(i) Courts look for corroboration when, in the light of all the evidence, a witness is worthy of belief. The purpose of corroboration is not to give validity or credence to evidence which is deficient or suspect or incredible but only to confirm or support that which as evidence is sufficient and satisfactory and credible;

B (ii) Since PW1 and PW2 are not credible then there cannot be corroboration from PW2 or anybody;

(iii) Since the identification of the appellants was done by witnesses whose evidence was deficient, suspect or incredible the appellants were not properly identified as the persons who took the stolen animals to PW1;

C (iv) The doctrine of recent possession could not be applied to the appellants and connect them with the murder of the deceased;

(v) The death penalty is inherently inhuman, cruel and degrading punishment and it is also so in its execution and it offends art 13(6)(d) and (e) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania;

D (vi) Whether or not legislation which derogates from a basic right of an individual is in the public interest depends on first, its lawfulness, that is, it should not be arbitrary and second, on the proportionality test, that is, the limitation imposed should not be more than is reasonably necessary;

E (vii) Though the death penalty as provided by s 197 of the Penal Code, Cap 16, offends art 13(6)(d) and (e) of the Constitution, it is not arbitrary, hence a lawful law and it is reasonably necessary and it is thus saved by art 30(2) of the Constitution; the death penalty is, therefore, not unconstitutional.

Case Infomation

F Both appeals allowed.

Cases referred to:

(1) Uganda v. Shah & Two Others [1966] EA 30

(2) Aziz Abdallah v. R [1991] TLR 71

G (3) DPP v. Kilbourne [1973] AC 729

(4) Barret Sutcliffe v. Jamaica UN Doc CCPR/6/E 44/D/R 988 s 3.4 and 3.5

(5) Abolt v. AG of Trinidad and Tobago [1979] 1 WLR 1342

(6) The State v. Petrus [1985] LRC (Const) 699

(7) Ndlovu v. The State [1988] LRC (Const) 442

H (8) Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace in Zimbabwe v. AG and Others, [1993] 1 ZLR 242

(9) Bacher Singh v. State of Punjab [1933] 1 SCR 154

(10) Michael de Freitas v. George Ramounter Benny [1976] AC 239

(11) DPP v. Daudi Pete [1993] TLR 22

(12) Trop v. Dulles 356 US 86

(13) Tyrer v. United Kingdom 2 EHRRl I

(14) Furman v. Georgia (1972) 408 US 238

(15) Kukutia Ole Pumbun v. AG [1993] TLR 97 A

(16) Said Mwamwindi [1972] HCD No 212
(17) R v. Asha Mkwizu Hauli, Crim Sessions Case No 3 of 1984 (DSM) (unreported)
(18) DPP v. Lenganzo Nyanje, Crim Appeal No 68 of 1980 (unreported)
Rweyongeza for the appellants. B
Miss W Korosso for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Ramadhani, JA: delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: C
The High Court of Tanzania At Dodoma (Mwalusanya, J) being satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the two accused persons; Mbushuu alias Dominic Mnyaroje and Kalai Sangula, had killed with malice aforethought a herdsboy, Saidi s/o Jingu, D convicted them of murder as charged. After some submissions as to the constitutionality of the death sentence, the learned Trial Judge declared that sentence unconstitutional and committed each of the accused persons to life imprisonment.
The two accused persons have appealed against conviction and the Republic has E appealed against the sentence. We have consolidated the two appeals for obvious reasons. Since conviction comes first before sentence, we have regarded Mbushuu alias Dominic Mnyaroje as the first appellant and Kalai Sangula as the second appellant and the Republic is taken to be the respondent. F
One Naftali s/o Ngamaa (PW3), is a resident of Mkwese village, Manyoni District, and owned some cattle and goats. On the morning of 6 September 1984, together with his herdsboy, Saidi s/o Jingu, the deceased, he took his animals to drink water and then left them under the care of the deceased for grazing. PW3 returned home but the deceased never did, even as late as at 7.00 pm. G Suspecting that something was amiss, he raised an alarm and went out in search of the deceased and the animals without success. We may point out here that there is no evidence as to when the deceased was found fatally wounded. However, PW3 and Athumani Mtinangi (PW4), then the ten cell leader of PW3 H owned to have seen the deceased with a spear wound in the ribs. The deceased told them that some strangers had attacked him and got away with the animals he was herding. The lad could not make it to the hospital. He died on the way.
Almost a month later, PW3 and PW4 were told that some of the I
1995 TLR p100
RAMADHANI JA
A stolen animals were at Mkatika Village, Bahi, in Dodoma District. In the company of some policemen, the two witnesses went to the kraal of Mosi Masingisa (PW1) where they identified four cattle and eight goats out of the stolen animals. At the kraal there were also Mdachi Hongole (PW5) and Matonya Yohana (PW6).
B PW1 told the court that the animals, six cattle and eight goats, were taken to his place by the two appellants and another person still at large called Moro s/o James. That was on 6 September 1984, the date the deceased was attacked and robbed. That was reiterated by PW6. PW1 also said that it was his first time to see the first appellant but that he had known the second appellant and Moro before C that day. PW1 further told the court that there was no movement permit for the animals which were intended to be left at his kraal for tending. PW1 then took the appellants and Moro to the village chairman, Masangwai Mafuma (PW2), who D allowed the animals to be left there provided that a movement permit was brought in due course. PW2 did not see the animals but he was just told that there was a bull and five cows. He did not mention the goats. PW1 also testified that the second appellant told him, as they were leaving, that the first appellant would E return for the two bulls. A few days later, the first appellant and Moro went to PW1 and took the two bulls. The movement permit still had not been produced, but PW1 was told, when the two bulls were taken, that the second appellant would deliver the permit to him. PW2 was also aware that the two animals had been taken away.

F According to PW2 and PW6, some time in October, 1984, PW3, PW4 and some policemen appeared at the kraal of PW1 searching for some stolen animals and that the four cattle and eight goats were identified as among the stolen animals. PW1 was arrested and charged with murder but the charges were later dropped and he was released. Also arrested were PW5 and PW6, and, like PW1, they were later released from custody. G

Both appellants denied involvement in the raid and the resulting murder. The first appellant claimed that he was a businessman at Saranda, Manyoni District, and that he had not gone to Mkatika Village on the fateful day. He further told the court that on 30 August 1984 he left Saranda for Dar es Salaam to attend to his sick H child who later died. The first appellant said that he remained in Dar es Salaam and got back to Saranda on 6 October 1984. The first appellant was supported in his alibi by his brother-in-law, Joseph Lazaro (DW1), who had accompanied him to and from Dar es Salaam. I

1995 TLR p101

RAMADHANI JA

The second appellant, too, claimed that he was at his residence at Dabiya Village A on the fateful day. He further told the court that he was charged with the murder of another on 26 December 1989 and that he was convicted of manslaughter and was sentenced to fifteen years imprisonment. He claimed to be a victim of circumstances.

At already said, Mwalusanya, J believed PW1 and PW6 that it was the appellants B who took some of the stolen animals to the kraal of PW1 where they were identified by PW3 and PW4. The learned Trial Judge found corroboration of that story in the testimony of PW2. Applying the doctrine of recent possession, the learned Trial Judge found the two appellants to have been among the persons who attacked and robbed the deceased. Thus he found the appellants guilty of murder as charged. C

Mr Rweyongeza, learned advocate, appeared for the appellants and had five grounds of appeal which, with respect, boil down to challenging the identification of the appellants. Mr Rweyongeza has sought to do that in three ways. D

First, Mr Rweyongeza submitted that the two identifying witnesses, PW1 and PW6 are not reliable. The learned advocate pointed out that both witnesses had been arrested for this incident though they were later released. So, he submitted, they E had an interest to serve and that in order to save their skins they are willing to shove the baby into any other persons's hands. Mr Rweyongeza added that PW1 had actually been charged with the murder of the deceased.

Second, Mr Rweyongeza pointed out that when PW1 was asked by PW3 and F PW4 as to how he got the animals, he mentioned one Lemmy as the person who had taken them to his place. However, in his testimony in court, the learned advocate said, PW1 mentioned the appellants as the persons who had taken the animals to his kraal. G

Third, the learned advocate said that PW2 cannot provide corroboration to PW1 and PW6, as the learned trial judge found, because of some discrepancies in his testimony. Mr Rweyongeza pointed out that PW2 did not mention goats as among the animals which were brought to PW1. Then, the learned advocate added, PW2 said that the animals belonged to Moro while PW1 named the second appellant as H the owner. Apart from that, Mr Rweyongeza said, PW2 did not see the animals but was just told by PW1 that some animals had been brought to his place.

Lastly, Mr Rweyongeza argued, if the identification of the appellants is not watertight and as the alibis of the appellants have not I

A been contradicted, then the appellants should be acquitted.

On behalf of the respondents Republic was Miss Korosso, learned State Attorney. She supported the conviction and submitted that the learned Trial Judge who saw and heard PW1 and PW6 believed them to be credible and that he cannot be B faulted. She contended that the witnesses have no interest to serve. Besides, Miss Korosso added, PW1 and PW6 are corroborated by PW2 whose evidence to the fact that it were the appellants who sent the animals to PW1 is that of an independent witness.

C The appeal stands or falls on the issue of identification. If they were properly identified as the persons who took the animals to PW1 then their alibis must fail and, on the basis of the doctrine of recent possession, they are the murderers. So, were they adequately identified?

D We agree with Mr. Rweyongeza that the evidence of PW1 and PW6 has to be scrutinized carefully. The stolen animals were found in their possession and they had received them without the prerequisite movement permit. That made them suspects and hence their arrest. They would naturally want to distance themselves from the event. But worse still is the testimony of PW3 and PW4 that PW1 mentioned Lemmy as the person who had brought the animals to him. He E claimed to have known the second appellant as a small boy. The second appellant himself acknowledges to have been born and brought up in Mkatika Village and that he is known to PW1. So, there is absolutely no question of PW1 mistaking Lemmy for the second appellant. Why did PW1 tell a lie at that first available F opportunity? Whom was he protecting and why? To crown it all, if the so well-known second appellant was the culprit why did it take so long to arrest him? It has not been controverted that he was arrested, charged with and convicted of manslaughter in another case in 1985. So, all this time he was at large and it has G never been claimed that the police were looking for him. The first appellant, too, was first arrested in 1985, he was discharged in 1988 and re-arrested in 1990. In fact on 16 July 1991 the first appellant was named by Mr Ndunguru, learned State Attorney, to be the first prosecution witness. Why was that if PW1 and PW6 had properly identified him on the fateful day of 6 September 1984, that is, seven years previously? H

We must admit that we have not been able to find answers to all the questions posed above. Hence the credibility of PW1 and PW6 is greatly in doubt.

Could PW2 provide corroboration? It is trite law that a court I

1995 TLR p103

RAMADHANI JA

looks for corroboration when, in the light of all the evidence, a witness is worthy of belief. A

The purpose of corroboration is not to give validity or credence to evidence which is efficient or suspect or incredible but only to confirm or support that which as evidence is sufficient and satisfactory and credible. B

That was said by our predecessor in Uganda v Shah & Two Others (1). Also in Aziz Abdallah v R (2) at p 10 we quoted with approval what was said by Lord Hailsham in DPP v Kilbourne (3) at p 745 that: C

`If a witness's testimony fails of its own inanities the question of his needing or being capable of giving corroboration does not arise.'

Since PW1 and PW6 are not credible, then there cannot be corroboration from D PW2 or anybody. There is no need even to discuss the testimony of PW2

We may as well mention two matters very quickly. One, it is remarkable that not a single policeman was called to testify though evidence shows that a couple of them were involved in the investigation. That could make a court draw an adverse inference. Two, the learned Trial Judge said in his judgment: E

`In any case the two accused have not challenged the contention that the four heads (sic) of cattle and eight goats are part of the cattle that were robbed from the deceased on 6 September 1984.' F

We think the appellants' behavior has been consistent with their testimony. Both of them have said that they do not know anything about the cattle raid. They were not at the scene of crime. They did not know the deceased or the animals he was G herding. So, how could they, then, with the same breath, say that the four head of cattle and the eight goats did not belong to the lot in the care of the deceased?

So, we find that the appellants were not properly identified as the persons who took the stolen animals to PW1. Therefore, the doctrine of recent possession H cannot be applied to them and connect them with the murder of the deceased. We, therefore, quash the conviction of murder and set aside the sentence of life imprisonment imposed of them.

But was that sentence of life imprisonment for murder proper? In other words, is the death sentence unconstitutional? I

1995 TLR p104

RAMADHANI JA

A The learned Trial Judge found death sentence unconstitutional under art 64(5) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania 1977 after holding that:

`the two petitioners have managed to prove on a balance of probabilities that the death penalty is cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment/treatment and also that it offends the right to B dignity of man in the process of execution of the sentence. At the same time the Republic has failed to prove on a balance of probabilities that the impugned law is in public interest and that it is a lawful law under art 30(2) of the Constitution. C

Before the learned Trial Judge, Mr Rweyongeza made three submissions and after a long deliberation covering 26 typed foolscap sheets the above quoted holding was arrived at. Mr Rweyongeza at the start argued that the death penalty is D contrary to art 13(6)(e) of the Constitution as its execution offends the right to dignity; second, it is a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment contrary to art 13(6)(e); and lastly, that the death penalty violates the right to life as provided by art 14 of the Constitution.

F Before us Miss Korosso presented a memorandum of appeal containing three grounds. In the first ground the learned State Attorney seeks to fault the learned trial Judge in holding that Art. 14 of the Constitution guarantees absolute right to life and that s 197 of the Penal Code, which provides for the death penalty, breaches that guarantee.

G The learned State Attorney took quite some time on that. However, we do not think it necessary to go over her submission, as Mr Rweyongeza pointed out, the learned trial judge did not make that finding.

The learned judge, after referring to our decision in DPP v Daudi Pete (11) that the Kiswahili version of the Constitution is the authentic one, said:

"The Swahili version reads: "Kila mtu anayo haki kuishi na kupata kutoka kwa jamii hifadhi ya maisha yake, kwa H muyibu wa Sheria." It is crystal clear from that wording in the Swahili version that both the right to life and the right to the protection of ones life by the society, is subject to the clawback clause "subject to law". So it is my finding that the right to life is not absolute but subject to law."

So the learned trial judge held quite the opposite of what Miss Korosso understood him to have I done. However, the learned State

Attorney was quick to reply that the subsequent pronouncements of the learned trial judge negated A the above quoted finding. Miss Korosso did not cite any such pronouncement. We shall have so see what the learned Trial Judge said in that part of his judgment entitled whether the law prescribing the death penalty is lawful law. B

As her second ground of appeal Miss Korosso submitted that the learned Trial Judge erred in holding that art 13(6)(d) and (e) prohibited the mode of execution of C the death penalty by hanging as provided under s 26 of the Penal Code. Thus the learned State Attorney was saying that the death penalty is not cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment. She contended that all punishments, without exception, are cruel. She, however, conceded that there is some delay in the execution of the death penalty. However, she does not consider delay as a factor D making death penalty cruel and inhuman. On the contrary, she has submitted, any delay in the execution of the punishment kindles some hope in the condemned prisoner. Miss Korosso in support of her submission referred us to Barret Sutcliffe v Jamaica (4); Abolt v AG of Trinidad and Tobago (5) and a book by William A Schabas entitled The Abolition of the Death Penalty in International Law. E

Mr Rweyongeza was very categoric that death penalty is cruel, torturous and most inhuman and that it offends art 13(6)(e) of the Constitution. F

The learned Trial Judge dealt with the issue of the death penalty and whether it is cruel, inhuman and degrading at great length. He said that a punishment can be inherently cruel, inhuman and degrading or it can be so in the mode of its execution. The learned Trial Judge followed the decision of the Court of Appeal of Botswana in The State v Petrus (6) and also the decision of the Supreme Court of Zimbabwe in Ndlovu v The State (7). G

As for the death penalty, the learned Trial Judge upheld the submission on behalf of the present appellants that the cruelty, the inhumanity and the degradation are both inherent and in the mode of execution. He said that killing is per se offensive, H this is so whether done by private person or by the State. He went on to say that killing by the State is even more repugnant as there lacks the element of provocation which in many cases is the cause of killing by a private individual. So, the learned judge continued, State killing is in cold blood and, referring to Clarence Darrow in Attorney I

A for the Damned, (1957) Simon & Schuster, New York, at 92, the State teaches the public to kill.

The learned Trial Judge found the inevitable delay in executing death penalty to add insults to the injury and to cause prolonged mental torture. He cited the decision of the Supreme Court of Zimbabwe in Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace in B Zimbabwe v AG and others (8). Coupled to the delay, the learned judge found that the conditions obtained in the death cells are horrible and add to the anguish of the condemned prisoner. The mode of the execution of the death penalty, that is hanging, according to the learned judge, completes the sordid and the debasing C character of the penalty. The learned judge described the mode of execution at some length pointing out that at the end of the day the dead body of the prisoner is left in a mess and that there could not be a more inhuman and degrading sight.

D The learned judge remarked that the fact that the State executes in secret and without publicity is a clear acknowledgement of its guilty conscience that what it is doing is cruel, inhuman, degrading and that the punishment is despicable.

E As her third ground, Miss Korosso submitted that the learned Trial Judge erred in not finding that the death penalty is saved by art 30(2) of the Constitution.

Miss Korosso said that s 197 of the Penal Code, Cap 16, which provides for the death punishment for murder, is not arbitrary. She submitted that the penalty is imposed after due process of law, that is, after a full trial in which the burden of proof is on the prosecution and with a provision for appeal and eventually a F provision for seeking pardon from the President. Miss Korosso also pointed out that pregnant women and youths under the age of 18 years are exempted from the death penalty. The learned State Attorney cited Bacher Singh v State of Punjab (9) G as authority for the proposition that when life is taken away in due process of law then that action is not unconstitutional. She said that such provisions for the death penalty, as our s 197 of the Penal Code, which have existed before the provisions on human rights and fundamental freedoms were introduced in the constitutions H are specifically saved by the same constitutions. She said that this was so with art 3 of the Constitution of Trinidad and Tobago. She referred us to Michael de Freitas v George Ramoutar Benny (10).

As for international instruments, Miss Korosso submitted that the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights (hereinafter referred to as the African Charter) requires that the respect for life I and the integrity of the person of an individual should not be deprived arbitrarily (art A 4). She also pointed out that art 2(1) of the European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (hereinafter referred to as the European Convention) protects life and adds that none `shall be deprived of his life intentionally save in the execution of a sentence of a court following his conviction of a crime for which this penalty is provided by law'. B

Miss Korosso also contended that the death penalty passes the proportionality test because it is in the public interest. The learned State Attorney said that she is aware of the moves toward the abolition of that penalty in some countries. However, she submitted that death penalty has proved to be a deterrent and that C some of the jurisdictions which abolished it, such as California, Guatemala, Mauritius, North Carolina and Texas, have swiftly reinstated it.

The learned State Attorney submitted further that there is the prerogative of mercy D which takes care of the appropriateness of the penalty in the peculiar circumstances of every individual case. She pointed out that in Tanzania there is a committee for advising on the exercise of the prerogative of mercy under the Presidential Affairs Act, Cap 502. All these measures, according to her, take care of the proportionality test. E

Miss Korosso contended that as death penalty is neither arbitrary nor in contravention of the proportionality test, then its derogation from the right to life is saved under art 30(2)(c).

Mr Rweyongeza admitted that there is due process of law when considering the F death penalty. However, he pointed out that the period from the end of the determination of an appeal by the Tanzania Court of Appeal, to the time of the execution of the penalty, is also part and parcel of the due process of law and that this portion of time is tainted with arbitrariness. He said so because, first, the G period is indeterminate and frequently tormentingly long. This he added, also offends the proportionality test. Then, Mr Rweyongeza said, there are no guidelines given on the usage of the prerogative of mercy. Therefore, he contended, the death penalty is not saved by art 30(2) of the Constitution. H

As for the first ground of appeal, we agree with Mr Rweyongeza that the learned Trial Judge categorically stated that the right to life under art 14 of the Constitution is not absolute. He struck out the provision for the death penalty not because it contravenes the absolute right to life but because of reasons which we shall deal with shortly. We do not agree with Miss Korosso that what the learned I

A judge said later negated that finding. This should suffice to dismiss the first ground of Miss Korosso. However, later on Mr Rweyongeza in effect submitted that the right to life under art 14 of the Constitution is absolute.

B Mr Rweyongeza submitted that art 14 merely prescribes the right to life and enjoins the law to protect that right. He pointed out that that article does not provide for the deprivation of life. He contrasted our art 14 with art 21 of the Constitution of India which provides:

C `No person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to procedure established by law.'

Mr Rweyongeza contended that since art 14 does not provide for deprivation of Life, as art 21 of the Indian Constitution does, then any law which purports to take away that right, that is, a law providing for the death penalty, is unconstitutional. D

We have already decided in DPP v Daudi Pete (11), as the learned Trial Judge properly observed, that the Kiswahili version of the Constitution is the authentic one. Article 14 of that version provides as follows: E

`Kila mtu anayo haki ya kuishi na kupata kutoka kwa jamii hifadhi ya maisha yake, kwa mujibu wa sheria.'

F The translation of that article in the English version is terribly misleading. As this judgment is in English there is a need for us to make our own translation of art 14 as follows:

`Every person has a right to life and to receive from the society the protection of his life, in accordance with law.'

G Admittedly, our art 14 does not expressly provide for the deprivation of the right to life as does art 21 of the Constitution of India. Our research has shown that a number of other countries have formulations like that of art 21 of the Constitution of India. For example, art 13(1) of the Constitution of the Republic of Ghana, 1992 provides: H

`No person shall be deprived of his life intentionally except in the exercise of the execution of a sentence of a court in respect of a criminal offence under the laws of Ghana of which he has been convicted.' I

Similar couching providing for deprivation of life is found in art 32 of the A Constitution of the People's Republic of Bangladesh, Fifth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States of America, art III(1) of the 1987 Constitution of the Republic of the Philippines and also, we may add, Article 52 of the Draft Constitution of the Republic of Uganda. B

We have also seen at least four international instruments on human rights which in addition to protecting the right to life expressly prohibit arbitrary deprivation of that right. Article 2(1) of the European Convention, as Miss Korosso properly pointed out, is very articulate: C

`Everyone's right to life shall be protected by law. No one shall be deprived of his life intentionally save in the execution of a sentence of a court following his conviction of a crime for which this penalty is provided by law.' D

The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (hereinafter referred to as the International Covenant) provides in art 6(1) thus:

`Every human being has the inherent right to life. This right shall be protected by law. No one E shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life.'

The African Charter in art 4 and art 4(1) of the American Convention on Human Rights (hereinafter referred to as the American Convention) provide very much like art 6(1) of the International Covenant. F

The result of our survey is that the international instruments declare the inherent and universal right to life, demand that right be protected by law and prohibit the arbitrary deprivation of that right. That means the right can be denied by due process of law. The six domestic constitutions which we have been able to obtain, G on the other hand, presume the existence of the inherent and universal right to life and its protection by law. The constitutions deal with when a person can be deprived of his life.

Article 14 of our Constitution lies in between the two sets. It declares the inherent H and universal right and its protection by the society but then subjects both the right and its protection, to law. That means there can be instances in which the due process of law will deny a person his right to life or its protection. This is why the learned Trial Judge found that the right to life under art 14 is not absolute but qualified, and here we agree with him. I

1995 TLR p110

RAMADHANI JA

A The issue we have to determine is whether the death penalty is one of such instances where the due process of law will deny a person his right to life and its protection.

The first matter which we have to address ourselves is whether the death penalty contravenes art 13(6)(d) and (e).

The relevant part of art 13(6)(d) provides as follows: B

`(6) kwa madhumuni ya kuhakikisha usawa mbele ya sheria, Mamlaka ya Nchi itaweka taratibu zinazofaa au zinazo-zingatia misingi kwamba -

(a) ...

(b) ... C

(c) ...

(d) kwa ajili ya kuhifadhi haki ya usawa wa binadamu, heshima ya mtu itatunzwa ... katika kuhakikisha utekelezaji wa adhabu;'

D Very briefly we can say that art 13(6)(d) seeks to protect the dignity of a person in the execution of a punishment.

Paragraph (e) of clause (6) of art 13 provides as follows:

`(e) ni marufuku kwa mtu kuteswa, kuadhibiwa kinyama au kupewa adhabu zinazomtweza au kumdhalilisha.' E

Here again the English version is faulty and we propose to use the following translation:

`(e) it is prohibited to torture a person, to subject a person to inhuman punishment or to degrading punishment.' F

The total effect of the two above-quoted paragraphs is that three things are prohibited: torture, inhuman punishments and degrading punishments. In addition, the punishments which are not prohibited have to be executed in such a way as to protect the dignity of a person. Does the death penalty offend any of these? G

Torture has been defined by the United National General Assembly (UNGA) in its unanimously adopted `Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or H Punishment' of 9 December, 1975 (Resolution 3542 (XXX)):

`Torture means any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted by or at the instigation of a public official on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or confession, punishing him for an act I

he has committed, or intimidating him or other persons. It does not include pain or suffering A arising only from, inherent in or accidental to, lawful sanctions ...' (Emphasis provided)

Forgetting for the moment, whether or not the death penalty is a lawful sanction, it is clear that any physical or severe mental pain or suffering brought about by the death penalty, does not constitute torture. We understand that a similar exception B is contained in the definition of torture in the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment a copy of which we have not been able to obtain. C

There is no doubt that there is a lot of severe mental pain and suffering to a person under the sentence of death from the moment that sentence is pronounced to the date of its execution. It has been amply stated that this span of time is tormentingly too long. We do not share the sentiments of Miss Korosso that the delay is a blessing in disguise to the condemned prisoners. In the present world of D anesthesia, both local and general, and pain killers the mental state of the condemned prisoners cannot be anything but in much agony. It is quite common that the blood pressure of a patient awaiting operation shoots up even though the patient is not ordinarily hypertensive. This is because the possibility of death is E encapsulated in the pending operation, though the patient is fully aware that the operation is for his own good. How much so is it to a condemned prisoner who stands to gain nothing from hanging? Is this not torture? F

We humbly agree with the learned Trial Judge that concepts like torture, cruel, inhuman and degrading `are subject to evolving standards of decency'. We agree with the United States Supreme Court in Trop v Dulles (12) when it held that the Eight Amendment must draw its meaning from the evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society. We also share the feelings of the G European Court of Human Rights in Tyrer v United Kingdom (13) that the European Convention is a living instrument which must be interpreted in the light of present-day conditions. We add that human rights concepts and terms like torture, inhuman and degrading punishment or treatment, have to be interpreted in the light of present-day conditions. H

It is our opinion that death penalty has elements of torture. Whereas all punishments, as Miss Korosso submitted, might be cruel, it is the degree of cruelty that matters. As for the other aspects prohibited by art 13(6)(e) of inhuman and degrading pun- I
1995 TLR p112
RAMADHANI JA
A ishments, we agree with the decisions of other jurisdictions that the death penalty offends these. One such decision is of the United States Supreme Court in Furman v Georgia (14) where Brennan, J said at 367 that the State, even as it punishes, must treat its members with respect for their intrinsic worth as human beings. He warned that members of the human race should not be treated as B non-humans, as objects to be toyed with and discarded.
To him, even the vilest criminal remained a human being possessed of common human dignity.
C The execution of the death penalty too, that is, hanging, is inhuman and degrading. We do not agree with the learned Trial Judge that hangings being conducted in private indicates the guilty conscience of the State. We are, however, of the opinion that the privacy surrounding executions is a recognition that hangings are inhuman and degrading and so are done in such a way as to give some semblance of dignity and respect to the prisoner. D
So, we agree with the learned Trial Judge that death penalty is inherently inhuman, cruel and degrading punishment and that it is also so in its execution and that it offends art 13(6)(d) and (e). But the crucial matter is: is it saved by art 30(2)?
That article provides: E

`(2) It is hereby declared that no provision contained in this part of this Constitution, which stipulates the basic human rights, freedom and duties, shall be construed as invalidating any existing law or prohibiting the enactment of any law or the doing of any lawful act under such law, making provision for - F

(a) ensuring that the rights and freedom of other or the public interest are not prejudiced by the misuse of the individual rights and freedom;

(b) ...

G (c) ensuring the execution of the judgment or order of a court given or made in any civil or criminal proceedings.'

This court has on two occasions dealt with art 30(2); in Daudi Pete v A--G (11) and also in Kukutia Ole Pumbun v A--G (15). In the latter case we said: H

' - the Court in Pete's case laid down that a law which seeks to limit or derogate from the basic right of the individual on ground of public interest will be saved by art 30(2) of the Constitution only if it satisfies two essential requirements: First, such law must be lawful in the sense that it is not arbitrary. It should make adequate safeguards against arbitrary decisions, and provide effective controls against I abuse by those in authority when using the law. Secondly, the limitation imposed by such law A must not be more than is reasonably necessary to achieve the legitimate object. This is what is also known as the principle of proportionality. The principle requires that such law must not be drafted too widely so as to net everyone including even the untargeted members of the society. If the law which infringes a basic right does not meet both requirements, such law is not saved by art 30(2) of the Constitution, it is null and void. And any law that seeks to B limit fundamental rights of the individual must be construed strictly to make sure that it conforms with those requirements, otherwise the guaranteed rights under the Constitution may easily be rendered meaningless by the use of the derogative or clawback clauses of that very same Constitution.' C
1995 TLR p113
RAMADHANI JA

We have found it necessary to quote at length what we have said because we feel that the learned Trial Judge seems not to have fully grasped its import. We have said that art 30(2) allows derogation from basic rights of the individual in public D interest. Whether or not legislation which derogates from a basic right of an individual is in public interest depends on first, its lawfulness, that is, it should not be arbitrary and second, on the proportionality test, that is, the limitation imposed should not be more than reasonably necessary.

The learned Trial Judge dealt with art 30(2) in Part IV of his judgment entitled in E capitals: `WHETHER THE LAW PRESCRIBING THE DEATH PENALTY IS LAWFUL LAW AND IS IN PUBLIC INTEREST UNDER ART 30(2) OF THE CONSTITUTION'. The lawfulness of the law prescribing the death penalty F according to Kukutia, is one ingredient of whether it is in the public interest and is not an additional matter to public interest. Then, the learned Trial Judge divided his Part IV of the judgment into `A: Whether the death penalty is in public interest under art 30(2) of the Constitution' and `B: Whether the Law Prescribing the death penalty is lawful law.' The two sub-headings should have been on arbitrariness and proportionality. G

Is s 197 of the Penal Code, the one providing for death penalty, lawful law, that is, not arbitrary? The learned Trial Judge found s 197 to be arbitrary on two grounds. First, the state H of our criminal law is such that `real murders and mentally sick are indiscriminately dumped together as murderers without distinction'. The learned Trial Judge gave three cases in which `famous psychiatrists' or `prominent psychiatrists' testified to the mental disease of the accused persons, yet they were sentenced to death. He cited Said Mwamwindi v R (16) the disease I

A being catatonic schizophrenia; R v Asha Mkwizu Hauli (17), and DPP v Lenganzo Nyanje (18) where the respondent had paranoid schizophrenia. The learned Trial Judge categorically indicated that Mwamwindi was executed but he did not do so with respect to Asha and Nyanje.

B Then the learned Trial Judge complained of the requirement under s 325 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 whereby in the case of the death penalty, the court record is sent to the President for the exercise of pardon. The learned Trial Judge said the procedure is arbitrary as the President is neither bound to follow the recommendations of the judge who tried the case nor of the advisory committee. C

In Kukutia we went on to explain what we meant by arbitrary. We said that the law under investigation `should make adequate safeguards against arbitrary decisions, and provide effective controls against abuse by those in authority when using the law'. D

Chambers 20th Century Dictionary defines arbitrary as `not bound by rules: despotic, absolute: Capricious: arising from accident rather than from rule'.

Does s 197 of the Penal Code fall under that definition? That section provides: E

`Any person convicted of murder shall be sentenced to death'

There then follows a proviso which exempts pregnant women. So, only those F persons convicted or murder are subjected to death under this section. (We may add that also those convicted of treason are subjected to death under s 39 of the Penal Code).

We agree with Miss Korosso that for a person to be convicted of murder he must have undergone a full trial by the High Court sitting with assessors and with the assistance of a prosecuting State Attorney and a defence counsel. Then, by G practice, there is an automatic appeal to this court. That can never be despotic.

Our law is that it is the court which makes decisions and all others, however qualified in their callings, give evidence and offer opinions which the court, for stated reasons, may or may not accept as factual and rely upon. Insanity is defined in s 13 of the Penal Code and anything short of that will not benefit an H accused person. Our law does not provide for diminished responsibility. That may be unfortunate but definitely not arbitrary because the court arrives at its decisions following rules and not accidentally.

It is possible that an innocent person may be executed in error. I

1995 TLR p115

RAMADHANI JA

But that will not be arbitrary. Either both the trial court and the appeal court were A genuinely mistaken or fraud was committed on them. But our law provides safeguards, for instance, in the case of doubt then the accused person should be benefit.

The Presidential pardon is outside the court process and helps to put a human touch on the rigors of the law. Admittedly, the President is not bound by the B recommendations of either the Trial Judge or the advisory committee but that does not enable him to abuse the law for he cannot make matters any worse for the condemned prisoner.

In fact s 197 cannot be arbitrary because it merely provides punishment to a C person convicted under other provisions of law.

Is the death penalty in conformity with the principle of proportionality? Is the limitation imposed not more than is reasonably necessary to achieve the legitimate object? Maybe, but what is the legitimate object? D

Section 197 provides for death to a person who has been proved to have killed another or others, with malice aforethought, that is, without any excuse recognized by law. So, the legitimate object of the law is to protect the society from such killings. Article 14 gives members of the society a right to life and requires the E society to protect this right. So, the society has the constitutional duty to ensure that its law abiding members are not deprived of this right. The society cannot provide personal body-guards for indefinite periods even to individuals whose lives may be threatened, and that is not expected of the society to do. So, the society cannot make it difficult or prevent one person killing another. The society can only F discharge its duty of protecting the right to life by deterring persons from killing others. Tanzania, like many other societies, has decided to do so through the death penalty.

There is a question of retribution. But that to our minds is between the murderer G and the relatives of the victim. For the purposes of the society to perform its duty under art 14 deterrence is the legitimate object.

Is the death penalty more than necessary to deter from killing others? H

We know that in certain jurisdictions death penalty has been held not to be necessary either to deter the commission of capital crimes or to protect society (Furman v Georgia referred to supra). However, it is our decided opinion that what measures are necessary to deter the commission of capital crimes or to protect society are matters for decision by every individual in society. I

1995 TLR p116

RAMADHANI JA

A We agree with the learned Trial Judge in the third principle which guided him in deciding this case that court decisions of other countries provide valuable information and guidance in interpreting the basic human rights in our Constitution. That is what we have done following Furham v Georgia in finding that death penalty is inhuman, cruel and degrading punishment. But when it comes to what is B reasonably necessary to protect our society we have to be extra careful with judicial decisions of other jurisdictions.

In societies where owning a firearm is almost as simple as owning a penknife, the death penalty might not be necessary to protect the public. But in societies like C ours, where people go to the extent of sacrificing dear sleep to join vigilante groups, popularly known as Sungusungu, in order to protect life and property, the death penalty may still be reasonably necessary.

We can do no better than quote the learned Trial Judge himself on this matter. He said: D

> `I concede that there may be a majority of Tanzanians who support the death penalty blindly, and these are not enlightened and not initiated or aware of the ugly aspects of the death penalty. Apparently it is so because the death penalty is carried out in secrecy. The E government must assume responsibility for ensuring that their citizens are placed in a position whereunder they are able to base their views about the death penalty on a rational and properly informed assessment. It is clear that many people base their support for the penalty on an erroneous belief that capital punishment is the most effective deterrent F punishment, and so the government has a duty to put the true facts before them instead of holding out to the public that the death penalty is an instant solution to violent crime. If many people, like members of the Myajali Commission see the death penalty as being morally insupportable and as having many negative effects, they would be expected to inform the public about their views and seek to influence public opinion in a more enlightened direction. The government should do the same.' G

Three things come out of the above quoted passage. One, the death penalty has H ugly aspects and is morally insupportable. Two, the death penalty is not the most effective punishment. Lastly, most people support it out of ignorance of the first two matters and ought to be enlightened.

As for the first matter, there is no question. We have already made a finding that the death penalty is cruel, inhuman and degrading. There is no conclusive proof one way or the other regarding the I
1995 TLR p117
RAMADHANI JA
second matter that the death penalty is not the most effective punishment. It is A common knowledge that after Said Mwamwindi was executed in early 1970s there were no more hangings until the present administration came into power in 1985. Why were executions resumed? No research on this has been conducted in Tanzania. As for influencing public opinion against the death penalty, all we can say is that that is perfectly legitimate in a democracy. B
But the crucial question is whether or not the death penalty is reasonably necessary to protect the right to life. For this we say it is society which decides. The learned Trial Judge in the above quoted passage acknowledges that presently society deems the death penalty as reasonably necessary. C
So, we find that though the death penalty as provided by s 197 of the Penal Code Offends art 13(6)(a) and (e) it is not arbitrary, hence a lawful law, and it is reasonably necessary and it is thus saved by art 30(2). Therefore it is not unconstitutional. D
We may observe here that we are aware of the drive to abolish the death penalty worldwide. But that has to be done, as the learned Trial Judge has aptly put it, by deliberate moves `to influence public opinion in a more enlightened direction'. For the present, even international instruments still provide for the death penalty. E
It may not be out of place to quote Paul Sieghart in The International Law of Human Rights (Oxford University Press) 1983 at p 130.

`As human rights can only attach to living human beings, one might expect the right to life itself F to be in some sense primary, since none of the other rights would have any value or utility without it. But the international instruments do not in fact accord it any formal primacy: on the contrary ... contain qualifications rendering the right less than absolute, and allowing human life to be deliberately terminated in certain specified cases ... The right to life thus stands in G marked contrast to some of the other rights protected by the same instruments: for example, the freedom from torture and other ill-treatment ... and the freedom from slavery and servitude ... are both absolute, and subject to no exceptions of any kind. It may therefore be said that international human rights law assigns a higher value to the quality of living as a process, than to the existence of life as a state ... the law tends to regard acute or prolonged suffering (at all H events in cases where it is inflicted by others, and so it is potentially avoidable) as a greater evil than death, which is ultimately unavoidable for everyone.
Before we finish, we commend the learned Trial Judge for his I
1995 TLR p118
RAMADHANI JA
A unexcelled industry in his exploration of the human rights literature. However, we would also like to point out that the style he has used in writing the judgment, dividing it into parts and sections, with headings and sub-headings, is unusual. That style is more suited for a thesis than for a judgment.

B Both appeals are allowed. The conviction or murder is quashed and the sentence of life imprisonment is set aside. The striking out of the death penalty is also quashed and that penalty is declared constitutional. C

1995 TLR p118

D

[zRPz]NICODEMUS NYAMBUYA v HAMISI RAMADHANI 1995 TLR 118 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Mwalusanya J E

(PC) Civil Appeal No 7 of 1994
January 31, 1995
Flynote

F Tort - Malicious prosecution - Whether ingredients of tort in common law is the same as in customary law.

Customary law - Tort - Malicious Prosecution - Ingredients of the tort.

-Headnote

G In this appeal the High Court considered whether the ingredients of the common law tort of malicious prosecution are also the ingredients under customary law.

Held:

(i) Under s 37(3)(a) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984, the High Court is duty bound to take judicial notice of what the Trial Court found to be the ingredients of a particular tort;

H (ii) According to the record of the Trial Court malice is not an ingredient of the tort of malicious prosecution; it is enough if the defendant had no reasonable and probable cause to prosecute the plaintiff;

(iii) The Trial Court correctly found as a fact that the defendant had no reasonable and probable cause to prosecute the plaintiff.

Case Infomation

Appeal dismissed. I

1995 TLR p119

MWALUSANYA J

Case referred to: A

(1) Hosea Lalata v. Gibson Marasote [1980] TLR 154

Mbezi for the respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwalusanya, J: B

The appellant Nicodemus s/o Nyambuya was successfully sued by the respondent Hamisi s/o Ramadhani for a tort of malicious prosecution at Kintinku Primary Court in Nanyoni District and was condemned to pay Shs 300,000/= as damages. His appeal to Manyoni District Court was dismissed but the damages were reduced to Shs 150,000/=. He is now making a second appeal to this court.

His main ground of appeal is that the ingredients of the tort of malicious prosecution were not proved. He contends that it was not proved that he was actuated by malice and that it was not proved that he acted without reasonable and probable cause.

The suit was filed under customary law of the Wagogo and Wanubi of Nanyoni District which is similar. Unfortunately the learned District Magistrate thought the ingredients of the tort of malicious prosecution are the same under the English common law and under customary law. That is why the learned District Magistrate cited the ingredients of the tort of malicious prosecution under English common law as expounded by Samatta J (as he then was) in the case of Hosea Lalata v Gibson Mwasoto (1). The learned District Magistrate was clearly in error.

However counsel for the respondent Mr Mbesi has contended that the ingredients of the tort of malicious prosecution under the English Common Law and under Customary Law are almost similar.

My view is that the ingredients of the tort of malicious prosecution under the relevant customary law has to be gathered from the record of the trial court. Under s 37(3)(a) of the Magistrate's Court Act No 2 of 1984, this court is duty bound to take judicial notice of what the trial court found to be the ingredients of a particular tort. According to the record of the trial court, malice is not ingredient of the tort of malicious prosecution. The record shows that it is enough if the defendant had no reasonable and probable cause to prosecute the plaintiff. Here the trial court found as a fact that the defendant had no reasonable and probable cause to prosecute the plaintiff. The defendant instead of leaving it to the police to investigate if the spare parts of a milling machine found with the plaintiff were those stolen from the milling machine of the defendant's village, went out of his way to tell the police that the plaintiff was the thief and should be arrested. The defendant insisted the arrest of the plaintiff even when he was shown the spare parts found with the plaintiff to be of Lister milling machine while the stolen spare parts were of Raslon milling machine. With that evidence indeed the defendant had no reasonable and probable cause to prosecute the plaintiff.

While I am doubtful if the defendant had any malice, I am satisfied that the trial court was correct to hold that he had no reasonable and probable cause to prosecute the plaintiff.

The appellant has not appealed against the quantum of damages of Shs 150,000/= as awarded by the District Court. I find it to be a reasonable award and so I will not interfere with it.

In the event the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs. Order accordingly.

[zRPz]MAKUPILA CHALO v MNINDA MDAMA 1995 TLR 120 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Mwalusanya J F

(PC) (Civil Appeal 126 of 1993)
February 22, 1995
Flynote
G Customary Law - Brideprice - Refund of - Principles governing refund - Customary Law Declaration Order GN No 279 of 1963.
-Headnote
This case concerned refund of brideprice. On appeal the High Court restated the guidelines for deciding on the quantum of refund of brideprice. H
Held:
(i) The Customary Law Declaration Order GN No 279 of 1963 paras 52, 53, 54 and 55 contain principles which provide for guidelines for deciding on the quantum of refund of brideprice;
(ii) Since the marriage subsisted for about 10 years and was blessed with 5 children, though two of them have died, refundable brideprice could I
1995 TLR p121
MWALUSANYA J
have been considerably reduced; A
(ii) The Trial Court should have somewhat increased the refundable brideprice because the wife was the guilty party responsible for the divorce.
Case Infomation
Appealed allowed in part.
No case referred to. B
Mbezi for the appellant
[zJDz]Judgment
Mwalusanya, J:
The respondent Mninda s/o Mdama successfully sued the appellant Makupila s/o C Chalo at Hager Primary Court in Mpwapwa District in a claim of refund of brideprice. The respondent was awarded all the brideprice that he paid on marrying the appellant's daughter and there were 10 head of cattle, five goats and cash Shs 556/=. The appellant's first appeal to Mpwapwa District court was unsuccessful and hence this appeal. D
Both court's below erred in failing to adhere to principles regarding refund of brideprice. These principles are contained in para 52, 53, 54 and 55 of the Customary Law Declaration GN: No 279 of 1963. These principle provide that: E
1. If children have been born, even if some have died, the brideprice to be refunded should be reduced or not paid at all.

2. If the marriage has subsisted for a considerable period, the refundable brideprice should be reduced or not paid at all.
3. If the wife is the guilty party responsible for the divence, the refundable F brideprice should be substantial, but if the guilty party is the husband, the refundable brideprice should be considerably reduced.
These are the guidelines for a case concerning refund of brideprice. The trial court G did not mention these principles at all. The District Court quoted para 58 which is a wrong section, because that section does not concern the exercise of the discretion by the court in assessing the refundable brideprice. The correct section or para is 53 which says that the court has the power to increase or reduce the refundable brideprice depending who is guilty party, the husband or the wife. H
At the District Court and at this court counsel for the appellant Mr Mbezi submitted that the marriage subsisted for about ten years and that the marriage was blessed with five children though two have died. The respondent does not appear on record as the Dis- I
1995 TLR p122
MWALUSANYA J
A trict Court to have had challenged that submission. That being the case the refundable brideprice should have been considerably reduced. At the same time the trial court should have somewhat increased the refundable brideprice because the wife was the guilty party responsible for the divorce.
B Taking all the circumstances mentioned above into account, I assess the refundable brideprice at 5 head of cattle, 2 goats and Shs 250/=. That appears a fair amount in the circumstances of this case.
In that the appeal is partly allowed to the extent indicated above, each party will bear its own costs of this appeal. Order accordingly. C
1995 TLR p122
D
[zRPz]BONIFACE JEREMIAH v STEPHEN LUKUMAY 1995 TLR 122 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Mwalusanya J E

(DC) CiVil Appeal No 30 of 1994
February 24, 1995
Flynote
F Evidence - Admissibility - Unstamped document - Issue of admissibility of unstamped document raised on appeal - Whether proper.
-Headnote
The respondent successfully sued the appellant in a District Court. The District G Court vested a house which had been mortgaged as security for a money claim unto the respondent. The mortgage deed was not stamped. Counsel for the appellant raised the question of admissibility in evidence of the unstamped document on appeal.

Held: The question of admissibility of an unstamped document cannot be raised on appeal but only at the trial.
Case Infomation
H Appeal dismissed.
Cases referred to:
(1) Sunderji Nanji v Bhaloo [1958] EA 762
Mbezi for the appellant.
Rweyongeza for the respondent. I
1995 TLR p123
MWALUSANYA J
[zJDz]Judgment
Mwalusanya J: A
The appellant Boniface s/o Jeremiah was successfully sued by the respondent Stephen s/o Lakumay at Dodoma District Court in a claim of Shs 195,500/= less Shs 82,500/= that has been paid. The District Court vested the house of appellant onto the respondent's ownership as alternatively prayed by the respondent, and that happened because appellant had mortgaged his house for the debt in B question. The appellant through his advocate Mr Mbezi is appealing to this court. The appeal was resisted by Mr Rweyongeza the respondent's counsel.
One of the points raised by Mr Mbezi in the Petition of Appeal is that the Trial C Magistrate was wrong to hold that the appellant had pledged his house to the respondent because that finding was based on inadmissible evidence that is the unstamped document. It is true that the said document is unstamped as required by s 46(1) of the Stamp Duty Act No 20 of 1972. However this argument as D contended by Mr Rweyongeza is of no avail, as that point should have been raised at the trial and not on appeal. As held by this court in the case of Sunderji Nanji v Bhaloo (1) the question of admissibility of an unstamped document cannot be raised on appeal but only at the trial. This is so that the other party can be given an opportunity of paying the requisite duty and thus making it admissible. E Therefore on the authority cited above I find that the finding of the Trial Magistrate about the mortgage cannot be impeached now.
The other point raised by the appellants' counsel is that the Trial Magistrate F abused his discretion or rather did not exercise his discretion judiciously by vesting the ownership onto the respondent instead of giving time to the appellant to pay the decretal amount. It is true that in the plaint the respondent prayed judgment for Shs 123,500/= or in the alternative to vest the ownership of the defendant's house to him. He said that to vest the ownership of the house for a debt of Shs 41,000/= was quite unfair. However I note that the outstanding debt then was Shs 111,000/= G and not Shs 41,000/= if you take into account a further loan of Shs 50,000/= and interest of Shs 20,000/= which has been mentioned by the Trial Magistrate in his judgment. He also said that when the house was valued in July 1994 it was found to be worthy Shs 6.6 million. The judgment was passed on 1 December 1989. H

On his part counsel for the respondent Mr Rweyongeza submitted that the valuation of the house was done in July 1994 while the suit was filed in 1986 and so it was done some eight years later when the I

1995 TLR p124

MWALUSANYA J

A house had appreciated in value. He said that the value of that house in 1986 or 1989 was quite low. And he also said that as disclosed in the judgment of the trial court the value of the time of oil which were Shs 1400/= per tin in 1985, was in 1989 Shs 4,500/= per tin. So he said that the debt was in 1989 over Shs 300,000/=. It was for this reason that Mr Rweyongeza contended that the Trial B Magistrate exercised his discretion judiciously.

I have seen the mortgage document dated 16 August 1985 which states that if the appellant does not discharge the debt of Shs 123,500/= by 31 October 1985 then respondent could have the house. For sure Shs 123,000/=in 1985 was a big sum. C And due to inflation I am sure by 1989 when the case was decided, the value of the money had been considerably devalued. Therefore the valuation of Shs 6.6 million done in July 1994 is of not much relevancy about the value of the house as it was in 1985. The value of the house was definitely much less in 1985. Due to devaluation the debt of Shs 123,500/= in 1985 could have gone up to Shs D 300,000/= by 1989. And the value of the house in 1989 could have been in the region of Shs 300,000/=. Taking into account the fact that the appellant was impecunious with no money to pay, I find that the Trial Magistrate did exercise his E discretion judiciously. I am unable to say that he abused his discretion.

Was this a foreclosure suit, so that the appellant should have been given time to pay the debt before the house was vested onto the respondent? For a foreclosure suit under Order 32 rule 2(c) of the Civil Procedure Code 1966, the defendant has F to be given time of six months within which to pay, before the vesting order is granted. However Mr Rweyongeza has contended that this was not a foreclosure suit but an ordinary suit and so the above cited provision is not applicable. I agree with the respondents' counsel that this was an ordinary suit for the recovery of G debt. And so the above provision is not applicable.

In the event this appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs. Order accordingly. H

1995 TLR p125

A

[zRPz]VIDYADHAR GIRDHARAL CHAVDA v THE DIRECTOR OF IMMIGRATION SERVICES AND OTHERS 1995 TLR 125 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Samatta JK B

Misc Civil Cause No 5 of 1995 C

March 7, 1995

Flynote

Administrative Law - Prerogative orders - Ad-interim injunctive orders pending hearing application for leave - Whether court may grant ad-interim injunctive order before granting leave to apply for prerogative orders.
Administrative Law - Injunctive orders against the Government - Whether the High court has power to grant injunctive orders against the Government, its ministers or officials - Section 11 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967. D
-Headnote
In this application the High Court considered, inter alia, whether it has power to E grant an injunction against the Government, a government minister or official in the light of the provisions of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance Act 1968 as amended by the Written Laws (Miscellaneous Amendments) (No 3) Act 1991 and s 11 of the Government Proceedings Act, 1967. In particular the Court considered whether the term 'civil proceedings' as defined in s 2(1) of the Government Proceedings Act includes an application for an F order of injunction against the Government, government minister or official.
Held:

(i) The term 'civil proceedings' was intended to have a restricted meaning; it was intended to mean civil matters as understood in the traditional sense of the term, that is to say, civil matters that are dealt with under the High G court's general civil jurisdiction;

(ii) Any statutory provision which purports to restrict this Court's jurisdiction, including inherent jurisdiction, must in the interest of everyone, be construed strictly;

(iii) The application of that principle in the interpretation of s 11 of the H Government Proceedings Act compels the holding that the term 'civil proceedings' in the subsection does not embrace proceedings for prerogative orders;

(iv) The prohibition imposed by ss (2) of s 11 of the Government Proceedings Act was not intended to, and does not, extend to an application in which the relief sought is injunction itself; I
1995 TLR p126
SAMATTA JK

A (v) the High Court has power to grant an interlocutory injunction before hearing application for leave to apply for a prerogative order.
Case Infomation
Order accordingly
Cases referred to:
B (1) M v Home Office [1993] 3 WLR 433
(2) R v Bishop of Oxford [1879] 4 QBD 245
Mkono for the applicant.
Mallaba for the respondents.
[zJDz]Judgment
C Samatta, JK:

In this application, an issue of novelty and great importance arises, namely whether this court has the power to grant an injuction against the Government, a government minister or official. The issue has arisen in this way. The applicant is engaged in a legal battle against a deportation order made against him by the D second respondent, who is Minister for Home Affairs, under the Immigration Act. On 2 February 1995, he filed before this Court an application against the Director of Immigration Services (the first respondent), the second respondent and the E Attorney General, who was made a party to the proceedings in compliance with s 17 of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance Act, 1968, as amended by the Written Laws (Miscellaneous Amendments) (No 3) Act, 1991, for two reliefs, namely; (1) leave to apply for order of certiorari, mandamus and prohibition, and (2) an injunction (in the Chamber summons the F word used is prohibition) restraining the first two respondents, pending the disposal of the prior application from detaining or deporting him for reasons which need not be given here. The application for injunctive relief was heard a day before the application for leave was heard. Mallaba, Senior State Attorney, appearing for G all three respondents, strongly opposed the application (for injunction) contending that this Court, before granting leave to apply for certiorari, mandamus or prohibition, has no power to grant an interim order. I rejected the argument and H made an order restraining the first and second respondents, pending the hearing of the application for injunctive relief, from detaining or deporting the applicant.

When, six days later, the application for interlocutory injunction was called on, Mr Mallaba raised a point in limine. He contended, citing s 11 of the Government Proceedings Act, 1967 (the Act), that this Court has no power to make an injunctive order against the I

Government, its ministers or officials. According to the learned Senior State A Attorney what the Court can do in circumstances in which the parties are private persons is grant injunctive orders, or to make an order declaratory of the rights of the parties. Section 11 of the Act reads:

11. (1) In any civil proceedings by or against the Government the court shall, subject to the B provisions of this Act, have power to make all such orders as it has power to make in proceedings between private persons, and otherwise to give such appropriate relief as the case may require:

Provided that - C

(a) Where in any proceedings against the Government any such relief is sought as might in proceedings between private persons be granted by way of injunction or specific performance, the court shall not grant an injunction or make an order for specific performance, but may in lieu thereof make an order declaratory of the rights of the parties; and D

(b) in any proceedings against the Government for the recovery of land or other property the court shall not make an order for the recovery of the land or the delivery of the property, but may in lieu thereof make an order declaring that the plaintiff is entitled as against the Government to the land or property or to the possession thereof. E

(2) The court shall not in any civil proceedings grant any injunction or make any order against an officer of the Government if the effect of granting the injunction or making the order would be to give any relief against the Government which could not have been obtained in proceedings against the Government. F

The term 'civil proceedings' is defined in s 2(1) of the Act as including proceedings in this court or a magistrate's court for the recovery of fines or penalties, and the phrase 'proceedings against the Government' is defined by the same subsection G as including a claim by way of set-off or counterclaim raised in proceedings by the Government. Mr Mkono, for the applicant, sought to counter Mr Mallaba's argument by contending that s 11 of the Act has no application where s 30 of the Constitution of the United Republic (constitution) is applicable. It was the learned H advocate's contention that the constitutional provision is applicable to the instant application. He drew my attention, citing M v Home Office (1) that in spite of the fact that s 21 of the Crown Proceedings Act, 1941, contains prohibitions identical with these imposed by s 11 of the Act, the House of Lords decided, in the cited case, that courts in England have the power to issue coercive orders, including injunctions, I

A against a government minister or department. Section 11 of the Act and s 21 of the English legislation are, save for the use of the words 'Crown' and 'subjects' instead of 'Government' and 'private persons', respectively, in pari materia with s 30 of the Constitution which deals with limitations upon and the enforcement and protection of basic rights and duties. B

It cannot be doubted that Mr Mallaba's preliminary point raises an issue of considerable importance on the enforcement by this court of the provisions of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance (Amendment) Act, 1968, the legislation which confers on this court the power to C grant prerogative orders. While I find Mr Mkono's argument concerning s 30 of the Constitution very interesting, I do not find it necessary, in law, to determine Mr Mallaba's preliminary point on constitutional grounds. I think the point can be adequately dealt with on non-constitutional grounds. It is a rule of constitutional D interpretation that if the court can decide a case before it on non-constitutional grounds, that course should be preferred; see The Guide to American Law, at 375. I proceed, therefore, to consider the merits or otherwise of the non-constitutional contentions addressed to me.

E The decision of the House of Lords in M v Home Office, supra, demonstrates, I respectfully think, the modern approach of courts towards their (courts) duty to control government actions and omissions which affect the freedoms and rights of the individual. The complex facts of the case are accurately summarised by the learned authors of Cases and Materials on Constitutional and Administrative Law 3rd ed at 197-198. I gratefully adopt that summary: F

'M, a citizen of Zaire, arrived in the UK seeking political asylum. The Home Office rejected his application and ordered his removal from the UK, which was to take place by 6.30 p.m. on 1 May 1991. At 5.20 p.m. (after the Court of Appeal had refused an application for leave to apply G for judicial review of the decision) a fresh application for leave to apply to move for judicial review, alleging new grounds, was made to Garland J in chambers. Garland J indicated at about 5.30 p.m. that he wished his departure to be postponed pending consideration of the application, and he understood from counsel for the Home Office that an undertaking to that H effect had been given. (Counsel understood that he had only undertaken to endeavour to prevent M's removal.) Due to bungling and breakdown in lines of communication, M's departure was not prevented nor was he removed from the onward flight to Zaire during a stopover at Paris. At 11.20 p.m. Garland J, being informed of M's removal from the jurisdiction, made an ex parte order I requiring the Home Secretary to procure the return of M to the jurisdiction and granting the A Home Secretary the liberty to apply for variation or discharge of the order on the morning of 2 May. Home Office officials then made arrangements for M's return. On the afternoon of 2 May, the Home Secretary, having taken advice from his officials and Treasury Counsel, concluded that the underlying asylum decision had been correct and that Garland J's ex parte order, B being a mandatory interim injunction against a minister of the Crown, had been made without jurisdiction. Thereupon he cancelled the arrangements for M's return. On 3 May he applied to Garland J to set aside the order of 1 May, which Garland did. Proceedings were then brought on behalf of M against the Home Office and the Home Secretary alleging contempt of court in C respect of the breach of the undertaking and the ex-parte order requiring M's return. Simon Brown J dismissed this motion on the basis that since the Crown's immunity from injunction was preserved by s 21 of the Crown Proceedings Act, 1947, neither it nor its departments, ministers and officials acting in the course of their duties could be impleaded for contempt of court. The applicant appealed'. D

The Court of Appeal, by a majority, allowed the appeal, holding that Brown J had mistakenly interpreted the law. The original order by Garland J should not have been made as injunctions could not be issued against the Crown. The Court went E on to hold, however, that as the order was binding until set aside, failure to comply with it constituted a contempt. It also held that while the Crown and Governments Departments are not subject to the contempt jurisdiction of the High Court because they are non-persons, Mr Baker, the Home Secretary, was F personally guilty of contempt. The Home Secretary appealed and the applicant cross appealed in respect of his original application against the Home Office. The House of Lords had to decide two issues of constitutional import, namely:

1. Could an injunction be issued against a government minister, and G
2. Could a government minister or department be found to be in contempt of court for failure to comply with an order of court? H

The House answered both issues in the affirmative. Their Lordships founded their decision on two grounds; firstly, on the wording of s 31 of the Supreme Court Act, 1981, which essentially, contains provisions regarding (i) the procedure for applying for prerogative orders of mandamus, prohibition and certiorari, (ii) the powers of the High Court in such applications and (iii) non-prerogative reliefs I

SAMATTA JK

A which may be sought and granted in an application for prerogative orders and (2) on the undesirability of the English law being inconsistent with the Community law on the matter. Their Lordships were of the opinion that s 21(2) of the Crown Proceedings Act, 1947, did not apply to judicial review jurisdiction as that branch of the law was controlled by the Supreme Court Act. In the course of his speech, B Lord Woolf (with who all their Lordships agreed) said, at 456H--C:

'... as in private law proceedings, once the Crown or a body representing the Crown is a party to proceedings, unless some express restriction exists, the Crown, like any other litigant, is liable to have interlocutory orders made against it with which it is required to comply....' C

And at 461 his Lordship said:

D '[the] decision not to amend section 21 (of the Crown Proceedings Act) is not really surprising bearing mind that the exercise in hand related to public law proceedings while section 21 dealt with private or 'civil' law proceedings.'

E In the course of his short speech, Lord Templeman said, at 431:

'My Lords, the argument that there is no power to enforce the law by injunction or contempt proceedings against a Minister in his official capacity would, if upheld, establish the proposition that the executive obey the law as a matter of grace and not as a matter of F necessity, a proposition which would reverse the result of the Civil War. For the reasons given by noble and learned friend, Lord Woolf, and on principle, I am satisfied that injunctions and contempt of court proceedings may be brought against the minister in his official capacity ...'

G What is the legal position here in Tanzania? To that question I now turn my attention. In the scope of the meaning of the words 'civil proceedings' in s 11 of the Act (the Government Proceedings Act, 1967), so wide as to embrace proceedings in which, as in the instant application, a temporary injunctive relief is sought? H Although in the Act there is no provision similar to s 31 of the Supreme Court Act (of England, I am of the settled opinion, bearing in mind the definition of term civil proceedings' in s 2(1) of the Act, and taking into account of the definition of the phrase 'proceedings against the Government' given in the same subsection, that the word 'civil' there has not been used to mean the opposite of I

SAMATTA JK

'criminal'. Thus, constitutional proceedings and proceedings which are instituted A under this Court's supervisory jurisdiction, that is to say, the jurisdiction to supervise statutory and domestic tribunals conferred on the court by s 17(2) of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance (Cap 360) as amended by the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) B Ordinance (Amendment) Act, 1968, must be held to be excluded by the term. The term was intended to have a restricted meaning; it was intended to mean civil matters as understood in the traditional sense of the term, that is to say, civil matters that are dealt with under this Court's general civil jurisdiction. Any statutory C provision which purports to restrict this courts jurisdiction, including inherent jurisdiction, must, in the interests of everyone living within the territorial boundaries of the United Republic, be construed strictly. The application of that principle in the interpretation of s 11 of the Act compels me to hold, as I have already indicated, D that the term 'civil proceedings' in the subsection does not embrace prerogative proceedings. In my opinion, s 11 is related to private law litigation only.

Even assuming that the words 'civil proceedings' cover prerogative proceedings, I would still regard Mr Mallaba's contention as untenable in law, because there is E another ground which compels the rejection of that argument. The relief referred to in ss 11(1) of the Act must, in my considered view, be a relief other than an injunction and specific performance. I have not the faintest doubt that to construe the subsection otherwise would make the words 'by way of' therein superfluous. It F is a settled canon of statutory interpretation that a statute should be so construed that, if it can be prevented, no clause, phrase sentence or word shall be superfluous, void or insignificant: See R v Bishop of Oxford (2) at 261. Unless the necessity or intractability of language in a legislation dictates otherwise, it is the G duty of a court to give effect to all words contained in the legislation. I can see no characteristics in ss 11(1). In my opinion, the words 'by way of' are not, and were not intended to be, insignificant in the provision. Those words were intended to, and do, control the meaning to be attached to the word 'relief' preceding them. They have the effect of excluding in intended and specific performance from the H meaning of that word. If the word (relief) were construed to include injunction the subsection would read very oddly, indeed. How can one, I ask, speak of a relief of injunction being granted by way of injunction? Neither to a lawyer not to an expert in English language would that statement make any sense. I refuse to reduce the subsec- I

A tion to the rank of absurdity. In my judgment, the prohibition imposed by the subsection was not intended to, and does not, extent to an application, like the instant one in which the relief sought is injunction itself. I would be skipping the words 'by way of' in the subsection, as the learned Senior State Attorney appears to have done, to hold that the word 'relief' there includes injunction. I can see no B warrant for doing so. On the contrary, I am profoundly convinced that both the law and common sense force one to the view that the use of those words was, as I have already, I hope, sufficiently demonstrated, intended to limit the scope of the meaning of the word 'relief' in the subsection. It is my duty to attach due weight to C the words which Parliament, in its wisdom, has chosen to use. If, in my opinion, Mr Mallaba's argument on the effect of the subsection were right, personal freedoms and rights would have been placed in great jeopardy, as there would be inadequate judicial protection against unlawful conduct on the part of those who D are entrusted with the power of governing this country or determining, non-judicially, the rights of individuals. If that situation were to exist, the rule of law in the country would greatly suffer, with the result that members of the public would be tempted to regard the law as being a series of hazards separating the litigant from justice. The courts must do everything possible under the law to E prevent that wrong impression of the law being formed. The law should be there to promote and not impede justice. In this country, a decision or order of a government minister or official, regardless of his or her rank, cannot outweigh the law. To borrow the argument of Lord Woolf in his speech in the M case supra (at 445H): F

'... circumstances can occur where it is in the interests both of a person who is subject to powers of government and of the government itself that the courts should be in a position to make an order which clearly sets either what should or what should not be done by the government.' G

Any collision between the freedom of the individual and the security of the State, in any sphere of national life, does not, in my considered opinion, dictate the H acceptance of Mr Mallaba's argument. If the law were as contended by the learned Senior State Attorney, justice would have been wearing a bandage over her eyes as she could not bear to see some of the decisions made in her name in that branch of the law. I can find no reason for believing that Parliament could have intended to create such a situation. I

1995 TLR p133

SAMATTA JK

Before parting with this application, I should, I think, say a word or two on one A important point. Since overruling Mr Mallaba's objection to this Court granting an injunction pending the hearing of the application for leave to apply for certiorari, mandamus and prohibition on the ground that the court lacked jurisdiction to do so, I have found a passage in the judgment of Lord Woolf in M's case, supra, which if I B may respectfully say so, plainly demonstrates that the High Court in England has the power to grant an interlocutory injunction pending the hearing of an application for leave to apply for judicial review. The passage, at 463--464, reads: C

What has been said so far does not mean that Garland J was necessarily in order in granting the injunction. The injunction was granted before he had given the applicant leave to apply for judicial review. However, in a case of real urgency this was, the fact that leave had not been granted is a mere technicality. It would be undesirable if, in the situation with which Garland J was faced he had been compelled to give leave because he regarded the case as an D appropriate one for an Interim injunction. In the case of civil proceedings there is recognition of the jurisdiction of the court to grant interim injunctions before the issue of a Writ, etc. (See Ord 29, rule (3)) and in an appropriate case there should be taken to be a similar jurisdiction to grant interim injunctions now under Ord. 53. The position is accurately set out in notice 53/1--14/24 to The Supreme Court Practice 1993 where it is stated that: E

'Where the case is so urgent as to justify it, (the judge) could grant an interlocutory injunction or other interim relief pending the hearing of the application for leave to move for judicial review. But if the judge has refused leave to move for judicial review he is functus officio and has no jurisdiction to grant any form of interim relief. The application for an interlocutory injunction or other interim relief could, however, be renewed before the Court of Appeal along with the renewal of the application for leave to move for F judicial review.'

If I may repeat what I ventured to say in my earlier ruling, there is no room for doubt G that this Court has the power to grant an interlocutory injunction before hearing an application for leave to apply for a prerogative order.

For the reasons I have given, I am satisfied that the law, justice and common sense dictate that I uphold Mr Mkono's contention that s 11 of the Government H Proceedings Act does not stand in the applicant's path in the instant application. Except to autocrats, it must be intolerable that, in a democratic society like ours, courts should be impotent to grant a temporary injunction in favor of an individual who complains of unwarranted or oppressive use of statutory powers by a government minister or official. It should be I

1995 TLR p134

SAMATTA JK

A made perfectly clear, I think that this Court can halt the bulldozer of the State before it squashes the right of an individual, company or society.

The preliminary point fails. B

1995 TLR p134

C

[zRPz]MOSES J MWAKIBETE v THE EDITOR - UHURU, SHIRIKA LA MAGAZETI YA CHAMA AND NATIONAL PRINTING CO LTD 1995 TLR 134 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha D

Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

E AR Civil Application for Revision No 8 of 1994

March 22, 1995

(From the Ruling and Order of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Mkude, J)

Flynote

F Court of Appeal - Jurisdiction - Revisional powers of the Court of Appeal - Whether revisional powers may be invoked as an alternative to the appellate jurisdiction of the Court - Section 2(3) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979.

-Headnote

The applicant sought to move the Court of Appeal to revise a Ruling of the High G Court. The applicant could appeal against that ruling with the leave of the court. But he chose to apply for Revision instead because he feared that processing and finalising the appeal would take a long time.

Held:

H (i) The revisional powers conferred by s 2(3) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979 are not meant to be used as an alternative to the appellate jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal; accordingly, unless acting on its own motion, the Court of Appeal cannot be moved to use its revisional powers under s 2(3) of the Act in cases where the applicant has the right of appeal with or without leave and has not exercised that right;

(ii) The Court of Appeal can be moved to use its revisional jurisdiction I

1995 TLR p135

OMAR JA

under s 2(3) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979 only where there is no A right of appeal, or where the right of appeal is there but has been blocked by judicial process, and lastly, where the right of appeal existed but was not taken, good and sufficient reasons are given for not having lodged an appeal;

(iii) The applicant in this case had a right to appeal and has not given any B good and sufficient reasons why he did not appeal; therefore he cannot move the Court of Appeal to exercise its revisional jurisdiction.

Case Infomation

Application dismissed.

No case referred to. C

Mahatane for the respondents.

[zJDz]Judgment

Omar, JA delivered the following ruling of the Co:

In this Notice of Motion, the applicant seeks to move this Court to exercise its D revisional jurisdiction to revise the Ruling of the High Court in Civil Case No 9 of 1993 and issue an order to the effect that in so far as the said ruling purports to stay the proceedings in relation thereto, purportedly by virtue of s 8 of the Civil Procedure Code pending the determination of Civil Case No 7 of 1993 be set aside E and that in lieu thereof the trial of the case to proceed to its logical conclusion. The revisional jurisdiction of this Court is provided by the Appellate Jurisdiction (Amendment) Act 17 of 1993 s 2(2) and (3). The jurisdiction in ss (2) is exercised either in the course of hearing an appeal or incidental to an appeal. Subsection (3) enables this Court to call for and examine the record of any proceedings before F the High Court for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, order or any other decision made thereon and as to the regularity of any proceedings in the High Court. The present application must fall within the provisions of ss (3). G

Before proceeding to hear such an application on merits, this court must satisfy itself whether it is being properly moved to exercise its revisional jurisdiction. The revisional powers conferred by ss (3) were not meant to be used as an alternative to the appellate jurisdiction of this court. In the circumstances, this court, unless it H is acting on its own motion, cannot properly be moved to use its revisional powers in ss (3) in cases where the applicant has the right of appeal with or without leave and has not exercised that option. In these circumstances, we asked the applicant whether or not the High Court Ruling he is moving this Court to revise is appealable. He I

A conceded that it is appealable with leave. We agree with him. The next question then was why he did not take that course of action. The applicant replied that he decided to come to this Court by way of revisional proceedings because he feared the length of time it takes to process and finalise an appeal particularly in this case where the judge who is involved was not a resident judge at Arusha. Is this B sufficient reason? Mr Mahatane for the respondents did not think so. In his view all that the applicant is trying to do is to use the revisional jurisdiction of this Court as an alternative to its appellate jurisdiction and that would be a misuse of its revisional jurisdiction. C

In our view this Court can be moved to use its revisional jurisdiction under ss (3) only in cases where there is no right of appeal or where there is, it has been blocked by judicial process. Lastly where such right exists but was not taken, good and sufficient reasons are given why no appeal was lodged. D

In the present case we agree with Mr Mahatane that the applicant has not given any good and sufficient reasons why he did not appeal. In his own words he decided to invoke the revisional jurisdiction of this Court as an alternative to the appellate jurisdiction because the latter takes too long to process and finalise. But E the revisional jurisdiction of this Court was not meant to short circuit its appellate jurisdiction, in any case the applicant was not entitled to assume that his intended appeal would take longer than necessary and then shape his court of action on that assumption.

For these reasons we are satisfied that the applicant has not established good and sufficient reasons for wanting to move the revisional jurisdiction of this Court. Accordingly we decline to exercise such jurisdiction and dismiss this application with costs. F

1995 TLR p137

A

[zRPz]AGNES MALODA v RICHARD MHANDO 1995 TLR 137 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Msoffe J

(PC) Civil Appeal No 11 of 1994 B

April 13, 1995

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Role of Assessors in Primary Courts - Assessors to be consulted by Magistrate and there is no summing up to assessors - Magistrates Courts (Primary Courts) (Judgment of Court) Rule 1987, GN No 2 of 1988. C

-Headnote

The High Court, on appeal, considered the procedure adopted by a Trial Court in summing up to assessors in contravention to the Magistrates Courts (Primary Courts) (Judgment of Court) Rules 1987 and its consequences. D

Held:

(i) Since assessors are part of the Court the magistrate has to consult with them and when a unanimous decision is reached he prepares a judgment which all of them have to sign or where the decision is not unanimous the majority have to sign; E

(ii) In the instant case the magistrate summed up to the assessors contrary to the express provisions of Rule 3(3) of GN No 2 of 1988.

Case Infomation

Order accordingly.
No case referred to.
Rweyongeza for the appellant.
[zJDz]Judgment
Msoffe, J:
This is a second appeal. It is common ground that way back in 1987 the respondent's son eloped with the appellant's daughter. The son was prosecuted, convicted and sentenced to three months imprisonment. Further to that, the respondent is said to have agreed to pay the 'costs' of that case on behalf of his son and actually paid part of it. When he failed to pay all the costs the appellant attached the respondent's head of cattle. This prompted the respondent to file the case the subject of this appeal. The two lower courts were of the view that there was nothing to be paid by the respondent as he could not pay for his son. In other words he was not, legally speaking, liable to pay for the misdeeds of his son; and so whatever was taken by the appellant in execution of the warrant of attachment should be returned to him. The appellant thinks the respondent is still liable and hence this appeal.
1995 TLR p138
MSOFFE J
In the memorandum of appeal there are three grounds which were presented and argued by Mr Rweyongeza learned advocate for the appellant. In my judgment though, the 1st ground is enough to dispose off the appeal, it reads:

'1.

THAT, The learned Senior District Magistrate erred in law in upholding a judgment in which the Primary Court Magistrate made a summing up to the assessors.'

A look at the record will show that in summing up to the assessors the Trial Magistrate said somewhere as follows:

'Kwa ufupi napenda kuwajulisha kwamba mzazi halazimiki kumlipia mtoto wake deni lolote analodaiwa au faini yoyote anayetakiwa kuilipa mbele ya Mahakama ila kwa hiari yake.'

After that summing up both assessors were unanimous that the respondent was not duty bound to pay for his son. In saying so the 1st assessor in particular said as follows:

'Iwapori kweli kwamba mzazi, au ndugu yoyote hana lazima ya kumlipia mtoto wake, au ndugu yake, mdai naona anayohaki ya kurudishiwa ng'ombe wake mnoja tu (1) na shs 5,000/= alizolazimishwa kumlipia mtoto wake deni katika madai kati ya huyo mtoto na mdaiwa.' (Emphasis added).

A close look at the above opinion will show that the assessor was heavily influenced or prejudiced by the summing up in issue. In the same way the 2nd assessor was prejudiced. Perhaps both the two lower Courts should have appreciated that the law with regard to the role of assessors in Primary Courts has undergone a fundamental change with the publication of The Magistrates' Courts (Primary Courts) (Judgment of Court) Rules 1987 contained in GN no. 2 of 1988. For case of reference I reproduce below the relevant parts of the rules:

'3 (1) Where in any proceedings the Court has heard all the evidence or matters pertaining to the issue to be determined by the Court, the magistrate shall proceed to consult with the assessors present with the view of reaching a decision of the Court, A

(2) If all the members of the Court agree on one decision, the magistrate shall proceed to record the decision or judgment of the court which shall be signed by all the members.

(3) For the avoidance of doubt a magistrate shall not, in lieu of or in addition to, the B consultations referred to in sub-rule (1) of this Rule, be entitled to sum up to the other members of the court.

4 (1) Where after consultations in accordance with Rule 3 the issue is determined by the vote of the majority, the magistrate shall proceed to record the decision or judgment of the majority which shall be signed by the assenting members of the court. C

(2) The dissenting member of the court shall give a brief statement specifying findings of fact and the law, his decision on the issue and the reasons for it.

(3) The brief statement referred to in sub rule (2) of this Rule shall be recorded by the magistrate immediately below the decision or judgment of the majority and shall be signed by the dissanting member.' D

It is clear from the above mandatory provisions that since assessors are part of the Court the magistrate has to consult with them and when a decision is reached he prepares a judgment which all of them have to sign in case of unanimous E decision, or the majority sign where the decision is not unanimous. In the instant case the magistrate summed up to assessors contrary to the express provisions of Rule 3(3). As if that was not enough, in the summing up he prejudiced them after which they gave their opinions similar to the ones he owned. The error F unfortunately escaped the attention of the senior (now Principal) District Magistrate who sat on appeal, otherwise he should have revised the proceedings and ordered a new trial.

In the result I hereby quash all the proceedings in the Court below and order that the case be heard de novo in the Primary Court of Mwitikira before another magistrate sitting with different assessors. Costs in this appeal and in the courts below will abide the outcome of the new trial. G

A

[zRPz]KAMANDO CHISIMA v REPUBLIC 1995 TLR 140 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dodoma
Judge Mnzavas JJA, Mfalila JJA and Lubuva JJA

B Criminal Appeal 57 of 1994
24th April, 1995
(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Dodoma, Ruhumbika, J)
Flynote

C Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Third appeal - Appellant raises a defence of alibi not raised and considered by second appellate court - Whether there was a point of law to be considered by the third appellate court.

-Headnote

D The appellant was convicted by the Primary Court of robbery. His appeals to the District Court and High Court were unsuccessful. While appealing to the High Court the appellant did not include in his memorandum of appeal the defence of alibi. On further appeal to the Court of Appeal a point of law certified to it was whether failure by the learned judge on second appeal to consider the defence of alibi was fatal. E

Held:

(i) the defence of alibi not being part of the memorandum of appeal filed, there was no basis upon which the learned judge on second appeal could deal with this issue; F

(ii) since a judge on appeal is guided by procedure to deliberate on issues or points raised at the appropriate time through the memorandum of appeal and since the issue of alibi was not before the judge on appeal, no point of law was involved warranting consideration of this Court on a third appeal.

Case Infomation

Appeal dismissed. G

No case referred to.

Kifunda for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

H Lubuva, JA delivered the following considered judgment of the Court.

Before the Primary Court of Mwitikira within Dodoma Rural District the appellant was charged with and convicted of the offence of robbery contrary to ss 285 and 265 of the Penal Code. He was sentenced to a term of imprisonment for fifteen (15) years. On I appeal to the District Court, the appeal was dismissed but the sentence was A enhanced to thirty years imprisonment. Again, he unsuccessfully appealed to the High Court at Dodoma. Dismissing the appeal, the learned judge held that there was ample evidence in support of the charge against the appellant who was sufficiently identified. This is thus a third appeal. B

1995 TLR p141

LUBUVA JA

The appeal before this Court has been lodged with a certified point of law. That is, whether failure by the learned judge on second appeal to consider the defense of alibi raised by the appellant was fatal. The appellant appeared in person at the hearing of this appeal. He has filed six grounds of appeal which in sum total C challenge the learned judge's failure to consider the appellant's defence of alibi. This, we think, is the only legal point for consideration in this appeal. In ground two of the memorandum of appeal, the appellant inter alia complains:

'That the Honourable Appellate Judge misdirected himself in law and fact in failing to evaluate D any defence testimony and that of any witnesses as regants (sic) my where-abouts on the material day.'

On record, the evidence which was accepted and believed as truthful by all the E courts below was that of PW1, PW2 and PW3. According to the evidence, on 4 May 1991 at about 5 pm while PW1 and PW2 were on their way home from Dodoma, on arrival at Mpunguzi village they were joined by Kasiani Ndunguru (PW 3) a teacher at the locality. As PW1, PW2 and PW3 proceeded to their home F village Mtita, the appellant in the company of other bandits who were not traced, waylaid them (PW1, PW2, PW3). In the process, Grace Malolela (PW1) was robbed Shs 6,000/=, a piece of khanga and a watch. The appellant and the other bandits were armed with a gun, clubs and a bush knife. In the course of the G robbery, PW1 and PW2 were also manhandled. In his defence at the trial, the appellant denied his involvement in the commission of the offence in that he was not at the scene of crime when the offence took place. The trial magistrate H rejected the appellant's defence of alibi and found it as a fact that the appellant was sufficiently identified in his participation in the robbery. He was therefore found guilty as charged.

On appeal to the District Court Dodoma, the learned District Magistrate dismissed the appeal on the ground that the identity of the appellant was clearly established from the evidence of PW1 which was corroborated by PW2 and PW3. Secondly, the learned I

1995 TLR p142

LUBUVA JA

A District Magistrate held that the appellant was found in possession of PW1's piece of khanga and PW2's local rate receipt which had been stolen in the course of the robbery and that the appellant also produced Shs 2,220/= as the balance of the money robbed. As already indicated, on second appeal to the High Court, the appeal was dismissed because the learned judge held that it was amply proved that the appellant was involved in the robbery in which PW1 and PW2 were the victims. B

At the hearing of this appeal before us, the appellant who appeared in person, opted not to add anything more to the memorandum of appeal filed. For the respondent Republic Mr Kifunda, learned State Attorney addressed us briefly. He C submitted that this being a third appeal and there being no point of law involved, the appeal should be dismissed. He further submitted that there was no merit in the point of law certified because the issues of the defense of alibi was not raised D before the High Court. Mr Kifunda, learned State Attorney finally submitted that the fact that the defence of alibi was not considered by the learned judge on the second appeal was not fatal. There was sufficient evidence on which to sustain the conviction, Mr Kifunda concluded.

E Now we will examine the merits of the points of law certified to this Court. As seen from the ground of appeal extracted, the gravamen of the complaint against the learned judge is that the defence of alibi raised by the appellant was not considered on appeal before the High Court. Upon our scrutiny of the judgment we F agree that the issue of alibi was not, with respect, expressly dealt with by the learned judge. But then we ask ourselves whether the learned judge can be faulted on that. In our considered view, the answer to that is categorically in the negative. This is for the simple and obvious reason that appeals in any court are a creation of procedure. It is common knowledge that the Civil Procedure Code 1966 and the G Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 provide a procedure to be followed in the processing of civil and criminal appeals respectively. Under such laid down procedure it is provided as to what issues are to be raised and dealt with on appeal. In this case, the issue of alibi was not one of the issues brought before the H learned judge to deal with on appeal. Furthermore, even in the seven point memorandum of appeal filed before the High Court, the question of alibi was not raised. In that situation we are, with respect, in agreement with Mr Kifunda, learned State Attorney that the defence of alibi not being part of the memorandum of appeal filed, there was no basis upon which the learned judge on second appeal could deal with this issue. I

1995 TLR p143

LUBUVA JA

At this juncture it is pertinent for us to make it clear that a judge on appeal is not A there to fish around for any point that may be raised, suggested or thought of at any time in the course of hearing on appeal. He is guided by procedure to deliberate on issues or points raised at the appropriate time through the memorandum of appeal. This was not the case here, the issue was not before the learned judge on appeal. In these circumstances we are, with respect, satisfied that no point of the law was involved. B

On the other hand, even granted that a point of law was involved upon a close scrutiny of the judgment of the High Court on appeal, it seems to us clear that the learned judge dealt with the issue of alibi indirectly. In our view, the learned judge addressed himself on this issue when dealing with the evidence of PW1 (Grace C Malolela). He stated:

'The evidence on record clearly shows that PW1, Grace Malolela identified the appellant, whom she knew by name as Kamando, as one of those people who invaded them as they were on their way home from Dodoma.' (emphasis supplied). D

Again it is on record that the learned judge alludes to the identity of the appellant when he dealt with the evidence of PW3 (Kasiani Ngunguru). There, he stated: E

'The old man rushed back on hearing the alarm raised by the girls. He recognised the appellant as they were dashing away from the girls after robbing them.'(emphasis supplied).

This, to our minds, clearly shows that the learned judge addressed himself on the F crucial issue of the identification of the appellant. That is, that from the evidence, the appellant was properly identified as a participant to the crime. From this it is apparent to us that the learned judge addressed on the fact that the appellant as G identified could not be elsewhere at the time when the crime was committed at the same time when he was seen at the scene of crime. This, to us, was clearly nothing but a concerted effort on the part of the learned judge to deal with the identity of the appellant which aspect indirectly as pointed out covers the issue of alibi. H

In the result, we are satisfied that in the circumstances of the case there was no point of law involved warranting consideration of this Court on a third appeal. We are also satisfied that the offence having taken place during day time, the identity of the appellant was proved satisfactorily. There was ample evidence upon which to sustain the conviction. We dismiss the appeal in its entirety. I

1995 TLR p144

A

[zRPz]PAULO MATHEO v REPUBLIC 1995 TLR 144 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dodoma
Judge Kisanga AG, Ramadhani CJ and Mfalila JJA

Criminal Appeal No 59 of 1994 B
May 8 1995
(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dodoma, Maina, J) C
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Economic and Organized Crime Control Act 1984 - Requirement for the Director of Public Prosecution's consent to prosecute - Consent given after trial had commenced - Whether consent as required by the law - Section 26(1) of the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act 1984. D
-Headnote
The trial of the appellant started as an ordinary trial but upon reaching half-way the character of the offences changed to economic crimes. In compliance with s 26(1) of the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act 1984, the DPP gave his E consent to prosecute, the trial continued and the appellant was convicted. The first appellate court validated the proceedings of the trial court. The appellant further appealed to the Court of Appeal.
Held:
F (i) The consent of the DPP must be given before any trial involving an economic offence can commence; the DPP cannot consent retrospectively;
(ii) In this case the consent of the DPP was not given in accordance with the law.
Case Infomation
Order accordingly G
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mfalila JA delivered the following considered judgment of the court: H
The appellant Paulo Matheo was the first accused at the trial in the District Court at Dodoma where with six other persons he was charged with two counts involving robbery and unlawful possession of a firearm. Five accused were acquitted in both counts, the appellant and the fourth accused were also acquitted on the first count but were convicted on the second count i.e. unlawful posses- I
1995 TLR p145
MFALILA JA
sion of a firearm, and were sentenced to fifteen years imprisonment. On appeal to A the High Court at Dodoma, the appeal of the fourth accused was allowed and he was set free, the present appellant's appeal was only partially successful in that the sentence was reduced to seven years imprisonment, his conviction was confirmed. This is his further appeal. B

However in view of what transpired at the trial, it is not necessary for us to go into the merits of the case. The trial in this case started as an ordinary trial in March 1990, but mid-way through the trial in October 1991 after nine prosecution witnesses had given evidence, the character of the offences was changed to economic crimes and the Director of Public Prosecutions filed both the transfer of C the offences and his consent as required by s 26(1) of the Economic and Organised Crime Control Act, 1984. However both the consent and the transfer which are in the record of trial appear to refer to a different case involving different accused persons although the offence is the same. This means that the trial of the D appellant and his colleagues in the District Court started without the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions in clear violation of s 26(1) which provides as follows:

'26 (1) Subject to the provisions of this section, no trial in respect of an economic offence may E be commenced under this Act save with the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions.'

So that even if the consent filed in record was in respect of this case, it would still F be invalid because such consent must be given before any trial involving an economic offence can commence. The trial cannot start and obtain the consent posthumously as it were, in other words the Director of Public Prosecutions cannot consent retrospectively. In the circumstances the learned judge on first appeal was wrong to validate the proceedings in the trial court in the following words: G

'The required consent by the Director of Public Prosecutions was given as required by law and the transfer of the offence which is an economic offence was also made.' H

However as indicated there was no consent relevant to this case given in accordance with the law.

Accordingly we declare the entire proceedings in the trial court null and void and quash them. The fate of the appellant in these circumstances has exercised our I

1995 TLR p146

MFALILA JA

A minds. He was sentenced to seven years imprisonment which with remission for good conduct amounts to a substantive term of four years and some eight months. He has been in custody since May 1989 this makes it five years to-date. It was in these circumstances that we did not feel inclined to order a retrial of the appellant. But taking into account the nature of the offence involved, we decided to B leave the fate of the appellant into the hands of the Director of Public Prosecutions who will decide whether to mount a fresh prosecution against the appellant in accordance with the law. In the meantime, we order the immediate release of the appellant from prison unless he is lawfully held in connection with some other matter. C

1995 TLR p146

E

[zRPz]GEORGE A MMARI AND ANANDE A MMARI 1995 TLR 146 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Mwaikasu J

(PC) Civil Appeal No 116 of 1994 F
May 14, 1995
Flynote
Probate and Administration - Wills - Attestation of wills - Will drawn by a literate person - When valid - Local Customary Law (Declaration) (No 4) Order 1963, GN 436 of 1963 Rules 5 and 19. G
-Headnote
The appellants challenged the validity of a will drawn by their deceased father while hospitalized bequeathing a house to their stepmother. The will was attested by the said stepmother, i.e. wife of testator, and the doctor who was attending the deceased. H
Held:

(i) For a will drawn up by a literate person to be valid it must be attested, besides the wife (wives), by at least two persons of whom one must be a relative of the deceased;

(ii) The deceased's will was not attested by a relative of the deceased, and it was defective for want of proper attestation. I

1995 TLR p147
MWAIKASU J
Case Infomation
Appeal allowed. A
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mwaikusa, J:
This is a second appeal arising from the decision of Kinondoni District Court in respect of an appeal from Manzese Primary Court concerning Probate and B Administration Cause No 57 of 1993. This appeal is principally centered on a dispute over the legality of the deceased's written will that purported to bequeath the deceased's house situate at Sinza within the City of Dar es Salaam to the respondent, one Afra Fuime. The two appellants namely George Anael Mmari and C Anande Anael Mmari, are the children of the deceased, one Anael Kikoka Mmari.
According to the evidence that was adduced before the trial court, the two appellants are the only children surviving the deceased, born of him with two different mothers who were not cohabiting with the deceased at the time of his D death. He died on 30 April 1993. The deceased was then cohabiting with the respondent who had then lived with him for about fifteen years. During his life time the deceased had managed to acquire various properties including the house in dispute. E
It was while the deceased was sick and admitted at Hindu Mandal Hospital within the City of Dar es Salaam that on 25 January 1995 he is said to have drawn up his will by which he purported to bequeath his various properties to his two children and the house in dispute to the respondent. Such will was attested by the F respondent who is the deceased's wife and one Dr Gloria, only. It is this doctor Gloria who was then attending the deceased while hospitalized at Hindu Mandal hospital. As it will have been noted, besides the respondent, the deceased's wife, the will was actually attested by one witness only, the doctor, one Gloria. Yet in G law, according to Rules (5) and (19) of the Local Customary Law (Declaration) (No 4) Order 1963, GN 436/63, Third Schedule, a will drawn up by a literate person, for it to be valid it must be attested besides the wife (wives), by at least two persons of whom one must be a relative of the deceased. That was clearly not complied H with in the will the subject of this appeal. Apparently the validity of such will was challenged by the two appellants before the trial court, but the trial court honoured such will. The will was challenged for want of a clan member to witness it and that the same had been written under undue influence of the respondent while the deceased was seriously sick. I

A Nevertheless, the lower appellate court, (H Kalombola, Esq SRM), surprisingly found that because the Administrator had not disputed such will, then there was nothing wrong with it, and therefore upheld the decision of the Primary Court to give effect to such will. That once more aggrieved the appellants, hence their appeal to this court. B

As pointed out earlier the deceased's will is clearly defective, for want of proper attestation. It lacked one more witness who ought to have been a relative of the deceased. As such it cannot be effected. It is null and void. In the circumstances, the deceased is to be taken to have died intestate and therefore administration of his estate is to be done in accordance with the applicable law, as if he had died intestate. C

Accordingly when this appeal came up for hearing on 2 February 1995, I allowed the appeal, set aside the order of the lower court, declaring the will null and void, with an order that the estate of the deceased should be administered afresh as if D he had died intestate, and that the case should be remitted back to the lower trial court to make necessary orders for the administration of the deceased's estate, reserving my reasons which I hereby give. E

G

[zRPz]DAUDI SABAYA v REPUBLIC 1995 TLR 148 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Kisanga JJA, Omar JJA and Lubuva JJA

H Criminal Appeal No 67 of 1994
May 23, 1995
(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Mackanja, J)
Flynote
Criminal Law - Murder - Malice aforethought - Self defence - Use of excessive force in self defence - Section 18B(3) of the Penal Code. I

LUBUVA JA

-Headnote

The appellant was charged with and convicted of murder by the High Court. The A trial court found that the appellant killed with malice aforethought ought because he used excessive force and rejected his defence of self-defence. The appellant inflicted several serious cut wounds on the deceased whom he found stealing from the shamba he was guarding and who, after some persuit stopped and started advancing towards the appellant holding a knife in hand. On appeal: B

Held:

(i) Having regard to all the circumstances of the case as a whole the defence of self defence was properly founded;

(ii) The appellant used greater degree of force than was necessary in the circumstances; he should have been found guilty of manslaughter;

Conviction of murder set aside, that of manslaughter substituted. C

Case Infomation

Cases referred to:

(1) Ipabala s/o Ibrahim v. R [1953] 20 EACA 300

(2) Sigismund Palmer v. R [1971] AC 814 D

Miss Mjasiri for the appellant.

Miss Chinguwile for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lubuva, JA delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: E

The High Court of Tanzania sitting in Dar es Salaam (Mackanja, J) convicted the appellant of the offence of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code. He was sentenced to death. From the conviction and sentence, he has appealed to this court. F

As established from the evidence on record, the facts of the case are simple. They may be summarised as follows: The appellant and the deceased lived at Goba, Kinondoni District within the outskirts of Dar es Salaam. The appellant was engaged to guard the farm of one Michael Mushi in which pineapples were grown. On 27 November 1988 at about 8 pm before retiring to bed, the appellant went G around the farm to inspect and ensure that the security position was in order. In the course of his rounds in the farm, the appellant saw the shadow of a moving object. On approaching the object, it dawned on the appellant that it was a man H who was then running away. The appellant pursued the fleeing person shouting 'thief! thief'. The fleeing thief who is the deceased in this case stopped and then advanced towards the appellant holding a knife in his hand. The appellant hit the deceased with a stick which was wrested from him (appellant) by the deceased. As the deceased still persisted in advancing towards the appellant, fearing for his life, the I

A appellant slashed the deceased with a panga. The deceased sustained serious multiple deep injuries over the shoulders and the back. While on the way to the hospital the deceased died.

The appellant was arrested and charged with the offence of murder.

B At the trial it was not in dispute that the appellant caused the death of the deceased. The issue was whether the appellant caused the death of the deceased with malice aforethought. It was the appellant's defence that he killed the deceased who was found at the farm stealing. The learned Trial Judge held that the appellant used excessive force in inflicting several serious cut wounds on the deceased. The appellant was thus convicted of murder. C

In this appeal, Miss Mjasiri, learned counsel from the Tanzania Legal Corporation advocated for the appellant and Miss Chinguwile, learned State Attorney appeared for the respondent, Republic. The memorandum of appeal filed contains three D grounds of appeal which in effect boil down to one point of complaint. That is, that the learned Trial Judge erred in rejecting the appellant's defence of self defence. Arguing on this point Miss Mjasiri, with distinct eloquence, addressed us at length on the fact that in the circumstances of the case the prosecution had failed to prove malice aforethought against the appellant. That the appellant should have E been convicted of the lesser offence of manslaughter and not murder because the appellant caused the death of the deceased in the course of defending himself (appellant) against the threatening deceased, Miss Mjasiri contended. F

In support of her submission, Miss Mjasiri referred us to the case of Ipalala s/o Ibrahim v R (1) on the basis of which she said, the learned Trial Judge had resolved to decide the instant case. Unfortunately, she lamented, the learned Trial Judge came to the conclusion which in her view was not in accord with the principles set out in that case. Miss Mjasiri, also made further reference to the G Privy Council decision in the Australian case of Sigismund Palmer v R (2) which was also considered by the learned Trial Judge. In her submission, she stressed that even though the correct principles on self defence as restated in this case were taken into account in this case, the learned Trial Judge failed to distinguish the circumstances of this case from those in the Palmer case. As a result, in the circumstances of the case, she said, the Trial Judge fell into the error of convicting H the appellant of the offence of murder and not manslaughter.

Miss Chinguwile, learned State Attorney, who as already indicated appeared for the Republic, conceded to the submission that I the appellant should have been convicted of manslaughter and not murder. In view A of the fact that in the evidence on record, the deceased was found stealing from the shamba which the appellant was guarding, the Trial Judge was wrong in rejecting the defence of self defence, Miss Chinguwile contended. She further argued that in view of the provisions s 18A (3) of the Penal Code, the appellant having used more force than was reasonably necessary, the appellant should have been convicted of manslaughter. B

From the record of this case before the High Court and the oral submissions before us at the hearing of this appeal, it is apparent that the essential facts are not disputed. The main question in this appeal is whether the defence of self defence C could in the circumstances of this case be sustained. On this, Miss Chinguwile, the learned State Attorney while in agreement with Miss

Msajiri learned Counsel for the appellant that the appellant used excessive force, categorically asserted that the Trial Judge should have found the appellant guilty of manslaughter because, D she said, the defence of self defence could not be discounted. In order to resolve this issue it is imperative first to have a clear perception of the law as it stands in Tanzania today. This, it appears to us the learned Trial Judge sufficiently E addressed himself on in the judgment in which reference was made to ss 18, 18A and 18B of the Penal Code. These are the provisions which, it should be noted, provide for circumstances in which the right to defend one's self or one's property or others against any unlawful act of seizure, destruction or violence. However, the right of defence provided for under s 18A of the Penal Code is subject to the limitations set out under s 18B which provides: F

18B: (1) In exercising the right of self defence of property, a person shall be entitled only to use such reasonable force as may be necessary for that defence. G

(2) Every person shall be criminally liable for any offence resulting from excessive force used in self defence or in defence of another or in defence of property.

(3) Any person who causes the death of another as the result of excessive force used in defence, shall be guilty of manslaughter. H

Apart from these clear statutory provisions on the defence of self defence in Tanzania, and as correctly pointed out by the learned Trial Judge, case law is another important source of guidance in deciding cases of this nature in Tanzania. In the instant case, the main evidence from which the sequence of events leading to the I

A death of the deceased is reflected in the extra judicial statement of the appellant. This was a statement made by the appellant before a magistrate as a justice of the peace on 3 December 1988, six days after the incident (27 November 1988). This was, to our minds recent enough for the appellant's memory to recount vividly what happened before the death of the deceased. In the statement, the appellant among others said: B

'... Mara niliona kama mtu amekaa. Nikaanza kumsogelea na kabla sijamfikia hatua 3 hivi akaanza kukimbia mimi huku namfukuza na kupiga kelele za mwizi, mwizi.... C

Mara katika kufukuzana huke nilimkuta nikampiqasfimbe mbili ubavuni mara marehemu alininyang'anya fimbe na akatoakisu na kukiweka mkononi ili amijeruhi juu ya mali yangu Kwa bahati mkono wa kushoto nilikuwa na panga hivye kabla hajaanza kunikata nilimuwahi na kuanza kumkata kwa kuwa kulikuwa giza sikujua nimenkata sehemu gani kwani marehemu alikuwa anatake kunirudishia' (emphasis supplied). D

As already pointed out, the learned Trial Judge accepted the evidence of the appellant as the only witness who could tell how the cut wounds on the back of the deceased were inflicted. On this evidence and as the extra judicial statement E extract above shows, it is evident that the appellant while in pursuit of the fleeing deceased from the shamba as a suspected thief, inflicted two blows on the deceased by use of a stick. Thereafter, in the process of the pursuit, according to F the appellant's statement, the deceased having wrested the stick from the appellant held out a knife while advancing to attack the appellant. In these circumstances which were believed by the learned Trial Judge as truthful, could the appellant avail himself of the right of self defence? The learned Trial Judge rejected the defence of self defence when he said: G

'It could be said that the accused was also entitled to arrest the deceased and that he was also entitled to use all reasonable force to subdue the deceased. But it is now clear that the deceased did not resist the arrest through any violence. In my view the two blows which the H accused inflicted on the deceased were unlawful and the deceased was entitled to defend himself. In the circumstances of this case the first two blows were a series of unlawful attacks on the deceased which were committed out of no legal justification.'

From this it is apparent to us that the learned Trial Judge while accepting and relying on the extra judicial statement of the appel- I lant, the analysis and conclusion reached are based on parts of the statement and A not the statement taken as a whole. This, Miss Mjasiri, learned Counsel for the appellant submitted was not proper on the part of the learned Trial Judge because it resulted in the rejection of the defence of self defence raised. Referring to the case of Ipalala s/o Ibrahim v R (1) the learned Trial Judge resolved to decide this B case on the basis of the principles set out in that case. Applying the principle in the Ipalala case to the circumstances of this case, the Trial Judge held that as was the case in the Ipalala case the right of self defence was not established because no unlawful act had been established which from the beginning had posed imminent danger to the appellant. C

It should be noted that the circumstances and facts in the Ipalala case are different from those in the instant case. In the Ipalala case, the appellant killed the deceased who at the time was struggling with the appellant's companion. The appellant hit the deceased from behind with a stick which he (appellant) had D fetched. The blows caused grievous injury and death to the deceased. In defence, it was submitted that the appellant had acted in defence of his companion's person in that the appellant had reasonably feared that the deceased was attempting to kill his companion. Dismissing the appeal, the Court of Appeal for E Eastern Africa re-affirmed the principle that killing of another is justifiable where an accused person acts without vindictive feeling and believes, and has reasonable grounds that a person's life is in imminent peril and that his action is absolutely necessary for the preservation of life. F

The Court further held that there was no basis upon which it could be inferred that the appellant honestly and reasonably believed that his friend's life was in imminent peril and that his action in hitting the deceased on the head was absolutely necessary for the preservation of life. In the instant case, however, with G respect, we agree with Miss Mjasiri, learned Counsel that the circumstances are distinguishable. Here, as the evidence in the extra-judicial statement shows, unlike in the Ipalala case, the life of the appellant himself was threatened and not his companion's. Furthermore, taking into account the sequence of events as H revealed from the extra-judicial statement as a whole and not in portions as the learned Trial Judge did, it seems reasonable to us that the life of the appellant was in imminent peril when the deceased advanced towards him (appellant) threatening to attack (him) with a knife in hand. In that situation, we think it was reasonable for the appellant to take such action as was necessary for the preservation of his life against the I

1995 TLR p154
LUBUVA JA
A deceased's threatened act of violence to his (appellant) body. From this point of view, it seems to us that the first two blows inflicted on the deceased by the appellant were rather more of an action on the part of the appellant taken as a reasonable means to prevent the commission of theft by the deceased at the shamba and not as a series of unlawful acts on the part of the deceased as the Trial Judge held. In our considered opinion, such are the circumstances in which B the defence of self defence could properly be called in.
Having taken the view that the circumstances and the evidence of the case as a whole warranted the invocation of self defence which is enough to dispose of this appeal, we do not think it necessary to address ourselves any further on the case C of Sigismund Palmer v R (2). Our attention was drawn to this case by the learned Counsel for the appellant. The learned Trial Judge relied on the decision of that case for the proposition of the law that if resistance exceeds the bounds of D mere defence and prevention, the defender would himself become an aggressor. With respect, we think this is an overstatement of the law on self defence because in deciding whether it was reasonably necessary to have used as much force as was used, regarding must be had to all the circumstances of the case. That is, E each case in which excessive force is used, must be taken on its own individual merit and not on a generalised basis. That is the general principle which was underscored in the Palmer case in which the defence of self defence was extensively discussed.
F Though as already indicated, there was evidence in support of self defence, it is no gainsay that the force used was excessive. The post mortem examination report bears this out. It shows that the deceased sustained multiple deep cut wounds over the shoulder and on the back with amputed index and middle fingers.
G In Tanzania, the law is clearly spelled out under the Penal Code for a person who causes the death of another as a result of excessive force used in defence. For an offence committed under these circumstances, s 18B(3) of the Penal Code provides for a conviction of manslaughter. In the instant case, we agree with Miss Mjasiri, learned Counsel for the appellant supported by the learned State Attorney H that having regard to all the circumstances of the case as a whole, the defence of self defence was properly founded. We also agree with both learned Counsel that as the appellant used greater degree of force that was necessary in the circumstances, he should have been found guilty of manslaughter and not murder. Had the learned Trial Judge considered the sequence of events leading to the I death of the deceased as a whole and not in phases, no doubt he would well have A come to the same conclusion.
1995 TLR p155
LUBUVA JA
For these reasons, we set aside the conviction for murder and sentence of death. In substitution thereof, we enter a conviction for manslaughter. Taking into account that relevant factors and circumstances of the case we sentence the appellant to five (5) years imprisonment effective from the date of his conviction before the High Court. B

1995 TLR p155

D

[zRPz]FANUEL MANTIRI NG'UNDA v HERMAN MANTIRI NG'UNDA AND TWO OTHERS

1995 TLR 155 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Lubuva JJA

Civil Appeal No 8 of 1995 E

May 24, 1995

(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Moshi, Mushi, J) F

Flynote

Magistrates' Courts - Jurisdiction - Jurisdiction over land held under customary law - Magistrates' Courts Act 1984.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Pleadings - Order of the High Court granting leave for case to proceed before the Resident Magistrate not pleaded - consequences thereof. G

-Headnote

The High Court had given leave for a dispute involving land held under customary law to be heard by the Court of Resident Magistrate. However, the order of the High Court granting leave was not pleaded in the plaint and the trial court came to know about the order when it was produced as an exhibit during trial. It was H evident that the order was granted before proceedings commenced. The trial court heard and determined the suit. On appeal the High Court ruled that the Magistrates' Court had no jurisidiction to entertain the dispute because the order granting leave to the court to hear and determine the dispute was not pleaded in the plaint. On further appeal to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania: I

1995 TLR p156

LUBUVA JA

A Held:

(i) Although the proceedings were commenced without the order of leave of the High Court being produced and pleaded in the plaint that the trial court had jurisdiction, the matter was saved when in the course of evidence the order of the High Court was availed to the trial court;

B (ii) As the order was in existence at the time the proceedings were commenced, as a matter of equity and justice, the proceedings before the Magistrates' Court were not vitiated and the Court was properly vested with jurisdiction over the case.

Case Infomation

Appeal allowed.

C No case referred to.

Jonathan, for the appellant
[zJDz]Judgment
Lubuva, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the court: D
This is a second appeal. It arises from the decision of the High Court of Tanzania (Mushi, J) setting aside the judgment and decree of the Magistrates' Court in RM civil case no 1 of 1992.
E Briefly, the facts that gave rise to the case were as follows. The suit involved a dispute between the Ng'unda clan members over a piece of land in Losaa Village, Hai District, Kilimanjaro Region. In the Magistrates' Court Moshi, the appellant successfully sued the respondents for trespass. He was declared the lawful owner of the land in dispute and the respondents were further ordered to pay compensation of Shs 300,000/= for loss of use and damages to the appellant. F
An order of injunction was also issued to restrain the respondents from entering the disputed land. From that decision of the Resident Magistrate, the respondents appealed to the High Court. Dealing with the appeal, the learned judge without G going into the merits of the appeal disposed of the matter on the ground that the Magistrates' Court had no jurisdiction to adjudicate on this case. In allowing the appeal, the learned judge held that although the Magistrates' Court Moshi had been granted leave of the High Court to entertain the suit, the Court's jurisdiction was H not properly invoked because it was not pleaded in the plaint. The learned judge thus ordered the plaint to be struck out as it was bad in law. Dissatisfied with the decision of the High Court, the appellant has appealed to this Court.
Mr Jonathan learned Counsel who had represented the appellant before the Courts below also appeared for the appellant before us. I
1995 TLR p157
LUBUVA JA
Although he had filed seven grounds of appeal, he preferred to argue only grounds A one and two together in which in his view, the points raised in the rest of the grounds were sufficiently canvassed. In these two grounds the appellant complained that:
1. The learned Judge erred in allowing the appeal on a point not raised in the B memorandum of appeal and not otherwise urged at its hearing.
2. The learned Judge erred in condemning the appellant unheard on the particular point determining the appeal. C Arguing on these grounds, Mr Jonathan, learned Counsel assailed the learned judge in allowing the appeal on a point which had not been raised on appeal on which the appellant had not been given a chance to be heard. He further submitted that it was erroneous on the part of the learned judge to allow the appeal on the ground that the Court (Magistrates' Court Moshi) had no jurisdiction over the case D because leave of the High Court had been granted and the order was tendered in Court as exhibit P1 in the course of the proceedings in court. Mr Jonathan however, conceded that it was not proper for the court to proceed with the hearing of the case on the assumption that the Court had jurisdiction to deal with the case. E Mr Jonathan however, firmly maintained that in this case, though initially the proceedings were commenced when the order granting leave of the High Court due to oversight had not been availed to the Court, the situation was saved when the order was produced in court as a matter of evidence. He finally submitted that F as the court order granting leave was issued on 29 November 1991, at the time of the commencement of the proceedings (9 January 1992) the court was properly vested with jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the case. He prayed the Court to allow the appeal and order the case to be remitted to the High Court to be heard on merit. G

On behalf of the other respondents, Ibrahim Athumani Ng'unda, the second respondent briefly addressed the Court. He stated that the respondents were not aware that leave of the High Court had been granted vesting jurisdiction in the Magistrates' Court Moshi to hear this case. However, at the Court's prompting that H the High Court order granting leave was tendered in Court as exhibit P1, he (Ibrahim Athumani Ng'unda)did not pursue this point any further. As for the arguments raised in support of the appeal, Ibraham Athumani Ng'unda, was of the view that since the issues involved were of a legal nature, they (respondents) had I

1995 TLR p158

LUBUVA JA

A left the matter the Court to decide according to the law and merit of the case.

The determination of this appeal turns around the issue whether the Magistrates; Court Moshi had jurisdiction to hear the case. This is an issue which is governed by the provisions of s 63(1) of the Magistrate's Courts Act, 1984 which provides: B

'63 (1) Subject to the provisions of any law for the time being in force where jurisdiction in respect of the same proceedings is conferred on different courts, each court shall have a concurrent jurisdiction therein: C

Provided no civil proceedings in respect of marriage, guardianship or inheritance under customary law, or the incidents thereof, and no civil proceedings in respect of immovable property, other than proceedings relating to land held on a Government lease or a right of occupancy granted under the Land Ordinance or proceedings under Section 22 or 23 of the Land Ordinance shall be commenced in any Court other than a primary court unless the D Republic is a party thereto or unless the High Court gives leave for such proceedings to be commenced in some other Court; (emphasis supplied)

E From the wording of this provision, it is unambiguously clear that suits involving land held under customary law are to be instituted before the primary court unless leave of the High Court is obtained for other courts to entertain such cases of this nature. In this case, the fact is that the Magistrates' Court Moshi had by order of F the High Court been granted leave to have the proceedings of the case commenced in that Court. However, in the plaint, it was not indicated that leave had been granted or that the Court had jurisdiction to deal with the case. As a result, the learned judge on appeal held that such omission in the pleadings was fatal. Furthermore, from the record, it is apparent that the order of the High Court G granting leave was produced in court as exhibit (P1) in the course of evidence by the appellant (original plaintiff). That to us clearly shows that the proceedings before the Magistrates' Court Moshi were commenced before the order of the High Court was availed to the court. For that reason, the learned judge held that the Court had assumed jurisdiction which it did not have. The plaint was thus ordered H to be struck out. In this connection, with respect, we do not accept Mr Jonathan's complaint that the learned judge decided the appeal on the question of jurisdiction which was not raised or on which the appellant was not heard. This we think is baseless because the record clearly shows that the matter was raised I

1995 TLR p159
LUBUVA JA
in the written statement of defence at the trial and the learned Counsel is also on A record addressing himself on this point on appeal before the learned judge. We reject that ground.
The question of jurisdiction for any court is basic, it goes to the very root of the authority of the court to adjudicate upon cases of different nature. In our considered view, the question of jurisdiction is so fundamental that the courts B must as a matter of practice on the face of it be certain and assured of their jurisdictional position at the commencement of the trial. This should be done from the pleadings. The reason for this is that it is risky and unsafe for the court to proceed with the trial of a case on the assumption that the court has jurisdiction to C adjudicate upon the case. For the court to proceed to try a case on the basis of assuming jurisdiction has the obvious disadvantage that the trial may well end up in futility as null and void on grounds of lack of jurisdiction when it is proved later as matter of evidence that the court was not properly vested with jurisdiction. D
Addressing himself on this point, with respect, we are in agreement with the learned judge's reasoning behind the logic of requiring leave of the High Court when he said: E

'The purpose of obtaining leave is to show that the RM's Court or District Court has been given special jurisdiction to determine cases of land held under customary law. This leave is the key to the opening or instituting the suit in the RM's or District Court. Jurisdiction of the Court must be evident on the fact of the plaint and not a matter of evidence to be gathered at the trial. In fact F not only that the plaint should state that such leave had been granted, but the High Court order granting such leave should form part of the plaint as an annexure....'

This, we are satisfied, was a correct restatement of the principle involved in the G Court's ascertainment of its jurisdiction at the commencement of cases. In the circumstances of this case, where as already indicated, the jurisdiction of the court was not included in the plaint and the Court's order granting leave to the Magistrates' Court Moshi was availed at a later stage of the trial, was the court's H jurisdiction ousted? Mr Jonathan, learned Counsel for the appellant has contended that as the High Court order granting leave was already issued since 29 November 1991 and the court proceedings before the Magistrates' Court were commenced on 9 January 1992, the court was vested with juridiction to try the case.
Indeed it is a gainsay that the court order exhibit P1 granting I
1995 TLR p160
LUBUVA JA
A leave was issued by the High Court on 29 November 1991. For some reason however the order was not availed to the Magistrates' Court Moshi by 9 January 1992 when the proceedings were commenced. It was on 5 June 1992 when, in the course of the proceedings that the order was tendered in court as exhibit P1. In these circumstances, we think the situation is different. That is, at the B commencement of the proceedings, the order granting leave was already in existence in which case the court of the Resident Magistrate Moshi was vested with jurisdiction over the case. To our minds, the situation would be different if C there was no order at all in existence at the time of the commencement of the proceedings as there would be no legal basis upon which the court could adjudicate upon the case. On the other hand if the order of the High Court was issued after the commencement of the proceedings, such order would not operate retrospectively so as to validate the proceedings which had commenced previously. Here, as already explained the order granting leave in terms of s 63(1) D of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 was already in existence when the proceedings commenced but had not then been communicated to the court. It was communicated later in the course of evidence. In our view, the order granting leave having been tendered in court as exhibit in the course of the evidence, it formed part of the record. E

In the result, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, we are with respect, in agreement with Mr Jonathan, learned Counsel for the appellant that although the proceedings were commenced without the order of leave of the High Court being produced and the fact that it was not pleaded in the plaint that the F court had jurisdiction, the matter was saved when in the course of evidence, the order of the High Court of 29 November 1991 was availed to the court. As the order was in existence at the time when the proceedings were commenced we are of the settled view that as a matter of equity and justice, the proceedings G before the Magistrates' Court were not vitiated and that the court was properly vested with jurisdiction over the case.

In concluding this matter, we wish to re-emphasize one point. That is, that even H though we have found in the particular circumstances of this case that the non-availability of the order of the High Court granting leave at the commencement of the proceedings did not vitiate the trial by the Magistrates' Court, as a matter of practice, it is essential for the courts at all times in the first instance to ascertain from the pleadings stage if they are properly vested with jurisdiction and not to let the matter to chance. Furthermore, it is I also our view that in order to control and avoid unscrupulous litigants from taking A advantage of obtaining leave of the High Court after the commencement of the proceedings, the courts should be very strict and meticulous in scrutinizing the orders for such leave when produced in court at the appropriate time of pleadings. B

1995 TLR p161

LUBUVA JA

For these reasons, we allow the appeal and set aside the judgment and decree of the High Court. We also order that the matter be remitted to the High Court for hearing the appeal on its merit before another judge. It is accordingly ordered. Each party to bear its own costs of this appeal. C

1995 TLR p161

D

[zRPz]TRANSPORT EQUIPMENT LTD v DEVRAM P VALAMBHIA 1995 TLR 161 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Mfalila JJA

Civil application No 46 of 1994 E
May 24, 1995
(For the revision of the judgment, decree and order of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Rubama, J) F
Flynote
Court of Appeal - Revisional jurisdiction - Revision by the Court of Appeal of Tanzania - When such revision is available - Section 4(3) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979. G
-Headnote
In this application the applicant sought to move the Court of Appeal of Tanzania to revise the judgment, decree and order of the High Court. The application was brought under powers of revision given to the Court of Appeal by the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979 as amended by Act No 17 of 1993. The Court of Appeal considered, inter alia, when such powers of revision can be exercised. H
Held:
(i) The appellate jurisdiction and the revisional jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal of Tanzania are, in most cases, mutually exclusive; if there I
1995 TLR p162
RAMADHANI JA
A is a right of appeal then that right has to be pursued and, except for sufficient reason amounting to exceptional circumstances, there cannot be resort to the revisional jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal;
(ii) The fact that a person, through his own fault, has forfeited his right of appeal cannot amount to exceptional circumstances;
B (iii) If a party does not have an automatic right of appeal then he can use the revisional jurisdiction after he has sought leave to appeal but has been refused;
(v) The Court of Appeal, may suo motu, embark on revision whether or not the right of appeal exists, and whether or not it has been exercised in the first instance.
C (vi) In the present application the applicant had an automatic right of appeal which was not utilized due to the applicant's own fault.
Case Infomation
Application dismissed.
Cases referred to:
D (1) Jewels & Antiques(T) Ltd v. National Shipping Agencies Co Ltd [1994] TLR 107.
Mbuya Shayo, Rutabingwa and Mrs Oriyo for applicant.
M Maira and M Marando for respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
E Ramadhani, JA delivered the ruling of the court:
This is an application by Transport Equipment Ltd moving this Court to revise the judgment, decree and order of Rubama, J in Civil Case No 210 of 1989 dated 12 February and 22 March 1991. The application is brought under the new powers of F revision given to this court by s 4(2) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 as amended by Act No 17 of 1993.

At the hearing of this application, the respondent, Devram P Valambhia, through his learned advocates, Mr Moses Maira and Mr Mabere Marando, came up with a G preliminary objection containing two points. First, the powers of revision granted to this Court by Act No 17 of 1993 came into force on 24 December 1993 (GN 908/93), so, he argued, the powers cannot operate retrospectively to affect rights which vested since 1991. He submitted that this application is incompetent and should be struck out. Secondly, the respondent argued that s 4(2) of the appellate H Jurisdiction Act, provides for revisional powers where there is an appeal pending before the Court.

It was pointed out to Mr Marando, who started arguing the objection, that the application has been brought under ss (3) and not ss (2) of s 4. Mr Marando conceded that error, admitted that I ss (3) is wider and does not require an appeal to be pending. After being allowed to A amend the motion by substituting ss (3) for ss (2), Mr Marando argued that the application is still misconceived as ss (3) can only be invoked where there is no right of appeal.

1995 TLR p163

RAMADHANI JA

It is our considered opinion that the second point, that is, whether or not revision under ss (3) of s 4 is available where there is a right of appeal, is enough to B dispose of this preliminary objection. However, in order to make the ruling meaningful a brief court history of the parties is necessary. For clarity we shall use their names rather than legal labels as these have alternated a number of times. The present applicant shall simply be referred to as TEL while the respondent as Valambhia. C

On 22 August 1989 TEL filed a plaint against Valambhia seeking monies then with the Bank of Tanzania to be paid to TEL. On 29 August 1989 Mr Ole Mboko, learned advocate for TEL, told Nchalla, J that he was holding a brief for Mr Mkatte, learned counsel for Valambhia, and that the suit had been 'Settled amicably out of court'. D The learned judge gave an order to that effect.

Valambhia filed a chamber application to set aside the order of 29 August 1989 marking the suit settled out of court, alleging that fraud was used to obtain it. Mr E Mbuya, learned advocate who had taken over the case for TEL, was aware of the hearing date of the application but was absent on 10 December 1990 and so it was heard ex-parte. On 28 December 1990 Rubama, J set aside the order marking the suit as settled out of court.

Valambhia, on the same day, 28 December 1990, filed a written statement of F defence (WSD) and a counter-claim for 45% of the proceeds of the money due from the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania to TEL. A reply to the WSD and a WSD to the counter-claim were ordered to be filed by 25 January 1991 and the hearing was to be on 1 February 1991. G

On the latter date Mr Mbuya came with two applications: extending the time within which to file a reply and a WSD to the counter-claim to 8 March 1991, and adjournment of the hearing of the suit to the second week of March, 1991. The two applications were refused, the plaint was dismissed, the counter-claim was H granted and Valambhia was declared entitled to 45% of the money as prayed. The learned judge also ordered Valambhia to prove quantum of general damages by affidavit to be filed on 5 March 1991. TEL again did not file a counter-affidavit on quantum and was absent on the date set for the proof thereof. General damages were granted ex-parte. I

1995 TLR p164

RAMADHANI JA

A TEL being aggrieved by the above decisions filed a notice of appeal in this Court on 19 February 1991. However, a copy of that was not served on Valambhia. TEL became aware of the non-service on 23 April 1991 when he received a copy of a notice of motion by Valambhia seeking to strike out that notice of appeal. Despite B that discovery, TEL did not file a notice of motion seeking to enlarge time within which to serve a copy of the notice of appeal on Valambhia until six months later, that is on 23 October 1991.

The matter went to Mfalila, JA for enlargement of time in which to serve a copy of the notice of appeal to Valambhia. That was refused and the reference from that C refusal was also dismissed by three judges of this court. TEL returned again with an application for a review of the ruling of that reference relying on the inherent jurisdiction of this court. There was a dispute as to whether or not we have inherent jurisdiction. That issue was referred to the full bench of this court which D ruled that there is inherent jurisdiction to review our decision in certain circumstances. So, the matter reverted to the three judges who, after hearing submissions, corrected certain errors but found 'no sufficient grounds for reviewing our previous ruling as asked.' That was on 12 September 1994.

E This application to revise the decision of Rubama J comes to us from that background, that is, after the right of appeal was lost through the fault of the applicant himself.

As already said Mr Marando's argument was that the door of revision is only open to a person who does not have a right of appeal and that the door is closed to the present applicant who had the right of appeal, tried to exercise it but was F unsuccessful because of his failure to fulfil certain prerequisite conditions.

Mr Marando said that the Appellate Jurisdiction Act is silent on the principle he has submitted but he contended that that is the principle governing revision in the lower courts. He cited s 79(1) of the Civil Procedure Code and also s 22 of the G Magistrates Courts Act, 1984 for the revisional powers of the district Court over the Primary Courts and s 43 and 44 of the same Act for the revisional powers of the High Court.

H The applicant was represented by a team of four advocates: Mr Everest Mbuya, Mr Shayo, Mrs Oriyo and Mr Rutabingwa. The first to respond was Mr Mbuya who said that s 44(1)(b) of the Magistrates Courts Act is saved by s 79(2) of the CPC. He then pointed out that s 44(1)(b) of the Magistrates Courts Act has wider powers of revision that s 79(1) of the CPC. Mr Mbuya argued that s 44(1)(b) of the Magistrates Courts Act, negates the principle pro- I pagated by Mr Marando. Mr Mbuya pointed out further that s 4(3) of the Appellate A Jurisdiction Act offers a party a choice of coming to this Court on appeal or for revision. He submitted that where a party has a good reason he can still seek revision after he has failed to prosecute an appeal. However, he did not say what is a good reason. B

1995 TLR p165

RAMADHANI JA

Mr Shayo also took his turn to address the Court. He said that the rights of revision and appeal under s 4(3) are concurrent and simultaneous and that there is no limitation. May we stop here and observe that we cannot pretend that we have understood what he meant by 'concurrent and simultaneous'. C

In reply, on behalf of the respondent, Mr Maira maintained that it is irregular for a party to choose both appeal and revision at the same time, even under s 44(1)(b) of the Magistrates Courts Act.

Section 79 of the CPC restricts revision to where there is no right of appeal. Subsection (1) of that section provides as follows: D

'The High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by an court subordinate to the High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto ... (emphasis is ours) E

However, that limitation is absent in ss 22, 43 and 44 of the Magistrates Courts Act, contrary to what Mr Marando submitted. In fact, as Mr Mbuya pointed out, s 44(1)(b) of the Magistrates Courts Act provides for very wide powers of revision that what is contained in s 79(1) of the CPC. That section provides: F

'(1) In addition to any other powers in that behalf conferred upon the High Court, the High Court -

(a) ...

(b) may, in any proceeding of a civil nature determined in a district court or a court of a G resident magistrate, on application being made in that behalf by any party or of its own motion, if it appears that there has been an error material to the merits of the case involving injustice, revise the proceedings and make such decision or order therein as it sees fit.' H

There is a proviso to the effect that an order shall not be made to the adverse interest of a party without being given an opportunity of being heard.

We must admit that it is difficult to reconcile ss (1)(b) of s 44 of the Magistrates Courts Act with s 79(1) of the CPC. And yet, ss (2) of s 79 of the latter legislation expressly saves the revisional powers I

1995 TLR p166

RAMADHANI JA

A of the High Court under the Magistrates Courts Act. Section 79(2) provides:

'(2) Nothing in this section shall be construed as limiting the High Court's power to exercise revisional jurisdiction under the Magistrates Courts Act, 1963.' B

We have not been referred to any authority which has decided on these two provisions. The reconciliation of the two sections is not an issue before us. These enactments were cited to us by way of analogy to help us determine when the right of revision is available under s 4(2) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act. But, as C we have said earlier, we cannot find that assistance from the provisions cited to us.

The issue we have to decide, also arose in this court in M/s Jewels & Antiques (T) Ltd v M/s National Shipping Agencies Co Ltd (1). The applicant obtained an D ex-parte judgment against the respondent in Civil Case No 51 of 1984 in the High Court at Arusha. However, he found some errors in that judgment and sought a review to correct them by filing, in the same court, Misc. Civil Application No 14 of 1991. The errors apparent on the judgment and decree were corrected. A year later he filed Misc. Civil Application No 57 of 1993 in the same court seeking to E correct errors due to a accidental slip or omission in Misc. Civil Application No 14 of 1991. The matter went before the same judge who dismissed the application because what was complained against was not an accidental omission but was a specific finding by which the prayer was refused for lack of supporting material. The learned judge was thus functus officio. F

So, the applicant sought to come to this court to appeal against the decision in Misc Civil Application No 57 of 1993. He first filed a notice of appeal and then sought leave to appeal to this court but that was refused by the High Court. The G applicant then approached this court through revision in Revision No 26 of 1994.
At the hearing, the learned advocate for the respondent had a preliminary objection containing inter alia, a ground that the applicant cannot use the revisional H jurisdiction of this court as he had already filed a notice of appeal in this very court.
The preliminary objection was upheld on another ground. Nevertheless, this Court, with respect to the ground mentioned above, had this to say:

'We are satisfied that this ground is misconceived. As we have I indicated earlier in this judgment, the applicant resorted to the revisional jurisdiction of this A court when the appellate door was blocked by the dismissal of his application for leave.'

1995 TLR p167

RAMADHANI JA

That means: if the applicant had been granted leave to appeal, and so earned the right to appeal, then that would have barred him from the revisional jurisdiction of this court. That is, revisional jurisdiction is exercisable only where there is no right B of appeal.
It has to be remembered that in that application the applicant did not have an automatic right of appeal. He had to earn that right through leave. In the present application before us, however, TEL had an automatic right of appeal but owning to his own fault he was unable to utilise it. C
The appellate jurisdiction and the revisional jurisdiction of this court are, in most cases, mutually exclusive. If there is a right of appeal then that has to be pursued and, except for sufficient reason amounting to exceptional circumstances, there D cannot be resort to the revisional jurisdiction of this court. The fact that a person through his own fault has forfeited that right cannot, in our view, be an exceptional circumstance. If a party does not have an automatic right of appeal then he can use the revisional jurisdiction after he has sought leave but has been refused. However, the court may, suo motu, embark on revision whether or not the right of E appeal exists or whether or not it has been exercised in the first instance.
In the circumstances the preliminary objection is upheld. This application is misconceived and is therefore dismissed with costs for two counsel. F

1995 TLR p168

A

[zRPz]AGROVETY AND CONSTRUCTION CO LTD v SALUM SAID KLEB 1995 TLR 168 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mwaikasu J

Civil Case No 173 of 1990 B
June 1995
Flynote
C Civil Practice and Procedure - Pleadings - Application for Amendment of Written Statement of Defence - What court to take into account when deciding whether or not to allow an application to amend a written statement of defence - Order 6 r 17 of the Civil Procedure Code.
-Headnote
D In this case the High Court considered the facts it should take into account when exercising its discretion whether or not to grant an application to amend pleadings.
Held:
E (i) The import of the provision under Rule 17 of Order VI of the Civil Procedure Code is that though a court has been vested with a discretion to grant an amendment as applied for by either party, such discretion may only be exercised where the amendment appears to the court to be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties;
F (ii) The intended amendment in this case is unnecessary for the purpose of determining the real question between the parties.
Case Infomation
Application dismissed.
Cases referred to:
G (1) Eastern Bakery v. Casteling [1948] EA 461
(2) Australian Steam Navigation Co Ltd v. Smith & Sons [1889] 14 AC 316
Muccadam for applicant.
Dr Lamwai for respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
H Mwaikasu, J:
This is an application for leave to amend a written statement of defence concerning the validity of the revocation of the defendant's right of occupancy in respect of the suit farmland. The intended amendment is also to include the pleading that the declaration sought by the plaintiff is time-barred. I
1995 TLR 169
MWAIKASU J
On the authority of Eastern Bakery v Casteling (1) which citation appears to be A incorrectly made, and the case of Australian Steam Navigation Co Ltd (2) at 318, it has been submitted by Mr Muccadam, learned counsel for the defendant/applicant that the position of the law is that in the interest of justice amendments to the Written Statement of Defense should be liberally allowed. He therefore prayed that B the amendments sought be allowed particularly as the case was just starting.

That has been protested by Dr Lamwai, learned counsel for the plaintiff/respondent on the grounds that though conceding on the principle of law relating to amendments as laid down in the two cases cited above, and as also provided for under Order 6 rule 17 of the CPC in exercising its discretion to grant amendments, C the court must look at the pleadings to determine whether the amendment is necessary as the purpose of an amendment is to assist the court to determine the real issue in controversy between the parties. To that end Dr Lamwai has D submitted that counsel for the defendant/applicant had failed to show the purpose to be served by the amendment in this case.

It has been further argued by counsel for the plaintiff/respondent inter alia that the amendment sought is intended to supply evidence that the allocation was wrong E and bad in law adding that the same could easily be supported by production of the revocation order as evidence for the same. A further contention for the plaintiff/respondent is that the combined effect of the defendant/applicant's pleadings in para 2 of the WSD which is to the effect that he has at all times been F the lawful owner of the disputed land, producing a copy of the certificate of right of occupancy in support thereof, and in para 3 of the WSD which is to the effect that the disputed land had been wrongly allocated to the plaintiff/respondent, for which annexure 'A' would make valuable evidence in court, is to bring up in the pleadings such issue of the unlawfulness of the revocation of the G defendant's/respondent's title to the disputed land.

As regards the issue of limitation which has not been pleaded in the WSD but also the subject of the intended amendment, it has been argued for the plaintiff/respondent that the same could still be argued after simply serving the H plaintiff/respondent with notice of the intention to plead the same at the hearing.

Other arguments for the plaintiff/respondent border on the merits of the case and therefore have been omitted for the purpose of this ruling.

Accordingly counsel for the plaintiff/respondent has prayed to I

1995 TLR 170

MWAIKASU J

A have this application for leave to amend the WSD dismissed with costs for being not necessary.

In determining this application the first reference point is the provision under Order 6 rule 17 of the CPC. It is there provided as follows and I quote:

B 'The court may at any stage of the proceedings allow either party to alter or amend his pleadings in such manner and on such terms as may be just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties. (Emphasis supplied.) C

As I take it, the import of the provision under rule 17 of Order 6, of the CPC above quoted is that though a court has been vested with a discretion to grant an amendment as applied for by either party, such discretion may only be exercised where the amendment appears to the court to be necessary for the purpose of D determining the real questions in controversy between the parties.

To the same effect was the decision of their Lordships in the case of Australian Steam Navigation Co Ltd v Smith & Sons (2) at 319, where they had this to say: E

'Their Lordships are strong advocates for amendment whenever it can be done without injustice to the other side, and even where they have been put to certain expense and delay, yet if they can be compensated for that in any way, it seems to their Lordships that an F amendment ought to be allowed for the purpose of raising the real question between the parties. That however is in the discretion of the court.' (Emphasis supplied).

G In the light of the undisputed pleadings before this court relating to proceedings in Misc. Civil Case No 76 of 1985, whereby the revocation of the defendant/respondent's title to the disputed land was challenged by the defendant/respondent and the matter was then resolved in his favour, the intended amendment relating to the validity of such a revocation in no way can help this H court in determining the real question in controversy between the parties. In fact, were that to be allowed it could be embarking on an improper procedure for challenging the validity of such revocation. For the proper procedure is the one that was adopted in Misc Civil Case No 76 of 1985, by which such revocation said to be wrongful was challenged by way of prayers for the issuance of prerogative orders of certiorari. It is to be noted that even if such procedure were to be I resorted to that cannot be done by way of defence in the suit before this court, as A that would be an improper procedure. And above all a revival of such contention would not be entertained for being res judicata in relation to Misc Civil Case No 76 of 1985

I therefore rule that the intended amendment of the defendant/applicant's WSD in order to raise the question of alleged wrongful revocation of the B defendant/applicant's right of occupancy on 8 August 1983, in respect of the disputed farmland is unnecessary for the purpose of determining the real question between the parties in this case.

The question of limitation being a point of law, though not pleaded in the WSD, C may, as counsel for the plaintiff/respondent has rightly pointed out, be raised at any other stage in the course of the hearing of the suit subject to reasonable notice to the other party of the intention to raise such an issue. It is not therefore one that calls for the amendment of the pleadings as a matter of necessity, for the purpose of determining the real question in controversy between the parties. D

Accordingly I rule that neither does the question of limitation call for the amendment of the defendant/applicant's WSD as a necessary measure for the purpose of determining such issue in controversy between the parties. E

In the circumstances I dismiss this application with costs. Order accordingly. F

A

[zRPz]HEMED ABDALLAH v REPUBLIC 1995 TLR 172 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Makame JJA, Omar JJA and Lubuva JJA B

Criminal Appeal No 167 of 1994 C
June 1, 1995
(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Bahati, J)
Flynote
Evidence - Confession - Retracted confession - Court accepts such evidence - Court warns itself of the danger of convicting on the basis of the uncorroborated retracted confession - Whether Court must give reasons. D
-Headnote
The High Court convicted the appellant of murder on the basis of his retracted confession. Before convicting the court warned itself of the danger of basing the conviction on an uncorroborated retracted confession. On appeal the appellant argued that the trial court's conviction should be faulted because the learned Trial Judge did not give reasons why he relied on the uncorroborated confession. E
Held:

(i) Generally it is dangerous to act upon a repudiated or retracted confession unless it is corroborated in material particulars or unless the court, after full consideration of the circumstances, is satisfied that the confession must but be true; F

(ii) Once the trial court warns itself of the danger of basing a conviction on uncorroborated retracted confession and having regard to all the circumstances of the case it is satisfied that the confession is true, it may convict on such evidence without any further ado; G

(iii) It is not a requirement of the law that reasons have to be given for the trial court's finding that there is no danger in accepting a retracted confession;

(iv) The learned Trial Judge found no danger in founding a conviction on the confessional statement because he was satisfied that the confession was true. H

Case Infomation
Appeal dismissed.
Cases referred to:
(1) Tuwamoi v. Uganda [1967] EA 84
(2) Bombo Tomola v. R [1980] TLR 254 I
1995 TLR p173
LUBUVA JA
(3) Ali Salehe Msutu v. R [1980] TLR 1 A
(4) Hatibu Gandhi alias Captain Hatty Macghee, Criminal Appeal No 3 of 1986 (Unreported)
Kalolo for the appellant.
Kiwanga for the respondent. B
[zJDz]Judgment

Lubuva, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

In a trial before the High Court (Bahati, J) sitting in Dar-es-Salaam the appellant, Hemed Abdallah was charged with and convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code. He was sentenced to death. This appeal is against the conviction and sentence. C

Briefly, the facts of the case as established by the prosecution are simple. They are that the appellant and the deceased were man and wife who lived at Mlandizi, Kibaha District, Coast Region. At the trial the prosecution case against the D appellant was wholly based on the statement which the appellant had made to the police and the extra judicial statement. There was no witness who saw the appellant attacking the deceased. Rashid Abdallah (PW1) the elder brother of the appellant is the only witness whose evidence throws light on the background to the tragic death of the deceased and what happened shortly after the incident. According to PW1, the appellant and the deceased led an unhappy family life E because the appellant suspected the deceased, his wife, of having sexual affairs with other men. The appellant thus threatened to divorce the deceased but PW1 managed to effect a reconciliation between the appellant and the deceased. It was F PW1's further evidence that on the day of the incident which was not long after the reconciliation, PW1 called at the house of the appellant where he (PW1) found the deceased already dead with a serious injury on her head. PW1 also saw an axe stuck on the head of the deceased. The appellant was nowhere around the G scene of crime when PW1 arrived. He (appellant) was arrested the next day as he was coming from a nearby forest where he had been hiding.

As already indicated, the next crucial evidence against the appellant was the extra H judicial statement (Exhibit P1) which the appellant had made to the Justice of the Peace (PW3). In this statement, the appellant clearly admits killing the deceased by using an axe. A detailed narration of the event leading to the death of the deceased is set out in the statement.

At the trial defending himself in a sworn statement the appellant I

A retracted the extra judicial statement. He claimed that the statement was made under duress and that the police had forced him to repeat before the Justice of the Peace what he had stated in the statement to the police. Having retracted the confessional statement, the appellant vehemently denied any involvement in the death of the deceased. He further claimed that he could not have killed the B deceased because on 25 August 1984, when the incident took place, he had gone to the forest to check on his traps and returned home the following day when he found his wife dead. The learned Trial Judge after holding a trial within a trial was satisfied that the appellant had voluntarily made the extra judicial statement and that it was true. Consequently, the appellant was convicted on the basis of this evidence. C

In this appeal the appellant, who was represented by Mr Kalolo, learned counsel, filed two grounds of appeal. Firstly, it was contended that the trial court erred in law and fact in convicting the appellant on the basis of the repudiated and retracted D statements. Secondly, that the trial court erred in law in finding and holding that malice aforethought had been proved. In regard to ground one, Mr Kalolo, learned counsel submitted that as the appellant had retracted the confessional statement to the Justice of the Peace, it was not enough for the Trial Judge to warn himself of E the danger of convicting on the basis of such evidence. The learned Trial Judge had to give reasons why he considered that there was no danger in basing a conviction on the evidence in this case. As no reasons were given in the instant case, Mr Kalolo, learned counsel, urged it was erroneous on the part of the learned F Trial Judge to convict the appellant solely on this evidence.

Responding to the appellant's argument on this ground, Ms Kiwanga, learned State attorney who appeared for the Republic, respondent maintained that the retracted extra judicial statement was properly admitted by the learned Trial Judge who had G followed the proper procedure in holding the trial within a trial. Furthermore, Ms Kiwanga, learned State attorney submitted that in coming to the conclusion to convict the appellant the learned Trial Judge was not influenced by one single H factor but had taken into account all the surrounding circumstances of the case. For instance, Ms Kiwanga pointed out the details of the sequence of events leading to the death of the deceased which were given by the appellant; the family life of the appellant and the deceased as given by Rashid Abdallah (PW1), the elder brother of the appellant; the question of torture was not raised at the trial within a trial and not with the Justice of the Peace I and no marks of injuries were seen when the appellant was physically examined A by the Justice of the Peace. On the basis of these factors, Ms Kiwanga insisted the learned Trial Judge was justified in his finding that the confession was but true.

As the prosecution case against the appellant is solely based on the retracted confessional statement to the Justice of the Peace, we think the only issue in B disposing of this appeal to the propriety of admitting the retracted statement (Exhibit P1). In order to resolve this issue we think it is necessary to look at the various surrounding circumstances. In the first place, as correctly pointed out by Ms Kiwanga, learned State attorney, it is common ground that there was no C witness who saw exactly what happened at the scene of crime when the deceased was killed. Rashid Abdallah (PW1) the elder brother of the appellant came to the scene after the death had taken place, in which case he was not in a position to give evidence on what exactly happened at the time. All that emerges D from the evidence of this witness (PW1) is the historical background relating to the life of the appellant and the deceased prior to the death of the deceased. That being the case, it beats our imagination as to how all the details pertaining to the sequence of events leading to the death of the deceased were obtained and included in the appellant's extra judicial statement to the Justice of the Peace. Who else could have supplied such details if not a person who either saw the E incident or was involved in it. Here there was no other person who witnessed the incident which led to the death of the deceased. As the statement was made by the appellant, it is to our minds highly unlikely that somebody else other than the appellant could have fitted in all the details in the statement. F

That is not all. According to Yusuf S Mperella (PW3) the Justice of the Peace, when the appellant was brought before him (PW3), the appellant was cautioned that he was before a Justice of the Peace and that he was free to tell PW3 what G had happened in relation to the incident if he so wished. There were no policemen around then but still the appellant did not raise the question of having been tortured or forced to make any statement by the police or anybody else. A physical examination by PW3 of the body of the appellant did not reveal any marks of H injuries on his body. In that situation, we think, and as correctly submitted by Ms Kiwanga, learned State attorney, the question of torture was nothing but an after-thought. We are not convinced that the learned Trial Judge can be faulted in his ruling that torture was not involved.

We will now deal with the main ground argued by Mr Kalolo, I

1995 TLR p176

LUBUVA JA

A learned counsel in this appeal. As already pointed out, Mr Kalolo had submitted and argued at considerable length that it was erroneous for the Trial Judge admitting and relying on uncorroborated confession in the extra judicial statement without giving reasons why he found no danger in convicting the appellant on the basis of the retracted statement. On this submission, we are constrained to say B that we find it attractive as well as novel. This is so because the law on retracted or repudiated confessions is settled. It is trite law that generally it is dangerous to act upon a repudiated or retracted confession unless it is corroborated in material particular or unless the court after full consideration of the circumstances is C satisfied that the confession cannot but be true. This cardinal principle which was, in our view and with respect, properly addressed by the learned Trial Judge has been restated in a number of cases by this court as well as the Court of Appeal for East Africa. Among others, see: Tuwamoi v Uganda (1), Bombo Tomola v R (2), D Ali Salehe Msutu v R (3), Hatibu Gandhi alias Captain Hatty Macghee v R (4).

On the basis of the principle set out in these cases, we are unable to accept Mr Kalolo's contention that the learned Trial Judge had to give reasons for his finding that it was not dangerous to found a conviction on the retracted confession. This is E so because there is no legal requirement that reasons have to be given by the trial court for accepting a retracted or repudiated confession. This principle was underscored by the Court of Appeal for East Africa in the Tuwamoi case (supra). In that case it was stated inter alia: F

'... a trial court should accept any confession which has been retracted or repudiated with caution, and must before founding a conviction on such a confession be fully satisfied in all the circumstances of the case that the confession is true ...' (Emphasis supplied). G

In our understanding, what is required is that in dealing with a retracted confession, once the trial court warns itself of the danger of basing a conviction on such evidence and having regard to all the circumstances of the case it is satisfied that the confession is true, it may convict on such evidence without any further H ado. This is what the learned Trial Judge did in the instant case. Addressing himself on this issue the learned judge said:

I have considered the danger of acting on a repudiated confession without corroboration. I have found no such danger because I am satisfied that the confession cannot be but true. I

1995 TLR p177

LUBUVA JA

From this it is clear to us that the learned Trial Judge found no danger in founding A a conviction on the confessional statement for the reason advanced, namely that he was satisfied that the confession was true. In that case, Mr Kalolo's submission that no reason was given by the learned Trial Judge in accepting the confessional statement is, with respect, unfounded. Reason had been given. At B any rate, as we have already shown, even if there was no reason advanced, we are satisfied that such being the position of the law on this point as amply demonstrated, the criticism raised by Mr Kalolo is, with respect, untenable. It is not a requirement of the law that reasons have to be given for the trial court's finding that there is no danger in accepting a retracted confession. Like the learned Trial C Judge, we are satisfied that taking into account all the circumstances of the case, the learned Trial Judge was justified in his finding that the extra-judicial statement was but true. It was properly accepted.

We will now briefly deal with the last ground of appeal. As filed, this is ground two. D In this ground, Mr Kalolo, learned counsel for the appellant argued that as the appellant and the deceased were not living harmoniously, the appellant was provoked by the deceased's behaviour of mimicking him (appellant). And so there was no malice aforethought on the part of the appellant, who should therefore have been found guilty of the lesser offence of manslaughter, Mr Kalolo argued. In E rebuttal, Ms Kiwanga, learned State attorney submitted that the background leading to the incident was such that the act of the deceased to mimic the appellant was not enough provocation. It was an intended act of killing Ms Kiwanga submitted. On the question of malice aforethought we need not labour much. Having taken the F view that the confessional statement was properly admitted, we are satisfied that there was sufficient evidence upon which to sustain the conviction of the appellant. The appellant killed the deceased with malice aforethought. We are settled in our minds that the learned Trial Judge was justified in his conclusion that on the facts of the case, the defence of provocation was not available to the appellant. This G ground is also rejected.

For these reasons we dismiss the appeal in its entirety. H

1995 TLR p178

A

[zRPz]HERMAN NYIGO v REPUBLIC 1995 TLR 178 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Mbeya

Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mfalila JJA and Lubuva JJA

Criminal Appeal No 15 of 1995 B

June 16, 1995

(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania, Mapigano, J) C

Flynote

Criminal law - Murder - Defence of provocation and self defence - When available.

Criminal law - Murder - Malice aforethought - Manifestations of.

-Headnote

D The appellant was convicted of murder by the High Court. In an unprovoked manner, using a heavy stick, he had hit the deceased hard on the head. Subsequently the deceased died. On appeal the appellant complained that the trial court should have accepted his defence of provocation and self defence and found him guilty of the lesser offence of manslaughter.

E Held:

(i) Normally the defence of provocation is available in circumstances which would otherwise constitute murder except for the sudden loss of control of oneself as a result of some act which provokes the accused person;

F (ii) There was no provocation at all involved in this case;

(iii) In the absence of a fight between the appellant and the deceased and that it was the appellant who started attacking the deceased with a heavy stick forcefully, the defence of self defence was not available either;

G (iv) The appellant's utterances that he was killing the deceased because of sorcery is a clear manifestation of malice aforethought

Case Infomation

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to.

H Kapinga for the appellant.

Mbise for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lubuva, JA: delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:

The High Court sitting in Iringa convicted the appellant of the murder of Musa Chatila. The incident took place at the village of I

1995 TLR p179

LUBUVA JA

Kaning'ombe within Iringa District. On 27 September 1992 at about 5.30 pm the A deceased had gone to a nearby pombe shop for refreshment. Ana Kabogo (PW1) was also present at the pombe shop. It would appear that at some stage while the deceased was exchanging greetings with PW1 somewhere outside the pombe shop, the appellant came armed with a bamboo club on his back. Without any B further ado, the appellant hit the deceased hard on the head. The deceased fell down unconscious. The appellant was heard by PW1 announcing: 'I am killing you because of your sorcery'. PW1 raised an alarm in response to which people came to the scene including Fidelis Mtende (PW2). The appellant was raging and C threatening other people. He was, however, subdued and arrested.

Charged with the offence of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code, the appellant put up the defence of provocation and self-defence. In a sworn statement, he claimed that when he met the deceased at the pombe shop, the deceased struck the appellant. That the appellant wrested the stick from the D deceased and with the stick, he (appellant) hit the deceased on the head once. Furthermore, the appellant flatly denied that PW1 was present when the incident took place. The learned Trial Judge rejected the defence of self-defence and provocation and held that the appellant assaulted the deceased unlawfully with malice aforethought. The appellant was accordingly convicted and sentenced to E death. He has appealed against the conviction and sentence.

Mr Kapinga, learned counsel who advocated for the appellant argued one ground of appeal. That is that the appellant should have been convicted of the lesser F offence of manslaughter and not murder. The reason, Mr Kapinga stated, was that the defences of self-defence and provocation were available to the appellant. He contended that the Trial Judge erred in not believing the defence of the appellant that he was attacked by the deceased. Mr Kapinga further argued that PW1 did not G indicate the time she had arrived at the scene and so it was possible that the appellant was attacked before her arrival. He urged the court to allow the appeal against conviction for murder and in substitution therefor a conviction for manslaughter be entered. H

The only issue for determination in this appeal is whether the defence of provocation or self-defence was available to the appellant. Otherwise, as informed from the bar by Mr Kapinga, the rest of the facts are not in dispute. It is common ground that the key witness for the prosecution is PW1. She was talking with the deceased when the appellant came, armed with a bamboo club and I

A started attacking the deceased. In her evidence, she is categoric that there was no fight initiated by the deceased as claimed by the appellant. She raised an alarm in response to which other people came to the scene where the deceased was lying on the ground unconscious. On this, she is fully supported by Fidelis Mtende (PW2) who was among the people who responded to PW1's alarm. PW2 found B the deceased in critical condition and the appellant who was there was arrested. As already observed, the learned Trial Judge found PW1 and PW2 as credible witnesses and consequently rejected the appellant's defence of provocation and self-defence.

C Mr Mbise, learned senior State attorney for the respondent Republic, had submitted that once the evidence of PW1 and PW2 is accepted as the learned Trial Judge did, the defence of self-defence and provocation is not available to the appellant.

D We accept Mr Mbise's submission that with PW1 and PW2 having been accepted as witnesses of truth by the Trial Judge who was in a better position to assess their credibility, we have no reason to differ from the Trial Judge's finding on the credibility of these witnesses (PW1, PW2). On the basis of this evidence (PW1 and PW2) is the defence of self-defence or provocation available to the appellant? Our answer is that it is not available. As correctly observed by Mr E Mbise, learned senior State attorney, in the absence of any quarrel or fight, in an unprovoked manner, the appellant hit the deceased hard with a heavy stick on a vulnerable part of the body i.e. the head. There is no basis upon which the appellant could avail himself of the defence of provocation or self-defence. F

At this juncture we wish to observe that normally the defence of provocation is available in circumstances which would otherwise constitute murder except for the sudden loss of control of oneself as a result of some act which provokes the accused person. This, as shown, was not the case in the instant case. There was no provocation at all involved. On the other hand, from the evidence, in the G absence of a fight between the appellant who started attacking the deceased with a heavy stick forcefully, the defence of self-defence was as properly held by the learned Trial Judge, not available either.

H In all the circumstances of the case, there is no basis upon which to fault the learned Trial Judge in convicting the appellant of the offence of murder. The appellant's utterances that he was killing the deceased because of sorcery is in our view a clear manifestation of malice aforethought. The appellant was therefore properly convicted.

The appeal is devoid of any merit, it is dismissed in its entirety. I

1995 TLR p181

A

[zRPz]MOHAMED IDDI MJASIRI v MRS JAYALAMI J JOSHI 1995 TLR 181 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Zanzibar

Judge Makame JJA, Omar JJA and Mnzavas JJA

Civil Appeal No 1 of 1995 B

June 16, 1995

(From the judgment/decree of the High Court of Zanzibar, Hamid, CJ) C

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Review - Judgment of High Court appealed against - Appeal Court hears the appeal and makes a decision - Whether High Court judge can entertain an application to review his judgment already appealed against. D

Court of Appeal Rules - Review - Judgment of High Court appealed against - Appeal Court hears appeal and makes a decisions - Whether an application to review the judgment lies to the High Court - Rule 44 Court of Appeal Rules. E

-Headnote

After a High Court of Zanzibar judgment had been appealed against, heard and determined by the Court of Appeal of Tanzania the appellant made an application to the High Court of Zanzibar for review of its judgment. The learned Chief Justice declined to entertain the application to review his own judgment on the ground that he was functus officio. This appeal was lodged to challenge the decision of the Chief Justice declining to review his judgment. F

Held:

(i) The appellant went to the wrong forum which lacked jurisdiction and the learned Chief Justice took a correct view of the matter;

(ii) Since there is a Court of Appeal judgment on record one may not assail that judgment by way of review other than in the very court itself. G

Case Infomation

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to.

Mbwezeleni for the appellant.

Kagambo for the respondent. H

[zJDz]Judgment
Makame, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:
This is an appeal from the decision of Hamid CJ in which the I
1995 TLR p182
MAKAME JA
A learned Chief Justice of the High Court for Zanzibar declined to review his own judgment for the reason that he was functus officio and also because in any event the application was time-barred.
The background to the case the learned Chief Justice had tried was that the husband of the present respondent and the father of the present appellant were friends and they both lived in Zanzibar. When in 1972 the respondent's husband B went away to live in Canada he left his house in the care of the appellant's father to whom he also gave a power of attorney. In October 1987 the appellant's father conveyed the property to himself and, a day later, to his son, the present appellant. C
In a suit to have the two conveyances nullified and the house declared part of her deceased husband's estate the present respondent succeeded. For the purposes of this appeal we do not consider it necessary to go into the specific findings made by the learned Chief Justice except to say that his decision was sustained by this court on appeal. D
The judgment of the High Court was delivered on 15 April 1993, that of the Court of Appeal on 25 November of that year and in January 1995 the present appellant sought to move the High Court to review its decision in view of the alleged discovery of a document which would have made the High Court arrive at a E different conclusion as it would have shown that the respondent's husband had received the proceeds of the sale of the house. The outcome of that effort was, as we have indicated, a failure to persuade the learned Chief Justice to review his decision. Before us the appellant is represented by Mr Mbwezeleni, learned F advocate while Mr Kagambo, learned counsel appeared for the respondent.
Mr Mbwezeleni assailed the High Court decision. He asserted that he properly went to the High Court under r 44 of the Court of Appeal Rules for review. A portion of the rule he relied on reads: G

> Whenever application may be made either to the court or to the High Court, it shall in the first instance be made to the High Court ...

H Mr Mbwezeleni contended that he had no choice but to proceed the way he did in view of the said rule. Mr Kagambo maintained that Mr Mbwezeleni has misconceived r 44 - the High Court had no power to review a Court of Appeal judgment, which was in effect what the High Court was being asked to do.
We are of the view that the answer to the question as to whether or not the appellant went to the correct forum for review is enough I to dispose of the appeal. In that case it would really be superfluous to deal with the A provisions of the Civil Procedure Decree, Cap 8, which relate to time scales.
1995 TLR p183
MAKAME JA

The Court of Appeal considered the substantive judgment of the High Court and was satisfied that it was sound. The court added its own dimension by remarking that in any event, there was no proof that the alleged consideration of Shs 150,000/= had passed to the respondent's husband. B

The final judgment was that of the Court of Appeal and matters rested there. It was the judgment of that Court, if at all, which should have been sought to be reviewed. In that exercise, if the court was so minded, it could have made orders it C considered necessary to the High Court, or otherwise disposed of the matter. The High Court had gone into the issues on merit, on the basis of the evidence then available, and the Court of Appeal had received the appeal and heard it on the same basis. There is a Court of Appeal judgment on record and one may not D assail that judgment by way of review other than in the very court itself.

With respect, Mr Mbwezeleni's arguments have a severe limitation. Before one can construe r 44 in Mr Mbwezeleni's favour one has first to determine whether the High Court is an available forum for the application - that is, whether the E application he sought to make was one that 'may be made to the court or to the High Court', in the first place. The rule presupposes, quite obviously, the existence of jurisdiction in both courts, and not otherwise. We are clear in our view that the appellant went to the wrong forum which lacked jurisdiction and that the learned Chief Justice took a correct view of the matter. We wish only to add that s 129 of the Civil Procedure Decree Cap 8, to which Mr Mbwezeleni kindly drew our F attention, does not detract from the position we have stated.

We propose to be quite brief on Mr Mbwezeleni's valiant effort to come to us for review as an alternative in the same document he prepared and filed for appeal. G This court cannot be reached via the medium of a fishing expedition. A party which wishes to be heard by us must first determine how to get us grant him audience, and proceed accordingly. This would incidentally afford the other party opportunity to prepare himself appropriately. H

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

We wish to add, without being determinative, that we very much doubt whether the High Court would have reached a different conclusion even if the alleged communicated dated 23 October 1987 purportedly from the respondent's husband to the appellant's I

1995 TLR p184

MAKAME JA

A father, had been placed before him during the hearing of the case. Even if one assumes that it was authentic it would not escape one's attention that it was 'innocuous' and terribly inconclusive. The document makes no reference to a house at all, only that the writer was 'very happy that everything went well just as B we had agreed upon'. Besides, US $5000 translates into a sum very different from the alleged sale price of Shs 150,000/=. Mr Mbwezeleni essayed that one US $ was then around Shs 300 which would make US $5000 the equivalent of 1.5 million Shs, that is 10 times the alleged price. In fact we have made our own research and discovered that from October to December 1987 one US dollar was C worth only Shs 83.7174, so that US $5000 would be about Shs 418,000/=, which would still be a lot more than the alleged price. There would therefore be no sound reason to surmise that the mysterious alleged sum of US $5000 related to a sale transaction over the suit property. D

1995 TLR p184
E
[zRPz]OLAFU WIKECHI v REPUBLIC 1995 TLR 184 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Mbeya
Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mfalila JJA and Lubuva JJA

Criminal Appeal No 178 of 1994 F
June 16 1995
(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Njombe, Mwalusanya, J) G
Flynote
Evidence - Identification of accused person - Identification done in the dark of night - Whether sufficient to found a conviction.
-Headnote
H The appellant was convicted of murder and sentenced to death. The Trial Judge founded his conviction on visual identification on a dark night. On appeal the appellant argued that the visual identification on the dark night should not have been relied upon to base a conviction.
Held: We are not convinced that the witness correctly identified the appellant; as such the case against the appellant was not proved beyond reasonable doubt as required by law. I
1995 TLR p185
MFALILA JA
Case Infomation
Appeal allowed. A
No Case referred to:
Mwangole for the appellant.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mfalila, JA: delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: B
The appellant Olafu Wikechi was convicted of murder by the High Court sitting at Njombe (Mwalusahya, J) and sentenced to death. His conviction was based on the evidence of a single identifying witness Martina Makasi (PW1), the wife of the deceased. C
The appellant's identification by the deceased's wife was not without difficulty as will be shown shortly. On the day in question, the appellant had in the morning visited the deceased's homestead. He had left after taking lunch prepared by PW1, one of the deceased's five wives. PW1 left for the shamba soon after D preparing lunch for the men. She returned home at 4.00 pm and found her husband's guest already gone. At about 5.00 pm the deceased asked her to take some liquor known as 'ulanzi' and a wick lamp to their old house which they had abandoned, telling her that he would be meeting his guest there. She complied with this instruction. At about 10.00 pm the deceased returned and told her to E accompany him to the old house and meet his guest Mr Wikechi the appellant. She went with him to the old house where on arrival he told her to remain outside. While she was outside, she could hear voices of people talking inside the hut. Then suddenly she heard a bang from inside the hut as if something was falling, F then she heard the sound of a door being closed and locked from the outside. She saw two people who were locking the door and recognised one of them to be the present appellant. The two people ran away, but she was emphatic that although it was a dark night she was still able to identify the appellant particularly by the white G rubber shoes he was wearing. She raised an alarm and awakened her fellow wives. When they entered the hut they found their husband dead. The post mortem examination report indicated that the cause of death was head injury leading to brain damage and haemorrhagic shock. The appellant was arrested two weeks later in Mawande Village and charged with the murder of the deceased. H

In his defence at the trial, the appellant denied causing the death of the deceased whom he described as a long time dear friend. He said that he had no cause or reason to kill such a friend. He narrated his movements on the day in question saying that after leaving I

A the deceased's house that day, he had gone to Mawande Village where his other wife, Veronica lived, and it was there that he was arrested.

The Trial Judge accepted the identification of the appellant by PW1 which he described as having strong probative value. He found that it had been corroborated B by the deceased's earlier statement to her that he was going to talk with his guest at the hut. The learned judge also found the fact that the appellant was arrested at Mawande Village at the house of his concubine, added weight to the prosecution case. He therefore found that the case against the appellant had been proved beyond reasonable doubt and convicted him as charged. C

In this appeal, Mr Mwangele, learned counsel who advocated for the appellant, attacked these findings. In his view, the learned judge was wrong to rely on the visual identification by PW1 when conditions were so unfavourable and that he erred in finding that this identification had been corroborated. D

As we have already indicated, the identification of the appellant by PW1 is not without difficulty. She herself conceded that it was a dark night. If so, how then did she identify one of the attackers to be the appellant? The answer is supplied by her own evidence that she identified one of the two to be the appellant particularly E when she saw his white rubber shoes. Is this mode of identification really reliable on a dark night? She explained later when cross-examined that there was moonlight. But this answer complicated her evidence even further for she made it F clear that her evidence could not be relied upon if she could change it so easily. In one minute saying it was a dark night, in another saying there was moonlight.

The learned judge found corroboration of her evidence in two factors. First, that the deceased had told her that he was going to talk to his guest, Mr Wikechi, the appellant. The question is how truthful was PW1 in this. The trial court who saw G her believed her and found as a fact that the deceased had made the statement. But, this finding was made without evaluating her veracity particularly in view of the contradictions in other aspects of her evidence as we have pointed out. We are therefore doubtful about her truthfulness. Secondly, that the appellant was arrested H in Mawande Village at the home of his concubine. We have not been able to appreciate the significance of this. Since there is no evidence to suggest that the appellant had gone to Mawande Village to escape arrest, we see nothing wrong or strange with the appellant deciding to proceed to the home of his concubine. I

1995 TLR p187

MFALILA JA

There is another matter which exercised our minds but only because we do not A share the trial court's conviction on the veracity of PW1. We thought it was very strange that the deceased should have asked his wife to accompany him to the hut to meet his guest the appellant only to ask her to remain outside the hut! And even if it is true that she accompanied the deceased to the hut at 10.00 pm, is it B necessarily true that one of the two men who came running out of the hut was the appellant, since she never had the chance of seeing them enter the hut? We also note that all the time the deceased was talking of 'his guest' not 'guests'.

For these reasons, we are not convinced as the trial court was that PW1 correctly C identified the appellant and that this identification was corroborated by independent credible evidence. In our view, the charge against the appellant was not proved beyond reasonable doubt as required by law and we accordingly allow the appeal, quash his conviction for murder and set aside the sentence of death imposed on him. We order him immediately released unless he is otherwise D lawfully held.

1995 TLR p187

F

[zRPz]THADEI MLOMO AND OTHERS v REPUBLIC 1995 TLR 187 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Mbeya

Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mfalila JJA and Lubuva JJA

Criminal Appeal No 53 of 1994 G

June 16, 1995

(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Mbeya, Mchome, J) H

Flynote

Evidence - Confession - Repudiated - Allegation of threats in extracting confession - Whether such confession admissible - Section 29 Evidence Act 1967.

Evidence - Corroboration - Confessions of co-accused - Must be corroborated before founding a conviction. I

1995 TLR p188

RAMADHANI JA

-Headnote

A Three appellants appealed against conviction of murder by the High Court. In convicting two of the appellants the court relied on retracted confessions which had been made involuntarily but which the court admitted under s 29 of the Evidence Act, 1967. The third appellant was convicted on the basis of the statements made by the co-accused. On appeal two of the appellants challenged the trial court's admission of the repudiated confessions. The third appellant attacked his conviction which was based of the repudiated confessions of the co-accused. B

Held:

(i) Under s 29 of the Evidence Act 1967 an involuntary confession is admissible if the court believes it to be true;

C (ii) While s 29 cannot be invoked where actual torture was applied, in this case there was no proof of torture but only threats;

(iii) On the evidence the confessions of appellants 1 and 2 were true;

(iv) There was corroborative evidence to support the conviction of the third appellant on the basis of the repudiated confessions of his co-accused.

Case Infomation

D Appeal dismissed.

Cases referred to.

(1) Tuwamoi v. Uganda [1967] EA 84

E (2) Marcus Kisukuli v. R Criminal Appeal No 146 of 1993 (Unreported).

Mkumbe for the appellant.

Mbise for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

F Ramadhani, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:

On 3 August 1988, Martin Mhenga, deceased, was on duty guarding a bridge on the Uhuru Railway at Mgololo, Mufindi District in Iringa Region. His company included Abdallah Selemani, PW7. They were attacked and robbed of their two G semi-authomatic machine guns (SMG) each with a magazine containing 30 rounds of ammunition. The deceased was killed in the process of the attack while PW7 was left seriously wounded.

H Four people were charged with the murder of the deceased. Three of them, the appellants here, Thadei Mlomo, Charles Nyimbo and Ben Sanga were convicted by the High Court of Tanzania at Mbeya (Mchome, J).

The learned judge was satisfied with the evidence before him. Somehow Charles Nyimbo, appellant 2, was arrested at Makambako on 3 October 1988 and that information was sent to the police in Iringa. ASP Kisika (PW1) in the company of S/Sgt I

Zakayo (PW2) went to Makambako to interrogate him. He admitted having A participated in a number of robberies including this one of the two SMGs which caused the death of the deceased. His camaraderie spirit broke down and we mentioned his co-participants. Appellant 2 said that he slashed PW7 with a panga and got hold of his gun. As the deceased emerged to give assistance to PW7, he was shot by Thadei Mlomo, appellant 1, and they took deceased's gun too. B

PW1 travelled to Dar-es-Salaam with appellant 2 who pointed out the houses of Ben Sanga, appellant 3 and that of appellant 1. Appellant 3 was arrested in his house but appellant 1 was not found in the indicated house. After that, PW1 returned to Iringa with appellants 2 and 3. C
The team of investigators, apart from PW1 and PW2 included
S/Sgt Semu (PW3), Inspector Gregory (PW4) and D/Sgt Jonathan (PW5). D
Appellant 3 in interrogation disclosed another participant at Matanana, Mufindi. PW1 failed to arrest that other person but he was told of a guest of that person from Dar-es-Salaam who happened to be appellant 1. So he was arrested. Appellant 1 led the investigators to the place where he had buried his gun and it was recovered. Appellant 3 failed to locate the place he had buried his gun. E However, appellant 1 pointed out that place which was very close to where he had hid his, and appellant 3 owned the unearthed gun. Both appellants 1 and 2 recorded extra-judicial statements, Exh P5 and Exh P6 respectively, before F Stephen Mbungu (PW6), a primary court magistrate. Appellant 2 also recorded a police caution statement, Exh P4. All three statements narrated the events as summarised above. Appellant 3, however, did not record any statement.
These statements were repudiated and the learned judge held a trial within a trial. The appellants alleged to have been tortured into making them. The learned judge relied on s 29 of the Evidence Act, 1967 and admitted them. G
In their defence the appellants flatly denied everything, even knowing one another. Appellant 1 said he only knew appellant 2 because they were both in the business of selling maize. H
The appeal was argued by Mr Mkumbe, learned advocate. He had four grounds of appeal. In the first ground the appellants complained that the learned Trial Judge erred in admitting the statements of appellants 1 and 2 since they were not voluntarily made. Grounds two, three and four objected the admission of a copy of a judgment of this court as evidence against the appellants. I
1995 TLR p190
RAMADHANI JA
A We shall deal first with the last three grounds. A judgment of this court (Exh P8) was used to secure the conviction of the appellants. In that judgment we consolidated a number of appeals and we upheld the district court of Iringa which convicted the appellants and other persons on their own pleas of guilty to certain charges of robberies. Mr Mkumbe submitted that it was not proper to do so while B Mr Mbise, learned senior State attorney, contended that it was proper.
It is our considered opinion that we do not have to resolve that issue. There is sufficient evidence to support the conviction even without Exh P8. So we leave that matter to be determined one way or the other in an appropriate appeal. C
The first ground of appeal challenges the statements which were produced at the trial. Admittedly, and as pointed out by Mr Mkumbe, appellants 1 and 2 repudiated their confessions at the trial. The learned Trial Judge found that the confessions D might have been obtained involuntarily. Nevertheless, he admitted them under s 29 of the Evidence Act, 1967. However, we agree with Mr Mbise that that was proper.
E May we start with s 27 of that Act which provides:

'27 (1) A confession voluntarily made to a Police Officer by a person accused of an offence may be proved as against that person.

(2) The onus of proving that any confession made by an accused person was voluntarily made by him shall lie on the prosecution. F

(3) A confession shall be held to be involuntarily if the court believes that it was not induced by any threat, premise or other prejudice held out by the police officer to whom it was made or by any member of the police force or by any other person in authority.' G

This section provides for the admission of a voluntary confession against the maker in a trial. It also prescribes when a confession is and when it is not voluntary. The onus of proving voluntariness is on the prosecution. H

However, an involuntary confession is also admissible if the Court believes it to be true. That is under s 29 which provides:

29. No confession which is tendered in evidence shall be rejected on the ground that a promise of threat has been held out to the person I confessing unless the court is of the opinion that the inducement was made in such circumstances and was on such nature as was likely to cause an untrue admission of guilt to be made. A

It is doubtful that the legislator intended it to be 'a promise of threat' and not 'a promise or threat'. We think it is the latter and that the former is a typographical error. This section appears to us to encapsulate the principle enunciated in the B Tuwamoi's case (1). This is the section which Mchome, J used to admit the confessions of appellants 1 and 2.

Under s 27 once a confession has been proved to be voluntarily made then it C would appear a court will accept it as the truth. However, if a confession was involuntary, then it will be accepted under s. 29 if the court is of the opinion that the confession constitutes the truth. So, in the former section the truth of the confession is presumed by the court while in the latter the truth has to be conceived by the court. We may point out that this holding is not in conflict with our D previous decision in Marcus Kisukuli v R (2). There we said that s 29 cannot be used where there is actual torture. Here there was no proof of torture but only threats thereof.

The question for us is to determine whether the inducement was such as 'to E cause an untrue admission of guilt'. We have to determine whether the confession is true or not. First of all, what is contained in the statements as to what happened that fateful night at the bridge at Mgololo tallies with the evidence of PW7, the guard who survived the onslaught. Secondly, appellant 1 led the investigators to F the discovery of the two guns which were robbed from the deceased and PW7. The serial numbers of those guns (Exh P1 and Exh P2) are the same as the guns which were issued to the deceased and PW7 per the armoury register (Exh P3). So, the confessions of appellants 1 and 2 must be true. G

Mr Mkumbe pointed out that appellant 3 did not make a statement so he should not be convicted solely on the confessions of co-accused persons. We concede that. In such a case, the law requires corroboration. However, we say that there is corroboration. Though appellant 3 failed to pinpoint where he had buried his gun, he led the investigators to the same area where appellant 1 had buried his and H where later, appellant 1 unearthed the gun which had been in the possession of appellant 3. That cannot be coincidental. He actually possessed the gun, hid it and knew the location of hiding. Either genuinely or by pretence he failed to point out the exact spot he had buried it. When it was unearthed, I

1995 TLR p192

RAMADHANI JA

A appellant 3 owned it. He denied to have done that, but the learned Trial Judge believed the investigators. We have absolutely no reason to differ with him.

B So we dismiss the appeal in its entirety.

1995 TLR p192

C

[zRPz]DEUS MWESIGA v REPUBLIC 1995 TLR 192 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Mbeya

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mfalila JJA and Lubuva JJA

Criminal Appeal 31 of 1994 D

June 23, 1995

(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Mbeya, Mkude, J)

Flynote

E Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Severe reprimand by employer and conviction by Court for the same wrong - Whether punished twice for the same offence.

-Headnote

F The appellant was severely reprimanded by his employer for fighting a fellow employee. The Court on its part convicted the appellant of doing grievious harm. The Court of Appeal considered whether the appellant was punished twice for the same offence.

Held: Severe reprimand did not constitute punishment for the offence of doing grievious harm created under the Penal Code. G

Case Infomation

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to.

H Ndibalema for the appellant.

Mbise for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

Asha Sadiki (PW1) and Deus Mwesiga, the appellant in this appeal, were hospital workers and at the time of the incident they both were I in a hospital theatre assisting the doctor who was operating on a patient. A dispute A arose between the two leading to a flight in the course of which PW1 sustained injuries including a fractured jaw. The appellant was charged in the district court with the offence of doing grievous harm contrary to s 225 of the Penal Code. He was acquitted but on appeal to the High Court that decision was reversed. He was B convicted as charged and sentenced to six months' imprisonment. It is from that decision that this appeal is preferred.

1995 TLR p193

KISANGA JA

Before us the appellant is represented by Mr Ndibalema, learned advocate while Mr Mbise, senior State attorney appeared for the respondent, Republic. C

Mr Ndibalema filed and argued only two grounds of appeal, namely that the appellant's defence of self-defence was wrongly rejected and that the appellant was punished twice for the same offence. On the first ground, counsel maintained that the appellant in his evidence had stated that during the fight PW1 pulled his D private parts. Learned counsel therefore contended that the appellant was in such circumstances entitled to assault PW1 the way he did in his endeavour to secure release from her grip.

The learned first appellate judge specifically considered that defence, and at E length, but rejected it as being an afterthought. We could not fault him because as he rightly argued, that allegation is not supported by any of the witnesses, numbering four altogether who were present at the theatre and witnessed the fight. What is more, the appellant never complained to these present at the theatre or to anyone whom he met immediately thereafter such as PW2 that PW1 pulled his F private parts. Again the appellant never suggested to PW1 in cross-examination that she pulled his private parts during the fight, and that adds to the view that the appellant's allegation has no truth in it. G

There was evidence that during the fight the appellant's trousers dropped down to the knees and Mr Ndibalema strenuously contended that the trousers were pulled down by PW1 during the fight and further urged us to find that PW1 must have pulled the appellant's private parts in the process. With due respect, however, we H cannot agree. If there was any act of pulling the appellant's private parts, such act would have been seen by the four witnesses who were present, and in particular by PW4 and PW8 who noticed the appellant's trousers dropped to the knees. Indeed the fact of the appellant's trousers dropping down was explained by PW8 on the ground that it was loose. That is to say the trousers was not secure enough I

A on the appellant's waist and therefore it could be expected to slip or drop during the fight.

The learned judge was therefore perfectly justified to reject the appellant's defence of self-defence and we can find no ground to interfere.

B On the second ground Mr Ndibalema submitted that his client was severely reprimanded by his employer for what he did, and so to convict him of doing grievous harm amounts to punishing him twice for the same offence. For this view he referred us to s 21 of the Penal Code which provides:

C '21. A person shall not be punished twice, either under the provisions of this Code or under the provisions of any other law for the same offence.'

D With due respect to the learned counsel, this submission is clearly misconceived. The severe reprimand alleged to have been issued to the appellant is no punishment prescribed either under the Penal Code or under any other law for the offence of doing grievous harm. It may very well be a disciplinary sanction which the appellant's employer was empowered by regulations or standing orders to impose on the appellant. That, however, did not constitute punishment for the E offence of doing grievous harm created under the Penal Code. This ground, therefore, is equally without merit.

In the event, we find the appeal to be without substance and accordingly we dismiss it in its entirety. F

1995 TLR p195

A

[zRPz]SEIF HOUSEHOLD STORE LTD v NEW MABAI STORE 1995 TLR 195 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Kyando J

Misc Civil Appeal No 2 of 1994 B

June 30, 1994

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Execution of decree - Stay of execution pending appeal against Decree of a Regional Housing Tribunal - Proper forum to lodge application for stay of execution. C

Civil Practice and Procedure - Execution of decree - Decree passed by Regional Housing Tribunal - Extent of powers of Resident Magistrate's Court - Order 21 r 24(1) Civil Procedure Code 1966. D

-Headnote

This was an appeal from a ruling of the Housing Appeals Tribunal (HAT) granting an application by the respondent for stay of execution pending an appeal to it (HAT) from the decision of the Regional Housing Tribunal of Dar es Salaam. Initially the respondent had lodged its application with a Resident Magistrate's E Court which dismissed it for want of prosecution. The High Court, on appeal, considered the extent of powers of the Resident Magistate's Court in entertaining applications for stay of execution of decrees passed by the Regional Housing Tribunal and also considered the proper forum to lodge such applications. F

Held:

(i) The Resident Magistrates' Courts' powers to entertain an application for stay of execution are limited to staying execution of a decree for only a reasonable time and for the purpose of enabling the judgment debtor to make an application to either the Regional Housing Tribunal which passed the decree or to the Housing appeals Tribunal, having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or the execution of it; G

(ii) The Resident Magistrate's Court had no power to stay execution of the decree pending appeal;

(iii) The Resident Magistrate's Court's dismissal of the application did not H affect the respondent's right to apply for stay in the proper fora, either the Regional Housing Tribunal or the Housing appeal Tribunal

(iv) The application to the Housing Appeals Tribunal was properly entertained by that Tribunal having been filed after the appeal had been lodged.

Case Infomation

Appeal dismissed. I

1995 TLR p196

KYANDO J

A Case referred to:

(1) Joseph EA Mwakajinga v. Prakash Brothers Ltd HC DSM, Civil Revision No 6 of 1990

Maira for the appellants.

B Chandoo for the respondents.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kyando, J:

This is an appeal from a ruling of the Housing Appeal Tribunal (HAT) granting an application by the respondent for stay of execution pending an appeal to it (HAT) from the decision of the regional housing tribunal of Dar-es-Salaam region. C

Briefly the respondent was a tenant of the appellant in respect of commercial premises, a godown, in Dar-es-Salaam. The applicant then applied to the Regional Appeals Tribunal for an order to evict the respondent from the premises. The Regional Tribunal granted the application but the respondent was aggrieved. He D took steps to appeal to HAT and before the appeal was heard, he applied to the resident magistrate's court of Dar-es-Salaam at Kisutu for stay of execution of the decree of the Regional Housing Tribunal. The decree had been sent there for E execution. In the course of time the application had to be dismissed by the resident magistrate's court for want of prosecution whereupon the respondent filed an application in Housing Appeal Tribunal seeking again stay of execution of the F decree of the Regional Housing Tribunal. The application was made under r 15 of the Housing Appeals Tribunal (Appeals) Rules, 1987 and the Housing Appeal Tribunal granted it. The appellant was aggrieved, hence this appeal.

G In the memorandum of appeal to this court the appellant sets out five principal grounds of appeal. In the first ground he states that the learned chairman of the Housing Appeal Tribunal misdirected himself at law in failing to hold that the application was not properly before the tribunal. In the second ground of appeal he contends that the learned chairman erred in law in his interpretation of r 15(2) of H the Housing Appeals Tribunal Rules, 1987. In the third ground he says that the chairman misdirected himself at law in failing to hold that the Housing Appeal Tribunal and Regional Housing Tribunal has no execution power. In the fourth ground he contends that the learned chairman misdirected himself at law and fact by not holding that the applicant is a trespasser in the suit premises. And in the fifth ground he states that the learned chair- I man misdirected himself in assessing who will suffer more hardship if the A application was decided in the issue of a third party.

Both parties are represented by counsel; the appellant is represented by Mr Maira, learned advocate and the respondent is represented by Mr Chandoo, learned advocate, counsel filed written submissions. B
By reg 6(6)(a) and (b) of the Regional Housing Tribunal Regulations 1990, execution of an order or decree of the Regional Housing Tribunal 'shall be through the court of a resident magistrate' and no execution proceedings can be commenced until after the expiry of the period of appeal provided either under the Rent Restriction Act, 1984 or the Regional Housing Tribunal Regulations. (Under C the regulations the period of appeal provided for is thirty days - see reg 10).
Then r 15 of the Housing Appeals Tribunal (Appeals) Rules (supra) provides: D

15 (1) An appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from except so far as the appeals tribunal may order, nor shall execution of a decree be stayed by reason only of an appeal having been preferred from the decree; but the appeals tribunal may for sufficient cause order stay of execution of such decree. E

(2) Where an application is made for stay of execution of an appealable decree before the expiration of the time allowed for appealing, the tribunal which passed the decree may on sufficient cause shown, order the execution to be stayed. F

(3) No order for stay of execution shall be made under subr (1) or subr (2) unless the appeals tribunal or the tribunal is satisfied that:

(a) substantial loss may result to the party applying for stay of execution unless the order is made; G

(b) the application has been made without unreasonable delay, and

(c) security has been given by the applicant for the due performance of such decree or order as may ultimately be binding upon him.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in subr (3) the appeal tribunals or the tribunal may make an ex parte order for stay of execution pending the hearing of the application. H

In his submissions Mr Maira argues that the respondent, having filed an application for stay of execution in the resident magistrate's court, he was bound to pursue it. Having failed to pursue it the court dismissed it and his remedies then were to seek to have the order of dismissal set aside and, if unsuccessful in that, to make an I

A appeal to this court against the order refusing setting aside. He says as an executing court the resident magistrate's court must be assumed to be having full powers of stay of execution of a decree passed by a Regional Housing Tribunal. Mr Maira says this was the intention of the legislature in conferring upon that court execution powers. He says in other words that the power to stay is implied in the power to execute. B

Mr Maira goes on to submit that by going to the Housing Appeal Tribunal with the application which was dismissed by the resident magistrate's court the respondent was forum shopping or the application was res judicata. He contends therefore that the Housing Appeal Tribunal erred entertaining it. Alternatively, he C contends the application should have been filed in the Regional Housing Tribunal and not in the Housing Appeal Tribunal because it was filed before the appeal to the Housing Appeal Tribunal had filed.

D To the above submissions Mr Chandoo for the respondent replies that the resident magistrate's court has no powers of stay of a decree passed by a Regional Housing Tribunal. He says the application he filed there was filed only for the purpose of stopping an execution which was being threatened before the E period of appeal, as provided for by the law, had expired. He says in effect that it was then left to lapse in the court and a proper application was then filed in the Housing Appeal Tribunal. He contends that the application to the Housing Appeal Tribunal was not res judicata.

F As for the submission that the application ought to have been filed in the Regional Housing Tribunal and not in the Housing Appeal Tribunal because the appeal had not been filed by the time when the application was filed, he says the appeal and the application were filed simultaneously.

G It is my view that the resident magistrate's court, as an executing court of decrees passed by Regional Housing Tribunals, has no general powers of stay in relation to those decrees. Its powers are limited and they are to the extent only as provided for in Order 21 r 24(1) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. Order 21 r 24(1) provides:

H '24 (1) The court to which a decree has been sent for execution shall upon sufficient cause being shown, stay the execution of such degree for a reasonable time, to enable the judgment debtor to apply to the court by which the decree was passed or to any court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or the execution thereof for an order to stay execution or for any other order relating to the decree or execution which might have been made by such court of first I instance or appellate court if execution had been issued thereby, or if application for execution A had been made thereto.' (Emphasis supplied.)

So the resident magistrate's court's powers are limited to staying execution of a decree for only a reasonable time and for the purpose of enabling the B judgment-debtor to make an application to either the Regional Housing Tribunal, which passed the decree or to the Housing Appeal Tribunal, the tribunal having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or the execution of it. This is what exactly happened in the instance case; the application to the court for stay was intended to enable the respondent to apply to the Regional the Housing Tribunal or C to Housing Appeal Tribunal for stay of execution pending appeal. The resident magistrate's court has no power, as an executing court, to stay execution pending appeal (see Joseph EA Mwakajinga v Prakash Brothers Ltd (1), decision by Mapigano, J which is to the same effect as the one I have made here). The D questions of applying for setting aside when the application was dismissed by the resident magistrate's court and appealing if setting aside did not succeed do not arise therefore. The court had no jurisdiction in the matter. The respondent realised after he had filed the application there that he had gone to the wrong forum. He left the application to lapse therefore and went to the right forum, the E Housing Appeals Tribunal.

Was it premature to go to the Housing Appeals Tribunal? This depends of course on whether the application was made simultaneously with the appeal as Mr Chandoo contends or whether it was made before the appeal was filed as Mr F Maira contends. Unfortunately the papers of the application and appeal to the Housing Appeal Tribunal are not in the record of appeal here, but the following statement by the chairman of the Housing Appeals Tribunal does show that the application was filed after the appeal: G

'On 26 October 1993 he (the respondent) filed this application (for stay of execution of the decree of the Regional Housing Tribunal) after lodging his appeal No 85/93.' (Emphasis supplied.) H

So the application was lodged after the lodging of the appeal and this was well within the requirements of the rules.

I do not think having decided as above that I should consider the rest of the grounds of appeal. I consider that my above determinations fully dispose of the appeal and there is no need to consider the rest of the grounds in the memorandum of appeal. I hold in the final I

1995 TLR p200

KYANDO J

A result that the resident magistrate's court had no power to stay execution of the decree pending appeal. Its dismissal of the application made there by the respondent did not affect the respondent's rights to apply for stay to either the Regional Housing Tribunal or the Housing Appeals Tribunal. The application to the Housing Appeals Tribunal was properly entertained by that tribunal as it was made B after the appeal to it had been lodged. I therefore dismiss the appellant's appeal to this court with costs.

1995 TLR p200

D

[zRPz]GODWIN NDEWESI AND KAROLI ISHENGOMA v TANZANIA AUDIT CORPORATION 1995 TLR 200 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Mnzavas JA

Civil Application No 57 of 1994 E

July 3, 1995

(For striking out Notice of Appeal from the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Maina, J) F

Flynote

Court of Appeal Rules - Notice of Appeal - Time within which to lodge such notice - Notice lodged one day out of time - Whether Court can allow the notice to stand.

-Headnote

G The respondent had filed a notice of appeal one day out of time and then prayed the Court to exercise its discretion to allow the notice of appeal to stand. The applicant argued that the notice of appeal be struck out as it offended the provisions of rule 76(2) of the Court of Appeal Rules, 1979.

H Held:

(i) The rules of court must prima facie be obeyed and in order to justify extending time during which some step in the procedure requires to be taken there must be some material on which the court can exercise its discretion;

(ii) In the present case the respondent's delay in filing his notice of appeal was due to an oversight, which is not a good reason for the Court to exercise its discretion under rule 3 of the Court of Appeal Rules; I

1995 TLR p201

Mnzavas JA

Case Infomation

Order accordingly A

Case referred to:

(i) Ratnam v Cumarasamy and Another [1964] 3 All ER 933

Kashumbugu, for the applicant. B

Safari, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, J.A., read the following ruling:

In a notice of motion under r 82 of the Court of Appeal Rules Mr Kashumbugu, C learned counsel for the applicant argued that the notice of appeal filed by the respondent be struck out, as it was argued it offends r 76(2) which says that notice of appeal should be lodged in court within 14 days from the date of the judgment. It was the learned counsel's submission that in the present case notice was lodged in the court's registry 15 days after the judgment, i.e. one day out of time. D

In rebuttal Mr Safari, learned counsel for the respondent conceded that the notice of appeal was lodged one day out of time. He, however, told the court that the notice was intended to be filed on 21 June 1994 but by an oversight it was filed on E 22 June 1994.

Mr Safari asked the court to exercise its discretion under r 3 of the Court of Appeal Rules and allow the notice of appeal to stand as it is only one day out of time.

In reply Mr Kashumbugu, learned counsel for the applicant countered that the F learned counsel for the respondent should have applied for extension of time to file his notice of appeal after he had learnt that he was already out of time instead of asking the court to invoke its powers under r 3 of the Court of Appeal Rules.

With respect to the learned counsel for the respondent this is not a proper case for the court to invoke its powers under r 3 of the Court of Appeal Rules even if that G rule could be called in aid of the respondent.

As it was held Ratnam v Cumarasamy and Another (1) at 935 -

'The rules of court must prima facie be obeyed and, in order to justify a court in extending time H during which some step in procedure requires to be taken there must be some material on which the Court can exercise its discretion. If the law were otherwise any party in breach would have an unqualified right to extension of time which would defeat the purpose of the rules which is to provide a timetable for the conduct of litigation.' I

1995 TLR p202

Mnzavas JA

A Rules are made to be followed. In the present case the respondent's delay in filing his notice of appeal was due to an oversight; this cannot be said with any stretch of the imagination to be a good reason for the court to exercise its discretion under rule 3 of the Court of Appeal Rules.

B I agree with Mr Kashumbugu's argument that the notice of appeal is incompetent and it is accordingly struck out as incompetent. The applicant to have his costs.

1995 TLR p202

D

[zRPz]MARY KIMARO v KHALFANI MOHAMED 1995 TLR 202 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Mwaikasu J

Misc Civil Case No 83 of 1992 E

July 28, 1995

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Application for leave to appeal out of time - Copy of proceedings not received - When limitation period begins to run. F

-Headnote

This was an application for leave to appeal out of time. The reason advanced for the application was that though a copy of judgment had been supplied, a copy of G the proceedings was yet to be supplied and thus it was not possible to frame a sound memorandum of appeal. The application was resisted on the ground that the applicant did not get a copy of the proceedings because he had not paid for it.

Held:

(i) A copy of proceedings and a copy of judgment are necessary for the purposes of framing a sound memorandum of appeal; H

(ii) It is from the time of supply of both such documents that the limitation of time for appeal begins to run.

Case Infomation

Order accordingly.
Cases referred to:
(1) Hasham Harji v. Katocha [XIX], KULR 20 I
1995 TLR p203
MWAIKASU J
Marandu for the applicant. A
Kinguji for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mwaikasu, J:
This is an application for leave to appeal out of time. It has been contended by Mr B Marandu, learned counsel for the appellant that upon delivery of the judgment of the lower appellate court on 7 May 1992, on the same day the lower appellate court was notified of the intention to appeal, copied to the counsel for the respondent, and such notice was received on the same day. A copy of judgment C of the lower court was received on 3 July 1992, but no copy of proceedings was then supplied, for the reason that it had not been typed. That is also confirmed by the record of the lower appellate court, as per endorsement made on Mr D Marandu's letter dated 3 July 1992, on the same day to the effect that copies of the proceedings and judgment of the primary court should be supplied first and then district court proceedings should be typed and supplied at the earliest. That then, it has been contended, made it difficult for the appellant to frame a proper and sound memorandum of appeal. Mr Marandu further contended that on 3 August 1992 E another reminder was sent to the lower appellate court, requesting the supply of the copy of proceedings but the same had not yet been supplied even by 10 August 1992 when this application for leave to appeal out of time was filed. That again appears to find support in the record of the lower appellate court, as per endorsement on Mr Marandu's letter of 3 August 1992, whereby the DM minuted to F the civil section that they should ensure that such request is met after payment of necessary fees. Such endorsement is also dated 3 August 1992. Mr Marandu further contended that by the time this application was being presented they had not yet been supplied with such copy of proceedings to enable them to formulate G their grounds of appeal and that it was difficult to do so on the basis of the copy of the judgment alone as he was not present when the appeal was argued. On the above grounds the learned counsel prayed for an extension of time to run to such time that the copy of proceedings shall have been supplied. H
That has been opposed by Mr Kinguji, learned counsel for the respondent on the grounds, inter alia, that the failure of the appellant to have copy of proceedings was due to the fact that he demanded the same through correspondence when he had not paid for them. He then referred this court to the case of Hasham Larji v I
1995 TLR p204
MWAIKASU J
A Kotecha (1) where it was decided that it is not sufficient to simply apply for copy of proceedings and then rest without taking any further action to procure the same.

As rightly contended by the learned counsel for the appellant, it is evident from the facts as observed above that the case cited before this court by the learned B counsel for the respondent as authority for defeating this application is clearly distinguishable from the facts of this case. For it is evident as also noted from the record of the lower appellate court that by 3 August 1992 such copy of C proceedings had not yet been ready for the supply to the appellant, despite frequent reminders. The appellant cannot in the circumstances be held to be responsible for the delay in obtaining copy of proceedings from the lower appellate court. It is the lower appellate court which has contributed to such delay.

D No doubt, copy of proceedings along side with copy of judgment are necessary for the purposes of framing a sound memorandum of appeal. It is from the time of the supply of both such documents that the limitation of time for appeal runs.

Accordingly I find that this application has merit. It is accordingly allowed and the appellant is hereby granted extension of time of his appeal to run from the date he E receives the copy of proceedings from the lower appellate court. It is, however, noted that such copy of proceedings have now been typed. The appellant should therefore arrange at the earliest to procure them on payment of the necessary fees.

Order accordingly. F

1995 TLR p205

A

[zRPz]NJORO FURNITURE MART LTD v TANZANIA ELECTRIC SUPPLY CO LTD 1995 TLR 205 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Arusha

Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA B

Civil Appeal No 39 of 1993

August 3, 1995

(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Munuo, J). C

Flynote

Tort - Damages - Whether to include an element to offset the effect of inflation and devaluation.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Costs - Court awards half of the costs of the suit - Whether proper. D

Civil Practice and Procedure - Interest - From date of filing suit to date of final judgment - Interest on judgment debt.

-Headnote

The trial High court awarded a sum of Shs 728, 154/70/ = being part of the special E damages claimed by the appellants, plus half of the costs of the suit and 10% interest payable 'from the date of judgment to the date of final settlement'. The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal against the quantum of special damages awarded, half of the costs of the suit without assigning any reasons, and failure of the Trial Judge to award 'interest at bank rate on the decretal sum calculated from the date of filing the suit to the date of final judgment'. The Court of Appeal upheld the quantum awarded by the Trial Judge. On the other points raised: F

Held:

(i) Since in principle the quantum of damages has to be such as to restore an injured party, as far as possible, to the position prior to the injury, it is correct in law to include in the award of damages an element calculated to offset the effect of inflation and devaluation; G

(ii) Costs follow the event; where the court directs that any costs shall not follow the event the court shall state its reasons in writing.

(iii) It is apparent from the provisions of s 29 of the Civil Procedure Code, H read together with rule 21 of Order 20 of the same code that interest is payable on a judgment debt 'from the date of delivery of the judgment until the same shall be satisfied', at the rate of seven percentum per annum or not exceeding twelve percentum as agreed by the parties in writing or by consent;

(iv) The trial court was in error in making a direction for '10% interest from the date of judgment to the date of final settlement' in the absence of agreement by the parties; I

1995 TLR p206

NYALALI CJ

A (v) The appellant is entitled to interest at bank rate from the date of filing the suit to date of delivery of judgment.

Case Infomation

Appeal allowed in part.

Case referred to:

B (1) Kioka Ltd v. De Angelis [1969] EA 7

Jonathan for the appellant.

Maro for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

C Nyalali, CJ delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:

This is an appeal by Njoro Furniture Mart Ltd, hereinafter called the appellant, against part of the judgment and decree of the High Court at Arusha where the appellant had instituted a suit against Tanzania Electric Supply Co Ltd, hereinafter D called the respondent. The suit was for payment of special and general damages arising out of alleged negligent conduct on the part of the respondent, plus costs and interest. The trial High Court, Munuo, J awarded a sum of Shs E 728,154/70/= being part of the special damages claimed, plus half of the costs of the suit and 10 per cent interest payable 'from the date of judgment to the date of final settlement'. The remainder of appellant's claim was rejected by the High Court. Appellant was aggrieved, hence this appeal to this court. Mr Jonathan, learned advocate, represents the appellant in this appeal, whereas Mr Maro, F learned advocate, represents the respondent. 12 grounds of appeal were submitted and argued in the appeal before us.

G It is common ground that on 17 September 1989 the carpentry workshop of the appellant at Njoro, otherwise known as Maili Sita, in Moshi municipality was gutted by fire some time after the respondent's employees had attended to the electricity line and transformer serving the appellant's carpentry workshop. That fire also damaged the property of the appellant's neighbours. Subsequently, at a meeting H held between the respondent's representatives on one side and the appellant and its neighbours on the other side, the respondent, through its representatives, admitted liability and agreed to compensate the appellant and the neighbours for the damage suffered. Prolonged negotiations and communications regarding the quantum of damages took place between the appellant and the respondent without success. I

1995 TLR p207

NYALALI CJ

It is common ground also that in the course of the negotiations for settlement of A claims, the respondent asked the appellant to give an estimate of the costs of repairing the damaged workshop; and an estimate of the loss of profits suffered as a consequence of the fire. In response to such requests, the appellant supplied to the respondent various estimates as per Exh P2, P9 and D6. Exh P2 is an B estimate prepared by a firm known as General Electric Service and signed by DW8 in respect of costs for 'repair and replacement of damaged motors and electric installation ...'. It is dated 18 January 1990 and puts the cost at Shs 1,261,808/=. Exh D6 is a similar estimate by the same firm, that is General C Electric Service, and is dated 25 July 1991. Exh D6 puts the cost for 'electrical repair' of the workshop at Shs 728,154.70/=. Exh P9 is an accountant's report prepared by one Anael Patrick Kavishe (PW3) of Masawe & Co Ltd, a firm of accountants and auditors, showing that the appellant had suffered loss of profits in the region of Shs 17,000,000/=. It is common ground that the appellant is a usual D client of Masawe & Co Ltd, on retainership basis.

Furthermore, it is undisputed between the parties that in the course of attempting to negotiate a settlement of the claims, the respondent also undertook its own E investigations of the damage and loss suffered by the appellant. Towards that end, one Mtoro Rajab Khalifan (DW6) prepared a report of the accounts of the appellant. That report, admitted at the trial as Exh D7, showed that the carpentry workshop business was running at a loss at the time of the fire incident. DW6 is a registered accountant employed by the respondent. F

It is the appellant's case that it is entitled to be paid not only the sum of Shs 1,261,808/= as per Exh P2, being the cost of restoring the carpentry workshop to normality, but the sum of Shs 17,105,394/= being the estimated loss of profits G arising from loss of sales to customers. Furthermore, it is part of the appellant's case that the appellant is entitled to be paid compensation for the loss likely to be suffered as a result of action likely to be taken by appellant's customers for failure to supply goods to the latter as agreed before the workshop was gutted by fire. Appellant further contends that any compensation paid by the respondent should H include an element to offset the effect of inflation and devaluation, plus interest at bank rate in order to put the appellant in the position it would have been had the workshop continued to operate.

The respondent's case on the other hand is to the effect that both estimates by the appellant as per Exh P2 and P9 are at best unreli- I

1995 TLR p208

NYALALI CJ

A able. It is respondent's contention that the estimate of the cost of restoring the workshop as shown in Exh P2 is fraudulent and grossly exaggerated. Furthermore, respondent contends that the true financial position of the workshop at the time of the fire incident is that it was a loss-making business as shown in Exh D7. Furthermore, it was part of the respondent's case at the trial in the High B Court that the appellant should have mitigated the damage by having the damaged workshop machines repaired and installed by General Electric Service, the firm which was apparently ready to repair and install the machines on credit.

C The first issue for consideration and decision in this case concerns the cost of restoring appellant's workshop to the working conditions it had prior to being gutted by fire. The only evidence relevant to decision of this issue is Exh P2 and D6. Both are estimates prepared by the appellant. The learned Trial Judge disregarded Exh D P2 on the ground that the person who signed it, that is DW8, was not sure of its contents as he claimed not to be conversant with the English language in which it was written. The learned Trial Judge, however, accepted the contents of Exh D6 as being more reliable and proceeded to award the sum shown therein that is Shs E 728,154/70/=. Bearing in mind that Exh D6 is a document prepared and supplied by the appellant in the course of negotiation to settle appellant's claims against the respondent, we find no basis for faulting the learned Trial Judge in that regard. We therefore find, as she did, that the cost of restoring the carpentry workshop to its working condition at the time Exh D6 was prepared is Shs 728,154/70/=. F

The second issue for consideration and decision is whether the appellant suffered loss of profits as a result of the fire. The learned Trial Judge does not appear to have specifically considered this matter when dealing with the 11 issues framed G for consideration by the trial court. Obviously the matter fell for consideration under issue No 9, that is, 'Has the plaintiff suffered loss of income and if so, to what extent?'. It would seem that the matter slipped from the attention of the learned Trial Judge apparently because she confined herself to only one aspect of the H issue - that is, appellant's alleged failure to mitigate damages. Obviously the issue of mitigation of specific damages arises only where loss is proved.

In the present case the only evidence relevant to the issue of loss of profits is to be found in the testimonies of PW3 and DW6 and the respective reports each prepared, that is Exh P9 and D7 respectively. The testimonies and reports of these accountants is diame- I trically opposed to each other. One supports the contention that appellant's A venture was profitable before it was closed down. The other supports the contrary view that appellant's venture was making a loss at the material time. Unfortunately neither PW3 nor DW6 is an independent witness, because the former is a retained client who normally audits the appellant's accounts, and the latter is an employee of the respondent. We think that under these circumstances, where the B burden of proof is upon the appellant (as plaintiff in the case), the appellant has to show that PW3 and his report are more reliable than DW6 and his report. It seems to us that this was not done. It follows therefore that the appellant failed to prove on a balance of probabilities that he suffered loss of profits. C

The third issue is whether the appellant is entitled to be paid compensation for loss likely to be suffered as a result of claims likely to be made for failure to deliver goods to clients as agreed before the workshop was gutted by fire. The learned D Trial Judge found to the effect that the appellant had received confirmed orders for the manufacture and supply of sundry goods to clients before the workshop was gutted by fire. She however did not consider whether the appellant would suffer loss consequent upon possible claims by those clients. In our considered opinion E it seems that the appellant, on the evidence adduced at the trial, has a defence against such possible claims. The obvious defence is that of frustration of contract arising out of appellant's workshop being gutted by fire. It follows therefore that appellant is not entitled to compensation for possible claims. F

The fourth issue is whether any amount of money awarded to the appellant as damages should include an element to offset the effect of inflation and devaluation. We think that since in principle the quantum of damages has to be such as to restore an injured party, as far as possible to the position prior to the injury, it is correct in law to include in the award of damages an element calculated to offset G the effect of inflation and devaluation. As stated by Kemp and Mc Oustra, learned authors in their The Quantum of Damages, vol 1, 2nd ed, 'leaving authority aside, both principle and common sense require that the courts, when they H assess an award of money, which is to compensate a plaintiff for the damage caused to him by his injuries, should take into account large and comparatively permanent changes in real value, i.e. in the purchasing power of money'. Unfortunately in the present case, though appellant was represented by experienced counsel at the trial, no evidence or material was adduced at the trial upon which the rate of inflation or I

A devaluation could be determined. We are therefore unable to award any amount for inflation or devaluation.

The fifth and last issue before us is whether the trial court erred in awarding half of the costs of the suit instead of granting the full costs, and whether it erred in awarding interest at 10 per cent from the date of judgment to the date of payment, B instead of granting interest at bank rate from date of filing the suit to date of payment as prayed.

With regard to the matter of costs, Mr Maro, learned advocate for the respondent, argued in the appeal before us that the trial court was correct in exercising its C discretion by granting less than the full costs in favour of the appellant, on the ground that the appellant had failed to prove a substantial part or the claim contained in the plaint. Undoubtedly in our opinion, costs are within the discretion of the court as stated under s 30 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. It has, D however, long been established by the courts that costs normally follow the event. See case of Kiska Ltd v De Angelis (1). Moreover, under ss (2) of s 30 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is expressly stated that, 'Where the court directs that any costs shall not follow the event, the court shall state its reasons in writing.' E

The gist of appellant's complaint is that the court did not state its reasons in writing for directing only half of the costs to be paid. The complaint is justified. We have, however, to ask ourselves what legal effect does this procedural error have? In our considered opinion, since the reasons for awarding less than the full costs in F favour of the appellant are so obvious, the error is curable. We thus cure the error by stating that the appellant, who was the plaintiff in the trial court, is entitled to half the costs of the suit by reason of failure to prove a substantial part of the claim.

G As to the matter of payment of interest, it is apparent from the provisions of s 29 of the Civil Procedure Code, read together with r 21 of Ord 20 of the same Code that interest is payable on a judgment debt 'from the date of delivery of the judgment until the same shall be satisfied.' Under r 21 of Ord 20, 'the rate ... shall H be seven per cent per annum or such other rate, not exceeding 12 per cent per annum as the parties may expressly agree in writing before or after the delivery of the judgment or as may be adjudged by consent'.

It is thus evident that the trial court was in error in making a direction for '10 per cent interest from the date of the judgment to the date of final settlement', in the absence of agreement by the I parties. We are bound to intervene to correct this error. But before we do so, we A have to consider whether the appellant should be paid any interest for the period prior to judgment. Under s 29 of the Civil Procedure Code, a court has power '... to order interest to be paid up to the date of judgment at such rates as it may deem reasonable ...'. The appellant had claimed in the plaint, 'interest at bank rate on the B decretal sum calculated from the date of filing the suit to the date of final judgment.' We think under the circumstances of this case, the claim is fully justified. The appellant is entitled to interest at bank rate from the date of filing the suit to date of delivery of judgment. C

In the final analysis therefore, this appeal partly fails and partly succeeds to the extent that the appeal against the principal sum and costs filed, but the appeal against the order for payment of interest succeeds to the extend indicated above. Under the circumstances of this case, we think it is just that appellant be paid one-third of the costs of this appeal. D

F

[zRPz]ZAKARIA BARIE BURA v THERESIA MARIA JOHN MUBIRU 1995 TLR 211 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Arusha
Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Kisange JJA

Civil Appeal No 40 of 1993 G
August 3, 1995
(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Munuo, J) H
Flynote

Land Law - Certificate of right of occupancy - Letter of offer of right of occupancy given jointly to husband and wife - Mortgage deed on right of occupancy executed jointly by husband and wife - Title deed issued in the name of husband alone - Whether proper.
Contract - Sale of a house jointly owned - One joint owner selling the house without the consent of the other - Whether title can pass. I
1995 TLR p212
A Contract - Illegality - Sale of a house - Two sale documents with one indicating a lower sale price with intention to defraud internal revenue - Contract void for illegality - Consequences thereof.
Evidence - Admissibility - Stamp duty - Sale of a house agreement - Sale document not bearing stamp duty - Whether admissible in evidence. B Stamp duty - Sale of a house agreement - Sale document does not bear stamp duty - Whether admissible in evidence.
-Headnote
C This was an appeal by the appellant against the judgment and decree of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha where the respondent had successfully instituted a suit against the appellant for a declaration that the sale of a house, which she had jointly acquired with her late husband in Arusha municipality, to appellant by her late husband was null and void. The respondent's late husband was able to sell the house because he had obtained the title deed to the plot of land in his own name although the letter of offer was in the joint names of the husband and the appellant wife, and the mortgage deed offered as security for a D loan from the Tanzania Housing Bank was executed in the joint names of the husband and wife. Two sale agreements were prepared and signed by the vendor and purchaser one of which indicated a lesser sale price in order to defraud internal revenue. The sale agreement did not bear any stamp duty. The Court of E appeal considered whether the title deed was fraudulently obtained and whether the sale agreement of the suit premises was of any legal effect.
Held:

(i) Since a certificate of right of occupancy can be mortgaged only by the owner or owners of the title, it must follow that certificate of title which F was the subject of the mortgage must have been in the joint names of respondent and her late husband; as such the title deed bearing solely the name of the respondent's late husband was obtained by deceit and for the purpose of depriving the respondent of her right in the suit premises;

G (ii) The sale agreement of the suit premises was of no legal effect because:

(a) the vendor, as joint owner, could not pass title of the house to the purchaser without the consent of the other joint owner, his wife;

(b) the making of the agreement under two sale documents intended to deceive the Treasury as to the proper tax liable to be paid for the transaction rendered the agreement illegal and therefore void ab initio and unenforceable. H

(c) the sale documents did not bear any stamp duty and were thus inadmissible in evidence.

(iii) Although the sale agreement was illegal the appellant purchaser was entitled to the sums of Shs 500,000/= which he paid under the illegal contract and which appeared to have been deposised in court by the respondent. I

1995 TLR p213

NYALALI CJ

Case Infomation

Appeal dismissed. A

Cases referred to:

(1) Miller v. Karlinski [1954] 62 TLR 85

(2) Napier v. National Business Agency [1951] 2 All ER 264

(3) Nizam v. Devonshire Stores [1958] EA 729

(4) Sunderji Nanji Ltd v. Mohamedali Kassam Bhaloo [1958] EA 762 B

Sang'ka for the appellant.

Bigeye for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Nyalali, CJ delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: C

This is an appeal by one Zakaria Barie Bura, hereinafter called the appellant, against the judgment and decree of the High Court at Arusha where the respondent, namely Theresia Maria John Mubiru had successfully instituted a suit D against the appellant. In that suit, the respondent sought a declaration to the effect that the sale of the house on Plot No 64 Block 21 Kaloleni in Arusha municipality between the appellant and respondent's late husband, namely John Lezon Mubiru, is null and void. She also sought vacant possession of the suit E premises and costs of the suit. The appellant on his side counter-claimed without success for damages on the ground of trespass by the respondent and in the alternative a refund of the purchase price of the suit premises. Aggrieved by the decision of the High Court, Munuo, J, he appeals to this court. He is represented F by Mr Sang'ka, learned advocate, whereas Miss Bigeye, learned counsel from the Tanzania Legal Corporation represents the respondent. Seven grounds of appeal have been submitted in support of the appeal.

It is common ground between the parties to this case that the respondent was the G wife of one John Lezon Mubiru who died in September 1986. Furthermore, it is common ground that sometime before that death, the married couple had agreed to jointly acquire a plot of land and build a matrimonial house thereon. Towards that end the couple applied for a right of occupancy in respect of Plot No 64 bloc 21, Kaloleni in Arusha municipality. In response to the application, the couple were H jointly given an offer of right of occupancy for a term of 33 years under a letter ref No ARD/1420/7/FAK dated 13 May 1977 from the Land Development Department in Arusha area commissioner's officer. That offer was produced at the trial as Exh P2. Furthermore, the couple jointly paid various I

1995 TLR p214

NYALALI CJ

A fees in satisfaction of the conditions stipulated in the offer of right of occupancy and were issued with receipts acknowledging such payments as shown in Ex P3.

It is also common ground that the house on plot No 64 Block 21, Kaloleni was built B through a loan given by the National Housing Bank on security of a mortgage of the title to the right of occupancy. That mortgage was contained in a mortgage deed produced at the trial as Exh P4. Furthermore, it is common ground that subsequently respondent's husband entered into a written agreement to sell the suit premises to the appellant. The agreement was dated 27 June 1984 and was in C two documents produced at the trial as Exh P8 and D1 for the respondent and appellant respectively. Both documents read the same except that the purchase price reads as Shs 500,000/= in Exh P8, whereas it reads as Shs 900,000/= in Exh D1. There is also an addendum in Exh D1 permitting the vendor to continue in occupation of the suit premises for a prescribed period. D

The respondent's case is that the agreement between the appellant and respondent's late husband was fraudulently made for the purpose of depriving the respondent of her rights in the suit premises. It is part of the respondent's case that in furtherance of that fraud, respondent's husband fraudulently obtained a title E deed, produced at the trial as Exh D3, purportedly issued in the sole name of respondent's husband, instead of the joint names of the respondent and her late husband. It is part of respondent's case that the appellant was either a party to or knew of the fraud. Furthermore, it is respondent's contention that the appellant is entitled, if at all, to a refund of only the purchase price of Shs 500,000/= shown in F Exh P3, which was deposited in court by respondent on receipt No ERV No 654854 dated 29 July 1988.

The appellant's case on the other hand is that the arrangement between the G respondent and her late husband to jointly acquire and build a matrimonial house collapsed as a result of matrimonial problems between the couple, and thereafter respondent's late husband proceeded alone to acquire the plot of land and alone H built the house in question. It is appellant's contention that no fraud was committed either in obtaining the title deed or the sale of the suit premises. It is part of appellant's case that he is entitled to vacant possession of the suit premises, or in the alternative, to a refund of the purchase price of Shs 900,000/= plus interest, and not the lower sum of Shs 500,000/=, which was shown in Exh P8 only for the purpose of enabling respondent's husband, as vendor, to pay less tax to the Treasury. I

1995 TLR p215

NYALALI CJ

It is apparent from the proceedings of this case that there are two main issues A upon which the outcome of this case depends. The first issue is whether the title deed, otherwise known as the Certificate to Right of Occupancy, produced at the trial by the appellant as Exh D3 was fraudulently obtained. The second issue is whether the sale agreement of the suit premises has any legal effect. B

Let us start with the first issue. The learned Trial Judge made no specific finding on it. The relevant evidence on this issue comprises the testimony of the respondent, supported by Exh P2 (letter of Offer of Right of Occupancy), P3 (four revenue receipts in respect of fees for Certificate of Title), P4 (the mortgage deed on Right of Occupancy title No 68-LRM) and P5 (payment voucher issued by C Tanzania Housing Bank for disbursement of loan). This evidence clearly shows that by the end of September 1977 there was a mortgage deed between the Tanzania

Housing Bank on the one side and the respondent and her late husband on the other side, under which the Right of Occupancy title No 686-LRM was D made a security for a loan of Shs 80,000/= by the bank to the respondent and her late husband. Consequent upon this mortgage, a sum of Shs 35,900/= was released to the respondent and her late husband on 21 October 1977 as per Exh P5. E

The question that arises here is in whose name or names was the Certificate of Title No 686-LRM supposed to be. Obviously, since a Certificate of Title of Right of Occupancy can be mortgaged only by the owner or owners of the title, it must follow that the Certificate of Title No 686-LRM which was the subject of the F mortgage must have been in the joint names of respondent and her late husband. The answer to the first crucial issue must therefore be that the Certificate of Title No 686-Land Registry Moshi (Exh D3) bearing solely the name of respondent's late husband was obtained fraudulently - that is by deceit and for the purpose of depriving the respondent of her rights in the suit premises. G

With regard to the second main issue, the learned Trial Judge specifically found that '... the late Mubiru had no capacity to solely sell the house to the defendant because the house was jointly owned by himself and his wife. Without the consent of his wife, the joint owner, the vendor could not pass the title of the house to the defendant purchaser'. H

We agree with the learned Trial Judge. We think that there are two other reasons why the appellant cannot obtain title to the suit premises on the basis of the sale agreement. The first reason was noted by the learned Trial Judge when she stated in a part of her I

A judgment '... The vendor and purchaser colluded and in pari delicto signed two different sale agreements in order to pass lower taxes. By agreeing to sign the Shs 500,000/= sale agreement, Exh P8, the purchaser stained his hands and tainted himself with illegality whether for his benefit or for the benefit of the vendor ...'.

B The learned Trial Judge of course did not sufficiently articulate the law concerning contracts aimed at defrauding the internal revenue. The law on this point, as established throughout the common law system, is that such contracts are unenforceable. See the case of Miller v Karlinski (1) and Napier v National C Business Agency (2). The contract of sale of the suit premises in this case was made under two documents aimed at deceiving the Treasury as to the proper tax liable to be paid for the transaction. Clearly such contract was void, without any legal effect right from the beginning. Of course this does not mean that the D appellant has lost everything including the money he paid as purchase price. In law, he is entitled to the sum of Shs 500,000/= which he paid under the illegal contract and which appears to have been deposited in court by the respondent.

E The second reason why the appellant could not have obtained the title to the suit premises, even if the sale agreement had not been tainted with illegality, is the fact that neither document containing the agreement bears any indication of payment of stamp duty according to the Stamp Duty Act. By law, such omission renders the sale agreement inadmissible as evidence in court, unless the party concerned pays the stamp duty before the document is admitted as evidence.

See the case F of Nizam v Devonshire Stores (3) and Sunderji Nanji Ltd v Mohamedali Kassan Bhaloo (4).
For all the reasons stated above, we are thus satisfied that this appeal has no merits whatsoever and must be dismissed in its entirety with costs. We order accordingly. G
1995 TLR p217
A
[zRPz]NIZAR SHELL L'ADAWY MUHANNA v REGISTRAR OF TITLES AND ANOTHER 1995 TLR 217 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Lubuva JJA

Civil Appeal No 33 of 1994 B
August 22, 1995
(From the judgment and decree of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Kyando, J) C
Flynote
Land Law - Land Registration - Powers of Registrar of Titles - Whether the Registrar has power to determine issues as to land ownership - Section 105 of the Land Registration Ordinance. D
-Headnote
The Registrar of Titles mounted an investigation to establish the ownership of property as between the appellant and his late father. The Registrar purported to invoke powers under s 105 of the Land Registration Ordinance, Cap 334. After investigations the Registrar decided that the property belonged to the appellant's late father. The appellant's appeal to the High Court challenging the decision of the E Registrar was unsuccessful. On further appeal the Court of Appeal of Tanzania considered the powers of the Registrar under s 105 Land Registration Ordinance. F
Held:
(i) Section 105 of the Land Registration Ordinance only empowers the Registrar of Titles to determine questions regarding whether his register should be corrected or an entry therein cancelled; any other inquiry or investigation to be undertaken by him must be either expressly or impliedly authorized as required by the Ordinance or any rule made thereunder; G
(ii) The issue in this case involved the ownership of registered land and there is no provision both in the Ordinance and in the Rules which authorize or require the Registrar of Titles to make investigations and determine such substantial issues as land ownership; H
(iv) The investigation and proceedings by the Registrar were undertaken without jurisdiction, and were null and void; so too was the appeal to the High Court being grounded on incompetent proceedings.
Case Infomation
Appeal allowed.
No case referred to. I

1995 TLR p218
MFALILA JA
[zJDz]Judgment
A Mfalila, JA delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:
In this appeal the dispute is over a house built on plot No 766 United Nations Road, Upanga in Dar-es-Salaam. The Certificate of Title issued in respect of this plot is No 186174/85 in the name of one Nizar Shell L'adawy Muhanna. This is the B present appellant. The appellant is the son of the late Shell Muhanna who died at Muhimbili hospital Dar-es-Salaam on 9 April 1990 leaving a widow Jamilla Mohamed, the second respondent, but she is not the appellant's mother. The late Shell Muhanna had several wives, one of whom was the appellant's mother, although it appears that at the time of Shell's death she was no longer his wife. C
Sometime in 1991 the appellant saw a general notice in the Government Gazette of 29 March 1991 advertising the loss of a Certificate of Title in respect of plot No 766 in the name of Nizar Shell L'adawy Muhanna (deceased) and that the D applicant was one Jamila Mohamed. The general notice went on to inform the public that Certificate of Title No 186174/85 in respect of the above plot was lost and that unless cause was shown to the contrary within two months, a new Certificate of Title would be issued in its place. According to the appellant, when he E saw this notice, he was greatly distressed because firstly he was still alive, secondly the certificate alleged to be lost was in his possession as registered owner and thirdly the property was his. He therefore hurried to the offices of the Registrar of Titles to record his objections against the terms of the notice. The F second respondent, however, maintained that the property was part of her late husband's properties and that it was bequeathed to her in his will. The Registrar of Titles who is the first respondent was therefore faced with a dispute between the appellant and his stepmother, the second respondent on whether plot No 766 G United Nations Road, Upanga belonged to the appellant or his deceased father as to form part of his estate. Faced with this dispute, the Registrar of Titles mounted an investigation to establish the ownership of this property as between the appellant and his late father. He launched this investigation under what he called powers vested in him by s 105 of the Land Registration Ordinance. This section provides as follows: H

'105. Where any question arises as to whether any registration or entry should or should not be made, or whether any memorial inscribed in the land register should or should not be corrected or cancelled or where by this Ordinance or any rule made thereunder I

1995 TLR p219
MFALILA JA

the Registrar is expressly or impliedly authorised or required to inquire into, investigate, give A any decision on or exercise any discretion as to any matter, he may order any person -

(a) to attend before him at such time and place as he may appoint and be examined on oath which he is hereby authorised to administer; and

(b) to produce to and allow him to inspect of all material documents in the possession, B power or control of such person.'

Following this investigation, the registrar held that the properly belonged to the appellant's late father and that therefore he had rightly disposed it in his will in favour of the second respondent. In his appeal to the High Court from this decision C of the Registrar of Titles, the appellant challenged the right and power of the registrar to make such an investigation purportedly under s 105 of the Land Registration Ordinance. The High Court appears to have agreed with the D Registrar's exercise of such powers and dismissed the appeal on the basis that the Registrar's decision that the property belonged to the appellant's father was fully supported by the evidence before him.

However, we are satisfied that if the High Court judge on first appeal had not E assumed that the Registrar had such powers of investigation and had specifically addressed his mind to the above provisions of s 105, he would most certainly have found that that section gives no such powers to the Registrar of Titles. That F section as quoted above only empowers the Registrar of Titles to determine questions regarding whether his register should be corrected or an entry therein cancelled. Any other inquiry or investigation to be undertaken by him must be either expressly or impliedly authorised or required by the Ordinance or any rule made thereunder. The present proceedings did not involve a dispute over entries in the Land Register requiring the Registrar of Titles to determine whether any G registration or entry should or should not be made in the Land Register or that what is in the register should be corrected or cancelled. It involved the question whether the land in dispute registered in the appellant's name was the appellant's property or his late father's. The dispute therefore involved the ownership of H registered land. There is no provision both in the Land Registration Ordinance and in the rules which authorise or requires the Registrar of Titles to make investigations and determine such substantial issues as land ownership. The investigation and proceedings by the Registrar were therefore undertaken without jurisdiction, they were thus null and void. The purported appeal to the High I

A Court was equally null and void because the appeal was grounded on incompetent proceedings.

Accordingly, we allow the appeal, quash the proceedings both before the Registrar and those in the High Court. An order for costs in favour of the appellant against the second respondent is made both in this court and in the High Court. B

If either the appellant or the second respondent feels the other is threatening their interests in plot No 766 United Nations Road, Upanga area in Dar-es-Salaam, they can file an appropriate claim in court. C

D

[zRPz]EVA SALINGO, MT 6222421 PTE PETER MAGOTI AND MT 62218 PASCAL MGAWE v REPUBLIC 1995 TLR 220 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Mbeya

Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mfalila JJA and Lubuva JJA E

Criminal Appeal No 32 of 1995
August 23, 1995
(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Iringa, Mchome, J) F
Flynote
Evidence - Identification - Identified persons not strangers to the identifying person - circumstances favourable for unmistaken identity. G Evidence - Identification - Identification parade - Appellants not identified because they were not in the parade - Whether failure of identification.
-Headnote
H The second appellant challenged his conviction for murder by the High Court on the ground that he was not identified as one of the killers. He charged that the witness who identified him was not a truthful witness and that she had failed to identify him during an identification parade in which he was present. On appeal:
Held:
(i) There was plausible evidence to show that the appellants were not I strangers to the witness and that the circumstances at the time were A favourable for unmistaken identity;

(ii) The witness did not identify the appellants at the identification parade for the obvious reason that the appellants were not there and this cannot be taken as a failure on the part of the witness to identify them. B
Case Infomation
Appeal dismissed.
No case referred to.
Ndibalema for the appellant.
Mbise for the respondent. C
[zJDz]Judgment
Lubuva JA delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:
The second appellant, MT 62421 Pte Peter Magoti and the third appellant, MT 62218 Pte Paschal s/o Mgawe were charged in the first count with the murder of D the deceased, Said s/o Mlonganile. In the second count, the first appellant, Eva d/o Salingo was charged as an accessory after the fact. Both were convicted as charged. The second and third appellants were sentenced by the High Court sitting at Iringa (Mchome, J) to death. The first appellant was sentenced to five years imprisonment. E
Initially each of the above-named appellants had lodged an appeal against the conviction and sentence. However, we were notified at the hearing of the appeal that the third appellant died in prison on 1 April 1994. So the appeal is proceeded with only in so far as the first and second appellants are concerned. In this appeal, we shall refer to the third appellant, the deceased, as the third accused. F

The tragic death of the deceased took place at Makambako on 15 February 1990. The first appellant, Eva d/o Salino owned a pombe shop where Ruti d/o Filangali (PW3) was employed in selling pombe. It would appear that the first appellant had a love relationship with both the deceased and the second appellant. It was the G prosecution case that on 15 February 1990 at about 8.00 pm the second appellant accompanied by the third accused came to the pombe shop for a drink. PW3 was then on duty at the pombe shop. At about 10.00 pm the deceased also came to the pombe shop where he sat at the counter with the first appellant. As it was closing time for the bar, the first and second appellants together with the deceased left the pombe shop and went towards the house of the first appellant. When PW3 H was taking the pressure lamp from the pombe shop to the house of the first appellant about I

A 30 paces from the pombe shop, she saw the second appellant and the third accused in hot exchange of words over the first appellant. Then the second appellant and the third accused held the deceased by the collar of his shirt outside the pombe shop. From the first appellant's house door, PW3 saw the second appellant and the third accused still beating the deceased with their boots. Then they dragged the deceased to a place she (PW3) did not know. B

PW3 did not see the second appellant, the third accused and the first appellant until the next morning at 5.00 am when the first appellant returned to her house and shortly left for Njombe. It was in the morning following the night of the incident C when the first appellant had left for Njombe that PW3 learnt of the deceased's death. She went to see the dead body lying by the roadside near the CCM office. PW3 identified the dead body as that of the deceased. Following the death of the deceased, a number of suspected people were arrested including Ruti d/o Filangali (PW3), Sauda Nyelenge (PW4), Ester Sanga (PW5) and the first D appellant. While in police lock-up, the first appellant threatened PW3 not to disclose to anybody about the fight that took place at the pombe shop where the deceased was beaten. If she (PW3) revealed, the first appellant threatened, PW3 E would be bewitched by the first appellant's mother. PW4 and PW5 who also heard this threat notified the police (PW6). Investigations were carried out and as a result, on 6 March 1990, the second appellant and the third accused were arrested and charged together with the first appellant.

F In her defence at the trial, the first appellant, Eva d/o Salingo virtually denied everything. She did not know the second appellant and the third accused. On the fateful night, she did not see the second appellant or the deceased at the pombe shop. She did not witness any fight taking place at her pombe shop that night. Though she knew the deceased she did not have love relationship with him. She G further stated that after she had returned the lamps from the pombe shop she went to bed. The following morning she left for Njombe to attend to a civil case. She denied threatening PW3.

H The second appellant raised the defence of an alibi. He claimed that he did not visit the pombe shop but remained at the barracks on the material night. He also maintained that he was not identified at the identification parade in which he took part. This, he insisted, showed that he was not in any way involved in the killing of the deceased.

The learned Trial Judge after a careful analysis of the evidence came to the conclusion that PW3, PW4 and PW5 were honest and I truthful witnesses. The judge further held that both the appellants had told the court A a pack of lies. Consequently, the second appellant was found guilty of murder and was sentenced to death. The first appellant was convicted as an accessory after the fact for which she was sentenced to five years' imprisonment.

1995 TLR p223

LUBUVA JA

Mr Ndibalema, learned counsel represented the appellants in this appeal. He B raised two points, namely that the learned Trial Judge erred in convicting the second appellant of murder because there was a fight. And that as regards the first appellant, the sentence of five years imprisonment was excessive.

From the outset, we wish to make it clear that it is our view that the main issue in C this appeal is the identification of the appellants. Arguing the appeal on behalf of the second appellant, Mr Ndibalema's brief submission was that as Stephen Kihanga (PW1), the investigating officer mentioned in his evidence of a fight and quarrel taking place at Msafiri pombe shop, it was possible that as a result of such D a quarrel and fight, the appellant was forced to retaliate against the deceased. In that case, Mr Ndibalema charged, the second appellant should have been convicted of manslaughter and not murder. In connection with the identification of E the second appellant, it is relevant to mention at this juncture that at the hearing of this appeal, in a rather unusual and dramatic manner, the second appellant who was present in court sought to conduct his appeal on his own. This was after Mr Ndibalema, learned counsel had finished his submission for both the appellants. We allowed him to address the court. The essence of his address to us was that F he was not involved in the murder of the deceased. This, he said, was so because he was not identified at the identification parade held at the barracks in which he took part. He discredited PW3 as an unreliable witness. He handed over to the court copies of the police statements by some of the witnesses for the prosecution to show how inconsistent they had been in identifying him (second appellant). G

On the issue of identification, the crucial evidence is that of Ruti Filangali (PW3). From the record it is evident that on the fateful night, she was on duty at Msefiri pombe shop from 8.00 pm to 10.00 pm, the closing hour. She was the employee H of the first appellant. PW3 in her evidence firmly stated to have seen the second appellant and the third accused at the pombe shop at the material time. That her employer, the first appellant, was also present there seated at the counter with the deceased. It is also in her evidence that both the appellants and the deceased were not new to her. She I

1995 TLR p224

LUBUVA JA

A had seen them on a number of occasions before at the pombe shop in company with the first appellant. There is therefore no reason why she should have mistaken the identity of these people that day. With the aid of a pressure lamp ('karabai') which sufficiently provided light at the pombe shop, she was able to see the appellants and the deceased inside the pombe shop. Outside the B pombe shop, she again saw the second appellant and the third accused beating the deceased. The first appellant was also present. From the threshold of the door of the first appellant, PW3 saw the second appellant in the company of the third accused still beating and kicking the deceased who had fallen down a few paces away from the pombe shop. From there, PW3 also saw the deceased being C dragged by the roadside to a place she did not know. The following morning the dead body of the deceased was found lying by the roadside naked. The learned Trial Judge was convinced that PW3 identified the second appellant sufficiently. Addressing himself on this issue he stated: D

'The issue is whether PW3 identified those who were fighting. She says she knew both second and third accused persons and the deceased well before. They were the first accused's lovers. They came into the pombe early and drunk. At closing time their quarrel over E first accused started inside ... I am therefore convinced that PW3 identified those who beat up the deceased clearly. I find PW3 to be an honest and truthful girl ...'

And PW3 in her evidence inter alia had stated: F

'... I saw second and third accused beating the deceased with their boots. We went to Eva's house and stood at the door. We watched their beating the deceased. They said we would G never leave you this woman. We feared to come close. We watched through the door. They continued beating him. We were about 30 paces from the pombe shop at Eva's house. They dragged the deceased to I (sic) do not know where and Eva returned at 5.00 am.'

H On the basis of this evidence, the learned Trial Judge came to the conclusion that the second appellant and the third accused were the ones who beat the deceased and strangled him to death. This is supported by the post mortem examination report Exh PIV which indicates the cause of death as asphyxiation following strangulation. The acceptance of the evidence of PW3 was a question of fact which the learned Trial Judge was entitled to as correctly submitted by Mr I Mbise, learned senior State attorney. It goes without saying that the judge was in a A better position to see the demeanour and assess the credibility of the witness (PW3) than an appellate court. We see no reason for faulting the Trial Judge on this point. The credibility of PW3 is strengthened even further by PW4 and PW5. In their evidence they support PW3 in her evidence that while in police lock-up the B first appellant threatened her (PW3) not to reveal to anybody about the fight that had taken place outside the pombe shop near the first appellant's house. The threat was that if she (PW3) did so, she (PW3) would be bewitched by the first appellant's mother. The threat was heard by PW4 and PW5 who were also in C police lock-up. It was PW4 and PW5 who informed the police about the threat and as a result, the investigation against the first appellant was intensified. This again, in our view, reinforces the fact that PW3 was a witness of truth as found by the Trial Judge.

With the evidence of PW3 accepted by the Trial Judge as credible, Mr D Ndibalema's claim that the death was a result of a fight between the deceased and the second appellant together with the third accused has no leg to stand on. It is clear from the evidence of PW3 that the deceased did not initiate the fight apart from pleading that the first appellant was, for a long time, his wife. Instead, the E evidence showed that all along, it was the second appellant and the third accused who were beating and kicking the deceased. The deceased was dragged away to the place where the next morning he was found dead. We agree with Mr Mbise's submission that this ground has no merit. F

Next we intend to deal with the identification parade. As regards the complaint raised by Mr Ndibalema, the learned advocate and the second appellant himself in his address in court on identification, we hardly need to say much on it. This is because, as observed, once the evidence of PW3 is accepted as truthful as found G by the trial court, there is no room for doubting the identification of the second and first appellants. We have already pointed out that there was plausible evidence to show that the appellants were not strangers to PW3 and that the circumstances at the time were favourable for unmistaken identity. We agree with Mr Mbise that the identification of the appellant was watertight. H

Then there is the issue raised by the second appellant that PW3 was unreliable since she could not identify him at an identification parade held at the barracks in Makambako in which he participated. On this again, we must say at once that the record is loud and clear. The evidence of PW3 does not support this claim. In her I

A evidence, she clearly states that on the day the identification parade was held at Idofi barracks, the second appellant and the third accused were not among those who took part in the parade. So she did not identify the second appellant and third accused in that parade for the obvious reason that they were not there. To our minds, this cannot be taken as a failure on the part of PW3 to identify the second B appellant, as he claimed at the hearing of the appeal. Even then, from the record, at the next earliest opportunity when PW3 saw the second appellant and the third accused at Msafiri pombe shop, without any delay, she alerted the police (PW6) who arrested them. This again, in our considered view, is a clear testimony C of PW3's firm and unmistaken identification of the second appellant and the third accused as the assailants of the deceased. The Trial Judge was entitled in his finding that PW3's identification of the second appellant was conclusive. The complaint on the identification of the appellants is to our minds groundless. D

As for the first appellant, like the case of the second appellant, the evidence of PW3 fully supported her conviction. We have sufficiently demonstrated that it being a question of credibility, she was properly convicted. Mr Ndibalema's E complaint against the sentence of five years' imprisonment as being excessive because she had stayed in remand prison for four years is, with respect, untenable. In any case, this was an aspect which was duly taken into account by the Trial Judge who rightly observed that the offence involved was a very serious one. She was centrally involved in enticing the deceased and the second appellant F into the rivalry that resulted to the tragic death of the deceased for which death penalty has been imposed against the second appellant. We think that the sentence of five years' imprisonment is by any stretch of imagination not excessive in the circumstances of the case. We see no reason to interfere with the sentence. G

For these reasons we dismiss both appeals in their entirety. H

1995 TLR p227

A

[zRPz]NURDIN AKASHA alias HABAB v REPUBLIC 1995 TLR 227 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mfalila JJA and Lubuva JJA

Criminal Appeal No 221 of 1994 B

September 12, 1995

(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Mwaikasu, J) C

Flynote

Evidence - Relevance and admissibility - Evidence adduced in support of a charge which is dismissed for want of consent to prosecute - Whether relevant and admissible to support any other charge in the same information - Section 11 of the Evidence Act, 1967. D

Evidence - Circumstantial evidence - Knowledge of presence of drugs - Whether may be inferred from the circumstances obtaining.

Criminal law - Unlawful possession of Dangerous drugs - Drugs hidden with knowledge and approval of a person - Whether the person with knowledge and giving approval is in possession of those drugs. E

Evidence - Unlawful importation of Dangerous drugs - Drugs imported into Tanzania - Drugs found in expensive and expertly constructed and sealed devices fitted to disguise - Whether knowledge and approval of owner of trucks can be inferred. F

-Headnote

The appellant was charged in a District Court with three counts and was acquitted on all three the counts. Count one alleged unlawful possession of dangerous drugs, count two alleged unlawful importation of dangerous drugs and count three alleged corrupt transaction. Acquittal on counts one and two was grounded on insufficiency of evidence. The appellant was acquitted on count three for lack of requisite consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions. G

The Republic appealed to the High Court against acquittals on counts one and two only. The learned High Court judge found that there was sufficient circumstantial evidence to support a conviction on counts one and two. The learned judge also relied on the evidence adduced in respect of the count which was dismissed for want of the DPP's consent to support the conviction. H

On appeal to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania the appellant attached the decision of the first appellate court arguing that the court erred in finding that there was sufficient circumstantial evidence to ground a conviction because there was no evidence to prove that the appellant I
1995 TLR p228
KISANGA JA
A had knowledge of and/or approved the importation of the drugs into Tanzania. It was also argued that the learned judge was wrong to use the evidence in respect of the dismissed count on corrupt transaction to convict the appellant on the other counts.
Held:
B (i) Where, as in this case, the evidence was capable of supporting more than one count in the charge, such evidence could be used in support of any count in the information, notwithstanding that such evidence supported some count or counts which were found to be invalid or void;
C (ii) Though the count of corrupt transaction was dismissed, meaning in law that the appellant had not been tried at all on that count, the evidence adduced at the trial was admissible to support the charge on any of the remaining counts provided that such evidence was relevant;
(iii) The evidence relating to bribing the search party (i.e. corrupt transaction) was relevant to the charge of unlawful possession of dangerous drugs;
D (iv) Whether the drugs were hidden in the store by the appellant himself or by another person with the appellants' approval, the appellant was in possession of those drugs;
(v) On the evidence, the drugs found on the appellant's three motor vehicles were imported into the country by the appellant or with his knowledge and approval;
E (vi) The learned High Court judge was perfectly justified to find the appellant guilty of unlawful importation of the drugs found on the three motor vehicles and of unlawful possession of the said drugs plus those which were recovered from his house.
Case Infomation
F Appeal dismissed.
Case referred to:
(1) King v. R [1987] LRC (Crim) 153
G M R M Lamwai for the appellant.
M Sengwaji for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Kisanga, JA delivered the considered judgment of the court.
H The appellant, Nurdin Akasha alias Habab, was charged in the district court with three counts. Counts one and two alleged unlawful possession of dangerous drugs and unlawful importation of dangerous drugs, respectively, both being offences under the Dangerous Drugs Ordinance (Cap 95) and the Economic and Orga- I nised Crime Control Act, 1984 as amended by Act No 13 of 1988. The third count A alleged corrupt transaction, being an offence under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1971 and the Economic and Organised Crime Control Act above cited. At the conclusion of the trial, the appellant was acquitted on all the counts. The acquittal on counts one and two was on grounds of insufficiency of evidence, while that on count three was for lack of consent by the Director of Public Prosecutions to B prosecute. However, dissatisfied with the acquittals, the Director of Public Prosecutions appealed to the High Court which convicted the appellant on counts one and two and sentenced him to concurrent prison terms of five and 10 years respectively. The Republic did not wish to pursue the appeal against the acquittal on the third count of corrupt transaction. It is against the convictions and C sentences imposed in respect of counts one and two that this appeal has been preferred. In this appeal the appellant is represented by Dr Lamwai, learned advocate, while Mr Sengwaji, learned principal State attorney appears for the respondent, Republic.
1995 TLR p229
KISANGA JA

The facts of the case are fairly complex, but they may be summarised briefly as D follows: The appellant was a branch director of Akasha Transport Ltd, a transport company incorporated in Kenya with its head office at Mombasa and a branch duly registered and operating in Tanzania. The branch office in Tanzania was situated at a house in Msasani Village area in Dar-es-Salaam which house also served as E residence for the appellant, a Kenyan national and his family consisting of wife, children and mother. The Tanzania branch of which the appellant was the director had a fleet of 10 lorries, some of which had trailers. The fleet was used for transporting goods from Dar-es-Salaam to Zaire, Zambia and Malawi. The lorries had their minor repairs done in Dar-es-Salaam but major repairs were done at the company's head office in Mombasa. F During January and February 1993 the appellant sent the fleet to Mombasa for repairs. The trucks went via Nairobi where it was hoped they would be hired to transport goods but this was not done because the parties concerned could not G agree on the hiring rates. The trucks therefore travelled all the way with no cargo from Dar-es-Salaam to Nairobi and ultimately to Mombasa where they were repaired. The appellant visited Nairobi and Mombasa and made a follow up on the trucks. It took about two months to have the trucks repaired at Mombasa. After the H repairs the trucks were driven back to Dar-es-Salaam, arriving on different dates and again without carrying any visible cargo on them. The first contingent of these trucks arrived back on 2 July 1993, only two days after the appellant's return here from Mombasa, while the last batch arrived back on 19 July 1993. I

1995 TLR p230

KISANGA JA

A On 20 July 1993 the police, acting on information, went to search the appellant's office cum residence at Msasani village area where they seized 105 packets of methaqualone (mandrax) drugs. The drugs were stuffed in two motor vehicle tyres kept in a room used as a store on the appellant's premises. It was alleged that B during the search the appellant panicked and trembled, that he and his family pleaded with the search party to stop the search and that the appellant gave them Shs 918,200/= as a bribe.

As a result of the search and the discovery of the dangerous drugs, the appellant was arrested and kept in police custody. On the same day, following the C appellant's arrest, the appellant's mother ordered some motor vehicles of the appellant's fleet to be removed from their usual parking yard at Tirdo in Msasani area to the CCM parking lot in Temeke area. These were among the appellant's fleet of 10 lorries which had returned from Mombasa. Acting on information, the D police searched two of the trucks so transferred from Tirdo and a third one which had remained at Tirdo but which they ordered to be brought to them for search. From the three motor vehicles the police recovered over 2,100 packets of drugs similar to those seized from the appellant's premises; the said packets also contained mandrax drugs. The drugs were hidden in metal containers fitted inside E the fuel tanks of the lorries and their trailers such that they could not be detected upon ordinary inspection of the motor vehicles. The police had to cut open the fuel tanks using welding equipment in order to reach the said metal boxes inside containing the mandrax drugs. The amount of drugs recovered both from the F appellant's premises and from his motor vehicles came to a total of 1,147.591 kgs which according to the charge sheet is valued at well over US$8,994,000 or well over Shs 4,997,500,000/=. This amount was also said to be a record haulage of dangerous drugs ever intercepted at any one time in Tanzania. G

Following these investigations charges were preferred against the appellant, as shown above, who vehemently denied them. In his defence he explained that the mandrax drugs recovered from his premises were found in a store room which was under the charge of one Mohamed Abdarahaman, alias Kipara, a Kenyan H citizen. The appellant maintained that he had no knowledge of the dangerous drugs found in the said store room and, therefore, he could not be said to have been found in possession of them. He denied giving a bribe of Shs 918,200/= to the search party and explained that the search party had merely seized that amount in the course of their search of the premises. I

As regards the drugs found in his motor vehicles, his position was that the three A trucks from which the drugs were recovered were among the trucks which he had left undergoing repairs in Mombasa. As these vehicles arrived in Dar-es-Salaam about three weeks after he himself had left Mombasa, he was not in a position to say who meddled with the trucks and fitted them with those boxes containing the B contraband. In those circumstances therefore, the appellant contended that he could not be said to have been found in possession of the drugs in question, nor could he be held responsible for their importation into the country.

As stated before, at the conclusion of the trial the appellant was acquitted by the C district court on all the counts, but on appeal by the Director of Public Prosecutions the High Court found him guilty on the counts of unlawful possession and unlawful importation of dangerous drugs.

In this appeal Dr Lamwai filed and argued 14 grounds of appeal plus a further two D grounds filed in a supplementary memorandum of appeal. All of these grounds, however, essentially raise the issue of the insufficiency of the evidence in support of the charges. Counsel rightly pointed out that the appellant's conviction was based solely on circumstantial evidence. However, he contended that such E evidence, as there was, did not pass the test for circumstantial evidence before conviction could be had on it. The evidence relied on to convict the appellant did not irresistibly point to the appellant's guilt. That evidence was not water tight; it left room or gaps such that a proper scrutiny of it leads to the view that the offences alleged were, or may have been, committed by person or persons other than the appellant. F

In finding the appellant guilty on the charge of unlawful possession of dangerous drugs, the High Court relied on the evidence that the appellant had access to the key to the store room where the drugs were hidden. For, he opened the door to G that store in order to allow the search party access to it; he used the key which he took from his wife to open that door. However, counsel argued that although the appellant had access to the store room in question there was no evidence to show that he knew that those drugs were in there. Dr Lamwai submitted that those drugs H may have been hidden there by one Mohamed Abdarahaman who, according to the appellant, was the person in charge of the store. Counsel emphasised, and indeed rightly so in our view, that proof of knowledge on the part of the appellant was essential. But since, in his view, there was no evidence that the appellant knew of the presence of I

A those drugs in the store room, then the charge of possession could not be sustained.

Mr Sengwaji for the respondent Republic conceded that there was no direct evidence to prove knowledge on the part of the appellant but that there was circumstantial evidence to prove such knowledge. Learned counsel submitted that B the appellant's assertion at the trial that the store room was under the charge of one Mohamed Abdarahaman was an afterthought because the two prosecution witnesses (PW2 and PW4) who were among the team conducting the search testified that they did not hear the appellant say that Mohamed Abdarahaman was the person in charge of the store room. The High Court judge accepted that C evidence but Dr Lamwai criticised him for so doing. This raises the issue of credibility of witnesses which we propose to deal with later on, but for the moment suffice it to say that we see no good reason why the Court should have preferred D the appellant's word to that of the two prosecution witnesses. If it were true that the store room was under the charge of Mohamed Abdarahaman and that the appellant was not aware of the drugs found therein, one would certainly expect the appellant to disclose this immediately the search party discovered the drugs. But once it is found that he made no such disclosure, then as submitted by Mr E Sengwaji, his subsequent disclosure was an afterthought, and the only reasonable inference to be drawn is that at least he was aware of the presence of those drugs in the store.

F This view is reinforced by the evidence that the appellant, his mother and wife pleaded with the search party to stop the search. The question is: If the appellant did not know of the presence of those drugs in the store why should he plead with the team to stop the search? Once again the only conclusion to be drawn is that he implored the team to stop because he knew that the search would lead to the discovery of the contraband. G

This view is further supported by the evidence that the appellant gave the search party a bribe of Shs 918,200/= in order to settle the matter there and then and not to proceed with it further. Dr Lamwai raised a number of arguments concerning this piece of evidence. First, he claimed that this was a mere fabrication by H prosecution witnesses in an attempt to falsely implicate the appellant with the offences charged. The police, he submitted, were interested in securing a conviction which would earn them financial reward and/or promotion. With due respect to the learned counsel we can find no substance in this submission. PW4 was a member of the search party who testified to the giving of the bribe by the appellant. He I was a ward executive officer and a justice of the peace. It is not apparent how the A appellant's conviction could earn him any gain in terms of financial reward or promotion in his employment.

Counsel criticised the High Court judge for failing to hold that the prosecution evidence regarding the alleged bribe was contradictory and hence of no value, and that the learned judge resolved such contradiction by engaging in conjecture. PW4 B and PW11 testified that the bribe money was counted at the appellant's premises. On the other hand PW2 stated that the money was counted at the police station. In evaluating the evidence, the learned judge found that the money was counted both at the appellant's premises and at the police station. At first Dr Lamwai charged that PW2 was lying when he claimed that the money was C counted at the police station. Because, in his view, it was inconceivable that money given as a bribe should have been counted at the police station instead of at the appellant's premises where it was allegedly given as a bribe. He therefore D urged us to find that not only was PW2 telling lies but that the contradiction between the evidence of this witness and that of PW11 was so material as to render worthless the prosecution's allegation of a bribe. However, when it was pointed out to counsel that his client supported the evidence of PW2 that the E money was counted at the police station, counsel turned round and submitted that in those circumstances the High Court judge should have found that, consistent with his client's testimony, the money was counted only at the police station. That, F counsel contended, would render the prosecution case most improbable and, indeed, highly suspect because it was simply incredible for bribe money to be counted at the police station and not at the appellant's premises where it is alleged to have been given.

As stated earlier, two witnesses, PW4 and PW11 gave evidence that the bribe money was counted at the appellant's premises where it was given. PW4 was a G ward executive officer and a justice of the peace. As such he was a responsible officer and an independent witness who was not shown to have any apparent cause to tell lies. It is true that PW2 testified in his examination in chief that the money was counted at the police station. But he was not asked in H cross-examination whether or not the money was counted at the appellant's premises. Had he been so asked, his answer might well have been in the affirmative. For, like Dr Lamwai, we think that it would be incredible that money alleged to be a bribe should be counted at the police station only and not at the place where it is said to have been given. In the circumstances, therefore, Dr Lamwai I

1995 TLR p234
KISANGA JA
A has not made out a case of any real contradiction in the prosecution evidence on this aspect. On the other hand the learned High Court judge was perfectly justified to find, as he did, that the bribe money was counted both at the appellant's premises, as testified to by PW4 and PW11, and also at the police station as testified by PW2 and supported by the appellant. It would appear that the counting B at the police station was done because the appellant had asked for it. For, in his evidence the appellant said:

'The money was taken and counted at the police station, that was what I wanted.' C

In other words, if the appellant had wanted to have the money counted at the police station, the police had to oblige, notwithstanding that there had been an earlier count at his residence.
D In yet another endeavour to attack the evidence relating to bribing the search party, Dr Lamwai strenuously contended that that piece of evidence ought to be expunged from the record because it had been adduced in support of the count of corrupt transaction which was dismissed for want of the Director of Public Prosecution's consent to prosecute. He severely criticised the High Court judge for E accepting and acting on that evidence to convict the appellant on the count of being in unlawful possession of dangerous drugs. Elaborating on this, counsel said that the evidence relating to bribery had been adduced in support of the count F of corruption. The appellant understood it so, and had that charge been valid, he would have prepared his defence accordingly if he so wished. But when at the end of the day that charge was dismissed for want of consent to prosecute, that meant that in law there had been no charge of corrupt transaction and, counsel G contended, the evidence purportedly adduced in support thereof cannot now be used to support the charge of unlawful possession of drugs. The reason for his argument is that the appellant was not made aware that the evidence relating to bribery was adduced also in support of the count of unlawful possession of drugs H so that he might have prepared himself accordingly to challenge it in the course of his defence on that count. In support of this submission counsel referred to the case of King v R (1).
We have given due consideration tot he submission by counsel, but we could not be persuaded. We are prepared to hold that when the count of corrupt transaction was dismissed for want of the Director of Public Prosecution's consent to prosecute, this meant I
1995 TLR p235
KISANGA JA
that in law the appellant had not been tried at all on that count. It is as if nothing had A happened. But the appellant's trial was otherwise valid in respect of the remaining two counts which were charged in the same information. The evidence adduced at such trial is admissible to support the charge on any of the remaining counts provided that such evidence is relevant. Section 11 of the Evidence Act provides that: B

'Facts necessary to explain or introduce a fact in issue or relevant fact, or which support or rebut an inference suggested by a fact in issue or relevant fact, or which establish the identity of any thing or person whose identity is relevant, or fix the time or place at which any fact in issue or relevant fact happened, or which show the relation of parties by whom any such fact C was transacted, are relevant in so far as they are necessary for that purpose.'

The evidence relating to bribing the search party was also relevant to the charge of D unlawful possession. The prosecution was alleging that the appellant had knowledge of the drugs being present on his premises, and that is why he was doing all he could, including bribing the search party, to stop the search and to settle the matter there and then with them. Indeed such evidence would have been E properly adduced to support the charge of unlawful possession, even if the count of corrupt transaction had not been included, and it seems there could have been no valid ground of complaint. We can find no justification for the objection F based as it was, merely on the ground that that evidence supported a count which was dismissed for lack of consent to prosecute. We are of the view that where, as in this case, the evidence was capable of supporting more than one count in the charge, such evidence can be used in support of any count in the information, notwithstanding that such evidence supported some count or counts which were G found to be invalid or void.

The case of King v R cited by counsel is not of much assistance because as Mr Sengwaji pointed out, the facts there were distinguishable. In that case the appellant and a co-accused were jointly charged with murder. The whole trial had proceeded on the basis that the co-accused was being accused of killing the H deceased, while the appellant was being accused of being accessory before the fact to such killing. At the conclusion of the trial the co-accused was acquitted but the appellant was convicted of murder on the basis of being accessory before the fact to the killing of the deceased by I

A person or persons other than the co-accused. On appeal the conviction was set aside on the ground that the charge on which the conviction was based had introduced an element of surprise. All along the appellant had defended himself against the charge of murder in the context of being accessory before the fact where the alleged killer was an identified person i.e. his co-accused, while the B conviction was for murder on the basis of being accessory before the fact where the alleged killer or killers were unidentified. He was afforded no opportunity to prepare his defence in respect of the latter.

C In the instant case, however, the facts and circumstances are different. The appellant was arraigned on the charge of being in unlawful possession of dangerous drugs. Therefore he knew the case which he was going to meet at the trial. He had the opportunity to prepare his defence and indeed, he did defend D himself against the charge and in the light of evidence adduced in support of the count of being in unlawful possession of dangerous drugs. He was not in any way taken by surprise. The prosecution adduced evidence in relation to the charge as a whole covering the three counts set out in the information. In our view it would be impracticable, and indeed idle, to demand that when the prosecution adduces E evidence, it should specify which evidence relates to which count in the information. It seems plain to us that once the appellant knew that he was charged with unlawful possession of dangerous drugs, it must have been clear to him that the evidence of bribery was intended to prove his knowledge of the drugs which F knowledge prompted him to give out the bribe in order to get the search party to stop investigations or stop taking further steps in the matter. In our view, therefore, the learned judge rightly accepted and acted on it in convicting the appellant on the count of unlawful possession of dangerous drugs. Unlike in King's case cited by G counsel nothing transpired in the present case which could be said to have introduced an element of surprise to the appellant.

There was also evidence that the appellant panicked and trembled during the search. Again Dr Lamwai sought to have this piece of evidence discounted as H being unreliable because it involved inconsistencies as to when exactly the appellant panicked or trembled. Our own view of the evidence is that the inconsistency involved here was only minor; it did not go to the root of the matter. PW2 and PW4 were consistent in saying that the appellant was shocked and that he panicked and trembled. The variation on whether the appellant displayed such conduct immediately upon the search I party entering on the appellant's premises or on entering the store room where the A drugs were kept is, in our view, of no consequence.

On the evidence therefore, the High Court judge was entitled to find that in the course of searching the appellant's premises, the appellant was shocked, that he panicked and trembled and that he pleaded with the search party and bribed them B in an attempt to get them to stop the investigation or to have the matter settled there and then. Mr Sengwaji submitted that such conduct clearly indicates that the appellant had knowledge of the drugs and that there could be no other explanation for it. In response thereto, however, Dr Lamwai contended that such conduct, C although suggestive of crime, was not conclusive of guilt. In this connection learned counsel referred to a passage in Sakar On Evidence (13th ed) at 86 which reads:

'Different persons are differently constituted and some accused even though innocent D deliberately abscond rather than face the ordeal of a criminal trial and some other innocent accused do equally foolish things as make a false admission of guilt or pay off the amount said to have been stolen or embezzled. Such subsequent conduct dispenses the guilt, the burden of which is on the prosecution.' E

Counsel submitted that the appellant may have conducted himself the way he did for a variety of reasons, such as, the mere scare of the police searching his premises, or fear in connection with some misconduct connected with his business as a transporter but unrelated to the offences in question. In any event, F counsel went on, the appellant should not be convicted on the weakness of the defence but on the strength of the prosecution case.

We have carefully considered this argument, but we think it lacks merit. PW4 in his evidence said, inter alia, that: G

'... the accused gave the bribe of Shs 918,200/=. The accused said this is because of hunger. I will destroy the drugs. I will not repeat.'

This statement cannot by any stretch of imagination be said to be consistent with H the appellant being unaware of the drugs found in his house. He gave the explanation of 'hunger' as the reason for his engaging in the drug business and promised to destroy the drugs found in his possession and to stop dealing in drugs in the future. He placed himself right at the centre of things, so to speak. If he had no knowledge of the drugs he could not have associated himself with them so closely as he did. I

1995 TLR p238

KISANGA JA

A Dr Lamwai repeatedly submitted that the drugs found in the appellant's store room were hidden there by Mohamed Abdarahaman who, according to the appellant, was the person in charge of the store. There was evidence that the said Mohamed Abdarahaman, a Kenyan, was staying in Mombasa, that he never lived in that room and he was last seen in Dar-es-Salaam two days before the store B was searched and that during police investigations following the appellant's arrest he could not be traced. Our view is that if the drugs were introduced into the store by the said Mohamed Abdarahaman, this must have been with the knowledge and approval of the appellant. It is highly unlikely that Mohamed Abdarahaman would C have risked leaving such a valuable commodity in the store at a time when he had no control over it as he spent his nights elsewhere and stayed away for some days. Whether the drugs were hidden in the store by the appellant himself or by the said Mohamed Abdarahaman with the appellant's knowledge and approval, the D appellant was in possession of those drugs and the learned High Court judge rightly so found.

The foregoing analysis and conclusions related to the dangerous drugs recovered from the appellant's premises. As regards the drugs found hidden in the three of E his fleet of lorries, it was common ground at the hearing of this appeal that the drugs were imported from Kenya into this country. The only question is who did the importation. The High Court found that it was the appellant, but Dr Lamwai disagreed sharply.

F According to the evidence the three trucks on which the drugs were found were among the motor vehicles which the appellant had left behind in Mombasa undergoing repairs. Those motor vehicles arrived in Dar-es-Salaam a little over a fortnight after the appellant himself had done so. Dr Lamwai therefore contended G that the drugs must have been fitted on the motor vehicles after the appellant had left for Dar-es-Salaam, in which case he would not know anything about them. In his view a number of people might be concerned with the fitting of those drugs on the motor vehicles. There was evidence that the appellant and his father were involved in arranging for the repairs of the lorries at Mombasa. Dr Lamwai, H therefore, took the view that the drugs might have been fitted on the trucks by the appellant's father after the appellant's departure for Dar-es-Salaam. Again there was evidence that on the very day the appellant was arrested following the discovery of the drugs at his premises, his mother ordered the removal of two motor vehicles from Tirdo where they used to be parked, to the CCM parking I lot in Temeke. Subsequently mandrax drugs were recovered from these vehicles. A Learned counsel submitted that the importation of those drugs into the country must have been an arrangement between the appellant's father in Mombasa and the appellant's mother in Dar-es-Salaam, but without the appellant's knowledge. In other words the appellant's father decided to conduct the illegal drug business B behind the back of their son while the son continued to manage the legitimate business of Akasha Transport. We are not at all impressed by this. There was overwhelming evidence showing that the appellant played an executive role in the management of the Tanzania branch of Akasha Transport. It is he who ordered the C movement of the fleet of lorries from Dar-es-Salaam to Nairobi and thence to Mombasa. At Nairobi the purchase of spare parts for the repair of the motor vehicles to Mombasa for major repairs, all had to await his arrival even though his father was in Nairobi at the time. Likewise after the fleet arrived in Mombasa the D decision as to which vehicles should be taken to which garages for what repairs had to await his arrival from Nairobi. It is the appellant who at all times had the control over the movement of the motor vehicles and what cargo they carried. In those circumstances it is unthinkable that the appellant's father would take only the E appellant's mother in confidence and with her engaged in drug trafficking using the company's motor vehicles without the knowledge of the appellant who had the control of those vehicles. Furthermore, Dr Lamwai when advancing mitigation on the appellant's behalf before the High Court, disclosed that the appellant's father F and mother were divorced. It is inconceivable that the appellant's father would confide in his estranged wife knowledge of such a valuable thing or transaction to the exclusion of his son who was also a senior business partner and co-director.

1995 TLR p239

KISANGA JA

Equally unimpressive is Dr Lamwai's contention that the drugs might have been G fitted on the trucks by the drivers of those vehicles. First of all the whole exercise involved fitting a new fuel tank at least on one of the motor vehicles. There was evidence, for instance, that motor vehicle KTU 052 with trailer No ZA 8202 was fitted with a new additional fuel tank which was found to contain mandrax drugs. The tank was easily seen by anyone looking at the vehicle. A driver would not dare H fit such an extra tank because the appellant would easily see it and demand explanation for it. Not only that. The evidence shows that the whole operation was very skillfully done. Indeed the trial magistrate who had the advantage of viewing the exhibits said: I

A 'I have seen all the three lorries and the places where the tanks had been fixed. I have also seen the tanks themselves. I have no doubt in my mind that a lot of labour and time was required in that exercise. I am also satisfied that a lot of expertise and sophisticated machinery were needed in the job.'

B And the learned High Court judge found that:

'... the tanks in which the drugs were found on the three lorries had been expertly constructed and sealed as to make it very difficult even to the police to have them removed and opened when they discovered such drugs. That in my view could not be the type of work that could have been undertaken by the drivers and turn boys of their own.' C

We entirely agree with the courts below and add that such a job was costly such that the drivers could not afford to pay for it. There was evidence that so soon after D the appellant's arrest the drivers of these trucks, who were all Kenyans, said that they were leaving because there was nobody to give them subsistence. If they had problems with finding mere subsistence, it would be impossible for them to finance an expensive operation such as the one in this case.

E Thus having regard to Dr Lamwai's submission, our own view is that if the appellant's father or mother or the drivers had a hand at all in the importation of the drugs, they must have done so with the knowledge and approval of the appellant. Of course, apart from mere speculation, there is no evidence that the appellant's father or the drivers did anything to import or facilitate the importation of the drugs. F As for the appellant's mother, however, there was the evidence that on the same day the appellant was arrested following the recovery of the mandrax drugs at his premises, she ordered the removal from Tirdo to Temeke of the trucks which had on board huge quantities of the same drugs. That shows that she had knowledge G of the drugs. It is therefore possible that she participated in the commission of the offence or offences charged, but that does not absolve the appellant from liability.

H On the evidence we are satisfied that the drugs found on the appellant's three motor vehicles were imported into the country by the appellant or with his knowledge and approval. Therefore the learned High Court judge was perfectly justified to find the appellant guilty of unlawful importation of the drugs found on the three motor vehicles, and of unlawful possession of the said drugs plus those which were recovered from his house. In the result the appeal fails and we dismiss it accordingly. I

1995 TLR p241

A

[zRPz]EMMANUEL KIBONA AND OTHERS v REPUBLIC 1995 TLR 241 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mbeya
Judge Mchome J

Criminal Appeals No 3, 4 and 5 of 1995 B
October 10, 1995
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentence - Sentencing Juveniles - Ascertainment of age of juveniles. C
-Headnote
After being convicted of robbery with violence the appellants were sentenced by the trial court under the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972. On appeal they argued that they were juveniles and as such ought not to have been sentenced under the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972. The appeal court considered the propriety of the D sentence in light of the age of the appellants. A medical report had said that all the appellants were adults. The appellant's challenged the assessment of their ages by the medical doctor. Their parents submitted, inter alia, baptismal certificates to enable the court assess the ages of the appellants. E
Held:

(i) Evidence of a parent is better than that of a medical doctor as regards that parent's child's age;

(ii) Where age cannot be assessed accurately the benefit of doubt must be given to the accused;

(iii) In this case the appellants are given the benefit of doubt. F

Case Infomation

Appeal allowed in part.

Cases referred to:

(1) Yusufu Kabonga v. R [1968] HCD No 188

(2) Sangu Saba & Anor v. R [1971] HCD No 385 G

(3) Francis Mtunguja v. R [1970] HCD No 181

[zJDz]Judgment

Mchome, J:

The three appellants, Emmanuel Kibona, Lugano Stephen and Jane Kapulu, were H jointly charged with two counts, namely, conspiracy to commit an offence contrary to s 384 of the Penal Code, and robbery with violence contrary to ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. The count concerns all the three appellants while the second one is against the first and second appellants, Emmanuel and Stephen, respectively, only.

They were all found guilty by the Mbeya District Court (P A I

1995 TLR p242

MCHOME J

A Lyimo, RM) on both counts and sentenced to 15 years imprisonment terms on each count. The sentences were ordered to run concurrently.

Being aggrieved they have now appealed here against both convictions and sentences.

B The evidence for the prosecution at the trial was that the complainant, Leina Jiwa, had employed the third appellant, Jane Kapulu, as a house servant. Jane knew the inside of the complainant's house very well. Besides that the third appellant had a boyfriend going by the name of Clemence. She informed her C boyfriend and the other appellants that in the complainant's house was kept a lot of money. So the trio arranged to go and steal that money.

It was on 20 November 1994 at midday when the first and second appellants knocked at the complainant's door. She opened the door for them. They entered leaving Clemence outside. The appellants threatened to kill the complainant with a knife unless she showed them where the money was kept. They cut her hand D partially with the knife. She showed them the money, Shs 2,100,000/= wrapped in a paper bag. They took it but not before the complainant had made an alarm.

E Neighbours came to her aid. One of them was PW2, Godfrey. He entered the house and saw the first two appellants inside. They threatened him with the knife and managed to escape with the bag of money. They jumped the fence and went to the streets. An alarm was made and the appellants were chased. The second F appellant was the first to be arrested. The first appellant ran harder, but eventually was arrested by the mob that has joined in the chase. Before being arrested he threw the bag of money away. The mob picked it but the police retrieved it before they had done much damage to the money.

G When the bag was opened at the police station it was found to have Shs 700,000/= instead of Shs 2,100,000/=.

The appellants were jointly charged. But Clemence has not been apprehended up to now.

Before the police the first and third appellants confessed to have conspired to rob. H

In their defence the first and second appellants alleged they were just passersby when they were arrested and beaten up by the mob at Meta Secondary School grounds. The third appellant after denying being involved at last admitted in court to have arranged the robbery with her boyfriend, Clemence, and the other appellants.

A lot of people saw the appellants, from the complainants house I to the place where they were arrested. The appellants never disappeared from the A sight of the chasers holding the bag of money until they threw it away to be picked by the mob and the police.

The difference between the amount alleged to have been stolen and that recovered when the bag was picked does not help the appellants either. Some B could have been stolen when the bag was thrown away by the first appellant or the complainant could have been mistaken on the figure. There is no evidence that when she was threatened to surrender the money to the knife-wielding thieves she counted it first.

But with this kind of evidence before it no reasonable tribunal would have found the C appellants not guilty. So their appeals against conviction lack in merit and are hereby dismissed.

Now we come to the appeals against sentences.

The appellants were convicted on the first count and sentenced to fifteen years jail each. This sentence is illegal as the maximum sentence provided under s 384 of D the Penal Code for the offence of conspiracy is seven years' imprisonment.

All three appellants have claimed to be children and young persons and so wrongly sentenced on the second count under the Minimum Sentence Act, 1972. In E sentencing them the learned Trial Resident Magistrate ordered the appellants to be medically examined as to their ages first. The medical report for the first appellant states that he is thirty years old, the second appellant twenty-three years old and the third one eighteen years old. These medical reports have been challenged on appeal and an application for additional evidence as to the appellants' age was made. Despite vehement opposition from the learned State Attorney, I granted this F application. This is because during the time of stating their mitigating factors the appellants stated their ages to be seventeen years, fifteen years and fifteen years respectively. Then the learned Trial Magistrate ordered that the appellants be G examined as to their age. Medical reports were tendered which stated that the appellants' ages were estimated to be about thirty years, twenty-three years and eighteen years respectively. The doctor was not called to state how he arrived at these conclusions, nor were the appellants given the chance to challenge those estimates. The learned Trial Magistrate took these estimates to be correct. In Yusufu Kabonga v R (1), Biron, J (as he then was) held: H

'However high the medical officer's qualifications and the extent of his experience, I am very far from persuaded that a doctor ... could give a definite assessment in respect of age ... with that degree of I

A certainty required in a criminal law. Accused to be treated as a minor.'

And in Sangu Saba & Anor v R (2) where even x-rays were used to examine the accused as to his age, the East African Court of Appeal held: B

'It is so well known as to be within the judicial knowledge of the court that even with the aid of X-rays, age cannot be assessed exactly.'

C And in Francis Mtunguja v R (3) George, CJ (as he then was) held that the High Court may call for additional evidence on appeal to elucidate a matter left vague in the trial court. It is desirable that s 322 of the Criminal Procedure Code be broadly interpreted. He continued: D

'I thought such additional evidence necessary because although it is possible in my view, on the facts to support the inference drawn by the trial magistrate, it appears to me to be undesirable to decide an important issue as to guilt or innocence on a serious charge on an inference when there could be available records which could help to establish the matter on way or the other ... A first appeal from the subordinate court is in law an appeal by way of E re-hearing. ... If the emphasis is to be on the interest of justice ... there should be little reluctance at the hearing of the first appeal to have as thorough an investigation of the factual situation as may be possible before arriving at its decision should this appear necessary.' F

In this appeal the appellants' parents alleged to have some evidence regarding the appellants' ages. Evidence of a parent is even better that that of a medical doctor as regards that parent's child's age. And additional evidence is as vital in G sentencing as in the trial itself. So I allowed the appellants to bring additional evidence.

For the first appellant, Emmanuel Kibona, his mother, Tukumbukege Kayange, tendered a birth certificate and a baptism certificate. She does not know the year he was born and just says he was born three days after Christmas. The baptism H certificate shows the appellant was born on 23 December 1977. So does the birth certificate. The birth certificate and the affidavit regarding birth were issued after the appellant was convicted with this offence. But the baptism certificate is dated 25 December 1980.

The certificates for the second appellant tendered by his father are baptism certificate, birth certificate and primary school leaving cer- I tificate. They all state that he was born on 26 December 1979. For the third A appellant was tendered a certificate for birth only issued on 22 March 1995 after she was sentenced in this case. It states that she was born on 20 November 1980.

Save for the baptism certificates the appellants' other certificates were prepared after they were convicted in this case. This casts doubts on their genuineness. But B I find no reason to doubt the genuineness of the baptism certificates. Also by appearance the second and third appellants look younger than what the medical certificates state. They look sixteen or below. So their parent's evidence could be the truth though prepared in suspicious ways after they were convicted, The burden of proof is not that heavy on the defence. The 1st appellant, Emmanuel C Kibona, despite the baptism certificate and the birth certificate, appears to be in is early twenties, not seventeen or thirty. But in the case of Sangu Saba & Another v R (2) cited above, the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa held that age cannot be assessed accurately the benefit of doubt must be given to the accused. D

In this case therefore I give the appellants the benefit of doubt and hold that the first one was aged seventeen in 1994, the second one 16 and the third one fifteen years old.

Under s 2 of the Minimum Sentences Act 1972 the provisions of the act shall not E apply to a juvenile, and under s 3 of the same act, 'juvenile' means any person under the apparent age of eighteen years.

So the appellants were juveniles when they were sentenced last year. Their sentences are therefore set aside and in their place substituted the following sentences: F

1st count

(a) The first appellant is sentenced to two years imprisonment.

(b) The second and third appellants who are below sixteen have their sentences reduced such as will result to their immediate release from prison. G

2nd count

(a) The first appellant is sentenced to five years imprisonment.

(b) The second and third appellants' sentences are reduced so as to result in their immediate release from prison. Sentences for the first appellant to run concurrently. H

In sum therefore the appeals against convictions are dismissed entirely and those against sentence are partly allowed as shown above. I

1995 TLR p246

A

[zRPz]NURDIN AKASHA v REPUBLIC (II) 1995 TLR 246 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mfalila JJA and Lubuva JJA

B Criminal Appeal No 190 of 1994

October 23, 1995

(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Chua, J) C

Flynote

Administrative law - Prerogative orders - Order of Preventive detention made and effected after an accused's acquittal by Court - Whether such detention legal.

-Headnote

D This was an appeal against the decision of the High Court which upheld the legality of the appellant's detention under the Preventive Detention Act and dismissed an application for habeas corpus. The legality of the detention was challenged in the High Court as it was effected immediately after the appellant had been acquitted by the Court. It was argued that the Government, by ordering the E detention of the appellant, was pursuing criminal and administrative measures at the same time.

Held:

(i) Since at the time of detaining the appellant court proceedings had terminated, there was no interference with court decisions;

F (ii) The appellant was properly detained.

Case Infomation

Appeal dismissed.

Cases referred to:

(1) DPP v. Mehboob Akber Haji and Others CA Crim Appeal No 28 of 1992. (unreported) G

Dr Lamwai for the appellant.

Sengwaji for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mfalila, JA: delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: H

In the Resident Magistrate's Court at Dar es Salaam, the appellant Nurdin Akasha was charged with three counts under the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act 1984. The charges involved unlawful importation and possession of dangerous drugs and corrupt transactions. The drugs involved were 1,096,719 kilograms of I

Methaqualone alias Mandrax valued at Shs 4,997,500,000/=. The trial Resident A Magistrate found and held that the charges in all three counts had not been proved beyond reasonable doubt and acquitted the appellant with an order that he be released from remand custody. But he was arrested soon after leaving the court premises and taken to the central police station. He was served with a detention B order. Since then he has been detained under the Preventative Detention Act. Following this detention, a habeas corpus application was lodged in the High Court seeking the following directions and orders:

(1) That Nurdin Akasha having been acquitted by the Dar es Salaam C Resident Magistrate's Court (Matui, PRM) on 20/5/94, the immediate detention of the said Nurdin Akasha on the said 20/5/94 infringed his rights as a freeman and this infringed the constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania. D

(2) That the said illegality be remedied by this honourable Court nullifying the detention of Nurdin Akasha.

(3) That Nurdin Akasha be released immediately.

These were the three orders and directions contained and sought in the E application filed on behalf of the appellant, and this application was supported by the affidavit of one Shamsa

Abdulrahman Niran who described herself as the appellant's aunt. After the respondent republic had filed their counter affidavit and a reply thereto had been filed by the appellant, the hearing of the application was set down. But what is clear from the record of proceedings is that the nature of the F application took a completely different turn. Instead of proceeding on the basis of the application before it, the Court was misled into considering the constitutionality of the act under which the appellant was detained. After hearing arguments from G both sides, the learned judge held that although the Preventive Detention Act has a number of shortcomings, i.e. a detainee is not given the right to be heard, still it had sufficient safeguards to pass the test of constitutionality. Accordingly he held that the Act was constitutional and that therefore the appellant was validly detained under it. The appellant lodged this appeal complaining in the substantive ground H that the learned High Court Judge erred in law in holding that the Preventive Detention Act had sufficient safeguards and as such was constitutional.

During the hearing of this appeal, Dr Lamwai, learned counsel who appeared for the appellant, submitted forcefully on the consti- I

A tutionality of the Preventive Detention Act. He argued that the Act in unconstitutional because it lacked basic safeguards before the powers under it are invoked and that if the detainee has a right to make any representations, these are limited to the formalities and procedures not the reasons for such detention. Mr Sengwaji, learned Principal State Attorney, argued to the contrary on the behalf of the Republic. B

In our view these arguments are neither here nor there because as we have indicated the High Court was misled and went astray. In the result it went off course and decided an issue which was not formally before it, leaving the formal prayers in the application unanswered. C

As already indicated, the application before the High Court was for the issuance of directions in the nature of habeas corpus that:

D (1) Nurdin Akasha having been acquitted by the Dar es Salaam Resident Magistrate's Court (Matui, PRM) on 20/5/94, the immediate detention of the said Nurdin Akasha on the said 20/5/94 infringed his rights as a freeman and this infringed the constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania.

E (2) The said illegality be remedied by this honourable Court nullifying the detention of Nurdin Akasha.

(3) Nurdin Akasha be released immediately.

F In all the three prayers asked for, none of them challenge the constitutionality of the Act under which the appellant was detained. They challenge the legality of his detention because such detention was ordered after the appellant was acquitted by a court of law and that therefore such detention infringed his rights as a freeman, the rights which are protected by the constitution. This was the basis of G the application before the Court and that therefore because the detention is illegal for the aforementioned reasons, the Court was asked to remedy the situation by nullifying the detention order and ordering the immediate release of the appellant. The constitutionality of the Act is raised for the first time in the reply to the counter affidavit. This part of the reply therefore was just hanging in the air for it H was not supporting anything in the original application. In the course of his submission in the High Court, Counsel for the appellant asked for the following prayers which played a major role in misleading the Court:

(a) That the Court can under s 390(1)(b) of the CPA make a I finding that the applicant is being illegally and improperly detained and A order that he be set at liberty immediately.

(b) That whoever has the custody of the applicant be ordered to produce him in Court.

(c) That the Court declare the Preventive Detention Act unconstitutional and void to be struck off the statute book. B

It is clear then that while prayers in (a) and (b) above are contained in and supported by the application before the Court, the prayer in (c) seeking to have the Preventive Detention Act declared unconstitutional is not part of the original application and the affidavit supporting it. Indeed, Dr Lamwai's reply in Court confirms this when he submitted: C

'However we concede that there was a preventive detention order signed on 20/5/94. We concede that our appellant was detained, what we are not conceding is the legality of the President to use is powers under Section 2 of the Preventive Detention Act to counteract the decision of the Court.' D

This was a correct statement of the issue before the Court based on the application before it. As a matter of fact the question of the constitutionality of the E Act being a new issue was raised by Mr Naali, counsel for the respondent Republic. In his submissions in the High Court, he said:

'The chamber application and the affidavit in support which were drawn up by Kashumbugu F advocate and the counter affidavit drawn up by myself have covered all matters regarding the legality of the detention under the Preventive Detention Act that:

(1) It amounts to an infringement of the basic rights of the applicant

(2) That the executive interferes with the judiciary. G

These are the matters at issue. In reply to the counter affidavit drawn up by Dr Lamwai, there is raised a fresh issue and that is the issue of constitutionality. This amounted to taking the Court by surprise and he is estopped from bringing matters which were not in the affidavit. The Court should not consider the question of constitutionality of the Preventive Detention Act. Dr H Lamwai is estopped from bringing the matter. This is because it was not in the original affidavit of the applicant.'

In answer to this objection, Dr Lamwai told the Court that in his submission the references to the constitution in the application to I

A the effect that the applicant's detention infringed the constitution of the United Republic raised the issue of the constitutionality of the Preventive Detention Act under which the detention was ordered. The learned judge did not make any ruling on this but in our view Dr Lamwai's reply had no validity. In the application, it is B stated that the detention of Nurdin Akasha on 20 May 1994 infringed his rights as a freeman and this (i.e. the infringement of rights) infringed or was in violation of the C constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania. The Court was therefore asked to quash this detention which infringed the constitutional rights of the appellant and order his immediate release. The Court was being asked to order the immediate release of the appellant not because the Act under which he was detained is unconstitutional, but because the detention was ordered following his acquittal by a court of law and that this violated his basic rights to personal freedom under the D constitution. In other words what was being challenged by the application was not the constitutionality of the Act used to detain the appellant, but the legality of his detention following an acquittal by a court of law. It is therefore our task to bring the whole case back on track and determine the appeal solely on the basis of the application before the High Court - namely that the application in the High Court was in the nature of a habeas corpus. E

In support of his argument that the Preventive Detention Act was wrongly used after a court order acquitting the appellant, Counsel cited the decision of this Court in DPP v Mehboob Akber Haji and Others (1) in which this Court stated that the F Preventive Detention Act was not meant to supplement the Criminal Law and that the two should not be used in tandem as it were. In Dr Lamwai's view, this is what the Government did in this case, they were pursuing criminal and administrative measures at the same time. Mr Sengwaji countered this argument by G distinguishing the two cases. In his submission, the Mehboob case is different from the present case in that in the Mehboob case the Government invoked administrative measures to detain the accused while their case was pending in court. In the present case the Court proceedings had been terminated by the acquittal of the accused. H

We are satisfied that this distinction is valid. In the Mehboob case the decision to detain the accused was taken following the court order releasing them on bail. Thus the accused were detained while their case was pending in court. The detention order was issued to counteract the court order releasing them on bail. In the present case the accused was arrested and detained after his case was termi- I nated in his favour. There was thus no case pending against him when he was A picked up by the police as he left the court house. It cannot therefore be said that parallel methods were being used simultaneously, so as to bring this case within the principles enunciated in the Mehboob case. Considering what the appellant's B mother had done, i.e. escaping from hospital while under guard, and the dubious circumstances in which the appellants was acquitted, there were genuine fears that the appellant would escape before the state filed the appeal against his acquittal.

In the circumstances we are satisfied that the appellant was properly detained and this fact did not conflict with the Court orders. There was no interference with court C decisions as the courts had at that stage terminated the proceedings against the appellant. This is the basis on which the High Court should have made its decision in upholding the appellant's detention rather than on the constitutionality of the Act which was not before it. It was brought in through the back door. Whether D or not the Preventive Detention Act is constitutional will have to await a relevant occasion.

Accordingly we dismiss the appeal in its entirety. E

1995 TLR p251

F

[zRPz]NATIONAL HOUSING CORPORATION v TANZANIA SHOE COMPANY AND OTHERS 1995 TLR 251 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Mfalila JJA G

Civil appeal No 48 of 1994

October 26, 1995

(From the judgment and decree of the High Court of Tanzania at Dodoma, Mwalusanya, J) H

Flynote

Constitutional interpretation - Parties to proceedings involving interpretation of Constitutional provisions enshrining basic freedom, rights and duties - Attorney General a necessary party - Section 17A(2) of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous I

1995 TLR p 252

KISANGA JA

A Provisions) Ordinance, Cap 360, as amended by Act No 27 of 1991.

Constitutional interpretation - Parties to proceedings involving interpretation of Constitutional provisions for basic freedoms, rights and duties, and competence of the court - Court proceeding with hearing without summoning Attorney General to appeal as a party - Consequences thereof. B

-Headnote

The High Court entertained proceedings involving the interpretation of the Constitutional provisions enshrining basic rights and freedoms without summoning the Attorney General to appear as a party in the proceedings. On appeal the Court C of Appeal considered whether or not the High Court was competent to proceed with the hearing without the Attorney General.

Held:

D (i) The Attorney General was not summoned as a party to appear for the hearing of the proceedings and the failure to so summon the Attorney General by the trial court contravened the provisions of s 17A(2) of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance, Cap 360 as amended by Act No 27 of 1991;

E (ii) Since the trial commenced and continued in the absence of a necessary party the Court proceeded without authority and that constituted a major defect which went to the root of the trial thus rendering the proceedings null and void.

Case Infomation
Appeal allowed.
F Case referred to:
(1) Laura Alfan Salum and 9 Others v. Minister for Land Housing and Urban Development and National Housing Corporation. Civil Appeal No 15 of [1994] TLR 237
G N Rweyemamu, ED Kisusi and N Mselem for the appellant.
D C Mbezi, for the respondent.
E Kifunda and S B Salula for the Attorney General.
[zJDz]Judgment
Kisanga, JA: delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:
H This appeal arises from the decision of the High Court (Mwalusanya, J) granting orders of certiorari and prohibition against the appellant, The National Housing Corporation (NHC), for having effected rent increases to its tenants to the tune of 800% per annum. Before the matter proceeded to hearing the Trial Judge, following representations from the Bar, ruled that in terms of s 17A(2) of the I
1995 TLR p 253
KISANGA JA
Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance, Cap 360, A as amended by Act No 27 of 1991, the Attorney-General be served to appear. The case was then adjourned a number of times between 23 July 1993 and 16 June 1994 because the Attorney-General could not be served. The record shows that when the case came up for hearing on 16 June 1994 Mr Mussa, the senior state-attorney, Dodoma, communicated information to the Court: B

Mussa - Senior State Attorney: We do not like to be heard. Counsel for the defendants will take care of our interests. C

Following receipt of such information the Court proceeded to hear the case at the conclusion of which it granted orders of certiorari and prohibition as indicated above.
In this appeal the appellant corporation is represented by a team of three D advocates, namely, Mr N Rweyemamu, Mr E D Kisusi and Mr N Mselem. The respondents are represented by Mr D C Mbezi, learned advocate, while the Attorney General was at first represented by Mr E Kifunda and later by Mr S B Salula, learned State Attorney and Senior State Attorney respectively. E
On behalf of the appellant, a memorandum of appeal was filed containing a total of 13 grounds of appeal. But at the commencement of the hearing we directed counsel for both sides to address us first on grounds three and four only which raise the issue of jurisdiction or competence of the trial Court, it being apparent F that should those grounds succeed, that was sufficient to dispose of the entire appeal, and it would serve no practical purposes to argue the rest of the grounds. The two grounds allege as follows:

3. That the learned Trial Judge erred in law in holding that the G Attorney-General was duly served without considering the question whether the Attorney-General, or his representative designated by him for that purpose, was summoned to appear as a party to the proceedings in the trial Court.

4. That the learned Trial Judge erred in law in commencing and continuing H the proceedings in the trial Court without summoning the Attorney-General, or his representative designated by him, for that purpose to appear as a party to the proceedings in the trial Court.

Essentially these grounds are alleging non-compliance with the provisions of s 17A (2) of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and I

A Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance, Cap 360, as amended by Act No 27 of 1991. That sub-section provides that:

'17A (2) In any proceedings involving the interpretation of the Constitution with regard to the basic freedoms, rights and duties specified in Part III of Chapter I of the Constitution, no B hearing shall be commenced or continued unless the Attorney-General or his representative designated by him for that purpose is summoned to appear as a party to those proceedings; save that if the Attorney-General or his designated representative does not appear before the Court on the date specified in the summons, the court may direct that the hearing be C commenced or continued, as the case may be, ex-parte.'

The sub-section requires that the Attorney-General be summoned as a party in the proceedings which involve the interpretation of the Constitution with regard to basic rights and freedoms enshrined in the Constitution. D

Mr Mbezi seemed to doubt the applicability of this provision to the facts of the present case which, in his view, did not raise the question of interpretation in the sense of clarifying some provision or provisions of the Constitution. With due E respect however, we think that this argument is misguided. The case seeks to challenge the constitutionality of Government Notice No 41 of 1992 which, it is alleged, is discriminatory on its effect and which denied the respondents their right to be heard before the appellant corporation, their land lord, effected rent increases F unilaterally and arbitrarily. We are of the settled view that these are matters which fall squarely within the purview of the sub-section, and we can find no justification for counsel's misgivings on that point. It seems that a question might G arise whether or not the claims of unconstitutionality can be remedied or redressed upon application, as in this case, for certiorari and prohibition, but that of course is a different matter; the point here is that the issue of constitutionality of a subsidiary legislation was raised, in which case sub-section (2) above quoted was applicable.

H The pertinent question now, therefore, is whether or not the trial was conducted in contravention of s 17A(2) of Cap 369 as amended by Act No 27 of 1991. For the appellant corporation it is alleged that it was, and the Attorney General is in agreement. However, the advocate for the respondents maintains that it was not. In an attempt to resolve this question we recorded additional evidence from a number of witnesses. Mr K M Mussa, Senior State Attorney I Dodoma, in his evidence before us seriously disputed the endorsement on the A court record by the Trial Judge on 16 July 1994 to the effect that they did not wish to be heard and that counsel for the defendants/appellant corporation would take care of their interests. Mr Mussa denied making any such statement and indeed went on to say that on the day in question, i.e. 16 June 1994, he was on safari B away from Dodoma where the proceedings were being conducted.

Further additional evidence from witnesses confirms that on the day in question Mr Mussa did not, in fact, attend the court in Dodoma to state therein what has been attributed to him. On the evidence, what appears to have happened was that when on 16 June 1994 the Attorney General did not appear, and indeed there is no C indication whatsoever that he was summoned for this date, the Trial Judge adjourned the case briefly with instructions to his clerk, one Mr B S Kihame, to contact the office of the Senior State Attorney Dodoma to find out what was the position of the Attorney General in the matter. According to Mr Kihame who gave D additional evidence before us, he spoke to Mr Mussa over the telephone, and the gist of that conversation as reported back by Mr Kihame is contained in the Judge's endorsement on the file as reproduced earlier.

In a further attempt by Mr Mussa to establish his absence from Dodoma on the E particular day, he stated that between 12 June 1994 and 22 June 1994 he was away in Singida on a special assignment by the Minister for Justice, that he had taken out an imprest for his subsistence allowances covering that whole period, that he returned to Dodoma on 19 June 1994, and finally he referred to a document F dated 30 June 1994 against which he had retired the said imprest. He therefore maintained that he could not have been in Dodoma on 16 June 1994 to state that he is alleged to have told the Judge's clerk over the phone.

It is not conclusive that on 16 June 1994 Mr Mussa was not, or could not have G been, in Dodoma. While Mr Mussa maintains that he was away on that day and that he returned to Dodoma only on 19 June 1994, Mr Kihame, the judge's clerk, equally maintains that he spoke to him over the phone in Dodoma that day and got from him the information which he relayed to the judge. Thus it amounts to one H man's word against another, and there is really no good reason for preferring the one to the other. As the evidence stands, it is possible that Mr Mussa could have returned to Dodoma before 19 June 1994 and thus could have spoken on the phone to Mr Kihame on 16 June 1994.

However, even assuming that this is what, in fact, happened, does I

A it amount to saying that there was compliance with the provisions of sub-section (2) above quoted? In order to comply with that sub-section, it was necessary to show that the Attorney General or his representative designated for that purpose was summoned to appear as a party to the proceedings. Mr Mbezi contended that the Attorney General was duly summoned, and in support of this B submission he relied on a summons dated 19 October 1993 sent to the Attorney General and requiring him to appear for mention of the case on 12 November 1993. However, in that summons the Attorney General is not cited as a party. He is C summoned merely as the Attorney General, while the only parties to the case are shown to be Tanzania Shoe Company Ltd and 28 Others (plaintiffs) and National Housing Corporation (defendant).

In this connection reference was made to the case of Lausa Alfan Salum and Others v Minister for Lands and Housing and Urban Development and National D Housing Corporation (1) in which, as in the present case, the constitutionality of Government Notice No 41 of 1992 was challenged. It was contended that in that case the Attorney General was not cited as a party, and yet this court proceeded to deal with the appeal on the merits. It seems to us, however, that that case is E distinguishable. In the first place in that case no objection was raised that the Attorney General was not cited or summoned as a party. In the present case, however, the non-summoning of the Attorney General was objected to from the very beginning of the trial. Indeed as shown above, Lausa's case cited the Minister F for Lands, Housing and Urban Development as a party, and at the hearing the Minister was represented by the Senior State Attorney. The clear object of sub-section (2) above quoted is to make sure that the government is afforded the opportunity to be heard upon a application for a prerogative order. Thus it seems to G us not an irregularity which went to the root of the matter. For, one can say that the Government was, in a real sense, a party to the case especially as the Senior State Attorney on behalf of the Attorney General and representing the Minister for Lands, Housing and Urban Development, appeared and participated in the proceedings. In other words the government was, in a true sense, afforded the H opportunity to be heard. There was compliance with the spirit, though not with the letter, of the sub-section, and had the Attorney General been cited instead of the Minister, it would not have made the slightest difference in the conduct of the proceedings.
In the instant case the summons which was addressed to the Attorney General was returned with an endorsement on it that: I 'Attorney General is not a part of (sic) this suit. I think that this notice was to be served to the A Secretary, National Housing Corp.'

It seems plain to us that by such endorsement the Attorney General refused, and rightly so in our view, to accept service. Thus we could find no justification whatsoever for the view that the said summons was asking the Attorney General to appear on 12 November 1993 for the purpose of mentioning the case only. But B as intimated earlier, there is not the slightest evidence or suggestion that any process was ever sent out to summon the Attorney General for the hearing of the case either on 16 June 1994 when the hearing commenced or any day subsequent thereto. C
Once we hold, as indeed we do, that the Attorney General was not summoned as a party to appear for the hearing on 16 June 1994, then there can be no basis for saying that Mr Mussa, the Senior State Attorney Dodoma, was summoned as the Attorney General's representative designated for the hearing on 16 June 1994. For, D the Attorney General cannot have designated Mr Mussa to take part in the proceedings on 16 June 1994 to which proceedings the Attorney General himself was not summoned and to which he was not a party. In which case, therefore, the calling by the court upon Mr Mussa on 16 June 1994 and what Mr Mussa is alleged

E to have said on that day that they did not wish to he heard etc. even if it be true, all this becomes wholly irrelevant for the simple reason that Mr Mussa was not the representative of the Attorney General within the meaning of the sub-section. In other words, in terms of the sub-section, Mr Mussa had no authority to be F contacted or to say anything on behalf of the Attorney General in this matter, especially after the Attorney General had expressly stated on the summons which was sent to him that he was not a party to the case.

It is true that the sub-section under consideration empowers the Court, in certain G circumstances to commence or continue hearing the ex-parte if the court so directs. But in this case the court did not direct that the hearing be commenced or continued ex-parte. Indeed, if we may say so in passing, the circumstances of the case could not have warranted any such direction. H

The available evidence therefore amply demonstrates that on 16 June 1994 the Attorney General or his representative designated for the purpose was not summoned as a party to the case before the court. Indeed the Attorney General was not summoned at all on that day or any day thereafter. Nor did the court direct that the proceedings be commenced or continued ex-parte. Section 17A(2) of I

1995 TLR p 258

KISANGA JA

A Cap 360 as amended by Act No 27 of 1991 reproduced above is couched in mandatory terms, and in the light of the foregoing the hearing of the case was commenced and continued in contravention thereof. The trial was commenced and continued in the absence of the necessary party and in the absence of any B direction by the trial Court to do so. Thus the court proceeded without authority and that constituted a major defect which went to the root of the trial. It rendered the proceedings null and void. In the event, the appeal succeeds. The proceedings before the High Court are declared null and void and are accordingly set aside.

C As regards costs, counsel for the appellant corporation asked us to certify costs for three counsel on the ground that the appeal raised complicated issues and that it involved the calling of a number of additional witnesses to give evidence during the appeal.

D Although a total of 13 grounds of appeal were filed, only two grounds were argued, namely grounds three and four. These grounds raise the issue of commencing and continuing the proceedings in the absence of the necessary party, i.e. the Attorney General. That issue had surfaced from the very beginning. Indeed at some stage before the hearing started the trial Court had to rule, E following representations from the Bar, that the case be adjourned until the Attorney General was served. In other words the necessity of having the Attorney General participating in the proceedings was clearly seen and appreciated from the start. However, as it transpired, the Attorney General was never served and yet the trial commenced and proceeded without any direction by the trial Court to proceed without him. F

It ought to have been quite clear to the advocate preparing, or counselling the preparation of, the memorandum of appeal that the Attorney General's lack of participation in the proceedings must be made a ground of appeal. Upon a glance G through the proceedings, it should have been equally easy to see that the appeal stood great chances of succeeding on that ground alone.

In our considered view it was not really necessary to mobilize or enlist the services of three counsel to see or discover these points; a single advocate would do for the purpose. It is on that account that we find ourselves unable to certify costs for three counsel.
In the event, we allow the appeal with costs for one counsel only. H
1995 TLR p 259
A
[zRPz]SHABANI RASHIDI v REPUBLIC 1995 TLR 259 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Kisanga JJA, Mfalila JJA and Lubuva JJA

Criminal Appeal No 194 of 1994 B
October 23, 1995
(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Mackanja, J)
C
Flynote
Criminal law - Murder - Provocation - When the defence of provocation is available.
-Headnote
The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania challenging his D conviction for murder and sentence of death by the High Court of Tanzania. His main ground was that the trial court did not accept that the defence of provocation was available to the appellant. The Court of Appeal considered this ground against the background of the appellant's denial of killing the deceased and that the relationship between the appellant and the women who the appellant alleged to have caught committing adultery with the deceased had terminated. E
Held:

(i) For the defence of provocation to avail the appellant two factors must be present: first that a relationship between him and Fatuma still existed and secondly he must admit to killing the deceased. F

(ii) There was ample evidence that the relationship between the appellant and Fatuma had effectively ended in 1986;

(iii) Once the appellant denied killing the deceased the defence of provocation disappeared and the Trial Judge was right in rejecting the defence of provocation. G
Case Infomation
Appeal dismissed.
No case referred to.
Mselemu for the appellant.
Korosso for the respondent. H
[zJDz]Judgment
Mfalila, JA read the following ruling of the court:

The appellant Shabani Rashidi was charged with and convicted of murder by the High Court (Mackanja, J) sitting at Dar es Salaam. Consequent upon this conviction he was sentenced to death. This appeal is against the conviction and sentence. I

1995 TLR p260

MFALILA JA

A The facts are not complicated. According to the prosecution witnesses, the appellant and a woman, Fatuma Hussein (PW1), cohabited as man and wife from 1983 to 1986 when they formally ended their relationship. They even divided B whatever they had earned together, in particular from produce. Fatuma then lived as a single woman with her parents from 1986 to 1988 when the deceased Ayubu Hatibu started courting her. With her parent's consent, she accepted his advances and they soon developed a love relationship. According to Fatuma, the deceased C intended to marry her. Then on 28 January 1988 at about 10 pm as the two of them were seated in her bedroom, the appellant suddenly burst in and without much ado proceeded to stab the deceased. He stabbed him in the stomach. Both the deceased and his lover ran out of the house shouting for help, the deceased clutching his stomach perhaps to prevent the intestines from pouring out. The D appellant caught up with him and started kicking him. Neighbours came in answer to the alarm. These included the Chairman Saidi Mwelupunge (PW3) and Fatuma's brother, Zuberi Hussein (PW2), who managed to separate the two. The E appellant told them that he had stabbed the deceased because he had found him committing adultery with his wife, Fatuma. The appellant was arrested and police from Chalinze Police Station took the deceased to hospital where he died of the injuries on 31 January 1988. The appellant was charged with this offence.

F In his defence, the appellant denied this allegation. He disputed the allegation that at the time of this incident his relationship to Fatuma had been terminated. According to him he had simply taken a second wife and he used to alternate between the two women. On the fateful day, he was supposed to be at the home of the second woman. But because one of his children with Fatuma was ill, he G decided to go and visit Fatuma's home to see how the child was doing. It was during this unexpected visit that he found Fatuma and the deceased committing adultery. He became extremely provoked he said. He got hold of the deceased and pulled him down from the bed and he fell down. When the deceased got up he saw him holding a knife. Seeing this, the appellant said, he kicked the deceased on H the legs. As the deceased fell down, he fell on the knife he was holding. When he got up, he ran out of the house. The appellant added that he pursued the deceased while raising an alarm and caught up with him about 100 paces from the house. When neighbours answered his alarm, he told them that he had found the deceased committing adultery with his wife. They started assaulting the deceased, but I when at last they saw who he was, they stopped their assaults. The appellant A therefore denied the charge that he murdered the deceased.

1995 TLR p261

MFALILA JA

After considering the whole evidence, the learned Trial Judge rejected the appellant's version of events. He believed Fatuma's evidence and on that basis B rejected the appellant's possible defences of self-defence and provocation. He rejected the defence of self-defence because the deceased was not armed with any weapon and he rejected provocation because his relationship with Fatuma had ended two years previously. Fatuma was free to take another lover. He therefore convicted him and sentenced him as indicated. C

In this appeal, only one substantial ground was filed on behalf of the appellant, that the learned judge erred both in law and fact rejecting the appellant's defence of provocation and that the appellant should have been given the benefit of doubt. D

At the hearing of the appeal, Mr Mselemu from the Tanzania Legal Corporation advocated for the appellant, and argued that as there was no formal dissolution of the relationship between the appellant and Fatuma, the appellant was entitled to be provoked when he found the deceased committing adultery with his wife or concubine. In rebuttal, Miss Korosso learned State Attorney who appeared for the E Republic, argued that the defence of provocation was not available to the appellant because at that time there was no relationship between him and Fatuma, such relationship had already come to an end. F

On our part we think that for the defence of provocation to avail the appellant, two factors must be present. First, that a relationship between him and Fatuma still existed, and secondly, he must admit to killing the deceased. As to the first factor, G there was ample evidence which was accepted by the trial Court, and in our view rightly, showing beyond controversy that whatever relationship there was between the appellant and Fatuma, it had effectively ended in 1986. From then on, Fatuma considered herself free and indeed she was free to take on another lover. On this basis, she informed the appellant that she had already got another man, H hence he could only visit to see the children. The second factor was also absent because the appellant denied killing the deceased. According to him, the deceased fell on his own knife he was holding in readiness to stab him. Once this version was rejected as it was, then the defence of provocation disappears. We are therefore satisfied that the Trial Judge was right in rejecting the defence of pro- I

A vocation. It was not available to the appellant in the circumstances of this case.

This being the only ground of appeal, we are satisfied that this appeal has no merit and we dismiss it in its entirety. B

1995 TLR p262

C

[zRPz]GEORGE SHAMBWE v NATIONAL PRINTING COMPANY LTD 1995 TLR 262 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Lubuva JJA D

Civil Appeal No 19 of 1995
October 27, 1995

E (From judgment of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Mkude, J)

Flynote

Contract - Contract of Sale of Land - Agreement reached but vendor refuses to sign it despite benefiting from consideration furnished by purchaser - Effect thereof. F

Land law - Disposition of interest in land - Agreement is made but vendor despite receiving and benefiting from consideration under the agreement, refuses to sign it - Consent to transfer not sought and obtained from the Commissoner for Lands - Whether there was a sale agreement - Rule 3 of the Land Regulation. G

-Headnote

After an agreement had been reached between a vendor and purchaser of an interest in land and after the vendor had benefited from the consideration under the agreement the vendor refused to sign the written agreement and sought to disown the agreement altogether. The vendor sued the purchaser claiming vacant H possession of the suit premises. The vendor argued that there was no agreement because the consent of the Commissioner for Lands had not been sought and obtained as required by reg 3(1) of the Land Regulations 1948. The High Court found that there was an agreement between the vendor and the purchaser, that the vendor had breached that agreement by his refusal to execute the written agreement and that though inoperative for lack of approval of the I

1995 TLR p263

LUBUVA JA

Commissioner for Lands the agreement was nevertheless binding as between the A vendor and the purchaser. The vendor appealed to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania arguing that there was no agreement of sale of the house.

Held:

(i) On the basis of the evidence there was a concluded agreement for sale of the house between the appellant and the respondent; B

(ii) It is not correct to say that because the approval of the Commissioner for Lands had not been obtained therefore there was no agreement of sale between the appellant and the respondent;

(iii) Though the agreement for sale of the house was inoperative as it was not C approved by the Commissioner for Lands, it did not also mean that there was no binding agreement as borne out by the evidence;

(iv) An agreement for disposition of a right of occupancy is inoperative in the sense that property does not pass unless and until the approval of the Commissioner for Lands is obtained.

(v) Having breached the agreement the appellant cannot validly resort to reg 3(1) of the Land Regulations, 1948 in defence; D

Case Infomation

Appeal dismissed.

Cases referred to:

(1) Peter Karanti and 48 others v. Attorney General Civil Appeal No 3 of 1988 (unreported) E

(2) J M Kasuka v. George Humba, Civil Appeal No 35 of 1990

(3) Millen Richard v. Ayub Hoza [1992] TLR 385

(4) Fazal Kassam v A N Kassam [1960] EA 1042

Semgalawe for the appellant. F

Maira for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lubuva JA delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: G

This appeal arises from the decision of the High Court (Mkude, J) in Civil Case No 123 of 1990. In that case the plaintiff, George Shambwe (hereinafter called the appellant) had instituted a suit against the defendant, the National Printing Company Limited (hereinafter called the respondent) seeking among other reliefs, H a declaratory judgment that the sale agreement between the appellant and the respondent for the purchase of the house was inoperative and an order for vacant possession of the suit premises by the respondent.

The background to the case is simple and the facts are also not disputed. The appellant owned a house on Plot No 86 Wakulima I

1995 TLR p264

LUBUVA JA

A Road, Kinondoni District within the City of Dar es Salaam. The house was mortgaged to the National Bank of Commerce as security for the loan which the appellant had raised from the bank. For the initial period up to 30 July 1987 the respondent/defendant had rented the house from the appellant/plaintiff. While still B in occupation of the house under the rental arrangement, the respondent expressed his interest to purchase the house from the owner, the appellant. Negotiations started and it was agreed that the purchase price for the house would be Shs 850,000/=. It was further agreed that the respondent would pay part of the C purchase price to the National Bank of Commerce in order to redeem the mortgage and the balance of Shs 143,000/= to be paid to the appellant through his lawyers M/S Kijugo and Company, Advocates, who, it was intended would settle the appellant's other financial commitments. On the other hand, for the purpose of effecting the sale transaction of the house, the defendant company had sought the services of the Tanzania Legal Corporation. D

It is apparent, however, that though the respondent company had as agreed paid certain sums of money towards the redemption of the appellant's mortgage, the mortgage still remained unredeemed at Shs 483,631/= by December 1989. In E these circumstances, the appellant decided to redeem the mortgage directly. With the assistance of his wife, the appellant paid to the National Bank of Commerce Shs 455,000/=. The respondent was notified by letter from the appellant that whatever amount of money the respondent had paid to the bank would be treated as rent for the period that the respondent had occupied the house. This, it appears F sparked off controversy between the appellant and the respondent over the house in dispute. The appellant was pressing for the respondent to vacate the house in which he wanted to effect repair works. On the other hand, the G respondent was refusing to vacate the house for which he was demanding the plaintiff to effect the transfer in terms of the sale agreement. Before the High Court at Dar es Salaam, as indicated, the appellant/plaintiff instituted a suit against the respondent company. The learned Trial Judge dismissed the suit with costs to the defendant. Aggrieved by that decision, the appellant has appealed to this Court. H

Mr Semgalawe, learned advocate for the appellant has filed and argued the following two grounds of appeal:

'1. That the trial Honourable Judge erred in law in holding that the appellant was in breach of the sale agreement, which I agreement was not executed, and consented to by the Commissioner for Lands. A

2. That the Honourable Judge erred in law in not granting reliefs sought by the appellant because he found it would be inequitable to grant reliefs as the appellant was in breach of the sale agreement.' B

Arguing on ground one before us, Mr Semgalawe, learned Counsel was brief but pertinent, He strongly criticized the learned Trial Judge in holding that the appellant was in breach of the sale agreement. Learned Counsel took the view that the decision of the matter depended on the law governing the deposition of a right of occupancy as provided in the Land Regulations 1948. C

Repeating the appellant's argument before the High Court, learned Counsel submitted that in terms of reg 3(1) of the Land Regulation 1948 a disposition of a Right of Occupancy is inoperative if it is not in writing and is not approved by the D Commissioner for Lands. In support of this proposition, Mr Semgalawe referred us to the decided cases listed at page 94 of the proceedings which among others include our decision in Peter Karanti and 48 Others v Attorney General (1), J M Kasuka v George Humba (2) and Millen Richard v Ayub Hoza (3). On the basis of reg 3(1) and the fact that the Commissioner for Lands had not approved the E disposition, Mr Semgalawe maintained there was no agreement which the appellant was held by the learned Trial Judge to have breached. Alternatively, it was Mr Semgalawe's submission that if there was such an agreement, it was not legally enforceable. This aspect, the learned Counsel asserted, was not taken into account properly by the learned judge. F

Mr Maira, learned Counsel for the respondent, submitted that the learned Trial Judge's decision could not, in the circumstances of the case be faulted. Elaborating on this, Mr Maira referred to the time-honoured maxim 'he who resorts G to equity must come with clean hands'. He submitted that it would be inequitable, unjust and repugnant to justice to sustain the appellant's appeal because his case was fraught with fraud which was admitted by the appellant at page 58 of the proceedings. He also submitted that having regard to the H background of the case as a whole, it was clear that the appellant and the respondent had entered into a sale agreement which was legally binding upon them. That on the basis of the agreement, there was consideration from the respondent which the appellant benefited, i.e. the appellant had his mortgage with the National Bank of Commerce satisfied as the respondent effected I

A the payment for the sale price to the bank (NBC) as agreed. It was Mr Maira's further submission that the appellant should not be allowed to benefit from his own breach which resulted in the breach of the sale agreement when the respondent had complied with the terms of the agreement. In conclusion, Mr Maira argued that B by refusing to sign the sale agreement, the approval of the Commissioner for Lands could not be obtained as there was no executed legal document upon which such approval could be sought.

C We have given anxious and close consideration to these submissions. It is our considered view that the decision of this case turns around a narrow issue. That is, whether there was an agreement which was breached by the appellant/plaintiff. With respect, we agree with Mr Maira, learned Counsel for the respondent, that in order to determine the issue concerning the agreement, it is necessary to take full D account of the historical background and circumstances of the case. As already indicated, it is common ground that the appellant and the respondent had come to an agreement to have the appellant's house purchased by the respondent. That it was agreed that out of the purchase price of Shs 850,000/= part of it was to be E paid to the National Bank of Commerce in order to redeem the appellant's mortgage and the balance was to be paid to the appellant's through his lawyer M/S Kijugo and Company advocates. The issue as raised by Mr Semgalawe, learned Counsel for the appellant, is that there was no binding agreement because the approval of the Commissioner for Lands was not obtained after the initial F agreement between the appellant and the respondent. Mr Maira, on the other hand ardently submitted that the appellant was in breach of the sale agreement.

G In order to have a clear picture of the historical background to the case we deem it appropriate to closely examine the following documents on record. First, there is the letter of 11 November 1986 which was addressed to M/S Kijugo and Company, advocates for the appellant, by the Tanzania Legal Corporation, on behalf of the respondent. With that letter, three copies of the sale agreement were enclosed for execution by the appellant. The appellant was required to return the H copies of the sale agreement after signing for further processing and Capital Gains Tax assessment. With this, as indicated earlier, the appellant did not comply. There is also the letter of 28 July 1988 addressed to the Chief Corporation Counsel by the appellant's advocates, M/S Kijugo and Company, Advocates. In that letter it is clearly stated that there was an agreement between I the appellant and the respondent regarding the sale of the house and the A conveyancing process that was being handled by the Tanzania Legal Corporation. It is also indicated in the letter that any balance of the purchase price was to be paid to the advocate in order to settle the vendor's (appellant) other liabilities. Then there is the letter of 28 February 1990 exhibit D6 written to the NBC by M/S Kijugo B and Company, advocates for the respondent in connection with the sale of the house and the outstanding balance on the mortgage. In it is shown that the respondent had at 5 September 1985 paid Shs 540,000/= for the mortgaged amount of Shs 593,407/50=. Specifically, the respondent's advocates request for C a statement of account on the mortgage so that 'we may pay the balance of the amount owing including interest in order that the mortgage could be discharged in our favour'. On these facts, which are not disputed, it seems clear to us that an agreement for the sale of the house had been reached between the appellant and the respondent. Following on the agreement, the various correspondences D including the letters referred above ensued. They all refer to an existing agreement which the parties, i.e. the appellant and the respondent, had entered.

On the basis of this evidence, we are satisfied that the learned Trial Judge was entitled to the conclusion that there was a concluded agreement for sale between E the appellant and the respondent. The evidence was duly considered. With respect, we are unable to accept Mr Semgalawe's argument that there was no binding agreement because the Commissioner for Lands had not sanctioned the sale transaction. We agree with Mr Semgalawe's statement that under the Land F Regulations 1948 the sale agreement was inoperative, as the correct position of the law on this point. Needless to labour more on it, suffice it to say that the cases cited by the appellant at the hearing of this appeal and the trial Court, have among other points underscored this position of the law. That list of authorities includes the decision of this Court in J M Kasuka v George Humba (2) and Millen Richard v Ayub Hoza (3). G

However, though it is the position of the law on this point, we wish to make it clear that Mr Semgalawe, learned Counsel, is not with respect correct in his assertion that because the approval of the Commissioner for Lands was not forthcoming H there was therefore no agreement of sale between the appellant and the respondent. This is so because, in the instant case though the agreement for sale of the house was inoperative as it was not approved by the Commissioner for Lands, it did not also mean that there was no binding agreement as borne out by the evidence. In our understand- I

A ing an agreement for a disposition of a right of occupancy is inoperative in the sense that property does not pass unless and until the approval of the Commissioner for Lands is obtained. In this sense, being inoperative, and as we stated in the case of J M Kasuka v George Humba (supra), where a disposition is B inoperative by virtue of reg 3(1) it is void ab initio, and, therefore all the terms of the agreement to the disposition are void and therefore unenforceable. In the instant case, the situation is distinguishable. The learned Trial Judge correctly took the view that the appellant, the vendor was in breach of the agreement even though the approval of the Commissioner had not been obtained, In his judgment, the learned judge stated: C

'The position as it is now is that it is the vendor who is guilty of breach of contract by refusing to sign the sale agreement. The reason he has given for not signing the agreement is a lame excuse which he has concocted against his agreement with the purchaser/defendant. By D refusing to sign the agreement and return it to M/S Tanzania Legal Corporation for further processing to its logical conclusion he has brought everything to a stand still. It would be letting the plaintiff benefit from his own breach to give (L) (sic) him the remedies he is seeking....' E

From this, it is crystal clear that in this case, unlike the situation obtaining in the case of J M Kasuka v George Humba (supra) and Fazal Kassam v A N Kassam (4) an agreement for sale had been reached prior to the stage when the F Commissioner's approval was to be sought. As found by the learned judge, it was at the stage when the appellant was required to execute the sale agreement that he refused to sign the document. With this refusal to sign, nothing further could be done in executing the sale agreement. As a result, the approval of the G Commissioner could not be obtained. For that reason, we agree with the learned Trial Judge that the appellant was in breach of the sale agreement reached between him and the respondent, the buyer. Having breached the agreement in these circumstances, the appellant cannot validly resort to reg 3(1) of the Land Regulations 1948 in defence. The Commissioner's approval is sought after all the H initial formalities including the signing of the sale agreement are completed. Due to the appellant's conduct, execution formalities could not be accomplished and the Commissioner's approval could not be obtained. It is our considered view that the learned judge's finding that the appellant had breached the agreement was justified. Therefore, ground one fails. I

1995 TLR p269

LUBUVA JA

Before dealing with the next ground, we wish to make brief mention of an aspect A which was raised by Mr Maira, learned Counsel for the respondent. This he did when he was addressing on ground one. As already pointed out, Mr Maira had submitted that the appellant's appeal should not be entertained because the appellant did not come to seek justice with clean hands. He referred to page 58 of B the proceedings in which the appellant had admitted to have told lies in court. On record, the appellant had stated:

'I wrote a personal letter to Mr Kusaga, the NPC GM on 2/4/85 in which I said I had signed the agreement. By this time I had not signed the agreement so I lied to Mr Kusaga because I was in a hurry.' C

During the hearing of the appeal, at the prompting of the Court, Mr Maira, learned Counsel correctly in our view, did not press any further on the issue of fraud. This is because it is common knowledge that as the issue of fraud was not raised in the pleadings, that issue was never before the High Court. With respect, we find D no basis upon which this court as an appellate Court could entertain at this stage the issue of fraud.

We come to the last ground of appeal i.e. ground two. This ground is closely linked E with ground one. Under this ground, the appellant seeks to fault the Trial Judge for not granting the reliefs sought. Arguing this ground, Mr Semgalawe briefly reiterated his arguments in support of ground one, Essentially, it was his submission that there was no legally binding agreement which could be enforced against the appellant. He urged that in the absence of an enforceable agreement F the Trial Judge should have granted the reliefs sought by the appellant. Having taken the view that the appellant was in breach of the sale agreement, we think it is unnecessary to go any further into this matter. The reliefs sought were based on whether or not there was a breach of the agreement. This ground also fails. G

As the relief sought at the trial was a declaratory judgment that the agreement was inoperative, and as there was no counter-claim filed by the respondent for specific performance or damages, the learned Trial Judge correctly made no further orders. The respondent having spent sums of money towards the redemption of H the mortgage and other liabilities of the appellant, the matter is left open for further processing and execution of the documents in order to effect the transfer in terms of the law.

In the event, the appeal is dismissed with costs to the respondent. I
1995 TLR p270
A
[zRPz]ENOCK M CHACHA v MANAGER, NBC TARIME 1995 TLR 270 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Mwanza
Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

B Civil Appeal No 20 of 1995
November 6, 1995
(From judgment of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, Masanche, J)
Flynote
C Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Appeals to Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Where appeal must be with leave of the High Court and no such leave is sought and obtained - Appeal incompetent - Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979, s 5(1)(c).
-Headnote
D The appellant got an ex-parte judgment against the respondent in a District Court. When he moved to execute the judgment the respondent filed two applications one for stay of execution and the other for setting aside the ex-parte judgment. The court allowed the former and refused the latter application. The E respondent bank successfully appealed to the High Court. Aggrieved by the decision of the High Court the appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania without first seeking and obtaining leave of the High Court.
Held:
F Since the appellant neither sought nor obtained leave to appeal to this Court the appeal is incompetent for non-compliance with s 5(1)(c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979.
Case Infomation
Appeal dismissed.
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
G Mfalila, JA delivered the order of the court:
There is absolutely no merit in this appeal. It all started at Tarime District Court where the appellant sued the respondent bank to recover damages amounting to Shs 3.5m for unlawfully dishonouring his cheque for Shs 20,000/= which he had H intended to pay for the balance of the cost of a motor vehicle. The respondent bank failed to file the written statement of defence within the stipulated time. The appellant was therefore allowed to prove his claim ex-parte. This was done and the Court entered judgment is his favour as prayed. It was when the appellant moved to execute the judgment I
1995 TLR p271

MFALILA JA

that the respondent bank realised of the existence of the judgment against it. It filed A two applications, one for stay of execution and the other for setting aside the ex-parte judgment. The application for stay of execution was granted while that for setting aside the ex-parte judgment was dismissed. The respondent bank successfully appealed to the High Court against this refusal. The High Court B (Masanche, J) allowed the appeal on the basis that the appellant did not prove his claim as a whole and the special damages claimed. In the circumstances the learned judge was of the view that it was necessary to have the case tried. Against this decision the appellant lodged this appeal. C

His claim and only complaint in this appeal is that the application to set aside the ex-parte judgment in the district court was out of time and therefore time-barred and that therefore the district court correctly and rightly dismissed the application to set aside the ex-parte judgment. D

There are two reasons why this appeal must fail. Firstly, the question of limitation is being raised for the first time in this Court. The points should have been raised in the courts below who would then have made a ruling on this issue. This Court cannot give decisions as a court of first instance. Secondly, under s 5(1)(c) of the E Appellate Jurisdiction Act, appeals like the present must come to this Court only with the leave of the High Court. The appellant neither sought nor obtained leave to appeal to this Court. The appeal is therefore incompetent for non-compliance with s 5(1)(c) aforesaid. F

In the result as we have indicated earlier this appeal has no merit and we reject it summarily. The order of the High Court should now be complied with. G

1995 TLR p272

A

[zRPz]NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE v DAR ES SALAAM EDUCATION AND OFFICE STATIONERY 1995 TLR 272 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dar Es Salaam

Judge B Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Lubuva JJA

Civil Appeal No 16 of 1995

November 24, 1995

C (From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Bubeshi, J)

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Temporary injunction - When applicable - Order 37 Rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code.

D Civil Practice and Procedure - Temporary Injunction - Order of injunction sought to set aside the sale of a house - Whether proper.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Temporary injunction - Whether may be issued against strangers to the suit.

Banking Law - Securities - Mortgages - Mortgage deed empowering mortgagee to sell the mortgaged property - Whether and under what circumstances Court may interfere with such sale. E

-Headnote

The respondent borrowed money from the appellant bank. As security, a house was mortgaged in favour of the appellant. Upon failure to repay the loan which had swollen more than seven fold the appellant exercised its right under the mortgage F deed and sold the house. After the sale of the house the respondent filed a suit followed by, on the next day, a chamber application filed under 0.37 R.1 and ss 48 and 95 of the Civil Procedure Code for an order of temporary injunction restraining the NBC and Registrar of Titles from transferring title of the house and preventing eviction of tenants therefrom. The judge who heard the application issued an order G that the sale of the house be set aside, and that NBC and the Registrar of be restrained from transferring the title to the house and further prevented eviction of the tenants. Aggrieved the appellant appealed against the decision of the High Court arguing, inter alia, that the order to set aside the sale of the house was not properly given under 0.37 R.1, temporary injunction may not be issued against strangers to the suit, and that the court had no power to interfere with the appellant H while exercising its power under the deed of mortgage.

Held:

(i) Where a mortgagee is exercising its power of sale under a mortgage deed the Court cannot interfere unless there was corruption or collusion with the purchaser in the sale of the property; I

1995 TLR p273

OMAR JA

(ii) Order 37 Rule 1 was inapplicable in the circumstances of the case A because there was no court decree in execution of which the house was sold;

(iii) Order 37 Rule 1 would not be applicable in this case on account of the fact that the house was mortgaged in which case it could be sold in execution of the mortgage without resort to a court decree; B

(iv) Since the order setting aside the sale of the house was a nullifying act it could not be obtained in an application for temporary injunction under Order 37 Rule 1.

(v) A temporary injunction cannot be issued against strangers to a suit.

Case Infomation

Appeal allowed.

Case referred to: C

(1) Garden Cottage Food Ltd v. Milk Market Board

Uzanda for the appellant.

Maira for the respondent. D

[zJDz]Judgment

Omar, JA delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:

This appeal was brought by Mr Uzanda, learned Counsel for the appellant, National E Bank of Commerce, to oppose the High Court order (Bubeshi, J) which set aside the sale of a house on plot No 5 Block 3A Kinondoni, Dar es Salaam. The order also restrained the NBC and the Registrar of Titles from transferring Title No 22576 of this house to any person, and also prevented eviction of tenants from this house. F

In 1986 the respondent, Dar es Salaam Education and Office Stationery, decided to gain liquidity at the appellant bank (that is National Bank of Commerce, Bank House Branch) where it held an account. The directors of this company applied for an overdraft facility first of Shs 400,000/= in February 1986 to be followed by another overdraft of Shs 1,000,000/= in August 1986 and lastly of Shs 2,000,000/= in March 1987. G

The Director of respondent company, Mr Omari Mgeni, deposited the title deed of his own house situated at Kinondoni as security for the second overdraft of Shs 2,000,000/=. In May 1994, seven years later, the appellant bank informed the H respondent company that the debt had risen to Shs 15,371,538/20/= and that if not settled the house so mortgaged to them would be sold. It was sold which gave rise to the first application to the High Court by the respondent company to set aside the sale and it was duly set aside for reasons given by the court and now appealed against by Mr I

1995 TLR p274

OMAR JA

A Uzanda, counsel for the bank, who made the following submissions: That the application was made and filed one day after the sale, that is on 30 November 1994, under Ord 37 rule 1 and ss 48 and 95 of CPC for a temporary injunction. The object of Ord 37(1) CPC 1966 is preventative, the whole purpose is to prevent or restrain so as to preserve the subject of the suit in status quo for the time being. B He cited vol III 6th ed page 3966 Chitley and Rao which explains that any order which has the effect of changing or disturbing or altering the status quo is not covered by Ord 37 rule (1). Mr Uzanda further stated that status quo as defined in C Garden Cottage Food Ltd v Milk Market Board (1) is the state of affairs existing immediately before the filing of the application and injunction should be to maintain the existing status before determination of the suit. The house was advertised to be sold on 7 September 1994 and it was sold on 29 November 1994 and the suit was filed on 30 November 1994. The High Court issued the order that the sale be D set aside, this Mr Uzanda argued was a nullifying act and not a restraining act and it cannot be made under Ord 37(1) CPC. Not only was the chamber application incompetent but the order was without legal authority. If only intended sale was under an execution of a decree but it was not the case, this he quoted E from Chitley and Rao vol III 6th ed and he submitted that the order of the High Court should be set aside. He further said that a temporary injunction cannot be issued against a stranger to the suit. Registrar of Titles is a stranger to the suit and he was by this order of Bubeshi, J restrained from changing the name of the F owner in his books. Purchaser of this house is also a stranger to the suit, he too was restrained by this order. Equity acts in personum not in rem. Mortgagee, that is the Bank, had a mortgage deed which entitled the Bank to sell without coming to G court. Section 48 CPC cannot be invoked because the mortgagee (the Bank) sold it; it was not attached property. NBC was a mortgagee and was exercising its power of sale under a deed of mortgage. Court cannot interfere unless there was a corruption of collusion with the purchaser in the sale of property. Unless the price is very much less so as to import fraud, corruption or collusion. The High H Court, he argued, had no power to interfere with the sale. Temporary injunction was issued without legal authority and it should be set aside in its entirety, a declaration that the sale was valid and the costs to the appellant in both courts.

Mr Maira, learned Counsel for the respondent Dar es Salaam Education and Stationery Office, stated in reply that the property was auctioned on 19 November 1994, the certificate of auction was I dated 8 December 1994 and the Chamber Summons was presented for filing on 1 A December 1994 it was meant to prevent or arrest the sale of this property in the words NBC should not continue with the sale of this property or that its completion should be arrested. Two houses were offered as security for this loan and the house situated at Singida if sold would deprive its owner of the roof over his head. B Mr Maira thereafter supported the ruling of the High Court and prayed that it should be left undisturbed. Mr Uzanda in reply to Mr Maira's submissions stated that they were all irrelevant. Even if the house had not been sold such order of setting aside a sale could not have been made under Ord 37(1) CPC because the C house was not in danger of being sold in execution of a decree, so the order could not be made at all. Also the order could not be made against Registrar of Titles, because temporary injunctions are not issued against strangers, purchaser of the house is also a stranger. The applicant/respondent was not a party to the D contract guaranteeing the loan. Mr Uzanda continued by saying that Mr Maira conceded that the respondent was indebted under the banking facilities. He further said that s 95 CPC was mentioned as an alternative to Ord 37(1) CPC; this is erroneous. A sale takes place when the hammer falls and this took place on 29 November 1994 and 30 November 1994 was the date of filing the application that E is why it was applied to be set aside. Corruption or collusion were not pleaded therefore the court was not entitled to interfere with the sale. Mr Uzanda said that Mr Maira had filed a suit for permanent injunction. Now he has applied for setting F aside which is sufficient to dispose of his matter, that is his remedy. Interlocutory order does not decide the rights of the parties but this one of the High Court did decide the rights of the parties. Mr Uzanda then prayed for this appeal to be allowed.

We have carefully considered these submissions. The central issue in this appeal G is the propriety of the order of 30 December 1994 by Bubeshi, J. In that order, the sale of House No 5 Block 3A Kinondoni, Dae es Salaam was set side. That was as a result of a chamber application filed by the respondent, Dar es Salaam Education and Office Stationery, under Ord 37 rule 1 and ss 48 and 95 of the Civil H Procedure Code. In the main suit which is still pending before the High Court filed on 30 November 1994, the respondent who was the plaintiff was seeking for judgment and decree against the appellant (NBC) as defendant for:

'an order for a permanent injunction to stop the sale of the property I

A situated on Plot No 5 Block 37A Kinondoni, Dar es Salaam until the facts in dispute are resolved in full.'

Otherwise the respondent was not disputing the debt and was willing to settle it upon the establishment of the extent of the debt. After the written statement was filed, before the hearing of the suit started, the respondent filed a chamber B application which sought to have the sale of the house on Plot No 5 Block 3A Kinondoni set aside. From the affidavit deponed by one Omari Mgeni, the Executive Director of the respondent Company and the submission by Mr Uzanda, C leaned Counsel for the appellant, it is apparent that the house in question was sold on 28 November 1994 when the matter was still pending before the High Court.

Under a certificate of urgency, on 1 December 1994, a chamber application was filed under Ord 37 rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the sale of the house. Order 37 rule 1 provides: D

'1.Where in any suit it is provided by affidavit or otherwise -

(a) that any property in dispute in a suit is in danger of being wasted, damaged, or alienated by any party to the suit or suffer loss of value by reason of its continued use by any party to the suit or wrongly sold in execution of a decree ...' (Emphasis supplied.) E

On the basis of this provision, can it be said that in the instant case, the property, the subject matter of the suit pending, was the property sold in execution of a court decree? In our view, from the facts of the case, the answer is affirmatively in the F negative. There was no court decree on the basis of which the house was sold. In that case, we are, with respect, in agreement with Mr Uzanda, learned Counsel for the appellant, that Ord 37 rule 1 was inapplicable in the circumstances of the case because there was no court decree in execution of which the house was sold. G Furthermore, it is our view that Ord 37 rule 1 would not be applicable in this case on account of the fact that the house on Plot No 5 Block 3A Kinondoni was mortgaged in which case it could be sold in execution of the mortgage without resort to the court decree.

H Next we address our minds on the sequence of events leading to the sale of the house and the time when the order setting aside the sale was issued. If the sequence of events was as set out by Mr Uzanda, learned Counsel for the appellant, which was not controverted by Mr Maira, learned Counsel for the respondent, the question is whether the order of injunction which sought to set aside the sale of the house was proper. The sequence of events was that the I house was sold on 28 November 1994, the main suit was filed on 30 November A 1994 and the chamber application, the subject matter of this appeal was filed on 1 December 1994. As indicated, if by 30 December 1994 the house had been sold, was the application for a temporary injunction under Ord 37 rule 1 to set aside the sale on 1 December 1994 of any practical effect? It is common knowledge that the B purpose of an order for a temporary injunction as set out under Ord 37 rule 1 is to preserve and retain the status quo as obtains at the time immediately before the filing of the application until the determination of the suit. In this case, the matter had already been carried beyond the stage in which the restraining relief being sought would serve any purpose. That is, the house had already been sold in C which case there was nothing from which the appellant would be restrained to do. The sale having taken place any measure aimed at preventing the sale from taking place would be an exercise in futility. This was the object of the main suit. As for D the sale, the subject matter of the chamber application, in this, with respect, we accept Mr Uzanda's submission that in the instant case, it was not a restraining act but a nullifying act which could not be sought in an interlocutory order under Ord 37 rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code. It being a nullifying act, it could not, in our view, properly be obtained in an application for temporary injunction under Ord 37 rule 1. E

Mr Maira's submission that the High Court was entitled to make the temporary order under Ord 37 rule 1 because, as he stated though the sale of the house by auction had taken place, the legal formalities of conveyancing and transfer had not F been completed, is with respect, untenable. It is our considered view that setting aside the sale of the house not being a restraining act but a nullifying act, would appropriately be dealt with in the course of determining the main suit and not in an application for a temporary injunction. As it happened, with due respect to the G learned judge, the order of 30 December 1994 setting aside the sale of the house on Plot No 5 Block 3A Kinondoni pending the hearing of the main suit again renders the whole matter ineffectual. This is because, as pointed out, the main purpose of the main suit was to obtain a permanent order of injunction to stop the sale of the house until the facts are resolved in full. But by 28 November 1994, the H matter was overtaken by events when the house was sold. The sale could no longer be restrained.

Finally, we wish to make brief mention on the extent of the order of 30 December 1994. In that order, the Registrar of Titles was also I

A restrained from transferring Title No 22576 in respect of the house on Plot No 5, Block 3A Kinondoni. The purchaser of the house was also restrained from evicting the occupants of the house. As succinctly elaborated by the learned authors of Chitty and Rao, 6th ed, vol III, it is common ground that a temporary injunction B cannot be issued against strangers to the suit. In this case the Registrar of Titles and the purchaser of the house were not parties to the suit in which case, we accept Mr Uzanda's submission that it was not proper to have them included in the temporary order of injunction on 30 November 1994.

C For these reasons, we are satisfied that the order for temporary injunction issued to set aside the sale was without any legal basis. The matter had been overtaken by events. It is accordingly set aside. We allow the appeal with costs to the appellant.

E

[zRPz]MICHAEL JOSEPH v REPUBLIC 1995 TLR 278 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Kisanga JJA, Mfalila JJA and Lubuva JJA

Criminal Appeal 199 of 1994 F
November 28, 1995
(From the judgment of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Bahati, J)
Flynote
G Criminal Law - Armed robbery - What constitutes armed robbery.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Charge of robbery with violence - In the commission of the offence an arm is used - Whether offence committed is one of armed robbery.
-Headnote
H The appellant was charged with robbery with violence. Evidence led showed that during the commission of the offence the appellant used a knife. The trial court convicted and sentenced him to thirty years imprisonment and five strokes of the cane. On appeal to the High Court the main issue raised was that the sentence imposed was not proper in law because the offence did not amount to armed robbery. The appeal was dismissed. On further appeal to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania. I
1995 TLR p279
LUBUVA JA
Held: A
(i) Though there is no express and specific definition of what constitutes 'armed robbery' it is clear that if a dangerous or offensive weapon or instrument is used in the course of a robbery such constitutes 'armed robbery' in terms of the law as amended by Act No 10 of 1989.
(ii) Weapons are not confined to firearms only, other types of weapons such as knives are also included; B
(iii) The offence involving the appellant was armed robbery.
Case Infomation
Appeal dismissed
No case referred to.
Mwengela for the respondent. C
[zJDz]Judgment
Lubuva, JA: delivered the following considered judgment of the court:
The District Court of Ilala District at Kivukoni convicted the appellant of the offence D of robbery with violence contrary to ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. He was sentenced to a term of imprisonment for thirty years. The appellant was further ordered to suffer five strokes of the cane. On appeal to the High Court (Bahati, J) the main issue raised was that the sentence imposed was not proper in law. He E contended that the trial magistrate erred in sentencing him to thirty years imprisonment because a mere knife was used in the commission of the offence in which case it was not armed robbery. In that situation, the appellant insisted, in terms of the provisions of Act No 10 of 1989, he should have been sentenced to fifteen years imprisonment for the offence of ordinary robbery. Dismissing the F appeal, the learned judge held that the offence was armed robbery because the knife used in the commission of the offence was a dangerous and offensive weapon. Still dissatisfied, this second appeal has thus been lodged. Again it is against sentence only. G

Complaining against the sentence, the appellant has filed four grounds of appeal. In addition to these grounds, at the hearing of this appeal the appellant submitted a handwritten memorandum which he claimed contained additional grounds of appeal. From these grounds, it is our view that in essence two points are raised in H this appeal. First, that the sentence imposed was not proper as the offence involved was not armed robbery. Secondly, that as the appellant was sixteen years of age at the time, he should not have been sentenced to thirty years imprisonment and five strokes of the cane.

For the respondent, Republic, Mr Mwengela, learned State Attorney, appeared before us. In regard to the appellant's claim that I

1995 TLR p280

LUBUVA JA

A he was sixteen years of age at the time of the trial before the District Court, he submitted that, that was not true. Referring to page 6 of the proceedings at the trial, Mr Mwengela pointed out that the record quite clearly shows that the appellant in his sworn defence statement declared he was twenty years of age. It B is inconceivable, Mr Mwengela stressed, that the appellant stated his age to be twenty years if, as a matter of fact he knew it was not so. Furthermore, Mr Mwengela contended, at the hearing of the appeal before the High Court the issue that the appellant was sixteen years of age was not raised. It was Mr Mwengela's submission that there was no basis for the appellant's claim that he should have been treated as a juvenile.

C We accept Mr Mwengela's submission that this ground is without merit. From record, the issue that the appellant was sixteen years old was neither before the trial Court nor the High Court on first appeal. As already pointed out by Mr D Mwengela, learned State Attorney, the facts as accepted by the two courts below do not bear him out on this. The appellant in clear and unambiguous terms stated in is defence at the trial that he was at the time twenty years old. What is more, on appeal to the High court, the age of the appellant was not raised at all. All that the E appellant complained on appeal at the High Court was in regard to the sentence of thirty years imprisonment. In such circumstances, we think it is not only too late in the day but that the appellant cannot be entertained in this in this court to raise an issue which was not before the two courts below. Furthermore, it is an issue F which, according to the record, the appellant clearly admitted that he was twenty years old. With respect, we are satisfied that it is a futile exercise for the appellant to seek to fault the learned judge on first appeal regarding the sentence imposed on the ground of his age.

G We revert to the ground that the sentence of thirty years imprisonment was improper. In his submission on this point, Mr Mwengela submitted that under Act No 10 of 1989 read together with s 286 of the Penal Code, once it is proved that a dangerous or offensive weapon or instrument was used in the commission of the robbery, such would be armed robbery. In the instant case, Mr Mwengela urged, H as a knife was used which is a dangerous or offensive weapon the offence involved was armed robbery for which the sentence imposed was proper.

On this ground, the only issue is whether the circumstances of the case, the offence involved was armed robbery. It is common knowledge that the object behind the enactment of the Written Laws (Miscellaneous Amendments) Act No 10 of 1989 which amends I

1995 TLR p281
LUBUVA JA
the Minimum Sentence Act 1972, was inter alia, to raise the penalties for offences A of robbery with violence or attempt to commit such offences and the sue of arms or dangerous or offensive weapons. Otherwise, the basic definition of robbery still remains as provided for under the Penal Code. Under s 286 of the Penal Code which prescribes the penalties for robbery the circumstances under B which if robbery takes place, a sentence of life imprisonment with or without corporal punishment could be imposed are set out. In that section, in part, it is provided '... If the offender is armed with any dangerous or offensive weapon or instrument ...' (Emphasis supplied.) From this, and as correctly held by the C learned judge, though there is no express and specific definition of what constitutes 'armed robbery' it is clear to us that if a dangerous or offensive weapon or instrument is used in the course of a robbery, such constitutes 'armed robbery' in terms of the law as amended by Act No 10 of 1989. In this context, the weapons are, in our view, not confined to firearms only, other types of weapons such as D knives are also included.
In the instant case, the weapon used was a knife which as already indicated is a dangerous or offensive weapon. With respect, we are in agreement with the learned judge that the offence involving the appellant was armed robbery. We are E therefore satisfied that the sentence of thirty years imprisonment and five strokes of the cane on the appellant was properly founded in law. The appellant's complaint against the propriety of the sentence is untenable.
In the event, we dismiss the appeal in its entirety. F

1994
Editorial Board

Chairman
The Hon. Mr. Justice F.L. NYALALI, Chief Justice of Tanzania
Secretary & Managing Editor
Dr. J.T. MWAIKUSA, Senior Lecturer, Faculty of Law,
University of Dar es Salaam
Members
The Hon. Mr. Justice B.A. SAMATTA, Justice of Appeal,
Tanzania Court of Appeal
The Hon. Mr. Justice H.M. HAMID,
Chief Justice of Zanzibar
The Hon. Mr. Justice H.A. MSUMI,
Principle Judge (J.K.) of the High Court of Tanzania
Mr. SHAIDI, Principal State Attorney
Attorney General's Chambers, Dar es Salaam

Mr. A.M. MISKIRY, Senior State Attorney,
Attorney General's Chambers, Zanzibar
Ms. K. ORIYO, Chief Corporation Counsel,
Tanzania Legal Corporation
Mr. S.J. JADEJA, Advocate of the High Court of Tanzania
Mr. B. LUANDA, Registrar, Court of Appeal of Tanzania
Ms. M. SHANGALI, Court of Appeal, Administrative Assistant
Dr. P.J. KABUDI (Assistant Editor),
Senior Lecturer, Faculty of Law, University of Dar es Salaam

SCOPE OF THE SERIES

These Reports cover cases decided in the Court of Appeal of Tanzania and the High Courts of Tanzania and Zanzibar

CITATION

These Reports are cited thus [1994] T.L.R.

Judges of the Court of Appeal of Tanzania in 1994

1.	The Hon. Mr. Justice F.L. Nyalali	Chief Justice
2.	The Hon. Mr. Justice L.M. Makame	Justice of Appeal
3.	The Hon. Mr. Justice R.H. Kisanga	Justice of Appeal
4.	The Hon. Mr. Justice A.M.A. Omar	Justice of Appeal
5.	The Hon. Mr. Justice A.S.L. Ramadhani	Justice of Appeal
6.	The Hon. Mr. Justice N.S. Mnzavas	Justice of Appeal
7.	The Hon. Mr. Justice L.M. Mfalila	Justice of Appeal
8.	The Hon. Mr. Justice D.Z. Lubuva	Justice of Appeal

Judges of the High Court of Tanzania in 1994

1.	The Hon. Mr. Justice B.A. Samatta	Principal Judge (J.K.)
2.	The Hon. Mr. Justice D.P. Mapigano	Puisne Judge
3.	The Hon. Mr. Justice K.S.K. Lugakingira	Puisne Judge
4.	The Hon. Mr. Justice E.W. Katiti	Puisne Judge
5.	The Hon. Mr. Justice B.D. Chipeta	Puisne Judge
6.	The Hon. Mr. Justice N.M. Mushi	Puisne Judge
7.	The Hon. Mr. Justice W. Maina	Puisne Judge
8.	The Hon. Mr. Justice J.A. Mroso	Puisne Judge
9.	The Hon. Mr. Justice L.J.R. Chua	Puisne Judge
10.	The Hon. Mr. Justice R.A. Mwaikasu	Puisne Judge
11.	The Hon. Mr. Justice A. Bahati	Puisne Judge
12.	The Hon. Mr. Justice H.A. Msumi	Puisne Judge
13.	The Hon. Mr. Justice J.L. Mwalusanya	Puisne Judge

14. The Hon. Mr. Justice E.E. Kazimoto Puisne Judge
15. The Hon. Mr. Justice E.P. Moshi Puisne Judge
16. The Hon. Mr. Justice L.A. Kyando Puisne Judge
17. The Hon. Mr. Justice W.H. Sekule Puisne Judge
18. The Hon. Madam Justice E.N. Munuo Puisne Judge
19. The Hon. Mr. Justice J. Masanche Puisne Judge
20. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.B. Mchome Puisne Judge
21. The Hon. Mr. Justice M.D. Nchalla Puisne Judge
22. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.M. Mackanja Puisne Judge
23. The Hon. Mr. Justice T.L. Mkude Puisne Judge
24. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.J. Mkwawa Puisne Judge
25. The Hon. Mr. Justice E.K. Mwipopo Puisne Judge
26. The Hon. Mr. Justice E.N. Rutakangwa Puisne Judge
27. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.H. Msoffe Puisne Judge
28. The Hon. Mr. Justice A.C. Mrema Puisne Judge
29. The Hon. Madam Justice A. Bubeshi Puisne Judge
30. The Hon. Mr. Justice S.N. Kaji Puisne Judge

Judges of the High Court of Zanzibar in 1994

1. The Hon. Mr. Justice Hamid M. Hamid Chief Justice
2. The Hon. Mr. Justice Dahoma Puisne Judge

Cases Reported
1994 TLR p1
A
[zRPz]JUMA ALI KAZIYABURE v TANZANIA POSTS AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS 1994 TLR 1 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Msumi J

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL CAUSE NO. 94 OF 1985 B
21 August, 1986
Flynote
Labour Law - Summary dismissal - Minister orders reinstatement of dismissed employee - Whether employer C may terminate services and pay statutory compensation instead - Security of Employment Act, Cap 574.
-Headnote

The respondent summary dismissed the applicant from employment. The Minister for Labour, in D agreement with the decision of the Reconciliation Board, ordered the reinstatement of the applicant. Instead of complying with it the respondent purported to terminate service on payment of statutory compensation and twelve months salary in accordance with s 40A(5) of the Security of Employment Act as amended by Act No 1 of 1975. E

The applicant then applied to the High Court for an order of specific performance of the Minister's decision. He also claimed damages arising from the respondent's failure to comply with that decision. The learned counsel for respondent was of the view that an employer can legitimately ignore the order of the Minister or Board for reinstatement provided he pays the aggrieved employee F statutory compensation, plus twelve months salary.

Held:

(i) There is no legal backing for the argument that an employer can legitimately ignore the order of the Minister or Board for reinstatement provided he pays the aggrieved employee statutory compensation plus twelve months salary; G

(ii) Section 27 and 40A(5) of the Security of Employment Act is where the Minister or Board has ordered for reinstatement or re-engagement it is the complainant employee, and not the offending employer, who may opt for one of the two alternatives. H

(iii) An employer who refuses to reinstate his employee in contravention of the decision of the Minister or Board risks having such decision executed against him by way of specific performance with or without payment of damages;

(iv) in addition to an order for specific performance, the court is empowered, under s 27(2) of I the Security of Employment Act, to award damages.

1994 TLR p2

Case Information

A Application upheld; respondent ordered to reinstate the applicant within thirty days.

No case referred to.

Teye, for applicant.

Kisaka, for respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

B Msumi, J: These proceedings have been initiated under the provisions of s 27 of Security of Employment Act, cap 574 and Order XXI Rule 20 of Civil Procedure Code, 1966. The applicant is seeking the assistance of this court in executing the decision of the Minister of Labour who, in C agreement with the decision of the Reconciliation Board ordered for the reinstatement of applicant in his position as an employee of the respondent. Prior to the decision of the Minister, respondent had invoked a disciplinary action against the appellant by dismissing him summarily. In these proceedings respondent does not challenge the Minister's decision which according to law is final D and conclusive. However, instead of complying with it by reinstating the applicant, respondent purported to terminate his service on payment of statutory compensation and twelve months salary E in accordance with s 40A(5) of Security of Employment Act as amended by Act 1 of 1975. It has been submitted by the learned counsel for the respondent that this provision gives an employer the option to terminate the service of his employee instead of reinstating him provided he pays him the stipulated compensation.

F The relevant provisions in this case are s 27 and 40A(5) of the Security of Employment Act, henceforth referred as the Act. Both sections are hereby fully quoted for ease of reference.

'27(1) The decision of the Minister on a reference to him under s 26, and subject to any decision on a reference to G the Minister therefrom the decision of a Board on a reference to it under this Part -

(a) shall be final and conclusive and

(b) shall be binding on the parties to the reference and the relationship between the parties in the consequence H of the matters in respect of which the reference was made shall be determined accordingly, and

(c) may be enforced in any court of competent jurisdiction as if it were a decree.

(2) In addition to its powers to execute any decision which requires the refund of any wages deducted or, expressly or by implication, the payment of any sum to any employee where a dismissal is ordered to take effect as the I termination of employment, a court in which it is sought to enforce a decision of the Minister or a Board may make and enforce such orders as are necessary for the A specific performance of any decision for the re-engagement or reinstatement of any employee (notwithstanding that the court would not have power apart from this subsection to make or enforce such orders) and may award damages for the failure of the employer to carry out any such decision as if he had dismissed the employee B concerned wrongly (and if Part IV of this Act is in operation in relation to the employee concerned, such damages shall include the statutory compensation provided for in that Part.)'

Section 40A(5) provides -

`40A(5) Where a reinstatement or re-engagement has been ordered under this section and the employer refuses or fails to comply with the order - C

(a) in the case of an order made by a Board against which no reference has been made to the Minister within twenty eight days of the order being made, or

(b) in the case of an order made by the Minister on a farther reference to him, within fourteen days of the order D being made by the Minister, the employer shall be liable to pay the employee compensation of an amount equal to aggregate of -

(i) the statutory compensation computed in accordance with s 35, and E

(ii) a sum equal to twelve months wages to which the employee was entitled immediately before the termination of his employment or, as the case may be, his dismissal.

and such compensation shall be recoverable in the same manner as statutory compensation the payment of which has been ordered under s 39.' F

As noted earlier, respondent refused to reinstate the applicant and instead he purported to terminate him on payment of statutory compensation and twelve months salary. The learned counsel for respondent is of the view that an employer can legitimately ignore the order of the Minister or Board G for reinstatement or re-engagement provided he pays the aggrieved employee statutory compensation plus twelve months salary. With respect I can find no legal backing for such argument. My understanding of s 27 and s 40A(5) of the Act is that where the Minister or Board has H ordered for reinstatement or re-engagement the complainant employee may opt for one of the two alternatives. He may either apply to the court under s 27(1) of the Act to have the order executed as if it was a decree, or he can claim for payment of statutory compensation and twelve months salary as I provided under s 40A(5) of the Act. Either

1994 TLR p4

MSUMI J

A of these alternatives can only be initiated at the instance of the aggrieved employee and not the offending employer. An employer who refuses to reinstate his employee in contravention of the decision of the Minister or Board does so at the risk of having such decision executed against him by way of specific performance with or without payment of damages, or on the application of the aggrieved employee, he may be ordered to pay the employee statutory compensation plus twelve B months salary. An employer cannot, at his own initiative, choose to pay his aggrieved employee statutory compensation and twelve months salary as an alternative to comply with the Minister's or C Board's decision of reinstatement.

Essentially what the applicant is asking the court to do is to order specific performance of the Minister's decision. He is also claiming damages arising from the respondent's failure to comply with D the decision of the Minister. As far as reinstatement is concerned, the decision is quite clear, it says:

`Kwamba kufukuzwa kwake kazini mfanyakazi siyo sawa na halali. Hivvo arudishwe kazini kwake kama kawaida.'

E This is the decision which the applicant wants to execute by way of specific performance. However, in addition to making an order for specific performance, the court is empowered under s 27(2) of the Act to award damages. However, apart from his claim for various entitlements applicant has not claim and prove any damage. He is mainly claiming for payment of arrears of wages.

F In conclusion the application for the execution of the Minister's decision is hereby upheld. Respondent is ordered to reinstate the applicant with effect from 28 October 1983 the day when the Minister gave his decision. As a necessary measure for enforcing this decision it is further ordered G that respondent should reinstate the applicant within thirty days from the delivery of this ruling. For the avoidance of doubt it is specifically stated that applicant is entitled to be paid his arrears of salary H from 28 October 1983 to the time of his reinstatement. No order for costs is made.

1994 TLR p5

A

[zRPz]YOHANA BALICHEKO v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 5 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Makame JJA, Kisanga JJA, and Omar JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 119 OF1987 B
28 July, 1988
(Appeal from the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, Kaji, PRM, Ext Jurisdiction) C
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Sentence for manslaughter - Whether Court of Appeal may interfere with sentence imposed by the trial court. D
-Headnote
The appellant was charged with murder, but ultimately found guilty of manslaughter only and sentenced to 10 years imprisonment. In passing sentence on the appellant the Trial Court considered the fact that the appellant was 41 years of age, he was a first offender, and had been E remanded for four years, and that he was highly provoked by the misconduct of his deceased wife. On appeal:
Held:

(i) As a general rule this court will not readily interference with a sentence imposed by the High Court unless satisfied that the sentence was manifestly excessive, or that the sentencing F court failed to consider a material circumstance, or that it otherwise erred in principle.

(ii) In the circumstances of the case the sentence imposed, although heavy, was not manifestly excessive to warrant interference by this court.

Case Information
Appeal dismissed. G
Cases referred to:

1. R v Wilson Munsha 5 NRLR 87
2. R v Lukanfubila [1970] HCD n 175
3. Silvanus Leonard Nguruwe v R [1981] TLR 66

Rugarabumu, for the appellant, Swai, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Kisanga JA: delivered the following considered judgment of the court:: This appeal arises from the decision of Mr S N Kaji, Principal Resident Magistrate exercising extended jurisdiction, in which he H convicted the appellant for manslaughter and sentenced him to ten years' imprisonment. The appellant had been charged with murder, but at the conclusion of a full trial the learned Principal Resident Magistrate found him guilty only of the lesser offence of manslaughter and proceeded to sentence him as above. The appeal is against sentence only.
It is important to set out, although very briefly, the background of this matter. The appellant was the husband of the deceased. The two had been husband and wife for quite some time and had had I

KISANGA JA

A seven children between them, five of whom are living. The deceased was given to heavy drinking, and this appears to be the source of the appellant's quarrel with her on many occasions. On the day of the incident the deceased returned home at night from a drinking spree; she was drunk. She had B been away for a considerable time leaving the young children at home unattended and without food. Upon her return home the appellant beat her up severely, using a stick, by way of punishment for disobeying his orders to stop drinking. In the course of such beating he inflicted on her what the medical witness described as `huge wound on the head' involving a depressed fracture of the skull C and a raptured main artery which caused intracranial haemorrhage leading to her death.

In passing the sentence the learned Principal Resident Magistrate duly took into account a number of mitigating factors nearly all of which had been put forward by the appellant. This is what he said,

D `The accused is 41 years old. He is a first offender. He has been in remand for about four years. He was very highly provoked by the misconduct of his wife (the deceased). It was only too bad that he used excessive force.

He is hereby sentenced to 10 (ten) years imprisonment.'

E Mr Rugarabamu the learned advocate who argued this appeal submitted that the sentence was manifestly excessive and urged us to reduce it. Counsel took the view that the severity of the sentence meeted out was out of proportion to the seriousness of the assaults inflicted. In this F connection he referred us to the case of R v Wilson Munsha (1), cited by Brian Slattery in his book titled A Handbook on Sentencing at 56. The relevant law report was not available in the Mwanza High Court Library and so we had to rely on what the learned author said. According to him the court in G that case held that:

`One criterion in deciding whether a case of manslaughter calls for a substantial sentence is to ask oneself whether if the injuries inflicted had not turned to be fatal, any charge, or any serious charge would have been brought against H the accused. If the answer is no, then only a light sentence is called for. If the answer is yes, a substantial sentence is called for.'

The thrust of Mr Rugarabamu's submission was that the circumstances of the present case involved I a purely domestic affair in which the appellant was chastising his wife for some family misconduct, and in which death was not reasonably foreseeable. In those circumstances, counsel argued, A the appellant was really punished not for the dangerousness of his assaults on the deceased but rather for the gravity of the consequences of such assaults, namely, the resultant death which was not reasonably foreseen; and that was wrong. B

In further support of the submission that the sentence was manifestly excessive Mr Rugarabamu again referred us to a decision of the High Court in the case of R v Lukanfubila (2) in which the accused had raped a young girl aged about 10 years following which the victim bled profusely for several days and eventually died. The accused was convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to C only five years' imprisonment. Thus Mr Rugarabamu's point is that by comparison, the sentence of ten years' imprisonment in the present case was manifestly excessive.

Mr Swai, the learned State Attorney appearing for the respondent Republic resisted the appeal and D submitted that the sentence was not manifestly excessive, especially bearing in mind that the maximum punishment for manslaughter is life imprisonment. Referring to the decision of this Court in the case of Silvanus Leonard Nguruwe v R (3), he submitted that the circumstances in the present case do not warrant interference by this Court. E

As a general rule this Court will not readily interfere with a sentence imposed by the High Court. As observed in Nguruwe's case cited above, we would not interfere merely because we think that if we had tried the case ourselves we might have imposed a somewhat different sentence. This court will F interfere only in limited circumstances including where we are satisfied that the sentence was manifestly excessive or that the sentencing court failed to consider a material circumstance or that it misdirected itself in some particular or that it otherwise erred in principle. Mr Rugarabamu's main G contention is that in assessing the sentence, the trial court proceeded on a wrong principle in that it sought to punish the appellant not for his assaults on the deceased but rather for the consequences of such assaults which consequences were not reasonably foreseeable. But with due respect to the learned counsel, the facts of the case do not support this argument. There was overwhelming H evidence that the appellant assaulted the deceased viciously. He repeatedly assaulted her that night using a weapon, namely, a stick. He renewed the assaults on the following morning. During these assaults the deceased suffered great pain, cried bitterly and pleaded for mercy requesting the I appellant not to kill

A her but in vain. Even when neighbours tried to intervene, he repelled them and inflicted a vicious assault on one of them (PW3) which sent him to the ground causing him to break his watch. These were clearly vicious and merciless assaults on a defenceless woman. Among the visible injuries B inflicted on the deceased during the assaults was a huge wound on the head involving a depressed fracture of the skull. Obviously that was a serious injury. Thus it seems plain that the appellant was duly punished for his vicious, merciless and dangerous assaults, and for the serious injuries he inflicted on the deceased. Indeed the court had a duty to impose heavy punishment to meet the C gravity of such vicious and ruthless conduct of the appellant. Viewed in that light, therefore, it becomes difficult to sustain Mr Rugarabamu's submission that the appellant was punished merely for the consequences of his assaults rather than for the dangerousness of those assaults.

D Mr Rugarabamu also referred to one mitigating factor or circumstance which the appellant had raised and filed as an additional ground of appeal namely, that the deceased left behind five children who it is his duty now to look after. The appellant did raise that matter before the sentencing court, E but in passing sentence the court made no reference to it. It is not clear whether the court overlooked it or whether it had it in mind but thought that it was not material. To give the benefit of that doubt to the appellant, we proceed on the basis that it overlooked it. However, it seems unlikely that had the court duly considered that circumstance, it would have come to a different conclusion, having regard F to the viciousness and the dangerousness of the appellant's assaults on the deceased.

Looking at the case as a whole, it can be said with some justification that this was a bad case of manslaughter, verging on murder itself. When the deceased repeatedly cried bitterly saying that the G appellant was killing her and pleaded for mercy but the appellant continued to assault her with the stick that night and renewed the assaults on the following morning, that was very close to establishing malice aforethought on the part of the appellant. For, at least it must have been apparent H to him that the assaults were dangerous to the life of the defenceless woman. In all the circumstances of the case we think that the sentence of 10 years' imprisonment, although on the heavy side, was not so manifestly excessive as to warrant interference by this Court. In the result the I appeal is dismissed.
1994 TLR p9
A
[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v ESTON SELEMAN 1994 TLR 9 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Makame JJA, Kisanga JJA and Omar JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 122 OF 1987 B
28 July, 1989
(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Tabora, Korosso, J) C
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Sentence of conditional discharge and order to pay compensation - Whether convict may be remanded until compensation is paid. D
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Failure of respondent to appear for hearing after being served - Whether hearing may proceed in the absence of respondent - Rule 72(6) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979.
Criminal Law - Murder - Whether murder may be alleged without evidence of killing. E
-Headnote
In the District Court of Tabora the respondent was charged with being in possession of a firearm without a licence. He pleaded guilty and was convicted and sentenced to a fine of Shs 90/= or eight F months imprisonment in default. There was no indication as to whether or not he in fact paid the fine. The respondent was also charged with causing grievous harm to which he pleaded not guilty. At the end of the trial he was convicted and sentenced to a conditional discharge, and he was also ordered to pay Shs 15,000/= as compensation to the person grievously harmed. The respondent was G ordered to be remanded in custody until he pays the compensation money.
The Director of Public Prosecutions appealed to the High Court against sentence, praying for a custodial sentence and enhancement of the compensation.

At this point the High Court judge formed the opinion that the respondent should have been charged H with murder contrary to s 195 of the penal code and quashed the trial court proceedings and ordered the respondent's immediate arrest so as to be tried for murder.
Meanwhile, the appeal by the DPP came to the Court of Appeal but could not proceed because the respondent was absent and unserved. Next time again the respondent did not appear though he had I been served.
1994 TLR p10
A Held:

(i) Where the respondent is served but does not appear it is permitted to hear an appeal by virtue of Rule 72(6) of the Court of Appeal Rules, 1979.

(ii) Before the respondent's presence can be dispensed with under Rule 72(6), there must be B proof, as there is in the instant appeal, that the respondent was made aware of the time and place at which the appeal would be heard;

(iii) Where the respondent fails to pay the compensation ordered the next step would be to order distress, and only in default of distress is an accused person liable to imprisonment; C the order for remand in custody until compensation is paid was irregular;

(iv) A change of murder presupposes unlawful killing, but in this case there was no killing at all, let alone an unlawful one.

Case Information
Appeal allowed: case remitted back to the High Court for the appeal to be heard on merit complying with s 381 of the Criminal Procedure Act.
D No case referred to.
J Tendwa, for the appellant.
[zJDz]Judgment
E Makame, JA delivered the following considered judgment of the court:
This appeal by the Director of Public Prosecutions first came before this court in November 1988 but it was not possible to be proceeded with because the respondent, Eston Seleman, was absent and unserved. This time the respondent again did not appear but it was possible to hear the appeal, and F we heard it, because he has now been served and it is permitted to hear an appeal in such a situation by virtue of Rule 72(6) of Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules which provides:

G If on the day fixed for the hearing of an appeal the respondent does not appear in person or by advocate the appeal shall proceed unless the court sees fit to adjourn the hearing.

The above subrule must of course be read together with, and is subject to, Rule 72(1) which H provides that `The Registrar shall cause notice to be given to the appellant and to the respondent of the time and place of which an appeal will be heard' and Rule 73(1) which says that both the appellant and the respondent shall be entitled to be present at the hearing of the appeal. So that before the respondent's presence can be dispensed with under rule 72(6), there must be proof, as I there is in the instant appeal, that the respondent was made aware of the time and place at which the appeal would be heard. A
1994 TLR p11
MAKAME JA

This appeal has a back-drop which is out of the ordinary. In the District Court of Tabora at Tabora the respondent was charged with being in possession of a firearm without a licence to which he pleaded guilty and was fined Shs 90/= or eight months imprisonment in default. There is incidentally no B indication as to whether or not he in fact paid the fine, so those responsible may wish to follow up that matter.

The respondent was also charged with causing grievous harm to which he pleaded not guilty. He C was duly tried and at the end of the trial he was found to have committed the act. He got a conditional discharge but he was also ordered to pay Shs 15,000/= as compensation to the person he had emptied his muzzle gun on.

Thereafter, incidentally, the learned trial magistrate committed the illegality of ordering the respondent to be remanded in custody until he paid the compensation money. This was on 19 March 1985 and D the respondent was accordingly remanded. Nine days later a prison officer, Cpl Kibira, apparently took some initiative: He went to the trial magistrate and told him,

> Your Honour the committal order is not clear as to what should be the fate of the convict if the compensation is not E paid. For how long should the convict remain in our custody?

The trial magistrate had the respondent brought before him on 1 April 1985 and when the respondent F informed the court that his relatives were looking for the money the magistrate further remanded him for fourteen days `to compel his relatives to pay the ordered sum. If they shall fail to pay them an order for distress shall be given'. G

The foregoing orders were irregular and it is distressing to note that the High Court made no comment on them when the matter reached there, albeit on some other issue, which we shall presently turn to. If the respondent failed to pay the compensation ordered the next step would be to order distress. Only in default of distress is an accused person liable to imprisonment, `for a term H not exceeding six months unless such (costs or) compensation shall be sooner paid'. There is no question of remanding him in custody to compel his relatives to pay.

The Director of Public Prosecutions appealed to the High Court complaining that the case was not fit for a conditional discharge I

A and that the compensation award was too small. The pubic prayed for a custodial sentence and enhancement of the compensation. The matter was taken before Korosso J on 26 February 1987 but the respondent was not in court. The State Attorney asked for an adjournment so that the respondent B might be served. His lordship did not grant the adjournment prayed for, instead he said:

> It is true that under normal circumstances the respondent must be present at the hearing of the appeal of this nature. But having gone on the evidence on both the prosecution and the accused as recorded by the trial court and I having formed the opinion that the respondent should in the first place have been charged with the offence of C murder c/s 195 of the Penal Code, I find it unnecessary hearing his evidence.

This must have been shattering to the learned State Attorney because not only was the appeal not D heard but, more important, the victim Lucas Jacob the respondent had shot at had not died and had in fact been PW1 at the trial. Little doubt that Mr Nyabiri, the State Attorney said,

E As the court had decided to order that the respondent be charged with the offence of murder I do not think I will have anything to submit to your Lordship.

When the learned judge eventually delivered the judgment on 2 March 1987 he quashed the trial F court proceedings and indeed ordered the respondent's immediate arrest so that he might be tried for murder.

Mr Tendwa, learned State Attorney before us, was quite brief. He pointed out what the Director of G Public Prosecutions had gone to the High Court for and the unexpected result he got. Mr Tendwa finally asked us to remit the matter back to the High Court for the appeal to be heard.

There is no doubt that the High Court order was unusual and we think it was an unhappy slip on the H part of the learned High Court judge: a charge of murder of course presupposes an unlawful killing, whereas here there was no killing at all, let alone an unlawful one. The Director of Public Prosecutions' appeal was not heard at all and the respondent had no opportunity to respond to the issues raised. This appeal must of necessity succeed. We accordingly allow the appeal and set aside the impossible order. We remit the matter back to the High Court for the High Court to hear the I appeal on merit after duly complying with the provisions of s 381 of the Criminal Procedure Act. A

1994 TLR p13

C

[zRPz]BURA AE v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 13 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Makame JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Mnzavas JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 129 OF 1990 D
22 October, 1991
(From the conviction of the High court of Tanzania at Arusha, Mroso, J)
Flynote
Criminal Law - Murder - Intoxication as a defence to murder - Not established where the conduct of the accused E is inconsistent with a person intoxicated.
Criminal law - Murder - Defence of provocation - Not available where the deceased did not utter or do the acts of provocation alleged. F
-Headnote
The Appellant was convicted of murder by the High Court of Tanzania and sentenced to death. It was found that he had chased the deceased for some forty paces, stabbed him twenty- six times and then dragged the body half a kilometre to a valley. That same night he washed his blood stained shirt. G On appeal to the Court of Appeal, it was argued that the appellant acted under provocation, and that he was so intoxicated that he was incapable of having the necessary mens rea for murder.

Held:

(i) The conduct of the appellant during and after the assault was inconsistent with a person H intoxicated within the meaning of the law;

(ii) Provocation was not available because the deceased did not utter or try to carry out the threats alleged by the appellant;

(iii) The appellant had the requisite mens rea for murder.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to. I

1994 TLR p14

A Loom-Ojare, for the appellant.

Mrs Lyimo, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Makame, JA delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

B Bura Ae was condemned to death by the High Court sitting at Babati (Mroso J), consequent upon his conviction for the murder of his brother-in-law, Qwatema Darabe, the husband of the appellant's sister, PW1 Maria Ae. The fact of killing was not denied, the only controversy being whether or not C the act amounted to the offence of murder.

Mr Loom-Ojare, learned advocate, argued the appeal before us on behalf of the appellant while Mrs Lyimo, learned State Attorney, supported the High Court decision. Mr Loom-Ojare submitted and argued four grounds of appeal. One of them, the third one, that there was a miscarriage of justice D because the learned judge asked the assessors for their `views' rather than their `opinions', we did not take seriously. It was pointed out to the learned advocate that he was splitting hairs really, one definition of `opinion' being a `mental view'. We wish to add that Hornby and Parnwell's An English-Reader's Dictionary gives `opinion' as one of the meanings of `view'. We certainly do not E think there is any merit in this third ground.

In the other grounds Mr Loom-Ojare submitted that his client was so intoxicated that he was F incapable of having the necessary mens rea for murder, that he in fact acted under grave provocation, and lastly that the finding of murder was on the whole against the weight of the evidence.

The deceased was married to PW1 and they had children together. The evidence was that he would G often assault her whenever he abused himself with liquor. On such occasions PW1 would remove herself to the homestead of the appellant and stay there until reconciliation was effected. She had done so eight times before the fateful occasion. On the material day PW1 had been at the appellant's place for two or three days before the deceased arrived at about 9 in the evening when the found H PW1 and their three children eating in a house about fifteen paces from the appellant's, and whose door faced that of the appellant's own house. According to PW1 the deceased, who was unarmed, called the children but when the eldest one said he was sleepy the deceased allowed them to go and sleep. Just then PW1 heard the repeated cries of her sister-in-law, the appellant's wife, Yasinta Uo, I (who declined to testify in accordance with s 130 of the Evidence Act) to the effect that Bura, that is the appellant, had a spear. A Then PW1 heard the deceased crying out for help and people running. The following morning PW1 and Yasinta found a pool of blood some forty paces from PW1's house and some drag marks which they followed for about half a kilometre before they found the deceased's dead body in a dry valley. B

1994 TLR p15
MAKAME JA
As we have already said, at his trial in the High Court the appellant owned that he had killed the deceased. He told the trial court that he had earlier that day imbibed a liquor called `Mangure', made of millet, and then drank an orange squash bottleful of `Moshi'. He got home at 6 pm and retired to C bed at 7 pm. When he went out to ease himself at about 9 pm he heard the deceased announce loudly that he would set the house on fire; indeed the deceased struck a match so as to set the appellant's house ablaze. The appellant took his spear, chased the deceased with it, and after some D five paces, when the deceased made to disarm the appellant, the latter stabbed the deceased once with the spear. Then the appellant dragged the deceased's body to a valley `because I was afraid and I knew I had done wrong. I threw the spear away from the dead body. . . .'
Mrs Lyimo urged us to find that the appellant was not intoxicated at the material time. She said if he E was he would not have done the things he did after the killing. Mrs Lyimo also submitted that the appellant lied about the deceased threatening to set the appellant's house on fire but later, in response to a question from the Bench, Mrs Lyimo said the appellant could have been provoked by the deceased to the house in which PW1 and her children were without first calling on the appellant. F
We are satisfied that this was a sure case of murder. We are convinced that the events and their sequence were as told by PW1. Like the three assessors and the Trial Judge himself, we are G satisfied that the appellant's story about the deceased wanting to set the appellant's house on fire was a fib. PW1's testimony, believed by the trial Court, and which we also accept as true, cannot accommodate the appellant's version of the events that evening. On his own account, when the appellant went outside, the deceased was calling his own children. `I heard him also say loudly that H people in the house would all be burnt down.' If this were true PW1 would have heard the utterance and we are also of the view that the deceased would not have been so daft as to allow his own children to go to bed in a house so close to the one he wanted to burn down.
We also regard the appellant's conduct during the assault and I
1994 TLR p16
A thereafter as inconsistent with a person who was intoxicated within the meaning of the law. He gave chase for some forty paces, not for only five as he said during his trial. He had the capacity to run that far and, after the twenty six stabs, he had the presence of mind, ability and composure to B drag the body half a kilometre to a valley, and know that `I had done wrong'. His blood-soiled shirt he washed the same night until `there was no blood stains left on the shirt', and he had already left his homestead by the time his sister and his wife went looking for the deceased. Quite apart from his prevarication as to whether or not he was drunk that day, we have been unable to see evidence that C would reasonably persuade us to say he was intoxicated. We do not agree that Provocation was available because we do not believe that the deceased uttered the threats or tried to set the house on fire. Also we are unable to hold that the appellant was provoked by the deceased not first stopping by D the appellant's house before going to converse with his own wife and children.

We respectfully agree with the learned Trial Judge that the appellant had the requisite mens rea and that it was therefore murder that the appellant committed. We are satisfied that the High Court E decision was decidedly sound and so we dismiss the appeal entirely.

1994 TLR p16

F

[zRPz]AUGUSTINO KAGANYA, ATHANAS NYAMOGA AND WILLIAM MWANYENJE v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 16 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Mnzavas JJA

G CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 63 OF 1990

15 November, 1991

H (From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Morogoro, Bahati, J)

Flynote

I Evidence - Evidence by witness of tender age - Witness aged fifteen years - Whether needing corroboration.

1994 TLR p17

Evidence - Credibility of witnesses - Trial court best placed to determine credibility. A Criminal Law - Murder - Malice aforethought - Attacking a confessed thief with knife, club, fire, and utterances that he would die and be finished off - Whether establishing malice aforethought. B

-Headnote

The appellants were convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code and sentenced to death. They appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Their Counsel submitted that the evidence of PW3, Kayowina Mkuya, should not have been relied on by the trial court as the witness was of tender age and as such, her testimony needed corroboration. C It was further argued that they should have been found guilty of the lesser offence of manslaughter because they were merely beating a confessed thief and they did not intend to cause his death.

Held:

(i) As PW3 was fifteen years old when she gave her evidence on oath, her evidence did not need to be corroborated before being acted upon; D

(ii) As the decision regarding who attacked the deceased was wholly based on the credibility of the witnesses, it is the Trial Judge who saw and heard the prosecution and defence witnesses as they testified who is better placed that the appellate court to assess their credibility;

(iii) In a charge of murder, only where it is doubtful on the evidence that an accused intended to E kill or cause grievous harm to the deceased will the Court give the benefit of doubt to the accused and find him guilty, not of murder, but of manslaughter;

(iv) By their acts and utterances the appellants amply showed that they had formed a positive intention to kill the deceased.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed. F

Cases referred to:

1. Kasmiri v R, Court of Appeal, Criminal Appeal No 148 of 1990 (unreported).
2. R v Byarushengo and Another [1946] 13 EACA 187.
3. R v Kibia Arap Serem [1940] EACA 73. G

Mihayo, for the appellants.

Miss Chiwanga, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

The appellants were convicted of the offence of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code by the H High Court (Bahati J), and sentenced to death. Dissatisfied with the finding of the lower Court they have jointly appealed to this Court.

Arguing against the conviction of the appellants Mr Mihayo, learned defence counsel, submitted that the evidence of PW3, Kayo- I

A wina Mkuya, should not have been relied upon by the trial Court as the witness was of tender age and as such, it was argued, her testimony needed corroboration before being acted upon to the detriment of the appellants. In support of his argument the learned counsel referred us to s 127(5) of the Evidence Act 1967 and the decision of this Court in Kasmiri v R (1). It was also submitted that B the evidence of PW2, Yusufu Rajabu, should not have been given any credence as it was evidence of an accomplice which needed corroboration. It was argued that as PW3's evidence needed C corroboration she (PW3), could not have corroborated the evidence of PW2.

In the alternative but without prejudice to the above argument Mr Mihayo submitted that the appellants were punishing the deceased who was a thief and that they did not intend to kill him. The Court was therefore asked to find the appellants not guilty of murder but guilty of the lesser offence of D manslaughter. Miss Chiwanga, learned State Attorney, on the other hand supported the convictions. She argued that PW2 was not an accomplice whose evidence needed corroboration before it was acted upon. As for the decision in Kasmiri v R (1) (supra) Miss Chiwanga submitted that the facts in E that case are distinguishable from the facts in the present case.

It was the learned State Attorney's argument that the decision of the High Court was based on the credibility of the witnesses and that the trial Court was in a better position to assess the credibility of F the witnesses than this Court. The Court was invited to dismiss the appeal.

The case for the prosecution that it was the appellants who, of malice aforethought, killed the deceased was supported by a neighbour of the deceased, (Juma Mchewa), one Yusufu Rajabu, G PW2. According to the evidence of Yusufu while he was at his house on 6 August 1987 at about 9 pm he heard an alarm from his neighbour, the deceased, who was saying that he was dying. He ran to deceased's homestead to render his assistance. There he met the first appellant who was armed with a knife. It was Yusufu's evidence in the lower Court that he heard the first appellant saying to the H deceased `you will die if you come out as you have stolen the property . . . of my brother'. At the time the deceased was inside his homestead. The witness also told the trial Court that the first appellant, Augustino Kaganya, then set the house on fire.

On being asked by PW2 why he was torturing the deceased the first appellant is reported to have I replied that he was torturing the deceased because he had stolen his (first accused's) brother's property. A

1994 TLR p19

MNZAVAS JA

When the deceased managed to get out of the house which was already in conflagration and got into another house the third appellant is said to have set on fire this second house and said `they were to finish off the deceased'. The deceased again escaped from the second burning house and ran into B his shamba.

According to the evidence of PW3 the appellants chased and arrested the deceased and belaboured on him. The appellants were, according to the evidence of PW2, armed with a knife and a club. On the following day the witness was told by Athanasi, the second appellant, that Juma Mchewa had C been killed.

A step-daughter of the deceased, PW3, gave evidence to the effect that on 6 August 1987 at about 7 pm her stepfather returned home from a pombe shop and told them that while he was at the pombe shop the three appellants wanted to kill him because they alleged that he (deceased) had stolen D cooking pots from their relative.

As they were outside the house conversing, and the deceased smoking his tobacco, the first appellant emerged and snatched the tobacco from the deceased and stabbed him with a knife. E According to her evidence the deceased ran into his house and the first appellant set the house on fire and stood at the door brandishing a knife.

Like PW2, the witness also testified before the trial Court that when the deceased took refuge into another house William, third appellant, set this second house on fire. F

When the deceased escaped from the second house the appellants chased and caught up with him and attacked him. According to the evidence of PW3 the deceased cried out `let us go so that I show you where the things are'. Next morning deceased body was found lying in his shamba. G

In his defence first appellant denied knowing the deceased leave alone killing him. He advanced defence of alibi and said that Yusufu, (PW2), told lies against him because there was enmity between them as he, (PW2), believed that he (first appellant) had reported to game scouts that he, H (PW2), was manufacturing bullets illegally. This defence was apparently not believed by the learned judge and in our view rightly so. If there was indeed such enmity one would have expected him to cross-examine the witness, PW2, on the alleged bad blood. That he did not do so tends to show that his defence of enmity was an afterthought. I

1994 TLR p20

MNZAVAS JA

A The second appellant, Athanas, also denied attacking the deceased. He said that he saw the body of the deceased in the morning as he was going to his work and reported to Yusufu, PW2, what he had seen.

B The third appellant, William, told the trial court that Yusufu had deliberately told lies against him as to cause his undoing because they had quarrelled over a girl. Like the first appellant he did not cross-examine Yusufu on the alleged enmity when he gave his evidence. And, like the first appellant, he did not tell the trial court why the young girl, PW3, should have decided to cook up such a serious C story against him.

Coming to the learned defence counsel's argument that the evidence of PW3 needed corroboration because she was a child of tender age the record shows that PW3 was 15 years old and gave her evidence on oath. Section 127(5) of the Evidence Act relied upon by the learned defence counsel in D support of his argument says:

`For the purpose of ss (2), (3) and (4) the expression "child of tender years" means a child of or below the apparent age of fourteen years'.

E As we have already stated above PW3's age was fifteen years at the time she testified and gave her evidence on oath. Her evidence did not therefore need to be corroborated before being acted upon.

As for the decision in Kasmir v R (1) quoted by the learned defence counsel we, with respect, agree F with Miss Chiwanga, learned State Attorney, that the facts in that case are clearly distinguishable from the facts in this case.

The decision of the High Court regarding the question as to who attacked the deceased on the G material night was wholly based on the credibility of the witnesses. The learned Trial Judge saw and heard the prosecution and defence witnesses as they testified. He was therefore in a better position to assess their credibility than this Court which merely reads the transcript of the evidence.

The learned judge came to the conclusion that PW2 and PW3 were credible witnesses and that their H evidence was a true account of what happened. We see no reason to differ with trial court's finding of fact.

As to Mr Nihayo's argument that the lower court should have found the appellants guilty of the lesser offence of manslaughter because the appellants were beating a confessed thief and that they did not I intend to cause his death we would like to restate the law that in cases of this nature it is only where it is doubtful on the evidence that an accused intended to A kill or cause grievous harm to the deceased that the Court would give the benefit of the doubt to the accused and find him guilty, not of murder, but of manslaughter see R v Joseph Byarushengo and another (2) and R v Kibia Arap Serem (3). B

1994 TLR p21

In the present case the evidence of both witnesses, PW2 and PW3 shows that the appellants used a knife and a club in attacking the deceased. The first appellant's utterances to the deceased that he (deceased) would die if he escaped from the burning house amply demonstrated that the appellants wanted the deceased to remain in the house they had set on fire and be burnt to death. Equally the C acts of the third appellant of setting on fire the second house the deceased entered for refuge and his (third appellants') utterances that `they were to finish off the deceased' amply showed that they had formed a positive intention to kill the deceased. D
On the evidence we are far from being persuaded by the learned defence counsel's argument that this was a case of manslaughter. On the totality of the evidence we agree with the learned Trial Judge that the killing of the deceased by the appellants was with malice aforethought. We agree with the learned State Attorney that the appellants were rightly convicted of murder and we accordingly E order that the appeal be dismissed in its entirety.
1994 TLR p21
G
[zRPz]JAIROS SAKUZI v MCHEMWA MNYAMBUYU 1994 TLR 21 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Maina J

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 19 OF 1990 H
19 May, 1992
Flynote
Criminal practice and procedure - Natural justice - The Right to be heard - Person acquitted by trial court is convicted by appellate court without being heard - Whether proper.
Magistrate's Courts - Appellate jurisdiction of district court - I
1994 TLR p22
A Whether district court as an appellate court may substitute a conviction for an acquittal without hearing the accused - Section 21(1)(b) of the Magistrates' Court Act 1984.
-Headnote
The appellant was acquitted of the charge of cattle theft by the primary court but on appeal the B district court reversed that decision and convicted the appellant of cattle theft and sentenced him to five years imprisonment. No notice for the hearing of the appeal was served on the appellant and the appeal was determined in his absence. He appealed to the High Court.
Held:
C (i) It is a fundamental principle of law that no person shall be condemned unheard; a person acquitted by a trial court cannot be convicted by an appellate court without being given an opportunity to be heard.

(ii) The district court, on appeal, had no jurisdiction to substitute a conviction for acquittal D without first giving the appellant an opportunity to be heard.

Case Information

Conviction quashed and sentence set aside; appeal to the district court to be heard de novo.

No case referred to.

E Rweyongeza, for the appellant.

Mbezi, for the respondent.

Kifunda, state attorney, as amicus curiae.

[zJDz]Judgment

F Maina, J: delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

The appellant was charged in the primary court at Mvumi with cattle theft and he was acquitted. On appeal to the district court at Dodoma, by the respondent who was the original complainant, the decision of the primary court was reversed, and the appellant was convicted of cattle theft as G charged and he was sentenced to five years imprisonment. This appeal is against the conviction.

Mr Rweyongeza, learned counsel for the appellant, argued several grounds of appeal, but I shall base my decision on one ground only, and that is the second ground of appeal. Mr Rweyongeza submitted, H in respect of the second ground of appeal, that the learned district magistrate erred in law in failing to serve a notice on the appellant, and in determining the appeal in the absence of the appellant, without giving the appellant an opportunity to be heard. Learned counsel cited s 21(1)(b) of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1984 which states in part that in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, the I district court shall have power to confirm, reverse, amend or vary in any manner, the decision of the primary court, and that, A

`. . . no conviction or conviction and sentence shall be substituted for an acquittal, and no sentence shall be enhanced, unless the accused or convicted person, as the case may be, shall have first been given an opportunity B of being heard'.

It is a fundamental principle of law that no person shall be condemned unheard. A person who has been acquitted by a trial court cannot be convicted by an appellate court without being given an C opportunity of being heard. Since the appellant was acquitted by the primary court, the district court, on appeal, had no power to substitute a conviction for the acquittal without first giving the appellant an opportunity to be heard. The requirement to give such an opportunity to the person who has been acquitted, is mandatory, and not discretionary. The learned district magistrate erred in law in not D giving the appellant the opportunity to be heard. The error is incurable. Mr Mbezi, learned counsel for the respondent, conceded that failure to give to the appellant an opportunity to be heard, was an incurable error in law and Mr Kifunda, learned State Attorney who appeared as amicus curiae, concurred.

For the reasons given, I agree with counsel that the appellant's conviction cannot stand. I quash the conviction and set aside the sentence. As the appellant has served one year and nine months out of the five years imprisonment, it is, in my view, fair and in the interest of justice that the appeal be re-heard in the district court. Since the appellant has not served a substantial term of the sentence imposed, it is necessary that the appeal be re-heard by the district court.

Having found that the district magistrate erred in law in substituting a conviction for the acquittal, without giving the appellant an opportunity to be heard, I do not consider it is necessary to decide on the other grounds of appeal. The other grounds are based on the evidence, and anything I comment on the evidence will prejudice the magistrate who will hear the appeal in the district court.
The appeal is allowed. The proceedings before the district court are declared a nullity. The conviction is quashed and the sentence is set aside.
It is ordered that the appeal be heard de novo in the district court by another magistrate of competent jurisdiction.
1994 TLR p24
A
[zRPz]ISIDORI STANISLAUS v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 24 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Nyalali CJ, Omar JJA and Ramadhani JJA

B CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 187 OF 1991
(Appeal from the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania, at Tabora. Kajeri, PRM Ext Jurisdiction)
Flynote
C Criminal Law - Murder - Defence of provocation.
-Headnote
The appellant was charged and convicted as charged for the offence of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code, Cap 16, and sentenced to death by the High court. On appeal it was contended that the trial Court erred in law by refusing to accept the appellant's plea of provocation.
D Held: No provocation in law was established and the conviction and sentence were properly arrived at by the trial court.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
Cases referred to:
E (1) Yovan v Uganda, [1970] EA 405.
(2) Katemi s/o Ndaki v R [1992] TLR 297.
Mr Nasimire, for the appellant.
Mr Mapunda, for the Republic.
[zJDz]Judgment
F Nyalali CJ: delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

The appellant, Isidori Stanislaus was convicted as charged for the offence of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code and was given the mandatory sentence of death by hanging by the High Court G at Tabora (Kajeri, PRM with extended jurisdiction). He was aggrieved by the conviction and sentence, hence this appeal to this Court. In this appeal Mr Nasimire, learned advocate, represented the appellant, whereas Mr Mapunda, learned attorney, represented the respondent, Republic. Two H memoranda of appeal were filed, the first one by the appellant himself and the second one, subsequently by Mr Nasimire. All the grounds of appeal boil down to the complaint that the trial Principal Resident Magistrate (with extended jurisdiction) erred in holding that the appellant acted I without legal provocation in killing the deceased in this case. Mr Mapunda, on behalf of the Republic, supports the decision of the trial court.

1994 TLR p25

NYALALI CJ

From the proceedings both in this court and the trial court it is apparent that there is common ground A on most of the matters relevant to this case. It is common ground that on 14 April 1987, the appellant killed one Nathan s/o Itiel by practically decapitating him with a panga in appellant's shamba, at Kibanga village, Kasulu district. Prior to the incident, the deceased and his brother, B namely Zakaria s/o Itiel - the first prosecution witness (PW1) - had been staying as guests at the homestead of appellant's father. The appellant lived with his father. Shortly before the incident, the appellant invited the deceased to accompany him to appellant's shamba to help the appellant carry some luggage. Deceased obliged and took his bicycle with him for that purpose. Sometime after they C arrived in the shamba, the appellant struck deceased with a panga at the back of the neck.

It is common ground also that after thus attacking the deceased with the panga, the appellant returned home where he asked PW1 also to accompany him with his own bicycle to the shamba D purportedly to assist in carrying a luggage which had proved to be too heavy to be carried by appellant and PW1's brother. PW1 obliged. Shortly after they arrived in the shamba, the appellant slashed PW1 in the back but PW1 managed to escape serious injury and ran away. Thereafter, the E appellant made a shallow grave in his shamba where he buried the deceased Nathan s/o Itiel and camouflaged it by planting some banana shoots on top of it. Having accomplished that, the appellant returned home. Appellant, however, did not stay long at home. PW1 turned up at night and narrated F to appellant's father and relatives what had transpired in appellant's shamba. Anticipating trouble for himself, the appellant disappeared from home and ran away with the bicycle of the deceased.

It is undisputed between the parties to this case that the shallow grave where the deceased was G buried by the appellant was discovered by the villagers after a search was mounted the following morning. The police were informed, and they came to the scene, accompanied by a doctor, several days later. A postmortem examination was conducted on the dead body of the deceased. The appellant was subsequently arrested on 20 April 1987. He was taken before a Justice of the Peace before whom he recorded a confession to killing the deceased.

At his trial he raised the defence of provocation claiming in effect that the deceased and the appellant had been partners in an illicit business of smuggling elephant tusks from Tanzania to Burundi. He

A further asserted that for sometime prior to the fatal incident, the deceased had behaved as if he wanted to cheat on appellant's share of the last transaction. Appellant's suspicions were confirmed when the appellant demanded for his share when the appellant and deceased were in appellant's B shamba on the material day. Deceased flatly refused, saying what amounted to in Kiswahili as:

`Blashara gani dihara yenyene ya niza tena ya magendo na tedha zenyewe nimekwisha tumia na kunywew.'

C This roughly translates into English as saying `What kind of business is this! It amounts to stealing and involves smuggling. Anyhow, I have spent all the money on drinking.'

It is these remarks which the appellant claims provoked him into killing the deceased. The trial court did not accept the story given by the appellant to explain his killing of the deceased and therefore held D that the defence of provocation was not proved. The thrust of the appeal is directed at faulting this finding of the trial court. In the course of hearing this appeal, the court asked the parties to address it on an important point of law, upon which the decision of this appeal turns. This is whether the story E of the appellant, if accepted as true, discloses conduct which amounts to legal provocation. Both sides are in agreement that the answer lies in the provisions of s 202 of the Penal Code, which states:

F `The term "provocation" means and includes, except as hereinafter stated, any wrongful act or insult of such a nature as to be likely, when done to any ordinary person, or in the presence of any ordinary person to another person who is under his immediate care, or to whom he stands in a conjugal, parental, filial or fraternal relation, or in the relation of master and servant, to deprive him of the power of self-control and to induce him to commit an assault of G the kind which the person charged committed upon the person by whom the act or insult is done or offered.

When such act or insult is done or offered by the person to another, or in the presence of another to a person who is under the immediate care of that other, or to whom the latter stands in any such relation as aforesaid, the former is H said to give the latter provocation for an assault.

A lawful act is not provocation to any person for an assault.

An act which a person does in consequence of incitement given by another person in order to induce him to do the I act and thereby, to furnish an excuse for committing an assault is not provocation to that other person for an assault.

An arrest which is unlawful is not necessarily provocative for an assault, but it may be evidence of provocation to a A person who knows of the illegality.'

The important issue that arises in this case is whether the alleged refusal by the deceased to pay the proceeds of smuggling, coupled with the words allegedly spoken by him amount to wrongful act or B insult. In the case of Yovan v Uganda (1), the Court of Appeal for East Africa while dealing with similar legal provisions, stated:

`With this in mind we would again shortly summarize the provisions of ss 187 and 188. The essentials as set out in s 188 are that there must be: C

(i) A wrongful act or insult, and as stated in ss (3) it cannot be a lawful act;

(ii) It must be such an act or insult as to deprive an ordinary person of his self-control; D

(iii) and such as to induce him to commit an assault of the kind which he did upon the person offering the insult;

(iv) the assault must be committed on or at least aimed at the person offering the provocation.'

The expression `wrong' or `wrongful' is not specifically defined under the Penal Code or the E Interpretation of Laws and General Clauses Act 1972, chap 1 of the Revised Laws. To our knowledge, these expressions do not appear to have been previously defined judicially within our jurisdiction or elsewhere in our neighbourhood. However, according to Jowitt's Dictionary of English F Law a `wrong' means `the privation of right, and injury; that which takes place when a right is violated or infringed'. Similarly Wharton's Law Lexicon (14th ed) defines a wrong as, `the privation of right, an injury, a designed or known detriment'. The Shorter Oxford English Dictionary defines a G wrong as it relates to law as, `violation, transgression, or infringement of law; invasion of right to the damages or prejudice of another or others'.

We think that the meaning of a `wrong' as articulated above is the correct meaning in the law H applicable in this country. It follows that the conduct of the deceased could amount to provocation in law only if it deprived or violated a right acquired by the appellant under the illicit transaction between them. It is, however, elementary principle that illegal transactions do not give rise to rights recognized by the law of the land. In other words, illegal activities take place outside the protection of the law, and those who partici- I

A pate in such activities do not acquire any rights in respect of which a privation injury, violation or infringement is capable of being committed. The case of Katemi s/o Ndaki (2) decided by this court, did not deal with the provisions of s 202 of the Penal Code in respect of the claim made by the appellant in that case that he had been provoked by being served with a court summons in a matter B already settled out of court.

In the final analysis therefore it is clear that the conduct of the deceased, as disclosed by the story of the appellant, does not amount to legal provocation. Appellant was thus liable to be convicted as C charged. As the sentence imposed is mandatory under the law, this appeal must fail and we dismiss in its entirety.

E

[zRPz]JIMMY DAVID NGONYA v NATIONAL INSURANCE CORPORATION LTD 1994 TLR 28 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Bahati J

F MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL CAUSE NO. 74 OF 1991
15 September, 1992
Flynote
Natural justice - The right to be heard - Applicant dismissed from employment by the respondent's Board of G Directors on account of an audit report - Need to show contents of audit report to the appellant before dismissing him.
Natural justice - The rule against bias - General Manager who initiated disciplinary proceedings against the H applicant was present at the board meeting while applicant was absent - Whether the board was biased.
-Headnote
The applicant was dismissed from employment as a branch manager of the respondent corporation. The Board of Directors dismissed him on the basis of an audit report whose contents were never shown to the applicant to enable him to contradict them. When the Board of Directors met to I deliberate on the applicant's case, the General Manager, who had initiated the proceedings against the applicant and had commissioned the audit, was present but the A applicant was absent. The applicant applied for certiorari and mandamus arguing that his dismissal was in contravention of the rules of natural justice.
1994 TLR p29
Held:

(i) Since the audit report was prejudicial to the interests of the applicant and it formed the basis of the decision of the Board, it ought to have been shown to the applicant for his comments B and for an opportunity to contradict its contents; failure to do that contravened the right of the applicant to be heard;

(ii) Since the General Manager, who was in the nature of a prosecutor, was present during the deliberations of the Board which dismissed the applicant, the proceedings of the Board C were vitiated by bias.

Case Information
Application granted.
Cases referred to:

(1) Local Government Board v Arlidge [1915] AC 120. D
(2) Board of Education v Rice [1911] AC 179.
(3) The King v Hendon Rural District Council, ex parte Chorley [1933] 2 KB 307.
(4) Cooper v Wilson [1937] 2 KB 307.
(5) R v Barnsley Metropolitan Borough Council, ex parte Hook [1976] 3 All ER 452.

WC Mwakasungula, for the applicant. E
M A Mapunda, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Bahati J: This is an application for orders of certiorari and mandamus to remove into this Court and quash the decision of the Board of Directors of the National Insurance Corporation, and to compel F the Board of Directors of the respondent Corporation to reinstate the applicant and thereby direct it to act with fairness.
Mr Mwakasungula, learned counsel for the applicant submitted that the application was for the orders mentioned above and it was supported by an affidavit of the applicant. He went on to state that the G main thrust of the application was that the respondent in determining the fate of the applicant was in breach of the rules of natural justice, namely that a party should not be condemned unheard and that no one should be a judge in his own cause. He elaborated that the Board of Directors in its letter of H 25 July 1991 through the General Manager stated that the applicant had been dismissed because the Board of Directors found him guilty and the finding was according to the audit report. But the audit report from Tanzania Audit Corporation was never presented to the applicant to contradict the findings in it. The applicant was therefore not accorded the I

A opportunity to comment or see the report nor did he appear at the Probe Committee. Mr Mwakasungula submitted that as a branch Manager, the applicant was entitled to know the nature of the investigation at his branch. He argued that the applicant was therefore condemned unheard which was a break of the rules of natural justice. Mr Mwakasungula referred the court to the cases of B Local Government Board v Arlidge (1) and Board of Education v Rice (2) in support of his argument.
The second limb of Mr Mwakazungula's contention was that the Board of Directors when deliberating C upon the case of the applicant was going against the second rule of natural justice in that the Board was a Judge in its own cause. He referred to annexure R2 and continued that since it is the General Manager who initiated the proceedings and commissioned Tanzania Audit Corporation to carry out D investigations at Singida Branch it was wrong for the General Manager and the Management Committee to deliberate the case of the applicant on 25 July 1991 because, he submitted, any decision of the Board of Directors taken in the presence of the General Manager but in the absence of the applicant amounted to the fact that the General Manager and the Management Committee took E part in the deliberations of the Board. Mr Mwakasungula referred to the cases of The King v Hendon Rural District Council ex parte Chorley (3) and Cooper v Wilson (4) and R v Barsnley Metropolitan Borough Council ex parte Hook (5). He submitted that the General Manager and his team were present in the Board Meeting which decided the fate of the applicant and that on the F authorities cited above he was praying for the grant of the application by the Court.
In reply, Dr Mapunda, learned counsel for the respondent, submitted that a charge was served on G the applicant which contained several disciplinary offences. The applicant was given an opportunity to reply to the charge and he did actually reply. Then on the basis of the charge and reply the Board of Directors commissioned auditors to verify the contradictions between the charge and reply. The auditors submitted their report to the Board and the Board considered the charge, reply and the H auditors' report and decided to dismiss the applicant. Dr Mapunda contended that although the applicant was not given the opportunity to reply to the audit report, the audit did not contain anything new which the applicant was not aware of, and that the report only confirmed allegations in the charge. Dr Mapunda submitted that there was therefore no contravention by the Board of the rules of I natural justice of the right to be heard.

1994 TLR p31

BAHATI J

With regard to the presence of the General Manager in the Board meeting, Dr Mapunda submitted A that it was true that the General Manager attended the Board meeting of 25 July 1991 but that he was only there as part of the management and did not take any part in the Board's deliberations since he is not a Board member. He said that his presence was only procedural because the management B was always invited in the Board meeting. He submitted that the decision to dismiss the applicant summarily was made by the Board members only. Dr Mapunda, however, conceded that he was aware of the rule that mere presence of an interested party in the absence of the other party would vitiate the proceedings. He said that he had read the authorities cited by his learned friend and that he C was in agreement with them.

In a further reply, Mr Mwakasungula said that according to the minutes of 25 July 1991 the General Manager was present together with his management team when the fate of the applicant was being D discussed but that the minutes were silent as to who took active part in the deliberations. He prayed that the minutes be quashed on the basis that the applicant was not there. Mr Mwakasungula also submitted that the letter of dismissal has two limbs, one concerning the charge and the other concerning the findings of the audit, and this audit report is the one which weighed most on the E Board in coming to the conclusion to dismiss the applicant. He submitted further that if there was nothing new then the Board should have acted on the charge and reply only.

The questions to be answered in this application are mainly two. These are, (1) whether the applicant F was given the opportunity to present his case properly and (2) whether it was in order for the General Manager to attend the Board meeting in the absence of the applicant. With regard to the first question it is my opinion that the applicant was not given an opportunity to present his case in full G before the Board because he was not shown the audit report for him to comment on. Since the audit report formed the basis of the decision of the Board of Directors, it was necessary to serve a copy of the report to the applicant for his comments. Then the comments of the applicant would be taken to the Board so that the Board would then look both at the audit report and the comments of the H applicant. The cases of Board of Education v Rice (2) and Local Government Board v Arlidge (1) cited above are relevant in this case more so because they clearly state that the parties in the controversy should be given a fair opportunity to correct or contradict any relevant statement in any information obtained by a Board I

1994 TLR p32

BAHATI J

A which is prejudicial to their view. Certainly in this case the audit report was prejudicial to the view of the applicant. It ought to have been given to him for his comments. The Board, therefore, contravened the rule of natural justice namely the right of the applicant to be heard.

B Secondly, with regard to the second question, the Board was again in breach of the rules of natural justice since the Board deliberated on the case of the applicant in the presence of the General Manager who was in the position of a prosecutor. The case of R v Barnsley Metropolitan C Borough Council, ex parte Hook (5) cited by Mr Mwakasungula is relevant. That case held inter alia that `the local authority was in breach of the rules of natural justice since the Committee heard the market manager's evidence in the absence of the applicant or his representative, and the market manager, who was in the position of a prosecutor, had been present at the deliberations of the D committee when it came to its decision'.

It has been stated from the Bar that there is no evidence of any participation in the deliberations of the Board by the General Manager who was not a member of the Board. But the case cited above does not make it necessary that the General Manager should participate in actual fact. It is enough if E he is in the nature of a prosecutor and he is present during the deliberations of the Board.

I agree with the decisions reached in the cases of R v Barnsley Metropolitan Borough Council, ex parte Hook (5) and Local Government Board v Arlidge (1) and Board of Education v Rice (2) cited above. Indeed Dr Mapunda for the respondent said that he too agreed with the decision in R v Barnsley Metropolitan Borough Council (5) which hold that proceedings would be vitiated by F presence of an opposing party.

For the above reasons, I grant this application. I hold that the decision of the Board of Directors was vitiated by a breach of the rules of natural justice. I therefore quash the Board's decision of G dismissing the applicant. The applicant is to be regarded still the employee of the respondent corporation and to have been such employee all the time because the decision to dismiss him has been quashed. I command that the respondent reinstate the applicant forthwith and pay him all his salaries and other benefits because the applicant is and has always been the employee of the H respondent.

1994 TLR p33

A

[zRPz]TANZANIA DAIRIES LTD v CHAIRMAN, ARUSHA CONCILIATION BOARD AND ISAACK KIRANGI 1994 TLR 33 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Mroso J

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL APPLICATION NO. 56 OF 1990 B

18 December, 1992

Flynote

Prerogative orders - Parties to applications for prerogative orders - Whether a private individual may be joined as C a co-respondent in an application for prerogative orders.
Labour law - Limitation of time - Time within which to file a reference to the Labour Conciliation Board or further reference to the Minister - Security of Employment Act 1964 and Law of Limitation Act 1971. D
-Headnote
This was an application for the orders of certiorari and mandamus, made under s 2(2) of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance, Cap 453, and the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and E Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance, Cap 100, as amended by the law reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance (Amendment) Act 1968, and s 95 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. The second respondent was dismissed from employment as senior accountant by a letter of 22 March 1988, and he referred the matter to the Conciliation Board on 22 June 1989, far beyond the F 14 day limit set by s 23(2) of the Security of Employment Act, Cap 574, as amended by Act No 1 of 1975. The Board proceeded to hear the reference despite the limitation of time. The applicant obtained leave of this court to apply for the orders of certiorari and mandamus against the Chairman, Arusha Conciliation Board and one Issack Kirangi, first and second respondents respectively. G Amongst the issues was whether it was proper to join an individual, the second respondent, in an application of this nature.
Held:
(i) In the absence of clear authority to the contrary, the applicant could validly join Isaack Kirungi, a private individual, as a co-respondent; but the prerogative orders, if granted, will H only be directed at the first respondent;
(ii) The Security of Employment Act does not provide that time for filing a reference to the Board or a further reference to the Minister could be extended on application;
(iii) The Law of Limitation Act 1971 applies to appeals and applications I

A made to a court of law only, not otherwise; accordingly, the provisions of that act do not apply to proceedings before the Labour Conciliation Board under the Security of Employment Act;
(iv) Once the law puts a time limit to a cause of action, that limit cannot be waived even if the opposite party desists from raising the issue of limitation;
B (v) The Conciliation Board acted ultra vires when it heard and decided on the reference after the time provided by law had expired.
Case Information
Certiorari and mandamus granted.
Case referred to:
C (1) Assistant Registrar of Buildings v Fredrick G Kibwana, Court of Appeal at Mwanza, Civil appeal No 1/1987 (unreported).
Maro, for the applicant.
Mwaimu, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment

D Mroso J: This is an application for the orders of certiorari and mandamus made under s 2(2) of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance, cap 453 and the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance, cap 100, as amended by the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance (Amendment) Act 1968. Section 95 of the Civil E Procedure Code, 1966 has also been cited in aid. Tanzania Dairies Limited, henceforth to be referred to only as the applicant, obtained leave of this court in Miscellaneous Court Application No 150 of 1990, to apply for the orders of certiorari and mandamus against the Chairman, Arusha F Conciliation Board and an individual, one Isaack Kirangi, henceforth to be referred to as the first and second respondents respectively.

During the hearing of this application the applicant was represented by Mr Mareo, learned counsel G from the Tanzania Legal Corporation, and the first respondent was represented by Mr Mwaimu, learned State Attorney. The second respondent fended for himself. I raised the question whether it was proper to join an individual, one Isaack Kirangi, as a respondent in an application of this nature. The Arusha Region (Labour) Conciliation Board had given an award in favour of Mr Kirangi whereby H the applicant was ordered to reinstate him in its employ.

Mr Maro argued that it was thought proper to include Mr Kirangi as a respondent because under Rule 22 of the Crown Office Rules, 1906 which is law in Tanzania by virtue of the reception clause in the Tanganyika Order-in-Council, 1920 which applied the practice and procedure obtaining in England on I 22 July 1920, persons affected by proceedings may show cause. That means, according to Mr Maro, that any A party affected by proceedings in a court or tribunal could be made a party in an application for the prerogative orders. The second respondent being a party who would be affected by the present proceedings was thought to be a proper party to be joined as a respondent. B

Mr Mwaimu held the view that the second respondent should not have been made a party because the orders of certiorari and mandamus cannot be directed to a private individual. He did not cite any authority in support of that view. The second respondent himself, being a layman, said he was not in a position to argue whether or not he had locus standi in these proceedings. C

On reflection, and in the absence of clear authority to the contrary, I think the applicant could validly join Isaack Kirangi as a second respondent, even though, if the court grants the orders applied, they can only be directed at the first respondent. I have come to hold this view because, according to D Halsbury's Laws of England, 1989 ed at 110, if an order nisi to an application for mandamus, for example, is given (I take this to be the equivalent of an order for leave to apply for the order of mandamus), `then notice has to be given to every person who, by the affidavits on which the order is moved, appears to be interested in or likely to be affected by the proceedings, and to any person E who, in the opinion of the court or judge, ought to have such notice'. The phrase `every person' does not appear to be restricted to the one to whom the court order would be directed but to any one `who appears to be interested in or is likely to be affected by the proceedings'. There can be no doubt that F the second respondent is a person interested in and who is likely to be affected by the orders sought, if they are granted. The first respondent, of course, is the correct party, being a kind of tribunal which exercises statutory powers of a public nature. Now, then, to the merits or otherwise of the application. G

The applicant summarily dismissed the second respondent on the ground that, when called upon to do so, he failed to produce to the employer originals of certificates which would verify his qualification for the post of senior accountant which had been offered to him. The second respondent, acting H under provisions of the Security of Employment Act, cap 574, made a successful reference to the Arusha Regional Conciliation Board, which ordered his reinstatement. Because of non-compliance with certain requirements under the Security of Employment Act, the applicant could not appeal the Conciliation Board award, but believing the Board acted ultra vir- I

1994 TLR p36

MROSO J

A es in hearing the reference beyond the requisite period of limitation, applied to this court for the orders of certiorari and mandamus to remove the proceedings in the Board and quash them.

The second respondent was dismissed from employment as senior accountant by a letter of 22 B March 1988. The reference to the Conciliation Board was filed on 2 June 1989, a year and three months after the dismissal. But s 23(2) of the Security of Employment Act, cap 574, as amended by Act 1 of 1975, requires that the reference to the Board was to be made within 14 days of dismissal. There has not been any serious dispute that the reference was filed well after the time limited by law. C Indeed, the Board was aware of it but proceeded to hear the reference. Although the applicant claims it protested against the hearing of the reference on the ground that it was time barred, that is not apparent from the copy of proceedings of the Board which the applicant filed in this court as an annexure to the application.

D It has been argued before me that there is a lacuna in the Security of Employment Act, cap 574 in as much as it is not provided therein that time to file a reference to the Board or a further reference to the Minister could be extended on application.

E It is true indeed that there is no provision in cap 574 for extension of time to file a reference to the Board or a further reference to the Minister.

Mr Maro, on the other hand, has argued that there is no lacuna in the law. He submits however that F ss 14 and 46 of the Law of Limitation Act 1971 provide sufficient remedy. Section 14 provides - `14(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of this Act, the court may, for any reasonable or sufficient cause, extend the G period of limitation for the institution of an appeal or an application, other than an application for the execution of a decree, and an application for such extension may be made either before or after the expiry of the period of limitation prescribed or such an appeal or application.

(2) For the purposes of this section "the court" means the court having jurisdiction to entertain the appeal or, as the H case may be, the application.'

Section 46 provides -

`46. Where a period of limitation for any proceeding is prescribed by any other written law, then, unless the contrary I intention appears in such written law, and subject to the provisions of s 43, the provisions of this Act shall apply as if such period of limitation had been prescribed by this Act.' A Section 43 excludes certain proceedings from the application of the provisions of the Law of Limitation Act. These are criminal proceedings, applications and appeals to the Court of Appeal for B East Africa (now presumably the Court of Appeal of Tanzania) certain proceedings by the Government, forfeiture proceedings under the East African Customs and Transfer Tax (Management) Act 1952, proceedings in respect of forfeiture of a ship or an aircraft and any proceedings for which a period of limitation is prescribed by any other written law, save to the extent provided for in s 46. C

1994 TLR p37

MROSO J

After considerable thought, I have come to the view that the provisions of the Limitation Act 1971 apply only to appeals and applications made to a court of law. In s 14(1) of the Limitation Act, for example, reference is made to court. The Act itself does not define the term and one has to look at D the definition of the term in the Interpretation of Laws and General Clauses Act 30 of 1972. There `Court' is defined as `any court of Tanganyika of competent jurisdiction'. Even the term `proceeding' in s 46 refers and is restricted to a court proceeding. A definition of the term as used in the Law of E Limitation Act means `a suit, an appeal or an application and includes proceedings under customary law'. I hold, therefore, that the provisions of the Limitation Act 1971 do not apply to proceedings in a Regional Conciliation Board under the Security of Employment Act, cap 574. It would follows that the F Act having fixed the time within which a reference may be made to the Conciliation Board is deficient in not providing for a means of obtaining enlargement of time in case of a delay for which there is sufficient cause.

Was the Conciliation Board entitled to disregard the fact that the reference was time-barred? I think G that once the law puts a time limit to a cause of action, such action cannot be accepted and adjudicated upon after the limitation period has expired. The bar of time cannot be waived so that even if the party for the opposite side desists from raising limitation as a defence the court or tribunal before which the action is brought has no option but to dismiss it. I think, therefore, that the H Conciliation Board acted ultra vires when it heard and decided on the reference after the time provided by law had expired. Perhaps the legislature should revisit the Act to provide for a procedure for seeking and obtaining extension of time.

The question I have now to consider is whether I should quash the Board's award. I

1994 TLR p38

MROSO J

A The orders of certiorari and mandamus, among other prerogative orders, are discretionary and this court may refuse to grant them even where the right has been established.

Traditionally the order of certiorari was directed against judicial or quasi-judicial acts only. But, as B was held in Assistant Registrar of Buildings v Fredrick G Kibwana (1), Mustafa JA said -

`An order for certiorari would lie from the High Court to an inferior court or tribunal of a judicial, quasi-judicial or even an administrative nature. The body would be a statutory or some sort of such authority such as a licensing or C municipal or disciplinary body. It would be a body of person or persons having legal authority to determine questions affecting the rights of subjects.'

A Regional (Labour) Conciliation Board is a quasi-judicial body and would be subject to the D supervisory power of the High Court.

As Mustafa JA also said in the case cited (supra) -

`If such a body acts in excess of jurisdiction or fails to observe the rules of natural justice or there is a palpable error E on the face of it, then an order would issue.'

I think that in disregarding the fact that the reference was time-barred, the Board had committed a palpable error which went to jurisdiction.

F It has been argued by Counsel for the first respondent that the applicant company itself disregarded procedural requirements in the manner it proceeded to dismiss the second respondent and, therefore, that this court should not exercise its discretion to grant the orders for which it applied. I accept this argument in part. I shall not order payment of costs to the applicant. But I shall G grant the orders of certiorari and mandamus by ordering the proceedings in the Conciliation Board to be brought up and to be quashed. I have come to this conclusion because I am aware of a growing trend in this country by various authorities to disregard legal requirements which are thought to be inconvenient or inexpedient.

H Although it may have been thought benevolent for the Board to disregard the question of time limitation, that was in any case bad discipline and I think courts of law should not give blessing to such a trend. The orders shall issue as prayed, and there will be no order for costs.

1994 TLR p39

A

[zRPz]GERVAS KILONGOZI v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 39 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 141 OF 1993 B

25 March, 1993

(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Moroqoro Kyando, J) C

Flynote

Evidence - Confession - Admissibility - Confession to a police officer of unknown rank - whether admissible - sections 27(1) and 3 of the Evidence Act, 1967.

-Headnote

The appellant was charged with and convicted of murder. The trial court based the conviction on a D confession which the appellant made to a police officer whose rank was not shown on the evidence. On appeal the conviction was challenged as being based on inadmissible evidence.

Held:

(i) We are satisfied that there is nothing to show that the police officer to whom the appellant E made the confession was of the rank required under s 3 of the Evidence Act, 1967;

(ii) In the circumstances the confession was inadmissible in evidence;

(iii) The prosecution has not proved its case beyond reasonable doubt.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No case referred to. F

JI Rutabingwa, for the appellant.

M Kamba, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Omar, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the court: G

The appellant Gervas Kilongozi was charged with and convicted of murder c/s 196 of the Penal Code.

The prosecution evidence is very scanty and mostly hearsay. PW2, Assistant Inspector Elias Madata of Mang'ula Police Station, was awakened at night and informed that there was an injured person at H the police station. He went there and found one Michael Mkalawa had been injured on the head. He gave him a PF3 to take to hospital. He also directed one Detective Corporal Jafari to take down his statement. In this statement Mkalawa said that the appel- I

A lant went to his house at night and knocked, when he opened the door he was attacked but he managed to escape, but he feared for the girl who was living in his house because he, Mkalawa, saw the attacker entering her room. So PW2 took a militiaman one Adriano Mkiwa and a ten cell leader B Simon Peter, also Abdu Mshinde and Sadon Mwinyikaule, these last two are relatives of the deceased Mariam Theophil and Mkalawa. Outside the house of Mkalawa they found Mariam lying face downwards with a head injury; she was already dead. The child of the deceased Zamoyoni Lucas appeared from inside the house and told PW2 that his mother was killed by his stepfather C Gervas Kilongozi the appellant. Mkalawa has not given evidence because he died before hearing of this case. The daughter of the deceased also did not give evidence because she was too young to understand the nature of oath and the truth and falsehood of evidence. The learned Trial Judge D disqualified her from giving evidence. The rest of the people who went with PW2 to the house of Mkalawa were not called to give evidence.

PW3, Aloys Kilongozi, the father of the appellant, was taken from his house on the same night by PW2, Assistant Inspector Madata, and was asked to show him where his son was, so Aloys took E him to a house where a person called Majengo accommodated his son the appellant. The appellant was found in this house and he was taken to the police station with his father PW3 and were locked in. The following morning both were taken out of the lockup. PW3, the father of the appellant, was F informed by PW2 that his son had killed a woman. Then they were put in custody again. The third day they were transferred to Ifakara Police Station where the appellant was interrogated and according to PW3's evidence appellant admitted killing his fiancee. PW3 remembered standing surety for the appellant in a case in which he was charged for assaulting his fiancee and on Thursday the fiancee went to the Court and complained that he was a threat to her and wanted his G bail cancelled. PW3 wanted to withdraw himself as a surety but the Court refused this request and the same night Inspector Madata went to his house asking him to show where his son the appellant was as he was wanted for the killing. When PW3 was cross-examined by one of the assessors he H said:

`Accused confessed to me and very voluntarily and clearly that he had killed. He so confessed while we were only three, himself, the Incharge CID and myself. He confessed that he had killed.'

I PW4, Sgt Samoyoni, stated that he was stationed at Mang'ula

Police Station, Kilombero District and that he knew earlier of the case of the appellant when he A assaulted the same deceased and a case file was opened on 14 February 1989 and he was granted bail by the Primary Court while on bail, the victim of the attack Mariam Theophil went to court and complained that the appellant was going to her house to threaten her. She asked for cancellation of his bail. PW3, Aloys Kilongozi, was appellant's surety. On 18 February 1989 he (PW4) reported for B work at the police station only to find that the same person had been arrested for killing Mariam Theophil.

The appellant in his defence admitted to have told one junior Police Officer Raphael that he had assaulted deceased at a pombe club. He went on to say that his confession was after he had been C beaten with a club several times and was even told by Raphael that a person had died during interrogation. So he had to admit the offence of assault to save himself from further torture. His father PW3, the appellant said, was with him in the lockup and he cooked up this story of his son D confessing to the murder of Mariam merely to be released from custody. And he was actually released. The appellant denied injuring Mkalawa nor did he know that Mariam was living in Mkalawa's house because they had separated for quite sometime. As for wanting his bail to be cancelled that was merely because she was unhappy with his release from custody. He concluded by saying that E she wanted to see him in prison rather than a free man.

Mr Rutabingwa, learned counsel for the appellant, submitted that the evidence adduced by the prosecution in support of the charge against the appellant was insufficient. He said that the whole F case against the appellant was wholly based on the confession of the appellant to a police officer whose rank is not shown on the evidence. He submitted further that while s 27(1) of the Evidence Act 1967 provides for the confession voluntarily made to a police officer by an accused person, there was no evidence to show that the police officer involved was of the rank required under s 3 of the G Evidence Act 1967. For that reason, Mr Rutabingwa submitted that the validity of the confession was doubtful. Secondly, Mr Rutabingwa argued that as the witness who was present at the time when the appellant made the confession to PW3 did not give evidence in court the evidence of PW3 is H suspect. Thirdly, Mr Rutabingwa submitted that since the only person present during the killing was a child of tender age, who was disqualified by the court from giving evidence, there is no evidence to support that of PW3. He urged the court to allow the appeal.

Mr Kamba, learned State Attorney for the Republic, respondent I

1994 TLR p42

OMAR JA

A did not seek to support the conviction for the following reasons: Firstly, one of the witnesses who witnessed the incident was disqualified to give evidence because of his tender age and the other one (Mkgalawa) had died. Secondly, Mr Kamba submitted that there were serious irregularities pertaining to the confession of the appellant to the police officer. The police officer concerned did not come to B testify and that it is not certain as to the rank of the police officer. Mr Kamba submitted that the whole case had no leg to stand on. For these reasons, he did not support the conviction.

We have examined the submissions by both the learned counsel very closely. With respect, we are C in agreement with the submission of the learned counsel for the appellant and the learned State Attorney for the Republic that the case against the appellant was entirely based on the confession of the appellant to the police. Upon close examination of the evidence, we accept the submission of the D Counsel that the confession is fraught with very serious discrepancies. The confession does not in our view comply with the provisions of s 27 and s 3 of the Evidence Act 1967. These provisions provide:

E `27(1) A confession voluntarily made to a police officer by a person accused of an offence may be proved as against that person.

(2) . . .

(3) . . .

Section 3:

F "`Police Officer" means any member of the Police Force of or above the rank of Corporal.'

From the evidence, we are satisfied that there is nothing to show that the police officer to whom the appellant made the confession was of the rank required under s 3 of the Evidence Act 1967. The G officer may well be of the rank below Corporal in which case, the confession would not be admissible. It is therefore, a confession which, in the circumstances, is not admissible under the law. If the police officer involved had given evidence in Court, the position would have been clarified. This was not done in this case. Consequently, we are in agreement with the learned counsel that the H prosecution case still left much to be desired.

In the result we find that the prosecution has not proved its case beyond reasonable doubt. We allow the appeal and order that the appellant be released from custody forthwith unless he is otherwise I lawfully held.

1994 TLR p43

A

[zRPz]AGRO INDUSTRIES LTD v ATTORNEY GENERAL 1994 TLR 43 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Makame JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Mfalila JJA

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 34 OF 1990 B
23 April, 1993
(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Mapiqano, J) C
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Issues for determination by the Court - Issues not at all pleaded but the court allows parties to address it them - whether the court should make a determination on them.
Land Law - Revocation of a Right of Occupancy - Notice of intention to revoke a right of occupancy - Essence and purpose thereof D
Land law - Revocation of a Right of Occupancy in the Public Interest - Revocation made in order to protect a trespassing parastatal - Whether it is revocation in the Public Interest - Section 10(2) of the Land Ordinance. E
-Headnote
Two farms were mortgaged to a bank. Fifteen years later the mortgagor had absconded, and the debt was unpaid. The bank sold the farms to the appellant who was then given offers of rights to occupancy. Subsequently, rights of occupancy in respect of the same farms were given to another company, thereby occassioning a double allocation. The right of occupancy offered to the appellant F was then purportedly cancelled in order to protect the interests of the second grantee, a parastatal company. The appellant filed a case in the High Court, to challenge the cancellation, and lost. On appeal to the Court of Appeal:
Held:

(i) When a trial court allows parties to address it on any issues, the court must conclusively G determine those issues, notwithstanding that the issues were not in the pleadings;

(ii) The whole purpose of issuing a notice to revoke a right of occupancy is to afford a party an opportunity to put up a case against the proposed revocation; the appellant in this case was H afforded that opportunity through the meeting in the Prime Minister's office on 29 August 1985;

(iii) The decision to revoke the right of occupancy was made by the President when he wrote `Nakubali', that is `I agree', to the minute sent to him recommending revocation, and what I the Minister subsequently did was not to revoke himself but merely to signify the revocation made by the President; there was, therefore, no delegation
1994 TLR p44
A or usurpation of the powers of the President.

(iv) The Kilosa District Authorities had no power to allocate the two farms in dispute in this case, or to grant any rights over them, to Darbrew;

(v) In the eyes of the law a trespasser is a trespasser, be it a public enterprise, a private B enterprise or an individual; public interest requires that legal property rights should be protected against trespassers and the revocation of the rights of occupancy in this case was done to protect the interests of a trespassing public enterprise and therefore it was not done the the public interest.

Case Information

C Appeal allowed.

Cases referred to:

(1) Vidyarthi v Ram Rakha [1957] EA 527.

(2) Odd Jobs v Mubia [1970] EA 476.

(3) Patman Garments Industries Ltd v Tanzania Manufacturers [1981] TLR 303.

D (4) Associated Provincial Picture Houses Ltd v Wednesbury Corporation [1947] 2 All ER 680.

(5) Padfield v Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food [1968] 1 All ER 694.

(6) BP Bhatt and Another v Habib Versi Rajani [1958] EA 536.

(7) Hawabai Franjee Petit v Secretary of State for India [1915] 39 BOM 279.

E (8) R v Sussex Confirming Authority, ex p. Tamlin and Sons Brewery (Brighton) Ltd [1937] 4 All ER 106.

Marandu, for the appellant.

F Mrs Ndosi, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Ramadhani, JA, delivered the considered judgment of the court:

This is an appeal by Agro Industries Ltd, the appellant, against the ruling of Mapigano J who upheld the revocation by the President of the United Republic of Tanzania of the rights of occupancy which G were granted to the appellant and refused the prayer to quash the revocation order.

Two farms, conveniently known as farms No 6 and No 7, are situated in Msowero Village, Kilosa District of Morogoro Region. These belonged to one Akberali Abdulrasul Dharamsi who mortgaged H them for a loan of Shs 45,000/= from the National Development Credit Agency, the predecessor of the Tanzania Rural Development Bank (hereinafter referred to as the Bank). That was in 1968. Until 1983 the debt had not been liquidated and the mortgagor had absconded. So the Bank was, I naturally, keen to sell the farms.

1994 TLR p45

RAMADHANI JA

Two firms had their eyes on the farms. The appellant company was quick to pursue the legal A channels. As early as February 1983 the appellant company approached the bank for a sale. The Regional Development Director of Morogoro Region gave his consent on 30 July 1983 vide his letter C30/16/65. The appellant company paid a total of Shs 98,880/= being the land rent, and debt and B interest thereon, and capital gains tax. That was on 6 October 1983 and the deeds of title were given on 8 July 1985.

The other firm was Darbrew Ltd. This applied through the Msowero Village Government on 1 November 1983 and were granted the use of the farms on 19 November 1983 vide the letter ref No C KL/1322/172. Darbrew immediately took possession and went into cultivation.

Obviously a dispute blew up and Darbrew Ltd petitioned the President on 13 June 1985. The President referred the matter to the Prime Minister on 6 August 1988. The Prime Minister convened a D meeting on 29 August 1988 which resulted in the recommendations of 2 September 1985 that the rights of occupancy granted to the appellant company be revoked and new ones be granted to Darbrew Ltd. The President gave this consent on 5 September 1985. E

The appellant company was advocated for by Mr Marandu, learned counsel. He prayed for and we granted him leave to adduce additional evidence. The effect of that evidence was to prove that farm No 7 too met the same fate. The revocation order for this farm was produced as exh CAI. F

Mr Marandu filed a memorandum of appeal containing seven grounds of appeal. As for the first ground he attacked the learned Trial Judge for having failed to take into account issues which were not pleaded. These issues were three. Firstly there was the question that the appellant was not given notice of the President's intention to revoke the Rights of Occupancy. Second, that the appellant was G not given an opportunity to be heard. Lastly, whether the Minister for Lands usurped the powers of the President or whether the President had delegated his powers to the Minister.

Mr Marandu pointed out that the learned Trial Judge dealt with those issues but as obiter because `It is now established that evidence and arguments in legal proceedings should be confined to the H pleadings'. The learned Trial Judge cited Vidyarthi v Ram Rakha (1).

Mr Marandu submitted that the learned Trial Judge had erred not to decide those issues since both parties adduced evidence and made submissions on them and the Court allowed that to be done. I

1994 TLR p46

RAMADHANI JA

A On behalf of the respondent was Mrs Ndosi, learned State Attorney. She did not actually address herself to whether or not the learned Trial Judge should have decided those unpleaded issues. Instead she dealt with the merits of the issues themselves which form the content of the other grounds of appeal.

B Admittedly, the three matters were not pleaded and so contravened the decision of the East African Court of Appeal in Vidyarthi v Ram Rakha (1) supra. However, as properly pointed out by Mr Marandu, both sides dealt with these issues and so, as correctly submitted by Mr Marandu again, the decision of the same Court of Appeal in Odd Jobs v Mubia (2) is pertinent. It was decided therein C that a Court may base its decision on an unpleaded issue if it appears from the course followed at the trial that the issue has been left to the Court for decision.

We are of the opinion that those three issues were left to the Court for its decision. The learned Trial D Judge, however, did not dismiss those issues with a wave of the hand. He discussed them at length and rejected them, thus signifying his findings.

Admittedly, after making those three determinations the learned judge went on the remark that:

E `All that I have stated above are essentially in obiter . . .'

The reason he gave for saying so was that those were unpleaded issues. With respect we think the F learned judge was wrong to have regarded his decisions on the three issues as obiter. So long as he had allowed both counsel to address him on them, then, under the authority of Odd Jobs v Mubira (2) he had to conclusively decide them. Therefore these decisions on the three issues were not obiter and can properly be subjects of this appeal.

G As his second ground of appeal Mr Marandu said that Mapigano J erred in holding that the meeting in the Prime Minister's Office (hereinafter referred to as PMO) amounted to prior notice of the intention of the President to revoke the appellant's right of occupancy. Mr Marandu submitted that at the time of the meeting at PMO the President had not made up his mind either to revoke or not to H revoke. The learned advocate pointed out that even the minutes of that meeting indicate that. So, he argued, the appellant's Managing Director, Mr Kimoi, `could not be expected to anticipate or forestall the President's future state of mind or intentions'. Mr Marandu argued further that as the decision to I revoke the rights of occupancy was made after that meeting then the President was duty-bound to give the appellant company a notice of his intention. The learned counsel referred us to A Patman Garments Industries Ltd v Tanzania Manufacturers (3) at 309.

In reply Mrs Ndosi said that the Director of Land Development Services, Mr Mtetewaunga (PW2), had written a letter on 5 July 1984 to the Regional Land Officer, Monogoro, suggesting revocation. That B letter, Mrs Ndosi pointed out, does not show that it was copied to the appellant company but nevertheless the appellant responded to it on 4 August 1984 and so, she argued, they must have had notice of it.

What Mrs Ndosi submitted is true. There was the letter, exh A7 from PW2 suggesting revocation and C that was contested by the appellant company vide exh A8. However, the same PW2, almost a year later, on 27 May 1985 to be precise, wrote another letter (exh A9) saying that the Minister had ruled that the farms remain with the appellant company and that Darbrew was to be given adequate D land to suit their requirement. So even if there was notice of revocation then that notice was waived so to speak. What we are then left with is the meeting of 29 August 1985.

It is true, as Mr Marandu said, that that meeting was `basically and merely called to discuss a long outstanding dispute between the appellant company and Darbrew Ltd'. But then we ask, after the E discussion what next? Was the discussion an end in itself or was it a means to arriving at a solution to the dispute? It is obvious to us that the Principal Secretary of PMO would not involve himself in an academic exercise. In fact the minutes are in black and white that Mr Kimoi, for the appellant F company, was asked whether they would be prepared to compensate Darbrew if it were decided that the farms continued to be of the appellant company. The same question was put to Darbrew. These two questions clearly showed that there was a possibility of revocation. The minutes (exh A12) go G further to record that the stand of the appellant company was that `hawatakubali shamba lingine badala ya hilo walilokwihapewa "title deed" '. We are left in no shade of doubt that the issue of revocation was made transparent to the appellant. In our opinion the whole purpose of notice is to afford a party an opportunity to put up a case. The appellant had that. H

We agree with the learned Judge, therefore, that:

`The applicant thus knew, or ought to have known, the consequence which might follow an adverse decision by the authority, namely the revocation of their rights over the two farms.' I

1994 TLR p48

RAMADHANI JA

A As for the case cited, with respect we find it not relevant to the point at issue but we shall discuss it at the appropriate juncture.

So the second ground of appeal fails.

The third ground of appeal avers that there is no revocation in fact and that the President merely B wrote `Nakubali' to the minute sent to him from PMO. Mr Marandu argued that that was a mere expression of the mind of the President and that he had to actually sign the revocation order to show that he had revoked. Mrs Ndosi said that when the President wrote `Nakubali' to the letter from PMO he signified his decision to revoke the title.

C We cannot resist the thought that this is semantics. PMO was instructed by the President to investigate the dispute and they wrote to him recommending revocation of the title for two reasons which are not necessary to divulge for the time being. Then the President wrote `Nakubali' ie he agreed that the title be revoked. Now we fail to see what Mr Marandu is up to. As far as we are D concerned the manifestation of the mind of the President can take other forms than just personally appending his signature. The endorsement of `Nakubali' that is `I agree' is one of those other forms. This ground too fails.

E Had the President to sign the revocation order personally? Mr Marandu said yes. That was his fourth ground. To him, since the letter from PMO did not suggest to the President that he should direct the Minister for land to revoke, then the word `Nakubali' cannot be taken to signify the F delegation of the Presidential powers to revoke to the Minister. We understood Mr Marandu to be saying that there was no delegation specifically for this revocation order in question.

Mr Marandu did not stop there, he also argued that there could not be a general delegation of these G powers either. He submitted that the powers under s 10(1) of the Land Ordinance are quasi-judicial and discretionary and so in the absence of express statutory provision there can be no delegation. He referred us to Halsbury's Laws of England for that proposition of law. Mr Marandu contended, H therefore, that the order of revocation signed by the Minister is ultra vires.

Mrs Ndosi conceded that there is no instrument delegating the powers of the President of revoking rights of occupancy. However, she submitted that s 2 of the Presidential Affairs Act (cap 502) permits delegation of presidential powers provided there is no contrary intention appearing in the I specific statute which gives the President the powers in question. The learned State Attorney submitted that the Land Ordinance provides no such contrary intention and so, she contended, the A power to revoke is capable of delegation.

1994 TLR p49

RAMADHANI JA
To that contention Mr Marandu responded that the provisions of s 2 of the Presidential Affairs Act are circumscribed by the clause in s 10(2) of the Lands Ordinance which says `. . . if in the opinion of the B President . . .'.
It appears to us that Mrs Ndosi agreed with Mr Marandu that there is no delegation of statutory powers without express statutory provisions and that is why she came up with the Presidential Affairs Act. Paragraph 134 of the Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd ed provides: C

`Without statutory authority to do so, statutory powers cannot be assigned. Although such powers may, in general, be exercised by the hands of servants, agents or contractors and, in the case of corporate bodies, must be so exercised, the question whether statutory powers may be delegated in any wider sense than this depends on the D proper construction of the enactment conferring the powers and, in particular, whether that enactment specifically authorise delegation.'

Now there is no provision for delegation in the Land Ordinance and according to Mrs Ndosi there is E no instrument of delegation that has been given. Does s 2 of the Presidential Affairs Act provide for a general delegation of the functions of the President to Ministers? We think not. That section provides:

`2. Where by or under any written law, other than the Constitution . . ., any power, duty or function is conferred or F imposed on, or is vested in, the President, the exercise of such power or the performance of such duty or function by the President may, unless a contrary intention appears, be signified under the hand of a Minister, a junior minister or G a permanent secretary' (emphasis added).

This section merely empowers a Minister to signify `the exercise of such power or the performance of such duty or function by the President'. The section does not authorize a Minister to exercise H power or perform a duty or a function on behalf of the President.
However, in the present situation the Minister for Lands merely signified the exercise of the power of revocation of the rights of occupancy by the President as is provided by the above quoted section. We have already said that we are satisfied that the President actually made up his mind to revoke I when he had minuted
1994 TLR p50
RAMADHANI JA
A `Nakubali'. All that the Minister did was to signify that revocation. In fact just above the signature of the Minister there are these words typed in capital letters: `By command of the President'.
For the sake of completeness, and not that it is essential to this judgment, we wish to comment on B the distinction which Mr Marandu made that the revocation powers of the President are quasi-judicial and not executive. That distinction is no longer relevant. We have decided so in Patman Garments Industries Ltd (3) at 307 and 308. This ground also fails. These was no delegation C or usurpation of the powers of the President. The Minister signed the revocation order merely signifying the exercise of that power by the President.

The fifth ground of appeal was that Mapigano J erred when he held that the Kilosa District Authorities D allocated the farms in dispute to Darbrew. The learned counsel pointed out that PW2, Mtetewaunga, who was then the Director for Land Development Services, was not aware of such grants. Mr Marandu went further to submit that even assuming that Darbrew were so granted that allocation was null and void since the District Authority had no such capacity. He referred us to Associated Provincial Picture House Ltd v Wednesbury Corporation (4) and Padfield v Minister of E Agriculture (5).

Mrs Ndosi agreed with Mr Marandu and we think there is much weight in that submission. Section 3 of the Land Ordinance has declared the whole of the lands of Tanzania Mainland to be public land. F Then s 4 goes on to vest in the President all public lands and rights over them and that `no title to the occupation and use of any such lands shall be valid without the consent of the President'. Section 9(2) provides further that a certificate of a right of occupancy is valid if signed by the Land Officer on behalf of the President. The Kilosa District Authority did not have such powers to grant any rights G over the two farms to Darbrew or any body.

This ground therefore succeeds.

The sixth ground of appeal is that the learned Trial Judge erred to have found that the revocation of the rights of occupancy granted to the appellant company was in the public interest. Mr Marandu H stated that the recommendations sent to the President were that as Darbrew is a public enterprise then it is in public interest to protect it.

Mr Marandu argued that that reasoning is faulty because first no proof had been adduced to show that Darbrew was a public enterprise and secondly there was abundant evidence that Darbrew was I a trespasser.

Mrs Ndosi replied that Darbrew is a parastatal organisation since the National Development A Corporation (NDC) which is owned by the Government had 55% majority shares. She reiterated that the revocation was in the public interest as the revocation order said so.

We feel that we should not be detained by whether or not Darbrew is a public enterprise. Mr Marandu conceded that GN 55/80 transferred shares in Darbrew from Lonrho to Tanzania Breweries Ltd, a B subsidiary of the NDC. We are satisfied that Darbrew is a public enterprise.

Let us come to the real issue: was the revocation in public interest? Maybe before we address ourselves to that question we have first and foremost to determine what is public interest. C Unfortunately both learned counsel did not assist us in this regard. So we have to depend on our own research and we have to admit there is not all that much.

The phrase `public interest' was discussed by Law J of the High Court of Tanganyika in B P Bhatt D and another v Habib Versi Rajani (6) where he held, according to the head note, that to be `in the public interest . . . it is not sufficient that public interest may benefit indirectly or incidentally, if the primary purpose of the application is to benefit the landlord's interest and not that of the public'. E

The learned judge relied on Hawabai Franjee Petit v Secretary of State for India (7) which dealt with the phrase `public purpose' which to the learned judge means the same as `purpose in the public interest'. In the Indian case it was said: F

`. . . the phrase, whatever else it may mean, must include a purpose, that is to say an aim or object, in which the general interest of the community, as opposed to the particular interest of individuals, is directly and vitally concerned'.

Yet in R v Sussex Confirming Authority, ex p Tamplin and Sons Brewery (Brighton) Ltd (8) at 112 it G was said:

`It is fallacious to say that a condition is not in the public interest, or may not be in the public interest, if it is the case that a great many of those persons who constitute the public are not directly affected by it; and it is equally fallacious to say that a condition cannot be in the public interest if a great many members of the public neither know nor care H anything about it.'

So what do we understand by an action being in the public interest? We think it is so when looked at objectively with impartial I

A eyes the section is primarily and not incidentally in the interest of the public which, depending on the matter at issue, may even comprise the individual or individuals concerned, and it matters not whether the public is aware of it or not.

B With that understanding in mind, let us see what exactly the President decided by saying `Nakubali'. We have no option but to start at the beginning and that is the letter from PMO.

On 26 June 1986 the Principal Secretary to the President wrote to the appellant company (exh A15) saying:

C `Tarehe 2.9.85 Waziri Nkuu aliwasilisha spala hili kwa Rais akishauri Darbrew wamiliki mashamba hayo kwa sababu zifuatazo:

(a) Darbrew tayari wanayamiliki mashamba hayo, walikwisha kuvuna msimu mmoja mwaka jana na hivi sasa wanavuna msimu wa pili, wakati Agro Industries hawajafanya kazi yoyote pale. Walikuwa wanasubiri kwanza D wapate hati ya kumiliki ardhi ili waende Benki kuomba mkopo.

(b) Darbrew ni shirika la umma, kwa hiyo katika mashindano ya kumiliki ardhi baina yao na kampuni ya watu binafsi ya Agro Industries, shirika la umma linastahili kupata ushindi.

Ukiridhika hivyo, iliyobaki ni kufuta hati ya Agro Industries ya kumiliki ardhi hiyo. Uwezo huo Serekali inao E kisheria, na nashuari utumike.'

Then the President wrote `Nakubali'. Thus the President decided to revoke the rights of occupancy of F the appellant company because: One, Darbrew was already in possession of the farms and was cultivating them; and two, Darbrew is a parastatal and that in a bid to the ownership of land a parastatal should be favoured against a private firm.

G But how did Darbrew came into possession? Admittedly they were allowed to occupy the farms by the Village Government on 1 November 1983 because there was a big bush which provided refuge for destructive animals. Darbrew then applied for title on 9 May 1984. So they were cognizant of the legal position that the Village Government could not give title. Five days later, on 14 May 1984, the H General Manager of Darbrew rang the Land Development Officer of Morogoro saying that the Bank had rescinded its contract to sell the two farms to the appellant company and that the Bank was going to sell them to Darbrew (exh A3). A copy of that letter from the Land Development Officer to the Bank was sent to Darbrew who did not protest their innocence. That was an unabashed lie which I only meant that Darbrew was well aware that the farms were already sold to the appellant who in fact had paid for them as far back as 6 October A 1983.

1994 TLR p53

RAMADHANI JA

Admittedly since the consent to the Commissioner for Lands had not been obtained the transaction between the appellant company and the Bank was an inoperative agreement. But then the title remained with the Bank, the mortgagee, it had not passed to the Village Government. So Darbrew B were trespassers and we are satisfied that they knew their status to be so. In the eyes of the law a trespasser is a trespasser be it a public enterprise or a private enterprise or an individual.

So the crucial question is what action is in the public interest: to protect one with a legal title or to C protect a trespasser? What is at stake in the sanctity of a legal right, and particularly right to property, against the use of naked force. Which of the two should be protected in the public interest?

We are satisfied that public interest, as we have stated to understand it, requires that legal property D rights should be protected against trespassers. Except for these two farms in question, it is also in the interest of Darbrew themselves that legal property rights should be respected and protected.

So the revocation which was done in favour of a trespasser and against a lawful owner never be in E the public interest. So the revocation is null and void because s 10(2) of the Land Ordinance provides:

> `Notwithstanding the provisions of ss (1) the President may revoke a right of occupancy if, in his opinion, it is in the F public interest so to do.'

This we are satisfied was not done in the public interest.

Admittedly that subsection provides a subjective test that is: in the opinion of the President. In this G case that opinion was based on the recommendations of PMO which did not describe Darbrew in its true colours that it was a trespasser. In fact the President was misled by `Darbrew tayari wanayamiliki mashamba hayo . . .'. If the President was seized of the full and correct situation he H would not, in our opinion, have used his name to protect a trespasser albeit a public enterprise. He would have been of the opinion that that was not in the public interest.

Lastly there is the issue of compensation. This is straightforward. As already said at the meeting called by PMO both the appellant and Darbrew had agreed to pay compensation to the other party I

1994 TLR p54

A should it be so decided. Admittedly the revocation order did not say anything about compensation but that does not mean that it was denied. So the applicant should compensate Darbrew for unexhausted improvements.

B This appeal is allowed with costs. The revocation order is quashed. The appellant company still has rights of occupancy over farm 6 and 7 and it shall compensate Darbrew for unexhausted improvements. It is so ordered.

1994 TLR p54

D

[zRPz]OLONYO LEMUNA AND LEKITONI LEMUNA v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 54 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramandhani JJA and Lubuva JJA

E CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 123 OF 1993

15 November, 1993

F (From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Munuo, J)

Flynote

Criminal practice and procedure - Right of accused to be heard - Accused persons jump bail and do not appear G in court for hearing shortly before close of the prosecution case - Case proceeds in their absence - Whether conviction proper - ss 226 and 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985.

-Headnote

H The two appellants were jointly charged in the District Court of Monduli with robbery with violence contrary to sections 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. Just before the prosecution closed its case they jumped bail and the rest of the proceedings were conducted in their absence. They were convicted and sentenced in absentia in terms of the provisions of s 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985, and sentenced to 8 years imprisonment and an order of compensation of Shs 60,000/= the worth of I the three goats the subject of the charge. Their appeals to the High Court were dismissed, and their prison sentence was enhanced to fifteen years. On further appeal to the Court of Appeal they asserted that, the trial having proceeded in their absence, they A were not given the opportunity to be heard.

1994 TLR p55

Held:

(i) Section 226(2) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 makes provision for the court to set aside a conviction entered in the absence of the accused if it is satisfied that the absence was due to causes beyond the control of the accused; this accords to the accused person B an opportunity to be heard;

(ii) Section 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985, which allows the conviction of an accused person in absentia, can only be invoked when an accused person being tried by a subordinate court fails to appear in court for hearing after the close of the prosecution case; C

(iii) Only prior to the close of the prosecution case are the circumstances set out in s 226 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 applicable; after the close of the prosecution case, s 226 is inapplicable and s 227 takes over;

(iv) As in this case the appellants absconded before the prosecution closed its case, the trial D court misapplied the provisions of s 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985;

(v) Having misapplied s 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985, justice in this case would be met if the discretionary powers under s 226(2) of the Act were invoked and have the case re-opened. E

Case Information

Proceedings remitted to the trial court.

No case referred to.

Mono, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lubuva, JA delivered the considered opinion of the court: F

The two appellants are brothers. They were jointly charged in the District Court of Monduli with the offence of robbery with violence contrary to ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. They were duly arraigned when the trial started on 17 August 1992. When the charge was read over and explained to G them, both of them pleaded not guilty. Just before the prosecution closed its case the appellants jumped bail. The rest of the proceedings in the trial were therefore conducted in their absence. Consequently on 19 February 1993 they were convicted and sentenced in absentia in terms of the H provisions of s 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985. They were sentenced to 8 years imprisonment together with an order of compensation of Shs 60,000/= the worth of the 3 goats, the subject of the charge. On appeal to the High Court (E N Munuo J) against the conviction and sentence, the appeals were dismissed. The sentence of 8 years imprisonment was set aside and substituted therefore a I

A sentence of 15 years imprisonment. They have now appealed to this Court.

In their memorandum of appeal the appellants, as it was in the High Court on first appeal, have raised a number of points of complaint. In our view, the most important ground is the one in which the appellants assert that both the lower courts erred in sustaining the conviction because they were B convicted in absentia. The trial having proceeded in their absence, they were not given the opportunity to be heard. They also raised the question of identification. That they were not properly identified.

C Mr J D Mono, learned Principal State Attorney who appeared for the Republic, respondent sought to support the conviction arguing that this being a second appeal apart from the issue of the appellant's conviction in absentia there was no point of law involved, the appeal on the conviction is devoid of any merit. It should be dismissed. Mr Mono stressed that the question of identification was D a matter of fact which was dealt with by both courts below. It should not be entertained on second appeal.

Mr Mono then advanced further arguments concerning the conviction and sentencing of the E appellants in absentia. He contended that in the circumstances of the case, if this Court is satisfied that the provisions of s 226(2) of the Criminal Procedure Act were not properly invoked by the trial magistrate, the matter should be remitted back to the trial court. In this way, if we understood Mr Mono, the learned Principal State Attorney, the appellants could be heard on their defence if they had F any.

We shall only deal with the ground on the appellant's conviction and sentence in absentia. The determination of this matter hinges on this point. It raises an important legal point of procedure in connection with the administration of criminal justice. On this aspect, it is convenient to set out the G sequence of events as shown from the record. As indicated when the trial started, both the appellants were present in court until sometime when the prosecution were about to close their case, when they jumped bail. On 4 February 1993 when the case was called up for hearing the H Prosecutor applied for an adjournment. Again the record shows that both the appellants were absent that day. The case was adjourned until 11 February 1993 for mention. Arrest warrants were ordered to be issued against the appellants.

On 11 February 1993 when the case was supposed to come up for mention, the record shows that instead, the trial was proceeded with in the absence of the appellants. The record further shows that I the Public Prosecutor indicated to the court that he had one more witness to call when he said: `I have A got the remaining witness.' As the case had been fixed for mention that day, it was expected that the court would normally fix the next hearing date when, perhaps the accused would have been traced. Instead for no apparent reason the trial was proceeded with.

Detective Constable Linus (PW5) gave evidence for the prosecution. His evidence was formal. He B was the arresting officer. That was the essence of his evidence. With this evidence, the prosecution closed its case. Judgment was to be delivered on 12 February 1992 and the arrest warrant was extended. The judgment was delivered on 19 February 1993 still in the absence of the appellants. In C the judgment, the learned trial magistrate indicates that as the appellants had absconded, the trial was proceeded with under the provisions of s 226 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985. Acting under the provisions of s 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 the learned trial magistrate proceeded to D convict and pass sentence against the appellants in absentia wherein it was recorded:

> 'Judgment read in court to the prosecution represented by Ass Insp Malle. Accused person (sic) are at large.'

Three days later (22 February 1993) the record indicated that the first appellent, Olonyo Lemuna, E was brought to the court under arrest. Following from that it appears that the court informed the first appellant of the judgment and sentence that had been handed down on 19 February 1993. It was F done in the following words by the learned magistrate:

> 'I am just pronouncing the sentence to the accused. Also, it shall give him the right of appeal.' G

Otherwise, as for the second appellant, Lekitoni Lemuna, the record does not show when he was arrested to start serving the sentence. However, as pointed out by the learned judge on first appeal, the second appellant was subsequently arrested and committed to the prison to serve the sentence. H This is evident from the requisite Notices and Memorandum of Appeal filed in which both the appellants feature.

With this background information on the sequence of the proceedings of the trial in the absence of the appellants it is convenient at this juncture to examine closely how the matter was dealt with at I

A the High Court. This matter was specifically raised by the appellants in their memoranda of appeal. The learned judge addressed herself to this issue in these words:

"The accused jumped bail so they were convicted in absentia under s 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985. They B were subsequently arrested and committed to prison to serve an eight year sentence which sentence, I note is illegal because the minimum sentence for the offence of robbery is now fifteen years jail.' (Emphasis supplied.)

C With respect, we are of the view that on appeal the learned judge examined sufficiently the evidence on identity and the propriety of the sentence imposed. On this she properly directed herself and reached a sound conclusion. But the question of the legality or otherwise of the procedure followed at the trial resulting in the conviction and sentencing of the accused in absentia was not D unfortunately look into beyond the extent explained above.

Now we turn specifically to the provisions of s 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985. The issue is whether in the circumstances of the case as set out, the provisions of this section were properly invoked? In order to appreciate the import of this section, it is important to set it out in full starting with E s 226 both of which have to be read together.

Section 226 reads:

F '226(1) If at the time or place to which the hearing or further hearing shall be adjourned, the accused person shall not appear before the court which shall have made the order of adjournment, it shall be lawful for such court to proceed with the hearing or further hearing as if the accused were present and if the complainant shall not appear, the court may dismiss the charge and acquit the accused with or without costs as the court shall think fit.

G (2) If the court convicts the accused person in his absence it may set aside such conviction upon being satisfied that his absence was from causes over which he had no control, and that he had a probable defence on the merit. (Emphasis supplied.)

(3) . . .

H (4) The court, in its discretion, may refrain from convicting the accused in his absence, and in every such case the court shall issue a warrant for the apprehension of the accused person and cause him to be brought before the court.'

And s 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 provides:

I '217. Where in any case to which s 226 does not apply, an accused being tried by a subordinate court fails to appear on the date fixed for the continuation of the hearing after the close A of the prosecution case or on the date fixed for the passing of a sentence, the court may, if it is satisfied that the accused's attendance cannot be secured without undue delay or expense, proceed to dispose of the case in accordance with the provisions of s 231 as if the accused being present, has failed to make any statement or B adduce any further evidence, in relation to any sentence which the court may pass; save that:

LUBUVA JA

(a) where the accused so fails to appear but his advocate appears, the advocate shall subject to the provisions of this Act, be entitled to call any defence witness and to address the court as if the accused has been or is C convicted, and the advocate shall be entitled to call any witness and to address the court on matters relevant to any sentence which the court may pass; and

(b) where the accused appears on any subsequent date to which the proceedings have been adjourned, the proceedings under this section on the day or days on which the accused was absent shall not be invalid by D reason only of his absence.'

As s 231 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 provides for the defence of an accused person, it is important to set it out here. It reads: E

'231(1) At the close of the evidence in support of the charge, if it appears to the court that a case is made against the accused person sufficiently to require him to make a defence either in relation to the offence with which he is charged or in relation to any other offence of which under the provisions of s 312-321 inclusive of this Act, he is liable F to be convicted, the court shall again explain inclusive substance of the charge to the accused and inform him of his right.

(a) to give evidence whether or not on oath or affirmation on his own behalf, G

(b) to call witnesses in his defence; and shall then ask the accused person or his advocate, if it is intended to exercise any of the above rights and shall record the answer etc.'

These are very clear provisions governing criminal proceedings. The importance of trial courts to H strictly comply with laid down rules of procedure need not be overemphasized. They are the basic guidelines in the process of administering justice in courts. In our view, in order for the courts to apply these rules properly, firstly, it is necessary to have a clear understanding of such provisions and the rationale behind them. Secondly, the rules must be looked into within the whole context and I not singly. If a particular rule of procedure is

A considered in isolation, there is the danger of applying such a rule in circumstances which are otherwise inappropriate.

In the instant case, the above cited rules of procedure laid down under the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 have to be read together in order to determine at what stage an accused person can be B convicted and sentenced in absentia. In our understanding, various provisions of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 as set out above, were among other reasons aimed at speeding up trials. For instance the non-appearance of the accused persons on the dates fixed for the hearing of the case due to reasons which could otherwise be avoided accounts for further delays in the disposal of C cases. In order to minimize delays of this kind, sections 226 and 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 were enacted. However, in doing so, the cardinal principle of affording opportunity to the parties D to be heard is not to be overlooked. For that reason, s 226(2) makes provision for the court to set aside a conviction of a person sentenced in absentia once the court is satisfied that the absence was due to causes beyond the control of the accused. This accords to the accused person an opportunity to be heard in defence against the prosecution case made against him. It must be made E quite clear that only prior to the close of the prosecution case, in circumstances set out therein, s 226 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 is applicable. Beyond that stage this section is inapplicable from where s 227 takes over. In the instant case, we are convinced that the trial magistrate was confused in the application of both ss 226 and 227 when he proceeded with the case under s 226 but F ended up by invoking s 227 in sentencing. These sections cover two different situations.

As already demonstrated in the present case, the appellants absconded at the stage of the G proceedings when the prosecution had not closed their case. The evidence of the arresting officer (PW4) was taken when the appellants were at large. Then the prosecution case was closed and the judgment was handed down purportedly under the provisions of s 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985. The question arises as to whether this section was properly applied at the stage of the case H reached. To our mind, the operative words of this section are clear. That the section can only be invoked when and accused person being tried by a subordinate court fails to appear in court on the date fixed for the continuation of the hearing after the close of the prosecution case or the date fixed for the passing of a sentence. In this case, this stage had not been reached as the case for the I prosecution had not been closed. We are of the settled view that the general spirit behind the provisions of s 227 read together with s 231 and ss 312 to 321 is to deal A with the proceedings which have reached the stage beyond the close of the evidence in support of the prosecution case. In the result on a close scrutiny of the general scheme and objective of these provisions of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985, we are satisfied that the trial magistrate misapplied B the provisions of s 227. The circumstances of the case and the stage reached in the proceedings are not, in our view those envisaged for the application of this section. Unfortunately, the learned judge on appeal to the High Court, fell into the same error.

1994 TLR p61

LUBUVA JA

Having taken the view that s 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 was misapplied, what should be C done next in this case? In order to resolve this matter, we have addressed ourselves seriously on the rationale behind the provisions of s 226. It is our understanding that unlike s 227 which covers proceedings from the stage after the close of the prosecution case, s 226(2) enables proceedings D which were proceeded with to conviction from the stage before the close of the prosecution to be reopened if the court is satisfied that the accused's absence was justified. In these circumstances we are satisfied that the justice of the case would be met if the discretionary powers under the provisions of subclause 2 of s 226 of the Criminal procedure Act 1985 were invoked. That is to have E the case re-opened in terms of the provisions of this section whereby if the court is satisfied that the appellant had justifiable reasons for his absence it could hear his (appellant) defence. The right to be heard is a cornerstone principle of justice. The appellants should have been afforded that F opportunity. Then on the basis of such defence and the evidence of the prosecution already at hand, judgment could be delivered. On this we are in agreement with Mr Mono, learned Principal State Attorney who argued us to render the matter back to the trial Court if s 227 was wrongly applied. G

Consequently, for these reasons the appeal is allowed to the extent explained. In terms of Rule 36 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules 1979 the proceedings are remitted to the trial Court with direction to deal with the matter in compliance with the provisions of subclause (2) of s 226 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985. H

1994 TLR p62

A

[zRPz]STEPHANO NDAGIZI AND JAMANNE SAID v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 62 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Lubuva JJA

B CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 24 OF 1992

13 December, 1993

C (From the judgment of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Lugakingira, J)

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Robbery with violence and armed robbery - Two distinct offences D attracting distinct punishments.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Cognate offences and substituted conviction - Armed robbery and robbery with E violence - Whether a conviction for armed robbery may be substituted for robbery with violence.

-Headnote

The house of one Ramadhani Hassani was broken into and some items stolen therefrom on account of which the two appellants were convicted by the District Court of Ilala of the offence of robbery with violence contrary to ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. Their appeal to the High Court of Tanzania F failed. On further appeal they claimed they did not commit armed robbery so their punishment should have been fifteen and not thirty years.

Held:

(i) The charge confronting the appellants was robbery with violence contrary to s 285 of the penal code, not armed robbery contrary to ss 285 and 286; these are two distinct offences with two distinct punishments

G (ii) Armed robbery, punishable with a minimum sentence of thirty years' imprisonment, is a more serious offence than robbery with violence, punishable with a minimum sentence of fifteen years' imprisonment; a conviction for armed robbery therefore, could not be legally substituted for robbery with violence;

H (iii) For a sentence of thirty years' imprisonment to be imposed, the charge must be armed robbery.

Case Information

Appeal against conviction dismissed; appeal against sentence allowed.

Cases referred to:

I (1) Leonard Raphael and Another v Republic Court of Appeal, Criminal Appeal No 4 of 1992 (unreported).

1994 TLR p63

(2) John Joseph Onenge and Another v Republic [1993] TLR 131. A

Sengwaji, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Ramadhani, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the court.

On the night of 14 September 1990 the house of one Ramadhani Hassani (PW1) was broken into B and some items of property belonging to him were stolen. The two appellants, Stephano Ndagizi and Jumanne Said, were identified by PW1, his wife, Zena Saidi (PW2), their tenant, Rajabu Mkwanyu C (PW5) and by their neighbour, Manoto Sylvester (PW3), to have been the offenders. So the two appellants were convicted by the District Court of Ilala at Kivukoni of the offence of robbery with violence contrary to ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. The appellants were sentenced to a term of imprisonment of thirty years each. D

They appealed to the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam (Lugakingira J) but they were unsuccessful. This is their second appeal and hence we shall deal with points of law only.

The appellants appeared in person but the respondent was represented by Mr Sengwaji, learned E State Attorney. The appellants had only one point of law in their six grounds of appeal. However, that one point is really crucial though it has not been properly articulated. In their ground number three, the appellants have complained against excessive punishment. They have pointed out `thirty years imprisonment is a corporal punishment (sic) which is imposed for only in the offence of armed F robbery, not robbery with violence'. Admittedly the language is broken but the message is clear. They argue that there are two offences: armed robbery and robbery with violence and that the minimum punishment of thirty years is for the former, that is armed robbery. They went further to argue that the G word `armed' has not been defined - probably they mean not defined under the Penal Code. However, they have pointed out that the definition of that word in the Arms and Ammunition Ordinance, cap 223 does not include `panga, shoka, rungu, nondo or knife'. As those were the items it was said they had in their possession on the fateful night, they argued, they did not commit armed H robbery so their punishment should have been fifteen and not thirty years.

Mr Sengwaji started by challenging that reasoning. We are satisfied that in this appeal it is not necessary to determine whether or not a person with any of the items enumerated by the appellants, I that is

1994 TLR p64

RAMADHANI JA

A `panga, shoka, rungu, nondo or knife', can be properly said to be armed. The real point of law is not whether the appellants were armed or not. Mr Sengwaji agreed with the court that the charge which confronted the appellants was robbery with violence contrary to s 285 of the Penal Code and not armed robbery contrary to ss 285 and 286. These are two distinct offences: the former, that is B robbery with violence, attracts a minimum punishment of fifteen years while the latter, armed robbery, is visited with a minimum of thirty years imprisonment. The charge has to be very categoric on the offence facing an accused person.

C Here the charge was robbery with violence and the appellants were convicted of that despite the fact that the evidence shows that they carried some weapons. They were not charged with armed robbery. As armed robbery is more serious than robbery with violence, though cognate to it, legally there could not be a substituted conviction. So the conviction is of robbery with violence, punishable D with a minimum of fifteen years and not thirty years.

We have already decided that for a sentence of thirty years imprisonment to be imposed, the charge must be armed robbery. This was in Leonard Raphael and another v R (1) following our earlier decision in John Joseph Onange and another v R (2).

E Act 10 of 1989 has amended the Minimum Sentences Act 1972 by adding a new para (bb) to s 5 which reads:

`(bb) Where any person is convicted of armed robbery the Court shall sentence him to imprisonment for a term of F not less than thirty years.'

Thus, as we have already said above, there is a specific offence of armed robbery. However, the Second Schedule to the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 giving Forms of Stating Offences in G Information does prescribe in item 8 the format `Robbery with violence, contrary to s 285 of the Penal Code, Act 10 of 1989 has not added a new format of `Armed Robbery, contrary to s 285 and 286'. It is easy to see, therefore, why those with the duty of framing charges have been repeatedly omitted to H accused persons specifically with `armed robbery'. We hope that the Director of Public Prosecutions will take the necessary steps to inform those who act on his behalf of these decisions and check against this mistake.

The appeal against conviction is dismissed but that against sentence is allowed. The sentence of thirty years given to the appellants is set aside and in its stead we order that they serve fifteen years I imprisonment from the date they were sentenced.

1994 TLR p65

A

[zRPz]PASCAL KITIGWA v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 65 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 161 OF 1991 B

15 December, 1993

(From the judgment of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Masanche, J) C

Flynote

Evidence - Evidence of a co-accused - Whether evidence of a co-accused may form the basis of conviction - Section 30 of the Evidence Act 1967.

Evidence - Accomplice's evidence - Whether court may convict on accomplice's evidence without corroboration. D

Evidence - Corroboration - What may constitute corroborative evidence.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Right of the accused to be defended by advocate - Trial court ordered trial to proceed in the absence of defence advocate - Consequences thereof. E

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Penal legislation - Retrospective application of penal legislation - Sentence imposed came into operation after commission of the offence - Whether proper.

-Headnote

The appellant, together with two others, were jointly charged and convicted of robbery with violence F by the Ilala District Court, and sentenced to thirty years imprisonment and corporal punishment. His appeal to the High Court was unsuccessful. He appealed further to the Court of Appeal complaining that it was unfair for the Trial Magistrate to proceed with the hearing of the case after the defence G advocate had left, without giving the applicant an opportunity to get another advocate. He also argued that it was wrong for the trial court to convict on the evidence of a co-accused.

Held:

(i) The second accused in the trial court was an accomplice: a participant to the crime H charged;

(ii) Evidence from a co-accused as in this case is accomplice's evidence and a court may convict on accomplice's evidence without corroboration if it is convinced that the evidence is true, and provided it warns itself of the dangers of convicting on uncorroborated I accomplice's evidence;

(iii) Although the law does not say that conviction on uncorroborated

1994 TLR p66

A accomplice's evidence is illegal, it is still unsafe, as a matter of practice, to uphold a conviction cased on the uncorroborated evidence of a co-accused;

(iv) Corroborative evidence may be circumstantial and may well come from the words or conduct of the accused and, in this case, the appellant independently corroborated the evidence of the co-accused;

B (v) The trial court was in error in not giving a last chance to the appellant to get another advocate when attention was drawn to the fact that his advocate was absent; but in the circumstances of this case the error did not prejudice the appellant or occasion a failure of justice;

(vi) It was wrong to impose a sentence prescribed by a law which came into operation after the C commission of the offence.

Case Information

Appeal against conviction dismissed; appeal against sentence allowed.

Cases referred to:

(1) R v Saidi Magombe [1946] EACA 1645.

D (2) Migezo Mbinga v Uganda [1967] EA 71.

(3) Laurent Joseph and Another v R [1981] TLR 351.

Tendwa for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

E Lubuva, JA delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

The appellant together with Hamisi Selemani and Issa were jointly charged in the District Court if Ilala with robbery with violence contrary to ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. He was convicted as F charged and sentenced to thirty years imprisonment. In addition, he was condemned to corporal punishment of ten strokes. He unsuccessfully appealed to the High Court (Masanche J). He is now appealing to this Court against both the conviction and sentence.

G The facts of the case as found by both courts below are as following: On 11 December 1989, at about 7 pm, Hassan Abdallah (PW2) the complainant set out from his residence in Upanga area for an outing. He was driving a motor vehicle registration No TZ 77533. Before he had gone far from his house, he stopped over at a nearby shop to buy some cigarettes. From the shop as the complainant H was walking back to the motor vehicle he was confronted by one person who was dressed in police uniform. As this self styled policeman was inquiring from the complainant (PW2) about the motor vehicle, three other people joined in. They were also dressed in police uniform. At gun point the motor vehicle was forcefully driven away together with the complainant who, in the process I underwent traumatic torture and horror. The complainant was eventually abandoned in Kawe area within the A outskirts of Dar es Salaam in a very distressed condition. The bandits vanished with the motor vehicle.

In the course of investigation, on 13 December 1989 the motor vehicle was found in Mwananyamala at the house of one Hamisi (accused No 1) who was jointly charged with the appellant. He was B acquitted at the trial before the District Court. Issa Hamisi the son of Hamisi Selemani was the other accused (accused No 2) who was charged with the appellant for receiving stolen property and was sentenced to three years imprisonment. He did not appeal. The appellant and two of his friends C (Emmanuel and Frank) who could not be traced had brought the motor vehicle to this house in Mwananyamala from where it was recovered resulting in the arrest and prosecution of the appellant, (third accused), Hamisi Selemani (first accused) and Issa Hamisi (second accused).

The appellant appeared before us in person. The respondent was represented by Mr J B Tendwa, D learned Senior State Attorney. At the hearing of the appeal, the appellant emphasized his complaint that it was unfair for the trial magistrate to proceed with the hearing of the case in the absence of his advocate. He should have been given the opportunity to look for another counsel since the advocate E Mr Mchora could not continue to conduct this appeal on the basis of the ground set out in his field memorandum of appeal.

In his first ground of appeal, the appellant asserts that the learned judge erred in law in supporting a conviction which was based on the evidence of a co-accused. He cited s 30 of the Evidence Act F 1967 in support of his argument that the evidence of the co-accused, (second accused) should not have been admitted since it was made in circumstances of such a nature as was likely to cause an untrue admission of guilty. He argued further that as the confession of the second accused was G induced, his evidence should not have been acted upon. Mr Tendwa, Senior State Attorney briefly stated that both the courts below properly addressed themselves on this point and relying on the provisions of s 142 of the Evidence Act 1967, accepted the evidence of the co-accused (second accused). He argued that this ground of appeal was without substance. H

On record, it is quite clear that both the trial magistrate and the learned judge on first appeal seriously and properly directed themselves to this important issue. It raises a fundamental aspect on which the evidence implicating the appellant hinges. The trial magistrate in a commendable manner dwelt at I length in analyzing the

A evidence of the second accused as a co-accused. Likewise, the learned judge addressed himself on the matter saying:

> `Evidence from a co-accused is accomplice evidence but the law does not say that a court cannot convict on accomplice evidence without corroboration. It can convict if it is convinced that the evidence could be no other than B true, provided it warns itself of the dangers of convicting on an accomplice's evidence without corroboration.'

The learned judge could not fault the trial magistrate on her approach towards the evidence of an C accomplice. He concluded that on the evidence given in court together with the cautioned statement the trial magistrate was satisfied that the appellant was one of those who robbed the complainant (PW2). We think the learned judge was correct. In regard to the second accused at the trial (Issa D Hamisi) there is no doubt in our mind, that he was an accomplice for the following reasons. One, the second accused received the motor vehicle which was brought to his house by the appellant together with the other two persons who are at large (Emmanuel and Frank) on the understanding that it would be taken on safari the following day. Second, soon after the motor vehicle had been E brought to the house of the second accused the carpets, the registration number plate; seat covers, and tyre of the car were removed with the assistance of the second accused. Such evidence in our view shows clearly that the second accused was aware or had reason to suspect that the car had F been stolen. He was therefore a participant to the crime - participet criminis. We will now examine the legal effect of the evidence of the accomplice, the second accused at the trial (DW2) against the appellant. It is common knowledge that under s 142 of the Evidence Act 1967, the evidence of an accomplice is admissible against a co-accused. It provides:

G `142. `An accomplice shall be a competent witness against an accused person; and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice.'

H However, as correctly observed by the trial magistrate and the learned judge, even though the law is such that a conviction based on uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is not illegal, still as a matter of practice, the then Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa and this Court have persistently held that it is unsafe to uphold a conviction based on uncorroborated evidence of a co-accused.

I In this case, the trial magistrate as well as the learned judge on first appeal apart from warning themselves of the danger of convicting on uncorroborated evidence of A the second accused (DW2), went further to look for other evidence implicating the appellant. It is common ground that corroborative evidence may well be circumstantial or may be forthcoming from the conduct or words of the accused. On this, numerous decisions have been made by the then B Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa - see R v Saidi Magombe (1) and Migezo Mbinga v Uganda (2). On record, the trial magistrate addressed herself to the cautioned statement of the appellant. Assistant Inspector Tuomas Iddi Semkondo, the investigation officer, took the cautioned statement of the appellant. We are satisfied that it was a voluntary statement made without any inducement or C torture as correctly found by the learned trial magistrate. In that statement, the appellant, on his own volition mentions Emmanuel and Frank as the other people who were involved in the robbery of the car. We think the learned trial magistrate properly took that view. If the appellant had not participated D in the commission of the offence, how was he able to know of Frank and Emmanuel who are still at large as participants to the crime. It had not been suggested to him by anybody, it came from him voluntarily. In the circumstances, we think the learned trial magistrate correctly held that this conduct E of the appellant independently corroborated the evidence of the co-accused, the second accused at the trial.

1994 TLR p69

LUBUVA JA

On this ground, we are convinced that both the lower courts having believed the evidence of Issa Hamisi (DW2) as truthful, and warning themselves of the danger of convicting on the evidence of an F accomplice whose evidence was corroborated by the conduct of the appellant, there was no misdirection or error on the part of the learned judge.

Ground two of the appeal concerns legal representation. It complains against the decision of the trial magistrate to proceed with the trial of the case in the absence of Mr Mchora, advocate for the G appellant. It deprived the appellant of his right to legal representation. On this important legal point, at first Mr Tendwa learned Senior State Attorney for the Republic, was not inclined to deal with it at length because the matter was not raised on appeal before the High Court. However, at the H suggestion of the Court, he submitted that the advocate's absence at the trial did not prejudice the determination of the case. Mr Tendwa finally contended that the appellant had ample opportunity of defending himself as well as cross examining the witnesses at the trial on the various aspects of the case. I

1994 TLR p70

LUBUVA JA

A From the record, it is apparent that Mr Mchora, learned advocate had been appearing for the appellant from the beginning of the trial. The accused persons (first and second) were not represented throughout the trial. The trial started on 15 July 1989 and since then, on different days, B evidence had been taken from a total of four prosecution witnesses in the presence of Mr Mchora who cross-examined such witnesses. After the fourth prosecution witness had testified on 24 August 1989, the case was adjourned until 5 September 1989 for continued hearing. On 5 September 1989 when the case was called out for hearing Mr Mchora for the appellant was absent without any C information to the court. The case was again adjourned until 19 September 1989. On 19 September 1989 again Mr Mchora was absent without any information. The case was once again adjourned until 29 September 1989 for mention and 5 October 1989 for hearing. The case was mentioned on 29 September 1989 when 5 October 1989 was confirmed as the date for hearing. On 5 October 1989 D when the case was called out for hearing Mr Mchora was again absent. Then, the appellant stated:

`I have not received any information about my advocate.'

E The court then recorded:

`Advocate of third accused Mr Mchora is absent without cause. We will proceed with hearing.'

F The trial then proceeded to finality without the appellant's advocate. The appellant defended himself as the other accused (first and second) did.

The main issue for consideration on this ground is whether the absence of the advocate did G prejudice the case of the appellant. That is, if the advocate was present, would it have affected the determination of the case against the appellant. In the case of Laurent Joseph and another v Republic (3) we had the occasion to observe on the importance of affording opportunity to accused H persons to have legal representation during trial. It is more pertinent as it happened in the instant case where the party concerned had engaged the service of an advocate. In the case cited (supra) the appellant was the only one among the other accused persons in a murder charge who was not represented. In the circumstances, because it was not certain if his defence would have been I affected had the appellant been represented, we ordered a retrial of the case for all the accused persons. In the instant case, contrary to the case cited above, the appellant was the only one who was represented by counsel. The rest of the A accused were not represented.

In view of the time honoured practice, with respect, we think the learned trial magistrate was in error in not giving a last chance opportunity to the appellant when the attention of the court was drawn to the fact that the advocate was absent. It would then be open to the appellant either to impress upon B Mr Mchora to appear at the next date set for hearing or to arrange to get another advocate. However, though the trial magistrate erred on this point, we are of the settled view that in the circumstances of the case the error did not prejudice or occasion a failure of justice on the part of the appellant. In our C view, this is because, first, the appellant's engagement of the service of an advocate is no justification for protracted and undue delay in the disposal of proceedings before the court due to the advocate's failure to attend court trial. In this case Mr Mchora, learned advocate had on a number of D occasions absented himself from the court without information. The court had obliged to and granted several adjournments. Second, and more importantly, the main line of defence of the appellant is the evidence of DW2 (second accused) as a co-accused. We have already sufficiently addressed ourselves to this evidence. It is an issue which was looked into in the light of the statutory E provisions of s 142 of the Evidence Act 1967, and the rule of practice pertaining to the evidence of an accomplice. Thirdly, the appellant's cautioned statement (exh P5) was reiterated by the second accused (DW2). To all these, the learned trial magistrate addressed herself sufficiently. Therefore, F we do not think that the presence of the advocate would have made any difference to the legal defence of the appellant. We are convinced that the case of the appellant was not prejudiced when the learned magistrate proceeded with the trial in the absence of the appellant's counsel. We now turn to ground three. It concerned the legality of the sentence imposed. Mr Tendwa, Senior State G Attorney, conceded that it was an error on the part of the learned trial magistrate to invoke the provisions of Act 10 of 1989 in this case. According to Mr Tendwa, the offence took place on 11 February 1989. In that case, in terms of the provisions of s 13(6)(c) of the Constitution of the United H Republic of Tanzania, this Act which provides for a minimum of thirty years imprisonment could not be applied. This section of the Constitution provides:

`13(6)(c) No person shall be punished for any act which before its commission was not defined as such offence, and no penalty imposed I

A for any criminal offence shall be heavier than the penalty in force at the time the offence was committed.'

And s 49 of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act, chap 1 of the laws provides:

B `49. Where an act constitutes an offence and penalty for such offence is amended between the time of the commission of such offence and the conviction thereof; the offender shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be liable to the penalty prescribed at the time of the commission of such offence.'

C Such being the position of the law, and as correctly conceded by Mr Tendwa learned Senior State Attorney, it is clear that it was wrong to apply Act 10 of 1989 which came into operation after commission of the offence. To do so means applying a penal legislation retrospectively which is in D conflict with the above cited legislative provisions. With respect, this is an aspect which the learned judge did not address himself. The applicable legislation at the time of the commission of the offence is the Minimum Sentences Act 1967 and the Penal Code. Accordingly, we set aside the sentence of E thirty years imprisonment and the order of corporal punishment. The gravity of the offence needs no further explanation. The minimum sentence prescribed for such an offence under the law as it stood then was seven years imprisonment and the upper limit set under the Penal Code is twenty years. We accordingly substitute a sentence of fifteen years imprisonment therefore.

F Consequently, for reasons explained, the appeal against conviction is dismissed and the appeal against sentence is allowed to the extent explained above.

1994 TLR p73

A

[zRPz]JAMES F GWAGILO v ATTORNEY GENERAL 1994 TLR 73 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Mwalusanya J

CIVIL CASE NO. 23 OF 1993 B

10 January, 1994

Flynote

Civil Service - Removal of civil servant from service in the public interest - Section 19 of the Civil Servant Act 1989. C

Public Interest - Power of the President to remove civil servants in the public interest - What constitutes public interest.

Jurisdiction - Ouster of jurisdiction - Statutory provision that an act of the President shall not be enquired into by any court - Effect thereof - Section 23(2)(a) of the Civil Service Act 1989. D

-Headnote

The plaintiff, a seasoned civil servant, was charged under the Economic and Organised Crime Control Act 1984 and acquitted. Then disciplinary proceedings were instituted against him under the Civil Service Regulations; the proceedings ended in his favour. He was then removed from office by, as stated in the letter communicating the decision to remove him, the President directing that he be E removed in the public interest. He filed a suit for a declaration that his removal from office was wrongful. The defendant raised a preliminary point to the effect that the court had no jurisdiction to try the case because the President had a prerogative power to remove a civil servant in the public interest; that civil servants held office at the pleasure of the President; and that the President's F decision to remove a civil servant in the public interest could not be enquired into by any court.

Held:

(i) The prerogative power of the Crown to dismiss a civil servant at will ended, and did not devolve to the President, when Tanganyika became a Republic in 1962; instead the G President could only remove a civil servant in the public interest under s 20(3) of the Civil Service Act 1962, Cap 509, now replaced by the Civil Service Act 1989 (Act No 16 of 1989);

(ii) Termination of a civil servant at the will of the President is not the same thing as removal in the public interest; in the former the president need not show the cause for the discharge H while in the latter he must show the public interest being served;

(iii) When removing a civil servant in the public interest, the President is bound to give reasons indicating the public interest to be served; under the Constitution the civil servant

so I removed has the right to appeal against, or to apply for judicial review of, that removal and if

1994 TLR p74

A no reasons are given therefore, that constitutional right will be rendered ineffective and illusory;

(iv) Disclosure of reasons for removal of a civil servant in the public interest is also necessary so as to reduce the possibility of casualness, arbitrariness and abuse of power in the decision making process and to instill public confidence in it and maintain its integrity, and to B satisfy a basic need for fair play;

(v) The notion of a subjective or unfettered discretion is contrary to the Rule of Law; although the Civil Service Act 1989 says that the President may remove a civil servant from office if he considers it to be in the public interest to do so, the discretion of the President must C nevertheless be exercised objectively and the High Court may enquire into that exercise to see if it was properly exercised;

(vi) Statutory clauses ousting the jurisdiction of the courts are ineffective to exclude the power of the High Court to exercise its supervisory role of judicial review conferred on it by article D 108(2) of the Constitution;

(vii) The provisions of ss 6 and 7 of the Pensions Ordinance which say an officer removed from service in the public interest has no right to compensation for past services and no right to other allowances he is otherwise entitled to, and which bar such officer from presenting his claim in court are unconstitutional and void; the plaintiff is at liberty to present his claim in E court.

Case Information

Preliminary object overruled.

Cases referred to:

(1) Opoloto v Uganda [1969] EA 63.

F (2) Padfield v Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, [1968] AC 997.

(3) Minister of National Revenue v Wright's Canadian Ropes Ltd, [1947] AC 109.

(4) Re: In the Matter of Amir Hamza Umar and the Minister for Local Government, HC-MZA-Misc Civil Cause No 9 of 1989 (unreported).

(5) Osmond v Public Service Board [1985] LRC (Const) 1041.

G (6) SP Quota v Union of India [1982] AIR (SC) 149.

(7) Agro-Industries v Attorney General [1994] TLR 43.

(8) Secretary of State for Education and Science v Metropolitan Borough of Tameside [1976] 3 All ER 665.

(9) Secretary of State for Employment v Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen (No 2) [1972] 2 QB 455.

H (10) Attorney General of St Christopher, Nevis and Anguilla v Reynolds [1979] 3 All ER 129.

(11) Laker Airways Ltd v Department of Trade [1977] 2 All ER 182.

(12) Anisminic Ltd v Foreign Compensation Commission [1969] 2 AC 147.

(13) Re: Racal Communications [1980] 2 All ER 634.

(14) Attorney General v Lesinoi Ndeanai [1980] TLR 214.

I (15) Ally Linus v Tanzania Harbours Authority CAT Civil Appeal 2/1983 (unreported).

1994 TLR p75

(16) Dr Kaijage v Esso Standard Tanzania Ltd CA - DSM - Civil Appeal No 10/1982 A (unreported).

(17) Council of Civil Service Unions v Minister for Civil Service [1984] 3 All ER 935.

(18) Sanai Murumbe v Muhere Chacha [1990] TLR 54.

(19) Director of Public Prosecution v Daudi Pete [1993] TLR 22.

(20) Kukutia Ole Pumbun v Attorney General [1993] TLR 159. B

Mbezi, for the Plaintiff.

Nyabiri, for the Defendant.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwalusanya, J: Delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

The power of the President of the United Republic of Tanzania to remove a civil servant from service C in public interest is being challenged in this case. The question is, does the President have the authority to remove someone in the public service in public interest disclosing what that public interest is? Under s 19 of the Civil Service Act 16 of 1989 it is provided: D

`19. The President may remove a civil servant from the service of the Republic if he considers it in the public interest to do so.'

The issue is, what is in public interest? Is the word of the President final? In other words in deciding E as to whether the decision was in public interest, what test to apply, a subjective test or an objective test? The State Attorney Mr Nyabiri has argued that the test is subjective and so the decision of the President cannot be questioned in court. F

There is another question as to whether this court has jurisdiction to inquire as to whether the President complied with the law. Under s 23(2)(a) of the Civil Service Act 16 of 1989 it is provided:

`23(2)(a)The question whether the President has validly performed any function under this Act shall not be inquired into by or in any court.' G

Have the courts been rendered impotent by that provision ousting the jurisdiction of the courts? These are the questions that I have been invited to answer in this case.

The plaintiff in this case is a seasoned civil servant one Mr James Funke Gwagilo who until 15 May H 1990 was a Regional Development Director for Tabora Region. By a letter dated 29 December 1990 he was informed by the Principal Secretary (Establishment) that `the President under s 19(3) of the Civil Service Act 16 of 1989 and s 8(f) of the Pensions Ordinance cap 371 and Standing Order F35 has directed that you are retired from the public service I

1994 TLR p76

MWALUSANYA J

A in public interest with effect from 15 May 1990'. No reasons were disclosed as to what rendered the retirement to be of interest to the public at large. However the letter states that the retired servant would be paid all his pension due.

Now the said plaintiff has filed a suit for a declaration that his retirement in public interest was B wrongful. He prays to be declared as still a lawful employee of the government. He claims Shs 47,559,511/60 as damages for wrongful retirement and his arrears of salary and other allowances that he was entitled to. He also claims Shs 157,717,644/60 as special damages. The Government C through the State Attorney Mr Nyabiri has raised a preliminary point to the effect that this court has no jurisdiction to try this case. However the plaintiff through his advocate Mr Mbezi has contended that this court has the jurisdiction to try the case.

D First the State Attorney Mr Nyabiri has argued that the President under article 36(2) of the Constitution has the prerogative power to terminate or remove a civil servant in the public service in public interest. He said that power is supplemented by the Government Standing Order F35 which states that a civil servant holds his office at the pleasure of the President as such he can be dismissed at will. Counsel for the plaintiff Mr Mbezi has rightly pointed out that the correct Standing E Order is F44, which states that a civil servant holds his office at the pleasure of the President.

I will be quick to point out that the Standing Orders have no force of law. Those standing orders have F been superseded by the provision of the Civil Service Act 16 of 1989 and the Constitution. The Standing Orders had validity only during the colonial period when the Crown could dismiss a civil servant at will as he held office at the pleasure of the Crown. When Tanganyika became a Republic G in 1962 the prerogative power of the Crown to dismiss a civil servant at will did not devolve to the President. Instead the President could only remove a civil servant not at will but in public interest as per s 20(3) of the Civil Service Act 1962, cap 509. Therefore the prerogative to dismiss at will has been abrogated. As Prof Abraham Kiapi points out in his book Civil Service Laws in East Africa H (1984) East African Literature Bureau at 54:

> The power to dismiss can only be exercised if it is in the public interest. There is a distinction between this and the power to dismiss at will exercisable by the Crown in England or the President in Uganda. Whereas under the prerogative the Crown need not state why an officer is being dismissed and no cause need be shown for the I discharge, under the Tanzania Act, the President must act if the > public interest so requires. There must exist some circumstance to enable the President to form the opinion that the A removal of an officer is in the public interest.

In fact article 36(2) of our 1977 Constitution which the State Attorney has cited reinforces the view that the President has no power to dismiss a civil servant at will, contrary to what the Standing Order B provides. Article 36(2) of the Constitution clearly provides that the President has no power to terminate or remove someone in public interest except in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution or the law of the land. Now the only law available for termination or removal in public interest is the Civil Service Act 16 of 1989. C

In the same breath it may be of interest to note the observation of Prof McAuslan in his book Administration Law in Kenya where at 10 he states: D

It would then follow that wrongful dismissal would be actionable, as a breach of contract of employment. In Kenya neither the Constitution nor the regulations provide for dismissal at pleasure by the President or the Public Service Commission, only termination of appointment in the Public interest; this is very different from dismissal. It would E seem to follow therefore that there is a proper contractual relationship between the Kenya Government and the servants, one in which, it is true, all the cards are stacked on one side, but that is not uncommon these days and it represents a step forward from the colonial position. F

I hope by now the State Attorney Mr Nyabiri has understood that the Government Standing Orders do not represent the true state of the law. Mr Nyabiri was also quite wrong to think that the Uganda case of Opoloto v Uganda (1) represents the true position of the law. That case held that the President of G Uganda had the power to dismiss a civil servant at will. That is the position in Uganda where the Constitution of Uganda stated that on the attainment of Republican status, the prerogative powers of the Crown became vested in the President of Uganda. But in the 1977 Constitution of Tanzania we have no such provision. The President of Tanzania has no prerogative power to dismiss a civil H servant at will but in terms of article 36(2) of our Constitution he must remove someone in the civil service in accordance with the law ie Civil Service Act 16 of 1989.

Now the next question is whether removal in public interest is equivalent to termination at the will of the President. The answer is I

1994 TLR p78

MWALUSANYA J

A an emphatic no. As Prof Abraham Kiapi rightly points out in the passage I have quoted above, whereas in the termination at will the Crown need not show the cause for the discharge, under our law the President must state what the interest of the public is being served. To quote his word: `There must exist some circumstance to enable the President to form the opinion that the removal of B an officer is in public interest.' The President cannot and should not just out of the blue, state that he was removing someone in public interest without disclosing the interest of the public to be served. Otherwise he will be accused of acting arbitrarily and in a high-handed manner. In other words it will C be an abuse of power.

The duty to give reasons by the President when removing someone in the civil service in public interest is reinforced by the provisions of article 13(6)(a) of our Constitution. That provision states that every person whose rights and obligation are being determined by a public officer, has the right D of appeal or the right to another remedy against that decision. By the phrase `another remedy' there is envisaged the right to judicial review. But there can be no judicial review if the decision-maker has not given the reasons for his decision. As Lord Upjohn observed in the case of Padfield v Minister of E Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (2) at 1061

> . . . if he does not give any reason for his decision a court may be at liberty to come to the conclusion that he had no good reason for reaching that conclusion.

F No doubt the absence of reasons would render the constitutional right to appeal to judicial review ineffective and illusory. Consequently there is an implicit obligation to give reasons in order to facilitate and render meaningful the exercise of the right of appeal and judicial review.

Our Constitution in article 13(6)(a) must have intended the constitutional right of appeal and judicial G review to be an effective right and that the President by keeping silent cannot defeat the citizen's constitutional right. To hold otherwise would mean that the President could in almost every case, render the right of appeal and judicial review completely nugatory - see the decision of the Privy H Council in the case of Minister of National Revenue v Wright's Canadian Ropes Ltd (3) at 123. If reasons are not given for a decision by the President that will render it virtually impossible for the courts to perform their function of judicial review. If the basis and reasons for the impugned decision are not articulated it is difficult for a reviewing court to adjudge the validity of the decision. The courts I cannot exercise their duty to review unless they are advised of the considerations underlying the action under review. That is the common law rule also A all over the Commonwealth - see In the Matter of Amir Hamza Umar and the Minister for Local Government (4) and Osmond v Public Service Board (5). B

Another reason for requiring disclosure of reasons for retiring in public interest, is to ensure proper application of mind, to reduce the possibility of casualness and capricious. In brief to maintain the integrity of the decision-making process. The compulsion of disclosure of the public interest involved C guarantees consideration and introduces clarity. If reasons for an order are given there will be less scope for arbitrary or partial exercise of powers and the order ex-facie will indicate whether extraneous circumstances were taken into consideration by the President in reaching his decision. That will be an effective restraint on abuse of power. D

In addition to imposing a healthy discipline on the decision makers, public confidence in the decision-making process is enhanced by the knowledge that acceptable reasons have to be given by those who exercise administrative power. Besides, even if the decision is adverse, the person E affected may be convinced by the reasons to accept it as a reasonable and fair exercise of discretionary power.

Another important consideration underlying the requirement to give reasons as to why a servant is removed in public interest, is to satisfy a basic need for fair play. A person affected by an adverse F order is entitled to know why the decision has gone against him or her. What is required is not a detailed judgment but a brief and concise statement of reasons for the adverse decision.

Moreover, the obligation to give reasons, our President should note, also flows from the citizen's right to know and the right to have information which is an essential component of the freedom of speech and expression guaranteed under article 18 of our Constitution. The Supreme Court of India in the case of S P Quota v Union of India (6) declared the right to know from the guarantee of free speech in the Indian Constitution. I adopt that reasoning. Thus the rights to have information obliges the President and other authorities to disclose reasons for their decisions which affect citizen's rights.

It can be said with confidence that since article 13(6)(a) of our Constitution provides for the right of appeal and right of judicial review from every decision affecting citizen's rights, then ipso facto

1994 TLR p80

MWALUSANYA J

A it creates a third head of the principles of natural justice ranking equally with audi alteram partem (the rule against bias). This third head is the right to reasons from a decision-maker - that it is a denial of natural justice to refuse to give reasons to the party who lost. Thus the third pillar of the principles of natural justice is here to stay just as day follows night. In order that it be at no B disadvantage in point of latinity, this third arm of the principles of natural justice, should be referred to as nullum arbittrium sine rationibus.

So the State Attorney Mr Nyabiri was wrong as was the President to equate removal in public C interest with termination at the President's will or pleasure. There is a vast different between the two as adumbrated above.

Then Counsel for the Republic Mr Nyabiri argued that it is for the President and not the courts to determine what amounts to public interest. He said that the decision of the President is subjective D and that is why the legislation in question states that `if the President considers it' to be in public interest. So he said that the words used put it clearly that it is entirely in the discretion of the President to determine whether a particular decision is in public interest or not. I am quite certain that the State Attorney is wrong. In matters of this kind the test is an objective test and not a subjective E test. A similar expression was considered by the Tanzania Court of Appeal in the case of Agro Industries Ltd v Attorney-General (7) whose judgment was delivered on 23 April 1993. What was in F issue was the provision in s 10(2) of the Land Ordinance cap 113 which provides:

`Notwithstanding the provisions of ss (1) the President may revoke a right of occupancy if, in his opinion, it is in the public interest so to do.'

G In that case the revocation of right of occupancy was done by the President in favour of a trespasser (a public corporation) as against a lawful owner (a private company). The Tanzanian Court of Appeal, as per Ramadhani JA held that notwithstanding the wording suggesting a subjective H test the test to be applied was an objective test. He said at 14-15 of the typed judgment:

In the eyes of the law a trespasser is a trespasser be it a public enterprise or a private enterprise or an individual. So the crucial question is what action is in the public interest: to protect one with a legal title or to protect a I trespasser? What is at stake is the sanction of a legal right, and pertaining the right to property, against the use of naked force. Which of the two should be protected in the public interest? We are satisfied that public interest, as we A have stated to understand it, requires that legal property rights should be protected against trespassers. . . . Admittedly that subsection provides a subjective test and that is: in the opinion of the President. In this case that opinion was based on the recommendations of the PMO which did not describe Darbrew in its true colours that it was a trespasser. In fact the President was misled. If the President was seized of the full and correct situation he B would not, in our opinion, have used his name to protect a trespasser albeit a public enterprise. He would have been of the opinion that, that was not in the public interest'.

1994 TLR p81

MWALUSANYA J

The important point to remember is that the Tanzania Court of Appeal applied an objective test despite the wording of the statute in question. Ramadhani JA emphasized that point at pages 12-13 of his typed judgment by stating

`So what do we understand by an action being in the public interest? We think it is so when looked at objectively with impartial eyes the section is primarily and not incidentally in the interest of the public which depending on the matter at issue, may even comprise the individual or individuals concerned and it matter not whether the public is aware of it or not.'

So a matter which benefits an individual may be in public interest depending in the circumstances, for example where the basic human rights of an individual are at stake against an oppressive majority or public.
The subjective formulation of discretionary powers is not a new phenomenon, as often the executive attempt to restrict the scope of judicial review. But the courts do not consider themselves impotent in the face of those subjectively framed discretionary powers. In a case from England, the case of Secretary of State for Education and Science v Metropolitan Borough of Tameside (8) the statute stated that `if the Minister was satisfied' he could decide something. The issue was whether he could be challenged. Lord Wilberforce said at 681-2:

`This form of section is quite well known and at first sight might seem to exclude judicial review. Sections in this form may, no doubt, exclude judicial review on what is or has become a matter of pure judgment. But I do not think that they go further than that. If a judgment requires, before it can be made, the existence of some facts, then, although the evaluation of those facts if for the Secretary of State alone, the court must enquire whether these facts exist and have been taken into account, whether judgment has been made on a

A proper self-direction as to those facts, whether the judgment has not been made on other facts which ought not to have been taken into account. If these requirements are not met, then the exercise of judgment however bona fide it may be, becomes capable of challenge.'

B And a similar view is taken by Lord Denning MR in the case of Secretary of State for Employment v Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen (No 2) (9) where the statute said `if it appeared to the Minister' he could do certain things. Lord Denning MR at 492-3 said:

C `If it appears to the Secretary of State, this in my opinion does not mean that the Minister's decision is put beyond challenge. The scope available to the challenger depends very much on the subject matter with which the Minister is dealing. In this case I would think that if the Minister does not act in good faith or if he acts on extraneous considerations which ought not to influence him or if he plainly misdirects himself in fact or in law, it may well be that D a court would interfered. But when he honestly takes a view of the facts or the law which could reasonably be entertained, then his decision is not to be set aside simply because thereafter someone thinks that his view was wrong.'

E The Privy Council as per Lord Salmon expressed their sentiments in more biting language in the case of Attorney-General of St Christopher, Nevis and Anguilla v Reynolds (10). When it said at 656:

F `Their Lordships consider that it is impossible that a regulation . . . could be properly construed as conferring dictatorial powers on the Governor, and that is what the regulation would purport to do if the words "if the Governor is satisfied": mean "if the Governor thinks that etc". No doubt Hitler thought that the measures - even the most G atrocious measures - which he took were necessary and justifiable, but no reasonable man could think any such thing.'

The notion of a subjective or unfettered discretion is contrary to the Rule of Law. All power has legal H limits and the rule of law demands that the courts should be able to examine the exercise of discretionary power. If the discretion is not subject to review by a court of law then in our judgment that discretion would be in actual fact as arbitrary as if the provisions themselves do not restrict the I discretion to any purpose and to suggest otherwise would in our view be naïve.

1994 TLR p83

MWALUSANYA J

Perhaps at this juncture I should remind all and sundry that the importance of the role of the courts in A trammeling abuse of executive and administrative power of the government was fittingly put across by the eminent English judge Lord Denning MR in the case of Laker Airways Ltd v Dept of Trade (11) where he said at 194-5: B

`These courts have the authority and I would add the duty, in a proper case, when called upon to enquire into the exercising of a discretionary power by a Minister of his department. If it is found that this power has been exercised improperly or mistakenly so as to infringe unjustly on the legitimate rights and interests of the subject, then these C courts must so declare. They stand, as ever, between the executive and the subject, as Lord Atkin said in a famous passage, alert to see that any coercive action is justified in Law. To which I would add: alert to see that a discretionary power is not exceeded or misused.' D

So the learned State Attorney is patently wrong to think that since the discretionary powers of the President are subjectively worded, then the President is beyond challenge. As amply demonstrated above, the President can be challenged, so as to see that his power has been properly exercised. E

We now go to the ouster clauses and which sometime they are referred to as pricative clauses, which attempt to oust the jurisdiction of the courts. As stated earlier, the ouster clause here is contained in s 23(2)(a) of the Civil Service Act 16 of 1989. At the outset I would like to put down F plainly that ouster clauses are paper tigers meant to scare the unwary and the uninitiated in this realm of the law. They are simply put there as scarecrows. As Hon Mr Justice John Laws states in his article `Is the High Court the Guardian of Fundamental Constitutional Rights?' in the Public Law Journal Spring 1993 at 78: G

`Since the case of Anisminic v Foreign Compensation Commission (12) clauses purporting to oust the jurisdiction of the courts have fallen into disuse. To oust the courts power of review is necessary to put some party above the H law or at least to make it and not the court the judge of what the law is, which is the same thing. The courts will presume against the conferment of such a power.'

The same view was expressed by Lord Diplock with characteristic pungency in the case of Re Racal Communications (13): I

1994 TLR p84

MWALUSANYA J

A `It proceeds on the presumption that when Parliament confers on an administration tribunal or authority, as distinct from a court of law, power to decide a particular question defined by the Act, conferring the power, Parliament intends to confine that power to answering the question as it has been so defined and if there has been any doubt as to what that question is, this is a matter for courts of law to resolve in fulfilment of their constitutional role as B interpreters of the written law and expounders of the common law and rules of equity.'

To be sure, ouster clauses are ineffective to exclude the power of the High Court to exercise its C supervisory role as conferred on it by article 108(2) of our Constitution over inferior tribunals and public authorities. It is axiomatic that all statutory power conferred on public officers including the President are subject to supervision by the High Court exercising its classic and traditional function D of judicial review notwithstanding the existence of an ouster clause. The Tanzania Court of Appeal has espoused that view in a number of cases inter alia AG v Lessinoi Ndeinai & others (14), Ally Linus v Tanzania Harbours Authority (15) and D R Kaijage v Esso Standard Tanzania Ltd (16). In the last case mentioned Makame JA observed that despite an ouster clause the High Court could E examine a decision to see if the rules of natural justice were observed in arriving at the decision, which would in turn determine whether there was a valid decision or any decision at all. However I have to point out that the position now is that not only can the decision of a public authority be F challenged for violating the principles of natural justice, but the ground has been expanded. Lord Diplock in the case of Council of Civil Service Unions v Minister for the Civil Service (17) identified four principles which can be used to challenge a decision of a public authority, and that case was G cited with approval by the Tanzania Court of Appeal in the case of Sanai Murumbe v Muhere Chacha (18). These four principles are illegality (failure to follow the law); procedural impropriety (failure to observe the principles of natural justice and failure to act with procedural fairness); irrationality (making a decision which is outrageous in its defiance of logic or of accepted moral standards that H no reasonable person who had applied his mind to it could have made such a decision); proportionality (that the means employed by a decision-maker are no more than is reasonably necessary to achieve his or her legitimate aims). The doctrine of proportionality has been recognised I by the Tanzania Court of Appeal in the case of DPP v Daudi Pete (19) and Kukutia Ole Pumbun v Attorney-General (20). The decision of the President in this particular A case is open to challenge on all these four principles.

1994 TLR p85

MWALUSANYA J

It may be argued on behalf of the President that since the President did not disclose on which ground of public interest he removed the servant in the civil service, then it is not possible to mount a B challenge on his decision. That argument is naïve. In the Agro Industries Ltd case (supra) the President did not disclose the public interest involved when he revoked somebody's right of occupancy, nevertheless the Tanzanian Court of Appeal took into account the history of the case C which revealed that the revocation was made to assist a public corporation to occupy the land in dispute in which it had trespassed into and the court held that, that was not in public interest. In the case at hand although the President has not disclosed as to what public interest would be served in removing the servant from the civil service yet taking into account the history of the case, the court at D the main trial would be at liberty to consider on whether the President was correct to take into account in reaching his decision the fact that the civil servant in question had an economic sabotage criminal case in which he was acquitted and there were disciplinary proceedings against the said servant but which ended in favour of the said servant. The trial court will have to consider as to E whether the President was right to take into account these extraneous considerations in arriving at his decision.

The courts under the doctrine of separation of powers are charged with the task of upholding the Constitution and acting as a check on other branches of the government. In the two themes above, I F have attempted to explain how the judiciary has rejected attempts by the Executive to overreach individual rights by the use of legislation providing subjective discretionary powers and legislation ousting the jurisdiction of the courts. Court's resistance to attempts on the part of the political G branches of the government to acquire uncontrolled power is highly commendable and shows that they are fitted to provide an effective check against oppressive exercise of power by the Executive. William Wade, in Constitutional Fundamentals', Hamlyn Lectures, 32nd series, (1980) at 83-4 has commended the court's role by stating: H

`. . . to exempt a public authority from the jurisdiction of the courts of law is, to that extent, to grant dictatorial power. It is no exaggeration, therefore, to describe this as an abuse of the power of Parliament, speaking constitutionally. This is the justification, as I see it, for the strong, it might even be said rebellious stand which the I

A courts' have made against allowing Acts of Parliament to create pockets of uncontrolled power, in violation of the rule of Law. Parliament is unduly addicted to this practice, giving too much weight to temporary convenience and too little to constitutional principle. The laws delay, together with its uncertainty and expense tempts government to take B short cuts by elimination of the courts. But if the courts are prevented from enforcing the law, the remedy becomes worse than the disease.'

It is only hoped that the Executive will take this dialogue with magnanimity. Uncontrolled power on the C part of the Executive does not augur well with a democratic government. It should be noted that Courts are in a position of independence and so they are often better placed than the President or any other public authority to assess the weight of competing aspects of the public interest.

Finally the State Attorney Mr Nyabiri advocating for the President, argued that the provisions of ss 6 D and 7 of the Pensions Ordinance cap 371 bar the plaintiff to present his claim in Court. Both these sections provide that `no officer who has been retired in public interest has an absolute right to compensation for past services and to other allowances he is otherwise entitled to'. The short E answer to these provisions is that they are unconstitutional and so void. They are denying a person the right to remuneration for work done contrary to article 23(1) of our Constitution. Equally article 24(2) providing for the right to property is violated, as that basic right states that no one may be deprived of his property without authority of the law which shall set out conditions for fair an adequate F compensation. The law that is impugned is not good law and is not saved by article 30(2) of our Constitution because it is arbitrary and without adequate safeguards against any such arbitrary decision. And if offends the principle of proportionality - it is not shown that it is reasonably G necessary to achieve a legitimate objective. Both these principles have been expounded by the Tanzania Court of Appeal in the cases of Kututia Ole Pumbun v Attorney-General and DPP v Daudi Pete (supra). It should be noted that under article 9(1)(b) of our Constitution, the President and all the H state agencies are required to direct all the policy and business towards the preservation and compliance with the basic law of the land, that is the Constitution. And article 26(1) of our Constitution directs that every person including the President is obliged to comply with the Constitution. It is therefore surprising to note that the President has opted to obey the unconstitutional I Pensions Ordinance which offends the basic law of the land. I have to remind the President and all other public officials that under s 5(1) of the A Constitution (Consequential Provisions) Act 16 of 1984 they have to regard all the existing law (laws passed before 1 March 1985) as modified as an to bring them into conformity with our Bill of Rights Act 15 of 1984. So all laws passed before 1 March 1985 should not be taken at their face value, but B should only be obeyed if they don't go against the basic law of the land, the Constitution. The President of the United Republic should be in fore-front to disregard all the laws that are in breach of the Constitution, such as the Pensions Ordinance. As amply demonstrated above the Pensions C Ordinance violates the right to property and the right to a just remuneration for work done. Therefore under s 5(1) of Act 16 of 1984 and article 64(5) of our Constitution, I declare the provisions of s 6 and 9 of the Pensions Ordinance to be void. I hold that the plaintiff is at liberty to present his claims before this court. D

E

[zRPz]HASSANI KILALA v JUMA SAID 1994 TLR 87 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Mwalusanya J

CIVIL APPEAL 117 OF 1993 F

1 February, 1994

Flynote

Taxation of costs - Proper procedure to comply with - Proper taxing masters - GN 515 of 1991. G

-Headnote

The appellant filed a fresh case in a Primary Court intended to be a Bill of costs for taxation for a case which started from a Primary Court and ended with the High Court. The bill of costs presented H at the Primary Court was for a claim of Shs 123,000/=. After taxation the Primary Court Magistrate allowed a sum of Shs 21,000/= only. On appeal the District Court raised the sum to Shs 37,200/=. He appealed further to the High Court.

Held:

(i) It was improper for the appellant to file a fresh case for taxation I

1994 TLR p88

A proceedings; he should have filed his bill of costs in the same case file itself in which he was successful;

(ii) For cases starting from the Primary Court and ending in the District Court the taxing master is the Primary Court Magistrate Concerned;

(iii) For cases starting from the Primary Court and ending in the High Court the taxing master is the District Registrar of the High Court;

B (iv) For cases starting from the Primary Court and ending in the Court of Appeal of Tanzania the taxing master is the Registrar of the Court of Appeal or his deputy. Order Accordingly.

Case Information

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

C Mwalusanya, J:

The appellant Hassani s/o Kilala filed a bill of costs at Kondoa Urban Primary Court for taxation. In fact he filed a fresh case, Civil Case No 23 of 1993. The bill of costs was for a case that started at D Kondoa Urban Primary Court as civil case No 3 of 1987, then the case went on appeal to Kondoa District Court as Civil Appeal No 16 of 1988 and ended with the High Court Dodoma Civil Appeal No 77 of 1991. The bill of costs presented at the Primary Court was for a claim of Shs 123,880/=. The E bill of costs after taxation a sum of Shs 21,000/= only was allowed. The District Court on appeal raised the sum payable as costs to Shs 37,020/=. The appellant was aggrieved and hence the appeal to this court.

It is patently clear that both the Primary Court and District Court are ignorant about where taxation F proceedings are to be conducted. If they knew they would have advised the appellant accordingly.

The first mistake that was made was that it was improper for the appellant to file a fresh case for taxation proceedings. It was wrong in here to file Civil Case No 23 of 1993. The proper procedure is G for the applicant to file his bill of costs in the case file itself in which he was successful - that is civil case No 3 of 1987. The taxation proceedings in the main suit.

Secondly, it appears the two magistrates who dealt with the matter are not aware of the The H Advocates Remuneration and Taxation of Costs Rules GN No 515 of 1991. These Rules are made under the provisions of the Advocates Ordinance Cap 341. These rules as per rule 2 are applicable to courts subordinate to the High Court. For cases starting from the Primary Court and ending with the High Court the taxing master is the District Registrar of the High Court. For a case starting with a I Primary Court and ending with the Tanzania Court of Appeal the taxing master is the Registrar of the Court of Appeal or his deputy. For a case starting from the Primary Court and ending in a District A Court, the taxing master is the Primary Court Magistrate concerned.
1994 TLR p89
Therefore in the case at hand the Primary Court Magistrate concerned was wrong to usurp the functions of the District Registrar because the suit in question ended in the High Court. The trial B magistrate should have advised the appellant to file his bill of costs with the High Court. The procedure explained above has an advantage because the High Court has all the proceedings of the Primary Court and those of the District Court and so it becomes easy to take note of appearance of the parties in Court. In the case at hand the Primary Court Magistrate has no case file of the High C Court and so he had only to guess or speculate as to how many appearances the parties made at the High Court.
That was quite improper.
In the event I declare the proceedings of both courts below to be a nullity. The appellant should file a D fresh bill of costs with the High Court. Each party will bear its own costs of this appeal.
As this error that has presented itself in this appeal is common all over the Zone, I direct the District Registrar to serve a copy of this judgment to all Primary Court Magistrates and District Magistrates of this zone. Order accordingly. E
1994 TLR p89
F
[zRPz]HASSANI FADHILI v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 89 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Makame JJA, Omar JJA and Ramadhani JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 111 OF 1993 G
18 March, 1994
(Appeal from the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Tanga, Msumi, J) H
Flynote
Evidence - Circumstantial evidence - To ground conviction on circumstancial evidence it must be incapable of more than one interpretation. I
1994 TLR p90

-Headnote

A The appellant was charged with and convicted of murder, and sentenced to death. The conviction was based on circumstantial evidence. The deceased died as a result of homorragic shock due to loss of a lot of blood because of incomplete abortion, said to have been performed by the appellant. The learned Trial Judge was satisfied that the appellant had committed the offence. On appeal it was contended that the prosecution did not discharge its burden of proof and that the circumstances B relied upon were capable of more than one interpretation.

Held: We are far from being convinced that the evidence is beyond any reasonable doubt that the appellant performed the abortion.

Case Information

C Appeal allowed.

Cases referred to:

(1) Simon s/o Musoko v R [1958] EA 715.

(2) R v Lucas [1981] 2 All ER 1008.

Lamwai, for the appellant.

D Muna, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Ramadhani, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

E The deceased, Mariam Hamad, died at Bombo Hospital, Tanga on 3 June 1990. The death certificate (Exh P4) prepared by Dr Samuel Mgemwa (PW11) gave cause of death as hemorragic shock due to loss of a lot of blood because of incomplete abortion. As to that there was no dispute. The issue was who induced the abortion.

F It was also admitted that the deceased, on that fateful day, arrived at the house of the appellant, Hassan Fadhili, a Medical Assistant with M/S Foma Factory, at 1 pm walking alone but with some difficulty. That was deposed by Salma Fadhili (PW12), wife of the appellant, who welcomed the deceased as the appellant, then, was not at home. The appellant returned home at about 4 pm and, G after being told of the presence of the deceased, attended her. The nature and the extent of that attention was and still is an issue.

However, it is not again disputed that at about 6.15 pm the appellant took the deceased in a taxi to H CIC Hospital. That taxi was brought, at the instruction of the appellant, by Ali Tondwa (PW4), a tenant of the appellant. At that time the deceased was in a bad state and had to be assisted into the cab and also out of it when they arrived at the hospital. There, the medical officer on duty, Twaba Kajombo (PW7), a medical assistant, was told by the appellant that the deceased had an abortion. At that time I she was bleeding profusely. PW7, having reached the end of his tether, advised the appellant to take the deceased to Bombo Hospital. But instead of doing that the appellant A left the deceased and retired to his home where he was met by two elder sisters of the deceased: Rehoma (PW1) and Rahima (PW2). What was said between the appellant and the two sisters is a moot point but it is undisputed that the appellant and PW1 took a taxi to the CIC

Hospital from where B they transferred the deceased to Burhani Hospital and eventually to Bombo Hospital. From the house of the appellant, the other sister, PW2, went back to inform their mother, Hilda (PW5), who also went to Bombo Hospital to have a last glimpse of her dear daughter. The deceased passed away shortly after her mother arrived. It is also common ground that the appellant made himself C scarce immediately after he delivered the deceased at Bombo Hospital.

The deceased was buried at Muhoza on 5 June 1990 only to be exhumed twenty nine days later and be subjected to autopsy by Sylvester Enock Mdanya (PW13), an Assistant Medical Officer II who D produced his report (Exh P5) that the abortion was physically induced and that the uterus was perforated.

The learned Trial Judge, Msumi J, convicted the appellant of murder. He believed PWs 1 and 2 that the appellant confessed to them to have performed the abortion on the deceased and the learned E Trial Judge found that evidence to be supported by the post-mortem report (exh P5). In addition, the conduct of the appellant provided the coup de grace. The learned judge said: `... the accused's act of taking the deceased from his house to the afore-mentioned hospitals and paying for transport charges clearly demonstrates his involvement in the said abortion'. F

That judgment is the subject of this appeal. It has been bitterly attacked by Dr Lamwai, learned advocate for the appellant, but dutifully defended by Mr Muna, learned State Attorney, for the respondent. G

Two grounds of appeal have been advanced. The first ground has a number of fronts. For the purposes of clarity we shall deal with every aspect of both grounds as argued by Dr Lamwai, responded to by Mr Muna and the replies of the Counsel for the appellant.

In the first ground the appellant avers that the prosecution did not discharge its burden of proof and that the circumstances relied upon were capable of more than one interpretation. H

As his first point in that ground, Dr Lamwai challenged the post-mortem report (Exh P5). He pointed out that PW13 did not disclose his academic qualifications but merely said that he was an Assistant I Medical Officer II. Dr Lamwai pointed out that that particular

A autopsy, involving exhumation of a body buried twenty nine days previously, called for a sound knowledge of forensic medicine which PW13 did not even claim to possess. As evidence of the lack of pre-requisite expertise, Dr Lamwai claimed, PW13 relied on the information which was supplied to B him by the relatives of the deceased that it was a case of abortion. Apart from that, the learned Counsel pointed out, PW13 did not display the thoroughness of an expert in that he did not give the dimensions of the perforation of the uterus. Dr Lamwai urged us to ignore completely Exh P5 and the oral evidence of PW13.

C Mr Muna merely said that PW13 had some experience on post-mortem in addition to his training as Assistant Medical Officer. In any case, Mr Muna added, even if that piece of evidence is discarded there is still the testimony of PW11 and the death certificate (Exh P4) that some remains of foetus were seen. However, that point was already covered by Dr Lamwai who admitted abortion but D reiterated that the issue was who caused it.

Dr Lamwai said that a lot of credit was put on the two sisters, PWs 1 and 2, but he argued that they did not deserve it as each had recorded two statements at the Police Station in a span of a year. He E said that that should not have been necessary had they been forthcoming. Mr Muna conceded that there are some discrepancies in the two statements of both sisters but dismissed them as immaterial.

Apart from that, Dr Lamwai argued that PWs 1 and 2 were already prejudiced against the appellant as `daktari anayofahamika sane sane hapa mjini kwa shughuli za kuton mimba'. As such, Dr Lamwai F contended, PWs 1 and 2 pre-judged the appellant and then claimed that the appellant had confided to them about the abortion. Mr Muna refuted that and stuck to his guns that PWs 1 and 2 were told so by the appellant and that they reported thus to their mother PW5 who unsuccessfully resisted the G burial as the death was a police case.

Dr Lamwai attacked the veracity of the two sisters even further and labelled them liars. He cited their H evidence that the wife of the appellant (PW12) came out of the house and rebuked the appellant for his habit of performing abortions on others' daughters. Dr Lamwai stated that that was denied by PW12 herself and also by PW4 who was there at the material time. Mr Muna said that that was a question of credibility which was properly decided on by the learned Trial Judge who saw all the four witnesses. In reply Dr Lamwai said that as it was a first appeal this Court could still make its own I finding of credibility.

1994 TLR p93

RAMADHANI JA

As his last prong of attack in the first ground, Dr Lamwai asked whether it was not conceivable that A the deceased went to the appellant when abortion had already been performed on her elsewhere and by another person. He advanced this proposition from two premises. First, he said that there is abundant evidence that the deceased had not been feeling well that morning and even before it. This was said by the mother (PW5) and the two sisters (PWs 1 and 2). The deceased, Dr Lamwai B reminded us, missed a day at school and had to fabricate a hospital chit to explain her truancy. Then that fateful morning the deceased was sluggish in responding to their mother's request to her for a cup of tea. Indeed, seen after she had prepared one, and was allowed by the mother to resume her C sleep, she did so in the corridor rather than in her bed. Even the preceding night one of the sisters, PW2, who shared a bed with her, said that the deceased had not been quite herself. Dr Lamwai wondered whether the deceased had not been at it that early.

Alternatively, Dr Lamwai questioned the unaccounted for three hours of that fateful day. The learned D advocate revisited the evidence of PW1 who left home with the deceased and parted ways at about 10.00 am. The deceased was then proceeding to her friend, one Rose, of unknown surname and address. Three hours later the deceased emerged at the house of the appellant walking with some E difficulty. That was about 1 pm. Dr Lamwai suggested to us that the abortion was performed at Rose's and when the going became painful, the professional assistance of the appellant was sought.

Mr Muna again dismissed the three hours as immaterial. What is crucially important to him is the F fact that the deceased went into the house of the appellant unaided, albeit with some difficulty, but came out of it completely helpless. Mr Muna also questioned the dilly-dallying of the appellant for some two and a quarter hours after his return home. If the the condition of the deceased had G drastically worsened at the house of the appellant, Mr Muna challenged, why didn't a Medical Assistant as the appellant was, realise the seriousness of the situation and rush the deceased to the hospital. Mr Muna submitted that the deceased had not gone there for professional assistance but for an abortion and that was why the appellant took that long before he resorted to the hospitals. H

The second ground of appeal is that the learned judge erred in law and fact to find that the appellant had the requisite mens rea. Dr Lamwai maintained that all that the appellant did was to try to help the deceased and not to perform an abortion. He argued that there was in fact not even actus reus and I hence there could not possibly

A be mens rea of any sort. Mr Muna's reply was simple: since the appellant performed the abortion he knew that death could possibly result and when it did, then mens rea was very much there.

As already stated, the deceased had incomplete abortion. That is not disputed. That would cause excessive bleeding. We are prepared to take it that the abortion was not natural but induced. The B appellant himself has been of that opinion and he was told by the deceased. The question is did he induce it as claimed by the Republic and found by the learned judge. As already said, that decision was founded on the evidence of the two sisters. PWs 1 and 2, of PW13 and his post-mortem report C (Exh P5) and the conduct of the appellant.

We start by examining the evidence of PW13 and Exh P5. We may as well state right at the beginning that a strictly thin piece of evidence does not advance the case one way or the other. It D confirms what has already been settled: the abortion was induced. However, it does not tell us whether or not the appellant induced it. So we are of the opinion that it should not detain us longer. Suffice it is to say that we agree with Dr Lamwai that PW13 neither disclosed his qualifications for the job nor did he display his expertise in his post-mortem report (Exh P5). We, therefore, ignore E PW13 and Exh P5 completely.

So we are left now with the evidence of the two sisters and the conduct of the appellant.

We take it as a fact that when the two sisters arrived at the house of the appellant, the latter took the F former for a private chat. PWs 1 and 2 were supported by PW4, a tenant of the appellant. The question is what was said. This is the word of the two sisters against that of the appellant. On the side of the two sisters there is the issue of the two statements which each wrote after an interval of a year. Admittedly, the difference between the earlier statements to and the latter ones is not as black G is to white. But definitely it is as pink is to red. The first statements implied that the appellant performed the abortion. Thus PW2 said, for instance `huyo daktari ni daktari amayofahamika sana sana hapa msini kwa shughuli sa kutoa mimba tuliona hivyo ... narohomu anofanya mambo mabaya. Mdipo huyo daktari alituita na akasoma ... Nataka iwo siri kwanza huko nyumbani kwonu msisomo H hata mkuliswa somoni amokauywa vidomge...' But in the second statements the message was so expressed. PW2 said `... alituambia wasi wasi kwamba yoyo alimfanyia marokomu abortion'. The question is why was this. One would expect, as Dr Lamwai said, that the two sisters would not have I minced their words immediately after the loss of their dear one.

1994 TLR p95

RAMADHANI JA

Apart from that the two sisters claimed in their examination-in-chief to have told their mother that the A appellant had performed the abortion before even the mother went to Bombo Hospital. However, in cross-examination PW1 said that `we could not tell our parents this information earlier because we were confused as a result of the deceased's death'. Even in re-examination by Mr Muna she B repeated: `I was so confused that I could not tell my parents about this incident immediately after deceased's death'. So even the parents were told the story of abortion and that it was by the appellant after the burial. One wonders why or did PW1 know the nature of the mission of the deceased to Rose? C

This brings us to the three hours which have not been accounted for. Surely these cannot be immaterial especially in view of the evidence that the deceased was walking with some difficulty when she was welcomed by PW12, albeit the wife of the appellant, but all the same a prosecution witness. Rose could never be identified to clear the air. D

All the same the situation is compounded by a fact which was conceded by Mr Muna. There was no appointment between the appellant and the deceased and that the two were strangers to each other. The deceased arrived at the appellant's at 1 pm and then inquired from PW12 whether that was the E appellant's house. The appellant on the other hand, returned home at 4 pm from his father-in-law's (PW1) where he was chatting and had lunch. At home the appellant had to be told of the presence of the deceased.

Now, if that was so, one wonders whether the appellant would be so bold or so stupid to perform an F abortion on a total stranger within two hours after their very first encounter. Or was this a case of `kuokoa jahazi' (save the situation) as Dr Lamwai puts it?

We now come to the conduct of the appellant. Did it provide the circumstantial evidence in which the inculpatory facts are incompatible with the innocence of the appellant and incapable of explanation G upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of guilt? Simon s/o Museke v R (1). Let us see the various circumstances in that light.

One conduct is that the appellant spent a considerable amount of time before taking the deceased to hospital. Some two and a quarter hours elapsed before the appellant took the deceased to the first H hospital. We do not know when the bleeding started. Unfortunately the appellant was not cross-examined on that delay. So what we have is the submission of Dr Lamwai that the taking of a patient to a hospital is a matter of judgment and the most that can be said is that the appellant made an error of judgment. I

1994 TLR p96

RAMADHANI JA

A True, PW7 at CIC Hospital suggested to the appellant that the deceased be taken to Bombo Hospital. That was not done. The appellant said that he had to look for the relatives of the deceased first. He found them and, as it turned out, PW1 `... advised the accused to take her to Burhani B Hospital where we sometimes get treated'.

Then when they finally reached Bombe Hospital, the appellant left immediately after the deceased was admitted. Dr Lamwai said that the appellant had already spent a lot of time with the deceased and that at that juncture her relatives were already there so the appellant retired home. That to us is a C plausible explanation.

There was also the issue of the paying for the taxis. The first trip to CIC Hospital from the appellant's house could not have been otherwise. As to the second leg from the appellant's house to CIC Hospital in the company of PW1 that can similarly be understood. The appellant was looking for the D relatives of the deceased and PW1 suddenly emerged and she could not necessarily have been expected to carry money on her. The suggestion by Mr Muna that the appellant should have awaited the mother (PW5) from whom to recover the charges, is, as Dr Lamwai said, out of the ordinary E when the deceased was in such a bad shape. Again the appellant could have waited to come and claim his refund any time. So that omission could be innocent and honourable.

Lastly, there is the lie which the appellant told the medical officer of CIC Hospital (PW7); that the F deceased was from the appellant's dispensary at Foma Factory. In R v Lucas (2) it was said:

> `... To be capable of amounting to corroboration a lie told out of Court, must first of all be deliberate. Secondly, it must relate to a material issue. Thirdly, the motive of the lie, must be a realisation of guilt, fear of the truth ... people G sometimes lie, for example in an attempt to bolster up a just cause, or out of shame, or out of wish to conceal a disgraceful behaviour from the family ...'

There is no doubt that was a deliberate lie. We are not quite sure that the lie related to a material issue. What was important to us is that the appellant took his patient to the hospital. We feel that it H would have been different had he said that he had picked up the deceased from the streets. Even that lie to PW7 is not exclusively explainable in terms of appellant's guilt.

After all is said and done, an accusing finger is pointing at the appellant. However, as this is a capital offence the evidence has to be watertight. It is possible that the reputation of the appellant, if any, has I contributed to his conviction. But we are far from being convinced that the evidence is beyond any reasonable doubt that the appellant performed the A abortion. Suspicion, there is, but that is not enough.

So we allow the appeal, quash the conviction of murder and set aside the sentence. The appellant should be released immediately if he is not otherwise lawfully in custody. It is so ordered. B

C

[zRPz]LIAMBA SINANGA v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 97 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 161 OF 1993 D

14 February, 1994

(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Mapigano, J) E

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Change of Trial Magistrates - Second magistrate does not inform accused of F his right to resummon and re-hear witnesses - Section 214(2)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.

-Headnote

The appellant was charged with and convicted of cattle theft. In the court of first instance two G magistrates heard the case. The second magistrate continued with the hearing of the case without informing the accused of his right to have witnesses who had testified before the first magistrate resummoned and re-heard. An appeal by the appellant to the High Court was summarily rejected. On further appeal the Court of Appeal addressed the issue of the accused's right to be informed. H

Held:

(i) The language in s 214(2)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act is mandatory in that the learned second magistrate was obliged to inform the appellant of his right to demand that witnesses who testified before the first magistrate be summoned to testify before the second I magistrate if the appellant so wished.

1994 TLR p98

A (ii) Had the learned judge been aware of the non-compliance (by the second magistrate) of the mandatory provisions of s 214(2)(a) of the CPA he would not have summarily rejected the appeal.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

B No case referred to.

Dr Lamwai, for the appellant.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

C This is an appeal from the decision of the High Court (Mapigano J), in High Court Criminal Appeal No 89 of 1993 in which the learned judge rejected the appeal summarily. Arguing against the order of the High Court Dr Lamwai, learned Counsel for the appellant, submitted that the case was heard by D two different magistrates in the Court of first instance but that before the second magistrate continued with the hearing of the case the appellant was not informed of his right to resummon the witnesses or any of them so that their evidence might be re-heard before the other magistrate if he E (appellant) so wished. In support of his argument the learned defence Counsel referred to the Court the provisions of s 214 (2)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act.

Our perusal of the record shows that the appellant was charged with and convicted of cattle theft c/ss 265 and 268 of the Penal Code before the district Court and sentenced to five years imprisonment.

F Hearing of the case started on 28 August 1992 before one, P Nnally, District Magistrate, and two witnesses (PW1 and PW2) gave evidence before him. Thereafter the prosecutor applied for adjournment to enable him to summon one, Juma, another prosecution witness. The magistrate G adjourned the case for hearing on 17 September 1992. Apparently the case did not come up for hearing on 17 September 1992 - instead it came up for hearing on 15 October 1992; and before a different magistrate one, E H Malekela, Senior District Magistrate. Hearing was again adjourned on the request of the prosecutor who told the Court - `the witness has not turned up'. Hearing was H adjourned to 29 October 1992. On that day Mr Malekela, SDM, heard the evidence of Juma Athumai, (PW3). A month or so later, 26 November 1992, a fourth prosecution witness, D/Sgt. Kassim, gave evidence before Mr Malekela and the prosecution closed its case.

I On the same day the appellant gave his evidence in defence and closed his defence.

1994 TLR p99

MNZAVAS JA

The record is silent as to why Mr Nnally, District Magistrate, could not continue hearing the case to its A finality. Nor does the record show that the appellant was informed of his right under s 214(2)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act.

Section 214(1) of the CPA allows another magistrate to take over and continue with proceedings started by a different magistrate who for any reason is unable to complete the proceedings provided B that before doing so the provisions of s 214(2)(a) are complied with:

The provisions under s 214(2)(a) are loud and clear. They say:

> `214 (2) `Whenever the provision of sub-section (1) applies - C
>
> (a) in any trial the accused may, when the such other magistrate commences his proceedings, demand that the witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and re-heard and shall be informed of such right by the other D magistrate when he commences his proceeds' - (The emphasis is supplied).

That being the language in s 214(2)(a) it was mandatory on the part of the learned second magistrate, Mr Malekela, Senior District Magistrate, to inform the appellant of his right to demand that the witnesses who testified before the first magistrate be summoned and testify before him if he E (appellant) so wished. This, Mr Malekela, Senior District Magistrate, did not do.

With respect to Dr Lamwai, learned defence Counsel, we agree with his argument that had the learned judge been aware of the non-compliance by the second magistrate of the mandatory F provisions under s 214(2)(a) of the CPA he would not have summarily rejected the appeal. The order of the High Court is apparently not supported by the Republic.

In the event the appeal is upheld, the record is remitted to the High Court and it is directed that the G appeal be heard on its merit.

1994 TLR p100

A

[zRPz]RAYMOND FRANCIS v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 100 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Lubuva JJA

B CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 162 OF 1993
14 February, 1994
(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Mapigano, J)
Flynote
C Evidence - Identification of accused person - Conditions favouring a correct identification.
Evidence - Identification of accused person - Witnesses saw appellant for the first time during the incident - Need to describe identity in detail.
D Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentences - Sentence for robbery with violence - Arm used during commission of offence - Accused sentenced as if charged with armed robbery.
-Headnote
E On being convicted of the offence of robbery with violence by the District Court the appellant was sentenced to thirty years imprisonment as if he had been charged with armed robbery under Act 10 of 1989. The conviction of the appellant was based on evidence of identification. The trial court was satisfied that the appellant was adequately identified by five witnesses all of whom had seen the appellant for the first time during the incident. None of the witnesses was able to describe in detail F the identity of the appellant. The appellant was also identified in an identification parade in which requisite procedures were not followed. The High Court of Tanzania dismissed the appellant's appeal. On a further appeal to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania.
G Held:

(i) It is elementary that in a criminal case whose determination depends essentially on identification, evidence on conditions favouring a correct identification is of the utmost importance;

H (ii) As the identification of the appellant was the crux of the matter, and having regard to the fact that the robbery took place at 8.00 pm when it was dark, we are satisfied that the conditions were not favourable for a correct identification of the appellant;

(iii) Since all the witnesses admitted seeing the appellant for the first time during the incident that day it was necessary in their evidence of identity to describe in detail the identity of the I appellant when they saw him at the time of the incident;

1994 TLR p101

(iv) The identification parade was not carried out properly in terms of the applicable procedure; A as such it was of little value as evidence against the appellant;

(v) After the passing of Act 10 of 1989 the offence of armed robbery is distinct from, though cognate to, robbery with violence; it should be clearly spelt out in the charge;

(vi) The omission to particularize the offence of armed robbery in the statement of offence can B only be cured if the charge in the particulars of offence clearly spells out the use of arms.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Cases referred to: C

(1) Mohamed Alhui v Rex [1942] 9 EACA 72.

(2) Rex v Mwango s/o Manaa [1939] 3 EACA 29.

Kakoti, for the appellant.

Sengwaji, for the respondent. D

[zJDz]Judgment

Lubuva, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

In the District Court of Ilala District at Kivukoni, the appellant was charged with and convicted of the offence of robbery with violence contrary to ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. He was sentenced to E imprisonment for thirty years and twelve strokes. On appeal to the High Court, (Mapigano J) his appeal was dismissed. Dissatisfied with the decision of the High Court, he has appealed to this Court.

The facts of the case which emerge from the evidence were briefly as follows: That on 11 December 1989 at about 8 pm the house of one Athumani Rajabu was invaded by a group of bandits one of F whom had a firearm. In the process of this robbery, various household items (including cash money, Shs 500,000/=) the total value of which was Shs 530,000/= were stolen. The group of bandits, comprised four people. It was only the appellant who was arrested and duly charged for the offence G of robbery with violence. The rest of the bandits vanished and could not be traced for their arrest and trial.

At the time of filing the memorandum for this appeal, it would appear that the appellant had not briefed Counsel for arguing his appeal. The memorandum of appeal was therefore processed and H filed by the appellant himself with the usual assistance of the prison officials. However, at the hearing of the appeal before us, Mr Kakoti, learned advocate, appeared for the appellant. Arguing the appeal before us, Mr Kakoti, based the appellant's defence on the following grounds: I

A 1. That both the two courts below erred in basing the conviction of the appellant on the evidence in which there was no proper and sufficient evidence of identification.

2. That the identification parade was of no evidential value as it was not properly conducted.

B 3. That as the appellant was charged with the offence of robbery with violence and not armed robbery, he was wrongly sentenced to 30 years imprisonment.

On the basis of these grounds, Mr Kakoti, in a very persuasive manner, assailed the learned judge's C decision in upholding the conviction against the appellant. It was a case which, in his submission, wholly depended on the evidence on identification. The evidence adduced by the prosecution on the identity of the appellant at the time was too scanty to found a conviction. He contended that even D though it is common ground that matters of assessing the demeanor of the witnesses is the responsibility of the trial court, in the instant case, the very evidence of the witnesses PW1, PW2, PW3, PW4, PW5 and PW6 which was believed and accepted by the Trial Magistrate, was not reliable. According to him, from their evidence, they had seen the appellant for the first time on the E day of the incident. That was 11 December 1989. For this reason, he submitted that, having seen the appellant for the first time that day and the offence having taken place at night, it was necessary for these witnesses to describe how they identified the appellant. As such details were missing from the F evidence of these witnesses, it was unsafe to sustain a conviction based on this evidence Mr Kakoti contended. For this contention, he relied on the decision of the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in the case of Mohamed Alhui v Rex (1).

G Secondly, Mr Kakoti, learned advocate submitted that the learned judge erred in law by not subjecting the evidence on the identity of the appellant to a close scrutiny. He argued that as the evidence on the identify of the appellant was highly unsatisfactory, it was necessary to have it H re-evaluated by the first appellate Court. In his view, PW1, PW2, PW3, PW4, PW5 and PW6 in their evidence do not describe in any way how they identified the appellant at the time of the robbery. He said that no description has been given in regard to the lighting condition, the type of clothing the appellant was wearing or his physique etc. It was his submission that this evidence was of little evidentiary value as it was lacking in details on identity. Mr Sengwaji, learned Principal State Attorney I who appeared for the Republic supported the conviction. He conceded that except for PW2, the rest of the witnesses had A seen the appellant for the first time that day when the incident took place. Furthermore, while also conceding to a number of issues raised by Mr Kakoti, learned Counsel for the appellant, Mr Sengwaji maintained that the decision of the learned judge on first appeal and the Trial Magistrate was proper. B He argued that despite the discrepancies in the evidence of the prosecution, the appellant was properly identified. He further observed that as there was light at the time which was later switched off on the instruction of one of the bandits, the witnesses had the opportunity of seeing and identifying the appellant. C

As regards the identification of the appellant we are with respect, in agreement with the learned Counsel for the appellant, Mr Kakoti that this is a case where determination wholly depends on the evidence on the identity of the appellant. In our view, it is elementary that in a criminal case where D determination depends essentially on identification, evidence on conditions favouring a correct identification is of the utmost importance. In the instant case, except for PW4 who, apart from having seen the appellant earlier that day at 4 pm but did not actually directly see what happened at 8 pm E during the incident, all the other witnesses either in examination in chief or in cross examination admit seeing the appellant for the first time during the incident that day. For that reason, we think it was necessary in their evidence on identity to describe in detail the identity of the appellant when they saw him the time of the incident. Here, this was not the case with the evidence of either of these F PW1, PW2, PW3, PW5 and PW6. In our view, their evidence, regrettably, is of a generalised nature on the identity of the appellant. It is mere assertion that they saw the appellant.

In his defence, the appellant among others, advanced the argument that Athumani Rajabu, the owner G of the raided house owed him (appellant) money and that there was bad blood between the appellant and the family of Athumani Rajabu. He claimed he was known and familiar with most of the prosecution witnesses. In the first place, we note, this issue was never raised at the time the H witnesses were testifying. Nonetheless, in our view, even if this theory is accepted, it makes it even much easier in practice for them to describe the appellant in more particulars in regard to the identification than it is to a stranger. Here, these witnesses deny knowing the appellant before the incident. None of the witnesses (PW1, PW2, PW3, PW4, PW5 and PW6) as well as the police I officers

A involved in the investigation of the case or the identification parade, (PW7 and PW8) given any description in their evidence as to how the appellant was identified.

The importance of proper and correct identification in cases whose determination hinges on identification was reiterated by the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa way back in 1942. In the case of B Mohamed Alhui v Rex (1) it was held that:

> `In every case in which there is a question as to the identity of the accused, the fact of there having been a description given and the terms of that description given are matters of the highest importance of which evidence C ought always to be given; first of all, of course, by the persons who gave the description and purport to identify the accused, and then by the person or persons to whom the description was given'.

D On the basis of this well enunciated principle, in criminal cases, we are convinced that the offence having taken place at night, the condition prevailing at the time can hardly be said to be favourable for a correct identification of the appellant. Granted the appellant was seen at the scene earlier in the day at about 4 pm as the evidence of PW2 shows, the crucial moment for identification was at the time E when the offence was committed at 8 pm when it was dark. The evidence on this, in our view, still left much to be desired.

Mr Kakoti, learned counsel for the appellant also took issue with the manner in which the F identification parade was conducted. He submitted that the identification parade having been conducted in such an unsatisfactory manner, it was of little value as evidence against the appellant. He referred to the case of Rex v Mwango s/o Manana (2) in which the rules for guiding identification G parades were fully set out and approved by the Court. It was his submission that proper procedure was not followed in conducting the identification parade. From the evidence on record, it is evident that even though PW7 in cross examination says that he conducted the identification parade, in actual fact, it was PW8 who was involved in the identification parade. For the identification parade, H PW8 included 9 other people and the appellant. The evidence does not show how the identifying witness (PW2) had identified the appellant eg by touching etc. It is also not indicated if PW2 was given the option to indicate if he wanted to see those taking part in the parade walk; or hear them talk etc. On the other hand,

Hassan Jumbo (PW2) the witness who was supposed to identify the I appellant at the identification parade does not say anything at all about the identification
1994 TLR p105
LUBUVA JA
parade and how he did it. Furthermore, from the evidence of PW8 and PW2, it is not clear if the A appellant was asked if he was satisfied that the parade was conducted in a fair manner. In those circumstances, it appears to us that the identification parade was not carried out properly in terms of the applicable procedure as set out in the cited case of Mwango (supra). B Thirdly, Mr Kakoti, learned Counsel complained about the investigation and the arrest of the appellant. He contended that it was curious that the offence took place on 11 December 1989, but it took so long for the appellant to be arrested, on 5 April 1990. According to him this is the day when C the appellant had gone to the house of the complainant. Mr Kakoti further contended that such lapse of time without explanation raises doubts against the prosecution case.
We have examined this matter clearly. From the evidence of Hassani Jumbo (PW2) it is clear that D after the house had been invaded, he (PW2) ran to the house next door to inform the neighbours and the owner of the house Athumani Rajabu who in turn went to inform the police. If the police were informed of this serious incident of robbery, it is not shown what time the police came to the scene of crime. The record is completely silent on this vital aspect. The investigating officer, Stanley (PW7) E only talks of 5 April 1990 when he arrested the appellant at the complainant's house (Athumani).
Another Police Officer, Inspector Patric Byatao (PW8) in his evidence also comes into the picture from 21 May 1990 when he conducted the identification parade. In this state of affairs, we think, the F investigation was, with respect, poorly conducted. The end result is that it is not certain when the incident was reported to the police; who reported and why it took so long before the appellant was apprehended on 5 April 1990. If the explanation is that the appellant disappeared after the incident, in G our view, it is equally unlikely that the appellant would present himself at the very house, the scene of crime risking himself the arrest which he had been avoiding.
All in all therefore, as the identification of the appellant was the crux of the matter, and having regard H to the fact that the robbery took place at 8 pm when it was dark, we are satisfied that the conditions were not favourable for a correct identification of the appellant. In these circumstances, proof of the identity of the appellant was in our considered opinion, such that the possibility of I mistaken identity could not be eliminated. Furthermore, from the
1994 TLR p106
LUBUVA JA
A evidence as already explained, we are convinced that the identification parade was conducted in an unsatisfactory manner. Above all, it is also clear to us that the manner in which the investigation of the case was conducted by the police was such that it leaves much to be desired, it was poor to say B the least. It leaves a lot of loose ends untied. With respect, these are matters which apparently were not addressed to by both the courts below. Had they been considered, the decision would, in our opinion, have been different.

There remains the question of the sentence and the charge on which both Mr Kakoti, learned C Counsel and Mr Sengwaji, learned Principal State Attorney briefly addressed us. Mr Sengwaji conceded that it was wrong to indicate Athumani Rajabu as the victim of the robbery. With respect, we agree with Mr Sengwaji. On record, Athumani Rajabu was not present at the time when the incident took place. It was therefore, an error to show him in the charge as the victim. However, an D error though it was, we think it was such that it was curable under s 388 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.

As regards the sentence imposed, Mr Kakoti, learned Counsel for the appellant submitted that as the E appellant was charged with the offence of robbery with violence contrary to ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code, for which the penalty provided for under s 286 of the Penal Code is twenty years imprisonment, the provisions of Act 10 of 1989 which could not apply in this case. According to Mr F Kakoti, the penalty of thirty years is for a graver offence than that preferred against the appellant. With respect, this Court has held in a number of cases that after the enactment of Act 10 of 1989 the offence of armed robbery is distinct though cognate to robbery with violence. It should be clearly spelled out in the charge. Otherwise, the omission to particularize such an offence in the statement of offence can only be cured if the charge in the particulars of offence, clearly spells out the use of G arms as was the case in the present case.

Consequently for the reasons stated, we allow the appeal, quash the conviction and set aside the sentence and order that the appellant be released from prison forthwith unless he is otherwise H lawfully held.

1994 TLR p107

A

[zRPz]JEWELS & ANTIQUES (T) LTD v NATIONAL SHIPPING AGENCIES CO LTD 1994 TLR 107 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Makame JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

REVISION NO. 26 OF 1994 B

5 December, 1994

(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Munuo, J) C

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Correction of errors - Clerical and arithmetical mistakes in judgments, decrees and orders, arising from accidental slip or omission - Whether application to correct such mistakes is subject to the law of limitation - Item 21 First Schedule to the Law of Limitation Act 1971 and s 96 of the Civil Procedure D Code 1966.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Clerical and arithmetical errors - Application to correct such errors - Application to amend decree so as to include compensation for inflation and devaluation - Whether an application for E correction of clerical and arithmetical errors.

Court of Appeal - Revisional jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal - Whether a party may pursue and use the revisional jurisdiction of the Court even after filing Notice of Appeal - Section 4 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act F 1979, as amended by Act No 17 of 1993.
-Headnote
After obtaining judgment and decree in the High Court the applicant applied to the same court for review of the decree `to correct the errors apparent on the judgment and decree'. The High Court G rectified the judgment and decree as prayed. Almost a year later the applicant again applied to the High Court, under s 96 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966, for the decree to be further amended to include `payment of compensation for inflationary and devaluation element as at the date of settlement in full'. This application was dismissed. The applicant filed a Notice of Appeal against that H dismissal and, as the intended appeal could only be made with leave, the applicant also applied for leave to appeal. This application for leave was also dismissed by the High Court. The applicant then applied to the Court of Appeal for Revision. At the hearing a preliminary issue was raised that the application was time barred. I
1994 TLR p108
A Held:
(i) As per s 96 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966, clerical and arithmetical mistakes may be corrected at any time; applications to correct the same, therefore, are not subject to any limitation of time;
(ii) This application, which seeks to further amend a decree so as to include payment of B compensation for inflationary and devaluation elements, is not one for correction of clerical and arithmetical errors envisaged by s 96 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966; this application, therefore, is subject to the law of limitation and in the event it has been made out of time;
(iii) The applicant's right to appeal to the Court of Appeal was effectively blocked when its C application for leave to appeal was dismissed; upon that dismissal the applicant became entitled to resort to the revisional jurisdiction of the court of Appeal.
Case Information
Application struck out.
Case referred to:
D (1) Luke Mepaachi Mollel & Ten Others v Losiyo Ngeseyan, CAT-Civil Appeal No 8 of 1993 (Unreported).
Miss Bigeye, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
E Mfalila, JA, delivered the following ruling of the court:
The applicant company M/S Jewels & Antiques (T) Limited, filed in this court what they called a Memorandum of Revision in which they asked this Court to revise the proceedings, judgment and order of the High Court Arusha in Misc. Civil Application No 57 of 1993. We think it is in the interests F of clarity if we set out the background or short history of these proceedings.
The present saga started in 1984 when the applicant company filed Civil Case No 51 of 1984 in the High Court at Arusha against the respondent company claiming damages and various other reliefs G for breach of contract involving the shipment of goods to Hong Kong. The case proceeded ex-parte and at the end, an ex-parte judgment was entered in favour of the applicant, subsequently the relevant decree was drawn up. However, the applicant company appears to have been dissatisfied H with the format and content of the decree as according to it the judgment and decree were `not in consonance with the relief prayers of the applicant in his (sic) plaint and oral evidence in court'. The applicant accordingly filed in the High Court at Arusha Misc Civil Application No 14 of 1991 in which it applied for a review of the judgment and decree `to correct the errors apparent on the judgment and decree handed down in Civil Case No 51 of 1984'. The learned judge who heard and determined Civil I Case

No 51 of 1984 reviewed the proceedings, judgment and decree in that case and having done so, A rectified the judgment and decree as prayed. An order embodying the terms of the varied decree was drawn up. This was on 29 May 1992. The matter ought to have rested there, but this was not to be for a year later on 6 April 1993, the applicant filed yet another application this time under s 96 of the B Civil Procedure Code. This was Misc Civil Application No 57 of 1993 in which it made the following prayers:

`That the decree in Civil Case No 51 of 1984 dated is further amended to include "payment of compensation for inflationary and devaluation element as at the date of settlement in full".' C

In his affidavit in support of this application, the managing director of the applicant company, Mr Komba, stated that this prayer had not been granted in Misc Civil Application No 14 of 1991 due to D accidental omission or slip and that this accidental omission has seriously affected the economic future of the applicant. At the conclusion of the hearing of the application, the same learned judge dismissed it saying that the decision on this prayer had not been omitted accidentally or otherwise in Misc Civil Application No 14 of 1991. On the contrary, she said, the Court had made a specific finding E by which the prayer was struck off for lack of supporting material. In the circumstances, she said, as far as this matter was concerned she was functus officio.

Following this ruling and order, the applicant filed a notice of appeal on 2 July 1993 stating that it F intended to appeal against the decision and Order of the High Court in Misc Civil Application No 57 of 1993. As no doubt the applicant could not appeal to this Court against such an order as of right, it filed an application for leave to appeal. This application was heard and dismissed by Mroso J on 29 G October 1993. With the appellate avenue to this Court thus blocked, the applicant company filed this application asking this Court to exercise its revisional jurisdiction and revise the ruling and Order of the High Court in Misc Civil Application No 57 of 1993. In the present application for revision, the H applicant contends that in the proposed revision, it will be urged among other things that `Section 96 of the Civil Procedure Code was applicable to this case and that the judge ought not to have refused to grant the relief sought particularly so when she had granted bank interest in the application for review which relief she had not granted in the main suit'. I

At the hearing of this application, the respondent company
1994 TLR p110
MFALILA JA
A through its advocates filed a notice of motion raising a preliminary objection that this application was incompetent and that therefore it should be dismissed. In support of this preliminary objection, Miss Bigeye learned Counsel for the respondent company, argued a number of grounds.
B Her first point was that Misc Civil Application No 57 of 1993 was time barred as it should have been brought within 60 days as provided under item 21 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act and that therefore the present application being based on a void ruling and order is itself incompetent and should be struck out.
C In reply Mr Komba managing director of the applicant company said that s 96 of the Civil Procedure Code under which the application was brought does not set down a time limit, it provides that such corrections can be made at any time. This section provides as follows:
D `96. Clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgements, decrees or orders or errors arising therein from any accidental slip or omission may at any time be corrected by the Court either of its own motion or on the application of any of the parties.'
E But Miss Bigeye contended that the phrase `at any time' should be read to mean `at any time' within the limitation period.
On our part we are satisfied that the phrase `at any time' means just that, `at any time'. Subject to F the rights of the parties, there should be no point in limiting the time in which to correct such innocuous mistakes or errors which are merely clerical or arithmetical with absolutely no effect on the substance of the judgment, decree or order. Hence if what was sought in Misc Civil Application No 57 of 1993 was merely to correct clerical or arithmetical mistakes arising from an accidental slip G or omission, we agree with Mr Komba that such correction can be made at any time subject as we have indicated to the rights of the parties.
This brings us to Miss Bigeye's next point, namely on the status of Misc Civil Application No 57 of H 1993. Did that application seek merely to correct clerical or arithmetical mistakes in the judgment and decree handed down in Civil Case No 51 of 1984 so that it was properly brought under s 96 of the Civil Procedure Code?
Miss Bigeye contended that Misc Civil Application No 57 of 1993 could not properly be brought under s 96 of the Code because it does not seek merely to correct clerical or arithmetical errors caused by I accidental slip or omission, it in fact seeks to alter the main substance of the judgment and decree in Civil Case No 51 of 1984 hence it is subject to the A Limitation Act.
1994 TLR p111
MFALILA JA
On his part, Mr Komba submitted that the application in Misc Civil Application No 57 of 1993 was properly brought under s 96 hence the applicant was free to bring it at any time.
Section 96, which we have quoted in full, is quite clear in its import. It provides that clerical or B arithmetical mistakes in judgments, decrees or orders arising from accidental slip or omission may be corrected at any time either by the Court on its own motion or on the application of any of the parties. In Misc Civil application No 57 of 1993 the applicant applied for the following order that the decree in Civil Case No 51 of 1984 be `further amended to include payment of compensation for C inflationary and devaluation elements as at the date of settlement in full'. This inflationary and devaluation element is calculated at Shs 58,577,888/=. By any description, this cannot be correcting a mere clerical or arithmetical mistake in the judgment and decree in Civil Case No 51 of 1984. If D granted, the original decretal amount would be inflated by Shs 58,577,888/=. Indeed the applicant avoided using the word `correcting' in its application, the wording `further amended' was used implying that the exercise envisaged involved far more than mere correcting of clerical or arithmetical E mistakes. It involved something which was bound to affect in a very profound way the original judgment and decree. Such an application cannot be fitted in s 96. At the lowest it could be an application for review which under item (3) of Part III of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act should be brought within thirty days. Misc Civil Application No 57 of 1993 was filed in Court almost a year F after the judgment and decree in Civil Case No 51 of 1984 was handed down. It was therefore quite clearly out of time. It was time barred and the learned judge should not have proceeded to hear it without enlarging the time. As we stated in Luke Mepaachi Mollel & 10 Others v Losiyo Ngeseyan - Civil Appeal No 8 of 1993, `the High Court order based, as it was, on the consideration of the invalid G application was itself a nullity and the purported appeal to this Court arising from such a nullity is obviously misconceived and hence incompetent'. Similarly, since the present application arises out of the High Court order in the invalid Misc Civil Application No 57 of 1993; is obviously misconceived H and incompetent and on this ground the preliminary objection must succeed.

Miss Bigeye had two other grounds. She said that since the applicant filed a notice of appeal, it cannot at the same time pursue and use the revisional jurisdiction of this Court. We are satisfied

I

A that this ground is misconceived. As we have indicated earlier in this judgment, the applicant resorted to the revisional jurisdiction of this Court when the appellate door was blocked by the dismissal of his application for leave.

B Lastly, Miss Bigeye contended that this Court has no jurisdiction to revise proceedings in cases decided before 1 January 1994 when the Court was invested with revisional jurisdiction by the Appellate Jurisdiction (Amendment) Act 17 of 1993. But since we have already sustained the preliminary objection on some other ground, we do not feel it is necessary to make a decision on this point.

C For these reasons we uphold the preliminary objection and strike out this application as being misconceived and incompetent. We also make an order for costs in favour of the respondent.

E

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Kisanga JJA, Omar JJA, and Mfalila AgJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 68 OF 1987 F
13 March, 1989
(Appeal from the Conviction of the Economic Crimes Court at Dodoma, Ruhumbika, J)
Flynote
G Criminal law - Theft - Doctrine of recent possession.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Failure to file a notice of appeal in accordance with Rule 61(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979 - Whether appeal is competent.
H Evidence - Defence of alibi - Whether conviction and sentence were valid in law.
-Headnote
The five appellants were charged with and convicted of cattle theft by the Economic Crimes Court. The court sentenced the second and fifth appellants to fourteen years imprisonment and the first appellant to seven years imprisonment `on account of advanced age'. The fifth appellant had jumped bail before trial and was tried and sentenced in I absentia under ss 37(4)(b) and 49(1)(c) of the Economic and Organised Crime A Control Act No 13 of 1984. When this appeal was filed before the Court of Appeal he was still absent.
1994 TLR p113
Held:

(i) Where no sufficient efforts have been made to submit a culprit who was tried in absentia to the process of the court, the Court of Appeal cannot B exercise its discretion to allow an appeal out of time, to do so would be a mockery to Court Orders and might give an impression to the public that there are no obligations to sign bonds;

(ii) Since the appellants did not file the notice of appeal as provided for under Rule 61(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules, 1979, this appeal is incompetent; C

(iii) The trial court did not err in exercising its discretion with regard to the appellants defence of an alibi, thus they were rightly convicted;

(iv) The process of sentencing is not a mechanical function but that calling for the utmost mental effort to ensure that the sentence imposed not only fits the offence but also the offender; in this case it was in the interest of justice to impose a shorter term of imprisonment to the first appellant than that meted to his younger colleagues. D

Case Information
Appeals dismissed.
No cases cited. E
Mbezi, for the appellants.
Benne, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mfalila, AgJA, delivered the following judgment of the court:

The five appellants were charged with and convicted of cattle theft in the F Economic Crimes Court sitting at Dodoma and presided over by Mr Justice Ruhumbika. Upon their convictions the court sentenced appellants two to five to fourteen years imprisonment and the first appellant to seven years imprisonment `on account of his advanced age'. He is over seventy years old. The fifth appellant G Jared Machilika alias Mnyalifa was tried in absentia under the provisions of ss 37(4)(b) and 49(1)(c) of the Economic Crime and Organized Crime Control Act No 13 of 84. In this appeal the fifth appellant was still absent, he has not been arrested since he jumped bail before trial. However all the appellants are challenging both their convictions and sentences. H

The summary of the facts in this case is as follows: The complainant Ernest Majebele (PW1) is a big time cattle owner at Handali Village in Dodoma rural District. On 5 September 1985 at about midnight, a group of cattle thieves invaded his cattle boma and while they were in the act of driving away the cattle, he woke up I

A and in the company of three other male members of his household went out to see what was happening. They tried to follow and confront the thieves. The moon was shinning so the complainant was able to recognize one of the thieves as his neighbour the fifth appellant. But when the thieves threatened to shoot them if they persisted in following them, they retreated and returned home. The following B morning they decided to follow the hoof and foot prints, those went on for a whole day until the marks disappeared at a place where it was obvious the animals had been loaded onto a truck. Suspecting that the cattle had been taken to Dar es Salaam, the complainant and his companions decided to travel to Dar es Salaam C where they combed the cattle markets at Pugu and Kimara. On 9 September 1985 the complainant saw and identified six head of cattle at Kimara abbatoir to be his stolen animals. He seized the animals with the assistance of a policeman on duty (PW5) and had the herdsman arrested. The herdsman explained that the D cattle belonged to one Joseph Chipilipili (PW2) who in the meantime had had the thieves arrested when they tried to sell the cattle to him. The arrested thieves are the present appellants and the fifth appellant who absconded. They were all taken to Magomeni Primary Court and charged and later transferred to Dodoma to face this charge. E

The defences of appellants two to four who are brothers were similar in so far as their reasons for travelling to Dar es Salaam at that particular period was concerned - namely that they travelled to Dar es Salaam not for the purpose of F taking the stolen cattle as alleged by the prosecution, but to go and look for the relatives of the wife or concubine of the second appellant, the wife who had just died at Dodoma. The first appellant said that he travelled to Dar es Salaam to visit his son Job Chilimba and that he took advantage of travelling with the Ndumizi G brothers, the other appellants, because he had never been to Dar es Salaam before. They all denied taking part in the theft of the complainant's cattle saying that they were elsewhere when it happened. The first appellant said he was at his home at Ihumwa Village, the second appellant that he was at Makole at the house of Rashidi Kasuga (DW5) tending his wife Adija, who was then admitted at H Dodoma Hospital. The third appellant said he was at home at Ihumwa and later went to Dodoma on hearing of the death of his sister-in-law. The fourth appellant said that he was on duty at Mirembe Hospital where he works as a watchman. With regard to the time and place of their arrests, they explained that they were arrested at the house of Joseph Chipilipili I

1994 TLR p115
MFALILA AgJA
after Chipilipili himself had invited them to his home when they met him at A Kariakoo. They added that Chipilipili must have arranged for their arrest to save himself as the stolen cattle had been found with his herdsman at his home.
The trial court rejected those explanations and alibis. The court chose to believe the prosecution case to the effect that the appellants were found with the stolen B cattle in Dar es Salaam on 9 September 1985, four days after the theft, and applying the doctrine of recent possession they were deemed to have stolen them.
In this appeal Mr Mbezi who appeared for the appellants argued six grounds of appeal, grounds five and six being on sentence. However when Mr Benne rose to C answer the appeals on behalf of the respondent Republic, he challenged the competency of the fifth appellant's appeal on the ground that he did not file any notice of appeal in accordance with Rule 61(1) of the rules of this Court. In the circumstances, he said, there is no appeal before this Court in respect of this appellant. Mr Mbezi conceded the point but asked us to exercise our discretion in D the matter and grant extension of time to the fifth appellant in which to file his notice. We think Mr Benne's objection is well taken. The notice dated 14 May 1987 is only in respect of the four appellants. Accordingly the fifth appellant did not comply with the provisions of Rule 61(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules, his appeal is therefore incompetent and we strike it out. E
With regard to Mr Mbezi's application for the extension of time, we think this would have been a proper case to use our discretion in favour of the fifth appellant if he had submitted himself to the process of this Court. We hold this view because we think he was improperly tried in absentia. We do not think sufficient effort was F made to trace him to compel his attendance as required by the section ie s 37(4)(b) of the Economic Crime and Organized Crime Control Act 13 of 1984 which allows trials to proceed in the absence of accused persons. The court made specific orders in respect of both the absconding fifth appellant and his G sureties before the trial started, but to date no visible efforts seem to have been made to give effect to this order. We think this situation is very unsatisfactory, it makes a mockery of court orders and gives the unfortunate impression to the public that there are no obligations attached to signing surety bonds. In other H words it is an empty ceremony. We ask the High Court which granted bail to take immediate action against both the fugitive fifth appellant and his sureties. We cannot in these circumstances exercise our discretion in favour of one who has abused the judicial process. I
1994 TLR p116
MFALILA AgJA
A Ground 2 of the appeal can easily be disposed of. In this ground, Mr Mbezi complained that the Trial Judge erred in law in failing to obtain the opinions of the lay members who sat with him and also in failing to sum up the case to them. We think this complaint confuses the role of lay members in an Economic Crimes B Court and Assessors in the ordinary sitting of the High Court. Unlike the ordinary sitting of the High Court, the decisions of the Economic Crimes Court are either by majority or unanimity, there is therefore no need to sum up the case to the Lay Members and obtain their opinions. In this case as the judgment makes it so clear, the decision was unanimous. We therefore see no merit in the complaint in this ground. C

In ground 3 Mr Mbezi complained that the trial court erred in holding that thirty not six head of cattle were stolen from the complainant. At the hearing of the appeal, Mr Mbezi argued that the evidence on record supports a finding of six head of D cattle having been stolen not thirty and that the complainant inflated the figure in his later reports to gain more advantage. In the very first statement which the complainant made to the police, he said that on checking soon after the theft, he found that six head of cattle had been stolen, but he changed this number to thirty E in his subsequent statement. He tried to explain this discrepancy saying that he first mentioned the number six because he had seen six of his stolen cattle at Kimara. This explanation contradicts the very clear language he used in his first statement. He said:

F `Nilipoanza kuhosabung'ombe hae nikagundua kwamba ng'ombo sita wamoibiwa ambaoini ni madume mawili majike wanne' . . .

G In other words he said `when I started to count the cattle, I discovered that six head of cattle had been stolen, two bulls and four cows'. In our view nothing could be clearer. Here he was talking about the total number of animals stolen not just those which were found at Kimara abbatoir. We think in the circumstances it H would be safer to rely on the first statement rather than the latter which could have been influenced by considerations of self interest. The trial court's unanimous view that `thirty head of cattle is the correct figure to be taken in preference to six head of cattle' is therefore unsafe. Accordingly we uphold the complaint in this ground and say that during the night six head of cattle were stolen from the complainant's boma.

In ground 4 of the memorandum of appeal, Mr Mbezi sought to I challenge the whole basis of the appellant's conviction. He complained that the A evidence which was used to convict the appellants being wholly circumstantial, it was wrong for the trial court to reject the alibis of the appellants and convicting them as charged. We would like to state as Mr Mbezi himself conceded in the course of the hearing that it is not correct to say that the evidence against the appellants was wholly circumstantial. There was the evidence of PW1 who saw B and recognised the fifth appellant at the time of the theft. But even the circumstantial evidence which was led was of the strongest kind. For instance there were witnesses who if their evidence is believed as it was, saw the appellants with the stolen cattle only four days after the theft. On the morning of 9 C September 1985 the four appellants went to a city butcher Joseph Chipilipili and offered to sell him six head of cattle. These are the very ones which were identified by the owner PW1. His identification of the head of cattle was not challenged by anyone. Indeed all the appellants did was to deny that the six head of cattle were at D any time in their possession and that PW2 framed them to save himself. This story and as to how they had found themselves at PW2's house where they were arrested was rejected by the trial court. An attempt was made to make capital out E of the differences in the evidence of PW2 and PW3 regarding the time the appellants had been seen with the cattle at Kimara. PW2 told the trial court that he went to Kimara in the company of the appellants to view the animals at about 8 am. PW3 said this was impossible because he had himself seen the second and F fourth appellants offloading the cattle at Kimara around noon and that these two had offered to sell the cattle to him. We do not know why PW3 said it was impossible for PW2 to have been at Kimara in the morning. The trial court observed that anything could have happened between 8 am when PW2 visited G Kimara and 1 pm when PW3 arrived. We agree. The appellants could have temporarily taken the cattle out of the prying eyes of unwanted people and returned them when the situation was `calm'. In fact there is nothing to suggest why PW2 should have chosen to frame his own innocent guests, people from his own area in Dodoma. We think the trial court rightly accepted his evidence as true. H

The trial court also used the statement (P3) of the dead herdsman one Mandawa to link the appellants to this offence. But Mr Mbezi sought to challenge the admissibility of this statement saying that it was improperly admitted under s 34B of the Evidence Act. We think this statement was properly admitted in evidence under that section because it complies with all the conditions envisaged by the section I

A namely that it is written, its maker could not be called as a witness because he is dead and the matters it contains are relevant facts. The only problem with this document pertains to the weight attached to it. The events it describes appear to have taken place in August, 1985 and it is endorsed to have been recorded on 3 B September 1985. Quite clearly then what it describes cannot refer to the events under investigation because both the events and the recording of the statement took place before the theft in this case on 5 September 1985. The record of trial does not contain any explanation on this anomaly. We therefore decided to C disregard this statement completely. But even without this document we think there was left enough other evidence to support the prosecution case that the appellants took part in the theft of the complainant's cattle.

The trial court rejected the appellants' various alibis, we think rightly. The alibis were introduced in the course of the defence case contrary to what s 41 of the D Economic and Organized Crime Control Act provides. It was thus entirely in the discretion of the trial court to decide what weight if any to give to the alibis. We do not think the trial court erred in exercising the discretion in the matter in the way it did. In the circumstances we are satisfied that the appellants were properly convicted.

E Lastly we shall consider together grounds 5 and 6. In these two grounds the appellants complain that the trial court erred in imposing two different sentences on the appellants and that in any case the sentences imposed on the appellants were excessive.

F We wish to state that the process of sentencing is not a mechanical function. On the contrary it is a function calling for the utmost mental effort to ensure that the sentence to be imposed not only fits the offence but the offender. This is exactly what the trial court sought to achieve in this case. After a careful G consideration, the trial court concluded that it was in the interests of justice to impose a shorter term of imprisonment to the first appellant than that meted out to his younger colleagues. We endorse this approach in the circumstances of this case where the difference between the age of the first appellant and that of the other appellants is so wide.

H As to the severity of the sentences which were imposed, we would not have been inclined to interfere if we had found like the trial court that thirty head of cattle had been stolen particularly when the fact of the appellants having been armed with lethal weapons is taken into account. But we have found that only six head of cattle were stolen. Would the trial court have imposed the same sentence if they had found as we have that only six and not thirty head of cattle I were stolen? We do not think so, in any case we are not certain, accordingly we resolve this uncertainty in the appellants' favour. A

For all these reasons we dismiss the appeals of all the four appellants against convictions as well as the appeal of the first appellant against sentence. We allow the appeals against sentences of appellants two to four, and set aside the sentences of fourteen years imposed on them and instead sentence each of them to seven years imprisonment. B

Consequent upon our finding that only six head of cattle were stolen, the order of compensation made in favour of the complainant for the unrecovered twenty-four head of cattle falls away as now all the stolen cattle were recovered. The order of compensation is accordingly set aside. C

E

[zRPz]ANDERSON SOLOMON v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 119 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 42 OF 1993 F
14 February, 1994
(From the decision of the High Court at Dar es Salaam, Bahati, J)
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Appeals against interlocutory orders - Whether G an accused person may appeal against an interlocutory order.
-Headnote
The appellant was charged with stealing by agent contrary to s 273 of the Penal H Code Cap 16. After the case was mentioned in court on five different dates, a date for hearing was set and hearing proceeded in spite of the appellant's request for an adjournment so that he could attend a funeral.

The appellant also made an application to the presiding resident magistrate to have his case transferred to another magistrate. Dissatisfied with the resident magistrate's refusal to transfer the case the appellant filed an I

1994 TLR p120

A application before the High Court. It was not granted and the High Court ordered the trial to proceed before the same magistrate. The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Held: It is settled law that in criminal cases an appeal does not lie from an interlocutory order and the application before the High Court should have been rejected with directions to the District Court to continue with the case; accordingly, there is no legal basis upon which to entertain this appeal. B

Case Information

Appeal dismissed: Case remitted to District Court to continue with proceedings.

Cases referred to:

C (1) Alois Kula and Leyandoi Lekoisa v R, CAT. Criminal Appeal No 121 of 1991 (unreported).

(2) Uganda v Lule, [1973] EA 362.

Senguji, for the Republic (Respondent).

[zJDz]Judgment

D Lubuva, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

Before the District Court of Ilala at Kisutu, the appellant was charged with the offence of stealing by agent contrary to s 273 of the Penal Code. E

From the record, after the case was mentioned in Court on five different dates, it was finally set for hearing on 28 July 1992. This was in spite of the appellant's request for an adjournment in order to enable him to attend a funeral. From 28 July 1992, the hearing of the case started and the prosecution had closed its case. F

The appellant had been addressed in terms of the law regarding his rights in defence of his case. The matter rested there before the District Court.

G On the other hand, the appellant had made an application to the presiding Resident Magistrate Ruhangiza to have the case transferred to another magistrate. The reason advanced for the application to transfer the case was that following on the magistrate's refusal to grant an adjournment, the appellant was apprehensive that the case would not be decided fairly by that magistrate. Dissatisfied with the decision of the presiding magistrate not to transfer the case, H the appellant filed an application before the High Court (Bahati, J). The application was not granted and it was ordered the trial to proceed before the same magistrate. Still dissatisfied with that decision of the High Court, he has now appealed to this Court.

Arguing the appeal before us, the appellant said that it was wrong for the learned judge to refuse his application. He explained that he I had applied for the transfer of the case to another magistrate for two reasons: A First, the date when the case was heard was initially set for mention. That day he asked for an adjournment but was refused. Secondly, when the case was set for hearing, he asked for time to prepare himself, this was again turned down by the learned magistrate. For this reason, he claimed, he was convinced that justice B would not be done to him in the case by that magistrate. He therefore thought he had a right of appeal against the decision of the High Court refusing to grant his application.

1994 TLR p121

LUBUVA JA

Mr Senguji, learned State Attorney who appeared for the Republic, respondent in a brief address firmly opposed the appeal. He argued that in the first place, this C matter was wrongly entertained by the High Court. He submitted that as this matter arose from an interlocutory order in a criminal case it is not appealable. He referred to the decision of this Court in the case of Alois Kula and Leyandoi Lekoisa v Republic (1). In that case, Mr Senguji submitted that this Court dismissed the appeal whose facts were similar to the instant case on grounds of incompetence. D

We respectfully agree with the submission of Mr Senguji, learned State Attorney. It is settled law that an appeal does not lie from interlocutory order in criminal cases. That this is the legal position on this matter is evident from the numerous cases E decided by the then Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa and this Court on this point. Among other cases, the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in dealing with the case of Uganda v Lule (2) EA 362 held:

> `There is no appeal from orders of the High Court incidental to a criminal appeal but not involving the decision of appeal'. F

And more recently, in the cited case of Alois Kula and Leyandoi Lekoisa (1) No 121 of 1991 (unreported) we held that no appeal lies from an interlocutory order in a criminal case. G

In the case before us, which arose from somewhat similar circumstances, we think with respect, the learned judge heard the application in error. The application should have been rejected with direction to the District Court to continue with the case. In the event of the case ending up with the appellant's (accused) conviction, he (appellant) would be at liberty to appeal against the conviction. In the appeal, it would be open for the appellant to include among other grounds the complaint H against the magistrate's refusal to transfer the case. In dealing with the appeal, the issue of impartiality which the appellant is canvassing before us would be considered accordingly. I

A This being the position of the law on interlocutory orders in criminal cases, there is no legal basis upon which this appeal could be entertained. In the result, the appeal being incompetent, it is dismissed in its entirety. It is further ordered that the case be remitted to the District Court with direction to continue with the B proceedings. The appellant would be at liberty to appeal to the High Court if he should be found guilty of the offence with which he is now charged. In that appeal, the appellant may wish to include his complaint against the magistrate's refusal to transfer the case among other grounds of appeal. C

E

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 8 OF 1993
14 February, 1994
F (From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Rubama, J)
Flynote
Criminal Law - Self defence - Appellant followed into his house and hurled with obscene abuses and attacked by complainant - Appellant used panga against the aggressor - Whether excessive force used - Sections 18, 18A and 18B of the Penal Code. G
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted of wounding with intent to cause grievous harm and sentenced to five years imprisonment by the district court. The High Court H dismissed his appeal against conviction but reduced the sentence to three years imprisonment. He appealed further to the High Court. The evidence on record showed that the complainant had followed the appellant into the latter's house and hurled obscene abuses at him and his wife, before attacking him in the presence of his (the appellant's) wife. The appellant then used a panga against the aggressor, causing severe head injuries. I
1994 TLR p123
Held: A
(i) In using a panga in his defence the appellant used excessive force and was therefore rightly convicted of the offence of wounding with intent to cause grievous harm contrary to s 222(1) of the Penal Code;
(ii) The circumstances that preceded the attack of the complainant by the appellant were such that they rendered this a case that loudly cried for leniency, the use of a panga by the appellant notwithstanding. B
Case Information
Sentence reduced.
Cases referred to:
(1) R v Hussey [1924] TLR 205.
Rutakyamirwa, for appellant. C
Senguji, for the Republic.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mnzavas, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the court: D
The appellant, Seif Mohamed Senzagala, was charged with and convicted of wounding with intent to cause grievous harm contrary to s 222(1) of the Penal Code and sentenced to five years imprisonment by the district court.
Dissatisfied with the decision of the district court he appealed to the High Court E which dismissed the appeal against conviction but reduced the sentence of five years imprisonment to one of three years. Still dissatisfied the appellant has come to this Court.

Arguing the appeal before us Mr Rutakyamirwa, learned defence Counsel, submitted that since the High Court (Rubama, J) had found that the attack of the F complainant, (PW1) by the appellant was done in self-defence inside the appellant's room where the complainant had followed him he should have found the appellant not guilty of any offence as the attack was justified in law. In support of his argument the learned Counsel referred us to article 16(1) of the Constitution G of the United Republic of Tanzania and the decision in R v Hussey (1).

In the alternative but without prejudice to the above argument Mr Rutakwamirwa submitted that even if the conviction was to be upheld, (as indeed it was upheld by H the High Court), the circumstances under which the assault was done called for a more lenient sentence than that of three years imposed by the High Court.

The Court was asked to uphold the appeal and order the acquittal of the appellant.

In rebuttal Mr Senguji, learned Senior State Attorney, supported I

A the conviction and the sentence of three years imprisonment. It was argued that the sentence was not so manifestly excessive as to call for reduction by this Court.

When the Court referred the evidence in the district court to the learned State Attorney, he conceded that the complainant was the aggressor who had followed B the appellant into his house. It is also not irrelevant to mention that the complainant hurled obscene abuses to the appellant and his wife before he attacked him in the presence of his (appellant's) wife.

Taking into account this evidence and the provisions of ss 18, 18A and 18B of the Penal Code which say inter alia that: C

> `A person is not criminally liable for an act done in the exercise of the right of self-defence unless "excessive force" is used'.

D We are of the considered view that in using a panga in his defence and thereby causing the complainant to suffer a severe head injury the appellant used excessive force as rightly argued by the learned State Attorney. He was therefore rightly convicted of the offence of wounding with intent to cause grievous harm contrary to s 222(1) of the Penal Code. The appeal against conviction is accordingly dismissed.

E As for the sentence of three years imprisonment imposed by the High Court the learned judge said inter alia before sentencing the appellant:

> `I accept in that vein Mr Rutakyamirwa's submission that the appellant had every justification to defend himself and his property'. F

With that observation by the first appellate Court we respectfully agree; but with even greater respect to the learned judge we are far from being persuaded that taking into account the circumstances that led the appellant to use a panga (as mentioned above) in attacking the complainant called for a severe sentence. G

As rightly argued by the learned defence Counsel had the learned judge sufficiently addressed himself to the circumstances that preceded the attack of the complainant by the appellant he would no doubt have found that this was a case H that loudly cried for lenience the use of a panga by the appellant notwithstanding.

The record shows that the appellant was convicted of the offence on 10 August 1992; and he will by now have served one year and five months imprisonment. We are of the opinion that this is more than sufficient punishment in view of the mitigating factors mentioned above. I
1994 TLR p125
In the event we sentence the appellant to such sentence as will result to his A immediate release from custody. It is so ordered.
1994 TLR p125
C
[zRPz]REPUBLIC v D 4527 D/C ASHERY AND THREE OTHERS 1994 TLR 125 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Moshi
Judge Mroso J D

CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 4 OF 1994
16 March, 1994
Flynote
Road Traffic Act, 1973 - Definition of a motor-vehicle - Whether a `motor cycle' is a `motor E vehicle' - Section 284 of the Penal Code.
Magistrate's Courts - Revision - Reference to the High Court for revision - Powers of resident magistrate in charge to initiate revision of decision of a district magistrate - Section 44(2) of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1984. F
-Headnote
This was a reference proceeding for revision of a decision of a district magistrate to the High Court initiated by a resident magistrate in charge seeking guidance of the High Court on the correctness of the decision of the district magistrate. The reference was made by the resident magistrate under s 30(2) of the Magistrates' Court Act, 1984. G
Held:

(i) The resident magistrate employed the wrong provision in instituting the reference as s 30(2) of the Magistrates' Court Act, 1984 relates to proceedings originating from the Primary Court and not from the District Court. The proper provision in this matter is s 44(2) of the Magistrates' Court Act, 1984; H

(ii) In matters of revision from a District Court the law does not empower the resident magistrate to open a revision record in his court instead he forwards the subject record together with his report to the High Court for it to consider whether or not to make a revision of the District Court proceedings;

(iii) As the District Court record was not forwarded to the High Court the I
1994 TLR p126
A court is unable to give the requested guidance or make a revision of the decision of the District Court;

(iv) A `motor cycle' is a motor vehicle because it is self-propelled, compared to a bicycle, which is usually mechanically propelled; therefore a motor cycle, being a self propelled vehicle, does not fall under s 84 of the Penal Code.

Case Information

B Revision record is quashed and set aside.

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mroso, J:

C The Senior Resident Magistrate in charge of Kilimanjaro Region has forwarded to the High Court a court record titled:

`In the Court of Resident Magistrate at Moshi Criminal Rev C No 1/94

D C/F Same D/C Cr C No 110/93

D 4527 D/C Ashery

E 5535 P/C Jacob

E 5953 P/C Mugendi

Richard Muhanza.'

E The proceedings in that record are dated 23 February 1994 and were before Mr BM Muilla, SRM in charge with Applicant and Respondent shown as absent. The proceedings are entitled:

`Reference to the High Court Made under Section 30(2) of the Magistrates' Courts Act No 2 of 1984' F

It would appear that there have been criminal proceedings in the District Court of Same in which four accused persons, three of whom are policemen, were charged with the offence of conversion not amounting to theft, contrary to s 284 of G the Penal Code. The four accused person are alleged to have unlawfully converted a motor cycle belonging to CCM to their own use without authority from CCM. In the course of the trial the question was raised whether conversion of a motor cycle is an offence under the section cited in the charge sheet, since it was not a `draught or riding animal or any mechanically propelled cycle of any description or any vessel....' H

I gather from the senior resident magistrate in charge in his reference proceedings that the trial district magistrate ruled that according to the Road Traffic Act, No 30 of 1973, a `motor cycle' is a `motor vehicle' by definition and that having so found, the district magis- I trate dismissed the preliminary point which had been raised, questioning the A propriety of the charge.

Before I proceed any further, let me point out to the senior resident magistrate in charge that, in the first place, he has employed the wrong section of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 in this reference. Section 30(2) which he employed does not relate to proceedings originating in District Courts. If the learned senior B resident magistrate in charge would care to look again at the provision he will note that it says:

`A resident magistrate in charge may call for and inspect the record of any proceedings under C this Part.... (emphasis added).

The words `this Part' refer to Part III of the Magistrates' Court Act which is on - D `Jurisdiction and power of, And Appeals, Etc from Primary Court'.

That part starts with s 18 and ends with s 39.

Proceedings in the District Court of Same referred to in the reference do not therefore fall under Part III of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 Original proceedings in District Courts and Courts of Resident Magistrate came under Part IV of the Act and the relevant section would have been s 44(2) of Act. There it is E provided:

`A resident Magistrate in charge may call for an inspect the record of any proceedings in a F district court and may examine the records or registers thereof for the purpose of satisfying himself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any decision or order and as to the regularity of any proceedings therein; and may, in any case in which he considers that any decision or order is illegal or improper or any proceedings are irregular, forward the record with a report to the High Court in order that it may consider whether or not to exercise its powers of revision' (emphasis added). G

So, in the second place, the senior resident magistrate in charge does not himself open a revision record in his court as he did in this case. Rather, as the words I H have underlined show, he forwards the subject record (that of the District Court) together with his report (regarding that record) to the High Court for that court to consider whether or not revise those District Court proceedings, decision or order believed to be irregular, illegal or improper. In the present matter the District Court record was not forwarded to the High I

A Court. What was forwarded is a record of the Court of Resident Magistrate at Moshi titled Criminal Revision No 1 of 1994. Indeed, the contents in that record were not even revision proceedings as one would have expected but a reference report, albeit under the wrong section of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984. Now back to the substance of the record. B

I presume the senior resident magistrate in charge found the proceedings or ruling of the District Court on the question whether the charge which faced the accused persons in Same District Court Criminal case No 110 of 1993 was not correct.

C Unfortunately the District Court record, as I already said, was not forwarded to the High Court and from the report of the senior resident magistrate in charge, I am unable to understand how if the presiding district magistrate found that a `motor cycle' is a `motor vehicle' he would proceed to dismiss the preliminary point raised by the advocate that the charge under s 284 of the Penal Code was D inappropriate. In the absence of the District Court record, therefore, I am unable to give the requested guidance.

Even so, let me hazard to say that a `motor cycle' is indeed a motor vehicle of some sort because it is self propelled, compared to, say a bicycle, which is E usually mechanically propelled. I do not know the state to which the proceedings in the District Court have reached but a motor cycle being a self propelled vehicle, does not fall under s 284 of the Penal Code.

F Since the senior resident magistrate in charge should not have opened a revision record in his court in respect of Same District Court Criminal Case No 110 of 1993, that revision record is quashed and set aside. If the learned senior resident magistrate still needs the opinion of the High Court on the propriety of the proceedings in Same District Court, he should follow the guidance I have given above. G

1994 TLR p129

A

[zRPz]RAJABU KHALIFA KATUMBO AND THREE OTHERS v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 129 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Mnzavas JJA, Mfalila JJA and Lubuva JJA B

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 94 OF 1993

19 April, 1994

(From the judgment of the High Court of Tanzania at Morogoro, Bahati, J) C

Flynote

Evidence - Identification of accused persons - Murder committed at night during a burglary - Whether identification of the accused as the murderers could not have been mistaken. D

-Headnote

The four appellants were tried and convicted of murder and sentenced to death. They appealed against conviction and sentence, arguing that they were victims of mistaken identity. The offence was committed at night in the course of a burglary.

Held:

(i) Although the offence was committed at night, there were two lamps in the E corridor inside the house which facilitated the identification of the offenders;

(ii) The accused were known to the witnesses well before the day of the incident; the witnesses, therefore, were extremely unlikely to mistake them;

(iii) On the totality of the evidence, the Trial Judge was entitled to come to the F conclusion that the appellants were properly identified as among the robbers who terrorised the house on the material night.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No cases referred to. G

Lubulira, for the appellants.

Miss Korosso for the respondents.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: H

The four appellants, Rajabu Halifa Katumbo, Salehe Shabani Msebwege, Kibwana Shabani Msebwage and Kigona Iddi Kigoma were tried for murder. They were found guilty and duly convicted. Bahati, J accordingly sentenced them to death. I

A Two grounds of appeal filed on behalf of the appellants were argued for them by Mr Lubulira, learned defence counsel.

Miss Korosso, learned state attorney resisted the appeal.

The following facts which led to the arrest and arraignment of the appellants were not in dispute:

B On 6 April 1990 at Malui village, Kilosa district the house of one Salehe Vindiri was burgled into by bandits who in the course of their nefarious activities shot and killed Salehe Vindiri. They also shot dead one Mkunda Mkunda, a watchman.

C One Mkingila, (PW1), who rented part of the house of the deceased, Salehe Mkingila, in which he was running a shop was also shot and injured; bullets brased his cheek and head. The killings were reported to the police and wheels of investigation led to arrest and arraignment of the appellants and seven other accused who were acquitted. In the High Court the Republic alleged and convinced the trial judge that the appellants were the assailants and that they killed the deceased persons with malice aforethought. D

The trial court relied mainly on the evidence of Salum Mkingila, (PW1) and Siwatu Hassani (PW2) who testified that they saw and recognised the appellants on the fateful night as they were marauding the shop armed with a gun. E

In their defences the first appellant advanced defence of alibi saying that he was sleeping in his house the whole night the killings took place. Likewise the second appellant told the court that he could not have committed the offence as he was on the material day in his house from 6 pm till morning with his wife Suzana. Suzana supported her husband's defence of alibi. F

The third appellant also advanced the defence of alibi and said that on the material date - 5 April 1990 he was at his house from 7 pm till next morning.

G Kigoma Iddi Kigoma, fourth appellant, said he was nowhere near the scene of crime. According to his defence he was at home in Kisokwe village on 5 April 1990. He remained in his homestead from 8 pm till next morning.

H The learned judge considered the defences of the appellants and came to the conclusion that the defence of alibi was not available to any of them. He believed the prosecution witnesses, (PW1 and PW2), that they properly identified the appellants as among the bandits they saw on the material night.

Mr Lubulira, learned defence counsel, vigorously assailed the decision of the High I Court arguing that the killings were committed at night and that it was possible that the two witnesses could have been mistaken in their identification of the appellants; as conditions favouring A identification were difficult.

It was argued that as there must have been pandemonium while the bandits were burgling the house and shooting indiscriminately it was unlikely that PW1 and PW2 could have been so courageous as to be able to peep from their rooms and recognise the bandits. B

In rebuttal Miss Korosso submitted that although the offence was committed at night there were two lamps, a hurricane lamp and a wick-lamp burning in the corridor of the house through which the bandits passed towards the shop. It was also argued that both the witnesses knew the appellants before the incident; and that PW1 mentioned the names of the appellants to the police which facilitated in their arrest. C

As for the evidence of PW2 who had told the police that he knew two of the bandits by their faces although she did not know their names, Miss Korosso submitted that the witness identified the first and fourth appellants as among the bandits on the material night in an identification parade without any hesitation. D

The learned state attorney was of the view that on the evidence the two witnesses could not have mistaken the identity of the appellants and asked the court to dismiss the appeal. E

After a thorough scrutiny of the evidence we agree with Miss Korosso, learned state attorney, that the totality of the evidence entitled the learned judge to come to the conclusion that the appellants were properly identified by PW1 and PW2 as among the robbers who terrorised the house on the material night. There was F undisputed evidence that all the appellants were well known to PW1 before the killing. There was also undisputed evidence that although the offence was committed at night there were two lamps burning in the corridor inside the house which facilitated their being identified. And what is more PW1 immediately reported to the police what had happened and mentioned the appellants as among the bandits. The report facilitated in the arrest of the appellants. G

Again PW2 also told the police that he recognized two of the robbers on the material night as she had seen them in the village on many occasions before the incident; although she said she did not know their names. That she recognised H two of the bandits on the material night was fortified by her identification of the first and fourth appellants in a police identification parade without any hesitation.

It is also relevant to mention that both witnesses told the court that the first appellant, Rajabu Khalfani Katumbo, I

A was armed with a gun; and when PW1 was cross-examined as to how he recognized the voice of the bandit who told the others `shoot him he is escaping' he replied: `I have known Kibwana (third appellant) for a long time. I knew Kibwana's voice. We used to play sports together'.

B Apparently there was no suggestion leave alone evidence that PW1 and PW2 had reason to tell lies against the appellants so as to cause them their undoing.

It is our view that for evidence to be so consistent the only common denominator, save perjury, must be truth. We are satisfied in our own minds that the possibility C of mistaken identification of the appellants as among the bandits who burgled the house on the material night and killed the two decease was properly excluded by the learned judge.

In the event the appeal is dismissed in its entirety and it is so ordered. D

1994 TLR p132

E

[zRPz]ALI ABDALLAH RAJAB v SAADA ABDALLAH RAJAB AND OTHERS 1994 TLR 132 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Zanzibar F

Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 42 of 1993

13 May, 1994 G

(From the judgment and decree of High Court of Zanzibar at Zanzibar, Mmila, RM/Extended Jurisdiction).

Flynote

H Evidence - Evidence of a spouse - Failure to warn oneself on evidence from a spouse.

Evidence - Credibility of - Witnesses - Whether appellate court can assess credibility of witnesses

-Headnote

The appellant appealed against the decision of the High Court of Zanzibar contending that it was wrong in believing the testimony of the first I respondent without taking into account that she was an interested party in the suit, A and that it failed to warn itself that her testimony could be biased in favour of the second respondent, her husband.

1994 TLR p133

Held:

(i) Where a case is essentially one of fact, in the absence of any indication that the trial court failed to take some material point or circumstance into account, it is improper for the appellate court to say that the trial court has come to an erroneous conclusion; B

(ii) Where the decision of a case is wholly based on the credibility of the witnesses then it is the trial court which is better placed to assess their credibility than an appellate court which merely reads the transcript of the record. C

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred.

Mbwezeleni, for appellant.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court. D

This is an appeal against the decision of Mmila, Regional Magistrate, (Extended Jurisdiction), which adjudged the second respondent, Mohamed Burhan Mkelle, the owner of a house build on Plot No 18/25 at Kisima Majongoo area in Zanzibar township. E

In his memorandum of appeal, the appellant, Ali Abdulla Rajab, argued that the Trial Magistrate (Ext Jurisdiction) erred in law in assuming that Plot No 18/25 is the same as Plot No 18/26A and thereby holding against him. F

Secondly, it is alleged that the trial court was wrong in believing the testimony of the first respondent, Saada Abdulla Rajab without taking into account that she was an interested party in the suit. In the third ground the appellant alleged that, and we quote: G

`The learned trial Regional Magistrate erred in law in concluding that the physical change of the suit premises must of necessity be caused by demolition and nothing else'.

Finally the fourth ground of appeal was that the trial court erred in law in concluding H that `undertaking efforts to build a house belonging to ones in law confers one the right of ownership'.

Before we proceed further we would like to mention that when the appeal came up for hearing the first, second and the fourth appellants did not appear despite the fact that they were duly served with notices of hearing. Mr Mbwezeleni, learned Counsel I

1994 TLR p134

MNZAVAS JA

A for the appellant applied for leave to be heard ex-parte and was allowed to proceed under Rule 105(2) of the Court of Appeal Rules in respect of the first, second and fourth appellants.

Elaborating on the grounds of appeal the learned Counsel argued that the learned Trial Magistrate (Ext Juridiction) failed to warn himself when assessing the evidence of Saada, the first respondent, that her testimony could be biased in B favour of the second respondent who is her husband. It was Mr Mbwezeleni's argument that the trial magistrate's decision was not supported by the evidence before him and asked the Court to set aside that judgment and declare the appellant and his sister, first respondent, the owners of the disputed premises. C

In rebuttal the third respondent, Ahmed Suleiman, who bought the disputed house from the second respondent told the Court that the house the appellant claims to be his property had been demolished by municipal authorities as it had become dilapidated; and that after its demolition the second respondent erected a new D house on the plot which house he later sold to him; third respondent.

In this appeal the following matters were not in controversy:

One, Mwanabaraka d/o Salim owned a house - No 18/25 at Kisima-Majongoo. Mwanambaraka died in 1944 and her house was inherited by her daughter one, E Bimkubwa Ali. Four years later, in 1948, Bimkubwa met her death and the house was inherited by her two children, the first respondent and the appellant. The first respondent, Saada, is married to the second respondent, Mohamed Burhan Mkelle. F

The issue that the trial court had to decide was whether the house bought by the third respondent from the second respondent was the same house inherited by the appellant and the first respondent after the death of their mother as alleged by the appellant; or whether it was a brand new house built by the second respondent G after the house inherited by the appellant and his sister, the first respondent, had been demolished by municipal authorities as argued by the second respondent.

In his evidence before the Court of first instance the appellant argued that the disputed house was the same house he and his sister, first respondent, inherited H from their mother. It was his testimony that while he was in Nairobi he entrusted the house to his sister to look after it and that he used to repair the house. He also told the Court that on one occasion he gave his brother-in-law, the second respondent, Shs 3000/= to effect repairs on the house. It was his evidence that the house looked new because of repairs on it and I not because a new house had been built on the plot as alleged by the second A respondent.

In her defence the first defendant denied that the appellant had entrusted the house to her. According to her defence the house the appellant claimed was demolished by the Government because it was in bad shape. B

The second respondent told the Trial Court that after the house which belonged to the appellant had been demolished by the government he applied for a building permit to build a house on the vacant plot. He was issued with a permit and built the house in his name and that it is this house the appellant is claiming to be his property. He denied receiving Shs 3000/= from the appellant for repair of his house. C

According to his defence the appellant was always in financial difficulties and that on one occasion he had to find him a job with Rex Hotel in Dar es Salaam. It was also his defence that on another occasion he advanced the appellant capital to enable him to start business as a fish-monger. D

In assessing the evidence the learned Trial Magistrate said on page two of the typed script of the judgment inter alia: E

> `However, taking the whole evidence into consideration this Court is of a clear view that the assertion of the plaintiff that the house was never demolished cannot stand. Two of his witnesses PW1 and PW2 all ended up conceding that the previous premises were demolished. PW1 Ramadhani Juma, . . . admitted when cross-examined by the attorney of the third defendant that the current house in that place is a modern house, roofed with iron-sheets. He also admitted that all the walls were physically pulled down and replaced by new ones, and that work was undertaken by Mohamed Burhan Mkelle'. F

The learned magistrate also believed the evidence of PW2, Sheha Hadji Ali who G said that document No 1010/1955 dated 14 June 1955 came from his office, the municipal office; and that it showed that the previous premises which stood on Plot No 18/25 was demolished. From the evidence of this witness the document No 7/59 dated 10 January 1959 showed that the plot was cleared and that there was no house on the plot. H

The Trial Magistrate also believed the second respondent when he said the plaintiff did not give him any money for repair of his (appellant's) house. The decision of this case was wholly based on the credibility of the witnesses. The learned Trial Magistrate saw and heard the witnesses as they testified. He was therefore in a I

1994 TLR p136

A better position to assess their credibility than this Court which merely reads the transcript of the record.

This Court has repeatedly held that where a case is essentially one of fact, in the absence of any indication that the Trial Magistrate/Judge has failed to take some material point or circumstance into account, it is improper for the Court to say that he has come to an erroneous conclusion. B

With respect to Mr Mbwezeleni, learned Counsel for the appellant, the preponderance of probabilities heavily weighed against the appellant. We see no good reason to differ with the finding of the trial court, based as it was, on the credibility of the witnesses. C

In the event the appeal is dismissed.

The respondents to have their costs.

1994 TLR p136

E

[zRPz]MOHAMED AMOOR KHALID AND MAHAMOUD AYUB IBRAHIM v AHMED ISSA KHALFANI 1994 TLR 136 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Zanzibar

Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA F

CIVIL REFERENCE NO. 12 OF 1993

13 May, 1994

G (From the Ruling of a single judge of the Court of Appeal of Tanzania at Zanzibar, Omar, JA).

Flynote

Court of Appeal Rules - Application to strike out a notice of appeal for failure to institute the appeal in time - Whether lack of money is a defence. H

-Headnote

The reference was from the ruling of the Court of Appeal by a single judge granting the respondent an application to strike out notice of appeal by the applicants for failure to institute the appeal within 60 days after being supplied with the copy of proceedings. The applicants argued that their failure to institute the appeal in time was due to lack of funds and ignorance regarding the steps to be taken in such circumstances. I

1994 TLR p137

Held:

(i) Lack of funds to institute an appeal within sixty days as required by the A rules is an irrelevant reason in an application to strike out a notice of appeal.

Case Information

Reference dismissed.

No cases referred to. B

[zJDz]Judgment

Mfalila, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:

This is a reference from the Ruling of Omar, JA in Civil Application No 2 of 1993 in C which the applicant Ahmed Issa Khalfani, the present respondent, sought to have the respondents' notice of appeal struck out. In that application, the applicant alleged that the respondents, Mohamed Amour Khalid and Mahamoud Ayub Ibrahim, the present applicants, had filed their notice of appeal without serving the D same on him and that subsequently they failed to take an essential step timeously ie they did not institute the appeal within the prescribed period. Omar, JA found after scrutinising the records in the respondents' possession that the notice of appeal had in fact been served on the applicant but that the respondents had failed to institute the appeal within sixty days after being supplied with the copy of E proceedings. He therefore granted the application and struck out the notice of appeal.

The applicants were aggrieved by this decision and filed this reference on the basis that they failed to institute the appeal in time because they did not have the F money to meet the costs, and that they came to Court to file the appeal as soon as they acquired the necessary funds.

At the hearing of this reference, both applicants conceded that on the facts there was nothing wrong with the decision of the single judge, but they argued that they G should be allowed to proceed with their appeal because the reasons which prevented them from instituting the appeal on time were beyond their control, in that they lacked the necessary funds to pay for the appeal and they were ignorant of the law as to the steps to be taken in such circumstances. The respondent, no H doubt in view of the applicants' concessions on the correctness of the decision of the single judge, said he had nothing to say.

The reasons which the applicants gave for not instituting the appeal in time, could have been relevant if this were an application for enlargement of time. In this application we are only dealing with I

A the question of striking out the notice of appeal for failure to take an essential step in time. We agree with the findings of the learned single judge that the notice of appeal was served on the present respondent in time and that the application for the copy of proceedings was in writing and was copied to the respondent. But since the proceedings were supplied to the applicants on 28 January 1993, they B should have instituted the appeal within sixty days ie by 29 March 1993. They did not do so until 5 August 1993, almost five months out of time. In these circumstances the learned single judge did not have any other alternative except to allow the application and strike out the notice of appeal. Indeed as we have already C indicated the applicants have conceded as such.

For these reasons we dismiss this reference with costs.

E

[zRPz]AMIRI MOHAMED v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 138 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Tanga

Judge Makame JJA, Omar JJA and Ramadhani JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 5 OF 1994 F
18 May, 1994
(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Tanga, Kileo - PRM/Extended Jurisdiction). G
Flynote
Evidence - Analysis of evidence - Failure to properly analyse evidence - Consequence thereof.
Evidence - Hostile witness - Evidence of hostile witness - Whether such evidence may be used.
Evidence - Corroboration - Circumstantial evidence - Reliability of witness H Criminal Practice and Procedure - Murder - Motive - Whether motive is necessary to establish murder.
-Headnote
The appellant appealed against conviction and sentence for murder. He challenged the conviction on, inter alia, the ground that the testimony of I one witness in court differed with the statement of the same witness made to the A police one day after the event; in particular about the sequence of events. Another ground was that the trial court was wrong to disbelieve the reasonable and likely version by the appellant because the Trial Magistrate had made up her mind that the appellant was a liar.
1994 TLR p139
Held: B

(i) All the three versions of evidence given by three different witnesses yielded the same basic message, that the appellant issued threats to the effect that the deceased had done something bad to the appellant for which the deceased would have had to pay on the day he was murdered; C

(ii) The appellant did utter the threats to the deceased and this was a circumstance to be taken into account in considering the guilt or otherwise of the appellant;

(iii) It is improper to use evidence of a hostile witness which has to be thrown out in toto; however in this case there was evidence of the appellant himself that he did instruct the hostile witness to throw away the weapon alleged to have been used for the murder, into a latrine or into a river; D

(iv) Every magistrate or judge has got his or her own style of composing a judgment, and what vitally matters is that the essential ingredients should be there, and these include critical analysis of both the Prosecution and the Defence; E

(v) The conduct of the appellant of disappearing from his abode soon after the event of murder and his explanations show that he was responsible for the murder:

(vi) Although motive is not discernible on the record but motive does not have to be established to bring the charge home. F
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
No case referred to.

Kavuta, for the appellant.
Bilaro, State Attorney for the respondent. G
[zJDz]Judgment
Makame, JA, delivered the considered judgment of the Court: H
The appellant Amiri Mohammed was condemned to death by Mrs Kiloo, PRM, Extended Jurisdiction, after being found guilty of murdering a woman, variously described as a widow or divorcee, Asha Miraji, at Kilole Village, Korogwe District on 15 February 1991. He is advocated for by Mr Kavuta, learned Counsel, while Mr Bilaro, learned Senior State Attorney appeared for the respondent and urged us to sustain the finding that the appellant is guilty. I
1994 TLR p140
MAKAME JA
A The deceased was stabbed to death some 50 paces from the house of PW4 Vincent Michael and his wife PW2 Harlamu Mkoma who, like PW3 Daniel Komba, said the appellant was one of the people who went visiting at that house that evening. The appellant owned as much, so that was common ground.
B According to PW4, PW2 and PW3, the appellant uttered some threats to the deceased who was also at the house where PW2 was sick. The appellant threatened to get even with the deceased because of some undisclosed uncivil treatment he had been subjected to by the deceased previously. PW4 did not like the commotion in his house so he asked all the visitors to leave. PW4 testified to C leaving the house with the deceased with the appellant behind them. Outside there the appellant resumed the quarrel which the deceased said she did not like, whereupon the appellant seized the deceased by her dress and hit her with something the appellant fished out from his pocket. The deceased cried out that she had been stabbed with a knife while the appellant ran away. D
On behalf of his client Mr Kavuta argued four grounds. First he submitted that PW3's testimony ought not to have been believed and relied on by the trial court because it differed from Exh D1, the statement the witness made to the police one day after the event, in particular about the sequence of events. Going by the statement there was a time when PW3 went away from the deceased, and less E than five minutes later is when PW3 heard the deceased's cries.
Learned Counsel for the appellant also urged that the alleged threats by the appellant inside the house were sheer lies. There were no such threats made and that was why the renderings by the three witnesses were so variant. F
The appellant's advocate's other ground of complaint was that the learned Trial Magistrate erred in finding that the appellant used the bush-knife (Exh 13) to kill the deceased by making use of the evidence of the appellant's daughter PW5 Fatuma Amiri and that of PW6 D/Sgt Hatal. G
Counsel's last ground is that it was wrong on the part of the trial court to disbelieve the reasonable and likely version by the appellant. Counsel also submitted that the Trial Magistrate made up her mind that the appellant was a liar so that even then H she came to consider the appellant's disappearance after the killing she made conclusions without properly analysing the appellant's story.

The appellant's version was that although he did go to the house of PW4 and there found the deceased who left with PW3 ahead of him, there was no trouble at all. He left the place normally but did I not go home. He spent the night at Hanundu in his uncle's house and the following A day he went on to Ngombozi to look for a job. We wish to pause here and observe two things: One that the uncle was not called and two that according to the appellant himself he had an uncompleted masonry assignment which he left to be completed by other fundis. Regarding the panga said to be the murder weapon, the appellant said he did tell his daughter to throw the panga into a latrine or the B river but this was because it had hurt him.
1994 TLR p141
MAKAME JA
Mr Bilaro, learned Attorney for the Republic supported the conviction. He conceded that PW3's statement to the police differed from what she later told the Court but C he urged us to accept her explanation that at the police station she held back somewhat as she was scared and she had been roughed up. Mr Bilaro also submitted that PW3's identification of the appellant at the scene was worthy of belief. If, however, we thought that that piece of evidence needed corroboration such corroboration was available from three aspects. Those were the threats the appellant uttered to the deceased at the house, the appellant's disappearance for D some days, and the discovery of the murder weapon. Learned State Attorney also pointed out that the evidence of the appellant's daughter was discarded and not used. The learned Trial Magistrate relied rather on the appellant's own evidence and that of PW6. Mr Bilaro also submitted that the reason the appellant gave for wanting to dispose of the panga was flimsy. Lastly, on Ground 4 learned E State Attorney said it was only a matter of style: The truth is that the learned Trial Magistrate considered the evidence of both the Prosecution and the Defence before arriving at her decision. F
We are obliged to both Counsel for their help. We propose to deal with the second ground first. With respect, we are not at all impressed by the appellant's advocate's submission that the disparity in the three reproductions of the reported G threats by the appellant to the deceased are such that the trial court ought reasonably to have doubted the veracity of PW2, PW3 and PW4. All the three versions yield the same basic message: That the deceased had done something bad to the appellant for which the deceased would have to pay that day. The three witnesses should not have been expected to quote the appellant verbatim necessarily. In fact, in the circumstances, if such witness had used the same H precise identical words one might start wondering. Like the trial court, we are satisfied that the appellant did utter the threats to the deceased. We might jump in here and add that this was I
1994 TLR p142
MAKAME JA
A indeed a circumstance to be taken into account in considering the guilt or otherwise of the appellant.
Regarding the bush-knife which was Ground 3, we wish to say that one did not have to rely on the evidence of the girl PW5 to find that it featured in the case. Further, it is true that it would indeed have been improper to make use of it B because the evidence of a hostile witness has to be thrown out in toto. In the instant case, however, there was the evidence of the appellant himself that he did instruct PW5 to throw away the weapon, into a latrine or into a river. People do not C usually throw away weapons which happen to hurt them, as that would be quite unnatural. If you fear that a weapon would hurt you again why not fear for your daughter also, and why not think of members of the public who may have D occasion to be in the river? We are satisfied that the appellant had something to fear about the panga and that was why he gave instructions for its disposal. We too think it would have been better workmanship to send the weapon to the government chemist, but in the particular circumstances of this case we do not think the unhappy omission was fatal.

E Regarding Ground 4 we agree with what Mr Bilaro said. Every magistrate or judge has got his or her own style of composing a judgment. Some judgments are more logically written, some are more neatly thoughtful, some are more compondious, and so on. What vitally matters is that the essences should be there, and these include critical analysis of both the prosecution and the defence. We are unable to say that the essential ingredients are lacking in the judgment we are considering. F

We now wish to turn back to the issue of the reliability or otherwise of the witness Daniel Komba. One needs to be realistic. We cannot fail to agree with Mr Bilaro that what we are satisfied did happen at the house of PW2 and PW4 is a G circumstance legitimately to be taken into account. We are of course referring to the threats which, as we have indicated, we are satisfied the appellant did utter. Within minutes thereafter the deceased lies stabbed and dead. The Trial Magistrate and both her assessors specifically said they believed PW3. We are H respectfully of the view that what she said was true and we accept her explanation that she held back some information at the police station because she was scared and had been roughed up. That in our view explains the disparity pointed out.

There was also the behaviour of the appellant soon after the event. He disappeared from his abode and his story that he went I off to look for a job, while he had another job uncompleted and without saying A goodbye to his family, convinces us that he went into hiding because he was responsible for the dastardly deed. If he innocently spent the night at the house of his uncle and innocently again travelled with him one would have expected him to call that uncle or at least explain why he did not do so. B

The totality of the evidence satisfied us, beyond reasonable doubt, as it did the learned Trial Magistrate, that it was the appellant that murdered the deceased. The appellant knows why he did so. The motive is not discernible on the record but then, of course, motive does not have to be established to bring the charge home. C

We dismiss the appeal as we are satisfied that the Trial Court decision cannot justly be assailed.

We wish to associate ourselves with what Mrs Kiloo said about the police habit of confining a suspect's dear ones so as to lure the suspect from hiding. The practice may produce the desired results but is is certainly crude, mean, unjust, callous, and deplorable. It is hardly calculated to endear the police force to the public. D

1994 TLR p143

[zRPz]MAULID HASSAN KONDO v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 143 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam F
Judge Nyalali JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 164 OF 1993 G
30 May, 1994
(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Mapigano, J)
Flynote
Criminal Law - Murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code Cap 16 H
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Memorandum of Appeal filed out of time - Consequences thereof - Rule 65(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979.
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code, and sentenced to death. He appealed to the Court of Appeal. When the I
1994 TLR p144
A appeal came up for hearing it was discovered that the memorandum of appeal had been filed out of time.
Held:
(i) The appeal was not properly before the Court as the mandatory provisions of Rule 65(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979 were not complied with;
B (ii) Malice aforethought was clearly established by the evidence that the applicant used a pestle in attacking the deceased, and there were no reasons to interfere with the finding of the High Court which was based on clear and loud evidence.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
C No case referred to.
Lamwai, for the appellant.
Miss Kiwanga, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
D Mnzavas, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Courts:
Maulidi Hassani Kondo was charged with and convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code and sentenced to death. Dissatisfied with the decision of the High Court, (Mapigano, J) he has appealed to this Court. E
When the appeal came up for hearing on 17 February 1994 we discovered that it was not properly before us as the memorandum of appeal was filed out of time contrary to the provisions of Rule 65(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules. Dr Lamwai, F learned defence counsel applied for an adjournment to enable him to file an application for leave by this Court for enlargement of time to file memorandum of appeal. The application was granted but when the matter came up again for hearing this morning - 26 May 1994, Dr Lamwai informed the Court that after he G had scrutinised the evidence tendered in the High Court he was of the view that the conviction was based on the evidence of identification of the appellant by PW1, Fatuma Thabiti, who told the trial court that she saw and identified the appellant as he was attacking the deceased Thabiti Ali on 18 November 1990.

H The learned defence counsel finally told the Court that he had nothing to say about the conviction and left the matter to the Court to decide. In her short submission to the Court Miss Kiwanga, learned State Attorney, said that in view of what the learned defence counsel had stated she also left it to the court to decide.

First we would like to point out that the appeal was not properly before us as the mandatory provisions of Rule 65(1) were not com- I plied with. That being the position the Court would be entitled to strike it out as A incompetent.

1994 TLR p145

MNZAVAS JA

Even if for the sake of argument the appeal had been properly before us we would have no reason to interfere with the finding of the High Court taking into account that the conviction was based on the clear and loud evidence of Fatuma, PW1. B

The witness, (PW1), testified that she knew the appellant before the incident and that she clearly saw him attacking the deceased on the head with a pestle. According to her testimony the attack took place in the morning at a `ngoma' party to celebrate the initiation of three girls and that it was in the morning at 6 am. That PW1 could not have mistakenly identified the appellant is evident from her C husband's testimony. Her husband, (PW2), told the court that he saw the appellant holding a pestle and attacking his wife (PW1) in the flank. Apparently the appellant is uncle of PW2. There was no suggestion, leave alone evidence, that PW1 and PW2 had reason to tell lies against the appellant. D

We see no reason to differ with the learned judge's finding of fact that it was the appellant who fatally attacked the deceased on the material day. Malice aforethought was clearly established taking into account the evidence that the appellant used a pestle in attacking the deceased; he held the pestle with both E hands when inflicting the blow and directed the blow to such vulnerable part of the body, the head.

We are satisfied in our own minds that there was ample evidence in support of the learned judge's finding that the appellant was guilty of the offence of murder as charged. In the event we dismiss the appeal in its entirety. F

1994 TLR p146

A

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v MBUSHUU alias DOMINIC MNYAROJE AND KALAI SANGULA 1994 TLR 146 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Mwalusanya J

B CRIMINAL SESSIONS CASE NO. 44 OF 1991
22 June, 1994
Flynote
C Constitutional Law - Death penalty - Whether or not offends the right to dignity - Article 13(6)(d) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania, 1977.
Constitutional Law - Death penalty - Whether it is a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment and treatment - Article 13(6)(e) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania.
D Constitutional Law - Penal Code - Whether the provision prescribing death penalty is lawful law or necessary in the public interest - Article 30(2) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania.
Constitutional Law - Death penalty - Whether death penalty violates article 14 of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania which guarantees the right to life.
E Constitutional Law - Violation of basic rights - Burden of proof - Proof on balance of probabilities.
F Statutory interpretation - Constitutional provisions guaranteeing basic rights - Whether generous and purposive construction should be applied.
-Headnote
The two accused were convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code, by the High Court and they were to be sentenced to death. However before the G sentence was pronounced a point was raised that the death penalty was unconstitutional and therefore it should not be imposed on the accused.
Held:
H (i) Death penalty offends the right to the dignity of a person in the way the sentence is executed and therefore it offends article 13(6)(d) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania;

(ii) Death penalty is inherently cruel, inhuman and a degrading punishment and the process of execution by hanging is particularly gruesome, generally sordid, debasing and generally brutalising, and it offends article 13(6)(e) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania; I
1994 TLR p147

(iii) From the wording of article 14 on the right to life in the Swahili version of A the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania, which is the controlling version, both the right to life and the right to protection of one's life by society is subject to the claw-back clause and is therefore not absolute;

(iv) The petitioners have managed to prove on a balance of probabilities that hanging, as the way of carrying out the death penalty, is a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment; B

(v) The petitioners have only evidential burden to show that a right has been infringed and once they have succeeded to show that then it is for the state to prove on a balance of probabilities that the law being attacked as unconstitutional is lawful law and that it is saved by article 30(2) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania and therefore it is in the public interest; C

(vi) The Republic has failed to prove on a balance of probabilities that the death penalty is in the public interest;

(vii) For a law to be lawful it should meet the proportionality test and it should D not be arbitrary; the Government in this case has failed to prove on balance of probabilities that the present law restricting the right to life is proportionate and the carrying out of the sentence is not arbitrary;

(viii) The provisions of the Penal Code on the death penalty do not have E adequate safeguards against arbitrary decisions and do not provide effective control against abuse of power by those in authority when using the law;

(ix) Death penalty is contrary to article 13(6)(a) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania because there is no appeal against the decision of the President not to commute the sentence even if it is unreasonable or discriminatory; F

(x) In construction of provisions of the Constitution and in particular that part of it which protects and entrenches fundamental rights and freedoms, a generous and purposive method should be applied.

Case Information

Death penalty in its present form is unconstitutional. G

Cases referred to:

(1) AG of the Gambia v Momodue Jobe [1984] PC 689.
(2) Minister of Home Affairs v Fisher [1980] AC 319.
(3) Kukutia Ole Pumbun and Another v AG [1993] TLR.
(4) AG v Lesinoi s/o Ndeinai [1980] TLR 214. H
(5) Riley and Others v AG of Jamaica [1982] 3 All ER 469.
(6) Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace v AG and Others [1993] (1) ZLR 242.
(7) AG v Morgan [1985] LRC (Const) 770.
(8) The State v Petrus [1985] LRC (Const) 699.
(9) AG v Edmund s/o Lawrence [1985] LRC (Const) 921.
(10) Kahekeya Buzoya v R (1976) LRT n 16. I

A (11) Ndlovu v The State [1988] LRC (Const) 442.
(12) Trop v Dulles, 356 US 86.
(13) Estelle v Gamble 429 US 97.
(14) Chileya v State, Criminal Appeal No 64/1990.
(15) Soering Case [1989] 11 EHRR 439.
B (16) Furman v Georgia, 408 US 238.
(17) Javed Ahmed v The State of Maharashtra, AIR 1985 SC 251.

(18) Madhu Mehta v Union of India [1989] 3 SCR 775.

(19) De Freitas v, Benny [1976] AC 239 (PC).

(20) Bello v AG of Oyo State [1986] 5 NWLR 88828.

(21) Omwuka v The state [1988] 1 NWLR 529.

C (22) Dhlamini and Others v Carter [1968] 1 RLR 136.

(23) AG v Lachma Devi [1986] LRC (Const) 1.

(24) Bachan Singh v State of Punjab [1983] 1 SCR 154.

(25) Director of Public Prosecution v Daudi Pete, [1993] TLR 22.

(26) Said s/o Mwamwindi v R [1972] HCD 212.

D (27) R v Asha Mkwizu Hauli, Dar es Salaam, High Court Criminal Sessions Case No 3 of 1984 (unreported).

(28) Director of Public Prosecutions v Leganzo Nyanje, Criminal appeal No 68 of 1980 (unreported).

(29) R v Agnes Doris Liundi [1980] TLR 46.

(30) Conjwayo v Minister of Justice and Director of Prisons [1991] 1 ZLR 105 (SC). E Mwambe and Kifunda, for the Republic.

Rweyongeza and Mpoki, for the Accused.

[zJDz]Judgment

F Mwalusanya J:

I INTRODUCTION

The two accused Mbushuu alias Dominic Mnyaroje (first accused) and Kalai s/o Sangula (second accused) were on 13 May 1994 convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code cap 16 by this Court. They were supposed to get a death G penalty by virtue of s 197 of the Penal Code, and the death penalty is to be by hanging as per s 26 of the Penal Code. Before the death penalty was imposed, counsel for the accused (on dock brief) Mr Rweyongeza raised a point to the effect that the death penalty is unconstitutional and so it should not be imposed. Three points were raised concerning the unconstitutionality of the death penalty - first H that it offends the right to dignity in the execution of a sentence provided for in article 13(6)(d) of the Constitution; secondly that the death penalty is a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment and treatment prohibited by article 13(6)(e) of our Constitution; and thirdly that the death I penalty offends the right to life as provided in article 14 of our Constitution. The A Attorney-General was duly served with summons to appear as required by s 17A(2) of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents & Misc Provisions) Ordinance cap 360 as amended by Act 27 of 1991. And Mr Mwambe learned State Attorney duly appeared on behalf of the Attorney-General. B

At the outset I wish to point out some of the general principles that will guide me in arriving at my conclusion at the end of the day. First I take it that a constitution and in particular that part of it which protects and entrenches fundamental rights and freedoms to which all persons in the state are to be entitled, is to be given a C generous and purposive construction - see the decision of the Privy Council in AG of The Gambia v Momodue Jobe (1) at 700 as per Lord Diplock. The

Privy Council repeated that doctrine in Minister of Home Affairs v Fisher (2) where Lord Wilberforce at 329 stated: D

`The way to construe a constitution on the Westminster model is to treat it not as if it were an Act of Parliament but as sui generis, calling for principles of interpretation of its own, suitable to its character, without necessary acceptance of all the presumptions that are relevant to legislation of private law. The Constitution calls for a generous interpretation avoiding what has been called the "austerity of tabulated legalism", suitable to give to individuals the full measure of the fundamental rights and freedoms referred to.' E

And in the same vein, as counsel for the petitioners Mr Rweyongeza has pointed out, the Court of Appeal of Tanzania in the case of Kututia Ole Pumbun & anor v F AG (3) stated at page 11 of the typed judgment (as per Kisanga JA) that; `Any law that seeks to limit fundamental rights of the individual must be construed strictly to make sure that it conforms with these requirements, otherwise the guaranteed rights under the Constitution may easily be rendered meaningless by the use of G the derogative or claw-back clauses of that very same Constitution.' And also relevant is the decision of the Tanzania Court of Appeal in AG v Lesinoi s/o Ndeinai (4) which it held that a constitutional provision should not be construed so as to defeat its evident purpose, but rather so as to give it effective operation. H

Connected to the above principles is the question of burden of proof. I think there are two situations. First on whom does the burden of proof lie to establish that there has been a violation of a basic human right? Secondly, once it has been established that there has been a violation of a basic human right, on whom does I

A the burden of proof lie to show that the violation has been saved by the Constitution? In the first situation the matter was put clearly by the Privy Council in the case of Riley & others v AG of Jamaica (5) at 480 that it was on the person attacking the death penalty to be unconstitutional to prove on a balance of B probabilities that it is a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment. The Supreme Court of Zimbabwe in the case of Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace v AG & others (6), as per Gubbay CJ stated that: `I consider that the burden of proof that a fundamental right, of whatever nature, has been breached is on him who asserts it. In relation to article 15(1) of the Constitution the issue of whether an C individual has been subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading punishment is essentially a matter of fact and ordinarily some evidence would have to be adduced to support the contention. The respondent is not obliged to do anything until a case is made out which requires to be met.' I accept that to be the correct D position even here in Tanzania. As regards the second situation the case decided by the Court of Appeal of Trinidad and Tobago of AG v Morgan (7) correctly stated on whom the burden lies where it stated; `Where an Act is passed into law and E that Act is one that restricts the rights and freedoms of an individual, in order to impugn such an Act, all that the individual is required to do is to show that one or more of his rights has been restricted. Having done so, because of the expressed constitutional policy, the burden is then shifted to the proponents of the Act to F show that the provisions of the Act restricting such rights and freedoms are reasonable restrictions. If the proponents of the Act fail to discharge this burden, then a Court of competent jurisdiction may pronounce against the validity of the impugned Act.'

I agree with that proposition of law. That means the petitioner has only an evidential burden of proof and the State has to prove on a balance of probabilities G that the violation of the basic human rights has been saved by the Constitution. That is exactly what was decided also by the Court of Appeal of Botswana in the case of The State v Petrus (8) at 722 as per Aguda JA. The decision of the Court of Appeal of St Christopher and Nevis in the case of AG v Edmund s/o Lawrence H (9) which suggests that the petitioner has to establish a prima facie case that the law impugned is unconstitutional before the onus shifts to the Republic, was in my view wrongly decided. The petitioner does not have to establish a prima facie case but just raise the matter (evidential burden) that a particular piece of legislation is ex-facie ultra vires the Constitution then the onus shifts to the Republic. It is just similar to the defence of I intoxication in the case of murder, where the burden of proving that the accused A was capable of forming the intent necessary to constitute the offence of murder always remains on the prosecution, and such a burden is not discharged if the probability emerges from the evidence (either from the evidence of the prosecution or the accused) that the accused was incapable of forming the intent - see the B decision of the East African Court of Appeal in Kahekeya Buzoya v R (10). So similarly the petitioner has just to raise the fact that a particular piece of legislation violates a basic human right, and he does not have to establish a prima facie case before the burden of proof shifts to the Republic.

Finally I am of the considered view that international human rights instruments and C court decisions of other countries provide valuable information and guidance in interpreting the basic human rights in our Constitution and so a judge in my present situation should look to them and draw upon them in seeking a solution. As the Chief Justice of Zimbabwe Gubbay CJ has pointed out in (1990) D Commonwealth Law Bulletin vol 16 No 3 at 999: `A judicial decision has greater legitimacy and will command more respect if it accords with international norms that have been accepted by many countries, than if it is based upon the parochial experience or foibles of a particular judge or court.' E

And the Chief Justice of Tanzania Mr Justice Nyalali in the case of AG v Lesinoi s/o Ndeinai (4) at 222 states that when basic human rights are at stake or the question of interpretation of a constitutional provisions arises then: `On a matter of this nature it is always very helpful to consider what solutions to the problems F other courts in other countries have found, since basically human beings are the same though they may live under different conditions.' Suffice to state here that the Bangalore Principles (1988) pronounced by a distinguish Judicial Colloquim and later adopted at Harare (1989), Banjul (1990), Abuja (1991) and Balliol (1992) speak the same message above expounded. Let it be noted that Nyalali CJ G attended the Harare Judicial Colloquim, while Ramadhani JA attended the Balliol (Oxford, England) Judicial Colloquim.

II THE RIGHT TO DIGNITY AND THE RIGHT AGAINST CRUEL, INHUMAN AND DEGRADING PUNISHMENT AND TREATMENT H

The right to dignity under article 13(6)(d) and the right against cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment and or treatment under article 13(6)(e) will be discussed under one rubric. This is because the right to dignity referred to in that provision is concerned with the pre- I
1994 TLR p152
MWALUSANYA J
A servation of dignity in the execution of a sentence. And it is my view that a person who has been subjected to a degrading treatment has also been deprived of his right to dignity.
I also wish to point out at the outset that a punishment is either inherently cruel, inhuman and degrading or the mode or manner of execution of the punishment is B cruel, inhuman and degrading. That much was pointed out by the Court of Appeal of Botswana in the case of The State v Petrus (8) and by the Supreme Court of Zimbabwe in the case of Ndlovu v The State (11). It is the case for the petitioners that the death penalty is both inherently a cruel, inhuman and degrading C punishment and that its mode or manner of execution is also cruel, inhuman and degrading. And it is my finding that the term `torture' used in our Constitution is the equivalent of the term `cruel' that I will hereinafter use.
D And it will be important to remember that concepts such as `cruel, inhuman, and degrading' are subject to evolving standards of decency. They are not immutable. And that is what we learn from the US Supreme Court in the cases of Trop v Dulles (12) at 101; and Estelle v Gamble (13) at 102. Thus punishment or treatment incompatible with the evolving standards of decency that mark the E progress of a maturing society or which involve the infliction of unnecessary suffering is repulsive. What might not have been regarded as inhuman decades ago may be revolting to the new sensitivities which emerge as civilization advances.
F (a) The death penalty is inherently cruel it was submitted on behalf of the two petitioners. It is said the process of execution by hanging is particularly gruesome. One leading doctor described the process as `slow, dirty, horrible, brutal, uncivilized and unspeakably barbaric'. The prisoner is dropped through a trapdoor, to eight and a half feet with a rope around his neck. The intention is to G break his neck so that he dies quickly. The length of the drop is determined on the basic of such factors as body weight and muscularity or fatness of the prisoner's neck. If the hangman gets it wrong and the prisoner is dropped too far, the prisoner's head can be decapitated or his face can be torn away. If the drop is too short then the neck will not be broken but instead the prisoner will die of H strangulation. There are many documented cases of botched hangings in various countries including Tanzania. There are a few cases in which hangings have been messed up and the prison guards have had to pull on the prisoner's legs to speed up his death or use a hammer to hit his head. The shock to the system causes the prisoner to lose control over his bowels and he will soil himself. I
1994 TLR p153
MWALUSANYA J
In short the whole process is sordid and debasing. Not only is the process A generally sordid and debasing, but also it is generally brutalizing and thus defeats the very purpose it claims to be pursuing. The brutalizing effect of executions has been amply documented - see `Legal Homicide: Death as Punishment in America from 1864 to 1982' (1984) 2nd ed at 271-335 by William J Bowers and G B R Pierce; and the book `The effect of Executions is Brutalization, not Deterrence' (1988) by William J Bowers, Kenneth A Haas and James A Inciardi (editors).

It was argued for the petitioners that the State continues to perpetuate such cruelty under the protection of the law. This may legitimize the act in its legal sense, but certainly it does nothing to mitigate its barbarity. The act of killing in itself is C offensive: that it is done by the State does nothing to lesson its offensiveness. It is furthermore done in cold blood with utter cruelty. Now there are circumstances which lead up to the killing which are said to provoke it. But this is not provocation in the innate moral sense. When a private individual kills after having been D provoked, this is regarded as mitigating because, at the time of the killing, the killer's blood is heated and human passions aroused. When the State kills, its blood is cold, its detachment inhuman. Legitimizing State killings by law thus takes killing out of the arena of perverse human behaviour and elevates it into a principle. E In other words rather than killing being deemed as heinous in itself - the result of perversity - it becomes something which is acceptable if done by the right people at the right time. The gates are then opened for people to determine F whether they are the right people and whether the time is right. The heinous nature of murder becomes diluted in the public eye, the public becomes accustomed to brutality, brutality enters the prevailing moral ethos, becomes acceptable and regarded as an inevitable part of human society. A prominent American lawyer, G Clarence Darrow, in his speeches `Attorney for the Damned' (1957) Simon & Schuster, New York at 92 states: `We teach people to kill and the State is the one that teaches them. If the State wishes that its citizens respect human life, then the State should stop killing. The greater the sanctity that the State pays to life, the greater the feeling of sanctity the individual has for life.' H
To dramatize it, consider its logical corollary. A woman is beaten and raped. The perpetrator is apprehended. A State rapist is then engaged to exact retribution on behalf of society. He first beats the rapist in an identical manner to that in which the woman was beaten and then proceeds to rape the rapist in as identical a fashion I

A as possible, once or however many counts are involved. The very analogy is distasteful. One may decide to create a raping machine operated by the State rapist to remove some of these distasteful aspects.
B It would nonetheless remain a punishment which should not be countenanced by society. The reason is clear. Rape in itself is brutal and abhorrent. It does not matter that it is done under the cloak of any law. To have an official State rapist is debasing and brutalizing to society. It gives an official stamp of approval to degradation. Yet somehow, murder, which is worse, is carried out under the cloak C of the law and is regarded as acceptable. Murder, like rape, is in itself brutal and must be condemned unequivocally for itself and not merely by reason of the fact that it was not done under the sanction of law. This is why state killing is debasing and brutalizing. It seeks to legitimize brutality; which can never be anything other than brutality. That was part of the argument on behalf of the two petitioners. D

Moreover it was argued on behalf of the petitioners that the State by conduct admits that the death penalty is sordid and debasing. In the past hangings were done publicly. When capital punishment was a public spectacle it became linked in E the minds of the public as part and parcel of the crime. It was as if the punishment was thought to equal, if not to exceed, in savagery, the crime itself, to accustom the spectators to a ferocity from which one wished to divert them. At the end of the day the tortured criminal became an object of pity or admiration if not a F hero by the spectators. The perception that the state was brutal had to be minimized. It was achieved by making the execution the most hidden part of the penal process. The actual execution is carried out under a seal of secrecy and executions are bureaucratically concealed. The concealment minimizes only and does not remove the debasement and brutalization. The concealment, it was G submitted, manifests the State's guilty conscience.

It has also been argued that if death penalty is to stay, then other better methods of killing than hanging have to be invoked or devised. There has been suggested the use of the electric chair or a lethal injection or gas chamber as used in the USA H . These methods are less cruel than hanging. The Supreme Court of Zimbabwe in the case of Chileya v State (14) was about to deliver a judgment to the effect that death penalty by hanging was cruel and debasing punishment, and so the State should devise a better method of killing.

However the Court was pre-empted by the government which I passed an amendment to the Constitution to the effect that `hanging' was A constitutional. But why use `hanging' when there are other less cruel methods of killing?

(b) Then it is argued that the mode or manner of execution of the death penalty is objectionable on two grounds - the long delay in carrying out the execution and secondly, the horrible conditions under which the people on death row are kept. B

The first point about the long delay in carrying out the execution, it is argued causes untold mental anguish to the prisoners on death row. Capital punishment, it should be pointed out, is a euphemism for official killing by the State. However, C unlike most murders, the process leading up to the killing is a long drawn out one. From the time the person is sentenced to death he is immediately installed on death row in a blue uniform. He is kept in virtual solitary confinement in an individual cell which is so small that he can touch both walls with his arms outstretched - see s 71 of the Prisons Act 34 of 1967 and also regulation 21(2) D and regulation 33 of the Prisons (Prison Management) Regulations GN No 19 of 1968. The only reading material, if any, is the bible or other religious tracts. Every night all his clothes are taken away and he is kept naked in his cell until the next morning. The light in his cell is never turned off and he is kept under surveillance E by the guards. Some guards take delight in taunting the prisoners, constantly reminding them of their impending fate and telling them gruesome stories of executions which have gone wrong. From the time the High Court tells a murderer that he is to hang, in the Tanzanian context he will often wait in suspense for more F than four years before he is finally taken to the gallows. I was referred to an article in the Business Times newspaper by Mr Robert Rweyemamu (with a legal touch column) of 2 April 1993, and counsel for the petitioners Mr Rweyongeza said that it reveals aptly the long delays of carrying out executions in Tanzania. The G long agonizing wait before the final decision is taken and the shorter wait for the sentence to be carried out inevitably causes appreciable mental suffering. This pre-execution period has been referred to as a period in which the prisoner suffers a living death or hell on earth. He fearfully broods on his fate and suffers great anguish and uncertainty. H

This often leads to pronounced mental deterioration. Inordinate delay before execution thus constitutes a form of prolonged mental torture. For a detailed discussion of and reference to the literature on the mental effects upon prisoners on death row - see pp 12-15 of the cyclostyled copy of the judgment of the Supreme Court of I

1994 TLR p156

MWALUSANYA J

A Zimbabwe in the case of Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace v AG and others (6). Then there was the argument presented about the horrible condition in the condemned sections of all prisons in Tanzania. I was invited under s 59 and s 122 of the Evidence Act 6 of 1967 to take judicial notice of all the Prison Regulations B GN No 13 of 1968, GN No 18 of 1968 and GN No 19 of 1968 and the reports of the Visiting Justices to prison. For example the amount of diet and the amount of exercise allotted to the prisoner on a death row is at the discretion of the Principal Commissioner of Prisons and is generally minimal see regulation 33 of the GN No 19 of 1968. It is common knowledge that the prisoners are kept in tiny cells without C access to washing, and open air and they cannot exercise effectively. Because of poor preparation conditions the diet provided is extremely poor and the quantity small. In short the prisoners on death row are treated as non-persons whose rights are subject to the whim of the supervising administration at the prison concerned. For similar conditions of prison in Zimbabwe, the Supreme Court there D in the case of Conjwayo v Minister of Justice and Director of Prisons (30) held that these horrible conditions constituted a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment.

E On concluding this part, it has been contended on behalf of the petitioners, that the emerging consensus of values in the civilized international community as evidenced by the UN human rights instruments, the decision of other courts and the writings of leading academics is that the death penalty is a cruel, inhuman and F degrading punishment. It was pointed out that article 6(6) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (1966) (which Tanzania has ratified) states: `Nothing in this article shall be invoked to delay or to prevent the abolition of capital punishment by any State Party to the present Covenant' which indicates that the G parties to the Covenant have agreed to eventually abolish the death penalty. And the UN Commission on Human Rights at its 1989 session in Genera agreed by consensus that the death penalty was a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment, and agreed to forward to the UN General Assembly a draft Second H Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights aimed at abolishing the death penalty. Indeed the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights was passed by the UN General Assembly in 1989 and many member states have started ratifying it, and no doubt Tanzania which has a great reputation of respecting human rights will I soon ratify it. Amnesty International, vide its Declaration of Stockholm of 1977, with A delegates of about 200 from Africa, Asia, Europe, Middle East, North and South America and the Carribean Region, declared that the death penalty was an inhuman, degrading and cruel punishment. The Nyalali Commission in its authoritative Report Book III at 25 held that the death penalty was an inhuman and B cruel punishment and so should be abolished. Then we have the Council of Europe which in its Protocol 6 to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Freedoms (1950) abolished the death penalty in 1983 for all member countries of the Council of Europe because they had found it to be a cruel and inhuman punishment. And the European Court of Human Rights in the Soering C case (15) held that the death penalty according to the evolving standards of Western Europe was a cruel and inhuman punishment. The following countries of the Commonwealth have abolished the death penalty: Namibia, The Gambia, D Kiribati, New Zealand, Solomon Islands, Tuvalu and Vanuatu, Australia and South Africa (soon to become a Commonwealth member). Some of the decisions of other countries which have declared the death penalty to be a cruel punishment are: USA in Furman v Georgia (16); India we have Javed Ahmed v The State of Maharashtra (17) and Madhu Mehta v Union of India (18); in West Indies we have De Freitas v Benny (19) and Riley v AG of Jamaica (5); and two cases from E Nigeria - Bello v AG of Oyo State (20) and Omwuka v The State (21) and from Zimbabwe the famous case cited above of The Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace v AG (6). F

The arguments for the Republic in reply were made by the State Attorney Mr Mwambe. Mr Mwambe conceded that the prisoners do suffer some torture in the process of hanging, but countered by stating that the torture the victims of murderers encounter is much more. And since the murderers are getting a just desert and what they deserve, then they cannot complain about the torture or loss of dignity, he submitted. G

Concerning the delay in carrying out the execution for years on end, Mr Mwambe submitted that it is not a torture but a blessing in disguise to the said prisoners. He said that in fact the prisoners are quite happy for the delay, as they are given many more years to live which they don't deserve. H

Concerning the horrible conditions in the death cells, all Mr Mwambe could say was that the prisoners are treated in accordance with what the Tanzanian's state of economy can afford. He could not tell if the conditions in prison are horrible or not. I

A And for the Republic it can be argued that the remedy to the above named complaints about torture in hanging, delay in execution and horrible conditions in the death cells, has been given in other countries, although Mr Mwambe was not aware of this. It could be contended that the solution to the complaints raised by B the prisoners is not the abolition of the death penalty, but to apply to court to give an order to the Government to rectify those matters. The Chief Justice of the then Southern Rhodesia Beadle CJ in the case of Dhlamini and others v Carter (22) said:

C `If during the course of time of serving a sentence of imprisonment a prisoner is subjected to inhuman or degrading treatment, the court, in the exercise of its powers given to it by the Constitution, would see that the treatment was stopped but that would not entitle this court to sit as a Court of Appeal, as it were, on the original sentence. The inhuman treatment complained of in the instant case is the delay in carrying out the sentence. If, as I have already D found, `treatment' is distinct from punishment and if the inhumanity of the treatment cannot taint the lawfulness of an otherwise lawful punishment, then the only remedy an accused who had been sentenced to death has, is to ask for an order that the delay should stop, something which no person sentenced to death is ever likely to do.' E

There is also another point in favour of the Republic to the effect there is no consensus of values in the so-called civilized society that the death penalty is a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment. It has been pointed out that the F decisions of other courts in different countries are not uniform. For example in the USA many States retain the death penalty. In India in such cases as AG v Lachma Devi (23) and Bachan Singh v State of Punjab (24) the Supreme Court there held that the death penalty by hanging was not a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment. And as long ago as 1961 the UN General Assembly in its Resolution G No 32 of 1961 declared that the death penalty was not unlawful but that it should be reserved for only very serious crimes like murder. Even article 6(2) of the International Covenant and Civil and Political Rights (1966) does not prohibit member countries imposing the death penalty for serious crimes like murder. What is more is that the UN Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman H or Degrading Treatment and or Punishment of 1987 did not prohibit the imposition of the death penalty if it is prescribed by law. That is why the majority of the 161 members of the UNO retain the death penalty - 100 countries retain it and only 35 countries have abolished it - see Amnesty Interna- I tional Newsletter May 1989 at 3. And in the Commonwealth 46 countries out of 53 A retain the death penalty and only 7 have abolished it - see the Commonwealth Lawyer Journal of March 1993 at 71-76.

It has been submitted elsewhere that the argument that capital punishment has no place in a civilized society, presupposes that only one set of values (liberal B Western values) is `civilized'. They exclude the values of the Third World including countries of the East. In any case even in the West there is no unanimity about the desirability of abolishing capital punishment. In China and other countries of the East where Confucian values prevail (eg Singapore, Taiwan) capital punishment is C accepted without hesitation. The Western liberal values do not represent what is truly a `civilized society' but its admirers merely confuse it with technological advancement. It may be true to say that technology has advanced considerably in the last few decades, but it is highly debatable whether civilization has advanced much, if at all. Civilization in fact is going down particularly in the decadent West. D We see in the West a decline in values to the point where one wonders if most people have any beliefs or morals at all: an all-absorbing selfishness and lack of concern for others, crass materialism, an increasing disregard for the law, the E commission of crimes of a most revolting nature such as were unimaginable a few years ago, the apparent acceptance of sexual immorality and promiscuity as alternative lifestyles, proliferation of drugs, easy divorce and abortion, and devaluation of the family unit etc, the list is depressingly endless. Alongside these F signs of moral degeneration are the continuing tragedies of wars, refugees and increasing poverty. These are just the tip of an iceberg of the flaws in a modern society, and so the talk of the values of a `civilized society' is mere trash and ironical at best.

It was argued for the Republic that what should therefore be considered in G determining whether the death penalty is a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment is not the values of a nebulous `civilized society' but the contemporary norms operative in Tanzania and the sensitivities of its people. The question should be whether capital punishment, with what it entails, is acceptable in a H Tanzanian society. The decisions of other courts in other countries and the writings of leading academics are questionable because they do not take into account the sensitivities of the people of Tanzania. Therefore the views of other courts and leading academics are very much out of touch with what an ordinary Tanzanian feels on the matter. If newspaper reports are anything to go by, it would be seen I

A that the majority of Tanzanians do not regard the death penalty as a cruel and degrading punishment. Although there has been no public opinion survey, it can be asserted with some confidence that the majority of the people of Tanzania are not against capital punishment and that the abolitionists are a minority group. In a democratic state like Tanzania, the views of the majority should be respected. B This is because for any system of justice to work, it must be credible in the eyes of the people of the country concerned. For this reason the court's and Parliament's attitudes should not be radically different from those of society as a whole. It is C very dangerous in fact to allow penal policy to jump too far ahead of the population, since it will result in the loss of public confidence in the criminal justice system and concomitantly to the alienation of the public from it. There is abundant evidence that members of the Tanzanian public often resort to mob justice in a situation in D which they feel that the criminal justice system and/or its agencies, lack the competence or the will to protect them against crimes. Therefore no civilized community should provoke such a situation in the name of a so-called `progressive' penal policy.

I will start my decision with the point raised that the remedy for the petitioner's EI complaints is for them to apply to court so that it may order the government to stop the ugly aspects of the death penalty like delay, horrible conditions of prison and hanging. The Republic's arguments rests on the decision of Beadle CJ in the case of South Rhodesia of Dhlamini & others v Carter (22). In my considered view the F views of Beadle CJ were aptly answered by Gubbay CJ in the later case of The Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace v AG of Zimbabwe (6). It was held in that latter case that when a prisoner who has been on death row for several years approaches the courts for relief he is not seeking to be put to death expeditiously G but rather he is saying that the long period he has spent on death row, coupled with the agony and anguish of death row endured for several years, plus the horrible conditions under which he is kept, is such as to render his execution at that particular time so cruel and inhuman as to offend the constitutional prohibition against cruel and inhuman punishment. Contrary to Beadle CJ's reasoning, he H would not be challenging the legality or appropriateness of the original sentence of death. He would be accepting the validity of that original sentence but merely arguing that the juxtaposition of the intervening delay and the prolonged anguish of death row, which has been appropriately referred to as a `living hell' is such as to render it particularly inhuman to execute him at that stage. In I the case at hand there is no argument that the court is trying to act as an appellate A court in a case it had already passed a death sentence, as was the case in two cases cited from Zimbabwe, but those two cases emphasize one point relevant here, that the juxtaposition of the delay in carrying out the death penalty and horrible conditions under which the prisoners are kept are relevant matters in B determining whether a death penalty is a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment. As Pannick in his book `Judicial Review of the Death Penalty' at 85 aptly puts it:

1994 TLR p161

MWALUSANYA J

> `Whether or not the death penalty is Constitutional per se, the pain and suffering it causes may C exceed constitutional limits when the agony caused by delay is added to the balance.'

And according to our Constitution in article 30(3) an aggrieved person `may without prejudice to any other action or remedy lawfully available to him in respect D of the same matter, institute proceedings for relief in the High Court to vindicate his basic human rights. Therefore even if the prisoners could apply to the High Court to order the government to rectify the ugly matters inherent within the death penalty, still they are not precluded from making a petition to vindicate their basic human rights that the death penalty is unconstitutional. E

That hanging is a cruel affair has not been challenged by the counsel for the Republic. All what Mr Mwambe learned State Attorney stated was that the torture that the hanged man gets is not comparable to the torture the victim of murder gets at the hands of the murderer. Well that begs the question or rather it is a tacit F admission that there is torture indeed in the process of hanging. An as amply demonstrated above, the government impliedly concedes that hanging is ugly and cruel and that is why they do it in secret so that the people should not witness such a cruel spectacle. It is my finding that the petitioners have managed to prove G on a balance of probabilities that hanging in carrying out the death penalty is a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment.

Concerning the delay in carrying out the death penalty, there can be no doubt that it causes a lot of protracted mental anguish. Also the horrible conditions in the H death cells are only fit for a non-person. Learned State Attorney Mr Mwambe conceded that there is invariably a great deal of delay, the average may be up to five years. But he said that the delay is to the advantage of the prisoners as they are happy that they are not hanged sooner. I don't think the fact that the prisoners on death row do not wish I

1994 TLR p162

MWALUSANYA J

A to be hanged sooner takes away the fact that there is acute mental anguish in the period they are waiting for their execution. If the article by Mr Robert Rweyemamu in the Business Times of 2 April 1993 is anything to go by, the delays are indeed inordinate and many are over ten years. I am entitled to take B judicial notice of that fact and by virtue of s 122 of the Evidence Act 6 of 1967 I am entitled to infer the existence of the above stated practice, regard being had to the common cause of natural events. The same applies to the horrible conditions obtaining in the death cells of condemned prisoners. As regards the horrible C conditions in the death cells it is common knowledge that the cells are small, dirty, over-crowded, very poor diet, little ventilation, no time for exercises, under watch for 24 hours, and medical facilities will only be available to these prisoners if the Prison Department is allocated enough funds to pay for their treatment - see Mzalendo Newspaper of 19 June 1994.

D So if the Prison Department has run short of funds (as is very common these days for every government department) that means the prisoners will not be treated as government hospitals demand payment for treatment of prisoners as well. Learned State Attorney Mr Mwambe stated that the horrible conditions in the E death cells and in the prisons as a whole are inevitable because of the poor state of the economy of this country. He said that the government cannot afford more than what it is doing. That is an admission of the horrible conditions in prison and the government is putting up a defence of poverty or lack of funds. It is my view that the defence of poverty can be offered elsewhere, but not when the basic F human rights of an individual are at stake.

There is the argument that this court in determining as to whether the death penalty is a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment should concentrate on the contemporary norms operative in Tanzania and the sensitivities of its people instead of concentrating on the values of a nebulous `civilised society'. I agree, but G it is my view that even if one takes into account the sensitivities of the people of Tanzania, one cannot escape the conclusion that the death penalty, taken as a whole, is a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment. The various ugly aspects of the death penalty as amply demonstrated above, are apt to move the heart of even the stone-hearted. The composition of the members of the Nyalali Commission H was quite representative, with a broad spectrum of the enlightened members of Tanzanian society, and they unanimously reached the conclusion that the death penalty was a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment. I concede that there may be a majority I of Tanzanians who support the death penalty blindly, and these are not enlightened A and are not initiated or aware of the ugly aspects of the death penalty. Apparently it is so because the death penalty is carried out in secrecy. The government must assume responsibility for ensuring that their citizens are placed in a position whereunder they are able to base their views about the death penalty on a rational B and properly informed assessment. It is clear that many people base their support for the penalty on an erroneous belief that capital punishment is the most effective deterrent punishment, and so the government has a duty to put the true facts before them instead of holding out to the public that the death penalty is an instant solution to violent crime. If many people, like members of the Nyalali C Commission see the death penalty as being morally insupportable and as having many negative effects, they would be expected to inform the public about their views and seek to influence public opinion in a more enlightened direction. The government should do the same. D

1994 TLR p163

MWALUSANYA J

In fine I find that the petitioners have managed to prove on a balance of probabilities that the death penalty is a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment and also that it offends the right to dignity in the course of executing the sentence. It is not just the final act of stringing up the prisoner which is an ugly matter; but the E protracted torment to which we subject the prisoner before finally dispatching him, makes the whole process even nastier.

III RIGHT TO LIFE F

The version in English of this basic human right reads: `Every person has a right to live and subject to law, to protection of his life by the society.' Counsel for the petitioners Mr Rweyongeza submitted that according to that wording the right to life is absolute and not governed by the claw-back clause of `subject to law'. He said G that what is subject to law is the right of an individual to the protection of his life by society. He invited me to accept his interpretation contending that it should be so because the right to life is the most fundamental right on which all other rights depend, and if life is extinguished then all other rights become meaningless. H

However, on my part I agree with Mr Mwambe learned State Attorney that the Swahili version of our Bill of Rights is the controlling version and not the English version, as amply pointed out by the Tanzania Court of Appeal in the case of Director of Public Prosecutions v Daudi Pete (25). The Swahili version reads: `Kila mtu I

A anayo haki ya kuishi na kupata kutoka kwa jamii hifadhi ya maisha yake, kwa mujibu wa sheria.' It is crystal clear from that wording in the Swahili version that both the right to life and the right to the protection of one's life by society, is subject to the claw-back clause `subject to law'. So it is my finding that the right to life is not absolute but subject to law. B

As amply indicated in Part I of this judgment, the petitioners have only an evidential burden to show that the right to life has been infringed. And that much they have succeeded to show. What remains then is for the Republic to prove on a balance of probabilities that the law prescribing the death penalty (the Penal Code cap 16) is a lawful law and that it is saved under article 30(2) of our Constitution. I reserve C for discussion that matter under Part IV of this judgment.

IV WHETHER THE LAW PRESCRIBING THE DEATH PENALTY IS LAWFUL LAW AND IS IN PUBLIC INTEREST UNDER ARTICLE 30(2) OF THE CONSTITUTION D

A. Whether the Death Penalty is in public interest under article 30(2) of the Constitution E

First we have the argument for the Republic that the death penalty has some deterrence effect. It is argued that the death penalty is necessary to protect society and that by executing some of the murderers we deter at least some potential F killers from committing murders. It cannot be disputed that the death penalty may have some deterrent effect. The vital question, however, is whether the death penalty has a deterrent effect significantly greater than the alternative sentence of life imprisonment or in other words, whether the death penalty protects society G more than life imprisonment. If the death sentence is not a superior deterrent then the same social purpose could be achieved by the use of life imprisonment. Over the years a large number of studies have been carried out. Some have compared the position before and after abolition of the death penalty in particular countries H and between different countries with and without the death penalty. Other methods have also been used to study the effects of capital punishment upon the incidence of murders. Mr Roger Hood, who is the Director of the Centre for Criminological Research at the University of Oxford, has examined carefully all these various studies and reaches the categorical conclusion that the research so far carried out has failed to provide I scientific proof that executions have a greater deterrent effect than life A imprisonment - see R Hood The Question of the Death Penalty and the New Contributions of the Criminal Sciences to the Matter, a Report to the United Nations Committee on Crime Prevention and Control of 1988. Although some people intuitively believe that capital punishment must have a powerful deterrent effect, the following matters need to be borne in mind: B

(i) Most murders are committed on the spur of the moment in emotional circumstances. Clearly the death penalty has no effect on crimes of passion which are committed impulsively and without any thought being given to the penal consequences. C

(ii) Many murderers are mentally disturbed persons who will not have the mental capacity to be influenced in their conduct by the death penalty.

(iii) The relatively few planned and pre-meditated murders tend to be D perpetrated by criminals who are often supremely confident that they will escape detection and arrest.

Moreover, the deterrent effect of the death penalty is further diminished by the fact that we do not hang all our murderers but hang only a few and in private. There is E thus a low probability of death for murderers. In fact Mr Mwambe for the Republic greatly deprecated the practice of hanging the murderers in secret, and advocated public hangings which have a real deterrent effect. So in effect the Republic conceded that hangings in secret as done now have no desired deterrent effect. And it should be pointed out that the deterrent effect would be enhanced if F there was certainty that all murderers would be apprehended and every one would be executed without exception. The situation obtaining now is that many murderers are set free at the President's whims, under the guise of commuting G the sentence of death or pardon. To sum up, we can effectively protect our society against violent crime without employing the death penalty by using life imprisonment sentences.

It has also been argued on behalf of the petitioners, that there is a risk of executing H the innocent. The risk assumes greater proportions when one considers the fact that most poor persons do not obtain good legal representation; as they get lawyers on dock briefs who are paid only Shs 500/= (the equivalent of one US dollar!!!). As result of such poor remuneration the defence counsels do not exert enough effort in such cases. I

1994 TLR p166

MWALUSANYA J

A The possibility of a judicial error, for whatever reason, assumes ever greater importance because the death penalty is irreversible, that is, once carried out that is the end of the matter, it cannot be corrected. And mind you convictions for murder in error (after the appeals) are not rare. Although the argument on the other B side is that there is no evidence that advocates who hold dock briefs conduct their cases poorly, I am of the considered view that the risk of executing the innocent is great under the present system because of the nature of legal representation offered. It is just human nature that it happens so.

C I have already indicated in Part II above that the present system of execution by hanging, long delays in carrying out the death penalty, and the horrible conditions in the death cells cause great torture and mental anguish and that being so it cannot be in public interest to continue using the death penalty. Instead of hanging D the government can change to the use of the electrical chair, or lethal injection or gas chamber which are less cruel. About the long delay in carrying out the sentence, the government should stop using the death penalty until such time that they have devised a better method of reducing the bureaucracy causing the delay. One cannot tell me that it is not possible to reduce the bureaucracy involved E because the Supreme Court of Zimbabwe in the case of The Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace v AG (6) offered a number of good suggestions to that effect. About the horrible conditions in the death cells, the defence of poverty of the government is not a good defence; and the logical F solution is for the government to suspend the death penalty law until such time that it will have enough funds to be able to treat the prisoners on death row as human beings.

Then there is the argument that the death penalty is in public interest because it shows in emphatic terms that the government denounces murder. It is argued that G murder is a crime of the utmost depravity and gravity and therefore it should be treated with the utmost severity when it comes to punishment. Society through the death penalty must denounce the taking of human life in the most emphatic manner possible and it is therefore right that society's extreme disapproval and indignation should be signified by imposing the ultimate penalty of death. By doing H so society reinforces and promotes public respect for life. Any lesser penalty would be inadequate as a punishment for the taking of innocent human life and the suffering which this causes the relatives and loved ones. It has been said even Christianity and Islamic Religion support the death penalty as something morally I all right in order to protect society. The State quotes the Bible in Genesis 9:6; A Excodus 21: 12 and 14 and Deuteronomy 9:11 and 12. And for the Moslems the State quotes the Koran 5:36.

1994 TLR p167

MWALUSANYA J

However, in my judgment I find that in symbolic terms, the official murdering of killers can hardly be said to foster respect for the sanctity of life. It is contradictory to kill people to show that killing is wrong. Society B can still express its utter condemnation of the act of murder by imposing the most drastic sentence of life imprisonment. The effect upon the public of the death sentence is to brutalize rather than humanize. If we insist on killing murderers we are descending to the same level as the murderers and this debases society. As C the situation obtains now, the State is a teacher and when it kills, it teaches vengeance and hatred. Murderers are not to be loved, nor may they be disregarded. But in allowing them to live, society is saying that sanctity of life is all important. Although the Christian and Islamic Religions have no objection to the D death penalty as such, it is significant to note that they do not support the ugly aspects of the death penalty. For example the Catholic Church (see Newsweek of 30 November 1992 at 53) through Pope Paul II when releasing the new Universal Catechism stated that the death penalty is allowed by the church as a last resort E for the preservation of public order, provided it is carried out in a timely and compassionate manner. As amply demonstrated above the death penalty in Tanzania is not carried out in a timely and compassionate manner. Execution by hanging renders untold suffering; the delay in carrying out the sentence causes untold mental anguish; the horrible conditions in the death cells are meant for non-persons. That cannot be called death penalty in a timely and compassionate F manner. Any properly informed Christian or member of the Islamic religion, cannot support the death penalty under the present form and conditions in which it is carried out.

Then there is this argument that Government must be seen by society to be taking a tough line in relation to violent crime. If it abolishes the death penalty, it is said, this would be taken by persons inclined towards violent crime as a sign that G Government is going soft on crime and this may encourage people to commit violent crimes. However, in my judgment I find that the above argument does not carry much weight. The government is not becoming soft in the fight against crime by doing away with the death penalty. Long term imprisonment is an extremely H severe punishment. Indeed some would say that life imprisonment is far worse than death. I

1994 TLR p168

MWALUSANYA J

A The cost of imprisonment is another argument presented on behalf of the government. The argument is that we should execute dangerous murderers rather than wasting large sums of public money in keeping these persons locked up in maximum security prisons. In my considered opinion, if we are talking about B expense, we should not forget that we are forced to spend large amounts to process through the elaborate system we have to decide whom we should execute. Clearly, it would be cheaper to kill murderers than to keep them locked up for long periods, but it is a morally unacceptable argument that we should kill criminals because it is cheaper to do so. Considerations of economy cannot justify C the taking of life. Moreover the imposition of a sentence of life imprisonment can help to assuage the survivors of the victims of murder in an effective way by way of compensation. Murderers imprisoned for life will be put to work whilst in prison and at least part of the profits generated by such work shall be used to pay compensation to the survivors. However, that cannot be achieved if the murderers are sentenced to death. D

Then we have the argument of retribution in favour of the Republic. This argument runs along those lines. As many people believe that murderers deserve to die, the law must satisfy the public's thirst for vengeance otherwise the law will fall into E disrepute. This is like saying that the law should string up murderers before the lynch mob does. But it may be argued that even if it is the case that the majority of the public do subscribe to some sort of an eye for an eye retaliation approach in F murder cases, a progressive government will not feel obliged to execute persons simply to satisfy some crude urge for vengeance. Rather it will assume the responsibility for informing the public and seek to influence their views in a more enlightened direction. Often vengeful sentiments stem from fear in the face of increasing rates of violent crime. The death penalty, however, is not an instant G solution to violent crime and the government should not hold it out as such. Retribution has no place in a civilized society, and negates the modern concepts of penology.

The other most important point which puts out law into disrepute and so not in H public interest is the fact that it is arbitrary in that people with mental cases (insane people) are also sentenced to death as if they were normal persons when they did a killing. In the case of Said s/o Mwamwindi v R (26) the accused was sentenced to death (and executed) despite the fact that a famous psychiatrist, one Dr Pendaeli, had testified that the accused had a mental disease called Catatonic Schizophrenia. The same thing happened in the case of I

R v Asha Mkwizu Hauli (27), where two prominent psychiatrists, Dr K F A Rugeiyamu and Dr W S Pendaeli (both consultant psychiatrists), testified that the accused was mentally sick. The same thing happened in Director of Public Prosecutions v Leganzo Nyanje (28) where the psychiatrists had confirmed that the accused was mentally sick of Paranoid Schizophrenia and yet he was B sentenced to death. In that case Mr Justice Mustafa gave a strong dissenting judgment. The majority of the Tanzania Court of Appeal conceded that the law was unjust and outdated and yet they washed their hands as Pontius Pilato did saying that they were impotent to change the law. The late Mwakasendo JA (as he then was) delivering the judgment of the court held: C

> `We wish to state in conclusion that we are fully aware that many doctors with experience of mental diseases have at various times strongly attacked the supposed harshness or D unscientific nature of the present formulation of the law relating to the defence of insanity. These doctors have contended, we think quite rightly, that the present law is based on an "entirely obsolete and misleading conception of the nature of insanity, since insanity does not only, or primarily affect the cognitive or intellectual faculties, but affects the whole personality of the patient, including the will and the emotions". However, it is, our considered view that the E only sure and acceptable mode of alleviating the harshness of the present law is to change the law along the lines proposed by its many critics and not by ignoring its existence. Suffice here once again to draw the attention of Parliament to the urgent clamour for changing the law in this field to accord with present knowledge of medical science.' F

The same sentiments were expressed by the Tanzania Court of Appeal in the case of R v Agnes Doris Liundi (29) where it said `it is possible, indeed likely, that our law on the issue of insanity is antiquated and out of date. Parliament, in its G wisdom, may wish to amend this particular branch of the law and bring it into line with modern medical knowledge on the subject.' The law, I hold, ought to be amended to bring about the defence of diminished responsibility which entitles the H accused who is mentally sick not to be acquitted altogether but to be found guilty only of manslaughter. They did it in England in 1957 by the Homicide Act and in Uganda they did it in 1967. Our government has persistently refused to rectify the law so as to do away with the injustices caused the present law. The mentally sick who kill are dumped together as murderers as those who commit murder during robbery. Nobody I
1994 TLR p170
MWALUSANYA J
A in his right senses can defend the present state of the law that it is in public interest. The present state of the law puts our criminal justice system into disrepute.
There is also the political perspective of the death penalty which indicates that the death penalty is not in the public interest. The State does not disclose the fact that B most poor persons kill during robbery because of the poor living conditions and the unequal distribution of the national cake. The grinding poverty and hunger lead to brutalization because the economy has been mismanaged by the government. Instead of the State revealing that the poor kill because of the poor living C conditions, but say because the killer is morally depraved. Why regard the murderer as inherently depraved? The State deliberately washes its hands of the socio-economic conditions it has created. In the institution of State killing, the public is invited to bury knowledge of the conditions which have led to the crime and concentrate on the individual. It is the individual that must be regarded as D depraved not a system founded on ruthless exploitation, economic mismanagement and enforced impoverishment. So, when one accepts State killing, one gives a tacit nod of approval to those who would turn their faces away from the conditions which engender the crime in the first instance. Thus economic E mismanagement by the State leading to impoverishment of the majority is legitimized. Thus the attack on the death penalty is raised to the level of an attack of the ruling clique, who want to maintain the status quo and the privileges which have been conferred upon them by the prevailing invidious economic system. In F order to appease the impoverished people, the State points an accusing finger at the murderers and orders them to be hanged. But in the long run the exploited and impoverished masses will realize who is the real enemy - whether the murderer or the system that has engendered the murderer? It is suggested that there is a G real element of hypocrisy and irony in continuous support of the death penalty by the State when it is the State itself that has largely contributed to the conditions that create murderers.
At the end of the day I find that the Republic has failed to prove on a balance of probabilities that the death penalty is in the public interest. The arguments H adumburated above clearly show that the death penalty under the present form and conditions is not in the public interest at all.

B. Whether the Law prescribing the death penalty is lawful law

The existing law that prescribes the death penalty is the Penal Code, cap 16. The Tanzania Court of Appeal in the case of Kukutia Ole I

1994 TLR p171

MWALUSANYA J

Pumbun v AG (3), held that any law that restricts or abridges basic human rights A must fulfil two conditions in order to be regarded as a lawful law. First that law should meet the proportionality test, that is, the limitation imposed on the basic human right by such law must not be more than is reasonably necessary to achieve the legitimate object of the government. Secondly the law should not be B arbitrary - that is it should make adequate safeguards against arbitrary decisions, and provide effective controls against abuse by those in authority when using the law.

(i) As regards whether the present law meets the proportionality test, I am of C the considered view that it does not. If the object of the government is to protect society, I am of the view that that can be met by imposing the sentence of life imprisonment which will incapacitate the offender not to commit further crimes. As amply demonstrated above, the death penalty D has only minimal deterrent effect. Moreover the imposition of the death penalty negates the modern concepts of penology which are based on the theory that rehabilitation of the individual criminal is possible. Retribution as an object of punishment is uncouth and outdated and E negates modern concepts of penology. In short it is my finding that imposing the death penalty is more than reasonably necessary to achieve the object of protecting society. Life imprisonment can serve that purpose. The Government has failed to prove on a balance of probabilities (even allowing a margin of appreciation to the state) that the present law restricting the right to life is proportionate and closely tailored to the aim sought to be achieved.

(ii) It is also my considered view that the impugned law is arbitrary in that it does not have adequate safeguards against arbitrary decisions and does not provide effective control against abuse of power by those in authority when using the law. It is arbitrary in three aspects:

First the impugned law empowers the courts to sentence to death the real murderers and also persons who have killed because they are mentally sick (insane or those under diminished responsibility). The real murderers and the mentally sick are indiscriminately dumped together as murderers without distinction. I have amply demonstrated above about this phenomenon. The courts raise their hands in despair and state that they are impotent to do anything about this injustice because their hands are tied by the provisions of

1994 TLR p172

MWALUSANYA J

A the law. So it is crystal clear that the impugned law is not `law' because it does not provide adequate safeguards against arbitrary decisions made by the courts. The law which allows the courts to dump together the mentally sick and real murderers is not good law.

Secondly when the impugned law (the Penal Code) is read together with B s 325(1), (2) and (3) of the Criminal Procedure Act 9 of 1985 you find that the President is empowered to commute the sentence or pardon the convict. This law is arbitrary in that it does not provide effective controls against abuse of power by the President. He is not bound by the recommendation of the convicting judge nor that of the Advisory C Committee. There are no checks or controls whatsoever in the exercise of that power and the decision depends on the President's whims and his idiosyncrasies. This type of law is similar to that of s 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 which gave the Minister for Justice the power to D consent or not to sue the government at his discretion. The law was strongly condemned by the Tanzania Court of Appeal in the case of Kukutia Ole Pumbun v AG (3) and they declared it to be unconstitutional and so void. The same reasoning applies to the law now under discussion. It may be pointed out that the abuse of power by the President is not a far-fetched idea. It is common knowledge to the people E of Tanzania that one pilot Capt Aziz was pardoned from serving a prison sentence simply because the President felt that the said convict had an old mother who depended on him. But how many convicts have old mothers who depend on them and yet they have not been pardoned by the President? F

Thirdly there is no provision under the present law for appeal against the decision of the President. That is contrary to article 13(6)(a) of the Constitution. The decision of the President may be unreasonable, or it may be discriminatory as per article 13(4) and (5) of the Constitution and G yet the prisoner is not allowed to challenge that decision which affects the rights of a citizen. The mere fact that one is sentenced to death does not make him a non-person and a non-citizen who is not entitled to the basic human rights. I don't agree with Mr Mwambe learned State Attorney H who argued that the commutation of a sentence or a pardon is just a privilege and not a right to the prisoner. That the President should exercise his powers of commuting a sentence or pardoning a convict in accordance with the law and the Constitution is not a privilege but a constitutional right of the prisoner. The impugned law is simply not a lawful law.

It is my finding therefore that the death penalty is not in public I interest and it is not a punishment which is prescribed by a lawful law. A The Republic has completely failed to prove on a balance of probabilities that the death penalty is in public interest and that the impugned law is a lawful law.

V CONCLUSION B

We live in a troubled world with many threats to the security and well-being of our society. In such an atmosphere there is often a tendency to advocate draconian measures to protect society against real and imagined ills. The necessity for such C measures can frequently appear plausible and the most well-intended citizens can be tempted to advocate the principle that `the end justifies the means'. Suffice it to say that the history of the world is replete with the disastrous consequences of the law of man being replaced by the dictates of expediency. A progressive D government will assume the responsibility of informing the public and seek to influence their views in a more enlightened direction, to the effect that the end does not justify the means.

In the fine, I hold that the two petitioners have managed to prove on a balance of probabilities that the death penalty is a cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment E and or treatment and also that it offends the right to dignity of man in the process of execution of the sentence. At the same time the Republic has failed to prove on a balance of probabilities that the impugned law is in the public interest and that it is a lawful law under article 30(2) of the Constitution. It is therefore my finding that the death penalty is unconstitutional and so void as per article 64(5) of the Constitution. Order accordingly. F

1994 TLR p174

A

[zRPz]ROBERT MGIRE v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 174 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Kisanga JJA, Omar JJA and Mnzavas JJA

B CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 51 OF 1994

25 July, 1994

(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, Mrema, J)

Flynote

C Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Summary dismissal of appeal - Whether summary dismissal of appeal without re-appraisal of evidence proper.

-Headnote

D This appeal was against the summary dismissal decision of the High Court on the appellants appeal against conviction by the District Court for house breaking. Both counsels for the appellant and the respondent concurred that this was not proper case for summary dismissal.

Held: the evidence on record on this case required a re-appraisal and had that been done the judge would have found that there was reasonable doubt as to the appellant's guilt. E

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Kahangwa, for the appellant.

F Lyimo, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, JA, delivered the following considered reasons for judgment:

G When this appeal came up for hearing, counsel for both sides addressed us and at the end of it we allowed the appeal but reserved our reasons to a later date. We now give reasons for doing so.

This was a second appeal arising from the decision of the High Court (Mrema, J) dismissing summarily the appellant's appeal against conviction by the District H Court for house breaking and the sentence of five years' imprisonment. Before us the appellant was represented by Mr

Kahangwa, learned advocate, while Mr Lyimo, learned Principal State Attorney, was for the respondent Republic. Mr Lyimo did not seek to support the appellant's conviction. He shared Mr Kahangwa's view that this was not a proper case for summary rejection by the High Court. The evidence on record was such as did require re-appraisal, and that had this been done the learned judge I could not have upheld the decision of the District Court. With respect we agree A with the concurrent views of both counsel.

1994 TLR p175

KISANGA JA

Very briefly the facts of the case were that the complainant's house was broken into at night and a number of items of property were stolen from there. About three days later the appellant was found wearing a T-shirt which was adequately identified as part of the property stolen from the complainant's house. On being B asked, he immediately explained that he had bought it from his co-accused (first accused), and another co-accused (third accused) who was then present claimed that he witnessed the said transaction between the appellant and the first accused. In their defences at the trial, both the first and the third accused persons C denied any involvement in or witnessing the sale of the T-shirt in question to the appellant. However, both the first accused and the appellant who was the second accused, were convicted for the offence already mentioned; the third accused was acquitted. Again as intimated earlier, their appeals to the High Court were D summarily rejected, and while the appellant has appealed further to this Court, the first accused has not.

The complainant's neighbour (PW2) watched the incident that night through the E window in his own house and by the help of electric security lights stated that he saw and identified the first and third accused as being among the four persons who broke into the complainant's house. However, he categorically stated that he did not see the appellant there. Now the question is, if the appellant took part in the commission of the offence, why did PW2 not see and identify him? F

The appellant was found wearing the complainant's T-shirt and upon being asked he readily explained that he had bought it from first accused, and that explanation was duly supported by third accused who was present them. We are finally of the G view that that explanation could possibly be true. Indeed the first and third accused persons in their defences at the trial completely denied any involvement touching on the T-shirt in question. That, of course, could only be expected because it was in their interest to try to prevent the shift of blame to them. The H view, that the appellant's explanation could possibly be true, finds support in the appellant wearing openly the complainant's T-shirt bearing the complainant's initials RZ on it. If the appellant were the thief or a guilty purchaser or receiver, it seems to us most unlikely that he would have worn it so openly and in the locality where the complainant could reach easily. I

1994 TLR p176

A We are certain that had the learned judge addressed himself to these matters he would have found that at least they did raise a reasonable doubt in his mind as to the appellant's guilt. It is for that reason that we upheld the submissions by counsel for both sides and allowed the appeal, quashing the conviction and setting aside the sentence with the order to release the appellant forthwith unless he was otherwise lawfully held in custody. B

1994 TLR p176

[zRPz]RUNGU JUMA v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 176 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza D
Judge Kisanga JJA, Omar JJA and Mnzavas JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 105 OF 1993
25 July, 1994 E
(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, Masanche, J)
Flynote
F Evidence - Evidence of a child of tender years - Whether such evidence may be received without a voire dire - Section 127(2) of the Evidence Act 1967.
Evidence - Evidence of a child of tender years - Corroboration - Whether a child's evidence may be corroborated by the defence evidence of the accused. G
Criminal Law - Robbery with violence - Appropriate sentence for robbery with violence - Sections 285 and 286 of the Penal Code, and the Minimum Sentences Act 1972 as amended by Act No 10 of 1989. H
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted of robbery with violence and sentenced to fifteen years imprisonment by the district court of Musoma. His appeal to the High Court was unsuccessful and, instead, the sentence was enhanced to thirty years. He appealed further to the Court of Appeal. His main ground was that the conviction was wrong because it was based on the evidence of the complainant, a child of tender years. I
1994 TLR p177
Held: A

(i) As the offence was committed in broad daylight, and the appellant was well known to the complainant before the incident, and the complainant immediately mentioned the appellant to his father and later to the Police that he was the one who assaulted him and stole his cattle, it cannot be said that the complainant could have been mistaken in the identification of the appellant as his assailant and robber;

(i) As the offence was committed in broad daylight, and the appellant was well known to the complainant before the incident, and the complainant immediately mentioned the appellant to his father and later to the Police that he was the one who assaulted him and stole his cattle, it cannot be said that the complaint could have been mistaken in the identification of the appellant as his assailant and robber; B

(ii) A child's evidence may be corroborated by the defence of the accused and in this case the appellant's admission that he was present at the scene of the crime on the material day and that it was the complainant's description of the appellant to the Police that led to his (the appellant's) arrest does, to some extent, corroborate the complainant's evidence; C

(iii) On the totality of the evidence the appellant was rightly convicted of robbery with violence as charged and in view of the amendment of the Minimum Sentences Act 1972 by Act 10 of 1989 the High Court rightly enhanced the sentence to thirty years imprisonment. D

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

Case referred to:

R v Okello Bayenzi s/o Anyaro [1938] 5 EACA 140.

Lyimo, for the Republic. E

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:

There was no dispute in this case that one, Malima s/o Mang'azi, PW1, had his F sixteen head of cattle stolen on 13 October 1991 while grazing them at Nyamike Village within the district of Musoma in Mara region. It was the case for the prosecution that immediately before such stealing the thief attacked Malima Mang'azi with a panga causing him to suffer grievous harm. G

Investigation regarding the incident culminated to the arrest of the appellant and a charge of robbery with violence contrary to s 285 and 286 of the Penal Code was preferred against him. In the alternative to the charge of robbery the appellant was charged with causing grievous harm contrary to s 225 of the Penal Code.

The district court at Musoma heard the case against the appellant and after a full trial the learned resident magistrate came to the conclusion that the charge of robbery with violence against the appellant had been proved beyond reasonable doubt. The appellant was accordingly convicted and sentenced to fifteen years imprison-

A ment. In addition the district court imposed corporal punishment of twelve strokes of the cane and an order that the appellant refunds sixteen head of cattle to the complainant, PW1.

Dissatisfied with the decision of the district court the appellant appealed to the High Court on the ground that the district court erred in acting on the evidence of PW1 (a child of tender age) that he had identified him (appellant) as his assailant B and robber. In dealing with the question whether or not the complainant had identified the appellant as the robber the High Court (Masanche, J), said inter alia:

C `... Issues of credibility as is known are best judged by the person who tries the case. This is because the judge is able to watch the demeanour of the witnesses who testify.... However one aspect of the case: PW.1, the complainant, is said to be a juvenile. The magistrate I notice, has recorded that Section 127(5) of the Evidence Act had been complied with. The D learned magistrate however, did not conduct a voire dire at least to show why he thought the witness understood the nature of oath.'

After quoting the provisions of sub-sections (2) and (3) of s 127 of the Evidence Act, 1967, the learned judge said: E

`Coming to the instant case, I am in no doubt whatsoever, satisfied that the child must have understood the nature of oath. Even if for sake of argument, the child did not understand the nature of oath I am satisfied that the child had sufficient intelligence "to justify the reception of F evidence". . . The complainant in his evidence in chief, was able to break down the numbers with regard to what beasts he had. He said he had 184 head of cattle, 29 goats and 3 sheep . . . Such breakdown can only be done by an intelligent boy.'

G The learned judge then concluded that `the conviction was well deserved' and dismissed the appeal against conviction. As for the sentence of fifteen years imprisonment the learned judge was of the view that robbery with violence where an offensive weapon is used, as was in this case, the appellant should have been sentences to thirty years imprisonment under the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972, H as amended by Act No. 10 of 1989. Accordingly the sentence of fifteen years imprisonment was enhanced to thirty years imprisonment.

Still dissatisfied the appellant has come to this court.

Before us the appellant who was not represented by a counsel recapitulated his defence in the High Court that the district court erred in convicting him of the evidence of the complainant, PW1, I who was a child of tender age. He also told the court that the court of first instance A refused him to call some of his witnesses. He recapitulated his defence in the district court that on the material day complainant's cattle had strayed into his (appellant's) shamba and that he reported to his cell leader who gave him a letter to the agricultural officer who came to the shamba and assessed the extent of damage caused. According to his defence while he was away looking for the cell B leader and the agricultural officer the appellant and his family cooked up a story that he had robbed him (PW1's) of his cattle.

In rebuttal Mr Lyimo, learned Principal State Attorney, told the court that the C appellant did not tell the trial court that he had more witnesses to call after DW1 and DW2 had given evidence. In support of his argument the court was referred to page ten of the typed proceedings where the appellant is recorded to have told the court: `I have nothing to say, as I intend to call no other witness'. If this statement D by the appellant is anything to go by appellant's defence before us that he was refused to call some of his witnesses is bogus and an afterthought.

The learned Principal State Attorney conceded to appellant's argument that the complainant was a child of tender age and that his real age was not established. E Equally it was agreed that the learned trial magistrate did not subject the complainant to a voire dire to enable him to form an opinion whether the complainant was `possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of his evidence' as required under s 127(2) of the Evidence Act, 1967. F

However despite this omission by the learned resident magistrate Mr Lyimo submitted that the appellant admitted in his defence that he was at the scene of crime on the material day and that it was complainant's description of the appellant to the police that led to the arrest of the appellant. This, it was argued by the Republic, showed that the complainant could not have been mistaken in the identification of the appellant as his assailant and robber. G

The learned Principal State Attorney invited the court to dismiss the appeal. With respect we agree that on the evidence tendered in the court of first instance the appellant was rightly convicted of the offence of robbery with violence as charged H the non-compliance of s 127(2) of the Evidence Act, 1967 notwithstanding. The offence was committed in broad daylight, the appellant was well known to the complainant before the incident and the complainant immediately mentioned the appellant to his father and later to the police at Kiabakari that he was the one who assaulted him and stole his I

1994 TLR p180

MNZAVAS JA

A cattle. Apparently the evidence showed that soon after the incident (at about 8am) the appellant decamped from his house and only surfaced in the evening, at 7 pm, and handed himself to the Police Station after finding that his family had been arrested. We are also of the view that appellant's admission that he was present at the scene of the crime on the material day does to some extent B corroborate complainant's evidence that it was he who attacked the appellant and stole his cattle.

That a child's evidence may be corroborated by the defence of the accused is evident from the decision in R v Okello Byenzi s/o Anyaro (1). C

Before we conclude we would also like to mention another blatant lie by the appellant. Before us he said `the complainant did not have any injuries on his body'. This statement is diametrically opposed by his statement when cross-examined by the public prosecutor. There he answered `I don't know how he sustained the injury on his left shoulder'. D

The medical report - exhibit P1 was to the effect that the complainant had a cut wound on his left shoulder which was four inches long and two inches deep.

E On the totality on the evidence we are satisfied in our own minds that the appellant was rightly convicted of the offence of robbery with violence as charged. In view of the amendment of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972 by Act No. 10 of 1989 the learned judge was right in enhancing the sentence of fifteen years imprisonment imposed by the district court to one of thirty years imprisonment. Apparently the High Court judgment is silent regarding the sentence of twelve F strokes corporal punishment imposed by the district court. Having convicted the appellant of robbery with violence the district court had no alternative but to impose corporal punishment. Such sentence is mandatory under the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972 as amended by Act No. 10 of 1989. In the event we affirm the sentence G of thirty years imprisonment awarded by the High Court and that of twelve strokes corporal punishment imposed by the district court. The order of compensation by the district court also stands.

In conclusion the appeal is hereby dismissed in its entirety. H

1994 TLR p181

A

[zRPz]MICHAEL LUHIYE v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 181 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Kisanga JJA, Omar JJA and Mnzavas JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 77 OF 1993 B
1 August, 1994
(Appeal from the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Tabora, Korosso, J) C
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Trial with assessors - Assessors not given opportunity to cross-examine witnesses individually - Effect thereof.
Evidence - Confession made involuntary - Circumstances of confession not seriously and D comprehensively considered by the court - Whether proper.
Evidence - Corroboration - Uncorroborated retracted confession - Whether courts may convict on a retracted confession without corroboration.
-Headnote
The appellant is this case appealed against conviction the murder contrary to s E 196 of the Penal Code. He argued that the trial was a nullity as it was conducted without the aid of assessors; that the assessors were not given opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses individually, instead they cross-examined them together and the witnesses answered them together; that the confession from him F to the police was involuntary as he was subjected to violence before he made it; and that hsi confession was retracted but was nevertheless relied upon by the court without independent evidence to corroborate it.
Held:

(i) In a trial with assessors the Trial Judge should allow each assessor who wishes to cross-examine the witness individually and the answer thereto should be recorded separately; therefore it was improper and an irregularity not to have done so in this case;

(ii) For a trial in a criminal case to be a nullity it must be shown that the G irregularity was such that it prejudiced the accused and therefore occasioned failure of justice; in this case the Trial Judge gave a summing-up of the evidence to the assessors, and took into account as to the guilt or otherwise of the appellant and therefore it cannot be declared a nullity;

(iii) It is always desirable to look for corroboration in support of a retracted confession before acting on it but a court may convict on retracted H confession even without corroboration. I
1994 TLR p182
Case Information
A Appeal dismissed.
Cases referred to:

(1) R v Gae s/o Maimba and Another [1945] 12 EACA 82.
(2) R v Kaperere s/o Mwaya [1948] 15 EACA 56.
(3) Tuwamoi v Uganda [1967] EA 84.

B Muhula, for the appellant.

Kaduri, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mnzavas, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: C
The appellant, Michael Luhiye, was charged with and convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code by the High Court, (Korosso, J), sitting in Tabora; and the mandatory sentence of death was handed down.
Dissatisfied with the finding of the High Court he has come to this court. D
The charge of murder alleged that the appellant on or about 19 July 1989 at the Jioneemwenyewe village within Urambo district, Tabora region, murdered one, Mohamed Rashidi.
E After a full trial the High Court (Korosso, J) was satisfied that the prosecution had proved the charge of murder against the appellant beyond reasonable doubt and, as already mentioned above, convicted him and imposed the death sentence.
F Before us Mr Muhula, learned defence counsel complained that the trial was a nullity as, it was argued, it was conducted without the aid of assessors. In support of his argument Mr Muhula referred the Court to pages 6, 7, 12 and 15 of the proceedings where it is shown that the three assessors were not given the opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses individually. The record appeared to G show that all the assessors cross-examined the witnesses together and the witnesses answered them together. This procedure was, according to the learned counsel's submission, tantamount to trying the case without the aid of assessors and we were invited to make a finding that the trial was a nullity.
H In the alternative, but without prejudice to the above argument, the learned defence counsel submitted that the trial court did not seriously and comprehensively consider the circumstances under which the appellant confessed to the killing. It was argued that had the learned judge properly directed his mind to the evidence before him he would have found that appellant's confession to the police - exhibit C, was involuntary as, it was submitted, the appel- I lant was subjected to violence before he gave his confessional statement. A

As to the evidence of the village chairman, (PW3), who testified that the appellant had voluntarily confessed to the killing of the deceased and that the appellant gave the reason for the killing as deceased's taking his (appellant's) fiancÅe and deceased making him (appellant) impotent by means of witchcraft, Mr Muhula B argued that the appellant had retracted his confession and that there was no independent evidence that corroborated the retracted confession that it was the appellant who murdered the deceased. The learned defence counsel prayed that the appeal be upheld and appellant be set free. C
In rebuttal Mr Kaduri, learned Senior State Attorney, conceded that it was irregular on the part of the learned trial judge to record the cross-examination of the assessors in an `omnibus' fashion but it was argued that the irregularity did not occasion failure of justice. D
As for the argument that the retracted confession should not have been relied upon by the trial judge to convict the appellant Mr Kaduri, learned counsel for the Republic, submitted that the confession of the appellant was so detailed that it could not have been narrated by any person other than the appellant. It was argued E that there was no evidence that the appellant was subjected to such violence as would have induced him to say to the police what he would not have said.

The court was asked to find that appellant's cautioned statement to the police and his statement to the chairman (PW 3), that it was he who killed the deceased were F free and voluntary and that the appeal should be dismissed.

We have minutely examined the evidence tendered before the court of first instance and we agree with the learned defence counsel that it was improper for the trial judge to allow the assessors to participate in the trial of the case the way G they participated. In a trial with assessors, as it was in this case, each assessor (if he wishes to cross-examine) has to cross-examine the witness/s individually and the answers thereto should be recorded separately.

There was clearly an irregularity in the way the assessors participated in the H hearing of this case. But as Mr Muhula, learned defence counsel, will no doubt agree on reflection, it is one thing to say that there was an irregularity in the manner the assessors participated in the hearing of the case, and quite another thing to say that such irregularity vitiated the proceedings. Before pronouncing any proceeding in a criminal case to be a nullity it must be shown that the I

A irregularity was such that it prejudiced the accused and therefore occasioned failure of justice.

In the present case it is amply clear that the trial court gave a summing up of the evidence to the assessors' and taking into account their opinions as to the guilt or otherwise of the appellant it cannot, with any stretch of the imagination, be said that the trial of the appellant was conducted without the aid of assessors. B

It is our considered view that the irregularity did not in any way occasion failure of justice. That disposes the first ground of appeal.

Coming to the second ground of appeal that there was no corroboration of C appellant's retracted confession and that the learned trial judge did not warn himself of the danger of basing a conviction on such evidence we, with respect agree with the learned defence counsel, that it is always desirable to look for corroboration in support of a confession which has been retracted before acting on such confession to the detriment of an accused person; but with even greater D respect to the learned counsel there is a long and unbroken chain of authorities that a court may convict on a retracted confession even without corroboration.

In the case of R v Gae s/o Maimba and Another (1) it was held that: E

> `There is no rule of law or practice making corroboration of a retracted confession essential. Corroboration of a retracted confession is desirable but if the court is fully satisfied that the confession cannot but be true, there is no reason in law why it should not act upon it.' F

In another decision three years later the Eastern Africa Court of Appeal said in R v Kaperere s/o Mwaya (2)

G `A Court may convict on a retracted confession even without corroboration though such confession must be received with great caution and reserve.'

There are many other decisions by the Eastern African Court of Appeal, the East Africa Court of Appeal and the Tanzania Court of Appeal to the same effect. To H mention the celebrated decision in the case of Tuwamoi v Uganda (3) the court had this to say inter alia:

`We would summarise the position thus: a trial court should accept any confession which has been retracted or repudiated with caution, and must before founding a conviction on such a confession be fully satisfied in all the circumstances of the case that the confession is I

1994 TLR p185

MNZAVAS JA

true. The same standard of proof is required in all cases and usually a court will only set on A the confession if corroborated in some material particulars by independent evidence accepted by the court. But corroboration is not necessary in law and the court may act on a confession alone if it is fully satisfied after considering all the material points and surrounding circumstances that the confession cannot but be true.' B

Coming to the case in hand it is true as rightly argued by the learned defence counsel, that the learned judge did not fully advert his mind to the law that a retracted confession should be accepted with caution but in his judgment he appears to have been satisfied in his mind that taking into account the circumstances of the case the confession could not but be true. C

That he was of that view is evident from his pronouncement on page 33 of the typed judgment where he says inter alia: D

`... I am fully convinced that the accused went to the chairman and confessed killing the deceased.... PW3 is a highly respected person in the village of Jionee-mwenyewo. He has been the village chairman for seven years in succession. It is difficult to entertain the least belief that PW3 could have decided to implicate the accused in this capital offence.... There E was no evidence that PW3 was related to the deceased.... The contents in exhibit C1 are so detailed and intimate that nobody else but the accused could have made it from the treasures of his heart.'

The learned trial judge then concluded that appellant's confession to the police - F exhibit C1 was free and voluntary and convicted the appellant of the offence of murder as charged.

With respect to the learned judge we agree with his finding that appellant's cautioned statement to the police was so detailed, elaborate and thorough that no G other person could have made the statement but the appellant. His cautioned statement to the effect that he decided to attack the deceased with a panga and a stick on the head after he was told by witch doctors that it was the deceased who had made him (appellant) impotent by means of a witchcraft was so personal that no other person would have such information. So was his statement that he had H visited Government hospitals in Urambo and Kibondo and a number of witch doctors for treatment but that he could not regain his virility.

And, to crown it all, his cautioned statement to the police officer, PW1, that he cut the deceased on the head with a panga tallied with the post-mortem report - exhibit P1 which showed that the deceased I

1994 TLR p186

A had a cut wound on the head. The evidence amply corroborated appellant's retracted confession; if corroboration was necessary. Maybe it is also not irrelevant to mention that it is the appellant who led the village chairman (PW3) to his (appellant's) house where he produced the panga he had used in attacking the deceased.

B For evidence to be so consistent the only common denominator, save perjury, must be truth. Appellant's retracted confession was, in our considered view, a clumsy attempt to evade the consequences of his acts.

C We are satisfied that the appellant was properly convicted of the offence of murder as charged. The sentence of death is mandatory. In the event we order that the appeal be dismissed in it entirety.

1994 TLR p186

E

[zRPz]NYIGOSO MASOLWA v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 186 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Kisanga JJA, Omar JJA and Mnzavas JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 798 OF 1993 F
1 August, 1994
(Appeal from the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Tabora, Korosso, J)
Flynote

G Criminal Practice and Procedure - Identification of an accused - Identification in conditions not favourable - Whether reliable.

-Headnote

The appellant appealed against conviction for murder. The conviction was based on the evidence of the wife of the deceased who was the sole identifying witness that she identified the accused when their house was broken into by two bandits at night. The appellant denied ever being at the house of the deceased or slashing H him with a panga.

Held:

(i) Circumstances prevailing in the room at the time of the attack were not favourable for proper identification of attackers and the witness never reported having identified the attacker to the ten cell leader nor to the people who gathered at the scene. I

1994 TLR p187

Case Information

Appeal allowed. A
No cases referred.
Magongo, for the appellant.
Kaduri, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Omar, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: B

The appellant Nyigoso s/o Masolwa was convicted on a charge of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code and was sentenced to death. He is now appealing. C

PW1 Modosta Luchoga stated that she was at home with her husband the deceased in old Shinyanga Village on the night of 5 August 1987 when two bandits broke down their front door and entered, and straight away started attacking her by cutting her on the head and on the left hand. She fell down and became D unconscious but before that she said she was able to identify the appellant by the torches each one of them carried. They flashed their torches straight at her face and the light dazzled her but the appellant was illuminated on the face by the torch of his colleague and she was able to identify him as Nyigoso Masolwa the brother of the former wife of her husband Amos Matiga, the deceased. At that time when E she ran to the front door her husband dived under the bed and she heard the bandits say `here he is'. Apparently he was pulled out from under the bed and cut to pieces. When she regained consciousness after the attackers had gone she F went and reported the matter to the ten cell leader, one Ngolo Shumbi. She further said that the cell leader did not ask her who had attacked her. She was feeling severe pains that night that is why she did not tell the cell leader or any of the persons who had gathered at her home, who her attackers were. She could not recognise the other attacker. The appellant whom she identified had put on a red shirt, the other bandit whom she could not see was wearing a black shirt. G

The rest of the witnesses PW2 and PW3 talked of the dispute between the father of the appellant and deceased over the bride price of seventeen head of cattle which the deceased demanded to be given back after he had divorced the sister of H the appellant. PW2 Leonard s/o Kankutebe who was the acting Divisional Secretary in Shinyanga was handed a letter by the District Commissioner directing him to collect seventeen head of cattle from the father of the appellant and hand them to the deceased as per court order. The handing over was to be done on 6 August 1987. The deceased died on 5 August 1987 one day earlier. I

1994 TLR p188

OMAR JA

A The appellant in his defence denied over being at the house of the deceased or slashing him with a panga. He said he was a home on the night of 4 August 1987. He said he knew about the dispute over bride price and preparations were under way to pay back deceased's cattle. Mr Magongo learned counsel for the appellant B submitted that the identification of the appellant by PW1 left much to be desired. PW1 never mentioned the appellant immediately after the attack. She never reported having identified the appellant to the ten cell leader or to the people who had gathered at the scene.

He submitted that PW1 never identified the appellant at all and he quoted the C following lines in the judgment of the trial court and concluded that they were mere assumptions. The quoted lines are:

`Believing as I do that each of the two attackers had his own torch and since they were looking at random to locate the position of the victims it is reasonable to see the urgency of their part to keep their torch alight all the time. The fact that they slashed PW1 on the head as well with a D panga they had (were) criminally disposed to kill PW1 as well so that when she dropped to the ground they had mistaken her for a dead person. Even if they had not intended to kill PW1 time to them was very important soon after the accused and the other attacker had got into the house of the deceased. The possibility of the accused and the other attacker carelessly E flashing torch light would appear the most reasonable assumption. It is most likely that in their carelessly flashing the light the accused became exposed to the blazing torch light held by the other person.'

F These arguments by the Trial Judge Mr Magongo covered in his second ground of appeal which is `that the finding and the conclusion arrived at by the honourable Trial Judge in his decision are indefensible both in fact and law.'

G Mr Kaduri learned State Attorney in reply stated that there were two torches, one was flashed on to the appellant who had already cut her and it was then that she identified him. Besides, PW1 knew the appellant for quite a long time.

We have gone through the evidence of PW1 the sole identifying witness and are of the view that circumstances prevailing in that room at the time of the attack were H not favourable for proper identification of the attackers and therefore the testimony of PW1 is unreliable in this respect.

We therefore allow the appeal, quash the conviction and sentence, and order that the appellant be set free unless he is otherwise lawfully held. I

1994 TLR p189

A

[zRPz]WILFRED LUKAGO v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 189 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Kisanga JJA, Omar JJA and Mnzavas JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 75 OF 1993 B

1 August, 1994

(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Tabora, Korosso, J) C

Flynote

Criminal Law - Murder - Contradictions in evidence regarding circumstances in which deceased was killed - Whether may be relied on for conviction of murder.

-Headnote

The appellant was the husband of one Elizabeth Lukago (PW1). After years of a D happy marriage blessed with six children, some misunderstandings developed which led to the appellant's wife having a boyfriend, and the appellant and his wife living separately. On the material day the appellant went to the house of PW1 where he met his wife and her boyfriend, but later left. PW1 and her boyfriend also E went out for a visit, during their return they were offered a lift by a motor vehicle. Thereafter the evidence was not clear as to what exactly happened but all in all PW1's boyfriend was subsequently found killed. The appellant was charged and convicted of murder. The conviction was largely based on the evidence of PW1 which was, however, contradictory in some respects. F

Held: The prosecution evidence had some serious contradictions and, in the circumstances of this case, it was impossible to assess the credibility of the appellant's wife whose evidence was heavily relied on in reaching conviction; all these raise a grave doubt as to the appellant's guilt. G

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No cases referred to.

Nasimire, counsel for appellant.

Kaduri, counsel for the respondent. H

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, JA, delivered the considered judgment of the Court:

When this appeal came up for hearing we heard counsel for both sides after which we allowed it, quashing the conviction for murder and setting aside the sentence with an order for the appellant's I

1994 TLR p190

KISANGA JA

A immediate release. We reserved our reasons for judgment, which we now proceed to give.

The appellant is the husband of one Elizabeth Lukago (PW1). For quite some time the two lived happily as husband and wife, and they had six children between them. However, close to the happening of these events they fell into family misunderstandings which caused PW1 to develop the relationship of boyfriend B with the deceased. At the material time PW1 and the appellant, although husband and wife, were living separately.

In the morning of the material day the appellant had gone to the house where PW1 C lived and found PW1 and the deceased, her boyfriend there. He went away after some time but made no comment about his finding the deceased there. After some time PW1 and the deceased went out together. The deceased had asked PW1 to escort him to visit the family of one Mwakibete, and from there they visited D Tabora Boys' and Girls' Secondary Schools. After leaving the schools at about 3.00 pm, and as they were walking along, a motor vehicle came from the opposite direction and on reaching them the occupants thereof offered them a lift.

Thereafter the evidence is so unsatisfactory that Mr Nasimire, learned advocate E for the appellant, submitted in effect that no court properly directing itself could have grounded the appellant's conviction on it. Mr Kaduri, learned Senior State Attorney appearing for the respondent Republic, concurred and did not wish to support the conviction.

F The rest of the prosecution case depended entirely on the evidence of PW1. She stated that upon the occupants of the motor vehicle offering them a lift, the deceased accepted provided that the motor vehicle went in their direction. Whereupon the driver reversed and headed in their direction. One of the G passengers of the motor vehicle was the appellant and another one was Mrs Mwakibete to whose house PW1 and the deceased had been that morning only to find her out at work. PW1 did not know Mrs Mwakibete before, but she was identified to her by Mrs Mwakibete's son (PW2) who had joined PW1 and the H deceased as they were walking along, and the three were together when they met the motor vehicle. PW1 and the deceased got into the motor vehicle leaving Mwakibete's son on the ground. Then as the motor vehicle drove off fast, PW1 and the deceased were blindfolded by some of the passengers in the motor vehicle, using cloth material for the purpose. At some point further on the motor vehicle stopped. PW1 and the deceased were forced out of the motor vehicle after which they I were attacked in the most brutal manner. PW1 lost consciousness for over two A months as a result of the severe attacks. The dead body of the deceased was found lying on the ground under a tree. It had marks of violence on the head, and in the doctor's opinion death was due to head injury and intracranial haemorrhage. In his defence, the appellant flatly denied the charge of murder. B

1994 TLR p191

KISANGA JA

The prosecution evidence was unsatisfactory in a number of ways. First, it involved serious contradictions. PW1 is contradicted when she said that Mrs Mwakibete was in the motor vehicle which kidnapped her and the deceased, and that it is Mrs Mwakibete's son who identified his mother to her (PW1). For, C Mwakibete's son (PW2) denied being in the company of PW1 and the deceased at the time of meeting the alleged motor vehicle. Mrs Mwakibete who gave evidence for the defence (DW2) equally denied being a passenger in the said motor vehicle or otherwise being at the scene as claimed by PW1. The trial judge in convicting the appellant, relied heavily on the evidence of PW1 whom he found to be a truthful witness. However he did not attempt to resolve these contradictions in the D evidence. He did not say why Mrs Mwakibete and her son should deliberately testify unfavourably against the deceased who was shown to have had some friendly connections with the Mwakibete family, as against the appellant who was a total stranger to that family. E

Secondly, PW1 admitted making two statements to the police about the incident. She further admitted that those statements might be different because of the brain injury that she sustained which, as already noted, rendered her unconscious for over two months. Now, a number of questions arise from this. First, which of the F two statements was the basis of her evidence in court, or was that evidence based on both statements? The learned judge never addressed himself to that question and on the evidence we can find no clue as to what the answer is. In those circumstances it becomes impossible to assess her credibility, that is, to G determine the extent to which her evidence was or was not affected by the severe brain injuries which she sustained.

And lastly, in convicting the appellant the court also relied on the evidence that H some time during the investigation of the case an axe was recovered from the appellant's house which had marks of human blood on its blade and the wooden handle. While such evidence served to augment suspicion on the appellant, it did not advance the prosecution case any much further. For, it was not shown whose blood it was. It could be that of the person or persons who occupied the house and who used the axe. I

1994 TLR p192

A In our view, all these points taken together raise a grave doubt as to the appellant's guilt, and had the learned trial judge addressed his mind to them he would not have convicted the appellant. It is for these reasons that we allowed the appeal, quashed the conviction and set aside the sentence and ordered the appellant's immediate release from prison unless he was otherwise lawfully held. B

1994 TLR p192

C

[zRPz]MASOLELE GENERAL AGENCIES v AFRICAN INLAND CHURCH TANZANIA 1994 TLR 192 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza D

Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 13 OF 1994

9 August, 1994

E (From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, (Masanche, J)

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Claim for loss of profits - Need for specific proof of specific claims - Burden of proof. F

-Headnote

This was an appeal against an ex-parte judgment of the High Court dismissing a claim for loss of profits by the appellant company to the sum of 1.6 million shillings.

G Having won the tender for the supply of iron bars, the appellant company supplied 225 pieces worth Shs 1,023,700/=, which amount was paid. However, the appellant claimed that the parties had agreed that payment was to be made upon supply, and the respondent failed to honour this agreement and made payments almost a year after delivery of the last supply.

H It was the appellant's case that if payment had been timely, it would have realised a profit of Shs 1,600,000/= from its cement business. The claim was dismissed by the Trial Judge on the basis that the claimed loss of profit had not been proved.

Held:

(i) Once a claim for a specific item is made, that claim must be strictly proved, else there would be no difference between a specific claim and I

1994 TLR p193

a general one; the Trial Judge rightly dismissed the claim for loss of profit A because it was not proved;

(ii) A bill of costs is nothing more than tabulated costs incurred by a party in the conduct of the case and which he seeks to be reimbursed by the other party. It is not an entitlement that may be claimed in the body of a suit.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed. B

No case referred to.

Kahangawa, for the appellant. C

[zJDz]Judgment
Mfalila, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:
This appeal is against the ex-parte judgment delivered by Masanche, J dismissing a claim for loss of profits by the appellant company against the respondent the D African Inland Church Tanzania. In the suit, the appellant company claimed the sum of Shs 1,660,000/= being loss of business profits it allegedly suffered in the following circumstances: That in January 1990, the respondent church floated a tender for the supply of iron bars. The appellant company won the tender and supplied 225 pieces worth Shs 1,023,700/=. The whole of this amount has been E paid. However, the appellant claimed that both parties had agreed that payment would be made upon supply, but that the respondent failed to honour this agreement and made the payment almost a year later after delivery of the last supply on 22 December 1990. The appellant's case was that if payment had been F made timeously, it would have realised a profit of Shs 1,660,000/= from its cement business between January and September, 1991.
In dismissing this claim, the trial judge held that loss of profits in the cement business had not been proved. In his view claim for loss of profits, like a claim for special damages, must be strictly proved. G
In his memorandum of appeal, the appellant complained that the trial judge misdirected himself on the law as to the standard of proof with regard to loss of business profits as particularised in paragraph 6 of the plaint. At the hearing of this appeal, Mr Kakangwa learned advocate who appeared for the appellant, made a H valiant attempt to expand on this point. But on our part, we are satisfied that the trial judge's views on the burden of proof were correct. Once a claim for a specific item is made, that claim must be strictly proved, else there would be no difference between a specific claim and a general one. In the present case, the appellant company claimed loss of business profits in the sum of I

A Shs 1,660,000/= it would have realised from the cement business. All that was said in evidence by the Director of that company apparently in proof of this claim was as follows:

`I had taken Shs 2 million as loan from the bank. The bank took interest of 31% per month. The overdraft facility was to end on 20/6/91. I tender (Exist P2). I had bank money to buy the B iron bars. I dealt with cement. One wagon gave me Shs 280,000/= (for 800 bags) I could take one wagon per month. That was since January 1991.'

C This was all the evidence led on behalf of the appellant company on its cement operations. No documents were produced to back up these figures which therefore appear to have been plucked from the air. For instance apart from the appellant's word, there was no evidence that it deals in cement. What was the D purchase price of one bag of cement, from which point, what was the transportation cost of one bag and at what price was it finally sold? The appellant's witness said that one wagon could be taken a month. Nothing definite here. This is not the kind of information on which any court could award loss of business profits.

E We were however surprised by the trial judge's last paragraph to the following effect:

`After a careful consideration, I am of the view that the plaintiff has not succeeded to prove loss of profit. I think he can claim whatever he is entitled to, in his bill of costs, if he mind to present it.' (Emphasis supplied.)

F A bill of costs is nothing more than tabulated costs incurred by a party in the conduct of a case and which he seeks to be reimbursed by the other party. It is never `a claim of whatever one thinks one is entitled to'. A claim of whatever one thinks one is entitled to is made in the body of the suit. We only hope that the bill of costs which was presented by the appellant was not in any way affected by this G misleading direction.

With this remark we order that this appeal which is without merit be dismissed. As the respondent did not appear we make no order for costs. H

1994 TLR p195

A

[zRPz]MOSSES MICHAEL ALIAS TALL v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 195 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Kisanga JJA, Omar JJA and Mnzavas JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 35 OF 1994 B

17 August, 1994

(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, Chipeta, J) C

Flynote

Criminal Law - Murder - Malice aforethought - Whether malice aforethought may be inferred from the amount of force used - Whether conduct may be indicative of malice.

-Headnote

This was an appeal on conviction for murder by the High Court. The appellant had D killed a woman he was cohabiting with and he argued that he ought not have been convicted of murder because malice aforethought was not established.

Held:

(i) Malice aforethought may be inferred from the amount of force which an E offender employs in inflicting fatal injury;

(ii) The conduct of the accused may be indicative of malice aforethought as it was in this case where the appellant was persistent in beating the deceased for a long time and prevented intervention by persons who wanted to help the deceased. F

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred.

Butambala, for the appellant.

Lyimo, for the respondent. G

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

The appellant was charged with and convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code, and was sentenced to death by the High Court (Chipeta, J) sitting at H Mwanza. He has now appealed against both conviction and sentence.

The background to the case may be set out briefly as follows: At the material time, the appellant and the deceased were living together as husband and wife. According to the appellant the union had lasted for a fortnight only. On the material night, the couple I

1994 TLR p196

KISANGA JA

A had retired after a drinking session with friends; this was around 9 pm.

It would appear that during their short cohabitation the appellant disliked certain aspects of the deceased's behaviour and had asked her to go away but she refused. After the drinking session that night then the appellant set upon her and B assaulted her, using bare hands, for a long time. She cried out and neighbours responded but the appellant chased them away. The deceased died on the same day following the attack. Her death was due to excessive internal bleeding resulting from a ruptured spleen.

C The appellant vehemently denied assaulting the deceased. He claimed that the deceased poisoned herself to death by drinking thiodan. The trial court rejected such defence and, as already stated, convicted the appellant as charged.

In this appeal the appellant was represented by Mr Butambala, learned advocate while Mr Lyimo, Principal State Attorney, was for the respondent Republic. D

In his memorandum of appeal, counsel for the appellant filed only one ground of appeal which alleged that malice aforethought was not established. The learned counsel elaborated on that ground at considerable length during his oral submission before us. E

However, we could find no merit in the contention. The medical opinion which the court accepted was that great force must have been used to cause the ruptured spleen which led to the death of the deceased. The law is settled that malice aforethought may be inferred from the amount of force which the offender F employed in inflicting the fatal injury. In the instant case great force was used. That was a circumstance from which malice could properly be inferred.

The evidence of PW1 and PW2 which the court believed was to the effect that the appellant continued beating the deceased for a long period lasting between 9 pm G and 1 am. The deceased was crying out but when PW1 went to plead with the appellant to stop the beating the appellant chased him away, and when more neighbours came there the appellant also chased them away. In our view such H conduct was indicative of malice. To subject the deceased to persistent beating over a long period when she continued to cry in pain, and to prevent any intervention by persons who had come to the rescue of the suffering victim were acts which were intended to end the life of the deceased or at least to cause her grievous harm.

The appellant did not feel sorry at all for what he had done. At some stage after rendering the deceased helpless through the beat- I ing, he went to call the neighbour (PW1) and asked him to come and watch `free A cinema'. Upon PW1 arriving there the appellant showed to him the deceased who was lying on the bed helpless and virtually naked; she only had an underskirt on and no underpants. The appellant then rolled bhang in a piece of paper `using B the skin of the deceased as a pad and rolled the bhang from the vagina area up to her navel'. The appellant showed complete disregard for human life and dignity. He turned human suffering, a situation which he himself had created, into a scene of entertainment. Had he not intended to kill or cause grievous harm to the deceased, he would have felt sorry and would have enlisted the assistance of the neighbours who called on him to take the deceased to hospital or dispensary. Instead he C turned the neighbours away as if to say that the helpless victim should be left alone to die, which is exactly what happened. Such conduct was clearly consistent with malice aforethought. D

1994 TLR p197

Mr Lyimo, the learned Principal State Attorney appearing for the Republic, opposed the appeal and for the reasons as set out above we agree that the appeal is without substance. It is accordingly dismissed in its entirety. E

1994 TLR p197

F

[zRPz]HEMED S TAMIM v RENATA MASHAYO 1994 TLR 197 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA G

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 44 OF 1993

30 September, 1994

(Appeal from the Judgment of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Bahati, J) H

Flynote

Family Law - Presumption of marriage - Presumption rebutted after eight years of cohabitation - Whether parties have any rights under the Law of Marriage Act 1971 I

1994 TLR p198

-Headnote

A The appellant's third appeal follows from dissatisfaction with the decisions of the Primary, District and High Courts in which he had sought divorce and division of matrimonial assets in the form of a dwelling house which had been acquired in the course of cohabiting with the respondent for a period of eight years. In the Primary Court the respondent's claim was established and reliefs granted namely B dissolution of the marriage and equal division of the dwelling house. But the presumption of marriage was found to have been rebutted by the District and High Courts. On further appeal to the Court of Appeal:

Held:

C (i) Where the parties have lived together as husband and wife in the course of which they acquire a house, despite the rebuttal of the presumption of marriage as provided for under s 160(1) of the Law of Marriage Act 1971, the courts have the power under s 160(2) of the Act to make consequential orders as in the dissolution of marriage or separation and division of matrimonial property acquired by the parties during their relationship is one such order;

D (ii) Having found that the parties were not duly married, the decision of the lower court regarding the dissolution of marriage is void.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No cases referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

E Mfalila, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:

This is a third appeal from the decision of the Primary Court of Ilabo district at F Bwquauni. In that court, the present respondent Renato Mashayo sued the appellant for divorce and division of assets in the form of a dwelling house acquired while they were cohabiting. The Primary Court found the respondent's claim established and granted the reliefs sought namely dissolution of marriage and equal division of the dwelling house. The appellant successfully appealed to G the district court which held that as the appellant had rebutted the presumption that they were duly married, there was no marriage to dissolve and that therefore the question of dividing matrimonial assets acquired during marriage did not arise. The respondent was therefore as it were condemned to get out of the eight year H relationship with the appellant empty handed. She fought back and successfully appealed to the High Court where Bahati,J held that although the presumption under s 160(1) of the Law of Marriage Act had been rebutted, the respondent still had some residual rights to property under s 160(2) of the Act which empowers the court, upon rebuttal under ss (1) of the same and upon the woman satisfying the court (as she did in this case) that she I and the man did in fact live together as husband and wife for two years or more, A

`to make order or orders for maintenance and upon application made therefore either by the woman or the man, grant such reliefs including custody of children as it has jurisdiction under this Act to make or grant upon or subsequent to the making of an order for the dissolution of a marriage or an order of separation as the court may think fit, and the provisions of this Act B which regulate and apply to proceedings for and orders of maintenance and other reliefs under this section.' C

The learned judge then allowed the appeal, set aside the judgment and orders of the district court and restored those of the Primary Court. The appellant Hemed S Tamin applied for leave to appeal to this court arguing that there was an important point of law involved which cried for determination by this court. The Judge (Kyando, J) who heard this application and granted it, certified the following point of law for determination by this court: D

`Whether the respondent was entitled in law to a share of assets in the circumstances of this case.' E

We think the law on this point is quite clear under s 160(2) of the Law of Marriage Act 1971 on which Bahati, J based his decision. It was held by all the courts that on the evidence, the appellant and the respondent had lived as husband and wife for eight years in the course of which they acquired the house at Kiwalani. Both the F District court and the High Court found that the presumption under s 160(1) had been rebutted but the High Court held correctly that following this rebuttal the court had the power and jurisdiction to make the same consequential orders as in the dissolution of marriage or separation. The order for division of matrimonial assets G is one such order, consequently the learned judge ordered equal division of the house at Kiwalani which was acquired by the parties during or in the course of their relationship. However, having found that the parties were not duly married, the learned judge should not have ordered the restoration of the Primary Court order H regarding the dissolution of marriage, for quite obviously there was no marriage to dissolve. Consequently the order of dissolution of marriage upheld by the High Court is set aside.

Apart from this variation in the High Court judgment, the appeal is otherwise dismissed with costs. I

1994 TLR p200

A

[zRPz]AHMADI ALLY MAUNDU v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 200 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Kisanga AgCJ, Omar JJA and Lubuva JJA

B CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 129 OF 1994

7 October, 1994

(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Mtwara, Mkwawa, J)

Flynote

C Criminal Law - Provocation - Whether a demand for `talaka' rather than reconciliation amounts to provocation.

-Headnote

D This was an appeal from a conviction for murder by the High Court. The appellant sought to rely on provocation as defence because his wife preferred ending their matrimonial differences by demanding `talaka' rather than proposed reconciliation.

Held:

(i) The demand for `talaka' by the deceased did not constitute any unlawful conduct which would form a basis for legal provocation. E

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred.

[zJDz]Judgment

F Kisanga, Ag CJ, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:

This appeal is completely devoid of merit; it ought to have been rejected summarily. It arises out of a conviction for murder and the sentence of death passed on the appellant by the High Court (Mkwawa, J) sitting at Mtwara. G

It was alleged, and admitted by the appellant, that the appellant killed his wife by stabbing her with a knife. In his defence at the trial the appellant sought to rely on provocation as a defence, but the court rejected it. The appellant stated that on the H material day he and his wife had set out to go to his grandfather who lived in a different village in order to refer their family or matrimonial misunderstandings to him for reconciliation. Apparently at the time of setting out, the wife did not know the purpose of the mission, and so on the way she asked the appellant what the intended visit was for. Upon the appellant disclosing the purpose of the visit, she preferred ending their matrimonial differences by demanding `talaka' ie I divorce from the appellant rather than by the proposed reconciliation. The appellant A claimed that such reaction by his wife angered him so much that he stabbed her four times using a knife, killing her instantly.

Like the trial court, we have no difficulty at all in rejecting the appellant's plea of provocation. The demand of `talaka' by the deceased did not constitute any B unlawful conduct on her part which would form the basis for legal provocation. The appellant's conviction, therefore, was amply justified. His appeal is hopelessly devoid of merit and, as stated at the very beginning, it was fit case for summary rejection. The appeal is accordingly dismissed in its entirety. C

1994 TLR p201

E

[zRPz]LUCAS NGALYOGELA v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 201 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Kisanga Ag CJ, Omar JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 21 OF 1994 F
7 October, 1994
(from the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Morogoro, Kyando, J)
Flynote
Criminal Law - Provocation - Sudden and grave reaction - Manslaughter and not murder. G
-Headnote
This is an appeal against conviction for murder by a husband who killed his wife by hitting her with a stick after she had let out a cascade of abusive words which infuriated him. H
Held:

(i) Taking into account that the evidence of the appellant invoking the defence of provocation was not controverted by the prosecution, the appellant may have attacked the deceased under provocation which was sudden and grave.

Case Information
Appeal allowed. I

1994 TLR p202

A No case referred.

Msellem, for the appellant.

[zJDz]Judgment

Omar, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:

B The appellant Lucas Ngalyogela was charged with and convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code. He is now appealing. His ground of appeal is that there was provocation and if considered would have reduced the offence of murder to one of manslaughter. The appellant does not dispute that on the evening of 16 September 1989 while inside their house with his wife Consolata he attacked C his wife by hitting her not with axe pestle but with an ordinary stick and not in the living room as was said by PW1, their 20 year old son, but in the bedroom.

D PW1 in his evidence stated that on the material night he was present in the house with his parents and other children and he heard his father tell his mother that she had sent her children to arrest him for being a thief and she was also telling neighbours that the appellant was a petty thief ie `Mdokozi'. His mother did not reply to these allegations. PW1 left the house and went to sleep in another E house with his two young brothers. But before his departure PW1 also heard his father the appellant, telling the deceased to prepare more food for him; this was after the family had eaten their dinner together. What transpired after that between his parents he, PW1, did not know. But shortly afterwards he heard the cries of `mama mama' from the three youngest children he left behind with their parents. F And he rushed there only to find his mother lying on the bed with axe pestle near her and bleeding from the head. The appellant was nowhere to be seen, he having fled from the house. PW1 took the deceased to the cell leader and from there to the Police Station and thence to the dispensary for treatment. The case of assault G causing actual bodily harm was opened against the appellant who was found in the bush and arrested the same evening. The appellant was sentenced to six months imprisonment. Ten days after this incident the deceased whose wounds had not healed but became septic, died in hospital where she was rushed the H same day her condition deteriorated. It was then that the appellant who was in prison serving his sentence, was charged for the offence of murder and when the charge was read to him he agreed that he attacked his wife but he did not expect her to die.

Considering the evidence as a whole there is the statement of the I deceased which she made when she was still able to walk and speak and she A said that as she bent down to pick the flour in order to prepare for the extra meal for her husband she was hit on the head and she became unconscious. PW1's contribution to the evidence mentioned the outburst of the appellant to his wife about her attitude of considering her husband a petty thief and setting her children against him. Then there is the evidence of the appellant who described the abusive B words of the deceased to him when he asked where she had been from 5 pm when she had finished her work of selling liquor at a bar to 7 pm when she returned home. In her explanation about this absence of two hours she said she C was collecting utensils used for selling liquor and then her husband replied that this work could have been done by her young sister who was there at the bar helping her. It was at this juncture that according to the appellant, his wife let out a cascade of abusive words which infuriated him so much that he picked a stick and hit her on the head. They were alone in the house but for the three very young D children. The outburst is as follows: `You are telling me to let my young sister to collect utensils, why? You old-man you have no brains. Your brains are like those of your mother. And the mother that gave birth to you I do not know in what form you were then.' E

On the available evidence we cannot say for certain that these words were not uttered. They may well have been uttered and led to the attack on the deceased. After all, the time this couple lived together was long, 22 years, and peaceful with a gift of eight children which they were blessed with. This has reinforced our belief F that this was probably an isolated and unfortunate incident in their lives and has led to such a tragedy. The evidence of the appellant on this provocation was not controverted by the prosecution. PW1, their son, was not around to have witnessed events that preceded the attack. G
In the result we agree with the submission of Mr Msellem the learned defence counsel that the appellant may have attacked the deceased under provocation which was sudden and grave. We therefore quash conviction for murder and set aside the sentence of death. We find the appellant guilty of the lesser offence of manslaughter and sentence him to a term of eight years imprisonment from 4 February 1993 the day he was convicted in the High Court. H
1994 TLR p204
A
[zRPz]SAIDI ABDALLAH v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 204 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Kisanga AgCJ, Omar JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 130 OF 1994 B
7 October, 1994
(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Mtwara, Mkwawa, J)
Flynote
C Criminal Law - Murder - Defence of Provocation - Whether talking in riddles is provocative enough
-Headnote
This was an appeal against conviction for murder by the High Court. The accused argued that he should have been convicted of manslaughter as he killed because he suspected that the deceased and his colleagues had hatched a plan to kill him. D
Held:

(i) The defence of provocation is not available in this case where the appellant was clearly vengeful from the way he persuaded his victim to follow him to the forest where he killed him; E

(ii) People talking in riddles is not provocative enough to lead the appellant to choose one unsuspecting person and lure him to his death.

Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
F No case referred.
Mkongwa, for the appellant.
Matupa, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
G Omar, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:
The appellant Saidi Abdallah was charged with the murder of his fellow worker Saidi Hassan Mnanila and was convicted. He is now appealing.
H The prosecution led evidence to the effect that on 16 April 1991 at Pungutini Village in Kilwa District the appellant and the deceased took their meal together in the house of PW1 where they were employed as shamba boys. PW2, the brother of PW1, was present too during meal time. Both PW1 and PW2 heard the appellant entreating the deceased to go with him to the shamba to collect building poles. At first deceased refused but the appellant insisted, I so the deceased turned to PW1 and PW1 permitted the deceased to go. The two A then departed for the countryside; the appellant borrowed a bill-hook from PW1 and took it along. Shortly afterwards a loud sound was heard by PW1 and PW3 and the cries from the deceased screaming that Saidi was killing him.

PW4 Sikujua d/o Pengere who was passing by at the time, saw the appellant B running very fast to the bush and wielding a bill-hook, and a distance ahead she saw the deceased lying on the ground. He was already dead.
In the cautioned statement before ASP Matho in the CID Office at Kilwa, Masoko the appellant confessed to killing the deceased by cutting his neck on the right side C with a bill-hook. But he did so because he suspected that the deceased and his colleagues had hatched a plan to kill him.
In his defence the appellant agreed that he and deceased went out together that fateful day but on the way the deceased tried to throw him to the ground but he D (the appellant) managed to escape from him and ran away. He was not carrying a bill-hook and PW4 who said she saw him running armed with a bill-hook was lying. The appellant then said that he did not know who killed the deceased.
Mr Mkongwa, the learned counsel for the appellant, submitted that the learned trial E judge erred in law and in fact by finding the appellant guilty of murder instead of manslaughter. He added that the appellant was acting in self-defence following what he perceived was a serious threat to his life, he (the appellant) did not deny attacking the deceased. F
Mr Matupa, the learned State Attorney, on the other hand supported the conviction of murder and he added that it was well founded because it is clear that he was vengeful from the way he persuaded his victim to follow him to the forest ostensibly to help him (the appellant) cut building poles but actually to afford him (the appellant) the opportunity to kill, which he did at the first available opportunity. G

We agree with the counsel for the Republic that the defence of provocation is not available to him. If the appellant perceived any threat to his life he should have quietly disappeared from his place of work instead of doing what he did. If people H were talking in riddles which made him understand that they were saying that they had him in their grip then that conception is not provocation enough to lead him to choose one unsuspecting person and lure him to his death. We find on this account that the appeal is devoid of merit and so dismiss it in its entirety. I

1994 TLR p206

A

[zRPz]SIJALI JUMA KOCHO v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 206 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Kisanga Ag CJ, Omar JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 22 OF 1994 B

7 October, 1994

(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Morogoro, Bahati, J)

Flynote

C Criminal Law - Defence of alibi - Whether prior notice is required.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Identification of accused - Identification where offence was committed at night.

-Headnote

D The appellant appealed against the conviction for murder by the High Court on the ground that the conviction was largely based on the uncorroborated dying declaration of the deceased. The appellant further contended that the conditions obtaining at the time of the incident did not favour correct identification of the appellant as being one of the bandits who invaded the house of the deceased in the night. E

Held:

(i) The conditions in the house did favour correct identification of the appellant as the tube light under which a person could read was sufficiently bright to enable the deceased to identify the appellant who was well known to him before the incident; F

(ii) Prior notice of the defence of alibi is required under the law;

(iii) The appellant was under no legal obligation to prove the alibi but in the fact of the allegations made against him one would reasonably expect him to call the person he claims he was with at the time of the event.

Case Information

G Appeal dismissed.

No case referred.

Mselem, for the appellant.

Korosso, State Attorney for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

H Kisanga, Ag CJ, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:
The appellant was convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code and sentenced to death by the High Court (Bahati, J) sitting at Morogoro. He has now appealed against both conviction and sentence. I
1994 TLR p207
KISANGA Ag CJ
The facts of the case were that a group of ten bandits broke into a shop at about 1 A am and seriously attacked the deceased and PW3 who were sleeping there after which they made away with money and shop goods. The two victims were taken to hospital where the deceased died about a week later. PW3 survived to tell the story of what happened. B
The conviction is based largely if not wholly, on a dying declaration of the deceased, consisting of what he is reported by PW3 to have said at the time of the invasion that night, and by PW1 while he (the deceased) was at the hospital. PW3, the owner of the shop which was broken into, testified that after the bandits had entered they demanded money. He obliged and gave them Shs 67,000/= which C was in two lots. However, they were not satisfied and so they started to attack him and the deceased. They were in two groups: One group consisting of five dealt with the deceased while the other group was on PW3. In the course of the attack D the deceased remarked `Even you Kocho my relative of Manzese are killing me?' PW1 who was attending the deceased at the hospital testified that deceased told him that it was his friend Kocho who had injured him. The appellant in his defence denied the charge and put up the alibi that on the material night he was far away at the home of his uncle. E
The trial judge rejected the defence of alibi. He relied on the dying declaration and convicted the appellant. He was satisfied that the dying declaration was sufficiently cogent to warrant the conviction even without its being corroborated. F
At the hearing of this appeal the appellant was represented by Mr Mselem, learned advocate, while the Republic was represented by Miss Korosso, learned State Attorney. Mr Mselem filed and argued only one ground essentially attacking the trial judge for basing the appellant's conviction on the uncorroborated dying declaration of the deceased. He contended that the conditions obtaining at the time of the G incident did not favour correct identification of the appellant as being one of the bandits. Miss Korosso strongly resisted the appeal.
The Trial Judge accepted the evidence that there was a tube light on in the room H where the bandits carried out their nefarious activities that night. The tube light was coloured but was sufficiently bright for a person to read under it. There was abundant evidence that the appellant and the deceased were long time friends. Indeed the appellant conceded that he went to school with the deceased in Morogoro and he visited the home of the I
1994 TLR p208
KISANGA Ag CJ
A deceased in Moshi. The bandits did not start attacking the inmates immediately after entering the room. They demanded money first and PW3 dished out Shs 67,000/= in two lots. It is only after they were dissatisfied with this amount that they started to attack PW3 and the deceased.

B We are of the view that these conditions did favour correct identification of the appellant. The tube light under which a person could read was sufficiently bright to enable the deceased to identify the appellant who was well known to him before the incident.

There was evidence that the bandits flashed torch light in the eyes of the inmates C in order to dazzle them, and Mr Mselem contended that this must have prevented the deceased from identifying his assailant or assailants. We cannot agree. Flashing torch light did not go on all the time. For instance, there was the period between the time the bandits demanded money and the time PW3 handed to them Shs 67,000/=in two lots. The bandits cannot have been flashing torch D lights in the eyes of PW3 all this time. They must have paused for some time to enable him to pick up the money from wherever he had kept it and hand it over to them. During such interval the deceased could have identified the appellant as one of the intruders. There is other evidence which shows that flashing of the torch light did not dazzle the inmates to the extent of making it impossible for them to see and appreciate what was going on. PW3 said that the group of bandits who E entered the room that night numbered ten. If under the conditions obtaining in the room he could see and count the number of invaders, the same conditions should enable the deceased to identify the appellant whom he knew so well before. Of F course, unlike the deceased, PW3 could not identify the bandits because, he said, they were strangers to him; he did not know them prior to the incident.

G Mr Mselem emphasized the view that the conditions were not favourable for correct identification considering that the inmates must have been suddenly awakened from deep sleep at 1 am, the events were taking place in rapid succession and that the inmates were very frightened. Once again we are not H persuaded by this argument. As pointed out earlier, the attack did not start immediately after the bandits had demanded money and were given what they considered was not enough. During such demand for and handing over of money the deceased, with the aid of the tube light, would be able to identify the appellant whom he knew so well as a long time friend. I

1994 TLR p209

KISANGA Ag CJ

As submitted by Miss Korosso, the appellant's conduct points to his guilt of the A offence charged. The appellant and the deceased were long time friends and, indeed according to the appellant, that friendship continued until the death of the deceased. There was ample evidence that after the deceased was injured the appellant enquired, though sarcastically, and got to know that the deceased was B hospitalized but he never went to see him there even though he told lies that he visited him twice at the hospital. It is hard to see how in ordinary circumstances the appellant would have forsaken his long time friend at such a critical time. This point is brought out even more clearly when the appellant told lies that he visited the deceased twice at the hospital for this is what he should indeed have done but he did not. C

There was credible evidence that after the deceased died and during investigation into the case, the police were searching for the appellant but as they approached him he ran away and disappeared, only to be arrested two days later. It is only D reasonable to conclude that he ran away because he knew that the police wanted him in connection with this offence which he had committed. Not only that. There was evidence also that the appellant was known by the name of Kocho by which the deceased is reported to have identified him on the fateful night. Indeed it is the E name under which the appellant was charged and which appeared throughout the proceedings respecting him right up to this court. Prosecution witnesses consistently referred to him as Kocho and they were not cross-examined. Strangely enough, however, the appellant in the course of his defence disowned F that name. One wonders why. In normal circumstances one does not disown one's name. The only reasonable inference to be drawn is that the appellant did so as an afterthought in an attempt to avoid any association of his identity with the death of the deceased. G

We are satisfied that considering all the circumstances of the case the charge against the appellant was proved sufficiently and that the appellant's denial cannot cast any reasonable doubt on his guilt. In his defence of alibi the appellant had claimed that on the material night he slept at the home of his uncle. He had given H no prior notice of this alibi as required under the law. Admittedly he was under no legal obligation to prove the alibi but in the face of the allegations made against him, one would reasonably expect him to call the said uncle to bear him out. However, the appellant declined to do so despite suggestions to him in cross-examination. In these circumstances, therefore no weight can be attached to his alibi, and the I

A learned Trial Judge rightly discounted it. In the result the conviction was justified and we can find no ground to interfere. Accordingly the appeal is dismissed in its entirety.

C

[zRPz]KULWA KABIZI, PAULO SINDANO BALELE & SULEIMAN MLELA v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 210 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

D CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 38 OF 1993
19 October, 1994
(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Tabora, Lugakingira, J) E
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Admission and evaluation of evidence - Evidence wrongly rejected by trial court - Duty of the Appellate Court.
-Headnote

F The appellants were charged with conspiracy, fraudulent false accounting, and stealing by public servant before the Shinyanga District Court. They were acquitted on all counts. The Republic appealed to the High Court which, after restoring and re-evaluating numerous pieces of evidence which had been rejected by the trial court, allowed the appeal and convicted the appellants on all counts. They G appealed to the Court of Appeal arguing that the High Court was wrong to restore some evidence which had been rejected by the trial court and to rely on some evidence which needed corroboration, and further that the High Court exceeded its powers in that it acted in a manner which amounted to recording additional evidence. H

Held:

(i) The High Court was right to evaluate the evidence on record and to act on some crucial evidence which the trial court had wrongly and deliberately disbelieved;

(ii) Where a trial court wrongly rejects certain evidence it is the duty of the appellate court to arrive at its conclusions upon a consideration of the whole of the evidence properly admissible and available on record; I

1994 TLR p211

(iii) The High Court in this case rightly arrived at its own conclusion after A restoring evidence in support of the prosecution which had been wrongly rejected by the trial court.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

Cases referred to: B

(1) Williamson Diamonds Ltd and Another v Brown [1970] EA 1.

(2) Trevor Price and Another v Raymond Kelsall, [1957] EA 752.

(3) R v Hamis bin Said and Another [1942] 9 EACA 50.

Maira, for the first appellant.

Mtaki, for the second appellant. C

Matata, for the third appellant.

Kaduri, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court. D

The appellants, Kulwa Kabizi, Paulo Sindano Balele and Suleiman Mlela to whom we will hereinafter be referring to as first, second and third appellants respectively, were charged before the District Court of Shinyanga of three counts of conspiracy, three counts of fraudulent false accounting and three counts of stealing by public servant. E

After a full trial the District Court acquitted the appellants on all the counts. Dissatisfied with the decision of the District Court the Republic appealed to the High Court which, after evaluating the evidence tendered in the court of first instance, was satisfied that there was ample evidence in support of the charges F against the appellants. The learned judge accordingly upheld the appeal by the Republic, convicted the appellants on all the counts and sentenced each of the appellants to seven years imprisonment in respect of counts one, four and seven. In counts two, five and eight each appellant was sentenced to seven years imprisonment on each count; and in counts three, six and nine (that is stealing by public servants) each appellant was sentenced to ten years imprisonment on each count. All the sentences were made to run concurrently. Aggrieved by the decision G of the High Court the appellants have appealed to this court.

Before us Mr Maira, learned counsel, advocated for the first appellant. Mr Mtaki, learned counsel appeared for the second appellant and Mr Matata, learned counsel argued the appeal in respect of the third appellant. H

Mr Maira argued that the first appellate court erred in convicting the first appellant on the evidence of PW3, PW5 and PW6 who like I

A the appellants were employees of Shinyanga Region Co-operative Union. It was the learned counsel's submission that these witnesses were accomplices whose evidence needed corroboration before being acted upon to the detriment of the first appellant.

B Mr Maira, learned defence counsel also argued that it was wrong and improper for the learned judge to rely on exhibits P1, P2 and P3 to convict his client, the first appellant; when the evidence showed that some of the documents were tampered with.

It was also Mr Maira's submission that on the evidence tendered in the district C court the most that could be said about his client, first appellant, is that he was negligent in his work. It was argued that there was no evidence implicating the first appellant with the offences charged. Finally Mr Maira complained that his client's conviction was based on the weakness of his defence and not on the strength of the prosecution case and asked this court to allow his appeal. D

Mr Mtaki, learned counsel for the second appellant argued that the High Court exceeded its powers in that it heard the appeal in a manner which amounted to recording additional evidence. Like Mr Maira, Mr Mtaki also complained that the learned judge erred in acting on the evidence of PW3, PW5 and PW6 which E evidence, it was argued, needed corroboration before being relied upon to the detriment of the appellant. Mr Mtaki further argued that the judge readily accommodated prosecution irregularities but that he did not do so in respect of his client, second appellant.

F Mr Matata appearing for the third appellant complained that the learned judge should not have relied on the payment vouchers - exhibit P4 in convicting the third appellant because the said payment voucher was found in third appellant's cupboard at the time he had already been interdicted. It was submitted that the document (P4), could have been `planted' in his office cupboard during his G absence. The learned defence counsel also argued that the learned judge should not have believed the evidence of PW2 and PW12 which was to the effect that exhibit P4 was found in third appellant's cupboard.

H In conclusion Mr Matata submitted that the third appellant's office was merely a clearing house and that as such he could not have committed the offences charged.

In rebuttal Mr Kaduri, learned Senior State Attorney, submitted that the High Court was right in not treating PW1, PW2, PW3, PW5 and PW6 as accomplices whose evidence needed corroboration because they were all employees of the Co-operative Society I working in different capacities from the appellants - and those witnesses mainly A touched on the daily routine regarding financial transactions in the Co-operative Society.

As for the High Court's decision to rehear the case Mr Kaduri argued that as a first appellate court the High Court was not bound by the facts found by the court of first instance. In support of his argument we were referred to the decision in Williamson Diamonds Ltd and Another v Brown (1). B

It was also submitted that the High Court had power to evaluate evidence tendered in the District Court and draw its own inferences. In support of this submission the decision in Trevor Price and Another v Raymond Kelsall (2) was quoted. C

We have minutely examined the evidence tendered in the court of first instance and the High Court's evaluation of that evidence and we are fully satisfied in our own minds that the learned judge was perfectly right in coming to the conclusion that the Trial Senior Resident Magistrate was from the word go bent to acquit the D appellants. In order to do so he deliberately disbelieved crucial prosecution witnesses - PW3, PW4, PW5 and PW6 on the ground that they were accomplices and that their evidence lacked corroboration. E

The Trial Magistrate even rejected the audit report tendered by the prosecution on the ground that the auditor (PW2), was not a competent auditor. That the Trial Magistrate found PW2 to be incompetent to audit business accounts despite the evidence that he was a holder of Advanced Diploma in Accountancy is, to say the least, beyond our comprehension. F

The learned judge was also right in restoring the evidence of one, Alphonce Dutta, (PW14), whose evidence the court of first instance struck out as inadmissible. This witness used to prepare weekly returns and was called to supplement the G prosecution case taking into account that original copies of returns from accused's societies could not be traced. Apparently the trial magistrate had earlier refused to admit copies of the original returns in total disregard of the provisions of s 67(1)(c) of the Law of Evidence Act 1967 which allows admission of such evidence. This again clearly demonstrates his bias against the prosecution case. H

`Where a Trial Magistrate wrongly rejects certain evidence (as it was in this case) it is the duty of the appellate court in the circumstances of the case, to arrive at its conclusions upon a consideration of the whole of the evidence properly admissible and available on record' - R v Hamis bin Said and Another (3). I

1994 TLR p214

A In this case the learned judge arrived at his conclusion after finding that the trial court wrongly rejected evidence which supported the prosecution case. We see no good reason to differ with the learned judge's finding that on the evidence the appellants were guilty of the nine counts of conspiracy, fraudulent false accounting and stealing by public servant as charged. B

In conclusion we would like to mention, if only in passing, that had this appeal been placed before us for admission or otherwise we would not have had the slightest hesitation in dismissing it summarily under s 4 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 as amended by Act 16 of 1984. C

In the event this appeal fails and it is accordingly dismissed in its entirety.

1994 TLR p214
E
[zRPz]JOSE X FERREIRA v MBARAKA SALUM 1994 TLR 214 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 22 OF 1994
F 10 November, 1994
(Appeal from the Judgment and order of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Kyando, J)
Flynote
G Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Appeals to the Court of Appeal - Appeal made without leave of the High Court where leave is required - Appeal incompetent.
-Headnote
At the hearing of this appeal counsel for the applicant raised a preliminary objection asserting that the appeal was incompetent because no leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal had been granted while counsel for the respondent contended H that the matter was appealable as of right.
Held:
This is a matter which is appealable only with leave of the High Court; as no leave to appeal had been obtained or sought the appeal was incompetent.
Case Information
Objection upheld.
No cases referred to. I
1994 TLR p215
Lamwai, for the applicant. A
Mbuya, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Kisanga, JA, delivered the following ruling of the Court:
At the hearing of this appeal Dr Lamwai, learned counsel for the applicant, raised a preliminary objection to the appeal, he having given due notice of that objection in terms of Rule 100 of the Court of Appeal Rules. The objection is based on a B number of grounds.
Firstly, the appeal is incompetent because no leave to appeal to this Court was granted or sought. Elaborating on that ground Dr Lamwai submitted that the C decision of the High Court being appealed against ie the Order dated 25 June 1993 is not appealable as of right. That order is appealable only with leave in terms of s 5(1)(c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, but no such leave has been granted or sought.
In reply thereto Mr Mbuya, learned counsel for the respondent, contended that the D said order fell within the ambit of s 5(1)(b)(viii) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act and therefore it was appealable as of right. The relevant provisions of s 5 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act say that:

`5(1) In civil proceedings, except where any other written law for the time being in force E provides otherwise, an appeal shall lie to the Court of Appeal -

(b) against the following orders of the High Court made under its original jurisdiction, that is to say - F

(viii), an order under any of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966 imposing a fine or directing the arrest or detention, in the civil prison, of any person except where the arrest or detention is in execution of a decree;'

The record shows that on 23 June 1993 counsel for the applicant applied under G Order 36 rules 1(b)(3)(1) and 5 of the Civil Procedure Code for the following orders:

`(1) That the respondent should show cause why he should not furnish security in the sum of Shs 10m/= for the due performance of the decree that may be passed against him. H

(2) If he fails to show cause he should be required to deposit Shs 10m/= into court.

(3) Upon his failure to deposit, he be committed to civil prison.'

After hearing arguments for both sides the learned judge on 25 June 1993 made the following order: I

1994 TLR p216

KISANGA JA

A `ORDER

After examining the papers in relation to this case, especially the affidavits in the application, and after hearing counsel for both sides, I am satisfied that this is a fit case for ordering security for appearance under Order 32 r 1(b) and s 5 of the Civil Procedure Code. This is the case especially because the respondent/2nd defendant was in the process, when he was B arrested under a warrant of arrest issued by this court, of leaving the country for India. Also, he (the respondent) is a non-citizen. It cannot be said at all under those circumstances, that the applicant's apprehensions that he (respondent) may be leaving permanently are altogether unfounded. Accordingly, I grant the application and make the following orders: C

I The respondent is to furnish security for his appearance by executing a bond of Shs 5,000,000/= with two sureties with each in the likesome. The sureties should be holders of Tanzania passports and should be having immovable property in this country and they are to deposit the title deeds of properties in court. D

II If he fails to execute the bond he should deposit Shs 7,000,000/= in court as a security.

III Failing the above ie (I) & (II), he is not to leave the jurisdiction of this court and for this purpose the passport which the Registrar ordered to be surrendered to the Police is to remain in Police hands. E

IVApplicant awarded the costs of this application.'

We can find nothing either in the application dated 23 June 1993 or in the corresponding order of 25 June 1993 to show or suggest that the court imposed a fine on or directed the arrest or detention, in the civil prison, of the respondent. The F case, therefore did not come within the ambit of s 5(1)(b)(viii) as asserted by Mr Mbuya. As Dr Lamwai rightly submitted this was a matter which fell under s 5(1)(c) of that Act in which leave to appeal was required. As no leave has been obtained or sought the appeal is clearly incompetent and must be struck out. G

That then was sufficient to dispose of this matter, but Dr Lamwai further charged that the appeal was incompetent for lack of the extracted order in appeal and that it was also time barred. Upon our examination of the record, and having heard counsel arguments for both sides, we are satisfied that objection on those H grounds was also well taken.
In the event, Dr Lamwai's preliminary objection succeeds, and accordingly the appeal is struck out with costs. I
1994 TLR p217
A
[zRPz]DAVID KAMUGISHA MULIBO v BUKOP LTD - BUKOBA 1994 TLR 217 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 14 OF 1994 B
(From the ruling of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, Masanche, J) C
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Change of judge before concluding the trial - Whether proper - Order 17 Rule 10 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966.
Labour Law - Summary dismissal of employee - Meaning of `employee' in cases of summary dismissal - Sections 4 and 28(1) of the Security of Employment Act 1964 as D amended by Act No 45 of 1969.
Labour Law - Meaning of `employee' under the Security of Employment Act 1964 - Whether the opinion of the Labour Officer is binding on the court. E
-Headnote
The appellant sued the respondent for wrongful termination of employment. At the commencement of the trial the respondent had raised a preliminary objection to the effect that the trial court had no jurisdiction because the appellant had been summarily dismissed. The trial judge ordered the trial to be stayed so that the F opinion of the labour officer could be obtained regarding whether or not the appellant was employed in the management of the business of the employer, and therefore not an `employee' under the Security of Employment Act 1964. That opinion was obtained and given to the court. The matter was then called before another judge who proceeded to strike out the case `as incompetent in law'. G
On appeal:
Held:
(i) It was highly irregular and unprocedural for the matter, which was initially before a judge who had stayed his ruling pending the opinion of the labour officer, to be heard and determined by another judge; H

(ii) The opinion of the labour officer that the appellant was not a member of the respondent's management team was no more than a mere opinion which the court was not bound to follow;

(iii) As there was a triable issue before the court, ie whether or not the appellant was wrongly terminated by the respondent, the suit was in no way incompetent. I

1994 TLR p218

Case Information

A Case remitted to the High Court to proceed by the Judge before whom it was initially heard.

No case referred to.

B Nasimire, for the appellant.

Katabalwa, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: C

The appellant, David Kamugisha Mulibo, filed a suit in the High Court against his former employer, Bukop Ltd - Bukoba, claiming damages for wrongful termination of his appointment.

D When the case came up for hearing on 14 August 1990 Mr Katabalwa, learned defence Counsel for the respondent/defendant, raised a preliminary objection to the effect that the Court had no jurisdiction to hear the case as, it was argued, the appellant was summarily dismissed. He quoted the provisions of s 28(1) of the Security of Employment Act 1964 and case law in support of his submission. E

In rebuttal the appellant/plaintiff argued that the suit was for claim of damages and that he was not questioning his dismissal. In his ruling the High Court (Sekule, J) said inter alia: F

`... This is therefore a case of summary dismissal and the jurisdiction of this Court is ousted by Section 28(1) of the Security of Employment Act 1964. The matter however does not end here because for the jurisdiction of this Court to be ousted, the second requirement must be met. That is, the plaintiff must show to have been an employee within the meaning of Section 28(1) of the said Security of Employment Act, 1964. G

According to Section 2 of the Security of Employment (Amendment) Act 1969, employees who are employed in the management of their employer's business are exempted from the provisions of the Act and are not therefore employees within the meaning of Section 28 of the H Security of Employment Act, 1964. The issue therefore is, was the plaintiff in this case employed in the management of the business of his employee'.

Act No 45 of 1969 - The Security of Employment (Amendment) Act 1969 amends s 4 of the principal Act regarding the definition of I

1994 TLR p219

MNZAVAS JA

`employee' by adding para (e) which says that an employee also means `any A employee who, in the opinion of the labour officer is employed in the management of the business of his employer'.

In deciding on the question whether or not the appellant/plaintiff was employed in the management of the business of his employer of the High Court (Sekule, J) said inter alia: B

`... I am inclined to the view that this is a fit case for the labour officer to give his opinion in terms of section 4(e) as amended by the Security of Employment (Amendment) Act, 1969 as to whether or not in his opinion the plaintiff was employed in the management of the business of C his employer. In this regard, I would adopt the approach of this Court in the case of Walter Jager v Cordura Ltd t/a Tanganyika Tourist Hotels and Oyster-Bay Hotels (1972) HCD 133: and stay the suit, and leave it open to either party to this suit to obtain the opinion of the labour officer under Section 4(e) of the Security of Employment Act as amended by the Security of D Employment (Amendment) Act No 45/1969 i.e. whether or not the plaintiff was employed in the management business of his employer. It was so ordered'.

This was on 7 March 1991. On 15 January 1993 the District Magistrate minute to Sekule, J was to this effect: E

`This suit was stayed, pending opinion of the Labour Officer. The same has now been obtained and the case is referred back to your Lordship for your action/advice'. F

Sekule, J in reply to the minute said:

`Let the parties be informed of the Labour Officer's opinion, And the case should be fixed for hearing or mention so that the effect of the opinion could be formally dealt with in the presence of the parties'. G

On 24 February 1993 the case came before Masanche, J. On that day the appellant/plaintiff was present but the defendant was not. The record does not show whether or not he had been served with notice of hearing. The appellant/plaintiff is recorded to have told the Court: `I am suing Bukop for dismissing me without following procedure'. H

The Court (Masanche, J) retorted -

`But the record shows that it has been resolved that you were not a member of management team. Again, in terms of s 28(1) of the I

A Security of Employment Act, 1964 Cap 574 this Court would have no jurisdiction to entertain the case'.

The appellant/plaintiff replied:

B `My Lord I think you can take my case. I think there is an authority of the Court of Appeal that says that such cases can be entertained. It is the case of Kaijago'.

The Court fixed the 1 September 1993 as the day the ruling would be delivered. It was indeed delivered on that day and the High Court (Masanche, J) found that the C Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the case and `struck it out as incompetent in law'. Aggrieved by the ruling the appellant has come to this Court.

Before us Mr Nasimire and Mr Katabalwa, learned Counsel appeared for the appellant and the respondent respectively.

D Mr Nasimire, Learned Counsel, argued, after direction from the bench, that the High Court should have called the labour officer as a court witness to elaborate on his report that the appellant was not employed in the management of his employer's business before acting on the report to the detriment of his client, the appellant. It was also Mr Nasimire's submission that as Sekule, J had stayed the E proceedings pending an opinion from the labour officer the matter should have been dealt with by the same judge after the opinion of the labour officer was received. The fact that the case was placed before Masanche, J was said to be F irregular and we were ordered that the case be continued to completion before Sekule, J.

In rebuttal Mr Katabalwa, learned Counsel for the respondent, was apparently of the same view - adding that the whole matter was in confusion as Sekule, J did not finish his ruling. With respect to the learned Counsel we agree that it was highly irregular and unprocedural for the matter (which was initially before Sekule, G J who had stayed his ruling pending an opinion from the labour officer) to be heard and determined by another judge.

The record is totally silent as to why Sekule, J did not conclude the trial after the opinion of the labour officer was received. H

Order 17 Rule 10 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966 says:

> `Where a Judge or magistrate is prevented by death, transfer or another cause from concluding the trial of suit, his successor may deal with any evidence or memorandum taken down or made by the foregoing rules as if such evidence or memorandum had been taken down or made by him or under his direction under the said rules and I > may proceed with the suit from the stage of which his predecessor left it'. A

As none of the impediments mentioned above were present to prevent Mr Justice Sekule from concluding the trial of the suit, the trial of the suit by Mr Justice Masanche went counter to the clear provisions of Order 17 Rule 10 of the Civil B Procedure Code - above mentioned. It is also not irrelevant to mention, if only in passing, the remark by Masanche, J to the plaintiff - `But the record shows that it has been resolved that you were not a member of the management team' - (emphasis supplied). If the learned judge meant that the opinion of the labour C officer had resolved the issue that the plaintiff was not a member of the management team (and we think that is what he meant), it is our view that the labour officer's opinion was mere opinion. It was not evidence, and the Court was not bound to follow it. D

Another observation is that in his concluding remarks Masanche, J said - `I order that his case be struck out as incompetent in law'. With respect, the suit was in no way incompetent. There was a triable issue i.e. whether or not the appellant/plaintiff was wrongfully terminated by the respondent/defendant from his employment, and the Court proceeded and tried the suit. E

In view of the glaring irregularity mentioned above we have no alternative but to quash the decision by Masanche, J; and the order thereto is hereby set aside.

The case is remitted to the High Court and hearing should continue before Sekule, J from where it was stayed and the opinion of the labour officer be put to the parties. F

A

[zRPz]MOSES MUNGASIANI LAIZER ALIAS CHICHI v REPUBLIC 1994 TLR 222 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

B CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 99 OF 1994
28 November, 1994
C (From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Mushi, J)
Flynote
Criminal law - Murder - Self-defence - Whether plea of self-defence is available to a person who started the fight.
D Criminal Law - Homicide - Death occurring as a result of a fight - Whether it is murder or manslaughter.
-Headnote
This was an appeal against conviction for murder. The appellant argued that he shoould havve been convicted of the lesser offence of manslaughter instead of murder as the death of the deceased was the result of a fight.
E Held:
(i) The defence of self-defence is available also to a person who has started a fight depending on the circumstances of the case;
(ii) Where death occurs as a result of a fight an accused person should be found guilty of the lesser offence of manslaughter and not murder.
Case Information
F Appeal allowed.
Cases referred to:
(1) R v John Wimaana [1968] HCD 49.
(2) R v Ramzan Ahmed Jamal [1955] 22 EACA 504.
G Mwale, for appellant.
Mwaimu, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mnzavas, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:
H The appellant, Moses Mungasiani Laizer alias Chichi, was charged with and convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code and sentenced to death. Dissatisfied with the decision of the High Court he has come to this Court.
Mr Mwale, learned advocate, appeared for the appellant while Mr Mwaimu, learned State Attorney, advocated for the Republic.
Mr Mwale essentially argued that on the evidence before the High I

Court the learned Trial Judge should have convicted the appellant not of murder A but of a lesser offence of manslaughter contrary to s 195 of the Penal Code as, it was submitted, there was a fight between the deceased and the appellant before the latter fatally attacked the former. The learned State Attorney on the other hand supported the conviction for murder arguing that the appellant had ambushed the deceased, PW1 and PW2 in an attempt to commit the offence of robbery. B

In this case the conviction of the appellant for murder of the deceased stands or falls on the evidence of PW1 and PW2. C

According to the evidence of PW1 on 28 September 1991 at about 9 pm, he was in the company of the deceased and one Florida Ndosi (PW2) at Kivulini Bar quenching their thirst. They remained there for a while and left to Tanta Bar. As they were on their way to Tanta Bar the deceased and himself were assaulted by two people whom they identified as Chichi, the appellant, and one Simon Alfayo. D When they asked their assailants why they were attacking them the assailants attacked them all the more and the appellant took a knife from inside the pocket of his jacket. At this juncture the witness told the trial Court that he ran away to enlist assistance from his watchman (PW3) - And added `I left the accused fighting with the deceased while holding a knife'. E

PW2's testimony was to the effect that after Kivulini Bar they left to PW1's place of work and that as they were going two young men came from the side of the path and slapped the deceased on the shoulder. The deceased asked the young men why they assaulted him and a reply came from one of them - `Tunataka kukunyang'anya pesa'. F

The appellant said in his defence given on oath that he was also at Kivulini Bar on the material evening drinking. From Kivulini Bar he went to `Baa ya John Lema' where he drank beer. From there he proceeded to a hotel of Mama Elizer. G Thereafter he went home accompanied by one Simon Alfayo. On the way they met three people, two gentlemen and a lady walking at close-range; the lady being in the middle. He recognized one of the men as Elibarjki (PW1). According to his H defence he greeted them in a perfectly proper manner - `Jamani habari ya saa hizi' but they did not reply. He all the same touched the lady's shoulder and said to her - `Naona leo uko na akina Niko'. PW1 is said to have replied - `Kwani unafahamu huyu mwanamke', jumped on the appellant and held him by his shirt and at the same time the deceased hit him with his fist and fell him on the ground and held him by his I

A neck. According to his defence it was when he was being held on the ground that he pulled his knife and stabbed the deceased in self-defence.

In finding the appellant guilty of the offence of murder the learned Judge said inter alia:

B `In other words the accused cannot be heard to say that he was overpowered and therefore justified to stab the deceased so as to reduce the act of killing to that of manslaughter as found by the assessors in their opinions. It will be an extremely bad precedent to allow someone to deliberately and with unknown motive attack another person and in the course of the ensuing struggle the attacker should be heard to say that he has been overpowered and C thus entitled to kill the other person'.

D In this case both the evidence of the prosecution and the defence case is ad idem that the appellant, PW1 and the deceased were drinking at Kivulini Bar. It is also clearly brought out from the prosecution case and the defence that the deceased and the appellant fought on the material night. As for the learned State Attorney's submission that the appellant ambushed the deceased and his E companions and that he committed the offence of murder as he was attempting to commit the offence of robbery we are far from being persuaded by this argument. If the appellant had in fact decided to commit robbery he could not have been so naÝve as to say to his victim - `Tunataka kukunyang'anya pesa' bearing in mind F that the appellant, the deceased and PW1 were fellow villagers. That he would have decided to expose himself in such manner is, to say the least, beyond our comprehension. If he in fact said so it was, in our view, more of a drunken froth than an intent of malice.

Coming back to the question of the appellant and the deceased having fought it was, on our view, a misdirection on the part of the learned Trial Judge when he said: G

`Even if I was to find that the deceased's death was caused under the circumstances described by the accused, I would still hold that the death of the deceased was murder. This is because the accused having been the one who started the fight he cannot turn round and say H that he was acting in self-defence'.

This was a misdirection because if the appellant's version was accepted the defence of self-defence would have been available to him.

It has been said times without number, and we would like to reiterate, that where death is caused as a result of a fight an accused I person should be found guilty of the lesser offence of manslaughter and not A murder. See the decision in R v John Wimaana (1). Maybe it is not irrelevant to mention if only in passing the defence case that the lady (PW2) in some ways sparked the fight between the deceased and the appellant. This defence was apparently not adverted to by the learned Judge in his judgment. After out close B review of the evidence tendered before the High Court we are satisfied that the question of the appellant's guilt regarding the charge of murder `is so complicated and uncertain that the Court of first instance ought to have felt some doubt about it' - R v Ramzan Ahmed Jamal (2). On the evidence we are not surprised that the assessors were unanimous that the appellant was only guilty of the lesser offence of manslaughter contrary to s 195 of the Penal Code. C

In the event the conviction for murder is hereby quashed and the sentence of death is set aside. In substitution therefore the appellant is convicted of the lesser offence of manslaughter contrary to s 195 of the Penal Code. D

As for the sentence to be imposed the appellant used a knife in killing the deceased. The use of a knife in a fight is always a telling factor against an accused person. The appellant is sentenced to ten years imprisonment. E

G

[zRPz]MOHAMED HASSANI v MAYASA MZEE AND MWANAHAWA MZEE 1994 TLR 225 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 20 OF 1994
23 December, 1994 H
(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Tanga, Msumi, J)
Flynote
Probate and Administration - Administration of Estate - Powers of the Primary Court to appoint and replace an administrator - Rules I
1994 TLR p226
A 2(a) and (b) of the First Schedule of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984.
Probate and Administration - Challenging validity of appointment of an administrator - Onus of proof.
Probate and Administration - Disposition of property - Whether consent from all heirs is necessary before sale of property. B
-Headnote
This was an appeal against the decision of the High Court that the appointment of one Mfundo Omari as an administrator of the estate of the late Mzee Risasi was void because it was done under Rule 2(b) and not under Rule 2(a) of the Fifth Schedule to the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984, and thus he had no power to C dispose the property of the deceased's estate and, therefore, his sale of the house to the appellant was null and void. It was argued by the appellant that the appointment was valid under Rule 2(b) because it was a replacement and not a first appointment.
D Held:

(i) Primary courts are empowered under Rule 2(a) of the Fifth Schedule to the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984, to make first appointment of administrators of estate and Rule 2(b) of the same schedule for appointment of a replacement. Therefore the Judge was wrong to restrict the powers of Primary Courts to appoint administrators to Rule 2(a). E

(ii) It is up to the person challenging the validity of appointment of an administrator by the court to show that the person so appointed does not have the required qualifications to administer the estate.

(iii) The administrator is not legally required to obtain consent of all the heirs before disposing of property or sale of a house. F
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
Case referred to:

(1) Aziz Daudi Aziz v. Amin Ahmed Ally and Another, Civil Appeal No 30 of 1990 (unreported). G
Semgalawe, for the appellant.
Lamwai, for the respondents.
[zJDz]Judgment

Mfalila, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: H

In the Court of the Resident Magistrate at Tanga, the appellant, Mohamed Hassani, sued the two respondents with another person, Mfundo Omari, now deceased, claiming that the three should convey to him the house on plot No 2 Block 86 Central Ngamiani area in Tanga Municipality, the house which had been sold to him by I

Mfundo Omari in his capacity as administrator of the estate of the late Mzee A Risasi. The two respondents, the sisters Mayasa and Mwanahawa, are the daughters of the deceased Mzee Risasi, while the late Mfundo Omari was appointed administrator of the estate of the late Mzee Risasi by the Primary Court Tanga in Cause No 6 of 1984. The appellant won his claim in the Resident B Magistrate's Court which ordered the respondent's to convey the house to him and also to refund him all the rents they had been unlawfully collecting from the date of purchase of the house to the date of judgment. The respondent successfully appealed to the High Court at Tanga where Msumi J held that since Mfundo's C appointment as administrator of the estate was void under Rule 2(a) of the Fifth Schedule to the Magistrate's Courts Act, he had no power to dispose of the property of the deceased's estate and that therefore his sale of the house to the appellant was null and void. Accordingly, he restored the house to the two D respondents. The appellant felt greatly aggrieved by this decision, he lodged this appeal complaining in his three point memorandum of appeal first that the learned Judge erred in law when he held that the Primary Court had no power to appoint Mfundo Omari administrator of the estate of the late Mzee bin Risasi and that he was not properly appointed according to Rule 2(a) of the Fifth Schedule to the E Magistrate's Courts Act.

Secondly, the appellant complained that the learned Judge erred in fact when he held that the sale of the suit house was arbitrary and did not take into consideration the interests of the estate when there was ample evidence to prove that the suit house was at stake. F

Thirdly, that the learned Judge erred in law in holding that there was no consent of the beneficiaries to sell the suit house when in fact the authority to sell was vested in the administrator by the operation of the grant under which he was appointed. G

At the hearing of this appeal, Mr Semgalawe, learned advocate who appeared for the appellant, argued in support of the first ground of appeal that since Rule 2(a) applies to grants made in the first instance and not replacement, Mfundo Omari must have been appointed under Rule 2(b) and that therefore his appointment was valid. H

In opposing this ground, Dr Lamwai, learned counsel who appeared for the respondents, advanced three reasons for his view that Mfundo Omari was not properly appointed and that therefore this Court should uphold the appointment of the first respondent Mayasa Mzee as administrator of the estate. First, he said that the purported appointment of Mfundo Omari was made while Mayasa's I

A was still in force, it had not been revoked as claimed. He conceded that the Primary Court Magistrate (PW 5) gave evidence to this effect but he added that that witness did not produce the record of the Primary Court to confirm his evidence. Secondly, he said that Mfundo Omari did not qualify to be appointed administrator under Rule 2(b) because the Court did not state Mfundo's B qualifications under that sub-rule. Thirdly, he said that since the house was already in Mayasa's name, such transfer was already effective under Rule 4 as there had been no complaint against this transfer.

C On our part we do agree with Mr Semgalawe that the Primary Court can only use Rule 2(a) to make first appointments not replacements. We also agree with him that Mfundo Omari as a replacement could only be appointed administrator under sub-rule (b), and that therefore his appointment was made under that sub-rule. We are therefore satisfied that the learned Judge was wrong to restrict the powers of Primary Courts to appoint administrators to sub-rule (a). The next D question is whether this appointment was valid in light of the objections raised by Dr Lamwai. As indicated, Dr Lamwai's first objection was that Mfundo could not be appointed administrator to replace Mayasa whose appointment had not been E revoked for the reason which he gave. We are satisfied that this objection has no basis. First, where is the evidence of the Primary Court Magistrate who handled this Administration Cause, ie PW5. According to him, he revoked Mayasa's F appointment after receiving complaints from other beneficiaries of the estate and that therefore he appointed Mfundo Omari as a replacement. The record shows that the Primary Court record was produced as an exhibit. This objection must therefore fail. The second objection was that the Primary Court did not specifically state in what way Mfundo Omari was qualified to be appointed administrator under sub-rule (b). This sub-rule provides: G `either of its own motion or on the application by any person interested in the administration of the estate, where its consideration that it is desirable so to do for the protection of the estate and the proper administration therefore, appoint an officer of the court or one reputable and H impartial person able and willing to administer the estate to be administrator either together with or in lieu of the administrator appointed under Sub-paragraph (a)'.

It is clear in the circumstances of this case that Mfundo Omari was appointed under the second limb as a `reputable and impartial person able and willing to administer the estate'. We think that the fact of the appointment is evidence that the Court was satisfied that the person so appointed is I a `reputable and impartial person able and willing to administer the estate', it is A therefore up to the person challenging the validity of the appointment to show and establish that the person so appointed does not have these qualifications. It is not enough as Dr Lamwai sought to do in this case merely to say that the court did not B indicate in what way the court was satisfied that the appointee possessed those qualifications. This objection must therefore also fail. Lastly, Dr Lamwai's third objection has no merit because the sale of the house to the appellant was made after not before the revocation of Mayasa's appointment.

For these reasons we uphold the appellant's first ground of appeal. C

We intend to deal with grounds two and three together as those are related. We think and are satisfied that in the circumstances of this case, selling the house and distributing the proceeds among the various contending heirs, was the only sensible option open to the administrator. The record shows that there are two D hostile contending groups among the heirs of the late Mzee bin Risasi. The heirs are grouped according to their mothers. There is absolutely no way of reconciling the two groups. We are therefore satisfied that the decision to sell the suit house was not arbitrary, in fact it was in the best interests of the estate and all the heirs. With regard to the question whether consent of all the heirs should have been E sought before selling the house, firstly, it was impossible to obtain such consent from the two hostile groups. Secondly, the administrator was not legally required to obtain such consent. As this court stated in Aziz Daudi Aziz v Amin Ahmed Ally & Another (1): F

`We cannot find in the evidence before the High Court that there was anything wrong with the sale of the house. Once an administrator of the estate was appointed then the house of the deceased owner of the property is changed in all documents and that of the administrator is substituted and it is left to his discretion to administer the estate in the best way he can....'. G

Accordingly we uphold the complaints in both grounds two and three. H

Before we rest and make the necessary orders, we wish only to mention that in the course of the hearing of this appeal, two members of the court thought aloud and wondered whether the Primary Court had jurisdiction to administer this estate involving as it did registered land, in view of the provisions of s 18(1) of the Magis- I

A trate's Courts Act. But since this was not a substantive issue in this appeal, we do not intend to say any more about it.

Turning now to the appeal, we have already upheld all the grounds in the appeal, but having done so, we are still extremely uneasy about the fairness of the sale. There are two documents, both executed by the late administrator Mfundo Omari, B and each of them bearing a different purchase price. The first document dated 28 March 1985 shows that the house was sold to the appellant for Shs 147,680/= whereas the second document dated 5 October 1985 shows that the same house was sold to the appellant for Shs 200,000/=. Which then is which? We think it C would be fair both the estate and the heirs if this difficulty was resolved by ordering a new sale. For the foregoing reasons, we allow the appeal and set aside the judgment and orders of the High Court. But we set aside the two sales dated 28 March 1985 and 5 October 1985 and order a new sale of the house by public D auction in which the present appellant will be allowed to bid. If his bid succeeds then he can have the house and the purchase price so far paid will be credited to him. In the event he is unsuccessful, however, the purchase price is to be refunded to him. The appellant will have his costs both in this Court and in the Courts below. E

F

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Kisanga JJA, Mfalila JJA and Lubuva JJA G

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 23 OF 1993
11 November, 1994
(From the decision of the Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Bahati, J) H
Flynote
Labour Law - Jurisdiction - Summary dismissal - Ouster of the jurisdiction of the court - Section 28 of the Security of Employment Act, 1964. I
1994 TLR p231
Labour Law - Jurisdiction - Summary dismissal - Whether the court can split suit into A compartments so as to exclude claims based on summary dismissal.
Civil Practice and Procedure - Amendment of cause of action - Whether judge can amend pleading without application of the parties. B
-Headnote
This is an appeal against the decision of the High Court of Tanzania which, having accepted a preliminary objection that the court had no jurisdiction to hear the suit because it concerned summary dismissal, the court nevertheless proceeded to split the entire suit into separate compartments and held that as not all reliefs C claimed were based on summary dismissal, the court had jurisdiction to hear and determine those claims which were not based on summary dismissal.
Held:

(i) Section 28 of the Employment Act, 1964, ousts the jurisdiction of the court in cases of summary dismissal, proposed summary dismissals D and salary deductions as a disciplinary penalty; since the three situations have nothing to do with one another, they can be taken independently of each other;

(ii) The court cannot split a claim once it is partly found to be based on summary dismissal and the claims in this case were so interwoven on their foundation; E

(iii) The court cannot take upon itself, without application from the parties, to amend the basis of the cause of action merely to take the claim away from the ouster clause of s 28 of the Security of Employment Act.

Case Information
Appeal allowed. F
Cases referred to:

(1) Kitundu Sisal Estate v Shingo and Others [1970] EA 551.
(2) Mohamedi and Others v Manager, Kunduchi Sisal Estate [1971] HCD 430. G
(3) Allimasi v MS Kerewala Ltd, [1974] LRT 39.

Majithia, for the appellant.
Mbuya, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment

Mfalila, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: H

The respondent, Jose Xavier Ferreira, sued his erstwhile employers, Royal Dutch Airlines, otherwise popularly known as KLM by its acronym, claiming an assortment of reliefs including unpaid salary, transport and meal allowances and other reimbursements plus in- I

1994 TLR p232

MFALILA JA

A terest at 31 per cent per annum from the date these payments were due to the date of judgment and at a further 31 per cent interest on the damages from the date of filing the suit to the day of judgment. The basis of these claims is contained in paragraph 6 of the plaint which is in the following terms:

B `Furthermore, the defendant willfully and without any notice, cause or justification in contravention to the defendant's regulations as contained in the aforesaid conditions of employment - Local Staff Tanzania, unilaterally stopped the plaintiff from attending to his duties with affect from 20th November 1986 and until to-date has not lawfully terminated plaintiff's employment'. C

In his written statement of defence and at the beginning of the trial in the High Court, the defendant, the present appellant, raised preliminary points challenging the jurisdiction of the Court dn that the plain disclosed no cause of action. In D support of the preliminary point, Mr Majithia argued on the High Court that as this was a case of summary dismissal, the jurisdiction of the Courts was ousted by s 28 of the Security of Employment Act. The High Court (Bahati, J) agreed with Mr Majithia that this was a summary dismissal case and that therefore the jurisdiction E of the court was ousted by s 28 of the Security of Employment Act. After making this finding, the trial judge then proceeded to recategorize the entire suit into separate compartments and held that as not all the reliefs claimed are based on summary dismissal, the court has jurisdiction to hear and determine those claims which are not based on summary dismissal. He said: F

`But not all the claims in this case are based on summary dismissal. In paragraph 5 of the plaint there are claims for remuneration from March 1984 to-date, reimbursement of money G paid by plaintiff to purchase tickets, failure by defendant since 1985 to honour fully the plaintiff's free and reduced fare air travel facilities. These claims are not based on summary dismissal because they are from 1984 whereas summary dismissal was in November 1986. These claims have, therefore nothing to do with summary dismissal and as such they cannot be excluded by Section 28 from the jurisdiction of this Court'. H

The judge therefore held that the jurisdiction of the Court was not ousted by s 28 and he ordered the case to be heard and determined on merits. Against this ruling, the appellant Airline lodged this appeal complaining that the learned judge having found that there was summary dismissal, erred in not rejecting the plaint and I dismissing the suit and that therefore the learned judge erred in ruling that the A Honourable Court had jurisdiction to entertain claims based on summary dismissal.

1994 TLR p233

MFALILA JA

At the hearing of the appeal, Mr Majithia, learned counsel who advocated for the appellant, submitted that having determined that this was a case of summary B dismissal, the judge should not have decided to proceed with the case on merits on the basis that some of the claims which he enumerated were not claims which he said were not summary dismissal flowed directly from such summary dismissal.

In reply, Mr Mbuya, learned counsel who appeared for the respondent, argued that C the definition of summary dismissal enunciated in Kitundu Sisal Estate v Shingo and Others (1) is erroneous because it defined summary dismissal without taking into account the definition given in the Act itself namely that under the Act, termination becomes summary dismissal if there is intention to take disciplinary D action, and that since in the present case the only intention was to terminate the respondent's services with the appellant, such termination could not be summary dismissal ousting the jurisdiction of the courts under s 28 of the Security of Employment Act. Mr Mbuya concedes that the High Court was bound by the E definition in the Kitundu case but he said that this court is not. He supported the judge's action of severing the claims into those falling under the prohibition of s 28 and those which do not. He argued that claims available prior to the termination are not interwoven with the summary dismissal hence they can be severed. F

We start with Mr Mbuya's second argument that this was not a summary dismissal case because no disciplinary action was envisaged. Mr Mbuya based this argument no doubt on the wording of s 28 of the Security of Employment Act which provides as follows: G

> `28 - (1) No suit or other civil proceeding (other than proceedings to enforce a decision of the Minster or the Board on a reference under this part) shall be entertained in any Civil Court with regard to summary dismissal or proposed summary dismissal or a deduction by way of disciplinary penalty from wages of an employee'. H

If Mr Mbuya sat back and reflected, he would no doubt find as we do that this section bars three types of situations from being actionable in Civil Courts. First, all summary dismissals, second all proposed summary dismissal and thirdly all deductions as disciplinary penalties from wages of employees. It is quite obvious that I

A the first two situations have nothing to do with the third situation in which an employer deducts a sum from the wages of his employee as a disciplinary measure. Since the three situations have nothing to do with one another, they can be taken independently of each other. Hence, the Court of Appeal in the Kitundu case could not have defined summary dismissal with reference to the disciplinary action envisaged under a different situation. B

We return to the High Court finding that since not all the respondent's claims can be regarded as flowing from the summary dismissal, then these other claims which do not are actionable in a Civil Court. According to the learned judge, these include all those claims which arose before the summary dismissal in November 1986. C

In our view the first objection against this line of reasoning is that it conflicts with two earlier decisions of the case Court, decisions with which we are in agreement. The effect of these two decisions is that you cannot split the claim once it is found to be based on summary dismissal. The first of these cases is Mohamedi & D Others v Manager Kunduchi Sisal Estate (2).

In that case fifty six persons who were employed by the Kunduchi Sisal Estate, sued their employer claiming Shs 81,741/= as compensation because of E termination of their services without notice. This sum comprised of severance, leave and travel allowances as well as month's wages in lieu of notices. The Court held that the basis of the claim was summary dismissal and that by s 28 of the Security of Employment Act Cap 574 the jurisdiction of the Court was ousted. In his own words Onyiuke, J held: F

`When an employee is dismissed summarily without justification he has a cause of action against the employer, that is to say he can bring an action of summary dismissal against the employer. Usually it takes the form of action for damages. These damages may be general or G special depending on whether the employee is claiming a specified amount such as severance allowance or annual leave pay (special) or is asking the Court to assess his loss such as the claim for reasonable notice (general). These claims have to be founded on the cause of action . . . . Assuming without deciding the point that Section 32(b) provided an alternative remedy, the fact still remains that the cause of action is basically one for summary dismissal'. H

Similarly in the present case, the claims which the learned judge attempted to sever from the rest, are all founded or based on the wrong described in paragraph 6 of the plaint namely that the defendant (present appellant) `willfully and without any notice, cause of justi- I fication . . . unilaterally stopped the plaintiff (present respondent) from attending to A his duties with effect from 20th November 1986....'.

The second case is Allimasi v M S Kerewala Ltd (3). That case commenced in the District Court as a result of a report submitted by the Labour Office Mtwara to the District Court under s 132 of the Employment Ordinance. The appellant was a B driver by calling. The respondent was a limited liability company carrying on quarrying operations among other activities in Mtwara/Mikindani. The appellant's case was that he was employed by the respondent in 1959 as a driver on a monthly wage of Shs 250/= and that he had worked continuously for the C respondent up to 20 October 1971 when his employment was terminated without notice, and without payment in lieu of notice. He claimed Shs 250/= being one month's wage in lieu of notice and Shs 1,625/= being severance allowance for fifteen years continuous service. D

The trial magistrate treated the appellant's claim as one of summary dismissal holding that since the plaintiff was neither given a notice nor paid in lieu of notice, then his termination in law is that if summary dismissal and that therefore he had no jurisdiction under s 28 of the Security of Employment Act. Against this decision E the appellant appealed to the High Court where one of the points raised in his favour was whether the appellant's claims could be treated separately so that his claim for severance should have been entertained in the Court below, and that if this was possible the learned judge should not have dismissed that part of the appellant's claims for want of jurisdiction. Sections 3, 4 and 11 of the Severance F Allowance Act Cap 487 were cited in support of this submission. Section 3 provides:

`3 - Subject to this Act where an employee has been in the continuous employment of an employer for a period of three months or more and, on or after the twenty fifth day of June 1962: G

(a)(1) The employment is terminated by the employer ... the employer shall pay to the employee a severance allowance'.

Section 4(1) of the Act provides: H

`An employer shall not be liable to pay any severance allowance to or in respect of any employee who:

(a) Immediately before the cessation of his employment was

(1) -

(2) A casual employee

(b) Was summarily dismissed for lawful cause. I

1994 TLR p236

MFALILA JA

A And s 11 provides as follows:

`The amount of any severance allowance which an employer is required to pay to or in respect of an employee, may be recovered by the employee or in the event of his death by any of his dependants by suit as a debt to such employee or to such dependants'.

B Onyiuke, J held as follows:

`I do not think that Section 11 of the Severance Allowance Act can be sued to bypass the mandatory provisions of Section 28 of the Security of Employment Act. The basis of the C appellant's claim whether in respect of the one month's wage or in lieu of notice or of severance allowance was that his employment was wrongfully terminated, that is to say summary dismissal for lawful cause and that he was therefore entitled to his claims. But for Section 28 of the Security of Employment Act the Court would have to inquire into the issue of D wrongful dismissal. The effect of Section 28 however is to oust the jurisdiction of the Court to do just that. I hold that the appellant's claims are so interwoven that they fall within the ambit of prohibitory provisions of Section 28 of the Security of Employment Act and that the learned Magistrate was justified in dismissing his claim for lack of jurisdiction'. E

We are also able to say in this case that all the respondent's claims are so interwoven on their foundation that they fall within the ambit of the prohibitory provisions of s 28 of the Security of Employment Act. We are satisfied that had the F decisions in these two cases been brought to the attention of the learned judge, he would most certainly have followed their powerful reasoning and conclusions.

The second objection to the learned judge's reasoning is procedural. The learned judge's approach amounted to amending the plaint at that stage of the G proceedings and indeed that is what Mr Mbuya was asking us to do. The learned judge could not take it upon himself to amend the basis of the cause of action without application from the parties merely to take the claim away from the prohibitory provisions of s 28. It is even more remote in this Court. H

Since as the learned judge found the respondent's claims were based on summary dismissal, the jurisdiction of the courts was ousted by s 28 of the Security of Employment Act, the learned judge should have allowed the preliminary objection and dismissed the claim.
Having so decided on the question of jurisdiction, we feel it is I unnecessary to consider the second limb of the appellant's preliminary objection A namely whether the respondent's plaint disclosed a cause of action.
1994 TLR p237
For these reasons we allow the appeal and order that the respondent's claim be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. The appellant will have their costs both in this Court and in the Court below. B
1994 TLR p237
D
[zRPz]LAUSA ALFAN SALUM AND 106 OTHERS v MINISTER FOR LANDS, HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT AND NATIONAL HOUSING CORPORATION 1994 TLR 237 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA E

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 15 OF 1994
9 November, 1994
(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, Chipeta, J) F
Flynote
Rent Restriction - Powers of the Minister to grant exemption - Section 2(1)(b) of the Rent Restriction Act, 1984.
Administrative Law - Ultra vires Doctrine - Whether Government Notice 41 of 1992 granting G exemption to the National Housing Corporation was ultra vires - Exempts - Specified parastatal instead of a class of premises as provided by s 2(1)(c) of the Rent Restriction Act, 1984.
Constitutional Law - Whether GN 41 of 1992 was discriminatory contrary to article 13(2) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania.
Constitutional Law - Whether GN 41 of 1992 was arbitrary - contrary natural justice and H equality before the law.
Constitutional Law - Drafted in so wide terms as to net even untargeted groups - Whether saved by article 30(2) of the Constitution. I
1994 TLR p238
-Headnote
A The appeal was against the decision of the High Court to uphold as valid the Government Notice No 41 of 1992 issued byt the Minister for Lnads, Housing and Urban Development under s 2(1)(b) of the Rent Restriction Act, 1984 exempting the National Housing Corporation from all or any of the provisions of the Act. The High Court held that Government Notice No 41 of 1992 was both ultra vires and constitutional.

B Held:

(i) The Government Notice No 41 of 1992 does not and did not intend to grant arbitrary powers to the National Housing Corporation to increase rent;

(ii) The National Housing Corporation cannot arbitrarily raise rent „beyond economic rates, if it does, tenants can seek redress in the ordinary courts; C

(iii) The Government Notice No 41 of 1992 does not violate the concept of equality before the law enshrined in article 13 of the Constitution.

(iv) The Rent Restriction Act 1984 under s 2(1)(b) empowers the Minister responsible for housing to exempt any premises or class of premises from the provisions of the Act and the premises exempted by Government Notice No 41 of 1992 are covered under the description any; D

(v) The order in Government Notice 41 of 1992 is constitutional and ultra vires as the Minister did only what he is allowed and empowered to do by the Rent Restriction Act, 1984, namely to exempt the premises owned by the specified parastatals from the provisions of the act; E

(vi) The exemption order by the Minister was perfectly valid and lawfully made under the validly delegated authority and therefore the new rents imposed by their landlord are valid.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

F Cases referred to:

(1) Shah v Attorney General [1970] EA 523.

(2) Juthalal Velji Ltd v THB Estates Co Ltd, Civil appeal No 11 of 1985 (unreported).

(3) Minister of National Revenue v Wrights Canadian Ropes Ltd, [1947] AC 109. G

Matata, for the appellants.

Magoma, Senior State Attorney for the respondents.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mfalila, JA, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: H

In the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, the appellants Lausa Salum and Others whose number varies from 106, 116 to 206 filed an application praying for orders of certiorari against the two respondents namely the Minister for Lands, Housing and Urban Development and the National Housing Corporation that: I

(a) the entire order of the Minister GN 41 of 1992 be quashed. A

(b) the action of the National Housing Corporation increasing the rent of its premises occupied by the applicants be quashed.

The background to these proceedings may be easily stated. The second B respondent, the National Housing Corporation, was established by an Act of Parliament, the National Housing Corporation Act No 2 of 1990. Section 11 of the Act provided that the rents chargeable for the premises belonging to the Corporation shall be set by the Corporation subject to the provisions of the Rent C Restriction Act 1984. The Rent Restriction Act also created the Housing Tribunals and their appellate body, the Housing Appeals Tribunal. Section 2(1)(b) of the Rent Restriction Act empowers the Minister responsible for Lands, Housing and Urban Development, by order published in the Gazette with the approval of the National Assembly signified by a resolution, to exempt any premises or class of premises D from all or any of the provisions of the Rent Restriction Act. Using these powers, the Minister responsible for Lands, Housing and Urban Development promulgated Notice No 41 of 1992 exempting all premises in respect of which a specified E parastatal body is the lawful landlord from all the provisions of the Rent Restriction Act relating to the restriction on the amount of rent that may be charged or collected by the specified parastatal body as the landlord from any tenant occupying any part of these premises. The second respondent was among the specified parastatals. Following the publication of GN 41 of 1992, the second F respondent increased rents for all its premises including those occupied by the appellants. The appellants objected very strongly to those rent increases which they called unilateral. When their protests were rejected by the second respondent, they filed an application in the High Court challenging the validity of G both the GN 41 of 1992 and the increases of rent based on it. The appellants challenged the validity of GN 41 of 1992 on two grounds.

The first ground was that GN 41 of 1992 is ultra vires the parent Act because it exempts specified parastatals instead of a class of premises as provided by s 2(1)(c) of the parent or enabling Act. H

The second ground was that GN 41 of 1992 is unconstitutional for the following reasons. Firstly that it is discriminatory. That it discriminates against the appellants by depriving them of the protection afforded by the Rent Restriction Act against arbitrary eviction, distress for rent and the right to statutory tenancy which is otherwise available to I

A tenants generally and that this discrimination is contrary to article 13(2) of the Constitution of the United Republic. Secondly that it bars the appellants from litigating their rights as tenants in the Housing Tribunal and that this is contrary to article 13(3) of the Constitution. Thirdly, that it provides no safeguards against abuse of power by the second respondent. B

The appellants challenged the validity of the rent increases by the second respondent on the basis that since the order under which they were made is invalid, such increases were in contravention of s 11 of the National Housing Corporation Act 1990.

C The High Court dismissed the application, the learned judge holding that GN 41 of 1992 was both intra vires and constitutional. He held that since contrary to the appellant's assertions, GN 41 of 1992 exempts a class of premises ie those owned by the specified parastatal bodies, the order is in accord not inconsistent with the parent Act and that therefore it is within its ambit. Regarding the D constitutionality of GN 41 of 1992, the learned judge held firstly that it comes within the saving provisions of article 30(2) of the Constitution because it is not drafted in such wide terms as to net untargeted groups. Secondly that it is not discriminatory in that it affects all the tenants of the specified parastatals. Thirdly that it does not E shut out the tenants of the specified parastatals from legal recourse in that ordinary courts are available to the tenants to enforce their contractual rights against their landlords. Fourthly that although the Government

Notice should have contained a provision limiting the power of the parastatals to increase rent to F economic rent, he held that the absence of such a clause was not fatal as the courts can still intervene where unconscionable increases in rent are made. Accordingly he dismissed the application with costs.

Against this decision the appellants filed this appeal. Mr Matata, learned counsel G on behalf of the appellants, filed five grounds of appeal. In the first ground he complained that the learned judge having found that the first respondent's order (GN 41 of 1992) has no legal safeguards against the abuse of power, he ought to have found that the order is bad in law and unconstitutional because it violates article 13 of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania. At the hearing of H this appeal, Mr Matata expanded on this complaint submitting that GN 41 of 1992 is unconstitutional because first it allows the second respondent to act arbitrarily and secondly it violates the concept of equality before the law enshrined in article 13 of the Constitution. He added that the Rent Restriction Act avails all the tenants to two basic rights. The protection against I increase of rent except on the formula given by the Act and statutory tenancy at A the end of the existing term. GN 41 of 1992 removes both these rights, and that since the first respondent's order ousts the jurisdiction of the Housing Tribunal, it leaves the second respondent free to treat its tenants in any way it likes as it did in the rent increases in this case and against such arbitrary actions, the tenants are left defenceless. The effect of the order, Mr Matata went on, is to create two B categories of tenants, those with full protection under the Rent Restriction Act and those without such protection.

On behalf of the first respondent, Mr Magoma, the learned Senior State Attorney, C supported the High Court judgment on the validity of GN 41 of 1992 stating that it was made within the four corners of the law empowering the first respondent to make it and that it does not in any way violate the Constitution of the United Republic.

In support of his contention that Courts can and should intervene in respect of D legislation without proper safeguards against arbitrary action, Mr Matata cited the decision of the High Court of Uganda in Shah v Attorney General (1). It is true that the learned judge found that GN 41 of 1992 had no safeguards against arbitrary E increases of rent, but he did not think this was necessarily fatal to the validity or constitutionality of the order because in his view tenants of the second respondent could pursue and enforce their legal rights in the ordinary courts. In the Shah case quoted above, the court felt obliged to intervene because the legislation in question, ie The Local Administration (Amendment) Act 1961, violated the provisions of article 8 of the Uganda Constitution in that: F

`(a) It had the effect of depriving a party of property without compensation.

(b) It had the effect of depriving an aggrieved party of "protection of the law" in that it shut out litigation and prevented him from ventilating his grievances in Court. G

(c) It gave power to the Minister responsible to nullify even court judgments including the High Court'.

We therefore ask ourselves whether GN 41 of 1992 has any of these or similar H effects. We do not think so. Like the learned judge we think it would have been fairer if the order had provisions safeguarding the interests of the tenants against the possibility of arbitrary increases of rent by their powerful landlord, but we are satisfied that despite being freed from the controls in the Rent Restriction Act by GN 41 of 1992, the second respondent does not have and the order did I

1994 TLR p242

MFALILA JA

A not intend to grant it arbitrary powers to increase rent. We are satisfied that the second respondent cannot arbitrarily raise rents beyond economic rates, if it does, the appellants and indeed all the tenants of the second respondent countrywide can seek redress in the ordinary courts. In the circumstances, it is not correct to say that GN 41 of 1992 created two categories of tenants, one enjoying legal B protection and the other without such legal protection. The correct position is that GN 41 of 1992 removed the appellants and all tenants of the second respondent C from the protection of the Housing Tribunals under the Rent Restriction Act and as it were transferred them to the ordinary courts. We therefore agree with the learned judge that GN 41 of 1992 does not violate the concept of equality enshrined in article 13 of the Constitution. We also wish to affirm the principle in the decision of this Court in Juthalal Velji Ltd v THB Estates Co Ltd (2) relied on by D the learned judge and which is on all fours with the present case to be good law. Mr Matata sought to distinguish Velji's case from the present one on the basis that in Velji's case the rent was based on the economic value of the building based on the valuation report which was produced in the High Court whereas in the present E case there was no such violation. Secondly that the exemption in Velji's case was specific to a specific building. We do not think these distinctions are valid. The presence or absence of a valuation report would be relevant when considering the reasonableness of the rent charged not the validity of the legislation conferring power to charge such rent. Secondly, limiting the exemption to specific buildings is F in accord with the legislation which directs that the exemption may be in respect of any premises or class of premises. In Velji's case, they sought to exempt `Tecco Godowns' in Mikocheni Industrial Area as a class of premises.

G In the second ground, the appellants complained that had the trial judge properly interpreted the order (GN 41 of 1992) vis-È-vis the enabling provision (s 2(1)(b)) of the Rent Restriction Act 1984, he would have found that the order in exempting a group of parastatals instead of a class of premises, was ultra vires the enabling provisions. In support of this ground, Mr Matata submitted that GN 41 of 1992 is H ultra vires because the relevant enabling section refers to a class of premises whereas the exemption in the order is based on the ownership of those premises. We think with respect that this submission is based either on a misreading or partial reading of the section of the order. Section 2(1)(b) of the Rent Restriction Act 1984 provides: I

1994 TLR p243

MFALILA JA

`2 - (1), This Act shall apply to all dwelling houses and commercial premises other than: A

(a) -

(b) Any premises or class of premises which the Minister may with the approval of the National Assembly, signified by a resolution, by order published in the Gazette, exempt from all or any of the provisions of this Act'.

And para 3 of the exemption order reads in part: B

`3., All premises in respect of which a specified parastatal is the lawful landlord are hereby exempted from all the provisions of the Rent Restriction Act'.

Reading these two provisions together, we do not see how paragraph 3 of the C Order can be considered to be outside the enabling provisions in s 2(1)(b) of the Act. Under s 2(1)(b) the Minster responsible for Lands, Housing and Urban Development can exempt two groups of premises from the provisions of the Rent Restriction Act. He can exempt any premises or class of premises. The premises D exempted by GN 41 of 1992 are covered under the description any, whereas those under GN 23 of 1983 are covered under the description class of premises. We therefore do not see why Mr Matata would want to limit the Minister's power of exemption to a class of premises when the first part of the section widens the E power to any premises. Since all premises must have owners, it is strange to suggest that an order would be rendered invalid simply by identifying their owner. For these reasons we are satisfied that GN 41 of 1992 is not ultra vires the enabling section of the Act. This ground of appeal therefore fails. F

In ground three the appellants averred that had the trial judge properly directed himself on the rules of statutory interpretation, he would have found that s 2(1)(b) of Act 17 of 1984 does not confer upon the first respondent parliamentary power to amend substantive provisions of a statute (s 11 of the National Housing G Corporation Act No 2 of 1990). In support of this ground, Mr Matata contended that the effect of the order by the first respondent was to amend s 11 of the National Housing Corporation Act which he was not empowered to do. In reply Mr Magoma contended that GN 41 of 1992 did not amend and was not intended to amend s 11 or any other provision of the National Housing Corporation Act. H

We agree with Mr Matata that the first respondent, the Minister for Lands, Housing and Urban Development, has no power to amend an Act of Parliament. But he has never purported to undertake such a task. In promulgating the order in GN 41 of 1992, the Minister was only doing what he is allowed and empowered to do I

1994 TLR p244

MFALILA JA

A by the Rent Restriction Act - namely to exempt the premises owned by the specified parastatals from the provisions of the Act. Being exempted from the operations of a particular law or order does not mean repealing or amending that particular law or order. It simply means that that particular law will not operate on a specified individual, body of individuals or organisation. Hence, you may have the Minister of Finance being empowered to exempt certain organisations from the B operations of say the Sales Tax Act. This does not mean that the Finance Minister is empowered to amend the Sales Tax Act. The contention in this ground therefore fails.

C We have already held that the disapplication of the Rent Restriction Act to the premises owned by the second respondent, did not leave the appellants helpless without any remedy against the second appellants arbitrary or capricious actions. We have already held that the appellants or other tenants of the second respondent can still go to the ordinary courts to enforce their rights under the D tenancy agreements or to challenge the rents fixed by the second respondent under its new acquired authority. In the circumstances, we do not agree with Mr Matata that the appellant's right to go to the ordinary courts is illusory as we do not see any reason which can prevent them from going to the ordinary courts to enforce their rights as tenants. The contention in ground four similarly fails. E

Lastly, in ground five the appellants contended that had the learned judge properly directed himself on the second respondent's decision to raise rent, he would have found that the second respondent acted arbitrarily and contrary to the principles of F natural justice. In support of this contention Mr Matata cited a Privy Council decision in an appeal from Canada, Minister of National Revenue v Wrights Canadian Ropes Ltd (3). We think the decision in this case would have been relevant in the consideration of the present appeal if the appellants had been G challenging the reasonableness of the new rents not their validity. They would then in the process have provided the necessary data or information to support their challenge. Once it is held, as we have done, that the exemption order by the Minister was perfectly valid as it was lawfully made under validly delegated H authority, the validity of the new rents imposed by their landlord under the newly acquired authority cannot be successfully challenged. In the circumstances we agree with Mr Magoma that the only and best course for the appellants to take would have been to proceed by way of challenging their landlord to justify the new rates. The learned trial judge did rightly attempt not to resolve I the question whether the new rates are reasonable because he had no data or A other material to assist in such an undertaking. Accordingly we hold that this head of complaint also fails.

1994 TLR p245

MFALILA JA

All the grounds of appeal having failed, the appeal fails and we dismiss it in its entirety with costs. B

1993
Editorial Board

Chairman
The Hon. Mr. Justice F.L. NYALALI, Chief Justice of Tanzania
Secretary & Managing Editor
Dr. J.T. MWAIKUSA, Senior Lecturer, Faculty of Law,
University of Dar es Salaam
Members

The Hon. Mr. Justice B.A. SAMATTA, Justice of Appeal,
Tanzania Court of Appeal
The Hon. Mr. Justice H.M. HAMID,
Chief Justice of Zanzibar
The Hon. Mr. Justice H.A. MSUMI,
Principle Judge (J.K.) of the High Court of Tanzania
Mr. SHAIDI, Principal State Attorney
Attorney General's Chambers, Dar es Salaam
Mr. A.M. MISKIRY, Senior State Attorney,
Attorney General's Chambers, Zanzibar
Ms. K. ORIYO, Chief Corporation Counsel,
Tanzania Legal Corporation
Mr. S.J. JADEJA, Advocate of the High Court of Tanzania
Mr. B. LUANDA, Registrar, Court of Appeal of Tanzania
Ms. M. SHANGALI, Court of Appeal, Administrative Assistant
Dr. P.J. KABUDI (Assistant Editor),
Senior Lecturer, Faculty of Law, University of Dar es Salaam

SCOPE OF THE SERIES

These Reports cover cases decided in the Court of Appeal of Tanzania and the High Courts of Tanzania and Zanzibar

CITATION

These Reports are cited thus [1993] T.L.R.

Judges of the Court of Appeal of Tanzania in 1993

1. The Hon. Mr. Justice F.L. Nyalali Chief Justice
2. The Hon. Mr. Justice L.M. Makame Justice of Appeal
3. The Hon. Mr. Justice R.H. Kisanga Justice of Appeal
4. The Hon. Mr. Justice A.M.A. Omar Justice of Appeal
5. The Hon. Mr. Justice A.S.L. Ramadhani Justice of Appeal
6. The Hon. Mr. Justice N.S. Mnzavas Justice of Appeal
7. The Hon. Mr. Justice L.M. Mfalila Justice of Appeal
8. The Hon. Mr. Justice D.Z. Lubuva Justice of Appeal

Judges of the High Court of Tanzania in 1993

1. The Hon. Mr. Justice B.A. Samatta Principal Judge (J.K.)
2. The Hon. Mr. Justice D.P. Mapigano Puisne Judge
3. The Hon. Mr. Justice K.S.K. Lugakingira Puisne Judge
4. The Hon. Mr. Justice E.W. Katiti Puisne Judge
5. The Hon. Mr. Justice B.D. Chipeta Puisne Judge

6. The Hon. Mr. Justice N.M. Mushi Puisne Judge
7. The Hon. Mr. Justice W. Maina Puisne Judge
8. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.A. Mroso Puisne Judge
9. The Hon. Mr. Justice Y.S. Rubama Puisne Judge
10. The Hon. Mr. Justice L.J.R. Chua Puisne Judge
11. The Hon. Mr. Justice R.J. Ruhumbika Puisne Judge
12. The Hon. Mr. Justice A.G.G. Korosso Puisne Judge
13. The Hon. Mr. Justice R.A. Mwaikasu Puisne Judge
14. The Hon. Mr. Justice A. Bahati Puisne Judge
15. The Hon. Mr. Justice H.A. Msumi Puisne Judge
16. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.L. Mwalusanya Puisne Judge
17. The Hon. Mr. Justice E.E. Kazimoto Puisne Judge
18. The Hon. Mr. Justice E.P. Moshi Puisne Judge
19. The Hon. Mr. Justice L.A. Kyando Puisne Judge
20. The Hon. Mr. Justice W.H. Sekule Puisne Judge
21. The Hon. Madam Justice E.N. Munuo Puisne Judge
22. The Hon. Mr. Justice J. Masanche Puisne Judge
23. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.B. Mchome Puisne Judge
24. The Hon. Mr. Justice M.D. Nchalla Puisne Judge
25. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.M. Mackanja Puisne Judge
26. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.J. Mkwawa Puisne Judge
27. The Hon. Mr. Justice E.K. Mwipopo Puisne Judge
28. The Hon. Mr. Justice E.N. Rutakangwa Puisne Judge
29. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.H. Msoffe Puisne Judge
30. The Hon. Mr. Justice A.C. Mrema Puisne Judge

Judges of the High Court of Zanzibar in 1993

1. The Hon. Mr. Justice Hamid M. Hamid Chief Justice
2. The Hon. Mr. Justice Dahoma Puisne Judge

Cases Reported
1993 TLR p1
A
[zRPz]SCOLASTICA BENEDICT v MARTIN BENEDICT 1993 TLR 1 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Omar JJA

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 26 OF 1988 B

9 March, 1989
(From the Judgment and Decree of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, Moshi, J.) C
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Functus officio - When a court becomes functus officio.
Probate and Administration - Administration of estates - Administration of registered land - Whether primary courts have jurisdiction. D
Magistrates' Courts Act - Jurisdiction - Administration of estates - Subject matter of administration is registered land - Whether primary court has jurisdiction - Sections 14 and 15 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 and Government Notice No. 320 of 1964. E
-Headnote
The appellant's husband died intestate in 1971. He was survived by two wives and a number of sons and daughters. The deceased left to his heirs substantial property including motor vehicles, farmland, cattle and houses. The administrators of the deceased's property distributed the property and the interests therein to the heirs in accordance with the guidance of the clan council acting under F Haya customary law. None of the widows of the deceased inherited any property of the deceased; instead they were required to reside with and be maintained by their respective children according to Haya customary law. The respondent, one of the sons of the deceased by his first wife, was given, G among other things, a house on plot Nos. 17 and 19 Block `D' in Bukoba township, in which the appellant, the second wife of the deceased had been living with her deceased husband. The only daughter whom the appellant had sired with the deceased was given, among other things, a farmland including a house in need of some repair at Kanoni Shamba. H
The appellant filed a civil suit in the Urban Primary Court of Bukoba challenging the administration of the estate of her deceased husband, particularly in respect of the house on plot Nos. 17 and 19 Block `D' in Bukoba township. The defendants resisted the suit on the ground, inter alia, that the I primary court had no jurisdiction on the subject-matter. The primary court overruled the defendants who successfully appealed to the District Court whose decision was confirmed by the High Court.
1993 TLR p2
A The High Court, however, granted the appellant `liberty to pursue her claim' either in the District Court or the High Court. This liberty was not exercised.
The respondent, who was given the house on plot Nos. 17 and 19 instituted a suit in the Court of B Resident Magistrate at Bukoba seeking, inter alia, to evict the appellant and her daughter from the suit premises. The trial court granted vacant possession to the respondent. The appellant's appeal to the High Court failed. On a further appeal to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania the Court upheld the decision of the High Court. In addition the Court considered when a court becomes functus officio C and the question of jurisdiction of primary courts in administration of registered land.
Held: (i) As a general rule, a primary court, like all other courts, has no jurisdiction to overturn or set aside its own decisions as it becomes functus officio after making its decisions;

(ii) The only exception to this general rule includes the setting aside of ex parte decisions and D reviews of decisions induced by fraud or misinformation;

(iii) While section 15(1)(c) of the Magistrates Courts Act 1963 (now s. 19 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1984) did not specify the particulars relating to the administration of estates, the order of the Chief Justice published as Government Notice No. 320 of 1964 conferred E jurisdiction on primary courts in matters of administration of estates regardless of whether the subject-matter is land registered under the Land Registration Ordinance, provided the applicable law is customary or Islamic law, other than matters falling under the Marriage, Divorce and Succession (Non-Christian Asiatics) Ordinance.

Case Information

F Appeal dismissed in its entirety.

Cases referred to:

1. Julitha Mwaisunga (PC) Civil Appeal No. 38 of 1978 (unreported).
2. Scolastica B. Katanyebile (P.C.) Civil Appeal No. 11 of 1976 (unreported).

G 3. Munugwa Lutalamila and Two others v. Martha Lutalamila [1982] TLR 98.

G.M. Fimbo, for the appellant.

Rweyemamu, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

H Nyalali, C.J., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

This case has a long and chequered history. It commenced in the Urban Primary Court of Bukoba as Civil Case No 36 of 1972 in which the present appellant, namely Scolastica Benedict Katanyabile, I challenged the administration of the estate of her deceased husband, particularly in respect of a house on plot Nos 17 and 19

1993 TLR p3

NYALALI CJ

Block "D" in Bukoba township. The defendants in that case, namely Rose Benedict (the first wife of A the deceased), Donation Emmanuel and Dionizi Ngilileha (administrators of the deceased's estate) resisted the legal action on the ground, inter alia, that the primary court has no jurisdiction on the subject matter. The primary court overruled the defendants but they successfully appealed to the B District Court at Bukoba in Civil Appeal No 7 of 1974. This decision was confirmed by the High Court at Mwanza in a further appeal by the present appellant in (PC) Civil Appeal No 117 of 1976. The High Court, Lugakingira J, however granted the appellant `liberty to pursue her claim' either in the District Court or the High Court. C

Thereafter civil case No 12 of 1978 was instituted in the High Court at Mwanza but subsequently that court ordered that the case be filed in the subordinate court which had pecuniary jurisdiction over the subject matter of the suit. D

For reasons best known to the appellant, she apparently did not exercise the liberty granted to her by the High Court. Instead, the present respondent, namely Martin Benedict, one of the sons of the deceased, instituted a suit in the Court of the Resident Magistrate at Bukoba in civil case No 90 of 1981 seeking inter alia, to evict the appellant and her daughter (Methodia d/o Benedict) from the suit E premises. The trial court granted vacant possession to the respondent. The appellant and his daughter were aggrieved by that decision and they appealed to the High Court, in Civil Appeal No 14 of 1985. The High Court at Mwanza, B P Moshi J, dismissed the appeal in its entirety. The appellant, F but not her daughter, was again aggrieved by the decision of the High Court and she sought and obtained leave to appeal to this court. Hence the present appeal in which she is represented by Prof Fimbo, learned Advocate from the Legal Aid Committee of the University of Dar es Salaam. Mr G Rweyemamu, learned Advocate, appears for the respondent.

From the proceedings in this court and the courts below it is apparent that the following matters were established in the courts below. The appellant's husband, one Benedict Katanyebile died intestate in 1971. He was survived by two wives, and a number of sons and daughters. The appellant was his H second wife, whereas one Rose Benedict was his first wife. The deceased husband had nine children from his first wife, one of them being the respondent in the present case. On the other hand, the appellant bore him only a daughter, that is, Methodia d/o Benedict, who was a party to this case in the two courts below. I

1993 TLR p4

NYALALI CJ

A Furthermore, the deceased left to his heirs substantial property, including motor vehicles, farmland, cattle and houses. One of these houses is the subject of this case, and it is on plot Nos 17 and 19 Block "D" in Bukoba township. Its title is registered under the Land Registration Ordinance. The deceased's property was administered by two out of three administrators appointed by the B Urban primary court at Bukoba to administer the deceased estate. In discharging their functions, the two administrators distributed the property and the interests therein to the heirs in accordance with the guidance of the clan council, acting under Haya Customary Law. All the children of the deceased, C including the appellant's daughter, got their inheritance. The respondent was given, among other things, the house which is the subject of this case. This appellant's daughter was given, among other things, a farmland, including a house in need of some repair, at Kanoni Shamba. None of the widows D of the deceased inherited any property of the deceased, instead they were required to reside with and be maintained by their respective children according to Haya customary law. The appellant was thus required to reside with and be maintained by her daughter, Methodia d/o Benedict at Kanoni E Shamba. In consequence thereof, the appellant was further required to vacate the house which is the subject of this case, and in which she had been living with her deceased husband. She did not comply with that requirement and instead sought to reopen the matter of administration of the deceased's estate in the urban primary court at Bukoba in civil case No 36 of 1972 as already F mentioned.

The appellant's ground for refusing to hand over the house to the respondent and for appealing to us against the decisions of the two courts below boil down to three basic grounds, that is, firstly, that the G primary court under which the estate of the appellant's husband was administered had no jurisdiction over registered land. Secondly, that the transfer of title to the respondent was null and void, and thirdly and finally that the administrators appointed by the court erred in depriving the appellant of her matrimonial right of residence in the house of her deceased husband.

H The first point for consideration and decision in the case before us is a procedural one, and it is whether the decision of the Urban Primary Court of Bukoba, in the earlier administration proceedings, can be overturned in subsequent proceedings other than by way of appeal to or revision by a higher court. We think the answer is a double one. The first part of the answer relates to the primary court I itself. As a general rule, a primary court, like all other courts, has no jurisdiction to overturn or set aside its own decisions as it becomes functus officio, after making its A decisions. That is why the proceedings subsequently instituted in the primary court by the appellant in civil case No 36 of 1972 above mentioned were faulted by both the District Court of Bukoba and the High Court at Mwanza. The only exceptions to this general rule includes the setting aside of B ex-parte decisions, and reviews of decisions induced by fraud or misinformation.

The second part of this answer relates to the courts above the primary court. Under the hierarchical scheme of the Courts' system in this country, a decision of a primary court can be overturned by a C court above in the course of appellate or revisional proceedings or in the rare case of judicial review (where no other remedy is available). The present case originated in the court of the Resident Magistrate as a suit for vacant possession, inter alia. It was not instituted as an appeal against or revision of the decision of the primary court. These proceedings therefore cannot give rise to a D decision overturning that of the primary court. This conclusion should not be treated as a technicality. It is based on the principle that the higher courts are not capricious and that the relationship between the lower and higher courts is orderly and judicious. E

Having come to that conclusion on the first point, we would have found it unnecessary to consider the question of jurisdiction of a primary court in administration of registered land, but for two reasons. Firstly, there is a conflict of views in the High Court on the issue, and secondly, we are satisfied that F our action will not overturn the decision of the primary court.

Unfortunately, this point of jurisdiction of a primary court in administration matters was not specifically considered and decided upon by the two courts in this case. We are grateful however to G Professor Mgongo Fimbo, learned advocate, for citing two precedents of the High Court which are relevant to the point. These are the case of Julitha Mwaisunga (1) and the case of Scolastica B Katanyabile (2). We are aware that there are other cases decided by the High Court in the same H way. These cases are currently the authority for the proposition that a primary court has no jurisdiction in administration cases involving registered land by virtue of the proviso contained in para (A) of s 14(1)(a)(i) of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1963, Cap 537, (now repealed and replaced by the provisions of s 18 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1984). The contrary proposition was made by Mfalila J in the case of Munugwa Lutalamila and Two Others v Martha Lutalamila (3). Since the I

A present case was decided by the primary court before s 14 was repealed and replaced, and since most of the High Court precedents were decided during that period, it is appropriate to reproduce in full the relevant provisions of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1963, which deal with the jurisdiction, B powers, practice and procedures of primary courts. These are s 14 and s 15.

14(1) A primary court shall have and exercise jurisdiction -

(a) in all proceedings of a civil nature -

C (i) where the law applicable is customary law or Islamic law: Provided that no primary court shall have jurisdiction in any proceedings -

(A) affecting the title to or any interest in land registered under the Land Registration Ordinance; or

D (B) in which Islamic law is applicable by virtue of the provisions of the Marriage, Divorce and Succession (Non-Christian Asiatics) Ordinance; or

(ii) for the recovery of civil debts, rent or interest due to the Republic, the Government or any municipal, town or district council, under any judgment, written law (unless jurisdiction therein is expressly conferred to a court or courts E other than a primary court), right of occupancy, lease, sub-lease or contract, if the value of the subject matter of the suit does not exceed two thousand shillings, and any proceedings by way of counterclaim and set off therein of the same nature and not exceeding such value;

F (iii) for the recovery of any civil debt arising out of contract, if the value of the subject matter of the suit does not exceed one thousand shillings, and any proceedings by way of counterclaim or set-off therein of the same nature not exceeding such value;

G (b) in all proceedings in respect of which jurisdiction is conferred on a primary court by the First Schedule to this Act;

(c) in all proceedings in respect of which jurisdiction is conferred on a primary court by any other law.

(2) The Chief Justice may, by order published in the Gazette, confer upon a primary court H jurisdiction in the administration of deceased estates where the law applicable to the administration or distribution of, or the succession to, the estate is customary law or, save as provided in ss (1) of this section, Islamic law.

(3) The Minister may, by order published in the Gazette, add to the First Schedule jurisdiction to administer or enforce any provision of any law which a district court has jurisdiction to administer I or enforce (other than any such provisions in respect of which jurisdiction is conferred on a district court only when held by a civil magistrate), and may A amend or replace the same accordingly.

15(1) The practice and procedure of primary courts shall be regulated and, subject to the provisions of any law for the time being in force, their powers limited - B

(a) in the exercise of their criminal jurisdiction, by the Primary Courts Criminal Procedure Code;

(b) in the exercise of their civil jurisdiction, by the provisions of the Fourth Schedule to this Act, and, where the law applicable is customary law, by customary law insofar as it is not inconsistent with the provisions of the Fourth Schedule; C

(c) in the exercise of their jurisdiction in the administration of estates, by the provisions of the Fifth Schedule to this Act,

(2) Not relevant.

(3) Not relevant.

(4) Not relevant. D

It is clear that when these two sections are closely examined together, they make manifest not only the kinds of jurisdiction vested in primary courts but also, since primary courts, unlike the High Court, have limited jurisdiction, the species of that jurisdiction. From s 15(1) paras (a), (b) and (c), it is E evident that primary courts have three kinds of jurisdiction under the Magistrates' Courts Act, that is, firstly, a criminal jurisdiction, secondly, a civil jurisdiction, and thirdly, a `jurisdiction in the administration of deceased estates'. F

Section 14 on the other hand deals with the species of jurisdiction of the various kinds. Sub-section (1)(a)(i) of that section specifies certain proceedings of a civil nature. It is obvious that these fall within the second kind of jurisdiction manifested by s 15, that is, the Civil Jurisdiction of the primary court. Similarly, ss (1)(a)(ii) of s 14 specifies other matters for the recovery of civil debts, `. . . due to G the Republic, the Government . . .' It is obvious also that these fall within the scope of the second category or kind of jurisdiction of the primary court - that is, the civil jurisdiction. The same applies to the provisions of ss (1)(a)(iii). H

On the other hand, the provisions of s 14(1)(b) specify certain proceedings stated in the First Schedule to the Act. An examination of the contents of the First Schedule reveals matters which fall within the first general kind expressed by s 15 - that is, the criminal jurisdiction of primary courts. It I is apparent that by virtue of the provisions of s 14(1)(c), the Magistrates' Courts Act is not

A meant to state exhaustively all the species of jurisdiction vested in a primary court. Additional jurisdiction can be conferred by other laws as it was done under the Law of Marriage Act 1971.

It is also apparent that the Magistrates' Courts Act 1963 did not specify the particulars of the B jurisdiction provided under s 15(1)(c) - that is, the `jurisdiction in the administration of estates'. However, the Act empowers the Chief Justice to specify such jurisdiction under ss (2) of s 14. By order published in the Gazette as Government Notice No 320 of 1964, the Chief Justice did just that. Under rule 2 of that Order it was stated that:

C Every primary court shall have jurisdiction in the administration of the estate of a deceased person, if -

(a) the deceased, at the time of his death, had a fixed place of abode within the area of jurisdiction of the court; and

D (b) the law applicable to the administration or distribution of, or the succession to, the estate is customary law or Islamic and the estate is not one to which the provisions of the Marriage, Divorce and Succession (Non-Christian Asiatics) Ordinance apply.

E It is evident from this order of the Chief Justice that all primary courts have been given jurisdiction in matters of administration of estates regardless of whether the subject matter is land registered under the Land Registration Ordinance provided the applicable law is customary law or Islamic law, F other than matters falling under the Marriage, Divorce and Succession (Non-Christian Asiatics) Ordinance. This latter Ordinance has been extensively amended by the Marriage Act 1971 by removing all provisions relating to marriage and divorce, and retaining only provisions relating to G succession or inheritance of property belonging to non-Christian Asiatics. It follows therefore that, since the deceased estate in the present case is not one that falls within the exception stated under para (b) of the Order concerning non-Christian Asiatics, the urban primary court of Bukoba had jurisdiction to administer the estate in question, unless the Order made by the Chief Justice is ultra vires.

H Prof Fimbo canvassed the view before us that the Order of the Chief Justice is ultra vires to the extent that it confers jurisdiction over matters expressly excluded by the provisions of s 14(1)(a)(i)(A). With due respect to Prof Fimbo, we are satisfied that he is wrong. He seems to have failed to grasp the point that the entire provisions of ss (1)(a) deal only with the ordinary civil jurisdiction of the I primary court and excludes the jurisdiction in administration of estates which is dealt with under a separate ss (2) of s 14. He also appears to have A failed to notice that the only estates excluded from the powers conferred upon the Chief Justice by ss (2) are those estates which, though subject to Islamic law, are within the provisions of the Marriage, Divorce and Succession (Non-Christian Asiatics) Ordinance. This is apparent from the B expression used under ss (2) which reads, `where the law applicable . . . is customary law or, save as provided in ss (1) of this section, Islamic law'. The mere fact of registration of an estate under the Land Registration Ordinance does not therefore exclude it from the powers of the Chief Justice. It follows therefore that the Order published as Government Notice No 320 of 1964 is ultra vires and C valid. The position taken by Mfalila J in Manugwa Lutalamila (3) above mentioned is thus correct.

It must be pointed out for the avoidance of doubt that the subsequent extensive amendments to the Marriage, Divorce and Succession (Non-Christian Asiatics) Ordinance in 1971 did not alter the D position regarding the estates of non-Christian Asiatics governed by Islamic law, since such estates are still expressly excluded by the Chief Justice's order. It must also be mentioned that ss 14 and 15 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1963 have been replaced by ss 18 and 19 of the Magistrates' Courts E Act 1984, which repealed and replaced the former Act. No major changes were made by the relevant new provisions apart from deleting the proviso which appeared in para (B) of ss (1)(a) of the former Act, and adding another specie of jurisdiction vested in primary courts - that is jurisdiction `in all F matrimonial proceedings relating to Civil and Christian Marriages'. The effect of these changes are twofold. Firstly, by virtue of the deletion of the proviso above mentioned, matters which formerly fell within the scope of the Marriage, Divorce and Succession (Non-Christian Asiatics) Ordinance ceased to be excluded from the ordinary civil jurisdiction of a primary court. As already pointed out, G this ordinary civil jurisdiction of a primary court, the scope of which was dealt with under para (a) of ss (1) of s 14 of the former Act (and is now dealt with under para (a) of ss (1) of s 18 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1984) is separate from the special jurisdiction in the administration of H deceased's estates, the scope of which is definable by the Chief Justice, and has in fact been defined under Government Notice No 320 of 1964 mentioned earlier. Secondly, the new Act confers jurisdiction in matrimonial cases concerning civil and Christian marriages only. Other kinds of I marriage, such as Hindu marriages, are thus not covered by the Magistrates'

A Courts Act 1984. One has to look to the Law of Marriage Act 1971 for guidance on Hindu marriages as far as jurisdiction of primary courts is concerned in matrimonial cases.

The next important point for consideration and decision in this case is whether the appellant or the B respondent has a better title to possession of the premises in dispute. This is a crucial point, since in a suit for vacant possession, it is an elementary principle that as between the plaintiff and the defendant, the one who has a better title to possession prevails.

The respondent sued the appellant for vacant possession on the basis of a certificate of title C transferred to him under the Land Registration Ordinance as a consequence of the administration of his late father's estate. The transfer was endorsed in the Land Register. The appellant resisted the suit on the basis of a matrimonial right of residence which she had under Haya customary law. D Which then of these two competing titles is the better one? Section 33 of the Land Registration Ordinance provides, insofar as registered estates are concerned as follows:

33(1) The owner of any estate shall except in case of fraud, hold the same free from all estate E and interests whatsoever, other than -

(a) any encumbrances registered or entered in the land register;

(b) the interest of any person in possession of the land whose interest is not registrable under the provisions of this Ordinance;

F (c) any rights subsisting under any adverse possession or by reason of any law of prescription;

(d) any public rights of way;

(e) any charge on or over land created by the express provisions of any other law, without reference to registration under this Ordinance, to secure any unpaid rates or other moneys;

G (f) any rights conferred on any person under the provisions of the Mining Ordinance, the Mining (Mineral Oils) Ordinance, the Forest Ordinance or the Water Ordinance (other than easements created or saved under the provisions of that Ordinance);

H (g) any security over crop registered under the provisions of the Chattels Transfer Ordinance.

It is apparent that the title of the owner of a registered estate is paramount except in the instances stated under paras (a) to (g) of s 33. It follows therefore that the respondent's title will prevail in this I case unless the appellant's matrimonial right of residence is one of the species of rights exempted under paras (a) to (g). It would seem that under the facts of A this case, the appellant's matrimonial right of residence falls under para (b) as an `interest of any person in possession of the land whose interest is not registrable under the provisions of this Ordinance'. This is so because a matrimonial right of residence is not a lease or estate which is B required to be registered under s 8 of the Land Registration Ordinance Cap 334. It follows therefore, that the respondent's title cannot prevail over that of the appellant in this case unless the appellant's matrimonial right of residence had ceased to exist at the time of filing the suit. C Unfortunately for the appellant that is what appears to have happened. The matrimonial right of residence which she claims to have had, ceased to exist by virtue of the decision made by or on authority of the Urban primary court of Bukoba in the course of administering the estate of her late husband. As already mentioned earlier in this judgment, she was deprived of that right and required D to reside with her daughter at Kanoni Shamba. For reasons best known to herself, she did not appeal to the District Court against that decision; instead she sought to reopen the case in the same primary court as civil case No 36 of 1972. That course of action reached a dead end as both the E District Court and the High Court correctly overturned her action on appeal. She was advised by the High Court how to pursue her claim but she chose not to act on that advice. Eventually she found herself being sued by the respondent for vacant possession. Thus the decision of the primary court F remains legally binding and effective by choice of the appellant. Furthermore, we are satisfied that even if the appellant had properly challenged the administration of the estate of her late husband, she would not have succeeded, since her matrimonial right of residence upon death of her husband is G under customary law concomitant with her right to live with her children in a house of her deceased husband. It is so stated under Rule 66A the Customary Law Declaration Order 1963 published as Government Notice No 279 of 1963 and was applied to the Bahaya community by Government H Notice 605 of 1963. That customary rule states in Kiswahili:

1993 TLR p11

NYALALI CJ

Mjane anayo haki ya kumchagua ndugu mmoja wa marehemu na kuishi naye kama mume wake, au anaweza kudai kuishi na watoto wake katika nyumba ya marehemu na atakuwa mmojawapo katika jamaa ya marehemu I

1993 TLR p12

A The relevant part is italisised by us for purposes of clarity. A free translation into English of that part reads as follows: `Or she may claim her right to reside with her issue in a house of the deceased, and thus become one of the deceased's kinsfolk.' Bearing in mind that under customary law, the residence of the issue of the deceased is determined to a great extent by rules of B inheritance, it follows that a widow who elects to reside where her issue are entitled to reside by rules of inheritance. In the present case, the appellant's daughter was entitled to reside at Kanoni Shamba and not in the house on plot Nos 17 and 19 Block `D' in Bukoba C township. The appeal before us cannot therefore succeed as it has no legal legs upon which to stand.

We thus dismiss the appeal in its entirety. Since this is a Legal Aid case, we make no order as to costs.

1993 TLR p12

E

[zRPz]ATLANTIC ELECTRIC LTD v MOROGORO REGION COOPERATIVE UNION (1984) LTD 1993 TLR 12 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Ramadhani JA

F CIVIL APPLICATION NO. 26 OF 1990

11 March, 1991

G (From the Ruling of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Mapigano, J.)

Flynote

Court of Appeal Rules - Notice of Intention to Appeal - Essentials of a Notice of Appeal - Form and Content of a Notice of Appeal - Form D in the First Schedule to the Court of Appeal Rules 1979.

H Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeals to the Court of Appeal - Time in which to appeal and steps necessary to take before instituting appeal - Rule 83 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979.

Court of Appeal Rules - Right to apply for extension of time to appeal - Whether provisions prescribing period in which necessary steps for instituting appeals should be taken are mandatory - Rules 8 and 83 of the Court of I Appeal Rules 1979.

1993 TLR p13

-Headnote

In a suit before the High Court the Applicant obtained an ex-parte judgment against the Respondent. A The Respondent's application for extension of time in which to apply for review of the ex-parte judgment was dismissed by the High Court. The Respondent then filed a Notice of intention to appeal to the Court of Appeal against that dismissal. More than two months after filing the Notice of Appeal B the Applicant filed this application to strike out the said Notice, advancing three grounds: that the Notice of Appeal was bad in law; that after filing the Notice the Respondent had not taken the necessary steps to prosecute the appeal; and that the Respondent had no serious intention to pursue the appeal.

Held: (i) The provision that a notice of appeal shall be substantially in the Form D in the First C schedule to the Court of Appeal Rules 1979 means that in drawing a notice of appeal the format given in Form D may be disregarded but not the substance of the information listed in it;

(ii) As it did not bear an endorsement signature by the Court Registry showing the date when it was lodged there as provided in r. 15 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979, the Notice of Appeal was bad in law; D

(iii) Under r. 83 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979 an appeal should be instituted within 60 days of filing the Notice of Appeal; as to institute an appeal the record of appeal has to be filed, applying for and obtaining a copy of proceedings from the High Court are necessary steps to be taken well in time before the appeal can be instituted; E

(iv) The provision, in r. 8, allowing applications to be made for extensions of time does not mean that the rules prescribing the period in which to institute appeals and providing for the taking of necessary steps for instituting appeals are not mandatory;

(v) By not applying for a copy of proceedings and for leave to appeal, the Respondent omitted to take necessary steps for the prosecution of the intended appeal in time. F

Case Information

Application granted

Cases referred to:

1. Hills v. Stanford [1904] 23 NZLR 1661.
2. Victorian Chamber of Manufacturers v. Commonwealth [1943] 67 CLR 347. G

J.T. Mwaikusa, for the applicant.

E.D. Kisusi, for the respondent. H

[zJDz]Judgment

Ramadhani JA: This is an application to strike out a Notice of Appeal under Rule 52 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules. The applicant is The Atlantic Electrical Limited who was represented by Mr Mwaikusa, learned Advocate, and the respondent is The Morogoro Region Co-operative Union advocated for by Mr Kisusi, learned Counsel. I

1993 TLR p14

RAMADHANI JA

A The applicant had filed a suit on 1 November 1989 against the respondent in the High Court and obtained an ex-parte judgment as the respondent did not appear. When the applicant was in the process of execution the respondent made an application before the High Court for the extension of time in which to apply for the review of the ex-parte judgment. That application was dismissed by B Mapigano J, as he was then, on 18 September 1990, whereupon the present respondent filed a Notice of Appeal to this Court objecting to that dismissal on 1 October 1990.

This application is to strike out the said notice of appeal. An affidavit supporting the notice of motion C was duly filed cataloguing the grounds for striking out the notice of appeal.

When the application came for hearing on 19 February 1991 Mr Kisusi, for the respondent, made an informal application for the extension of time in which to file an affidavit in reply. He said that he had D been briefed by his client just on 17 February and that he was then bereaved. He said that some of the factual matters contained in the affidavit had been overtaken by events. Mr Mwaikusa objected to that because the notice of motion was served on the respondent since 31 January 1991 and that they had ample time to file an affidavit in reply. He added that Mr Kisusi had appeared three times E before the High Court representing the respondent in other applications before that Court since 1 February so he could not be heard to say that he was not briefed. Mr Kisusi replied that he had been instructed for matters before the High Court but not for this application.

F On 20 February I gave an order granting the application but I reserved giving my reasons until now. Admittedly the respondent was served in over 14 clear days while Rule 52(1) prescribed at least two clear days. So even if there was actual lateness in giving instructions to the counsel that was squarely the carelessness of the respondent himself and could not be sufficient reason to extend G time. However, as striking out of a notice of appeal is a serious matter and as there were allegations that certain facts were overtaken by events I was inclined to adjourn the hearing and afford the respondent an opportunity to file an affidavit so that the Court would be seized of all facts when H determining the motion. I gave the respondent the order to file the affidavit in reply by 26 February 1991 and the hearing to be on 28 February.

When the Court reconvened to hear the motion Mr Mwaikusa, for the appellant, had a preliminary I objection. He sought to move the Court to strike out the affidavit in reply filed by the respondent.

1993 TLR p15

RAMADHANI JA

He gave three grounds: First, he said he had been served with a copy of the affidavit that same A morning within the Court premises. Explanations by Mr Kisusi to the effect that attempts to locate him previously were abortive were refuted by Mr Mwaikusa. He said that a copy of the same could have been left with his Secretary at the Faculty of Law which he had given as his address for B service. Second, Mr Mwaikusa said that the order which I gave as to the filing of the affidavit by 26 February was not complied with in that the same was filed on 27 February and no leave had been sought to extend time. Mr Kisusi invoked Rule 8 that leave for extension of time could be applied for even after the affidavit had been filed. Third, Mr Mwaikusa submitted that the signature purported to C be that of one Mr Tayari and appendaged on the affidavit on behalf of the respondent, is so different from other signatures of Mr Tayari in other documents, pertaining to this same dispute, filed in the High Court. He referred the Court to some of these documents. Mr Kisusi first challenged the D competence of Mr Mwaikusa to question the authenticity of signatures. However, Mr Kisusi admitted to the Court that the signature on the affidavit is so much different from the signatures in other Court documents. Mr Mwaikusa submitted that the affidavit in question cannot be said to have been attested to by Mr Tayari and consequently, he argued, there is no affidavit before the Court. E

Grounds numbers two and three are sufficient to dispose of the preliminary objection. The purported affidavit in reply was filed outside the time limit I prescribed in my order. There was no application for leave to extend time. Mr Kisusi only pointed out Rule 8 which permits an application to extend time F before or after the act but he did not so apply. But even if there was such an application I would not have granted it. I allowed to adjourn the hearing to give him time to file the affidavit in the first place by over-stretching my indulgence otherwise there was no merits. Then, as Mr Kisusi conceded, the G signature of the affidavit did not in any aspect resemble the others by Mr Tayari. In fact the signature is not that of Mr Tayari. The situation to say the least borders forgery. Therefore there was no affidavit at all and that is why I decided to ignore that piece of paper and to proceed with hearing the motion but reserving giving my reason to the present. H

Three grounds have been advanced for the application to strike out the notice of appeal.

The first ground was that the notice of appeal is bad in law. Mr Mwaikusa had pointed out four defects. One, it did not conform with Form D of the First Schedule of the Tanzania Court of Appeal I

1993 TLR p16

RAMADHANI JA

A Rules 1979. Two, the notice of appeal was a mere letter addressed to the Registrar of the High Court. Three, there was no citation of the rule or rules under which it was made. Four, there was no indication of where or when it was lodged and, according to Mr Mwaikusa, this was the most serious flaw.

B Mr Kisusi said that the notice of appeal was not bad in law. He submitted that Rule 76(6) merely provides that a notice of appeal is to be `substantially in the Form D'. He argued that three is no requirement that a notice of appeal is to be as Form D. He said that the notice of appeal had been addressed to the Registrar of the High Court as required by rule 76(1). He pointed out that the names C of the parties had been given, a description of the suit at the High Court had been provided and so was the date of the decision complained of. He admitted that there were a few omissions like not mentioning the Court of Appeal as is done in Form D. Also the date the notice of appeal was received D is missing but he produced a G.R.R. No. 214726 for Shs 800/=, the fee required for lodging a notice of appeal, which was issued on 1 October 1990 as evidence of when it was lodged.

The second ground for striking out the notice of appeal was that since it was lodged necessary steps E had not been taken to prosecute it. He mentioned the necessary steps to be two. One, copies of the proceedings had not been applied for as required under Rule 83 while more than thirty days had elapsed. Two, no application had been made for leave to appeal under Rule 76(5). He said that that could be made either before or after the notice of appeal and that there was no need to extract the F decree.

Mr Kisusi's reply was that it was not mandatory to apply for the records of the proceedings within thirty days. He said that a party would observe that only if he wanted to avail himself of the benefits G under Rule 83. These are, he said, the exclusion of the period taken to prepare the records when computing the sixty days prescribed for instituting an appeal. Mr Kisusi submitted that failure to institute an appeal could be cured by an application for leave to extend time under Rule 8 therefore a H party was not obliged to apply for a copy of proceedings within thirty days.

The third ground advanced by Mr Mwaikusa was that the respondent had not manifested any serious intention to pursue the appeal and that the notice of appeal was merely used to frustrate the execution of the decree of the High Court which was in favour of the applicant. He submitted that I finances could not have been a problem as Court fees could have been exempted under Rule 122 upon proof of sufficient cause and even Court records could have been prepared by the High Court. A So Mr Mwaikusa prayed for the striking out of the notice of appeal with costs. He also submitted that costs for the delay in the execution of the decree could be covered if interest at the bank rate is ordered.

Mr Kisusi submitted that certain steps had been taken. However, the elaboration of those steps was B objected to my Mr Mwaikusa on the grounds that there was no affidavit in reply and that the counsel could not adduce evidence. It was agreed that the Court could take judicial notice of the records of the High Court. Mr Kisusi said that it was superfluous to apply for the extension of time C before leave to appeal was granted. Hence he argued that the notice of motion was premature for it could not be said that the respondent could not proceed with the intended appeal. He also said that the disbursement of the decretal amount was not prevented by the respondent but that the order of 10 August 1990 by Mapigano J lifted the Garnishee Order and so the moneys were held by the High D Court pending further orders by the same Court.

Mr Mwaikusa replied that until then no leave to appeal had been granted by the High Court and also there was no application for extension of time made before this Court. He also submitted that the E order of Mapigano J on 10 August 1990 was a temporary one while the final order was that of 18 September 1990 against which the respondent had filed the notice of appeal in question. Mr Mwaikusa said that every time the appellant asked for execution they were reminded of the pending notice of appeal. F

Let me start with whether or not the Notice of Appeal is bad in law. Rule 76(6) provides as follows -

> `A notice of appeal shall be substantially in the Form D in the First Schedule to these Rules and shall be signed by or on behalf of the appellant.' (Emphasis provided.) G

On the outset that sub-rule uses the word `shall' in saying `a notice of appeal shall be' and so it is mandatory: the notice of appeal must be substantially in the Form D. The only question is what is to be substantially in the Form D. Mr Kisusi merely said that there was no requirement that a notice of H appeal was to be as Form D. Mr Mwaikusa responded to that by saying that the phrase meant functionally sufficient to perform the purposes intended.

The phrase `substantially in Form D' has not in my knowledge, been defined in any decision of this Court. My research has also failed to produce any authority on the issue and none has been cited I

A to me either of the learned counsel. So I am somewhat on new ground.

The word `substantially' is the adjective of `substance'. The provision could be rephrased `a notice of appeal shall be as Form D in substance . . .' Now what does that mean?

B The word `substance' is defined in Chamber's Dictionary thus:

> `that in which qualities or attributes exist; the existence to which qualities belong; that which constitutes anything what it is; the principal part; gist; subject matter . . .'

C According to Stout CJ in the New Zealand case of Hills v Stanford (1) at 1065.

`The word "substance" is a philosophical term with a long history, and according to philosophical terminology it D means "that which requires for its existence the existence of nothing else". It is the "substrate", the "essence", the "thing in itself". It has to be thought of or inferred apart from its accidents . . .'

From the foregoing exposition then we have first to determine the substance of Form D. What E makes Form D not Forms A, B or C or whatever other forms prescribed by the Rules. What is the essence, the content of Form D. After determining that then we have to see whether or not the notice F of appeal in dispute is substantially in Form D.

Of essence there are ten pieces of information required to be given in Form D to wit:

(1) The matter is to be dealt with in the Court of Appeal of Tanzania at a named centre.

(2) The name of parties.

G (3) The number of the case complained against.

(4) The name of the judge whose decision is the subject matter of the appeal.

(5) An indication of whether the appeal is against the whole decision or just a certain specified part of the decision.

H (6) The address for service for the appellant.

(7) To whom copies of the notice of appeal is intended to be served.

(8) Date of the notice of appeal.

(9) Signature of the appellant or his advocate.

I (10) The High Court Registry to which the notice of appeal is addressed.

(11) The date on which the notice of appeal was lodged. A

(12) The signature of the Registrar.

Before analysing the notice of appeal in dispute it is proper, at this juncture, to make one point very clear. Mr Mwaikusa complained that the notice of appeal was like a letter. That is very true. There is B even `Dear Sir' written. But our concern is the substance, the content and not the form. Thus it was said in Victorian Chamber of Manufacturers v Commonwealth (2) at 377:

`The words "in substance" indicate that in making the necessary comparison form should be disregarded.' C

So it is not the format of Form D that is material but the content of Form D.

Going through the disputed notice of appeal I find three of the twelve matters enumerated above D missing. At the outset there is no indication that the matter is to be before the Court of Appeal. However, that has been indicated in the body of the notice of appeal where the words of Form D have been used `. . . intends to appeal to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania . . .' So that cannot be said E to have been really offended. Then the date when the notice of appeal was lodged is not shown and lastly there is no signature of the Registrar. Mr Kisusi produced the receipt and claimed that it was issued the day the notice of appeal was lodged. That could be said to supplement the notice of F appeal. But it would seem that it will not suffice. Rule 15 is offended since it provides that:

`Whenever any document is lodged in the Registry or in a sub-registry or in the registry of the High Court under or in accordance with these Rules, the Registrar or deputy registrar or the Registrar of the High Court, as the case may G be, shall forthwith cause it to be endorsed, showing the date and time when it was lodged.'

To that extent it is my well considered opinion that the said notice of appeal is bad in law.

The second ground advanced for the striking out of the notice was that no necessary steps had been H taken. These were mentioned to have been applications for a copy of proceedings and for leave to appeal.

As for the copy of proceedings Mr Kisusi submitted that it was not mandatory to apply for them within thirty days unless a party wanted to avail himself with the advantage of excluding the time used in the preparation of the records from the sixty days limitation I

A provided under Rule 83. He relied on Rule 8 to apply for extention of time.

With all due respect to the learned Counsel that argument is odd to say the least. Under Rule 83 the appeal was required to be instituted within sixty days of filing the notice of appeal. Thus if the notice B of appeal was filed on 1 October 1990, as claimed, then the institution should have been by or on 1 December 1990. But in order to institute the appeal the record of appeal had to be filed; that is, they must have been obtained. This presupposes that they had already been applied for. Now none of these steps had been taken when this motion to have the notice of appeal struck out was filed on 22 C December 1990. This is nineteen days after the date the appeal ought to have been instituted. The counsel cannot be heard to say that the application for a copy of proceedings was not required to be made within thirty days.

D Admittedly Rule 8 provides for the application to extend the time prescribed for anything in the Rules. But that is very different from submitting that the Rules are not mandatory otherwise there should not have been the reason to have Rule 82 which provides for application to strike out a notice of appeal because an essential step in the proceedings had not been taken within the prescribed E time. Moreover, the extension of time under Rule 8 is at the discretion of the Court and upon proof of sufficient reason for the delay. It is not proforma.

F The same reasons given above apply to an application for leave to appeal because an order giving leave to appeal is part and parcel of the record of appeal which is required to be filed within sixty days in order to institute the appeal.

The third and last ground was that no intention to pursue the appeal had been manifested by the G respondent and that the notice of appeal had been used just to frustrate execution. Mr Mwaikusa conceded that a notice of appeal, and indeed an appeal itself, did not operate to stay execution but submitted that the amount involved was so big that prudence dictated hesitation to execute the decree pending the finalization of the appeal.

H Mr Kisusi started to enumerate steps taken but that was objected to by Mr Mwaikusa as being giving evidence. I ruled out that such information as obtainable in Court records could be taken judicial notice of. On a perusal of the High Court file civil case No 276/89 between the parties, I have I found that there is an application for the extension of time of leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal against the ruling of Mapigano J given on 18 September 1990. This application was lodged on 19 January 1991. However, I am also cognizant of the fact that the motion to A strike out the notice of appeal had been filed on 22 December 1990 that is about 28 days before the application for extension of time was filed. Could knowledge that there was such a motion before the Court prompted the application for the extension of time? B

1993 TLR p21
RAMADHANI JA
Besides that that application for the extension of time is just the first step of a number of steps. Assuming that it be granted then the present respondent will have to apply for leave. Assuming that to be granted he will have then to apply for the extension of time to institute the appeal. This is in fact C a postponement indefinitely of the execution of the decree.
This is a motion under Rule 82 to strike out the notice of appeal. As I have been satisfied that the notice of appeal is bad in law I am inclined to grant the motion. I am equally granting the motion since essential steps in the proceedings hence not been taken within prescribed time as explained above. D In any case Rule 84(a) provides:

`84. If a party who has lodged a notice of appeal fails to institute an appeal within the appointed time -

(a) he shall be deemed to have withdrawn his notice of appeal and shall, unless the Court orders otherwise, be liable to pay the costs of any persons on whom the notice of appeal was served arising from the failure to E institute the appeal;'

The respondent in this motion is such a party. Even if there was not this motion he would have been deemed to have withdrawn his notice of appeal. F
Therefore the motion is granted for the reasons given above. The purported notice of appeal is struck out with costs to the applicant. G
1993 TLR p22
A
[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v DAUDI PETE 1993 TLR 22 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Ramadhani JJA

B CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 28 OF 1990
16 May, 1991
C (From the Ruling of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, Mwalusanya, J.)
Flynote
Constitutional Law - Basic rights enshrined in the Constitution - Procedure and jurisdiction of the High Court in D enforcing basic rights and freedoms - Articles 30(3) and (4) and 108(1) and (2) of the Constitution.

Constitutional Law - Constitutional Bill of Rights and its interpretation - Use of the African Charter on Human and People's Rights in interpreting the Bill of Rights.

E Bill of Rights and Freedoms - The Right to personal liberty - The right to bail and circumstances and procedure for denying bail to an accused person - Section 148(5)(e) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 and article 15(2)(a) of the Constitution.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Bail - Denial of bail in criminal trials: Whether violative of the constitutional F presumption of innocence - Section 148(5)(e) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 and article 13(6)(b) of the Constitution.

Constitutional Law - Bill of Rights and Criminal Practice and Procedure - The Right to Equality before the law: Whether violated by denial of bail - Section 148(5)(e) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 and article 13(4) and (5) G of the Constitution.

Constitutional Law - Doctrine of Separation of Powers - Statutory provisions prohibiting the grant of bail - Whether they violate the doctrine of separation of powers.

H Bill of Rights - Derogation clauses in the Bill of Rights - Circumstances in which statutory provisions violating basic rights and freedoms may be saved by derogation clauses - Section 148(5)(e) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 and article 30 of the Constitution.

-Headnote

The Respondent was charged with robbery with violence before the District Court. His application for bail pending trial was dismissed on grounds that s 148(5)(e) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 I (hereinafter `the Act') provided that the offence he was charged with was not bailable. He subsequently A applied to the High Court for bail. The High Court held that the provisions of s 148(4) and (5) of the Act, which prohibited the granting of bail in certain circumstances, violated several provisions of the Constitution concerning basic rights and freedoms, and the doctrine of separation of powers, and were therefore null and void. The High Court therefore granted bail. The Director of Public B Prosecutions appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Held: (i) Issues of constitutionality of the provisions of s 148 of the Act were raised by both sides to the case before the trial court; the trial judge, therefore, was right to frame and deal with issues relating to the constitutionality of s 148 of the Act; C

(ii) The Constitution confers upon the High Court original jurisdiction to entertain proceedings in respect of actual or threatened violations of the basic rights and freedoms and, until Parliament enacts the procedure for the enforcement of those rights and freedoms, the same may be enforced using the procedure available in the High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction; D

(iii) As the parties before the trial court had raised issues relating only to the provisions of paragraph (e) of ss (5) of s 148 of the Act, the trial judge was wrong to frame issues covering the whole of ss (4) and (5) of s 148 of the Act;

(iv) As the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania is established in the Kiswahili E language, the controlling version in interpreting the Constitution is the Kiswahili and not the English version;

(v) The Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania recognizes and guarantees not only basic human rights but also basic human duties, consistent with the African Charter on Human and People's Rights; as the Bill of Rights and Duties was introduced into the F Constitution shortly after Tanzania signed and ratified the Charter, account must be taken of that Charter in interpreting the Bill of Rights and Duties;

(vi) On account of the co-existence of the individual and society and their respective rights and duties, the rights and duties of the individual are limited by the rights and duties of society, and vice versa; G

(vii) Under article 15(2)(a) of the Constitution a person may be denied or deprived of personal liberty under `certain circumstances' and subject to a `procedure prescribed by law', but s 148(5)(e) of the Act does not contain the requisite prescribed procedure for denying bail to an accused person; section 148(5)(e) of the Act therefore violates article 15(2) of the H Constitution;

(viii) Section 148(5)(e) does not violate article 13(6)(b) of the Constitution, which prohibits treating an accused person like a convicted criminal, because denying bail to an accused person does not necessarily amount to treating such a person like a convicted criminal;

(ix) Persons denied bail under the provisions of s 148(5)(e) of the Act are so denied on the I basis of their actions or conduct and therefore those

1993 TLR p24

A provisions do not violate article 13(4) and (5) of the Constitution which prohibit discrimination;

(x) Statutory provisions prohibiting the grant of bail to persons charged with specified offences, like the provisions of s 148 of the Act, do not amount to a take over of judicial functions by the legislature; such provisions, therefore, do not violate the doctrine of separation of B powers;

(xi) The provisions of s 148(5)(e) of the Act violate article 15(2)(a) of the Constitution and would, therefore, be null and void, unless saved by article 30 of the Constitution because any piece of legislation falling wholly within the parameters of article 30 of the Constitution is valid, C notwithstanding that it may be violative of basic rights of the individual;

(xii) Section 148(5)(e) would accordingly be valid if its denial of bail aimed only at accused persons capable of being a danger or threat to the interests of defence, public safety or public order but now, as it is so broad as to cover even persons who are no danger at all to the interests of defence, public safety or public order, it does not fit into article 30 of the D Constitution and is therefore null and void;

(xiii) Courts have discretion to grant bail to persons accused of offences specified under s 148(5)(e) of the Act, which discretion should be exercised judicially taking into account the interests of both the individual and the community.

Case Information

E Appeal dismissed.

Cases referred to:

1. Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India [1978] 2 SCR 621.

2. Republic v. Peregrin Mrope HC Misc. Criminal Cause No. 43 of 1989 (unreported).

F 3. Clarke v. Karika [1985] LRC (Const.) 732.

4. Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. [1911] 220 US 61.

5. Megowan v. Maryland [1961] 366 US 420.

6. Bull v. Minister of Home Affairs [1986] (1) ZLR 202.

7. Attorney General of the Gambia v. Momedou Jobe [1984] AC 689 (PC).

G K.S. Massaba, for the appellant.

G.M. Fimbo, as Amicus Curiae.

[zJDz]Judgment

H Nyalali, C.J., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

This appeal by the Director of Public Prosecutions, hereinafter called the DPP, is one of three constitutional cases that have reached this Court ever since Fundamental Rights and Duties I embodied in the Constitution of the United Republic in 1984 became enforceable in March 1988 by virtue of the provisions of s 5(2) of the Constitution (Consequential, Transitional and Temporary Provisions) Act 16 of 1984. This case A however is the first to be decided by the Court. It concerns the right to bail.

1993 TLR p25

NYALALI CJ

The respondent, one Daudi s/o Pete was charged in the District Court of Musoma District at Musoma with the offence of robbery with violence c/s 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. He was denied B bail and remanded into custody on the basis that the offence for which he stood charged was not bailable by virtue of the provisions of s 148(5)(e) of the Criminal Procedure Act 9 of 1985. The Respondent was aggrieved by that decision, and he applied to the High Court at Mwanza for bail. The High Court, Mwalusanya J, hold that the provisions of s 148(4) and (5) of the Act, which prohibited the C granting of bail in certain cases were unconstitutional and therefore null and void. Mwalusanya J held that these provisions were violative of several articles of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania, which concern Basic Rights; and the Doctrine of Separation of Powers between the D Judicature and the Legislature. The High Court therefore granted bail. The DPP was aggrieved by the decision of the High Court, hence this appeal to this Court.

While this appeal was pending before us, the trial in the District Court proceeded and the respondent E was acquitted. Apparently and understandably because of this acquittal, the respondent lost interest in the D.P.P.'s appeal. He did not enter appearance before us in spite of our order made under rule 3(2)(a) of the Rules of the Court for Notice of Hearing to be served upon him by publication in local newspapers. We are indebted however to Professor Mgongo Fimbo, learned Advocate, who F agreed to act as amicus curiae so as to assist the Court to see the other side of the coin of this case. We are also grateful to Mr K S Massaba, learned Principal State Attorney, assisted by Mr Matupa, learned State Attorney, who very ably represented the D.P.P. in this appeal. G

The D.P.P. submitted a total of five grounds of appeal, two of which are contained in a Supplementary Memorandum of Appeal filed on 19 June 1990. The main Memorandum of Appeal has three grounds. The two supplementary grounds of appeal read as follows: H

`1. That the learned Judge seriously misdirected himself in framing for consideration, the issues relating to the constitutionality of the prohibition of bail under s 148 of the Criminal Procedure Act.

2. That the learned Judge seriously erred in considering the constitutionality of s 148 of the Criminal Procedure I Act, as

A a whole while the issue concerned only para (e) of ss 5 of the said section.'

The three main grounds of appeal read as follows:

`1. That the honourable Judge erred in law in holding that by applying normal canons of interpretation, a B meaning cannot be attached to s 148(5)(e) of the CPA that fits within the provisions of articles 30 and 31 of the Union Constitution.

2. That the honourable Judge's interpretation of s 148(5)(e) of the CPA in the light of art 13(6) of the Union C Constitution is bad in law as `hearing' envisaged by the Parliamentarians in the aid article is not the same as `hearing' when the case is before the court for applications such as those of bail under s 148(5)(e) of the CPA.

3. That the Honourable Judge applied wrong canon of statutory interpretation hence his failure to interpret s D 148(5)(e) of the CPA in the light of societal interests vis-à-vis those of a private citizen.'

In his submissions before us regarding the first supplementary ground, Mr Massaba argued in effect E that there was nothing in the pleadings or the submissions in the course of the proceedings in the High Court which could give rise to the issues of constitutionality of the prohibition of bail under s 148 of the Criminal Procedure Act. Professor Fimbo on the other hand argued the contrary view. Having F examined the record of the proceedings of the court below, and bearing in mind that the respondent was a layman, we are satisfied that any reasonable tribunal would find that paras 5 and 6 of the affidavit filed in support of the bail application, together with the respondent's oral submissions made in support of his application, undoubtedly give rise to the issues of constitutionality of the prohibition G of bail. Paragraphs 5 and 6 of the affidavit state as follows:

`5. My Lord, I agree that s 148(5) CPA prevents the court to grant bail, but in my case the charge was prepared to suit the conditions of s 148(5) and it is not true that a gun was used to take only one cattle while there are H many cattle in the kraal of Mr Maregeri or Issa Magoma.

6. My Lord this honourable Court has power to consider and administer justice so that a person cannot be mistreated by the existing law or otherwise. Mr Maregeri, Issa Magoma and the police have conspired to I detain the applicant by means of law without even a reasonable evidence.'

Mr Massaba's argument that the respondent in these paragraphs is complaining only of victimization A by the Police and Mr Maregeri cannot be sustained in the light of what is stated in the first sentence of para 6. The respondent's assertion that the High Court has `power to consider and administer justice so that a person cannot be mistreated by the existing law or otherwise' read together with the B respondent's reference to the provisions of s 148(5) of the Criminal Procedure Act, clearly shows beyond doubt that the respondent was challenging the constitutionality of the provisions of s 148(5) which prohibit bail.

The relevant parts of the respondent's submissions as recorded in the High Court reads as follows: C

`The law should not be used to victimize citizens. Mr Maregeri and the OCD are using the law as an instrument of oppression. This offence is purely out of vindictiveness. I am wondering as to whether such cause of action is D constitutional. I understand that our Bill of Rights has come into operation. What of it? I thought that we oppressed citizens would be saved by it. If s 148(5) of the CPA condones denying liberty to a citizen for more vindictiveness then I am afraid the Bill of Rights is not worth the paper it is written on.' E

We think no stronger words could have been used to raise the constitutional issues than these. In his submission in reply Mr Muna, learned State Attorney, who represented the Republic of the High Court, is recorded to have said, inter alia, F

`The question of Bill of Rights under arts 13(2) and 15(2) of the Constitution would seem to give the right to liberty to the citizen. But that right has lawfully been curtailed by Parliament.

It is my submission that s 148 is constitutional which does not go against arts 13(2) and 15(2) of the constitution. I G rely on arts 30 and 31. These are saving the said provisions of s 148 of the CPA. So the law of bail in s 148 is lawful for public interest and on national security grounds.'

In response to the submissions of Mr Muna, the respondent concluded by saying H

`I wish only to add that, if Parliament condones such things as vindictiveness, then I am afraid that, we the down-trodden have no where to run to for our liberty. Parliament cannot have unlimited powers to pass oppressive laws as this one which the State Attorney is keeping defending. It was not the intention of the Legislature to I

A pass laws to oppress Wananchi. That cannot be true in a democratic state like Tanzania.'

There can be no doubt in the mind of any reasonable tribunal that these parts of the submissions B made by both sides of the case in the High Court raised issued of constitutionality of the provisions of s 148 of the Criminal Procedure Act. It follows therefore that the learned trial judge was correct in framing issues relating to the Constitutionality of s 148 and we so find.

C Mr Massaba also made submissions concerning the jurisdiction and procedure of the High Court in the enforcement of the Basic Rights, Freedoms and Duties enshrined in the Constitution, in view of what the trial judge had said on that point. In his ruling, Mwalusanya J stated inter alia:

D `A point in limine to be taken is as to whether the Bill of rights may be enforced when the procedure and rules for conducting such cases by the court are yet to be enacted by the Government as provided in art 30(4) of the Constitution. Counsel for the Republic did not address me on this point.

E My view is stated in the case of Marwa Wambura Magori v AC (in) High Court Misc Criminal Cause No 2/1988, and wish to reiterate here that it is not necessary to have such rules in order to enforce the Bill of Rights. The enforcement may be done by application in the form of Habeas Corpus, Mandamus, Prohibition, Cortiorari, Declarations and even by an application for bail as the case at hand.'

F Both Mr Massaba and Professor Fimbo agree with this view of the learned Trial Judge on this point. Professor Fimbo further informed us that the jurisdiction of the High Court is derived from three sources, two of which exist under arts 30(3), (4) and 108(1) and (2) of the Constitution, and the third G under s 5(2) of the Constitution (Consequential, Transitional and Temporary Provisions) Act 16 of 1984. According to the official English translation of the Swahili version of the Constitution.

Article 30(3) and (4) reads as follows:

H `30(3) where any person alleges that any provision of this part of this chapter or any law involving a basic right or duty has been, is being or is likely to be contravened in relation to him in any part of the United Republic, he may without prejudice to any other action or remedy lawfully available to him in respect of the same matter, institute proceedings for relief to the High Court.

I (4) Subject to the other provisions of this Constitution, the High Court shall have and may exercise original jurisdiction to hear and determine any matter brought before it in A pursuance of this section; and an Act of Parliament may make provisions with respect to -

(a) the procedure regulating the institution of proceedings under this section;

(b) the powers, practice and procedure of the High Court in relation to the hearing of proceedings instituted B under this section;

(c) ensuring the more efficient exercise of the powers to the High Court, the protection and enforcement of the basic rights, freedoms and duties in accordance with this Constitution.' C

We concur with the learned Trial Judge that the provisions of sub-arts (3) and (4) of art 30 sufficiently confer original jurisdiction upon the High Court to entertain proceedings in respect of actual or threatened violations of the Basic Rights, Freedoms and Duties. We also concur that until the D Parliament legislates under sub-art (4) the enforcement of the Basic Rights, Freedoms and Duties may be effected under the procedure and practice that is available to the High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, depending on the nature of the remedy sought. E

As to the provisions of article 108(1) and (2), it is provided therein as follows:

`108(1) There shall be a High Court of the United Republic (referred to as the "High Court") which shall have the jurisdiction and powers conferred on it by this Constitution or by any other legislation. F

(2) Where it is not expressly stated in this Constitution or in any other legislation that any specific matter shall first be heard and determined by certain court, the High Court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine that matter. In addition the High Court shall have jurisdiction in respect of any other matter which in accordance with legal G traditions and conventional practices obtaining is ordinarily to be heard and determined by the High Court. Save that, the provisions of this section shall apply subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal of Tanzania as provided for in this Constitution or in any other legislation.' H

We agree with Prof Fimbo that under the above cited provisions, the High Court has unlimited inherent original jurisdiction to adjudicate upon any legal matter unless there is express statutory provision to the contrary. However, we concur with Mr Massaba that since there is a specific I provision under the Constitution, that

A is, article 30(3) and (4) concerning the enforcement of the Basic Rights, Freedoms and duties in question, any proceedings for that purpose must be instituted under that specific article of the Constitution.

B With regard to the provisions of s 5(2) of the Constitution (Consequential, Transitional and Temporary Provisions Act 1984, it is states therein that:

`5(2) Notwithstanding the amendment of the Constitution and, in particular, the justiciability of the provisions relating to basic rights, freedoms and duties, no existing law or any provision in any existing law may, until after three years C from the date of the commencement of the Act, be construed by any court in the United Republic as being unconstitutional or otherwise inconsistent with any provision of the Constitution.'

D On a proper construction of the above cited provisions, we are, with due respect to Prof Fimbo, unable to accept his learned advice to the effect that the provisions in question create or confer jurisdiction on the High Court to adjudicate upon the constitutionality of any law of the land. It is apparent in our view that these provisions deal with the consequences of introducing a justiciable Bill E of Rights and Duties into the Constitution, by providing for a transitional period of grace of three years when the Government could put its own house in order, so to speak, by making appropriate amendments to existing law. That this is so is borne out by the next sub-provision (3) of s 5 which F reads:

`(3) The President may, at any time before 30 June 1985, by order published in the Gazette, make amendments to any existing law as may appear to him to be necessary or expedient for bringing that law into conformity with the G provisions of the Act and the Constitution or for giving effect, or enabling effect to be given to these provisions, and where the President makes an order under this section in relation to any law which is applicable to Zanzibar as well as to Mainland Tanzania, that order shall have effect so as to amend that law in relation to any person or matter connected with Zanzibar as well as with Mainland Tanzania in respect of any matter within the legislative H competency of the Parliament of the United Republic, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary in the interpretation of Laws and General Clauses Act, 1972.'

Let us now turn to the second supplementary ground of appeal. Mr Massaba has submitted in effect, I in the alternative to the first supplementary ground, that the only issue raised in the High Court concerned the constitutionality of A the provisions of para (c) of ss (5) of s 148 of the Criminal Procedure Act, and that the learned Trial Judge was therefore wrong in framing issues to cover the whole of s 148. Professor Fimbo on the other hand has advised us to the effect that the learned Trial Judge was correct in framing issues covering the whole of s 148 since para (c) of ss (5) is inseparable from the other provisions of s 148. B

1993 TLR p31

NYALALI CJ

With due respect to both Counsel, we think there is a common misdirection on their part concerning what the learned Trial Judge actually did. There is nothing on the record of the proceedings in the C High Court to suggest that the issues were framed on the whole of s 148. What is self-evident is that issues were framed on only two sub-sections of s 148. In a part of his ruling, the learned Trial Judge states:

`Before the application was heard I informed the State Attorney Mr Muna, that the application raised matters of great D public and Constitutional importance, as this court had to decide as to the Constitutionality of these provisions which restrict courts of law to grant bail to accused persons. And so the State Attorney was afforded opportunity to prepare himself and was given by me a list of the issues that needed to be examined closely. The issues framed E involved the whole of ss (4) and (5) of s 148 of the CPA. . . .'

From the record of the proceedings in the High Court, it is obvious that only the provisions of para (e) of ss (5) of s 148 were in issue between the parties. Was the learned Trial Judge correct in framing F issues to include the provisions of ss (4)?

Were these provisions, as Prof Fimbo advises, inseparable from para (e) of ss (5) which was in issue?

Let us have a close look at these provisions as amended by Act 12 of 1987 and Act 10 of 1989: G

`(4) Notwithstanding anything in this section contained, no police officer or court shall, after a person is arrested and while he is awaiting trial or appeal, admit that person to bail if the Director of Public Prosecutions certifies in writing H that it is likely that the safety or interests of the Republic would thereby be prejudiced.

(4A) A certificate, issued by the Director of Public Prosecutions under this section shall take effect from the date it is filed in the court, or notified to the officer in charge of a police station, and shall remain in effect until the proceedings concerned are concluded or the Director of Public Prosecution withdraws it. I

1993 TLR p32

NYALALI CJ

A (5) A police officer in charge of a police station, or a court before whom an accused person is brought or appears, shall not admit that person to bail if -

(a) that person is accused of murder or treason;

(b) it appears that the accused person has previously been sentenced to imprisonment for a term exceeding three years;

B (c) it appears that the accused person has previously been granted bail by a court and failed to comply with the conditions of the bail or absconded;

(d) the accused person is charged with an offence alleged to have been committed while he was released on bail by a court of law;

C (e) the act or any of the acts constituting the offence with which a person is charged consists of a serious assault causing grievous bodily harm on or threat of violence to another person, or having or possessing a firearm or an explosive;

D (f) it appears to the court that it is necessary that the accused person be kept in custody for his own protection;

(g) the offence for which the person is charged involved property whose value exceeds ten million shillings, unless that person pays cash deposit equivalent to half the value of the property, and the rest is secured by E execution of a bond; provided that this shall not apply in the case of police bail.'

It seems to us that the following points are obvious. First, the provisions of ss (4) deal with a situation which is entirely different from that covered by the provisions of ss (5). Second, each of the F paragraphs (a) to (g) concerns a situation which is entirely different from that dealt with in any of the other paragraphs. It follows therefore that the provisions of para (c) or ss (5) are separable from the provisions of paras (a), (b), (c), (d), (f) and (g) of ss (5), and also separable from the provisions of ss (4) of s 148 of the Criminal Procedure Act. We find therefore that the learned Trial Judge was wrong G in framing issues covering the whole of ss (4) and ss (5) of s 148.

Next we turn to the first main ground of appeal. Mr Massaba has submitted to the effect that on a proper and true interpretation of the provisions of para (c) of ss (5) of s 148 of the Criminal H Procedure Act, a meaning can be ascertained which fits into the provisions of article 30(2)(b) of the Constitution, which, according to him, permits the Parliament to enact laws under certain circumstances which are derogative or restrictive of the Basic Rights, Freedoms and Duties of the I human being. It was part of Mr Massaba's submission that the provisions of para (c) of ss (5) of s 148 which derogate from the basic right to personal liberty guaranteed by article 5 fall within the scope of article A 30(2)(b) of the Constitution, and are therefore constitutionally valid. Without prejudice to this submission, Mr Massaba also submitted to the effect that the provisions of article 15(2) of the Constitution permits the enactment of laws such as para (e) of ss (5) of s 148. B

Professor Fimbo on the other hand has advised us to hold the contrary view regarding article 15 and 30(2) of the Constitution in respect of the provisions of para (e) of ss (5) of s 148 of the Criminal Procedure Act.

Let us first have a close examination of article 15 of the Constitution. But a word of caution first. C Since our Constitution is established in the Kiswahili language, we must constantly bear in mind that the controlling version is the Kiswahili one and not the English version. When that is done, it is immediately noticed that the English version of para (b) of sub-art (2) of article 15 is incorrect insofar D as it includes the words `or upon reasonable suspicion of having committed a criminal offence'. Fortunately for us, the case before us does not involve that part of article 15. We are only concerned with sub-arts (1) and (2) para (a) which state:

`(1) Man's freedom is inviolable and every person is entitled to his personal freedom. E

(2) For the purposes of protecting the right to personal freedom, no person shall be subject to arrest, restriction, detention, exile or deprivation of his liberty in any other manner save in the following cases:

(a) in certain circumstances, and subject to a procedure, prescribed by law; or F

(b) . . . (not applicable).'

Mr Massaba has contended, correctly in our view, that the basic right to persona liberty may be G derogated from or restricted within the scope of the exceptions stated under paras (a) and (b) of article 15. He however goes further and contends that the provisions of para (e) of ss (5) of s 148 of the Criminal Procedure Act, fall squarely within the scope of para (a) above cited. Professor Fimbo has advised us to the contrary. H

In our considered opinion, we think there is a need to bear in mind certain basic concepts, principles and characteristics concerning the Bill of Rights and Duties enshrined in our Constitution, in order to interpret the Constitution and the laws of the land properly. First, the Constitution of the United I Republic recognizes and

A guarantees not only basic human rights, but also, unlike most constitutions of countries of the West, recognizes and guarantees basic human duties. It seems that the framers of our Constitution realized that the individual human being does not exist or live in isolation, but exists and lives in society. Our Constitution shares this characteristic with the Constitution in India which contains B `Fundamental Duties' of every citizen of India in Part IVA of the Constitution. There is however a significant difference between our situation and that of India on this point. First, the fundamental or basic duties recognized by our Constitution are attributed to human beings, whereas those under the Indian Constitution are attributed to Indian citizens only. Second, under the Constitution of India, C fundamental rights are dealt with in a separate part of the Constitution (Part III) and fundamental duties in another separate part (Part IVA). In our situation, both fundamental or basic rights and duties are dealt with in one single part of the Constitution, that is, Part III. This location of basic rights D and duties in one single part of the Constitution of the United Republic if both symbolic and significant. It is a symbolism and an expression of a constitutionally recognized co-existence of the individual human being and society, as well as the co-existence of rights and duties of the individual E and society.

This view is supported by the principles underlying The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights which was adopted by the Organisation of African Unity in 1981 and came into force on 21 F October 1986 after the necessary ratifications.

Tanzania signed the Charter on 31 May 1982 and ratified it on 18 February 1984. Since our Bill of rights and Duties was introduced into the Constitution under the Fifth Amendment in February 1985, G that is, slightly over three years after Tanzania signed the Charter, and about a year after ratification, account must be taken of that Charter in interpreting our Bill of Rights and Duties.

The preamble to the Charter states:

H `The African States members of the Organization of African Unity, parties to the present convention entitled "African Charter on Human and People's Rights".

. . .

Taking into consideration the virtues of their historical tradition and the values of African civilization which should I inspire and characterize their reflection on the concept of human and peoples' rights;

1993 TLR p35

NYALALI CJ

Recognizing on the one hand, that fundamental human rights stem from attributes of human beings, which justified A their international protection, and on the other hand that the reality and respect of peoples' rights should necessarily guarantee human rights;

Considering that the enjoyment of rights and freedoms also implies to performance of duties on the part of everyone; . . .' B

It seems evident in our view that the Bill of rights and Duties embodied in our Constitution is consistent with the concepts underlying the African Charter on Human and People's Rights as stated in the Preamble to the Charter. C

The second important principle or characteristic to be borne in mind when interpreting our Constitution is a corollary of the reality of co-existence of the individual and society, and also the D reality of co-existence of rights and duties of the individual on the one hand, and the collective or communitarian rights and duties of society on the other. In effect this co-existence means that the rights and duties of the individual are limited by the rights and duties of society, and vice versa. Thus under article 29(5) it is stated:

`(5) For the purposes of the better enjoyment by all persons of the rights and freedoms specified in this Constitution, E every person shall so conduct himself and his affairs as not to prejudice the rights and freedom of others or the public interests.'

The same principle or characteristic is reflected in article 30(1) which states: F

`The rights and freedoms whose basic content have been set out in this Constitution shall not be exercised by any person in such a manner as to occasion the infringement or termination of the rights and freedoms of others or the public interest.' G

We are aware that such limitations to basic rights and duties are not unique to Tanzania. They are inherent in any society and are to be found in many Constitutions and legal systems. Thus the merits and demerits of any legal system insofar as the question of Human Rights is concerned depend H upon the extent to which a particular legal system succeeds or fails to harmonize the basic rights and freedoms of the individual on the one hand, and the collective or communitarian rights and duties of Society on the other.

It is in the light of these considerations that the provisions of s 148(5)(e) of the Criminal Procedure I Act and those of article

1993 TLR p36

NYALALI CJ

A 15(2)(a) and article 30(2)(b) must be construed as to their meaning and effect. We must start with article 15 which we have already reproduced earlier. As already observed, Mr Massaba, learned Principal State Attorney, contends that the provisions of s 148(5)(e) which deprive an accused B person of his or her personal liberty by prohibiting the grant of bail are constitutionally valid, since such deprivation is done in respect of circumstances and according to a procedure prescribed by law. According to his argument, the requirements of article 15(2)(c) are fulfilled, since the prescribed circumstances are the offences charged, and the prescribed procedure is implied under the Criminal C Procedure Act, in that the accused has opportunity to be heard before he is remanded into custody by the subordinate court. In response to our question whether such procedure is meaningful when it does not affect the outcome in the sense that the accused is bound to be denied bail whatever he may say on his behalf, Mr Massaba replied to the effect that although such hearing is of no D consequence on the issue of denial of bail, it may result in the dismissal of the charge when for instance, such charge discloses no offence known to the law of the land.

E Unfortunately, the learned Trial Judge did not specifically consider the issue whether the requirements of article 15(2)(a) are fulfilled by the provisions of s 148(5)(e). What he stated on this point is as follows:

F `Article 15 of our Constitution provides for Rights to liberty such that no one may be deprived of his freedoms except in accordance with the law. Now s 148 of the CPA derogates from the right to liberty, and so it is ex-facie ultra vires the provisions of article 15 of the Constitution. It is for the Republic to prove that s 148 of the CPA is saved by arts 30 and 31 of the Constitution which permit Parliament to enact laws which derogate from the fundamental rights G enshrined in the Constitution by showing that the statute in question is in the public interest and justifiable on national security grounds. The Republic has to prove on a balance of probabilities.'

H It would seem that the learned Trial Judge is of the view that every statute which derogates from the right to personal liberty `is ex-facie ultra vires the provisions of article 15'. This view is obviously wrong because article 15 itself provides for derogation under sub-art (2).

I On a close examination of article 15, it is apparent that there are two situations under which a person may be denied or deprived of personal liberty under the same article. For purposes of clarity we repeat the provisions of article 15. A `15 (1) Man's freedom is inviolable and every person is entitled to his personal freedom.

1993 TLR p37

(2) for the purpose of protecting the right to personal freedom, no person shall be subject to arrest, restriction, B detention, exile or deprivation of his liberty in any other manner save in the following cases:

(a) in certain circumstances, and subject to a procedure, prescribed by law; or

(b) in the execution of the sentence or order of a court in respect of which he has been convicted.' C

It is obvious from these provisions that a person may be deprived or denied of personal liberty under article 15 only under the conditions stipulated under paras (a) and (b). In the case before us, it is para (a) which is relevant. That paragraph sanctions the deprivation or denial of liberty under `certain D circumstances' and `subject to a procedure', both of which must be `prescribed by law'.

In our considered opinion, there is no difficulty in finding the `certain circumstances' prescribed by s 148(5)(c) for deprivation or denial of personal liberty through the prohibition of bail. This is provided E for in the words underlined hereunder:

`(5) A police officer in charge of a police station, or a court before whom an accused person is brought or appears shall not admit that person to bail, if - F

(a) . . .

(b) . . .

(c) . . .

(d) . . .

(e) the act or any of the acts constituting the offence with which a person is charged consists of a serious G assault causing grievous harm on or threat of violence to other person, or of having or possessing a firearm or an explosive.'

There is however a real problem in finding the requisite prescribed procedure for denying bail to the H accused. As already mentioned, Mr Massaba, learned Principal State Attorney, contends in effect that such procedure is implied under the Criminal Procedure Act in that there is nothing under s 148 which prohibits the court from hearing the accused in respect of bail before remanding him into I custody. With due respect to Mr Massaba, we are satisfied that

A he is wrong, and that his error is a result of a misconception as to what amounts to `a procedure' in terms of para (a) of article 15.

From a close examination of sub-art (2) of article 15, it is apparent that its wording is so emphatically protective of the right to personal liberty that the procedure envisaged under para (a) cannot be B anything but a procedure of safeguards by which one may be deprived or denied of personal liberty. In the words of the Supreme Court of India which considered a similar provision in the Indian Constitution in the case of Maneka Gandhi v Union of India (1) at 621.

C `Is the prescription of some sort of procedure enough or must the procedure comply with any particular requirements? Obviously procedure cannot be arbitrary, unfair or unreasonable.'

We are unable to find under s 148 or elsewhere any prescription for the requisite procedure for denial D of bail in terms of para (a) of article 15(2) of the Constitution of this country. It follows therefore that s 148(5)(e) of the Act is violative of article 15(2) of the Constitution and we so find.

E We must now examine whether the provisions of s 148(5)(e) are also violative of article 13(6)(a) of the Constitution. That article deals with the basic right to be heard before being condemned. It states:

`(6) For the purposes of ensuring equality before the law the state shall make provisions:

F (a) that very person, when his rights and obligations are being determined, be entitled to a fair hearing by the court of law or other body concerned and be guaranteed of the right of appeal or to another legal remedy against the decision of courts of law and other bodies which decide on his rights or interests founded on G statutory provisions.'

The learned Trial Judge in the case before us was of the view that an accused person is not given any meaningful opportunity of being heard before he is denied bail under s 148(5)(e) of the Criminal H Procedure Act. In our view the provisions of article 13(6)(a) are really inapplicable to s 148(5)(e). We say so because that part of the article concerns only situations `when . . . rights and obligations are being determined' and not situations such as under s 148(5)(e) when the court make a particular order, without discretion.

I Next we turn to article 13(6)(b) of the Constitution to see whether the Trial Judge was correct in holding to the effect that the relevant provisions of s 148(5)(e) A were violative of that article. The paragraph reads:

`(6) For the purposes of ensuring equality before the law, the state shall make provisions - B

(a) . . . (cited above)

(b) every person charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed to be innocent until he is proved guilty.'

This is another article of which English translation does not correctly reflect the Swahili version, C which is the controlling version. The concept contained in the Swahili version is broader than the English translation. A proper translation of the article should read along the following lines:

`No one charged with a criminal offence shall be treated like a convict until his guilt is proved.' D

On a proper interpretation of s 148(5)(e), we agree with a part of what Msumi J stated in the case of Republic v Peregrin Mrope (2) where he stated, inter alia: E

`On the question of unconstitutionality, I am of the view that s 148(5)(e) does not contravene the provision of article 13(6)(b), ... Denying bail to accused person does not necessarily amount to treating such a person like a convicted criminal.' F

With regard to the provisions of article 13(4) and (5) which prohibit discriminatory legislation incompatible with the basic right to equality before the law, the learned Trial Judge held to the effect that s 148, which prohibited bail for certain offences, was violative of article 13(4) and (5). In coming to that conclusion, the learned Trial Judge was influenced by the meaning of discrimination, as G defined by the Court of Appeal of the Cook Islands in the case of Clark v Karika (3) also by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Lindsley v Natural Carbonic Gas Co (4) and the case of Megowan v Maryland (5). With due respect to the learned Trial Judge, he seems to have H misdirected himself and the correct interpretation of `discrimination' as envisaged under article 13(4) and (5). The term `discrimination' is specifically defined under sub-art (5) as follows:

`For the purpose of this section the expression "discriminatory" I

A means affording different treatment to different persons attributable only or mainly to their respective descriptions by race, place of origin, political opinion, colour, occupation or creed whereby persons of one such description are subject to disabilities or restrictions to which persons of another description are not made subject or are accorded B privileges or advantages which are not accorded to persons of such description.'

This is another English translation which is incorrect in certain parts. The word `occupation' used therein is not the correct rendering of the Swahili expression `hali yao ya maisha'. We think the C correct English translation consistent with the underlying concept should be something like, `Their status in life'.

Bearing in mind, as we must, this interpretation, we are satisfied that the selective prohibition against D bail contained under s 148(5)(e) cannot be said to be discriminatory in terms of the Constitution. This is because the accused persons who are denied bail are so denied on the basis of their actions or conduct.

Finally, we must consider whether the learned Trial Judge was correct in holding that the relevant provisions of s 148 were violative of the Doctrine of Separation of Powers stated under article 4. After E reviewing several decisions by a number of courts in Commonwealth countries, the learned Trial Judge concluded:

`Pursuant to that reasoning, which I adopt, I am of the view that the fettering or removing of judicial discretion by the F legislature in matters of granting bail under s 148 of the CPA is unconstitutional. . . .'

With due respect to the learned Trial Judge, we think he came to a wrong conclusion. In our view, the G Doctrine of Separation of Powers can be said to be infringed when either the Executive or the Legislature takes over the function of the Judicature involving the interpretation of the laws and the adjudication of rights and duties in disputes either between individual persons or between the state H and individual persons. Legislation which prohibits the grant of bail to persons charged with specified offences doe not in our view amount to such a take over of judicial functions by the Legislature. Such legislation do exist in several countries of the Commonwealth, such as Zimbabwe and The Gambia, where their constitutional validity has been confirmed in cases like Bull v Minister of Home Affairs (6) I and Attorney-General of the Gambia v Momeduu Jobo (7).

1993 TLR p41

NYALALI CJ

In the end however, when all is said and done, we find that the provisions of s 148(5)e) are violative A of article 15(2)(a) of the Constitution. To the extent that s 148(5)(e) violates the Constitution, it would be null and void in terms of article 64(5) of the Constitution, unless it is saved by the general derogation clauses, that is, article 30 and 31, which permits certain derogations from the basic rights of the individual. B

Article 30 and 31 states as follows:

`30(1) The rights and freedoms whose basic content have been set out in this Constitution shall not be exercised by any person in such a manner as to occasion the infringement or termination of the rights and freedoms of others or C the public interest.

(2) It is hereby declared that no provision contained in this Part of this Constitution, which stipulates the basic human rights, freedoms and duties, shall be construed as invalidating any existing law or prohibiting the enactment of any law or the doing of any lawful act under such law, making provision for - D

(a) ensuring that the rights and freedoms of others or the public interest are not prejudiced by the misuse of the individual rights and freedoms;

(b) ensuring the interests of defence, public safety, public order, public morality, public health, rural and urban E development and utilization of mineral resources or the development or utilization of any other property in such manner as to promote the public benefit;

(c) ensuring the executions of the judgment or order of court given or made in any civil or criminal proceedings; F

(d) the protection of the reputation, rights and freedoms of others or the private lives of persons involved in any court proceedings, prohibiting the disclosure of confidential information, or the safeguard of the dignity, authority and independence of the courts; G

(e) imposing restrictions, supervision and control over the establishment, management and operation of societies and private companies in the country; or

(f) enabling any other things to be done which promotes, enhances or protects the national interest generally.' H

Article 31:

`31(1) Notwithstanding the provision of s 30(2), an Act of Parliament shall not be invalid for the reason only that it provides for the taking, during periods of emergency, or in ordinary times in relation to individuals who are believed to be conducting them- I

1993 TLR p42

NYALALI CJ

A selves in a manner that derogate from the provisions of ss 14 and 15 of this Constitution.

(2) No measure referred to in s (1) shall be taken in pursuance of any law during any period of emergency, or in ordinary times in relation to any person, save only to the extent to which they are necessary and justifiable for dealing B with the situation that exists during the period of emergency or in ordinary times dealing with the situation created by the conduct of the individual in question.

(3) Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the deprivation of any person of the right to live except in respect of death caused as a result of acts of war.

C (4) In this and the following sections of this Part `period of emergency' means any period during which the proclamation of a state of emergency made by the President in the exercise of the powers conferred on him by s 32, continuous in force.'

D The question that arises is whether s 148(5)(e) fits into the provisions of article 30 or 31. The learned Trial Judge dealt with this aspect of the case and stated:

`Therefore if the Republic wants bail to be denied under the provisions of article 30 of the Constitution on the ground E that the provisions of s 148(4) and (5) of the CPA are in the public interest the said provisions of s 148(4) and (5) of the CPA must pass the proportionality test on a balance of probabilities. Similarly when the Republic wants the court to refuse bail to the accused person under the provision of article 31 of the Constitution on the ground that the provisions of s 148(4) and (5) were enacted on national security grounds the Republic has to prove and establish F that these provisions of s 148(4) and (5) of the CPA are necessary and reasonably justifiable. If the Republic overcomes both these two hurdles then only then, may the courts refuse bail, but after affording the accused person opportunity to challenge the Republic's statements and remarks.'

G It is apparent from the above cited paragraph, that the learned Trial Judge is of the view that the answer to the question whether s 148(5)(e) fits into the provisions of article 30 depends upon proof by evidence adduced by the prosecution. With due respect to the learned Trial Judge, we do not think that this is a question of evidence at all. On the contrary, it is a question of law. Mr Massaba correctly H confined his submissions to the provisions of article 30. Obviously, article 31 is not relevant to the case before us. It is Mr Massaba's contention that if s 148(5)(e) is found to fall short of the requirements of article 15(2)(a), it is nevertheless validated by the provisions of para (b) of sub-art (2) I of article 30 of the Constitution.

1993 TLR p43

NYALALI CJ

We accept the proposition that any legislation which falls within the parameters of article 30 is A constitutionally valid, notwithstanding that it may be violative of basic rights of the individual. But, and this is the crucial but, such legislation must fit squarely within the provisions of the article. Any statute which is so broad as to fall partly within and partly outside the parameters of the article would not be validated for the reason to be given hereafter. Let us therefore see whether section 148 (5)(e) falls B fully within para (b) of sub-art (2) of article 30.

It is apparent that s 148(5)(e) would be validated if it can be construed as being wholly for `ensuring the interests of defence, public safety, public order' in terms of para (b) of sub-art (2) of article 30. C Since the objective of the relevant paragraph of the Constitution is the `ensuring' or protection of the `the interests of defence, public safety, public order', etc. s 148(5)(e) would be saved if the denial of bail is aimed only at accused persons who are capable of being a danger or threat to the interests of D defence, public safety or public order.

In our considered opinion the provisions of s 148(5)(e) are so broad that they encompass even accused persons who cannot reasonably be construed to be such a danger in terms of the relevant paragraph of the Constitution. For instance, these provisions cover an accused person who, while E defending himself or his property against robbers uses excessive force resulting in the death of one or more of the robbers. They also cover an accused person who finds someone committing adultery with that person's spouse, and being provoked, seriously assaults and causes grievous bodily harm F to the adulterer. Similarly, the provisions also encompass an accused person who, to the knowledge of everyone, inherits a firearm from his or her parent but forgot to obtain a firearm licence, thereby unwittingly committing the offence of being in possession of a firearm without a licence. G Section 148(5)(e) would also cover every person who, though licensed to possess a firearm, forgets to renew his or her licence within the prescribed period. Many more such examples may be given. None of these persons can reasonably be said to be dangerous. H

It is thus plain that the provisions of s 148(5)(e) are so broadly drafted that they are capable of depriving personal liberty not only to persons properly considered to be dangerous, but even to persons who cannot be considered to be dangerous in terms of the meaning of para (b) of sub-art (2) of article 30. Such a statutory provision amounts to the Kiswahili proverbial rat-trap which catches I both

A rats and humans, without distinction. A provision of that nature attempts to protect society by endangering society. Section 148(5)(e) is such a provision. It does not therefore fit into article 30(2)(a) of the Constitution and is consequently null and void.

In the final analysis therefore, but for different reasons, we agree with Mwalusanya J that s 148(5)(e) B is unconstitutional and is therefore struck out of the statute book of the country. This means that the courts have discretion to grant bail to persons accused of the offences specified under s 148(5)(e) in accordance with the law as it existed before the enactment of s 148(5)(e). This discretion ought C always to be exercised judicially by the courts taking into account both the interests of the individual, and the community of which the individual is a part.

Thus we dismiss the appeal. Since the respondent is already a free man, we make no order in D respect of him.

E

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v NELSON RUPIA 1993 TLR 44 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Lugakingira J

F CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 17 OF 1991

11 June, 1991

Flynote

G Criminal Practice and procedure - Adjournments - Compliance with s 225(4) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.

-Headnote

At the expiration of an aggregate of sixty days the magistrate ordered another adjournment although there was no certificate from the Regional Crimes Officer stating the need and grounds for adjournment.

H Held: At the expiration of an aggregate sixty days and no certificate is filed by the Regional Crimes Officer the court must either proceed to hear the case or discharge the accused if the prosecution is unable to proceed with the hearing;

Case Information

I Order accordingly.

No case referred to.

1993 TLR p45

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira J: On 18 August 1989 the accused was arraigned before the District court at Kisutu on A a charge of stealing by public servant c/ss 265 and 270 of the Penal Code. There has been no further progress in the case, the prosecution having consistently claimed that investigations were not complete. Meanwhile, the prosecution has been allowed to get away with adjournments as if no law B governed the matter.

As provided under s 225(4) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985, it is unlawful with certain offences to adjourn a case for an aggregate exceeding sixty days except under the circumstances set out in paras (a), (b) and (c) thereof. These are: C

(a) At the expiration of an aggregate sixty days a case may lawfully be adjourned for a further period not exceeding a similar aggregate if the Regional Crimes Officer files a certificate in court stating the need and grounds for adjournment. D

(b) At the expiration of the aggregate in (a) further adjournment not exceeding the same aggregate has to be granted where a State Attorney files a similar certificate.

(c) At the expiration of the aggregate in (b), and if the DPP files a similar certificate, the court would further adjourn the case, but not for a period exceeding an aggregate of twenty-four E months from the date of the first adjournment in (a). When no certificate is filed ss (5) requires the court to proceed to hear the case or to discharge the accused if the prosecution is unable to proceed with the hearing. F

These are mandatory provisions and the court has no discretion in the matter. Adjournment granted in contravention of same is unlawful and, therefore, void.

In this case the accused was first brought to court and his plea taken on 18 August 1989. The court G had discretion to grant adjournments for an aggregate not exceeding sixty days. Since no hearing intervened after the plea was taken, I reckon that this aggregate was achieved by 17 October 1989. Beyond that date and since the hearing did not then commence, further adjournment required the H certificate of the Regional Crimes Officer. There was no such certificate and, interestingly, it is precisely on that date that the presiding resident magistrate purported to order further adjournment. I am satisfied that the order was unlawful and anything thereafter was null and void.

I have asked myself whether the Regional Crimes Officer can be I

A permitted to file a certificate now but the answer is no. There is no power to allow such a procedure at this stage because the only course allowed to the court is to proceed with the hearing or to discharge the accused. I therefore quash the adjournment order made on 17 October 1989 and the subsequent proceedings and direct the District Court to require the prosecution to call evidence B or to discharge the accused if the prosecution is unable to do so immediately.

D

[zRPz]ATTORNEY GENERAL v W.K. BUTAMBALA 1993 TLR 46 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Makame JJA and Ramadhani JJA and Mapigano Ag JA

E CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 37 OF 1991

14 June, 1991

F (From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, Mwalusanya, J.)

Flynote

Constitutional Law - Jurisdiction of the High Court to enforce basic rights enshrined in the Constitution - Judge raises issue of constitutionality without there being a complaint - Whether judge has jurisdiction.

G Bill of Rights - Procedure and practice of the High Court in enforcing constitutional bill of rights - Judge raises issue of constitutionality without there being any complaint to court - Whether procedurally proper.

-Headnote

H The respondent, advocate, handled three legal aid briefs. After the sessions were closed the respondent wrote to the Trial Judge the usual letter to have his fees assessed in terms of the Legal Aid (Criminal Proceedings) Act, No. 21 of 1969. After receiving the letter the judge thought that the advocates remuneration of between Shs 120/= and Shs 500/= in each case was grossly inadequate and contravened the provisions of Article 23 of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania. I The judge instructed the District Registrar of the High Court to open a Miscellaneous Criminal Cause, set the hearing date of the application and serve the parties who were W.K. A Butambala and the Attorney-General.

The parties attended the hearing. The State-Attorney who represented the Attorney General raised a preliminary point urging that there should have been a petition in terms of Article 30(3) of the Constitution to the High Court moving the Court into action. The state attorney was overruled, hearing B continued and the judge decided that the paltry sums mentioned in s 4 of Act 21 of 1969 were void because they contravened a constitutional right to a fair remuneration for work done. The learned judge construed s 4 of Act 21 of 1969 as modified to bring it into conformity with the provisions of the Bill of Rights. Then the judge assessed the fees payable to the advocate at Shs 10,000/= for the C three cases (almost 667% of the maximum the advocate would have got under s 4 of Act 21 of 1969).

The Attorney-General appealed challenging the judge for raising the issue of constitutionality suo moto. The procedure followed was also attacked.

Held: (i) The learned judge improperly raised the issue of constitutionality as there was no legitimately permissible occasion for him to do so; D

(ii) If one relies on s 5(1) of Act 16 of 1984 he has to wait until the matter arises in the course of proceedings so that the court gets the opportunity to construe; otherwise he has to petition under Article 30(3) of the Constitution as usual;

(iii) Section 4 of Act 21 of 1969 is still good law. E

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Cases referred to:

1. Steele v. Attorney General [1967] AIR SL 1.
2. D.P.P. v. Daudi Pete, [1993] TLR 22. F
3. Bull v. Minister of Home Affairs [1986] (1) ZLR 202.
4. Grace Stuart Ibingira v. Uganda [1966] EA 445 CA.

K.A. Mussa, for the appellant.

Rugarabamu, for the respondent. G

[zJDz]Judgment

Makame, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

The respondent is an advocate. One of the responsibilities of advocates in Tanzania is to accept H assignments fro appropriate authorities in the Judiciary to defend accused persons. Mr Butambala accepted three such briefs and handled them before Mwalusanya J. They were Criminal Sessions Cases No 66 of 1988; 18 of 1988 and No 113 of 1989. After the Sessions had closed he wrote to the Trial Judge the usual letter (not in the record but which was shown to us during the hearing) to have I his fees assessed in terms of

A the Legal Aid (Criminal Proceedings) Act 21 of 1969. That triggered off the while thing and set in motion a number of processes culminating in this appeal. After receiving the letter the learned Judge wrote the following administrative minute:

B District Registrar

1. Under s 4 of the Legal Aid (Criminal Proceedings) Act No 21/1969, the advocate is to be remunerated between Shs 120/= to Shs 500/= in each case. Such a paltry sum is outrageous and needs to be looked into.

C 2. Under the Bill of Rights in Art 23 of our Constitution every person who undertakes to do any work has the right to receive a just and favourable remuneration. He is entitled to receive remuneration according to the quantity and quality of the work done. Now it would appear that Act No 21/1969 infringes the above cited provision of the Bill of Rights. Therefore unless D it can be shown on a balance of probabilities by the Republic that under Art 30(2) of the Constitution the said Act No 21/1969 is in public interest, it cannot prevail.

3. Therefore under s 5(1) of Act No 16/1984 I intend to construe s 4 of Act No 21/1969 as modified so as to bring it into conformity with the provisions of the Bill of Rights. Therefore I E will regard the paltry sums mentioned in s 4 of Act No 21/1969 as void and modified, so that now it should read that an advocate shall be `entitled to be remunerated according to the quantity and quality of the work done'. For this view see my judgments in Bernado s/o Ephraim v Holaria Patory & Another: Mwanza (PC) Civil Appeal No 70/1989; and F Magdalena Zacharia v Daniel Zacharia: Mwanza (PC) Civil Appeal No 23/1989. See also the case of Re Maangi: [1968] EA 637 (K) by Farfel J.

4. Open a Misc Crm Cause No 50/90 and add to the title: In the Matter of s 4 of the Legal Aid G (Crim Proceeedings) Act No 21/1969, and In the Matter of Musoma Crim Sessions Cases No 66/1988; 18/1988; and 113/1989. W K Butambala - Applicant and Attorney-General as respondent.

5. Set this application for hearing on 27/7/1990 and serve the above minute to the State Attorney and Mr Butambala immediately.

H (SGD) J L MWALUSANYA

JUDGE.

24/7/1990.

I The District Registrar communicated the contents of the above minute to Mr Butambala.

1993 TLR p49

MAKAME JA

By a Notice dated 24 July 1990, addressed to the Principal State Attorney, Mwanza, and copied to Mr A Butambala, the hearing was fixed for 27 July 1990 as ordered by the learned Judge. On the return date Mr Malansha, learned State Attorney, for the Attorney-General informed the court that the Chambers were not ready to proceed as they had not yet made the necessary preparations, so they B were asking for an adjournment. A new hearing date was fixed for four days hence and on that second date, the Chambers, now represented by Mr Mussa, learned Senior State Attorney, told the learned Judge they were not ready so he asked for an adjournment until 3 August 1990. His lordship obliged: C

`Hearing on 3/8/1990. Parties warned.'

On the hearing date Mr Mussa, taking a preliminary point, challenged the whole exercise, urging that there should have been a petition in terms of article 30(3) of the Constitution of the United Republic of D Tanzania, to the High Court moving the court into action. Mr Butambala, who appeared in person, urged that the matter was properly before the court as under s 5(1) of Act 16 of 1984, the Constitution (Consequential, Transitional and Temporary Provisions) Act, it was not necessary to file E a petition.

In an expeditious Ruling on the same day, Mr Mussa was overruled. Incredible though it may sound, the substantive hearing proceeded on the same day. On 22nd of January this year the learned Trial Judge, in a rather lengthy judgment, reviewing an array of authorities, held thus: F

`In the upshot, under s 5(1) of Act No 16/1984 I hereby construe s 4 of the Act No 21/1969 to be modified so as to bring it into conformity with the provisions of our Bill of Rights. Therefore I will take it that the paltry sums mentioned in s 4 of Act No 21/1969 are void, and modified to read that an advocate in local aid cases shall be entitled to be G remunerated according to the quantity and quality of the work done as assessed by the certifying authority.'

The learned Judge then proceeded to assess the fees to be paid to Mr Butambala for the three H cases referred to. He ordered that the learned Advocate should be paid Shs 5,000/= for one of the cases, and Shs 2,500/= for each of the other two cases, total Shs 10,000/=, that is, arithmetically, almost 667% of the maximum of what Mr Butambala could have hoped to get under s 4 of the Local Aid (Criminal Proceedings) Act 21 of 1969. I

1993 TLR p50

MAKAME JA

A The Attorney-General was not satisfied with the High Court decision so he took this appeal. He was represented before us by the same Mr Mussa. The respondent, who was present in Court, was represented by Mr Rugarabamu, the most senior of private advocates based here in Mwanza.

B The Attorney-General's Memorandum consisted of five grounds of appeal. We propose to deal with the first two grounds first. In those two grounds the appellant complained that the learned Judge was in error to raise the issue of constitutionality without there being a complaint `from the allegedly aggrieved respondent'. The second ground of appeal urged that as the said application raised C matters of both fact and law, it was wrong to arrive at a decision without there being a factual basis for such a decision.

In his address to the court on those two grounds Mr Mussa submitted that there should have been a D complaint made by Mr Butambala, with material facts, that he has a Constitutional right, (in this case the right to receive a just and favourable remuneration for work done) and that that right had been infringed. He referred us to Steele v Attorney-General (1), a decision of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone. In the present case Mr Butambala merely asked for his fees to be assessed in E accordance with the existing law and nothing more. The Criminal Sessions case records allegedly giving rise to the High Court proceedings were not made available for the purpose. Along with this Mr Mussa submitted that it was wrong for the Judge to hold that he had competent jurisdiction by virtue F of Act 16 of 1984 referred to so that he could proceed the way he did even in the absence of a complaint. The learned Judge proceeded suo motu which he was not empowered to do. If Mr Butambala was a complainant then there is a provision available - article 30(3) and (4). Mr Mussa further added that the learned Judge erred in his observation that under article 30(3) the filing of a G petition to the High Court is not the only recourse because it is provided that that avenue is `without prejudice to any other action or remedy lawfully available to him in respect of the same matter'. The point Mr Mussa was making here is that the learned Judge misled himself into relying on these H words which are not in the Kiswahili version. We may pause and say that Mr Mussa is right here. The Kiswahili rendering goes like this:

I `30(3) Mtu ye yote anayedai kuva sharti lo loto katika Sehemu hii ya Sura hii au katika sheria yo yote inayohusu haki yake au wajibu kwake, limevunjwa, linavunjwa au inaelekea litavunjwa na mtu ye

1993 TLR p51

MAKAME JA

yote popote katika Jamhuri ya Muungano anaweza kufungua shauri katika Mahakana Kuu.' A

We note from this that there is not the usual `Bila ya kuathiri . . .' `Without prejudice . . .'. So that under article 30(3) one has to institute proceedings for relief in the High Court and the Kiswahili version, which is the controlling version, does not provide for other means. B

We now turn to Mr Rugrabamu's response on the first two grounds which he argued together. He argued in effect that it is correct that the whole thing started with Mwalusanya J's view that the fees paid to advocates under the 1969 law were inadequate. Mr Rugarabamu conceded that Mr C Butambala did not complain. Rather he and the Attorney-General were invited as amicus curiae to whom the learned Judge posed a problem involving the interpretation of the Constitution and asked them to assist. According to the learned Advocate, the learned Judge had the power to go about D construing the Constitution that way because the particular law, Act 21 of 1969, was enacted before 1985. According to Mr Rugarabamu it is unnecessary to make a complaint before the court so the first two grounds have no merit. E

As we see it the first two grounds involve two distinct issues - one of jurisdiction and the second one of procedure. They were however consolidated in learned arguments and we propose to treat them similarly. Before we do that we think it is opportune to interject a few brief remarks. We need F hardly say that our Constitution is a serious and solemn document. We think that invoking it and knocking down laws or portions of them should be reserved for appropriate and really momentous occasions. Things which can easily be taken up by administrative initiative are best pursued in that manner. If we may be permitted to borrow and extend the term `Ambulance Lawyers' in currency in G certain jurisdiction, it is not desirable to reach a situation where we have `ambulance courts' which go round looking for situations where we can invalidate statutes. We say this deliberately and by design, and we do not think this is conservative in the negative same. We think it is responsible and responsive to the needs of our Society. There is, or should be, plenty of room for judges and H magistrates to make positive and constructive inputs which can influence legislation in the right direction. The old practice where judges and magistrates used to construct such opinions for consideration by their own higher authorities or conferences should continue to be encour- I

A aged. It is a necessary and progressive function. We must not be understood to mean that judges should shy away from their function of construing the Constitution which is their proper duty and legitimate province. But there must be occasion for that. That is judicial power reserved for judicial situations. When we are moved we move into judicial action and fulfil our responsibilities. Not B otherwise. We are not knight errants.

To turn to the specifics now and we think they are hard:

Mr Butambala wrote to the Judge before whom he had appeared in the Criminal Sessions asking for C his fees to be assessed in accordance with the existing law, Act 21 of 1969. He was not complaining. If he thought the maximum fees payable were inadequate he did not say so. If he thought the law should be changed he and the Bar generally would know what to do and where. He knows the fora available, and the lobby. It would be perfectly alright for a Judge also, if he so feels, to D take administrative initiative to have the fees raised.

In the present case the learned Judge, on his own, decided, without complaint and before the benefit of learned arguments, to construe s 4 of Act 21 of 1969. `I intend to construe s 4 of the Act No 21/69 E as modified . . . I will regard the paltry sums mentioned in s 4 of Act No 21/1969 as void and modified . . . Set the application for hearing on 27/7/90 and serve the above minute to the State Attorney and Mr Butambala immediately.'

The italics are supplied by us to throw our view point into the sharp relief we desire. Where was the F application the learned Judge was referring to? There was none! And what if Mr Butambala had declined the invitation? We posed the question to counsel and Mr Mussa suggested that by the look of things the learned Judge have gone right ahead and do what he was intent upon doing.

G In the Sierra Leone case Mr Mussa referred us to, the point discussed above was not directly in issue but we cull from the decision:

(a) The applicant must allege that a provision of the Constitution was contravened in relation to him.

H (b) He must invoke the power of the High Court.

(c) That power of the court is a judicial power.

In our recent DPP v Daudi Pete (2) there were proceedings, a base, which contained material from I which to hold, reasonably and legitimately, that what the respondent was alleging was a violation of his constitutional right, albeit inarticulately and without elegance. We have no quarrel with the A relevant aspect of the decision in the Zimbabwe case of Bull v Minister of Home Affairs (3) the learned Judge quoted.

The holding therein was that a formal petition was not necessary. The court did not say that no step whatsoever was required to be taken by any party. What was decided in Grace Stuart Ibingira v B Uganda (4) was that the court will not desist from hearing the matter because of procedural irregularity particularly where the parties accept that the court has jurisdiction. That is not to say that the court would vest itself with jurisdiction in any event. The question whether a court has jurisdiction C is not a question of procedural propriety. It is not a nicety; it is fundamental.

Section 5(1) of Act of 1984 was pleaded by Mr Butambala and relied on by the learned Judge. We happily go along with Mwalusanya J that the provision deals with statutes or laws existing prior to D March 1985. Act 16 of 1984 provides so. In the exercise of its original jurisdiction the High Court may modify, adapt etc a law, yes, that must be in the process of construction. To construe, as used here, is a term of art, which implies a judicial interpretation of laws. It is not possible to do that unless there is a proceeding, a legitimate occasion, and you do not have to `threaten' to do so in a certain manner E and direction under your own steam, when no one says he is bothered.

If one relies on s 5(1) of Act 16 of 1984 one has to wait until the matter arises in the course of proceedings so that the court gets the opportunity to construe. Otherwise he has to petition under F article 30(3) as usual. It would conceivably have been possible to advise Mr Butambala to set the process in Motion by formally complaining, but we are not in a position to pronounce on the judicial propriety and desirability of that course of action either. G

We are of the carefully considered opinion, for reasons we have endeavoured to indicate, that the learned Judge improperly raised the issue of constitutionality and that there was no legitimately permissible occasion for him to do so. This is enough to dispose of the appeal in favour of the H Attorney-General who did not think he was drafted in as a friend of the court. Mr Mussa must be forgiven for adding that if the Attorney-General was a friend of the court then he was a reluctant friend. We wish to observe that before you can have amicus curiae you need first to have a curia gone to. I

With respect, Mwalusanya J initiated his own cause and then sat

A on it as a Judge. One may be tempted to think that he had made up his mind and so the whole exercise of bringing Mr Butambala and the Attorney-General on record and listening to their arguments was illusory. The approach was manifestly unjudicial and emphatically undesirable.

B This appeal is allowed. The effect of this is that s 4 of Act 21 of 1969 is still good law and in the books. It follows that the range of fees provided therein is still the legal one therefore the payment of Shs 10,000/= ordered to be paid to Mr Butambala are illegal and must be refunded, less the amounts C to be assessed afresh by Mwalusanya J in accordance with the existing law.

We make no orders as to costs.

We want to add this: Learned counsel on both sides were of useful help. We did not find the issues very easy and that is why had the judgment of this `curia' had to be curia advisari vult.

D We do not now need to consider the useful arguments learned counsel advanced on the remaining three grounds which we might have touched upon in the course of considering the first two grounds.

E By way of post-script we desire to add that the fees payable under s 4 of the Legal Aid (Criminal Proceedings) Act 21 of 1969 may be grossly inadequate and out of date. We think something positive must be done, unless the public philosophy is that the service advocates render under the F law are intended to be akin to the classical dock briefs of some jurisdictions.
1993 TLR p55

A

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v MICHAEL GODFREY SENKORO AND FIVE OTHERS 1993 TLR 55 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Lugakingira J

CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 21 OF 1991 B
21 June, 1991
Flynote
Economic and organized crime control - Jurisdiction of subordinate Courts - Director of Public Prosecutions C confers jurisdiction on a Court of Resident Magistrate - Case tried by a District Court - Whether lawful.
Criminal practice and procedure - Adjournment not in compliance with section 225(4) Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 - Whether Proceedings valid. D
-Headnote
This case was brought before the High Court in order to revise the proceedings from the standpoint of suspected unlawful adjournments. Going through the file the learned Judge found that at a certain E stage the accused were charged under the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act, No. 13 of 1984, whose offences are triable by the High Court unless the Director of Public Prosecution appends a certificate to the charge directing which other court should try the case. In this case the certificate directed that the case be tried by a Court of Resident Magistrate. The proceedings, however, continued on the same District Court file. The court record also showed that there were F many adjournments in contravention of section 225(4) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.
Held: (i) Subordinate courts have no jurisdiction to try offences triable under Act No. 13 of 1984 unless such jurisdiction is specifically conferred by the Director of Public Prosecutions; G

(ii) In the instant case the DPP conferred jurisdiction on a court of Resident Magistrate not on a District Court;

(iii) It was unlawful for the District Court to preside in a matter over which jurisdiction had been conferred on a Court of Resident Magistrate; H

(iv) The adjournments ordered in the wake of this charge sheet did not comply with the provisions of section 225(4) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.
Case Information
Proceedings quashed.
No cases referred to. I

1993 TLR p56

[zJDz]Judgment

A Lugakingira J: This proceeding has suffered considerable mismanagement. Originally six persons were on 6 June 1988 charged before the District Court at Kisutu on one count of stealing by a public servant, it being alleged that in June 1983 they stole Shs 1,148,000/= the property of what B was then the Ministry of Communications and Works, their employer. They denied the charge and a ritual of adjournments ensued for one flimsy reason or another and in complete disregard of the provisions of s 225(4) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985.

C On 5 March 1990 the prosecutor withdrew the charge and substituted another, this time charging one person with eleven counts of stealing by a public servant and, in the alternative, charging that person and seven others on two counts of occasioning loss to a specified authority. The alternative counts were laid under the Economic and Organised Crime Control Act 13 of 1984, and, in accordance with the provisions of s 12(3) of the said Act, the Director of Public Prosecutions D appended a certificate to the charge directing that the case be tried by a Resident Magistrate's Court. As if that made no difference, the proceedings were continued on the same District Court file.

E I pause to say that this was illegal. Subordinate courts have no jurisdiction to try offences triable under Act 13 of 1984 unless such jurisdiction is specifically conferred by the Director of Public Prosecutions. In the instant case the DPP conferred jurisdiction on a court of resident magistrate, not a district court. The two courts are distinct and each has its own registers; and although the F same set of magistrates could in certain circumstances serve both courts, it is not correct to imagine that a district court can lawfully take over a case jurisdiction over which is vested in a court of resident magistrate. The District Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the new charge and the G proceedings became void from the moment it did so. Oblivious of this the court went on to take pleas and once again to indulge in adjournments as if no law governed the matter.

On 30 May 1990 the saga took a new turn. The prosecutor stated to the court: `I ask for the court to H substitute an old charge for a new one.' Apparently the presiding magistrate understood what that meant and recorded: `A fresh charge sheet admitted.' It also seems that the `fresh charge sheet' joined the previous eight accused persons; hence the magistrate went on to take pleas from six persons then present and to order the arrest of two who were absent. He then adjourned the hearing to 30 June 1990. On that day the case was further adjourned to 30 July 1990 to enable the I prosecutor to join another person in the charge. On 30 July 1990 there was no reference to this subject; instead A the prosecutor told the court that the Republic wished to withdraw the charge against the 6th, 7th and 8th accused. They were accordingly discharged and the case was further adjourned to 30 August 1990.

1993 TLR p57

LUGAKINGIRA J

Before going further I should state that the `fresh charge sheet' is nowhere to be found in the case B file. Except for the assumption that the same eight persons were freshly charged, I do not know what they were charged with. It is then apparent that the `fresh charge sheet' contained a count or counts brought under Act 13 of 1984 for when discharging the 6th, 7th and 8th accused the magistrate C purported to cite `section 96' of that Act. But I have not seen the `fresh charge sheet'. I do not know whether the DPP's consent to prosecute was obtained in terms of s 26(1); I do not know whether, on this occasion, jurisdiction to try the case was conferred on a district court. But having stated this, let me turn to complete the saga. D

On 30 August 1990, the adjourned date, the prosecutor (a different one, to be sure) scanned the courtroom and was surprised to see that the 6th, 7th and 8th accused were absent. He promptly applied for their arrest. Somehow the presiding magistrate overlooked the application but it was E subsequently granted by another magistrate on 20 September 1990. I do not know whether they have been arrested to date, but adjournments continued at discretion until 27 April 1991 after which the record was called here.

It was originally expected to revise the proceeding from the standpoint of suspected unlawful F adjournments but the above review has uncovered additional scandals. That has widened the scope in which the matter may be dealt with. To begin with, I have already stated that it was unlawful for the District Court to preside in a matter over which jurisdiction had been conferred on a court of resident magistrate. The proceedings were for that reason void. The position would have changed if I were G assured that in the `fresh charge sheet' the Director of Public Prosecution had shifted the jurisdiction to a district court. I have not seen this charge sheet; above all, I do not know what offences it actually alleges. I am therefore not in a position to know that the District Court is lawfully seized of the H proceeding and that is sufficient reason to quash the same. I should add, however, that even if it turned out that the District Court regained jurisdiction under the `fresh charge sheet', I would still hold the proceeding void and quash the same on the ground that the adjournments ordered in the wake of this charge sheet did not comply with s 225(4) of the Criminal Procedure Act. I

A The proceeding is quashed in its entirety and the accused are discharged. The Republic is, of course, at liberty to prefer a fresh charge if there is any purpose in doing so.

C

[zRPz]SHABANI MPIRI v WILBARDA TAIRO 1993 TLR 58 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Mwaikasu J

D MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL APPEAL NO. 7 OF 1992
7 February, 1992
Flynote

Rent Restriction Act - Protected tenant - Protected tenant need not enter a new agreement with the landlord - E Eviction must comply with provisions of the Rent Restriction Act, 1984, s 25(1)(e)(i).
Landlord and Tenant - Protected tenant - Eviction - Need to comply with the provisions of s 25(1)(e)(i) of the Rent Restriction Act, 1984.
-Headnote
F The respondent was a wife of a deceased tenant of the appellant. After the death of the tenant the appellant wanted the widow to enter into a new tenancy agreement or else be evicted from the premises. The Dar es Salaam Regional Housing Tribunal ordered eviction of the respondent. The Housing Appeals Tribunal, on appeal, reversed the decision and order of the Regional Housing G Tribunal, holding that the respondent was a protected tenant within the meaning of s 25(1)(a)(i) of the Rent Restriction Act, 1984. Dissatisfied with this decision the appellant appealed to the High Court.
Held: (i) Under the provisions of ss 3(1) and 25(1)(e)(i) of the Rent Restriction Act, 1984, the respondent, upon the death of her husband, who was the tenant of the appellant and with H whom the respondent lived as husband and wife in the appellant's house until the day of his death, automatically became a protected tenant;
(ii) Any attempt to evict her from the premises must comply with the provisions of section 25(1)(e)(i) regarding the provision of suitable alternative accommodation by the landlord.
Case Information
I Appeal dismissed.
1993 TLR p59
No case referred to. A
[zJDz]Judgment
Mwaikasu J: By this appeal, the appellant, one Shabani Mpiri, challenges the decision of the Housing Appeals Tribunal in its Appeal No 46 of 1992, originating from the Dar es Salaam Regional Housing B Tribunal Application No 317 of 1991. In its decision the Housing Appeals Tribunal reversed the decision of the Regional Housing Tribunal which ordered the eviction of the respondent, one Wilbarda Tairo, from the appellant's house by unanimously holding that the respondent, having been C the wife of the deceased one Tairo who was the appellant's tenant and lived with him in such house until the day of his death, was, upon the death of her husband, a statutory tenant as defined under s 3(1) of the Rent Restriction Act 1984, and therefore as such, a protected tenant under the provision of s 25(1)(a)(i) of the said Act, so that there was no need for her to enter a new tenancy D agreement with the appellant.
That could not sound just and reasonable to the appellant who is on record to have maintained before not only the lower appellate tribunal but before this court that the respondent ought to have entered a new tenancy agreement after the death of her husband, and that if there was such a law E that did provide such a protection as relied upon by the respondent, then he would not recognize such law, adding that if there was a law that required him in the circumstances of this case to provide an alternative accommodation to such a widow if she is to be evicted, when such law, as it did not come from God, he would not recognise it either. F

It is such ostrich mindedness of the appellant that has led him to challenge such decision of the Housing Appeals Tribunal before this Court, arguing, in the main that the Housing Appeals Tribunal G had erred in law by so holding that the respondent was under the Rent Restriction Act 1984, automatically a protected tenant and that there was no necessity for her to enter a new tenancy agreement with him, the landlord. On the other ground that the Housing Appeals Tribunal did not adequately consider the allegation that the respondent had been guilty of contravening tenancy rules H for her alleged refusal to clean the backyard of the suit premises, that, in my view, was adequately considered by the lower appellate Tribunal. This court does not therefore, intend to address itself on the issue.
Now coming to the only legal issue raised in this appeal, which is whether under the provisions of s I 3(1) and s 25(1)(e)(i) of the Rent
1993 TLR p60
A Restriction Act 1984, the respondent, upon the death of her husband who was then the tenant of theB appellant and with whom the respondent used to live as husband and wife in the appellant's house until the day of his death, thereafter automatically became a protected tenant.
B Upon reading the definition of the word `Tenant' as provided for under s 3(1) of the Rent Restriction Act 1984 together with s 25(1)(e)(i) of the said Act, I am satisfied that this appeal has no substance. Under the law, the respondent is clearly as found by the Housing Appeals Tribunal, a protected tenant. Any attempt to evict her from the premises must comply with the provisions of s 25(1)(e)(i) regarding the provision of suitable alternative accommodation by the landlord. If the C appellant considers such provision of our law to be unjust, the only reasonable course for him to take is either to raise such complaint with his Honourable Member of Parliament, with a view of soliciting D the desired amendment or forward his memo with the law Reform Commission of Tanzania to have it looked into with a view of reforming it, if found to be so desirable. Otherwise he cannot stand in the way of the operation of the law. He may do so at his own peril.
E Accordingly I dismiss this appeal with costs.
1993 TLR p60
F
[zRPz]REV. CHRISTOPHER MTIKILA v THE EDITOR, BUSINESS TIMES & AUGUSTINE LYATONGA MREMA 1993 TLR 60 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Samatta JK

G CIVIL CASE NO. 47 OF 1992
26 March, 1992
Flynote

H Torts - Vicarious liability - Tort committed by a Minister in the course of official business - Whether civil action must be action against the Government - Government Proceedings Act 1967.

I Vicarious Liability - Government vicariously liable for torts committed by its servants - Whether the servant who has committed the tort is thereby absolved from liability. A

1993 TLR p61

Vicarious Liability - Government Proceedings Act 1967 - Suits against the Government for torts committed by its servants - Minister sued personally for a tort committed in the course of official business - Whether a suit against the Government.

-Headnote

The plaintiff sued the defendants in defamation for words uttered by the second defendant, a B Government Minister, and published by the first defendant. For the second defendant, a preliminary point was raised and argued to the effect that because the alleged defamatory words, if they were at all uttered, must have been uttered by the second defendant in the course of discharging his C ministerial duties, he cannot be sued in his personal capacity; rather, the suit should be a suit against the Government in accordance with the Government Proceedings Act 1967.

Held: (i) By vicarious liability the master is liable for tortious acts or omissions of the servant and the two are joint tort feasors; either or both of them can be sued; D

(ii) Vicarious liability does not transfer the principal liability of the servant to the master;

(iii) By vicarious liability an employer is vicariously liable for torts committed by his servant; but that does not absolve the liability of the servant for the tort he has committed; E

(iv) Suing the Government under vicarious liability does not confer immunity on the servant of the Government who actually committed the tort; the right to sue the servant is not affected by the right to sue the master;

(v) No provision of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 or any other legislation takes away F the common law right to sue a Government servant who commits a tort in the course of his official duties;

(vi) There is no law conferring immunity upon Ministers or public officials from being sued personally for torts they commit in the course of their official duties; when they are so sued in their personal capacity, it is not a suit against the Government; G

(vii) The vicarious liability of the master and the initial liability of the servant are two different branches of liability.

Case Information

Preliminary point rejected with costs.

Cases referred to:

1. Lanchbury and Others v. Morgans and Others [1971] 2 WLR 603. H
2. Young v. Edward Box & Co. Ltd [1951] 1 TLR 789.
3. Moris Sasawata v. Matias Malieko, [1980] TLR 158.

4. Ismail G. Lazaro v. Josephine Ngomera, Court of Appeal of Tanzania at Mbeya, Civil Appeal No. 2 of 1986 (unreported).

5. Lucas Matafu v. Hon. M.M. Songambele [1977] LRT, n. 10. I

F. Werema/Mwidunda for the second defendant.

1993 TLR p62

[zJDz]Judgment

A Samatta JK: This is an action for damages for defamation. In his plaint the plaintiff, Rev Christopher Mtikila, avers, inter alia, that the second defendant, Mr Augustine Lyatonga Mrema, maliciously uttered defamatory words to the first defendant, the Editor of `Business Times', a B newspaper circulating in Tanzania and beyond, the substance of which was that the plaintiff was plotting to kidnap him (the second defendant) using foreign mercenaries. The second defendant is the Minister of Home Affairs in the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania. The plaintiff C further alleges in the plaint that on 18 October 1991, the first defendant maliciously and without just cause published in his newspaper these words. He is claiming from both defendants, among other things, damages in the sum of Shs 250 million.

D When, on 10 April 1992, the case was called, Mr Werema, appearing for the second defendant, raised a preliminary point of law. I hope I am not misrepresenting or failing to do justice to the learned State Attorney if I seek to summarise his contentions as follows: since the alleged defamatory words, if they were at all uttered, must have been made in the course of discharging his ministerial duties, E the second defendant cannot in law be sued in his personal capacity. According to counsel, the only option open to the plaintiff in this case is to sue the Government of the United Republic after seeking and obtaining the necessary consent of the Minister responsible for legal affairs, under the provisions of s 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967. The second defendant can be sued in his personal F capacity in this case only if, to use Mr Werema's own words, the Government has abandoned him, the second defendant. Counsel hastened to add that no such abandonment has taken place. The plaintiff, who appeared in person, contended; citing several authorities, that, as a citizen he has a right in law to sue in tort a person, who is a State Minister, in his personal capacity and that that right G is not qualified.

There can be no doubt that Mr Werema's argument raises a point of considerable interest. Before I proceed further, however, I should, I think, quote s 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967, as H amended by the Government Proceedings (Amendment) Act 1974, heavily relied upon by Mr Werema in his not uninteresting argument. The section reads:

`6. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no civil proceedings may be instituted against the Government I without the previous consent in writing of the Minister:

1993 TLR p63

SAMATTA JK

Provided that no such consent shall be necessary for the making of the Government a party to any interpleader A proceedings.' (The term `Minister' is defined in s 2(1) of the Act as meaning the Minister responsible for legal affairs.)'

I wish to make it perfectly clear that in dealing with the preliminary point, I assume, without deciding, two things: B

1. The Government Proceedings Act (hereinafter referred to as `the Act') is, insofar as it purports to restrict the right of a person to sue the Government, constitutional, that is to say, C it does not offend any of the provisions of the Constitution of the United Republic of 1977 as amended (hereinafter referred to as `the Constitution').

2. Mr Werema, who is employed as a State Attorney in the Attorney-General's Chambers, is entitled in law to represent the second defendant in this case. D

Having made those assumptions, I proceed now to consider the merits or otherwise of the preliminary point.

The doctrine of vicarious liability, whereby the master or principal is liable for tortious acts or E omissions of his servant or agent, committed in the course of the servant's or agent's employment or agency, being part of the common law, is undoubtedly, part of the law of this country. What is the policy underlying that doctrine?

Although there is no unanimity among legal scholars and judicial authorities as regards the right F answer to that question, I confess that I am greatly attracted, if I may respectfully say so, by the answer which Lord Denning MR gives to that question in Lanchbury and Others v Morgens and Others (1).

The Master of the Rolls poses the question and proceeds to answer it. It would be presumptuous on G my part to attempt to improve on his language. He says at 606:

`What is the basis of this doctrine of vicarious liability? To answer it, I would first ask: what does "vicarious" mean? I turn to the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, 3rd ed (1944), Vol II. It means one "that takes or supplies the place of H another . . ." So vicarious liability means that one person takes the place of another so far as liability is concerned. Familiar instances are where the master shoulders the lability of his servant; or the principal shoulders the liability of his agent; and so forth. Whenever the law imposes vicarious liability, it does so for reasons of social policy - reasons which commend I

A themselves to the people at large. If a servant injures another by his negligence, his master should make good the loss. It does not matter whether the servant or agent is acting for the benefit of his master or principal, or not. Suffice it that the master or principal has put him in a position where he may do injury to another; and should be liable for B the way in which he conducts himself therein. It is true that the master or principal is not personally at fault. But it is only that he should be made vicariously liable. Otherwise it would mean that the injured person would get no redress: for, more often than not, the servant or agent has not the means to pay: whereas the master or principal has the means: or, at any rate, ought to insure against the liability so as to get the means to pay. In this way the C innocent victim is not left to bear the whole loss himself. It is distributed amongst the community in a way that is fair to all.'

It seems clear from this passage that the master or principal and his servant or agent are in law joint D tortfeasors. Either or both of them can be sued, for, the liability of the master or principal depends on the liability of the servant or agent. The proposition that the doctrine of vicarious liability does not transfer the principal liability of the servant or agent to the master or principal is amply supported by authorities. In Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England, 21st ed, Vol II, there is the following E passage at 445:

`. . . the liability of the superior for the tortious acts of his subordinate in no way exempts the latter from personal liability to the party injured. The question is not: "which is liable?" but "Are both liable?". In many cases, of course, F the liability of the subordinate is of little practical value; because he is, in popular language, `not worth powder and shot'. But this is by no means always true.'

G In Halsburys Laws of England, 3rd ed, Vol 25, at 546, the learned authors deal with the question concerning the liability of the servant as follows:

`A servant who commits a tort is, as a general rule, liable in damages to the person injured thereby, and his liability H is not affected by the existence of a contract of service, or, where he commits the tort in the course of his employment and within the scope of his authority, by the existence of the corresponding liability of his master for the same tort, since he is the actual tort easer.'

I The learned authors of Halsburys Laws of England, 3rd ed, vol

37, deal with the point in two passages at 135 and 136. The passage at the former page reads: A

`The person who actually commits a tort is in general liable although in committing it he is acting as servant of another person, and although he has no reason to know or suspect that the act is wrongful, unless the act is incapable of being regarded as a tort in the absence of actual or imputed knowledge.' B and that on 136 reads as follows:

`Each of two or more joint tortfeasors is liable for the entire damage resulting from the tort, subject to any C contributory responsibility of the injured persons. Persons are liable as joint tortfeasors where the act giving rise to the tort is a joint act done in pursuance of a common purpose. In particular joint liability arises where an agent, including a servant, commits a tort whilst acting within the scope of his authority. In such cases agents are jointly D liable with their principals for the consequences of their torts.'

In Young v Edward Box & Co, Ltd (2) Denning LJ examined briefly the legal position of the servant or agent where the doctrine of vicarious liability is sought to be brought into play. He said at 793: E

`In every case where it is sought to make a master liable for the conduct of his servant the first question is to see whether the servant was liable. If the answer is yes, the second question is to see whether the employer must shoulder the servant's liability.' F

To return home, as eventually one must, I should, I think, quote what I ventured to say about twelve years ago in Moris A Sasawata v Matias Maleko (3) and, later, quote what the Court of Appeal said G in I G Lazaro v Josephine Ngomera (4). In Sasawata's case I said, at 160:

`I have always understood it to be the law of this country that, as a general rule, the actual perpetrator of an act which in law turns out to be a tort is personally liable for damages irrespective of on whose behalf or for whose benefit he did the act and irrespective of the fact that he gained nothing personally. That law is, I think, in harmony with H common sense.'

As I shall, I hope, presently sufficiently demonstrate, I am bound to adhere to those words. In Lazaro's case (supra) the appellant was I

1993 TLR p66

SAMATTA JK

A aggrieved by a decision of this Court (Mroso J) whereby a decision of the Resident Magistrate's Court of Mbeya awarding the respondent, a woman constable, damages for defamation against the appellant, who was a Regional Police Commander at the material time, for calling the former at a parade a prostitute. The suit was filed against the appellant in his personal capacity. In the Court of B Appeal it was contended on behalf of the appellant, relying on s 3(4) of the Act, that, the appellant could not be sued in his private capacity as he was acting in his official capacity at the time in question. The Court rejected that argument. Mustafa JA, in whose judgment the other members of C the Court concurred, said, at 2 of the cyclostyled judgment:

`With respect, I am astounded by this contention. Section 3(4) of the Act 16 of 1967 merely renders the Government civilly liable vicariously for acts done by its servants in the course of their official duties. In matters of tort, a tortfeasor, D the person who commits a tort, is always primarily liable. An employer is vicariously liable if his servant commits a tort in the course and within the scope of his employment. That does not absolve the liability of the servant for the tort committed. It only means that the employer is also liable as the tort was committed when the servant was supposed E to be acting in place of or for the employer whose act it becomes.'

To distinguish this case from the case now before me requires, in my respectful opinion, the labours of Sisyphus and the sophistry of a Roman jurist. Mr Werema sought to meet the impact of that case F by contending that in that case, unlike in the instant case the Government had `abandoned' the appellant by refusing to grant its consent to be sued. With profoundest respect, I can see nothing in the judgment of Mustafa JA, which suggests, even remotely, that the said abandonment played some G part in the outcome of the appeal. On the contrary, it seems patently clear from the passage I have quoted that it was the opinion of the Court that the ability of a victim of a tort to sue the Government does not confer immunity from suit on the servant or agent of the Government who actually H committed the tort. In other words, whether or not the victim succeeds to secure the consent of the Government to sue it, his right to sue its servant or agent is in no way affected.

Mr Werema also sought to rely on Lucas Matafu v Hon M M Songambele (5) in his gallant attempt to persuade me to hold that the plaintiff's action against the second defendant is incompetent in law. In I my settled opinion, that case is no authority for the proposition which the learned advocate has advanced in the instant case. That case was an application for A an order directing the respondent to re-open the appellant's bar which the respondent had ordered, in his capacity as a Regional Commissioner, to be closed. The respondent was cited in his personal capacity. Mfalila C (as he then was) held that was an error in law. He said, at 45: B

1993 TLR p67

SAMATTA JK

`The third difficulty relates to the competency of this application. I take it that for the purpose of the Government Suits Ordinance Cap 5 this application is a suit. It is alleged in the affidavit that the respondent Songambele closed the applicant's Bar and tenantable premises. I cannot imagine how the respondent could have done this in his personal capacity. He must have used his authority as a Government Officer to effect whatever he did so that the final C responsibility lay with the Government. For instance if indeed the respondent closed these two premises, and he were either transferred or removed from office tomorrow, he would not as Songambele have the authority to re-open them even if he wanted or was ordered to. These premises were therefore closed by orders of the Government and D if any redress is needed it must be sought against the Government. The procedure for getting civil remedies against the Government is provided in the Government Suits Ordinance, and this must be complied with before this Court can assume jurisdiction. Since this was not done, this Court has no power to make any order against the E Government.'

The application was dismissed. Clearly, that case is distinguishable from the instant case. In that case the `action' was not grounded in law of torts; the appellant was not seeking damages for F wrongful closure of the bar. What he was seeking was, in effect, an order that the Government allow the bar to re-open. As rightly pointed out by Mfalila J, that order could be issued only against the Government. In any case, if my understanding of Mfalila J's judgment is wrong, that judgment cannot G be followed in view of the existence of a judgment of a higher court holding the contrary. The action in the instant case is grounded in tort, and, for reasons I have given, it is my opinion that it was not necessary in law for the plaintiff to institute proceeding against the Government.

Unless this Court is compelled by a statutory provision which alters the common law principle, it H cannot turn the plaintiff away. Is there any such a provision in our law? To that question I now turn my attention. It is an elementary rule of law that the common law cannot be altered by the legislature except in express terms or by clear implication. In my view, there is no provision in the Act (the I Government Proceedings Act) or in any other legislation - includ-

A ing the Constitution - which expressly or by necessary implication takes away the right of a citizen or other person enjoying the protection of the law of this country to sue a Government's servant or agent who, in the course of his official duties, has allegedly committed a tort against him. Section 6 of the Act was not, in my settled opinion, intended to, and did not cause such a change in B the law. I take leave to express some doubt, with respect, whether if such a provision existed it would pass the test of constitutionality. As the law currently stands, there is no legislation which confers immunity, qualified or otherwise, upon ministers or public officials from being sued in their C personal or private capacities for torts alleged to have been committed by then in the course of their official duties. It should be distinctly understood that a suit in tort against a person who happens to be a minister or public official is not in law bad if the alleged tort was committed in the course of his D official duties, a suit against the Government. One does not, in such a suit, require the consent of the Government (the Minister responsible for legal affairs) to institute the proceedings. Save as provided in law, a person cannot be a tortfeasor and yet not be liable to a suit. Neither under the Constitution nor under any other law do ministers enjoy exemption from civil proceedings. Like in the case of E private persons, vicarious responsibility and initial liability are two different branches of liability. Apart from any legislative enactment, there is a right of access to the courts of law in every citizen and in every stranger within the country. That right is a fundamental one: it is jealously guarded by courts.

F In spite of his very strenuous argument, Mr Werema has not come within miles of persuading me that there is merit in that argument. It is my view in this case that the plaintiff is, for reasons I have endeavoured to express, entitled in law to sue the second defendant in his (the second defendant's) private capacity.

G It is tempting to part with the case there, but I think it proper to say this: the question whether the alleged publication is defamatory and whether the defendants are liable as allowed or at all is a matter which will be decided by the Trial Court. What I was concerned with in this ruling was solely H whether in this case the plaintiff is precluded by law from suing the second defendant in his personal or private capacity. That is the question which I have endeavoured to answer in this ruling.

I The preliminary point fails and is consequently rejected with costs.

1993 TLR p69

A

[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v NYANGETA SOMBA AND TWELVE OTHERS 1993 TLR 69 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Makame JJA and Omar JJA, and Mapigano Ag JA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 53 OF 1990 B

14 July, 1992

(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Musoma, Mwalusanya, J.) C

Flynote

Criminal Law - Defence of alibi - Requirement of notice to Court and the prosecution - Form of such notice. D

Criminal Law - Identification of accused - Huge crowd, commotion of the moment and charged atmosphere - Reliability of identity evidence.

-Headnote

The Director of Public Prosecutions appealed to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania against the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Musoma acquitting thirteen persons who were charged with murder. E The learned Trial Judge's basis for acquittal was insufficiency of evidence of identification of the deceased's assailants from a huge crowd characterized by commotion of the moment and a charged atmosphere. At the trial, all the respondents raised the defence of alibi which the Trial Judge accepted. At the preliminary hearing all the respondents told the High Court that they were elsewhere F at the time when the murder of the deceased was committed. Six respondents gave particulars of their alibi the rest did not. The appellant argued that the Trial Judge was wrong to accept the defence of alibi because no notice of intention to rely on alibi was given to the Court and the prosecution in terms of s 194(4) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. G

Held: (i) There was in this case sufficient notice of intention to raise the defence of alibi within the meaning of section 194(4) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985, in respect of the 6th, 7th, 8th, 10th, 12th and 13th respondents;

(ii) Although no form of the notice has been prescribed the notice must furnish sufficient H particulars of the alibi and the notice must be given before the main hearing;

(iii) In respect of the rest of the respondents the Trial Judge had discretion to apply the provisions of subsection (6) of s 194 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985, and give their alibis some weight;

(iv) Given the uncertainty about whether the deceased was already dead when he was set afire I and the other materials in the record, only

1993 TLR p70

A those people who assaulted and burned the deceased or those who facilitated or encouraged the assault and the burning could be convicted of murder;

(v) Given the huge crowd, the commotion of the moment and the charged atmosphere, reliability of the identity evidence of the three witnesses was doubtful.

Case Information

B Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to.

Malamsha, for the appellant.

Rugarabamu, for the respondents.

[zJDz]Judgment

C Mapigano, Ag. J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

These thirteen respondents were jointly charged with the murder of one Karabani Mbarae contrary to D s 196 of the Penal Code. The case came for trial in the High Court at Musoma before Mwalusanya J. In a judgment delivered on 6 October 1989, the learned Judge acquitted all of them. The Director of Public Prosecutions is appealing against that judgment and on his behalf Mr Malamsha, learned E State Attorney, has filed four grounds of appeal. In the course of his address before us, however, Mr Malamsha dropped the second and the fourth grounds.

None of the respondents could be traced for normal service and so a substituted service was F ordered and effected by the publications of the notice in the Uhuru newspaper. In spite of that exercise none of them appeared when the appeal was called on for hearing. But Mr Rugarabamu, learned Advocate, resisted the appeal on their behalf on a dock brief.

G Karabani Mbarae was killed on 2 December 1987 at Nyegina in Musoma District in very cruel and dreadful circumstances, and he is referred to herein below as `the deceased'. Related to his killing was the death of another man called Maudi Magesa in the same village a few days back. The divination of a fortune-teller whom some of the villagers consulted had it that Maudi Magesa was not H actually dead but had been bewitched and transformed into a zombi by the deceased and PW5 Masatu Esagara. This divination was made public at a large gathering in the morning of 2 December 1987, and in great passion the gathering resolved that Karabani and PW5 be apprehended and tried I by the Baraza la Jadi which we understand to be a Sungusungu organ.

1993 TLR p71

MAPIGANO Ag JA

PW5 got wind of what had transpired at the meeting and he slipped away from the village and went A to the police station at Musoma to report the incident. In a smouldering rage the multitude went to and stormed a certain building referred to in the evidence as `the milk house' where the deceased was attending another meeting. The crowd pounced upon the deceased and took him to the home of B PW5. He was thoroughly belaboured on the way and he was in a very hopeless condition when he arrived at the home of PW5. Indeed, it is quite possible that he was then dying.

When the crowd discovered that PW5 had vanished they decided to and actually did set the deceased afire, and it is quite possible that the deceased was then already dead. When PW5 came C back in the company of policemen the deceased had been burnt beyond recognition and but for the intervention of the police PW5 would probably have met the same fate.

There was no dispute about the fact as above stated. The identity of the deceased's assailants was D the main point in dispute and the defence which was common to all the respondents was alibi. In the third ground of appeal the Trial Judge is faulted for `upholding' that defence. Mr Malamsha contended that the judge was wrong to give weight to the alibis, because, he said, none of the respondents had given any notice in terms of s 194(4) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985. Mr E Rugarabamu thought otherwise.

On 30 August 1989, at the preliminary hearing all the respondents told the High Court (Munyera J) that they were elsewhere at the time when the murder of the deceased was committed. But none F except the 6th, 7th, 8th, 10th, 12th and 13th respondents gave any particulars of the alibi.

It is provided by ss (4) of s 194 that:

> `Where an accused person intends to rely upon an alibi in his defence, he shall give to the Court and the prosecution notice of his intention to rely on such defence before the hearing of the case.' G

No form of the notice envisaged by this provision has been prescribed, but the view we take is that the notice must furnish sufficient particulars of the alibi so as to enable the prosecution to verify the H truth of those particulars and if necessary assemble evidence in rebuttal, and that the notice should be given before the main hearing. In our opinion there was in this case sufficient notice of intention to raise the defence of alibi within the meaning of the above subsection in respect of the 6th, 7th, 8th, I 10th, 12th and 13th respondents.

1993 TLR p72

MAPIGANO Ag JA

A Subsection (6) of that section provides that:

If the accused raises a defence of alibi without having furnished the particulars of the alibi to the Court or to the prosecution pursuant to this section, the Court may in its discretion accord no weight of any kind to the defence. In respect of the rest of the respondents the Trial Judge had discretion to apply this subsection and give their alibis B some weight as he did.

There was a body of evidence which established that there existed a common intention among a number of people in the crowd to assault and kill the deceased. The Trial Judge directed himself `that C only those accused persons who had been identified as having taken part in the burning of the body of the deceased, and those who helped to collect grass and firewood for burning the deceased, could be convicted of murder'. Given the uncertainty about whether the deceased was already dead when he was set afire and the other materials in the record, the view we entertain is that only those D people who assaulted and burned the deceased or those who facilitated or encouraged the assault and the burning could be convicted of murder.

E The allegation was that the respondents shared the common intention to kill the deceased. The central thrust of that allegation stemmed from three relatives of PW5 the other sorcerer suspect, ie PW4 Kisika the son of PW5, PW7 Masasi a member of PW5's household, and PW8 Sabe, his cousin.

F PW4 gave an account of how a crowd descended on the home of PW5 twice on that fateful day. The crowd first came at around 10 am searching for PW5. The crowd left when they were told that PW5 had travelled to Musoma. An hour or so later the crowd returned to that place with the G deceased. Heavy blows were rained on the deceased and then the burning followed. This witness implicated all the respondents in the killing except the 6th, 8th and 11th respondents.

PW8 saw seven respondents among the multitude, ie the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 7th, 10th and 13th. He H observed that the deceased had been beaten up. He left the place and before long he heard a voice announcing with content `that the witch is dead, he should be burned down'. He next saw the first respondent collecting firewood.

As for PW7, he stated that he saw the 1st, 2nd and 8th in the mob that brought the deceased to the home of PW5. But he did not say what they did to the deceased. Under cross-examination the I following admission was elicited from him:

1993 TLR p73

`I ran away when the group approached Masatu's home. The family of Masatu went to the home of Malima for safety. A We all ran away from the charging group including PW4 Kisika. In truth I had not identified any of the offenders at the scene. I was far away hiding. Masatu's family all hid and no one eye-witnessed the killing.'

In acquitting the respondents the Judge expressed doubt about the reliability of the identity evidence B of the three witnesses, given the huge crowd, the commotion of the moment and the charged atmosphere. He also expressed doubt about the credibility of those witnesses. He was of the opinion that their evidence was riddled with contradictions and falsehoods. The appellant's first ground is that C the learned Judge `grossly erred in law and in fact for failing to evaluate and assess the evidence against the respondents'. With respect we disagree.

As correctly pointed out by Mr Rugarabamu, Mr Malamsha has not demonstrated to this Court how the Trial Judge failed to assess the evidence. We think that in the light of the disclosure of PW7 D quoted above, any prudent Court would have felt doubt that any of the three principal witnesses had actually witnessed the event. The evidence of PW7 showed clearly that all of them had fled from the home of PW5 in terror and gone into hiding. E

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the judgment appealed from was right, and must be affirmed. We accordingly dismiss the appeal.

1993 TLR p73

G

[zRPz]ZAKAYO KUSAJA AND RICHARD MTALISI v PETRO TAPA AND MTIYANI GHAMBI

1993 TLR 73 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Mwalusanya J

(DC) CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 66 OF 1992 H

4 August, 1992

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Right of appeal by complainant - Whether complainant may appeal against acquittal of accused person. I

1993 TLR p74

-Headnote

A After a District Court acquitted the accused, who had been charged with cattle theft, the complainants decided to appeal to the High Court against such acquittal.

Held: (i) Under section 378(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985, only the Director of Public Prosecutions (D.P.P.) can appeal against an acquittal by a subordinate court;

B (ii) A complainant has no right of appeal to the High Court against an acquittal by a subordinate court.

Case Information

Appeal struck out.

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

C Mwalusamya J: The two respondents Petro s/o Tapa (1st respondent) and Mtiyani s/o Nghambi (2nd respondent) were acquitted of cattle theft contrary to ss 265 and 268 of the Penal Code Cap 16 by the Dodoma District Court. Aggrieved by the acquittal the two complainants (now appellants) Mr Zakyo s/o Kusaja (1st appellant) and Richard s/o Mtalisi (2nd appellant) have now appealed to this D court.

It is my considered view that the appeal is misconceived. Under s 378(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act 9 of 1985 only the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) can appeal against an acquittal by a E subordinate court. A complainant has no right of appeal to the High Court against an acquittal by a subordinate court.

Perhaps the above provision goes against the constitutional provision under article 13(6)(a) of our F Constitution which provides for the right of appeal against any adverse decision of a court of law. However that would entail challenging the unconstitutionality of s 378(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act in a proper forum and when properly pleaded. As the situation stands, the two appellants have only to blow a muted trumpet. There is nothing I can do about it.

G In the event I hold that the appeal is misconceived and I strike it off the register. Order accordingly.

1993 TLR p75

A

[zRPz]JIBU SAKILU v PETRO MIUMBI 1993 TLR 75 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Singida

Judge Mwalusanya J

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 48 OF 1992 B

13 November, 1992 - SINGIDA

Flynote

Customary Law - Clan land - Meaning of clan land

Customary Law - Clan land - Redemption of clan land - Limitation period. C

-Headnote

The respondent sought to redeem clan land many years after the limitation period had expired.

Held: (i) According to rule 2 of the Customary Law (Limitation of Proceedings) Rules, G.N. 311 OF D 1964, the limitation period within which to redeem clan land is 12 years;

(ii) When the respondent attempted to redeem his former clan land in 1989 he was already time barred as the twelve years from 1964 ended in 1976;

(iii) Clan land means land which has been inherited successfully without interruption from the E great grandfathers or from a grandfather by members of the same clan.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No cases referred to. F

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwalusanya J: This matter concerns the meaning of clan land and as to when it can be redeemed. Clan land means lands which has been inherited successfully without interruption from the great grandfathers or from a grandfather by members of the same clan. The key words are without interruption. If a member of the clan sells or in any other way disposes of clan land without the G consent of the members of the clan, then the members of that clan can redeem it within 12 years - see the Customary Law (Limitation of Proceedings) Rules GN No 311/1964. If it is not redeemed within 12 years, then it is lost and it is no longer clan land. The said land becomes the property of the purchaser. H

The trouble in this case arose because both courts below and the parties did not appreciate as to when clan land can be lost. It was common ground at the trial that the grazing ground in dispute was originally the clan land of the respondent Petro s/o Miumbi. That was before the German Colonial I Administration. According to the

1993 TLR p76

MWALUSANYA J

A appellant Jibu s/o Sakilu, the land in dispute was bought by six heads of cattle from a member of the respondent's clan named Missaa s/o Kihinya and that was during the German Colonial Administration. Then appellant testified that they have been occupying that land as their clan land since then. It was in 1989 when a member of the appellant's clan one Mr Pangi s/o Kitio sold that B clan land for one bull to the respondent Petro s/o Miumbi who is not a member of their clan. So appellant filed a suit to redeem that land from the respondent. The respondent resisted the C redemption, contending that the himself had redeemed it when he paid a bull to Pangi s/o Kitio.

What is interesting is that the respondent and his other members of the clan, conceded at the trial that they lost their clan land in dispute during the German Colonial Administration. They said that a D member of their clan Missaa s/o Kihinya did not sell it as claimed, but that as their great grandfather had failed to pay poll tax to the German Colonial Administrators, he pledged the land in dispute to the grandfather of the appellant for a bull. Since that time the land in dispute has not been redeemed by the members of the appellant's clan. So respondent said that since he bought that land for a bull in E 1989 from Pangi s/o Kitio who is a member of the appellant's clan, then he had effectively redeemed their former clan land.

It will be seen from the above account that the parties in this case are in agreement that the respondent's clan lost ownership of that land during the German Colonial Administration. They did F not redeem it, until 1989 when they attempted to redeem it. They could not redeem it in 1989 as twelve years had already elapsed. According to rule 2 of the Customary Law (Limitation of Proceedings) Rules GN No 311/1964, they could only redeem that land within twelve years from G 1964. The twelve years from 1964 ended in 1976. So since 1976 the land in dispute became effectively clan land of the appellant's clan. When respondent attempted to redeem his former clan land in 1989 he was time-barred. So the Primary Court came to the correct conclusion though through a different route. The District Court was wrong in holding that clan land can be redeemed even after the expiry of 12 years.

H In the event this appeal succeeds. The decision of the District Court is set aside, while that of the Trial Court is restored. The appellant is allowed to redeem the land in dispute by refunding a bull to I the respondent. The appeal is allowed with costs. Order accordingly.

1993 TLR p77
A
[zRPz]PETER NG'OMANGO v GERSON M.K. MWANGWA AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL 1993 TLR 77 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Mwalusanya J

CIVIL CASE NO. 22 of 1992 B
11 December, 1992 - DODOMA
Flynote
Constitution Law - Right of access to court to seek a remedy - Article 13 of the Constitution. C
Constitutional Law - Right of access to court and suits against the government - Requirement of ministerial consent to sue the government - Whether constitutional - Section 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 and article 13(3) and (6)(a) and article 30 of the Constitution. D
-Headnote
The plaintiff sued the Principal of Mpwapwa Teachers' College who, being a public servant, applied to have the government joined as a co-defendant but his application was rejected. Then the Attorney E General applied to have the government joined as a co-defendant; this application was also rejected. But finally the government was, by third party notice, joined as 2nd defendant. A preliminary objection was then raised on behalf of the government to the effect that the suit was incompetent for want of consent of the Minister to sue the government, a requirement of s 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967. The plaintiff countered that s 6 of the Act was unconstitutional for infringing the right of free F access to court, and was therefore null and void.

Held: (i) The right of an individual to have free access to the courts is well recognized by the Constitution; the requirement of consent of the Minister before one can sue the government as imposed by s 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 infringes in a big way the G constitutional right of free access to the courts for remedies;

(ii) The consent powers of the Minister under s 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 are so arbitrary and oppressive, and not subject to any restraint or control against abuse that they cannot be saved as lawful by article 30 of the Constitution;

(iii) The provision requiring the Minister's consent to sue the government is so broadly drafted H tht it offends the doctrine of proportionality; it denies an effective and prompt remedy even to those with clear and genuine grievances against the government;

(iv) The requirement of ministerial fiat to sue the government defeats the spirit of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 by bringing back outdated notions which held that rulers I could do no wrong and could

A not be sued, and which have now been discarded by nearly all commonwealth countries;

(v) Obiter: it is inappropriate for the law to give citizens of one part of the United Republic, Zanzibar, better access to court to complain against the government than the rest of the citizens;

B (vi) Obiter: the requirement of ministerial fiat to sue the government militates against the principles of accountability, openness and transparency of the government, all of which go well with the recently re-introduced multi-party democratic system.

(vii) Section 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 is unconstitutional and null and void.

Case Information

C Preliminary objection dismissed.

Cases referred to:

1. Attorney General v. Lesinoi Ndeanai & Another, [1980] TLR 214.
2. DPP v. Ally Haji Ahmed & Ten Others, CAT - Criminal Appeal No. 44 & 45 of 1985 D (unreported).
3. R v. Secretary of State for Home Affairs ex-parte Bhajan Singh, [1975] 2 All ER 1081.
4. Macauley v. Minister for Posts and Telegraphs, [1966] IR 345.
5. Shah v. Attorney General (No. 2) [1970] EA 523.
6. DPP v. Daudi Pete [1993] TLR 22

E 7. Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India [1978] 2 SCR 621.

8. Ong Ah Chuan v. Public Prosecutor [1981] AC 648.
9. Silver Case [1983] 5 EHRR 247.
10. Clarke v. Karika [1985] LRC (Const.) 732.
11. The Queen v. Big M. Drug Mart Ltd., [1986] LRC (Const.) 332.

F 12. Precunier v. Martinez [1974] 416 US 396.

13. Sunday Times Case, [1979] 2 EHRR 245
14. Johnson v. Chief Constable of the RUC, [1987] Q.B. 129.
15. Himid Mbaye v. The Brigade Commander [1984] TLR 294 (HC).
16. Shabani Khamis v. Samson Goa and Another, High Court of Zanzibar Civil Case No. 18 of G 1983 (unreported).
17. Khalfan Abeid Hamad v. Director of Civil Aviation, High Court of Zanzibar, Civil Case No. 20 of 1986 (unreported).
18. Rev. Christopher Mtikila v. The Editor, Business Time & Augustine L. Mrema [1993] TLR 60.

H Ndunguru, for the second defendant.

December 11, 1992.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwalusanya J: The plaintiff Peter s/o Ng'omgango is a tutor at Mpwapwa Teacher's College. He filed I a suit against the principal of Mpwapwa Teacher's College one Mr Gerson M K Mwangwa claiming Shs 1,201,762/= as damages for malicious prosecution and defamation. The defendant applied to have the government joined as co-defendant simply A because he is a public servant but I rejected the application. Then the State Attorney i/c of Dodoma Zone Mr Mwambe, duly instructed by the Attorney-General applied to have the government joined as a co-defendant and again the application was rejected. I advised the defendant that the proper procedure was for him to apply for a third party notice so that the government is joined as B co-defendant. That he did and the government was finally duly joined as the 2nd defendant.

1993 TLR p79

MWALUSANYA J

As expected, the 2nd defendant (the govt) in its written statement of defence has raised a preliminary objection to the effect that the suit is incompetent, for want of consent of the Minister for Justice C under the provisions of the Government Proceedings Act 16 of 1967. In his reply the plaintiff has raised a constitutional point to the effect that the Government Proceedings Act 16 of 1967 as amended by Act 40 of 1974 is unconstitutional and so void. He said that if offends arts 13(3), 13(6)(a) D and 30(3) of our Constitution and so it should be declared void under s 64(5) of the Constitution as well as s 5(1) of Act 16 of 1984. The Republic was represented by Mr Ndunguru, State Attorney while the plaintiff argued the point in person.

The State Attorney Mr Ndunguru conceded that the constitutional point in question was duly served E on him as required by s 17A(2) of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents Misc Provisions) Ord Cap 360 as amended by Act 27 of 1991. So he said that he was quite ready to argue the point. F

The points raised by Mr Ndunguru were two-fold. First that, assuming that the right of an individual to have access to the courts is granted under arts 13(3), 13(6)(a) and 30(3) of the Constitution, yet the same have not been infringed by the Government Proceedings Act. He said that s 6 of the G Government Proceedings Act, which requires written permission from the Minister of Justice in order to sue the government was a mere procedural matter which did not take away the right to sue the government. He said that the right to sue the government is left intact. He contended that since it is H only a procedural matter, it does not infringe the right of access to the courts. He said that it is just like a procedure which is provided in the Civil Procedure Code that one cannot sue any defendant until he has filed a proper plaint in court or until he has given a proper notice to sue the defendant. In fine he argued that the requirement of a fiat from the Minister for Justice is not inconsistent with the right to have a free access to the courts. I

1993 TLR p80

MWALUSANYA J

A Secondly, Mr Ndunguru argued that even if the requirement of a ministerial fiat is taken to infringe the right of free access to the courts provided for in the Constitution, nevertheless he argued the Government Proceedings Act is saved by the derogation clause in article 30(1) and (2) of the Constitution as it is in public interest. He said that it was in public interest for two reasons. First that B the restriction is necessary so as to avoid unnecessary harassment of the government so that it functions smoothly when serving the general public. He said that public policy requires that the government conduct its business smoothly without unnecessary harassments and impediments C otherwise the general public will not be served well. Secondly the State Attorney argued that if the High Court will declare this statute to be unconstitutional, the courts will be inundated with numerous cases against the government and the courts will not be able to cope with the flood of those cases. D So he said that the requirement of a ministerial fiat was in public interest under article 30(1) and (2) of our Constitution, so as to limit the number of cases going to court. And at the same time the government will be spared the embarrassment of being the defendant in frivolous and vexatious cases. He said that, that situation would not be healthy if the requirement of a ministerial fiat is E abolished.

The plaintiff replied by stating that the requirement of a ministerial fiat was not a mere procedural matter but substantively restricts the right to have free access to the courts. He continued to submit F that the Government Proceedings Act is not in public interest and so it is not saved by the derogation clause or claw-back clause. He said that since in every case where the government is the defendant, he said government would be fully heard and defended by a competent State Attorney, he G could not see any reason as to why the ministerial fiat should be imposed. He said that the government would not be prejudiced in any way if the ministerial fiat is taken away. He also argued that the requirement of a ministerial fiat is out of touch with the newly acquired multi-party democracy which stand for openness and transparency on the part of the government.

H Naturally the first question to be answered by this court is as to whether the right of free access to the courts for a remedy is recognised by our Constitution. It is my finding that the right of an individual for free access to the courts is recognised by our Constitution. First we have article 13(3) of our I Constitution which provides: `The Civil Rights, obligations and interests of every person shall be protected and determined by competent courts of law.' And article 30(3) of our Constitution A provides that if one feels that his constitutional rights have been violated, he has the right to `institute proceedings for relief in the High Court'. Not only that we have article 13(1) of our Constitution which provides that all persons are entitled to the protection of the law which envisages that any person will B have a free access to the courts for a remedy. And finally we have article 13(6)(a) of our Constitution which provides for a right of a fair hearing by the court of law, when ones rights and obligations are being determined. The right to be heard includes the right to have free access to the courts to file a suit for a remedy. That was the interpretation by the European Court of Human Rights C in the case of Golder v UK (Judgment of 21 February 1975) in respect of article 6(1) of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (1950) which is worded in similar terms like our article 13(6) of our Constitution. That Court invoked a purposeful D construction instead of a literal construction of the Constitution. That case is digested by a distinguished English jurist Mr Anthony Lester QC at 1063 of the Commonwealth Law Bulletin (1991) 17 CLB 1055 in his article titled `Preparing and Presenting a Human Rights Brief'. I adopt that E persuasive authority by the European Human Rights Court. The above account amply demonstrates that our Constitution recognises the right of an individual to have free access to the courts for a remedy.

The next question is whether the right to have free access to the courts for a remedy is infringed by F the mere fact that s 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 requires a ministerial fiat before one files a suit in court. Counsel for the Republic Mr Ndunguru argued strongly to the effect that the constitutional right to have free access to the courts for a remedy is not infringed by the requirements of a ministerial fiat, because he said that was a mere procedural matter while the right to file a suit is left intact. That problem can only be answered by looking at the international human rights G instruments and other comparative jurisprudence. It is a general principle of law that the interpretation of our provisions in the Constitution have to be made in the light of jurisprudence which has developed on similar provisions in other international and regional statements of the law. That H was the view taken by Kyalali CJ in the case of AG v Lesinoi Ndeanai & Another (1) at page 222 where he said: `On a matter of this nature it is always very helpful to consider what solutions to the problems other courts in other countries have found, since basically human beings are the same though they may I

A live under different conditions.' The same view was repeated by the Tanzania Court of Appeal in the case of DPP v Ally Haji Ahmed & Ten Others (2) where the court emphasized that in interpreting the Constitution the courts have to take into account the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948) and other treaties which Tanzania has ratified. That view is also in line with the B Harare Declaration of Human Rights issued at the end of a high level judicial colloquium of Commonwealth Judges on the topic of Domestic Application of International Human Rights Norms, convened in Harare, Zimbabwe between 19 and 22 April 1989. Our Chief Justice Hon Francis Nyalali attended that colloquium. In their declaration they endorsed the Bangalore Principles (1988) to the C effect that it is within the proper nature of the judicial process for national courts to have regard to international human rights norms (whether or not incorporated into domestic law) for the purpose of D resolving ambiguity or uncertainty in national Constitutions and legislation. On the same point see Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes (1969) 2nd ed at 183 as well as the judgment of Lord Denning MR in the case of R v Sec of State for Home Affairs ex-parte Bhajan Singh (3) at 1089. E Now Tanzania has ratified the following international and regional instruments which provide for the right of free access to the courts without any impediments: the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948) in article 8; the African Charter on Human and Peoples Rights (1981) in article 7(1) F which Tanzania ratified on 18 February 1984; the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (1976) in article 2(3) which Tanzania ratified on 11 September 1976. All those treaties or instruments are very specific that the right of free access to the courts should be without any impediments, including the impediment of the requirement of a ministerial fiat. That was what was decided by the G European Court of Human rights in the Golder case (supra). The UN Human Rights Committee interpreting that right in the case of Wight v Madagascar case No 115/1982 held that a right of access to the courts is infringed not only when an individual is denied the right to file a suit, but also H when restrictions are imposed such that the right to file a suit is rendered illusory or is cumbersome (see at 45 of the Report of the Proceedings of the Judicial Colloquium in Harare, Zimbabwe 19-2 April 1989 published by the Commonwealth Secretariat in November 1989).

That is not all, as we have also comparative jurisprudence. Northern Ireland had the Ministers and I Secretaries Act of 1924 which was in pari materia with our Government Proceedings Act 1967 as it required the consent of the Attorney-General before the government was sued. The Supreme Court A of Northern Ireland in the case of Macauley v Minister for Posts and Telegraphs (4) held that the provision requiring the consent of the Attorney-General was unconstitutional and void as it was in breach of the citizen's right to have access to the courts for a remedy. Nearer home we have the B case from Uganda, the case of Shah v Attorney-General (No 2) (5). The matter there concerned the provision of s 2(1) of the Local Administrations (Amendment) Act 2 of 1969 which imposed the requirement of a ministerial fiat before one could sue the government. Justices Jones, Mead and Wambuzi unanimously held that the provision in question was unconstitutional and void in that it C purported to deprive an aggrieved party of the protection of the law given by the Ugandan Constitution in article 8(2)(a) which is the equivalent of our article 13(1) and (3) of our Constitution. Moreover a very powerful Commission known as the Nyalali Commission in Book Three of its recommendations D at p 30 holds the view, that the requirement of a ministerial fiat is unconstitutional because it deprives an individual the right of a free access to the courts, and accordingly it recommended for its abolition.

In the light of the reasons enumerated above, I am unable to agree with counsel for the Republic Mr E Ndunguru that the requirement of a Ministerial fiat does not infringe the constitutional right of free access to the courts for a remedy. The right is infringed in a big way.

Granted that the requirement of a ministerial fiat infringes the Constitution, is it saved by the F derogation clause or claw-back clause in article 30(1) and (2) of our Constitution for being in public interest. The Tanzanian Court of Appeal in the case of DPP v Daudi Pete (6) held that a statute which infringes the basic human rights is not void if the Republic proves that it is in public interest. G The Tanzanian Court of Appeal made two guidelines as to which law which infringes the basic human rights may be saved by the derogation clause. First the law in question should make adequate safeguards against arbitrary decisions. Secondly the said law should not offend the H doctrine of proportionality or reasonableness - that is the law should not be too broadly drafted as to net the innocent and the offenders. I will discuss these two points seriatim.

The law which is alleged to have been saved by the derogation clause for being in public interest, I must have adequate safeguards against arbitrary deprivation of basic human rights. The Tanzania

1993 TLR p84

MWALUSANYA J

A Court of Appeal in the Daudi Pete (6) case quoted with approval the decisions of the Supreme Court of India in the case of Maneka Gandhi v Union of India (7) to the effect that any law which does not have adequate safeguards and effective control against arbitrary interferences by public authorities with the rights safeguarded is not `law'. A lawful `law' implies compatibility with the rule of B law. The Privy Council in the case of Ong Ah Chuan v Public Prosecutor (8) at 669-671 made a similar remark. Therefore it is not enough to have a `law' which does not have safeguards, because it is not `law' at all - see Prof H W R Wade in his book Administrative Law (1965) Oxford University C Press at page 37. And Chief Justice Francis Nyalali made a pertinent remark when addressing the legal community at the University of DSM in 1985 on the topic `The Bill of Rights in Tanzania' (1991) vol 8 DSM University Law Journal when he said at 2: `This overriding of rights and duties of the D individual by rights and duties of the community does not however entail arbitrary action on the part of the community or its institutions. As illustrated by the provisions of article 30(2) it has to be done according to law'. The European Court of Human Rights has also held in the case of the Silver case (9) that a `law' that infringes basic human rights without any adequate safeguards against arbitrary E action, is not `law'. Now a glance at the Government Proceedings Act 1967 will reveal that it is not a lawful `law' because it does not have any safeguards against arbitrary action by the Minister for Justice. The arbitrariness and oppressive nature of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 has been F amply documented - see Report of the Nyalali Commission, Book Three at page 30 and the LLM Dissertation of 1985 by law lecturer of the University of DSM Mr M K B Wambali titled The Tort Liability of the Government in Tanzania. The impact of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 on the rights of individual claimants see Mimeo at the University of DSM Library. First there is no appeal G against the decision of the Minister for Justice contrary to article 13(6)(a) of our Constitution. Secondly, there is all likelihood that the ministerial power may be grossly abused as the Act does not provide for restrictions of any type on the Minister. Thirdly there are no guidelines laid down for the H Minister to follow in exercising this power. We are all at the mercy of his idiosyncrasies. Fourthly there is no obligation imposed on the part of the Minister to answer the application and so Ministerial power may affect the period of limitation. Finally the consent has an extremely great likelihood of not I serving the ends of justice, for how come that the government is a judge in its own cause? The decision will always be at the expense of the individual rights. The procedure patently defends the ends of justice. A There can be no doubt that the Ministerial fiat requirements has been used by the government as a tool of oppression against the people it govern. That much has been documented by Mr

1993 TLR p85

MWALUSANYA J

Wambali in B his dissertation. He found that one could hardly make out tangible principles by which the Minister for Justice was guided in reaching the decision whether or not consent should be granted. He found that in each case any plausible justification was made for either a grant or a refusal. In short the decisions were found always to be palpably arbitrary. Examples are cited in the thesis wherein C consent was refused simply because the Minister thought if the matter went to court a good quantum of damages would have been awarded by the courts to the claimant on merits. In other cases Mr Wambali found that in many instances the Minister reached his manifestly adverse decision without referring to any supporting legal authorities or basing them on incorrect points of law. Another valid D complaint he discovered was the length of time taken to deal with the applications. It usually takes an unnecessarily long time. He found that out of the 58 tort claims he studied, only 6 applications for consent were granted by the Minister, that is about 10 per cent; and it took the average of four years E to reach the decision either way.

Certainly that is an inordinately very long time to reach a decision, taking into account the fact that the period of limitation is three years for torts. The graphic account of Mr M K B Wambali can also be F seen in his paper he presented at the Seminar to Commemorate 25 years of the Faculty of Law, held between 20th and 25th October 1986 at the University of DSM titled `The enforcement of the Bill of Rights against the Government'.

Others to document the oppression rendered by the requirement of the ministerial fiat is Dr Chris G Maina Peter a lecturer at the Faculty of Law of the University of DSM in his article Five Years of the Bill of Rights in Tanzania Drawing a Balance Sheet published in the African Journal of International and Comparative Law - 4 RADIC (1992) pages 131-167 at 156-157 where he states: H

`The most conspicuous and frustrating among the rights denied to the citizen is the right to sue the government. It seems as if the government has resolved to protect itself. This protectionist attitude of the government is codified through the Government Proceedings Act 1967. This strategic legislation insulates the government from all claims I in a feudalistic manner. According to this law, anybody

A wanting to sue the government has first to seek permission from the same government through the Attorney-General. To get such permission is a tussle which takes time. In some cases it has taken years to get the holy permit. This is not an accident, it has a meaning. The time factor is intended to wear our the claimant and force B him to settle the matter out of court with the government. If he insists on proceeding with the case, then time will have taken its toll and it is likely that some of the key witnesses will have died, been transferred or simply forgotten what transpired in relation to the issue being litigated. The legislation is quite irrational. The cruelty of this sadism C reaches the climax when the applicant himself dies while waiting for the Attorney-General's permission to enable him to pursue his rights through the courts of law. This happened in the case of Soarion Bruno.'

Others who have made similar adverse remarks against the Government Proceedings Act 1967 D include Prof Issa G Shivji in his article State and Constitutionalism in Africa: A New Democratic Perspective (1990) vol 18 of the International Journal of the Society of Law page 381 at 401.

And as I said earlier there are no safeguards and effective control against any gross abuses that they E may be committed by the Minister for Justice. The State Attorney Mr Ndunguru must have been kidding when he submitted that the law in question is in public interest. To the contrary it is the public who are being oppressed. Mr Ndunguru should respect the maxim, no research no right to speak. It is my finding that as the Government Proceedings Act 1967 has no safeguards and effective control F against gross abuses as amply documented above, it is not a lawful `law'. It is void and unconstitutional.

It is also my considered view that the Government Proceedings Act 1967 offends the doctrine of G proportionality. This principle of proportionality requires that the means employed by the government to implement matters in public interest should be no more than is reasonably necessary to achieve the legitimate aims. In other words, the government must show that the restriction imposed on a H basic human right is required by a compelling social need and that it is so framed as not to limit the right in question more than is necessary or proportionate to achieve a legitimate objective. The doctrine is discussed by the Court of Appeal of Cook Islands in the case of Clark v Karika (10) and by the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of The Queen v Big M Drug Mart Ltd (11). And Mr I Anthony Lester QC in his article mentioned above at pages 1064-1065 quotes a number of cases decided by the Supreme Courts of many A Commonwealth countries which consider the principle of proportionality to be as well established to be part of the public law or administrative law. In the USA the principle of proportionality was recognised by the US Supreme Court in the case of Precunier v Martinez (12) at p 143. While the European Court of Human Rights has invoked that doctrine in outlawing laws going against basic B human rights in the case of Sunday Times Case (13) and the case of Silver Case (9). In England the doctrine of proportionality is discussed in Halsbury's Laws of England 4th ed vol 51 at para 2296 and see also the case of Johnson v Chief Constable of the RUC (14) at 151. In Tanzania the doctrine of C proportionality was expounded by the Tanzanian Court of Appeal in the DPP v Daudi Pete Case (6) wherein it is stated that the law being defended for being in public interest should not be too broadly drafted such that its provisions are capable of depriving personal liberty not only to persons who are considered to be dangerous, but even to persons who cannot be considered to be dangerous. They said the law should not be a rat-trap which catches both rats and humans without D distinction.

MWALUSANYA J

Now the Government Proceedings Act 1967 offends the doctrine of proportionality because it is so E broad such that it denies an effective and prompt remedy to all and sundry without distinction - even to those who have a clear and genuine grievance against the government. I see no compelling social need to have restriction to sue the government, whereby the rights of citizens are marginalised and F emasculated. The State Attorney Mr Ndunguru argued that the courts will be flooded with cases when the government is allowed to be sued without fiat; and also that the government will not be able to function smoothly if frivolous and vexatious cases are freely allowed in courts against the government. Such arguments are preposterous and without substance. Nearly all countries of the G Commonwealth have done away with the requirement of a ministerial fiat, and they don't face such problems as mentioned by the State Attorney. In fact in one part of Tanzania, that is in Zanzibar, the right to sue the Government of the United Republic without a ministerial fiat is recognised and no H problems mentioned by the State Attorney are encountered there. In his article in the Journal of the Judges and Magistrates Association of Tanzania (1989) vol I page 1, the Hon Mr Justice Ramadhani (then Chief Justice of Zanzibar) mentions three cases in which the Union Government has been I sued without the fiat namely: Himidi Mbaye v The Brigade Commander of

A Nyuki Brigade (15); Shabani Khamis v Samson Goa & Another (16) and Khalfan Abeid Hamad v The Director of Civil Aviation (17). In Zanzibar all that one has to do before suing the government is to give a month's notice to the government. That is a sufficient and reasonable restriction against suing the government. The legislation in Zanzibar is in line with the doctrine of proportionality as it B does not limit the right of access to the courts more than is necessary or proportionate to achieve a legitimate objective. The law in Tanzania mainland is based on the unjustifiable protectionist attitude or fear that the government may be involved in uncontrolled litigation, thus ending in serious losses of C revenue. But that argument cannot hold water when one considers the high capability of the government to distribute the losses suffered through some fiscal measures, such as taxation.

The courts of course will always recognise that the state enjoys a margin of appreciation in D conforming their law and practice with the basic human rights. But the government does not enjoy an unlimited margin of appreciation. Ultimately it is for the Court to assess whether the reasons given to justify an interference with the basic human right are relevant and sufficient. In the case in hand the E government has failed to establish on a balance of probabilities that the requirement of a ministerial fiat is for a given pressing social need and that the restriction is framed such that as not to limit the right protected more than is necessary. In short the government has failed to prove that the restriction on the right to have free access to the courts is proportionate and closely tailored to the F aim sought to be achieved.

There is also another dimension. In view of the fact that Tanzanians of Zanzibar can sue the Union government without a ministerial fiat, while their counterparts in mainland Tanzania cannot do that, a G case is made out to the effect that the Government Proceeding Act 1967 infringes article 13(1) of our Constitution. That article provides: `All persons are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination, to equal opportunity before and protection of the law.' Now the impugned law is discriminatory of the citizens of mainland Tanzania just because of their place of origin - see article H 13(5) of our Constitution which defines what discrimination means.

As the law now stands the Tanzanians of Zanzibar are more equal than the Tanzanians of the mainland. That is not a healthy situation.

I The practice of the requirement of a ministerial fiat before one can sue the government, defeats the general spirit underlying the Government Proceedings Act A 1967. The statement of the objects and reasons of the Government Proceedings Bill of 1967 was said to be: `That in a modern democratic State, it is right that the government should be able to sue or be sued as if it were a private person of full capacity.' And that the Bill sought to reform the law B relating to civil proceedings in courts by or against the government, as the law hitherto in operation was thoroughly outdated - see Attorney-General Mr Mark Bomani in Hansard `Majadiliano ya Bunge 1967 - Mkutano ya Nane - 11 April to 18 April 1967 at 108'. In its Fundamental Objectives and C Directive Principles of State Policy the Constitution in article 9(1)(k) states that Tanzania is a democratic state. Then why did he government out of the blue in 1974 by Act 40 reintroduce the ministerial consent requirement when in 1967 it was stated to be undemocratic and outdated? Is D Tanzania not a democratic state now? And it is not axiomatic that the law in question is outdated? That law finds it root in ancient English Constitutional mythology about the divine nature of kingship - that the `King can do no wrong' and that `the King cannot be sued'. But that is an anachronism in a democratic state like Tanzania. Even in England itself the position changed since 1947 whereby a E citizen can sue the government as of right. And nearly all the Commonwealth countries have done away with the requirement of a ministerial fiat. Tanzania is an odd man out.

1993 TLR p89

MWALUSANYA J

The requirement of a ministerial fiat militates against the principle of accountability and the often quoted principle of openness and transparency of the government. The Ontario Law Reform F Commission of Canada in its report headed Report on the Liability of the Crown, 1989 reported in the Commonwealth Law Bulletin vol 16 no 3 of July 1990 pages 855-859 said at 856. G

`The present law governing liability of the Crown, insofar as it still provides privileges and immunities not enjoyed by ordinary persons is inconsistent with popular conceptions of government: Crown immunities are particularly contrary to a deeply - held notion that the government and its officials ought to be subject to the same legal rules H as private individuals and should be accountable to injured citizen for its wrongful conduct. A key element of this concept is the fact that the application or ordinary principles of law to government is placed in the hands of the ordinary courts, who are independent of government and therefore capable of being relied upon to award an appropriate remedy to a person who has been injured by unlawful government action.' I

1993 TLR p90

MWALUSANYA J

A At the end of the day, the Ontario Law Reform Commission recommended the abolition of the requirement of the ministerial fiat, as it was also found to be inconsistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

In Tanzania under one party democracy, the spurious justification for having a requirement of the B ministerial fiat, was espoused by some party fundamentalists (Wakereketwa) who nursed the idea that the government under the leadership of the CCN party which had a `clear and correct ideology' had a greater public interest to preserve and a monopoly of what is good for the country and C therefore cannot be let to be scandalized in courts by individuals with impunity. However that view cannot prevail now with the advent of multi-party democracy which was ushered in, in July 1992. In a bid to expand democracy the people in a multi-party democracy will continue bit by bit to wrench D away the mask of invincibility and unimpenetrability that the government sought to wear for many years under one party rule - see the debates in Parliament during the passing of the 9th Constitutional Amendment Act of 1992. Thus the vulnerability of the government to give way for more democratic institutions and norms has now been exposed.

E In the final analysis, I find that s 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 as amended by Act 40 of 1974 is unconstitutional and so void. I so declare under s 5(1) of Act 16 of 1984 as well as article 64(5) of the Constitution. For sure by this step, the CCM government will rejoice because in the 1990 F Election Manifesto, the said CCM government pledged to get rid of all the problems that plague the people (kuwaondolea wananchi mambo yote yanayowakera). The requirement of a ministerial fiat to sue the government was one of those matters that has been plaguing the people. Now this tool of oppression which the Tanu government in 1967 said it was undemocratic and outdated is gone G forever, and it is now part of the legal folklore destined for the dustbin. The Judiciary as an organ of the government has played its noble part to get rid of a matter that has been plaguing the people for far too long. It is pertinent to remark here that the government in the past and in this case had H insisted to be joined as a co-defendant not as a philanthropist wishing to bail out their distressed civil servant but for their own ulterior motives. They have been using the requirement of a ministerial fiat not as a shield to protect their own legitimate interests but as a sword to frustrate genuine claims. In I this case I told the State Attorney that the government's interests will be properly safeguarded if they merely provided legal representation to the defendant but they refused, and insisted to be joined as co-defendants. In the case of Rev Christopher A Mtikila v The Editor, Business Times and Mr Augustine Lyantonga Mrema (18) the government tried to use that play of using the law as a sword to frustrate the plaintiff's claims, but it was nipped in the bud by Samatta JK who held that the government need not be joined as a co-defendant. In this B respect Dr Chris Maina Peter in his article - 4 RADIC (1992) page 131 (supra) graphically illustrates the point raised at 157 thus:

> `Practice indicates that even where a person in an attempt to avoid this requirement of getting government approval, decides to sue the government officer alone without joining the government, the government insists on being joined C as a respondent. Worse still, once the government is joined, then it invokes the requirements of the Government Proceedings Act 1974. Permission must be sought although the government has joined the proceedings at its own request. This is exactly what happened in the case of Patrick Maziku v G A Sebalili and Eight Others: Tabora High.' D

However in this case the play has boomeranged. The government has been hoisted by its own petard.

Be that as it may, in the event the preliminary objection raised by the Republic is dismissed. The suit E will proceed to trial as scheduled. Costs in the cause. Order accordingly.

1993 TLR p91

G

[zRPz]TRANSPORT EQUIPMENT LTD v D.P. VALAMBHIA 1993 TLR 91 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Makame JJA, Kisanga JJA and Ramadhani JJA

CIVIL REFERENCE NO. 7 OF 1992 H

12 February, 1993

(From the ruling and decision of a single judge of the Court of Appeal of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Mfalila, J.A.)

Flynote

Court of Appeal Rules - Notice of Appeal - Service of Notice of Appeal out of time - Reasons for which court may I allow service of notice of appeal out of time.

1993 TLR p92

-Headnote

A This was a reference from the ruling of a single judge of the Court of Appeal of Tanzania refusing to extend time within which the applicant could serve the respondent with a copy of the notice of appeal. The applicant advanced two sets of reasons on the basis of which he prayed the Court to grant the application. First were extraordinary circumstances at the trial which merit the attention of B the Court of Appeal. Secondly, that the intended appeal would involve important points of law. The Court of Appeal considered the two grounds.

Held: (i) There are no extraordinary circumstances meriting the attention of this Court except perhaps a display of the lack of coming to grips with the rules;

C (ii) When the point at issue is one alleging illegality of the decision being challenged, the Court has a duty even if it means extending the time for the purpose to ascertain the point and, if the alleged illegality be established, to take appropriate measures to put the matter and the record right;

D (iii) The points of law submitted in this case have not succeeded to put in doubt the legality of the ruling by the judge;

(iv) What is glaring to the eye here is sheer negligence of the advocate, which is not a sufficient reason to extend time;

Case Information

Reference dismissed.

E Cases referred to:

1. Abdulatiff v. Saada Mohamed, H.C., DSM, Misc. Civil Appeal No. 20 of 1988 (unreported).
2. Kidaha Rashid v. Nasser Mohamed Mbaraka, HC, DSM, Civil Case No. 3 of 1982 (unreported).
3. Abdulhusein Bodalbhoy v. Marekwa, 5 ZLR 44.

F 4. Air Caterers Ltd. v. Air Tanzania Corporation, HC, DSM, Civil Case No. 223 of 1989 (unreported).

5. Continental Agencies v. AC. Berrill & Co. Ltd, [1971] EA 105.
6. Manners v. Pearson and Son [1898] 1 Ch. 58.
7. Theodora v. Gordon, HC, Arusha, Civil Case No. 70 of 1984.

G 8. Milliangos v. George [1976] AC 443.

9. Principal Secretary, Ministry of Defence v. D.P. Valambhia [1992] TLR 185.
10. The Commissioner of Transport v. The A.G. of Uganda and Another [1959] EA 329.

H Mbuya, for the applicant.

M.G. Maira and M.N. Marando, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Ramadhani, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

I This is a reference from the ruling of Mfalila JA refusing to extend time within which the applicant, Transport Equipment Ltd (hereinafter referred to as TEL), could A serve the respondent, D F Valambhia (hereinafter referred to as Valambhia), with a copy of the notice of appeal.

It has not been disputed that TEL was dissatisfied with the ruling of Rubama J on 12 February 1991 and so they filed a notice of appeal on 19 February 1991 but no copy of that was served on B Valambhia. It is common knowledge, in this litigation, that Valambhia has retained two advocates: Mr Maira and Mr Marando. The learned counsel for TEL, Mr Mbuya, admits that two copies of the notice of appeal were put in one envelope which was then addressed to Mr Marando but was never C dispatched and that it was seen lying in his (that is Mr Mbuya's) Chambers on 23 April 1991 when a copy of the notice of motion of Valambhia seeking to strike out that notice of appeal was served on him. It is further not contested that despite that discovery, Mr Mbuya did not immediately file a notice of motion to extend time within which to serve a copy of the notice of appeal on Valambhia. On the D contrary, such notice of motion was filed six months later, on 23 October 1991, when the notice of motion of Valambhia to strike out that notice of appeal had already been set down for hearing before Omar JA. E

Before us TEL was represented by Mr Mbuya assisted by Dr Ford, learned advocate from Ireland who was admitted on a special licence under s 39(2) of the Advocates Ordinance. For Valambhia, there were the same two counsel: Mr Maira and Mr Marando. F

Both advocates for TEL instead of pointing out to us the errors of the single judge, went to a considerable length arguing their intended grounds of appeal. We tolerated that amid the repeated objections from the learned counsel for Valambhia, simply because we are solemnly aware of the gravity of this reference purely owing to the colossal sums involved and the obvious fact that our G word is final.

On behalf of TEL we were given two sets of `sufficient' reasons to extend them. The first set was on some extraordinary circumstances at the trial which merit the attention of this Court. The second set catalogued important points of law which, it was argued, should override the accidental slip in H observing the Rules of this Court.

As for the extraordinary circumstances at the trial, Mr Mbuya pointed out that in the High Court Civil case No 210/89, TEL, who was the plaintiff, was ordered to file a reply to the written statement of defence of Valambhia and also to file a written statement of defence to the counter-claim of I Valambhia. That was to be done

A by 25 January 1991 and hearing was set for 1 February 1991. However, as TEL is registered in Ireland and has its offices there, and also because of the illness of its Managing Director, that was not possible. Mr Mbuya said that his application for an adjournment by a letter to the Registrar of the High Court found no purchase. His renewed efforts on the day set for hearing were also barren of B results. The learned Trial Judge adjourned the proceedings to 12 February 1991 for his ruling in which, Mr Mbuya explained, he refused the application for adjournment, dismissed the suit and granted the counter-claim. Mr Mbuya observed that the application was rejected because of two C reasons. One, the nature of the illness of the Managing Director was not disclosed in the medical certificate tendered. Two, Mr Mbuya complained, the learned judge, suo motu, compared the signature on the letter attached to the medical report, to the other signatures in other documents in D the case file and found them different and on that basis rejected the report as a concoction. Mr Mbuya lamented that he was not given an opportunity to explain the apparent difference. He also argued that the learned judge ought to have granted the adjournment with costs. Then as to the dismissal of the plaint, Mr Mbuya protested that he should have been given an opportunity to prove E his case and likewise, he claimed, he should have been allowed to contest the counter-claim even without filing a written statement of defence.

On the other hand Mr Maira submitted that the application for adjournment was resisted on two F grounds. First, the past conduct of Mr Mbuya in this litigation did not portray him to be serious. Mr Maira cited a number of examples of this. Second, Mr Maira said that Mr Mbuya could not even meet the challenge to produce a draft written statement of defence awaiting the signature of the Managing G Director. Mr Marando added that the date 1 February 1991 was not for hearing the suit and not for praying for an adjournment. Mr Marando pointed out further that under O VIII R 11(1) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966 (hereinafter referred to as CPC) the written statement of defence to the counter-claim was to be filed within twenty-one days of service which was 21 January 1991. H However, Mr Mbuya, it was contended, could have asked for an extension of time. Mr Marando pointed out that the written statement of defence was neither filed nor was extension of time applied for, instead Mr Mbuya prayed for an adjournment. For failing to do one of those two things, Mr Marando remarked, under O VIII R 14(1) of the CPC the Court was free to grant the counter-claim or I make any other order as it deemed fit. In this case,

1993 TLR p95

RAMADHANI JA

Mr Marando said, the court allowed the counter-claim and that was after he had prayed for that. A

Mr Marando also observed that Mr Mbuya was not in a position to prove the case for TEL because he had told the Court that he had four to five witnesses all of whom were in Ireland and specifically prayed for an adjournment so that the witnesses and the Managing Director could come at the same B time to save costs.

Mr Mbuya admitted that the learned judge was entitled to know the nature of the illness of the Managing Director and that the medical certificate was conspicuously silent on that. At the same C time we cannot fault the learned judge in comparing the signatures, albeit suo motu, of documents tendered in the same case. Again we cannot fault the learned judge for refusing the prayer to adjourn which was made on the date set for hearing, when the reason advanced was a failure to comply with the rules. These rules are for all litigants; residents and non-residents alike. We might have been D swayed otherwise if the refusal was to an application to extend time within which to file a written statement of defence to the counter-claim. It beats us why that was not done. Mr Mbuya would have been playing within the rules and not outside them as he sought to do. We then note that Mr Mbuya did not have a single witness to support the plaint. We also glean that he could not defend the E counter-claim. This is because Mr Mbuya did not even have enough instructions to prepare a draft written statement of defence. It is not surprising then that the specific prayers for the dismissal of the plaint and the grant of the counter-claim were not challenged. F

Now all of that has to be seen with the backdrop of the previous conduct of Mr Mbuya in this litigation. It is on that on 19 October 1990 Mr Mbuya was granted an adjournment he had prayed for to file an affidavit for Mr Mkatte, learned counsel, who had acted for TEL before him. Mr Mbuya has not G refuted Mr Maira's assertion that that affidavit has yet to be filed. Then two copies of notices of hearing were produced. One was for a hearing before the same Rubama J on 1 December 1990 and on that Mr Mbuya endorsed: `the date is inconvenient to us'. The other was for a hearing before the H same judge on 10 December 1990 which was again annotated `date unsuitable because of previous engagents sic)'. Obviously the word was intended to be `engagements'. Not even lame excuses were offered to explain the endorsement. Denials were out of question because of signatures and his Chamber's stamp. To crown it all, the discovery that Valambhia was not served with a copy of notice I of

1993 TLR p96

RAMADHANI JA

A appeal, as already seen, was made on 23 April 1991 yet it took six months, until 23 October 1991, to apply for the extension of time in which to serve them. The explanation given was that Mr Mbuya's secretary was hospitalised in various places outside Dar es Salaam including Nairobi and that she had to swear an affidavit in support of the application, and so the delay.

B We are far from being persuaded that there are any extraordinary circumstances meritting the attention of this Court except perhaps a display of the lack of coming to grips with the rules.

The second set of reasons on important points of law was largely marshalled by Dr Ford. He started C by pointing out that courts would normally extend time prescribed by their rules if a point of law is involved which would not be dealt with unless time is so enlarged. Then Dr Ford gave an inventory containing seven points of law. However, we are of the well settled opinion that only four of the seven D points merit discussion in this ruling.

The first point of law we address ourselves to is that the Stamp Duty Act, 1972 has been violated. Mr Mbuya at the end of the day acknowledged that the document of 10 June 1989 between Valambhia and the Ministry of Defence (MOD) is exempted from stamp duty. As to the unilateral surrender E agreement of 4 January 1989, Mr Mbuya, after some prevarication, stated that his instructions were that it was an agreement and so was covered by the Stamp Duty Act. This is the document titled `Irrecoverable Agreement' in which TEL `irrevocably, unconditionally, unilaterally' surrendered 45% of F the proceeds of the contract it had entered with MOD to Valambhia.

Mr Marando had two responses to that. First, he claimed that a unilateral surrender is not an agreement so is not covered by the Stamp Duty Act. In the alternative it was argued that the G omission to affix a duty stamp on the document can be cured by the court ordering that to be done. Mr Marando referred us to two unreported authorities of the High Court on this point: Abdulatiff v Saada Mohamed (1) and Kidaha Rashid v Nasser Mohammed Mbaraka (2).

H We have no difficulties in saying that the relevant document is an agreement and so covered by the Stamp Duty Act. Apart from the fact that the document itself is so entitled, that is `Irrevocable Agreement', it has been signed by R John Nolan, the Chairman and Managing Director of TEL, and by Valambhia himself. If it was truly a unilateral surrender document then there was no need for I Valambhia to sign when not a party to a unilateral declaration. Now, if it is an agreement then it is subject to stamp duty.

1993 TLR p97

RAMADHANI JA

Section 46(1) of the Stamp Duty provides: A

> No instrument chargeable with duty shall be admitted in evidence for any purpose by any person having by law or consent of parties authority to receive the evidence or shall be acted upon, registered or authenticated by any such person or by any public officer, unless such instrument is duly stamped.' (Emphasis added.) B

Two conditions prescribed in that subsection are relevant here. These are the admission of an unstamped document in evidence or acting upon such a document. Now, from the record it is patently clear that Rubama J never `admitted in evidence' the irrevocable agreement. However, a C copy of the agreement was annexed to the written statement of defence and the counter-claim and Valambhia craved leave to refer to it as part of the written statement of defence. As such, though the learned Trial Judge did not mention the agreement in his ruling, the irrevocable agreement could be taken to have been `acted upon'. For the purposes of this reference let us assume that it was. This D offends the above quoted section.

Now, is that a vital point of law in issue to be sufficient cause for us to extend time?

Mr Marando referred us to Abdulatiff and Kidaha Rashid where it was held that an unstamped E document was admissible provided that an order was issued that it be stamped. In fact that is provided for by proviso (a) to s 46(1) of the Stamp Duty Act. Admittedly this, for whatever reason, was not ordered by the learned Trial Judge. Now, if we extend time, as it asked of us, and the appeal F comes up, what is it that we are going to do after the hearing? The answer is obvious. We are going to do what Rubama J ought to have done under the proviso referred to above. Now, is that a vital point of law for our consideration? We think not. When the outcome is that well charted out then it cannot be a vital point of law for the consideration of this Court. G

Of course we are aware that if our assumption that the irrevocable agreement has been `acted upon' is correct, then we have on record a document which offends s 46(1) of the Stamp Duty Act and it will continue to be so if we refuse to extend time so that we can rectify it on appeal. However s 4693) H of the same Act says:

(3) Failure by any public officer to examine and impound any instrument as required by this subsection (sic) shall, in no circumstances affect -

(a) any proceeding under this Act or any other written law. I

1993 TLR p98

RAMADHANI JA

A Without analysing ss (3), on the face of it, we have no doubt that it covers the present situation where the ruling by Rubama J was made `under . . . any other written law'. It would appear to us then that no offence is perpetuated.

B So this point of law is not such as would persuade us to extend time.

The second point of law raised was with respect to the proof of the quantum of damages. The damages awarded have been regarded as implausible. It was also argued that TEL was not given an opportunity to defend itself.

C On 12 February 1991 after the rejection of the application for an adjournment by TEL, the dismissal of the plaint and granting of the counter-claim, an order was given that the proof of the quantum was by an affidavit. It was to be filed by 5 March 1991 and mention was to be on 9 March D 1991. The orders were given in the presence of Mr Maira and Mr Mbuya.

Valambhia duly filed his affidavit and quantum. On the date appointed for mention Mr Mbuya was absent. So the Deputy Registrar who conducted the mention placed the matter before Rubama J on E 19 March 1991 for the assessment of damages. On that date, too, Mr Mbuya was absent and the ruling on damages was finally given on 22 March 1991. Again the record does show that Mr Mbuya was present.

Two things are conspicuous from the records. First, the copy of the affidavit by Valambhia is silent F and mum on whether a copy of that was served on TEL. So TEL was not aware of what was claimed. Then, as already said, the records are loud and clear that Mr Mbuya was absent from the court on 9 March 1991 at the mention, on 19 March 1991 at the assessment of damages and on 22 March 1991 when the ruling on the assessment was delivered.

G We shall start with the second complaint that TEL was not represented in court for the assessment. As already pointed out Mr Mbuya was aware of the date for mention. He therefore did not need a notice of hearing from the registry. That he was absent, he has only himself to blame. Of course, in his absence the date for the assessment was fixed which sitting he again missed. Now, H was he to be notified of that date either by the registry or by Valambhia? We are very quick to say no.

An eminent Chief Justice of Zanzibar, Chief Justice Law, as far back as 1939, said in Abdulhusein Bodalbhoy v Marekwa (3):

I `In my opinion, apart from the official notice in `the Gazette' referred to, it is the duty of parties to keep themselves informed as to when their cases will be tried.' (Emphasis added.) A

We concur with the learned Chief Justice only that instead of reference to the notice in `the Gazette' we shall refer to the date fixed for mention. B

Now, was Mr Mbuya prevented from challenging the affidavit because of non-service of a copy thereof? The immediate reaction is to say yes. But upon reflecting that was not so. First, had he attended the mention on 9 March 1991 he would have complained of the non-service. Definitely he would then have been served. But, secondly, and this may be more vital, Mr Marando cautioned that C Mr Mbuya did not have an automatic right of filing a counter-affidavit according to Bahati J in Air Caterers Ltd v Air Tanzania Corporation (4). Mr Marando claimed that Mr Mbuya had to make an application to do that. The submission was not controverted in reply. D

So we are satisfied that the failure to be heard on the assessment was self-imposed by Mr Mbuya and that that cannot be a point of law to enlarge time.

It was also submitted that the Tanzania Exchange Control Ordinance, Cap 294, particularly s 5(b) E thereof, had been violated. This was the third vital point of law involved, so it was claimed, in the intended appeal. The breach of that statutory law was coupled with the disregard of the case law that Tanzania Courts can only enter judgments in Tanzania Shillings and not in foreign currency as was F in this case. As for the second criticism we were referred to the case of Continental Agencies v A C Berrill & Co Ltd (5) in which the East African Court of Appeal upheld the then Chief Justice of Tanzania, Georges.

Mr Marando remarked that the decision in Continental Agencies was based on the English law as it G was then and according to the case of Manners v Pearson and Son (6) which was cited in Continental Agencies by Mustafa JA. However, he pointed out, the position in England has now changed as is witnessed by the Halsbury's Laws of England 4th ed at 341. The learned advocate H went further to say that there are certain decisions of the High Court of Tanzania which have awarded damages in foreign currency. He cited Theodoras v Gordon (7). In that case, Mr Marando submitted, Chua J gave judgment in pounds sterling.

It is clear that Georges CJ based his decision on the English case. Dr Ford told us that because of the European Community the legal I

1993 TLR p100

RAMADHANI JA

A position in England has changed as borne out by Milliangos v George (8) where damages in tort, not contract, were awarded in foreign currency. However, Dr Ford could not contain his astonishment when the excerpt from the Halsbury's Laws of England was read out. That para 541 reads, in relevant places, as follows:

B `The Court has power to give judgment for a sum of money expressed in foreign currency in the case of obligations of a money character to pay foreign currency under a contract; the proper law of which was a foreign country or where it is the currency of the contract. . . . Where a plaintiff seeks to obtain a judgment in a foreign currency he should C expressly state in his writ of summons that he makes his claim for payment in a specified foreign currency and should plead the facts relied on to support such a claim.'

Two conditions prominently stand out in that proposition of law. First, the contrast forming the basis D of the claim must have been in foreign currency. Second, the plaintiff, or as in this case the defendant in the counter-claim, must have specifically prayed for relief in foreign currency while proving the basis of that prayer. We do not need to recapitulate that both of the requirements were met in this case.

E In our opinion if the basis of the case law of Tanzania has changed then there is absolutely no reason why the case law should not follow suit. That would have been different if there is a statute to the contrary. We may observe here that Cap 294 is no longer law in Tanzania. It was repealed by the F Foreign Exchange Act 1 of 1992 which came in force on 16 March 1992 per GN 37/92. The former s 5(b) which is said to have been violated, prohibited payments within Tanzania to or for the credit of a person resident outside Tanzania or on behalf of one resident outside Tanzania except with the G permission of the Treasury. However, the new s 5(b) says:

`any person whether resident or not resident in the United Republic may hold any amount of foreign currency and raw gold within the United Republic.'

H In fact Bureaux des Change have been established for transactions without formality and secrecy has been guaranteed except by due process of law.

We are of the well considered opinion that the point of foreign exchange violation has been overtaken by events and law. That point will only have academic interest while this is a court of justice and not I an academic institution.

1993 TLR p101

RAMADHANI JA

Admittedly because of the doctrine of stare decisis Rubama J, as well as the other learned judges, A were bound by the decision in Continental Agencies. But we cannot help asking ourselves whether we will strike the Continental Agencies in view of the present legal state, if the ruling of Rubama J comes to us on appeal. It is a foregone conclusion that we will not. If so, then what is the vital point of law which we shall deal with if we extend time? B

The final point of law that was propounded was that the learned Trial Judge erred in law in ordering a third party, the Government through the Ministry of Defence, to effect payment while not being afforded an opportunity to put up a case. Here there are three matters. First, the moneys claimed do C not belong to the Government but were due to be paid to TEL. The fact that the Government owed TEL some money has been more than adequately testified to by TEL in their plaint in paras 3 to 6 and 10. The second point is that the Government itself acknowledges having some money for TEL. D Mr Mrema, Principle State Attorney and the Director of Civil and International Department in the Attorney-General's Chambers, had said in Court:

`We are aware Government owed TEL certain moneys for goods delivered, the Government has an obligation to pay E that debt.'

Lastly, the Government is aware of the dispute between TEL and Valambhia and has agreed to assist the latter to recover what is due to him. There is the agreement of 4 January 1989 between the F Government and Valambhia to that effect. TEL has acknowledged the existence of that agreement in para 10 of the plaint. As a matter of fact the Government was just waiting to know whom, as between the parties, should be paid and how much.

It is clear that the Government was not sued and did not require to defend itself and the requirement G to pay was not prejudicial to its interests.

As stated much earlier, Dr Ford gave us a list of authorities from outside this jurisdiction on the fact that this Court could enlarge time prescribed by our Rules if there is a point of law involved in the H appeal. We agree with that and we have in fact already done so a number of times. In Principal Secretary, Ministry of Defence v D P Valambhia (9) we said `In our view when the point at issue is one alleging illegality of the decision being challenged, the Court has a duty even if it means extending the time for the purposes to ascertain the point and, if the alleged illegality be established, to take I

A appropriate measures to put the matter and the record right.' In the case before us the points of law submitted do not, in our opinion, and as we have shown above, succeed to put in doubt the legality of the ruling by Rubama J. They are the sort of points of law fit to be considered in other B proceedings as was the view of the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in The Commissioner of Transport v The AG of Uganda and Another (10) which we cited in The Principal Secretary. What is glaring to the eye here is sheer negligence of the advocate, which has often times been held not to be sufficient reason to extend time.

C So we agree with Mfalila JA that no sufficient reason has been disclosed to extend time and that application is rejected.

D

Court High Court of Tanzania - Moshi
Judge Mroso J

E CRIMINAL APPEALS NO. 2 & 3 OF 1993
12 March, 1993
Flynote
F Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Charge of breaking into a building with intent to commit an offence but facts show breaking into a dwelling house - Charge defective: ss 294(1) and 297 of the Penal Code.
G Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Duplex charge - Offence of breaking into a building with intent to commit an offence therein and offence of theft charged in one count - Charge is bad for duplicity.
Criminal Law - Theft - Doctrine of Recent Possession.
-Headnote
H The Appellants were charged with and convicted of breaking into a building with intent to commit an offence therein, namely theft c/ss. 297 and 265 of the Penal Code. A girls' school dormitory was broken into one night and personal belongings of some school girls were stolen. After mounting a search some of the stolen items were picked from different places. A schoolgirl's skirt was found in I the Appellant's homestead. The
1993 TLR p103
Trial Court record showed that the offence of breaking into a building with intent to commit an offence A therein, and the offence of theft, were charged in one count.
Held: (i) When the building broken into with intent to commit an offence therein is a dwelling house, as in this case, the offence is housebreaking, and because it was committed at night, the charge should have been of burglary, not breaking into a building with intent to commit an B offence therein;
(ii) Breaking into a building with intent to commit an offence therein and theft are two separate offences which should be charged in two separate counts; by putting the two in a single C count the charge was bad for duplicity;
(iii) Suspicion, however strong, cannot form the basis for conviction of theft.
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
Case referred to: D
1. Bachuka Amerika and Others v. Republic [1979] L.R.T., n. 8.
Mlambo, for the Respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mroso J: Appeals Nos 2 and 3 respectively of 1993 have been consolidated for hearing. The E appellant in Criminal Appeal No 2/93 is one Erasimu Daudi, henceforth in this judgment to be referred to as the first appellant while the appellant in Criminal Appeal No 3 of 1993 is one Erasto Daudi, henceforth to be referred to as the second appellant in this judgment. The two appellants were prosecuted jointly in the District Court of Moshi, along with three others, on three counts of breaking F into a building with intent to commit an offence therein, namely theft, contrary to s 297 and 265 of the Penal Code. The appellants were convicted as charged and were both sentenced to five years imprisonment on each count, the sentences to run concurrently. The other three accused persons were acquitted. Aggrieved by the convictions and sentences, the appellants have lodged appeals to G this court.

When I heard the appeals on 5 March 1993 I immediately alleged them by quashing the convictions and setting aside the prison sentences. I ordered that they be set free from prison forthwith unless H they were held for some other lawful cause. I reserved written reasons which I now try to give herein.

The appellants were said to have broken into a dormitory in which students were sleeping during the night of 17 August 1992 at Kiboshe Girls Secondary School. They were found by the Trial Court to I have stolen an assortment of personal belongings of three

A girls at the school. The value of the stolen property was estimated to amount to a total of shillings 377,200/=, according to the charge sheet.

To start with, the charge sheet was defective. It is not clear if more than one building was broken B into. But assuming it was a single building (it does not matter if it was more than one building), it was a dormitory and hence falls under the definition of a dwelling house. Now, if a person breaks and enters a building used as a human dwelling with the intent to commit an offence therein, he commits C the offence of house breaking, contrary to s 294(1) of the Penal Code. Since the breaking was committed at night, the offence is more appropriately termed burglary. It was wrong, therefore, to charge the appellants with breaking into a building with intent to commit an offence under s 297 of the Penal Code as that section relates to buildings which are not used for human dwelling.

D Secondly, the charge, even as drafted, was duplex. It charges two offences in one count namely, breaking into a building with intent to commit an offence therein contrary to s 297 of the Penal Code and for committing the offence of theft, contrary to s 265 of the Penal Code. Those are two separate E offences which must be charged separately in different counts.

Similarly, if a person breaks into a dwelling house and commits the offence, say of theft, therein he commits two different offences one under s 294 and the other under s 265, both of the Penal Code. F The Trial Magistrate, therefore, erred in accepting the wrong charge which was also bad for duplicity, and in passing `omnibus' sentences. Before I discuss the merits of the appeal, let me give a brief resume of the evidence that was adduced before the Trial Court, as revealed in the lower court record.

G During the night of 17 August 1992 someone or some people, using a ladder broke into and entered the first floor of a school dormitory in which girls were sleeping. Two suitcases containing an assortment of personal belongings of two girls and a pair of canvas shoes belonging to another girl were stolen. The victim girls discovered the theft on the same night but after the thief or thieves had H already left. General alarm was raised and later a report was made to the Police. Policemen who included PW4 - Detective Hussein and PW5 - Detective Msanya came to the scene with a police dog. A search was mounted and in the course of it a suitcase with some personal belongings of the student Leonara Mkanzabi (PW1) and some personal belongings (not the suitcase) of Joan Munisi I (PW2) as well as canvas shoes belonging to student Pamela

1993 TLR p105
MROSO J
Shao (PW3), were found and picked from different places. The appellants were found together and A taken to their home (apparently they lived in the same homestead and are half-brothers). When the houses at the homestead were searched a school girl's skirt was found. It is not clear from the evidence if any of the three students who testified at the trial identified the skirt as belonging to either B of them. The skirt was seized and the appellants said that their sister might be able to give an explanation about the skirt. Otherwise they denied they had anything to do with it.
During the trial a sister of the appellants, one Raphaela Daudi a 12-year-old girl who was in standard V, gave evidence as DW6. She explained that early on the morning of the day a search was done in C her room she had picked the skirt on her way to school. On reaching school she was sent back home to get school fees. She took the skirt home and left it in her room until it was traced by the police search party. The appellants were convicted on the basis of the skirt which was found at their D home, because as stolen property, it was found presumably in their possession only hours after the theft. The Trial Magistrate had invoked the doctrine of recent possession.
I was unable to find proof from the recorded evidence that the skirt was one of the things which had E been stolen from the school dormitory. The Trial Magistrate claimed in her judgment that PW2 Joan Munisi identified it as part of her property. But the claim is not borne out by the record. Joan indeed identified four skirts in court among other things as belonging to her but it is by no means clear if the particular skirt which was found at the home of the appellants was identified by Joan to be hers. But assuming for the sake of argument that it was, was it found in the possession of the appellants? F There was conflicting evidence regarding in whose room the skirts were found. The appellants said the skirts were found in their sister's room. They were tacitly supported by a prosecution witness PW8 - Lulea Dukaria, a ten cell leader who was present during the search. On the other hand, G PW7 Leoni Martin who was the appellants' ten cell leader had merely heard from PW2 that a skirt had been found `there', presumably meaning at the homestead of the appellants. He was not present at the time of the search. Furthermore, DW6 - Raphaela explained how she got the skirt. That story was not at all that unlikely considering that from the evidence of the police officers - PW4 and PW5 H some of the stolen items were found dropped at different places along the route used by the thief or thieves. Was it impossible that the skirt in question was one of the things which had also been dropped by the fleeing thief/thieves? I
1993 TLR p106
MROSO J

A The two policemen - PW4 and PW5 said in their evidence that as they traced the path which the thief or thieves had taken they heard noises of people fleeing and then saw the things which had been dropped along the route. Assuming that some of those fleeing thieves were these appellants in B court, would they have been so naïve as to take the single skirt to their home and hide it in one of the rooms even though there was a likelihood the pursuing police might search the houses along the route?

The Trial Magistrate appeared to have made substantial reliance on evidence that it was the police C dog which led the search party to the home of the appellants. She said -

`. . . I am driven by circumstantial evidence on how the dog led the policemen to the house of the first and second D accused without going to another house and on the way some properties were found dropped'.

With respect, our law of evidence has no provision on what a police dog can or cannot prove in a criminal trial in a law court. It was not advisable or proper therefore for the Trial Magistrate to place E any reliance on what the police dog may have done as part of the proof that the appellants were guilty of the offence which had been charged against them.

The Trial Magistrate also appeared to have convicted the appellants on more suspicion as she F demonstrated in her statement in the judgment -

`I find the facts of this case on the suspicion of first and second accused to be the same as the facts in the case of Bachiuba Amerika and Others v Republic (1).'

G But the case cited is no authority that suspicion can be a basis for convicting a person accused of committing a crime. The law is that no amount of suspicion, however strong, can found a conviction.

All in all, the evidence which was adduced by the prosecution was inadequate to prove the guilt of the H appellants. The appellants ought to have been acquitted. It is noteworthy that even in the course of hearing this appeal the Republic did not seek to support the conviction. It was for the above reasons that I allowed the appeal and the orders that I did.

1993 TLR p107

A

[zRPz]KENETH MANDA v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 107 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Mroso J

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 7 OF 1993 B

12 March, 1993

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Plea of Guilty - Appellant pleaded guilty and admitted facts not constituting the offence charged - Whether plea of guilty unequivocal. C

Road Traffic - Causing bodily injury through reckless driving - Ingredients of reckless driving - Road Traffic Act 1973.

-Headnote

The Appellant was charged with causing bodily injury through reckless driving. He was convicted on D his own plea of guilty. But the particulars of the offence in the charge sheet, and the facts stated in court by the prosecution, did not suggest any reckless driving by the Appellant.

Held: (i) An accused person can only be convicted on his own plea of guilty if it is ascertained that he has accepted as correct facts which constitute the ingredients of the offence charged; E

(ii) As no particulars or facts constituting reckless driving were put to the appellant, his plea of guilty was equivocal and should have been entered as a plea of `not guilty'.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. Case remitted to the lower court to enter a plea of `not guilty' and the case to F proceed to hearing.

No cases referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mroso J: This is an appeal against a conviction and sentence by the District Court of Moshi in Traffic Criminal case No 288/92. The appellant is shown to have pleaded guilty to a charge of causing bodily G injury through reckless driving, contrary to ss 42(1)(a), 63(2)(b) and 27(1)(a) of the Road Traffic Act, No 30 of 1973. He was convicted on the plea of guilty and sentenced to a fine of shillings 10,000/= or 12 months' imprisonment in default. He was also disqualified from holding or obtaining a H driving license for a period of three years. His appeal is based mainly on the complaint that the plea of guilty was equivocal.

At the hearing of this appeal the learned State Attorney for the respondent Republic did not seek to support the conviction. He conceded that the plea of guilty was equivocal, I proceeded to I

1993 TLR p108

MROSO J

A allow the appeal by quashing the conviction and setting aside both the sentence and the disqualification order. I ordered that the fine if already paid be refunded to him. The case was remitted to the lower court with a direction that a plea of not guilty be entered against the appellant and the case to proceed to hearing.

B There is no doubt that the plea of guilty by the appellant was equivocal. The particulars in the charge sheet read:

`That Keneth s/o Manda charged on the 15th day of October 1992 at about 15:35 hrs along Himo Road within the C Municipality of Moshi Kilimanjaro Region being the driver of motor vehicle Reg No 95843 make Toyota Coaster PSV did drive the said motor vehicle on the said road recklessly. To wit he failed to control well the said motor vehicle as the result went off the road and overturned thereby caused bodily injuries to Aisia d/o Nichola and Regina d/o Phillipo who were passengers in the said motor vehicle.'

D The appellant accepted these particulars as true. The Court entered a plea of guilty following that plea. When the prosecution was called upon to give the facts of the case he said:

E `On 15/10/92 at about 3:35 along Himo Road In Moshi Town, accused was driving a motor vehicle registration number TZ 95843, a mini bus for carrying passengers. He was driving from Himo towards Moshi Municipality. Accused failed to control the motor vehicle as such it overturned and injured two passengers namely Asia Nichola F and Regina Phillipo. I produce PF3 in respect of the injured people as exhibits.'

After the exhibits were tendered the appellant said the facts were correct. The court then proceeded G to convict him on his own plea of guilty.

As is obvious, there was nothing said either in the particulars of the offence or in the facts as given by the public prosecutor which suggested reckless driving apart from the bare assertion that the appellant failed to control well (sic) the motor vehicle he was driving and that consequently it H overturned. Now, to fail to control a motor vehicle one is driving can be as a result of either careless or reckless driving or because of a factor for which the driver is not personally responsible. The appellant, belatedly perhaps, explained that his failure to control the motor vehicle was because a main leaf has broken. That might have been true. Incidentally, it is curious the prosecutor did not I tender to court a vehicle inspection report, if it existed, to show the condition of the motor vehicle before and after the accident. A

If, as claimed by the appellant, the failure to control the motor vehicle resulted from the broken main leaf, he would not be blamed for the overturning of the motor vehicle and the resultant injuries to B passengers. Furthermore, admission by the appellant of the particulars of the offence and the facts narrated by the prosecutor as correct was non-committal and innocuous. It by no means suggested he was pleading guilty to the offence charged, unless the doctrine of res ipsa loquiter was being invoked. That is to say, that the mere fact that the motor vehicle overturned and passengers were C injured that meant the appellant had been reckless. But, as has often been stated by this court, the doctrine of res ipsa loquiter has no application in criminal law.

An accused person can only be convicted on his own plea of guilty if his plea is unequivocal. That is, where it is ascertained that he has accepted as correct facts which constitute all the ingredients of D the offence. That was not the case here. As already said, no particulars or facts constituting the offence of reckless driving were put to the appellant. So, the plea by the appellant was equivocal and the court ought to have entered a plea of not guilty and required the prosecution to adduce evidence E in proof of the offence charged.

The lower court should comply with the directions of this court as already given in this judgment.

[zRPz]HAMISI ATHUMANI AND TWO OTHERS v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 110 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Nyalali CJ, Kisanga JJA and Ramadhani JJA

B CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 14 OF 1993

30 April, 1993

C (From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Tanga, Mrema, PRM, Ext. Jur.)

Flynote

Evidence - Confession - Repudiated or retracted confession - Confessions found to be true - Conviction may be based on them.

-Headnote

D The three appellants were jointly charged with and convicted of murder and were each sentenced to death. They appealed against both conviction and sentence complaining, inter alia, that the Trial Court admitted in evidence and convicted the appellants on the basis of the alleged confessions of E the appellants which confessions had been repudiated or retracted.

Held: (i) Although the appellants in their defences at the trial repudiated or retracted their confessions once the Trial Court found those confessions to be true it was entitled to base conviction on them;

(ii) Conviction of the appellants was right as it was based on the repudiated or retracted F confessions of the appellants which the Trial Court found to be true.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

Case referred to:

1. Tuwamoi v. Uganda [1967] EA 84

G Mramba, for the appellants.

Miss A. Chinguwile, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

H Kisanga, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

The three appellants were jointly charged with and convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code, and were each sentenced to death by Mr Mrema PRM (Exercising Extended Jurisdiction) sitting at Tanga. They have now appealed against both conviction and sentence. In this Court they I were represented by

1993 TLR p111

KISANGA JA

Mr Mramba, learned advocate, while the respondent Republic was represented by Miss Chinguwile, A learned State Attorney.

Essentially the case for the prosecution was that the three appellants jointly planned and killed the deceased. The third appellant Noti Mtachi, is the wife of the deceased; the first appellant Hamisi Athumani is her lover and the second appellant Wambua Mdhami is her cousin. It was alleged that B the motive for the killing was to save the appellant Noti from matrimonial harassment by the deceased who had constantly complained of her adulterous association with the appellant Hamisi. Thus in execution of their joint criminal venture, while the deceased was sleeping in his hut on the C material night, the third appellant who shared the hut with him opened the door for the first and second appellants, and the three of them jointly killed the deceased apparently by strangling him. The third appellant then supplied a gunny bag in which the dead body was put after which the first and D second appellants took it away and buried it in the bush.

During investigation of the case the third appellant made a disclosure of the incident which led to the arrest of the first and second appellants who in turn showed the place where they buried the deceased. E

The appellants in their defences at the trial vehemently denied the charge. The third appellant claimed that on the day of the alleged killing her husband took leave of her in the morning saying that he was going to Kenya to sell some precious stones. He stated to her that he would return after some time but he did not, and she did not know what happened to him. The first and second F appellants equally denied the charge adding that on the material day they were each in different places away from the village of the deceased.

In convicting the appellants, the learned Principal Resident Magistrate relied on the evidence of G Monica (PW3), the third appellant's daughter, who testified to having seen the three appellants in the hut of the deceased on the material night only shortly after the deceased had called out saying that he was being killed. The learned Principal Resident Magistrate also relied on the retracted or repudiated confessions of the three appellants, and also on a finding of motive behind the killing, H namely, the elimination of the deceased who had resisted the adulterous association between the first and third appellants. He rejected the third appellant's assertion that the confession attributed to her was concocted by the prosecution. He equally rejected the first and second appellants' defences of alibi and their claim that the confessions attributed to them were not voluntary. I

1993 TLR p112

KISANGA JA

A In this appeal Mr Mramba filed a total of seven grounds of complaint mainly criticising the Principal Resident Magistrate for admitting in evidence the alleged confessions of the appellants, and for accepting and acting on the evidence of PW3 to convict the appellants. We propose to deal with the confessions first starting with those of the first and second appellants.

B These two appellants had claimed that the police tortured them by beating and starving them, and threatened to continue to torture, and even to injure them, if they did not admit killing the deceased. Under those circumstances, therefore, they made statements to the police, falsely admitting the killing, along the lines the police had wanted. They repeated the same stories in their respective C extra-judicial statements to the justice of the peace (PW2) for fear of more torture upon their return to the police. They denied having led the police to the place in the bush where the deceased had been buried and alleged that it was the police who were directing them, as they marched along through the D bush, until they came to the place of burial.

The learned Principal Resident Magistrate having held a trial within a trial and, upon believing the E evidence of the police officer (PW6) and that of the justice of the peace (PW2) who testified that the appellants made their statements voluntarily, accordingly admitted the confessions in evidence. We are unable to say that he erred either on the procedure he followed or in arriving at his decision to admit the confessions in evidence.

F Mr Mramba contended that the justice of the peace in recording the extra-judicial statements of the appellant failed to comply with some important requirement or requirements as set out in the `Guide for Justices of the Peace' when recording the statement of an accused person. It is pertinent to point G out that at the time Mr Mramba was making this submission he did not have a copy of the said `Guide for Justices of the Peace' and none was available for our reference at the Tanga Registry. However, upon our return to Dar es Salaam we have since secured one, and on perusing it we are satisfied that there was substantial compliance with the requirements thereof by the justice of the H peace when recording the extra-judicial statements of the first and second appellants. Again in view of the evidence of PW1, PW3 and PW6 the Principal Resident Magistrate was quite entitled to reject the appellants' claim that it is the police who were directing them as they walked through the bush to the place where the deceased was buried.

I Turning for the moment to the third appellant, she completely denied to have made any statement to the police or to the Justice of the Peace (PW2). According to A her, after the deceased had gone missing from their home the villagers mounted a search for him. In the course of doing so they consulted a local witchdoctor who announced at a meeting of the villagers that the deceased had been killed by the three appellants following which she (third B appellant) was arrested and taken to the police. She added that the person who handed her over to the police repeated to the police what the witchdoctor had told the villagers. She claimed that the confession attributed to her must have been a fabrication originating from the witchdoctor's allegations as announced at the meeting of the villagers. That is to say, following such C announcement the villager who took her to the police told the police that she and her co-appellants were responsible and the police in turn, based on this information to the Justice of the Peace who accordingly took it down and attributed it to her. D

Following a trial within a trial on the issue, the Principal Resident Magistrate rejected the appellant's story. He found that it is the third appellant herself, not the alleged witchdoctor who made a disclosure of her involvement, and indeed that of her co-appellants, in the killing of the deceased. He E accepted the evidence of the Justice of the Peace who testified that the third appellant made a confessional statement before him and that she did so voluntarily. The Principal Resident Magistrate ruled that the extra-judicial statement of this appellant was admissible in evidence and we can see no ground for faulting him. For, to say the least, we could find no conceivable reason why the Justice F of the Peace would go all the way to fabricate a confession implicating this woman.

Upon his evaluation of the evidence before him the Principal Resident Magistrate held that the appellants' confessions were true, and we think that he was amply justified to so hold. For one thing G the appellants' confessions were confirmed in some material particular by subsequent events. Thus the confession of the third appellant implicating herself as well as the first and second appellants, and leading to the arrest of the latter, was confirmed by the confessions of the first and H second appellants who not only implicated themselves and the third appellant but also led the police to the place where they had buried the dead body of the deceased. Furthermore, the first and second appellants in their confessions stated that after the deceased was jointly killed by the three of them, his dead body was put in a gunny bag which they tied with a rubber band and then took it away for I burial. Indeed this was

1993 TLR p114

KISANGA JA

A confirmed when upon exhuming the dead body of the deceased, it was found to be placed in a gunny bag which was tied with a rubber band. In the gunny bag also was found the trousers of the deceased which confirms the confession of the second appellant that they also put the clothes of the deceased in the gunny bag before taking it away for burial.

B Thus the Principal Resident Magistrate took the view that although the appellants in their defences at the trial repudiated or retracted their confessions. Once he had found those confessions to be true he was entitled to base conviction on them, citing as his authority the case of Tuwamoi v Uganda (1). C There can be no doubt that he properly directed himself in the matter.

The other piece of evidence relied upon to convict the appellants was the evidence of PW3, and as intimated before, Mr Mramba criticised the Principal Resident Magistrate for accepting an acting on D it; the thrust of his submission being that PW3 was an unreliable witness. The Principal Resident Magistrate reviewed the evidence of PW3 at great length, and duly considered the various criticisms levelled by Mr Mramba both at the trial and before in respect of that evidence. At the end of the day he came to the conclusion that PW3 was a credible witness. He went further and said that although E the defence doubted the credibility of PW3, her evidence was sufficiently corroborated by the repudiated or retracted confessions of the appellants which he found to be true. We can find no fault in all this. Indeed on the issue of corroboration we might go further and say that even if the evidence F of PW3 were to be disregarded, which of course it should not, conviction could still be safely based on the repudiated or retracted confessions of the appellants which were found to be true.

The learned Principal Resident Magistrate also found the existence of motive behind the killing and G there was abundant evidence to support such finding. The first and third appellants were lovers, and the deceased had all along resisted and complained about it. Indeed following one such complaint the first appellant was adjudged by village elders to pay the deceased Shs 2,000/= compensation in H respect of the adultery. In our view that provided the basis for a grudge against the deceased by the first appellant, and ample motive for the first and third appellants to eliminate the deceased for being an obstruction or obstacle in their love affairs. The second appellant, as stated in his own extra-judicial statement, participated in the criminal venture out of sympathy for the third appellant, I his cousin, who had appealed to him for help to kill the deceased who was torturing her.

1993 TLR p115

In the light of all this incriminating evidence the learned Principal Resident Magistrate, rightly in our A view, rejected the defence of each appellant consisting of a denial of the charge. He further rejected the defences of alibi put forward by the first and second appellants in the light of their own confessions and that of the third appellant, and also on the strength of the evidence of PW3 who B testified to seeing the appellants at the home of the deceased on the material night. It is noted that the appellants did not give any notice or particulars of their alibis at the trial in terms of s 194(4) and (5) of the Criminal Procedure Act; that would provide an additional ground for the decision to attach C no weight on the said alibis.

After a careful study of the record we are of the view that the appellants' convictions were well founded and we could find no reason to interfere. In the result the appeals of all the appellants fail and are accordingly dismissed in their entirety. D

1993 TLR p115

E

[zRPz]MOSES MAYUNGA v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 115 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Moshi

Judge Munuo J

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 5 OF 1993 F

7 May, 1993 - MOSHI

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Right of accused to defend himself - Accused jumps bail and absconds after G close of prosecution case - Whether conviction and sentence passed in his absence was proper - Sections 226(1) and (2) and 227(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985.

-Headnote

The appellant was charged with breaking into a building and stealing therefrom. After the prosecution H closed its case, he jumped bail and absconded. The Trial Court convicted and sentenced him in absentia. On appeal he complained of being denied the right to defend himself and to call witnesses.

Held: Having jumped bail and absconded, the appellant is estopped from complaining that conviction I and sentence were passed in his absence.

1993 TLR p116

Case Information

A Appeal dismissed.

No cases referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Munuo J: This is an appeal against the decision in Moshi District Court Criminal Case No 595 of B 1989 wherein the accused Moses Mayunga was charged with breaking into a building and stealing contrary to ss 296(1) and 265 of the Penal Code in that he burgled the grinding machine house of the KCMC hospital therein stealing a mortar valued at Shs 7,000/= the property of the said hospital.

C The complainant, PW2 Peter Paul stated that being the watchman on guard duty with his co-watchman, PW4 Josephat Mkumbo, they routinely combed the KCMC hospital premises only to find the padlock on the door of the grinding machine missing. Upon PW2 opening the unpadlocked door to find out what was happening therein, he encountered the accused Moses Mayunga hurrying D out carrying a mortar he had stolen therein. The watchman then confronted and apprehended the accused red-handed with the stolen mortar. A police officer PW1 Inspector Adam Ndesamburo visited the scene of the crime and formally arrested the accused and the recovered exhibit. The E accused was then charged with the present offence.

The accused jumped bail after the closure of the prosecution case so he remained at large until judgment was pronounced in his absence. He was later traced, rearrested and committed to prison to serve his sentence. Hence the present appeal.

F In his memorandum of appeal the appellant complained that he was unlawfully convicted in absentia and denied his rights of defence and of calling defence witnesses. The proceedings of the Trial Court speak for themselves. The prosecution closed their case on 17 April 1990. The accused then opted to give a sworn defence and to call one witness which he never did because he jumped G bail. He is therefore estopped from complaining against the conviction and sentence passed in his absence upon his own deliberate default to appear for his defence.

The Trial Court had powers to proceed under s 226(1) and (2) and, or, s 227(1) of the Criminal H Procedure Act 9 of 1985. In that regard the trial cannot be faulted.

In view of the above, the appeal is devoid of merit. The sentence imposed on the accused is the mandatory minimum provided under the Minimum Sentences Act 1972. The appeal is devoid of I merit. Accordingly the appeal is dismissed.

1993 TLR p117

A

[zRPz]AUGUST MAHIYO v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 117 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 28 OF 1993 B

21 May, 1993

(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Munuo, J.) C

Flynote

Evidence - Circumstantial evidence - False, incredible or contradictory statements given by way of explanation by the accused - Effect in reaching verdict.

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted of the murder of his wife and was condemned to death. He appealed D against both conviction and sentence. His story on the cause of the death of the deceased had inconsistencies. On appeal counsel for the appellant argued that the alleged inconsistencies in the appellant's story regarding the cause of death of the deceased did not necessarily point to the guilt of the appellant. E

Held: (i) The force of suspicious circumstances is augmented whenever the person accused attempts no explanation of facts which he may reasonably be expected to be able or interested to explain; false; incredible or contradictory statements given by way of explanation if disapproved, become of substantive inculpatory effect; F

(ii) Looking at the totality of the evidence the circumstantial evidence pointed irresistibly to the guilt of the appellant;

(iii) On the evidence the learned Trial Judge had no alternative but to find that the prosecution had proved the charge against the appellant beyond reasonable doubt.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed. G

Case referred to:

1. Rafael Munya v R [1953] 20 EACA 226.

Makange, for the appellant. H

Mrs. Lyimo, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

The appellant, Augusti Mahiyo, was charged with and convicted of I

1993 TLR p118

MNZAVAS JA

A murder and condemned to death by the High Court, (Munuo J) sitting at Moshi on 9 August 1991.

Dissatisfied with the decision of the Trial Court he has appealed to this Court. It was the prosecution case that the appellant on or about the 6th day of June, 1988 at Keni Mengeni, Rombo district, B Kilimanjaro region, with malice aforethought killed one, Gudila w/o August, his wife.

In support of the prosecution case a relative of the appellant, Justice Ndemasa, PW2, testified in the Lower Court that on the fateful evening one, Jamila August, PW1, daughter of the appellant, met him C as he was returning home from a cooperative society (KNCU) and told him that her mother had sent her to call him because her parents were quarreling. He proceeded to the deceased's house but found the kitchen padlocked with a `viro' lock. The door to the main house was also locked. As no D one responded to his call of `hodi' he returned home. At about 9 pm on the same evening one, Focas, came to his house and told him that the deceased had fallen down and collapsed. The witness hurriedly proceeded to deceased's house where he met her husband, the appellant. On asking the appellant what had happened the appellant is said to have told him that his wife who was E expectant had suddenly collapsed and that he has massaged her in an attempt to revive her to no avail and that the deceased died.

In the morning relatives and neighbours of the appellant gathered to the bereaved house and F suggested that the deceased should not be buried before a post mortem examination was performed to find out the cause of death. The witness told the Trial Court that at that juncture the appellant changed his story and told the gathering that the deceased had hanged herself in the kitchen; and showed to them a sweater which the deceased allegedly used in hanging herself.

G The deceased's death was reported to the police and after investigations the appellant was charged with murder; and, after hearing evidence in support of the charge and appellant's defence that the deceased had hanged herself, the learned Trial Judge was satisfied that the charge of murder had been proved beyond reasonable doubt and proceeded to convict the appellant of the H offence as charged.

Before us the appellant was represented by Mr Makange, learned counsel, while Mrs Lyimo, learned Senior State Attorney appeared for the Republic.

I Mr Makange, submitted that the learned Judge did not consider appellant's defence that he was not at home at the time the deceased met her death and that he should have believed appellant's defence that it was when he returned A home when he discovered that his wife had hanged herself. The learned Defence Counsel finally argued that the alleged inconsistencies in the appellant's story regarding the cause of deceased's death did not necessarily point to the guilt of the appellant. B

In rebuttal Mrs Lyimo supported the conviction on the ground that the circumstantial evidence against the appellant irresistibly pointed to the guilt of the appellant. In support of her submission regarding the appellant's inconsistent stories the Court was referred to the evidence of PW2, PW3, PW4 and PW5. C

We have considered the matter carefully; and, in our own view of the evidence and the submissions by learned counsel, we are satisfied that the learned Trial Judge's finding that the appellant murdered his wife was amply warranted by the evidence.

When asked by his relative and neighbour, (PW2), as to what had caused the deceased's death he D initially said that the deceased suddenly fell down and died. On suggestions by neighbours and relatives who had assembled to the bereaved homestead that the deceased should not be buried till a post mortem examination was performed to established the deceased's cause of death the E appellant prevaricated; changed his story and said that the deceased had hanged herself. That he prevaricated a good deal is evident from the testimony of not lesser a person than his close relative PW2. Not to mention the evidence of PW3, PW4 and PW5, the police constable. F

The appellant's defence that the deceased had committed suicide by hanging was proved to be bogus by the neighbours who saw the place the appellant alleged that the deceased had hanged herself. In respect of this defence PW6 Dt/Corp Jacob, told the Court in his evidence inter alia: G

> `. . . The accused told me his wife had stomach pains so she committed suicide. The accused showed me a small kitchen where she allegedly hanged herself. I surveyed the place and the height was just 5 ft while the body appeared taller. . . . I measured the height of the deceased; it measured 5 ft 6.' H

On being cross-examined by Mr Lyasenga, learned Counsel who represented the appellant in the High Court; the witness said inter alia:

`The body was 5' 6' while the height at the hanging place was 5 ft.' I

1993 TLR p120

A Medical report - exhibit P1 - was to the effect that the deceased had injuries on her neck and that the cause of death was `severe assault'.

Dealing with the question of circumstantial evidence the East African Court of Appeal had this to say in Rafael Munya v R (1):

B `The force of suspicious circumstances is augmented whenever the person accused attempts no explanation of facts which he may reasonably be expected to be able and interested to explain; false, incredible or contradictory statements given by way of explanation if disapproved, become of substantive inculpatory effect.'

C Looking at the totality of the evidence we are satisfied in our own minds that the circumstantial evidence pointed irresistibly to the guilt of the appellant. On the evidence the learned Trial Judge had no alternative but to find that the prosecution had proved the charge against the appellant beyond D reasonable doubt. The appeal is devoid of merit and we accordingly dismiss it.

1993 TLR p120

E

[zRPz]DAWIDO QUMUNGA v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 120 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

F CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 30 OF 1993

21 May, 1993

G (From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Munuo, J.)

Flynote

Legal Assistance - Accused charged with murder - Court allows trial to proceed without the accused having the H assistance of counsel - Whether trial fair and just.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Calling of doctor who performed postmortem examination on the body of the deceased - Right of accused to be informed and to decide whether or not he wants the doctor to be called - I Section 291 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985.

1993 TLR p121

-Headnote

The appellant was charged and convicted of murder by the High Court sitting at Arusha. He was A sentenced to death. He appealed against both conviction and sentence arguing, inter alia, that he had to prosecute his defence without legal assistance. In addition counsel for the appellant challenged the High Court decision on the ground that the doctor who performed postmortem on the body of the deceased was not called to testify and therefore there was non-compliance with the provisions of B section 291 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. In addition it was pointed out that during the trial the accused was not informed by the Court of his right to have the doctor called to testify. The Court of Appeal considered all the points raised.

Held: (i) The provisions of section 291 Criminal Procedure Code are mandatory and require that an C accused must be informed about his right to have the doctor who performed the postmortem called to testify in order to enable him decide whether or not he wants the doctor to be called;

(ii) The absence of counsel in a trial involving a charge carrying the death penalty deprived the Trial Court of assistance so vital that it cannot be said that the appellant had a fair and just trial. D

Case Information

Conviction quashed, sentence set aside, retrial before another judge ordered.

Case referred to:

1. Kinyori s/o Karuditu v. Reginam [1956] 23 EACA 480.

Merinyo, for the appellant. E

Mrs. Sumari, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mfalali, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: F

The appellant Dawido Qumunga was charged and convicted of murder by the High Court sitting at Arusha (Justice Mrs Munuo). Upon this conviction he was by operation of law sentenced to death. He lodged his appeal against both conviction and sentence.

In this appeal, Mr Merinyo, Counsel for the appellant argued two grounds of appeal. Firstly, that the G learned Judge erred in law in not summoning to testify during the trial the doctor who performed the postmortem examination on the body of the deceased, and secondly that the honourable Judge erred in her assessment of the evidence relating to the causation of death otherwise she would have held H that the cause of death had not been established.

Considering the view we have taken of the entire proceedings in the High Court, we do not intend to go into the details of the merits of the case but we wish to state that the complaints embodied in the two grounds of appeal are part of a larger error committed by the learned Trial Judge. This error I consisted in allowing the trial to

A proceed without the appellant having the assistance of counsel. When the trial of the appellant opened on 28 September 1992, the following exchange took place between the Court and the accused:

Court to Accused:

B Mr Merinyo, learned advocate who was assigned the defence brief under legal aid is reported ill, so he cannot appear. The case will therefore have to be adjourned to another session.

Accused:

I have been in custody for a long time. Let the case proceed without defence counsel.

C Order:

Trial to proceed.

There was not the slightest attempt by the Court to dissuade the appellant from this prayer and warn D him of the dangers inherent in going it alone in such a serious charge. The Court did not warn the appellant of the pitfalls that awaited him in what to him was surely an unsurveyed terrain. The Court let him walk the unsurveyed terrain, the consequences as expected in such a serious charge were disastrous. In the course of the trial, he was faced with three legal issues which without legal E assistance proved too much not only for him but for the Court which also had to proceed without the benefit of legal assistance from the defence side.

The first problem was that raised in the first ground of appeal namely the non-calling of the doctor F who performed the post mortem examination on the body of the deceased. This involved non-compliance with s 291 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985, which provides as follows:

`Section 291 -

G (1) In any trial before the High Court, any document purporting to be a report signed by a medical witness upon a purely medical or surgical matter shall be receivable in evidence save that this subsection shall not apply unless reasonable notice of the intention to produce the document at the trial, together with a copy of the H document has been given to the accused or his advocate.

. . .

(3) Where any such evidence is received in evidence the Court may, if it thinks fit, and shall, if so requested by the accused or his advocate, summon and examine or make available for cross-examination, the person I who made the report, and the Court shall inform the accused of his right to require the person who made the report to be summoned in accordance with the provision of this subsection.' A

This is a mandatory legal provision requiring that an accused must be informed of these provisions to enable him decide whether or not he wants the doctor to be called. We think that the right created B by this section is so vital that at every trial where the accused is unrepresented the Court must make it known to the accused. This is because the presence of the doctor in the witness box can make a difference between a conviction for murder, manslaughter or even an acquittal depending on his elucidation of the cause of death recorded in the post mortem report. This brings us to the C second problem faced by the appellant at the trial, namely the deceased's cause of death. There is so much that was left unsaid in the post mortem report exh P1 that only the physical presence of the doctor in the witness box could have cleared or filled the empty gaps. But as we have pointed out, all D this was unsurveyed terrain for the appellant. How was he expected to know of his legal rights under s 291? We are satisfied that had legal assistance been available to the appellant at the trial as it was at the taking of the plea on 27 August 1991, the question of compliance with s 291 would have E been raised as it was on 27 August 1991 when Counsel gave notice that at the trial the defence would require the physical attendance of the doctor who performed the post mortem examination. When therefore the trial opened on 28 September 1992 without Defence Counsel, both the Court and the Defence side were affected. There was no one to remind the Court of the mandatory provisions F of s 291.

The third problem was the conduct of the trial within a trial which arose in the course of the hearing. The conduct and procedure of a trial within a trial along the lines laid down by the Court of Appeal for G Eastern Africa in the case of Kinyori s/o Karuditu v Reginam (1) is difficult enough even with the assistance of Counsel, how much more difficult it must have been for an unassisted villager! We therefore ask ourselves: would the presence of a doctor have made any difference? Would the H presence of Counsel made any difference in the conduct of the appellant's defence as a whole? If the answer to both these question is in the affirmative, then we cannot say that the appellant had a fair and just trial. We are not saying that the absence of defence Counsel rendered the trial null and void, we are saying that the absence of Counsel in a trial involving a charge carrying the death I penalty, deprived the Trial

A Court of assistance so vital that we are unable to say that the appellant had a fair and just trial. We realise that the Trial Court acted on the wishes of the accused, who, tired of being in remand for a long time, wanted as it were to get on with it and be done with it as soon as possible. But the Court should not have lost sight of the fact that hurried justice is as much denied as delayed justice.

B Mrs Sumari who appeared for the Republic informed us that the Republic did not support the appellant's conviction almost for the same reasons advanced by her colleague Counsel for the appellant. But she prayed either for a retrial of the appellant or the calling of the doctor before this C Court to give additional evidence. On the other hand Mr Merinyo thought that a retrial or calling the doctor would not serve any useful purpose, so he called for the acquittal of the appellant.

D On our part, we think that considering other evidence on record, we do not think acquitting the appellant would be fair and just. Since the non-calling of the doctor was not the only legal problem facing the appellant at the trial, calling him to give evidence before us, would not serve any purpose since the other problems we have demonstrated caused by the absence of Defence Counsel at the E trial would remain unattended.

In the circumstances we are satisfied that the appellant's conviction cannot be supported. We accordingly quash it and set aside the sentence of death. But we order the retrial of the appellant F before another judge according to law.

A

[zRPz]HAMIDU MUSSA THIMOTHEO AND MAJIDI MUSSA THIMOTHEO v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 125 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 23 OF 1993 B
21 May, 1993
(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Mushi, J.) C
Flynote
Evidence - Circumstantial evidence - Unbroken chain of circumstantial evidence linking the appellants to the death of the deceased - Whether can ground a conviction. D
-Headnote
The appellants were charged with and convicted of the murder of their father, and sentenced to death. The convictions rested solely on circumstantial evidence which the learned Trial Judge considered irresistibly pointed to their guilt. The appellants appealed against both conviction and E sentence arguing that the circumstantial evidence on which they were convicted did not irresistibly point to their guilt.
Held: The chain of circumstantial evidence linking the appellants to the death of their father is unbroken and therefore leads to no other conclusion but that the appellants were responsible for the death of their father. F
Case Information
Appeals dismissed.
No case referred to.
Makange, for the appellants. G
May 21, 1993.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mfalila, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court: H
The two appellants were charged with and convicted of the murder of their father one Mussa Thimotheo. There was no direct evidence linking the appellants to the killing. Their convictions rested solely on circumstantial evidence which the learned Trial Judge considered irresistibly pointed to their I guilt. We sentenced them to death. They
1993 TLR p126
MFALILA JA
A lodged this appeal against both their convictions and sentences of death.
The deceased Mussa Thimotheo was employed by the Tanzania Railways Corporation and lived in the Railway Quarters at Tingatinga Village in Mwanga district. His sons the two appellants lived in a B separate house outside the Railways Quarters, but having no utensils of their own they used to take their meals at the deceased's house. On 2 October 1985 after working hours he left camp on his bicycle telling his workmate Shabani Nassoro (PW2) that he was going to the shopping centre at C Handeni. This was the last time that he was seen alive for he never returned to the camp. On 4 October 1985 Shabani Nassoro became concerned for the non-appearance of the deceased both at his residence and at work. He therefore reported the fact of the deceased's disappearance to their superior at work. The following day, a search alarm was raised and the search for the deceased D began. The appellants were asked as to the whereabouts of their father, but they both denied any knowledge. In this they were not believed, they were therefore arrested and handed over to the police. Later on the same day the body of the deceased was seen floating in the nearby river and E recovered. Word was sent to the police authorities regarding the recovery of the body of the missing Mussa Thimotheo. The following day police arrived and collected the body. The post mortem examination revealed multiple cut wounds one of which caused a compound fracture of the occipital F bone exposing the brain. The cause of death was certified to be haemorrhage and shock. At this time the appellants were already in police custody, but the police party on the suggestion of the deceased's relatives passed by the appellants' house and conducted a search. This search was witnessed by neighbours such as Shabani Nassore (PW2) and Shabani Juma (PW3), relatives such G as Hamisi Juma (PW4) and Naulid Thimotheo (PW7) and a cell leader Athuman Mohamed (PW5). All these witnesses testified that in this search they recovered the following items wrapped in a sack and hidden under the bed in a room used by the appellants: two bicycle tyres, one bicycle stand, five H spanners and one panga which had blood stains. Hamisi Juma (PW4) identified the panga to belong to the second appellant Majidi while Athumani Mohamed (PW5) identified the bicycle parts to be parts from the bicycle of the deceased, explaining that he used to repair it. When later the I appellants were shown these items by Detective Godwin (PW6), they admitted that the panga was theirs but with regard to the blood on it they gave different explanations. While the second appellant explained that the blood on the panga was animal blood from the Dik Dik they had A killed during a recent hunt, the first appellant said that he did not know how the panga came to be blood stained.

In their respective defences both appellants denied any involvement in the killing of their father. The B first appellant explained that he first heard of the deceased's disappearance from home on 4 October 1985 when he was told by Hamisi Juma (PW4) that the deceased had not been seen at home since 2 October 1985 and that a search for the deceased would be mounted on the following day 5 C October 1985. But he said that he was arrested on 5 October 1985 before the search began. He explained that he did not consider the deceased's prolonged absence from home unusual because he used to do that whenever he want to his shamba. He also denied the existence of any bad relationship between him and the deceased as deposed by his uncle Maulid Thimotheo (PW7). On D the allegation that he used to eat at the deceased's house he denied saying that more often than not he took his meals at the home of his aunt Chausiku Thimotheo who gave evidence as (DW1). But as she gave evidence at the instance of the court, we whink in fairness she should have been labelled as a Court witness (CW). Lastly he denied any knowledge or connection with the articles allegedly E recovered from their house.

The second appellant Majid also denied any involvement in the killing of their father saying that he had left home on 2 October 1985 to go and visit his uncle Maulid Thimotheo (PW7) but he did not find him F at home. Only his aunt Chausiku was present. He remained there until 4 October 1985 when he returned home only to be informed that their father had not been seen since 2 October 1985. This he said did not worry him because it was not unusual for the deceased to be absent from home for G several days whenever he went to his shamba. But he said that he was arrested on the following day 5 October 1985 and added that he knew nothing about all the articles allegedly recovered from their house.

In a well written and reasoned judgment the learned Trial Judge held that although there was no H direct evidence linking the two appellants to the death of the deceased the circumstantial evidence adduced by the prosecution against them was such that it only pointed to their undoubted guilt.

In this appeal the appellants complained that the circumstantial evidence on which they were convicted did not irresistibly point to their guilt. I

1993 TLR p128

MFALILA JA

A The question then is what is the circumstantial evidence which was used to convict the appellants was it such that it pointed to no other conclusion but their guilt?

The first link in the chain of circumstantial evidence are the items which were recovered after a B search of the appellants' house. These included a pair of bicycle tyres, a bicycle stand, five spanners as well as a panga with blood stains. There was evidence which was not gainsaid that the appellants owned no bicycle or any other mode of transportation. It was therefore surprising that bicycle parts should have been found in their dwelling house. Their late father had a bicycle which he used on the C fateful day to travel to Handani shopping centre. The panga was blood stained. Again in their evidence they denied any knowledge of this panga. But during interrogation they had admitted ownership although they differed in explaining the presence of and the nature of the blood on the D panga. The second appellant said it was animal not human blood. But the Government Chemist confirmed in his report that it was human blood although its group could not be determined due to deterioration. The first appellant said that he did know how the panga came to be blood stained. Independent witnesses identified the panga that it belonged to the second appellant but that both of E them were using it. Hence although the identification of the bicycle parts by the bicycle repairer Shabani Juma (PW3) might attract some doubts, that of the panga found hidden under the appellants' bed and blood stained with human blood was beyond question. At the hearing of this F appeal, Mr Makange, learned counsel who advocated for the appellants, pointed out what he called co-existing circumstances which tended to weaken the inference of guilt from the circumstantial evidence assembled against the appellants. Firstly, with regard to the articles found and recovered G from the appellants' dwelling house he said that all these items were recovered from the appellants' house in their absence and that since the search was made a day after their arrest, there was every possibility that these articles could have been introduced into the house by someone other than the appellants during their enforced absence, particularly so he said, because the appellants' dwelling H house was semi-finished without any meaningful locking mechanism. Secondly, he said that the blood on the panga was not identified to be the same group as the deceased's. Thirdly, he said that when the alarm was raised, the appellants neither ran away nor panicked. The learned Trial Judge I considered at length these likely weaknesses but rejected them for the reasons which he gave and we agree with him. We do not see how anyone who was bent on incriminating the appellants could then have proceeded to A hide under the bed the very incriminating articles. As to the identification of the blood group on the panga this would have carried some weight if the appellants had admitted that it was human blood and explained where it came from. But according to them, it was either animal blood or they did not B know how and with what blood the panga came to be stained. Hence, this, added to other circumstances to be narrated point to the only conclusion that the blood on the panga must be that of the deceased Mussa Thimotheo. Blood grouping in the laboratory is not the only way of linking a sample of blood to the subject in issue. Whereas in this case this is lacking for one reason or other C deductive methods can be used. With regard to the point that the appellants neither panicked nor ran away when the alarm was raised, we think it has no merit because running away would have been the most stupid thing to do. Their own father was dead and they had already arranged their line of D defence. As to panicking, the cell leader Athuman Mohamed (PW5) stated that the second appellant was uncertain and unsettled in his behaviour as he tried to answer the questions as to what had happened to their father on 2 October 1985. E

1993 TLR p129

MFALILA JA

The second link in the chain of circumstantial evidence is the conduct of the appellants. Firstly, they did not report the disappearance of their father with whom they were in daily contact at least during meal times. They showed no concern and remained silent and the matter was raised by neighbours and co-workers. They explained that to them the deceased's disappearance was not unusual as he F had done so several times previously whenever he went to his shamba. This explanation seems to us untenable. The deceased was a regular employee of the Railways Corporation. How then could it have been possible for him to disappear from the camp for several days thus absenting himself from G work for so many days. If this absenteeism had been a regular routine of the deceased, he would have got himself into trouble with his employers a long time back. We are therefore satisfied that the appellants did not raise an alarm over their father's disappearance or even report it at this work place H because they knew what they had done to him. Secondly, they told a number of lies in a situation where, had they been innocent, telling the naked truth was the most natural and easiest thing to do. They lied about their presence at the camp when their father left on 2 October 1985. The first I appellant said that the last time he had had contact with the deceased was on 20

1993 TLR p130

MFALILA JA

A September 1985, and that he only went back to the deceased's house on 4 October 1985 when he heard of his disappearance. All this time he said he was eating at his aunt's place. The second appellant explained that he had been away from home since 2 October 1985 and that when the B alarm was raised he had just come back. But their close neighbour Shabani Nassoro (PW2) who saw the deceased as he left for Handeni on 2 October 1985, confirmed that both appellants were at the camp when their father left. Shabani Juma (PW3) said that the appellants were lying when they claimed that they were not in the village at the relevant time. They also lied when they denied eating C food regularly with their father claiming that more often than not they used to take their meals at their aunt's house. Their aunt Chausiku Thimotheo vehemently denied this allegation saying that even at the time when she lived in the village and this was a long time back, the appellants hardly visited her and that ever since she had been living in Tanga. It is a truism that lies by the accused on D their own can never form the basis for a conviction, but certainly they can be part of a chain. In this case, the only reason why the appellants sought to distance themselves from the deceased, denying that they regularly took meals at his house was to break the link to prevent people from wondering E why they failed to note and report their father's disappearance, someone with whom they were in daily contact at meal times.

The third and last link was the motive. The deceased's brother Maulid Thimotheo (PW7) said in his F evidence that the deceased had told him that the appellants had threatened to kill him allegedly because they resented his act of selling the family cattle. The deceased had told him that the situation was so bad that they were hardly on talking terms. PW7 had promised the deceased that he would come and try to talk to him and his sons. But the deceased was killed before he undertook G this mission. The appellants denied the existence of any feud between them and their father. But we believe that PW7 could not have invented this story. Indeed, the appellants themselves had at one time made a similar complaint to him regarding the bad relationship obtaining between them and their father.

H Accordingly like the learned Trial Judge, we are satisfied that the chains of circumstantial evidence linking the appellants to the death of their father is unbroken and that therefore it leads to no other conclusion but that the appellants were responsible for the death of their father. Their convictions and I sentences were in the circumstances well founded. We dismiss both appeals in their entirety.

1993 TLR p131

A

[zRPz]JOHN JOSEPH ONENGE AND JULIUS SENENE v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 131 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 24 OF 1993 B
21 May, 1993

(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Munuo, J.) C

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Adjournment of cases - Statutory control of adjournments and remand of accused in custody - Need for a certificate from specified officers stating the need and grounds should further D orders of adjournments and of remand custody of the accused be necessary - section 225(1) and (4) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 - Consequences of breach of such mandatory statutory provisions.

-Headnote

The appellants were convicted of armed robbery by the District Court. During trial the learned E magistrate adjourned the case from time to time and remanded the accused in custody for an aggregate exceeding sixty days without a certificate by specified officers stating the need and grounds for such further orders of adjournment and of remand custody of the accused. The Court of Appeal considered this issue and the consequences of failure to comply with the mandatory statutory F provisions of s 225(1) and (4) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.

Held: (i) The Trial Court breached the mandatory provisions of s 225(1) and (4) by making orders of adjournment and of remanding the appellants in custody for an aggregate of more than 60 days without any certificate of a specified officer stating the need and grounds for such further orders; G

(ii) Such breach of a mandatory statutory provision, which breach does not affect the substance of the trial does not render the trial a nullity.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to. H

C.J. Maruma, for the appellant.

Mrs. M. Lyimo, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court: I

1993 TLR p132

KISANGA JA

A Both appellants were convicted by the District Court for the offence of armed robbery contrary to ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code and were each sentenced to thirty years' imprisonment. They appealed unsuccessfully to the High Court hence this second appeal. In this Court both appellants B were advocated for by Mr C J Maruma Advocate; the respondent Republic was represented by Mrs M Lyimo, Senior State Attorney.

Both Courts below found that the house of the complainant (PW2) was broken into in broad daylight and a number of items of property were stolen from there. The appellants were seen and identified at C the scene but they managed to run way and could not be arrested. Subsequently, however, the appellant Julius Senene was found in possession of a radio which was one of the items stolen from the broken house of PW2.

Mr Maruma filed and argued a total of nine grounds of appeal seeking to raise a number of points of D law. He strongly criticised the High Court for not holding that the charge was defective. The charge as laid read as follows:

`Offence section and law: Armed robbery c/s 285 and 286 of the Penal Code cap 16 vol 1 of the Particulars of E Offence: John s/o Joseph Onenge and Julius s/o Senene Mosha are charged on 25th day of February 1991 at about 12:30 hrs at Ismalia Road within the Municipality and District of Moshi, Kilimanjaro Region did steal one pistol make Browning No 5201 and 14 bullets valued at Shs 150,000/= one Normade radio band 6 valued at Shs 60,000/=, one F wrist watch Oris valued at Shs 16,000/=, one golden necklace valued at Shs 25,000/= and cash Shs 32,000/=, all total valued at Shs 281,000/= the property of Seby s/o George Anjaria and immediately before the time of such stealing did threaten one Victus s/o Joseph by firing one bullet into the air in order to obtain or retain the things G stolen.'

The learned counsel vigorously contended that armed robbery as an offence does not exist under the Penal Code. To use his own words `That offence is yet to be created by the Legislature'. In his view H the only offence which exists under the Penal Code is that of robbery as created by s 285 and punishable under s 286 of the Code.

Referring to a passage in the judgment of the High Court in which the learned Judge had stated that the appellants were properly sentenced under Act 10 of 1989, Mr Maruma submitted that that was completely wrong because the said Act 10 of 1989 did not create the offence of armed robbery. In his I view that Act only makes penalty provisions which prescribe inter alia a minimum of 30 years' imprisonment for armed robbery A an offence which is non-existent. He strongly emphasized the point that the provision under Act 10 of 1989 prescribing a minimum of 30 years' imprisonment for armed robbery is meaningless unless and until Parliament enacts a law creating the offence of armed robbery. B

We have considered these arguments very carefully. Mr Maruma is quite right in submitting that Act 10 of 1989 does not create the offence of armed robbery. It only makes provisions for the punishment of different types of robbery. But we think that it is wrong to say that the offence of armed robbery does not exist under our law. Our view is that on a true construction of s 285 and 286 of the C Penal Code read together with s 5(b) and (bb) of the Minimum Sentences Act as amended by Act 10 of 1989, the offence of armed robbery does exist. The provisions of these sections are set out hereinbelow: Section 285 of the Penal Code provides that: D

`285. Any person who steals anything and, at or immediately before or immediately after the time of stealing it, uses or threatens to use actual violence to any person or property in order to obtain or retain the thing stolen or to prevent or overcome resistance to its being stolen or retained is guilty of the felony termed "robbery".' E

Section 286 of the Code provides that:

`286. Any person who commits the felony of robbery is liable to imprisonment for twenty years. If the offender is F armed with any dangerous or offensive weapon or instrument or is in company with one or more other person or persons, or if at or immediately before or immediately after the time of the robbery, he wounds, beats, strikes or uses any other personal violence to any person, he is liable to imprisonment for life, with or without corporal punishment.' G

And s 5(b) and (bb) of the Minimum Sentences Act as amended by Act 10 of 1989 provides inter alia that:

`5(b) where a person is convicted of robbery, the Court shall sentence him to imprisonment for a term of not less than fifteen years; H

(bb), where any person is convicted of armed robbery, the Court shall sentence him to imprisonment for a term of not less than thirty years; . . .'

Upon reading the three provisions together it is discernible that I

1993 TLR p134

KISANGA JA

A s 285 of the Penal Code creates the genus of the offence of robbery by defining that offence and spelling out the ingredients which constitute it. Section 286 of the Code prescribes punishment for ordinary robbery and for aggravated types or species of robbery. Thus the section prescribes the B punishment of twenty years' imprisonment for ordinary robbery and life imprisonment with or without corporal punishment as a general punishment for various types or species of aggravated robbery, including armed robbery. And s 5(b) and (bb) of the Minimum Sentences Act as amended by Act 10 of 1989 prescribes a minimum of fifteen and thirty years' imprisonment for ordinary robbery and C armed robbery respectively.

Upon this construction, therefore, the appellants who were found to have been armed with a pistol at the time of committing the offence, were properly charged with and convicted of the aggravated species of armed robbery under s 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. Likewise they were properly D sentenced to a minimum of thirty years' imprisonment under s 5(bb) of the Minimum Sentence Act as amended by Act 10 of 1989.

The view was also expressed that the charge as laid ought to have cited in the statement of offence Act 10 of 1989 as the penalty provision on which the charge was based, and that failure to do so did E prejudice the appellants. We think, however, that this was not necessary. The statement of offence did cite s 285 and 286 of the Penal Code as the provisions on which the charge was based. Furthermore the statement of offence alleged armed robbery and the particulars of the offence alleged that the appellants used a pistol in committing the offence. That in our view sufficiently F informed the appellants as to what type of aggravated robbery they were being charged with, so that they could prepare their defences accordingly. We, therefore, can find no justification in Mr Maruma's criticism that the charge was defective.

G Closely connected with this was the allegation that the District Court had acted in excess of its jurisdiction when sentencing the appellants to thirty years' jail. Mr Maruma contended that in terms of s 170 of the Criminal Procedure Act the sentencing power of the District Court is limited to a H maximum of only eight years' imprisonment, and therefore that court had no authority to impose thirty years on the appellants. It seems to us, however, that the learned Counsel has misapprehended the meaning of s 170 of the Criminal Procedure Act. The relevant provisions of that section state that:

I `170(1) A subordinate Court may, in cases in which such sentences are authorised by law, pass the following sentences -

1993 TLR p135

KISANGA JA

(a) imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years; save that where a Court convicts a person for a scheduled A offence it may, if such sentence is authorised by law, pass a sentence of imprisonment for such offence for a term not exceeding eight years;'

This is no doubt the provision on which Mr Maruma relied for his submission. However, the learned B Counsel failed to grasp the import of ss (2) which qualified the provisions of ss 91) above. The relevant provisions of ss (2) read as follows:

`(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of ss (1) - C

(a) a sentence of imprisonment -

(i) for a scheduled offence which exceeds the minimum term of imprisonment prescribed in respect of it by the Minimum Sentences Act 1972; D

(ii) . . . .

(b) . . . .

(c) shall not be carried into effect, executed or levied until the record of the case, or a certified copy of it, has been transmitted to the High Court and the sentence or order has been confirmed by a Judge.' E

The combined effect of these provisions as reproduced is that a Dubordinate Court first, is enjoined to impose on the offender the minimum prison term prescribed for the offence by the Minimum Sentences Act; in other words the Court has no discretion in the matter to pass any lesser sentence. F And secondly, in a deserving case, the Court may in its discretion sentence the offender to a prison term which is longer than the minimum prescribed for the offence but where this is done, it is required that such longer prison term has to be confirmed by a judge of the High Court before it is G carried into effect, executed or levied.

In the present case, the prison term of thirty years imposed by the District Court was, as was shown earlier, the barest minimum prescribed for the offence by the Minimum Sentences Act as amended by Act 10 of 1989. In terms of ss (2) as reproduced above, that sentence was clearly within the H sentencing powers of that Court. Indeed, not only was the District Court obliged to pass that sentence, but it could also in its discretion if the circumstances called for a stiffer penalty, have meted out a longer prison term subject, however, to confirmation by the High Court. I

In yet another ground Mr Maruma criticised the High Court for

1993 TLR p136

KISANGA JA

A failing to hold that the trial by the District Court was a nullity under s 225(1) and (4) of the Criminal Procedure Act. The two subsections of s 225 above cited in effect make in unlawful for a court in the trial of a case such as this one to adjourn the case from time to time and to remand the accused in B custody for an aggregate exceeding sixty days, except upon certificate by specified officers stating the need and grounds for such further orders of adjournment and of remand custody of the accused.

Admittedly there was a breach of the mandatory statutory provisions of s 225(1) and (4) of the C Criminal Procedure Act. The Trial Court made orders of adjournment and of remanding the appellants in custody for an aggregate of more than sixty days without any certificate of a specified officer stating the need and grounds for such further orders. Now the question is whether such D breach rendered the trial a nullity as urged by Mr Maruma. We think it did not. The mandatory provision under s 225(1) and (4) mentioned above is one of a procedural nature. It is a provision which seeks mainly to safeguard the liberty of an accused person. It was not alleged nor is it apparent from the record, that the breach of that provision has affected the appellants' trial or prejudiced them in any way, say by making it impossible to find or to communicate with Counsel. In E our view such breach of a mandatory statutory provision which breach does not affect the substance of the trial does not render the trial a nullity. He accordingly rejects this ground. We should add, however, that the Trial Courts should be more vigilant in the application of s 225(1) and (4) of F the Criminal Procedure Act above cited in order to make the provisions which seek to safeguard the rights of the accused meaningful.

Again it was alleged that the Trial Magistrate had failed to call essential evidence. This was in relation G to the first appellant John Onenge who in his defence of alibi had claimed that at the time of the commission of the offence he was in police custody apparently in connection with some other offence. In answer to cross-examination he is recorded as saying that he did not know the importance of calling the officer in charge of the police station in question to produce the lock up H register in support of the alibi. Mr Maruma, therefore, submitted that in those circumstances the Trial Court erred in failing to call for the said lock up register which would have provided the necessary evidence to determine whether or not the appellant could have been at the scene of crime on 25 February 1991 as alleged.

I We can find no merit in this complaint. The appellant was seen and identified at the scene of crime by PW1 and PW3 on 25 February 1991. His co-accused, Julius A Senene, in his cautioned statement to the police (exh P5) stated that the appellant called on him on 25 February 1991. And PW9 testified that he and other members of `Sungu Sungu' arrested the appellant in the dead of the night on 26/27 February 1991 on suspicion when the appellant and B another person tried to run away with some luggage in their possession upon seeing the `Sungu Sungu' following them. Thus there was abundant evidence before the Trial Magistrate showing that on 25 February 1991 the appellant was not at police lock up as he claimed. He was free and he could C have been at the scene of crime on 25 February 1991, the day of commission of the offence. Thus the lock up register was really not necessary for the purpose of determining whether or not the appellant was at the scene at the time of the commission of the offence, and hence the Trial Magistrate was not obliged to call for it. D

Criticism was also leveled against the procedure of tendering exhibits in evidence. The radio which was stolen in the course of committing the offence charged in this case was tendered in evidence as exh P2 by its owner (PW2). Criticising this Mr Maruma submitted that the radio ought to have been E tendered by the police officer who was keeping custody of it. However, we can find no substance in this complaint. PW2 testified that exh P2 was stolen from his home during the commission of the offence charged and the appellant Julius Senene confirmed that exh P2 was the same radio which the police had seized from him. Thus so long as the identify of exh P2 was not in dispute, we could F see no valid reason why its owner could not properly produce it in evidence.

It should be borne in mind that the object of the rule that an exhibit should be produced by the person who had custody of it is to ascertain the identity of the said exhibit as the very one which it is claimed connects the accused with the offence charged. In the instant case both the prosecution and the G defence are agreed that exh P2 the radio stolen during the commission of the offence charged is the very one found in possession of the appellant, thereby implicating him with the offence charged. In such circumstances it is pointless to insist on the production of the radio by the police who had kept H custody of it.

And lastly Mr Maruma criticised the High Court for failing to find that the Trial Magistrate had written the judgment before hearing the defence case. Advancing this complaint particularly in relation to the I second appellant Julius Senene, the learned Counsel

A contended that the irregularity meant that the Magistrate did not consider the defence case. This, he want on, necessarily prejudiced the defence thereby vitiating the whole judgment.

There is no doubt that this is a serious allegation, and we must make it plain that if it were founded, it B would have far reaching consequences. However, upon a careful scrutiny of the record, we are of the opinion that the allegation is not substantiated. The judgment of the Trial Magistrate is about four and a half typed pages. The record shows that the Magistrate delivered that judgment on the same day at the same sitting after concluding the defence case and without any adjournment during which C to compose the judgment. Counsel submitted that such a long judgment must have been written before the proceedings were concluded and in particular before the defence was heard. Deferring to an endorsement on the record which shows that the defence case was adjourned to 4 September 1991 for continuation while the judgment is dated 3 September 1991. Mr Maruma stated that this D confirmed his claim that the judgment must have been written before the defence was heard.

As intimated earlier, however, we are not satisfied that this allegation has been substantiated. The second appellant, Julius Senene, was the last to give evidence in which he mentioned one Jambii as E the person who had brought a radio to him, and indeed this was the backbone of his defence. That fact is clearly reflected and duly considered in the judgment of the Trial Magistrate. But a far as we could ascertain, that fact is not reflected in the evidence of any other witness. Then the question is: If the Magistrate had written his judgment before hearing the defence case where did he get this fact F from? We specifically put this question to Mr Maruma but he could give no answer to it.

Mr Maruma had informed us from the bar that according to his instructions, during the morning of the G day the judgment was given the Magistrate had recorded the whole of the defence for the first appellant and the examination-in-chief of the second appellant Julius Senene. He then adjourned the case for cross-examination of the appellant Julius which, according to the record, was a brief H covering only about six lines. After that judgment was delivered very late in the afternoon at about 5 pm. Therefore, it may be that during the long adjournment after the morning session the Magistrate started to compose his judgment basing it on the bulk of the prosecution and the defence evidence already recorded and then rounded it off in Court after the brief cross-examination of the appellant I Julius during the afternoon session.

1993 TLR p139

On the issue that the defence case was adjourned on 4 September 1991 for continuation while the A judgment is dated 3 September 1991, we are satisfied that this was only a mix up by the Magistrate in the recording of dates. The true position is that the judgment was dated and delivered on 4 September 1991 and not 3 September 1991 as the record purports to show. For Mr Maruma B conceded that the defence of the second appellant Julius was recorded on 4 September 1991, the day the judgment was delivered. Yet the endorsement on the record shows that it was recorded on 3 September 1991. It was therefore a slip for the magistrate to endorse that the defence of the appellant Julius was recorded on 3 September 1991 when in fact it was recorded on 4 September C 1991. It was equally a slip that he endorsed on the record that the judgment was dated and delivered on 3 September 1991 when in fact it was dated and delivered on 4 September 1991.

After a careful examination of the record, we are satisfied that the criticisms leveled against the D decision of the High Court are unfounded and the appeal is without merit. The High Court rightly upheld the appellants' convictions and the sentences imposed on them. The appeal, therefore fails and is accordingly dismissed in its entirety. E

1993 TLR p139

F

[zRPz]LEKASI MESAWARIEKI v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 139 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 31 OF 1993 G

21 May, 1993

(From the conviction and sentence of the High Courtof Tanzania at Arusha, Munuo, J.) H

Flynote

Legal Assistance - Accused allowed by the Court to prosecute his own case carrying the death penalty - whether accused could get a fair trial without legal assistance. I

1993 TLR p140

-Headnote

A The appellant was charged with and convicted by the High Court of the offence of murder. He was sentenced accordingly. During trial the Judge allowed the appellant to defend himself without assistance of a lawyer and without explaining to the accused the dangers he was facing in conducting his own defence in such a serious charge of murder.

B The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania against both conviction and sentence.

Held: The appellant did not and could not get a fair trial without legal assistance.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

C Case referred to:

1. Laurent Joseph and another v. Republic [1981] TLR 351.

Sabaya, for the appellant.

Mrs. Sumari, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

D Mfalila, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

In the High Court sitting at Arusha the appellant Lekasi Mesawarieki was charged jointly with his E fifteen-year-old son Zephania Mesawarieki with the offence of murder. His son was acquitted, but he was convicted as charged and sentenced to death. He lodged this appeal against both his conviction and the sentence of death.

Before us, Mr Sabaya, learned Counsel who appeared for the appellant argued two grounds of F appeal after abandoning the second ground. In ground No 1 the appellant complained that the learned Trial Judge erred in law and fact when she allowed the appellant to proceed to defend himself on such a serious charge of murder without availing him with the services of a lawyer. During the G hearing, Mr Sabaya argued that the appellant was greatly prejudiced by being allowed to prosecute his own case involving such a serious charge carrying the death penalty. He added that for the same reason that this Court ordered a retrial in Laurent Joseph & Another v Republic (1) a retrial should be ordered in the present case.

H In reply Mrs Sumari who had initially supported the appellant's conviction arguing that he had freely informed the Court that he was prepared to proceed with the trial on second thoughts she conceded that the appellant was prejudiced by proceeding with the trial without Counsel, hence in her view the I appellant did not get a fair trial.

1993 TLR p141

MFALILA JA

The record shows that when the trial of the appellant and his young son opened on 29 September A 1992 the following is what transpired:

1st accused:

If no advocate has turned up to defend us we shall conduct the defence by ourselves. The case should not be B adjourned.

2nd accused:

Let the case proceed. We shall defend ourselves.

These statements by the appellant and his young son appear to have been given spontaneously, for C they are not preceded by any comments or address by the Court. After recording those spontaneous statements, there was no attempt by the Court to explain to the accused the dangers that they were faced in conducting their own defence in such a serious charge of murder. The Court D simply ordered the trial to proceed as schedules oblivious of the fact that one of the accused persons was just a child. As it turned out, the going proved too difficult for the appellant. When cross-examined by Mrs Lyimo, he is recorded to have replied at one stage:

`I was not able to ask anything I wanted because I am not literate and the case has many corners.' E

We think that this statement sums up graphically the difficulties which the appellant and his son faced in the conduct of their defence at the trial. We are thus inclined to agree with both counsel that F the appellant did not and could not get a fair trial without legal assistance.

For these reasons we allow the appeal, quash the appellant's conviction and set aside the sentence of death. However in view of the state of the evidence on record, we order that the appellant be G retried before another judge in accordance with the law.

1993 TLR p142

A

[zRPz]RICHARD VENANCE TARIMO v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 142 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

B CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 29 OF 1993

21 May, 1993

(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Mroso, J.)

Flynote

C Criminal Practice and Procedure - Assessors - Directions to assessors - Trial judge misdirects assessors on the nature of provocation - Assessors fail to determine and advise on the provocative nature of the deceased's words - Effect of such misdirection.

D Criminal Law - Provocation - Deceased uttered words tending to show that she had an adulterous association with some men - The test of provocation.

-Headnote

E The appellant was convicted of the murder of his wife and was sentenced to death. Among the defences raised during trial was provocation; the appellant had contended that his wife made statements which tended to show that she had adulterous associations with some men. When giving directions to the assessors, on the question of provocation, the learned Trial Judge put emphasis on alleged or suspected adultery as constituting provocation and not the words uttered by F the deceased. This way of directing the assessors was attacked on appeal.

Held: (i) The immediate alleged provocation was not the deceased's adultery, but rather the words allegedly uttered by the deceased when asked where she had been and why she had gone out without telling the appellant;

G (ii) The test in this case was on the provocative nature of the deceased's words, whether the words themselves were capable of provoking an ordinary man of the appellant's community to induce him to react in the manner the appellant did, not whether these words suggested or amounted to a confession of adultery by the deceased;

H (iii) The learned Trial Judge misdirected the assessors on the question of provocation and this misdirection resulted in failure by the assessors to determine and advise on the provocative nature of the deceased's words;

(iv) Before a conviction for murder can be upheld in a situation where there was a misdirection or non-direction on the question of provocation the following two conditions must be present: firstly the omission must have been deliberate on a view of the evidence taken by I the judge and, secondly, the judge must have made a specific finding making it clear that he would in any A case have overridden the contrary opinions of the assessors the contrary;

1993 TLR p143

(v) In the present case, the assessors were misdirected away from the true nature of the provocative act; so neither the assessors nor the judge made any finding on it.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. B

Cases referred to:

1. Wafula s/o Waninira v. R. [1957] EA 498.
2. Bullard v. R [1957] 3 WLR 656.
3. Tulubuzya Bituro v. Republic [1982] TLR 264. C
4. Abdullahi Ali v. R [1958] EA 725.

Ngalo, for the appellant

Mrs. Lyimo, for the respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

Mfalila, J.A. delivered the following considered judgment of the court: D

The appellant Richard Venance Tarimo was convicted of murder of his wife Delfina Richard by the High Court sitting at Moshi and was sentenced to death. He filed this appeal consisting of two E grounds against both his conviction and the sentence of death. In ground 1, he complained that the Trial Court ought to have considered the evidence that the appellant and the deceased had been drinking for a long time and that at the time of the commission of the offence the appellant was still under the influence of alcohol. In Ground 2 he complained that the Trial Court ought to have held that F there was sufficient provocation to reduce the offence of murder to manslaughter.

Apart from the appellant, there was no other person who witnesses the deceased being assaulted. The two neighbours, (PW6) Orest Ntaimo and his wife Akwilina Orest (PW7) who arrived at the G scene in answer to the cries of the deceased, found the appellant standing at the door of his house holding the door frame. When they asked him what was the matter, the appellant ordered them to go away and threatened to teach them a lesson if they dared to come any nearer. At being so H threatened, the two retreated to the safety of their home. But they heard the deceased crying from inside the house and lamenting that she was dying leaving behind her children as orphans. The next day they heard of Delfina's death and reported the incident to the police who came to the village and arrested the appellant. I

1993 TLR p144

MFALILA JA

A At his trial the appellant explained that the deceased Delfina was his wife whom he regrettably killed. Narrating the circumstances of her death, he said that on the day in question, he and the deceased went to drink pombe at 5 pm and they returned home at 8 pm. On their way home, they B met two men one of whom he identified by his voice to be Orest (PW6). Orest then attacked him and threatened to teach him a lesson because he alleged the appellant was back-biting him. He, however, managed to free himself from Orest enabling him and his wife to proceed home where they slept. But later during the same night as he and the deceased were asleep, he woke and realised C that the deceased was not in bed with him. He went out to look for her thinking that she had gone to the latrine, but she was not there. He decided to wait on the veranda. At last she appeared coming along the path leading from Orest's house. When they were both inside the house, he asked her D where she had been and why she had gone out without informing him. She replied:

`Mimi sichungwi. Kama huko Dar es Salaam una wanawake na mimi nina wanaume,'

E and pushed him. The appellant said he fell on the table, the deceased also fell over him. There was a knife on the said table which he picked up intending to put away. But she also held it and a struggle for the knife between the two of them ensued. In the course of this struggle, he said, he stabbed her accidentally. He does not know how many times he stabbed her but he was shocked at F what he had done. He slept until the following morning. He explained that the deceased sustained several cut wounds because they struggled over the knife.

Both in his summing up to the Assessors and his judgment, the learned Trial Judge considered that G three defences were open to the appellant, namely provocation, self-defence and accidental killing. The learned Judge considered all these three defences and rejected them as did the assessors. He therefore found the appellant guilty of murder as charged and sentenced him to death.

At the hearing of this appeal, Mr Ngalo who advocated for the appellant, argued that as the appellant H and the deceased had been drinking for many hours before the attack, the appellant must have been so drunk that he was incapable of forming a specific intent.

On our part, we do not think the evidence on record supports Mr Ngalo's contention that the appellant was at the time so drunk that he was not in a position to form a specific intent. On his way home, the I appellant was strong enough to wriggle out of the clutches of his assailant and to continue with his journey home. On arrival at home, he was sober enough to wake A up and realise that his wife was not in bed with him. He went out looking for her thinking that she had gone to the latrine, and when he found that she was not in the latrine, he decided to wait on the veranda until she returned. We are satisfied that these are not the actions of a man so drunk that he cannot form an intent to do a specific act. What took place inside the house up to the fatal stabbings B of the deceased confirms this view.

1993 TLR p145

MFALILA JA

On the second ground, Mr Ngalo argued that when all the evidence is considered including the appellant's cautioned statement, it is clear that provocation was established and that therefore the C Trial Court should have convicted the appellant of manslaughter not murder.

In connection with the defence of provocation, the learned Judge explained to the Assessors what this defence entails and after explaining its elements he directed them as follows: D `Finding a wife in the act of adultery or in circumstances suggesting reliably that she had just been committing adultery can provide legal provocation.

Accused did not find the deceased in the act of adultery. But do you think he suspected she had just been E committing adultery with someone when she left him in bed during the fateful night? If so, were those circumstances that irresistibly suggested she had been committing adultery? Mere suspicion is not enough.

If you believe she must have been committing adultery when the accused saw her returning home and he killed her F in the heat of passion, then you can advise me to find the accused guilty of manslaughter only. You may consider in that connection, whether you believe the deceased, on being asked where she had been, said `Mimi nina wanaume wengi, ukipenda nenda ukatafute mke wa kwako' or `Mimi sichungwi, kama huko Dar es Salaam una G wanawake na mimi nina wanaume.' If you believe she replied in that manner to the accused, do such words indicate that she was confessing to having just committed adultery? Would that be unequivocal confession of adultery?'

By this direction the learned Judge wanted the Assessors to assume two things. Firstly, that the act H of provocation was the deceased's alleged or suspected adultery. Secondly, that the deceased had gone out at night leaving the appellant alone in bed and when she came back and on being asked where she had been, she answered in the manner the appellant alleges she did and therefore to consider I

A whether this answer suggested adultery on her part. We think it was a serious error to ask the Assessors to act on the basis of these two assumptions. In our view the immediate alleged provocation was not the deceased's adultery, but rather the words allegedly uttered by the deceased when asked where she had been and why she had gone out without telling the appellant. The judge B should therefore have directed the Assessors to answer the following questions:

(a) Whether on their way back from the pombe drinking, the appellant and his wife encountered Orest and another man and that Orest threatened to assault him.

C (b) Whether the deceased had gone out of the house in suspicious circumstances leaving the appellant alone in bed?

(c) Whether after her return and being asked where she had been, she answered the appellant in the manner the appellant alleged she did.

D (d) If the answer to (c) is in the affirmative, whether such words were provocative capable of inducing the kind of reaction exhibited by the appellant.

In other words, the test in this case was on the provocative nature of the deceased's words, whether E the words themselves were capable of provoking an ordinary man of the appellant's community to induce him to react in the manner the appellant did, not whether these words suggested or amounted to a confession of adultery by the deceased. This misdirection resulted in the failure by the Assessors to determine and advise on the provocative nature of the deceased's words. On his part, F the learned Judge also continued to act on this error and rejected the defence of provocation because adultery had not been established. The learned Judge rejected the defence of provocation because there was only suspicion that the deceased had committed adultery. In the circumstances G he held that the appellant killed the deceased to punish her because of his suspicions that she had committed adultery.

What then are the consequences of this misdirection? Except in very rare cases, both this Court and H the old Court of Appeal for East Africa considered such misdirection as fatal. In the case of Wafula s/o Waninira v R (1) the appellant who had been struck with a stick following a beer party, stabbed and killed his assailant. At his trial for murder, the appellant's plea of self-defence was rejected and was convicted and sentenced to death, but the Trial Judge failed to appreciate that the evidence I clearly raised an issue of provocation. On this omission, the Court of Appeal of East Africa

1993 TLR p147

MFALILA JA

(Forbes JA) held that the omission of the Judge to direct himself and the Assessors on the issue of A provocation was a serious misdirection and the conviction of murder could not stand. The Court quoted with approval the following passage from the judgment of the Privy Council in Bullard v R (2) at 659:

`It has long been settled law that if on the evidence whether of the prosecution or of the defence, there is any B evidence of provocation fit to be left to a jury, and whether or not this issue has been specifically raised at the trial by Counsel for the defence and whether or not the accused has said in terms that he was provoked, it is the duty of the Judge, after a proper direction, to leave it open to the jury to return a verdict of manslaughter if they are not satisfied C beyond reasonable doubt that the killing was unprovoked.'

On the consequences of such misdirection the Court held and state at 499:

`. . . It is once more stated that it is not open to a Court of Appeal to speculate on what the conclusion on the issue of D manslaughter would have been if the issue had been left to the jury. Similarly it is not for us to speculate on what conclusion would have been reached by the Assessors and the learned Trial Judge had they considered this issue. In the circumstances the conviction for murder could not stand.' E

Similarly this Court in Tulubuzya Bituro v Republic (3) considered this point and held that failure by a Judge to direct Assessors on the issue of provocation where evidence shows so, vitiates the entire F proceedings. In that case the record indicated Appeal for East Africa in an appeal from the Somaliland Protectorate in the case of Abdullahi Ali v R (4). In that case on the question of provocation the Trial Judge had held as follows: G

`. . . This followed her repudiation of the settlement and refusal to go home and allowance must be made for the `last straw' doctrine of commulative provocation, but, put at its highest, this could not excuse so grossly excessive reaction. For these reasons I was of the opinion there was no evidence of provocation on which a verdict of culpable homicide could properly be founded and I did not refer to such a possibility in the summing up.' H

On appeal, the Court of Appeal for East Africa held at para 708:

`With respect, we thought that it was not correct to remove the I

1993 TLR p148

MFALILA JA

A question of sufficient provocation or no sufficient provocation from the Assessors. However since the learned Judge in the next sentence of his judgment found as a fact, as he was entitled to do, that the story that the woman refused to go home at that time and in that situation, was not credible, it is quite clear that he would have overridden the assessors whatever their opinions on the question of provocation might have been. Accordingly his omission to B mention provocation in the summing up did not affect the result.'

The Court of Appeal then concluded the judgment with the following words:

C `We would add that we agree with the learned Judge that even if the appellant's statement were to be taken at its face value, the provocative received could not have justified so brutal a retaliation by the appellant. We merely point out that this matter should not have been removed from the consideration by the Assessors. The question whether or not the retaliation was out of proportion to the provocation was a question of fact which they should have been D required to take into consideration before giving their opinions.'

Thus before a conviction for murder can be upheld in a situation where there was a misdirection or E non-direction on the question of provocation, the following two conditions must be present. Firstly, the omission must have been deliberate on a view of the evidence taken by the Judge. Secondly, the Judge must have made a specific finding so that it is clear to this Court that he would in any case F have overridden the opinions of the Assessors to the contrary. In the present case, the assessors were misdirected away from the true nature of the provocative act so neither the Assessors nor the Judge made any finding on it. We are therefore in no position to speculate on what the conclusions might have been had the Assessors been properly directed on the provocative nature of the words uttered by the deceased or what view the learned Judge himself might have taken of these words. G We can only resolve this uncertainty in favour of the appellant and hold that his conviction for murder cannot stand. Mrs Lyimo who appeared for the Republic conceded as much and declined to support the appellant's conviction for murder.

H Accordingly we allow the appeal, quash the conviction for murder and set aside the sentence of death. Instead we find the appellant guilty of the offence of manslaughter and convict him accordingly.

On the question of sentence, we agree with Mrs Lyimo that this was a wicked assault on the I unfortunate woman and we also agree that the sentence to be imposed must reflect this fact.

1993 TLR p149

With all these factors in mind we sentence the appellant to fifteen years imprisonment. A

1993 TLR p149

C

[zRPz]SAMUEL SILANGA v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 149 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 32 OF 1993

21 May, 1993 D

(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Mroso, J.)

Flynote

Evidence - Burden of proof - Murder - Accused's right palm stained with blood which appears to be recent and about which accused keeps quiet when asked - Whether court may draw inference that accused's silence is not E consistent with his innocence.

Evidence - Burden of proof - Shifting the burden to the accused - Accused's palm stained with blood appearing to be recent - Whether requiring the accused to explain how he got the blood stain amounts to shifting the burden F of proof to the defence.

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted of murder and sentenced to suffer death. He appealed against both conviction and sentence. One ground of his appeal was that the burden of proof was improperly G shifted to the defence when, being found to have his right palm stained with blood, he was asked how he got it and he kept quiet. The Trial Court inferred guilt because the appellant kept quiet on how he got blood on his right palm. On appeal:

Held: (i) Once it was shown that the appellant's palm was stained with blood at a time when murder H involving stab wounds had just been committed in the neighbourhood, and no doubt suspicion was mounting high all over the place, one would expect the appellant to explain how he got his palm stained with blood; certainly it was in his best interest to do so;

(ii) The Trial Judge was perfectly entitled to draw the inference that the appellant's silence I could not be consistent with innocence.

1993 TLR p150

Case Information

A Appeal dismissed in its entirety.

No case referred to.

Sabaya, for the appellant.
J. Mono, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
B Kisanga, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:
This is an appeal against conviction for murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code, and the sentence of death imposed by the High Court (Mroso J) sitting here in Arusha. The appellant is C represented by Mr Sabaya, Advocate and the respondent Republic is represented by Mr J D Mono, Senior State Attorney.
The facts of the case may be summarised briefly as follows: The appellant is a brother of the D deceased woman, and their houses were in the neighbourhood of each other. Both of them were disputing over the ownership of a piece of land, and this dispute was pending in Court when this incident happened.
E On the material night the deceased was sleeping in her house when she suddenly noticed that her house was on fire and she tried to escape. The prosecution charged that as she got out, the appellant attacked her with a knife inflicting a number of stab wounds on her. She died in hospital only shortly afterwards as a result of the stab wounds.
F The appellant's defence was a mere denial coupled with a claim that on the material night he was sleeping in his house and did not go to the home of the deceased. The High Court rejected that defence and accordingly convicted the appellant as charged.
G Mr Sabaya filed and argued three grounds of appeal alleging inadequate identification of the appellant at the scene of crime, basing the appellant's conviction on uncorroborated evidence and shifting the burden of proof onto the appellant. None of these grounds, however, has any merit. On the issue of identification there was the evidence of Godfrey Lembris (PW1) and Solomon Nicolaus H Ukeled (PW2) who testified that they saw and identified the appellant at the home of the deceased. PW2 added that he saw the appellant actually stabbing the deceased and when the appellant saw him approaching the scene he (the appellant) ran away. Both witnesses who knew the appellant well before the incident, stated that they identified the appellant through moonlight and also through the I fire from the burning house of the deceased and that of PW1 which had also gone on fire. Indeed PW1 said that as he went out of his house he saw and A identified the appellant who was only three paces away.
1993 TLR p151
KISANGA JA
Mr Sabaya submitted that there was conflict between the evidence of PW1 and PW2 on the one hand and that of PW3 (Christopher Laizer) on the other. PW3 had stated in his examination-in-chief B that there was no moonlight on the material night, contrary to PW1 and PW2 who said that there was moonlight. Counsel, therefore, contended that such conflict seriously weakened or rendered unreliable the prosecution evidence respecting the means of identifying the appellant at the scene of crime that night. The Trial Judge considered this issue. His views was that even if there was no C moonlight that night, there was light from the burning houses by which the appellant was adequately identified by the witnesses. While endorsing that view, we are prepared to go further. It is noted that PW3 in his cross-examination by the prosecution is recorded as saying that he could not quite D remember if there was moonlight that night. We think that this fact could provide no good reason for discounting or reasonably doubting PW1 and PW2 who positively stated that there was moonlight on the material night. Had PW3 been consistent and maintained his earlier position that there was no moonlight that night, the view might have been different. E

Nor did the appellant's conviction rest on the evidence of visual identification alone. He was based also on a number of pieces of circumstantial evidence. There was the dying declaration of the deceased who told PW1, PW2 and PW3 at the scene that it was the appellant who had injured her. F Later on at the hospital PW6, a police officer, also recorded her statement to the same effect.

There was evidence that during the fracas that night the deceased and her sons, PW1 and one Julius, raised the alarm as they called for help and neighbours, including PW3, went to the scene in answer to such an alarm. However, the appellant who was also a neighbour did not show up. One G wonders why he did not? When the police called on him that same night and asked him to come out of his house after they had duly identified themselves, he refused to open the door until the police threatened to break it. The inference to be drawn is that the appellant declined to answer the alarm or to open the door because he knew that he had done wrong and he was now afraid of the H consequences.

What is even more suspicious is that upon coming out of his house, his right palm was stained with blood which appeared to be recent but on being asked how he got it he kept quiet. Mr Sabaya I submitted that

A the Court was not entitled to view the appellant's silence as something that went against him. He contended that to require the appellant to explain how he got his palm stained with blood amounted to shifting the burden of proof to the defence. With due respect to the learned Counsel, we think that such criticism is unjustified. Once it was shown that the appellant's palm was stained with blood at a B time when murder involving stab wounds had just been committed in the neighbourhood, and no doubt suspicion was mounting high all over the place, one would expect the appellant to explain how he got his palm stained with blood; certainly it was in his best interest to do so. It was odd, however, C that in the face of such circumstances he kept quiet when asked about it. We think that the Trial Judge was perfectly entitled to draw the inference that the appellant's silence could not be consistent with his innocence.

And lastly, there was the evidence of bad blood between the appellant and the deceased on account D of a dispute over a piece of land and that the dispute was pending in Court when the killing occurred. That would provide motive for the appellant to eliminate his rival.

We are satisfied that all this evidence amply demonstrated that appellant's guilt beyond any E reasonable doubt. There is no merit in the appeal which is accordingly dismissed in its entirety.

F

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Omar JJA

G CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 45 OF 1993
4 June, 1993
H (From the judgment of the High Court of Tanzania at Morogoro, Kyando, J.)
Flynote
Evidence - Evidence of spouse - Compellability of spouses to give evidence against each other in criminal cases I - Admissibility of spouse's evidence - Evidence Act 1967, ss 130(2).
1993 TLR p153
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted of murder and sentenced to death. At his trial, his wife was compelled A to testify against him as a key prosecution witness. He appealed against conviction and sentence.
Held: The evidence of a spouse who has been compelled to testify against another spouse in a criminal case contrary to the provisions of s 130 of the Evidence Act 1967, is inadmissible and of no effect. B
Case Information
Appeal allowed. Conviction for murder quashed and substituted for manslaughter.
No cases referred to.
Miss D.K. Mutabuzi, for appellant. C
Sengwaji, for respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Nyalali, C.J., read the following considered judgment of the court:
The applicant, namely Matei Joseph, was charged and convicted in the High Court on circuit at D Morogoro for the offence of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code and was sentenced to death as prescribed by law. He was aggrieved by the conviction and sentence hence this appeal to this Court. Miss Mutabuzi, learned Counsel from the Tanzania Legal Corporation represented the E appellant before us, whereas Mr Sengwaji, learned State Attorney represented the respondent Republic. The memorandum of appeal contains two grounds of appeal, but Miss Mutabuzi abandoned the second ground. The remaining ground states: F

`That the learned Trial Judge misdirected himself in law and in fact in not giving the appellant the benefit of doubt.'

According to the record of the trial in the High Court, much of the relevant facts are not in dispute between the parties including the killing by the appellant of his father-in-law, namely Zebedayo Tupa, G whose daughter, that is, Maria Zebedayo, was appellant's wife at the material time. It is common ground that the appellant's marriage to Maria Zebedayo had been bedevilled with marital problems for sometime prior to 10 September 1989 when appellant killed his father-in-law. Maria Zebedayo had H run away from the matrimonial home on several occasions, and on the fateful day, she had been brought back to the appellant by the deceased. The appellant and the deceased had then gone out together for a drink of local liquor and when they returned to the appellant's home, they found Maria Zebedayo missing. That triggered off a quarrel I

1993 TLR p154

NYALALI CJ

A between the appellant and the deceased which led the appellant to inflict fatal stab wounds upon the deceased. Thereafter the appellant went to surrender himself and his weapon to the local authority, that is, Hassani Mgalusi (the Ward Secretary). Subsequently the appellant was taken to a B Justice of the Peace to whom he made an extra-judicial statement.

The only dispute in this case concerns the circumstances under which the appellant stabbed the deceased to death. Counsel for appellant has submitted to the effect that appellant could have been acting either under self-defence or provocation or under the influence of drink. We have examined C the evidence. Apart from the appellant, the only eyewitness to the incident is the wife of the appellant, that is, Maria Zebedayo, who gave evidence at the trial as the first prosecution witness (PW1). Unfortunately, according to the record of the trial, the provisions of s 130 of the Law of Evidence Act D 1967 concerning the compellability of spouses to give evidence against each other in criminal cases were not complied with by the Trial Court. Sub-sections (1) to (3) state:

`(1) Where a person charged with an offence is the husband or the wife of another person that other person shall be a competent but not a compellable witness on behalf of the prosecution, subject to the following E provisions of this section.

(2) Any wife or husband, whether or not of a monogamous marriage, shall be a competent and compellable witness for the prosecution -

F (a) in any case where the person charged is charged with an offence under chapter XV of the Penal Code or under the Law of Marriage Act 1971;

(b) in any case where the person charged is charged with an act or omission affecting the person or G property of the wife or husband, of that person or the children of either or any of them.

(3) Where the person whom the Court has reason to believe is the husband or wife, or, in a polygamous marriage, one of the wives of the person charged with an offence is called as a witness for the prosecution, H the court shall, except in the cases specified in ss (2), ensure that the person is made aware, before giving evidence, of the provisions of ss (1), and the evidence of that person shall not be admissible, unless the Court has recorded in the proceedings that this subsection has been complied with.'

I It is clear under the above cited provisions that in cases like this one, which does not fall within the categories of cases stipulated under ss (2), the evidence of a A spouse, such as PW1, which is given contrary to the relevant mandatory provisions, is inadmissible and of no effect. That leaves us only with the evidence of the appellant himself, the evidence of the Ward Secretary (PW4) and the appellant's extra-judicial statement, The evidence of PW4 who B seems to be a credible witness, excludes the possibility that the appellant could have been drunk to the extent of not being capable of forming a culpable intent. As to the issue of self-defence, it seems that there is no clear suggestion or assertion either in appellant's evidence at the trial or in his exculpatory statements to the ward secretary and the Justice of the Peace. The relevant part of his C evidence reads:

1993 TLR p155

NYALALI CJ

`As I was attending the call of nature Tupa approached me from behind and hit me with a piece of an iron which was a tractor part. I fell down and he started kicking me with his feet and fists. I lost self-control and as I was having a D knife then and also due to drink, I took out the knife and stabbed him with it in the stomach and it cut from one side of it to another. He left and started to run. I rose and due to the state in which I was I also started to run . . .'

As to the relevant part of his extra-judicial statement to the Justice of Peace, it reads in Kiswahili: E

`. . . alikuja kunivamia na kuanza kunipiga kwa vile alikuwa ananishembulia na kunitupa ehini. Daada ya kunitupa shini, nikapata kasire ndipe niliohomoa kisu nikamchoma kwa vile slinisukuma nilimehoma tumbeni na kiunoni. Nilivyoang aweumia nilikwenda CCM kutoa ripoti . . .' F

The thrust of this evidence is provocation and not self-defence. This evidence is consistent with appellant's statement to PW4 whose relevant part of his testimony reads: G

`He said he had truly killed him by stabbing him twice with a knife in the back in the stomach and that intestines had come out and he was totally finished. He said he had come to me for safety as he did not want to be bothered by people. He said I should take him where he should be taken for killing deceased. He said he had stabbed H deceased because deceased had got drunk and had gone to make `fujo' at his (accused's) house.'

In the light of the evidence therefore, the defence of self-defence I

A appears not to be available to the appellant. As to the defence of provocation, the Trial Court rejected it mainly on the basis of the testimony of PW1. But as already pointed out, PW1's testimony is inadmissible for non-compliance with the relevant provisions of s 130 of the Law of Evidence Act. B There is no other evidence to discredit the appellant's story. We are of the view that in the light of the available evidence, the defence of provocation cannot safely be excluded. We are bound therefore to quash the conviction for murder and substitute therefore a conviction for the offence of manslaughter contrary to s 195 of the Penal Code. Taking into account the circumstances of this C case and the fact that the appellant has been in custody since 1989, we think that a sentence of ten years from the date of his conviction - that is - from 10 April 1992 will meet the justice of the case. Accordingly, we allow the appeal by quashing the conviction for murder and substituting instead a D conviction for manslaughter, contrary to s 195 of the Penal Code and sentencing the appellant to ten years imprisonment commencing from 10 April 1992.

F

[zRPz]ABDALLAH HAMED v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 156 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Makame JJA, Kisanga JJA and Omar JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 43 OF 1990
G 17 June, 1993
(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Magessa, PRM, Ext. Jur.)
Flynote
H Magistrates' Courts Act - Extension of Appellate jurisdiction to magistrates - Order investing magistrate with extended jurisdiction not specifying categories of cases the magistrate may entertain - Whether the order is proper.
-Headnote
I In a second appeal the learned advocate for the appellant challenged the jurisdiction of the Principal Resident Magistrate who had been vested
1993 TLR p157
with extended appellate jurisdiction. His main attack was that the order investing the appellate
A jurisdiction did not comply with s 45(1) of the Magistrate's Courts Act 1984, in that it was too general. Counsel argued that the order ought to have specified the categories of cases the magistrate vested with appellate jurisdiction could hear and determine.
Held: (i) The order clearly intended that the magistrate should exercise all appellate jurisdiction ordinarily exercisable by the High Court; B (ii) The Order, G.N. 121 of 1988, was not faulty.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
No cases referred to. C
M.R.M. Lamwai, for the appellant.
Kamba, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Makame, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court: D
This is a second appeal. The appellant Abdallah Hamed was sentenced by Kulolela, Senior District Magistrate, to be jailed for thirty years after he was found to have participated in a daylight robbery in the municipality of Morogoro. His co-accused, Kasimili Faustin Mogela, was similarly rewarded and E did not appeal. The present appellant did appeal, to the High Court, where Magessa, Principal Resident Magistrate, exercising Extended Jurisdiction, dismissed his appeal. Dr Lamwai, learned Advocate, represented the appellant in the appeal before us. Mr Kamba, learned State Attorney, F supported the Lower Court's decision.
Dr Lamwai did not have much room for argument, and we reckon he knew as much. This is a second appeal so there was hardly any scope for his intended effort in two of his three grounds of G appeal, touching on the burden and standard of proof. Both the Trial Court and the First

Appellate Court were satisfied that the appellant, at the material time a driver employed by the National Bank of Commerce at Morogoro, took part in the robbery by facilitating the flight of his co-accused, and other participants, from the scene of crime by driving them away in the National Bank of Commerce Land H Rover he was employed to drive. Dr Lamwai was left with only one ground - the first one, which sought to challenge Mr Magessa's jurisdiction to hear the first appeal. Dr Lamwai submitted that the Order which invested Mr Magessa with the appellate jurisdiction, ordinarily exercisable by the High Court, did not comply with s 45(1) of the Magistrate's Court Act. I

1993 TLR p158

MAKAME JA

A Section 45(1) of the said Act provides:

`The Minister may after consultation with the Chief Justice and with the Attorney-General, by order published in the Gazette -

(a) invest any resident magistrate, in relation to any category of cases specified in the order, with the appellate B jurisdiction ordinarily exercisable by the High Court.'

Now, the Order investing Mr Magessa with extended jurisdiction, GN 121 of 1988, was couched in the following terms:

1. This Order may be cited as the Magistrates' Courts (Extension of Appellate Jurisdiction) Order 1988.

C 2. Subject to s 46 of the Magistrates' Court Act 1984, the Magistrates specified in the Schedule to this Order, are hereby invested with the appellate jurisdiction ordinarily exercisable by the High Court.

SCHEDULE

1.

D 2.

. . .

8. I H Magesso . . . Principal Resident Magistrate Grade I

. . .

Dar es Salaam. D Z LUBUVA

E 6th April, 1988 Minister for Justice'

Dr Lamwai's complaint is that the order quoted above is bad for being too general. Learned Counsel submitted the category of cases Mr Magessa was empowered to hear appeals from should be F mentioned in so many words. We fail to appreciate the logic of this when the Order clearly intended that Mr Magessa should exercise all appellate jurisdiction ordinarily exercisable by the High Court. It would in the circumstances be not only unduly cumbersome but also obviously pointless to list out all the categories of cases. It would be different if it was intended that jurisdiction should be exercised by G Mr Magessa only in one category or only certain categories of cases. Then we would agree that such category or limited categories should have been specified, but as indicated, not otherwise.

H We respectfully agree with Mr Kamba, learned State Attorney that GN 121 of 1988 was not faulty in the circumstances. The appeal has not merit and accordingly we dismiss it.

1993 TLR p159

A

[zRPz]KUKUTIA OLE PUMPUN AND ANOTHER v ATTORNEY GENERAL AND ANOTHER 1993 TLR 159 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 32 OF 1992 B
23 July, 1993
(From the judgment and decree of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Munuo, J.) C
Flynote
Constitutional Law - Suits against the Government - Statutory provision requiring the Minister's consent to sue the Government - Whether constitutional - Section 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967. D
-Headnote
The appellants sought to sue the Government. They applied for the Minister's consent to sue the Government as required by s 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 but got no reply. They then E called upon the High Court to rule on the constitutionality of that provision of the law; it was null and void as it contravened the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania. The respondents did not wish to file a written statement of defence to the claim; instead they lodged with the Court a preliminary objection that the suit was incompetent for want of the Minister's consent to sue the Government. The learned Trial Judge ruled that section 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 F was not unconstitutional and dismissed the suit as incompetent. The appellants to the Court of Appeal.
Held: (i) Section 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 violates the basic human right guaranteed under arts 13(3) and 30(3) of the country's Constitution, of unimpeded access to the Court to have one's grievances heard and determined there; G

(ii) In considering any act which restricts fundamental rights of the individual, such as the right to free access to the Court of law in this case, the Court has to take into account and strike a balance between the interests of the individual and those of the society of which the H individual is part;

(iii) A law which seeks to limit or derogate from the basic right of the individual on grounds of public interest will not be declared unconstitutional if it satisfies two requirements:

(a) that it is not arbitrary; and

(b) that the limitation imposed by such law is not more than is reasonably necessary to I achieve the legitimate objective;

1993 TLR p160

A (iv) Section 6 of the Government Proceedings Act, 1967, as amended by section 6 of Act No. 40 of 1974 is unconstitutional because it violates the basic human right, guaranteed under arts 13(3) and 30(3) of the country's Constitution, of unimpeded access to the Court to have one's grievances heard and determined there;

(v) Section 6 of the said Act is not saved by art 30(2) of the Constitution because it does not B meet the two requirements;

(vi) In terms of art 64(5) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania s 6 of the Government Proceedings Act, 1967, as amended by Act No. 40 of 1974 is void, and is accordingly struck out for being unconstitutional.

Case Information

C Appeal allowed.

Cases referred to:

1. The Director of Public Prosecutions v. Daudi Pete [1993] TLR 22.
2. Peter Ng'omango v. Gerson M.K. Mwangwa and Attorney General, [1993] TLR 77.

D 3. Himid Mbaye v. The Brigade Commander [1984] TLR 294.

4. Shabani Khamis v. Samson Goa and Another, High Court of Zanzibar, Civil Case No. 18 of 1983.
5. Khalfan Abeid Hamad v. The Director of Civil Aviation, High Court of Zanzibar, Civil Case No. 20 of 1986.

E A. Mughwai, for the appellants.

Mrs. A. Sumari, for the respondents.

Editorial Note: Section 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 has since been repealed and replaced so as to conform with this judgment: Government Proceedings (Amendment) Act, 1994, F Act No. 30 of 1994.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

G The appellants in this case sought to sue the Government in the High Court to recover damages for trespass assault and conversion. The plaintiff alleges, among other things, that the necessary fiat or consent to sue the Government had been sought but was withheld. The requirement for consent H to sue the Government is imposed by s 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 as amended by Act 40 of 1974 (hereinafter to be referred to simply as s 6). Upon consent being withheld, therefore, the High Court was called upon by the appellants to rule on the constitutionality of s 6, and to hold that that provision was null and void as against the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania.

I The respondent Republic did not wish to file any written statement of defence to the claim; instead it lodged with the Court a preliminary objection that the suit was A incompetent for want of the Attorney-General's consent to sue the Government. The case was then adjourned, upon application by Counsel, for written submissions after which the Court (Mrs J Munuo) ruled that s 6 was not unconstitutional, and proceeded to dismiss the suit as being B incompetent. It is from that ruling that this appeal now arises. Arguing the appeal before us were Mr A Mughwai, learned Advocate, for the appellants, and Mrs A Sumari, learned State Attorney, for the respondent Republic.

In the course of hearing the appeal, and during the submission by Mrs Sumari, some doubt arose C whether consent to sue had, in fact, been sought and withheld as claimed by the appellant's Counsel. However, this doubt was resolved when Counsel for the appellants furnished the Court with documentary evidence that consent was in fact sought and refused. Upon receipt of this information D Mrs Sumari stated that hitherto she had been acting on wrong information sought from and supplied by the Attorney-General's Chambers, Dar es Salaam that the appellants had not applied for any consent to sue the Government. She added the because of such misinformation she did not E address the real issue which was before the High Court, namely, the constitutionality of the requirement of consent; instead she had concentrated on the contention that the suit was incompetent for want of consent. Asked what course she proposed to adopt, now that she was informed of the true position, she readily replied that the hearing of the appeal should continue, F adding that during the short adjournment, she had prepared herself sufficiently to respond to Mr Mughwai's submissions.

We continued with the matter even though we felt that the learned State Attorney needed more preparation in order to assist the Court in proceeding with the appeal which raised an important G constitutional issue.

The memorandum of appeal raised two grounds:

1. The Honourable Judge erred in law in not determining the real issue before the Court, ie

The interpretation and Constitutionality of the provisions of s 6 of the Government H Proceedings (Amendment) Act 10 of 1974 vis-à-vis the Constitution of Tanzania.

2. The Honourable Judge erred in failing to hold that s 6 referred to in para 1 herein is unconsitutional, obsolete and that where there is a dispute between a citizen and the Executive, the Executive cannot lawfully impede or obstruct access to High Court. I

1993 TLR p162

KISANGA JA

A On the first ground that the Trial Judge failed to consider and determine the issue before her, that is, the constitutionality of s 6, we think that there is merit in the complaint. Upon reading her brief ruling on the matter, covering just about two pages, it becomes apparent that the learned Judge either did not comprehend the issue before her or, if she did, she deliberately evaded it. Paragraph B 11 of the plaint states, inter alia, that:

`The plaintiffs will contend at the trial that it is not in law necessary to obtain the fiat as such requirement is null and C void as it seeks to contravene the basic structure of the Constitution of Tanzania and its specific provisions.'

The appellants specifically called upon the Court to consider the validity of s 6 as against arts 4(1), 108 and 13(6)(a) of the Constitution. These articles make provisions for separation of powers, confer D jurisdiction on the High Court to hear and determine complaints and provide for the basic right to a fair hearing. Counsel had submitted that s 6 contravened these provisions of the Constitution and accordingly invited the Court to declare that section null and void.

E In disposing of the issue very briefly the Trial Judge simply said:

`Considering that the Government Proceedings Act 40 of 1974 was properly enacted by Parliament as stipulated in article 97 of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania, it is sound law and does not infringe the provisions F of article 13 and/or article 108 of the Constitution.'

In our view this was, to say the least, a very superficial way of dealing with the issue which was before the Court. for, the fact that s 6 was duly enacted by a competent Legislature is no answer to G the question whether that section is valid or not as against the Constitution. It is one thing for a provision of the law to be properly or validly enacted by competent Legislature, but quite another for it to be constitutional; the two are not the same.

H The appellant did not allege or even suggest that s 6 was improperly enacted by the Legislation. Their claim was that s 6, although properly and duly enacted by the Legislature, offended some provisions of the Constitution, the supreme law of the land. It did so, the appellants continued, in a number of ways, primarily by denying them the opportunity of having their grievances heard and I determined by the High Court which was duly vested with such jurisdiction. Therefore what the appellants were asking for was a declaration under article 64(5) of the Constitution that A s 6 was null and void because it was inconsistent with the supreme law of the land. The learned Judge in merely stating that s 6 was sound law because it was properly enacted by a competent Legislature, did not address herself squarely to that issue, and to the extent of such omission she was clearly in error. B

1993 TLR p163

KISANGA JA

The second ground is really an amplification of the first one. It specifies the matters which the Trial Judge had failed to deal with and to decide upon. Mr Mughwai submitted that s 6 is null and void and should be struck down because it violates the guaranteed right, under the Constitution, of unimpeded C access to the Courts to have one's grievances heard and determined. In this respect he specifically referred to arts 13(3) and (6)(a) and 30(3) of the Constitution, the provisions of which we reproduce hereinbelow for case of reference. D

`13(3) The civil rights, obligations and interests of every person and of the society shall be protected and determined by competent courts of law and other state agencies established in that behalf by or under the law. E

(4) . . .

(5) . . .

(6) For the purpose of ensuring equality before the law, the state shall make provisions:

(a) that every person shall, when his rights and obligations are being determined, be entitled to a fair hearing by the court of law or other body concerned and be guaranteed the right of appeal or to another F legal remedy against the decisions of courts of law and other bodies which decide on his rights or interests founded on statutory provisions.

30(3) Where any person alleges that any provision of this part of this chapter or any law involving a basic right or duty G has been, is being or is likely to be contravened in relation to him in any part of the United Republic, he may, without prejudice to any other action or remedy lawfully available to him in respect of the same matter, institute proceedings for relief in the High Court.' H

Learned Counsel submitted that the combined effect of violating these provisions has far reaching consequences. It means that s 6 places an obstacle or obstruction to access to the Courts of Law. The section offends the principle of separation of powers by enabling the Government to exercise a judicial function of deciding upon its civil liability or the extent of such liability and hence to I

1993 TLR p164

KISANGA JA

A decide whether or not it should be sued at all. It enables the Government to be the judge in its own cause. It also seeks to limit Government liability at the expense of the rights of the individual. It offends against the principle which requires the Government to be responsible and accountable to its people. It goes against the principle of openness or transparency.

B Referring to article 30(2)(b) of the Constitution which permits derogation from human rights in certain circumstances, learned Counsel was of the view that s 6 is not saved because it is too general in its application.

C Replying to these submissions Mrs Sumari supported the decision of the High Court that s 6 was not unconstitutional. If we understood her correctly, the thrust of her argument was that although s 6 violates arts 13(3) and 30(3) of the Constitution, that by itself did not make the said section unconstitutional because the complainant of the violation has remedies open to him, such as orders D of mandamus and certiorari. In other words, if the Government withheld the consent, the appellants could always seek remedy for this by asking for an order of mandamus or certiorari compelling the Government to give consent or not to withhold consent.

E With due respect to the learned State Attorney, this amounts to evading the issue. It does not really grapple with and answer the question before us. The argument merely echoes the provisions of article 13(3) of the Constitution. That article says that on aggrieved person may seek redress in the High Court, and that this is without prejudice to any other remedy which may be available to him. F This means that the complainant of a violation of a basic human right is free to seek redress under article 30(3) although he could equally well have sought relief by way of mandamus or certiorari. Therefore if the appellants in this case chose to seek remedy, as they did, under article 30(3) they G were exercising their constitutional right as to which procedure to follow in seeking redress. There can be no justification whatsoever for saying that because s 6 presents an obstacle, the complainant of a violation of this basic human right should be restricted to other forms of remedy. A complainant H should be free to choose the best method legally open to him to prosecute his cause.

This is so under article 30(3) of the Constitution. Section 6 which denies this constitutional right cannot be said to be valid merely because the applicants could have remedy elsewhere; that would amount to going around the problem instead of striking at it directly. Our firm view is that the I offending section must be held and tested directly against the Constitution itself.

1993 TLR p165

KISANGA JA

Mrs Sumari also claimed that s 6 was justified on grounds of public interests. By this we understood A her to say that the section was saved by article 30(2) of the Constitution which permits derogation from basic human rights in certain circumstances. She contended that s 6 was necessary because it enabled the Government to regulate and control the suits which are brought against it. She was of B the decided view that if s 6 were to be removed, that would open flood gates of frivolous and vexatious litigation which would embarrass the Government and take up much of its time that could be better spent on matters connected with the development and welfare of the members of the society generally. In this regard the learned State Attorney urged that the Government and the C individual are not, and cannot be, equal because the Government has the responsibility of looking after the wider interests of the society at large.

On the material before us we have no difficulty in holding that s 6 violates the basic human right of D unimpeded access to the Court to have one's grievances heard and determined there. That right is guaranteed under arts 13(3) and 30(3) of the country's Constitution reproduced earlier in this judgment. Indeed the Republic's view was that the violation did not invalidate s 6 (the requirement of consent to sue) because where such consent was withheld, the victim was not without remedy, he E could apply for orders of mandamus or certiorari. However, we have rejected that argument for the reasons given earlier in this judgment.

The more difficult question is whether s 6 is saved by arts 30 or 31 of the Constitution which permit F derogation from basic human rights in certain circumstances. Article 31 which relates to measures taken during the period of emergency is obviously inapplicable here. And as far as article 30 is concerned, only sub-art (2) is relevant; it provides that: G

`30(2) It is hereby declared that no provision contained in this part of this Constitution, which stipulates the basic human rights, freedoms and duties, shall be construed as invalidating any existing law on prohibiting the enactment of any law or the doing of any lawful act under such law, making provision for - H

(a) ensuring that the rights and freedoms of others or the public interest are not prejudiced by the misuse of the individual rights and freedoms;

(b) ensuring the interests of defence, public safety, public order, public morality, public health, rural and urban development planning, the development planning, the development and utili- I

1993 TLR p166

KISANGA JA

A zation of mineral resources or the development of utilization of any other property in such manner as to promote the public benefits;

(c) ensuring the execution of the judgment or order of a Court given or made in any civil or criminal proceedings.

(d) the protection of the reputation, rights and freedoms of others or the private lives of persons involved in any Court proceedings, prohibiting the disclosure of confidential information, or the safeguarding of the dignity, B authority and independence of the courts;

(e) imposing restrictions, supervision and control over the establishment, management and operations of societies and private companies in the country; or

C (f) enabling any other thing to be done which promotes, enhances or protect the national interest generally.'

This Court had occasion to deal with a similar situation in the case of The Director of Public D Prosecutions v Daudi Pete (1) where it considered the validity of s 148(5)(e) of the Criminal Procedure Act denied bail to the accused in a criminal case in certain circumstances. In that case it was recognised that because of the co-existence between the basic rights of the individual and the collective rights of the society, it is common nowadays to find in practically every society limitations E to the basic rights of the individual. So that the real concern today is how the legal system harmonizes the two sets of rights. In trying to achieve this harmony, the view has been that in considering any act which restricts fundamental rights of the individual, such as the right of free access to the Court of law in this case, the Court has to take into account and strike a balance F between the interests of the individual and those of the society of which the individual is a component.

Thus consistent with that approach, the Court in Pete's case laid down that a law which seeks to G limit or derogate from the basic right of the individual on grounds of public interest will have special requirements; first, such a law must be lawful in the sense that it is not arbitrary. It should make adequate safeguards against arbitrary decisions, and provide effective controls against abuse by those in authority when using the law. Secondly, the limitation imposed by such law must not be H more than is reasonably necessary to achieve the legitimate object. This is what is also known as the principal of proportionality. The principle requires that such law must not be drafted too widely so as to met everyone including even the untargeted members of the society. If the law which infringes a basic right does not meet both requirements, such law is not saved by article 30(2) of the I Constitution, it is null and void. And any law that seeks to limit fundamental rights of the individual must be construed strictly to make sure that it conforms A with these requirements, otherwise the guaranteed rights under the Constitution may easily be rendered meaningless by the use of the derogative or clawback clauses of that very same Constitution.

We shall now apply the two tests to s 6 to see if it is saved by article 30(2) of the Constitution. B Section 6 provides that:

`6. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Act, no civil proceedings may be instituted against the Government without the previous consent in writing of the Minister.' C

The section carries a proviso which is not relevant to the facts of the present case.

It is most apparent that the law is arbitrary. It does not provide for any procedure for the exercise of the Minister's power to refuse to give consent to sue the Government. For instance, it does not D provide any time limit within which the Minister is to give his decision, which means that consent may be withheld for an unduly long time. The section makes no provisions for any safeguards against abuse of the powers conferred by it. There are no checks or controls whatsoever in the exercise of E that power, and the decision depends on the Minister's whims. And, to make it worse, there is no provision for appeal against the refusal by the Minister to give consent. Such law is certainly capable of being used wrongly to the detriment of the individual. F

Turning now to the requirement that the law must not be drafted too widely, it is obvious once again that s 6 does not pass that test either. The section applies to all and sundry including even those against whom it was never intended. If, as contended by Mrs Sumari, the object is to exclude or discourage the bringing of frivolous and vexations litigation against the Government, it is not shown G how that object is achieved without also limiting the right of persons who have genuine and legitimate claims against the Government.

Even if the limitation imposed by s 6 could be selective, the pertinent question to ask is whether there was really a compelling need for such limitation. In other words, in what way is the limitation justified H in public interest so as to bring it within the purview of article 30(2) of the Constitution? As noted before, Mrs Sumari's contention was that the lifting of the limitation will encourage vexatious suits against the Government such as to embarrass the Government and to take up much of its valu- I

A able time which could be better spent elsewhere. But, apparently anticipating Mrs Sumari, Mr Mughwai in his address earlier on, had argued that there was no such limitation imposed in relation to suits against local governments where the only requirement is a month's notice to sue, and yet the Courts have not been flooded with suits against local governments. When we asked Mrs Sumari, to B respond to that argument she was still at ease to do so.

On this same point Mr Mughwai had submitted that the law in Zanzibar did not impose such limitation, and yet it is not shown or claimed that the Courts in Zamzibar have flooded with frivolous C and vexatious litigation against the Government. In another dimension the learned Counsel charged that in this context s 6 was discriminatory and hence unconstitutional. He referred us to the decision of the High Court (Mwalusanya J) in the case of Peter Ng'omango v Gerson M K Mwangwa and Attorney-General (2) in which this same issue of Ministerial fiat or consent had been raised. There D the learned Judge cited three cases of the Zanzibar High Court in which no consent, but only a month's notice, was required to sue the Union Government. The three cases are: Himidi Mbayo v The Brigade Commander (3); Shabani Khamis v Samson Goa and Another (4) and Khalfan Aboid E Hamad v The Director of Civil Aviation (5). Mwalusanya J took restriction based on which Court, in the United Republic, one goes to seek remedy against the Government of the same United Republic. We entirely agree with the learned Judge that this is violative of arts 13(1) and (2) of the Constitution which provide that:

F `13 (1) All persons are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination, to equal opportunity before and protection of the law.

G (2) Subject to this Constitution, no legislative authority in the United Republic shall make any provision in any law that is discriminatory either of itself or in its effect.'

On a similar reasoning we reject Mrs Sumari's submission that because the Government is H responsible for the wider interests of the society, then it should not be placed on an equal footing with an ordinary person. We can find no justification for the distinction. We think that the equality before the law envisaged in article 13(1) above embraces not only ordinary persons but also the Government and its officials; all these should be subjected to the same legal rules.

I While advancing the argument of a compelling need for limitation, Mrs Sumari again claimed that the requirement of consent was necessary in order to give A Government the opportunity during which to study the proposed claims and, where warranted, to consider settlement out of Court. This, she said, spares the Government of the embarrassment of appearing in Court and saves its valuable time to serve the wider public. We could find no substance B in this argument. The Government can achieve all this within the normal procedures of bringing civil suits. Ordinarily before a person decides to sue the Government, there must be some prior communication between the person intending to sue the Government and the Government in which C the former will have indicated sufficiently the nature and grounds of his claim. Thus if the Government so wishes, it can assess the claim and, where warranted, consider settlement out of Court during such pre-suit communication. The requirement of consent to sue is really not necessary for the purpose of affording the Government time to assess the claim and consider settlement out of Court. On the other hand we agree with the learned Judge in Ng'omango's case D above that such restriction militates against the principles of good governance which call for accountability and openness or transparency on the part of Governments.

Therefore, unlike the learned Judge from whom this appeal arises, we find that s 6 of the E Government Proceedings Act 1967 as amended by s 6 of Act 40 of 1974 is unconstitutional for the reasons we have amply demonstrated above. The Republic has totally failed to show that the said section is saved by the provisions of the Constitution which allow for derogation from basic human F rights. In the circumstances we have no alternative but to hold, in terms of article 64(5) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania that s 6 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 as amended by Act 40 of 1974 is void. It is accordingly struck down for being unconstitutional. G

The appeal is allowed with costs, and the preliminary objection having failed, the suit is to proceed in accordance with the law.

A

[zRPz]SALUM MHANDO v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 170 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

B CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 15 OF 1993
28 July, 1993
C (From the judgment of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Bahati, J.)
Flynote
Appellate Jurisdiction Act - Second appeal - Whether it is proper for a second Appellate Court to evaluate the evidence afresh and come to its conclusions in matters of fact.
Evidence - Evaluation of - When a second Appellate Court may evaluate the evidence afresh and make its own D findings of fact.
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted of two counts of robbery with violence. The Trial Court sentenced him to fifteen years imprisonment on each count. On appeal by the appellant to the High Court the appeal E was dismissed and the sentence enhanced to thirty years imprisonment on each count. The sentences were to run concurrently. Aggrieved, the appellant further appealed to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania complaining that there was no evidence of his identification as a member of the gang of robbers. The Court of Appeal observed that the concurrent findings of fact made by the two courts below were not based on a correct appreciation of the evidence.
F Held: (i) If as in this case both courts completely misapprehend the substance, nature and quality of the evidence, resulting in an unfair conviction, this court must in the interests of justice intervene;
(ii) Where there are misdirections and non-directions on the evidence, a court of second G appeal is entitled to look at the relevant evidence and make its own findings of fact;
(iii) The identification of the appellant was not put outside the pail of doubt to make his conviction safe.
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
H Case referred to:
1. DPP v. Jaffari Mfaume Kawawa [1981] TLR 149.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mfalila, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:
I The appellant Salum Mhand was convicted of two counts of robbery with violence contrary to s 285 and s 286 of the Penal Code in Criminal Case No 1589/89 at A Kivukoni District Court in which he was jointly charged with two other persons. Upon his conviction, the appellant who was the first accused at the trial, was sentenced to fifteen years imprisonment on each count but the sentences were ordered to run concurrently. Against this conviction and sentence B the appellant unsuccessfully appealed to the High Court. The High Court (Bahati J) held that the appellant had been sufficiently identified by the complainants, the victims of the robbery but that since the appellant and his associates were armed at the time of committing the offence, they were liable to be sentenced to imprisonment for not less than thirty years. Accordingly the learned Judge set C aside the sentence of fifteen years on each count and substituted a sentence of thirty years imprisonment. We assume that the learned Judge passed the sentence of thirty years imprisonment on each count and that the sentences were to run concurrently. But at the same time we think the D judge should have invoked the court's revisional jurisdiction to rectify the sentences in respect of the third accused. From this decision, the appellant further appealed to this Court arguing at the hearing that he was not properly identified as being part of the gang which broke into the shops of the E complainants, and in his memorandum of appeal, he complained that as a juvenile he was exempted from the rigours of the Minimum Sentence Act and that therefore he should not have been sentenced to the minimum sentence prescribed by the Minimum Sentences Act.
1993 TLR p171
MFALILA JA

Before we deal with the appeal on merits, we wish to draw the attention of the Registrar of the High F Court to the unsatisfactory way in which some criminal records of appeal are being prepared. We would like to ask him to certify to us only truly correct records. The act of certifying as correct a record of appeal is not an automatic function. In the present case, the record contained a wrong G charge sheet which was withdrawn. The correct charge sheet with additional accused persons was not made part of the record, hence we had to resort to the original record to see whether the charges referred to in the evidence were the same as those on the new charge sheet and who were the H accused and their numbering. In future we may not take kindly to registrars who certify as correct incorrect records.

The main question before us as it was in the Trial Court and in the High Court was the identification of the appellant. The appellant contends that he was not a member of the gang which raided the two I shops on 27 September 1989. At the trial two witnesses gave

A evidence in support of the charge in Count 1. These are the complainant Sifuni Fadhili (PW1) and another occupant of the house Mikundiwe Zakaya (PW2). What was the substance and effect of the evidence of these two witnesses in support of the charge in Count 1. PW1 related how a group of B about twenty people broke into his shop and attacked the occupants with an assortment of weapons including a panga and iron bar. The witness was assaulted with a panga and another occupant with an iron bar before the assailants made away with a large quantity of articles from the shop. The C witness described what each of the three accused persons did and the articles he took with him. With regard to the appellant, the witness said that he knew him because he always went to his shop. All this is very well, but nowhere does this witness explain how he identified the appellant among the gang of twenty people in what could only have been a room without any light. The raid took place D between 1 am and 2 am. It was extremely important for this witness to explain how he identified the appellant in these circumstances. The other witness PW2 gave similar evidence describing what weapon each accused carried and whom he attacked. But like PW1 he did not explain how he identified the appellant in this darkness. This is how he explained the way he identified the accused. E He said:

`I identify both the accused persons were in the scene of a crime.' (sic)

F We think this hardly says anything regarding the identification of the appellant although later he states that he knew the appellant before the incident. When cross-examined by the appellant, the witness simply replied that he identified him because he knew him before. The question remains, how did he do this identification in darkness. Quite clearly then the charge in Count 1 was not proved G as the identification of the appellant to have been a member of the twenty strong gang was not established beyond reasonable doubt.

With regard to the charge in Count 2, the relevant witness was the complainant Tito Mbugi (PW4), H and another occupant in the room Mohamed Abdallah (PW6). PW4 described in his evidence how on 27 September 1989 at 1 am the shop was raided by a group of people wielding iron bars, axes and pangas. On entering the room, they shone their torches and threw a stone at him. He added that the gang was big and he could not identify the number. They left after robbing him of various shop I goods and cash. They then went to a neighbour's shop. He concluded his evidence by saying that that night he identified all the accused. The same question as in Count 1 can be asked, namely A how did he manage to identify the accused that night. The witness provided the answer, he said:

`After breaking the door, they lighted the torches, they threw stone on me, and got in the room and lighted the light.' B

So according to this witness, the bandits put on the light when they entered the room although they had torches and actually had them on. Is this a reasonable scenario that thieves could deliberately expose themselves to clear identification - by putting on the light in the room. We have strong C reservations on the truthfulness of this statement. These reservations are strengthened by the evidence of the other witness PW6 who stated:

`It was 2 am. They pass through at the backyard they just pushed the door and was down, when the bandit arrived D we waked up stated that nobody should be out "Sisi tumefuata kazi moia tu stakayefika aakiona". At the backyard there is light but succeed to make light off - they broke the torches light the whole house was dark. They broke the shop and don't know the property which had been taken.'

Although the passage could be improved grammatically, the general meaning is clear that the E bandits put off the light and plunged the whole house in darkness. We think this version makes sense, that the bandits armed with torches, plunged the house in darkness to make their operations easier by using their torches while at the same time making their identification difficult. In the light of this evidence, we think the learned Judge on first appeal was unduly optimistic when he stated: F

`The witnesses were quite positive about the identity of the appellant. Despite any contradictions there may be in their evidence, the evidence on the identification is very clear.

They knew the appellant before the day in question. G Although there was only torch light in the shop, it was in my view, enough to enable witnesses to identify the appellant who they knew very well.'

Like us the learned Judge also seems to have disbelieved or doubted PW4's assertion that the H bandits put on the light when they entered the building, hence his finding that there was only torch light in the room. But as the learned Judge would most certainly appreciate, torch light in a robbery at night, does not help the victim to identify the attackers, on the contrary it prevents him from I

A identifying them, while making it easier for the attackers to view the surroundings. It is quite obvious then that the appellant was arrested on suspicion because the complainant knew him to be virtually a `bhang' smoking vagabond.

B As it will be noticed, we have taken the unusual step in this appeal of interfering with concurrent findings of fact made by two courts below. On a second appeal to this Court, we are only supposed to deal with questions of law. But this approach rests on the premise that the findings of fact are based on a correct appreciation of the evidence. If as in this case both courts completely misapprehend the substance, nature and quality of the evidence, resulting in an unfair conviction, this C Court must in the interests of justice intervene. In the High Court the learned Judge approached the case globally forgetting that the appellant was charged with two counts which had to be considered separately. The consequences of this approach was that the learned Judge failed to analyse the D evidence touching on each count, this led him to make general statement which cannot be supported by the evidence led in support of each count. In a case in which a similar problem arose, DPP v Jaffari Mfaume Kawawa (1) this Court held as follows at 153:

E `The next important point for consideration and decision in this case is whether it is proper for this Court to evaluate the evidence afresh and come to its own conclusions in matters of fact. This is a second appeal brought under the provisions of s 5(7) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979. The appeal therefore lies to this Court only on a point or F points of law. Obviously this position applies only where there are no misdirections or non-directions on the evidence, a court of second appeal is entitled to look at the relevant evidence and make its own findings of fact.'

G We are therefore satisfied that the identification of the appellant was not put outside the pail of doubt to make his conviction safe. Accordingly we allow the appeal, quash the convictions on both counts and order that the appellant Salum Mhando be released from prison immediately unless he is H lawfully held on some other cause.

[zRPz]SAIDI KIBWANA AND GENERAL TYRE E.A. LTD v ROSE JUMBE 1993 TLR 175 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

(as administratrix of the Estate of Jumanne Jumbe)
CIVIL APPEAL NO. 6 OF 1993 B
30 July, 1993
(From the judgment and decree of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Munuo, J.) C
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Interest on general damages - Trial Judge awards interest on the principal sum at 5% per month from the date of filing the suit to the date of full settlement - Whether correct to award interest on D general damages from the date of filing the suit - Interest - Award of interest on general damages - Award of interest at 5% per month - Whether too high and out of proportion.
Civil Practice and Procedure - Abatement of suits - Actions in respect of torts - legal provisions saving certain E causes of action based on tort from abating on the death of either party.
-Headnote
The husband of the respondent filed a suit against the appellants claiming damages due to negligent F driving by the first appellant leading to an accident which caused serious injuries to the husband. The suit took inordinately long before it was finally determined by the High Court. The husband died while the suit was still pending. The widow, the respondent, applied for and was granted letters of administration after which she applied to be brought on the record as the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to continue the suit. The application was granted and the respondent was brought G on the record and she continued to prosecute the suit. The learned Trial Judge in the end found the appellants (defendants) guilty of negligence and awarded the respondent (plaintiff) Shs 600,000/= as general damages. In addition the Judge ordered the appellants to pay the respondent interest at the rate of 5% per month from the date of filing the suit to the date of final settlement. The appellants H appealed to the Court of Appeal challenging the manner the Judge awarded interest. The Court of Appeal considered the question of award of interest, and also digressed and considered a number of other issues including abatement of suits based on tort.
Held: (i) Interest on general damages is only due after the delivery of judgment because then the principal amount due is known; I
1993 TLR p176
A (ii) The rate of interest to be awarded during the period after the judgment is delivered is governed by the provisions of Order 20 Rule 21 of the Civil Procedure Code which is limited between the minimum of seven per cent per annum and the maximum of twelve per cent per annum;

(iii) The Trial Judge was wrong to grant interest on general damages from the date of filing the B suit;

(iv) The Trial Judge was wrong to award interest at the rate of 5% per month beyond the date of delivery of judgment; such rate in any case was too high and out of proportion;

(v) Obiter: the general rule is that all rights of action and all demands existing in favour of or C against a person at the time of his death survive to or against his representatives, except those rights which are tied up with the individuality of the deceased which are caught up in the maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona, i.e., a personal right of action dies with the person;

(iv) Obiter: as a general rule the maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona applies to actions D in respect of torts so that on the death of either party to such action the right to sue will be extinguished;

(vii) Obiter: the provisions of section 9 of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance, Cap. 360, save causes of action based on tort from abating on the death of either party unless they are for defamation, seduction or inducing spouses to E separate;

(viii) The right to sue in this suit survived the death of the plaintiff and the legal representative was properly brought on the record.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

F Cases referred to:

1. Scott v. London and St. Katherine Docks Co. [1865] 3 H & C 596.
2. Barkway v. South Wales Transport Co. Ltd. [1950] 1 All ER 392.
3. Admiralty Commissioners v. SS Susquehanna [1926] AC 655.
4. Mohamed s/o Mohamed v. Athman Shamte [1960] EA 1062.

G 5. J.S. Joban Putra v. G.M. Jaffer, High Court Civil Revision No. 2/60 (unreported).

6. Hooda v. G.M. Gulamali, High Court Civil Revision No. 4/60 (unreported).
7. Prem Lata v. Peter Musa Mbuju [1965] EA 592.
8. National Bank of Commerce v. Parma Shoe Company [1988] TLR 224.

H Makange, for the respondent.

Maro, for the appellants.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mfalila, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

I The respondent in this appeal is shown as Rose Jumbe in her capacity as administrator of the Estate of one Jumanne Jumbe. A brief explanation is therefore called for. A Jumanne Y Jumbe was the husband of Rose Jumbe and at all material times he was employed as Export Officer by the second appellant, General Tyre East Africa Ltd headquartered at Arusha. According to the claim, on or about 21 October 1978, the said Jumanne Jumbe while in the course of B his employment with the second appellant, was travelling in the second appellant's motor vehicle driven by the first appellant, when the said motor vehicle was involved in an accident and caused serious injuries to the said Jumanne Jumbe. After his recovery, Jumanne Jumbe filed a claim in tort C against the second appellant as employer and the first appellant as driver of the said motor vehicle and employee of the second appellant. He claimed general damages amounting to Shs 600,000/= against the first appellant for his negligent driving and against the second appellant as being vicariously liable for the negligence of the first appellant, its employee. The suit took inordinately long D before it was finally determined by the High Court, hence unfortunately Jumanne Jumbe the plaintiff in Arusha High Court Civil Case No 103 of 1983 died in 1988 while it was still pending. At this stage, the widow Rose Jumbe applied for and was granted letters of administration to administer the estate E of her late husband. After getting letters of administration, she applied to be brought on the record as the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to continue the suit. The application was granted on 13 December 1989, and it was ordered that she be brought on the record and henceforth the suit F was prosecuted by her in that capacity and it is in that capacity that she appeared before us as the respondent. Having traced the history of how Rose Jumbe came to be on the record of this appeal, the next question is whether her being brought on record was proper in law. The learned Judge who granted the application and everyone else appear to have assumed the automatic nature of the G position.

1993 TLR p177

MFALILA JA

The actual position is neither automatic nor simple. The question is whether on the death of the original plaintiff Jumanne Jumbe, the suit abated. The governing legal provision is Order 22 Rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966 which provides as follows: H

`The death of a plaintiff or defendant shall not cause the suit to abate if the right to sue survives.' (The emphasis is ours.)

When therefore Mrs Rose Jumbe applied to be brought on the record to continue the suit as personal representative of the de- I

1993 TLR p178

MFALILA JA

A ceased, the Court should have asked itself whether the plaintiff's right to sue the appellants survived his death. In this connection it was incumbent upon the respondent who was claiming that the deceased plaintiff's right to sue had survived to her, to show either that she was entitled to assert the right to the same relief claimed by the deceased plaintiff or that there are some statutory B provisions entitling her to do so.

The general rule is that all rights of action and all demands existing in favour of or against a person at the time of his death survive to and against his representatives, except those rights which are tied up C with the individuality of the deceased, these are caught up in the maxim - actio personalis moritur cum persona, ie a personal right of action dies with the person. As a general rule this maxim applies to actions in respect of torts so that on the death of either party to such action the right to sue will be D extinguished. Hence in the present case since the claim by the deceased plaintiff was based on tort, this right to sue did not survive his death. In the circumstances, the respondent's application to be brought on record as the deceased's legal representative, should not have been granted in the E automatic manner in which it was. The only salvation left to the respondent was whether there are statutory provisions to override the common law position. In the Indian Civil Procedure Code, the position is saved by the provisions in the Indian Succession Act 1925 and the Probate and F Administration Act. However our own Probate and Administration Ordinance cap 445 would not be of any assistance to the respondent because the nearest provision in s 40 does not specifically provide for the survival of causes of action. We have laboured to save this suit because given the gross mishandling that it has suffered and the unnecessary delays to which it was subjected mostly due to G the plaintiff's own counsel, we thought it would be most unfortunate and tragic for the unfortunate widow if the suit were to fail on the basis that the right to sue did not survive the death of the plaintiff. The Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance cap 360 came readily to H our assistance. Section 9 of this Ordinance provides as follows:

`9(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, on the death of any person after the commencement of this Ordinance, all causes of action subsisting against or vested in him shall survive against, or as the case may be for the benefit I of his estate:

Provided that this subsection shall not apply to causes of action for defamation or seduction or for inducing one A spouse to leave or remain apart from the other or to claims for damages on the ground of adultery.

(2) not applicable

(3) no proceedings shall be maintainable in respect of a cause of action in tort which by virtue of this section B have survived against the estate of a deceased person unless either -

(a) proceedings against him in respect of that cause of action were pending at the date of his death; or

(b) proceedings are taken in respect therefor not later than six months after his executor or administrator took out representation.' C

This section specifically saves causes of action based on tort from abating on the death of either party unless they are for defamation, seduction or inducing spouses to separate, which this one is D not any of these. Therefore the right to sue in this suit survived the death of the plaintiff and the legal representative was properly brought on the record.

Having firmly established the respondent's legal position, we now turn to the suit itself. In the formal amended plaint which was about the fourth version, the plaintiff alleged that on or about 21 October E 1978, while in the course of their employment, the first defendant and the plaintiff were travelling in the second defendant's motor vehicle, the first defendant being the driver, attempted to overtake motor vehicle registration No TZ 34121, Isuzu and in the process crashed into the Isuzu whereby the F plaintiff sustained injuries leading to permanent disabilities. The plaintiff went on to assert that this accident was a result of the negligence of the first defendant as employee and/or authorised driver of the second defendant. He particularised the first defendant's negligence as follows: G

(a) attempting to overtake the Isuzu vehicle while it was not possible and in the process crashed into the same;

(b) while overtaking, the first defendant went completely off course as the other vehicle's driver tried to swerve to the right; H

(c) that due to the above mentioned negligence the plaintiff suffered injuries and permanent disabilities.

The injuries suffered by the plaintiff were also particularised as follows: I

A (a) Injuries to the spine from the mid-thoracic spine resulting in complete paraplegia.

(b) Multiple bodily bruises.

(c) Nervous shock.

B By reasons thereof the plaintiff claimed general damages amounting to Shs 600,000/=, interest on the decretal amount at 9% per month from the date of suit till date of full and final payment and costs of the suit.

C At the conclusion of the trial in the High Court, the learned Judge found on the evidence before her that at the time of the alleged accident, the plaintiff was in the course of his employment with the second defendant, that the accident was caused by the negligence of the first defendant and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled to the damages as claimed in the plaint. Accordingly, she awarded D the plaintiff the sum of Shs 600,000/= as general damages, but reduced the interest claimed from 9% to 5% per month from the date of filing the suit to the date of full settlement and costs of the suit. The appellants then lodged this appeal but only against the rate of interest awarded. They were apparently satisfied with the Judge finding on their liability and have in fact already paid to the respondent the principal sum adjudged. In their memorandum of appeal which contained two E grounds, the appellants complained:

`1. That the learned Trial Judge erred in law in awarding interest on the decretal amount at the rate of 5% per F month beyond the date of delivery of judgment.

(b) That the learned Trial Judge erred in law and fact in awarding interest on the principal sum at the rate of 5% per month, which rate is clearly excessive and out of proportion.'

G As indicated, this appeal is not concerned with the liability of the appellants in negligence because there was no appeal against the Judge's finding on this point. In this appeal we are only concerned with the rate of interest which was awarded. However, having gone through the record of trial and noted some shortcomings, we have decided to deal with the question of the absence or presence of H negligence on the part of the first appellant and the second applicant's vicarious liability so that our observations can act as a guide in future cases. It was for the same reason that we dealt with the point whether the plaintiff's right to sue survived his death.

I In our view, the most important question was whether negligence on the part of the first appellant was established. After establishing negligence on the part of the first A appellant, the respondent had to show that at the time of the accident, the first appellant was acting in the course of his employment as employee of the second appellant. What was the evidence in this regard? In her evidence in chief the respondent said nothing regarding the first appellant's alleged B negligence, this is not surprising because she admitted that she does not know much about the accident as she did not witness it. But in cross-examination, she acted that although she was not present when the accident happened, the deceased had told her that the accident occurred when the first appellant was overtaking an Isuzu truck TZ 34121 in the course of which the first appellant's C vehicle hit the Isuzu truck. The next question is what were the circumstances in which the first appellant's vehicle hit the lorry? Two explanations were offered; one by the first appellant and the other by the respondent. Of course the respondent not having been at the scene could only hazard a guess. She said that since the first appellant knocked the lorry as he was overtaking it causing his D own vehicle to overturn, this circumstance, she said, appears to suggest that the overtaking was done recklessly without due attention. And, in her written submissions at the end of the trial, the respondent submitted that the first appellant's negligence was to be found in the speed at which he E was driving. In her submission, the first appellant's failure to stop or otherwise manage the vehicle at the time of the accident, is evidence of high speed and therefore reckless driving.

On the other hand the first appellant explained that the accident happened when he started F overtaking an Isuzu lorry after indicating to the lorry driver his intention to do so. As he came abreast with the lorry, it swerved onto his path knocking his vehicle and causing it to overturn. He added that G the lorry swerved to his side because its driver was trying to avoid a cyclist. His tyre also burst in the process. In the circumstances the appellants submitted that there was no thread of evidence adduced by the respondent before the Court to prove that the accident which resulted in the alleged injuries was due to the negligence of the first appellant. They added that in the Criminal Court the first H appellant was acquitted of the charge of reckless driving.

In reply, the respondent stated that since her claim was not founded on the negligence by the first appellant but rather on a claim based on injuries sustained in the course of employment, the first I appellant's negligence was immaterial. The Trial Judge did not

A comment on this strange submission, but on our part we are satisfied that it was misconceived both in fact and law. It was misconceived in fact because the respondent specifically pleaded the first appellant's negligence in para 6 and particularised the alleged negligence in the same paragraph in B three sub-paragraphs. It was misconceived in law because the vicarious liability of an employer does not depend on his relationship with the victim of the accident, but with the tort-feaser. It was therefore extremely important and material to prove the first appellant's negligence.

C In her judgment the Trial Judge had the following to say on the appellant's liability in negligence:

`With regard to issue 2 (ie whether the accident was caused by the negligence of the first appellant) there is the evidence of the first defendant who was driving the accident vehicle at the material time. He stated that he flashed to D an Isuzu lorry ahead of him that he was overtaking the said lorry but the lorry driver would not give way thereby causing some tyres of the Range Rover ARG 134 to leave the tarmac road resulting in the said Range Rover overturning. It is the considered view of the Court that if the lorry driver would not give way to allow the first defendant to pass safely, the first defendant was duty bound to slow down and drive behind the Isuzu lorry until it was safe to E overtake it. The first defendant would have done so if he were driving with due care and attention and not at an excessive speed. The circumstance of the Range Rover the first defendant was driving getting off the tarmac and overturning indicate that the first defendant was driving at such excessive speed or with such recklessness that he F failed to control the said Range Rover thereby causing it to overturn. Even if the first defendant were not negligent in his driving, the plaintiff would still be entitled to damages for personal injuries sustained in the material accident on the concept of res ipsa loquitor (sic) and furthermore because the plaintiff was within the scope of duties G assigned to him by his employer the General Tyre (EA) Limited when the motor accident occurred.'

From the above passage of the Trial Court judgment, we have been able to extract four reasons on H which the learned Judge based her finding that the first defendant was negligent thereby entitling the plaintiff to damages. These are:

(1) that the first defendant was driving at an excessive and reckless speed.

I (2) that he overtook a vehicle when it was not safe to do so as the vehicle in front of him would not give him way.

(3) on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. A

(4) that the plaintiff was at the time of the accident acting within the scope of his employment.

Each of these reasons prompted some question in our minds. With regard to the first reason, was B there any evidence led to support it? Apart from the fact that there is no evidence led to support the first reason, it was not part of the pleadings, in other words excessive and reckless speed was not among the particularised acts of negligence pleaded in para 6 of the plaint. The Trial Judge should not therefore have imported it. The second reason is well founded because it came from the first C appellant's own mouth. He said, `I had flashed to the Isuzu lorry that I was overtaking but the said lorry driver did not give me way so that the accident occurred. . . .' It is clear from this that the first defendant was forcing his way to overtake the lorry while fully aware that the lorry driver was not ready to give him way as apparently there was a cyclist in front. Although speed was not pleaded in D the particulars of negligence, and this is just one of the numerous weaknesses in the conduct of the respondent's case, the first appellant must have been travelling at a high speed while forcing his way to overtake the lorry. The act of forcing his way to overtake the lorry even without the high speed E constituted negligent driving. Since the accident involving the Range

Rover driven by the first appellant and the Isuzu lorry was thus obviously due to the negligent and careless driving of the first appellant, the question of applying the maxim res ipsa loquitur did not F arise as the Trial Judge indicated as being another reason establishing the first appellant's negligence. We intend therefore to dwell at length on this maxim and clarify its application. The learned Judge stated: `even if the defendant was not negligent in his driving, the plaintiff would still be entitled to damages for personal injuries sustained in the material accident on the concept of res ipso G loquitor' (sic). This statement was a contradiction in terms arising out of the confusion of the concept in this maxim and how and in what circumstances it should be applied. If there is no negligence, the maxim simply would not arise. The circumstances which give rise to the application of the maxim, constitute prima facie evidence of negligence against the defendant. We think we H cannot better the explanation of this maxim given by Professor Winfield in his book on Torts 13th ed at 125:

`In order to discharge the burden of proof placed upon him, it is usually necessary for the plaintiff to prove specific I acts or omissions

A on the part of the defendant which will qualify as negligent conduct. Sometimes, however the circumstances are such that the Court will be prepared to draw an inference of negligence against the defendant without hearing detailed evidence of what he did or did not do. Thus for example the presence of an unlighted vehicle on the road at B night will, if there is no other lighting, be regarded prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the driver. It is important to appreciate however that this means no more than that in the absence of an explanation from the defendant, the plaintiff has discharged his burden of proof. The inference of negligence is by no means irresistible and the nature of the evidence required from the defendant in rebuttal will depend in each case on the standard of C care called for in the circumstances.

The position has, however, been complicated and obscured by the use in many cases of the maxim res ipsa loquitur. As Morris LJ has said, the maxim `possesses no magic qualities, nor has it any added virtue, other than D that of brevity, merely because it is expressed in Latin. When used on behalf of a plaintiff it is generally a short way of saying: `I submit that the facts and circumstances which I have proved establish a prima facie case against the defendant.' There are certain happenings that do not normally occur in the absence of negligence, and upon proof of these a court will probably hold that there is a case to answer. In other words the maxim does no more than express E in three words what has just been said.'

From this passage we discern one condition before this maxim can be applied to a particular F situation. That is that the mere fact of the accident having happened should tell its own story and raise the inference of negligence so as to establish a prima facie case against the defendant. The story should be clear and indicate only a prima facie case of negligence against the defendant. This concept is illustrated by the following two cases. In Scott v London and St Katherine Docks Co (1) six bags of sugar fell on the plaintiff whilst lawfully passing a doorway of defendant's warehouse. G Defendants called no evidence and Erle CJ stated:

`There must be sufficient evidence of negligence. But where the thing is shown to be under the management of the H defendant or his servants, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendants that the accident arose from want of care.'

On this principle, the Chief Justice found that sufficient evidence of negligence existed in the case I before him. From the above passage three conditions for the application of the maxim can be extracted. These are: A

1993 TLR p185

MFALILA JA

(1) That the thing causing the damage be under the control of the defendant(s) or his servant(s).

(2) That the accident must be such as would not in the ordinary course of things have B happened without negligence.

(3) Absence of any explanation, by the defendant, in other words there must be no evidence of the actual cause of the accident. This is because if the facts are sufficiently known the question ceases to be whether they speak for themselves, the only question being whether on the facts as established negligence is to be inferred or not. C

The case going the other way is Barkway v South Wales Transport Co Ltd (2). In this case B was travelling as a passenger in the defendant's omnibus and was killed when it veered across the road D and fell over an embankment. A great deal of evidence was given by the defendants and it was established that the cause of the accident was a defect in one of the tyres which could have been discovered beforehand if the defendants had required their drivers to report occurrences which could result in what was described as `impact fractures'. The House of Lords held that as the cause of the E accident was known, res ipsa loquitur did not apply, but that on the facts the negligence of the defendants was established.

Like in the Barkway case (2), the cause of the accident in the present case is known ie the first appellant attempting to forcibly overtake a lorry when it was obviously not safe to do so. The maxim F res ipsa loquitur was therefore clearly not applicable.

The fourth and last reason used to establish the second defendant's liability was that the plaintiff was at the time of the accident acting within the scope of his employment. With respect, this also G confused issues. The vicarious liability of an employer in tort as we have already stated, is not governed by the relationship between the employer and the victim of the tort of negligence. Rather his liability is based on his relationship with the tort-feaser who must have at the time of the accident been acting within the scope of his employment. The relationship of the plaintiff to the second H defendant would have been relevant only if he had based his claim on the Workmen's Compensation Ordinance. On the facts of this case, there is no doubt that the first defendant or the present first appellant was at the time of the accident acting within the scope of his employment with the second appellant. In the circumstances the I

1993 TLR p186

MFALILA JA

A vicarious liability of the second appellant was thus firmly established.

The other point which we want to deal with again purely for reasons of future guidance is the question of damages which were claimed and awarded in this case. We say for future guidance B because the question is not before us. We have felt compelled to make these observations because we strongly feel that the respondent in this appeal as was her plaintiff husband, did not get proper advice as regards their claim for damages, and at the end of the trial the Court did not face and C resolve this problem properly to the plaintiff's fullest advantage. In all the four plaints, only general damages amounting to Shs 600,00/= were claimed. We are at a loss to understand why Counsel on behalf of the plaintiff limited himself to this head of claim. We think this was very unfortunate. In an accident of such magnitude which resulted in such serious incapacitating injuries to the plaintiff, the D following reliefs in addition to the general damages should have been specifically claimed.

(a) damages for loss of future earnings

(b) damages for pain and suffering

E (c) damages for loss of expectation of life.

This we think could have done justice to the plaintiff or his estate. But as it turned out only a meagre Shs 600,000/= was claimed as general damages. The Trial Court automatically awarded this figure F acting as if its hands were tied to the figure asked for. The fact of the matter is that the Court was not tied to the figure of Shs 600,000/= which in any case should not have been pleaded. A plaintiff should only ask for general damages and leave the quantification to the Court. The Court determines how much damages are due be it in contract or tort, which so far as money can compensate, will G give the injured party reparation for the wrongful act and for all the natural and direct consequences of the wrongful act. As Lord Dunedin stated in the case of Admiralty Commissioners v SS Susquehanna (3):

H `If the damage be general, then it must be averred that such damage has been suffered, but the quantification of such damage is a jury question.' (read Court).

I Hence the fact that in the present case the plaintiff mentioned a specific figure did not take away the function of the Court to determine and quantify the damage suffered. In the circumstances of this case where only one head of A claim was made, the Trial Court would have been perfectly entitled to ignore the figure claimed and award a much higher figure. During the hearing of the appeal, Mr Makange, Counsel for the respondent, invited us to assess afresh the general damages because according to him, this Court B is not tied to the amount claimed or that awarded by the High Court. This Court, he said, can award damages as it thinks fit. We agree with Mr Makange that we are not tied to the amount claimed or that awarded by the High Court, but we have to be moved to exercise this jurisdiction. We cannot do it in the absence of an appeal and since in this case there was no appeal against the C amount of general damages awarded, we cannot take up the matter on our own with a view to interfering or changing what was claimed or awarded.

Having digressed for so long in the hope that our digression will be of assistance in future cases, we D now turn to the appeal before us regarding the rate of interest which was awarded by the Trial Court. As indicated earlier on in this judgment, the Trial Judge awarded interest on the principal sum of 5% per month from the date of filing the suit to the date of full settlement. In their memorandum of E appeal, the appellants stated that the Trial Judge erred in law in awarding interest on the decretal amount at the rate of 5% per month beyond the date of delivery of judgment and that in any case awarding interest at the rate of 5% per month was clearly excessive and out of proportion. At the hearing of the appeal, Mr Maro, learned Counsel who appeared for the appellants, submitted that the F power of the Trial Court to award interest is provided in s 29 of the Civil Procedure Code and that interest on general damages cannot be awarded from the date of filing the suit but from the date of judgment. Interest from the date of filing the suit is only awarded on special damages. He added that G since general damages are not known until they are assessed by the Court, they are not owed until they are pronounced hence interest on them cannot be backdated. In this case, he submitted, where the award was only for general damages, the Trial Court could only award interest from the date of judgment and this at the Court rate only. H

On the second ground of appeal, Mr Maro submitted that the rate awarded of 5% per month was too high and that in any event the rate applicable after judgment is between 7% and 12% per annum. The rate awarded at 5% per month is equivalent to 60% per annum which is clearly exorbitant. I

In reply Mr Makange defined the rate of interest awarded saying

1993 TLR p188

MFALILA JA

A that in awarding interest at this rate, the Trial Judge took into consideration the heavy responsibilities which have fallen on the respondent after the death of her husband and also the devaluation of the shilling. In the circumstances, he said, the interest rate at 5% per month is not B excessive to warrant intervention by this Court. In any case, he added, this was not the first time that a Court has awarded interest at the monthly rate.

As Mr Maro rightly pointed out, the statutory power to award interest on judgment debts is contained C in s 29 and O 20 r 21 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966. Section 29 provides as follows:

`Section 29 - The Chief Justice may make rules prescribing the rate of interest which shall be carried by judgment debts and, without prejudice to the power of the Court to order interest to be paid up to the date of judgment at such rates as it may deem reasonable, every judgment debt shall carry interest at the rate prescribed from the date of the D delivery of the judgment until the same shall be satisfied.'

Order 20 r 21 provides as follows:

`The rate of interest on every judgment debt from the date of delivery of the judgment until satisfaction shall be seven E per centum per annum or such other rate, not exceeding twelve per centum per annum as the parties may expressly agree in writing before or after the delivery of the judgment or as may be adjudged by consent.'

F The rate of interest prescribed under powers conferred on the Chief Justice by s 29 vide GN No 410/64 are the same as those prescribed under O 20 r 21 namely between the minimum of 7% and the maximum of 12% per annum from the date of the delivery of judgment until satisfaction. The rate G of interest to be awarded for the period prior to the delivery of judgment is set at the discretion of the Court. The rate which it considers reasonable. There are thus two divisions of interest under Tanzania Law as opposed to three under s 34 of the Indian Civil Procedure Code which ceased to apply in Tanzania in 1966. These two divisions correspond to the period for which interest is H awarded. The first period covers the whole of that period up to the delivery of judgment. The second period is the period from the delivery of judgment to final satisfaction. The rate to be awarded for the first period is entirely at the discretion of the Court, whereas the rate to be awarded for the second I period is also at the discretion of the Court but within set limits ie between 7% and 12% per annum. Although for the purposes of fixing interest rates there are only two periods, the first period can be subdivided in two: A namely the period prior to the institution of the suit and the period between the filing of the suit till judgment. In the present case the learned Trial Judge awarded interest at the uniform rate of 5% per month from the date of filing the suit to the date of full and final payment. The Judge therefore B consolidated two distinct periods, the one before and after judgment. Could the Judge properly do this? This is the basis of the two complaints in the memorandum of appeal. The two periods as we have already indicated are governed by different methods of fixing the rates of interest. One in which C the Court has complete discretion, and the other where the Court's discretion is bound within a limited area. We do not think in the circumstances that the two periods could be consolidated and treated as one for the purpose of fixing interest rates. In Mohamed s/o Mohamed v Athman Shamte (4) the appellant obtained judgment against the respondent for Shs 1,000/= with interest therein D amounting to Shs 1,190/= to the date of filing proceedings and further interest on the principal sum at the rate of 6% per annum from the date of filing proceedings to the date of final payment. The plaintiff was not satisfied with the rate of interest awarded between the date of filing the suit and the date of judgment. He appealed to the High Court in which he complained among other things that the learned E resident magistrate erred in not allowing the rate of interest as agreed between the parties from the date of filing until judgment. At the hearing, Counsel for the appellant submitted that as the rate of interest under the loan agreement was 84% per annum, the appellant should be allowed interest at F this rate also for the period between the date of filing of the suit to the date of judgment the High Court held Mosdell J:

1993 TLR p189

MFALILA JA

`Quite apart from legislative provisions on the subject, it is clear that this Court has an inherent power to reopen a G harsh and unconscionable bargain between two parties and in particular in relation to the rate of interest agreed to be paid on a loan. . . .

The rate prescribed from the date of delivery of judgment is 6% as laid down in the relevant Rules. But the interest H rate between the date of the filing of the suit and the date of judgment is left to the discretion of the Court. In the instant case the Resident Magistrate reached the conclusion that although a contractual rate of interest might be deemed reasonable by the Court, it was not bound to award such a rate of interest if it considered it harsh and I unconscionable. . . .

1993 TLR p190

MFALILA JA

A The discretion of the Court is not displaced by an agreement to pay a certain rate of interest. The Court may or may not award the contractual rate of interest between the date of the institution of the suit and judgment in the exercise of its discretion. Whether it does so or not depends upon whether or not such rate is reasonable.'

B Although the Athman Shamte case as well as J S Joban Putra v G M Jaffer (5) and Hooda v G M Gulamali (6) were concerned with contractual rates of interest, unlike the present case where the principal judgment debt is in the nature of general damages in tort, nevertheless they underline the C principle governing the award of rates of interest for different periods and the discretionary nature of the award for the period prior to the delivery of judgment. In the two revision cases, a rate of interest at 21/2% per month was awarded but this as indicted was in contract and for periods in which the D Court had discretion as to what rate to award ie the period before judgment.

The case which is almost on all fours with the present case and therefore directly relevant is Prem E Lata v Peter Musa Mbuju (7) which was an appeal from the High Court of Kenya. In that case the appellant in a suit for damages for personal injuries was awarded Shs 24,000/= as general damages and Shs 1,742/80 as special damages but the Trial Judge refused an application to award interest on F these two sums from the date of filing suit until judgment. The Court held that in personal injuries cases, interest on general damages should not be awarded for the period between the date of filing suit and judgment but interest should normally be awarded on special damages if the amount claimed has been actually expended or incurred at the date of filing suit. The Court (Law JA) stated at 593 (C-H):

G `The award of interest on a decree for the payment of money for the period from the date of the suit to the date of the decree is a matter entirely within the Court's discretion, by s 26 (equivalent to our s 29 supra) of the Civil Procedure Act. Such a discretion must of course be judicially exercised, and where as in this case no reasons are given for the H exercise of a judicial discretion in a particular manner, it will be assumed that the discretion has been correctly exercised, unless the contrary be shown. (Toprani v Patel [1958] EA 346.) In an attempt to satisfy us that the normal practice is to award interest on the amount of a money judgment from the date of filing suit, Counsel for the appellants referred us to Eastern Radio Service v R J Patel 1962 EA 818 and Y F Gulan Hussein v French I Somaliland Shipping Co Ltd 1993 TLR p191

MFALILA JA

[1959] EA 25. In both these cases the successful party was deprived of the use of goods or money by reason of a A wrongful act on the part of the defendant, and in such a case it is clearly right that the party who has been deprived of the use of goods or money to which he is entitled should be compensated for such deprivation by the award of interest. But suits for damages for personal injuries are in a different category. It cannot be said that, at the date of B filing suit, the plaintiff is entitled to any particular amount. This depends on the decision of a number of factors, including liability contributory negligence, and the assessment of damages which may include as in this case, a considerable element in respect of future disability. In these circumstances, we do not consider that the Chief Justice wrongly exercised his discretion in refusing to award interest from the date of filing suit in respect of the C general damages, as the infant plaintiff cannot have been deprived of the money represented by these damages from any particular date before judgment. Counsel for the respondent does not however, oppose an order for the payment of interest on the special damages awarded to the next friend as these represent out of pocket expenses actually paid or incurred at the date of filing suit. We agree.' D

In the present case where no special damages were pleaded and awarded, the Trial Judge overlooked every principle enunciated in the Prem Lata case quoted above as well the provisions of E O 20 r 21 of the Civil Procedure Code when she awarded interest at the rate of 5% per month from the date of filing the suit to the date of satisfaction of the decree. Since the award was only for general damages, no interest could be awarded for the period prior to the delivery of judgment F because before delivery of the judgment which awarded general damages, the plaintiff was not entitled to any particular amount which could attract interest. Interest on general damages is only due after the delivery of judgment because then the principal amount due is known. The Court has a G discretion to award interest for the period before the delivery of judgment only on special damages actually expended or incurred, but even this at such rate as the Court thinks reasonable. This discretion does not extend to the period after the delivery of judgment. The rate of interest to be awarded during the period after the judgment is delivered is governed by the provisions of O 20 r 21 H of the Civil Procedure Code which is limited between the minimum of seven per centum per annum and the maximum of twelve per centum per annum. The Trial Judge awarded a rate of interest at 60% per annum. Even for the period prior to the delivery of judgment for which the Court has unlimited discretion subject to reasonableness, the award of interest at that rate cannot be any description or yardstick be re- I

1993 TLR p192

MFALILA JA

A garded as reasonable. It is twice the normal bank rate. Even if we were to agree with Mr Makange that in fixing the interest at this rate, the Trial Judge took into account the responsibilities which fell on the respondent upon the death of her husband as well as the devaluation of the shilling, this rate B would still appear unreasonable. But these two considerations have one main objection, that they are irrelevant when considering the rate of interest to be awarded. They could be relevant in assessing the amount of damages and then only if the claim was made vide the provisions of Law Reform (Fatal Accidents Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance cap 360. Then, the responsibilities of the C widow or other dependants would feature prominently. But this was a case of the legal representative stepping into the shoes of the plaintiff in a claim for personal injuries. With regard to the devaluation of the shilling, this Court in National Bank of Commerce v Parma Shoe Company (8) approved the D principle. In that case the High Court awarded Shs 50,000/= as compensation for the depreciation in value of the sum claimed ie Shs 34,500/=. The present appeal is however different, it is concerned with the rate of interest to be awarded on the principal sum. This as it has been shown is governed by statute. The depreciation in value of the principal sum is a separate and unrelated issue. E Therefore both the considerations advanced by Mr Makange to support the 5% per month interest rate are irrelevant.

For the reasons we have given, we uphold the appeal against the rate of interest awarded by the Trial Court and say that the Trial Judge was wrong to grant interest on general damages from the date of F filing the suit, that the Trial Judge was wrong to award interest at the rate of 5% per month beyond the date of delivery of judgment and that such rate in any case was too high and out of proportion. We accordingly set aside the interest awarded at 5% per month from the date of filing the suit to full payment. We order instead that the principal sum of Shs 600,000/= awarded as general damages, G shall carry interest at the rate of 12% per annum from the date of judgment to the date of full payment.

With regard to the costs of this appeal, we are aware that ordinarily the costs must follow the event, H but in this case we have taken into account the fact that due to the errors of her advocates in the High Court the respondent has been grossly underpaid, her new responsibilities in the family and the fact that she was saddled with this appeal purely on account of the Trial Court's errors in law. We I think for these reasons that she should not be burdened further with extra costs.

1993 TLR p193

A

[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v ABDUL ISMAIL 1993 TLR 193 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mbeya

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 73 OF 1993 B

12 August, 1993

(From the revision of the High Court of Tanzania at Mbeya, Mchome, J.) C

Flynote

Criminal Law - Threatening violence - Whether threatening violence includes threat to kill - s 89(2)(a) of the Penal Code.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Criminal Revision - Whether Judge can make a revision after consultations D with the relatives of a convict who had an advocate.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Criminal Revision - Notification to the DPP - Whether the High Court should hear the parties on revision - S 374 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. E

-Headnote

The respondent was convicted by the District Court, of threatening violence and sentenced to four months imprisonment. Immediately thereafter, his advocate gave notice of appeal and applied for a copy of proceedings and judgment. The same day, relatives of the respondent complained to the Judge about the case. The Judge sat in revision on the following day, which was a Saturday, and F quashed the conviction and set aside the sentence. The Director of Public Prosecutions appealed.

Held: (i) Section 89(2)(a) of the Penal Code includes the ingredient of a threat to kill;

(ii) Where a party has an advocate, a Judge should entertain complaints through Counsel and not through the party's relatives; G

(iii) In terms of s 374 of the Criminal Procedure Act, the judge is not obliged to hear the parties on revision, but the practice in the High Court has been to notify the Director of Public Prosecutions; the need to adhere as far as possible to that practice is emphasized.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. H

No case referred to.

Mrs. Makuru, for the appellant.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, J.A., read the following considered judgment of the court: I

1993 TLR p194

KISANGA JA

A This is an appeal by the Director of Public Prosecution (DPP) against a revision order of the High Court (Mchome J).

The respondent was convicted by the District Court of threatening violence contrary to s 89(2)(a) of the Penal Code and sentenced to 4 months' imprisonment. Immediately after his conviction and B sentence, Mr Kayange, his advocate, gave notice of appeal and applied for copy of proceedings and judgment, and in response thereto the Court ordered:

C `Proceedings and judgment to be typed and supplied to Mr Kayange, Counsel for accused immediately.'

Sitting in revision on the following day which was a Saturday, the learned Judge quashed the conviction and set aside the sentence.

The learned Judge set out the background to, and the justification for the action he took. He said that on Friday the respondent was being threatened that he would be imprisoned without an option for a fine. Whereupon the Judge advised him to wait for the judgment which was due for delivery that D same Friday, and should the threat materialize then he would appeal or apply for revisions. In the afternoon of that same Friday the respondent's relatives complained to the Judge that the respondent E had in fact been sentenced to four months' imprisonment without an option of a fine. As there would be no Judge at the station for more than a week starting on Sunday, the Judge said he had to call up the file for inspection that Saturday. His inspection revealed gross miscarriage of justice, a situation F which he described as follows:

`The whole exercise in this case shows a travesty of justice and I find that the accused will suffer unnecessarily if this case waits for the normal appeal processes.'

G According to the learned Judge the miscarriage of justice found consisted of the charge being grossly defective resulting in the evidence not disclosing the offence charged. It also consisted of imposing a prison sentence without a fine option on the respondent, an old man aged about sixty H years and a first offender on the pretext that he was wealthy.

The DPP filed four grounds of appeal which were argued before us by Mrs Makuru, learned Senior State Attorney. The respondent appeared and resisted the appeal in person. The first ground of appeal in effect criticises the learned Judge for acting on non-existent provision or the law when he I quashed the conviction entered by the District Court. This criticism is wholly justified. The offence of threatening violence, as it currently A stands, is created under s 89(2)(a) of the Penal Code a was amended by Act 14 of 1980. That section provides:

1993 TLR p195

KISANGA JA

> `Any person who:
>
> with intent to intimidate or annoy any person, threatens to injure, assault, shoot at or kill any person or to burn, B destroy or damage any property . . .'

The information before the District Court charged the respondent with threatening to kill Mr Mbise, State Attorney and the Trial Magistrate in his judgment correctly reproduced the law as set out above C when he was considering whether or not the charge had been proved.

In quashing the conviction, however, the learned Judge, for reasons which are not at all apparent D relied on the version of s 89(2)(a) of the Penal Code which was amended in 1980 and which then did contain as an ingredient the threat to kill. We say the Judge did so for reasons which are not apparent because the amendment which was effected over twelve years ago is now contained in the copies of the Penal Code which are currently in use and which the learned Judge should be using. Not only that. The current version of the law was set out in the very judgment which the learned E Judge was revising, but he did not refer to that version to say why the Magistrate was wrong in applying it and why he (the judge) was justified to apply the one he did. Be that as it may, the net result is, and we so find, that the learned Judge quashed the respondent's conviction on a patently F wrong ground that s 89(2)(a) of the Penal Code under which the respondent was charged did not include the ingredient of a threat to kill.

In the second ground the DPP complains that the learned Judge erred in holding that the particulars G of the offence did not disclose the offence charged. This is already covered by what has been said above. For, had the learned Judge referred to, and applied the current version of s 89(2)(a) of the Penal Code which has as an ingredient the threat to kill, he would have found that the particulars did disclose the offence when they charged the respondent with the threat to kill the State Attorney. H

Ground three criticises the learned Judge for making a finding that Mr Mbise had abdicated his duties as a State Attorney when he advised a certain Mr Mohamed Hussein, a private individual, to look for I an advocate to assist him. This ground would appear to be

1993 TLR p196

KISANGA JA

A relevant to consideration of the soundness or otherwise of the respondent's conviction. But bearing in mind the course which we propose to take in the matter, we find it appropriate to say nothing about it.

The fourth ground says that:

B `The learned High Court Judge erred when he proceeded to write revisional order after consultations with the relatives of a convict, the respondent, after office hours, when there was a notice of appeal by the Advocate for the respondent.'

C This complaint is not without substance. Since the respondent was represented by Council, the learned Judge should have entertained the complaint through the respondent's Counsel and not through the respondent's relatives, unless of course, it can be said that the learned Judge did not D know that the respondent was represented at the trial.

On receiving the case file from the Trial Court the learned Judge no doubt became aware that the respondent had Counsel who had in fact acted very promptly, after the conviction was entered, by giving notice of appeal and applying for copy of the record. Nonetheless, the learned Judge brushed E aside the role of Counsel and proceeded the way he did, and on a Saturday which is a non-working day, as if to say that he felt he could champion the respondent's rights better than the retained Counsel. We think that such display of overzealousness may lead to undesirable consequences. Certainly it does not make for smooth administration of justice. At its worst it might provide the basis F for unfounded allegations, and we think it should not be encouraged.

And finally, the learned Judge did not give notice to the DPP if he wished to be heard on the proposed G revision. Admittedly, in terms of s 374 of the Criminal Procedure Act the judge, in a matter like this one, is not obliged to hear the parties on revision; it is left to his own discretion. But the practice in the High Court has been to notify the DPP if he wishes to be heard on the proposed revision. Yet in this case no explanation was given, and none is apparent, for departing from that practice. This practice H serves a number of practical purposes. To mention only one example. It affords the Court the assistance of Counsel. In the instant case, for instance, if the learned Judge had availed himself of the assistance of Counsel, we feel certain that the blunder or error which was committed would easily have been avoided. We would accordingly emphasize the need to adhere as far as possible to I that practice.

1993 TLR p197

In conclusion, we are satisfied that the learned Judge in dealing with this revision failed to apply the A relevant provisions of the law under which the respondent was charged, with the result that he wrongly quashed the respondent's conviction. We are equally satisfied that in so failing to apply the relevant provisions of the law, he cannot be said to have dealt with the merits or demerits of the respondent's conviction. Consequently we set aside the High Court order in revision and restore the B judgment of the District Court, with a direction that any party who was aggrieved by that judgment is at liberty to take the necessary steps as he deems fit.

1993 TLR p197

D

[zRPz]JESINALA MALAMULA v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 197 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mbeya

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 4 OF 1993 E
12 August, 1993
(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Mbeya, Mwaikasu, J.) F
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Assessors - Judge removes the question of provocation from Assessors - Fatal to resulting conviction.
-Headnote
The appellant was found guilty and convicted of the murder of her husband. The Trial Judge found G that the appellant had been provoked by the deceased. Nevertheless the learned Trial Judge thought that the defence of provocation was not available to the appellant and directed the assessors not to consider this defence. On appeal the Court of Appeal of Tanzania considered the proprietary of the H Trial Judge's direction to the Assessors and the effect of removing the question of provocation from the Assessors.
Held: To remove the question of provocation from the Assessors when there is such provocation is fatal to the resulting conviction.
Case Information
Appeal allowed. Conviction for murder quashed, sentence of death set aside, appellant found guilty and convicted of manslaughter. I
1993 TLR p198
A No case referred to.
Ndibalema, for the appellant.
M.T. Mbise, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
B Mfalila, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:
The appellant Jesinala Malamula was found guilty and convicted of the murder of her husband Edison Mkasiwa. Upon this conviction she was sentenced to death. She lodged this appeal against C both her conviction and the sentence of death.
There was only one material witness in this case, namely Mesia d/o Edison (PW1), the daughter of both the appellant and the deceased. According to her, she was present when this sad event D between her parents took place. She said in her evidence that on 21 September 1988 her parents ie, the deceased (her father), the appellant (her mother) and Lutinala Nbasu (PW2) (her father's second wife) returned home from the pombe shop at 7 pm. On arrival, a neighbour one Masundi came and invited her parents to go to his home for a drink. He asked then to go and join his guests for a drink. E Her father did not go but he allowed his junior wife, Lutinala to go to Masudi's house as requested but he refused to let her mother, the appellant go, although she specifically asked for permission to do so. This led to a quarrel between the two particularly after the deceased had abused her in the F most foul language calling her foolish. The deceased warned the appellant that if she persisted in her intention to go to the drinking party, he would beat her. Thereupon the appellant challenged him to do so. The deceased like the man he was, accepted the challenge and advanced towards her. As he G did so, the appellant picked a pestle which was near at hand and beat him with it on the shoulder and waist. But as the deceased was still advancing on her, the appellant beat him on the neck. The deceased fell down. At this stage, Mesia said, she raised an alarm and started crying. People came, including the deceased's junior wife. They carried the deceased into the house and the next morning H the deceased was taken to hospital where he remained for two weeks before being discharged. But two weeks later, the condition of the deceased deteriorated, he was taken back to hospital where he died a week later.

In her defence at the trial, the appellant denied these allegations. She denied beating the deceased I as alleged by her daughter (PW1) or asking for permission to go for a drink at Masudi's house.

1993 TLR p199

MFALILA JA

According to her, when the three of them returned home at about 7 pm on the day in question, their A neighbour one Masudi invited them for a free drink at his house. Her co-wife Lutinala (PW2) went to Masudi's house, but she and the deceased remained at home. She personally elected not to go, she said because she thought it was rather late. Later her daughter Mesia (PW1) told her that her father B had gone to the pombe shop. After some time the deceased returned home and he asked her why she continued drinking pombe in spite of his having prohibited her from drinking. The deceased then proceeded to assault her with his fists three times on the head. The appellant said she ran away. The deceased went back to the pombe shop. After some time as she was in her house, her C daughter Mesia called her out to come and see how the deceased was walking. When she went out she found the deceased had fallen down near the latrine.

In his summing up to the gentlemen Assesssors, the Trial Judge directed them to consider three D questions; first whether in the light of the evidence it is the appellant who caused the death of the deceased. Secondly whether the death was caused with malice aforethought. Thirdly, if malice aforethought is present, whether it was negated by the accused's intoxication. The Trial Judge E specifically directed the assessors not to consider provocation as a defence which is legally available to the accused. On this direction, the gentlemen Assessors were divided. Two of them advised that the accused was guilty of murder as the person who caused the death of the deceased and that although she had taken some pombe, she was not so drunk at the time she assaulted the F deceased as to render her incapable of forming a specific intention. The third gentleman Assessor differed saying that on the evidence the accused was incapable of forming a specific intention by reason of her drunkness. The Trial Judge accepted the advice of the majority Assessors and found G that the accused before him had killed her husband with malice aforethought by reason of the weapon used and that at the time she was not so drunk as to be rendered incapable of forming a specific intent. Accordingly he found her guilty of murder and sentenced her to death. H

In this appeal, Mr Ndibalema learned Advocate filed two grounds of appeal, that the learned Trial Judge erred in law and fact when he failed to consider the appellant's possible defence of provocation and secondly that the learned Trial Judge erred in law and fact when he rejected the

I appellant's defence of intoxication in the circumstances of this case. At the hearing of the appeal, Mr Hdibalomo
1993 TLR p200
MFALILA JA
A quite properly abandoned the defence of complete denial advanced at the trial. He accepted the prosecution case that it is the appellant who killed the deceased, but he submitted that this was done without any intention on the appellant's part to kill her husband. Firstly, he said that this death occurred following a family drunken brawl in which the appellant picked a weapon ready at hand and B inflicted it on non-vulnerable parts of the body. Secondly, he submitted that in this case the deceased seriously provoked the appellant by his threats to beat her and abusing her in the most foul manner in the presence of their young daughter. In the circumstances he said, the appellant should C have been convicted of the lesser offence of manslaughter.
We are satisfied that this was a typical family brawl which was not helped by the pombe which both D parties had taken from 2 pm to 7 pm. We think it is unfortunate that the defence at the trial was not competently handled. The appellant was allowed to embark on a futile exercise of complete denial when the evidence supporting her role in the killing of her husband was so glaring, provided by none other but her own daughter who professed to love both her parents. Similarly, Defence Counsel at E the trial embarked on a futile exercise to discredit the girl Mesia as a witness. Defence Counsel should have energetically advanced the twin defences of provocation and intoxication which are so clearly brought out by the record. Defence Counsel should have used the evidence of PW1 to defend F the appellant rather than trying to discredit it. From the evidence of PW1, it is clearly brought out that the deceased used foul language to abuse the appellant in the presence of their young daughter. He threatened to beat her and indeed was going to make good his threat when the appellant decided to stop him. In view of the deceased's previous conduct of beating his wives whenever he was drunk, G the appellant was entitled to take his threats seriously. These certainly were provocative acts on the part of the deceased. But the Trial Judge thought this defence was not available to the appellant and directed the Assessors accordingly. We intend to reproduce in full the Trial Judge's summing up on this point because it contains such serious misdirections that our comments may help to avoid H such pitfalls in future. He stated:

`Now turning to the defence of provocation, the evidence we have for the defence that tends to establish the same is that following a quarrel with the deceased, the deceased beat her on her head three times with a fist after when she I ran away, and the deceased left her and went away too. Assuming for a moment that the accused picked the pestle and beat the deceased as alleged, and of course that would have to be regarded to have been so done in the heat A of passion, while there was no time for her to cool, which then could be said to have deprived her of the power of self control, the next and important question that would have to be answered, is whether by the use of the pestle as alleged, what she did as she beat the deceased with it could be said to have been of the nature of or commensurate B with the assault alleged to have been done by the deceased to her. To that I would clearly give a `no' answer. In the circumstances, the use of a pestle in repelling such deceased's alleged assault, was totally out of proportion and gravely excessive force. Accordingly I cannot put to you that there was such legal provocation as to constitute a valid defence for the accused. So do not have to labour yourselves considering such a defence. Apparently should C you accept the evidence of PW1, the only eye witness and daughter of the accused, it would appear that the deceased, thought he threatened to beat the accused and did approach her for the purpose empty handed, the accused ran away before she was beaten.' D
1993 TLR p201
MFALILA JA

Since the Judge found that there was provocation, he should not have removed the question from the Assessors and decided it on his own. This Court has held on a number of occasions that to remove E the question of provocation from the Assessors when there is such provocation is fatal to the resulting conviction, for it is impossible to know that the Assessors would have said had the question been put to them.

In this case there was provocation in the form of insults and threats to beating and the parties had F been drinking, this made it a typical family brawl. Mr Mbise, learned State Attorney had at first supported the appellant's conviction, but on second thoughts, decided that the appellant's conviction for murder cannot be supported. He said that on the evidence she should have been convicted of manslaughter. G

We agree, and for the reasons we have given, we allow the appeal, quash the appellant's conviction for murder and set aside the sentence of death. Instead we find her guilty of the lesser offence of manslaughter and convict her of this offence. H

As to the sentence, we think that the appellant's criminality was not as such a level as to call for a severe punishment. As we have indicated, it was a family brawl following a long session of drinking which culminated in insults and threats. The appellant may have thought she had a genuine I grievance at her being refused permission to go for a drink while her co-wife was allowed, even if the

A deceased may have had good reasons for doing so. She has been in custody since 1989. This makes it about four years. As she herself stated, she loved her husband, she could hardly therefore have wished to cause his death.

In the result we sentence the appellant to such term of imprisonment as will result in her immediate B release from prison.

C

[zRPz]ANANGISYE MASENDO NG'WANG'WA v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 202 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mbeya

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

D CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 5 OF 1993

13 August, 1993

E (From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Mbeya, Mwaikasu, J.)

Flynote

Evidence - Murder - Conviction based mainly on the evidence of a single witness - Whether such conviction can F stand.

Evidence - Defence of Alibi - Alibi raising no reasonable doubt on the prosecution case - Effect thereof.

-Headnote

G The two appellants were jointly charged with and convicted of murder. They were each sentenced to death. They appealed against both conviction and sentence on two grounds: Firstly that their conviction was wrongly based on the evidence of a single witness, and secondly that their defences of alibi raised during the trial of the case were rejected on insufficient grounds.

H Held: (i) Since the learned Trial Judge had warned himself of the danger of relying on a single witness in a serious charge of murder and since he was satisfied that he could safely act on that evidence to convict the appellants, the learned Judge was entitled to so convict;

(ii) The appellants' defences of alibi did not raise any reasonable doubt on the prosecution case and were properly rejected.

Case Information

I Appeals dismissed.

1993 TLR p203

No case referred to. A

J.E. Kayange, for the appellant.

M.T. Mbise, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court: B

The two appellants were jointly charged with and convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code, and were each sentenced to death by the High Court (Mwaikasu J) sitting here in Mbeya. They have now appealed against both conviction and sentence. Before us the appellants were C represented by Mr Kayange, learned Advocate, while Mr Mbise, learned State Attorney, appeared for the respondent Republic.

The Republic alleged that on the day of the incident the deceased and his sister (PW1) set out to go D to a funeral of a relative. On the way they met the appellants who stopped them, blew a whistle which attracted three more others to the scene after which the whole group set upon the deceased and beat him up using sticks and clubs. After the assault the deceased was never seen alive again. His dead body was recovered from a river about a week later bearing cuts and stab wounds. The E cause of death was haemorrhage due to cut wounds. The appellants' defences were a flat denial coupled with an alibi. The Trial Court rejected their defences and convicted them as charged.

Mr Kayange filed three grounds of appeal which essentially raise the issue of credibility of the F witnesses. He complained that the appellants' conviction was wrongly based on the evidence of a single witness and that the appellants' defences of alibi were rejected on insufficient grounds.
Admittedly the appellants' conviction was based mainly on the evidence of a single witness. This was G Enelise Nomba (PW1), the deceased's sister who on the fateful day had accompanied the deceased to the funeral of their relative. The learned Trial Judge was fully aware of this aspect of the evidence, and specifically addressed himself to that issue. At the end of the day, however, he found H that he could safely act on that evidence to convict the appellants. This is what he said in his judgments:

`While fully aware of the danger of relying on a single witness in a serious charge like this, this Court is clearly of the view that bearing in mind the fact that this incident took place in broad daylight while I

A the PW1 was very close to the assailants, and had ample time to have a close, careful and clear look at them all, and that in all respects the PW1 appeared to have been telling the truth, it can confidently and safely walk on the rope of the evidence of the PW1 to the sacred end of justice in this case. There is therefore, no hesitation in placing B reliance in the evidence of the PW1, though the only eye witness in this case.'

On the material before him, the learned Judge was entitled to come to that conclusion and we can find no valid ground for complaint. Furthermore, in addition to the factors mentioned by the learned C Judge, the witness knew the appellants well before the day of the incident, indeed she said she is related to Masendo, the first appellant. That would strengthen the Judge's finding that PW1 could not have mistaken the identity of the appellants. Again when PW1 arrived at the place of the funeral she D disclosed the incident and mentioned the appellants to be among the assailants. Such promptness in reporting the incident and the consistency in mentioning the appellants as the culprits would tend to lend credence to her story. And finally she testified that there were five assailants altogether but of these she knew only the two appellants. The view may be taken that if she were given to E exaggeration she might claim that she had recognized the whole group.

There was evidence also that the news of this attack and the disappearance of the deceased immediately thereafter spread widely in the locality. There was further evidence that both appellants F were members of the local militia popularly known as `Sungusungu'. The appellants in their defences, however, claimed that they were not at all aware of this incident having happened in their locality. The Trial Judge found it strange that the appellants who as members of `Sungusungu' were, G on their own admission, concerned with matters of security in the locality, should not have known of the incident until their arrest three days after the incident. The Judge took the view that the appellants' denial of any knowledge about the incident was an attempt to avoid any suspicion being cast upon them in conjunction with their involvement in causing the death of the deceased. We H cannot say that such inference was unjustified.

Not only that. There was evidence that only two to three weeks prior to the incident, the appellant Fabian, in a group of other persons unknown, had mounted an ambush attack on the deceased, for which the said appellant was prosecuted, convicted and fined, and ordered to compensate the I deceased Shs 10,000/= which he had taken from him during the attack. So far the appellant had refunded only Shs 2,000/= A and the remaining Shs 8,000/= was due to be paid on a Monday but then this incident happened on the preceding Friday. The appellant Fabian, therefore, nursed a grudge against the deceased and that would provide motive for the subsequent and fatal attack on the deceased. It is clear, therefore B that the appellants' convictions were not based on the evidence of the single witness (PW1) alone. There was also other circumstantial evidence which tended to implicate the appellants with the offence.

1993 TLR p205

KISANGA JA

In their respective defences of alibi, the first appellant Anangisye had stated that on the day of the incident he was at his home, and the second appellant Fabian claimed that he had gone to the C District Court in Tukuyu to lodge an appeal in the said case involving him and the deceased. The Trial Court duly considered the defences and rejected them. The appellant Anangisye could very well have been at his home as he claimed. But there was nothing to prevent him from going to commit D the offence and then return home. The same may be said of the appellant Fabian. He could have been to Tukuyu District Court to transact business there and then returned to his locality in Kiwira in time for the incident which happened at about 3 pm. We do not think that the defences of alibi are E such as would raise any reasonable doubt on the prosecution case, and like the Trial Judge we reject them.

The Trial Judge considered the fact that the deceased was found to have sustained cut and stab wounds which caused his death, while the only evidence received was that the appellants and the F rest of their group were seen attacking the deceased with sticks and clubs; no sharp weapons were seen. He resolved the matter by saying that since the deceased was assaulted as he was being held by the appellants, and since the deceased was never seen again alive after such assault, then the appellants, must have known how the deceased came to sustain these wounds. That is, the G appellants must have been parties to the inflicting of those wounds on the deceased. For our part we cannot say that such inference was erroneous.

Upon a careful study of the record we satisfied that the appellants' convictions were amply justified. H We find no merit in the appeals which are accordingly dismissed in their entirety.

1993 TLR p206

A

[zRPz]ITIKA KETTA MWAKISAMBWE v MARA COOPERATIVE UNION (1984) LTD 1993 TLR 206 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

B CIVIL APPEAL NO. 24 OF 1993

30 August, 1993

C (From the Ruling of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, Masanche, J.)

Flynote

Labour Law - Summary dismissal - Jurisdiction of the courts in cases of summary dismissal - Security of Employment Act, Cap 574.

D Constitutional Law - Basic rights enshrined in the Constitution - The right to seek redress in court and ouster of court's jurisdiction - Section 28 of the Security of Employment Act and article 30 of the Constitution.

-Headnote

E The appellant was summarily dismissed from employment by the respondent. He filed a suit in the High Court to contest the dismissal. The respondent did not file a written statement of defence but the High Court struck out the suit for want of jurisdiction in terms of s 28 of the Security of Employment Act (Cap 574). On appeal the appellant raised the question whether s 28 of the Act was constitutional.

F Held: (i) A claim that a basic right is violated is triable in the first instance by the High Court, not the Court of Appeal;

(ii) As the appellant was unrepresented, the question of the jurisdiction of the High Court in matters of summary dismissal took him unawares, making it impossible for him to answer it properly; the High Court thus struck out the suit without taking into account the appellant's G real answer to the question.

(iii) The appellant should be given an opportunity to address the High Court on the issue of constitutionality of the ouster of jurisdiction of the High Court.

Case Information

H Order accordingly.

No cases referred to.

Dyabusha, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, J.A., delivered the following order of the court:

I The appellant was summarily dismissed from employment by the respondent, The Mara Cooperative Union, his employer. He filed a suit in the High Court against such summary dismissal. The respondent Union did not file its written A statement of defence in time. Whereupon the appellant applied for an ex-parte proof of his claim which was duly granted. On the day set for the ex-parte proof, however, the presiding Judge struck out the suit for want of jurisdiction in terms of s 28 of the Security of Employment Act (cap 574) B which ousts the jurisdiction of the court in matters of summary dismissal. The appellant was aggrieved by that decision, hence this appeal.

The appellant appeared and conducted the appeal in person while the respondent Union was represented by Mr Dyabusha, learned advocate. In his memorandum of appeal and his written C submissions, the appellant raises the issue of constitutionality of s 28 of the Security of Employment Act which, as it were, prevents him from knocking on the door of the High Court to have his grievance redressed. He says that the s violates his basic right under article 30(3) of the Constitution D of the United Republic of Tanzania.

Thus it becomes obvious that the appellant is alleging a violation of a basic right. While such a claim is triable by the High Court in the first instance, the appellant is raising it for the first time in this appeal. This Court has no competence to deal with the matter as a court of first instance. E

On the day the appellant came to court for ex-parte proof of his case, the Trial Judge asked him if the Court had jurisdiction over the matter in view of the Security of Employment Act. Obviously the appellant was taken unawares and the only answer he could give was that he was advised by a F magistrate and the labour officer that he could do so. Whereupon the learned Judge stated that he was going to strike out the case, and immediately adjourned the matter for this purpose. It is in the course of appealing against the decision to strike out his case that the appellant has raised the issue G of violation of his basic rights.

As stated before, the appellant was taken awares. He never expected to be questioned by the Judge on the issue of jurisdiction, and so he was least prepared for it. Worse still, he was a layman who was in no position to avail himself of any legal counsel immediately to answer the Judge's question in H court. We think that had he been given notice or sufficient notice of the issue put to him by the Trial Judge, he would have come up with an answer which raises the issue of the constitutionality of s 28 of the Security of Employment Act, as indeed he has done in this appeal.

So that as the matter stands now, the Judge's ruling cannot be I

A said to have taken into account the appellant's real answer to the question put to him.

In the circumstances we think that the appellant should be afforded the opportunity to respond fully in the High Court to the issue of ouster of jurisdiction of the court in matters of summary dismissal. B Consequently, the ruling of the High Court is set aside. The matter is sent back to the High Court with a direction to hear the appellant on the issue of ouster of jurisdiction of the court and, in the process determine the constitutionality or otherwise of s 28 of the Security of Employment Act which C sanctions such ouster of Court's jurisdiction. Any party who is dissatisfied with the decision of the High Court on that issue should be at liberty to appeal to this Court.

1993 TLR p208

E

[zRPz]RAZA SOMJI v AMINA SALUM 1993 TLR 208 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Kisanga JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 45 OF 1992

F 30 August, 1993

(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, Sekule, J.)

Flynote

G Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Memorandum of appeal - Memorandum of appeal makes no reference to undue influence and no leave of Court sought and obtained to argue the issue on appeal - Whether the Court may entertain the issue suo motu - Rights of the other party - Order 39 rule 2, Civil Procedure Code.

-Headnote

H The appellant and respondent entered into an oral agreement for an exchange of residential premises. After executing the agreement the respondent sought to rescind the agreement and the landlord acting under the orders of the Housing Allocation Committee reinstated the tenancy to the respondent. The appellant filed a suit in the District Court for specific performance of the agreement I and general damages for breach of contract. The court allowed the claim. The respondent appealed to the High Court and A found that the respondent was justified to rescind the contract because it was concluded by undue influence exercised on her by, inter alia, the appellant. The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania. Counsel for the appellant argued that the issue of undue influence was not raised on the pleadings and therefore by considering and making a finding on that issue the learned Judge erred B for two reasons. First, he relied for his decision of the appeal on a ground which was not raised in the memorandum of appeal or which was not raised with the leave of the court during the hearing of the appeal. Secondly, the Judge did not afford the appellant the opportunity to be heard on the issue. C

1993 TLR p209

Held: (i) The ground of undue influence was, on the evidence, disclosed but was not set forth in the memorandum of appeal. Rule 2 of order 39 of the Civil Procedure Code empowered the learned Judge to raise it suo motu. However under the proviso to that rule the Judge was enjoined to give the appellant the opportunity to contest the issue before resting his decision on it as he did; D

(ii) The learned Judge failed to afford the appellant the opportunity to be heard on the issue, as such he was clearly in error;

(iii) The provisions of rule 2 of order 39 of the Civil Procedure Code are mandatory, their infringement is fatal, and thus the finding on the issue of undue influence in this case was invalid. E

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No cases referred to.

Magongo, for the appellant. F

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:
The appellant and the respondent entered into an oral agreement for an exchange of residential G premises. The appellant offered the respondent a house in Nyakato area in exchange for a flat occupied by the respondent in the centre of the Municipality of Mwanza. The appellant, in addition gave Shs 200,000/= to the respondent as disturbance allowance upon her vacating the flat.
Pursuant to the agreement the respondent's landlord, the Registrar of Buildings, upon the H respondent's request, acceded to the parties' wishes and duly allocated the flat to the appellant, following which the appellant went into occupation and made substantial renovations to the premises amounting to about Shs 2,000,000/=. Subsequently, however, the respondent changed her mind and I sought to dishonour or rescind the agreement. The landlord, the
1993 TLR p210
KISANGA JA
A Registrar of Buildings, acting under orders of the Housing Allocation Committee, reinstated the tenancy to the respondent. Whereupon the appellant filed a claim in the District Court for specific performance of the agreement and general damages for breach of contract. The Court allowed the claim for specific performance and further directed the return of the Shs 200,000/= to the appellant, B as it appeared that the respondent was denying ownership thereof.
The respondent appealed to the High Court which set aside the order for specific performance. In so doing the High Court found that the respondent was justified to rescind the contract because she C was made to conclude that contract by undue influence exercised on her by the appellant and possibly by her own husband. It is from that decision that this appeal now arises.
Before us the appellant was represented by Mr Magongo, learned advocate, while the respondent conducted the appeal in person.
D Mr Magongo filed four grounds of appeal which essentially raised two issues, namely,

(a) Whether on the evidence there was any undue influence, and

(b) Whether it was open to the learned Judge to make a finding on that issue which was not E raised on the pleadings.

We propose to consider ground (b) first. Mr Magongo rightly observed that the issue of undue F influence was never raised on the pleadings. The crux of the respondent's defence was couched in paras 4 and 5 of her written statement of defence in the following terms:

`4. That it is not true that both the defendant/plaintiff are tenants of the Registrar of Buildings at Plot No 10 Block G `R'. Defendant aver (sic.) that she does not known the plaintiff in any way.

5. That contents of para 4 and 5 are a total lie as the defendant has never seen the plaintiff before and hence no agreement could have been entered into between them. The alleged contract, is purely a fraud and the H defendant would prove it.'

The respondent was clearly asserting that the appellant was a stranger and that she could not have entered into an agreement with such a stranger. She does not allege undue influence. Nor was I undue influence one of the issues framed. The issues as framed at the trial were:
1993 TLR p211

KISANGA JA

`ISSUES AGREED UPON AS FOLLOWS: A

1. Whether or not there was an oral agreement between the parties for exchange of services.

2. Reliefs, if any, to which the parties are entitled.'

The learned Judge, however, found that the respondent in the course of her evidence at the trial did B raise the issue of undue influence, and he criticised the Trial Magistrate for failing to consider it. This is what he said:

As already said, the Trial Court did not touch on this issue i.e. undue influence. It concerned itself only with the issue C of offer and acceptance. But the appellant otherwise in my view clearly raised this issue in her testimony in defence.

In order to remedy the omission, therefore the learned Judge proceeded to consider the issue and accordingly made a finding of it as shown above. D

Mr Magongo submitted that in considering and making a finding on that issue the learned Judge erred for two reasons: First, he relied for his decision of the appeal on a ground which was not raised in the memorandum of appeal or which was not raised with the leave of the Court during the hearing E of the appeal. Secondly he did not afford the appellant the opportunity to be heard on the issue. He relied for this submission on the provisions of Order 39 rule 2 which provide that:

`2. The appellant shall not, except by leave of the Court, urge or be heard in support of any ground of objection F not set forth in the memorandum of appeal: but the Court, in deciding the appeal, shall not be confined to the grounds of objection set forth in the memorandum of appeal or taken by leave of the court under this rule: G

Provided that the Court shall not rest its decision on any other ground unless the party who may be affected thereby has had a sufficient opportunity of contesting the case on that ground.' H

The first leg of Mr Magongo's complaint is wholly justified. The respondent's memorandum of appeal to the High Court makes no reference whatever to the issue of undue influence, and there is no indication in the record that the respondent obtained or sought leave to take that ground at the I hearing. The second leg of Mr Magongo's complaint is equally justified. If the learned Judge was

A of the view that the ground of undue influence was, on the evidence, disclosed but was not set forth in the memorandum of appeal, we think that rule 2 of Order 39 empowered him to raise it suo motu. However, under the provisio to that rule he was enjoined to give the appellant the opportunity to contest the issue before resting his decision on it as he did. Mr Magongo who had also represented B the present appellant in the High Court says that no such opportunity was afforded to his client. Indeed according to him, he was taken by surprise when he read the High Court judgment and for the first time noticed that the Judge had raised and dealt with that issue there. In all this the learned C Counsel is supported by the record. Thus to the extent that the learned Judge failed to afford the appellant the opportunity to be heard on the issue, he was, with due respect, clearly in error.

Our understanding of rule 2 of Order 39 is that its provisions are mandatory and the infringement D thereof is fatal. In the context of the present case this means that the finding on the issue of undue influence is invalid and ought to be set aside.

On the remaining ground Mr Magongo submitted in effect that on the evidence no undue influence E was disclosed. However, having held that the finding on that issue was invalid, it would serve no practical purpose now to go further into the matter. And since the decision of the learned Judge in this appeal was rested solely on the issue of undue influence, the view we have taken on that issue also disposes of the appeal itself.

F In the result the appeal is allowed. The decision of the High Court is set aside and that of the District Court is restored.

As stated before, the Trial Magistrate ordered the return of the Shs 200,000/= to the appellant because the respondent appeared to deny ownership of it. This was somewhat strange because the G money which was put in a fixed deposit at the bank was in her own name and she was keeping the fixed deposit certificate. However at the hearing of this appeal she assured us that she has been renewing the deposit every year, which clearly shows that she acknowledges the money to be hers. On that account we reverse the order of the District Court in this regard and order that the sum of H Shs 200,000/= be restored to the respondent.

The appellant is to have his costs of this appeal.

1993 TLR p213

A

[zRPz]HAMISI MEURE v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 213 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 112 OF 1993 B

25 October, 1993

(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Dodoma, Mwalusanya, J.) C

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Statement of witness or substance of evidence not read at committal proceedings - Whether witness can testify for prosecution at the trial - Section 289(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. D

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Witness - Notice to accused or Advocate of intention to call witness - Contents of such notice - Criminal Procedure Act 1985, s 289(2).

Evidence - Extra-judicial statement retracted at trial - Whether it can be relied upon. E

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted of murder and was sentenced to death on the basis of the identification of a witness who saw him driving the stolen cattle of the deceased and on his alleged confession made to a Justice of the Peace. The statement written by the Justice of the Peace was not read at the committal proceedings. The Justice of the Peace was called as a prosecution witness without F the appellant or his advocate being given reasonable notice. At the trial, he retracted the extra- judicial statement he made to the Justice of the Peace.

Held: (i) The learned Trial Judge erred in law in allowing evidence of the Justice of the Peace to be given at the trial when his statement had not been read at the committal proceedings and no notice had been given to the appellant or his advocate, and therefore, the extra-judicial G statement was wrongly admitted;

(ii) Section 289(2) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985, makes it mandatory for not only the name and address of the witness to be supplied, but also the substance of the evidence H which he intends to give;

(iii) Since the extra-judicial statement was clearly retracted at the trial, the Trial Judge should not have relied on it without warning himself of the dangers of convicting on a retracted confession.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to. I

1993 TLR p214

A Rweyongeza, for the appellant.

Ndunguru, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mfalila, J.A., read the following considered judgment of the Court:

B The appellant Hamisi Meure was convicted of the murder of one Abubakari s/o Shabani and was sentenced to death by the High Court sitting at Dodoma (Mwalusanya J). He lodged this appeal against both his conviction and the sentence of death.

C At the trial two witnesses gave evidence for the prosecution. These were the deceased's neighbour Erkadi s/o Mwakagile (PW1) and the Justice of the Peace David Mzuri (PW2). Erkadi Mwakagile whose evidence was hotly contested both at the trial and in this Court, told the Trial Court that on 16 March 1989 at about 1.10 am he was awakened by an alarm from the deceased's house. D He proceeded there and found the deceased's two wives crying. The deceased himself was sprawled on the ground with serious injuries. The deceased then told him with difficulty, for he was barely conscious, how bandits had attacked him and stolen his sixteen cattle, forty goats and two sheep. The deceased died soon after that. However the villagers organised themselves into two E groups and started to trace the cattle thieves. The following day, 27 March 1989 at about 4 pm they caught up with the thieves driving the stolen cattle. When they got sufficiently close to the gang, the witness said that he identified the stolen cattle to be the deceased's as some of his own were in that F herd. He also identified two of the eight bandits. He identified the appellant clearly because he said they had been village mates for the last ten years. He also identified another who was charged as the third accused and whom he named as Chimingati Meure. He was acquitted at the trial. In the ensuing G fight, the bandits were overpowered and they ran away leaving their loot behind, but one of their number, Koyesa was arrested but he died later apparently of wounds sustained in the fight. The stolen cattle were returned to the village. The appellant and the third accused at the trial Chimingati H Meure were later arrested and charged with this offence.

The Justice of the Peace, Davis Mzuri recorded the appellant's extra-judicial statement admitted at the trial as exhibit B in which he admitted taking part in the raid at the deceased's homestead, but he explained that he was an unwilling participant as he had simply been forced to join the raiding party I when he met them. He confirmed that the third accused was an active participant.

1993 TLR p215

MFALILA JA

In his defence at the trial, the appellant denied taking part in the raid in which the deceased was A killed. He said that he was just arrested for reasons he did not understand. After his arrest, he was subjected to severe beatings in the course of which he was forced to go to the Justice of the Peace where he made the extra-judicial statement exh B. He was told what to say in that statement and that B the names he supplied were given him by the Police Investigating Officer.

After a very careful summing up, the Assessors accepted the evidence of PW1, that he identified both the appellant and the third accused at the scene while they were driving away the cattle. The C assessors also accepted the extra-judicial statement exh B as having been freely and voluntarily made. On these two pieces of evidence, the assessors found both the appellant and the third accused guilty as charged. However, the learned Judge stated that while he was able to go along with the Assessors on the guilt of the appellant, he was unable to agree with them on the guilt of the D third accused. Incidentally, the second accused had been acquitted at the close of the prosecution case. The learned Judge was of the view that while PW1 was indeed a truthful witness, his truthfulness did not extend to his alleged identification of the third accused. In fact, the learned Judge E found that PW1 lied on three points. He lied when he stated that he knew the third accused, that he lied when he said that the third accused was a resident of Case Village when in fact he lived in Msanga Village which is some fifty kilometres away. (The learned Judge was still using the now defunct imperial system when he stated that Msanga is thirty miles away). And lastly that PW1 lied F when he said that the third accused's name is Chimingati s/o Meure when he is Chimingati s/o Ndyongo. In the circumstances, he said that he was not persuaded that PW1 knew the third accused before the incident to enable him make a correct identification. He therefore convicted the appellant G as having been correctly identified by PW1 his long time village mate and acquitted the third accused. The learned Judge also found that PW1's identification of the appellant was corroborated, if corroboration was necessary, by the appellant's own extra-judicial statement. H

In this appeal, Mr Rweyongeza learned Counsel who appeared for the appellant filed four grounds of appeal. In ground No 1, he complained that the learned Trial Judge erred in law in allowing the evidence of PW2 to be given at the trial when his statement had not been read at the committal proceedings and no notice had been given to the appellant or his advocate. During the hearing I

1993 TLR p216

MFALILA JA

A of the appeal, Mr Rweyongeza submitted that in the absence of a reasonable notice, PW2 the Justice of the Peace was barred from being called as a witness under s 289(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act because the substance of his evidence was not read at the committal proceedings. This section provides as follows:

B `289(1) No witness whose statement or substance of evidence was not read at committal proceedings shall be called by the prosecution at the trial unless the prosecution has given a reasonable notice in writing to the accused person or his advocate of the intention to call such witness.

C (2) The notice shall state the name and address of the witness and the substance of the evidence which he intends to give.

(3) The Court shall determine what notice is reasonable, regard being had to the time when and the circumstances under which the prosecution became acquainted with the nature of the witnesses's evidence and determined to call D him as a witness. No such notice need be given if the prosecution first became aware of the evidence which the witness would give on the date on which he is called.'

E Mr Rweyongeza added that ss (3) is not applicable because the prosecution became aware of the existence of such evidence as far back as 3 November 1992 during the preliminary investigation when the first accused, the present appellant intimated that he had been threatened into making the extra judicial statement to the Justice of the Peace.

F At the trial, when the defence objected for the same reasons that the Justice of the Peace (PW2) should not be called as a witness, the learned Judge overruled the objection in the following words:

G `However it is my view that since yesterday 10 February 1993 (ie the day before the trial began on 11 February 1992) the defence became aware of the application for summons for the prosecution witnesses that was written about three weeks ago. In that application for summons, the name of Mr Mzuri appears and it is written that he is a Justice of the Peace. As it is written that he is a Justice of the Peace, the defence Counsel must have known that the H substance of the evidence that this witness would give concerns the extra-judicial statement he must have recorded. So the Defence Counsel today was not taken by surprise. If he required more reasonable notice, the Defense Counsel should have said so yesterday when he became aware of the calling of this witness. It is my view that the I period from yesterday morning to this day is sufficient notice to the Defence.'

1993 TLR p217

MFALILA JA

We think, with respect, that this passage contains assumptions which, even if they were to be A proved correct, could not meet the rigid and mandatory requirements of s 289. Even if the application for witness summons were to be regarded as a notice under this section, which it cannot, there is not basis for believing that it was seen by either the appellant or his Counsel. Secondly, ss (2) makes B it mandatory for not only the name and address of the witness to be supplied, but also the substance of the evidence which he intends to give. There is no room for the defence to be left guessing as the learned Judge seems to suggest. Thirdly, since the prosecution became aware of the existence of such evidence four months before the trial opened, there was no justification for the C Court to pin down the Defence to a day's notice and call such notice reasonable under ss (3). In any event, we were surprised by the Judge's remark that if Defence Counsel had required more reasonable notice he should have said so earlier, when that was exactly what Counsel had demanded when arguing his objection. It having been accepted by the prosecution and the Judge D himself that PW2 did not feature in the record of committal proceedings, he should not have been allowed to give evidence in contravention of the provisions of s 289 which are mandatory. In the circumstances we agree with the complaint in ground 1 and hold that PW2 was wrongly allowed to E give evidence. Mr Ndunguru learned State Attorney who appeared for the Republic conceded that PW2 would not have been allowed to give evidence before complying with the mandatory provisions of s 289 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985. F

Mr Rweyongeza argued grounds 2 and 3 together because they both touched on the credibility of PW1. In these two grounds, he complained that the Trial Judge should not have found PW1 a truthful witness in respect of one accused and a liar in respect of the other and that he should have found G PW1 an unreliable witness particularly after considering the statement this witness gave to the police and the evidence he gave in Court.

As we have already indicated, the learned Trial Judge found that PW1 had lied on three matters. However on our part, we think the learned Judge over-reacted to the differences between the H evidence of PW1 and that given by the third accused. PW1 told the Trial Court that he knew the third accused, while the third accused said that he did not know him. PW1 said that the third accused lived in Chasa Village while the third accused denied this saying that he lived in Msanga Village fifty I kilometres away. PW1 said that the third accused's name was Chimingati s/o Meure while the third

A accused said he was Chimangati s/o Ndyongo. Were these differences sufficient to suddenly turn PW1 into a liar when the Court had just evaluated him to be a truthful and reliable witness? The Trial Judge should have realised like the Assessors that the third accused had every reason to deny PW1's allegations about him, whereas PW1 had no reason to lie against the third accused. The Trial B Judge did not state where he got the impression that the third accused was a total stranger to PW1 apart from third accused's own denials. Indeed when cross-examined by Defence Counsel, PW1 stated categorically that:

C `The third accused is my village mate at Chase - he is called Chimingati Ndyongo s/o Meure. He does not stay at Msanga Village.'

PW1 was therefore aware of the third accused's other surname `Ngyongo' and in any case he D definitely knew his first name `Chimingati' which was not disputed. We are in the circumstances satisfied that the Trial Judge wrongly, even unfairly branded PW1 a liar. The Assessors' assessment of PW1 as a truthful and reliable witness was the correct one even after taking into account the E difference between what he said in Court and what he stated in his police statement exh A. In Court, he said that his group did not fight the bandits, but in the police statement he stated:

F `. . . Hapo tulizitambua ng ombe hizo na mbuzi ndizo zenyewe nilizooibiwa kwa marehemu, ndipo tukaanza mapigano ya mishale bahati tukawazidi nguvu wezi hao na kumkamata mmoja wao aitwaye Koyesa s/o Chimingati . . .'.

G It should be remembered that according to this witness, the search party was divided into two groups, the witness belonged to the group which was in front. But since the two groups were on the same mission, they were just one large group divided into two sections, so that when the witness was describing the events while at the police station, he chose to treat the whole search party as one H and he considered himself a member of the entire search party. But in his evidence in Court, he chose to be more detailed, describing that each section of the group did. We can therefore see nothing in this to make PW1 a liar and unreliable. In the circumstances we reject the complaints in grounds 2 and 3.

I In view of our finding that PW2 should not have allowed to give evidence in contravention of s 289, it follows that the extra-judicial statement was wrongly admitted and therefore we need not deal with the complaint in ground 4 A namely that the learned Judge misdirected himself in relying on the extra-judicial statement of the appellant in complete disregard of the circumstances under which it was made. But we would like to point out that as it was clearly retracted at the trial, the Trial Judge should not have placed any B reliance on it without warning himself of the dangers of convicting on a retracted confession.

1993 TLR p219

However as we hope we have clearly indicated, the Trial Court was perfectly and rightly entitled to base the appellant's conviction on the evidence of PW1 once they had evaluated him as they did, to be a truthful and reliable witness. The third accused should consider himself lucky for being C acquitted. The appellant was rightly convicted on the basis of the doctrine of recent possession.

The appeal has no merit, we accordingly order that it be dismissed. D

1993 TLR p220

E

[zRPz]MAGENDO PAUL AND ANOTHER v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 220 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 99 OF 1993 F

25 October, 1993

(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Singida, Maina, J.) G

Flynote

Evidence - Strong circumstantial evidence - Only remote possibility left in favour of an accused - Whether sufficient proof of charge established. H

-Headnote

The appellants were jointly convicted of murder and sentenced to death. Their conviction was based on circumstantial evidence. The appellants together with another person (who was also accused but died in remand prison) were village militiamen who were ordered by the village secretary to guard the I deceased who had been locked in a cell on allegations of

A rape. Later the deceased was found hanging by the neck from a piece of cloth. At their trial in the High Court, both appellants denied killing the deceased and contended that the deceased must have committed suicide by hanging himself. The prosecution relied on the evidence of the doctor who conducted the post mortem. His report, which was not disputed by the defence, showed that the B cause of death was `peripheral circulatory failure caused by bleeding and severe pain after perforation of the eye by a sharp weapon'. The doctor dismissed the suggestion that the deceased had hanged himself because he had no marks around the neck and there was no congestion of the lungs to indicate death by hanging.

Held: (i) The circumstantial evidence irresistably pointed to the appellants as the people who C perforated the deceased's eyes; in doing so they clearly intended, at the very least, to cause him grievous harm;

(ii) If the evidence is so strong against an accused as to leave only a remote possibility in his favour, which can easily be dismissed, the case is proved beyond reasonable doubt.

Case Information

D Appeal allowed.

Case referred to:

1. Miller v. Minister of Pensions [1947] 2 All ER 372.

Mbezi, for the appellants.

E Mwambe, for the Republic.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, J.A., read the following considered judgment of the court:

The two appellants, Magendo Paul and Shabani Benjamin, were jointly charged with and convicted of F murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code by the High Court, (Maina J), and sentenced to death. Dissatisfied with the findings and the sentence imposed they have appealed to this Court.

The following facts were narrated to the Trial Court:

The appellants were villagers at Sasile Village in Manyeni district and were militiamen in the area. On G 1 July 1990 their village secretary, PW2, ordered them to arrest their fellow villager, one, Bakari s/o Leonard, who was alleged to have raped a woman in the village. They obediently complied and duly arrested the said Bakari s/o Leonard and brought him to the village secretary (PW2), who locked him in the village lock-up. According to the evidence of the village secretary after Bakari was locked up he H told the appellants, and one, Charles Mjelwa, who was also a militiaman (and was one of the accused but met his death in remand prison) to send Bakari to the Ward Secretary on the following day - 2 July 1990. The village secretary then left for his house leaving the appellants and Charles I guarding the deceased.

1993 TLR p221

MNZAVAS JA

Later while he was in his house the first appellant, Magendo Paul, and one, Robert Noha, came and A asked to go to the lock-up and see what had happened. He accompanied them to the lock-up and on arrival asked the first appellant who was in possession of the key to unlock the lock-up. He did so and on entering the cell he found Bakari hanging by the neck from a piece of cloth tied to a beam of the ceiling. He was already dead. Apparently the cloth used in hanging the deceased was his own B jacket.

The matter was reported to the police and the investigation culminated in the arrest and arraignment of the two appellants and one, Charles Mjelwa, who, as already mentioned above died while in C remand.

In their defence before the High Court both appellants denied killing the deceased and argued that the deceased must have committed suicide by hanging himself.

Before us Mr Mbezi, learned Defence Counsel, submitted that `the learned Trial Judge erred in D disbelieving that the deceased had actually hanged himself'. When the Court posed the question as to who could have perforated the deceased's eyes if the deceased had actually hanged himself. Mr Mbezi argued that after the deceased had hanged himself the dead body fell on the ground and that E the perforation of both eyes may have been caused by sharp objects on the ground. It was further argued that relatives of the woman the deceased was alleged to have raped may have been so angered as to resort to perforating the deceased's eyes after he had hanged himself. F

In the second ground of appeal the learned Defence Counsel submitted that the Trial Judge was wrong in his finding that it were the appellants who killed the deceased as, it was argued, it was clear from the evidence which one of the appellants held the key to the lock-up. G

It was the learned Counsel's submission that any of the militiamen who guarded the deceased could have committed the offence but that it was not clear who, between them, committed the offence. It was argued that this being the position this Court should allow the appeal and acquit the appellants. H

In rebuttal Mr Mwambe, learned State Attorney, supported the conviction and argued that the prosecution relied on the evidence of the doctor, PW1, as to the cause of deceased's death. It was submitted that the contents of the post mortem report as to the cause of death was not disputed by the defence. In support of his argument we were referred to page six of the proceedings. I

1993 TLR p222

MNZAVAS JA

A As for the the argument that the appellants were wrongly convicted or murder because there was no evidence as to who among them held the key to the lock-up the learned State Attorney submitted that the appellants were convicted of murder on circumstantial evidence which was that from 3.30 pm to 4 pm or thereabout, when the deceased met his death he was locked in the village lock-up and B guarded by the appellants and their deceased co-accused,

Charles. That was evidence that they were custodians of the key to the lock-up. It was not disputed that at the time the deceased was put in lock-up his eyes were normal. And last but not least, the deceased was alone in the lock-up.

C On the argument by the defence that relatives of the woman alleged to have been raped by the deceased may have perforated deceased's eyes, Mr Mwambe countered that this could not have been possible and referred the Court to the defence of the first appellant in the High Court on page 17 D of the proceedings in which he said inter alia:

`. . . I knew the woman who alleged that she was raped. I saw her relatives at the scene. I also saw relatives of the E deceased. Those people were saying that we who had arrested the deceased had killed him.'

This being the evidence of the first appellant the argument by the learned Defence Counsel that relatives of the woman the deceased was alleged to have raped may have perforated the deceased's eyes in anger, thereby causing his death, had no leg to stand on.

F The contents of the post mortem report - exh P1 regarding the cause of death which were not disputed by the defence in `the memorandum of matters not in dispute' were that the cause of death was due to `peripheral circulatory failure caused by bleeding and severe pain after perforation of the eyes by a sharp weapon'.

G Elaborating on the post mortem report the doctor, (PW1), said in his evidence inter alia:

`. . . In my opinion there was no evidence that the deceased had died from hanging - what I found around H deceased's neck was a piece of his shirt. That piece of cloth was just placed around the neck to fake hanging. There was no bruise around the neck. If the deceased had hanged himself, there could have been a mark around his neck. . . . The lungs were normal. There was no congestion of the lungs to indicate death by hanging.'

I Taking into account the evidence of the village secretary, (PW2), that he had ordered the appellants to guard the deceased who had been locked in the cell; his A evidence that he had left the keys to the lock-up with the appellants and that they guarded the deceased from the time he was put in lock-up up to the time he met his death; and the doctor's evidence that the cause of death was due to perforation of the deceased's eyes which led to peripheral circulatory failure as a result of neurologic shock we are far from being persuaded by the B learned Defence Counsel's argument that someone other that the appellants may have perforated the deceased's eyes and thereby caused his death.

We agree with Mr Mbezi's submission that anything is possible but on the facts of this case the C argument that the appellant's both eyes may have been perforated by sharp instruments on the floor after the body had fallen to the ground is, to say the least far-fetched and untenable.

As it was held by Lord Denning in Millier v Minister of Pensions (1): `The law would fail to protect the D community if it admitted fanciful possibilities to deflect the Court of Justices. If the evidence is so strong against a man as to leave only a remote possibility in his favour which can be dismissed with the sentence "of course it is possible but not in the least probable", the case is proved beyond E reasonable doubt.'

In the present case the circumstantial evidence irresistibly pointed to the appellants as the people who perforated the deceased's eyes. In doing so they clearly intended, at the very least, to cause him grievous harm. Their defence that the deceased had hanged himself was a clumsy attempt to F extricate themselves from their criminal acts.

We are satisfied in our own minds that on the evidence the learned Trial Judge was right in convicting the appellants of the offence of murder as charged. We agree with that the learned State G Attorney that the appeal has no merit and we accordingly order that it be dismissed in its entirety.

1993 TLR p224

A

[zRPz]SALIM SUNDERJI AND CAPITAL DEVELOPMENT AUTHORITY v SADRUDIN SHARIFF JAMAL 1993 TLR 224 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Mnzavas JA

B CIVIL APPLICATION NO. 10 OF 1993

25 October, 1993

C (From the Decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dodoma, Maina, J.)

Flynote

Court of Appeal Rules - Notice of Appeal - Service of Notice of Appeal - Proof of service of notice on the Respondent - Rule 77(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979.

D Court of Appeal Rules - Notice of Appeal and letter of application for copy of High Court proceedings - Non-service of Notice of Appeal and copy of application letter: consequences thereof - Rules 77(1) and 83(2) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979.

-Headnote

E The applicants sought an order striking out a Notice of Appeal filed by the respondent. To support their application they said that the respondent did not serve them with a copy of the Notice of Appeal as required by r. 77(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979 until four months after filing the Notice, and also that the respondent did not serve them with a copy of the letter applying for a copy of the F proceedings in the High Court in terms of r. 83(2) of the Rules. The respondent argued that the Notice of Appeal was served in time but forgot to ask the applicants to sign to acknowledge receipt of the Notice. He also argued that copies of the letter applying for a copy of the High Court proceedings G were sent to the applicants; but there were no signatures acknowledging receipt of copies of the said letter.

Held: (i) The argument that an advocate would, by an oversight, forget to ask the person served with a Notice of Appeal to sign a copy of the document in acknowledgement of receipt is not convincing to the court;

H (ii) Bare assertion by the respondent that he served the applicants with copies of the letter of application for a copy of the proceedings in the High Court without proof of such service cannot be believed by the Court.

(iii) Non-compliance with rr. 77(1) and 83(2) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979 nullifies a Notice of Appeal or an appeal.

Case Information

I Application allowed; Notice of Appeal struck out

1993 TLR p225

Cases referred to: A

1. D.P. Valambhia v. Transport Equipment Ltd., [1992] TLR 246.
2. Mohamed Raza Azizi & Another v. Akberal Habib Hassamal, CAT - Civil Appeal No. 21 of 1990 (unreported).
3. Grace Frank Ngowi v. Dr. Frank Israel Ngowi, [1984] TLR 120.

Mbezi for the applicants. B

M.N. Marando/Mpoki/Rutagatina for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, J.A.: In this application the applicants are seeking an order by this Court that the Notice of Appeal filed by the respondent be struck out because some essential step in the proceedings has C not been taken and/or has not been taken within the prescribed time as required by r 77(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979.

Secondly Mr Mbezi, learned Counsel for the applicants, submitted that the respondent did not serve the applicants with a copy for the letter he wrote to the Registrar seeking to be supplied with a copy D of the proceedings of the High Court as stipulated under r 83(2) of the Rules.

Elaborating on the argument that the provisions of r 77(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules were not complied with the learned Counsel told the Court that the respondent filed his Notice of Appeal in E Court on 10 June 1992 and that the Notice of Appeal was served on the applicants on 2 October 1992 and that the Notice of Appeal was served on the applicants on 2 October 1992, about four months from the time it was filed in Court on 10 June 1992. It was submitted that this was contrary to F the provisions of r 77(1) which required the respondent to serve the applicants with the Notice of F Appeal within seven days after the lodging of notice in Court.

As for the provisions of r 83(2) of the Court of Appeal Rules Mr Mbezi argued that the advocate, Mr Marando, who represented the respondent, did not send a copy of the letter he wrote to the Registrar G seeking for copy of proceedings to the applications; and that this omission went counter to the provisions of r 83(2) of the Rules.

The respondent in his counter affidavit argued that he in fact served the respondents with copy of Notice of Appeal but he inadvertently forgot to ask them to affix their signatures on the copies of the H Notice of Appeal. The applicants filed a counter affidavit denying that they were served with copy of the notice.

On the allegation that the respondent did not send to the applicants copy of the letter he wrote to the Registrar seeking for a copy of the proceedings in the High Court the respondent swore a counter I affidavit to the effect that his advocate, Mr Marando, sent him

A many copies of the letter he wrote to the Registrar seeking to be supplied with copy of proceedings in the High Court and that he served the applicants with copies of the letter. Mr Mbezi, learned Counsel for the applicants countered in his affidavit denying `having been served with any copy of Mr Marando's letter as alleged in para 4' of the respondent's counter affidavit and `put Mr B Jamal, the respondent in strict proof thereof'.

Mr Rutagatina who represented Mr Marando for the respondent did not have much to say regarding the applicant's assertion that the provisions of r 77(1) and r 83(2) of the Court of Appeal Rules had C not been complied with by the respondent. In concluding his submission the learned Counsel said: `My Lord if this Court finds that the two essential steps were not taken I pray that the respondent be entitled to reliefs as they stand by the decision of the High Court. We also pray that we be excused from costs.'

D After hearing both parties I am satisfied that there is constraining force in this application. If the respondent's argument as deposed by Mr Mpoki who at one time acted on behalf of Mr Marando for the respondent is to be believed one would have expected him to approach the advocates for the applicants, after he had discovered that they had not signed the notice in acknowledgement of E receipt and ask them to sign them. This, he did not do. Secondly I am not convinced by the argument that an advocate would by an oversight forget to ask the person served with a Notice of Appeal with any other important legal documents of similar nature to sign copy of the document in F acknowledgement of receipt.

On the evidence I agree with the learned Counsel for the applicants that the mandatory provisions of r 77(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules were not complied with.

G Coming to the argument that the respondent did not send copy of his application to the Registrar for copy of proceedings in the High Court to the applicants it is amply clear from the letter Ref MNM/SHARIFF dated 24 September 1992 written by Mr Marando, Counsel for the respondent, to the Registrar asking to be supplied with a copy of proceedings that it was only copied to the respondent, H Shariff Jamal. In the copy sent to Mr Shariff Jamal Mr Marando says to him - `Please follow up'.

The letter does not show that it was copied to the applicants. Nor does it show that Mr Jamal was asked to bring to the notice of applicants the contents of the letter. From the contents of the letter the I words - `Please follow up' merely urged Mr Jamal to follow up the application in the High Court.

Mr Jamal's mere deposition in his counter-affidavit that he received many copies and that he served A some of them to the advocates of the applicants has been denied by the learned Counsels.

This Court will not be entitled to believe the bare assertion by the respondent that he received many copies of the application to the Registrar and that he served the applicants with copies of the B application without proof of such service. There is a long and unbroken chain of authorities by this Court that non-compliance with the provisions of r 77(1) and r 83(2) of the Court of Appeal Rules nullifies a Notice of Appeal or an appeal. See the decisions of this Court in D P Valambhia v Transport Equipment Ltd (1), Mohamed Raza Azizi and Another v Akberal Habib Hassanal (2) and C Grace Frank Ngowi v Dr Fank Israel Ngowi (3) to mention but only a few of the decisions.

In the event the Notice of Appeal is clearly incompetent as some essential step has not been taken D and/or has not been taken within the prescribed time. The Notice of Appeal is accordingly struck out.

As for Mr Rugagatina's prayer that this Court makes an order that the respondent is entitled to the reliefs as found by the High Court it would be improper for this Court to deal with a matter which is not properly before it.

Mr Rutagatina's prayer that his client be excused from paying costs cannot, with respect, be E entertained. The law is that the party who wins in a suit is entitled to have his costs unless there are exceptional circumstances to the contrary. There are no such exceptional circumstances in this case. F

1993 TLR p228

A

[zRPz]THE MANAGER, NBC, TARIME v ENOCK M. CHACHA 1993 TLR 228 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Masanche J

B CIVIL APPEAL NO. 22 OF 1993

2 November, 1993

Flynote

C Civil Practice and Procedure - Ex-parte judgment - Grounds for setting aside an ex-parte judgment.

-Headnote

The appellant was sued by the respondent. On the date set for the hearing of the case the appellant did not appear. The Trial District Court, ordered the case to proceed ex parte the following day. The D case proceeded as ordered and judgment was entered for the respondent (plaintiff). The appellant unsuccessfully applied to the Court to set aside the ex-parte judgment and hence this appeal.

Held: The District Court was wrong to refuse to set aside the judgment it gave ex-parte because

E (a) assuming that the respondent was properly allowed to prove his case ex-parte, he did not prove his case on the balance of probability as required by law;

(b) the learned District Magistrate was enjoined to draw issues but in this case no issues were drawn; and

F (c) the central issue in the case, which was special damages, was not addressed.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Cases referred to:

1. Jayantilal G. Dave v. Business Machines Ltd., Civil Appeal No. 45 of 1973 (Kenya).
2. Felix M. Shirima v. Mohamed Farahani and another, HC, DSM, Civil Case 23 of 1981 (unreported).
3. Anglo-Cyprian Trade Agencies Ltd. v. Paphos Wine Industries Ltd [1951] 1 All ER 873.

November 2, 1993.

[zJDz]Judgment

Masanche, J.: The appellant, the manager of the National Bank of Commerce was sued by respondent, Enock Chacha in the District Court of Tarime, at Tarime. In short, it is alleged that the respondent had presented a cheque at the bank of the appellant. The cheque was of Shs 200,000/=. That cheque was dishonoured by the bank. The respondent contended that the cheque was dishonoured wrongly. The respondent therefore sued the bank for this `disgrace.' He asked to be paid damages to the tune of Shs 3,5 million.

The bank did not appear on the date fixed for the hearing of the case. The District Magistrate, Mr Malamsha ordered that the case should proceed to hearing ex-parte, the following day. The hearing was to commence on 27 January 1993. Indeed on that day, the respondent was called upon to adduce evidence. He did so. The learned Magistrate wrote a short judgment. He actually termed it a `ruling'. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff wholly as prayed.

On 18 March 1993, the appellant, through the Tanzania Legal Corporation, applied to have the attachment order which was issued against the bank stayed pending an application to set aside the ex-parte judgment entered on 27 January 1993. The application was granted. But the Court ordered that the bank deposit with the Court some Shs 3 million as security.

The actual application to set aside the ex-parte judgment entered on 27 January 1993 was heard on 24 April 1993. The appellants were not granted the application. They now appeal to this Court.

The respondent, in answer, to this application by the bank, to set aside the ex-parte judgment, informed the Court that the applicants were themselves to blame. He had obtained judgment and he was bound to apply for its execution. He argued that the appellants were late in applying to set aside the ex-parte judgment.

This appeal against the decision of the District Court, refusing to set aside the judgment it gave ex-parte, must be allowed. There are several reasons why this appeal should be allowed.

1. Assuming that the respondent was properly allowed to prove his case ex-parte, he did not prove his case on the balance of probability as required by law. It does not follow that since a party has been allowed to prove his case ex-parte, he can just casually go though his claims, in the hope that the Court will readily grant the prayer. A party who proceeds to prove his case ex-parte must prove his case on the required standard of the law. Where the proof falls short of the required standard, the court must dismiss the case (see the case of Javantlal G Dave v Business Machines Ltd (1)

2. Corollary to the above, Bahati J, has said this in Felix M Shirima v Mohamed Farahani and Another (2) It is a cardinal principal of law that in civil cases there must be proof on the balance of the probabilities. In this case, it cannot be said I

1993 TLR p230

MASANCHE J

A that the scanty evidence adduced in this Court proves in any way what is alleged in the plaint. There must be proof of the case on the standard by law which is on the balance of the probabilities even when a case proceeds ex-parte like in this case. . . .

(3) The case before the learned District Magistrate was a Civil Case and it was coming for B hearing albeit ex-parte. The learned District Magistrate was enjoined to draw issues. No issues were drawn as far as I can see in this file.

(4) The learned magistrate should have realised that the central issue in the case was special C damages. Special damages, in law need strict proof. As Devlin J said in the case of Anglo-Cyprian Trade Agencies Ltd v Paphos Wine Industries Ltd (3) at page 875:

`There exists an impression that, when pleading special damages, one can plead a certain figure, arrived at in some way, and one can then set up a lower figure in Court and seek to justify it. In my view that is not the proper way to plead special damages . . .'

All these reasons make it necessary for me to allow this appeal. As Mr Gallati has submitted, there is E a triable issue: it is that of special damages. The respondent alleged that because his Shs 200,000/= worth of cheque was not honoured, he has suffered special damages to the tune of Shs 3.5 million. That in itself, should have attracted the learned magistrate to make his discretion in favour of having the whole matter go on full trial.

F Appeal is allowed.

The case is remitted back to the District Court, where it should be heard inter-party. But the hearing inter-party should be before another Magistrate. The order of a deposit of Shs 3 million into Court is also set aside. The bank should have its money back.

G It is so ordered.

1993 TLR p231

A

[zRPz]ALLY JUMA MAWEPA v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 231 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 125 OF 1993 B

8 November, 1993

(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Nchalla, J.) C

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Assessors - Summing up to the Assessors - Court should not influence Assessors.
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted of murder and sentenced to death after his defences of drunkenness D and provocation were rejected by the Judge sitting with Assessors. The decision of the Court was based entirely on the credibility of the appellant as a witness. On appeal, the appellant's advocate criticised the Trial Judge for making certain comments during the summing up to the Assessors about the credibility of the appellant.
Held: (i) When summing up to the Assessors the Trial Judge should as far as possible desist from E disclosing his own views, or making remarks or comments which might influence the Assessors one way or another in making up their own minds about the issue or issues being left with them for consideration;

(ii) The assessors should be made to give their opinions independently, based on their own F perception and understanding of the case after the summing up; the Judge makes his views known only after receiving the opinions of the assessors and in the course of considering his judgment in the case;

(iii) Even though the Judge committed an error by commenting on the appellant's credibility, this G error did not really affect the opinion of the assessors; had it influenced their opinions, the trial would have been a nullity.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
Case referred to: H

1. Tulubuzya Biture v. Republic [1982] TLR 264.

D.N. Kapoor, for the appellant.
Mrs. M. Lyimo, for the Republic.
[zJDz]Judgment
Kisanga, J.A., read the following considered judgment of the Court: I
1993 TLR p232
KISANGA JA
A This appeal arises from the appellant's conviction for murder and the sentence of death passed on him by the High Court (Nchalla J) sitting at Arusha.
The brief facts were that the appellant and the deceased were co-workers at the National Milling Corporation in Arusha. They were both employed there as porters or collies and at the material time B they were also living in the same premises where the appellant had invited the deceased to come and share a room with him. On the material day the appellant attacked the deceased at night, cutting him with an axe twice on the head and killing him instantly. On the following day the appellant told C witnesses that the killed the deceased for stealing his (appellant's) mattress and a bucket some days prior the day of incident.
In his defence at the trial the appellant raised the defences of drunkenness and provocation. However, the Trial Judge sitting with his assessors rejected them and accordingly convicted him for D murder.

Before us the appellant was represented by Mr D N Kapoor, learned Advocate while Mrs M Lyimo, Senior State Attorney, appeared for the respondent Republic. Mr Kapoor filed three grounds of appeal E which he argued together, essentially contending that the defences of drunkenness and provocation were open to the appellant. His contention was strongly resisted by Mrs Lyimo.

As stated earlier the Trial Court duly considered these defences but rejected them; that decision F being based entirely on the credibility of the appellant as a witness. In the morning following the night of the incident the appellant told Joseph Haule (PW2) and Jumanne Kiyemi (PW3) that he had killed the deceased because he (the deceased) had stolen his bucket and a mattress. He duly produced the axe which he used in killing the deceased. Later on the same day he gave a similar account to G the policeman (PW1) who recorded his cautioned statement.

In his defence at the trial, however, the appellant said that he was drunk that night because he had taken lots of drinks. Elaborating on that he stated that on the day of the incident he drank from 6 pm H to 10 pm. He started off with what is popularly known as `moshi' or `gongo'. He consumed three big bottles - orange juice size - of this stuff and then switched over to various other types of drinks. To use his own words:

I `I took three bottles of gongo. Three bottles of the size of an orange juice bottle, that is the big bottles. . . . I also drank `Wanzuki'. . . . I also drank mbege, whisky, konyagi - every alcohol that you can think of. . . . I drink all these types of pombe every A day.'

Then upon his return home at 10 pm he said he noticed that his property had been stolen. This included his mattress, bedsheet, bucket and utensils, and when he asked the deceased, the B deceased said that he knew nothing about them. In addition the deceased told him not to ask him about the matter and further insulted him, `kuma ya mama yako, mimi sikukuibia vitu vyako'. Whereupon, the appellant says, he became angry, fetched an axe from under the bed and hacked him to death. C

The Trial Court duly considered the appellant's defence but rejected it. The learned Judge and his assessors did not believe that the appellant was drunk or that the deceased insulted him. Mr Kapoor contends that the Trial Court erred and urges us to find that the defences of drunkenness and provocation were open to his client. D

In rejecting the appellant's defence, the Trial Court took into account that on the day following the killing the appellant consistently explained to witnesses his reason for the killing. PW2 and PW3 had each asked the appellant the reason for the killing and the appellant's reply was that he killed the E deceased because he had stolen his property including a mattress and a bucket. Later on the same day the appellant made a detailed cautioned statement to the police officer (PW1) in which he gave the same reason for the killing, adding that the theft leading to this killing had taken place some days back. The appellant did not disclose or suggest to these witnesses that he was drunk or that he was insulted by the deceased. Indeed according to PW2, the appellant told him that when he (the F appellant) asked the deceased about the theft, the deceased simply laughed. And when PW1 specifically asked the appellant whether he was drunk at the time of the killing he said no, adding that he did not take any pombe that day. G

The Trial Court took the view that if it is true that the appellant was drunk or that the deceased had insulted him, he would have said so at the earliest opportunity when PW1, PW2 and PW3 questioned him about the incident. Since he did not do so but disclosed the defence only during the trial, the Court disbelieved him and found his defence to be an afterthought. In our view that H conclusion was amply supported by the evidence, and we can find no fault with it.
Mr Kapoor also criticised the Trial Judge for making certain comments during the summing up to the assessors about the cred- I
1993 TLR p234
KISANGA JA
A ibility of the appellant. The Trial Judge had remarked that the appellant's allegation that he had mixed all sorts of alcohol; mbege, gongo, whisky, konyagi and several others was a blatant lie. He made similar remarks about the appellant's claim that the deceased had insulted him, which the judge also said was a lie. Again the learned Judge commented on how the appellant in the course of B his defence at the trial prevaricated and indicated the reasons for such prevication by the appellant. For instance the appellant at first stated that the theft of his property had taken place a week before the killing but that on realizing that such evidence was dangerous he quickly changed and said that it C had occurred on the day of the killing.
Mr Kapoor vigorously submitted that such remarks amounted to a misdirection in that the Trial Judge had, in effect, made up the mind for the assessors that the appellant had told lies. Counsel went D further and submitted that such misdirection also, in effect, meant that the learned Judge tried the issues of drunkenness and provocation without the aid of the assessors. But the principle long established by this Court is that where the Trial Judge proceeded to consider and reject the E appellant's defence without the aid of assessors, then the appellant's conviction is a nullity. See for instance the case of Tulubuzya Biture v Republic (1). Accordingly Mr Kapoor urged us to declare the conviction of his client a nullity.
We have given due consideration to Mr Kapoor's submission. It seems however, that there is a F certain amount of misunderstanding here. Admittedly, the Trial Judge, in his summing up, did make remarks about the appellant's credibility to the effect that the appellant told lies. But he did not direct the assessors to reject or not to consider the appellant's defences of drunkenness and provocation. It cannot be said that the Trial Judge failed to leave those defences with the assessors for their consideration. Indeed a perusal of his summing up clearly shows that he expressly left those matters G to the assessors. This is born out by the last two paragraphs of his summing up in which after reviewing the evidence and explaining the defence of provocation, he said:
H `Considering the above evidence, gentleman assessors, whether the malice aforethought has been proved on the accused in the light of the various circumstances which I have given and explained to you from which malice aforethought can be inferred. Also consider whether the accused killed accidentally. Or whether he killed under I provocation. Or he killed under intoxication.

1993 TLR p235
KISANGA JA

I have said about that the element of accident is ruled out, as the accused himself also has not pursued it in his A defence at the trial. Then consider the element of intoxication. Has the accused drunk when he committed this offence? Is the accused's evidence on that fact believable: if you think and believe that the accused killed under intoxication then the provisions of s 14 of the Penal Code, cap. 16 will apply to him. Firstly you will have to say B whether the accused was so drunk that he did not know what he was doing, or if he did then he did not appreciate the results of his act. This means the accused will be treated like a person who kills while insane. Secondly, you will have to say whether due to intoxication the accused could not form the specific intention for the commission of C murder, in which case the accused will be found guilty of the lesser offence of manslaughter.

And the defence of provocation if successfully pleaded and proved, then the same reduces the offence of murder to that of manslaughter.' D

Thus it is important to distinguish between commenting on the appellant's credibility on the one hand, and on the other withdrawing the appellant's defence from consideration by the assessors or failing to leave such defence with the assessors for their consideration. All that the learned Trial Judge did E in his summing up to the assessors in this case was to comment on the appellant's credibility when he said that he (the appellant) had said was a lie. That did not amount to withdrawing the appellant's defences from consideration by the assessors, and upon reading the above quoted extract from the summing up, there can be no doubt whatsoever that the learned Judge did leave the defences of F drunkenness and provocation to the assessors for their consideration. Therefore, the question of nullifying the appellant's convictions as raised and canvassed by Mr Kapoor does not arise.

Before taking our leave of the matter we find it necessary to say a few words for the benefit of those G who preside over trials with the aid of assessors. Our observation relates to the aspect where the Judge expresses or arises his own views when summing up to the assessors. Where this happens, as indeed in the present case, we think that it can influence the assessors in making up their own H minds on the issue, or issues being left with them for consideration. For in practice assessors have high regard and respect for the Judge and his opinion because the Judge is a learned and experienced man in legal matters and also in human affairs. As such one would rarely expect assessors to come up with an opinion different from that expressed by the Judge on a particular matter. I

1993 TLR p236
KISANGA JA

A On that account it is considered appropriate that when summing up to assessors the Trial Judge should as far as possible desist from disclosing his own views, or making remarks or comments which might influence the assessors one way or the other in making up their own minds about the issue or issues being left with them for consideration. The summing up should be unbiased and B impartial such that it leaves the assessors to make up their own minds independently. For instance where, as in this case, the accused had given conflicting accounts of the circumstances surrounding the killing, the Trial Judge should sum up and explain the conflicting accounts to the assessors without showing his own opinion or inclination one way or other; to make known his own views, as he C did, as this stage would be going too far. He should then ask the assessors to decide whether or not in the light of the conflicting accounts, and considering all the circumstances the accused could be believed and if so which account was or was likely to be true. The assessors should be made to give their opinions independently, based on their own perception and understanding of the case after D the summing up. The Judge makes his own views known only after receiving the opinions of the assessors and in the course of considering his judgment in the case.

E Now the pertinent question which arises is if the Trial Judge properly directed the assessors without commenting in the manner he did on the appellant's credibility, the assessors would have come to a different conclusion ie that the appellant was drunk and that he was provoked by insults F uttered by the deceased at the time of the killing. We are firmly of the view that having regarding to the material on the record the assessors would have come to the same conclusion as they did. For even on a cursory glance at the evidence on record, it is evident that what the appellant stated in Court as his defence was demonstrably false. Therefore the error committed by the learned Judge G did not really affect the opinion of the assessors. However, it is necessary to emphasize the need to adhere to the practice as stated above, for failure to do so may in a proper case result in declaring the trial a nullity on appeal.

In the result we can find no justification for interfering with the appellant's conviction for murder. That H conviction is upheld and, therefore, the appeal fails and is dismissed in its entirety.

1993 TLR p237

A

[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v SABINIS INYASI TESHA AND RAPHAEL J. TESHA 1993 TLR 237 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Mfalila JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 127 OF 1993 B

8 November, 1998

(From the acquittal by the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Nchalla, J.) C

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Appeals against Interlocutory Orders - Whether appellable by the Director of Public Prosecutions - Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979, s 6(2). D

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Incomplete trial within a trial Whether Court can make a ruling on it.

Natural Justice - The right to be head in criminal trials - The right of the prosecution to be heard.

-Headnote

The appellant was aggrieved by the ruling of the Trial Court that the respondents had no case to E answer to the charge of manslaughter. Three grounds of appeal were advanced: firstly, refusal of the Judge to admit extra-judicial statements of both respondents and the cautioned statement of the first respondent; secondly, refusal to give the appellant right to reply to objections by the respondents' advocate; and lastly, the ruling of no prima facie case. F

Held: (i) Since the Justice of the Peace was the only witness in the trial within a trial, and his testimony was not controverted even by the respondents, and since the Trial Judge rejected his evidence, the trial within a trial was incomplete; therefore, the Judge erred in making a G ruling on it;

(ii) It is a cardinal principle of natural justice that a party should not be condemned unheard; the appellant was not given an opportunity to respond to the allegation that the cautioned statement made by one of the respondents was illegally obtained;

(iii) Failure to conduct a second trial within a trial was a fundamental error; H

(iv) The D.P.P has the right to appeal against an interlocutory order in criminal proceedings; it is only the accused person who does not have such a right.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. The proceedings are quashed and a retrial ordered before another Judge. I

1993 TLR p238

A Cases referred to:

1. General Medical Council v Spackman [1943] AC 627.

2. Hypolito Cassiano De Souza v Chairman and Members of the Tanga Town Council [1961] EA 377.

3. Alois Kula and Another v Republic, Criminal Appeal No. 120 of 1990 (unreported).

B J. Mono, for the appellant.

C.J. Maruma, for the respondents.

[zJDz]Judgment

C Ramadhani, J.A., read the following considered judgment of the Court:

The High Court of Tanzania at Arusha (Nchalla J), on 4 November 1992, made a ruling that the two respondents, Sabinis Inyasi Tesha and Raphael Jacob Tesha, had no case to answer. Thus they were acquitted of the charge of manslaughter c/s 195 of the Penal Code.

D That ruling aggrieved the Republic and so the Director of Public Prosecutions has come up with this appeal. At the hearing Mr Mono, the learned Principal State Attorney, appeared on behalf of the appellant Republic, while Mr Maruma learned Counsel, represented both respondents, just as he had done at the trial.

E Mr Mono filed three grounds of appeal. First he attacked the refusal of the learned Trial Judge to admit as evidence the extra-judicial statements of both respondents and the cautioned statement of the first respondent. Secondly, Mr Mono said that Nchalla J erred when he refused to give DPP the F right to reply to the objections of Mr Maruma to the production of the cautioned statement of the first respondent. Lastly it was submitted that the ruling of no prima facie case was wrong since the evidence of the remaining prosecution witness PW1 was sufficient to make out a case for the respondents to answer.

G In the course of hearing the appeal, four fundamental omissions vividly stood out, and Mr Maruma was very quick to admit them when he came to address the Court. We intend to dispose of this appeal in those four errors.

H Firstly, the record is patently clear that the trial within a trial that was conducted was incomplete and yet the learned Trial Judge made a ruling on it. Secondly, the DPP was denied his right of reply after the defence made its objection. Thirdly a second trial within a trial was not held while it ought to have been conducted. Lastly the DPP was denied a stay of proceedings he requested so that he I could appeal against the rejection of the cautioned statement of the first respondent.

1993 TLR p239

RAMADHANI JA

Both respondents recorded extra-judicial statements before a Justice of the Peace (PW3). When A these statements were about to be tendered as exhibits, Mr Maruma objected. So a trial within a trial was held. PW3 became the first prosecution witness in the trial within a trial. In fact PW3 was the only witness. After examination-in-chief, cross-examination and re-examination the learned Trial B Judge went on to make his ruling rejecting both statements. What the Justice of the Peace deposed was not controverted even by the respondents. We just wonder on what other evidence did the learned Judge reject that of the Justice of the Peace. This is why we say that the trial within a trial was incomplete. C

The first respondent had also recorded a cautioned statement before PW4 and when that was about to be tendered, the defence objected alleging that s 53 to s 58 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 had not been complied with. After that address by Mr Haruma, the learned Judge made his ruling D rejecting the cautioned statement for failure to comply with the mandatory provisions of the Criminal Procedure Act.

Mr Mono is recorded to have said:

`I have not been given opportunity to reply to the objection by my learned friend on the admissibility of the statement which PW4 recorded from first accused. For that reason I apply to appeal against the ruling. The proceedings be E stayed.'

Thus Mr Mono registered two points. Firstly he pointed out that he was denied his right of reply. Secondly he wanted to exercise his right of appeal and so asked for the proceedings to be stayed. F

We shall deal with the first point first. With respect, the learned Judge erred. It is a cardinal principle of natural justice that a party should not be condemned unheard. In the issue of objecting to the admission of the cautioned statement, tables were turned; Mr Maruma was the prosecutor accusing G Mr Mono of producing a document which had been illegally obtained. Mr Mono had to defend the Republic against that allegation but was not given opportunity.

Lord Wright had this to say in General Medical Council v Spackman (1), at 644: H

`If principles of natural justice are violated in respect of any decision, it is indeed immaterial whether the same decision would have been arrived at in the absence of the departure from the essential principles of justice. That decision must be declared to be no decision.' I

1993 TLR p240

RAMADHANI JA

A That was quoted with approval by the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in De Souza v Tanga Town Council (2) at 388. We think it is a sound principle.

However, in the present case, `in the absence of the departure' from that rule of natural justice, B namely the right to be heard, the learned Judge would not have arrived at the same decision. More likely he would have ordered a trial within a trial which is the test a statement has to pass before it is admitted as evidence. So the departure here is even more offensive. This is the third fundamental error: the failure to conduct a second trial within a trial.

C To go back to the second point of Mr Mono, that is, his request for staying the proceedings so that he could appeal, the learned Judge responded with the following order:

`As the ruling is on an interlocutory point I rule out the application to stay the proceedings. I order accordingly.'

D Mr Mono complied in the only way open to him: `In that case my Lord, I close the Prosecution case.' That, of course paved the way for the ruling of no case to answer which gave birth to this appeal.

E At the appeal Mr Mono submitted that the learned Judge erred in his opinion that an interlocutory order in criminal proceedings is not appealable by the DPP. He relied on our decision in Alois Kula v Republic (3). The learned Principal State Attorney said that the DPP has a right of appeal even against such orders. With respect, that is so. In Alois Kula (3) we were just interpreting the F provisions of s 6(2) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979 which says:

`(2) Where the Director of Public Prosecutions is dissatisfied with any acquittal, sentence or order made or passed by the High Court or by a subordinate court exercising extended powers he may appeal to the Court of Appeal G against the acquittal, sentence or order, as the case may be, on any ground of appeal.'

Here the DPP wanted to appeal against the order of the learned Judge in rejecting the cautioned H statement of the first respondent. That order was appealable by the DPP. It is only the accused person who does not have a right of appeal against an interlocutory order in criminal proceedings. That is what we decided in Alois Kula (3).

The learned Judge certainly had his reasons, rightly or wrongly, in conducting the proceedings in the way he did, however, the four errors pointed out are uncomfortably glaring. Justice must be seen to I be done both to the accused person as well as to the prosecution.

1993 TLR p241

Here it cannot be said to have been so on the part of the Republic. A

As Mr Mono prayed the only remedy is to direct a new trial. The proceedings are quashed and a retrial by conducted by another Judge. It is so ordered.

The appeal is allowed. B

1993 TLR p241

C

[zRPz]GODSON HEMEDI v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 241 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 114 OF 1993 D
8 November, 1993
(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Same, Kannonyele, PRM, Ext. Jur.) E
Flynote
Evidence - Alibi - Supported by witnesses of both defence and prosecution - Rejected - Whether properly rejected. F Evidence - Dying declaration - Corroboration - Corroborative evidence weak and bearing unsatisfactory features - Whether can corroborate.
-Headnote
The appellant was charged with and convicted of murder, and sentenced to death. His conviction G was based on the dying declaration of the deceased who consistently mentioned him as her assaillant. The Trial Judge was satisfied that the dying declaration was sufficiently corroborated by the evidence of PW1. During the trial the appellant had raised the defence of alibi which the learned Trial Judge rejected.
On appeal the decision of the Trial Judge was challenged on two grounds: firstly that the dying H declaration was uncorroborated and secondly that the appellant's defence of alibi was wrongly rejected.
Held: (i) The dying declaration of the deceased and the evidence of PW1 involve weakness and unsatisfactory features which sufficiently render such declaration unreliable and make PW1's evidence incapable of supplying the necessary corroboration to it; I
1993 TLR p242
A (ii) In the light of the weakness of the prosecution case the appellant's alibi supported by his own witness and that of the prosecution was wrongly rejected.
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
No case referred to:
B Mchami, for the appellant.
Mrs. M. Lyimo, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
C Kisanga, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the Court.
The appellant was convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code and sentenced to death by the High Court (Kannonvale PRM Extended Jurisdiction) sitting at same. He has now appealed against both conviction and sentence. In this Court he is represented by Mr Mchami, learned D advocate while the respondent Republic is represented by Mrs M Lyimo, learned Senior State Attorney.

The facts of the case are short although not simple. On the day of the incident the deceased, an old E lady and her husband (PW1) were at their home talking to their visitor (PW2) who had just arrived. Both the husband (PW1) and the visitor (PW2 were inside the house while the deceased was outside. The time was about 4 pm.

F While the conversation between the three was going on, the deceased was suddenly attacked. She sustained a cut wound on her left loin causing haemorrhagic shock ultimately leading to her death only shortly afterwards. The Prosecution's case was that it is the appellant who inflicted the cut wound which caused the death of the deceased.

G The appellant denied the charge and put up an alibi.

The appellant's conviction was based on a dying declaration of the deceased which the Trial Court found to be sufficiently corroborated. However Mr Mchami for the appellant has submitted that the said dying declaration was uncorroborated and that the appellant's defence of alibi was wrongly H rejected.

PW1 and PW2 testified that during the conversation while the two of them were seated inside and the deceased outside the house the deceased was suddenly attacked following which she cried out loudly and mentioned the appellant, her nephew, as her assailant. Both witnesses say they went out I immediately and saw the deceased at a distance running away. PW1 added that he saw the appellant about fifteen paces away entering his house and holding a panga. PW3, the deceased's sister and A mother of the appellant testified that on hearing the alarm coming from the deceased's house which was about twenty paces away she went out and found the deceased who had sustained a cut wound and who told her that the appellant had cut her with a panga. The deceased repeated this to the B policeman (PW4) who visited her at the hospital and recorded her statement.

That is essentially what constituted the prosecution case against the appellant. However it seems that there is substance in Mr Mohami's submission that the conviction is unsupportable. We think that there are gaps or unsatisfactory features in the evidence which tend to render the deceased's C dying declaration unreliable.

According to the policeman (PW4) and the post mortem examination report, it would appear that the deceased was attacked from the back while facing in the direction of and talking to PW1 and PW2 who were seated inside the house. PW4 said that the deceased told him that upon her attack she D turned and saw the appellant disappearing. That is to say, she only saw the assailant from the back. The question is whether in the circumstances of this case the deceased correctly identified her assailant. It is conceded that the appellant was well known to the deceased prior to the day of the E incident and that the incident itself took place during day-light at about 4 pm. But the attack on the deceased which was sudden and from the back must have caused her great shock, fear and confusion. In such a state of great shock, fear and confusion we think that the deceased's identification of her assailant who was running away and whom she could only see from the back F cannot be all that reliable.

There was evidence that the deceased was aware of some rumours in the village that the appellant had alleged that the deceased practiced witchcraft on him. That may well have influenced the G deceased in coming to a wrong conclusion that she saw and identified the appellant as her assailant who had come to settle scores with her.

The evidence of PW1 which according to the Trial Court corroborated the dying declaration, leaves much to be desired. The witness stated that following the loud cry by the deceased that the appellant H had cut her with a panga he and his visitor (PW2) immediately went out of the house. He saw the deceased at a distance running away and also the appellant entering his house carrying a panga. However PW2 who confirms that he came out immediately following the deceased's cry, did not see the appellant around. Like PW1 he saw the deceased at some distance running away but to use his I own words:

1993 TLR p244

KISANGA JA

A `I had not seen the attacker that day nor did I see any other person outside there other than the attacked woman.'

Now if PW1 claims to have seen the appellant entering his house while carrying a panga, why was the appellant not also seen by PW2 who observed the incident from the same vantage point? B According to PW2, PW1 did not tell him that he saw the deceased's attacker. The question is: since both witnesses were together, why did PW1 not point out to PW2 that he had spotted the culprit?

According to PW1 he followed the direction taken by the deceased until he reached the police station C and on his return home the children told him that they saw the appellant going away from his house. None of these children was called to testify on this point which was of crucial importance in assessing the veracity and accuracy of PW1 as a witness. The question is: why were these children D not called? And if they were called can one say that they would necessarily support the claim that the appellant went out of his house so soon after the attack on the deceased?

There is no evidence as to whether or not the appellant's house was searched for the panga (the E murder weapon) which PW1 allegedly saw the appellant taking into the house. The panga was obviously relevant because it might have had blood stains which would provide a strong link between the appellant and the attack on the deceased. Then the question is: if the appellant's house was not searched for the panga why was this? And if a search was conducted but no panga was found in the F house, what value can one put on PW1's evidence that he saw the appellant entering his house with a panga?

Then there was evidence that after a while the appellant returned to his house and that PW1 on G seeing him, sent for the police who came to arrest him. The question is: if the appellant had gone out in the first instance what should make him return to the place so soon afterwards? Since the deceased cried out loudly mentioning the appellant as the assailant, the appellant clearly knew that he was then a wanted man. Now if he had managed to escape arrest in the first instance why should H he bring himself back to the obvious danger?

These are some of the matters which in our view increasingly render the evidence of PW1 unreliable. In holding this view we take into account that PW1 is an old man of about seventy years who admitted having poor eye-sight. Although he claimed that this weakness is limited only to his I ability to read, we think that he was merely trying to play down the problem, having regard to the evidence of PW2 to the effect that A he saw no one else around except the appellant who was running away. We also bear in mind that PW2, being the husband of the deceased, may have exaggerated his evidence. Upon hearing the deceased mentioning the appellant as her assailant, he might have been tempted to embellish his B story by claiming that he actually saw the appellant in order to make it more easily acceptable and hence to ensure that the culprit has been found.

1993 TLR p245

KISANGA JA

At the commencement of the trial the appellant in terms of 194(4) of the Criminal Procedure Act gave notice of an intended alibi. Consistent with such notice he stated in his defence that on the day of the C incident he and his brother had left their village in the morning for another village, some distance away, called Vujo where they carried on the business of burning charcoal and they did not return home until around 7 pm. The alibi was only supported by his own brother and witness (DW2) and D also by his mother who had given evidence for the prosecution (PW3). Her evidence was to the effect that on the material day the appellant and his brother (DW2) had left home in the morning for charcoal burning business and that she did not see them again for the rest of that day. In the light of E the weaknesses in the prosecution case as pointed out above we think that the appellant's alibi supported as it was by his own witness and that of the prosecution was wrongly rejected.

In upholding Mr Mchami's submission, we find that the dying declaration of the deceased and the F evidence of PW1 involve weaknesses and unsatisfactory features which sufficiently render such declaration unreliable and make PW1's evidence incapable of supplying the necessary corroboration to it. In the result the appeal is allowed. The conviction is quashed and sentence set aside. The appellant is to be set free forthwith unless he is otherwise lawfully held in custody. G

1993 TLR p246

A

[zRPz]HILDA ABEL v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 246 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Lubuva JJA

B CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 119 OF 1993

8 November, 1993

(From the conviction and sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Moshi, Mroso, J.)

Flynote

C Criminal Law - Murder - Defence of insanity - Person suffering from defective reasoning due to delusion but capable of understanding what she was doing - Whether defence of insanity applies - Penal Code, s 13.

D Evidence - Expert evidence - Evidence by medical expert - Whether courts are bound by such testimony.

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted of murder and sentenced to death. At her trial, she raised the defence E of insanity. The doctor who examined her reported that she was insane at the time of the alleged murder as she was suffering from defective reasoning due to delusion of thought and imperative hallucination. After analysing and evaluating the evidence and directing himself on the cautioned statement of the appellant in which she admitted killing the deceased and gave a detailed account of F the incident, the Trial Judge held that though the appellant was mentally disturbed at the time, she was sane within the meaning of s 13 of the Penal Code. The appellant appealed.

Held: (i) Insanity within the context of section 13 of the Penal Code is a question of fact which could be inferred from the circumstances of the case and the conduct of the person at the material time;

G (ii) Courts are not bound to accept medical expert's evidence if there are good reasons for not doing so;

(iii) As the law now stands in Tanzania, though the appellant may well have been under diminished responsibility, no destruction could be made in terms of criminal responsibility; there is need to update the law in this field.

Case Information

H Appeal dismissed.

Case referred to:

1. Agnes Doris Liundi v Republic [1980] TLR 46.

I L. Ojare, for the appellant.

Mrs. Lyimo, for the respondent.

1993 TLR p247

[zJDz]Judgment

Lubuva, J.A., read the following considered judgment of the Court: A

The appellant was charged with and convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code. She was sentenced to death by the High Court (Mroso J) sitting at Moshi and is now appealing against both conviction and sentence. Before this Court the appellant was represented by Mr Loomu Ojare B learned Advocate and Mrs Mary Lyimo learned Senior State Attorney appeared for the respondent Republic.

The facts are simple and are not in dispute. They may briefly be summarised as follows: The victim of the tragic death was a three and a half year old boy, one Bethlehem John. On the fateful day, (5 C May 1985) while the parents of the deceased John Urio (PW2) and Advesta w/o John (PW3) were away the appellant came with a bill-hook hidden in her clothes with which she (appellant) hacked the deceased to death. The deceased was then in the company of his elder sisters Judica John (PW6), D Doreen and Regina. Deceased was the youngest of them all. Immediately after the tragic incident the appellant went to her father's house in the neighbourhood where she cleaned and hid the bill-hook, the weapon used in the murder. Thereafter she went to hide herself at the house of her E aunt in Kondeni Village nearby from where she was arrested the following day. Two days after the incident, the appellant made a cautioned statement in which she admitted having killed the deceased in revenge against Advesta John (PW3) the deceased's mother. In the cautioned statement the appellant gave a detailed clear account of the entire sequence of the incident. The statement was F admitted in evidence at the trial (exh P1).

At the trial, the appellant denied her involvement in the offence. As the main line of defence was insanity, the appellant was committed to Isanga Institution for examination in order to determine G whether she was mentally sound at the time of committing the offence. Dr Ngonyani, the Specialist Psychiatrist at Isanga Institution, Dodoma duly reported on the appellant's condition. It was the opinion of the doctor that the appellant was insane at the time of the alleged murder. According to the doctor the appellant was suffering from defective reasoning due to delusion of thought and imperative H auditory hallucination. The learned Trial Judge having analysed and evaluated the evidence and directing himself on the cautioned statement as well as the defence of insanity raised held that though the appellant was mentally disturbed at the time, still she was sane within the meaning of s 13 of the Penal Code. At the I

1993 TLR p248

LUBUVA JA

A hearing of this appeal the appellant through the learned Advocate Mr Loomu Ojare, essentially raised one ground of appeal. He complained that the learned Trial Judge erred in law and fact in not holding that the appellant was entitled to the defence of insanity. Mr Loomu Ojare strongly urged that B in the first place, from the initial stages there was evidence (PF 3 at Mawenzi hospital) to show that the appellant was mentally ill. Secondly, the Isanga Institution's psychiatrist report on her mental condition at the material time showed that she was insane at the time the offence is alleged to have been committed. It was his submission that the Trial Court should have accepted the defence of C insanity. It was, the learned Advocate further argued that at the time when the appellant committed the offence she knew what she was doing but did not know that it was wrong. In support of this argument, the learned Advocate relied on the provisions of s 13 of the Penal Code Chapter 16 of the D Laws of Tanzania wherein it is provided that:

> `A person is not criminally responsible for an act or omission if at the time of doing the act or making the omission he is through any disease affecting his mind incapable of understanding what he is doing, or of knowing that he E ought not to do the act or make the omission.'

It was the learned Advocate's complaint that the learned Trial Judge did not address himself on the aspect of insanity touching on whether the appellant knew that she ought not to do what she was F doing. The Trial Court merely concerned itself with the issue of whether the appellant knew what she was doing the learned Advocate further complained. This, the learned advocate submitted was a narrow and restrictive approach on the question of insanity because an insane person suffering from G some hallucination may well carry out murderous acts but may not know such acts are wrongful.

For the Respondent Republic Mrs Mary Lyimo learned Senior State Attorney supported the conviction and urged that the appeal be dismissed. It was Mrs Lyimo's contention that the Trial Court while accepting the Psychiatrist's report on the mental condition of the appellant at the material time H correctly held that though she was suffering from defective reasoning due to delusion, still she was sane and therefore was properly convicted upon the evidence available. The learned Senior State Attorney further submitted that the conduct of the appellant immediately before and after the incident indicates that she knew what she was doing. For instance, the appellant came to the scene of I murder hiding the bill-hook. Furthermore, Mrs Lyimo submitted that after commission of the act she returned to her father's house A where she cleaned the bill-hook and hid it. She (appellant) then went to hide at the house of her aunt at Kondeni from where she was arrested. Mrs Lyimo finally argued that in the cautioned statement which was taken two days after the incident, the appellant gives a detailed account of all that had happened giving reasons why she had set about killing the deceased. All these Mrs Lyimo, learned B Senior State Attorney urged was clear testimony of the fact that the appellant was legally capable of appreciating the nature of her action at the time. The conviction was, according to Mrs Lyimo properly founded. C

We have given due consideration to the submissions of both learned Counsel for the appellant and respondent Republic respectively. With respect, we are unable to agree with the submission by the learned Advocate Mr Loomu Ojare for the appellant that the Trial Court should have upheld the D defence of insanity. The evidence as believed and accepted by the Trial Court was such that the appellant was at the time not insane within the context of s 13 of the Penal Code. She knew what she was doing. This is a question of fact which could be inferred from the circumstances of the case and the conduct of the appellant at the material time. There was ample evidence to show that the E appellant came with a bill-hook hidden in her clothes; the appellant's quick retreat to her father's house with the bill-hook soon after the commission of the offence, the cleaning of the bill-hook and the subsequent hiding of it followed by her hiding at the house of her aunt at Kondeni until the time of F her arrest. All this goes to show that the appellant knew and understood the nature of what she had done and the consequences of such an act. We are of the view that the totality of evidence is such that the Trial Judge correctly concluded that the appellant knew as well that it was wrong for her to do the act. On the point the learned Trial Judge can hardly be faulted. Apart from the conduct of the G appellant immediately before and after the incident there was the evidence of the cautioned statement which was admitted at the trial (exh P1). Though at the trial there was an attempt by the appellant to repudiate the cautioned statement, it was nevertheless properly admitted as there was H sufficient and independent evidence to support and corroborate it. In the statement, the appellant quite clearly states that she had killed the deceased as a revenge against Advesta the deceased's mother (PW3) on suspicion of witchcraft. It is therefore quite clear that on the basis of the cautioned statement in which the appellant sets out in detail the motive behind the murder of the I

1993 TLR p250

LUBUVA JA

A deceased as well as the conduct of the appellant immediately prior and after the incident the Trial Judge concluded that the appellant was sane at the time of the commission of the offence. We are satisfied that the learned Judge sufficiently analysed and addressed himself on the law and evidence relating to the defence of insanity when he concluded by saying `all this suggests that she must have B known that what she did was wrong'. We can find no ground for the submission by Mr Loomu Ojare learned Advocate for the appellant that the Trial Judge did not address himself on the aspect whether the appellant knew that she was doing wrong.

C Finally we would wish to make an observation on medical expert's evidence. This point was touched upon by Mrs Lyimo the learned Senior State Attorney at the hearing of this appeal. She stated that the medical expert's report is not binding on the Court and so it's acceptability or D otherwise depends on the circumstances of the case. In the instant case, the Trial Judge while accepting the psychiatrist's report as to the mental condition of the appellant at the time of the incident, he came to the conclusion that she was nevertheless sane. The difference lies in the conclusion arrived at. On the basis of this it is imperative to restate the legal position that the courts are not bound to accept a medical expert's evidence if there are good reasons for not doing so. We E respectively uphold Mrs Lyimo's submission on this point.

As regards the status of the law in Tanzania in connection with diminished responsibility and insanity, F this Court has had occasion to make some remarks on the matter in the case of Agnes Doris Liundi v Republic (1) where we observed that there is the need to have the law updated in this field. In this case the learned trial Judge has come to the conclusion that though the appellant may well have been under diminished responsibility still the law being what it is, no distinction could be made G in terms of criminal responsibility. With respect, we are in agreement with the views expressed by the learned Trial Judge on this point. Once again we would draw the attention of the authorities concerned to the need to take appropriate legislative measures to amend the law in order to conform with current needs as intimated.

H In the result we are satisfied that the Trial Court properly analysed and evaluated the evidence of both the Prosecution and the Defence on the issue of insanity and came to the right conclusion. The appellant's conviction was well founded. We find no reason to interfere. Accordingly the appeal is I dismissed in its entirety.

1993 TLR p251

A

[zRPz]MICHAEL MAPUNDA v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 251 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 118 OF 1993 B
8 November, 1993
(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzaniaat Arusha, Mushi, J.) C
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Minimum Sentence for corrupt transactions - Sections 5(d) and 4(a) of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972.
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted by the Resident Magistrate's Court of soliciting and receiving a bribe of D Shs 1,000/= contrary to s 3(1) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1971, and sentenced to five years imprisonment. His conviction and sentence were upheld by the High Court. He appealed further.
Held: The minimum sentence for corrupt transactions under s 4(a) of the Minimum Sentences Act, E 1972, where the amount of money involved does not exceed Shs 5,000/= is three years imprisonment.
Case Information
Appeal against conviction dismissed.
Sentence reduced to three years.
No cases referred to. F
J. Mono, for the Republic.
[zJDz]Judgment
Ramadhani, J.A., read the following considered judgment of the Court: G
The appellant, Michael Mapunda was an inspector with the Municipal Council of Arusha. He was convicted by the Resident Magistrate's Court of Arusha of two counts of corrupt transactions c/s 3(1) H of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1971. The learned Resident Magistrate found that the appellant solicited and did receive a bribe of Shs 1,000/=. He was given a custodial sentence of five years for each count to run concurrently. His appeal to the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha (Mushi J) was dismissed in its entirety. This is, therefore, his second appeal. I
1993 TLR p252
RAMADHANI JA
A The appellant, just as before the two lower courts, appeared in person while the respondent Republic was represented by Mr Mono, Principal State Attorney. The only point of law in this appeal is the legality of the sentence.
The learned Resident Magistrate in passing the sentence said:
B `Accused is sentenced to serve the statutory sentence of five years on each count . . .'.
He was not mindful of citing the relevant section he relied upon for `the statutory sentence'. C Unfortunately, the High Court, too, did not address itself to the sentence. The learned Judge reviewed the evidence, found the conviction above-board and, without a word on the sentence, dismissed the appeal though severity of the sentence was ground ten of the appeal.

D Section 56(1) of the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act 13 of 1984 provides that all offences contained in the First Schedule to that Act are economic offences. Bribery and Corruption under the Prevention of Corruption Act 16 of 1991 are mentioned in item 2 of that First Schedule. So the appellant has been convicted of economic offences the maximum punishment of which is fixed E by s 59(2) of Act 13 of 1984 to be fifteen years. The minimum punishments for such offences are contained in the Minimum Sentences Act 1 of 1972. Where the amount of money involved is over Shs 5,000/=, s 5(d) of that Act prescribes a minimum term of imprisonment for five years. That is F probably what the learned Resident Magistrate termed `the statutory sentence of five years'. However, that prescription does not apply to the appellant since the amount he obtained was just Shs 1,000/=. He falls under the provisions of s 4(a) of the Minimum Sentences Act which says:

G `4. Where any person is, after the date on which this Act comes into operation, convicted by a court of a schedules offence, whether that offence was committed before or after such date, the court shall sentence such person to a term of imprisonment which shall not be less than -

H (a) where the offence is an offence specified in the First Schedule to this Act, three years;'

Now, the two counts under s 3 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1971 of which the appellant has I been convicted are in item 8 of the First Schedule of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972. That is why we have said that the appellant falls under s 4(a) of the latter Act. The minimum sentence then A is three years.

We, therefore, agree with Mr Mono that the punishment awarded were illegal. We set them aside and give a sentence of 3 years imprisonment for each count and order them to run concurrently. B

The appeal against conviction is dismissed but that against sentence is allowed to the extent described above. The appellant is to serve a term of three years from 4 March 1992 the date he was first sentenced. It is so ordered. C

1993 TLR p253

D

[zRPz]NAOCHE OLE MBILE v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 253 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 129 OF 1993 E

8 November, 1993

(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Munuo, J.) F

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Accused convicted without having been arraigned - Whether proper - Section 228 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Powers of Appeal Court where trial was a nullity - Whether Court of G Appeal can order re-trial - Rule 36 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979.
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted by the Economic Crime Court in absentia. In fact, the entire H proceedings were conducted in the complete absence of the appellant from the court room, i.e. he was convicted without having been arraigned.
Held: (i) One of the fundamental principles of our criminal justice is that at the beginning of a criminal trial the accused must be arraigned, i.e. the Court has to put the charge or charges to him I and require him to plead;
(ii) Non-compliance with the requirement of arraignment of an accused person renders the trial a nullity;
1993 TLR p254
A (iii) The Court of Appeal has discretion under Rule 36 of the Court of Appeal Rules to order retrial.
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
No case referred to.
B Mrs. Sumari, for Republic.
[zJDz]Judgment
Kisanga, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:
C The appellant was convicted by the Economic Crimes Court (Munuo J (Mrs)) for cattle theft contrary to s 56(1) and s 59(2) of the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act 13 of 1984, read together with para 12(1) of the First Schedule to that Act, and was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment. He has now appealed. In this Court and also in the Court below he was D unrepresented. Mrs Sumari, learned State Attorney, appeared before us for the respondent Republic.
Mrs Sumari did not seek to support appellant's conviction. She submitted that the conviction was bad E because the appellant was given no opportunity to answer the charge or to defend himself to it. With respect to the learned State Attorney, we entirely agree.
The entire proceedings were conducted in the complete absence of the appellant from the court F room. The case was called on for hearing on two different dates. The appellant was absent on both occasions. On the second occasion the Court, after endorsing on the file that the accused was absent and at large, proceeded to conduct what was really a mockery of a trial by reading out the charges and recording pleas thereto. The record reads as follows:
G `Charge read over in absentia and plea likewise in the following words:
1st Count: Not true
2nd Count: Not true
H Entered as a plea of Not Guilty in the absence of the accused persons' (sic).
The so called trial proceeded to conclusion and the appellant was convicted on the first count.

One of the fundamental principles of our criminal justice is that at the beginning of a criminal trial the I accused must be arraigned. That is to say the Court has to put the charge or charges to him and require him to plead thereto. In this case the appellant was charged with an economic offence, A and the procedure for such offence is provided for under the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act 13 of 1984. Upon a glance through that Act it seems that the Act makes no provision for arraignment of the accused before the Economic Court. However, s 28 of the Act provides in effect B that where the Act is silent, the procedure under the Criminal Procedure Act shall apply.

1993 TLR p255

KISANGA JA

That section says:

`28 Except as is provided in this part to the contrary, the procedure for arraignment and for the hearing and C determination of cases under this Act shall be in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code.'

This then brings us to s 228 of the Criminal Procedure Act which makes provision for arraignment of an accused person. The relevant parts of that section provide as follows: D

`228(1) The substances of the charge shall be stated to the accused person by the Court and he shall be asked whether he admits or denies the truth of the charge. E

(2)

(3) If the accused person does not admit the truth of the charge the Court shall proceed to hear the case as hereinafter provided - ' F

Then s 33 of the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act takes over from there and provides inter alia, that:

`33 Where the accused person does not admit the truth of the information . . . the Court shall enter a plea of not guilty G to that information. . . .'

Our construction of these provisions of the law is that the requirement of arraignment of an accused person as embodied in those provisions is mandatory and non-compliance therewith renders the H proceedings a nullity. The rationale for this view is not difficult to find; it is that the accused must know the offence with which he is charged and for which he is being tried. A person should not be put in jeopardy of a conviction when he is unaware of the source of the jeopardy itself. The necessary corollary that follows from this is that the accused must be physically present and the I charge must be put

1993 TLR p256

KISANGA JA

A to him in person. Otherwise the whole principle of arraignment and the vital purpose for which it is intended are rendered meaningless.

Now, the crucial question which arises is this: In the present case was the accused arraigned? Since he was absent at the material time, to whom did the Court read out the charges? And who B gave the answers thereto which constituted the pleas of `Not Guilty' as recorded by the Court? Certainly the accused cannot be said to have been arraigned. As amply demonstrated already, such non-compliance with the requirement to arraign the accused rendered the purported trial a nullity.

C Mrs Sumari was also at pains to point out that the learned Trial Judge failed to comply with the provisions of s 226(2) of the Criminal Procedure Act which provides that:

`226(2) If the Court convicts the accused person in his absence it may set aside such conviction, upon being D satisfied that his absence was from causes over which he had no control, and that he had a probable defence on the merit.'

Learned Counsel was of the view that upon the appellant's arrest but before his committal to prison, E it was open to the learned Trial Judge to proceed as provided for in ss (2) above quoted, but she did not. We think differently. Our view is that that subsection does not apply to a case like this where the trial was a nullity ab initio. For the subsection envisages that if the Court is satisfied that the F accuse'ds absence was justified, it may allow him to advance his defence on the merits of the case, and on the basis of such evidence, and that of the Prosecution previously recorded, proceed to give judgment. In other words the subsection empowers the Judge to re-open the trial and continue the proceedings to a judgment. However, that would be untenable here where there was really no trial at G all from the very beginning. There was nothing for the Judge to reopen and continue.

Mrs Sumari referred us to s 37(4)(a) of the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act 1984 as amended by Act 12 of 1987 which provides for the trial to proceed in the absence of an accused H person. That subsection says:

`37(4)(a) Where a person admitted to bail absconds or fails to appear before the Court before which he is required I to appear on a date fixed and conceals himself so that a warrant of arrest may not be executed -

(a) the trial in respect of that person before such court shall continue irrespective of the stage of the trial when the accused absconds, after sufficient efforts have been A made to trace him and compel his attendance;'

We are satisfied that this provision is equally inapplicable to the present case. The learned Trial Judge cannot properly have invoked it. First, the accused never jumped bail, and indeed he was B never brought before the Court at any time. Second, since the trial `shall continue' upon certain contingencies happening or being fulfilled, this means that the provision applies only where the trial has already started. In the instant case however the trial cannot have started where the accused was never arraigned. C

Having found the purported trial to be a nullity, the question now is what is the next step? Mrs Sumari submitted that this is a fit case for the Court to order a re-trial, a discretion which is conferred on the Court by rule 36 of the Court of Appeal Rules. Her reasons for that view are twofold. First the victim D of the theft is yet to recover four of his stolen forty head of cattle. And secondly the appellant has so far served only about two years out of the prison term of seven years awarded to him. We have given thought to this submission, and we find no good reason for disagreeing. In acceding to it we also take E into account that cattle theft is a serious offence which sometimes is the source of inter-community clashes leading to tragic consequences. We think that suspects of such offences should not be let off lightly.

In the result the appeal is allowed. The purported proceedings in the High Court are set aside, with an F order that the appellant be tried before another judge. As the appellant has been in prison for about two years, it is further directed that he be tried as soon as is practicable.
1993 TLR p258
A
[zRPz]RASHID s KANIKI v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 258 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Lubuva JJA

B CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 116 OF 1993
8 November, 1993
(From the sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Mushi, J.)
Flynote
C Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - When a Court of appeal can interfere with the Trial Court's sentence.
-Headnote
D The appellant was charged with and convicted of the offence of defilement of a girl below the age of fourteen years. He was sentenced to ten years imprisonment. The appellant, who was a foster father of the defiled girl, appealed against the sentence.
Held: (i) It is trite principle that before a Court of Appeal can interfere with the Trial Court's sentence, E the Appeal Court must be satisfied that either the sentence imposed was manifestly excessive or that the Trial Court ignored an important matter or circumstance which ought to have been considered while passing the sentence or that the sentence imposed was wrong in principle.
(ii) All the relevant circumstances of the case were duly considered by the learned Trial Judge when deciding on the sentence.
Case Information
F Appeal dismissed.
No case referred to.
Mrs. Sumari, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
G Lubuva, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:
Before the High Court of Tanzania, at Moshi, (N M Mushi J) the appellant was convicted of the offence of defilement of a girl below the age of fourteen years contrary to s 136(1) of the Penal Code. H He was sentenced to ten years imprisonment. Initially, the appellant was charged with the offence of incest by male contrary to s 158(1) of the Penal code as a first count and the charge of defilement contrary to s 136(1) of the Penal Code in the alternative. At the end of the trial, the appellant was I convicted of the offence of 1993 TLR p259

LUBUVA JA
defiling a girl under the age of fourteen years. He has now appealed to this Court against the A sentence of ten years of imprisonment.
The facts are brief but unpalatable and are, on the whole undisputed. The incident took place on 21 April 1988 at a place called Shanty Town within the outskirts of the Municipality of Moshi. The victim of this unsavoury episode is one Mwamvita d/o Rashidi (PW4) who was at the time of the incident B nine years of age. At the time of the trial (1991) she had reached the age of thirteen years. In 1976, the appellant got married to Asia Zuberi (PW2). In 1978 he (appellant) again started living with Christina Sarwat (PW1) in a separate house from that of Asia Zuberi (PW2) (not a legal marriage). C By that time, Christina Sarwart had a child of her own with another person. This is the victim of this ugly sexual incident, Mwamvita Rashidi (PW4). The appellant was therefore a foster father to Mwamvia (PW4) who was staying with her grandmother, the mother of appellant in the said area of Shanty Town in Moshi. On the day of incident (21 April 1988) the appellant upon visiting his mother's D house, found Mwamvita in the company of two other children - Edward (PW3) and Rashidi who was not called in at the trial to give evidence. The appellant instructed Edward (PW3) and the other child Rashidi to go out of the house to attend to some shamba work nearby. Mwamvita Rashidi was therefore left behind alone with the appellant to clean up the servant's quarters. It was during this E time that the appellant sexually assaulted Mwamvita Rashidi. Edward, (PW3) who was with Ramadhani at a nearby shamba on hearing Mwamvita crying, rushed to see what was happening. He (PW3) saw the appellant in the kitchen holding on to Mwamvita's mouth. F
Thereafter, the matter was reported to Asia Zuberi (PW2) and Christina Sarwart (PW1) the wives of the appellant. To both PW1 and PW2 Mwamvita narrated in detail all that the appellant had done to G her. The child victim of the incident Mwamvita (PW4) was taken to the hospital by PW1 for medical examination. In the normal manner in such cases, PF3 was issued as a basis of medical investigation. The police took up the case for investigation which finally resulted in the prosecution of the appellant who was as explained earlier, convicted and sentenced to ten years imprisonment. At H the start of the trial, Mr Itemba, Learned Counsel was assigned to defend the appellant. However for some reason, in the course of the trial the appellant showed lack of confidence in Mr Itemba. Consequently another Counsel Mr A M Shayo, Learned Advocate was assigned to defend the appellant throughout the trial. I
1993 TLR p260
LUBUVA JA
A The appellant's line of defence at the trial was denial of the offence. He claimed that all the witnesses particularly his wives PW1 and PW2 were all out to fabricate evidence in order to fix him (appellant). The Trial Judge rejected this defence rightly so in our opinion. This was a case whose B determination depended on the credibility and acceptance of the evidence of the witnesses. In our view, the Trial Judge quite properly and thoroughly analysed the evidence of the witnesses which he accepted as truthful. As a result the appellant was convicted of the offence of defiling a girl below the age of fourteen years contrary to s 136(1) of the Penal Code.

C His appeal to this Court is against sentence only. In the course of hearing the appeal and as already indicated, the appellant persistently raised arguments against the conviction. He alleged that the witnesses particularly PW1 and PW2 his wives had conspired to frame him. Likewise he claimed D that Mwambita (PW4) the victim of the sexual assault and Edward (PW3) were all taught by PW1 and PW2 to frame him. He insisted that there was no evidence that Mwamvita (PW4) was sexually assaulted as no PF3 was tendered at the trial. The appellant further asserted that he had intended to call witnesses who were not called to give evidence in support of his defence. He finally pleaded with E this Court to be lenient with him as the sentence of ten years is excessive. There was credible evidence of an unusual conduct on the part of the appellant who disappeared soon after this incident as the appellant was coming from the hospital in the company of his wife Asia Zuberi (PW2) where F PW4, Mwamvita had been taken for medical examination. According to PW2, during the time when the appellant was in hiding, she (PW2) received a letter from the appellant in which he wrote:

`Mimi naishi porini angalia watoto.'

G The appellant denied having disappeared or written such a letter. We are in agreement with the learned Trial Judge that it is incomprehensible that all these witnesses particularly his wives should fabricate evidence against the appellant. However the Court again reminded the appellant that he had H been allowed to come to this Court on the question of sentence only. This being an Appellate Court, matters of credibility of the witnesses are primarily the domain of the Trial Court which has the advantage of assessing the demeanour of the witnesses and evaluating the credibility of such I evidence. This Court will not readily interfere with the decision of the Trial Court on such an issue.

1993 TLR p261

LUBUVA JA

For the Republic Mrs Sumari learned State Attorney supported the conviction and sentence. She A submitted that though this was not an appeal against conviction but as the appellant had argued at length on conviction, she urges that the conviction was properly founded. She countered that there was abundance of credible evidence which was believed by the Trial Judge. The learned State B Attorney wondered why all these witnesses, PW1, PW2, PW3 and PW4 should all conspire to frame a case of this kind against the appellant. As the appeal on the conviction was without merit, it should be dismissed in its entirety, the learned State Attorney contended. The non-availability at the trial of the PF3 regarding the medical examination of PW4, did not in any way vitiate or weaken the C prosecution case. Mrs Sumari, learned State Attorney further submitted. It was Mrs Sumari's conclusion that in the circumstances of the case, the sentence imposed against the appellant cannot be faulted, it was lawful and not excessive for such a shameful act. D

Though indeed as rightly pointed out by Mrs Sumari, the learned State Attorney: this was not an appeal against conviction, on the evidence on record and the persistent argument of the appeal before us by the appellant, the appeal against conviction is, in our view, without any merit. We are E satisfied that there was paucity of evidence of PW1 and PW2, the wives of the appellant which was fully supported by the evidence of the child victim of the sexual assault (PW4) and Edward (PW3). We find it highly incredible that both the wives of the appellant (PW1 and PW2) and the children F (PW4 and PW3) should all conspire to fabricate evidence against him. Even granted that PW4 was not the child of the appellant as the appellant would want this Court to believe, that in our considered view, is no reason for her (PW4) to frame a case of this nature against him. The record bears no evidence of a bad relationship between the appellant and the two wives, a version which the G appellant vainly tried to canvass at the hearing of the appeal. We do not accept that. Though we could glean from the evidence that the victim child of the sexual assault (PW4) was experienced in sexual intercourse for the reasons advanced by the Prosecution (at page 19 of the record) that the H PF3 which had been handed over to the police could not be traced and the fact that PW4 had been told by the appellant to take a wash, we are convinced like the learned Trial Judge that Mwamvita (PW4) was sexually assaulted. Furthermore, we are also satisfied that the learned Trial Judge was justified in his finding that it was the appellant who defiled Mwamvita I

A (PW4). The conviction though not a ground of appeal to this Court, can hardly be faulted in these circumstances.

On the sentence in the circumstances of the case, there can be no doubt that this was a serious and shameful act of sexual abuse against a child of tender age. As the learned Trial Judge rightly B remarked, it is an offence that calls for severe punishment. PW4, a child of tender age must in our view have suffered traumatic psychological and mental torture at the very thought of her foster father involving himself with her in this manner. At the hearing of this appeal, the appellant advanced no reasons to show either that the sentence was unlawful or manifestly excessive. Having listened to C the appellant's plea for leniency with great sympathy we see no reason to depart from the old time established principle of criminal justice in matters of sentence on appeal. That it is a trite principle that before a Court of Appeal can interfere with the Trial Court's sentence, the appeal court must be D satisfied that either the sentence imposed was manifestly excessive or that the Trial Court ignored an important matter or circumstance which ought to have been considered while passing the sentence or that the sentence imposed was wrong in principle. In this appeal, we are with respect in E agreement with the contention of the learned State Attorney that all the relevant circumstances of the case were duly considered by the learned Trial Judge when deciding the sentence. We see no reason for interfering with the sentence which in our view cannot be said to be excessive or unlawful.

F For these reasons the appeal against sentence is accordingly dismissed.

A

[zRPz]THOMAS ELIAS, PAUL PETER AND MENG'OLU NDAMUNI v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 263 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 34 OF 1993 B
8 November, 1993
(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Munuo, J.) C
Flynote
Magistrates Courts Act - Jurisdiction - A Court of Resident Magistrate presided over by a District Magistrate - Whether Court properly constituted - Criminal Practice and Procedure - Curable defects - Such defects must proceed from a trial by a Court of D competent jurisdiction - Sections 387 and 388 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.
-Headnote
The appellants were charged with robbery with violence and convicted before the Resident Magistrates Court, Arusha presided over by a District Magistrate. They were each sentenced to E seven years imprisonment and were ordered to compensate the complainant. The appellants' appeal to the High Court was dismissed. On further appeal to the Court of Appeal the Court considered whether the Trial Court was properly constituted and, if it was not, whether that was a defect which could be cured by invoking the provisions of s 387 and s 388 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. F
Held: (i) The Principal District Magistrate, though in terms of jurisdiction had the power to try the case for such offence as the law stands under the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984, was not competent to sit and preside over the case in the court of the Resident Magistrate. G

(ii) Proceedings and deliberations of a court which is not properly constituted are a nullity;

(iii) The provisions of s 387 and s 388 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985, cannot be invoked to cure such a defect because the irregularities, errors and omissions curable under these provisions not have occasioned a failure of justice and, more importantly, they must proceed from a trial by a Court of competent jurisdiction. H
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
Case referred to:

1. William Rajabu Mallya and Two Others v. Republic [1991] TLR 83. I

J. Mono, for the respondent.
1993 TLR p264
[zJDz]Judgment
A Lubuva, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:
This is a second appeal. The appellants were charged and convicted before the Resident B Magistrate's Court Arusha for the offence of robbery with violence contrary to s 285 and s 286 of the Penal Code. The Trial Court having convicted them imposed a sentence of seven years imprisonment against each of the appellants together with an order of compensating shillings

2,370/= to the complainant. On appeal to the High Court (Munuo J) their appeal was dismissed. The C conviction and sentence were upheld. Dissatisfied with the decision of the High Court, the appellants have now appealed to this Court.

At the hearing of this appeal, Mr J D Mono, Learned Principal State Attorney appeared for the D respondent Republic. The First appellant (Thobias Elias) and second appellant (Paulo Peter) appeared in person. The third appellant (Meng'olu Ndamuni) did not appear though the Court was informed that he was duly served and had not filed his Memorandum of Appeal. At this was the third E time that this appeal was called up for hearing but still he (third appellant) could not only not attend the Court but had not as yet filed the Memorandum of Appeal, the Court decided to dismiss his appeal; a move which was also supported by the learned Principal State Attorney Mr J D Mono on behalf of the Republic. This was done in terms of Rule 74(4) of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules F 1979 with the liberty to have it restored upon showing sufficient cause for not appearing when the appeal was called for hearing. Otherwise, it would cause undue delay of the whole matter including the first and second appellants who, apart from having filed their Memorandum of appeal have also been appearing before the Court whenever the Appeal was called for hearing. The hearing of the G appeal of the first and second appellant was therefore proceeded with.

As a preliminary point, Mr J D Mono, learned Principal State Attorney raised the point that the appeal H was incompetent. This was because, according to Mr Mono the appeal was out of time in that the judgment was delivered on 19 July 1988 and the Notice of Appeal was given on 16 May 1991 when the requisite time for giving Notice of Appeal was long past, so urged Mr Mono. Finally, however, Mr Mono conceded and correctly so in our view, that there was nothing in the record to indicate when I the appellant became aware or was notified of the outcome of the appeal before the High Court. Without such knowledge, it is not possible to expect the appellant to initiate action towards the A processing of an appeal against a decision which he had not known. In the circumstances and for purposes of better meeting the justice of the case, especially for the parties who had appeared in court when the appeal was called (first and second appellants) we were satisfied that it was justified for the first and second appellant's appeal to proceed. We accordingly overruled Mr Mono's B preliminary point on limitation of time and therefore allowed their appeals to proceed to hearing.

In the course of hearing of the appeal filed by the first and second appellants Mr J D Mono learned Principal State Attorney raised yet another important point of law. He submitted that this being a C second appeal it should not be entertained as there was no point of law involved. Section 6(7)(a) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 sets out the conditions for such appeals to the Court which if not fulfilled, should not be entertained so urged the learned Principal State Attorney Mr Mono. With D respect, we agree with him on this submission. Furthermore, Mr Mono, learned Principal State Attorney raised the question of jurisdiction. He urged that though at the High Court when the appeal was heard, his office on behalf of the Director of Public

Prosecutions was represented and E supported the conviction, upon further scrutiny and researching on the matter the issue of jurisdiction had cropped up. In his view this was a very vital aspect which goes to the very root of the case. He urged that the record of the case (pages 2 and 6) quite clearly shows that it was entitled `In the Resident Magistrate's Court at Arusha'. The record further shows that the proceedings were F presided over by one W Nathan, Principal District Magistrate. That means that the Court of a Resident Magistrate was presided over by a District Magistrate who had risen to the rank of Principal District Magistrate. As such Mr Mono argued convincingly that the trial was a nullity, it having been G tried by a Magistrate who had no jurisdiction. In support of this argument he referred us to the provisions of s 6 of the Magistrates Courts Act, 1984 which provides for the Constitution of the Magistrates Courts in Tanzania. In that section, it is provided: H

6(1) Subject to the provisions of s 7, a Magistrate's Court shall be duly constituted when held by a single Magistrate being -

(a) and (b) are not applicable and s 7 deals with primary courts sitting with Assessors.

(c) in the case of a Court of a Resident Magistrate a Resident Magistrate. I

1993 TLR p266

LUBUVA JA

A Under such legal position Mr Mono submitted that unlike the case of a District Court where the trial can be presided over by either a Resident Magistrate or District Magistrate in the case of a Court of a Resident Magistrate by law it must be presided over by a Resident Magistrate. In the case before us, Mr W Nathan being a District Magistrate was not competent to sit and preside over a trial in the Court B of a Resident Magistrate. In order to reinforce his submission, Mr Mono referred to a recent decision of this Court in William Rajabu Mallya and Two Others v Republic (1)

In that case the proceedings in the Resident Magistrate's Court were presided over by a Principal C District Magistrate. As the Principal District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case in the Court of a Resident Magistrate Court, the court was not properly constituted as required under the Magistrate's Courts Act 1984. We declared the proceedings a nullity thereby setting aside the D conviction and sentence.

We have very carefully and closely considered the submission of Mr Mono, learned Principal State Attorney. As an officer of the Court, we have no hesitation in commending him for the valuable E contribution and assistance he has rendered to the court in this matter. With respect, we agree with his submission that the Court when trying the case was not properly constituted. The Principal District Magistrate Mr W Nathan, though in terms of jurisdiction had the power to try the case for such offence but as the law stands now under the Magistrate's Courts Act 1984 he was not competent to sit and preside over the case in the Court of the Resident Magistrate. That was the F wrong Court for him. Consequently, proceedings and deliberations of such a trial are but a nullity. The provisions of s 6(1)(c) of the Magistrate's Court's Act, 1984 are so clear and unambiguous that the provisions of s 387 and s 388 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 cannot be invoked to cure such a defect. This is because, in our understanding of these provisions, the irregularities, errors and G omission that can be cured by invoking these provisions of the Criminal Procedure Act are of such a nature as not to have occasioned a failure of justice and more importantly they must proceed from a trial by a Court of competent jurisdiction. This was not the case in the instant appeal. The proceedings were a product of a court which was not properly constituted. The result was a nullity H which cannot be saved by any of the abovementioned provisions of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985. This is an aspect which it would appear from the record was not looked into by the High Court on I appeal and the learned State Attorney on behalf of the Republic did not allude to it either.

1993 TLR p267

For these reasons and without going further into the other grounds of appeal we agree with Mr Mono, A the learned Principal State Attorney who did not support the conviction that the trial having been conducted by a court which was not properly constituted, was therefore a nullity. Accordingly, we set aside the proceedings, quash the conviction, sentence and the order of compensation. The first and B second appellants are to be set free forthwith unless otherwise lawfully held in custody.

In the result, with this decision, having regard to the nature of the offence and the fact that the appellants have since (19 March 1986) served a substantial part of their sentence of seven years C imprisonment, we are not minded to order a retrial; we leave the matter open for the Director of Public Prosecutions to exercise his discretion on whether or not to institute fresh charges against the appellants.

As regards the third appellant whose appeal we had ordered at the hearing of this appeal to be dismissed (under Rule 73(4)) it is accordingly ordered that he (third appellant) should be served with D a view to have his appeal restored in terms of the Rules in order to be dealt with in similar manner. It is accordingly ordered.

1993 TLR p267

F

[zRPz]WILSON FANUEL v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 267 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 124 OF 1993 G

8 November, 1993

(From the sentence of the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha, Mroso, J.) H

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Powers of the Court of Appeal to interfere with sentence.

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted of manslaughter on his own plea of guilty and was sentenced to six years imprisonment. He appealed against that sentence as being excessive. I

1993 TLR p268

A Held: It is trite law that an Appellate Court will not interfere with a sentence just because it would not have imposed that sentence if it were the Trial Court.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

B Case referred to:

1. Silvanus Leonard Nguruwe v Republic [1981] TLR 66.

Mrs. Sumari, for the Republic.

[zJDz]Judgment

C Ramadhani, J.A., read the following considered judgment of the Court:

The appellant, Wilson Fanuel, pleaded guilty to and was convicted of manslaughter contrary to s 195 of the Penal Code. He was then sentenced to a term of imprisonment of six years. This appeal is D against that sentence.

The appellant appeared in person with a four ground memorandum of appeal. He submitted that the punishment meted out is excessive, that he had readily pleaded guilty and so saved the Court from conducting a full trial, that he killed his own son in the course of chastising the deceased and that he E is now remorseful for what he has done. The appellant pleaded for leniency at the hearing of the appeal for two reasons. First, he said his family of five kids, a wife and an aged and blind mother is suffering greatly because of his incarceration. Secondly, he reiterated that he had acted inadvertently and that he had not intended to kill his son.

F Resisting the appeal on behalf of the respondent Republic was Mrs Sumari, learned State Attorney. She supported the punishment awarded to the appellant and pointed out that the appellant was just repeating what he had told the learned Trial Judge (Mroso J) who had duly taken the G mitigation into account when sentencing. The learned State Attorney agreed with the learned Trial Judge when he said:

> `But I must deprecate most strongly the brutal manner in which accused chastised his young son of ten years to the H point of causing his death. I have to impose a deterrent sentence on him and to any potential offenders of his like.'

The deceased had the habit of stealing. That fateful evening the appellant tied the deceased to a post and flogged him with a stick until he lost consciousness. Upon regaining it, the deceased asked for I and was given some water to drink. That was the end of him.

The appellant buried the deceased without reporting the incident to any authority. The body was A exhumed and a post mortem was conducted about a week later. The cause of death could not be determined but it was established that the beating was administered on the buttocks. However, and as properly pointed out by Mrs Sumari, the deceased met his death at the hands of the appellant. B Undisputably the appellant over reacted to a delinquency of a boy of tender years.

It is trite law, which we have reiterated in Silvanus Leonard Nguruwe v R (1) that an Appellate Court will not interfere with a sentence just because it would not have imposed that sentence if it were the Trial Court. The sentence of six years for such manslaughter as this one in this appeal, is not C manifestly excessive. At the same time we cannot say that the learned Trial

Judge considered matters which he ought not to have considered or that he had used a wrong principle. D
So however sympathetic this Court may be to the said situation in which the appellant is we are bound by the confines of the law.
The appeal is dismissed. E
1993 TLR p269
F
[zRPz]MELKIZEDEKI GABRIEL AND SHABANI BENJAMIN v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 269 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 117 OF 1993 G
15 November, 1993
(From the conviction of the High Court at Arusha, Munuo, J.) H
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Appeal against Order of the High Court - Whether by an order of the High Court refusing leave to appeal to that Court is appealable to the Court of Appeal on a point of law only. I
1993 TLR p270
A Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Leave of the High Court to appeal against orders - Whether orders of the High Court appealable only with leave.
-Headnote
The appellants were jointly convicted of robbery with violence by the District Court. Their application B to the High Court for leave to challenge both the conviction and sentence out of time was dismissed by Munuo, J., for failure to show good cause. The appellants were dissatisfied with that refusal and applied for leave to appeal against it. Mroso, J., rejected their application on the ground that they raised no point of law requiring consideration by the Court of Appeal.
C Held: (i) There is no provision in the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979 and the Court of Appeal Rules which provides that in criminal cases a person aggrieved by an order of the High Court refusing leave to appeal out of time can go to the Court of Appeal on a point of law only;
(ii) An application for leave to appeal out of time will normally involve matters of fact;
D (iii) The learned Judge erred in requiring the applicants to raise points of law as a condition for granting leave to appeal; he should have looked into the circumstances of the case as a whole;
(iv) There is no law or rule which makes an order of the High Court in criminal cases refusing to extend time to appeal to that court appellable with leave even though the general practice E has been that such orders are appealable with leave.
Case Information

Application allowed. Matter is remitted to the High Court to proceed to hear the applicants' intended appeal.

F No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, J.A., read the following considered judgment of the Court:

G The appellants were jointly convicted by the District Court for robbery with violence contrary to s 285 and s 286 of the Penal Code, and were each sentenced to eight years imprisonment. They sought to appeal to the High Court against both conviction and sentence, but as it appeared that they H were time barred, they applied to that Court for leave to appeal out of time. Munuo J (Mrs) who consolidated and heard the applications dismissed them because no good cause was shown for enlarging the time. Dissatisfied with the refusal, the appellants applied for leave to appeal against it but Mroso J who also consolidated and heard the applications refused them on the ground that no I point of law was involved in the ruling of Munuo J (Mrs) which required consideration by this

1993 TLR p271

KISANGA JA

Court. The present appeal arises from that decision. Although in their joint Notice of Appeal to this A Court the appellants indicate that they are appealing against the decision of Munuo J (Mrs), the true position is that they are appealing against the decision of Mroso J refusing them leave to appeal to this Court against the decision of Munuo J (Mrs). Accordingly, we treated the matter as such. B

However, after hearing the arguments, and as we were deliberating on our decision, we realized that if Munuo J's (Mrs) order was appealable with leave, then this Court would have concurrent powers with the High Court to grant such leave. We could find no good reason for thinking that the power to C grant such leave is or should be the exclusive domain of the High Court. In that case then the matter should not have come to this Court by way of appeal from Mroso J but by way of further application under rule 44 of the Court of Appeal Rules, and in terms of rule 55(1) of the Rules it should have come before a single Judge. However, we feel very concerned that this matter, as will D be demonstrated later, has suffered an inordinate delay from 1987 through no fault of the appellants, and to have it shuttled now to a single Judge would only serve to aggravate the problem further. We are also of the settled view that even if the matter came before any one of us singly he would, on the material before the Court, undoubtedly grant leave to appeal. In short, we strongly feel that shuttling E the matter for hearing before a single Judge during the next Sessions of the Court scheduled for May next year will cause grave injustice to the appellants, having regard to the inordinate delay they have already suffered through no fault of their own. It is for this reason that we have decided to invoke the F provisions of rule 3(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules and proceed to consider the matter as a further application for leave to appeal against the order of Munuo J (Mrs).

As intimated before, Mroso J refused to grant leave because the decision of Munuo J (Mrs) did not G involve any point of law requiring consideration by this Court. With great respect to the learned Judge, however, we can find no support for that view. Upon searching through the Appellate Jurisdiction Act and the Court of Appeal Rules, we have not been able to find a provision which says that in criminal cases a person aggrieved by an order of the High Court refusing leave to appeal to H that Court out of time can come to this Court on a point of law only. Indeed we think that in practice an application for leave to appeal out of time, by its very nature, will normally involve matters of fact, such as, the date on which the applicant became aware of the judgment or decision being ap- I

A pealed against, the date he gave notice of his intention to appeal, the date he applied for a copy of proceedings, etc, etc and if, in the prosecution of his appeal he failed to do any act within the prescribed time, the reasons for such failure. Such matters, in our view, can hardly involve points of law.

B We are therefore satisfied that the learned Judge erred in requiring the applicants to raise points of law as a condition for granting leave to appeal. The learned Judge should have looked into the circumstances of the case as a whole, including the facts as deposed to in the affidavits and the way in which the application was dealt with by the Judge who handled it, and on the basis of that decide C whether or not to grant leave, if indeed leave was necessary. We say if leave was necessary because we have not been able to find any law or rule which makes an order of the High Court, in criminal cases refusing to extend time to appeal to that Court appealable with leave even though the D general practice has been that such orders are appealable with leave. Indeed rule 42(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules clearly implies that certain applications in criminal cases lie to this Court with the leave of this Court but to the best of our knowledge such applications are not specified or set out E anywhere. Be that as it may as intimated earlier the general practice has been to treat orders of the High Court, in criminal cases such as the present one as being appealable with leave. And for reasons which will be apparent presently, we are certain that had Mroso J approached the matter as outlined above he would have granted the leave sought.

F Munuo J (Mrs) found that the applicants who were convicted on 14 May 1987 did not give the requisite notice of their intention to appeal within ten days in terms of s 361(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act. She found that the appellants gave such notice only on 1 October 1990 when they G filed their affidavits in support of their applications for extension of time. She found that to be an inordinate delay and upon finding further that no good reason had been advanced for enlarging time to file Notices of Appeal, she accordingly refused the application.

H But when the applicants came before Mroso J they stated in their respective affidavits that upon their admission in prison in respect of this offence they immediately notified prison authorities of their intention to appeal. Prison authorities duly prepared the relevant notices which the applicants were made to sign on 14 May 1987. The applicants further deposed that their intention to appeal is clearly I reflected in the prison records. No counter-affidavit was filed by the Republic to refute these claims and therefore there could be no valid ground for rejecting A them.

Again the applicants' respective proposed petitions of appeal bear endorsements by prison authorities to the effect that copy of judgment was applied for on 19 May 1987. This tends to support B the applicants' allegation on oath that they did give notices of appeal on 14 May 1987. For it is only reasonable to think that the applicants gave Notices of Appeal first on 14 May 1987 as claimed and then applied for copies of judgment on 19 May 1987 to enable them prepare the petitions of appeal.

There was, therefore, sufficient material to indicate that the applicants did give Notices of Appeal C promptly on 14 May 1987 the very date of their conviction and that they were very much in time. The fact that the said Notices are nowhere to be found is neither here nor there. They may have been mislaid by prison authorities or by the Court Registry staff. In any case the applicants have not been D contradicted when they stated on oath that they did give the requisite Notices of Appeal in time and that this was reflected in the prison records.

The applicants' respective proposed petitions of appeal mentioned earlier further bear an endorsement by prison authorities that copy of judgment was received on 16 November 1990 and E the proposed petitions of appeal were submitted on 28 November 1990. Once again this was in compliance with the provisions of s 261(b) of the Criminal Procedure Act and the proviso thereto which require an appellant to lodge his petition of appeal within forty five days of the judgment or of the day he received a copy of it. F

On the facts and circumstances of the case as re-appraised, we are satisfied that the applicants' appeals are within time. The applicants need not have applied for leave to appeal out of time in the first instance and had Mroso J properly directed himself in the matter he would have granted the G leave sought. In the result the application is allowed. The order of Munuo J is set aside. The matter is remitted to the High Court with a direction to proceed to hear the applicant's intended appeals in respect of which the said order of (Munuo J (Mrs)) was made. H

1993 TLR p274

A

[zRPz]MOHAMED IDDI MJASIR v MRS. JAYALAXMI JAYANTILAL JOSHI 1993 TLR 274 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Zanzibar

Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

B CIVIL APPEAL NO. 36 OF 1993

25 November, 1993

C (From the decision of the High Court of Zanzibar at Zanzibar, Hamid, C.J.)

Flynote

Power of Attorney - Whether creates a fiduciary relationship between the donor and the donee of such power.

Land Law - Transfer of property - Whether a person can transfer property to himself alone - Section 5 of the D Transfer of Property Decree, Cap. 150.
Contract - Contract of sale of a house - Failure of consideration - Effect thereof.
-Headnote

E One Jayantilal Bhanji Joshi, now deceased, owned a house in Zanzibar. He left for Canada in 1972 leaving his house to one Ahmed Iddi Mjasir under a power of attorney. Ahmed Iddi Mjasir had power to receive rent from tenants, effect repairs and also had power to sell the house if he thought the price offered was reasonable. In 1987 Jayantilal B. Joshi died. In 1990 Jayantilal B. Joshi's wife, the respondent, came to know that their house had been sold and filed a suit in the High Court of F Zanzibar seeking a declaration that her deceased husband was the lawful owner of the house and that the house be registered in her name as the legal representative of her deceased husband's property.

G Ahmed Iddi Mjasir, smarting under a power of attorney, prepared a deed of conveyance dated 1 October 1987 purported to be between the owner of the house and himself which showed that the owner had sold the house to Ahmed Iddi Mjasir at the price of Shs 150,000/=. On 2 October 1987 Ahmed Iddi Mjasir prepared a deed of gift between himself and his son, the appellant under which he conveyed the house to the son. The deed was registered in the name of the appellant.

H The learned Chief Justice of Zanzibar considered the legality of the transfer of the property from Jayantilal B. Joshi to Ahmed Iddi Mjasir and then from Ahmed Iddi Mjasir to his son the appellant and held that the transfer of the suit premises from Jayantilal B. Joshi to Ahmed Iddi Mjasir was illegal and therefore null and void and therefore Ahmed Iddi Mjasir had nothing to transfer to his son the I appellant. The Chief Justice based his decision on the provisions of s 5 and s 6(11) of the Law of Property Decree, Cap 150 of the Laws of Zanzibar and breach of fiduciary relationship created by A the power of attorney between Jayantilal B. Joshi and Ahmed Iddi Mjasir.

1993 TLR p275

On appeal to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania the appellant attached the decision of the Chief Justice arguing that there was no fiduciary relationship between the Jayantilal B. Joshi and Ahmed Iddi Mjasir. It was further argued that the transfer of the property to Ahmed Iddi Mjasir was legal because B the power of attorney vested into Ahmed Iddi Mjasir the power to sell the property. In addition it was contended that the transfer of the house was backed by good consideration in the sum of Shs 150,000/=. The Court of Appeal considered all the arguments advanced. C

Held: (i) The provisions of s 5 of the Transfer of Property Decree, Cap. 150, are to the effect that if a person decides to convey property to himself (as it was in this case) such conveyance to be lawful must include one or more other living persons;

(ii) The purported transfer of the house by the late Ahmed Iddi Mjasir to himself is invalid; D

(iii) In law therefore Ahmed Iddi Mjasir owned no property capable of being transferred to his son, Mohamed Iddi Mjasir, the appellant;

(iv) Due to the power of attorney there was a fiduciary relationship between the late Jayantilal B. Joshi and the late Ahmed Iddi Mjasir, which relationship estopped Ahmed Iddi Mjasir from E obtaining advantage from the fiduciary relationship without first obtaining consent from Jayantilal B. Joshi. No such consent was sought and obtained;

(v) There was no evidence that the consideration of Shs 150,000/= as purchase price passed to the alleged vendor, the late Jayantilal B. Joshi as such the contract of sale is rituated by lack of consideration. F

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to:

Mbwezeleni, for the appellant.

Kagambo, for the respondent. G

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:

This is an appeal against the decision of the High Court (Hamid M Hamid CJ), which nullified a deed H of conveyance dated 1 October 1987 which transferred ownership of house No 2328 situated at Sokomhogo Street to one, Ahmed Iddi Mjasir - deceased on the ground that the transfer was null and void ab initio.

Having found that the transfer of the sold property to the deceased was illegal the High Court proceeded and nullified a subse- I

A quent transfer of the house by the deceased to his son Mohamed Iddi Mjasir, the present appellant, and ordered that ownership of the house be restored to its legal owner, before it was transferred to the late Ahmed Iddi Mjasir.

B Aggrieved by the Lower Court's finding the appellant has appealed to this Court.

The following facts which were not seriously disputed by the parties were narrated to the Trial Court:

On 25 January 1956 one, Jayantilal Bhanji Joshi now deceased owned a house, No 2328 along Sokomhogo Street in Zanzibar in which he lived with his family up to 1972 when he left for Canada C where he lived with his son. Before he left he entrusted his house to the late Ahmed Iddi Njassir, appellant's father, who was to collect rent from tenants, effect repairs to the house when the need arose, pay any monies on his behalf such as land rent etc, and to keep any balance of money for D him. In 1987 Jayantilal Bhanji Joshi died.

According to the evidence of his wife Jayalaxmi Jayantilal Joshi, the respondent in this appeal, in 1990 she came to know that their house had been sold and decided to file a suit in the High Court - E Civil Case No 3 of 1992, seeking a declaration that her deceased husband is the lawful owner of the house and that the house be registered in her name as the legal representative of her deceased husband's property.

F There was no dispute in this case that the deceased, Ahmed Iddi Mjasir, smarting under a power of attorney, given to him by the owner of the house prepared a deed of conveyance dated 1 October 1987 purported to be between him and the owner of the house which showed that in consideration of the sum of Shs 150,000/= he paid to the owner of the house as purchase price, the owner of the house had sold and transferred the house to him. Equally it was not in controversy that on the G following day (2 October 1987) Ahmed Iddi Mjasir prepared a deed of gift between himself and his son, Mohamed Iddi Mjasir, the appellant/defendant and in consideration of natural love and affection for his son conveyed the house to him. The deed was registered in the name of the appellant, H Mohamed Iddi Mjasir on the same day.

The question the High Court had to decide was whether or not the transfer of the house to the deceased, Ahmed Iddi Mjasir, and later to his son, the appellant/defendant, was in accordance with I the law. In deciding this question the learned Chief Justice said inter alia:

1993 TLR p277

MNZAVAS JA

`There is no proof to the effect that the late Joshi had any knowledge to this type of transfer since no evidence was A adduced by the defendant to that effect and this Court cannot be left to assume that is the case.'

Earlier the learned Chief Justice had rejected respondent's/plaintiff's argument that her deceased B husband had not given Ahmed Iddi Mjasir power of attorney over the house and upheld the appellant's/defendant's evidence that Joshi had in fact given power of attorney to Ahmed Iddi Mjasir over the house.

However despite the power of attorney the Court held that by transferring the house to himself, C Ahmed Iddi Hjasir contravened the provisions of s 5 of the Transfer of Property Decree, cap 150 of the Laws of Zanzibar. Equally it was the Court's view that the transfer was invalid under the doctrine of fiduciary relationship.

In conclusion the learned Chief Justice said: D

`Consequently I hold that the transfer of the suit premises, vide a deed of conveyance dated 1.10.89 conveying the suit premises to the late Ahmed Iddi Mjasir to be illegal and therefore null and void and since the conveyance of the same property to the defendant very much depends upon the conveyance that bestows the ownership of the said E premises to the late Ahmed Iddi Njasir which conveyance is void ab inito it follows therefore the subsequent transfer by the late Ahmed Iddi Mjasir to the defendant automatically becomes illegal and therefore null and void.'

The Court then proceeded and declared the late Jayantilal Bhanji Joshi to be the lawful owner of F house No 2328 situated at Sokomhogo Street, Zanzibar. It was also ordered that all the rent collected from the suit premises as from 1 October 1987 be paid by the appellant/defendant to the respondent/plaintiff. The respondent/plaintiff was ordered to refund the sum of Shs 20,8224/70 which G the deceased Ahmed Iddi Mjasir paid to a bank to redeem the suit premises to the heirs of the late Ahmed Iddi Mjasir.

It was the Trial Court's order that each party was to bear its own costs. H

Before us Mr Mbwezeleni, learned Counsel for the appellant vigorously challenged the Lower Court's finding, arguing that the learned Chief Justice erred in holding that there was fiduciary relationship between the late Ahmed Iddi Mjasir and the late Jayantilal Bhanji Joshi. It was the learned Council's submission that the power of attorney empowered the deceased Ahmed Iddi Mjasir to transfer I

1993 TLR p278
MNZAVAS JA
A the house to himself as, it was submitted, para 7 of the power of attorney vested that power to him.
Mr Mbwezeleni further argued that the High Court erred in not ordering that the sum of Shs 20,824/70 should be refunded to the appellant/defendant with interest.
B The Court was asked to allow the appeal and declare the appellant the lawful owner of the house.
In rebuttal Mr Kagambo, learned advocate for the respondent, supported the High Court decision and reiterated that the deceased, Ahmed Iddi Mjasir, acted unlawfully in transferring the house to himself.
C It was also submitted that the transfer was in contravention of the provisions of s 5 and s 6(II) of the Law of Property Decree, cap 150 of the laws of Zanzibar. The learned Counsel also argued that there was no evidence that the alleged purchase price of Shs 150,000/= for the house said to be paid D by the late Ahmed Iddi Mjasir to the late Jayantilal Bhanji Joshi passed to Joshi. And therefore, it was submitted, the sale was bad for lack of consideration. The Court was invited to dismiss the appeal.
E In reply Mr Mbwezeleni countered that there was consideration because Mr Joshi did not complain.
First and foremost we agree with the learned Chief Justice's finding that the late Jayantilal Bhanji Joshi did give power of attorney to the late Ahmed Mjasir. There was undisputed evidence that under the power of attorney the late Ahmed Mjasir had power to receive rent from tenants occupying the F house and to effect repairs on the house as and when the need arose. He also had power under para 7 to sell the house if he thought the price offered was reasonable.
However despite the fact that the late Ahmed Mjasir received rent from tenants in the house neither G the record nor the appellant in his evidence in the High Court showed that the deceased, Ahmed Mjasir kept accounts of the monies he received as rent or any monies he may have used in effecting repairs of the house. When this serious anomaly was put to Mr Mbwezeleni, learned Advocate for the H appellant, he merely said that a record of accounts may have been misplaced after the death of Ahmed Iddi Mjasir. With respect to the learned Counsel this reply is not good enough taking into account the fact that Ahmed Mjasir was entrusted with the house over twenty years ago.
Because there was no record of accounts kept by the donee it is our considered view that the I inescapable inference is that the late
1993 TLR p279
MNZAVAS JA

Ahmed Iddi Mjasir was not wholly honest. And, as rightly observed by the learned Chief Justice, there A was no evidence at all that Jayantilal Joshi knew of the transfer of the house to the late Ahmed Mjasir; leave alone his consent to such transfer.

Coming to the question whether the late Ahmed Mjasir had power (under the power of attorney) to transfer the house to himself the law is clearly set out under s 5 of the Transfer of Property Decree B cap 150 which says:

> `Transfer of property means an act by which a living person conveys property, in present or in future, to one or more other living persons, or to himself and one or more other living persons; and `to transfer property' is to perform such C act.'

It is clear from the above language that if a person decides to convey property to himself (as it was in this case) such conveyance to be lawful must include one or more other living persons. That being D the law, the purported transfer of the house by the late Ahmed Iddi Mjasir to himself is invalid. Under the law there was no transfer of the property to him at all. He in law therefore owned no property capable of being transferred to his son, Mohamed Iddi Mjasir. E

In the event we agree with Mr Kagambo's argument that the learned Chief Justice was, on the evidence, entitled to declare that the house No 2328 situated at Sokomhogo Street, the subject matter of the suit, belongs to the late Jayantilal Bhanji Joshi. F

We would also like to add, if only in passing, that due to the power of attorney there was a fiduciary relationship between the late Jayantilal Joshi and the late Ahmed Mjasir. That being so Ahmed Mjasir was estopped from obtaining advantage from the fiduciary relationship without first obtaining consent from the other party, the late Jayantilal Joshi. As we have shown above no such consent was sought. G

We also, after considerable reflection, agree with Mr Kagambo that even if for the sake of argument we were to accept the argument that the transfer of the property to the late Ahmed Mjasir was lawful there was not evidence whatsoever to show that the said consideration of Shs 150,000/= as H purchase price passed to the alleged vendor, the late Jayantilal Joshi. Needless to mention that lack of consideration vitiates a contract of sale.

In conclusion we are at a loss to know why the learned Chief Justice ordered that each party should pay its own costs. The law is that the party that wins is entitled to have his costs. One of the I

A exceptions to this rule of practice is where the parties are spouses; which is not so in this case.

It is our view that the respondent is entitled to her costs in this Court and in the Court below. It is so ordered.

B Apart from the question of costs, this appeal is dismissed.

C

[zRPz]MOHAMED IDRISSA MOHAMMED v. HASHIM AYOUB JAKU 1993 TLR 280 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Zanzibar

Judge Omar JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Mfalila JJA

D CIVIL APPEAL NO. 34 OF 1993

25 November, 1993

E (From the judgment of the High Court of Zanzibar at Zanzibar, Hamid, C.J.)

Flynote

Contract - Contract of sale - Party fails or refuses to perform an agreement - Court can order specific F performance.

Court of Appeal - Appeals to the Court of Appeal originating from District Courts in Zanzibar - Whether point of law should be certified for determination by Court of Appeal - Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979.

G Court of Appeal - Appeals to Court of Appeals in cases originating from District Courts in Zanzibar - Leave of the High Court is required - Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979.

-Headnote

The appellant was unsuccessfully sued by the respondent in the District Court for specific H performance of an agreement for sale of land. The District Court held that the performance of the contract had been frustrated by the intervention of the appellant's children and clan members. The respondent appealed to the Regional Court which held that the appellant's claims of frustration had not been proved. He was therefore ordered to fulfill the agreement. The appellant appealed to the I High Court which confirmed the Regional Court's decision. He further appealed.

1993 TLR p281

Held: (i) An appeal to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania in a case originating from the District Court of A Zanzibar does not need a point of law to be certified for determination by the Court of Appeal; such a case only requires leave from the High Court;

(ii) Where a party to the contract has no good reason not to fulfill an agreement, he must be forced to perform his part, for an agreement must be adhered to and fulfilled. B

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mfalila, J.A., read the following considered judgment of the Court: C

In the district Court at Vuga, the respondent Hashim Ayoub Jaku sued the appellant Mohammed Idrissa Mohamed for specific performance of an agreement for the sale of land. The district Court D dismissed the suit holding that the performance of the agreement of sale had been frustrated by the intervention of the appellant's children and clan who blocked the deal on the ground that the land which contains ancestral graves, could not be sold to an outsider. Against this decision, the respondent successfully appealed to the Regional Court sitting at Zanzibar. The Regional Court held E that the appellant's claims that the sale had been blocked by other interested clan members had not been proved because no such clan members came forward to give evidence in support of this claim. The Court therefore ordered specific performance of the agreement of sale. The appellant unsuccessfully appealed to the High Court against this decision. The High Court confirmed the F Regional Court's finding that there was no evidence that there were other clan members interested in this same land who could have lawfully blocked the sale. Against this decision the appellant further appealed to this Court. G

The agreement of sale or its terms are not in dispute. Both the appellant and the respondent agree that on 29 June 1989 they entered into an agreement by which the appellant was to sell his shamba situated at Muyuni to the respondent for Shs 45,000/=. That on two different occasions, the H respondent paid a total of Shs 15,000/= as advance to the appellant to enable the latter to process the Deed of Sale. On the first occasion, the respondent paid Shs 10,000/= and on the second occasion Shs 5,000/=. There was thus a balance of Shs 30,000/= which was to be paid on the execution of the Deed of Sale. At this stage, the agreement got stuck because the appellant alleged I that he could not execute the Deed

A of Sale due to opposition from his clan who maintained that he had no right or power to sell to an outsider clan land containing ancestral graves. The appellant who inherited this shamba from one Abdulfatah also alleged that as there were two other people entitled to inherit a portion of this shamba namely Abdulfatah's widow and one other unnamed person, he could not on his own sell this land. In B rejecting these allegations, both the Regional and the High Court held that there was no evidence to support them.

In his appeal to this Court, the appellant's memorandum of appeal contains four grounds; the sum C total of which is that the Chief Justice was wrong in holding that there was no evidence to support his contention that the sale agreement had been frustrated by the opposition of his clan. The appellant was granted leave to appeal to this Court by the Chief Justice who certified the following point of law for determination:

D `That the contract of sale of the land (shamba) is null and void since at the time of the sale of the said land, the applicant (in this application) had no title to that land as the inheritance formalities which could have otherwise conferred the title to him are yet to be finalised.'

E We think the best way of formulating the point of law for determination by this Court is to put it in the form of a question rather than as it was done in this case as a statement of fact. But the important period is that which was raised by Mr Mohora, learned Counsel who appeared for the F respondent. He said that since this appeal involves a case which did not originate from the Primary Court, it did not need a point of law to be certified for determination by this Court. We agree, this appeal does not fall under Part II of the Zanzibar Magistrate's Court Act 1985 because the case G originated from the District Court. All the Chief Justice was required to do was to grant leave under s 5(1)(c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979.

Back to the substantive appeal. In all the three Court's below, the appellant's case was that he could H not execute the Deed of Sale in favour of the respondent because members of his clan opposed the sale on the ground that he could not sell clan land with ancestral graves on it to an outsider and that it was forbidden to sell land to non Africans. He added that the widow of the late Abdulfatah and another person had an interest in the same shamba, he could not therefore unilaterally sell it. But at I the hearing of this appeal he advanced a completely new ground for his inability to execute the

1993 TLR p283

MFALILA JA

Deed of Sale. He said that he could not execute the Deed of Sale because the respondent had A failed to pay the balance of the purchase price of Shs 30,000/=. He even introduced a new element which does not appear anywhere in his evidence at the trial. He said that the respondent failed to pay the sum of Shs 13,000/= in addition to the Shs 15,000/= which would have enabled him to meet the costs of processing the Deed of Sale. The question then is whether the appellant failed to B process and execute the Deed of Sale because the respondent failed to pay the balance of the purchase price or because the claim prevented him.

As to the respondent's failure to pay the balance of Shs 30,000/=, this allegation appears to be C false. There is evidence supported by the Secretary of the Local Authority (PW2) that when the respondent went on a month long visit to Pemba, he left the money with his wife with instructions to hand it over to the appellant.

With regard to the allegation that his children and other interested members of the clan objected to D this sale, we refer to the documents Exhibits A-D produced by a record clerk in the Registry of Titles at the hearing of this appeal. It is clear from these documents that at about the same time the appellant was negotiating and concluding the sale agreement of the shamba to the respondent, he concluded the sale of the same shamba to one Suleiman Seif Masoud for a higher price of Shs 73,000/=. After receiving the additional advance of Shs 5,000/= on 2 August 1989 from the E respondent, only six days later on 8 August 1989 he sold the shamba to Suleiman Seif Masoud for Shs 73,000/= in whose favour he executed a Deed of Sale and registered it on 30 April 1993 after completing all the formalities with the relevant local authorities. This latter sale involving a higher F price, explains the appellant's change of attitude towards his agreement with the respondent. He was doing his best to find any excuse to repudiate his lower priced agreement with the respondent G in order to cash in on the higher priced sale to Suleiman Seif Masoud. But as the appellant will now no doubt realise, albeit a little late, he was trying to be too clever perhaps by half. At the hearing of this appeal, the appellant sanctimoniously preached the virtues of adhering to and fulfilling agreements and how ungentlemanly it was not to keep one's word. We would recommend to the H appellant that he puts his preaching into practice. The appellant was able to execute a Deed of Sale in respect of the name shamba in favour of Suleiman Seif Masoud without any objections from his clan, or children. It is quite clear then to us as it was to the learned Chief Justice that the story of the I clan objections as well as the

1993 TLR p284

A alleged interests of the widow were appellant's own creations designed to defeat the lower priced agreement with the respondent in order to keep the higher priced agreement with Suleiman Seif Masoud. This he cannot be allowed to do. As he himself emphasised, agreements must be adhered to and fulfilled.

B We are for these reasons satisfied as was the learned Chief Justice that the appellant had no good reason not to fulfill his agreement of sale with the respondent and execute the Deed of Sale in his favour. Accordingly we dismiss the appeal with costs both in this Court and in the Courts below. C Exhibits A to D to be returned to the Registry of Titles.

1993 TLR p284

D

[zRPz]COOPERATIVE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT BANK v FILTON (TANZANIA) LIMITED 1993 TLR 284 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Mackanja J

E CIVIL CASE NO. 122 OF 1993

6 December, 1993

Flynote

F Civil Practice and Procedure - Adjournment - Advocate of a party engaged in another court - Whether ground for adjournment - Order 17 Rule 1(2)(c) Civil Procedure Code and the mischief the rule was intended to curb.

-Headnote

G When the matter came for hearing the court was informed that one of the advocates had travelled to appear before the Court of Appeal of Tanzania. An application for adjournment of hearing the matter was resisted on the ground that appearance by an Advocate before another H court is not sufficient cause for an adjournment as provided in Order 17 Rule 1(2)(c) of the Civil Procedure Code. The learned Judge considered the mischief this rule is intended to curb.

Held: (i) The purpose for which paragraph (c) of the proviso to Rule 1(2) of Order 17 of the Civil Procedure Code was intended was to prohibit advocates using their failure to I maintain their diaries as a ground for adjournment;

1993 TLR p285

MACKANJA J

(ii) These provisions do not cover situations which are beyond the control of the A Advocate;

(iii) Where the Court of Appeal amends its calendar as a result of which an Advocate finds himself having to appear before both the Court of Appeal and this Court, he is bound to appear before the superior Court;

(iv) Since the change of dates was made without the prior knowledge of learned Counsel B and since those changes were made well after this application was fixed for hearing it was not the Advocate's fault to find himself having to appear before the Court of Appeal and this Court on the same date.

Case Information

Order accordingly.

No case referred to. C
Chandoo, for the defendants.
E.D. Kisusi, for the plaintiff.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mackanja, J.: When this matter came for hearing of a Chamber application in which the applicants D pray that an order be made to consolidate the hearing of the several cases listed in the Chamber summons, Mr Chandoo, Advocate, informed the Court that Mr Mohora, one of the defence lawyers had travelled to Zanzibar to appear before the Court of Appeal of Tanzania. In that connection he E applied for an adjournment for several days in that they expected Mr Mohora from Zanzibar the next day.
Mr Kisusi, learned Counsel for the plaintiff strongly objected to the application. His reasons in so objecting are quite sound; for as he said, appearance by an Advocate before another Court is not F sufficient cause for an adjournment. This, indeed, is what para (c) of the provise to Rule 1 sub-rule (2) of Or XVII provides. It states:

`The fact that the Advocate of a party is engaged in another Court shall not be ground for adjournment.' G

I nonetheless granted the application for adjournment and reserved my reasons. I now give the reasons.
The purpose for which, in my view, para (c) of the proviso to Rule 1(2) of Order XVII, was meant to H cover was to prohibit Advocates using their failure to maintain their diaries as a ground for adjournment. This is not one of those cases; for as Mr Chandoo stated in reply, these provisions do not cover situations which are beyond the control of the Advocate. Obviously, where the Court of I
1993 TLR p286
MACKANJA J
A Appeal amends its calender as a result of which an advocate finds himself having to appear before both the Court of Appeal and this Court, he is bound to appear before the superior Court. Since the change of dates was made without the prior knowledge of learned Counsel, and since those changes were made well after this application was fixed for hearing, it was not Mr Mohora's B fault to find himself having to appear before the Court of Appeal and this court on the same date. I would have upheld Mr Kisusi's objection if, knowingly, Mr Mohora had participated in fixing dates for the hearing of this application so as to coincide with his appearance before the Court of Appeal. In C my opinion, therefore, Government Notice No 508 of 1991 which publishes the amendments in the Civil Procedure Code which Mr Kisusi, learned Counsel for the plaintiff, seeks to rely upon does not apply to the circumstances of this case.
D On the other hand, learned Counsel for the plaintiff sought to defeat the application for an adjournment on the premise that filing of an application for consolidation of summary suits is untenable unless the defendants seek and obtain leave to defend first. I think there are two aspects involved here: the right to defend oneself, and secondly, to have the claim consolidated so that the E defendant does not have to file separate application, to defend themselves in each civil case. What the defendants are enjoined to do now is to challenge the merits of the claim without leave of the Court. I do not see in that desirability an implied condition that the defendants are also barred from applying to the Court for an order that the several claims against them, if they be of the same F nature, be consolidated.

Since an application to consolidate the several civil cases does not affect the merits of the claim C against the defendants, it will be expedient that the defendants be heard if they can show sufficient cause.

G In the result the objections are dismissed. Costs shall be in the cause.

1993 TLR p287

A

[zRPz]GODISON NDOBHO v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 287 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam

Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 22 OF 1993 B

13 December, 1993

(From the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Mrema, PRM, Ext. Jur.) C

Flynote

Criminal Law - Acquittal of PW1 in a charge of assault before a Primary Court in which the appellant was the complainant - Whether a bar to P.W.1 to complain against the appellant in a charge of assault in a District Court - Whether defence of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict could be advanced. D

Evidence - Acquittal of P.W.1 in a charge of assault before a Primary Court in which the appellant was the complainant - Whether a bar to P.W.1 to complain against the appellant in a charge of assault in District Court - Section 141 of the Evidence Act, 1967. E

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted by a District Court of assault causing actual bodily harm. His appeal to the High Court was not successful. He further appealed to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania. The Court entertained only one ground of appeal which was on a point of law leaving out seven grounds F which were on matters of fact. The ground of appeal was to the effect that the complainant in the case against the appellant was in fact an accused in a charge of assault before a Primary Court. After acquittal of the accused the accused filed a case in the District Court against the appellant in a charge of assault causing actual bodily harm. The appellant argued that the filing of this second case in the District Court contravened the provisions of s 141 of the Evidence Act. G

Held: (i) The provisions of s 141 of the Evidence Act, 1967 did not bar the prosecution from filing a charge of assault against the appellant simply because the complainant (P.W.1) had already been acquitted of a similar charge in which the appellant was the H complainant. This is because the facts in support of the charge against the appellant were different from those against the complainant and the accused persons were different;

(ii) The appellant could not advance the defence of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict as the appellant had not been convicted or acquitted of the same offence before he was convicted of the offence he is now appealing against. I

1993 TLR p288

Case Information

A Appeal dismissed in its entirety.

Case referred to:

1. Philbert Loisean and Another v. R [1956] 23 EACA 566.

Sengwaji, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

B Mnzava, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

The appellant Godson Ndobho was convicted by the Ilala District Court of assault causing actual C bodily harm c/s 241 of the Penal Code and sentenced to two years imprisonment. Dissatisfied with the finding of the District Court he appealed to the High Court.

The High Court dismissed the appeal against conviction but reduced the sentence to six months D imprisonment. Still dissatisfied he has appealed to this Court. In his prolific memorandum of appeal to this court the appellant raised eight grounds of appeal which, in our view, all except ground one, relate to matters of fact which this court is, in view of Rule 65(2) of the Court of Appeal Rules and s E 6(7)(a) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, precluded from entertaining.

In ground one which concerned matters of law all the appellant stated in his memorandum of appeal is that `The Principal Resident Magistrate (Extended Jurisdiction) as he then was F misdirected himself when he joined to believe the trial resident magistrate in contravention of the provision of s 141 of the Evidence Act 1967.' Elaborating on ground one the appellant who appeared in person argued that all the prosecution witnesses told lies against him. He said that he was the G complainant and that he testified in court how he was assaulted by PW1 and his son and that after PW1 was acquitted it was wrong and contrary to s 141 of the Law of Evidence Act for the prosecution to file criminal proceedings against him and that Mrema PRM (extended jurisdiction) H erred in adopting the finding of the District Court. The court was asked to allow the appeal.

Mr Sengwaji, learned State Attorney on the other hand argued that the provisions of s 141 of the Evidence Act, 1967, could not be invoked in aid of the appellant because, it was submitted, the acquittal of PW1 in a charge of assault before a Primary Court in which the appellant was the I complainant did not bar PW1 to complain against the appellant in a charge of assault in Kivukoni

1993 TLR p289

MNZAVA JA

Criminal Case No 99952/887 in which the appellant was, as already mentioned, above convicted of A assault causing actual bodily harm. It was argued that the two cases were different and the accused persons were also different.

We have seriously considered the argument by the appellant that he should not have been prosecuted after the complainant had been acquitted of the offence of assaulting him (appellant). In B our view we agree with the learned State Attorney that the provisions of s 141 of the Law of Evidence Act, 1967 did not bar the prosecution from filing a charge of assault against the appellant simply because the complainant, (PW1), had already been acquitted of a similar charge in which the appellant was the complainant. This is because the facts in support of the charge against the C appellant were different from those against the complainant and the accused persons were different.

This is also not a case where the appellant could advance the defence of autrefois acquit or D autrefois convict as the appellant had not been convicted or acquitted of the same offence before he was convicted of the offence he is now appealing against - see the decision in Phibert Loisean and Another v R (1).

As for the sentence of six months imprisonment imposed by the High Court (Mrema PRM extended E jurisdiction) we are of the view that the sentence erred on the low side in view of the unprovoked attack of the complainant by the appellant. The appellant should consider himself lucky that this Court has not decided to enhance it.

In the event we agree with Mr Sengwaji, learned State Attorney, that this appeal has no merit and it F is hereby dismissed in its entirety.

1993 TLR p290

A

[zRPz]MOHAMED MUSERO v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 290 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Makame JJA, Omar JJA and Mfalila JJA

B CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 99 OF 1993

13 December, 1993

(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza, Masanche, J.)

Flynote

C Criminal Practice and Procedure - Identification - Use of torch light in identifying thieves - Whether reliable.

Appeals - Second appeal - Where findings of fact or inferences are perverse - Whether Court of Appeal can D intervene - Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979 - Section 6(7) (a).

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted of robbery with violence by the District Court and sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment. His appeal to the High Court failed and his sentenced was enhanced to thirty years imprisonment. He appealed further.

E Held: (i) Where everything is equal, the Court of Appeal acting as a second appellate court, is confined by s 6 (7) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979 to matters of law only;

(ii) Where the Court of Appeal in the course of exercising its jurisdiction under s 6 (7)(a) F of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979, finds that findings of fact or inferences are completely unrelated to the evidence on record, it must, in the interests of justice, intervene.

(iii) Torch lights are not effective in identifying thieves, the High Court judge's remarks on G torch beams were pure conjecture which have no room in criminal trials.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No case referred to.

H W.C. Magoma, for the Republic.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mfalila, J.A. delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

The appellant Mohamed Musaro was charged with and convicted of the offence of robbery with violence contrary to ss 185 and 286 of the Penal Code at the District Court of Dunda district at I Dunda. He was sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment. He appealed to the

1993 TLR p291

MFALILA JA

High Court at Mwansa where Nasancho J dismissed the appeal but enhanced the sentence to thirty A years imprisonment because `for the offence of robbery with violence c/s 285 and 286 of the Penal Code the correct punishment is thirty years. The appellant lodged this further appeal still protesting his innocence. As a second appellate Court, we are confined by s 6 (7) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979 only to matters of law. Questions of fact are supposed to have been B conclusively dealt with by the Courts better placed to do so, ie the Court of first instance which heard and saw the witnesses and the first appellate Court which evaluated the evidence and is empowered to treat the appeal as a re-hearing. This is the position in cases where everything is C equal. If in the course of exercising its jurisdiction under s 6 (7)(c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, it finds that findings of fact on inferences are perverse in that they are completely unrelated to the evidence on record, this Court must in the interests of justice intervene. This is because the D attainment of justice is or should be the goal of any good law.

In the present case some violent intrusion was made at the home of Juma Wambura (PW2) at Nyandogo Village during the night. At the time Juma was not at home, he was in remand for some offence, only his two wives Suzana (PW1) and Mwajuma (PW3) were in the house. They are E therefore the two witnesses who narrated the events of that night. The two women deposed that on 22 April 1990, two men violently broke into their house and demanded to be given some money. When the intruders were told that there was no money, they started collecting some articles. They F took one radio, International in make, two radio cassettes, 50 compact cassettes, one Seiko watch, two pairs of shoes, two and a half pairs of khanga, one bedsheet, two stools, four shirts and six pairs of trousers. In the course of this stealing, the bandits injured a five year old child with a G panga on the head. Suzana added that they raised an alarm in the morning. It appears that no further action was taken, because according to Mwajuma, their father-in-law told them not to take any action until their husband came out of remand. Nothing therefore appears to have taken place until 30 July 1990 when according to Susana, the appellant was arrested in possession of her radio H which she identified as her property. Indeed there is no evidence that any report about this break-in was ever made at the Police Station. There is therefore a gap in the circumstances leading to the arrest of the appellant apart from Juma Wambura's contention in his evidence that: I

1993 TLR p292

MFALILA JA

A `In August I caught the accused with the radio which was among the stolen things. We found the radio on the chair.'

There was of course also the evidence of another woman Nyebanano Makarai (PW4) who said that in April 1989 she bought 11/2 pairs of khanga from the appellant, and that one day as she was B wearing one piece of this khanga, she met one of Juma Wambura's wives who recognised it. This was produced as an exhibit at the trial.

C In his defence at the trial, the appellant narrated the circumstances and events which led to his arrest. He said that on 29 September 1990 at about 1 pm, he was at his home when his niece Rawa Yusuf called. After a while his nephew Jumamosi also arrived carrying a radio. He asked Jumamosi whose radio it was, Jumamosi told him that it belonged to Juma Wambura PW2. Indeed D the appellant confirmed this when he examined it because he knew the radio. Juma Wambura is closely related to him as his first cousin. Jumamosi called for batteries. He told him to get some from the bookshelf and went to take a bath. While he was dressing, Jumamosi bid him goodbye. E The following day on 30 July 1990, he went to the Police Station on some business when he was informed by one P C Francis that there was some stolen property at his house. He went back to his house accompanied by Police Officers who searched the house in the course of which a radio was recovered hidden in some couch cushions. He was arrested and taken to the Police Station. The F appellant contended that his case was planted on him by his cousin Juma Wambura who had grudges against him based on three events. The first one involved Wambura's repatriation to Ruvuma Region as a suspected cattle thief. It was then believed that it was he who had informed on Wambura. The second one involved Wambura swindling him of Shs 6,270/= in 1986 which led G to criminal charges being made against Wambura, but he later withdrew the charges on account of their close relationship. The third involved his refusal to pay Wambura Shs 9,000/= which he claimed to be his share in their joint hotel business.

H Reading the record we find that the Trial Court found that the charge against the appellant had been established for three reasons. First, that the appellant was amply identified by Suzana and Mwajuma to be one of the two bandits who broke into their house on 22 April 1990. Secondly, that one of the items i.e. a piece of khanga stolen from their house by the bandits was sold to the I woman Nyobanane by the appellant. Thirdly, that another item a radio stolen that night from their house was found in possession of the appellant on 30 July 1990. A

1993 TLR p293

MFALILA JA

We shall first deal with the identification of the appellant by PW1 and PW3. The trial Magistrate stated:

`The complainant PW2 is related to the accused. PW1 and PW3 are the complainant's wives. Therefore the B witnesses and the accused know each other very well. Therefore the issue of mistake of identity cannot be entertained. PW1 and PW3 told this Court that they identified the accused person with the aid of torch light and by his voice when he said `tulia' and when he demanded to be given some money. I am satisfied with the evidence that the witnesses did really identify one of the robbers to be the accused. It is also true that the accused did use C actual violence in order to obtain the stolen property to wit he did cut a five year old child with a panga on the head.'

On appeal to the High Court, the learned Judge agreed with this view. After considering the misgivings expressed by the learned State Attorney whether torch light is really effective in D identifying thieves, as sometimes and quite often beams of torches are directed into the eyes of complainants, dazzling them and therefore impairing their vision the judge said: E

`I agree. But, sometimes and quite often too, thieves swing such beans of lights in search of articles to be stolen. If the torches get swung, it sometimes becomes easy to identify thieves.'

We think with respect that the misgivings expressed by the learned State Attorney about the F efficiency of torch light in identifying thieves are universally valid. The learned Judge's remarks on torch beams were pure conjecture. As the learned Judge will readily appreciate, conjecture and guess work have no room in criminal trials. In the circumstances of this case therefore the fact that G the two women as relatives knew the appellant very well, was irrelevant for his correct identification as one of the intruders. With regard to the voice this was also most unreliable in the circumstances of this case. There was not much exchange of words in this confused atmosphere, only one word `tulia' seems to have been uttered and possibly another two `lete pesa' when the H bandits were demanding money. This to us appears insufficient to enable the witnesses to make a clear identification based on voice.

The second piece of evidence which allegedly linked the appellant to this offence was the khanga found with Nyebanano. The Trial I

A Court make this linkage and the High Court went along. The judge stated:

`Anyway besides the radio, a woman was caught with a piece of khanga. The woman disclosed that the price of B khanga has been given to her (sic) by the appellant.'

We have found it extremely difficult to comprehend this linkage so readily made both by the Trial Court and the High Court. Nyabanano's evidence is clear that she bought this piece of khanga from C the appellant in April 1989, a year before the robbery at PW2's home on 22 April 1990. In her judgment, the trial Magistrate also wrote clearly that PW4 Nyebanano testified that in April 1989 the accused sold to her one piece of khanga at the price of Shs 300/=. How then could she link this D transaction which took place in 1989 to the robbery of 1990? In the circumstances we are satisfied that the transaction involving the sale of the piece of khanga by the appellant to Nyebanano in 1989 had no relevance or bearing to the robbery which took place at PW2's house in 1990.

E Lastly we turn to the radio. The robbery at PW2's house took place in April 1990 and by the time the radio was allegedly recovered at the appellant's house, no report had been made at the Police Station, not even after the release of PW2 from record prison. We ask ourselves why, particularly when the two women victims of this robbery claimed to have clearly identified one of the bandits. F The whole thing was left hanging until by some chance the appellant went to the Police Station on his own business when he was told that there were some stolen properties in his house. How did P C Francis know of this, who reported the stealing and presence of this radio? Why did PW2 and his wives remain silent all this time? These unanswered questions lend credence to the appellant's G theory that for the reasons which he gave, this radio was planted at his house by Jumamosi on the instructions of Juma Wambura (PW2). Both the Trial Court and the High Court capitalised on the fact that Jumamosi denied taking any radio to the appellant. But we think they overlooked two H important things. If Jumamosi was part of the conspiracy, his denials could only be expected. Secondly the fact that the appellant called him as his witness, lends credence to his story that Jumamosi had brought the radio. He did this innocently. He could not have risked to call a false witness who would spoil his case by denying all knowledge of the radio. It is true that his niece I Rawa was not called, but we think the appellant gave good reasons why this did not happen. If either or both the Trial Court and the High Court on first appeal had A addressed themselves to these weaknesses in the prosecution case, we are sure they could not have convicted the appellant. Hence the necessity for our intervention. There is also another matter which we think affects any consideration of the appellant's involvement. We think that given the close blood relationship between the appellant and Juma Wambura, the appellant could not harm B his five year old nephew if he was one of the bandits who raided PW2's house that night.

Mr Magoma, learned State Attorney, who appeared for the Republic found himself in the unfortunate position of having a split personality. To support the appellant's conviction in accordance with official C instructions and his personal conviction that the appellant's conviction was unsupportable for the very good reasons which he gave. We give credit to Mr Magoma's personal position in this appeal with which we agree. D

For all the foregoing reasons, we are satisfied that the appellant's conviction cannot be supported by the evidence on record. Accordingly we allow the appeal, quash the conviction and set aside the 30 year prison sentence. We order the appellant's immediate release from prison unless he is otherwise lawfully detained. E

F

[zRPz]PASCAL MWITA AND TWO OTHERS v REPUBLIC 1993 TLR 295 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar es Salaam
Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas JJA and Lubuva JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 124 OF 1993 G
14 December, 1993
(From the conviction of the High Court of Tanzania at Mbeya, Mchome, J.) H
Flynote
Criminal Law - Theft - Stealing by agent - Penal Code - ss. 265 and 273.
Criminal Law - Theft - Accessory after the fact of stealing - Penal Code - ss. 387 and 388. I
1993 TLR p296
A Criminal Law - Theft - Receiving stolen property - Penal Code - s 311(1).
-Headnote
The first two appellants were convicted of stealing by agent by the District Court and sentenced to three years' imprisonment while the third appellant was convicted by the same court of receiving B stolen property and he was also sentenced to three years' imprisonment. They all appealed to the High Court which upheld their convictions and sentences. They appealed further.
Held: (i) The first and second appellants were properly charged with the offence of stealing by C agent and were rightly convicted by the offence as charged;
(ii) There was ample evidence in support of receiving property knowing it to have been stolen in respect of the third appellant;
(iii) The sentence of three years imprisonment is not excessive bearing in mind that the maximum penalty for such offences is ten and seven years imprisonment D respectively.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
Cases referred to:
1. R v Erunasoni Sokoni s/o Eria and Another [1947] 14 EACA 74.
E 2. R v Nanji Sunderji [1935] 2 EACA 130.
Sengwaji, for the Republic.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mnzavas, J.A., read the following considered judgment of the court:
F The three appellants were jointly charged before the Mbeya District court with four counts. The first and second counts are stealing by agent c/ss 265 and 273 of the Penal Code. These faced the firstt and second appellants. The third count was being accessory after the fact to stealing c/ss 387 and 388 of the Penal Code. The fourth count was receiving stolen property c/s 311(1) of the Penal G Code which was in the alternative to the third count. These two counts faced the third appellant before this Court and one Jumanne Nyagawa, the third accused in the District Court who was acquitted.
H The following facts which led to the arraignment of the appellants were not seriously disputed:
The first and second appellants were at the material time employees of the Anti-Corruption Squad and were based in Mbeya. In September, 1990 they were in Sumbawanga on duty. On information received they, on 24/9/90, searched the house of one, Emmanuel, Simba who they suspected to I have in his possession illegally acquired property. In their search they found Simba in possession of

1993 TLR p297

MNZAVAS JA

Shs 1,000,000/= cash. They brought the money with them to Mbeya for further investigations. On A arrival in Mbeya they briefed their boss one Victor Mimbe, (PW9), about the money and Simba's explaination that the money had been sent to him by a businessman in Dar es Salaam to buy maize. After hearing from the two appellants their boss ordered them to return the money immediately to Simba in Sumbawanga. They returned to Sumbawanga on 20 September 1990 and, B according to the evidence of their boss, PW9 when asked about the money by the Regional Police Commander in Sumbawanga they told him that they had handed over the money to their boss, PW9, and that it was now in the Anti-Corruption Squad office in Mbeya. It was after this information that the RPC. in Sumbawanga ordered the arrest of the first and second appellants. C Soon after their arrest PW9 received a telephone message from Sumbawanga asking him to go to first and second appellants' houses and collect Shs 700,000/=and Shs 300,000/= respectively from their wives and take it to the office of the Anti-Corruption Squad in Mbeya. The two appellants' D houses were searched. Shs 680,617/= was found in a big suitcase in first appellant's house but no money was found in second appellant's house.

After the appellants were brought to Mbeya they, on interrogation, said in their statements they had E kept the money in their houses - (Exhibit P.5.). In their defence before the Court of first instance both the first and second appellants denied that they had committed the offence. It was their defence that there was bad blood between them and police officers in Mbeya because at the F material time they were investigating the RPC Rukwa, one, Omari Mahita, on an allegation of corruption and that they were in the process of traping the Rukwa OC-CID, (PW2), who was about to receive money as corruption but that the trap leaked. It was because of this enmity that the police in Sumbawanga decided to tell lies against them so as to cause them their undoing. The two G appellants also told the Trial Court that they decided to keep the money in their houses after they had failed to get reliable transport from Tunduma to Sumbawanga and that they found it unsafe to remain with such big amount of money in a guest house in Tunduma. H

As for the third appellant, (fourth accused in the District Court), the prosecution case was that on 1 October 1990 he took money from Juma Kondo, (PW10), in the presence of one, Asha Kondo and the third accused who was acquitted. Juma Kondo (PW10) stated in his cautioned statement the amount was Shs 300,000/= which was in six bundles of Shs 50,000/= each. I

1993 TLR p298

MNZAVAS JA

A Third appellant's defence in the District Court was a complete denial. After hearing evidence from both sides the District Court was satisfied that the prosecution has proved the charges against the appellants and convicted the first and second appellants of stealing by agent and sentenced each of them to three years imprisonment. The third appellant was convicted of B receiving stolen property and was sentenced to three years imprisonment.

Dissatisfied with the decision of the District Court they appealed to the High Court. After evaluating C the evidence in the district court, the High Court, (Mchome, J.), was of the view that there was ample evidence before the District Court to entitle the learned resident magistrate to find that the prosecution has proved the charges against the appellants beyond reasonable doubt and accordingly dismissed the appeal. Still dissatisfied the appellants have come to this Court.

D In his defence before us the first appellant who appeared in person and unrepresented argued that he should have been charged with stealing Shs 600,000/= not Shs 700,000/= as shown in the charge sheet because the second appellant had admitted receiving Shs 400,000/= not Shs 300,000/= as shown in the charge sheet. It was his argument that if this Court accepts his E submission then it should find that the charge against him was defective.

Secondly it was his defence that the Trial Court should not have believed the evidence of Ester, (PW11), because it was argued, she gave her evidence one year after the case had started and that she was summoned by the police to tell lies against them (first and second appellants). The F first appellant went as far as saying that he believed that the police message said to have been received by PW.9 was sent by the police in Sumbawanga and not by Ester (PW.11). The reason for such behaviour by the police in Sumbawanga was that they were determined to cause them G their undoing of the alleged enmity between them.

Finally the first appellant argued that as the owner of the money was not called as a witness it was wrong for the Republic to charge them with stealing by agent. According to his defence they should H have been charged with stealing by person employed in public service.

The second appellant, like the first appellant, also challenged the credibility of Ester (PW11). He said she lied against them. It was his argument that the owner of the bar from which she telephoned was not called as witness.

I As for the money he is alleged to have stolen he said he had Shs 400,000/= in his office.

1993 TLR p299

MNZAVAS JA

The third appellant challenged the Trial Court's assessment of the prosecution witnesses. It was A argued that it was wrong for the learned resident magistrate to find that the evidence of PW10 was corroborated by Jumanne Nyagawa who was a co-accused; and whose evidence needed corroboration before being acted upon. It was also his defence that Juma Kondo told lies against him. B

We would like to start with the evidence of PW9, Victor Mkumbe, regarding the instructions he gave to the two appellants (first and second appellants). He said inter alia:

> `. . . I ordered the investigators to return the money to Simba so that the process of buying maize could proceed as C scheduled. I also gave them a pistol so that they could use it for protection on the way to Sumbawanga . . . On the following day the RPC (Sumbawanga) telephoned me . . . and told me that Kondo and Mwita had told the RPC in their statements that they handed over the money to me in the office and that by that time the money was in the Anti-Corruption Sqard Mbeya office.' D

That the first accused lied to the RPC Sumbawanga that he had handed the money - Shs 1,000,000/= to his boss, (PW.9), is amply demonstrated by his cautioned statement to PW.5, E Exhibit P.3. When he was cross-examined by the learned state attorney in the District Court about his statement to PW.5 he replied inter alia:

`. . . I did not deny to make my cautioned statement . . . I do not deny the cautioned statement but I am saying that the statement on it is not sufficient.' F

In his defence he gave a diametrically opposed story about the money. He said he had left the money, Shs 600,000/= according to him, at his house. As his wife was away when he left he G entrusted the money to his house maid who was to tell the wife to return the money to the Anti-Corruption Squad the following morning. The money was apparently not returned to the office, and when his house was searched and Shs, 680,617/= was found in a suit-case his wife claimed that Shs 400,000/= belonged to one Mahali who had requested her to buy a car for him as she was H going abroad. Shs 200,000/= belonged to one Egina, who had requested her to buy her a video set. Shs 50,000/= has been paid to her as an outfit allowance. The rest of the money was proceeds from their shop-business.

If first accused's story to PW8 was anything to go by, the I

A Shs 600,000/= the 1st appellant said he kept in his house to be handed to the office was no where to be seen. However, as there was no evidence either from the said Mahali nor from Egina that they owned the money the Court believed that the money found in the suitcase was part of the Shs 700,000/= the first appellant was entrusted to return to the owner.

B At this juncture we are to ask ourselves why the first appellants chose to lie to the RPC that they had handed the money to their boss PW9.

Dealing with a similar situation the Eastern Africa Court of Appeal has this to say in R v Erunasoni C Sekoni s/o Eria and Another (1),

`Although lies and evasions on the part of an accused do not in themselves prove the facts alleged against him, they may, if on material issues, be taken into account along with other matters and the evidence as a whole when D considering his guilt.'

In the present case, and as rightly observed by the High Court, because of the urgency of the matter PW9 gave the first and second appellants a pistol to protect them and the money they were E carrying to hand over to its owner in Sumbawanga.

They said they found it risky to stay with the money in a guest house at Tunduma so they decided to return to Mbeya. In our view it would have been more logical for officers of first appellant and second F appellants' calibre to entrust the money to the police at Tunduma police station for safe custody till next morning when they would continue with their safari to Sumbawanga that to travel all the way to Mbeya to keep the money in their houses.

And what is more they arrived in Mbeya at 4 p.m. but for reasons best known to themselves they did G not think it wise to contact their boss and inform him they had decided to return to Mbeya with the money. If they had done so and failed to trace him; they, being senior officers, knew or ought to know that they should have surrendered the Shs 1,000,000/= to the police station for safe custody. This they did not do but decided to keep the money in their houses - but as already mentioned above on arrival in Sumbawanga they told naked lies to the RPC that they had handed the money to H their boss PW9.

Even if we are to agree with the appellants (first and second) that they decided to keep the money in their houses that act was a departure from instructions by their boss, PW9. That this is the law is I shown in the decision in R v. Nanji Sunderji (2) it was held:

1993 TLR p301

MNZAVAS JA

`Where property is entrusted to a person and he converts it to his own use and disposes of it, whether or not the A intention to do so was conceived at or after the receipt of the property, as soon as there is an overt act showing a departure from the instruction in regard to it, the offence of theft is complete and a foundation for a case of receiving with guilty knowledge laid.' B

In the present case the money Shs 700,000/= kept in first appellant's house was found to be Shs 19,383/= short. Of that kept in second appellant's house Shs 300,000/= disappeared into thin air and is yet to be recovered.

As for first appellant's argument that PW11 should have been found by the Trial Magistrate to be C unworthy of credit because she was called as a witness very late in the case in an effort by the prosecution to fix them as they were at the time investigating allegations of corruption against the RPC and the OC-COD. It is our considered view that even if the testimony of PW11 is excluded D there was, as rightly argued by Mr Sengwaji, learned state attorney, other evidence in support of the prosecution case. There was for example no reason why the first and second appellants told lies to the RPC that they had handed the money to their boss, PW9. The question of enemity with the police could certainly not have made them lie about the where-abouts of the money. E

The argument that the first appellant had Shs 600,000/= and the 2nd appellant Shs 400,000/= was clearly an afterthought as there was evidence from PW1 that the first appellant was entrusted with Shs 700,000/= while the second appellant was handed Shs 300,000/=. There was also the F cautioned statement of Juma Kondo (PW10) which was to the effect that second appellant's wife handed him Shs 300,000/= for safe custody while he later told the court in his evidence that he had received Shs 400,000/= from second appellant's wife. In her assessment of PW.10's evidence the learned resident magistrate was in a better position to decide which of the two versions was to be G believed. She said she believed the cautioned statement because his evidence in court was to support first and second appellants' story that the second appellant had Shs 400,000/= and the first appellant Shs 600,000/=. The reason for the change was found to be the fact that the witness, H (PW10), is a brother of second appellant. We need not mention that this is a second appeal and we ordinarily do not deal with questions of fact which as in this case have been thoroughly scrutinised by the two courts below. I

1993 TLR p302

MNZAVAS JA

A On the facts the first and second appellants were properly charged with the offence of stealing by agent; and, on the evidence, they were rightly convicted of the offence as charged. There was also, as we have already shown above, ample evidence in support of receiving stolen property knowing it to have been stolen in respect of the third appellant.

B As for the sentence of three years imprisonment we are of the view that it does not call for interference by the Court bearing in mind that the maximum penality for offences of this nature are ten and seven years imprisonment respectively.

C The appeal is accordingly dismissed in its entirety.

1992

Editorial Board

Chairman
The Hon. Justice F.L. NYALALI, Chief Justice, Court of Appeal of Tanzania
Managing Editor
Dr. Z.S. GONDWE, Senior Lecturer, Faculty of Law,
University of Dar es Salaam
Editors
The Hon. Mr. Justice H.M. HAMID, Chief Justice, Zanzibar
The Hon. Mr. Justice B.A. SAMATTA, Principal Judge (J.K.),
High Court of Tanzania
Mr. K.S. MASSABA, D.P.P., Attorney-General Chambers,
Dar es Salaam
Mr. A.M. MISKRY, State Attorney, Attorney-General Chambers, Zanzibar
Dr. S. BWANA, Registrar, Court of Appeal of Tanzania
Mr. S.J. JADEJA, Advocate, High Court of Tanzania
Ms. C. ORIYO, Corporation Counsel,Tanzania Legal Corporation
Mr. S. MCHOME, Lecturer in Law, Faculty of Law,
University of Dar es Salaam, Assistant Managing Editor
Administrative Assistant, Ms. M. SHANGALI
Special Assistant, Dr. N.N.N. NDITI, Senior Lecturer in Law, Faculty of Law, University of Dar es Salaam

SCOPE OF THE SERIES

These Reports cover cases decided in the Court of Appeal of Tanzania and the High Courts of Tanzania and Zanzibar

CITATION

These Reports are cited thus [1992] T.L.R

Judges of the Court of Appeal of Tanzania in 1992

1. The Hon. Mr. Justice F.L. Nyalali Chief Justice
2. The Hon. Mr. Justice L.M. Makame Justice of Appeal
3. The Hon. Mr. Justice R.H. Kisanga Justice of Appeal
4. The Hon. Mr. Justice A.M.A. Omar Justice of Appeal
5. The Hon. Mr Justice A.S.L. Ramadhani Justice of Appeal
6. The Hon. Mr. Justice N.Z. Mnzavas Justice of Appeal
7. The Hon. Mr. Justice L.M. Mfalila Justice of Appeal

Judges of the High Court of Tanzania in 1992

1 . The Hon. Mr. Justice B.A. Samatta Principal Judge (J.K.)
2. The Hon. Mr. Justice D.P. Mapigano Puisne Judge
3. The Hon. Mr. Justice K.S.K. Lugakingira Puisne Judge
4. The Hon. Mr. Justice E.W. Katiti Puisne Judge
5. The Hon. Mr. Justice B.D. Chipeta Puisne Judge
6. The Hon. Mr. Justice N.M. Mushi Puisne Judge
7. The Hon. Mr. Justice W. Maina Puisne Judge
8. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.A. Mroso Puisne Judge
9. The Hon. Mr. Justice L.J.R. Chua Puisne Judge
10. The Hon. Mr. Justice R.A. Mwaikasu Puisne Judge
11. The Hon. Mr. Justice R.J. Ruhumbika Puisne Judge
I2 The Hon. Mr. Justice Y. S. Rubama Puisne Judge
13. The Hon. Mr. Justice A.G.G. Korosso Puisne Judge
14. The Hon. Mr. Justice A. Bahati Puisne Judge
15. The Hon. Mr. Justice H.A. Msumi Puisne Judge
16. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.L. Mwalusanya Puisne Judge
17. The Hon. Mr. Justice E.E. Kazimoto Puisne Judge
18. The Hon Mr. Justice E.P. Moshi Puisne Judge
19. The Hon. Mr. Justice L.A. Kyando Puisne Judge
20. The Hon. Mr. Justice W.H. Sekule Puisne Judge
21. The Hon. (Madam) Justice E.N. Munuo, Puisne Judge
22. The Hon. Mr. Justice J. Masanche Puisne Judge
23. The Hon. Mr. Justice L.B. Mchome Puisne Judge
24. The Hon. Mr. Justice M.D. Nchalla Puisne Judge
25. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.J.M. Mackanja Puisne Judge
26. The Hon. Mr. Justice J. Mkwawa Puisne Judge
27. The Hon. Mr. Justice T. Mkude Puisne Judge
28. The Hon. Mr. Justice E.l.K Mwipopo Puisne Judge
29. The Hon. Mr. Justice E. Rutakangwa Puisne Judge

Judges of the High Court of Zanzibar in 1992

1. The Hon. Mr. Justice Hamid M. Hamid Chief Justice
2. The Hon. Mr. Justice Dahoma Puisne Judge

Cases Reported
1992 TLR p1
A
[zRPz]HARUNA NDOLOGA v SANGULA CHIGONELA 1992 TLR 1 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Mwalusanya J

13 January, 1992
Flynote
Criminal Law - Bonafide claim of right. B
-Headnote
After the failure by the appellant's brother to refund bride price, the respondent took some cattle belonging to him. The respondent, upon a complaint by the appellant, was charged for cattle theft. Both the Primary and District Court found him not guilty. The C appellant appealed to the High Court.
Held: There was no theft but a mistaken claim of right.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed. D
[zJDz]Judgment
Mwalusanya, J.: The appellant Haruna s/o Ndologa was the complainant at Dodoma Urban Primary Court. He complained that the respondent Sangula s/o Chigonela had stolen his 20 head of cattle. The trial court held that the respondent was no guilty, E because when he took the cattle he had an honest, but mistaken claim of right because he thought he was entitled to a refund of bride price. The appellant made his first appeal to Dodoma District Court and he failed and hence this second appeal.
Like the two courts below, I find that this appeal is bankrupt of merit. It is clear from F the evidence that the respondent went to collect the cattle in broad light on the understanding that he had the right to the refund of bride price from the brother of his wife's father. He even reported to the C.C.M. that he had taken the cattle. That was not theft. In the memorandum of appeal the appellant states that the marriage between the G respondent and the daughter of his brother is still subsisting. However that is a point to be taken in a civil suit but not in a criminal court. The appellant can sue the respondent claiming the seized cattle on the ground that he is not liable to refund the bride price for H his brother and when the marriage has not been dissolved in a court of law. But the acquittal of the respondent was proper in law.

In the event I find that this appeal has been lodged without sufficient ground of complaint, and therefore the appeal is summarily rejected. I
Order accordingly.
1992 TLR p2
A
[zRPz]D P P v PAUL REUBEN MAKUJAA 1992 TLR 2 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Msumi J

10 February, 1992
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Pleas - Equivocality and unequivocality of pleas; B Statutory Interpretation - Whether section 63 (2) (a) of the Road Traffic Act creates a mandatory minimum sentence of two years imprisonment for offences committed under section 40.
-Headnote
On pleading guilty to a charge of causing death by dangerous driving c/s 40(1) and C 63(2) (a) of the Road Traffic Act the respondent was convicted and fined Sh. 6,000/= in the District Court of Tanga. The DPP appealed to the High Court on the ground that the sentence was not only manifestly inadequate but also violates section 63(2)(a) of D the Road Traffic Act which has prescribed a minimum sentence of two year imprisonment. The respondent contended that the plea was equivocal hence the conviction was not lawfully sustainable.
Held: (i) Under section 63 (2)(a) of the Road Traffic Act the mandatory minimum E sentence of two years imprisonment applies only when the Court has opted for a custodial sentence as opposed to other types of punishment;
(ii) before accepting a plea of guilty by the accused the court must be satisfied that the F accused's reply is nothing but a clear admission of guilt;
(iii) the plea of the respondent was equivocal.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed. G
[zJDz]Judgment
Msumi, J.: On his plea of guilty, respondent was convicted of causing Death by Dangerous Driving Contrary to Sections 40(1) and 63(2)(a) of the Road Traffic Act. He was sentenced to a fine of shs. 6000/= or three months jail. Dissatisfied with the H sentence the Director of Public Prosecutions is presently appealing against it. And in apparent ignorance of the existence of the appeal by the Director of Public Prosecutions, respondent filed appeal against his conviction. He is arguing that his pleas was not unequivocal. Since the appeal of the Director of Public Prosecutions cannot be I deliberated upon without somehow the court considering whether or not respondent's pleas was unequivocal, notwithstanding its irregularity, the appeal by respondent was also allowed to be argued upon. A
1992 TLR p3

MSUMI J
In the petition of appeal by the Director of Public Procesutions it is argued that the sentence of a fine of shs. 6000/= or three months jail in default is manifestly inadequate and it is also illegal since the law provides for a mandatory minimum sentence of three B years for the offence. As for the belated appeal of the respondent the Republic is submitting that respondent's plea was unequivocal hence the conviction is legally sustainable. But without prejudice to this argument the Republic is praying for order of retrial in case the court finds that respondent's reply to the charge did not amount to C admitting the guilt, but also the facts narrated by the public prosecutor to the court are inconsistent with the alleged offence. To be specific, the learned counsel pointed out the fact that whereas the charge sheet alleges that respondent drove on the extreme left of the road and thereby knocked down deceased, the sketch map of the scene of the D accident produced by the prosecution in support of the facts of the case shows that in fact deceased was knocked down in the middle of the road.
The argument that there is statutory minimum sentence of two years imprisonment for the offence of causing Death is based on the wording of Section 63(2)(a) of the Road E Traffic Act which, as far as material, says:

63 - (2): Any person who is convicted of -

F (a) an offence under Section 40 shall be liable to a term of imprisonment of not less than two years but not exceeding five years and the court may in addition thereto impose a fine not exceeding one hundred thousand shillings ..... (emphasis supplied). G
With respect the correct interpretation of this provision does not support the Republic's view that the Section has created a mandatory minimum sentence of two years imprisonment for the offence committed under Section 40. It is common view that the phrase "shall be liable" when statutory used in the prescription of penalties does not H have compulsory effect. In simple language, what it actually means is that besides other forms of punishment authorised by law, court may impose the prescribed sentence which is usually the maximum. The erroneous view held by the Republic appears to I have been caused by the words "not less than two years" appearing in the Section. It is true that these words set a mandatory minimum sentence of two A years imprisonment. However, this sentence becomes mandatory only after the court has opted for a custodial sentence as opposed to other types of punishments. If after convicting the accused the court decides to send him to jail, then the term of such B imprisonment should not be less than two years and not exceeding five years. It is not true that in every case where accused has been convicted of causing Death by Dangerous Driving, he must be sentenced to a minimum of two years imprisonment. It is quite lawful for the court to impose a sentence other than imprisonment as it did in this case. C
1992 TLR p4
MSUMI J
The second limb of the argument against the sentence is equally not tenable. The learned trial magistrate fully rationalized the sentence he has imposed. Quite correctly the magistrate took into account; as mitigating factors, the fact that respondent was a first offender, he promptly pleaded guilty and the heavy family commitments he has. D Taking those factors in consideration the sentence of shs. 6000/= or three months jail cannot be impugned for being manifestly inadequate.

As regards respondent's plea, it is evident that it is not unequivocal. His statement in E mitigation clearly shows that he did not grasp the nature of the offence at the time when he pleaded guilty to it. It does not appear that all the ingredients of the offence were fully explained to the respondent before his plea was taken. Whenever there is indication that accused intends to plead guilty, court should take effort to carefully explain to him F each and every ingredient of the offence and a plea of guilty should only be entered if his reply to such explanation clearly shows that he has understood the nature of the offence and he is without qualification, admitting it. Except when it is absolutely satisfied that accused reply is nothing but a clear admission of the guilt, court should be warry of G entering a plea of guilty where the nature of the offence is such that may likely lead the accused to think that his alleged offensive conduct is the actus reus of the offence without the other necessary ingredients such as culpable knowledge. Thus in the present case it is evident that what the respondent admitted was the fact that he caused the H death of the deceased. From what he said in mitigation it is clear that he is refuting the allegation that he caused the death of the deceased because his manner of driving at the material time was either dangerous or reckless. To the contrary he is contending that there was no way he could avoid knocking down the deceased. This contention I appears to be supported by the sketch map of the scene of the accident which shows that deceased was knocked in the middle of the road A and not on the extreme left as alleged in the particulars of the offence. It appears what happened in this case is similar to what transpired in the Republic v Himo [1971] E.A. 351 where George, C.J., as he then was, said:

B In the first place one ought to examine with much care a plea of guilty to a charge of Causing Death by Dangerous Driving. The accused may intend to do no more than to admit that he was responsible for the accident which caused the death.

This observation underscores the earlier warning that as a general principle, court C should be chary of accepting plea of guilty in this type of cases.

I agree with the learned State Attorney that in the event the plea is declared equivocal, an order should be made for retrial. I think it is clear for the interest of justice that D prosecution is given opportunity to prove their allegation against the respondent. In conclusion this appeal is dismissed. However, the conviction is quashed because the plea of the respondent was not unequivocal. The case is referred to the District Court of Tanga for retrial. E

Appeal dismissed.

F

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas JJA, Mapigano Ag. JA

20 February, 1992 G
Flynote
Criminal Law - Murder - Committed in pursuance of rape.
Evidence - Credibility of witness for conviction - Essential.
-Headnote
The two appellants were convicted, by the High Court, of the murder of a tender age H girl of twelve years called Mwajuma Maiko. The appellant were convicted basically on the evidence of PW.1 who testified that on 24/5/87 she saw the first appellant calling the deceased and the second appellant blindfolding her with a red handkerchief as they I escorted her inside a certain house. She never saw the deceased alive again. The post-mortem report, which was admitted without A dispute, showed that the deceased was defiled; the hymen was ruptured and there was evidence of ejaculation, and the body was burnt by hot water to the extent of 75%. In the appeal before the Court of Appeal the defence council was challenging the conviction of the appellants on the grounds that PW.1 was an unreliable witness and B that the learned judge erred when he found the first appellant as a principal offender because what he did was simply to ask the deceased to get into the house after which he left thereby disassociating himself.
1992 TLR p6
RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA, MAPIGANO Ag. JA
Held: (i) PW.1 was a reliable witness and her evidence as to what the appellants did C could be relied upon by the court;
(ii) the evidence of PW.1 was party corroborated by the evidence of PW.3;
D (iii) the first appellant actively involved himself in the crime and there is no evidence showing that he disassociated himself at any time.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
Mbezi, for the appellants E
Nyabiri, State Attorney, for the Republic
[zJDz]Judgment
Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: Richard Matangule, F Appellant 1 is the father of Elia Richard, Appellant 2. The two have been convicted of the murder of a tender girl of twelve years called Mwajuma Maiko. The post-mortem report, which was admitted without dispute, showed that the deceased was defiled; the hymen was ruptured and there was evidence of ejaculation, and the body was burnt G by hot water to the extent of 75%.
The prosecution procured three witnesses but Dorika d/o Berege (PW.1) was the one on whose evidence the conviction was secured. As for Tatu d/o Mashumbu (PW.2), a girl of ten years, the learned trial judge (Mwalusanya, J.) told the assessors thus: "... H her evidence does not implicate any of the accused with the offence". In his judgment also Mwalusanya, J. wrote: "... she denied to have had witnessed the two accused taking the deceased into the room". So her evidence was not at all taken into account. Likewise, the testimony of Kenneth s/o Hembelo (PW.3) was held not to implicate I the appellants in any way. All that PW.3 deposed was that sometime on the fateful day he saw four girls including PW.1 and PW.2 going in a certain A direction while Appellant 1 was behind them.

1992 TLR p7

RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA, MAPIGANO AG. JA

PW.1 stated that in the morning of Sunday 24/5/1987 she, together with PW.2, the deceased and a fourth girl, were playing at the house of Appellant, 1, her paternal uncle, the younger brother of her father. Then she was called inside the house by Appellant B 1 and there she found two other men besides her cousin, Appellant 2. However, PW.1 was just dismissed and she went out. Then the Appellants went outside and Appellant 1 told the deceased to get into the house. As the deceased did so, Appellant 2 blindfolded her with a red handkerchief and both appellants escorted her inside. The Appellant 1 C came outside, leaving Appellant 2, the deceased and the other two men inside, and ordered PW.1 and the other girls to go to play at their grandmother's. PW.1 never again saw the deceased alive.

The Appellants were represented in this appeal, as they were at the trial, by Mr. D Mbezi, learned Counsel. He had two grounds of appeal.

In the first ground Mr. Mbezi argued that the conviction was wrong as it was founded on the unreliable evidence of PW.1. In the first place Mr. Mbezi submitted that PW.1 E was a self-confessed liar. When cross-examined, Mr. Mbezi pointed out, PW.1 replied "I did not see any other person inside". However, Mr. Mbezi proceeded, upon re-examination PW.1 said "Inside the room I saw three persons seated including 2nd accused. I was lying when I answered defence Counsel the contrary". In the second F place, Mr. Mbezi submitted, the demeanour of PW.1 in Court portrayed her to be a witness not worthy of belief. Mr. Mbezi said that the learned trial judge vividly described her demeanour in his judgment thus: "... PW.1 when testifying looked worried and hesitant and was always looking down". Yet despite of that, Mr. Mbezi continued, G the learned trial judge rationalized her demeanour and held PW.1 to be a witness of truth. In the third place, Mr. Mbezi contended, the evidence of PW.1 was contradicted by that of the other two prosecution witnesses. The learned Counsel pointed out that PW.1 claimed to have been with PW.2 at the Appellants' premises yet on H cross-examination PW.2 differed from PW.1. Mr. Mbezi wondered how that could have been if both witnesses were together at the material time. Then Mr. Mbezi also pointed out that whereas PW.1 had said that Appellant I ordered them to go to play at their grandmother's after the deceased had got inside, PW.3 testified that PW.2 had I gone to his home crying and that PW.3 did not say that

1992 TLR p8

PW.1 was with PW.2 at the time. Lastly, Mr. Mbezi in impeaching the credibility of A PW.1, questioned her delay to report the matter while the body of the deceased was seen the following morning.

In the second ground, which was in the alternative to the first, Mr. Mbezi argued that the learned trial judge erred when he found Appellant 1 a principal offender. Mr. Mbezi B said that according to PW.1 all that Appellant I did was to ask the deceased to get into the house after which he left thereby disassociating himself.

On behalf of the respondent/Republic was Mr. Nyabili, learned State Attorney. He submitted that the conviction founded on the evidence of PW.1 alone was sound and C added that there was no need of corroboration since PW.1 was not a child of tender years. Mr. Nyabili submitted that the inconsistencies were more apparent then real. He pointed out that according to Esteri Matangule (DW.1), the wife of Appellant 1 and the mother of Appellant 2, PW.1 had gone twice to the house of the Appellants. Mr. D Nyabili said that PW.1 first went there in the morning and it was then that she saw Appellant 2 and the other two men. The learned State Attorney said that PW.1 went again in the noon when Appellant 2 and his colleagues were not there. Mr. Nyabili submitted that the question which PW.2 was asked was ambiguous and hence her E reply appeared contradictory.

As for the demeanour of PW.1, Mr. Nyabili reiterated what the learned trial judge had said: she was torn between telling the truth and testifying against her uncle and cousin.

On the second alternative ground Mr. Nyabili submitted that if PW.1 is believed then F the actions of Appellant 1 spoke for themselves. Mr. Nyabili stated that the leading of a blindfolded deceased into the house and the chasing away of the girls afterwards, brought Appellant 1 squarely under the preview of Section 22(b) of the Penal Code. G

We must say at the outset that the case was very poorly presented at the trial. The sequence of the events was not clearly brought out. We agree with Mr. Nyabili, for instance, that PW.1 went to the house of the Appellants twice; at the first time both Appellants as well as the other two persons were around and at the second time H there was only Appellant 1 whom she served lunch. DW.1 supported PW.1 on that. Admittedly there are some contradictions in the testimonies of the two, that is PW.1 and DW.1, with which we shall deal soon. Secondly, we have noted that the times given, I as is to be expected from villagers, were estimates and to a great extent added to the confusion.

That notwithstanding, we are satisfied that PW.1 is credible. First, this is because the A learned trial judge found her to be so and he is the better judge of that basing on the demeanour. The shyness and the fidgeting exhibited by PW.1 in Court was to be expected of a village adolescent girl speaking in public. It would seem that she had not even been to school. This is in addition to the reason the learned trial judge gave that B PW.1 was between the devil and the deep blue sea. Secondly, we have found PW.1 reliable on the totality of all the evidence before the Court. PW.1 has said that she had gone to the house of Appellant 1 and she was supported by Appellant 1 himself and DW.1. Then PW.1 said that she cooked food for and served it to Appellant 1. Here C DW.1 stated that PW.1 did not cook but only served food to Appellant 1. However DW.1 and PW.1 are agreed that PW.1 served food to Appellant 1. In the third place, PW.1 said that Appellant 2 had two visitors that fateful morning. Appellant 2 himself admitted that and so did

Appellant 1 though DW.1 mentioned one visitor. But how D would PW.1 have known of these visitors or even a visitor is she had not actually been there in the morning. Finally, there is the fact that Appellant 2 was left at home with his two colleagues. This is what PW.1 had said and she was supported by Appellant 1 and Appellant 2 though he claimed that the other visitor had left before his father. E

Thus in the main we are satisfied that PW.1 told the truth and the gist of her testimony was that the Appellants were the last known persons to have been with the deceased. This fact, without any doubt, casts a very good suspicion on them. But this in itself is F not conclusive proof that the Appellants killed the deceased.

However, there are other factors too. First, we have never been able to know why the Appellants blindfolded the deceased as they led her inside. Then there is another question: why Appellant 1 chased away the other girls. Here there is the evidence of PW.3 who saw the girls going with Appellant 1 behind them ensuring, as it were, that G they were really gone. Lastly, the Appellants had to give an explanation of when and how they parted with the deceased. On the contrary they gave deliberate lies. Appellant 2 was categoric that he never saw PW.1 or the deceased and the other girls that day. H Appellant 1, on the other hand, prevaricated. In examination-in-chief Appellant 1 said "When I went to church I did not leave her [PW.1] behind". Answering the first assessor Appellant 1 said "When I went to church I left the deceased, Dorica and Tatu at my home". Yet upon re-examination Appellant 1 replied "When going to church I I left them (deceased, Dorika and Tatu) playing at their homes and not at my home. I said at their homes and not mine". A

Now, these deliberate lies and the refusal to give an explanation corroborate the case for the prosecution that they are responsible for the death of the deceased.

As for the alternative ground of appeal we are of the firm view that it has no merit at B all. Appellant 1 escorted the poor girl inside the house, then chased away her playmates and conveniently made himself scarce. He cannot have dissociated himself with what he had helped to facilitate.

We must confess that this situation of a father and a son being privy to a sexual assault C on a girl aged twelve years has exercised our minds considerably. However, that goes to motive which is not essential in a criminal conviction. However, ritual practices cannot be ruled out especially considering the question of picking and choosing the victim which preferred a much younger girl than PW.1. The story of the defence that this was all a D frame-up because Appellant 1 was suspected of continuing illicit relationship with the mother of the deceased is bogus. Father and son were very bedfellows for such a plot.

E Appeal dismissed.

F

[zRPz]ALLY BAKARI & PILI BAKARI v REPUBLIC 1992 TLR 10 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Domoma

Judge Mapigano Ag. JA, Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas JJA

20 February 1992
Flynote
Evidence - Circumstantial - Facts from which inference of guilt is drawn must be proved G beyond reasonable doubt;
Criminal Law - Recent possession - Applicability of the doctrine.
-Headnote
On 1/11/86 at about 8.30 pm, two persons called at the house of PW.2 when he was H outside relieving nature. They were let in by Ally Hassan, now deceased. Immediately thereafter PW.2 heard a sound of a gunshot. He ran to the house of his neighbour. When he returned he found the deceased having a wound on the abdomen. In addition I the culprits had stolen several items including PW.2's sewing machine head. None of the culprits was identified. The deceased died later. PW.1 asserted that he met the appellant having a gun a few A hours before the incident and further that the appellant confided to him that he intended to rob someone. PW.3 alleged that he was called by the appellant while in remand prison and informed that he, the appellant, had hidden a sewing machine head in the bush and requested him to retrieve it and send it to his (appellant's) home. On B 24/12/86 PW.3 went to the scene and found the machine but did not take it. Somehow other people got wind of the event and as a result he was arrested and joined with the appellant in a charge of murder. He was discharged later. The machine was tendered in court as an exhibit. The trial judge convicted the appellant for murder. He appealed C to the Court of Appeal on the grounds, inter alia, that the doctrine of recent possession which was used to find the appellant guilty was misapplied on the ground that there was no sufficient evidence that the sewing machine belonged to PW.2. D

Held: (i) Where the evidence against the accused is wholly circumstantial the facts from which an inference adverse to the accused is sought to be drawn must be proved beyond reasonable doubt and must be clearly connected with the facts from which the inference is to be inferred. E (ii) as PW.2 could not with certainty show that the sewing machine (Exh. P.2) belonged to him the doctrine of recent possession could not be applied in this case.
Case Information
Appeal allowed. F
Alimwike, for the appellant
Njulumi, for the Republic
[zJDz]Judgment
Mapigano, Ag. J.A. and Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: On 1/11/86 at about G 8.30 p.m. one Ally Hassan was shot with a firearm and killed. The incident took place in his village of Mulua in the Kondoa District, inside the house of PW.2 Juma Bakari, his relative. The appellant was charged with the murder of the deceased man and tried by the High Court. On 20/3/91 Maina, J. sitting at Kondoa convicted him of the offence H and consequently sentenced him to death. This is an appeal from that judgment.

PW.2 gave an account of the commission of the crime before the High Court. According to him, two persons called at his house in that night when he was outside relieving nature. They were let in by the deceased and immediately thereafter he heard I the sound of gunshot. He was terrified and he did the only practical thing: he ran to the house of his A neighbour. When he returned to his house he found the deceased within doors, having sustained a wound in the abdomen. The culprits had made away with several valuables including PW.2's sewing machine head, Simanco make. Neither the deceased nor B PW.2 could identify any of the two culprits. The deceased later died.

1992 TLR p12

MAPIGANO AG. JA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

When the evidence is properly examined it becomes plain that the two culprits were involved in a common design to commit a robbery, and that their plan envisaged the instant use of maximum violence to overcome any possible resistance. It also becomes C plain, as the learned trial judge apprehended, that the evidence led against the appellant was circumstantial in nature. That evidence related to the appellant's alleged encounter with PW.1 Paulo Fokas in the morning of 1/11/86 in the village of Sori; a request which was allegedly made by the D appellant to PW.3 Halifa Sefu, his nephew, at the remand prison; and the discovery and identification of a sewing machine head, Simanco make, i.e. exhibit P.2, that followed that request.

PW.1's allegation was that he met with the appellant on 1/11/86 early in the morning. E He was in his garden when he saw the appellant passing by. He called the appellant and sought his hand to put a bag of tomatoes on his head. His request was met with a positive response. The appellant put down his bag and came to PW.1. On getting closer PW.1 observed that the appellant had a magazine that contained bullets. PW.1 was F suspicious and he told the appellant that he wanted to see what he was carrying in the bag. The two went to the bag which the appellant opened and took out a gun. Next the appellant levelled the gun at PW.1 and threatened to do harm to him if he revealed that he (appellant) was possessed of the weapon. Finally the appellant disclosed to him G that he intended to use the weapon to rob some one of a sewing machine head and other things in discharge of a deal he had made with another man. All this was denied by the appellant.

The narrative of PW.3, also denied by the appellant, was that he went to the remand H prison on 19/12/86 and saw the appellant, as he had received a message from his sister that the appellant wanted to talk to him. The appellant told him that he had hidden a sewing machine head in the bush and requested him to go to the place and retrieve it, that is, take it to his (appellant's) house. He went to the place on 24/12/86 and saw I the machine, exhibit P.2, but he did not take it. He went and sought counsel from his friends, but somehow other people came to know about the hidden machine and he was arrested, confined A and charged with the murder of the deceased along with the appellant. He was discharged nine months later.

1992 TLR p13

MAPIGANO AG. JA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

The appellant told the trial Court that both PW.1 and PW.3 had cause for telling a lie against him, namely, that PW.1 wanted to avenge the death of his brother Valentine B who, while in the company of the appellant, was shot and killed by the police; and that PW.3 simply wanted to extricate himself from the charge he was facing.

Exhibit P.2 was shown to PW.2 at the trial and the witness claimed that it was his property and the one that was stolen by the bandits who killed the deceased. He did not produce any document to support his claim and he would not remember its serial C number. Under cross-examination he was candid enough to say that "if exhibit P.2 is put with others of this type, I cannot say it is mine. What I say is that the sewing machine head stolen from my house was Simanco make". D

The trial judge believed the evidence of PW.1 and PW.3. He also accepted the evidence of PW.2 that exhibit P.2 was his property and that it was the very sewing machine head that was stolen during the killing of the deceased. He paid attention to the fact that PW.2 had once been a co-accused of the appellant and he took the view that E his evidence required corroboration, as a matter prudence, before it was acted upon. He found such corroboration in the evidence of PW.3 and, accordingly, he treated the case as one admitting of the application of the doctrine of recent possession of stolen property.

Of the seven grounds of appeal filed by Mr. Alimwike, learned advocate, on behalf of F the appellant, only five bear our consideration. The first grounds attacks the finding of the trial judge on the credibility of PW.1. In his address Mr. Alimwike argued that it is highly unlikely that the appellant would have made such a serious and risky disclosure to PW.1. He demonstrated how in his testimony PW.1 had diverged from the statement G he had previously made to the police. He submitted that the trial judge was wrong when he dismissed the appellant's contention that PW.1 was ill-disposed to him as a result of the violent death of his brother Valentine. Appearing for the respondent Republic, Mr. H Njulumi, learned State Attorney, generally supported the reasoning and findings of the trial judge.

The second ground of appeal attacks the finding of the trial judge on the credibility of PW.3. Mr. Alimwike's submission was that the judge ought to have approached the evidence of that witness with greater caution. With respect, we have failed to see the I point of this submission, because that is exactly what that learned judge did. The judge, as A shown, looked for corroboration.

The third ground of appeal faults the learned judge for holding that the evidence of PW.1 supplied corroboration to that of PW.3. Mr. Alimwike said that he had failed to see how the evidence of PW.1 could have done so. Again with respect, we agree B with Mr. Njulumi that the evidence of PW.1 could serve that purpose, provided that it was itself credible.

The fifth ground is that the trial court went wrong in accepting the evidence of PW.2 to the effect that exhibit P.2, was the sewing machine head that was stolen from the house C of PW.2, and that the doctrine of recent possession was thus misapplied. Mr. Alimwike submitted that there was no sufficient evidence that exhibit P.2 belonged to PW.2. On his part, Mr. Njulumi pointed out that the appellant had not claimed the machine to be his and no body else except PW.2 had lodged any such claim. D

Our view is that there was hardly any truth in the appellant's allegation that PW.1 bore hard-feeling against him in consequence to the death of Valentine. The evidence does not show why that death might have engendered such impulse in the mind of PW.1. We agree with Mr. Alimwike, however, that the encounter between PW.1 and the E appellant, as described by PW.1, was quite peculiar.

It was said that the appellant ordered PW.1 to sit down and then threatened him with the gun. Yet within no time the appellant went on to confide to PW.1 about his atrocious plan. It is an undeniable fact of life that the normal run of such criminals do not behave F in such a thoughtless and dangerous manner.

It is true that in his testimony PW.1 shifted from the statement he had made to the police and he more or less admitted that fact. He told the trial Court that he reported the appellant's disclosure to the police on 2/11/86, that is the day following the murder. G But when the police-statement was shown to him by the defence Counsel he agreed that he might have done so a week later. He also testified that he did not accept the appellant's invitation to be a partner in the intended robbery, whereas in his police-statement he stated that he had agreed to take part in the commission of the crime. H

Given the uncommonness of PW.1's account and the discrepancies we have alluded to, we think that it was needful for the trial Court to apply practical wisdom in viewing and assessing the credence of that story.

The evidence of PW.3 pertained to the discovery of exhibit P.2 in the bush. We I entirely agree with the trial judge that the evidence of this witness required corroboration. As shown, the judge held the view A that the evidence of PW.1 provided the required corroboration. The judge accepted the word of PW.2 and found that exhibit P.2 was the machine that was stolen from the house of PW.2 immediately after the deceased was murdered in that house. The judge went on, as mentioned already, to apply the doctrine of recent possession. B

To be sure, if upon a charge for murder it is proved that the deceased person was murdered in a house and that the accused stole goods from the house, as was the case here, and that the accused was a few days afterwards found in possession of the stolen C goods, that raised the presumption that the accused was the murderer, and unless he can give a reasonable account of the manner in which he became possessed of the goods, he would be convicted of the offence.

Mr. Alimwike's argument was essentially that the doctrine of recent possession was D inapplicable in this case, in that it was not established that exhibit P.2 was the property of PW.2

and the very sewing machine head that was stolen by the two murderers. This argument has tremendous force.

Quite clearly, as a matter of law and logic, it is essential for a proper application of the E doctrine of recent possession, that the stolen thing in the possession of the accused must have a reference to the charge laid against the accused. That is to say that the presumption of guilt can only arise where there is cogent proof that the stolen thing possessed by the accused is the one that was stolen during the commission of the F offence charged, and, no doubt, it is the prosecution who assumes the burden of such proof, and the fact that the accused does not claim to be the owner of the property does not relieve the prosecution of that obligation.

Also pertinent to this matter is the rule that in a case where the evidence against the G accused is wholly circumstantial, the facts from which an inference adverse to the accused is sought to be drawn must be proved beyond all reasonable doubt, and must be clearly connected with the fact sought to be inferred therefrom.

The vital question which needs to be considered and answered, therefore, is whether H there was sufficient evidence to support the finding of the trial judge in respect of exhibit P.2. This takes us back to the evidence of PW.2.

As shown above, PW.2 could not produce any document to support his claim that exhibit P.2 belonged to him. He said he could not remember the serial number of the I sewing machine head that was stolen from his house. Under cross-examination he put the matter bluntly and, on A our part, there is no mistaking the state of his uncertainty, and we again quote: "if exhibit P.2 is put with others of this type, I cannot say it is mine. What I saw is that the sewing machine head stolen from my house was Simanco make". It is highly improbable that he B was the only person who had acquired a Simanco sewing machine head in Kondoa. And it is to be observed that it was not PW.3's allegation that the appellant had intimated to him that the sewing machine which was lying in the bush had been stolen from the house of PW.2.

1992 TLR p16

We respectfully think that the identification of exhibit P.2 by PW.2 came short of the C requisite proof and we, therefore, agree with Mr. Alimwike that there was no proper occasion to invoke the doctrine of recent possession in this case.

In the final event we sustain the last ground of appeal, which is that having regard to D the totality of the evidence on record which was wholly circumstantial, the guilt of the appellant was not proved beyond reasonable doubt. We accordingly quash the conviction and set aside the sentence, and we order the appellant's immediate discharge from custody if he is not otherwise lawfully held. E

Appeal allowed.

1992 TLR p16

F

[zRPz]DAMIAN FERDINAND KIULA & CHARLES v REPUBLIC 1992 TLR 16 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Kisanga JJA, Ramadhani JJA and Mfalila JJA

23 February, 1990 G

Flynote

Criminal Law - Dying declaration - Authenticity and weight of a dying declaration.

Criminal Law - Murder - Provocation - Conditions for its invocation.

-Headnote

This is an appeal from a conviction of murder by the High Court. The facts were that H the appellant and the deceased were husband and wife and were living together at the material time. There was no dispute that the appellant stabbed and killed the deceased. What was in dispute was the motive, circumstances and reasons for the attack. The I prosecution relied on a dying declaration, Exh. P.2, which stated that the appellant attacked the deceased when she told him that she was A leaving him on account of his drunkenness and quarrelsome behaviour. But, according to the defence, the appellant attacked the deceased on account of her refusal to give him his money and provocative words and acts accompanied therewith. The trial judge was of the view that the deceased's dying declaration was weak and unreliable. However, B he held that the words and acts of the deceased did not amount to legal provocation. On appeal.

1992 TLR p17

MAPIGANO AG. JA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

Held: (i) For the defence of provocation to stick, it must pass the objective test of whether an ordinary man in the community to which the accused belongs would have C been provoked in the circumstances;

(ii) the words and actions of the deceased did not amount to legal provocation;

(iii) the recording officer had no reason to lie against the appellant and that the dying declaration was authentic and contained a painful lament by a dying mother. D

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mfalila, Kisanga and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: The appellant was convicted of the E Murder of his wife and sentenced to death by the High Court sitting at Dar es Salaam (Kyando, J.). He lodged this appeal against both conviction and the sentence of death.

There were no eye witnesses to the killing of the deceased woman Siwajibu Kondo. F She was stabbed in the privacy of their house, all the witnesses who arrived at the scene including her cousin Ali Kondo (P.W.2) found her already stabbed. However there was no dispute on the identity of the killer. The appellant admitted stabbing his deceased wife and that she died of this stab wound. What was seriously contested by the G defence at the trial were the motive, circumstances and reasons for the attack. According to the prosecution who relied on the deceased's statement which was reduced into writing and admitted in evidence as a dying declaration Ex. P.2, the appellant attacked the deceased when she announced that she was leaving him on H account of his drunkenness and quarrelsome behaviour. But according to the defence, the appellant attacked the deceased on account of her provocative acts and words.

The stabbing of the deceased was of such a nature and extent that the knife embedded in the neck could not be removed at the local hospital, the deceased had to be I referred to Muhimbili Medical
1992 TLR p18
MAPIGANO AG. JA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA
Centre where the knife was dislodged and handed over to Inspector Jumanne Itunga. A But while still at Tumbi Hospital Kibaha, the deceased had occasion to call Inspector Itunga and told him the circumstances of her being stabbed. Inspector Jumanne Itunga reduced this statement into writing and this is Ex. P.2. The person who inflicted this B injury could only have intended to cause death or at the lowest to cause grievous bodily harm. On the other hand, the appellant explained that he stabbed the deceased following her provocative behaviour both in words and deeds. He said that after leaving the Police Force, he started doing some business and farming, in which the deceased was fully C involved. In the course of time they managed to accumulate shs. 80,000/= which the deceased was keeping. On the day in question, he asked the deceased to give him some shs. 25,000/= for his business trip to Morogoro. Not only did she refuse him this money but she used offensive language. This, he said, angered him and he attacked her with a knife. D
The learned trial judge considered the deceased's dying declaration as providing the motive and circumstances of the appellant's attack on the deceased, but he rejected it, stating that he was unable to place much reliance on it because in his view it was weak E and unreliable on account of the contradictions between the version given by P.W.3 and P.W.4. The contradiction being that while P.W.3 stated that the deceased gave reasons for the appellant's attack on her, P.W.4 categorically stated that she did not, she having become too weak to continue speaking. On the other hand, the learned judge accepted the version given by the appellant, that he attacked the deceased F when she refused to give him the money and used what he called "dirty words", but in his view this could not have provoked "an ordinary reasonable literate Chagga living in a village". He therefore convicted him of murder and sentenced him to death. G
In this appeal, the Tanzania Legal Corporation filed one ground of appeal on behalf of the appellant complaining that the learned judge erred in rejecting the defence of provocation, and at the hearing of this appeal Mr. Lubulira emphasized that the deceased's refusal to hand over money to the appellant as requested and her use of H dirty words must have provoked him to such an extent that he lost his self-control and acted in the heat of passion. He argued that this was how an ordinary Chagga would have reacted in the circumstances.
For the defence of provocation to stick, it must pass the objective test of whether an I ordinary man in the community to which the accused belongs would have been provoked in the circumstances, and the best A judges to determine this question are the assessors, for they are "the ordinary persons of the community to which the accused belongs". If courts adhere to this simple test and as amplified and explained in various judgments of this Court, the need to resort to judgments passed and pronounced in a different sociological context would never B arise. We have in mind the case cited by the trial judge when considering the presence or absence of provocation in this case. In considering whether the act of the deceased refusing to hand over money to the appellant amounted to provocation in law, the trial judge quoted remarks from an old case which to us appear not only unsuited to the C facts of the present case but out of place in the context of the present sociological environment. The learned judge stated:
1992 TLR p19
MAPIGANO AG. JA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

D As regards the act of the deceased refusing to hand over money, the courts have repeatedly stated that in the case of an uneducated African villager, the reasonableness of his reaction to the provocation must be gauged not by what the judge would have done, but by what an average tribal villager might have done in the circumstances. E

This passage is from Kasumbwe v R. (1944) - EACA 116 at page 119. Unless these words were only meant to denigrate the African as it was fashionable in those days, we do not see the relevance of singling out the uneducated African villager whose reactions F should be related to the average tribal villager, and not to what the judge would have done. The Ordinance and its definition of provocation which have been in force since 1930 makes no such distinction. Everybody, whether an uneducated African villager or otherwise must be judged according to what an ordinary man of his community would G have reacted in the circumstances and not what the judge would have done. As we stated earlier, this case is also unsuited to the facts of this case because the present appellant is not an uneducated African villager. It could not therefore be applied to him even if it were sociologically acceptable. Section 202 of the Penal Code which H defines provocation provides as follows:

202. The term "provocation" means and includes, except as hereinafter stated, any wrongful act or insult of such a nature as to be likely, when done to an ordinary person, or I in the presence of an ordinary person to another person who is under

A his immediate care, or to whom he stands in a conjugal, parental, filial or fraternal relation, or in the relation of master or servant, to deprive him of the power of self-control and to induce him to commit an assault of the kind which the person charged committed upon the person by whom the act or insult is done or offered and: B

For the purposes of this section the expression "an ordinary person" shall mean an ordinary person of the community to which the accused belongs.

In the present case the "dirty words" allegedly uttered by the deceased were not C considered because the appellant did not specify them, but even if he had done so, they would not in our view have amounted to provocation because in the appellant's own words, up to that stage he thought the deceased was joking. What angered him was, D to quote his own words:

After I had washed and returned into the house that is when she displayed her hostilities, deceased refused completely to give me the money. Because of this I was seized with E anger and I became very bitter because it is I who earned that money. In that state of anger and bitterness I injured my wife with a knife.

The learned judge was of the view that an ordinary reasonable educated Chagga F would not have been provoked by the deceased's action of refusing to hand over money to him. He would have taken other measures to get the money. We are not certain whether the learned judge was in a position to put himself into the shoes of what he called "an ordinary reasonable educated Chagga". Secondly, there was no G evidence that the appellant is educated apart from the fact that he was at one time a policeman. The learned judge would have been on firmer ground if he had gone by the views of the assessors who rejected the appellant's story. They seemed to prefer the dying declaration as providing the basis for the attack on the deceased. They H however stated that even if the appellant's story were true, the refusal by the deceased to hand over money would not have provoked him to make him commit the kind of assault he committed on the deceased. In legal language, the assessors were saying that no ordinary man of the appellant's community, would I be provoked by the actions of the deceased to the extent that the appellant claims he A was.

For our part we do not think there were good reasons for regarding the dying declaration in Ex.P.2 as weak and unreliable. It was recorded by a police officer who had no reason to lie against the appellant. The fact that P.W.4 did not hear the deceased B give reasons for the attack cannot be explained solely on the basis that the reasons recorded by P.W.3 were invented. Indeed the dying declaration appears very authentic as it contains a painful lament by a dying mother - "who will look after my children?" These moving words could not have been invented by P.W.3. C

For these reasons we are firmly of the view that the dying declaration provides the motive for the killing of the deceased and that the appellant invented the money story which as the assessors stated, even if it were true, could not have amounted to provocation in law. The appellant's attack on the deceased was cruel, intended and D calculated to cause death. His conviction for murder was in these circumstances well founded. Accordingly this appeal has no merit and it is dismissed.

E Appeal dismissed.

F

[zRPz]ABDULKADAR A. MOHAMEDALI v REGISTRAR OF TITLES 1992 TLR 21 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas JJA, Mapigano Ag. JA

28 February 1992 G
Flynote

Land Law - Land registration - Whether or not the Registrar of Titles has power under Cap. 334 to register a sub-title.
-Headnote
The appellant had applied, under Cap. 334, to the High Court seeking for orders that a deed of conveyance between him and one A.H. Shamshudin be registered and a H "sub-title" be issued conferring rights over Plot No. 266 Alan Road, Upanga CT. No. 186181/46 to him. The Registrar submitted that there was no provision in the Land Registration Ordinance, Cap. 334, that empowered the Registrar of Titles to register appellant's "sub-titles". I
1992 TLR p22
MNZAVAS JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MAPIGANO AG. JA
The High Court judge upheld the Registrar's submission and dismissed the application A as incompetent. The appellant sought the assistance of the Court of Appeal.
Held: The deed of conveyance between the vendor and the appellant was a registrable B document under section 8(1)(b) of the Registration of Document's Ordinance, Cap. 117, but this argument was not conversed before the High Court.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed. C
Ngasala, for Appellants
Registrar of Titles, appeared in person.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mnzavas and Ramadhani, JJ.A and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: This is an appeal against D the ruling of the High Court (Rubama, J.), dated 30/4/90.
The appellant/applicant had applied to the High Court seeking for orders that a deed of conveyance between him and one A.H. Shamshudin be registered and a "sub-title" be issued conferring rights over Plot No. 266 Alkham Road, Upanga CT. No. E 186181/46 to him.
In support of the application in the High Court the appellant/applicant relied on the provisions of the Land Registration Ordinance, Cap. 334 of the Laws.
In the High Court the respondent, the Registrar of Titles, submitted that there was no F provision under the Land Registration Ordinance Cap. 334, that empowered the Registrar of Titles to register appellant's "sub-titles".
In his ruling the learned judge said, inter alia:
G I have gone through the law (Cap. 334) under which this application has been made and have not been able to identify any provision under which this Court could order the respondent to register the applicant's sub-title.
The learned judge then proceeded and dismissed the application as incompetent. H
When the appeal came up for hearing on 26/11/91 and after hearing Mr. Ngasala, learned counsel for the appellant, it was glaringly clear to us that Mr. Ngasala had not I made sufficient research on the law pertaining to real property. We accordingly adjourned the matter and gave the learned counsel three days to do some research. A
1992 TLR p23

When the appeal came up again for hearing Mr. Ngasala abandoned his earlier argument that the learned judge should have invoked his inherent powers under section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code and grant the application. He now argued that the deed B of conveyance between the appellant/applicant and the vendor in connection with Plot No. 266 Alkhan Road, Upanga, CT. No. 186181/46 should be registered under the Registration of Documents Ordinance, Cap. 117 of the laws.

With respect to the learned counsel for the appellant/ applicant the application before C the High Court was based under the Land Registration Ordinance, Cap. 334 of the laws. As we have already mentioned above the learned judge held that the application was incompetent, based as it was, under Cap. 334 of the laws.

With respect we agree with the finding of the learned judge that Cap. 334 deals with D land registration and was inapplicable on the facts of this case which concerned limitation of the vendor's interest over the property situated on the above mentioned plot.

We agree with Mr. Ngasala that the deed of conveyance between the vendor and the appellant was a registrable document under section 8 (1) (b) of the Registration of E Documents Ordinance, Cap. 117, but this argument was not canvassed before the High Court.

In the event we dismiss the appeal with costs. The appellant/ applicant is at liberty to make a fresh application before the Registrar of Documents to seek registration of the deed of conveyance between him and the vendor under the Registration of F Documents Ordinance, Cap. 117.

G Appeal dismissed.

1992 TLR p24

A

[zRPz]NIMROD ELIREHEMAN MKONO v STATE TRAVEL SERVICE LTD. & MASOO SAKTAY 1992 TLR 24 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas JJA, Mapigano Ag. JA

28 February 1992 B

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Convictions in Criminal case - Whether or not conclusive of the commission of the offence by the accused for purposes of a civil suit.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Written Statement of Defence - Whether the Advocate can C sign on behalf of his client.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Written Statement of Defence -Amendment of - Without leave of the court - Whether fatal to the proceedings.

-Headnote

In the District Court of Musoma the second respondent, then accused, was convicted D of causing death by dangerous driving and driving a motor vehicle on a public road in a manner which having regard to all the circumstances then pertaining was dangerous to the public or to any other person using the road. After the conviction the appellant E sued the respondent in the High Court claiming Sh. 4 million as damages for the benefit of the deceased's estate. In the course of the proceedings two issues arose. First whether or not the 2nd respondent was negligent in his driving. Second whether the amended W.S.D. by the second respondent was properly before the court and F whether the signing of the said W.S.D. by the 2nd respondent's advocate was proper in law. As to the first question the judge ruled that negligence was still an issue in the Civil case before him. On the second issue the judge said the W.S.D was properly before G him and that the signing of the W.S.D. by the advocate was in order. The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Held: (i) Under section 43A of the Tanzania Evidence Act, a conviction in criminal proceeding in the absence of an appeal, is conclusive evidence that the person so H convicted was guilty of that offence;

(ii) the proviso to 0.6 R.14 of the Civil Procedure Code allows an advocate by reason of absence of the client or for other good cause to sign on behalf of his client; I

(iii) the amendment of the W.S.D. without leave of the court

1992 TLR p25

MNZAVAS JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MAPIGANO AG. JA

offended the provisions of 0.8.R.13 but this did not prejudice the appellant's case. A

Case Information

Appeal allowed in part.

Uzanda, for the appellant B

Mnzavas, for the respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas and Ramadhani, JJ.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: In the District Court of Musoma (TRAFFIC CASE NO. 5/1984) the second respondent/then the accused was C convicted of causing death by dangerous driving and driving a motor vehicle on a Public road in a manner which having regard to all the circumstances then pertaining was dangerous to the public or to any other person using the road.

Consequent to the conviction the appellant/plaintiff filed a suit (civil case No. 158/86) in D the High Court against the respondents/defendants claiming a total of over shs. 4,000,000/= as "general damages, special damages, damages for the benefit of the estate and such farther reliefs as the Court may deem fit".

When the case came up for hearing Mr. Uzanda, learned counsel for the E appellant/plaintiff, asked the Court to adopt three issues he had framed. Mr. Mnzavas for the respondents/defendants argued that the issues must include whether or not the 2nd respondent/2nd defendant was negligent in his driving. Mr. Uzanda countered that the question whether or not the second respondent was negligent in his driving was F not an issue and quoted section 43A for the Evidence Act in support of his argument.

There were also arguments before High Court whether the amended written statement of defence by the second defendant/second respondent was properly before the Court G and also whether the signing of the written statement of defence as well as the amended written statement was proper.

After hearing arguments from both parties the learned judge held in favour of the respondents/defendants that negligence was still an issue in the civil case before him, that H the amended written statement of defence by the 2nd defendant was properly before the Court and that the signing of the written statement of defence and later the amended written statement of defence by the learned defence counsel was in order.

It is against this ruling by the High Court that the appellant has come to this Court. I

1992 TLR p26

MNZAVAS JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MAPIGANO AG. JA

Before us Mr. Uzanda, learned counsel for the appellant submitted that the conviction A of the 2nd respondent was not disputed and as such the respondents could not deny negligence in the civil case. In support of his argument the Court was referred to the decision in Robinson. v Oluoch [1971] E.A. 376. It was also his submission that in B view of the wording of section 43A of the Evidence Act the second respondent could not deny negligence and that the most he could do was to plead contributory negligence. To fortify his argument he quoted the decision in Queens Cleaners and Dyers Ltd. v East African Community and Others [1972] E.A. 229 and Civil Appeal No. 8 of C 1989 - Benedicto Augustino & Two Others v Godwin Manase Zephania; decided by this Court. It was also the learned counsel's submission that there was no plea of contributory negligence by the respondents.

As for the signing of the written statement of defence by the advocate for the respondent D it was argued that this was contrary to 0.6 R.14 of the Civil Procedure Code. It was submitted that there was no good reason why the party concerned should not have signed the pleading.

Finally Mr. Uzanda argued that the filing of an amended written statement of defence E without first being granted leave by the Court went counter to the provisions of 0.8 R.13 of the Civil Procedure Code; and that the trial judge should have disallowed the amended written statement of defence.

It was submitted that on the pleading the respondents were liable and that the only F issue before the High Court should be the question of quantum.

In rebuttal Mr. Mnzavas, learned counsel for the respondents supported the decision of the High Court. It was submitted that section 43A of the Evidence Act deals with criminal matters and that it does not stop a party going to court in connection with a G civil suit. The learned counsel also referred us to the decision of this Court in Civil Appeal No. 8/89 (supra) in which section 43A of the Evidence Act was discussed.

As for the signing of the written statement of defence by the advocate for the 2nd H respondent it was argued that the 2nd defendant was served by substituted service by publication on the application of the appellant/plaintiff and that the advocate had to sign on behalf of the 2nd respondent/2nd defendant who was absent. In support of his argument the Court was referred to 0.6 Rules 14 and 15 of the Civil Procedure Code. I

1992 TLR p27

MNZAVAS JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MAPIGANO AG. JA

Coming to the question of amendment of the written statement of defence without first A obtaining leave of the Court Mr. Mnzavas argued that 0.8 Rules 1 and 2 allowed the respondent to amend the written statement of defence without leave.

In the alternative the learned counsel submitted that if the Court found that he should have sought leave to amend the written statement of defence he prayed that he be B allowed to amend the written statement of defence to enable him to include the defence of contributory negligence.

After having carefully scrutinized the submissions by the learned counsels and having read the decisions quoted to us, we are far from being persuaded by Mr. Mnzavas C argument in rebuttal that section 43A of the Evidence Act only deals with criminal matters and that a decision in a criminal case can be challenged in civil proceedings. D

Section 43A of the evidence Act says:

A final judgment of a court in any criminal proceedings which declares any person to be guilty of a criminal offence shall, after the expiry of the time limited for an appeal against E that judgment or after the date of the decision of any appeals in whose proceedings, which ever is the latest, be taken as conclusive evidence that the person so convicted was guilty of that offence. F

Section 47A of the Kenya Evidence Act which is apparently analogous in its wording with section 43A of our Evidence Act was subjected to legal interpretation by the East Africa Court of Appeal in Robinson V. Oluoch [1971] E.A. 376 in which (at page 378) the Court said, inter alia: G

The respondent to this appeal was convicted by a competent court of careless driving in connection with the accident, the subject of his suit. Careless driving necessarily connotes some degree of negligence ... in those circumstances it may not be open to the H respondent to deny that his driving, in relation to the accident, was negligent. But that is a very different matter from saying ... that a conviction for an offence involving negligent driving is conclusive evidence that the convicted person was the only person whose negligence caused the I

A accident, and that he is precluded from alleging contributory negligency on the part of another person in subsequent civil proceedings.

Coming back home this Court had occasion to deal with section 43A of the Evidence B Act in Civil Appeal No. 8 of 1989 in Benedicto Augustino and two others v Godwin Manase Zephania (supra) where it said, inter alia:

... Mr. Raithatha assailed the inclusion of the result of the traffic case in a civil suit and C disagreed with section 43A of the Evidence Act used by the learned trial judge for this purpose. Section 43A in effect says that final judgment of a court in a criminal offence shall be taken as conclusive evidence that the person so convicted was guilty of that offence. Of D course it shall be taken as conclusive evidence that the person so convicted and no other, was guilty of that offence, whether another person contributed to the happening of the collision is a matter which calls for other evidence.

That being the law regarding section 43A of the Evidence Act and bearing in mind that E the 2nd respondent did not challenge ether conviction by way of an appeal and after the time limited for an appeal had expired he cannot be heard to say that he was not negligent in his driving. As he was convicted of causing death by dangerous driving it F is our view that dangerous driving connotes some degree of negligence. We agree with Mr. Uzanda's argument that the most the respondents could do is to allege contributory negligence.

As for the signing of the written statement of defence by the advocate it is our view that 0.6 R. 14 of the Civil Procedure Code gives discretion to the Court under the proviso G "that where a party pleading is, by reason of absence or for other good cause, unable to sign the pleading it may be signed by any person duly authorized by him to sign the same or to sue or defend on his behalf."

It is our view that the Indian decisions quoted to us by Mr. Uzanda, learned counsel for H the appellant are too restrictive. The learned trial judge properly exercised his discretion when he said that the signing of the pleading by the advocate for the respondents was in order.

Coming to the amendment of the written statement of defence without leave of the I court we agree that this offended the clear provisions of 0.8 R.13 of the Civil Procedure Code but it is also our considered view A that this lapse on the part of the respondents did not prejudice the appellant/plaintiff; this is especially so taking into account that the plaintiff had been given leave to amend his plaint. We would like to mention, if only in passing, that justice should always be done without undue regard to technicalities. B

In the event it is our view that this appeal should be allowed in part. The appellant is awarded 50% of the costs which are to follow the event.

C Appeal allowed in part.

1992 TLR p29

D

[zRPz]SOFIA SAID AND YUSUF MOHAMED MUSA v AWADH AHMED ABEID & THREE OTHERS 1992 TLR 29 (CA)

Court Court of appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas, JJA, Mapigano Ag. JA

28 February, 1992 E

Flynote

Islamic law - Inheritance - Principles of inheritance where a person dies intestate;

Islamic law - Inheritance - Importance of proximity to the deceased person in intestate F succession.

-Headnote

Fatuma d/o Sefu who was a Sunni - Shaffii Moslem died intestate in 1983. After an application in the Kariakoo Primary Court by the could be heirs the Court appointed G the fourth respondent as the administrator of the deceased estate. On the same day the court made an order that the assets of the deceased be sold by auction. There was no dispute that under Islamic law Mgeni Hemedi, the surviving husband of the deceased was entitled to take half of whatever fell to be decided. The issue was the method to H be adopted for the distribution of the remaining part of the estate. Several relatives from the uterine and agnate sides competed for a share. The matter was taken to the District Court. The District Court held that since there were no Koranic heirs other than Mgeni Hemedi, heirs on the uterine side are entitled to inherit along with those on the agnate I side. The appellants are aggrieved by this decision and they appealed to the High Court. The High Court upheld the decision of the District A Court. They appealed further to the Court of appeal.

Held: (i) In the Islamic law of succession the principle of proximity is of great importance in that within the limits of each class the nearer of blood excludes the remote; B

(ii) under the Islamic law of inheritance there are three principal classes of heirs - the "sharers" or "koranic heirs"; "Residuaries" and the "Distant Kindred". The rule regarding their right of inheritance prescribes that residuaries inherit only where there are C no koranic heirs or where the inheritable estate is not exhausted by the Koranic heirs and the distant kindred inherit only where there are no sharers of residuaries;

(iii) as the Koranic heir, Mgeni Hemedi, did not exhaust the estate the only person who has the right of inheritance in the circumstances is a residuary i.e. the second appellant. D The rest of the claimants have no right under Islamic law.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Mchora, for the appellants E

Ngasala, for the respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

Mapigano, Ag. J.A. and Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: This case concerns the estate of Fatuma d/o Sefu, hereinafter "the deceased", who died intestate in 1983. The F deceased was a Sunni - Shaffii Moslem, so the distribution of the estate, of which two houses are the main assets, is governed by the rules of that sect.

On 23/11/83 before the Primary Court at Kariakoo in Dar es Salaam the two appellants and three other persons who claimed to be heirs proposed that Mohamed G Ussi, the third respondent herein, be appointed administrator of the estate. But on 3/12/83 it pleased that court that the administration of the estate be granted to Saidi Mohamed Harriz, the fourth respondent. On the same day the court made an order that the assets be sold by auction.

The deceased was the wife of Mgeni Hemedi, and there was on agreement by the H claimants, and it was in full accord with the law of the estate, that Mgeni Hemedi, as surviving spouse, is entitled to take half of whatever fell to be divided. There was however a dispute as to whether

Mohamed Ussi, Shaban Abdul and his sisters Tatu I Abdul and Fitina Abdul could be called to the succession along with the appellants Sofia Saidi and Yusuf Mohamed Mussa. The contention of the appellants was that they were the only persons, apart from Mgeni A Hemedi, who could succeed to the estate, by reason of agnation. The appellants took the dispute to the District Court of Ilala although the matter could and should have been adjudicated upon by the primary court first, in terms of the Fifth Schedule to the B Magistrates' Courts Act, 1963, which was then in force.
1992 TLR p31
MNZAVAS JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MAPIGANO AG. JA
Mr. Machano, learned advocate, who appeared for the appellants submitted before the district court that Mohamed Ussi, Shaban Abdul and his sisters are excluded from succession on two grounds: first, they are kindred on the uterine side, which indeed C they are, and Mr. Machano referred the court to a broad statement made by Sheikh Ali bin Hemedi El-Buhuri in his handbook Mohamedan Law of Inheritance: secondly, they were "too far in the genealogical line".
However, another handbook on the same subject written by an equally renowned D Islamic law jurist, Sheikh Abdullah Salehe Farsy, was available to the senior district magistrate, and the learned magistrate understood Sheikh Farsy as holding the contrary, namely, that in a situation like the one is this case the net estate is divided to both agnate and uterine heirs. E
In his judgment dated 13/7/84 the learned magistrate preferred the view taken by Sheikh Farsy and held that since there was no Koranic heirs other than Mgeni Hemedi, which was common ground, heirs on the uterine side are entitled to inherit along with those on the agnate side. He also took into consideration the fact, as he found it, that F the uterine claimants were more intimate to the deceased and had cared for her during her old age and incurred a substantial amount of money on her funeral. He expressed no opinion on the respondents' argument that since the mother of the deceased would have taken of half of the estate, if she had survived the deceased, those who would have G inherited the mother's estate are not debarred from distribution. And he did not pronounce on the portions to be given to the claimants.
They, innuendo the appellants, were aggrieved by the decision of the district court and they appealed it to the High Court. In his judgment dated 20/12/86, Bahati, J. upheld H that decision. What is before us, therefore, is a second appeal.
On behalf of the appellants Mr. Mchora, learned advocate, has set out three grounds of appeal in the memorandum viz: I
1992 TLR p32
MNZAVAS JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MAPIGANO AG. JA
A 1. That the learned judge erred when he upheld the decision of the lower courts which held that heirs on the uterine side may inherit along with those on the agnate side where the deceased is a Moslem and his or her estate has to be administered according to Islamic law.
B 2. That the learned judge misdirected himself when he upheld the reasoning that Sheikh Farsy's opinion in respect of the matter was more appropriate and fitting than that of Sheikh Buhuri.

C 3. That the learned judge erred when he held that the appeal had no merit.

It seems to us that these grounds admit of being considered together. We have, D however, failed to understand why the first, second and fourth respondents have been made parties to these proceedings.

Before we heard the appeal we were under the strong impression that these grounds of appeal are confined to the question whether agnate heirs were, at law of the estate, E superior to uterine heirs, and in actual fact that was the burden of Mr. Machano's address in the district court. But in his submission before us Mr. Mchora changed tuck. He criticized the learned judge in the High Court for failing to consider the proximity to the deceased of each of the claimants. He concluded his speech by asking us to F remand the case back to the primary court for it to take additional evidence on the point and determine the same.

Learned counsel for the respondents, Mr. Ngasala, supported the concurrent finding of the court below, saying that the courts were entitled to accept Sheikh Farsy's opinion, G which opinion, he said, is grounded on equity. With regard to the question of proximity, Mr. Ngasala replied that the matter was not raised in the courts below, though he conceded that it is of immense importance in the scheme of Islamic succession.

With due respect to Mr. Ngasala, it is not true that the question of proximity was not H raised in the courts below. It was raised in the district court. We think that that is precisely what Mr. Machano had in mind when he submitted that the respondents are "too far in the genealogical line", about which the learned magistrate said nothing. I

It is beyond question that in the scheme of Islamic succession the principle of proximity is a vitally momentous one. It is a scheme that has held true A for centuries, and one that is applicable to all classes of heirs so that within the limits of each class the nearer of blood excludes the more remote. We are disposed to think that even Farsy's statement is subject to that principle.

Another scholar, Sir Roland Knyvet Wilson holds with the view expressed by Sheikh B Buhari about agnate superiority. In his Digest of Anglo - Muhammadan Law, 5th edition, Wilson writes at page 62:

C Special rules, based directly or by analogy on Koranic texts, govern the cases of females standing alone in the nearer degrees, and beyond the degree of sister patriarchal usage prevails in all Sunni schools to the extent of totally excluding females and blood- relations of either sex connected with the deceased through females, so long as there is any male D collateral, tracing up and down through an unbroken line of males - in other words any agnate, however remote.

In any event, the claims of the heirs in this case must be considered in the light of their classes, which, in our view, is determinative of the claims. Islamic lawyers distinguish E three principal classes of heirs and this also has held true down through the ages.

The first principal class is called "Sharers" or "Koranic heirs" of which, as stated, F there is only one in this case, i.e. Mgeni Hemedi. The second is called "Residuaries" or "Asabah" and looking at the Table of Residuaries in Mulla's Principles of Mohamedan Law, 14th edition at page 69A, there is only one such heir among the claimants in this case i.e. the second appellant Yusuf Mohamed Musa, he being an agnate nephew of G the deceased. The third class is commonly referred to as "Distant Kindred" and this is the class to which the rest of the claimants, including the first appellant Sofia Saidi, belong.

Germane to these classes is the rule of exclusion or postponement. The rule prescribes H that Residuaries are called to succession only where there are nos Sharers or where the inheritable estate is not exhausted by the Sharers; and the Distant Kindred are called to succession only where there are no Sharers of Residuaries: See Mulla, sections 65 and 67 (1). I

Accordingly, inasmuch as there is only one Koranic heir and there will be a residue left after satisfying his claim, the residuary, i.e. the second A appellant, should be called to succession. And inasmuch as there is a residuary, nothing can devolve upon the rest of the claimants. That is the legal position, and much as we may appreciate the affection and generosity which some of the claimants had displayed toward the deceased, there is nothing we can do. B

1992 TLR p34

For the benefit of some of the claimants we conclude by making this observation: it is a wrong thought that they can stand in the place of the mother of the deceased, for the doctrine of representation is alien to Islamic intestacy. So it matters not that the mother of the deceased would have been called to the succession of the estate, if she had C survived the deceased, and that upon her death the claimants would have partition in her inheritance. As Wilson points out in his Digest at page 64, the case of Prophet Mohamed himself poignantly exemplifies the true legal position. He writes: D

> Thus, in Muhammad's own case, his father Abdullah having predeceased him (in fact, having died before he was born) while the grandfather was still living, the other sons of the grandfather divided the whole of the latter's inheritance to his total exclusion, and he E owed his maintenance and start in life to the kindness of one of his uncles.

Wilson presumes that this system satisfied the Prophet's sense of justice though he F personally suffered by it, since he did not alter it when he was in a position to do so. And of course it is beyond our competence to change that system.

In the ultimate event this appeal succeeds, and we allow it with costs. In view of what we have remarked about the joinder of the first, second and fourth respondents, we G order that the costs be paid by the third respondent Mohamed Ussi alone.

Appeal allowed. H

1992 TLR p35

A

[zRPz]OMARY MOHAMED v AWADH ABDALLAH 1992 TLR 35 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga

Judge Kyando J

28 February 1992
Flynote
Land law - Co-ownership - Division of the house in terms of its value and option to B purchase the other's share.
-Headnote
The plaintiff and the defendant, who are cousins, jointly owned on equal share, a plot and a house located in Ngamiani area in Tanga municipality. They both lived in the said house with their relatives. After some time a sharp disagreement arose between them C and the plaintiff sought for and got alternative accommodation. The plaintiff brought this action requesting the court to either sell the house and have the proceeds divided equally between them or any of the parties should purchase the share of the other. D
Held: (i) In the circumstances of the case the defendant was not responsible for the conflict which arose in relation to the occupation and use of the house;
(ii) the fairest method, for which the parties also agreed, was the division of the E house in terms of its value and to give the parties an option of purchasing the other's share.
Case Information
Order accordingly.
[zJDz]Judgment
Kyando, J:. The plaintiff and the defendant in this case are cousins. Their mothers F are full sisters. They jointly bought Plot No. 8, Bloc 46, Barabara ya 8, Ngamiani, Tanga Municipality and constructed, jointly, a house on it. There had been an old house on the plot, which had belonged to their mothers. They demolished the old house and G constructed their present house in its place. Construction commenced in 1974 and was completed in 1979. It is apparent that in the house which was demolished their respective parents and other relatives, such as their mothers' sisters and an uncle lived in, together with the parties hereto. On completion of construction of the new house H the plaintiff and the defendant divided between themselves rooms in the house and they each had equal portions in the house. They continued to share their respective portions with their relatives, e.g. on the part of the defendant, with both his parents, and on the part of the plaintiff, with his mother, his mother's sisters and an uncle of the parties. I
1992 TLR p36
KYANDO J
They (the parties) are now involved in a wrangle over the house. The plaintiff in his A plaint prays that it be sold, at a public auction, and the proceeds be divided equally between them, or, alternatively, any of the parties purchase the share of the other by paying him shs. 750,000/= and any one party whose share is purchased should vacate B the house "the soonest."
The plaintiff alleges that what brought about the conflict over the house was the defendant's breach of their agreement whereby the (the defendant) let into the house "his relatives other than his families, to wit he let in one (1) Addarahman Abdala with his C wife and 2 children (2) Ramadhani Abdalla with his wife and 2 children." (See para 7 of the plaint). In paras 8 - 14 of the Plaint, the plaintiff states that:

8. That because of this influx of this large number of people and whose character and D behaviour was quite unbearable, the plaintiff found the said so he protested against this move by the defendant but the latter took no positive step to rectify the situation.

E 9. That finding that he could not reside at the house with his family, the plaintiff decided to and rented his part of the house.

10. That the plaintiff's tenants who were sociable people could not stay in the house for F long due to molestation and annoyance by the defendant and his relatives.

11. That since the end of 1983 to date the plaintiff has not been able to use his part of the house and so the same has remained idle. G

12. That the plaintiff has made proposals to the defendant that because the purpose of acquiring the house and rebuilding it has been defeated, the same should be sold by H public auction or one party purchase the other's share in the said house, the defendant has been unreasonably resisting any of these alternatives.

13. That the current market value of the house according to offers made by prospective I buyers is shs. 1,500,000/=.

1992 TLR p37

KYANDO J

14. That the plaintiff is willing and ready to buy the defendant's share in the house by A paying him shs. 750,000/=.

In his defence the defendant stated that it is not true that he let into the house people other than members of his family. He said the people concerned are his full brothers B Abrahaman Abdalla and Ramadhani Abdallah.

In paper 5,7,8, 9 and 10, of his written Statement of defence the defendant states:

5. The defendant denies para 8 of the plaint for the reasons that there were not large C numbers of people as stated by the plaintiff more than my young brothers as mentioned in para 4 of this written statement of Defence.

7. Paragraph 10 of the plaint is completely denied, there were not any molestation and D annoyance to his tenants. Further more he reached (sic) this matter to the police and hence to court complaining that I threatened his tenants Criminal Case No. 508/86 in the District Court Tanga refers. Those tenants called to court to give their evidence E about the complaint of the plaintiff, but they told the court that there were no any trouble or molestation or annoyance made by the defendant to them.

8. Paragraph 11 is also denied as nobody prevented him to use his part, he is living in F his house at Street No. 7 that is why he locked his rooms.

9. The defendant denies para 12 of the plaint, first of all I lived in that house since 1970 until now, and I have no other house to live in. I agree to purchase the share to the G plaintiff, but not by (sic!) black market as this matter has reached to the Resident Magistrate - in - charge, Tanga and he wrote a letter with Ref. SRM CONF/CIV/3/12 of 27/3/1987 to the Regional Valuation Officer to visit the house and make his value H (sic!) but to date no reply effected.

10. Paragraph 13 of the Plaint completely denied, the said house cannot reach (sic!) even half the amount as stated I

1992 TLR p38

A by the plaintiff, and that is why I emphasise to be valued by value (sic) Officers. The Written Statement of Defence is drawn by a lay hand. This is apparent from a mere glance of it. Nonetheless, while the defendant agrees with the proposal to have the B house divided into shares in terms of value and that one of them, the parties, should purchase the other's share and keep the house, he disagrees with the idea of the house being auctioned. He prefers that it be valued by a Government Valuer and then half of the value be paid to one who will not keep the house by the one who will keep it. He C suggests that he should be the one to buy out the plaintiff as he, he said, has no other house to live in while the plaintiff has the one he moved to when he shifted from the house in dispute in this case. The defendant also denies that he is the one who is responsible for the dispute which arose between the parties in relation to the house. D

The following issues were agreed on by the parties:

(1) Should the house be sold by public auction or one party should pay the other part of the amount shown in the Valuation Report? E

(2) What reliefs are the parties entitled to?

On the first issue, the plaintiff proposes sale of the house because, as shown, he F considers that the defendant is the one to blame for the dispute which has arisen in relation to the house. However, during the hearing the defendant contended that the plaintiff is an over sensitive and arrogant person; he took offence at very trivial matters which his (defendant's) relatives did. He said the plaintiff would even brag that he was G light complexioned while the defendant and his relatives were dark skinned (both the parties are Arabs). He bragged too, according to the defendant, about his having money while the defendant and his kins did not have any.

In my opinion on the first issue when the house was constructed it cannot be said that H it was meant for occupation exclusively by the parties and their families only - families in the European or white man's sense of the word. I think it was intended for occupation by the parties and their relatives as it now is. This is event from the fact that each of the parties had his relatives in the house right from the time it was ready for occupation. In I fact even before then, in the old house, the parties lived with relatives. The defendant lived with both his parents in the house. It would not therefore be any A wonder if his brothers, Abdarahaman Abdallah and Ramadhani Abdallah came to the house and joined their parents and brother, the defendant, even with their children and wives, there. I am of the view then that the coming to the house of the defendant'a brother was not in itself a breach of any agreement in relation to the occupation of the B house by the parties. I am of the view, too, that the coming to the house by the defendant's brother is not a matter for which the defendant is to be blamed in relation to the conflict which arose. The conflict arose due to poor relations between the plaintiff and those brothers and I think it may be true that it was because of the plaintiff's C oversensitivity, hatred and arrogance as stated by the defendant in his evidence. I will not therefore hold the defendant in any way to blame for the conflict which has now arisen in relation to the occupation of the house.

1992 TLR p39

KYANDO J

The above being the position, I think it is then for this court to adopt the fairest D method of dealing with the house as between the parties. Selling it at a public auction would certainly render the defendant homeless, for no fault, as held, of his. The plaintiff on the other hand has another house and does not live in the suit house. I am of the view then that selling the house by auctioning it will result in grave injustice to the defendant. E

There is a method which both the parties agree to. The plaintiff, of course, seems to have developed second thoughts about it and now insists on sale by public auction. The method is the division of the house in terms of its value, and then giving the parties an F option of purchasing the other's share and the one whose share has been purchased to move out of the house. The plaintiff says that if this is the option adopted, he should be the one to be given the opportunity to buy.

I think this method is fair. As I have said the plaintiff pleads it in his plaint as an G alternative relief. He is bound by his pleading and he cannot now wriggle out of them as he now attempts to do. Also I do not see why he should be the one to be given the first option to buy. As I have sid the defendant is not to blame for the conflict which has arisen in relation to the house. Also he is the one now in occupation of the house. I H think it would be fair therefore to let him see if he can purchase plaintiff's share first and if he fails then the plaintiff should be given the chance to purchase defendant's share. In the result then, the house is to be divided in two shares in terms of value. Then the defendant is to be given the first chance to purchase the plaintiff's share. If he fails to I do so within three months from the date of the delivery of this judgment, then the plaintiff is to purchase A defendant's share. The house was valued by a Government Valuer at Shs. 2,077,440/= on 26th June, 1991 (see his Valuation Report No. VAR/C/TAN/I/VOL.XI of 25th June, 1991) and that is to be taken as the present value of the house. The parties, or B anyone of them, may reapply to the court for revaluation of the house by the Government Valuer before any purchase of the shares is done. The new value will then be the basis for dividing the house into the shares I have ordered here.

I have made the above order because I am satisfied on the evidence that the parties C cannot possibly continue to co-own the house. They are in serious conflict over it now, and it is best that one of them ceases to be associated with it altogether. This will disengage them from further contacts over the house, which contacts have been the reason for the present conflict between them.

In the decision which I have made, I do not think either party can be said to have won D as against the other. I therefore will not make any order as to costs.

E Order accordingly.

F

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Masanche J

11 March 1992
Flynote
Criminal law - Obtaining by false pretence.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Omnibus sentence - Offences committed G in close association with each other - Whether consecutive or concurrent sentence - Rectification of sentencing procedure by an appellate court.
-Headnote
Appellant was charged with and convicted of obtaining money by false presences H contrary to section 302 of the Penal Code. It is alleged that the appellant went around in the township of Mwanza soliciting for money, especially from Asian businessmen, saying that he was sent by Government officials to collect such monies for Mwenge festivals. I He collected money from five persons. The sentence he got was one of three years for all the offences.
1992 TLR p41
MASANCHE J
Held: (i) It is unlawful to award omnibus sentence. Each count must receive a A requisite sentence. The magistrate may then decide to order the sentences to either run concurrently or consecutively depending on the nature of the charges and the evidence unfurled at the trial [See R. v White [1972] Crim L.R at 193];

(ii) the three year sentence imposed on the appellant was not on the high side. For B the record purposes the sentencing procedure adopted by the trial magistrate must be rectified;

(iii) On each of the five counts the appellant be sentenced to three years imprisonment. These sentences should run concurrently to each other and hence the appellant should serve three years imprisonment. C
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
[zJDz]Judgment
Masanche, J.: Appellant Jumanne Ramadhani was charged with and convicted of D obtaining money by false presences contrary to section 302 of the penal code. He had been charged along with another person called Mohamed Ally, Jumanne Ramadhani, the present appellant, was the second accused, according to the charge sheet dated 11/8/86, and Mohamed Ally was the first accused. Mohamed Ally got acquitted on a E benefit of doubt. The present appellant got convicted on all the counts he had been charged with, and was sentenced to an omnibus sentence of three years imprisonment.
I must straight away say that it is unlawful to award omnibus sentence. Each count F must receive a requisite sentence. The magistrate may then decide to order the sentences to either run concurrently or consecutively, depending on the nature of the charges and the evidence unfurled at the trial. A commentary to the case of R. v White [1972] Crim. L.R., at 193, a case decided by Queens Bench Divisional Court G comprising Lord Widgery C.J., Sacks L.J., and Ackner J., says this:

The general principle that offences committed in close association with each other should not normally attract consecutive sentences applies only where the offences concerned H are broadly similar in character or related in terms of subject - matter. Where two wholly different offences are committed at the same time, even against the same victim, consecutive sentences may properly be imposed. I

1992 TLR p42

MASANCHE J

In that case, a Jamaican got convicted on five counts of obtaining property by A deception and one of rape. He got money by telling the victims that he could cure them of their evil spirits. From one of them, a woman, he demanded sexual intercourse as a cure. Consecutive sentences were imposed and upheld.

Yet, in another commentary, in [1970] Crim L.R., at page 593, it is said, on B sentences:

As a general rule, consecutive sentences even though imposed for quite separate offences should not be added together to produce an aggregate sentence which is totally C out of proportion to the gravity of the individual offences, or the most serious of them. A court is entitled to reduce what would be the logical total sentence if a strictly mechanical approach were followed, if this is necessary to produce a reasonable result. D

The general rule, and the pattern in most cases is for the court to impose sentences on each count and then order that the sentences should run concurrently.

The appellant, as Mr. Kabonde, the learned state attorney has pointed out, is E appealing against sentence. He is not aggrieved at the conviction. Indeed, he could not complain against the conviction on such tangible evidence that was unfurled at the trial. Appellant went around in the township of Mwanza soliciting for money, especially F from Asian businessmen, saying that he was sent by Government officials to collect such monies for Mwenge Festivals. Almost all the Asian businessmen who parted with money identified him in Court to be the very fellow who had gone around to collect such moneys. In total, he collected about Shs. 10,000/=. He then got caught and was sent before law enforcing organs; then he got charged and got convicted. The sentence he G got was one of three years for all the offences put together. Such a 3 year jail term was not on the high side.

However, for record purposes, I have to rectify the sentencing procedure that the learned magistrate had adopted. I order that on each of the five counts the appellant H be sentenced to three years imprisonment. But, these sentences should run concurrent to each other. That is to say, the appellant only serves three years imprisonment.

I Appeal is dismissed.

1992 TLR p43

A

[zRPz]SEIF SHARIF HAMAD v S.M.Z 1992 TLR 43 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Zanzibar
Judge Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas JJA, Mapigano Ag. JA

13 March 1992
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Jurisdiction - Ruling on preliminary point relating to B jurisdiction of trial court - Whether appealable - Whether Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to entertain the appeal.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Jurisdiction - Section 6(2) of the Appellate C Jurisdiction Act, 1979 - Right to appeal.
-Headnote
After preliminary inquiry the appellant was committed to the High Court for trial. A regional magistrate, Mr. Mmilla on extended jurisdiction was duly assigned to hear and determine the case. Before hearing commenced the appellant raised a point of D jurisdiction of the trial court. The court ruled that it had jurisdiction to try the case. The appellant filed an appeal with the Court of Appeal challenging the ruling that the regional magistrate, with extended jurisdiction, was legally competent to conduct the trial. E
Before the Court of Appeal could entertain the appeal it considered whether it had jurisdiction to hear the appeal in view of section 6 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 and also whether the appellant was competent to lodge the appeal. F
Held: (i) The ruling of Mr. Mmilla was a specie of interlocutory order, and following our decision in Alois Kula we have no jurisdiction to hear an appeal against it under the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979;

(ii) the Court of Appeal has no inherent power to exercise jurisdiction where no G right of appeal is provided;

(iii) our appellate jurisdiction derives from the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979. Section 6 deals with criminal appeals like this one. Section 6(2) expressly permits only the D.P.P. to appeal against any order of the High Court or subordinate court in the H exercise of extended jurisdiction;

(iv) The appellant has no right of appeal.

Case Information
Appeal incompetent and premature. I
1992 TLR p44
RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA, MAPIGANO AG. JA
[zJDz]Judgment
Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: The appellant, Seif A Sharif Hamad, is challenging the ruling of Mr. Mmilla, Regional Magistrate, in the exercise of extended jurisdiction, that he has the jurisdiction to try the appellant.
After the conduct of a preliminary inquiry the appellant was committed to the High B Court for trial. His Lordship, the Chief Justice of Zanzibar, Mr. Hamadi, assigned the case to Mr.

Mmilla on extended jurisdiction. The appellant raised one major preliminary point of jurisdiction at the trial, and that was whether Mr. Mmilla was legally competent to conduct the trial.

This appeal was adjourned on the day it was first set for hearing. This court then C required the counsel for the appellant, as well as the counsel for the respondent/S.M.Z. to come to address it, when hearing is resumed, on whether or not this Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal in view of Section 6 of The Appellate Jurisdiction Act, D 1979 as interpreted in our recent decision in Alois Kula and Another v R., Criminal Appeal No. 121 of 1991 (unreported).

Before us, was Mr. Nowrejee, learned counsel. He had two main submissions.

First, he said that the decision in Alois Kula is to the effect that this Court does not E have jurisdiction to hear appeals against interlocutory orders. He submitted that the present appeal is not against an interlocutory order but against a decision on a preliminary point of law. He argued that at the stage reached before the Regional Magistrate no plea had been taken and assessors had not been chosen. In short the F trial had not started. To him an interlocutory order is one made after a trial has commenced but before it has been concluded. He argued that this appeal is founded on fresh proceedings before Mr. Mmilla even before the trial had started. So, he G concluded, what is before us is an appeal against a preliminary point of law not an interlocutory order.

His second submission was that this Court has inherent and or residual powers of appeal where the proceedings before the lower Court were a nullity or where jurisdiction was lacking. He cited David Mbowa Ndele v R. Criminal Appeal No. 1 H of 1989 (unreported) as his authority. In Ndede the Court of Appeal of Kenya used its inherent or residual powers to hear an appeal against a conviction founded on a plea of guilty while that is prohibited by Section 348 of the Criminal Procedure Code which only allows appeal against sentence. I

1992 TLR p45

RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA, MAPIGANO AG. JA

Mr. Nowrejee then urged us to use our inherent and residual powers to hear this A appeal.

On behalf of the respondent/S.M.Z. was Mr. Mutembei, learned State Attorney. He submitted that the ruling of Mr. Mmilla was interlocutory. To him an interlocutory order is one which is made by a court at any stage of the case but which does not finally B determine the case.

Mr. Mutembei argued that the appellate jurisdiction of this Court is a creation of a statute, The Appellate Jurisdiction Act, and that Section 6, does not admit of an appeal against an interlocutory order. Mr. Mutembei relied on Alois Kula and A. - G v. C Shah [1971] E.A. 50, which we have cited in Alois Kula, as his authorities for his submission.

As for the issue of inherent and residual powers of this Court, Mr. Mutembei said that the division in Ndode supports that in Alois Kula. The learned State Attorney submitted that the prohibition on appeal against conviction after a plea of guilty is not absolute D and it was so said in Ndode. But here, Mr. Mutembei argued, the prohition on appeal against interlocutory order is absolute.

In reply Mr. Nowrejee stuck to his guns that there was no interlocutory order. E

Then Mr. Nowrejee contended that what gives this Court its jurisdiction is section 4 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act which is broader in scope than Section 6. He admitted that Section 6(2) permits the D.P.P. only, and not the other party, to appeal against any order of the High Court. But he submitted that was not so in every instance. Where F the issue is nullity of proceedings or want of jurisdiction there are inherent and residual powers of appeal. Mr. Nowrejee pointed out that Alois Kula did not deal with these two issues so it is distinguishable.

Mr. Nowrejee also argued that Section 6 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act does not G give a right of appeal to a party other than the D.P.P. by implication only and that the right of appeal is not expressly denied. However, he added, the prohibition of appeal against as conviction based on a plea of guilty, as provided in section 324 of the Criminal Procedure Decree, like section 348 of the Kenyan Criminal Procedure H Code, is expressly prescribed, So, he submitted, if, notwithstanding an express prohibition, an appeal is entertainable, then it is a fortiori case where the prohibition is by implication.

The first issue we have to determine is whether Mr. Mmilla's order was an I interlocutory order or not.

1992 TLR p46

RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA, MAPIGANO AG. JA

Blacks Law Dictionary (Revised 4th ed) has this to say on interlocutory order: A

> An order which decides not the cause, but only settles some intervening matter relating to it ... B

Now, what was the "cause" before Mr. Mmilla? Was it whether or not he had jurisdiction, and for that matter jurisdiction to do what? Or was the cause before him whether or not the appellant was guilty of the charges facing him? We are not a shade in doubt that the guilty or the innocence of the appellant was the cause before him, and C that the preliminary point was raised just when he was about to try that cause.

It is plain that Mr. Mmilla's ruling did not decide the cause. The ruling, in our view, was a specie of interlocutory order, and following our decision in Alois Kula we have no D jurisdiction to hear an appeal against it under The Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 of which we shall have more to say in a short while.

The second issue which calls for our decision is whether or not we have residual or inherent powers over and above these given by the statute. E

This was categorically settled by our predecessor, the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in Rex v John Christopher Nealon (1950) 17 E.A.C.A. 120 at 121 thus:

> F This Court has no inherent power to exercise jurisdiction where no right of appeal is provided.

That was reiterated by that Court twenty years later in A - G v Shah thus:

> G It has long been established and we think there is ample authority for saying that appellate jurisdiction springs only from statute. There is no such thing as inherent appellate jurisdiction. H

And that is what we, also after another twenty years, have maintained in Alois Kula.

Our appellate jurisdiction derives from The Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979. Section 6 deals with criminal appeals like this one. Section 6(2) expressly permits only the I D.P.P. to appeal against any order of the High Court or subordinate court in the exercise of extended jurisdiction. Thus any party other than the D.P.P., like the A appellant here, has no such right.

As we have mentioned Mr. Nowrejee submitted that that denial does not extend to issue of nullity of proceedings or jurisdiction. With respect that is not so and has never been so as this extract from R. v Nealon at page 121 vividly demonstrates: B

But learned Crown Counsel relying on Rex v Sironga has argued that the revisional order in this appeal was made without jurisdiction and is a nullity so that in his submission the order appealed from was not a valid order in revision and in his submission an appeal C lies on point of jurisdiction.

The Court then went on to say that:

It may well be thought most extraordinary that no appeal should lie from an order D purporting to be made in revision either on a point of law or on point of jurisdiction, but we must take the law as we find it and under the law the right of appeal to this Court from the Supreme Court of Kenya exists only in cases where a right of appeal is provided by the E laws of Kenya and there is no such provision applicable to this case. This Court has no inherent power to exercise jurisdiction where no right of appeal is provided. (emphasis provided).

If we substitute Tanzania for Kenya wherever that name appears and the High Court F for the Supreme Court, then the analogy is complete.

The reasons for prohibiting a party other than the D.P.P. from appealing against interlocutory orders are not far to seek. The criminal proceedings would undoubtedly G be very protracted as an accused person would be attracted to appeal against every order.

That ought to have disposed the appeal but from brotherly respect to our colleagues in the Court of Appeal of Kenya we have to say a thing or two on Ndede.

First, we could say that the decision is of mere persuasive authority. That is an easier H thing to do but it is escapist. So, secondly, we say that even this Court has done the same in similar cases like Ndede because then the appellant comes with reasons saying that "I did not plead guilty" or words to that effect. The Court then has to assess the plea whether it was one of guilty or not. If it was of guilty then that disposes of the I matter forthwith, because there is no right of appeal against a proper plea of guilty. A

We want to make it abundantly clear that our decision does not finally determine the rights of the appellant. After the trial before Mr. Mmilla is over, and if the appellant is aggrieved, he can still come back and raise the issue of jurisdiction as one of his grounds B of appeal. So this appeal is incompetent and premature and we dismiss it.

C Appeal dismissed.

1992 TLR p48
D
[zRPz]THE REPUBLIC v MGEMA MANYUYA 1992 TLR 48 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tabora
Judge Korosso J

26 March, 1992
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Dismissal - Before lapse of 60 days illegal E and void - Court may refuse adjournment - S. 225 (4) Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.
-Headnote
In a trial before a District Court the presiding magistrate dismissed the charge and F discharged the accused under section 225(4) of the C.P.A after 55 days since commencement of proceedings. On revision the judge of the High Court found that the dismissal and discharge were unlawful and void, but observed that court have power in appropriate cases to refuse further adjournments of a case. G
Held: (i) The order for dismissal of the charge and discharge of the accused was null and void. Such order can only be made after the expiry of sixty days;
H (ii) in the application of the provisions of section 225(4) (a) of the CPA, the court has a discretion to refuse to adjourn a case even where a certificate has been filed by the Regional Crimes Officer if satisfied that the certificate has not been able to show an existence of a real need for an adjournment or the grounds are unreasonable. I
1992 TLR p49
[zJDz]Judgment
Korosso, J.: This revisional file was ordered to be opened with a view to satisfying A this Court as to the legality or propriety of the learned Principal District Magistrate order dated 27/3/1991 in which he dismissed the charge and discharged the Accused for failure by the prosecutor to file a certificate of the Regional Crimes Officer, Shinyanga, asking for an adjournment of the case for a further aggregate period of 60 days as B provided under the provisions of section 225 (4) of the CPA No. 9/85.
Mr. Oswald, the learned State Attorney, who represented the Republic at the hearing of the revision, submitted that the initial 60 days having not elapsed, the learned trial Magistrate was not legally justified in dismissing the charge and discharging the C Accused.
Indeed, the learned State Attorney, is right. The Accused had the charge formally read over to him on 31/1/1991 so that on 27/3/1991 when the charge was dismissed, there had elapsed 55 days or so in the aggregate. Self-evidently, the order was made prematurely. The discharge of the Accused was consequently illegal and the order a D nullity.
Be as it may, the learned trial Magistrate needs to be commended for being so mindful about the magnitude of the provisions of section 225 (4) of the CPA. There can be no room for compromise in the application of section 225(4) of the CPA. I may further E observe that in the application of the provisions of section 225 (4) (a) of the CPA, the Court has a discretion to refuse to adjourn the case even where a certificate has been filed by the Regional Crimes Officer if satisfied that the certificate has not been able to F show an existence of a real need for an adjournment or the grounds are unreasonable. Take this case in point as an example. The Accused was charged with the offence of giving false information to Mr. Magige, the Primary Court Magistrate at Bumela Primary Court on 14/90. In a case of this nature the said Magistrate was the only key witness. G It is difficult to really believe that it was not possible to secure the attendance of the Primary Court Magistrate, working in the same District before the District Court.

There may also arise a situation where all the witnesses but one have testified. If the Court honestly believes that the evidence of the remaining witness will be just like "a H fly on the coach-wheel', so that the case is bound to stand or fall on the evidence given thus far, it will be doing justice to the case to refuse the application. The position under the provisions of section 225 (4) (b) and (c) of the CPA has no relevancy to my foregone observations for under those I paragraphs (b) and (c) adjournment is obligatory once appropriate certificates are A filed on time.

I would emphasize here that the provisions of section 225(4) (a) (b) and (c) of the CPA are essentially intended to control the speed of hearing criminal cases so that proceedings are concluded within ascertainable period of time. The section is just like B a reins which a rider uses to control the direction and speed of an unruly horse.

The final question is whether or not this Court should order the arrest of the Accused so that the proceedings resume from where they stopped. C

I find myself overwhelmed by reluctance as a result of my surprise I expressed 'supra' because of the prosecution's failure to secure the attendance of Mr. Magige, the Primary Court of Bumela Primary Court, for 55 days.

Under the circumstances of this case, it would be violating the provisions of Article 13 D (6) (b) of the Constitution of 1977.

Consequently, I invoke the inherent powers of this Court by dismissing the charge and discharging the Accused.

E The Lower Court's order is quashed.

F

[zRPz]MASUDI ALLY v CHIKU MASUDI 1992 TLR 50 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tabora
Judge Korosso J

10 April 1992

Flynote
Customary Law - Inheritance - Rights of children to inherit parent's property. G
-Headnote
This is an appeal by the appellant challenging the decision of Kigoma District Court which rejected his claim for a right to inherit from a deceased person who was not his H relative.
Held: Under customary law only children of the deceased have the right to inherit from their deceased's parents property.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed. I
1992 TLR p51
[zJDz]Judgment
Korosso, J.: This is an appeal lodged by the Appellant challenging the decision of A the Kigoma District Court which reversed the decision of the Ujiji Urban Primary Court.
The Appellant was neither the son nor the relative of the Respondent's late father who exclusively owned the disputed residential house in Tabora Municipality. B
According to the para 26 of the Second Schedule of Declared Customary Law G/N 436/63, it is the children - them alone - of the Deceased that are customarily entitled to inherit the entire property, (without exception), of their late father. The appellant having been a complete stranger to the family of the Respondent's late father, he is equally a C stranger to the property of the Respondent's late father.
As it were true that the Respondent's late father had ever inherited the property of the Appellant's late father in 1956 when his father died, the Appellant would naturally have D sued the Respondent's late father during his lifetime until in 1990 when he passed away. Seeing that the Respondent's father is no longer with us, he decided to test the wisdom of courts of law.
On the foregone grounds, I dismiss the appeal in total with costs. E
Appeal dismissed.

F
[zRPz]PROTAS JOHN KITOGOLE AND ANOTHER v REPUBLIC 1992 TLR 51 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mbeya
Judge Makame JJA, Kisanga JJA, Omar, JJA

April 21, 1992 G
May 28, 1992
Flynote
Evidence - Circumstantial - Whether and when may ground a conviction. H
-Headnote
The appellants were charged with and convicted of murder by the High Court. The case against both accused/appellants was based wholly on circumstantial evidence. The pieces of circumstantial evidence tending to implicate the second appellant were: (i) I after the two deceased watchmen had been fatally wounded he was found

1992 TLR p52
MAKAME JJA, KISANGA JJA, OMAR JJA
at the home he was staying with a big fresh cut wound which was bleeding; (ii) A trail A of blood was traced from there right up to the carpentry workshop where the murders were committed. The appellants explanation that the cutwound was inflicted on him by bandits who had invaded the home was not backed up by any evidence; (iii) on the fateful night some 14 carpentry planes were stolen from the workshop, and six days B later the appellant told PW5, a relative, that he had carpentry planes for sale but cautioned him not to disclose this to anyone because theft of carpentry planes had taken place at Tosamaganga; (iv) just about six days prior to the commission of the murders, C the same workshop had been broken into and a welding machine (electric motor) was stolen from there but was later found abandoned only about nine meters away. In the dead of that same night the appellant had approached PW4 and asked him for a motor-vehicle to transport a motor from the workshop. Sensing that the said motor D was stolen PW4 refused to oblige.

As for the first appellant there were the following pieces of circumstantial evidence: (i) the appellant's companionship with his co-appellant (ii) the appellant's girl friend said that five to six days following the murders she visited the appellant's home where she E noticed the appellant with a big cut wound on his lower arm; the wound was not fresh. He threatened to kill her if she told people about the wound. She went on to say that the appellant used to put on T-shirts but that after the murders he used to put on long-sleeved shirt and a big coat; (iii) the appellant claimed that he sustained the cut F wound when he was trying to commit adultery with someone's wife. However there was no evidence to that effect.

The Court of Appeal considered whether or not the pieces of circumstantial evidence could ground a conviction in respect of each appellant. G

Held: (i) The fact that only shortly after the murders were committed, the second appellant was found with a big cut wound and that a trail of blood was traced from where he was found to the scene of the murders were incriminating circumstances H which lead to the only reasonable inference that the appellant took part in the murders. And the fact that the second appellant gave a false account of how he sustained the injury goes to strengthen this view;

(ii) although the evidence against the second appellant was a great deal stronger I than that against the first appellant we are fully satisfied that the circumstantial evidence against the first appellant
1992 TLR p53
MAKAME JJA, KISANGA JJA, OMAR JJA
was enough to lead to the irresistible conclusion that he was one of the killers; A (Kisanga, J.A., dissenting);

(iii) (per Kisanga, J.A.) The fact that the first appellant had sustained a cut wound on a certain day which wound according to the prosecution he was hiding cannot justify drawing the only reasonable inference that the first appellant sustained that wound B during the commission of the murders at the workshop on the night in question. That fact can be explained on another reasonable hypothesis, namely, that the injury could have been sustained elsewhere and the appellant would have reason to conceal it in order to avoid detection; C

(iv) (per Kisanga, J.A.) The fact that the appellant has not given a true account of how he sustained the cut wound would be relevant only if there was evidence which implicates him sufficiently with the offences charged;

(v) (per Kisanga, J.A.) To Attach any importance to the appellant's giving a false D account of how he sustained the injury and to his subsequent attempt to conceal the injury, and then to proceed to convict him would, in the circumstances of this case amount to basing conviction on the weakness of the defence rather than on the strength of the prosecution case; E

(vi) (per Kisanga J.A.) Each of the inculpatory facts or set of inculpatory facts, adduced against the first appellant, considered singly does not justify the drawing of the inference that the first appellant committed the murders in question. Likewise when considered together they could not justify the drawing of such inference for the simple F reason that it is not possible to add nothing to nothing and get something.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed. G

Mwangole, for the appellants.

[zJDz]Judgment

Makame, Kisanga and Omar, JJ.A: These two appellants were sentenced to suffer death after being found guilty of murdering two night watchmen, employees of Tosamaganga Mission in Iringa District on 14th September, 1983. Chua, J., and all H the three assessors sitting with him were satisfied that the two appellants were the ones who violently killed the deceased persons in the course of a theft. Both appellants were themselves found to be bearing serious cut wounds at the time they were arrested. I

1992 TLR p54

Mr. Mwangole, learned advocate, argued the appellants' appeal before us. He A complained that his clients were convicted merely because of the wounds they had, that their explanations as to how they each got injured should have been believed, and that there was no evidence that the appellants took part in breaking into the Mission Workshop the deceased persons were guarding. On the other hand, Mrs. Makuru, B learned State Attorney for the respondent Republic, supported the High Court decision, urging that the evidence adduced was enough to sustain both convictions.

The evidence relied on was completely circumstantial. We are able to say at the outset that it was clearly good enough and reliable evidence. We respectfully think that the C learned trial judge arrived at a reasonable conclusion.

The evidence was that the two appellants were constant companions. A paramour of the appellant Kitogele, P.W.9 Isabela Luwungo, testifies to this. She was supported D by P.W.2 Dr. Elius Mwakalobo, the other appellant's sister's husband.

During the material night P.W.2 was called to Tosamaganga Hospital where he was working as a doctor, to go and help fellow doctors attend the two watchmen who had been badly wounded. At that time his brother-in-law, the appellant Nzalalila, who had E come out of prison that year, was staying with P.W.3 Leokadia Nzalalila, heard her brother, the second appellant, cry out that he had been hurt by bandits. An inspection of the premises later the same night did not convince the several people there that the second appellant had really got the injuries at the premises. The second appellant's F story that the bandits had escaped.

There was another piece of evidence the learned trial judge mentioned both in his summing-up to the assessors and in his resume of the evidence in the course of his judgment but which he did not express an opinion on. We have in mind the testimony G of P.W.4 Alfonce Kimotuo according to which very late at night on 8/9/83 the second appellant and another person who took great pains to hide his identity went to his house wanting to hire his Pick-up. The second appellant said he wanted to go to Cheraheni to collect a motor from there. P.W.4 suspected that the item would be stolen property, H so he refused. Two days later P.W.4 reported the incident to P.W.6, the brother it will be remembered, and P.W.6 told him that a huge welding machine, called an electric motor by some people, had been stolen on 8th September, 1983, that is the same night I the second appellant asked for transport from P.W.4, but that it had been carried a distance of about nine metres only, to Ruaha

Bridge, and abandoned there. Incidentally we learn from P.W.2's evidence that the A place the murders were committed is also called Cheraheni and from the testimony of P.W.6 we realize that the 'motor' and the planes were stolen from one and the same workshop, the scene of the two murders.

It is our view that the trial court should have felt entitled to, and we do, take the B foregoing as one additional circumstance as far as the second appellant was concerned. It showed not only the second appellant's propensity but established that he had been at the same scene of crime, at night, six days previously, only that his efforts had been frustrated by his failure to secure transport. C

We are fully satisfied that from the various circumstances it was eminently proper to come to the conclusion that the second appellant must have been one of the persons who went to steal from the workshop at Tosamaganga Mission and maliciously killed the two watchmen in the process. His conviction was sound and we accordingly dismiss D his appeal.

Mr. Mwangole before us pursued the line taken by his other client at the trial as to how he got injured that is the Kihesa adultery story. He submitted that the first appellant got injured some ten days after the killings so his wounds had nothing to do with the E alleged offences. Learned Counsel further urged that in any event, even if the first appellant told lies about how he got injured, that does not mean that he was one of the killers.

We have seriously considered the evidence against the first appellant Protas Kitogele. We wish to say, in all candour, that the evidence against his co-accused was a great F deal stronger than that against him. We hasten to add, however, that we do not at all intend, by making that observation, to mean that the evidence against Kitogele was weak, or that it was not strong enough to ground a conviction. We are, on the contrary, fully satisfied that the circumstantial evidence against him was enough to lead to the G irresistible conclusion that he was one of the killers. There was first the evidence of constant companionship with the second appellant. There was also the testimony of the first appellant's own lover that at the funeral, which was on the morrow of the killings, H she saw the first appellant wearing a long-sleeved shirt and coat for the first time. There was also the evidence by the same witness that four days later when she visited the first appellant at his house and he inadvertently revealed that he had a bandage on his arm he told the witness on being asked by her, that he had been burnt by a kerosene cooker. I Then he changed his story and said he had been cut with a knife by someone with whom he had quarrelled. The appellant added that he had A turned down advice that he should go to a Government Hospital for treatment and that he had decided to treat himself at home. The appellant also threatened to kill the woman if she even disclosed that he had a large wound. During the investigation, and at the trial, this appellant must have appreciated the dire consequences that might befall him if B proved to have been involved in the crimes. We have first asked ourselves: would a person so seriously cut, with two wounds infact - one on the left shoulder and the one seen by P.W.9 on the right arm, have stayed from hospital treatment merely because C he had been surprised preparing to commit adultery with someone's wife? Faced now with a possible murder case, would he have declined to show Sgt. Kasian, P.W.1, the investigating officer, the location of the house he had intended to fornicate in, and had got so severely injured? He would have at least tried to lead P.W.1 to the house as D the incident imaginary in our view, had taken place at about 4.30 in the afternoon. Also it cannot be true that the first appellant got injured on 25th September, 1983, that is a good ten days after the killings. P.W.9 was clear that she discovered only four days after the funeral that the first appellant had a cut wound which already was not fresh E then. That would be 19th or 20th September. We are unable to entertain what would be fanciful doubt about the first appellant's guilt. We are satisfied that he too was justly convicted.

F Appeal dismissed.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, J.A: I have had the advantage of reading in draft the judgment of Makame and Omar, JJ.A. upholding the conviction of both appellants for murder and the G sentence of death passed by the High Court (Chua, J.). The facts of the case are sufficiently apparent from that judgment and I need not repeat them here.

I agree that the case against both appellants was pased wholly on circumstantial evidence. I also agree that such circumstantial evidence as adduced against the H appellant Wilbert Nzalaliza was sufficient to ground his conviction. The pieces of circumstantial evidence tending to implicate him and the inferences to be drawn from them are as follows. After the two deceased watchmen had been fatally wounded, this appellant was found at the home of P.W.2, where he was staying, with a big fresh cut I wound which was bleeding, and a trail of blood was traced from there right up to the carpentry workshop at Tosamaganga Mission where the murders were committed. A The appellant's explanation that the cut wound was inflicted on him by bandits who had invaded the home of P.W.2, his host and brother-in-law, was obviously bogus because there was no evidence of any breaking or entry by strangers into the room where the appellant claims he was attacked or into any part of P.W.2's premises. Thus the fact B that only shortly after the murders were committed, the appellant was found with a big cut wound, that a trail of blood was traced from where he was found to the scene of the murders were incriminating circumstances which lead to the only reasonable inference that the appellant took part in the murders. And the fact that the appellant gave a false C ground of how he sustained the injury goes to strengthen this view.

1992 TLR p57

MAKAME JJA, KISANGA JJA, OMAR JJA

On the fateful night some fourteen carpentry planes were stolen from the workshop, and about six days later the appellant told P.W.5, a relative, that he had carpentry planes for sale but cautioned him not to disclose this to anyone because a theft of carpentry planes D had taken place at Tosamaganga. The only reasonable conclusion to be drawn here is that the appellant must have taken part in stealing the planes from the workshop and in murdering the two watchmen in the process; and his caution to P.W.5 was necessarily E calculated to protect him from detection.

Again just about six days prior to the commission of the murders, the same workshop had been broken into and a welding machine, also known as an electric motor, was stolen from there but was later found abandoned only about nine metres away. The F appellant was connected with the theft because in the dead of that same night he had approached P.W.4 and asked him for a motor vehicle to transport a motor from the workshop, but sensing that the said motor was stolen he (P.W.4) refused to oblige. Once again the only reasonable inference to be drawn here is that the appellant went G to the workshop again to carry out theft which he had attempted unsuccessfully on the previous occasion and that in the process he committed the murders.

The various conclusions of inferences drawn from the inculpatory facts point irresistibly to the appellant as being a participant in the criminal activity which resulted in the H murder of the two watchmen in the workshop at Tosamaganga Mission on the fateful night. The appellant's conviction, therefore, was amply justified.

Turning now to the appellant Protas John Kitogele, however, I find myself unable to I agree with the majority judgment. My view is that the facts do not meet the test for convicting on circumstantial evidence as was A laid down by the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in the case of R. v Kipkering arap Koske and Another (1949) 16 E.A.C.A. 135, and followed by this Court in a number of subsequent decisions. Briefly stated the test is that in order to justify the inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused, B and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. The burden of proving facts which justify the drawing of the inference from the facts to the exclusion of any reasonable hypothesis of innocence is on the prosecution and it never shifts. C

1992 TLR p58

MAKAME JJA, KISANGA JJA, OMAR JJA

The pieces of circumstantial evidence adduced as tending to implicate this appellant are as follows: First, there was the evidence of the appellant's companionship with his co-appellant Wilbert whose conviction we have upheld. The evidence on this appeal was given by two witnesses. The appellant's own girl friend (P.W.9) who at the D material time was doing the work of selling pombe said:

The two accused used to walk together and come to the pombe shop together. They appeared to be friends because they were always together. E

This is supported by P.W.2 who said:

I have known the first accused (present appellant) for a very short period ... I came to know F the first accused in drinking places. At first the first accused used to come alone. Nearer the dates when the events occurred the two accused used to come to the drinking places together.

The first question to determine is this: Are the witnesses saying that both appellants G were always together when they went to the pombe shop or are they saying that they were together at all times? It seems plain to me that neither witness could meaningfully be saying that the appellants were together at all times, for the simple reason that the witnesses themselves were not with the appellants at all times. For instance when H P.W.9 was at the pombe shop selling pombe she would not know what company the appellant was keeping before his coming to the pombe shop. What is more, the appellant Wilbert whose case we have already deal with, used to frequent the home I of P.W.2 and, indeed on the night of the murders the appellant was spending the night there. But it is significant that neither P.W.2

nor P.W.3, his wife, suggested that they saw the appellant Protas at their home. In A other words, if both appellants were together at all times P.W.2 and his wife P.W.3 would have seen them together during the frequent visits by the appellant Wilbert at their home, and they would have said so. But on the contrary P.W.2 merely testified that he saw both appellants together at pombe shops, while P.W.3, his wife, makes no B mention at all of the appellant Protas.

On the evidence, therefore, all one can confidently say is that both appellants used to go to the pombe shop or pombe shops together, and the question is whether that fact was sufficient from which to draw the inference that Protas must have also accompanied C his co-appellant Wilbert to the workshop on the fateful night and there, together with Wilbert committed the murders. For my part, I could not answer that question in the affirmative. For one thing, there was no evidence whatsoever that both appellants were seen together anywhere, let alone at the scene of crime, on the day of the incident. D Further-more when P.W.2 parted with the appellant Wilbert on the material night and the latter went to sleep in P.W.2's back house, Wilbert was alone and not accompanied by the appellant Protas.

Thus on the evidence there were times when both appellants were not together. Both E appellants were not seen together anywhere on the day of the murders. On the other hand in the evening of the night of the incident, the appellant Wilbert was alone at the home of P.W.2 until bed time. In the face of such evidence I could not reasonably conclude that some how the appellant Protas must have accompanied Wilbert to the F scene of crime that night. To my mind such conclusion would merely amount to speculation. The fact of Protas's companionship with Wilbert to pombe shops is capable of an innocent explanation in that Protas may have kept such company only when going to drinking places but not during criminal ventures by his companion. G

The next set of facts tending to implicate the appellant Protas with the murders was also given by P.W.9, his girl friend. She said in effect that five to six days following the murders, she visited the appellant's home where she noticed the appellant with a big H cut wound on his lower arm; the wound was not fresh. After giving on inconsistent account of how he had sustained the wound, the appellant then threatened to kill her is she told people about the wound. She went on to say that before the murders, the appellant used to put on T-shirts but that after the murders he used to put on long I sleeved shirt and a big coat which, according to the prosecution, was designed to hide the wound. At the trial the appellant claimed that he sustained A the cut wound at Kihesa in Iringa town when he was trying to commit adultery with someone's wife.

I find that the appellant sustained a cut wound on his lower arm, and I am prepared to find further that he has not given a true account of how he sustained that wound. The B question that follows is: What nexus is there between his cut wound and the murders in the workshop at Tosamaganga Mission? Is there material to warrant the inference that the appellant must have sustained the injury in the course of committing the theft and murders at the workshop? I could find no justification for drawing any such inference C myself. In the first place on the evidence it is not established when the appellant sustained the wound. When P.W.9 noticed it five or six days after the murders, the wound was not fresh. But can one conclude that it was necessarily inflicted on the day of the murders and at the workshop? Relying on the evidence of P.w.9 the D prosecution takes the view that after the murders were committed, the appellant used to put on long sleeved shirt and a big coat in order to conceal his injury. But there is no evidence that P.W.9 used to see the appellant every day. Nor does P.W.9 say when she saw the appellant last before the murders were committed. In the absence of any E such evidence it is impossible to know when the appellant began to put on that kind of attire. He might have started putting it on one day or two days, when P.W.9 might not have seen him, before the commission of the murders, in which case if he was hiding a cut wound it would be a cut wound sustained elsewhere, and unconnected with the F incident at the workshop. But even assuming that the appellant started putting on this type of attire on the day following the murders, that would not be sufficient from which to conclude that he was trying to hide an injury which he had sustained during the incident at the workshop. For he could have sustained the cut wound elsewhere in the G commission of some other wrong, and it would be in his interest to hide it, and even to threaten P.W.9's life against the disclosure of it, in order to avoid detection. In other words, the fact that the appellant had sustained a cut wound on a certain day which H wound according to the prosecution he was hiding cannot justify drawing the only reasonable inference that the appellant sustained that wound during the commission of the murders at the workshop on the night in question. As has just been demonstrated, that fact can be explained on another reasonable hypothesis, namely, that the injury could have been sustained I elsewhere and the appellant would have reason to conceal it in order to avoid A detection.

The fact that the appellant has not given a true account of how he sustained the cut wound would be relevant only if there was evidence which implicates the appellant sufficiently with the offenses charged. In the case of Fyaralal M. Rassan and B Another v R. [1960] E.A. 854 the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa, dealing with a similar situation, said:

It is quite plain that false statements made by an accused person do not have substantive inculpatory effect and cannot be used as a make-weight to support other material, C unless the other material would be sufficient independently to sustain a verdict against the accused.

In the instant case the fact that the appellant had sustained a cut wound and that he D tried to hide it by dressing differently and by uttering threats to P.W.9 against disclosure of it does not necessarily connect him with the murders at the workshop because, as demonstrated earlier these facts can be explained. On another reasonable hypothesis; the appellant could have sustained the injury in the course of committing some other E wrong and it would be injury his interest to try to hide it in order to avoid being detected. Quite clearly the facts which do not necessary connect the appellant with the offenses charged could not be relied upon to sustain his conviction for those offenses. Consequently in terms of Bassan's case above cited the appellant's false account of F how he sustained the cut wound could not be used to support what may only be described as a weak prosecution case. To attach any importance to the appellant's giving a false account of how he sustained the injury and to his subsequent attempt to conceal the injure, and then to proceed to convict him would, in the circumstances of G this case, amount to basing conviction on the weakness of the defence rather than on the strength of the prosecution case.

In the last analysis my view is that each of the inculpatory facts or set of inculpatory facts adduced against the appellant Protas, considered singly does not justify the drawing H of the inference that the appellant committed the murders in question. Likewise when considered together they could not justify the drawing of such inference for the simple reason that it is not possible to add nothing to nothing and get something. In other words I the inculpatory facts, whether taken individually or collectively, do not point irresistibly to the appellant as a participant in the offenses charged. A

It is for these reasons I concur that the appeal by Wilbert has no merit and should be dismissed but would have allowed the appeal by Protas.

B Order accordingly.
C
[zRPz]AUGUSTER SALANJE v MUSSA MOHAMED PEMBA 1992 TLR 62 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Makame JA

22 April 1992
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Jurisdiction - Application for leave to appeal to Court of D Appeal under section 5(2)(c) Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 - Whether Court of Appeal has concurrent jurisdiction with High Court.
Family law - Appeals - From High Court to Court of Appeal - On point of law or mixed law E and fact - Whether leave to appeal is a pre-requisite - Section 80(4) Law of Marriage Act, 1971.
-Headnote
This was a second application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania made to a single judge of the Court of Appeal after the High Court judge had refused F the application. The Court of Appeal judge considered the propriety of filing the second application and what section 80(4) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 provides.
Held: (i) Under section 5(2)(c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979, no appeal G shall lie to the Court of Appeal if the matter started in the Primary Court unless the High Court certifies that a point of law (or, by necessary extension, a point of mixed law and fact) is involved;
H (ii) only the High Court may so certify - there is no concurrent jurisdiction like that under section 5(1)(c);
(iii) what has been introduced by section 80(4) of the Law of Marriage Act is the dimension that even on a ground of mixed law and fact a person may appeal to the Court of Appeal. It is in that sense less restrictive, but I do not read that to mean that I one may automatically come up. It would still have to be determined whether there was a point of law or mixed law and fact, and only the High Court has power to A identify such a point in the first instance;
1992 TLR p63
MAKAME JA
(iv) the applicant could only come up by way of appeal to the full court against the order refusing to grant leave and not by way of a second application to a single judge.
Case Information
Application misconceived and dismissed. B
Kisusi, for the applicant.
[zJDz]Judgment

Makame, J.A.: The appellant Auguster Samanje was advocated for by Mr. Kisusi, C learned Counsel, while the respondent, Mussa Mohamed Pemba, who did not wish to be present, was unrepresented.

The appellant successfully sued for diverse in the Primary Court. It was also decided by the Primary Court that the applicant should get 50% of all the matrimonial assets, and D the respondent's appeal against that decision was dismissed by the District Court. On further appeal to the High Court, it was decided that the applicant should get only a small portion of the matrimonial assets, not 50% as ordered by the two courts below. Maina, J. who made that decision, later heard the present applicant's application for E leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal and refused to grant such leave. He said that he had made the variation because of the undisputed fact that the present applicant's contribution to the acquisition of the matrimonial assets was less than that by her former F husband, the respondent. The learned judge refused leave on the basis that there was no question of law involved, a pre-requisite under section 4(2) (c) (Sic) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979.

The applicant contended that she contributed services and money even towards the improvement of the property she found the respondent with, and that this should have G been taken into account by the High Court in terms of section 114.

Mr. Kisusi also argued that in basing himself on section 4(2) (c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act the learned judge overlooked section 80(4) of the Law of Marriage Act 1971, which says: H

.... Any person aggrieved by a decision or order of the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction may appeal therefrom to the Court of Appeal (for East Africa) on any ground of law or mixed law and fact. I

1992 TLR p64

MAKAME JA

Counsel submitted that Maina, J. was not entitled to upset the concurrent award by A the two courts below.

I decided to set out the foregoing by way of background only, as it will soon be clear.

Reference to Section 4 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act by the learned High Court B judge was obviously lapsus calami, and by learned Counsel lapsus linguae. The old section 4, which would have been the relevant one, became the current section 5 when Act No. 16 of 1984 was passed. The intended section was therefore section 5(2) (c) and it is about that I now wish to say something. The High Court Ruling was delivered C on 20th February, 1990.

This matter started in the Primary Court. Under section 5(2) (c) no appeal shall lie to the Court of Appeal if the matter started in the Primary Court unless the High Court certifies that point of law (or, by necessary extension, a point of mixed law and fact) is involved. D Only the High Court may so certify - there is no concurrent jurisdiction like under section 5(1)(c). Section 5(1)(c) is excluded by section 5 (2) which applies "Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (1) ..."

What has been introduced by section 80(4) of the Law of Marriage Act is the E dimension that even on a ground of mixed law and fact a person may appeal to the Court of Appeal. It is in that sense less restrictive, but I do not read that to mean that one may automatically come up. It would still have to be determined whether there was a point of law or mixed law and fact, and only the High Court has power to identify such F a point in the first instance.

The implication must be that that the applicant could only come up by way of appeal to the full court against the order refusing to grant leave, and not by way of a second application to the single judge. It follows therefore that the application before me is misconceived and it is hereby accordingly dismissed. The applicant may wish to G pursue matter elsehow as the substantive merit of his effort is not determined by the present decision.
H Order accordingly.
1992 TLR p65
A
[zRPz]BUSHIRI AMIRI v REPUBLIC 1992 TLR 65 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Mroso J

April 28, 1992
Flynote
Evidence - Identification - Description of suspect - Significance. B
Evidence - Corroboration - Evidence of co-accused - To be treated as that of an accomplice.
-Headnote
The appellant and another were prosecuted and convicted for cattle theft and sentenced each to eight year imprisonment. The appellant alone appealed against both C conviction and sentence. The two witnesses who testified against him had not given a detailed description of the appellant before his arrest and before they had a chance of seeing him. He also charged that his co-accused evidence was given much weight in arriving at his conviction. D
Held: (i) The two witnesses ought to have given a detailed description of the appellant to the persons to whom they first reported about the theft before they had a chance of seeing the appellant after he was arrested; the description would be on say E appearance, colour, height and on any peculiar mark of identity;

(ii) in every case in which there is a question as to the identity of the accused the fact of there having been a description given and the terms of that description given are matters of the highest importance of which evidence ought always to be given; first of F all, of course, by the person or persons who gave the description and purport to identify the accused, and then by the person or persons to whom the description was given - Rex v Mohamed bin Allui (1942) 19 E.A.C.A. 72.

(iii) the evidence of a co-accused is on the same footing as that of an accomplice, G that is it is admissible but must be treated with caution and, as a matter of prudence, would require corroboration;

(iv) it would be unsafe to found a conviction of the appellant on the uncorroborated evidence of the co-accused. H

Case Information
Appeal allowed.
Shayo (Junior), for the appellant
Mwaimu, for the respondent I
1992 TLR p66
MROSO J
Judgment
Mroso, J.: The appellant and another were prosecuted and convicted for cattle theft, A contrary to section 268 and 265 of the Penal Code. They were each sentenced to eight years imprisonment. The appellant, but not the other accused person, felt aggrieved by the conviction and sentence and, therefore, has appealed to this court through his advocates M/S Shayo, Jonathan and Company. Six grounds of appeal were filed and B Mr. Shayo, Junior, learned advocate, argued the appeal before me.
The brief facts on which the District Court of Hai convicted the appellant are as follows. At about noon on 27/12/89, at Bomang'ombe, two young men, P.W.1 - Ally C Mohamed aged 16 years and P.W.4 - Twalili Abdi aged 14 years, were grazing cattle 27 head of cattle and 7 goats in the pastures. Two people approached them, beat them up, and stole all the animals which were being grazed. The two young men were forced to accompany the cattle raiders but, later in the evening, they managed to escape D from them. About three days later a village search party which included P.W.6 - Mayaha Lesekoni, recovered all the stolen cattle from the boma of the first accused (in the trial court) in Kiteto District. The first accused was also immediately arrested after the cattle were recovered. The first accused named the appellant as a co-participant E in the theft of the cattle. That led to the arrest of the appellant.
At the trial P.W.1 said that appellant was one of the cattle raiders, that he had put on a militia uniform and held a shotgun. The same evidence was given by P.W.4. P.w.6 told the trial court that the first accused implicated the appellant. The first accused F admitted in court when he was being cross-examined by the appellant that he had indeed named him as a participant in the cattle theft. The appellant himself during his defence said he had been a militia man and attempted to denial of the charge against him. He merely said that his village, apparently Sanya Station, had been raided on the G night of 26/12/89, which should be the night before the day for the cattle theft, and that he was one of the persons who the village chairman had instructed to patrol the village. He was arrested on 2/1/90.
The trial magistrate held that P.W.1 and P.W.4 had reliably identified the appellant as H one of the cattle raiders because they had ample time to mark their appearance unmistakenly. It is not however apparent from the judgment if the trial magistrate made use of the claim by the first accused to the arresting party that the appellant participated in the cattle theft. I
1992 TLR p67
MROSO J
In the first ground of appeal it was argued that the trial magistrate erred in law and in A fact in not considering the defence evidence of the appellant. It is true the trial magistrate did not comment on the evidence of the appellant in his defence, but I can find nothing helpful to the appellant in his defence evidence. As I mentioned earlier in this judgment, he made no attempt to expressly deny the charge of cattle theft which was facing him. B

It was also argued that since the prosecution did not cross-examine the appellant on what he said in his defence evidence, it must be taken that the defence evidence was accepted as correct and true. With respect to the learned counsel for the appellant, C was there anything worth cross-examining on? It seems to me that apart from mentioning the date he was arrested, the appellant did not say anything during his defence which was relevant to the charge against him.

He talked about being instructed by his village chairman during the night of 26/12/89. D The cattle theft occurred at noon on 27/12/89. He said nothing about what he did or where he was on 27/12/89.

In the third ground of appeal it was argued that the trial magistrate grossly erred in not considering the issue of identification. The trial magistrate in fact appears to have E considered the question of identification of the appellant and the first accused but, certainly, not adequately.

I would agree that it was not enough for P.W.1 and P.W.4 to tell the trial court that the appellant had put on a militia uniform and carried a shotgun, even though the appellant F admitted in his evidence he had trained as a militiaman. There ought to have been evidence that the two witnesses gave a detailed description of the appellant to the persons to whom they first reported about the theft, before they had a chance of seeing the appellant after he was arrested. The description would be on say appearance, G colour, height and on any peculiar mark of identity.

The great significance of evidence of description of a suspect was underscored as long ago as 1942 in the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa judgment in Rex v Mohamed H Bin Allui (1942) 19 E.A.C.A. 72 cited to me by Mr. Shayo, where the Court said:

> This Court has previously pointed out, and we wish to repeat, that in every case in which there is a question as to the identity of the accused, the fact of there having been a I description given and the terms of that description are matters of the

> A highest importance of which evidence ought always to be given; first of all, of course, by the person or persons who gave the description and purport to identify the accused, and then by the person or persons to whom the description was given .....
>
> B If the description is recorded at the time in an Occurrence Book, Diary or in any other form of writing such book or writing should be put in evidence, if admissible ...

In the case under discussion, the only evidence of description of the appellant was C that he wore a militia uniform and carried a gun. That kind of evidence does not help in identifying the appellant unmistakenly.

The third ground of appeal is not justified. It is complained that the trial magistrate D grossly erred in believing that the first accused mentioned the second accused (appellant) "without any evidence to that effect". I can see no reason why the trial magistrate should not have believed that the first accused mentioned the appellant as a participant in the cattle theft. The first accused admitted as much in court under E cross-examination by the appellant, thus confirming the evidence of P.W.6. But as said earlier in this judgment, there is no clear indication from the judgment that the trial magistrate relied on that evidence of P.W.6 and the first accused in convicting the appellant.

I think it is well accepted that the evidence of a co-accused is on the same footing as F that of an accomplice, that it is admissible but must be treated with caution and, as a matter of prudence, would require corroboration.

In Omari J. Kibanike and 40 others v R. Criminal Appeal No. 224/75 (DSM High G Court Registry) the late Biron, J. said:

> Where at a trial an accused opts to give evidence on oath and in such evidence he incriminates a fellow accused, such evidence is admissible against the other, though it cannot be treated otherwise than as evidence of an accomplice and therefore requiring H corroboration in practice though not in law, vide section 142 of the Evidence Act, 1967.

Mapigano, J. echoed that view in - Ibrahim Daniel Shayo v R. Criminal Appeal No. I 10 of 1990 (DSM High Court Registry) unreported, where he said:

1992 TLR p69

MROSO J

A Where an accused person gives evidence on oath in a joint trial implicating another accused (even if not a confession), whether or not he implicates himself, it may be used against that other accused, because that evidence is on the same footing as that of any other witness, though as a matter of prudence it must be approached with caution. B

In the case under appeal before me, the first accused implicated the appellant by saying under cross-examination from the appellant, that he had said they were together when committing the cattle theft. The first accused did not, as suggested by the trial C magistrate in his judgment, repudiate or retract or qualify the claim that they committed the crime together. But should the court rely on the word of the first accused alone to convict the appellant?

It is my judgment that it will be unsafe to found a conviction of the appellant on the evidence of the first accused. There are two reasons for this view. First, because of D the time honoured practice of the courts that the evidence of a co-accused, who is treated as an accomplice, should require corroboration. Second, the first accused when giving his evidence in chief did not implicate the appellant. He only did so under cross-examination. This, to me, casts a shadow of doubt on the truthfulness of his E claim and enhances the need for corroborative evidence. Because of the weakness of the evidence of identification given by P.W.1 and P.w.4, I am unable to consider it as good corroborative evidence. It follows that the trial court would not have been on safe ground to convict the appellant on the basis of the evidence of the first accused. F

Ground six of the petition of appeal criticized the judgment for wanting in legal (judicial) reasoning. I would agree right away. After summarizing the evidence at some length, the trial magistrate spent only 10 lines of the two page typed judgment to explain why he G found the appellant guilty as charged. The only reason he found the appellant guilty was that he was satisfied P.W.1 and P.W.4 upmistakenly identified the appellant, because "they had ample time of marking their assailants". But he never considered the shortcomings which I highlighted above such as their failure to give a description of H the appellant before he was arrested or the failure of the investigating officers to mount an identification parade. In fact the impression one gets from the recorded evidence is that the appellant was arrested solely because the first accused had named him. I

1992 TLR p70

Earlier in this judgment I said that the appellant had not made a clear denial of the A offence. For that reason, the appellant had practically no defence for the offence charged. But despite that weakness he could not be convicted on that basis for an accused who had pleaded not guilty to a charge can only be convicted on the strength B of the prosecution evidence against him and not because of his weak or worthless defence.

In this appeal the learned State Attorney for the Respondent Republic did not seek to support the conviction. I have come to the same view that it will not be safe to uphold the conviction. It follows that I am allowing the appeal by quashing the conviction and C setting aside the sentence which was imposed on him. He is to be set free forthwith unless he is held for some other lawful cause.

Appeal allowed.

1992 TLR p70

D

[zRPz]JOSEPH MAWETA v LEKITETYI KARASI 1992 TLR 70 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Maina J

29 April 1992 E

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Trial - Services of an intepreter - Necessary where the accused does not know the language of the court. F

-Headnote

This is an appeal by the appellant against the decision of the District Court of Dodoma which perused the original proceedings in Haneti Primary Court and ordered the retrial of the respondent on the ground that the respondent did not get a fair trial. G

Held: (i) Conducting trial against the respondent, who did not know Kiswahili, without the assistance of an intepreter was an un-incurable irregularity;

H (ii) the respondent was not given a fair trial.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

[zJDz]Judgment

Maina, J.: The appellant was the complainant before the primary court at Haneti in I which the respondent was charged with assault causing actual bodily harm contrary to section 214 of the

1992 TLR p71

MAINA J

Penal Code. The Primary Court acquitted the respondent. The appellant was A dissatisfied and he appealed to the District Court at Dodoma. The District Court quashed the proceedings before the Primary Court and ordered a retrial. This appeal is against the decision of the District Court.

The learned senior district magistrate declared the proceedings before the Primary B Court a nullity on the ground that the respondent, who was the accused person, did not get a fair trial. The proceedings were conducted in Kiswahili language which the respondent did not understand. I may hasten to add that the trial Primary Court magistrate found the respondent guilty of the offence charged, but the two assessors C who sat with him found him not guilty. I have also to point out, like the learned senior district magistrate did, that interpreter who was present when the charge was read over to the respondent, does not appear to have been sworn or affirmed as required by section 26(2) of the Primary Courts Criminal Procedure Code. It is not clear whether D the interpreter appeared only when the plea was taken on 11 May 1988.

The evidence was recorded on 11 May 1988 when witnesses gave evidence for the prosecution, and there is no indication whatsoever whether the interpreter was affirmed or sworn. Similarly, when the trial proceeded on 13 and 14 May, 1988, there is no E indication anywhere in the record whether there was an interpreter present. If the interpreter was present on 11 May 1988 when the charge was read over to the respondent, as the record shown, that interpreter was not sworn or affirmed. That was an irregularity. When the trial proceeded on 13 and 14 May 1988, there is no F indication that there was an interpreter. Again, that was an irregularity. These irregularities are incurable. The respondent was not given a fair trial. The learned Senior District Magistrate properly quashed those proceedings before the trial primary court an ordered a retrial. I must add that the retrial should be before another magistrate of G competent jurisdiction.

Having found that the proceedings were a nullity, it is not necessary to consider whether or not there was sufficient evidence to convict the respondent. That will have to be considered by the primary court when the retrial is held. I do not wish to comment on H the evidence because anything which I may say on the evidence will prejudice the primary court which will hold the retrial.

I Appeal dismissed.

1992 TLR p72

A

[zRPz]CLAY LAWAY v REPUBLIC 1992 TLR 72 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Omar JJA, Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas JJA

May 13 1992 B

Flynote

Criminal law - Murder - Self-defence - Whether killing on suspicion one has been poisoned constitutes self defence.
-Headnote
The appellant killed a person. In his defence he said he killed because the deceased had C given him poisoned milk. The High Court convicted him of murder. On appeal the Court considered whether the plea of self-defence was available to the appellant.
Held: The plea of self-defence cannot by any stretch of imagination be applicable to D the appellant. Was the appellant by hacking the deceased defending himself from further poisoning?
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
Ojare, for the appellant. E
Lyimo, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Omar, Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: The appellant Clay Laway was charged with and convicted of the offence of murder contrary to section 196 of the Penal Code. F It is the prosecution evidence that the appellant was on 19/9/89 at about 6 p.m. in the house of his step brother called Akweso. Members of the family who had just returned from the fields where they had been cultivating seeds and onions, and others like Akweso's two daughters Martha and Christina who had been to the Cattle Market, G were all in this house. So in the presence of the members of the family, the appellant who only had an hour previously had been with them looking at photographs of the family members, and had gone out of the house and returned, suddenly started attacking Suzana, the deceased who was the wife of Akweso. He struck her with a panga on the H back of her neck causing her instant death. None of the prosecution witnesses was able to say what the cause of the attack was. The two children of the deceased P.W.2 and P.W.3 had testified to being present in their home when their mother was killed. They said that there had been no quarrel at any time that day between the appellant and I any member of the family.
1992 TLR p73
OMAR JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA
In his defence the appellant stated thus: A

At 5 p.m. on 19/9/89 I came from working in my shamba. I went to the home of deceased. She was at home with her young children. She gave me milk which was poisoned. I got drunk and I killed her while in a state of dizziness and confusion. I took a panga which was B in the house of deceased and I attacked deceased, killing her ... I used to drink but I suffered stomachache and I stopped. After killing deceased I ran away because I became frightened.

Appellant tendered Hospital Discharge Certificate as Exhibit D.1 which showed that C he was admitted in hospital on 22/9/89 and discharged three days later on 25/9/89.
Going through the evidence we find that none of the prosecution witnesses had mentioned about seeing the appellant being given milk by the deceased on that D material day. The learned trial judge was of the view that if at all appellant was found suffering from food poisoning then the poison must have been taken by him after he had attacked the deceased and had run away from the scene of crime. E

Mr. Ojare, the learned counsel for the appellant considered whether it is credible or supportable that appellant was given poisoned milk. He considered the time that witnesses gave of the family members' return from their respective farms P.W.2 said 7 p.m., P.W.1 said 6 p.m., the appellant said 5 p.m. So Mr. Ojare concluded that there F was a sufficient timegap for the deceased to administer the poisoned milk. The solitary ground of appeal canvassed by the learned defence counsel is that he killed in self-defence but Mrs. Lyimo, learned state attorney for the prosecution said that this was not a case of self-defence or of provocation but of mere revenge and she prayed G for the appeal to be dismissed.

We are of the view that although there was a hospital discharge certificate showing that he was hospitalised for three days on the doctor's diagnosis of poisoning, there is no sufficient evidence from either side to this case to show how this poison got into the H appellant's body and at what time in relation to the event. No doctor was called to clarify on this diagnosis which was on the discharge certificate. Furthermore the plea of self-defence cannot by any stretch of imagination be applicable to him. Was the appellant by hacking the deceased defending himself from further poisoning? The I appellant in his defence stated that he felt dizzy and confused after drinking poisoned milk and without knowing what he was doing he took the panga A which was in the house of the deceased and cut her on the neck. We cannot in these circumstances find any of the known defences available to the appellant. The story of poisoned milk is still not convincing nor does it raise any doubt in the prosecution case. B If there are causes to this killing the members of the family are not willing to divulge them, then the matter rests there, that the killing was senseless and motiveless. We therefore find that the appellant was properly convicted.

C Appeal dismissed.

D

[zRPz]LUIHAM MARTIN v JUMA SAIDI 1992 TLR 74 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Omar JJA, Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas, JJA

13 May 1992 E

Flynote

Administration of Estates - Probate and Administration - Subordinate court discovers after hearing application that it has no jurisdiction - Moves High Court to exercise revisional powers - High Court sets aside decision of subordinate court- Proceeds to hear the F application though no fresh application was filed - Whether irregular.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Court of Appeal Rules - High Court has exercised original jurisdiction - Whether leave must be sought and obtained in order to appeal to the Court of Appeal.

-Headnote

Letters of administration were initially granted to the respondent by the Moshi R.M.'s G Court. Then the R.M.'s court realised that it lacked jurisdiction. So it invited the High Court to revise the proceedings.

The High Court ruled that the R.M.'s court had no jurisdiction and set aside the grant H in that cause. Then the High Court (D'Souza, Ag.J.) proceeded to hear and determine the cause although no fresh application was before it. The appellant, aggrieved by the decision of the High Court applied for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal. That I application was heard by Mroso, J. who decided that no leave was required because D'Souza, Ag. J. was exercising original jurisdiction. In the Court of Appeal arguments were heard on whether the decision of A Mroso, J. was right.

1992 TLR p75

MNZAVAS JJA, OMARI JJA, RAMADHANI JJA

Held: (i) The procedure adopted by D'Souza, Ag.J. amply showed that the court decided to hear the case in its original jurisdiction. The framing of issues and the hearing of witnesses from both parties did not, by any stretch of imagination, amount to B revising the R.M.'s Court;

(ii) since the High Court (D'Souza Ag. J.) heard the application in its original jurisdiction, in view of the provisions of section 52 of the Probate and Administration Ordinance, Cap. 445 and section 5(1)(a) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, the High C Court (Mroso, J.) was right in ruling that no leave was required for the appellant to appeal to the Court of Appeal.

Case Information

Order accordingly. D

Maruma, for the appellant.

Sang'ka, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, Omari and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: When this appeal came up for hearing E the Court decided, with the consent of both learned counsel, that the question whether or not the High Court, (Mroso, J.), was right in his ruling in Misc. Application No. 95/91 dated 25/7/91 he argued first.

Mroso, J. Held in his ruling that the grant of letters of administration to the respondent F by the High Court, D'Souza, Ag. J., (as he then was) in what is referred to as Civil Revision No. 1/81 was not in exercise of the High Court's revisional powers but that the High Court had granted letters of administration acting in its original jurisdiction. Having so held the learned judge concluded that the appellant required no leave from the G High Court to appeal to this Court.

Arguing against the ruling Mr. Maruma, learned counsel for the appellant, submitted that the High Court, (D'Souza, Ag. J.), was exercising his powers of revision when he granted letters of administration to the respondent and that as such section 5(1)(c) of H the Appellate Jurisdiction Act required the appellant to seek leave from the High Court before lodging an appeal to this Court.

Mr. Sang'ka, learned counsel for the respondent, on the other hand supported the ruling of Mroso, J., that no leave was required from the High Court before the appellant I appealed to this Court. It was submitted that the High Court (D'Souza, Ag. J.) acted in its original jurisdiction A and that under section 5(1)(a) for the Appellate Jurisdiction Act no leave was necessary.

1992 TLR p76

MNZAVAS JJA, OMARI JJA, RAMADHANI JJA

In supporting of the argument that the High Court, (D'Souza, Ag. J.), acted in its original jurisdiction when it granted letters of administration we were referred to pages 21 and B 30 of the proceedings. The learned defence counsel also argued that proceedings under the Probate and Administration Ordinance are regulated by the Civil Procedure Code 1966 and referred the Court to section 52 of the Probate and Administration Ordinance.

Our reading of the proceedings show that letters of administration were initially C granted to the present respondent by the Moshi, R.M's Court on 21.7.80. On 3/12/80 the R.M.'s Court realised that it lacked jurisdiction as the value of the estate was in excess of the R.M.'s jurisdiction and consequently wrote a letter to the High Court D inviting it to revise the proceedings of the R.M's Court.

On 4/1/85 the matter came before D'Souza, Ag. J., (as he then was). The present appellant was represented by Mr. Kapoor and Mr. Shayo appeared for the respondent.

Two issues were framed namely: E

(1) who is entitled to the estate of the late Mariam Hamisi?

F (2) who should administer the estate?

Thereupon Mr. Shayo, learned counsel for the respondent addressed the Court:

G "I pray to start", Mr. Kapoor obliged and replied "O.K."

The court then heard witnesses from both parties and delivered its ruling in favour of the respondent. In its ruling the High Court said inter alia on page 39 of the proceedings:

H ... As the estate could by no means be termed a "small estate" under the provisions of Cap. 445 - section 6; the District Court Moshi obviously had no jurisdiction and the grant in that cause is accordingly set aside... I

1992 TLR p77

MNZAVAS JJA, OMARI JJA, RAMADHANI JJA

Mr. Maruma argued that the High Court (D'Souza, Ag. J.), should have, (after setting A aside the grant by the district court), asked the appellant/applicant to file a fresh application in the High Court and that it should not have resorted to framing issues in the absence of an application for letters of administration before the court.

Mr. Sang'ka conceded that the procedure followed by the High Court was irregular B but argued that the irregularity did not prejudice the interests of the parties and that the counsel for the parties consented to the procedure adopted by the court.

With respect to the learned counsel for the appellant the procedure adopted by D'Souza, Ag. J. amply showed that the court decided to hear the case in its original C jurisdiction. The framing of issues and the hearing of witnesses from both parties did not, by any stretch of imagination, amount to revising the R.M.'s Court as Mr. Maruma would like us to believe. The fact that the R.M.'s court had no jurisdiction to grant letters of administration the proceedings before that court were a nullity and hence D their being set aside.

That it would have been neater for the High Court to ask the appellant to file a fresh application for letters of administration before proceeding to frame issues and determine as to who should be granted letters of administration there can be no doubt; but as E rightly argued by Mr. Sang'ka, learned counsel for the respondent, both counsel did not quarrel with the procedure adopted by the court and the parties were not prejudiced by the irregularity.

It is our considered view that the High Court (D'Souza, Ag. J., as he then was) heard the application for letters of administration in its original jurisdiction. That being the F position and in view of the provisions of section 52 of the Probate and Administration Ordinance, Cap. 445 and section 5 (1) (a) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act the High Court, (Mroso, J.) was right in his ruling dated 25/7/91 that no leave was required for the appellant to appeal to this Court. Cost to follow the event. G

H Order accordingly.

1992 TLR p78

A

[zRPz]MWANAHAWA MUYA v MWANAIDI MARO 1992 TLR 78 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Omar JJA, Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas, JJA

13 May 1992 B

Flynote

Administration of Estates - Probate and Administration - Annulment of grant of letters of administration - Concealment of letter of administration granted by lower court - Effect of such concealment.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Revisional powers - Suo moto - When exercisable. C

-Headnote

The appellant applied for and was granted letters of administration by the Resident Magistrates' Court. In that court the respondent was the objector. Despite this grant D the respondent filed a petition for letters of administration in the High Court in respect of the same estate. The respondent deposed in her petition that there had not been any proceedings for grant of probate or letters of administration regarding the estate. The High Court granted letters of administration to the respondent. Dissatisfied with the E grant of letters of administration to the respondent by the High Court, the appellant filed a civil application in the High Court challenging the grant of letters of administration to the present respondent and prayed that the grant of letters of administration to the respondent by the High Court be revoked. This civil application was heard by a F different High Court judge who instead of addressing the issue invoked revisional power suo moto and declared the proceedings in the Resident Magistrates' Court null and void.

The Court of Appeal considered whether the grant of letters of administration by the G High Court was valid. It also looked into the propriety of invoking revisional jurisdiction suo moto by the High Court over the proceedings of the lower court.

Held: (i) Respondent's blatant lies that there had not been previous proceedings H regarding grant of probate or letters of administration while she was in fact the objector in the R.M.'s court when letters of administration were granted to the appellant, amply demonstrated that she was bent to defraud other interested parties in the estate. Had the High Court (Nchalla, J.) dealt with this issue he would no doubt have found that this was I a good reason to annual the grant of letters of administration to the respondent by the High Court (Chua, J.); A

(ii) in a proper case the High Court can invoke its powers of revision in a grant of letters of administration by the District Court. Powers of revision are however usually exercised by the High Court suo moto when exercising its supervisory powers over B subordinate courts;

(iii) it is wrong, indeed improper, for the High Court to resort to its revisional powers where (as it was in this case) there are specific issues calling for determination by the court.

Case Information

Appeal upheld. C

D'Souza, for the appellant.

Muhatane, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, Omar and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: This is an appeal against the decision of D the High Court (Nohalla, J.), in Misc. H.C. Civil Application No. 161 of 1986 dated 26/1/90 in which the court held that the decision of the R.M.'s Court in Misc. Civil Application No. 51/81 granting letters of administration to the appellant/applicant, E Mwanahawa Muya, was null and void.

Arguing in support of the appeal Mr. D'Souza, learned counsel for the appellant submitted that the High Court failed to consider the appellant's application which was brought under the Probate and Administration Ordinance, Cap. 445 of the laws. It F was the learned counsel's submission that the appellant's application before the High Court was that in granting letters of administration of the estate of the deceased Al-Hadji Karama Maro, to the respondent, Mwanaidi Maro, in the Probate and Administration Cause No. 5/1986 the High Court, (Chua, J.) was misled in that the G applicant, now the respondent, failed to comply with Rules 32 and 71 and section 49 of the Probate and Administration Ordinance. Mr. D'Souza also submitted that in his application for letters of Administration before the High Court, (Chua, J.), the respondent has misled the Court when she said that no proceedings for grant of H probate and/or letters of administration had been commenced before any court inside or outside Tanganyika. In support of this argument the court was referred to page 45 of the proceedings. According to Mr.

D'Souza's submission instead of considering applicant's application which was based on non-compliance with the provisions of the Probate I and Administration Ordinance, the High Court,

1992 TLR p80

MNZAVAS JJA, OMARI JJA, RAMADHANI JJA

(Nchalla, J.), dealt with the case as if it was an appeal and quashed the decision of A the R.M.'s Court which granted letters of Administration to the appellant; a matter which was not before him.

It was argued that if the respondent had been aggrieved by the decision of the R.M.'s Court in Probate and Administration Cause No. 51/1981 in which letters of B administration were granted to the appellant he should have appealed to the High Court or alternatively she could have applied for revocation of the grant under section 49 of the Probate and Administration Ordinance.

Lastly Mr. D'Souza argued that the High Court, (Nchalla, J.), erred in invoking his C revisional powers suo moto in the course of writing his ruling. The Court was invited to allow the appeal on the ground that the High Court, (Nchalla, J.), failed to deal with the application before him.

In rebuttal Mr. Mahatane, learned counsel for the respondent argued that it was not D clear whether the matter should have been handled as a small estate or as a big estate. It was submitted that for purposes of revocation of a small estate section 82 of the Probate and Administration Ordinance applied whereas section 49 of the Ordinance dealt with revocation of big estates.

It was Mr. Mahatane's submission that proceedings in the lower courts show that the E matter was treated as a small estate and that in a fit case the High Court can interfere with a grant of letters of administration by a lower court. The learned defence counsel argued that in the present case the High Court, (Nchalla, J.), granted letters of F administration to the respondent after it had revoked the grant by the district court. It was finally submitted that the appellant had already been divorced five years before the death of the deceased, Alhadji Karama Maro, and that as such she had no interest in the estate as she had already received her "Kithumni".

In reply Mr. D'Souza argued that the appellant had not been divorced before the G death of her husband. That she was a widow of the deceased the court was referred to page 9 of the proceedings.

As for the provisions of section 82 of Cap. 445 Mr. D'Souza submitted that this argument has been brought rather too late in the day. It was submitted that if the matter H was treated as a small estate by the lower courts the respondent was required to file an application before Chua, J. under R. 85 of Cap. 445. It was also argued that under Rule 71 filing of consent of the other interested parties was mandatory and that no consent was filed by the respondent in her application for letters of Administration before, Chua, J. I did not revoke the earlier decision of the district court. It was submitted that Mr. A Kiyeyeu's ruling concerned Mr. Munuo's application to be heard. In support of this argument the court was referred to page 64 of the proceedings.

It was finally argued in reply that the ruling of Mr. Kiyeyeu

1992 TLR p81

MNZAVAS JJA, OMARI JJA, RAMADHANI JJA

This matter has a chequered history. It first started in the primary court from where it was transferred to the district court as the appellant (then petitioner) had indicated that B he was employing an advocate. On 16/4/81 letters of administration were granted to the appellant, Mwanahawa Muya, by the district court - ARUSHA RESIDENT MAGISTRATE'S COURT MISC. CIVIL APPEAL. NO. 51 of 1981. C

Despite this grant the respondent, Mwanaidi Maro, filed a petition for letters of administration in the High Court - probate and Administration Cause No. 5 of 1986 in respect of the same estate and on 20/8/86 the High Court, (Chua, J.), granted letters of administration to the respondent. D

Dissatisfied by the grant of letters of administration by the High Court, (Chua, J.), to the respondent, Mwanaidi Maro, the appellant, Mwanahawa Muya, filed Misc. Civil application No. 161/86 before the High Court challenging the grant of letters of administration by the High Court, (Chua, J.), to the present respondent and (b) of the E Probate and Administration Ordinance, Cap. 445 and Rules 32 and 71 of the same Ordinance; and prayed that the grant of letters of administration to the respondent by the High Court, (Chua, J.), be revoked.

The application was heard by the High Court, (Nchalla, J.), in Misc. Civil Appl. No. F 161/86 in which the learned judge said inter alia ... "There are several documents on record in this matter indicating that the size of the deceased's estate in this matter is quite substantial, amounting to hundreds of thousands of shillings.

On the foregoing facts and reasons, I am quite satisfied that the order of the district G court made on 8/4/81 in Misc. Civil Appl. No. 51/81 granting letters of administration to the applicant. Mwanahawa Muya, ... was null and void. ... In the circumstances I invoke, the revisional powers of this court both under section 31(1)(2) of the Magistrates' Courts Act ... and section 79 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966, and H hereby quash the whole proceedings ... The instant application is dismissed with costs.".

The High Court also said that the respondent, Mwanaidi Maro, was to remain the administrator of deceased's property as appointed by the High Court, (Chua, J.), in the Probate and Administration Cause No. 5 of 1986. I

1992 TLR p82

MNZAVAS JJA, OMARI JJA, RAMADHANI JJA

It is against this decision by Nchalla, J., that the appellant has come to this Court. A

After hearing arguments from both learned counsel for the parties and after our close examination of all the records, we are satisfied in our own minds that the High Court. (Nchalla, J.), did not at all deal with, nor determine, the issues before him. B

As clearly brought out from appellant's application by chamber summons (page 8 of the proceedings) the learned judge was asked to determine whether or not the grant of letters of administration to the respondent by Chua, J. was invalid as the respondent being the sole administrator did not file an affidavit as required under Rule 32 of the C Probate Rules.

The grant was also said to be invalid because, it was argued by the appellant in his application before Nchalla, J., the respondent did not file "CONSENT" of all those who would be entitled to the whole or part of the deceased's estate as required by Rule 71 D of the Probate Rules.

Finally the learned judge was required to decide whether or not the grant by the High Court, (Chua, J.) was invalid by reason of being obtained fraudulently by the respondent who was alleged to have made false suggestion and/or concealing from the court E something material to the case.

Apparently no where in his lengthy ruling does the learned judge mention, leave alone discuss, the serious allegations levelled against the respondent.

As we have already mentioned above the learned judge merely invoked his powers of F revision suo moto and held that the resident magistrate's court had no power to grant letters of administration to the appellant and dismissed appellant's application which challenged the grant of letters of administration to the respondent by the High Court, (Chua, J.). G

Clearly, and as the learned judge will no doubt agree with us on reflection, the question whether or not the resident magistrate's court had power to grant letters of administration to the appellant was not the issue before him. The issue before him was whether, as alleged in the chamber summons, the respondent had misled and/or H concealed important information from the High Court, (Chua, J.), and thereby causing it to grant letters of administration to the respondent; which letters of administration the High Court would not have granted had the true facts been divulged by the respondent to the court. I

As rightly argued by Mr. D'Souza, learned counsel for the appellant, appellant's complaint before the High Court (Nchalla, J.), was based on A non-compliance with Rules 32 and 71 and section 49 of the Probate and Administration Ordinance, Cap. 445 of the laws.

Section 49 of the Ordinance enumerates reasons which may cause the grant of probate and letters of administration to be annulled: B

One of such reasons is where "the grant was obtained fraudulently by making a false suggestion, or by concealing from the court something material to the case."

In her petition before the High Court, (Chua, J.), the respondent, Mwanaidi Maro, C stated in paragraph seven:

> No proceedings for the grant of probate and/or letters of administration or otherwise for the administration of the said deceased's estate have been commenced before any court D of compactent authority whether inside Tanganyika or outside it.

It was Mr. D'Souza's submission, as already mentioned above, that the respondent misled the court when she said that there had not been any proceedings for grant of E probate or letters of administration regarding the estate; while she very well knew that the appellant had been granted letters of administration by the R.M.'s court where she (respondent) was the objector. This deliberate lie by the respondent, it was argued, would have entitled the High Court, (Nchalla, J.), to annual the grant of letters of F administration to the respondent by the High Court, (Chua, J.) - As, it was submitted, Chua, J. would not have granted letters of administration if he had been aware that letters of administration in respect of the same estate had already been granted to the appellant by the R.M.'s Court. G

Mr. Mahatane, learned counsel for the respondent, vigorously argued that section 49 of the Probate and Administration Ordinance talks about fraud and that the respondent did not fraudulently mislead the court. Mr. Mahatane also submitted that failure to adhere to the rules does not by itself harm the interests of the parties. H

With respect to the learned counsel for the respondent section 49 (1) (b) of the Probate and Administration Ordinance is very clear and does not require interpretation or interpolation. Respondent's blatant lies that there had not been previous proceedings regarding grant of probate or letters of administration while she was in fact the objector I in the R.M.'s Court when letters of administration were granted to the appellant, amply demonstrated that she was bent to defraud other A interested parties in the estate. Had the High Court (Nchalla, J.), dealt with this issue he would no doubt have found that this was a good reason to annul the grant of letters of administration to the respondent by the High Court, (Chua, J,).

1992 TLR p84

We agree that in a proper case the High Court can invoke its powers of revision in a B grant of letters of administration by the district court. Powers of revision are however usually exercised by the High Court suo moto when exercising its supervisory powers over subordinate courts. It is, in our view wrong, indeed improper, for the High Court C to resort to its revisional powers where (as it was in this case), there are specific issues calling for determination by the court.

As for Mr. Mahatane's submission that the appellant had no interest in the estate as she had been divorced five years before the deceased met his death and that she had D received her "kithumni" under Islamic law, this would have been as relevant argument by the respondent when the appellant was seeking letters of administration before the R.M.'s Court. It would also have been a relevant argument if the respondent had appealed against the grant of letters of administration to the appellant by the R.M.'s E Court.

We, with respect, do not see the relevancy of the argument in this appeal which is against the decision of the High Court, (Nchalla, J.), that he had failed to decide the issues before him.

It is our considered view that the High Court, (Nchalla, J.), did not at all consider the F application of the applicant which was brought under the Probate and Administration Ordinance - Cap. 445.

As for the decision of the High Court, (Chua, J.), it is clear from what we have stated above that letters of administration would not have been granted to the respondent had the High Court been informed of the fact that letters of administration in respect of the G same estate had already been granted to the appellant by R.M.'s Court.

We agree with Mr. D'Souza's argument that the respondent was wholly to blame in misleading the Court to do what it would not have done had it been aware of the fact H of the previous grant of letters of administration to the appellant.

In the event this appeal is upheld with costs in this Court and the courts below. For avoidance of doubt this decision does not bar the respondent from challenging the grant of letters of administration to the appellant by the R.M.'s Court if she is so minded. I Appeal upheld.
1992 TLR p85
A
[zRPz]BENJANIN MWANSI v REPUBLIC 1992 TLR 85 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Omar JJA, Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas, JJA

13 May 1992
Flynote
Criminal law - Murder - Provocation - Caused by words. B Evidence - Provocation - Seemingly innocent words - When can be provocative
-Headnote
The appellant confessed killing his fiancee. In his defence he said he was provoked by C the words of the deceased whom he found in the bed of her new lover. Upon being asked she replied: "wewe bwana achana na mimi. Sina habari na wewe" (literally translated: "Please leave me alone. I have no business with you"). The Court considered whether these seemingly innocent words could provoke a person to killing. D
Held: (i) Now, those words in themselves appear innocent. But if they are looked at with the hindsight of what had transpired they are powerful dynamite sufficient to blow off the faculty of reasoning of the appellant. Not only that the appellants hope of E marriage with her was kindled by her deceit but also that very day she made him part with his shs. 20/=. As if that was not enough, and to add insults to injury, she turned him into a sentry and made him kick about his heels eagerly waiting for her when she knew just too well that she was not going to come back to him; F
(ii) the appellant was provoked by those words.
Case Information
Appeal allowed. Guilty of manslaughter.
[zJDz]Judgment
Ramadhani, Omar and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: Benjamin Mwansi, the appellant, was G convicted of the murder of Lucia d/o Hamadi and was sentenced by the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha (Nchalla, J.) to suffer death by hanging.
The Republic had produced three witnesses whose testimonies were not worthy even H to prove the case on a balance of probabilities which is not the standard in criminal trials. The appellant had put the nail in his own coffin, so to speak. His extra judicial statement (Exh. P.3), which he readily owned without requiring it to be produced by the Justice of Peace who recorded it, and his evidence in Court formed the planks on I which his conviction was based.

1992 TLR p86
RAMADHANI JJA, OMARI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA
The appellant and the deceased had agreed to marry and as the day of days was fast A approaching, the deceased schemed back-pedalling while putting up a facade that all was as planned. The deceased was also dishing out favour to one Idi Kazimoto. The appellant had intelligence of that affair but was satisfied by the assurances of Idi that he, B Idi that is, was not aware that he was trespassing on the appellant's garden and promised to desist further encroachments.
On the fateful day the appellant met the deceased on the way. The deceased managed without any difficulty to extract some twenty shillings from the appellant. As the C deceased was on a very private errand, she promised to return and be with the appellant within a short while. Minutes ticked by. The appellant then realised that he was left stranded on a barren and rather a dreary shore. Or, as they say, "aliwachwa kwenye mataa". So the appellant decided to go after the deceased. He went on Idi's D where he was told that the deceased had merely passed through without stopping. The appellant for some few minutes was sitted outside with Idi when suddenly Idi came up with an offer of a cup of tea at a nearby cafe. While there, an invitation was extended to the appellant to wait for food which was being prepared by one Monica. The E appellant had a brainwave and alone he went back to Idi's where, peeping through an aperture in the wall, he saw his Lucia cosily lying of Idi's bed. The appellant asked her "Ee bwana, sasa vipi?" To that the deceased replied "Wewe bwana achana na mimi. Sina habari na wewe". The appellant said he went wild. He kicked the mud F thatched wall making a hole through which he got access into the room. He then picked a plank of wood which he found therein and with it administered unknown number of blows on the head of Lucia. She died instantly. The appellant melted away until he was arrested.
The triable issue was whether or not the appellant was provoked. The learned trial G judge, in agreement with a male assessor and at variance with a female assessor, found that the appellant was not provoked.
The appellant was advocated for by Mr. Ojare, learned counsel. He had a sole H ground of appeal which was that there was "grave provocation". The learned advocate had two points in that respect. First, he pointed out that the words which the deceased replied to the appellant were taken to be not provocative because they were held to constitute neither an offence nor a wrong. Mr. Ojare pointed out further that the I definition of provocation, as given in Section 202 of the Penal Code, includes an insult.
1992 TLR p87
RAMADHANI JJA, OMARI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA
The learned advocate then submitted that the words uttered by the deceased when A looked at with the background of the relationship which existed between the deceased and the appellant were insulting and were nothing but provocative. As his second point, Mr. Ojare contended that provocation was at the time of the utterance of those words by the deceased and that there was no moment for cooling down. The learned B counsel submitted that the learned judge erred in holding that even if there was provocation the appellant had time to cool down. Mr. Ojare argued that the appellant just did not have that time to cool down.

On behalf of the respondent/Republic was Mr. Mono, Senior State Attorney. He C started by questioning the credibility of the appellant who first disowned the extra-judicial statement, then offered plea of guilty to manslaughter and finally came round to adopt the extra-judicial statement. However, Mr. Mono threw up the sponge and conceded that the appellant was consistent in denying murder and pleading D manslaughter. Secondly, Mr. Mono contended that as the appellant had a pre-knowledge of the relationship between Idi and the deceased then he should not have been provoked when he found Lucia in Idi's bed.

There are three matters which require our determination for the disposal of this E appeal. First, whether or not there was a cause for sudden provocation. Then there is the question at what occasion did that cause present itself. Lastly, and consequent to the second issue, whether or not there was time for cooling down.

The learned trial judge found that malice aforethought was established: F

> ... from the nature of the weapon used (Exh. P.2), the nature of injury caused (Exh. P.1) and the excessive force used by the accused... Also the accused hit the deceased on the G head, vulnerable part of the body.

With respect that was begging the issue which was to be decided. Killing on provocation is provided in section 201 of the Penal Code thus: H

> When a person who unlawfully kills another under circumstances which, but for the provisions of this section would constitute murder, does the act which causes death in the heat of passion caused by sudden provocation as hereinafter I defined, and before there is time for his passion to cool, he is guilty of manslaughter A only. (emphasis provided)

Thus in killing on provocation circumstances which constitute murder are proved and established. But that is not the end. There is something extra and that is sudden B provocation. If we were to be mathematical and devise a formula we would say: killing by provocation is equal to circumstances which constitute murder plus sudden provocation without time for cooling down.

So what the learned Judge did was to catalogue circumstances which would constitute C murder. But the issue is was there or was there not sudden provocation.

Admittedly the learned Judge also made the finding that the appellant had formed the intention to kill when he was awaiting food with Idi and that was why he left stealthily. The learned Judge stated: D

> It is established on the evidence that accused intended to kill the deceased and the motive thereon was to punish her for fidelity or dishonesty and to revenge from Idi Kazimoto.

The issue then for determination here is whether the appellant returned to Idi's having E made up his mind to pay off old scores, as the learned Judge found, or he was provoked by the reply of the deceased, as Mr. Ojare contended.

The appellant said that he refused to wait for food and so left Idi and then revisited F Idi's place to investigate. There is not the slightest suggestion that he left Idi stealthily. Admittedly in his sworn evidence the appellant had said that he had heard the voice of the deceased from the house of Idi the first time he was there. But in his extra-judicial statement (Exh. P.3) he did not say so and instead he stated that because of suspicion G he went back to Idi's to find out whether or not Lucia was there. The extra-judicial statement seems more credible. It would seem odd, if the appellant had known that the deceased was there, that he would let himself be kidded by Idi; taken away to a cafe H for a cup of tea and forget the purpose of his mission.

However, for the sake of argument and for the avoidance of doubt, too, let us take the sworn evidence of the appellant and work on it. Suppose the appellant was aware that the deceased was inside the room of Idi, and suppose, also, the appellant had already I resolved to teach the deceased a lesson when he had gone to Idi's the second time, one wonders why the appellant did not go straight and, without a word, force A his way through the door. Indeed one wonders why he did not go there armed so as to execute his purpose. Or put it the other way: how did the appellant know that he would stumble upon a plank of wood in the room of Idi which would conveniently present itself as a weapon with which he would accomplish his murderous errand. We have failed B to come up with answers to these questions that would satisfy us beyond reasonable doubt.

What we are then left with is his story. The appellant said he peeped through the wall and saw Lucia relaxed on the bed of her new lover and upon being asked she replied "Wewe bwana achana na mimi. Sina habari na wewe". C

Now, those words in themselves appears very innocent. But if they are looked at with the hindsight of what had transpired, they are a powerful dynamite sufficient to blow off the faculty of reasoning of the appellant. Not only that the appellant's hope of marriage D with her was kindled by her deceit but also that very day she made him part with his shs. 20/=. As if that was not enough, and to add insults to injury, she turned him into a sentry and made him kick about his heels eagerly waiting for her when she knew just too well that she was not going to come back to him. With this prelude one would agree E with the lady assessor that the appellant was provoked by that reply.

Did he have time to cool down? No, obviously not. If so, had the gentleman assessor grasped what happened, he would have opined as his colleagues for he had said: F

> The accused had time to cool, from the time he discovered that Lucia was in the house of Idi Kazimoto to the time accused returned there for the second time. G

Mr. Mono, has also submitted that the appellant, being a Nyiramba, whose custom, as he had admitted, does not give a right to a fiance to stop a fiancee from running with other persons, should not have been provoked. We agree with Mr. Ojare that Lucia was not a Nyiramba but a Mbulu and the matter was in Hanang District which again is H in Mbulu area. Moreover, under Section 202 of the Penal Code the appellant has to be judged as "an ordinary person of the community to which the accused belongs". At the time of the offence the appellant belonged to the Mbulu community.

We, therefore, find the appellant not guilty of murder but of manslaughter. So we I quash the conviction for murder. We set aside the sentence of death and impose one of imprisonment for a term of 4 years taking A into account that he has been in custody over since 18/8/1998. Appeal is allowed to that extent.
1992 TLR p90
B Appeal allowed.
1992 TLR p90
C
[zRPz]JOHN SANGAWE v RAU RIVER VILLAGE COUNCIL 1992 TLR 90 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Omar JJA, Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas, JJA

13 May, 1992
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Jurisdiction of High Court - Suits concern immovable D property which is land not held on a Government lease or a Right of Occupancy granted under the Land Ordinance.
-Headnote
In an application for striking out a notice of appeal the Court was moved to make a E ruling on the competence of the High Court to entertain a suit which concerned immovable property which is not land held on a government lease or a right of occupancy granted under the Land Ordinance F
Held: By virtue of the provisions of s. 63(1) Magistrates Courts Act, 1984 the High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.
Case Information
Order accordingly. G
[zJDz]Judgment
Omar, Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: Before this appeal came up for hearing Mr. Mahatane, learned counsel for the respondent stated that while he was giving a copy H of the Notice of Motion to the advocate for the Appellant in which mention he wanted to argue on the striking out of this appeal as being time barred; he came across the decision of this Court in Civil Appeal No. 25 of 1989, which is on all fours with the present case. The decision he drew our attention to is to the effect that the High Court I had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit which concerned immovable property which is not land held on a Government lease or a Right of Occupancy A granted under the Land Ordinance. The relevant provision of the law governing this decision is Section 63(1) of the Magistrates Courts Act, 1984 which reads:
1992 TLR p91
OMARI JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

Subject to the provisions of any law for the time being in force where jurisdiction in B respect of the same proceedings is conferred on different courts, each court shall have a concurrent jurisdiction therein;

C Provided that no civil proceedings in respect of marriage, guardianship or inheritance under customary law, or the incidents thereof, and no civil proceedings in respect of immovable property, other than proceedings relating to land held on a government lease, or a right of occupancy granted under the Land Ordinance or proceedings under section D 22 or 23 of the Land Ordinance shall be commenced in any court other than a primary court unless the Republic is a party thereto or unless the High Court gives leave for such proceedings to be commenced in some other court.

We are satisfied that this following decision of this Court in Civil Appeal No. 25 of E 1989 is relevant in this case. It reads thus:

We held that the High Court has no original jurisdiction in the matters mentioned above and cannot therefore order such proceedings to commence in itself. Our conclusion on F this point is supported by the view expressed by this court in the case of Frank M. Marealle v Paul Kyauka Njau [1982] T.L.R. p. 32.

G We think the rationale or policy behind the provisions of section 63 (1) which deprive the High Court of original jurisdiction in these and involve the community at the grass roots level, that the matters are better dealt with first by courts which are closer to the people than the High Court. H

We declare that these proceedings in the High Court were a nullity.

The appellant would remain with that portion of land which he is at this moment occupying. Either party if he is so minded can I start fresh proceedings in the proper court. A

1992 TLR p92

There should be no outcry on damages or costs that may have accrued since the inception of this case in the High Court.

B Order accordingly.

1992 TLR p92

[zRPz]MICHAEL HAISHI v REPUBLIC 1992 TLR 92 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Omar JJA, Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas, JJA

13 May, 1992 C
Flynote

Evidence - Witnesses contradicting themselves on vital details - Whether credible. D
Evidence - Bias - All witnesses from a village hostile to that from which accused comes from - Inconsistency in evidence given by witnesses - Fears of bias must be dispelled.
Evidence - Identification - Witnesses contradicting themselves - Whether reliable. E
-Headnote
The appellant is alleged to have been a party in malicious damage of property of another person. He was prosecuted, acquitted by the trial court, convicted on appeal to the High Court and then he appealed to the Court of Appeal challenging the decision of F the High Court. His conviction was supported by evidence of identification and other pieces of evidence adduced by witness who hailed from a village which harboured hostility against the appellants village. It was argued in favour of the appellant that the evidence given by the witness had so many contradictions that it was unsafe to ground G conviction on such evidence. Further it was said that since all the witnesses hailed from a hostile village there was need to dispel fears of bias and on the evidence these fears were not dispelled.
Held: (i) Since the witnesses contradicted themselves on the question of identification H of the appellant that evidence cannot remain unshaken;

(ii) since all the witnesses hailed from a village which was hostile to that of the appellant a high degree of consistency than the one displayed is essential to dispel fears of bias. I
1992 TLR p93
RAMADHANI JJA, OMAR JJA, MNZAVAS JJA
Case Information
Appeal allowed. A
Sang'ka, for the appellant.
Lyimo, for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Ramadhani, Omar and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: At about mid-day of 23/3/1987 the B house of Slaa s/o Malley (P.W.1) at Gongali Village in Mbulu District was rid of its roof which was then put on the ground and set on fire. This was done by about fifty people of whom six were prosecuted for malicious damage to property contrary to section 326(1) of the Penal Code. The District Court of Mbulu found that three accused C persons had no case to answer and at the end of the trial the remaining three were acquitted because of insufficient evidence.
The Republic was aggrieved by that judgment and appealed against two of the discharged accused persons before the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha. In the D course of the hearing the Republic abandoned the appeal against one respondent but proceeded to secure a conviction and a sentence of imprisonment for two years with respect of the remaining respondent, Michael Haishi, the present appellant. E
As in the High Court, the appellant was represented before us by Mr. Sang'ka, learned advocate. The memorandum of appeal contained five grounds which crystalizes down to three. The first ground is on the credibility of the Prosecution witnesses while the second is on the existence or non-existence of circumstantial evidence and lastly the severity F of the sentence.

Mr. Sang'ka submitted that the learned first appellate Judge (Mchalla, J.) "erred in law and fact in interfering with the trial magistrate's findings on the issue of credibility in the absence of circumstances of unsual nature apparent in the record of the trial court". G To support his proposition, the learned advocate cited the following authorities: Daudi Mwabusila v John Mwalefila [1967] H.C.D.n.59 and Ibrahim Ahmed v Halima Gullet [1968] H.C.D.n. 76

Mr. Sang'ka said that the trial Magistrate who saw the witnesses disbelieved them but H the first appellate Judge accused him of having "acted on wrong principles and thereby grossly misdirected himself on the law and hence wrongly acquitted the 1st respondent". Mr. Sang'ka submitted that it was the learned Judge who misdirected himself when he said "I really fail to see how the trial magistrate disbelieved P.W.2's I evidence."

1992 TLR p94

RAMADHANI JJA, OMAR JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

Mr. Sang'ka had a twofold attack on the credibility of the Prosecution Witnesses. A First, he contended that they were not independent. He said that there were two hostile bordering villages: Gongali and Bassodowish. Mr. Sang'ka pointed out that all the P.W.s. were from Gongali while the appellant was the chairman of Bassodowish. B Secondly, Mr. Sang'ka pointed out that the only eye witness, Akweso s/o Baric (P.W.2), was unreliable as he had contradicted himself in a material particular.

On behalf of the respondent/Republic was Mrs. Lyimo, learned State Attorney. She conceded that there was the inter-village hostility but contended that it was prejudicial C since the four crucial prosecution witnesses were at various localities when they saw what they testified to in court and therefore did not have an occasion to conspire against the appellant. She thus argued that the prosecution witnesses were independent. Against Mrs. Lyimo admitted that there were contradictions in the testimony of P.W.2 but she D submitted that they were not fatal because of the circumstantial evidence from the other prosecution witnesses.

At this juncture it is imperative that we pose to review what these prosecution witnesses testified in court.

The eye witness, P.W.2, stated that he had seen the appellant leading a group of E about fifty persons to the house of P.W.1. This witness was very positive that he saw these people lifting off the roof of P.W.1's house, resting it on the ground and that the appellant then applied a lighted match-stick to it and thereby set the roof ablaze. On F the other hand, P.W.3, Yohana d/o Ako, only recognised the appellant out of the fifty strong who were warming themselves against a fire which was about thirty paces from the house of P.W.1.

P.W.4, Bura s/o Lehema, testified that he was told by the appellant that the appellant "will demolish the house of P.W.1". Soon after that P.W.4 saw from far away smoke G rising up to the sky but he did not know what was burning. P.W.4 added "when I saw them passing I did not know where they were going". P.W.4, Sahware Barie, saw the appellant with his group going to the house of P.W.1. We better let him tell his own story:

H They started to break the house of P.W.1. they break all the house and started to carry it from there and went with it outside the shamba. After a short time I saw a big smoke which was followed by fire. I

1992 TLR p95
RAMADHANI JJA, OMAR JJA, MNZAVAS JJA
P.Ws 2 and 5 claimed to have been eye witnesses yet their testimonies are A irreconcilable. Whereas P.W.2 saw just the roof being hoisted down and set on fire by the appellant, P.W.5 witnessed the whole house being demolished and then merely saw a big smoke. P.W.5 did not see who lighted the fire and all that he said about the appellant was that "all that they did this accused was there" - So according to P.W.5 B the transgression committed by the appellant was being present without knowing whether innocently or otherwise.
Then, as Mr. Sang'ka had pointed out, P.W.2 contradicted himself. Both in his examination-in-chief and in his cross-examination by the sixth accused, P.W.2 was emphatic that "It was only Michael [the appellant] who set fire to the house and no C one else". However, P.W.2 shifted ground when he replied to the fourth accused that "Even this accused [fourth accused] did set fire to the house". So it was no longer only the appellant and no one else who lighted the fire. D Again P.W.2 testified that the whole mob of fifty people was in a single group. P.W.4, on the other hand, talked of three district groups and that the appellant was in the second one. At first, however, this witnesses had deposed: "They were too many but I only identified two of them, that were village chairman (1st accused) and 2nd accused. E They passed me in a group." It is not clear whether by "in a group" he meant the whole lot was in a single group or as he had said later in the second group. Not only that, but P.W.4 went on to say that he identified the fifth accused too in the third group thus contradicting his earlier deposition that he had identified only 1st and 2nd F accused persons. Then P.W.5 talked of two groups and that the appellant was in the first group contrary to what P.W.4 had said.
So we find that P.W.2 was not the only one who had contradicted himself but that P.W.4 did that as well and that P.Ws 2, 4 and 5 contradicted one another G hopelessly-in vital details.
However, the learned Judge found that "Inspite of the discrepancies in P.W.2's evidence as pointed out by Mr. Sang'ka, that evidence on the whole remains unshaken. With respect we are a shade unsure whether that could be so and particularly as H P.W.2 is controverted by the other who are themselves irreconcilable - and the fact that the learned Judge did not pose to consider these. On the contrary he found that "The evidence of P.W.2 was highly corroborated by another cogent evidence that was given by P.W.3 and P.W.4 who were also physically present at the scene..." I
1992 TLR p96
RAMADHANI JJA, OMAR JJA, MNZAVAS JJA
This unhealthy state of evidence is aggravated by the fact of hostility which was A established to exist between the two villages. The learned Judge stated:

I tend to agree with the finding of the trial magistrate that the source of the problem in B this matter could be a dispute over ownership of land which the parties in this case are contending.

If so, in our considered opinion, then the probability of biased testimony, prompted by that hostility becomes a matter of nagging concern which could not be lightly waived C aside by saying:

There is no reason, let alone good reason, given why these witnesses who are independent witnesses at that should have conspired to testify falsely against the 1st respondent and thereby implicate him in this charge. D

The trial magistrate correctly pointed out that all the six prosecution witnesses hail from Gongali Village while the appellant was the chairman of Bassodowish Village. So a high degree of consistency than the one displayed is essential to dispel fears of bias. Thus E we agree with the trial magistrate that:

These collection of those doubts make any court of justice and law find the accused not guilty at all. F

Once we have come to this conclusion then the remaining two grounds of appeal are superfluous. There could be no question of corroborating circumstantial evidence since that, too, would have come from the other biased witnesses. Of course if the appellant is not guilty there is no question of punishment. G

We thus allow the appeal, quash the conviction, set aside the punishment and order the immediate release of the appellant unless he is otherwise lawfully held.

H Appeal allowed.

1992 TLR p97

A

[zRPz]BERNADETA PAUL v REPUBLIC 1992 TLR 97 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Omar JJA, Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas JJA

13 May 1992

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Mitigation - Conviction on plea of guilty - B In remand for five years and first offender - Whether sentence of 4 years imprisonment proper.

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted on her own plea of guilty, of killing her 8 day old baby. C In sentencing the appellant the High Court considered only two mitigating factors - that she was a first offender and that she had been in custody for almost five years. The sentence imposed on the appellant was 4 years imprisonment against which she appealed. It was argued on appeal in favour of the appellant that the fact that she D readily pleading guilty to the offence was not considered as a mitigating factor.

Held: (i) An appellate court should not interfere with the discretion exercised by a trial judge as to sentence except in such cases where it appears that in assessing sentence E the judge has acted upon some wrong principle or has imposed a sentence which is either patently inadequate or manifestly excessive;

(ii) had the learned judge taken into account appellant's plea of guilty to the offence with which she was charged the judge would no doubt have found that the appellant F was entitled to a much more lenient sentence than the sentence of 4 years imposed.

Case Information

Order accordingly.

Maruma, for the appellant. G

Lundu, for the respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

Omar, Ramadhani and Mnzavas, J.A.: The appellant, Benadeta Paul, had an affair with one Godfrey on 20/11/84. The embrace culminated to pregnancy and on H 20/8/85 she delivered a full-term baby boy in hospital where she had been sent by her parents. Apparently the parents did not suspect her to be in the family way, neither did she tell them of her condition.

She remained in hospital for only one night and was discharged home. On arriving I home the parents who had, as already mentioned, been taken completely unaware started asking her as to who was the father of her A child. The appellant replied that she did not know the whereabouts of the putative father. It would appear from the facts narrated to the trial court that parental pressure reached to such an extent that eight days after delivery of the infant the appellant decided to kill the baby and did so by administering a coffee pesticide to it. B

From the facts in support of the charge after the baby had died the appellant tried to take her own life by drinking the same pesticide. Immediately after the killing of the baby the appellant was arrested and charged with infanticide c/s 199 of the Penal Code. C

She pleaded guilty to the charge and, on her own plea of guilty, she was convicted as charged. In sentencing the appellant the High Court, (Munuo, J.), remarked:

D The accused is a first offender. She has been in custody since September, 1985, almost five years now. I sentence the accused to 4 years imprisonment.

Mr. Maruma, learned defence course, who also defended the appellant in the High E Court has no quarrel with the conviction, based as it was, on appellant's unequivocal plea of guilty. He has however appealed to this Court on behalf of the appellant against the sentence imposed.

Arguing against the sentence of 4 years imprisonment the learned defence counsel F submitted that in imposing the sentence the learned judge only took into account (as mitigating factors) that the appellant was a first offender and that she had been in remand for almost five years. It was submitted that the fact that the appellant readily pleaded guilty to the offence was not considered as a mitigating factor nor it was argued, the G possibility that at the time she committed the offence she was mentally confused due to constant harassment by her parents who wanted to know the paternity of the child.

It was the learned defence counsel's submission that had the learned judge taken into H account these other mitigating factors she would have found that custodial sentence was not the proper punishment. The court was invited to allow the appeal, set aside the sentence of imprisonment and order the release of the appellant from custody.

In rebuttal Mr. Lundu, learned state attorney, supported the sentence on the ground I that "the nature of the offence called for a severe punishment". The learned counsel was of the view that the sentence of 4 years A was "rather lenient". It was submitted that there was nothing wrong for parents to question their daughter as who was the father of the child; and that there was nothing wrong for parents to question their daughter as who was the father of the child; and that such inquiries by parents could not be said to amount to harassment of the daughter B to the extent of making her mentally confused and driving her to commit infanticide. The Court was asked to dismiss the appeal.

1992 TLR p99

OMAR JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

Dealing with the question of reduction of sentence imposed by a trial judge the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa had this to say in R. v Mohamed Ali Jamal, 1948 15 C E.A.C.A. 126:

> An appellate court should not interfere with the discretion exercised by a trial judge as to sentence except in such cases where it appears that in assessing sentence the judge has acted upon some wrong principle or has imposed a sentence which is either D patently inadequate or manifestly excessive.

In a later case - James s/o Yaram v R. (1951) 18 E.A.C.A. 147, the same court also said: E

> A court of appeal will not ordinarily interfere with the discretion exercised by a trial judge in a matter of sentence unless it is evident that he has acted upon some wrong principal or over-looked some material factor. F

Coming to the present case it is clear from the record that in imposing the sentence of 4 years imprisonment the learned trial judge overlooked the fact that the appellant pleaded guilty to the offence charged. G

In the case of Francis Chilema v R. [1968] H.C.D. 510 where the accused had pleaded guilty the court said inter alia:

> It is generally, if not universally, recognised that an accused pleading guilty to an offence with which he is charged qualifies him for the exercise of mercy from the court. The H reason is, I think obvious, in that one of the main objects of punishment is the reformation of the offender. Contrition is the first step toward reformation, and a confession of a crime, as opposed to brazening it out, is an indication of contrition. Therefore in I

1992 TLR p100

A such a case a court can, and does impose, a milder sentence that in would otherwise have done.

It is our considered view that had the learned judge taken into account appellant's plea of guilty to the offence with which she was charged she would no doubt have found B that the appellant was entitled to much more lenient sentence than the sentence of 4 years she imposed. This is especially so taking into account that the appellant had but for this conviction an unblemished record and, if we may also mention, she had been in remand for about five years with the serious charge of infanticide hanging on her. C

Taking all these factors into account we agree with Mr. Maruma, learned defence counsel, that this was a case that loudly cried for leniency.

As the appellant was sentenced to 4 years imprisonment of 16/2/90 she has now D already served more than two years of the sentence. We think that is more than sufficient punishment. The sentence of 4 years imprisonment is accordingly hereby set aside and in substitution therefore the appellant is sentenced to such term of imprisonment as would result to her immediate release from custody; unless she is E otherwise lawfully held in connection with another matter.

F Order accordingly.

1992 TLR p100

G

[zRPz]HASSAN JUMA KANENYERA AND OTHERS v REPUBLICOMAR JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA 1992 TLR 100 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Omar JJA, Ramadhani JJA, Mnzavas, JJA

13 May 1992

Flynote

Evidence - Confession - Retracted confession - Need for corroboration. H

Evidence - Identification - By a single person - Need for corroboration.

Evidence - Identification - Under horrifying situation - Whether reliable. I

1992 TLR p101

The appellants were convicted of murder and sentenced to suffer death. They A appealed challenging the evidence adduced and which grounded their conviction. Four of the appellants were identified during a parade by P.W.4, the wife of one Dr. Tesha who was killed. P.W.4 is said to have been raped by several of the bandits in the presence of her 12 year old daughter. The appellants challenged the reliability of B identification by P.W.4 in such a horrifying situation. The first and second appellants were identified by P.W.4 alone. The appellants charged that identification by a single person needed corroboration which in their case was wanting. Other pieces of evidence which supported conviction were retracted confessions. These were challenged as C being involuntarily made and that in any case they needed corroboration which was lacking. The retracted confession in respect of the first appellant was tendered in evidence by the appellant himself during cross-examination and the defence councel raised no objection. D

Held: (i) However horrifying a situation is there is a watershed mark and if that is reached then a victim overcomes his or her fear and measures up to the occasion. We believe P.W.4 after such languish sojourn with her persecutors she surpassed fear and E as she said "Despite the torture I remained alert in the mind and observed the bandits closely". Moreover, in this particular case the reliability of the identification of the appellants largely depended on the demeanour of P.W.4. This was the monopoly of the learned trial judge who believed P.W.4 and we will be wrong to fault her. F

(ii) exh. P.15 was produced by the first appellant himself as an exhibit when he was cross-examined by the prosecution and the defending counsel did not object. So it cannot now be heard that the statement was involuntary;

G (iii) the two retracted statements can be safely relied upon under the authority of Tuwamoi v Uganda [1967] E.A. 84;

(iv) since we have found that P.W.4 properly identified the authors of the two retracted statements as well as the other appellants then her evidence provides corroboration if that was required;

H (v) it is a rule of practice, not of law, that corroboration is required of the evidence of a single witness of identification of the accused made under unfavourable conditions; but the rule does not preclude a conviction on the evidence of a single witness if the court is fully satisfied that the witness is telling the truth. I

1992 TLR p102

RAMADHANI JJA, OMAR JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

Case Information

Appeal of 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 5th appellants dismissed. Appeals of 4th and 6th A appellants allowed.

Ng'maryo, Itemba and Maruma, for appellants

Mono, for the respondent B

[zJDz]Judgment

Ramadhani, Omar and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: The deceased, Dr. Luis Tesha, on the night of 14/6/1985 was at his home in Chekereni, Weruweru Village in Moshi, together with his wife, Zaresh Tesha (P.W.4), his daughter, Sia Tesha (P.W.5) and a house boy, Prosper Francis (D.W.6), when they were invaded by a group of thugs who killed C him, raped and serious assaulted his wife, harassed his daughter and the house boy and made away with a number of items of property.

The widow (P.W.4) named and identified the first appellant, Hassan Juma D Kanenyera, who, until a couple of months before the incident, had been their watchman. The first appellant was tracked down at Kilosa by D/Cpl. Paulo (P.W.2). He was brought back to Moshi where he owned participating in the crime and named six other persons as his companions. He recorded a statement with the Police which was admitted as Exh. P.15. However, when he was taken to a Justice of the Peace, E Luvanda (P.W.1), he recorded an extra-judicial statement (Exh. D.1) in which he retracted what he had admitted in Exh. P.15 just as he had done at the trial. One of the persons whom the first appellant had implicated, Cyprian Joseph, the second appellant, F admitted to have been a party to the crime and gave a narrative very much like that of the first appellant which was recorded by P.W.1 as an extra-judicial statement (Exh. P.1). The second appellant, too, retracted the admission in his sworn evidence in court. As a result of the admissions of these two appellants, the persons they had implicated G were also arrested and charged. All in all there were eight accused persons. Accused No. 6, John Magesa, was acquitted, while accused No. 8, Julius Hamza, was convicted of receiving stolen property c/s 311(1) of the Penal Code and was sentenced to imprisonment for a term of ten years. The remaining six accused persons were H convicted of murder by the High Court of Tanzania at Arusha (Munuo, J.) and needless to say, were sentenced to suffer death. These six have now appealed before us.

The first appellant was represented by Mr. Ng'maryo, learned I attorney, while Mr. Itemba, learned counsel, advocated for the second appellant, and A the other four appellants had the services of Mr. Maruma, learned counsel.

1992 TLR p103

RAMADHANI JJA, OMAR JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

Mr. Ng'maryo had a memorandum of appeal containing eight grounds and Mr. Itemba had two while Mr. Maruma presented six grounds of appeal. For the sake of simplicity B and clarity we have consolidated all these grounds, some of which are mere repetitions, and we have come up with five objections. Again to avoid recapitulations we are first going to consider the five grounds drawing from the arguments of all the three learned advocates without indicating who submitted what and then take into account the counter-claims of the respondent/Republic through Mr. Mono, the Senior C State Attorney. After that we shall determine how our findings affect the individual appellants.

The first contentious issue was the credibility of the widow, P.W.4, which was assailed on two fronts. First, the appellants have argued that P.W.4 was not reliable because D she did not mention the first appellant in her Police Statement, Exh. D.2, which was recorded on 17/7/1985, that is just over a month after the incident. There she had said:

E Nakumbuka mnamo tarehe 14/6/85 kama saa 01.00 usiku huko nyumbani kwangu Karanga tulivamiwa na majambazi wasiojulikana...

However, it was pointed out by the appellant that on 10/9/85, some three months F later, she was able to pick out the first, the second, the third and the fifth appellants from an identification parade which was mounted by Inspector Daniel Kawiche (P.W.3) the results of which were tendered as Exh. P.2. In another identification parade on 25/9/84 (Exh. P.3), after fifteen days, P.W.4 could not pick-up anybody though the fourth G appellant was paraded. It was further pointed out that it was after the two identification parades that P.W.4 gave her second statement (Exh. D.3) in which she claimed to have recognised the first appellant among the bandits who killed her husband. So the appellants submitted that if P.W.4 had indeed identified the first appellant that fateful H night she would not have missed to record that in her first statement to the Police.

To that submission the respondent/Republic countered that P.W.4 was cross-examined on that and she had said that she did not disclose the first appellant in her first Police statement because she was concerned about her own safety. In any case Mr. Mono I added,

1992 TLR p104

RAMADHANI JJA, OMAR JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

P.W.4 had mentioned the first appellant to A.S.P. Mwanga (P.W.9) and that it was A after P.W.9 had identified himself as a Policeman that P.W.4 was at ease to make that revolution.

The learned trial judge believed P.W.4 and we see no good reason to fault her. P.W.4 did not also disclose in her first Police statement that she had been raped. Yet she B was and by four thugs, one after another, and within an earshot of her young daughter of twelve years, P.W.5. To make it worse, the awareness that among the thugs was a person who had been in her pay-roll was undoubtedly nauseating. P.W.4 would definitely be loathsome to put that in writing for all to see just a few weeks after the C incident when she had not conditioned herself to live with her tormenting memory. On the other hand, one could easily understand her readiness to whisper that disgusting experience into the ear of a Police investigator in privacy just a day after the incident, on 15/6/1985.

The other front relied upon by the appellants on the issue of credibility of P.W.4 was D that she was not borne out by the evidence of the other two occupants of the house in that evening. The young daughter, P.W.5, they contended, was loud and clear:

E I did not note the particulars of their clothes because one of the bandits was holding a sime of my neck. Under such captivity I was more concerned about surviving; not looking at the clothes the bandits wore ... I was naturally terrified under the panga threats.

As for the houseboy, P.W.6, the appellants pointed out, he did identify the sixth F appellant at the second identification parade but in his evidence on behalf of the defence, after he was offered by the prosecution, he stoutly and categorically denied that:

G I did not see accused No. 7 at the banditry raid on the material night.

D.W.6 admitted to have identified accused No. 7 (6th appellant) but that was because H he "used to buy milk from us". So the appellants quarried how could it have been that only P.W.4 had that cool nerve that evening to be able to identify them.

We agree with Mr. Mono that P.W.5 gave her reasons for being unable to identify any of the bandits. This is not surprising at all considering that P.W.5 was merely twelve I years old at the time when she was subjected to seeing her father flat on the floor groaning in deep pain and hearing her mother crying as she was being manhandled by the A bandits. That was enough traumatic experience to make her avoid looking at the thugs. However, she supported her mother in that she heard one of the robbers saying that it was the former watchman i.e. 1st appellant, who had told them that there was a lot of money in the deceased's house. As for D.W.6 he could not definitely identify anybody. From the first sound of B breaking into the house he sought refuge under a bed until he was fished out by one of the bandits.

We shall have more to say on this in the following ground of appeal. C

The second ground of appeal was that the identification by P.W.4 could not be relied upon. The first limb of contention was that the circumstances were not favourable for a proper identification. It was argued that it was night time with just hurricane lamps as sources of light and as for the outside there was moonlight. Then it was pointed out D that it was an intense moment of panic and horror. In addition to that, it was argued, P.W.4 was severely injured and had to be hospitalised for a month from 14/6/1985 to 14/7/1985. All these factors, it was submitted, did cast a shadow on the correctness of the identification. E

Mr. Mono countered that by saying that P.W.4 had spent quite a long time with these people and at a very close range and so was able to photograph their identities on her mental film. The learned Senior State Attorney also pointed out that the first appellant had been her employee for about three months and she was therefore able to identify F him very easily and particularly as she had said that she recognised his voice when he told his colleagues that P.W.4 was dead.

There is a lot of merit in what Mr. Mono has said. P.W.4 had a good opportunity which was denied to P.W.5 and D.W.6. Besides, it is our considered opinion that however G horrifying a situation is there is a watershed mark and if that is reached then a victim overcomes his or her fear and measures up to the occasion. We believe P.W.4 after such languish sojourn with her persecutors she surpassed fear and as she said "Despite H the torture I remained alert in the mind and observed the bandits closely". Moreover, in this particular case the reliability of the identification of the appellants largely depended on the demeanour of P.W.4. This was the monopoly of the learned trial judge who believed P.W.4 and we will be wrong to fault her. I

Again the advocates of the appellants pointed out that after the identification parade appellants 1, 2, 3, and 5 registered their complaints that A P.W.4 had known then before. Sarkar's Law of Evidence 13th ed. p.99 was cited as authority that an identification parade is useless if the persons put on the parade to be identified are known to the person who is to make the identification.

We concede that with respect to the first appellant. The identification parade was B superfluous. However, that could not be said to have been the case in respect of the remaining three appellants. These appellants knew P.W.4 as "Mama Maziwa". But that does not mean that P.W.4 must have known them too. Apart from her activity of selling C milk P.W.4 was the wife of a veterinary doctor. She was prominent enough to be known by all and sundry in the village but the reverse was not true. Had it been that P.W.4 knew the rest of the appellants before the identification parade and that was why she picked them out, then she should not have failed to identify the fourth appellant, D who is the brother of the fifth appellant, during the second parade. The fourth appellant too was a resident of that village, therefore according to the contention of the appellants, was known to P.W.4.

The third ground of appeal was that the statement of the first appellant to the Police, E Exh. P.15, and the extra judicial statement of the second appellant, Exh. P.1, were retracted and therefore required corroboration. Advocates, for the appellants cited a series of rather old authorities like R. v Mitilande (1940) E.A.C.A.46: Kimani and Others v R. (1954) 21 E.A.C.A. 316; and Etat v R. (1954) E.A.C.A. 330 to the F effect that the prosecution is to prove voluntariness of the statements.

We do not think that this should detain us even a bit. First, Exh. P.15 was produced by the first appellant himself as an exhibit when he was cross-examined by the prosecuting State Attorney and the defending counsel did not object. So it cannot now be heard G that the statement was involuntary. Second, the two retracted statements can be safely relied upon under the authority of Tuwamoi v Uganda (1967) E.A. 84. The advocates of the appellants pretended not to be aware of this classic authority on retracted confessions. Third, and as Mr. Mono submitted, these two statements, which were H confessions, are saved by Section 29 of the Evidence Act, 1967. Lastly, since we have found that P.W.4 properly identified the authors of the two retracted statements as well as the other appellants then her evidence provides corroboration if that was required. I

The fourth ground of appeal was the need for corroboration.

1992 TLR p107

RAMADHANI JJA, OMAR JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

This was argued first in relation to the retracted confessions which we have already A dealt with. Them it was also submitted with respect to identification by single witness that is P.W.4. Our decision in Lusabanya Siyantemi v R. [1980] T.L.R. 275 was cited as authority for that. But there we said:

B It is a rule of practice, not of law, that corroboration is required of the evidence of a single witness of identification of the accused made under unfavourable conditions; but the rule does not preclude a conviction of the evidence of a single witness if the court is fully satisfied that the witness is telling the truth. C

Here we have amply demonstrated that the conditions were not unfavourable. Admittedly the learned trial judge did not openly say that she was satisfied that P.W.4 was telling the truth. Since this is a first appeal we can, and we hereby, cure that oversight for the reasons already advanced. So we find this ground, too, to be D baseless.

The fifth ground was that of alibi. But this, as was properly pointed out by Mr. Mono, largely concerned the first and the fourth appellants who gave due notice of alibi. Again here we dismiss this ground since we have believed P.W.4 and have found the two E retracted statement to be reliable.

After making the above findings we cannot but dismiss the appeal of the first and the second appellants forthright. Both have confessed to have participated in the commission of the crime. Also as for the third and fifth appellants apart from having F being implicated by co-accused persons i.e. the first and the second appellants in their confessions, they were identified by P.W.4.

The fourth appellant, Adam Mamboleo, was mentioned by the second appellant only and not by the first appellant. Also though he was on the second identification parade he G was not picked out by P.W.4. The only other piece of evidence which could implicate him is the statement of D/SSgt. Wilfred (P.W.7) who arrested him. P.W.7 said that he found the fourth appellant having locked himself in his room from without. P.W.7 did not break the door because he got the key from the mother of the fourth appellant. This H could be an incriminating factor. However, P.W.7 was very clear that he found the brother of the fourth appellant who is the fifth appellant hiding under a bed in a room locked from outside. But P.W.7 did not say so with respect to the fourth appellant. so that is to the credit of the fourth appellant. But also P.W.7 had to break the door of I John Magesa who was the sixth accused because he too had locked in himself with a padlock outside his door. Yet this John was acquitted because the A house boy of the deceased, D.W.6, who picked him out at the identification parade, did so because John used to go to buy milk from P.W.4. Yet John was implicated by both the first and the second appellants. So we feel that Adam Mamboleo, the fourth appellant, is entitled to the benefit of B doubt. The fact that he had locked himself in could be explained otherwise than that he was involved in the murder of the deceased. We therefore quash his conviction of murder.

The sixth appellant, Hamadi Juma Kanyonga, was implicated by both the first and the C second appellants. Indeed the first appellant named him as one of the rapists of P.W.4. However, as he was not in either of the two identification parades.

We cannot say whether P.W.4 would or would not have identified him. Since he cannot be convicted solely on the confessions of co-accused persons-section 33(2) of the D Evidence Act, 1967 - we have to quash his conviction.

Therefore the appeals of the first, the second, the third and the fifth appellants are dismissed. The appeals of the fourth and the sixth appellants are allowed and it is ordered that they be released forthwith unless they are otherwise lawfully held. E

Before we finish we would like to comment in passing on the conviction of Julius Hamza Shimangwe for receiving stolen property c/s 311(1). Admittedly receiving is a lesser offence than murder but it is not a cognate offence with murder and therefore it was wrong to have made that substitute finding. It was held in Valezi Madageda v R. F (1954) 22 E.A.C.A. 389 that the offence of being an accessory after the fact to murder is minor to but not cognate with murder. That decision overturned R. v Sumbuso s/o Rulinde and Others (1948) 15 E.A.C.A. 99. If accessory after the fact to murder is G not cognate with murder then receiving stolen property is even more so. But as there is no appeal against that before us and as we have no revisional jurisdiction we leave that matter as it is.

H Order accordingly.

A

[zRPz]FANUEL MSENGI v PETER MTUMBA 1992 TLR 109 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Singida
Judge Mwalusanya J

19 May 1992

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeals- Right to appeal B

-Headnote

