MARUZUKU HAMISI v REPUBLIC 1997 TLR 1 (HC) A

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Masanche J

CRIMINAL APPEAL 84 of 1996 B
28 October 1996
Flynote
Criminal law - Theft - Proof of - Doctrine of recent possession - When applicable.
Evidence - Burden of proof - Accused's version has only to raise reasonable doubt. C
-Headnote
The appellant had been convicted of robbing with violence and sentenced to 30 years' imprisonment. The evidence indicated that the complainant had been D attacked in his house at night by a group of people and in the course of the attack the complainant was assaulted with a panga and his bicycle was stolen.Three weeks later the appellant was arrested whilst being in possession of the complainant's bicycle.
Held:

(1) That the appellant had given an explanation to the police as to his E possession of the bicycle: he had said that he had bought it from the eighth accused in the trial;

(2) That the accused's story did not have to be believed but only to raise reasonable doubt. In the present case the appellant gave an explanation and the appeal was accordingly allowed. F

Judgment
Masanche J : H
The appellant, Maruzuku s/o Hamisi, was convicted of robbery with violence contrary to s 285 and 286 of the penal code. He was sentenced to thirty years imprisonment. He now appeals against both conviction and sentence. It had been alleged that on 23 September 1995, at 3:00 am, the appellant in the company of some I

MASANCHE J
A other people robbed Jafary s/o Paul, PW1, of a bicycle and Shs 20 000/= in cash.
Mr Rutaisire, learned advocate argued for the appellant in the course of the appeal before me. Mr Mbago, learned state attorney argued for the Republic.
B We revisited the evidence that was adduced at the trial. Learned counsels were of the view that as far as this appellant was concerned (and he is the only one who is appealing) he was convicted on the doctrine of recent possession. That doctrine, they argued could not pin down the appellant, as he had given enough explanation for possession of the bicycle.
C It was on 23 September 1995, at 3:00 am, when Jafary Paulo PW1, while sleeping in his house with his wife, a group of people pounced into his house. The wife of Paulo was quick to bolt out. She escaped. The complainant decided to engage one of them, but he was cut with a panga in the process. He abandoned his bravery attempt and fled. D
Later, people were arrested, including the appellant. The appellant was arrested with a bicycle, which, of course, got identified to be that of the complainant. But, and this is where the counsels agree, the appellant gave an explanation of how he got the bicycle. He explained that it was sold to him by the eighth accused in the E trial, and in presence of a witness Issa Ally PW8. The wife of the appellant also witnessed both the bargain and the actual sale. It was the wife who, actually, advised the appellant to go ahead and buy the bicycle. Time between the actual theft of the bicycle and the recovery of the bicycle from the appellant was three F weeks. I agree that there was an explanation here to the possession. Again, the same appellant had given a cautioned statement to the police (Exhibit P4) in which he stated that the bicycle was sold to him by eighth accused in the trial. In the case of Hamisi v R (1), it is stated that: G

`Once the accused has been found in possession of property which may reasonably be suspected of having been stolen or unlawfully obtained, then the burden shifts on him of satisfying the Court as to how he came by the same. But the burden is not a heavy one.' H

The Court of Appeal for Tanzania in the case of Hassan Madenge v R (2), has said that:

`An accused's story does not have to be believed. He is only required to raise reasonable doubt, that is to say, his explanation must be within the compass of the possible in human terms.' I

It may also be useful to quote the obiter of Sir Ronald Sinclair CJ, in the case of A Omparkash Gandhi v R (3) at 647 where he says:

`In all these cases [possession cases and receiving cases] the defence is never required to do more than show an explanation which is reasonably possible in the circumstances.' B

Once again, I think the appellant gave an explanation for the possession of the bicycle. This is why I allowed his appeal on 11 October 1996 and set him free. C

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL CAUSE 3 OF 1996 F
1 November 1996
Flynote
Employment law - Public servant - Dismissal of - When permissible.
-Headnote
The applicant sought an order of certiorari to bring up and quash a decision of the G President of the United Republic `retiring' the applicant, an immigration officer, in the public interest. It appeared that the applicant had been employed by the Government of Tanzania for some years without having been subjected to any disciplinary sanction. The applicant had read a newspaper report of his dismissal for allegedly receiving bribes. About two months later the applicant received a letter informing him of his retirement. H
Held:

(1) The common law principle that a civil servant was dismissible at pleasure of the President was not part of the law of Tanzania;

(2) That the letter informing the applicant of his retirement cited provisions of law which were incompatible and this had caused the applicant considerable embarassment;

(3) Standing Order F35 which provided that all appointments were at the I

A pleasure of the President was invalid as it was in conflict with the provisions of ss 22 and 36(2) of the Constitution;

(4) The only legislative provision which permitted the compulsory retirement was paragraph (d) of section 8 of the Ordinance which would be utilised only for the purpose of facilitating improvements in the organisation of the department to which the civil servant belonged. It was clear that the applicant's removal had not been sought on these grounds. B

Samatta JK:
F This is an application by way of a chamber summons for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash a decision of the President of the United Republic `retiring' the applicant, who was an Immigration Officer, in the public interest.
The background to the application may, I think, be stated as shortly as is consistent with intelligibility. On 1 June 1984, the applicant was employed by the G Government of Tanzania as an Immigration Assistant. Following a promotion on 1 February 1991, he became an Immigration Officer, Grade III. In the third paragraph of his affidavit supporting the application, the applicant asserts that during the whole of his career in the Civil Service he was never formally warned, reprimanded or in any way penalised for anything done in connection with, or incidental to, the performance of his duties. No information is given in the H counter-affidavit contradictory of this averment. In the 2 June 1995 issue of the Daily News, a government-owned daily newspaper, there appeared an account, among others, to the effect that the then Minister for Home Affairs had sacked twenty eight officials of the Immigration Department, including the applicant, for receiving bribes. Upon I making inquiries about this story with his superiors the applicant was informed that A the story was essentially false as, among other things, the Minister lacked power in law to make the reported decision. About two months later -- on 4 August 1995, to be more precise -- the applicant received a letter addressed to him by the Acting Principal Secretary (Establishments), whose body reads, in Swahili, as follows: B

`Ninapenda kukurifu kwamba, Mtukufu Rais, amekustaafisha kwa Manufaa ya Umma kuanzia tarehe 20 Julai, 1995. Amekustaafisha kwa mujibu wa Kifungu Na 36(2) cha Katiba ya Jamhuri ya Muungano wa Tanzania ikisomwa pamoja na `Standing Order' Na. F35, 44 na. C 49(c), Kifunga Na. (f) cha Sheria ya Malipo ya Pensheni Sura (371); Kanuni za Utumishi Serikalini 1970 Kanuni Na. 29(2) na Sheria ya Utumishi Serikalini Na 16 ya mwaka 1989 Kifungu Na. 19(3). D

2. Aidha, kutukana na uamuzi huu wa kukustaafisha kwa Manufaa ya Umma, utalipwa Pensheni kwa utumishi wako Serikalini hadi tarehe 20 Julai, 1995.' D

Speaking through his advocate, Mr Nassoro, the applicant says that the President's decision to retire him in the public interest is invalid in law and ought, therefore, to be quashed by this court. Mr Songoro, Senior State Attorney, opposed E the application.
Before dealing with counsel's submissions, it is necessary, I think, to quote in extenso the provisions of law relied upon by the President in reaching his F impugned decision. As expected, I will start with s 36(2) of the Constitution of the United Republic (hereinafter referred to as `the Constitution'). The section reads:

`(2) Subject to the provisions of this Constitution and of any relevant written law, the power to appoint persons to offices in the public services of the United Republic, and the power of promotion, termination of appointment, dismissal and disciplinary control of persons G appointed to those offices shall be exercised by the President, the service commissions and such other authorities as may be specified in respect of any office or category of offices by this Constitution or any relevant written law.' H

Section 8 of the Pensions Ordinance (the Ordinance), as amended by s 6 of the Pensions Laws (Miscellaneous Amendments) Act, 1978, provides:

`8 Subject to the provisions of s 9A, no pension, gratuity or other allowance shall be granted under this Ordinance to any officer except I

A on his retirement from the public service in one of the following cases:

(a) on or after attaining the age of fifty:

Provided that in respect of

(i) officers in the Police Force of the rank of Constable and officers [in] the Prison Service, at the rank of Prison Officer Grade III, this paragraph shall have the effect as if `forty years' were substituted for `fifty years'; and B

(ii) officers in the Police Force above the rank of Constable and of or below the rank of Sergeant and officers in the Prison Service above the rank of Prison Officer, Grade III and of or below the rank of Prison Officer, Grade I, this paragraph shall have the effect as if `forty-five years' were substituted for `fifty years'. C

(b) in the case of transfer to other public service, in circumstances in which he is permitted by the law or regulations of the service in which he is last employed to retire on pension or gratuity: Provided that, if his service is superannuated under the Federated D Superannuation System for universities or similar insurance scheme, he has retired from the public service on one of the grounds mentioned in paragraphs (a), (c), (d), (e) and (f) of this section;

E (c) on the abolition of his office;

(d) on compulsory retirement for the purpose of facilitating improvement in the organisation of the department to which he belongs, by which greater efficiency or economy may be effected;

F (e) on medical evidence to the satisfaction of the appropriate authority that he is incapable by reason of any infirmity of mind or body of discharging the duties of his office and that such infirmity is likely to be permanent;

(f) in the case of removal from the public service in the public interest as provided in this Ordinance;

G (ff) if he retires from the public service with the consent of the President, and the President, by writing under his hand, declares that this paragraph shall apply to him;

(g) on retirement in circumstances, not mentioned in the preceding paragraphs of this section, rendering him eligible for a pension under the Pensions (Governors of Dominions, etc) Acts, 1911 to 1947, of the United Kingdom or any Act amending or replacing those Acts: H

Provided that a gratuity may be granted to a female officer in accordance with the provisions of this Ordinance, who retires for the reason that she has married or is about to marry, notwithstanding that she is not otherwise eligible under this section for the grant of any pension, gratuity or other allowance.' SAMATTA JK

Section 19 of the Civil Service Act, 1989, a legislation which repeals and replaces A the Civil Service Act, 1962 (Cap 509), is in the following terms:

`19-(1) The power to dismiss and to terminate the appointment of civil servants shall be exercised in accordance with the provisions of this section. B

(2) The power to dismiss shall not be exercised unless --

(a) a disciplinary charge is preferred against him;

(b) he is afforded an adequate opportunity to answer the charge, and

(c) an inquiry is held into the charge in accordance with regulations made under s 24. C

(3) The President may remove a civil servant from the service of the Republic if he considers it in the public interest so to do.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed as restricting --

(a) the compulsory retirement of any person under section 10 or in the paragraph (c), (d) or D (e) of section 8 of the pensions Ordinance, or under the provisions of the Tanganyika (Compensation and Retiring Benefits) Order in Council, 1961, or Retirement (Special Provisions) Act, 1962, or sub-section (2) of section 17 of the Republic of Tanganyika (Consequential, Transitional and Temporary Provisions) Act, 1962; or

(b) The termination, otherwise then by dismissal, of the service of any public officer, other E than the substantive holder of a pensionable office, in accordance with the terms of his employment, or the dismissal of any person from any office on the personal or domestic staff of the President or of any person holding an office the emoluments of which are payable at an hourly or daily rate. F

(5) Nothing in sub-section (1) or (2) shall apply to the dismissal of a civil servant who is an employee to whom the provisions of Part III of the Security of Employment Act, 1964, shall apply.

(6) Nothing in subsection (1), (2) or (3) shall apply in relation to any person holding the office of Controller and Auditor -- General.' G

I must now proceed to quote Regulation 29 of the Civil Service Regulations, 1970 (the Regulations). The Regulation reads:

`29-(1) Where the Principal Secretary is of opinion that a reason exists why an officer serving H on pensionable terms and who has attained the normal age of voluntary retirement, should be called upon to retire otherwise than on disciplinary or on medical grounds, the Principal Secretary may request the officer concerned to show cause why he should not be compulsorily retired. The Principal Secretary shall forward any representations made by the officer, pursuant to the notice given to him, together with his own recom- I

A mendations to the appointing authority, who shall decide whether or not such officer should be called upon to retire.

(2) Where a Principal Secretary is of the opinion that the President should be invited in the exercise of the powers conferred upon him by subsection (3) of section 20 of the Act [the Civil Service Act, 1962], to consider the removal of an officer in the public interest, the Principal B Secretary shall furnish to the President through the Principal Secretary (Establishments) such particulars as the President may, from time to time, by general or specific direction, require.'

C Standing Orders F 35, 44 and 49 for the Public Service, 1971, read as follows:

Standing Order F 35

`F 35 All appointments at the pleasure of the President. -- Excepting Judges of the High Court and the Controller and Auditor-General whose tenure of office is governed by the terms of the Interim Constitution of Tanzania, all other officers hold their respective offices subject to the D pleasure of the President of the United Republic. The pleasure of the President that any one of these officers should no longer hold it, may be signified through the Principal Secretary (Establishments) in which case no special formalities are required.' E

Standing Order F 44

`F 44 Removal in the public interest. -- The president may remove a civil servant or police officer from the public service if he considers it is in the public interest to do so otherwise than for the purpose of localization of the public service. The decision of the President that an officer F be removed from the service in the public interest may be signified through the Principal Secretary (Establishments) in which case no special formalities are required. The question of pension will be dealt with in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Pensions Ordinance (Cap 371).'

G Standing Order F 49

`F 49 Grounds for retirement on pension and/or gratuity under the Pensions Legislation. -- The Pensions Act (sic), (Cap 371) and the Regulations made thereunder, set out the circumstances under which a pensionable officer may elect to retire or may be called upon to retire others than on disciplinary grounds. These grounds are summarised below: H

(a) on or after attaining the age of 45 years:

Provided that an officer of the rank of Constable in the Police Force or an officer of the rank of Prison Officer Grade III in the Prisons Service may elect to be called upon to retire after he has attained the age of 40 years; I
SAMATTA JK

(b) on the abolition of his office; A

(c) for purpose of facilitating improvement in the organisation of the Department to which he belongs by which greater efficiency or economy may be effective;

(d) on medical grounds;

(e) female officers may elect to retire on marriage, and will be granted such gratuity or pension, if any, for which they may be eligible.' B

Those are the provisions upon which the President, according to the letter addressed to the applicant by the Principal Secretary (Establishments), quoted C above, based his impugned decision. I will now proceed to deal with the contentions addressed to me by counsel. I hope I can summarise those contentions very briefly without doing any injustice to them. In his engaging argument Mr Nassoro contended that the President's decision is invalid for the following reasons: (a) the basis for the decision is vague because the provisions of D law relied upon therein deal with matters of employment which are incompatible; (2) the Standing Orders referred to in the Principal Secretary's letter have no force of law as there were declared by this Court (Mwalusanya J) in James F Gwangilo v Attorney-General, (1) to have been superseded by the Constitution and the Civil E Service Act, 1989; and (3) the failure by the President to give reasons for his decision is fatal to the said decision: the President was found in law to disclose to the applicant the factor or factors which, in his opinion, constituted the alleged public interest. Mr Songoro urged me to hold that the President's decision is F proper and in accordance with the law of the land. He forcefully contended that the paramount words in the Principal Secretary's letter, as far as the reason for the President's decision is concerned, are the words `amekustaafisha kwa Manufaa ya Umma'. According to the learned Senior State Attorney, the Applicant had no G right in law to be given more information than that. Counsel urged me to hold that the President acted within his powers, and the procedure he applied was correct and sufficient. It seems to me that it is desirable, if not necessary, that some of the general principles which I consider to be relevant to the determination of the application now before me should be distinctly set out. In my opinion, the following are those principles: H

(1) The common law principle that a civil servant is dismissible at pleasure (see Shenton v Smith (2) and Gould v Stuart (3)) is not part of the law of this country: see s 36(2) of the Constitution as I

A read together with s 26(1) of the said Constitution, and James F Gwangilo's case supra. In this country, civil servants are dismissed for misconduct only: see s 19(2) of the Civil Service Act, 1989. When a civil servant is dismissed cause must be assigned. The English common law doctrine of `service at pleasure' has, as, I hope, amply B demonstrated above, no place in the law of this country. The saying `Whatever pleases the emperor has the force of law' forms no part of our law.

(2) While in England the courts are not concerned with the Civil service as such, because the civil servant there is in law only a servant of the C Crown, dismissible at the pleasure of the Queen without notice or compensation, in Tanzania the civil servant has some legal rights, including the right to be afforded an opportunity to show cause why he should not be dismissed from the service, which are enforceable in the courts.

D (3) No power conferred by law on a public leader or officer is absolute or limitless. Every such power must be exercised in good faith and in accordance with the Constitution and other laws. Any assertion that presidential powers brook no limitation would have no basis in law.

E (4) Compulsory retirement of a civil servant or his removal from service in the public interest may be challenged in this Court on, among others, any of the following grounds:

(a) the legislation under which the impugned decisions was made is unconstitutional;

F (b) the decision is mala fide ie, it is actuated by malice or some purpose other than that for which it is authorised by the law: malice would be held to exist where, for example, the alleged public interest, where removal is concerned, is founded upon non-existent facts;

G (c) the decision is perverse, that is to say, one which no responsible man would have made.

(5) The Standing Orders for the Public Service have no legislative effect; they are meant for departmental and administrative purposes: see IG Lazaro v Josephine Mgombera (4). Those Orders form the internal law of the Civil Service. H

Having stated these principles, I proceed to ask myself whether the impugned decision of the President is not valid in law. My mind is free from doubt as to how that question ought to be answered. I agree with Mr Nassoro that the President's decision is unsupportable in law. I hold that view for the following reasons: I

SAMATTA JK

(1) The letter from the Principal Secretary cites provisions of law which are A incompatible, that is to say, provisions which do not go together. Whereas the removal of a civil servant from service under s 8(f) of the Ordinance, s 19(3) of the Civil Service Act, 1989, reg 29(2) of the Regulations and Standing Order F44 is based on the general requirement of public interest, the removal under Standing Order F 49(c) must specifically be based on the need of, to quote the Order, B `facilitating improvement in the organisation of the Department to which [the civil servant] belongs by which greater efficiency or economy may be effective'. By being based on the two sets of provisions the President's decision has, I agree with Mr Nassoro, caused the applicant considerable embarrassment. C

(2) The citation, in the Principal Secretary's letter, of Standing Order F 35 as being one of the legs on which the President's decision was intended D to stand suggests, very strongly, that in making, or coming to, his decision the President was under the mistaken belief that the applicant held his office in the Immigration Department at his (the President's) pleasure. I have, I hope, sufficiently demonstrated that in this country civil servants, including immigration officers, do not hold office at the pleasure of the President. It is perfectly correct to say that a civil E servant's security of tenure is lesser than that of a judge, but it is equally correct to observe that that security is not as limited as is implied by the Principal Secretary's letter. Standing Order F 35 cannot be valid in law, because it is inconsistent with the provisions of ss 22 and 36(2) of the Constitution as read together with s 11(1) of the said Constitution. F

(3) No provision of law speaks of retirement of a civil servant in the public interest. Neither s 19 of the Civil Service Act, 1989 nor reg 29 of the Civil Service Regulations, 1970, confers on the President power to retire a G civil servant in the public interest. The provisions speak of removal, and not retirement, in the public interest. It is not of little interest to point out that even Standing Order F 44 does not speak of retirement. It speaks of removal. Paragraph (d) of s 8 of the Ordinance refers to compulsory H retirement for the purpose of facilitating improvement in the organisation of the department to which the servant belongs, by which greater efficiency may be effected. Neither what is stated in the Respondent's counter-affidavit nor what fell from the lips of Mr Songoro at the Bar during the hearing of the application gives even a faint suggestion that the pur- I

A ported termination of the applicant's employment falls under one of the categories of compulsory retirement mentioned in s 10 of the Ordinance, as amended by s 7 of the Pensions Law (Miscellaneous Amendments) Act, 1978. When all this is taken into account, it must be correct to say, as I do, that the use of the word `amekustaafisha' in the Principal Secretary's letter to the applicant causes even more confusion B as to exactly why the President acted in the manner he did with regard to the applicant's employment.

C Since I am of the settled opinion that the above three grounds constitute a sufficient warrant for faulting the President's decision, I do not find it necessary to consider Mr Nassoro's argument that, when ordering the removal of a civil servant from public service in the public interest, the President is bound in law to give reasons disclosing factors which, in his opinion, constituted public interest in the D particular case. In James F Gwagilo's case supra, Mwalusanya J was of the clear opinion that such reasons made be given. Thought the point is not an uninteresting one, I do not for the reason I have given, think it right to lengthen this ruling by discussing it.

E Before I part with this application, I would like to say a word or two on the true application of the provisions of s 23 of the Civil Service Act, 1989. The section reads:

F `23 -- (1) No proceedings shall be brought in any court on ground only that the provisions of this Act, other that the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 3 and Part V, have not been complied with; but nothing in this section shall apply to any criminal proceedings for an offence against any of the provisions of this Act.

(2) The question whether --

G (a) The President validly performed any function conferred on him by section 36 of the Constitution or by this Act;

(b) the Commission or other delegate has validly performed any functions the exercise of which has been delegated or deputed to it or him, shall not be enquired into by or in any court, subject to the provisions of sub-section (3).

H (3) Where a person is dismissed, the provisions of sub-section (2) shall not apply in relation to that dismissal unless prior to the dismissal, the provisions of section 19(2) are complied with.'

I was inclined to think that I was not deterred by these provisions from entertaining the instant application. In my opinion, those provisions do not take away the supervisory jurisdiction of this I

SAMATTA JK

Court where it is alleged, as is the case in the present application, that a decision A made by the President under s 36 of the Constitution and the provisions of the Civil Service Act, 1989, is invalid in law. As I understand the law, if a decision purportedly made by an authority which falls under the supervisory jurisdiction of this Court is challenged on the ground that it is not valid in law or it is null and void it becomes the bounden duty of the Court to hear the aggrieved party. It must be B distinctly understood, however, that this Court's supervisory jurisdiction is one of supervision and not of appeal or revision. When it exercises that jurisdiction this Court does not sit as a super-executive. Thus, when it issues an order of certiorari C the Court does not substitute another order in the place of the quashed order, but it removes that order out of the way, as one which should not be used to the detriment of any individual: see Walsall Overseers v Railway Company (5) at 39. Where an authority exceeds its jurisdiction, its decision will be regarded by the courts as invalid in law and beyond the protection of any exclusionary formula: see Anisminic v Foreign Compensation Commission (6). Parties to disputes as to legal rights must have access to legal tribunals for the settlement of those D disputes.

For the reasons I have given, I hope not at an inordinate length, I allow the application and quash the President's decision purporting to retire the applicant in the public interest. The respondent is to pay the applicant's costs in the E application.

The appellant was the tenant in a home which had been nationalised in 1971. The respondents had applied for the denationalisation of the house and had been D permitted by the President to collect and use the rents paid by the tenant (the appellant) for the duration of her life and that of the first respondent. The house was to remain in the name of the N H Corporation. After this permission was granted the respondents sought the eviction of the appellant from the premises. The High Court held that the respondents were clothed with the status of the landlord and as such they could evict a tenant. On appeal, E

The house on Plot No 1307/148 on Kitumbini Street, Dar es Salaam, originally belonged to one Mrs Ramatbai Alibhai, deceased, who was the mother of the second respondent, Rukiya Amirali Walji, and the mother-in-law of the first respondent, Amirali HM Walji. The appellant, Gulamabhas F Kassam, was the B tenant. That house was nationalised in 1971 under the Acquisition of Buildings Act, 1971 and was put under the Registrar of Buildings. The appellant continued to be the tenant.
The second respondent, that is the daughter of the original owner of the house, C petitioned the President of the United Republic of Tanzania for the denationalisation of the house and its eventual return to her as the heiress. By a letter SHC/A70/2 of 26 May 1992 signed by the Principal Secretary to the President (hereinafter referred to as the letter from Ikulu) the second respondent was allowed to collect and use the rents paid by the tenant in that house for the D duration of her life and that of the first respondent. It was categorically said in that letter that the house will continue to be in the name of the National Housing Corporation (NHC). Incidentally, to digress a bit, in 1990 the office of the Registrar of Buildings was merged with NHC and its property and activities passed on to the latter. E

The respondents filed a suit before the Regional Housing Tribunal of Dar es Salaam seeking to evict the appellant from the said house. Mr Majithia, learned counsel, who advocated for the appellant, raised a preliminary objection that the F respondents were not the landlords but were mere tenants and as such they could not effect eviction of a fellow tenant. He cited our decision in The Registrar of Buildings v Felix Bwogi t/a Eximpo Promotion and Services (1).

The Tribunal agreed with the submissions of Mr Chandoo, learned advocate for G the respondents, that the respondents were, by implication, the life landlords of the suit premises. The reasons were that the respondents were entrusted, in their life time, with the responsibilities of collecting rents, repairing the house and paying land rates. H

The appellant was aggrieved by that decision and he successfully appealed to the Housing Appeals Tribunal. It was held that NHC was the landlord and that the concept of a junior landlord is unknown in the land law of Tanzania. The respondents were found to be tenants and therefore they could not evict another tenant unless I

A they did so as agents of the landlord and that in that case the plaint had, under Order 3 Rule 1 and 2 to say so explicitly.

So, the preliminary objection was upheld and the suit was dismissed.

B The present respondents appealed to the High Court of Tanzania where Mwaikasu, J held that the respondents were clothed with the status of the landlord and as such they could evict a tenant. Thus the learned judge restored the ruling of the Regional Housing Tribunal. Mwaikasu, J reviewed the land law of England and saw that the right to receive rents as an owner, and not as a mere collector, is one of the incidents of being a landlord. C

This is now an appeal from that decision of Mwaikasu, J. The main issue, as Mr Majithia, learned counsel for the appellant said is whether or not the respondents can evict the appellant.

D Mr Majithia pointed out that this Court has decided in The Registrar of Buildings v Dr Ali H Kombe (2) that a former owner of a nationalised building is a licensee and not a landlord when that building is returned to him or her for the duration of his or her lifetime. So, the learned advocate submitted, the respondents, here are also licensees and that, as under Bwogi's case supra, they cannot evict a tenant. E

Mr Chandoo, for the respondents, first argued that if the respondents, by the authority of Dr Kombe, are licensees and not tenants, then Bwogi is inapplicable because it is about tenants. The learned advocate argued further that as F respondents were given a right of occupancy for life, they were then trustees of the reversionary interest of NHC. He submitted that seeking eviction was in the exercise of the protection of that reversionary right. Thirdly, the learned advocate submitted that to be a landlord one does not have to be an owner of a premises. He pointed out that all the land in Tanzania belongs to the President who grants rights of occupancy. Mr Chandoo argued that the holders of the rights of G occupancy are regarded as landlords and do evict their tenants. Finally, the learned advocate submitted that if the premises fall vacant the respondents would either enter into occupation themselves or they would look for another tenant. He argued that the respondents are, therefore, landlords. H

Mr Majithia in reply said that a licensee cannot be a landlord. He pointed out that under Bwogi only the landlord can evict. The learned advocate said that if the premises become vacant then the respondents will have to consult NHC and cannot just enter into occupation themselves or get another tenant. I

RAMADHANI JA

There is not a slightest doubt in our minds that Bwogi is categoric that only a A landlord can sue to evict a tenant and that one tenant cannot seek to evict another tenant. Similarly, according to Dr Kombe the respondents are not tenants but are licensees. In the Dr Kombe case a former owner of a house nationalized under the Acquisition of Buildings Act, 1971 had her house returned to her for the duration of B her life. She sold it to Dr Kombe. This Court held that the lady was a licensee and as such she had no title to pass on to a buyer. This Court had this to say at 65: C

> `In our view what the Government really intended to do, and what it in fact did, was to create a lesser or limited interest in favour of Mrs Kaur while it (the Government) itself retained the legal title to the property. The interest so created was to all intent and purposes a licence to enjoy the fruits of the suit premises; it amounted to no more than that.' D

Now, we have to determine what was not decided in Dr Kombe and that is whether a licensee can evict a tenant in order to `enjoy the fruits of the suit premises'. In other words, can a licensee be deemed to be a landlord for the purposes of eviction? E

> `includes, in relation to any premises, any person, other than the tenant, who is or would be, but for the provisions of this Act entitled to possession of the premises and any person from time to time deriving title under the original landlord, and any person deemed to be a landlord under s 4 or s 5'; F

We may as well say it here that ss 4 and 5 are inapplicable in this case. Two G things are obvious to us; one, a tenant, which title does not apply to the respondents, can never be a landlord and two, for the suit premises the title landlord is not confined to NHC only. The question is whether the respondents are `entitled to possession of the premises' and hence are landlords.

It is quite in order to revisit briefly the law regarding licence first, and then to look at H the terms of the licence of the respondents. A licence is a permission given by an occupier of land which allows a licensee to do some act which would otherwise be trespass. Since licences are almost purely personal transactions, it is difficult to put limits to their possible varieties. However, there are generally three different classes distinguishable. I

A First, there is a bare licence which is granted otherwise than for valuable consideration eg gratuitous permission to enter a house or field. This can be revoked at any time on reasonable notice. Then there is a licence coupled with an interest, that is, proprietary interest in other property. For example, a licensee is B allowed to enter a premises and to hunt or cut trees and then to take the animal killed or the wood cut. Under common law such a licence is irrevocable and is assignable. However, the interest must be validly created. Lastly, there is a contractual licence. This is where, for instance, one has a ticket for a sports match or for travelling. The licensor contracts not to revoke the licence. C

The respondents fall in the second category, that is, licence coupled with an interest. They have been allowed to take rents for their lifetime. As already seen such licence under common law is irrevocable. However, we are quick to add that where the terms of the licence are abused, as was the case in Dr Kombe, then the licence can be revoked. Here the interest was validly created because, as D properly pointed out in Dr Kombe at 64, the Registrar of Buildings, now NHC, under s 4(2) of the Acquisition of Buildings Act, 1971, acquired property subject to the directions of the President. The letter from Ikulu constitutes such directions of E the President. So, the respondents have the assurance of enjoying the fruits of the suit premises for their lifetime so long as they abide by the terms of the licence. Now, what are these terms?

The letter from Ikulu says, in the relevant parts, as follows:

F `... Rais amengiza kuwa badala ya kurudishiwa kabisa nyumba hiyo, Ndugu Rukia Amarshi Walji achukue kodi ya upangaji wa nyumba hiyo kwa kipindi cha uhai wake na wa mumewe.

Kwa kuwa utekelezaji wa uamuzi huu ni sawa na kurudishwa kwa nyumba hii kwa kipindi cha maisha yake yote na ya mumewe, masharti yafuatayo yazingatiwe . . .' G

That can be translated as:

H The President has directed that instead of restoring that house completely, Mrs Rukia Amarshi Walji to collect rents from the house for the duration of her life and that of her husband. As the implementation of this decision is tantamount to the restoration of the house for the duration of her life and that of her husband, the following conditions have to be observed ...'

It is clear that the house was returned to the respondents for their lifetime and because of that some conditions had to be observed. So, I the conditions were imposed because `life ownership' of the house was granted. S The conditions did not create the life ownership. However, only one of the conditions underscored the fact that the arrangement was for their lifetime. That was the requirement that the house continues to be in the name of NHC. The other two conditions are typical incidents of being a landlord; to repair the house and to pay land rates. B

Admittedly, another condition was that rents could only be altered after consultation with NHC. We think there was a good reason for that condition. Under the Rent Restriction Act, 1984, the Regional Rent Tribunals fixed the standard C rents for every building. All landlords, including NHC, were required to observe the standard rents. Any change of rents required the approval of the Regional Rent Tribunal. However, the situation was changed by the Rent Restriction (Exemption) (Specified Parastatals) Order, 1992 GN 41 of 1992 of 20 March 1992. Seven D specified parastatals, including NHC, were exempted from all the provisions of the Rent Restriction Act, 1984, relating to the restriction on the amount of rent that may be charged or collected by the specified parastatals as the landlord. So, rents charged on the suit premises were not controlled by the Rent Restriction Act, 1984. Since the suit premises remained in the name of NHC, the respondents E could cash in on that exemption and charge rents above the standard rents. We think that it was absolutely necessary to require the respondents to consult NHC, the real beneficiary of the exemption, before altering the rents. For the sake of record, we have to point out here that GN 41 of 1992 was published on 20 March 1992 and that it was already in force when the letter from Ikulu was signed on 26 May 1992. F

So, we are satisfied that the respondents were de facto landlords. The condition that they should consult NHC before altering rents was only necessary to ensure that they do not abuse a statutory privilege which is not theirs. It was that condition G which made Mr Majithia take the view that the respondents could not occupy the premises themselves or look for a new tenant if the premises become vacant. But because of the rationale we have stated for that condition, we see nothing which can stop the respondents from being entitled to possession of the premises. In fact the respondents could either take the rents and use them or they could reside H in the premises themselves. So, we find that the respondents are entitled to possession but for the Act which restricts possession except in certain circumstances and as such we are of the opinion that the respondents, as licensees, are landlords under s 3 of the Rent I

Landlord and tenant - Allocation of premises under s 12(1)(k)(i) of Rent Restriction Act 1984 - Regional Housing Tribunal has no powers to allocate a home belonging to specified parastatal to a tenant by virtue of GN 41 of 1992. E

F The appellant company applied before the Regional Housing Tribunal for certain apartments to be allocated to it on the ground that the said apartments had remained unoccupied for a period exceeding one month without good cause. The application was filed under s 12(1)(k)(i) of the Rent Restriction Act 17 of 1984. The apartments belonged to the National Housing Corporation, a parastatal, as landlord. The Regional Housing Tribunal rejected the contention of the second G respondent (who had applied to be joined as an interested party, alleging to be the legal tenant) and ordered the second respondent to vacate the premises immediately. The appellant was declared a tenant and the first respondent was ordered to conclude a proper lease with the appellant as tenant. The respondents appealed to the Housing Appeals Tribunal, contending that the Regional Housing H Tribunal had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter in view of GN 41 of 1992. The Housing Appeals Tribunal rejected the appeal and set aside all the orders made by the Regional Housing Tribunal on the ground that the Regional Housing Tribunal had no jurisdiction by virtue of GN 41 of 1992..

(2) The essence of GN 41 of 1992 was to exempt specified parastatals from the Tribunal's interference in fixing rents and in allocating their houses to tenants of their own choice and extended even to cover eviction of tenants already in occupation who would otherwise be protected; B

(3) A Regional Housing Tribunal had no powers to allocate a house belonging to a specified parastatal to a tenant under s 12(1)(k)(i) of the Rent Restriction Act by virtue of GN 41 of 1992. The Housing Appeals Tribunal was accordingly correct in holding so.

Kaji J:

The appellant company trading as Muhaka Enterprises was the applicant before the Regional Housing Tribunal at Dar es Salaam applying for, inter alia, being allocated apartments No 0001 and 0002 on Plot No 2222 Block 129 Nkurumah E Street on the ground that the said apartments had remained unoccupied for a period exceeding one month without good cause. That application was filed under s 12(1)(k)(i) of the Rent Restriction Act No 17 of 1984.

The said apartments belong to the first respondent the National Housing Corporation as landlord. F

The second respondent Dar es Salaam Regional Trading Co Ltd (RTC) applied to be joined as interested parties alleging to be legal tenants in the said apartments. G

The Regional Housing Tribunal rejected the second respondent's application and declared the second respondent to be an unlawful tenant. It ordered the second respondent to vacate the suit premises immediately.

At the same time the appellant was declared a tenant and the first respondent was ordered to conclude a proper lease with the appellant as tenant to the suit premises. H

The respondents were aggrieved. They jointly appealed before the Housing Appeals Tribunal. One of their main grounds of appeal was that the Regional Housing Tribunal had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter in view of Government Notice No 41 of 1992.

The Housing Appeals Tribunal summarily rejected the appeal I

KAJI J

A and set aside all the orders made by the Regional Housing Tribunal on the ground that the Regional Housing Tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain that matter by virtue of Government Notice No 41 of 1992.

The appellant was aggrieved. Hence this appeal.

B The appellant's learned Counsel Mr Mwakajinga raised two grounds of appeal, namely,

1. That the learned Deputy Chairman erred in law in setting aside the orders of Dar es Salaam Regional Housing Tribunal on authority that Government Notice No 41 of 1992 exempted the National Housing C Corporation from being sued for invoking its powers under s 12(1)(k)(i) of the Rent Restriction Act 1984.

2. That the learned Deputy Chairman erred in law in setting aside the orders of the Regional Housing Tribunal while at the same time he summarily rejected the appeal. D

Elaborating on these Mr Mwakajinga stated that the National Housing Corporation is not exempted by Government Notice No 41 of 1992 when s 12(1)(k)(i) is to be E applied. He said Government Notice No 41 of 1992 para 4 is restricted to statutory tenancy only. He said when the issue is not statutory tenancy then National Housing Corporation is not exempted.

F The learned Counsel went on, submitting that Government Notice No 41 of 1992 does not define statutory tenancy and also the Rent Restriction Act 1984 is silent on this except s 32 which gives conditions of statutory tenancy. He said a statutory tenant is a tenant who retains possession of any premises after his contractual tenancy has expired. He cited also the case of Carter v SU Carburetter Company (1) which also defined `statutory tenancy' to that effect. G

Mr Mwakajinga said since the appellant's claim was not based on statutory tenancy but on tenancy under s 12(1)(k)(i), the National Housing Corporation cannot hide itself behind Government Notice No 41 of 1992 for defence and that the honourable Deputy Chairman was wrong in holding that the Regional Housing Tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. H

The learned Counsel went on, submitting that the honourable Deputy Chairman summarily rejected the appeal. Since that was the case then there was no reason of setting aside the orders of the Regional Housing Tribunal because by rejecting the appeal the decision of the Regional Housing Tribunal remained intact. I

KAJI J

All in all the learned counsel said he did not understand the logic of rejecting an A appeal and at the same time setting aside the orders appealed against.

He therefore called upon this court to allow the appeal with costs.

Mr Rwabutaza learned counsel who represented the respondents at the hearing of this appeal replied that Government Notice No 41 of 1992 has exempted the B National Housing Corporation from the provisions listed thereunder which include the whole of s 12. He said a Regional Housing Tribunal has no jurisdiction to entertain any matter falling under s 12. He therefore rejected Mr Mwakajinga's contention that the exemption is limited to statutory tenancy. C

Mr Rwabutaza went on, replying that since the Regional Housing Tribunal had no jurisdiction and since the Housing Appeals Tribunal also held so, it was probably a slip of the pen by the honourable Deputy Chairman to say he summarily rejected the appeal. This is more so when he set aside all the orders which were subsequently made by the trial tribunal under the wrong self imposed jurisdiction. D He therefore called upon this court to dismiss the appeal with costs. In short that is what the learned counsels submitted.

The crucial issue is whether the Regional Housing Tribunal had jurisdiction to entertain the appellant's application under s 12(1)(k)(i) of the Rent Restriction Act, 1994 in view of para 4 of Government Notice No 41 of 1992. E

The said paragraph says:

> `4 All premises in respect of which a specified parastatal is the lawful landlord are hereby F exempted from the provisions of ss 12, 16, 17, 25, 26 and 37 of the Rent Restriction Act, 1984, which operate to confer upon a tenant a statutory tenancy upon the determination of his contractural tenancy'

The Housing Corporation is among the specified parastatals. Therefore the crucial G issue at this stage is whether the provision of s 12(1)(k)(i) of the Rent Restriction Act 1984 operates to confer upon a tenant a statutory tenancy upon the determination of his contractual tenancy. The said provision says: H

> `12(1)(k)(i): The Tribunal shall in relation to every rent restriction area within its jurisdiction, have powLer to do all things which it is required or empowered to do by or under the provisions of this Act, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing shall have power to allocate to any suitable tenant, at such rent as the Regional Tribunal may fix, any house of portion thereof which without good I

KAJI J
A cause has been left unoccupied for a period exceeding one month and, if any house is in an unfinished condition to cause such house to be finished in all respect and rendered fit for habitation.'
Therefore when a Tribunal allocates a house to a tenant under this provision of the law it must do two things. Firstly it must allocate that house to the tenant. Secondly it must fix a rent for that house. B
But for a house belonging to a specified authority such as the first respondent NHC, a Regional Housing Tribunal has no jurisdiction to fix a rent by virtue of para 3 of Government Notice 41 of 1992 which says: C
`3 All premises in respect of which a specified parastatal is the lawful landlord are hereby exempted from all the provisions of the Rent Restriction Act 1984, relating to restriction on the amount of rent that may be charged or collected by the specified parastatal as the landlord from any part of those premises.' D
Thus this provision gives full power to the specified parastatals to fix rents of their own choice for their houses without being interfered with by the Regional Housing E Tribunal is that respect. A Regional Housing Tribunal cannot interfere with them on this nor can it come into their shoes and fix rents for their houses. Secondly when a Regional Housing tribunal allocates a house to a tenant under this F provision, that tenant becomes a legal tenant and his tenancy will continue in force according to the tenancy agreement to be agreed between him and the landlord. He will be there on a contractual tenancy. At the determination of that contractual tenancy if he continues in occupation paying the rent but without any new tenancy agreement he becomes a statutory tennant as per the case of Carter v SU Carburetter Company cited supra. G
Therefore it would appear that when a tenant is allocated a house by a Regional Housing Tribunal under s 12(1)(k)(i) of the Rent Restriction Act 1984 that allocation operates to confer on that tenant a statutory tenancy upon the H determination of his contractual tenancy.
The essence of Government Notice 41 of 1992 is to exempt the specified parastatals from the Tribunal's interference in fixing rents and in allocating their houses to tenants of their own choice. The exemption does not end up with rent and allocation only. It extends I to cover even eviction of tenants who are already in occupation who would A otherwise be protected in a Tribunal by s 25, or subletting under s 37.
However I must admit that para 4 Government Notice 41 of 1992 has been couched in a complicated phraselogy which says: B

`... are hereby exempted from the provisions of ss 12, 16, 17, 25, 26 and 37 of the Rent Restriction Act 1984, which operate to confer upon a tenant statutory tenancy upon the determination of his contractual tenancy.'

This could easily be interpreted to mean that those specified parastatals are C exempted from the provisions of those sections in respect of statutory tenants only, or that they are exempted from those provisions where statutory tenancy is concerned, or that they are exempted from the provisions of those sections which grant statutory tenancy to a tenant. But I think the word `operate' has a future D meaning to mean that those specified parastatals are exempted from the provisions of those sections which place the tenant in a position to be able to acquire the status of a statutory tenant at the determination of his contractual tenancy. Allocating a tenant with tenancy under s 12(1)(k)(i) places a tenant in a E position to acquire the status of a statutory tenant at the determination of his contractual tenancy.

It is for the above reasons that I have been of the view that a Regional Housing Tribunal has no powers to allocate a house belonging to a specified parastatal to a tenant under s 12(1)(k)(i) of the Rent Restriction Act 1984 by virtue of Government F Notice 41 of 1992. The honourable Deputy Chairman of the Housing Appeals Tribunal was right in holding so.

Since the Regional Housing Tribunal had no powers to do what it purported to do, G the Housing Appeals Tribunal was right in setting aside all the orders purportedly made by the Regional Housing Tribunal. I agree with the respondent's learned counsel Mr Rwabutaza that the words `summary rejection' was probably a slip of the pen by the honourable Deputy Chairman. The contents of the order had the H meaning of allowing the appeal on the ground of lack of jurisdiction by the Regional Housing Tribunal. It is hereby rectified accordingly.

Lubuva JA:

This is an application, by notice of motion in which the applicant, Ludovick Mbona, is seeking leave to appeal to this Court against I the order of the High Court (Mackanja, J) of 1 September 1996. A

LUBUVA JA

In this application the applicant was represented by Mr Kwikima, learned counsel. For the national Bank of Commerce, the respondent, Mr Mtaki, learned counsel appeared. Both the learned counsel had also appeared before the High Court at Tabora.

The matter arises from Urambo District Court Civil Case No 9 of 1994 in which the B applicant was awarded Shs 10,000,000/= damages against the respondent. On appeal to the High Court (Tabora D/C Civil Appeal No 16 of 1995) the award was disallowed on 28 August 1995. From that decision, the applicant sought leave from the High Court to appeal to this Court. In Misc Civil Application No 12 of 1995 the C applicant's application for leave was on 1 September 1996 struck out on the ground that it was incompetent. Hence the applicant has come to this Court seeking leave to appeal. The application is supported by an affidavit which was deposed to by Mr Kwikima. In sum total in that affidavit the complaint is against the D High Court decision on the appeal and there is hardly any mention of the ruling pertaining to the application for leave to appeal which was struck out.

Before me, when the application was called on for hearing, Mr Mtaki, learned E counsel, took a preliminary objection that the application was incompetent because it did not comply with the requirement of Rule 52 of the Court's rules. Mr Mtaki further submitted that though in terms of Rule 44 of the Court's rules the High Court has concurrent jurisdiction with this Court, it is a mandatory requirement under this rule that application for leave must first be made to the High F Court. In the instant matter, Mr Mtaki maintained, as the applicant's application was struck out on 28 August 1995 on account of its incompetence, there was thereafter no valid application before the High Court. As a result, Mr Mtaki contended, there is no legal basis upon which this application is brought to the Court of Appeal. It should be dismissed. G

Mr Kwikima, learned counsel for the applicant forcefully responded to these submissions. In essence Mr Kwikima conceded that the respondent had not been served with the notice of motion. However, he was quick to qualify that when the H notice of motion was filed, service on the respondent was effected through the offices of Mr Mtaki, learned counsel for the respondent. But such service was not accepted, Mr Kwikima added. And yet Mr Kwikima did not have proof on this by way of an affidavit. In spite of this, it was Mr Kwikima's contention that the application did not I

A lapse as the right to appeal was a constitutional one. Furthermore, Mr Kwikima submitted that because the High Court and the Court of Appeal have concurrent jurisdiction in relation to applications for leave to appeal, it was his view that he could have brought this application directly to this Court without application first having to be made to the High Court. And so, he stressed, the fact that the B application was struck out on grounds of incompetence should not prejudice or in any way bar the applicant's right of appeal to the court. Finally, it was Mr Kwikima's contention that this court being the final Court of Appeal, it should not rule out applications such as this on grounds of technicalities as the High Court did in this matter. C

Upon close and anxious consideration of these submissions, it is apparent that the central issue of this application is the competence of this application having regard to the fact that the respondent was not served with the notice of motion. As already indicated, Mr Kwikima firmly maintains that despite the fact that the respondent D was not served, the application did not lapse, it still stood valid. At the outset, it is pertinent to state that it is common knowledge that this court is a creature of statute and the applicable rules. For its functional operations the applicable E legislations are the Constitution, the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 and the Court's Rules of 1979. In handling its work, the Court is guided by the provisions stipulated in these legislations and the rules. In the instant case as correctly pointed out by Mr Mtaki, the applicable rule is Rule 52(1). Under that rule it is F mandatory to serve the respondent as a necessary party with the notice of motion two clear days before the hearing. This was not done and so, as submitted by Mr Mtaki the application is not competent, it does not comply with the requirement of G the rules. It is my view that there is merit in Mr Mtaki's submission. This is so because it is clearly provided under rule 52(1) of the court's rules that the notice of motion among other relevant documents shall be served on all necessary parties which in this case includes the respondent. It is a mandatory requirement which H even Mr Kwikima does not dispute. Mr Kwikima's argument that even though service was not affected on the respondent, the application still remained valid and competent because the right to appeal is a constitutional one and that the court has concurrent jurisdiction with the High Court is, with respect, attractive but untenable. In a somewhat similar situation, our predecessor the I

LUBUVA JA

Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in the case of Harnam Singh Bhogal t/a Harnam A Singh & Co v Jadva Karsan (1) stated:

`It is well settled law that a right to appeal can only be founded on a statute and that any party who seeks to avail himself of the right must strictly comply with the conditions prescribed by the statute.' B

For similar reasons, it is my view that the instant case is such that it should strictly comply with the requirements of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 and the Court's rules. Unlike the situation in the case of Leonsi Silawyo Ngalai v Justine Alfred Salakana and The Attorney-General, (2) in which we held that in election C petition cases appeals lie to this court as a matter of right, in the present case as s 5 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 applies, leave to appeal is a necessary legal requirement. A further requirement is that application for leave should first be made to the High Court. With respect, Mr Kwikima's submission that he could D come up with this application to this Court without first applying to the High Court is misconceived. Consequently, in the circumstances of the case, I am increasingly convinced that the mandatory provisions of Rule 52(1) not having been complied with, the application was incompetent which in effect amounts to no application at all. E

This ground alone is sufficient to dispose of this matter. But there is yet another equally pertinent aspect which was raised by Mr Mtaki. I intend to deal with it briefly. As already intimated, on 1 April 1996, in Misc Civil Application No 122 of 1995, Mackanja, J struck out the application for leave to appeal to this Court. The F ground for that course of action was that the learned judge held the application was incompetent on account of the fact that the affidavit in support of the application was fatally defective. With the application for leave to appeal struck out what then is the legal basis for this application before me. Mr Mtaki, learned G counsel was of the view that with the application for leave to appeal struck out, there was no valid application before the High Court and so, consequentially, the applicant cannot be said to have complied with Rule 44. On the other hand, Mr Kwikima, learned counsel was of a different view. In his view, Rule 44 does not H necessarily envisage only valid applications. If I understood him correctly, it was his view that so long as he had first filed before the High Court an application irrespective of its competence or otherwise, it was sufficient compliance with the rule. I am settled in my view that Rules 43 and 44 of the court's rules envisage valid and competent applica- I

A tions only. Applications which are invalid or incompetent as was the case in the instant case would not do.

Consequently, the application before me originating as it did from an invalid and incompetent application before the High Court is not proper. I would venture to think that the proper course for the applicant to take would be to file another proper application in terms of the rules and proceed with it accordingly. B
In the event, the application is dismissed with costs.

-Headnote
G The appellant had instituted a trade dispute in the industrial Court arising from the alleged wrongful termination of his services by his employer. The action was dismissed by the Industrial Court. The appellant was advised that no appeal lay against a division of the Industrial Court in view of the provisions of s 27 (1C) of the Industrial Court of Tanzania Act 1968 as amended by Act 3 of 1990. The appellant contended that this provision infringed his rights under article 13(6) of the H Constitution, which guaranteed the right of appeal against a decision of a court of law.
Held:
(1) That s 27(1C) deprived a person of his basic right of appeal or another legal remedy except on grounds of lack of jurisdiction and was therefore unconstitutional and invalid;
(2) That s 27(1C) was not saved by the provisions of article 30(2) of the I
Constitution: there were no overriding public or societal interests A reasonably linked to the Constitution imposed under s 27(1C);
(3) That circumstances such as the constitution of the court; the elaborateness of its procedure, the permissible legal representation and the elegance and lucidity of the court's judgments were completely irrelevant to the issue in the present case. B
Case Information

The Court accordingly declared s 27(1C) unconstitutional.
Case referred to:
1. Kukutia Ole Pumbun v Attorney General [1993] TLR 159 (CA) C
Dr Tenga, for the plaintiff.
Salula, for the defendants.
Mapigano J:
The facts in this case are in a nutshell and the questions to be decided are purely D legal and require very careful treatment. The plaintiff P P Magasha was employed by the National Pharmaceutical Company but the employment was terminated in 1991. He considered it wrongful and instituted a trade dispute in the Industrial Court in 1991 at Tabora against the company. At the conclusion of the proceedings the action was dismissed. He felt aggrieved by the decision but he E was appraised that no appeal could lie against it in view of the legal impediment expressed in s 27(1C) of the Industrial Court of Tanzania Act, 1968 as amended by Act No 3 of 1990. F
Section 27(1C) provides that every award and decision of the Industrial Court shall be final and not liable to be challenged, reviewed, questioned or called in question in any court save on the grounds of lack of jurisdiction in which case the matter shall be heard and determined by a full bench of the High Court. In his pleadings the plaintiff has averred that this section is at odds with the provision of art 13(6)(a) of the Constitution. G
Article 13(6) provides that `every person shall, when his/her rights and obligations are being determined, be entitled to a fair hearing by the court of law or other body concerned and be guaranteed the right of appeal or another legal remedy (whatever that may be) against the decisions of courts of law and other bodies H which decide on his rights or interests founded on statutory provisions'. It may be observed that this constitutional provision was already in place and force when s 27(1C) was enacted.
As indicated, the plaintiff has come to this court to question the I

A legality of the section, to urge upon us that the provision purports to take away the right conferred on him by art 13(6)(a), and to seek a declaration that the section, to the extent that it is inconsistent with the constitutional provision, is unconstitutional and therefore null and void. No doubt, as aforestated, it is really B imperative for us to handle this matter with extreme wariness, for in principle that is precisely as it must be. There is no question whatever that to declare a provision of a statute unconstitutional and invalid is invariably a matter of great moment, a fortiori where, as in the present case, the constitutional provision under reference has preceded the impugned statutory provision in point of time. C
The argument put forward by Dr Tenga on behalf of the plaintiff is that since s 27(1C) must be construed to mean what it says, namely, that a court or any other authority is precluded from inquiring into the legality and propriety of any decision of the Industrial Court save for matters of lack of jurisdiction, therefore, factual D errors or other errors in law fallen into by the Industrial Court are not liable to be questioned or challenged before any such forum. Mr Salula for the respondents meets this argument by contending that inasmuch as s 27(1C) allows a person to go to the High Court it cannot be said to contravene art 13(6)(a) and we cannot help wondering whether this is not an evasive answer. E

The construction put on s 27(1C) by Dr Tenga is in our view the true and reasonable one. This provision pares away the right guaranteed by the Article, and to all intents and purposes such is exactly the intendment. Mr Salula has not F provided any effective rejoinder, and it seems to us that he has not addressed himself to the real issue. The complaint is not that a person is not allowed to go to the High Court at all. It is that his constitutional right to go there on appeal or otherwise is improperly abridged by the statutory provision.

G The argument advanced on behalf of the plaintiff is also that the limitations which are inherent in s 27(1C) have no plausible connection with the provisos prescribed under article 30(2), and reference is made to the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Kukutia Ole Pumbun v The Attorney-General, (1), in which two conditions were attached to the applicability of article 30(2) where a provision of a H law happens to be inconsistent with any of the constitutional provisions pertaining to the basic human rights, freedoms and duties. This is a powerful argument.

Mr Salula however submits that the decision in Ole Pumbun's case does not avail the plaintiff, because, according to him, s 6 of the Government Proceedings Act of 1967 with which the court was I dealing in that case was held to be unconstitutional on the ground that it A completely precluded access to the court, unlike s 27(1C) of the Industrial Court of Tanzania Act. We are bound to disagree. So far as we can discern that was strictly not the ratio decidendi of that decision, at any rate the only one. And we think it is quite explicit that the rules laid down by the Court of Appeal in that B judgment are eminently capable and were meant to be of wider or general application. Quite frankly we have to acknowledge having failed to ascertain in what way s 27(1C) can ever tend to the overriding public and societal interests set out under article 30(2), how, in other words, the limitations imposed under that section can be reasonably linked to any of the interests prescribed under the article. We wholly agree and we hold, therefore, that Ole Pumbun's case avails the C plaintiff and that none of the provisions of article 30(2) can be called into play.

Mr Salula further submits that s 27(1C) cannot be impugned because, in the first D place, article 13(6)(a) gives a person aggrieved the right to another legal remedy besides an appeal. It is quite true that the article guarantees two alternative remedies, ie, the right of appeal or the right to have recourse to another legal redress. But we should hasten to point out that this circumstances does not E effectively meet the objection taken by the plaintiff in the instant case, namely, that the section goes a long way to negate each of those two alternative rights. As Dr Tenga says, decisions of the Industrial Court which do not comport with the weight of evidence, or which are given per incuriam or in deliberate disregard to the relevant authorities, are by virtue of the section not impugnable. Yet these are the F things which would probably give rise to the majority of the complaints against the decisions of the Court.

Secondly, it is the opinion of Mr Salula that the Industrial Court is not a one-tier organ, and that this renders wrong the idea that challenging the decisions of the court only on grounds of lack of jurisdiction is encroaching upon a person's right G given under article 13(6)(a). It is also his observation that the proceedings of the court are held by a judge of the High Court and assisted by two assessors, that an elaborate procedure obtains; that appearance by advocate is allowed; and that in this case the proceedings were concluded by a lucid judgment. Upon all this Mr H Salula makes the argument, a startling argument, that there is no possibility of any abuse of power taking place in the court.
Beyond doubt, some of those assertions cannot stand the test of logic, and some are neither here nor there. Mr Salula has not shown I
MAPIGANO J
A how the Industrial Court is not a one-tier organ. For ourselves, we think there is no way around the fact that the Industrial Court has all the basic hallmarks of a court of first instance when exercising that particular jurisdiction, and that it is B essentially a one-tier organ. We also think it is idle to deny that s 27(1C) purports to whittle down the right given under art 13(6)(a). And we consider circumstances like the constitution of the court, the elaborateness of its procedure, the permissible legal representation and the elegance or lucidity of the court's judgments to be completely irrelevant to what is at issue in this case.
C We have ultimately taken the view that s 27(1C) does not abide by art 13(6)(a). The section has the effect of curtailing the basic right guaranteed under the Article, as demonstrated supra, and the language of the section precludes any other conclusion. As already mentioned, we also take the view that the section falls outside the purview of article 30(2). We so hold. D
This action therefore succeeds. We are amply satisfied that s 27(1C) of the Industrial Court of Tanzania Act, 1967 is unconstitutional and invalid to the extent that it deprives a person of his basic right of appeal or another legal remedy except on grounds of lack of jurisdiction. E
We so declare.

Appeal - Application to lodge memorandum of appeal out of time - Requirements. C
-Headnote
The applicant applied for leave to lodge a memorandum of appeal out of time. Counsel for the fourth respondent noted preliminary objections to the application, contending that (1) the application had not been initiated by a Notice of Motion as required by Rule 45 of the Court of Appeal Rules, but by a document titled D `Application for Leave to Appeal Out Of Time'; (2) the affidavit in support of the application was defective in that the deponent had not stated his name and religion before making the statement but had merely affirmed at the end thereof that what E he had stated above was true to the best of his knowledge and belief; and (3) that the deponent had failed to disclose the source of his information when he said that he ``was made to believe that the last day for lodging the appeal was 7 October 1996''.
Held:
(i) That non-compliance with the Rule was not fatal: the irregularity F was not one of substance but was one which could be cured by the Court granting an amendment;
(ii) That non-compliance with the practice of making the oath or affirmation at the commencement of an affdavit was not fatal: the deviation was not an irregularity which went to the substance; G
(iii) That it was clear that if the deponent's affidavit was read properly it did not give the impression that he had been led to believe by someone else that the last day for lodging the appeal was 7 October 1996. His mistaken impression was formed after his own independent study and understanding of the court proceedings. There was accordingly no ground for requiring him to disclose the source of his belief. Muccadam and Mulamula, for the fourth respondent.
Kisanga, JA:
B This is a preliminary objection taken to an application for leave to lodge the memorandum of appeal out of time. The objection is raised by Mr Muccadam and Mr Mulamula, learned advocates, who represent the fourth respondent, while the applicant whose application is being objected to is advocated for by Dr Tenga and Mr Ussi Khamis Haji. C
The preliminary objection alleges that the application is basically defective. To start with, the allegation says, the application was not initiated by a Notice of Motion as is required by Rule 45 of the Court of Appeal Rules. Instead it was commenced by a document merely titled

`Application for Leave to Appeal Out of Time'. Dr Tenga D conceded that there was no strict compliance with Rule 45 of the Court of Appeal Rules, but rightly contended that this non-compliance was not fatal. For, the substance of the application is quite clear. The irregularity is not one of substance; it is one which is curable by the court granting an application for an appropriate amendment. That ground of objection, therefore, fails. E

The next assertion was that the affidavit in support of the application was defective. The affidavit did not take the usual format whereby the deponent, inter alia, states his name and religion, and makes oath or affirmation before making the statement. Instead the deponent made the affirmation at the end of his statement to the following effect: F

`I, ... do hereby affirm that what is stated above is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.' G

Dr Tenga rightly pointed out that there is no provision under the Court of Appeal Rules requiring a deponent to make the oath or affirmation at the beginning instead of at the end of his deposition. He conceded that the usual practice in the Court of H Appeal is for a deponent to make oath or affirmation before making the statement, but submitted that non-compliance with this practice was not fatal. I entirely agree. For, the whole purpose of requiring a deponent of an affidavit to make oath or affirmation is to make such a deponent commit himself to tell the truth. While the practice in this court has been to require the deponent to undertake such commitment before I making his statement, I am strongly of the view that the deviation by the deponent A in this case is only an irregularity which did not go to the substance. Because the commitment to be truthful remains the same whether it is made before or after making the statement. The position would have been different, however, if no such commitment was undertaken at all in which case the deposition would not constitute an affidavit. The objection on this ground, therefore, also fails. B

Finally objection was taken that the deponent failed to disclose his source of information when in paragraph 6 of the affidavit he said, inter alia, that: C

`... I was made to believe that the last day for lodging the appeal was 7th October, 1996.'

Mr Muccadam insisted that the deponent was duty bound to disclose the person who made him believe that the last day for lodging the appeal was 7 October 1996, D and that failure to do so entitled this court to strike out the application. In support of this submission counsel cited the case of Msoza Transport Ltd v Nzareki Investment Co Ltd (1).

Mr Muccadam's submission on this point has its roots in para 6 of the affidavit but E it seems necessary to consider that paragraph together with para 7. The two paragraphs allege:

`6. THAT due to my wrong calculation of the time for the lodging of the memorandum of appeal as provided by Rule 83 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979 I was made to believe that the last day for lodging the appeal was 7th October, 1996. F

7. THAT this mistake was done by me alone and is not in any way connected with the Applicant and that I beg that it should be treated as human error.' G

If the two paragraphs are read together, they do not, in my view, give the impression that the deponent was made to believe by someone else that the last day for lodging the appeal was 7 October 1996. To my mind they give the impression that the mistake in attributable to the deponent alone who H misconstrued or misinterpreted the court proceedings and came to the erroneous view as to the last day for lodging the appeal. In other words the deponent's belief that the last day for lodging the memorandum of appeal was 7 October 1996 was formed following his own study and understanding of the court proceedings which were duly supplied to him by the court registry. Nobody could have given him any relevant information on this I

A point other than that as was contained in the court proceedings. If this view is correct, then there could be no ground for requiring the deponent to disclose the source of his belief which is based on his own study and understanding of the documents which, it has not been disputed, were duly supplied to him by the court registry.

B Dr Tenga went on to submit that even if it is found in Mr Muccadam's favour that the deponent did fail to disclose the source of his belief, that alone would not justify the striking out of the application. In his view it would be open to this court to order an amendment of the affidavit or the filing of a supplementary affidavit to rectify the error, and in this connection he referred me to the decision of this court C in the case of George Shambwe v Attorney-General and Another (2). I must state at once that Shambwe's case has no relevance to the present case in as much as it is concerned with what the High Court should have done in a matter which was before it, and in which the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code D applied. The matter before me is an application for leave to lodge the memorandum of appeal out of time. Such a matter was never, and could not be, before the High Court. It is a matter which is governed not by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code but by the Appellate Jurisdiction Act and the Court of Appeal E Rules. In other words what was said in Shambwe's case where the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code applied can have no relevance whatsoever to the present case which is governed by a different set of rules, and where the provisions of that Code do not apply.

F Having said that, and in the light of the view I have taken of the matter, I desire not to dwell any more on this point. That is to say, after holding that there was no basis for requiring the deponent to disclose the source of his belief as to the last date for lodging the memorandum of appeal, it is now not necessary for me to rule on Dr Tenga's submission that it is open to me to allow an amendment to the G affidavit or the filing of a supplementary affidavit to rectify the error.

In the final analysis, therefore, the preliminary objection fails and it is dismissed with costs. I grant Dr Tenga's application for the amendment of the application so H as to include in the title the words Notice of Motion. Unless a reference from this ruling to the full court is contemplated, I direct that the application now proceeds to hearing. I

Msoffe J:
In the Primary Court at Chipanga, Dodoma, the appellant sued the respondent in a claim of seven head of cattle being compensation for adultery. The said trial court was satisfied that there was a valid and subsisting marriage between the appellant and PW2 Veronica Chakachaka and that the respondent did actually commit H adultery as evidenced in the fact that he has since been living with PW2 as her husband. In the circumstances, the said court was of the view that since adultery was proved and established there was no way the respondent could escape civil liability. It however held that I

MSOFFE J

A the claim of seven head of cattle was on the high side; and so made an award of only three head of cattle for compensation of the adultery in issue.

Dissatisfied, the respondent appealed to the District Court at Dodoma where he won. The District Court made a number of findings and conclusions, but in brief it B was of the view that there was no valid marriage between the appellant and PW2; and therefore that the claim would have no legal basis.

This is an appeal against the decision of the District Court. Mr Nyangarika learned advocate appeared for the appellant. Mr Njulumi learned advocate appeared and resisted the appeal on behalf of the respondent. Both counsel have filed written C submissions to which the court is grateful for their useful assistance.

There is no dispute that the case in the two respective lower courts was essentially decided on the basis of credibility of witnesses. As this court has held D on more than one occasion, credibility is a question of fact and an appeal court should not disturb a finding of fact based on credibility unless it is manifestly unreasonable -- Lalata Msangawe v Henry Mwamlima (1) and Wilson Thomas v R (2). The issue is whether there was any material basis upon which the appellate E District Court could fault the decision of the trial Primary Court which was based on the credibility of witnesses as aforesaid.

In the petition of appeal a total number of five grounds have been raised and F canvassed in submissions made by counsel. However, all of them basically allege that the decision of the District Court was against the weight of the available evidence. In the premise, I propose to deal with the appeal generally in determining whether or not there is any valid complain in the appeal.

In my judgment, the appeal has merit. A look at the case in its entirety will show G that there is no serious dispute that there is a marriage contracted under customary rites between the appellant and PW2. All the witnesses (including the respondent) except perhaps PW4 William Chakachaka were affirmative of this fact. If so, the view held by the District court that there was no evidence establishing that the said marriage existed would appear to me to be unsupported by the evidence on record. H

Perhaps one comment which, I hope, may be of benefit to the learned Resident Magistrate who sat in the aforesaid first appeal. Somewhere in the judgment he appeared to be saying that payment of dowry would be a necessary prerequisite to validate a marriage. A look at the provisions of ss 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17 of The Law of I

Marriage Act No 5 of 1971 will show that this view is not correct as it is nowhere A mentioned therein that payment of dowry should be necessary in a valid marriage. Non-payment of dowry would not invalidate an otherwise valid marriage.

Much was said by learned counsel about whether or not there would be a rebuttable presumption of marriage under s 160 of The Law of Marriage Act 5 of B 1971 in the circumstances of the case. I need not waste much time on this point which apparently was not canvassed by anybody in the two respective lower courts. It will therefore be unfair to deal with it at this stage. However, if one may be excused to say in passing, the issue shall not arise at all. One says so because it C was not an issue before the two lower courts as aforesaid; and in any case the issue would not arise in the midst of evidence by the relevant witnesses that a marriage actually existed between the appellant and PW2. If so, why should there then be talk or mention about a presumption. D

The appeal is allowed with costs here and below. The decision of the District Court is set aside and that of the trial Primary Court is restored. E

Kisanga JA: G

There is before us an appeal against the ruling of the High Court (Chipeta, J) on a matter pertaining to an election petition. When the appeal was called on for hearing Mr Mwale, learned counsel for the first respondent, took a preliminary objection in terms of Rule 100 of the Court of Appeal Rules. H

The objection was based on three grounds. The first ground in effect alleges that the notice of appeal does not comply with the requirements of Rule 76(3) of the Court of Appeal Rules and the format made under that Rule as set out in Form D of the First Schedule to the Court of Appeal Rules. The relevant portion of Rule 76(3) provides that: I

`(3) Every notice of appeal shall state whether it is intended to appeal against the whole or A part only of the decision ...'

The appellant's notice of appeal had simply stated that the intended appeal was against the particular ruling of the High Court. Mr Mwale vigorously contended that failure to state whether the appeal was against the whole or part only of that ruling B was necessarily fatal; and in this connection he drew our attention to the use, in the provision, of the word `shall' which, according to him, made the requirement mandatory.

The appellant is represented by Mr B Makani and Mr Mutaitina, learned advocates. C In response to Mr Mwale's contention, Mr Makani in effect conceded that there was no strict compliance with the provisions of Rule 76(3) but submitted that such non-compliance was not fatal.

We entirely agree with Mr Makani's submission. We think that the use of the word D `shall' does not in every case make the provision mandatory. Whether the use of that word has such effect will depend on the circumstances of each case. For our part we think that the word `shall' in Rule 76(3) does not have the effect of making that provision mandatory, nor do we think that Parliament can have intended so. E

Failure by a party to state whether the intended appeal is against the whole or part only of the decision does not in any way prejudice the opposite side. Mr Mwale argued that he might have been prejudiced or ill-effected by having to examine the whole ruling while the appeal was in fact against part only of the ruling, in which F case he wasted or might have wasted his valuable time and energy doing unnecessary work. With due respect to counsel, however, we find not much force in this argument. Our understanding is that Mr Mwale started preparing for the appeal seriously only after receiving the record of appeal including the G memorandum of appeal. Upon studying the grounds of appeal he was then able to know the extent of the appeal, in which case if he found that the appeal was against part only of the ruling he would limit himself accordingly and there was no need to prepare himself in respect of the whole ruling. For these reasons we think H that the failure to comply strictly with the provisions of Rule 76(3) was not fatal, and if this was the only ground of objection to the appeal we would not sustain the objection, although of course we stress the importance of complying with the Rules. That ground, therefore fails.

Objection was also taken that the record of appeal did not con- I

KISANGA JA

A tain the certificate of the Registrar as to the exact time that was necessary for the preparation and delivery of the record to the appellant. Again there is little substance in this ground and, indeed, Mr Mwale argued it only half-heartedly. For, the record at p 82 contains a certificate duly issued by the District Registrar and showing, inter alia, that on 2 May 1996 he received from the appellant's counsel a B request for the supply to him of the record of proceedings which was duly supplied on 6 September 1996, and that the period up to this latter date should be excluded in computing the time within which to lodge the appeal. We could find nothing wrong with that. The purpose of the Registrar's certificate is to ensure that C an appellant lodges the record of appeal within sixty days of filing his notice of appeal or within sixty days of the supply to him of the record of proceedings. The record of appeal was lodged in court on 4 November 1996. This was within sixty days from 6 September 1996 which, according to the District Registrar, was the D date the period of limitation started to run against the appellant. Therefore, this ground of objection also fails.

The third and last ground of objection was that the appeal is incompetent because the record of appeal does not contain the drawn or extracted order in appeal, and E in support of this ground Mr Mwale cited numerous authorities of this Court and of its predecessor, the Court of Appeal for East Africa.

In response to this submission Mr Makani concede the non-compliance with Rule F 89(1)(h) of the Court of Appeal Rules which requires the record of appeal to include the extracted order but strenuously contended that this did not render the appeal incompetent. In his view such non-compliance was merely a procedural or administrative irregularity which renders the appeal incomplete and which could be rectified by making an appropriate order for the filing of a supplementary record. G

The law as it now stands is that failure to extract the decree or order in terms of Rule 89(1)(h) and (2)(v) of the Court of Appeal Rules renders the appeal incompetent, see for instance The Commissioner of Transport v The Attorney-General of Uganda and Another (1) and Juma Mtale v K G Karmali (2). H The finding that an appeal is incompetent has constantly resulted in striking out such appeal, see for instance The National Bank of Commerce v Methusela Magongo

(3). There is no room for Mr Makani's view that non-extraction of the decree or order is a mere procedural or administrative irregularity. In Arusha International Conference Centre v Damas Augustine I
KISANGA JA
Ndemasi Kavishe (4) it was held that such non-compliance was fundamental and A went to the root of the matter. Likewise Mr Makani's effort to urge us to grant an order to lodge a supplementary record of appeal or to invoke Rule 3 and direct a departure from the rules cannot bear any fruit. This court adequately considered such submissions in the Arusha International Conference Centre case cited above and found them untenable. B
Mr Makani cited the recent decision of this Court in the case of Leonsi Silawyo Ngalai v Justine A Salakana and Another (5). There the Court had occasion to say this: C

`We need however to point out for future guidance, that insufficiency or incompleteness of the record of appeal is not a ground for incompetency of an appeal, because such a defect is rectifiable by an appellant at any stage of the proceedings as provided under sub-rule 3 of Rule 92 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979 ...' D

Counsel took the view that consistent with this decision non-extraction of the decree or order only constituted an insufficiency or incompleteness which did not make the appeal incompetent. With great respect, however, we do not agree. First, it is not apparent from the E judgment cited what kind of insufficiency or incompleteness the court was considering or was having in mind because the allegation of insufficiency or incompleteness had been withdrawn by the party raising it before the Court heard arguments on it. However, we are of the view that where by reason of non-extraction of the decree or order, as in this case, the appeal is rendered F incompetent, the issue of insufficiency or incompleteness does not really arise. The position that arises is simply one of non-existence of the appeal. Because insufficiency or incompleteness connotes something which is in existence and which can be improved upon, say by adding to it. An incompetent appeal is one G which in law did not come into existence although efforts were made to try to bring it into existence. In such circumstances, therefore, one cannot properly talk of there being an insufficient or incomplete appeal which one can improve upon by filing a supplementary record, because in law no appeal came into existence in the first instance; there was only a purported appeal, if you wish. H
Mr Makani also relied on Rule 27(1) of the Elections (Election Petitions) Rules 1971 in his valiant attempt to urge us to overrule the objection. That sub-rule says that: I
KISANGA JA

A `27-(1) Save as is expressly provided to the contrary in these Rules, no petition shall be dismissed for the reason only of non-compliance with any of the provisions of those rules, or for the reason only of any other procedural irregularity unless the court is of the opinion that such non-compliance or irregularity has resulted or is likely to result into miscarriage of justice.' B
We have to state at once that the reference to this provision was obviously misconceived. The Elections Rules govern the conduct of election cases when they are before the High Court. The clear demonstration of this is the fact the word `court' which is used in the sub-rule is defined in Rule 2 to mean the High Court. C The preliminary objection before us is based not on any provision of the Elections Rules but on the provisions of the Court of Appeal Rules. The conduct of the present proceeding before us, therefore cannot be governed by the Elections Rules. D

Of course the Elections Rules would have been relevant if we were dealing with a matter which had been before the High Court. In that case we would seek to apply the Elections Rules in the manner that the High Court would have done. But the matter before us ie the preliminary objection, is a matter which was not and could not have been before the High Court. In the circumstances, therefore, there could E be no room at all for our invoking the Elections rules in dealing with the preliminary objection.
Mr Malaba, learned Senior State Attorney appearing for Republic, the second respondent, rightly supported the objection. F
In the result, and for the reasons set out above, the preliminary objection is sustained. The appeal is incompetent for non-extraction of the order in appeal in terms of Rule 89(1)(h) of the Court of Appeal Rules, and it is accordingly struck out with costs. It is now open to the appellant, if he so wishes, to institute the appeal afresh by making the appropriate application before the High Court. G

The second respondent brought an application for the review of an order passing D judgment on it based on the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Lubumbashi, Zaire. Summons had been served on the second respondent by DHL and in the absence of the second respondent the applicant was allowed to prove the suit ex-parte by way of affidavit. E
Held:
(i) That the parties were both foreigners and the applicant had given no good reason why it had failed to have the decree executed in Zaire. It mattered little that the applicant was owned by Tanzanians. In the absence of a proper nexus between the litigants and Tanzania, the Tanzanian court had no jurisdiction in the matter; F

(ii) Service by DHL was essentially service by post and accordingly the provisions of Rule 30 of Order 5 CPC were applicable. As no return of service or other notification had been received from Zaire, the requirements of Rule 30 had not been met. [zJDz]Judgment

Mapigano J:

OCS Company has brought an application for review of the order dated 27 September 1996 passing judgment against it on the I

MAPIGANO J

A strength of the depositions contained in Costa Shinganya's Affidavit made the day before. The application is opposed by Willow Investment, the decree-holder.

In short the matter arises in this way: Willow instituted a suit against OCS and another in the lower court of Lubumbashi in Zaire and the action succeeded. An appeal taken against that judgment to the Court of Appeal in Lubumbashi was B dismissed. The judgment was not executed in Zaire and when Willow discovered that another Zairean company which was allegedly indebted to OCS was possessed of goods in Dar es Salaam it filed a plaint in this Court seeking C judgment and decree against OCS in the sum adjudged by the Lubumbashi Court and an order that the decree be executed by attachment and sale of the said goods. Upon an application by Willow this court directed that service of summons to OCS be effected by DHL. On 26 September 1996, ie nine days later, Mr Maira D counsel for Willow informed the Court that service has already been effected, and since OCS did not show up on the day appointed in the summons, Willow was allowed to prove the suit ex-parte by way of affidavit. As mentioned above, judgment was entered on the morrow in favour of Willow in the sum adjudged and decreed by the Zairean Court on the basis of the materials set out in Costa Shinganya's affidavit. E

The memorandum of review contains four grounds. The first ground is that this court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The second ground is that the whole proceedings amounted to an abuse of the court process. The third ground is that F the case was actually decided without OCS having been served with summons or otherwise given an opportunity to be heard. And the fourth ground, which is framed as an alternative, is that the matter was res judicata.

In his address Dr Mwaikusa who advocated for OCS dealt with the first and G second grounds together, and I think properly so. He expressed the view that the jurisdiction given to this Court to adjudicate on matters arising outside Tanzania is restricted and does not extend to causes in which the parties are foreigners. He pointed out that Willow and OCS are foreigners, that the cause of action arose in H Zaire and was adjudicated upon by the Courts in Zaire, and that Willow has not given any good reason whatever why it has failed to have the decree executed in Zaire. To this counsel for Willow, Mr Shinganya, has replied that what this Court stated in a previous case between the same parties, ie Misc Civil Cause No 34 of 1996, is applicable to the present proceedings, and that the shareholders and directors of Willow are Tanzanians. I

MAPIGANO J

Dr Mwaikusa is right. The parties in this case, ie Willow and OCS, are both A foreigners, and it matters for little that Willow is owned by Tanzanians. It is true there is nothing in the evidence that was presented by Willow which shows why it has not executed the decree in Zaire. Surely the High Court of Tanzania cannot be and should not pretend to be, an international judicial tribunal to which foreign litigants, all and sundry, can resort to. As Dr Mwaikusa put it, there must be a B proper nexus between litigants and Tanzania.

In regard to the third ground of appeal Dr Mwaikusa makes the substantial point, and Mr Shinganya concedes, that service by DHL is essentially service by post, C and, accordingly, the provisions of rule 30 of Order 5 CPC are applicable. The rule provides that service by post may be deemed to have been duly effected if (a) the summons is returned by the defendant endorsed with an acknowledgment of receipt; or (b) a letter or other document is received from the defendant indicating that he received the summons; or (c) evidence is produced that a postal packet D was received by the defendant, supported by a certificate of an order of the court that the postal packet contained the summons. Dr Mwaikusa points out, correctly, that no such summons or document was received from Zaire and no such evidence was presented to this Court before the order for ex-parte proof was given. This is a powerful submission and must be accepted. The matter was E clearly governed by Rule 29 and the provision is one which ought to have been observed.

But there is nothing at all in the point raised in the fourth ground of the F memorandum. In Misc Civil Cause No 34 of 1996 Willow had sought the registration and direct enforcement of the Zairean judgment, and the application was made under Cap 8 of the Revised Laws. Objection was taken by the respondent, Gecamine, and sustained. It is true the application was dismissed for want of jurisdiction, but there is nothing that I stated in my order which is relevant G to the present matter or which can render this matter res judicata.

Mr Shinganya has raised two points in the course of his address. The first is the contention that this application is defective, on the ground that the memorandum is not accompanied by a copy of the decree. The second point is that the application is misconceived and that what OCS should have done is to bring an application for setting aside the decree, under Rule 13 of Ord 9 CPC. Dr Mwaikusa's answer, H which I am bound to accept, is that it would not have made any sense for OCS to file a copy of the decree when there was one in the court record already, and that OCS is not just aggrieved I

A by the ex-parte judgment but is also contesting the jurisdiction of this Court to entertain the suit.

This application therefore succeeds. The proceeding against OCS and the order given by this Court on 27 September 1996 are set aside as nullities, and Willow Investment is to pay the costs. B

Mapigano J: A

The applicant was the Executive Secretary of the Baraza Kuu La Waislam Wa Tanzania (Bakwata) up to February, 1996 when he was given the sack. He has described Bakwata as an incorporated religious organization whose objective is to promote the Islamic faith. B
He has deposed to having heard his removal from office being broadcast on Radio Tanzania on 25 February 1996, and to having read an article run by the Daily News of next day on the same subject. He has also deposed to the fact that his removal came to him as a complete surprise, as he had not been afforded any opportunity of being heard before the action was taken. Assuming, as I must do for the C purpose of the instant application, that these depositions are true, then his complaint that natural justice has not been done to him is well grounded. He is seeking leave to apply for an order of certiorari to quash the decision of Bakwata. D
The issue arises as to whether Bakwata is a body that is subject to judicial review. On behalf of the applicant, Mr Mkoba, learned advocate, says that Bakwata is such a body and his argument is on the following lines: Bakwata is admittedly a private body. There was a time when certiorari did not lie against private bodies. It E is no longer so. It is now accepted that such order can lie against such bodies provided the body in question discharges a public function. The determinant factor is what a body is doing and not how it was formed. F
I accept Mr Mkoba's submission as correctly stating the current state of the law. Mr Mkoba has referred this Court to the case of R v Panel on Take-Overs and Mergers (1), decided by the Court of Appeal of England, and it is unnecessary for me to say with what profound respect I regard any judgment or observation of that G Court. In that case counsel for the Panel had submitted that review jurisdiction only extends to bodies whose power is derived from legislation or the exercise of the prerogative. The argument on behalf of the applicant was that that view is too narrow, and that regard has to be had not only to the source of the body's power, but also to whether it operates as an integral part of a system which has a public H law character, and is supported by public law in that public law sanctions are applied if its edicts are ignored, and performs what might be described as public law functions. The Court of Appeal went along with the applicant's argument and held, vide the headnote, that: I
MAPIGANO J
A `In determining whether the decisions of a particular body were subject to judicial review, the court was not confined to considering the source of the body's powers and duties but could also look to their nature. Accordingly, if the duty imposed on a body, whether expressly or by implication, was a public duty and the body was exercising public law functions, the court had jurisdiction to entertain an application for judicial review of that body's decisions.' B
In the course of his judgment Donaldson MR looked back at what had been judicially decided in the last two decades or so. He observed, and I think it also bears repeating here, that: C

`The requirement that the body should have a duty to act judicially was deleted in O'Reilly v Mackman [1982] 3 All ER 680; and in Council of Civil Service Unions v Minister for the Civil Service [1984] 3 All ER 935, the supervisory jurisdiction of the Court was extended to a person exercising purely prerogative power; and in Gillick v West Norfolk and Wisbech Area Health Authority [1985] 3 All ER 402, Lord Fraser and Lord Scarman expressed the view obiter that D judicial review would extend to guidance circulars issued by a department of state without specific authority.'

He went on to observe at 577 that: E

`In all the reports it is possible to find enumerations of factors giving rise to the jurisdiction, but it is a fatal error to regard the presence of all those factors as essential or as being exclusive of other factors. Possibly the only essential elements are what can be described as a public element, which can take many forms, and the exclusion from the jurisdiction of bodies whose source of power is consensual submission to its jurisdiction.' F

And therein lies the obstacle to the present application.

It is wrong for Mr Mkoba to contend that Bakwata discharges public functions. Mr Mkoba would have this Court accept, but I cannot, that Bakwata officiates G marriage ceremonies and that it is legally charged with the function of conciliating matrimonial difficulties. Mr Mkoba seems to be unaware that the statue has been amended. Even supposing that Bakwata were still performing such functions, I would still hold that this Court is not competent to entertain the intended application. I would take the view that judicial review would be confined to the H decisions of Bakwata which pertain to such legal functions, and that there would be nothing which would sufficiently bring its decision on matters respecting the domestic relationship between it and its officers within the reach of judicial review. I

In these circumstances I feel bound to conclude that this application is A misconceived. It is accordingly refused.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga JA:

This is an application for leave to lodge the memorandum of I

KISANGA J

A appeal out of time, and it is a second time that the matter has come before me. It came before me first on 20 December 1996, but it could not proceed to hearing then because a preliminary objection was taken on the ground, inter alia, that the application was not initiated by Notice of Motion as required by Rule 45 of the Court B of Appeal Rules and Form A of the First Schedule thereto. I heard counsel for both sides and in my ruling dated 30 December 1996 I overruled the preliminary objection and granted an application by the applicant's counsel to amend the application in the title to include the words `Notice of Motion'. C

A reference from my ruling was preferred to the full Court on a number of grounds, one of the grounds not raised before me being that the application was invalid because it was not signed by or on behalf of the applicant. In its ruling dated 24 January 1997 the full Court dismissed the reference; and on the question of the application not being signed by or on behalf of the applicant the Court said: D

`... In our view it is such an irregularity that could in the interest of justice be regularised by the applicant being granted leave to sign the notice.' E

When the matter came before me this time ie on 6 February 1997 it could not proceed to hearing either. Mr C Tenga for Dr Ringo Tenga, appearing for the applicant, informed me that he has not been able to file a supplementary record F incorporating the two amendments granted by the full Court and by myself as shown above. He attributed such failure to some problems in his office connected with interruptions or failure of electric power. He therefore prayed for an adjournment during which to file a supplementary record incorporating the said amendments. G

Mr Muccadam, learned counsel appearing for the fourth respondent, opposed the application, but I now realize that through inadvertence I did not ask Mr Makungu, the learned State Attorney, if he wished to be heard on this point. Mr Muccadam H opposed the application mainly on the grounds that the applicant had plenty of time to file a supplementary record but he did nothing and that the court orders granting the amendments of the record have now lapsed.

Admittedly when the full Court and myself granted the applicant's counsel leave to amend the application, no period of time was specified within which to effect the amendments. However, I under Rule 47(2) of the Court of Appeal Rules the amended version of the A application had to be lodged in Court within 48 hours of granting the leave. That sub-rule says:

`(2) Where the Court gives leave for the amendment of any document whether on formal or informal application, the amendment shall be made or an amended version of the B document be lodged within such time as the Court when giving leave may specify and if no time is so specified then within forty-eight hours of the giving of leave and on failure to comply with the requirement of this sub-rule, the leave so given shall cease to have effect.' C

According to the sub-rule, the amended version of this application should have been lodged within forty-eight hours of the ruling of the Full Court on 24 January 1997 which granted leave to have the application signed by or on behalf of the D applicant, and which endorsed the part of my own ruling granting leave to amend the title of the application to include the words `Notice of Motion'. The applicant, however, did not comply with the requirement, with the result that the leave which was granted to effect the two amendments has now ceased to have effect ie it has lapsed. E

With such lapse, therefore, it becomes fairly apparent that the present application for an adjournment during which to file an amended application is grossly misconceived. Because the filing of an amended application is predicted upon the leave granted by the Court to effect the amendments in question. But once such F leave of the Court has ceased to have effect, as in this case, there can no longer be any basis for filing an amended version of the application as there is nothing to authorise such amendments. In other words it would be idle for me to grant an adjournment to the applicant to file an amended application when there is no authority to effect the amendments concerned in the first place. G

As stated earlier, Mr Tenga intimated that the failure to file the amended version of the application from 24 January 1997 to 6 February 1997 ie a total of fourteen days, was caused by problems in his office connected with interruptions or failure of electric power. It is not intended to go into the merits of this allegation, but if the learned counsel thought that he has sufficient reason for failing to file the amended H application within the prescribed time, it was open to him in terms of Rules 8 and 45 of the Court of Appeal Rules to make a formal application, duly supported by affidavit, for extension of time to file an amended application. This, however, he I

KISANGA J

A did not do. Instead, as already demonstrated, he asked for adjournment to file an amended version of the application when the authority to effect the amendments in question had ceased to exist.

I am therefore satisfied that the application for adjournment is untenable and is accordingly refused with costs.

B The question that now follows is this: After refusing the application for adjournment, what happens to the application itself which is still before me? From the ruling of the full court and that of my own, it seems clear that the application is defective but that it could be cured by effecting the amendments for which leave was duly granted. In other words the application could be maintained and thus C proceed to hearing only if it is amended along the lines for which leave was duly granted. Without those amendments the Court could not proceed to hear it. Yet, for the whole period between 24 January 1997 to 6 February 1997 ie the day the D application came on for hearing, the applicant did not wish to avail himself of the opportunity afforded or granted to him by the Court to effect the appropriate amendments to the application. Nor did he apply for any extension of time during which to effect such amendments if at all he had sufficient reasons which prevented him from effecting those amendments within the prescribed time. Thus E the situation is one where the Court has invited the applicant to cure a defective application to make it possible for the application to proceed to hearing but the applicant ignores or declines to do so. To my mind it seems plain that the applicant has no intention of pursuing the application seriously. In the circumstances I am constrained to hold, as I do, that the only reasonable course open to me now is to strike out the application as being unmaintenable in law. It is ordered accordingly. F

The respondents will have their costs. However, since the application was in effect disposed of on the basis of the submissions made during the preliminary G objection, the costs recovered in respect of the preliminary objection shall suffice also to cover the application itself. That is to say, no separate costs may be recovered in respect of the application because no further submissions were made after the hearing of the preliminary objection. H

Mfalila JA:

This is an application for leave to file the appeal out of time. The record shows that the applicant lodged the notice of appeal in time and engaged an advocate in the person of Dr Lamwai to pursue his appeal. Mr Ngalo has told this Court that the G applicant then fully paid Dr Lamwai. But contrary to ethics, Dr Lamwai abandoned his client without doing anything about the appeal. Instead, he kept on doing nothing and in the end decided to tell lies to the applicant in his handwritten note of 18 May 1996. Since the applicant had already paid Dr Lamwai in full for his H services, it was not possible for him to find another lawyer in the shortest time possible.

I am satisfied that the delay in lodging this appeal was caused by Dr Lamwai's conduct of misleading the applicant that he was attending to the matter when in fact he was not. In fact he was telling lies to his client. His note on the applicant's letter to him bears this I

Lubuva JA:
In a notice of motion under Rule 9(2)(b) of the Court's rules, the applicant is moving this Court for an order that the execution of the decree of the High Court (Kaji, J) in Miscellaneous Cause No 117 of 1996 be stayed pending the C determination of the intended appeal. The applicant is represented by Mr Maira, learned Counsel. Dr Tenga, learned Counsel appeared for the first respondent while Mr Salula, learned Senior State Attorney represented the second respondent, the honourable the Attorney-General. D
In support of the application, Nicholas Nere Lekule, the applicant has filed an affidavit. In that affidavit it is stated inter alia:

1. That on 12 September 1996, an application for an interim injunction was E filed in the High Court to restrain the respondent from entering into farm No 1331 Tegeta Sala-sala. The application was dismissed on 18 October 1996.

2. That if the stay order is not granted, the intended appeal would be rendered useless and of mere academic interest. F

At the hearing of this application, Mr Maira, learned Counsel for the applicant with characteristic vigour and industry briefly set out the historical background to the case that led to this application. He stated that the matter arose from High Court Miscellaneous Cause No 117 of 1996 and not Civil Case No 117 of 1996 which G was, through typing error, indicated in the notice of motion. According to Mr Maira in that Miscellaneous Cause the applicant had applied before the High Court for a temporary order of injunction to restrain the first respondent, the Independent Power (T) Ltd from entering into the land at Farm No 1331 Tegeta Sala-sala. This H order was sought Mr Maira stated, pending the determination of a suit which was then yet to be instituted. Incidentally from the bar the Court was informed that the suit is now instituted before the High Court as Civil Case No 15 of 1997, it is pending a hearing date to be fixed. A copy of the plaint in that case was, with the concur- I

A rence of both counsel, availed to me. On 18 October 1996, the High Court dismissed the application for the temporary injunction sought. The applicant was dissatisfied with that decision, and has thus filed the notice of appeal on 22 October 1996. He is now as stated earlier seeking an order of stay pending the determination of the intended appeal. B

In essence, Mr Maira's submission was that the applicant was seeking to have the decision/ruling of the High Court of 18 October 1996 stayed pending the determination of the intended appeal for two reasons. First, he stated, the applicant who owned land on Farm No 1331 Tegeta Sala-sala was carrying out C farming activities on that land which had been acquired by the Government on whose behalf of the second respondent was appearing. As stated in para 5 of the affidavit Mr Maira vehemently submitted that if the execution of the decision/ruling of the High Court of 18 October 1996 is not stayed, the intended appeal would be rendered useless and of a mere academic interest. Elaborating further on this D point he said the execution of the decision/ruling of the High Court would result in the farm plot being turned into a power station which would, in his view destroy the stratum of the intended appeal. Responding to para 6 and 7 of the affidavit in reply E by one James R Rugemalila, a director of first respondent company, Mr Maira countered that in the intended appeal the crux of the matter for challenge on appeal is not the money but the principles involved in the acquisition of the land. It was however not denied by Mr Maira that the first respondent had deposited money ie Shs 23.4 million for compensation in respect of the suit plot. He prayed F that in order to minimize the loss on the part of the applicant, the status quo ie the position before the parties went to the court, should be maintained until the pending appeal against Kaji, J's decision/ruling is determined.

G Dr Tenga, learned counsel for the first respondent argued three substantive grounds. Firstly, it was Dr Tenga's submission that the order or ruling of the High Court of 17 October 1996 is a declaratory order which is not capable of execution. For that reason, Dr Tenga maintained, a stay order cannot be issued. At this juncture, it is to be observed that Mr Salula, learned Senior State Attorney who H appeared for the second respondent, the Attorney-General was in agreement with most of the points argued by Dr Tenga. He however added a few more points which I will deal with later. On this submission it is relevant to note that the application before the High Court was seeking an interim injunction to restrain the first respondent from entering Farm No 1331 Tegeta Sala-sala. That is, the I application which was dismissed by Mr Justice Kaji on 18 October 1996. It is that A order in respect of which in this application as shown in the notice of motion and confirmed by Mr Maira, in his submission before me a stay order is sought. In my understanding, with the dismissal of the application in High Court Miscellaneous Cause No 117 of 1996 there was nothing, so to speak to be stayed. It was merely B a declaratory order that the application had been refused and so, the position on the ground as regards Farm No 1331 Tegeta Sala-sala remained as before, much the same as if nothing effectual had taken place legally. With an order which is incapable of execution, as I hold, that would be sufficient to dispose this application. But then there are other points of substance which were raised that need to be considered as well. C

Secondly, Dr Tenga argued that the stay order even if granted would not serve any useful purpose. This is because he stated, as of now when this application is being heard, the first respondent has gone quite a long way towards the D constructing of a power station. It was Dr Tenga's further submission that with the Government acquisition of the land on farm 1331 Tegeta Sala-sala and the same land having been allocated to the first respondent, there was no legal basis upon which the first respondent could be restrained from carrying out development on the suit land. If as found by the learned Trial Judge that at the time when the suit E plot was acquired, the applicant had no house on the land except for crops which have been uprooted and the land there is under construction, I agree with Dr Tenga, that the order sought would not serve any useful purpose. That is, the F matter having been overtaken by events, the stay order sought would not achieve the purpose it was intended ie maintaining a status quo. Thirdly, it was also the submission of Dr Tenga, learned counsel that there was no ground for the grant of a stay order. The reason he advanced was that in the circumstances of the case G the applicant is not subjected to an irreparable loss which would not adequately be compensated by an award of damages. He went on in his submission that the first respondent has deposited Shs 2.3 million with the government for compensation in respect of the suit plot at the farm. In that case, Dr Tenga H submitted, as seen from the plaint filed in the substantive suit -- Civil Case No 15 of 1997, the issue being one of compensation, it is a matter which does not warrant the granting of a stay as the applicant could equally be compensated.

On the question whether or not to grant a stay, it is common ground that one of the essential conditions for granting a stay of I

LUBUVA JA

A execution pending the determination of an intended appeal is the loss or injury to which an applicant is subjected. It should not be any ordinary loss, it must be an irreparable loss which cannot adequately be compensated by way of damages. In the instant case, as found by the trial judge, the issue is a narrow one namely that B of compensation in which case, the damage or loss that the applicant has suffered is capable of being qualified and paid for by way of damages. At the hearing of this application, Mr Maira, learned counsel accepted as truthful that C money in an amount of Shs 23.4 million has been deposited by the first respondent with the government for purposes of effecting compensation to claims such as the applicants. As a matter of fact, it was brought to my attention that except for the applicant and one other person, the rest of the occupiers of the land in the area under dispute have moved out of the area after compromising on compensation. Additionally, it is also an undisputed fact that the applicant did not D have any permanent structure on the land apart from perennial crops. In that situation, I am of the settled view that the applicant does not qualify for the grant of a stay. The loss involved is not irreparable, it is capable of being adequately compensated by an award of damages.

E In view of the position I have taken of the matter, it is not necessary to go into the details of the other points which were raised by Mr Salula, learned Senior State Attorney. In passing perhaps I should touch on one thing. He had taken issue with the affidavit in support of the notice of motion. That it was defective in terms of Ord F 19 Rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code. Needless to go into the details of the matter especially on whether the affidavit was defective or otherwise. Suffice it at this stage to observe that it is common knowledge that the Civil Procedure Code is applicable before the High Court and the courts below. In this Court, the procedure is governed by the Court's Rules, 1979.

For the foregoing reasons, the application is dismissed with costs. G

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Stay - Of execution pending appeal against decision of High Court - Applicant required to give details and particulars of loss it would C suffer if stay not granted.

-Headnote

The applicant applied for a stay of execution of a decision of the High Court which had granted an application for the formal filing of an arbitration award against the applicant. The applicant contended that if the stay order were not granted the D outcome of the intended appeal would be rendered nugatory if it went in the applicant's favour. It was contended further that if the stay were not granted its business would suffer such great and irreparable loss that it would be brought to a standstill.

Held: E

(i) That the applicant had not gone beyond mere assertion that it would suffer great loss and that its business would be brought to a standstill. Unless details and particulars of the loss were specified there was no basis upon which the Court could satisfy itself that such loss would be incurred; F

(ii) The applicant had furthermore failed to indicate, beyond the vague and generalised assertion of substantial loss, that the loss would be irreparable. Any loss which the applicant was likely to suffer could be adequately compensated for by an award of damages;

(iii) The granting of a stay was a matter of discretion which was be G exercised on a common sense and balance of advantage basis. In the present case there were no good or sufficient reasons for the grant of a stay even on the basis of common sense and balance of convenience approach.

Judgment

Lubuva JA: C

This is an application for a stay of execution. It arises from the decision of 16 August 1996 by the High Court (Kaji J) in Miscellaneous Civil Cause No 34 of 1996. In a notice of motion filed under Rule 9(2)(b) of the Court's Rules, 1979 the D applicant is applying for an order that the execution of this decision be stayed pending the determination of an intended appeal the notice of which was lodged on 22 August 1996. The application is supported by an affidavit deponed by one Ahmad Salum Kilingo, the Legal Secretary to the Tanzania Cotton Marketing Board, the applicant. The undisputed historical background to the case is short and may briefly be stated as follows: During the period 1993 and 1994 the E applicant had entered into a sale agreement for the purchase of raw cotton exported by the applicant. The respondent company was the buyer. A dispute between the applicant (seller) and the respondent arose which was referred to the Liverpool Cotton Association Ltd for arbitration. An award in favour of the F respondent was confirmed by the Technical Appeal Committee of the Arbitrators -- Liverpool Cotton Association Ltd. On request by the respondent, the Arbitrators filed the award before the High Court. Hence the institution of Miscellaneous Civil Cause No 34 of 1996. The applicant raised objection against the filing of the award G before the High Court on the ground that improper procedure in filing the award was invoked.

Upon careful and detailed analysis of the submission by Mr Mkoro, learned H Counsel for the respondent in this application who was then the applicant and Mr Mselem, learned Counsel for the applicant in this matter who was then the respondent, the learned judge overruled the objection against the applicant and granted the application for the formal filing of the award by the arbitrators. The applicant is dissatisfied with that decision and so the notice of appeal has been filed. It is the applicant's prayer that I the execution of the decision/decree be stayed pending the hearing of the intended A appeal.

In the affidavit in support of this application, Ahmed Salum Kilingo on behalf of the applicant inter alia, advances the following reasons for seeking a stay order: B

1. That the ruling of the High Court raises very important points of law which call for the determination of the Court of Appeal
2. That if the award/decree is executed the applicant will suffer great injuries as the decretal amount will be very high thereby bringing the business of the applicant of buying and exporting cotton to a standstill. C

At the hearing of this application, Mr Mselem, learned Counsel submitted that if the stay order is not granted, the outcome of the intended appeal would be rendered nugatory in the event the appeal now pending succeeds in favour of the applicant. He further argued that as the decretal amount is so great, the applicant's business D would suffer such great and irreparable loss that it would be brought to a stand still. So, he prayed for the granting of the stay order.

For the respondent, Mr Mkono, learned Counsel assisted by Dr Kapinga and E Pauline Kasonda, learned Counsel appeared before me in this application. In the first place, it was submitted by Dr Kapinga that the ruling of the High Court dated 16 August 1996 was a declaratory order which was not capable of execution. For that reason, Dr Kapinga argued, there was no basis upon which a stay order could be issued. In support of this argument, he referred to a decision of mine Salim F Said Bakhresa v Ally a Ngume (1). In that case, a stay order was sought in respect of a High Court order dismissing an application to set aside an ex-parte judgment. There, it was held that the High Court order of dismissal was merely G declaratory, incapable of execution in respect of which no stay order could be issued. The reason was that, with the dismissal order by the High Court, the status quo reverted to was the decision of the District Court which was capable of execution in respect of which a stay order could be issued. In the instant case, the H situation is different because, with the filing of the award in court in terms of s 16(1) the Arbitration Ordinance, Chapter 15 of the Laws, such an award is capable of being enforced as if it were a decree of the court. With respect, Dr Kapinga's submission that the ruling of the High Court was declaratory is rejected. I

LUBUVA JA

A Countering the argument that the applicant would suffer irreparable loss if a stay order is not granted, Dr Kapinga forcefully submitted that this prayer was without merit. It was Dr Kapinga's view that a mere assertion on the part of the applicant that if the amount awarded is to be executed, the applicant will suffer such great loss that the business of the applicant would be brought to a stand still B is vague. He further stated that the affidavit deposed to by Mr Kilingo is too general, it does not give any particulars of the loss that the applicant would suffer if no stay order is issued. I have been referred to a number of decided cases in India, England and the decisions of this court on this point. For instance, he referred to the Indian case of Bansidhar v Pribhu Dayal (2) where it was stated: C

`It is not enough merely to repeat the words of the Code and state that substantial loss will result; the kind of loss must be specified, details must be given, and the conscience of the court must be satisfied that such loss will really ensue.' D

On the basis of this principle, Dr Kapinga submitted that this ground was without foundation because there was nothing to convince the Court that such loss would really ensure on the part of the applicant if the award is executed. E

At the outset it must be stated quite clearly that this being an application for stay of execution filed under Rule 9(2)(b) of the Court's rules, it is discretionary. It's grant or otherwise would depend on the individual circumstances of the case at hand. In F this case, the decision turns around the issue whether the applicant would suffer not only substantial but irreparable loss which cannot be atoned by way of damages. This aspect was, as shown above, sufficiently canvassed by the G learned counsel for both parties. On this, I am respectfully in agreement with Dr Kapinga, learned counsel that the applicant has not gone beyond mere assertion that he would suffer great loss and that his business would be brought to a stand still if the award is executed. In my considered view, this is quite clearly unsatisfactory. As it was held in the case of Bansidhar (supra) unless details and H particulars of loss are specified there is no basis upon which the Court can satisfy itself that such a loss would really be incurred by the applicant. What is more, in the instant case, the situation seems to me even worse. From the affidavit sworn by Kilingo, in essence, it is stated that if the award is executed, the business of the applicant would be brought to a stand still. As a result, the applicant's financial position would be incapa- I

citated, so it was asserted by Mr Mselem, learned Counsel. If that is the A apprehension as expressed by Mr Mselem, learned Counsel for the applicant then that leaves open the possibility that the applicant's financial position is such that the decretal amount awarded could be paid for. But what seems to worry the applicant is the resulting hardship in future business dealings. Such would in my view, be the normal hazards of any judgment-debtor. This was further B underscored in the case of Bansidhar cited supra. There, it was further observed:

`The words ``substantial'' cannot mean the ordinary loss to which every judgment-debtor is C necessarily subjected when he loses his case and is deprived of his property in consequence. That is an element which must occur in every case and since the Code expressly prohibits stay of execution as an ordinary rule it is clear the words ``substantial loss'' must mean something in addition to and different from that.' D

In this case from the deposition in the affidavit and the submission by the applicant's counsel at the hearing of this application, I am not convinced that the applicant has shown that in fact he would be subjected to substantial loss if stay order is not granted. The matter has not, with respect, been taken beyond the E stage of vague assertion that great loss would be incurred and that business would be brought to a stand still if stay order is not issued. That is not enough.

Then there is the question of whether the loss is irreparable. I have already held F that in this case, the applicant has not advanced the case beyond the vague and generalised assertion of substantial loss in the event a stay order is not granted. That is, granted that there was such a loss to be incurred by the applicant, would such a loss be adequately compensated by an award of damages? In a number of G cases, this Court has held that stay order is not normally granted unless the Court is satisfied that the applicant has suffered an irreparable loss that cannot be atoned by way of damages. See for instance: Yaledi Swai & Another v Lilian Maro and Another (3);Said Salim Bakressa v Ally A Ngume (1); Joseph K Mlay v Ahmed Mohamed (4). H

From the principle stated in these cases, it seems clear to me that having regard to the circumstances of this case the applicant can hardly be said to have or is likely to suffer substantial and irreparable loss if execution of the award is not stayed. Such loss or da- I

A mage is, in my opinion capable of being adequately compensated by way of damages.

Another factor for consideration in this matter is the question whether the applicant has shown a prima facie case with a probability of a success in the appeal pending. It is however to be noted that at this stage it is rather premature to make any meaningful assessment of the chances of success of the appeal pending B because arguments from both sides have not been heard. At any rate it is to be observed as well that even elsewhere in countries with similar jurisdiction, the current trend seems to indicate a move away from this factor in matters of granting a stay. This can be seen from England in the case of Simonite v Sheffield C County Council (5) where it was stated:

`... and that there were strong grounds for an appeal was no reason for granting a stay, for no one ought to appeal without strong grounds for doing so'. (emphasis supplied) D

And so, with this restatement of the applicable principle my view is further reinforced that I am not persuaded either by this factor that this application warrants the issuance of a stay. E

Finally, I will look into the matter in the light of the third element which is also taken into account in considering applications for a stay. That is, when the court is in doubt having taken the various factors into account, the matter is decided on the balance of convenience. As stated before, the granting of a stay is a matter of F discretion and this is clearly indicated under the provisions of Rule 9(2)(b) of the Courts Rules, 1979. It is common knowledge that principles involving the exercise of a discretion crystallize and take root from established practice. For instance, in England, in situations of this kind, the current trend and practice of the court has G moved on to involve common sense and a balance of advantage. In the case of Wincester Cigarette Machinery Ltd v Payne and Another (6) the court inter alia stated:

H `In recent cases it has been said that the practice of the court had moved on from the principle that the only ground for a stay was the reasonable probability that damages and costs paid would not be repaid if the appeal succeeded. These cases held that the approach of the court now was a matter of common sense and a balance of advantage ...

But in holding any such balance of advantage, full and proper weight had to be given by the court to the starting principle that there I had to be a good reason for depriving a plaintiff from obtaining the fruits of a judgment.' (emphasis supplied). A

I have closely examined this principle in the light of the circumstances of this case. With respect, I am unable to go along with Mr Mselem, learned Counsel that there are good or sufficient reasons for the grant of a stay even on the basis of common sense and balance of convenience approach. B

Consequently, the application is dismissed. For this application it is ordered that each party to pay his own costs. C

The Attorney-General applied for an order that a decision of the High Court be revised in order to correct illegalities and improprieties contained therein. The proceedings arose out of the institution of proceedings by Kahama Mining H Corporation Ltd (KMC) against the respondents who sought an injunction against the respondents restraining them from interfering with mining operations and also sought an eviction order against the respondents. Whilst those proceedings were still pending the respondents applied for the Attorney-General to be joined as a co-defendant in that suit as they alleged that their defence I

A raised basic constitutional rights issues. An order was granted and it was ordered that the matter be heard by the High Court composed of three judges.

Prior to the Attorney-General being joined as a party to the original case, the respondents applied as a mater of urgency for a temporary injunction to restrain KMC from evicting them before the main suit was finally determined. The application was heard and determined the same afternoon and a temporary injunction was issued against KMC and the Attorney-General. B

It was contended on behalf of the respondents that as the Attorney-General had a right of appeal in the matter it was improper for him to bring the matter by way of revision. It was contended that even though he was not a party to the original proceedings, Rule 76 permitted any person to bring an appeal. C

Held:

(i) The words `any person' in Rule 76 referred to any of the parties involved in the original suit and not any other person; D

(ii) As the court order referring the matter to the High Court expressly provided that the Court be composed of three judges, the court had no authority to hear the application for the temporary injunction; the Court had erred further in granting the order without notice to the Attorney-General;

E (iii) The Court had also erred in holding that it had authority under s 95 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966: it was trite law that the inherent powers of the Court under this section of the Code were only invoked in cases where the Court had authority or jurisdictionto hear the matter - in the present matter there was no such authority or jurisdiction because of the existence of the unvacated order.

Lubuva JA:

H In this matter the Attorney-General is seeking to move the Court for an order that the decision of the High Court in Civil Case No 12 of 1995 dated 2 August 1996 be revised in order to correct illegalities and improprieties contained therein. A notice of motion was filed in which the ground for the application was stated:

`There is no procedure for revision which is provided for under the rules and that there is an impeding order of the High Court that has I been improperly issued against the Attorney-General, who cannot appeal against it because A he is not a party to Civil Case No 12 of 1995'.

The application is supported by an affidavit deponed to by Lawrence Kaduri, learned Principal State Attorney in charge of the Attorney-General's Office Tabora Zone. B

In the affidavit the historical background of the sequence of events giving rise to this matter is set out. At this juncture it is desirable to outline the facts in brief. It is common ground that in 1995 the company by the name of Kahama Mining Corporation limited was licenced by the government of Tanzania to carry out C mining activities in Kahama District. This company instituted High Court Civil Case No 12 of 1995 at Tabora against the respondents. That is, the company was the plaintiff and the respondents in this application were the defendant in the suit. In that case the plaintiff Kahama Mining Corporation Limited had applied for a D permanent injunction to restrain the respondents from interfering with the mining operations in the area. The plaintiff company had also sought an eviction order against the respondents who, in their written statement of defence counter claimed for compensation if they were to move out of the area where they claimed to have been living for years carrying on small scale mining activities. E

While the Civil Case No 12 of 1995 was still pending, the respondents had applied for the Attorney-General to be joined as co-defendant in that suit. This was so because it was thought that the respondents' defence raised basic constitutional rights issues. At that stage, it appears from the record the court having accepted F that the case involved basic constitutional rights made the following order:

`I therefore declare that this suit involves questions on constitutional basic rights and duties and has to be dealt with under the provision of the Basic Rights and Duties Enforcement Act, G 1994. And I refer this case to such court and, according to section 10 of the Act No 33 of 1994 this matter shall be heard by the High Court composed of three High Court judges.' H

On Friday afternoon, 2 August 1996, the respondents filed as a matter of urgency an application seeking a temporary injunction to restrain the Kahama Mining Company and the government from evicting them (respondents) from the area before the main suit ie High Court Civil Case No 12 of 1995 is finally determined. In their I

A application, the respondents claimed that the police had been stationed at the respondents' village ready to evict them. The Attorney-General who was yet to be joined as a party to High Court civil Case No 12 of 1995 on behalf of the government was not served with the notice of hearing of the application for B temporary injunction. So, with unprecedented speed and urgency the application was heard and determined the same afternoon. The application was granted with the result that a temporary injunction was issued against Kahama Mining Corporation Limited, the Attorney-General and their agents, servants, workers or representatives restraining them from evicting the respondents from their villages until the final determination of High Court Civil Case No 12 of 1995. C

The Attorney-General was aggrieved by the order issued by the High Court (Mchome, J). Though he was not a party to Civil Case No 12 of 1995, the order was issued against him. Hence this application to this Court. D

At the hearing of this application, Mr Maira learned counsel holding brief for Mr Kwikima on behalf of the respondents raised a preliminary objection. He argued that as the Attorney-General had a right of appeal in this matter, it was not proper for him to bring up the matter by way of revision. It was his submission that in E terms of s 4 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 as amended by Act No 17 of 1993 which involved the Court with revisional jurisdiction, a party who has the right of appeal cannot come to this Court by way of revision. In this case, he said, the Attorney-General should have lodged an appeal. Prompted by the Court as to how F this could be done since the Attorney-General was not a party in the original case, Mr Maira firmly maintained that Rule 76 of the Court's Rules, 1979 allows any person who desires to appeal to the court to do so. In his view, any person even if he is not a party to the original case, if in one way or the other he is affected he can lodge an appeal. He insisted that words should be given their natural meaning as they appear in the rules unless such interpretation results into G absurdity. He referred us to the decision of this Court in Transport Equipment Ltd v DP Valambhia (1).

H Responding to the preliminary objection, Mrs Macha, learned Senior State Attorney for the Attorney-General ardently submitted that the Attorney-General not being a party to Civil Case No 12 of 1995 could not lodge an appeal. She said it would lead to an absurdity if the law allowed any person not involved in the original case to lodge an appeal. In that way, she stressed, a flood gate of appeals from the world at large would be opened. I

LUBUVA JA

At the end of the submissions by the learned counsel for both the applicant and the A respondents or the preliminary objection, we reserved our ruling on the issue until at the end of hearing arguments on the whole matter before us. That is, depending on the direction our ruling would take on the objection, such would be embodied in the body of our decision in the application. We propose to deal first with the preliminary objection in this ruling. B

With respect, we agree with Mrs Macha's submission on this point. While it is true that Rule 76 of the Court's Rules, 1979 provides for any person to appeal to this Court, it defies logic and common sense that the provision was meant to allow any C person at large even if he is not a party to the original case to take up an appeal to this Court as urged by Mr Maira. In our considered opinion, the words `any person' should be interpreted to mean any one of those involved in the original case and not otherwise. An interpretation along the lines canvassed by Mr Maira, D learned counsel would lead to an absurdity which was not intended in enacting the rules. It is our view that in Transport Equipment Ltd v DP Valambhia (supra) to which we were referred is inapplicable to the instant case. In that case, unlike the instant case, the parties involved in the reference were the same parties who were involved in Civil Applications Nos 13 and 29 of 1991 before a single Judge of this E Court. So, the question of involving a person who was not a party to the original case did not arise. In the result, the preliminary objection is overruled.

We will next deal with the merits of the case. In the first place, the issue is whether F the learned judge had authority to deal with the application. Mrs Macha, learned Senior State Attorney categorically submitted that the learned judge had no such authority. She pointed out that as already indicated, at some stage when an application was made to join the Attorney-General as a party to the suit in High Court Civil Case No 12 of 1995, there was an express order of the court to the G effect that the matter including applications, would be heard by three judges of the High Court. Unless this order as vacated, Mrs Macha countered, the learned judge had no authority to deal with the case alone as he did. On the other hand, Mr H Maira, learned counsel boldly argued that the learned judge cannot be faulted because the granting of reliefs by way of a temporary injunction is a matter of discretion which, he said was judicially exercised. As the police were already at the site in the respondents' villages, Mr Maira went on, speed was necessary in order to prevent a miscarriage of justice, namely, the eviction of I

A the respondents. Finally, it was Mr Maira's submission that the circumstances of the case were such as to justify the application of the court's inherent powers under s 95 of the Civil Procedure Code.

With the court order extracted above still on record unvacated, it is clear to us that the learned judge had divested himself of the authority to deal with the case singly. B According to the order, because the suit involved constitutional basic rights, the case was to be heard by a panel of three judges of the High Court. This is in accordance with the provisions of s 10 of Act 33 of 1994. Apparently, aware of this order, the learned judge advances two reasons why he still dealt with the matter. First, as he described it, the affair cries haste and speed must answer it. That is, C as the police were already stationed at the villages of the respondents, anything could happen if the application was not heard that afternoon ie, eviction. Secondly, that the panel of three judges to hear the application could not be convened at that time because his other two colleagues were absent from the station and he D himself was due to leave the following day. With due respect to Mr Maira, learned counsel we do not accept that the learned judge cannot be faulted for what he did in this matter because he exercised the discretion judicially in the matter which called for speedy action in order to prevent a miscarriage of justice. It is E elementary that so long as the court order divesting the court of the authority to deal with the case was still in force any further dealing with the case outside the terms of the order was incompetent. It cannot be justified on grounds of F expediency or an apprehension of a miscarriage of justice. So long as the learned judge had the authority to deal with the case sitting as a single judge, it is inconceivable that the learned judge still dealt with the case fully aware of the existence of the court order. This is evident from the reasons advanced. In the circumstances, we are convinced that the learned judge was clearly wrong in assuming authority to deal with the application when the court order was still in force. G

It defeats us why the learned judge overlooked to invoke the otherwise day to day common procedure in situations of this kind that is familiar to judicial officers. Perhaps we venture to think, it was because of the peculiar and unusual manner in which the matter was handled. If the situation warranted to be dealt with so H urgently, the learned judge could either seek assistance from the Principal Judge in Dar es Salaam or refer the parties to Dar es Salaam where the matter could be attended to by a panel of three judges. This, he did not do but instead, he proceeded to deal with the matter in I complete disregard of the order. This was as pointed out patently wrong on the A part of the learned Trial Judge.

There is another ground of complaint in this application raised by the Attorney-General. That the matter was heard ex-parte and that he was not served with the notice of hearing of the application. According to Mrs Macha, para 3 of the affidavit in support of the application which was not countered, Mr Kaduri, the B Principal State Attorney in charge of the Attorney-General's Office, Tabora Zone deponed that he was not served with the notice of hearing the application. He was however served with a copy of the ruling of the application by Hon Mr Justice Mchome personally on Saturday evening, the day after the hearing of the application. She submitted that having regard to the fact that the C Attorney-General's Office in Tabora is within easy reach from the court building in fairness to both parties, the Attorney-General should have been served with the notice of hearing. On this, Mr Maira's submission was that the learned judge properly invoked the court's inherent powers under s 95 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. D

From the record, it is shown that the application was filed late in the afternoon, Friday 2 August 1996. Because of the circumstances of the case the learned judge decided to hear the matter ex-parte. And what are the circumstances. As shown on record, it was feared that the applicants, the villagers, would be evicted E any time by the police who were already stationed at the applicant's villages. The evidence in support of this apprehension was based on the reports from the news papers and the radio broadcast. We will advert to this aspect later. At this stage, F we pose to ask ourselves whether the learned judge's decision to proceed to hear the application ex-parte without notifying the Attorney-General was justified. As shown the urgency of the matter was that there was an apprehension that the government by use of the police was threatening to evict the respondents from their villages. In that case, the government represented by the Attorney-General G was a necessary party to be heard in the application for a temporary injunction the subject matter of the application. Granted that the matter was of extreme urgency, still it is our view that the Attorney-General's Office in Tabora could have been H served with the notice of hearing without causing delay. This is so, having regard to the fact that the High Court building in Tabora is within easy reach from the Attorney-General's Office there. The notice could be effected physically by court process server or by telephone, failure to which, the matter could well be heard the next day, when, as shown in the affidavit the learned judge I

A personally handed over a copy of the ruling to the Principal State Attorney. Unusual though it was, if the learned judge obliged to take a copy of the ruling in person on Saturday evening to the Principal State Attorney, we see no reason why he did not make a similar effort to notify the Principal State Attorney by telephone B or by physical contact as he did the next day when he delivered a copy of the ruling. This would accord with the principles of natural justice which the learned judge commendably and underscores in the course of his ruling when he states:

C `Natural justice requires that even a poor peasant at least be consulted before a decision affecting his life is made. In court he deserves at least to be heard.'

From this, it appears to us that this cardinal principle of justice was, with respect to the learned judge, applied in the reverse in so far as the Attorney-General was D concerned. This, we are convinced, was not fair and was done in such circumstances that raise doubts and suspicion as to the reasons behind it.

In the ruling, the learned judge sets quite correctly the legal position regarding the issuances of a temporary injunction against the government. He states that the E application could not be granted under Order 37 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966 because the government was not a party yet to Civil Case No 12 of 1995. The learned judge also considered the Government Proceedings Act 1967 as F amended by Act No 30 of 1994 which provides for a period of three months before the government can be made a party to proceedings. So, he took the view that irreparable damage would be caused to the respondents (then applicants) if the court were to wait for three months before issuing the injunction order. The application was thus granted by invoking the inherent powers of the court under s 95 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. We must at once point out that this was a G misapplication of this section. The reason is not far to seek. It is trite knowledge that the inherent powers of the court provided under this section of the Civil Procedure Code are invoked in situations where the court has authority or H jurisdiction to deal with the matter and there is no specific provision of the law in place. Where as in this case the court has no jurisdiction or authority and there are express provisions of the law as was the case here, which previsions were elaborately set out by the learned judge, it was an error on the part of the learned judge to invoke such powers. Mr Maira's submission on this point is, with respect, rejected. I

As stated before, the learned judge treated this matter with extreme urgency and A haste. It was filed late on Friday afternoon, 2 August 1996 and was finally determined the same day. The learned judge did so because the respondents in this application who were then the applicants were in danger of being evicted by use of the police. In support of this view, the learned judge stated: B

`There is probable truth in this as this morning I was reading two news papers, Mtanzania and the Guardian, confirming that the government has decided to evict the applicant from the area. Radio Tanzania, which I also listen to has been broadcasting this over the last two days or so.' C

It hardly needs to be overemphasized that it is highly improper on the part of the court to rely on or to take into account radio and newspaper reports as the basis of deciding the case. Time and again this Court has expressed the correct position in D law for the courts in administering justice. The Courts should base their decisions on nothing else other than the evidence adduced in court and the applicable law in the circumstances of the case. In the instant case it is inexplicable why the learned judge fell into the serious error of taking into account press and radio reports as the basis of deciding the case. This was, in our view, highly improper. We urge the courts to refrain from such practices in future. E

Consequently, in the circumstances of the case, the application succeeds and we agree to assume our revisional jurisdiction and exercising such revisional powers we set aside the order made by the High court for the reasons set out in this ruling. The matter is left open for the parties to pursue in terms of the law if they so wish. F It is so ordered.

Finally, though not part of the decision in this matter, we feel it appropriate to make G the following observation. From the proceedings in this case it is apparent that the errors and the unsatisfactory features are, in our considered opinion, glaringly of such a nature that with some diligence and a lesser sense of overzealousness, recurrence could be avoided. It is earnestly trusted that the relevant authorities in the judiciary would take the necessary appropriate steps in drawing the attention of H the relevant judicial officers to be extra careful in order to avoid a recurrence of such errors. This is particularly so because if the unfortunate impression is created that the judicial officers themselves do not respect the law, it would be difficult for other people, including the government, to respect the law. E The appellant appealed against a judgment of the High Court which had upheld a claim by the respondent against it relating to the sale of a godown. The godown was among the properties listed in the debenture which had been issued by the appellant to secure an overdraft facility granted by the respondent to the appellant. When the appellant failed to pay in time the respondent sold the godown by public auction. Subsequent to that sale the appellant sold the godown to the second appellant who alleged that it was the bona fide purchaser for value of the property. F

The judge at the trial held that the sale and transfer of the godown to the second appellant was illegal because it was contrary to the terms of the debenture and held that the second defendant was not a bona fide purchaser as the sale had been tainted by fraud. On appeal:

Held: G

(i) That the trial court had erred in describing the instrument as a debenture contract or agreement: there was no such thing as a debenture contract or agreement in law. A debenture was simply a document issued by a company as evidence of its indebtedness which was normally secured by a charge over its property and could only be made and issued by one side, namely the borrowing company; H

(ii) Sections 79 and 80 of the Companies Ordinance Cap 212 were quite clear as to the registration of charges and the consequences of non-registration, namely that if the charge was not registered within 42 days it became void and the loan so secured became immediately payable. In the present case the debenture had not been so registered and it was accordingly void; I

(iii) Even if the debenture had been properly registered and valid at the A time of the sale of the godown by the respondent it would make no difference on the validity of the sale by the respondent as under the debenture the respondent had no direct power of sale.

Mfalila JA:

This appeal is against the judgment and decree of the High Court of Tanzania at D Tabora in which judgment was entered in favour of the present respondent, the National Bank of Commerce. In the High Court, the National Bank of Commerce was the plaintiff, Shinyanga Regional Trading Company Ltd was the first defendant and Nyanza Bottling Company Ltd was the second defendant. In this appeal, the E National Bank of Commerce will be referred to as the respondent, Shinyanga Regional Trading Company Ltd as the appellant and Nyanza Bottling Company Ltd, which is not a party in this appeal will be referred to as the second defendant. The respondent's claim in the High Court was for a declaration that the sale of the F godown on Plot No 308 Block `B' in Shinyanga township, executed between the appellant and the second defendant and its subsequent transfer was illegal. The respondent alleged in its plaint that the said godown was among the properties listed in the debenture which was issued by the appellant to secure an overdraft facility amounting to Shs 50,000,000/= which it made available to the appellant. But G according to the respondent, when the appellant failed to repay the loan within the stipulated time, it decided to sell the properties listed in the debenture after giving due notice. Among these properties was the said godown. The sale of the H properties including the godown was conducted by public auction. Following this auction, the respondent averred, the appellant filed a suit in the High Court, Civil Case No 18 of 1994 seeking among other reliefs, a declaration that the sale of the godown is null and void. However, according to the respondent, before this case, I

A namely Civil Case No 18 of 1994 was determined, the appellant sold and transferred the godown to the second defendant, and according to the respondent, this sale and transfer of the godown by the appellant to the second defendant was illegal because:

B (a) By that time it had already sold the said godown at a public auction and the money so realised was deposited in the appellant's account.

(b) The said sale and transfer between the appellant and the second defendant was made without notice to it in breach of the mandatory provisions in the debenture. C

(c) The said sale and transfer was effected before finalisation of Civil Case No 18 of 1994.

(d) The said sale and transfer was effected in complete disregard of the caveat filed by the buyer of the property at the public auction which it organised. D

In its written statement of defence, the appellant denied that its sale of the godown to the second defendant was unlawful or illegal and that it did not fail to repay the loan as alleged and that in any case no due and proper notice was given by the respondent before the sale of the godown. The appellant further averred that on 17 E September 1994 it repaid the entire loan to the respondent by depositing the sum of Shs 63,542,025/25 in its account with the respondent as full settlement of the outstanding loan before the expiry of the agreed period on 30 September 1994 F and that the second defendant's credit note for Shs 63,542,025/25 is evidence of this transaction. That following the deposit of this amount in its account with the respondent, it informed the respondent on 22 September 1994 to treat this credit as settlement of the loan provided to them by the respondent. G

On its part, the second defendant denied that the sale of the godown by the appellant was illegal because it was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice land that therefore it acquired a good title. H

At the commencement of the trial, three issues were framed as follows:

1. Whether the sale and transfer of the suit premises by the first defendant to the second defendant was illegal.

2. If the sale was illegal, whether the second defendant was a bona fide purchaser for value. I

MFALILA JA

3. Whether in the circumstances, the plaintiff was entitled to sell the suit A premises and whether he had title to pass to the purchaser.

The respondent called only one witness in support of its case, its legal officer Mr Makenena Ngero. He told the trial court that they were requesting the court to B nullify the sale of the godown by the first defendant to the second defendant because this sale was effected when the same godown had already been sold by the plaintiff in exercise of its powers as debenture holder under clause 3 of the debenture. This clause, he said, empowered the debenture holder to sell the C charged property in the event of a default in repaying the loan so secured. Mr Ngero told the trial court that the sale of the godown by the first defendant to the second defendant was subsequent to the sale by the plaintiff at a public auction on 22 August 1994. Mr Ngero mentioned two other matters which in his view tainted the legality of the sale transaction between the two defendants. These were first, that according to the terms of the debenture, the borrower could not sell or transfer D the property so charged without the consent of the debenture holder. Secondly, that after the godown was sold by the plaintiff through a public auction, the first defendant filed a civil suit in court praying for a declaration that the sale by the plaintiff was illegal, but before the court determined the case, the first defendant went ahead and sold the property to the second defendant. It was for this reason, E he said, that the second defendant cannot claim to be a bona fide purchaser for value because he had notice of the sale of the godown by the plaintiff.

On its part, the appellant also called one witness, its erstwhile General Manager, F Hamisi Shilla Kitonka. He told the trial court that the appellant obtained an overdraft facility from the respondent's Manonga branch in Shinyanga township amounting to Shs 50 000 000/=. This loan, he said was secured by a debenture, but he denied that the debenture had any restriction on the appellant's right to deal with G the properties so charged, saying that the appellant was free to sell any of these properties provided approval was sought and obtained from its Board of Directors. Mr Kitonka added that the loan plus interest of Shs 13 million was to be cleared by 30 September 1994, but in June the respondent recalled the overdraft and H demanded payment within 14 days. The appellant requested for extension of time in which to pay. When this request was rejected, he said, they had no alternative but to sell one of the appellant's properties to raise the required money. It was decided to I

A sell one of the godown which they sold to the second defendant for Shs 60 000 000/=. When this amount was paid on 17 September 1994, it was deposited into their account with the respondent to clear the overdraft but they were informed that the overdraft had been cleared. They did not know how the overdraft had been B cleared. In these circumstances, Mr Kitonka concluded, the sale of the godown to the second defendant by the appellant was perfectly legal.

After hearing all the evidence and the submissions, the learned Trial Judge answered the first issue in the affirmative, namely that the sale and transfer of the C suit premises by the appellant to the second defendant was illegal, because it was contrary to the terms of the debenture which prohibited the appellant from alienating any of its property without the consent of the respondent as the debenture holder except of course in the ordinary course of its business. D

With regard to issue 2, the learned judge answered it in the negative, namely, that the second defendant was set a bona fide purchaser for value without notice because the sale of the godown between the two was tainted with fraud.

Lastly, the learned Trial Judge answered the third issue in the affirmative, that the E respondent had a good title to pass. In the circumstances, the learned judge entered judgment for the plaintiff as prayed, and also declared that the sale and transfer for the godown by the appellant to the second defendant was illegal, null and void. The judge also made a consequential order that the register of titles be F rectified by deleting the registration of the second defendant as owner thereof and further that the purchaser at the public auction be registered under s 51(1) of the Land Registration Ordinance Cap 334.

This decision aggrieved Shinyanga Regional Trading Company Ltd which then G filed this appeal, the memorandum thereof consisting of six grounds of appeal.

Before dealing with the appeal on merits, there is a point which we feel is of such importance, though not part of this appeal that it should be dealt with to avoid it misleading the lower courts if not the High Court itself. H

At the commencement of the trial, counsel for the defendants raised a preliminary objection which is so pointless both in fact and law that we feel the Trial Judge should not have expended so much energy and time trying to resolve it. In his preliminary objection, counsel for the defendants urged the court to dismiss the case against the second defendant because in his view it was wrongly I joined. Counsel told the trial court that the second defendant was wrongly joined A because the suit in question in founded on two unrelated contracts. One contract was what he called a debenture contract under which the respondent advanced Shs 50 million to the appellant and that since the second defendant was not a party to this contract, it could not be sued on it. The second contract, he B submitted, involved the sale of the godown by the appellant to the second defendant to which the respondent was not a party, hence it could not sue on it. We remarked that this objection was pointless both in fact and in law, because it is clear to anyone reading the plaint that the respondent was not suing on any C contract even if there was such a thing as a debenture contract or agreement in law. The respondent was simply challenging the legality of the sale and transfer of property over which it believed it had a legal charge. This is the factual position. On the legal front, there is no such thing as a debenture contract or agreement in law for the simple reason that such contract is impossible to make. A contract, like the D tango, takes two to materialise. But a debenture, being simply a document issued by a company as evidence of its indebtedness which is normally secured by a charge over its property, can only be made and issued by one side, namely the borrowing company. Therefore, since counsel was making submissions on E points whose legal significance he did not obviously understand, the judge should have dismissed the objection in a few lines, mostly asking counsel to make himself more familiar with concepts in company law. Unfortunately, the learned judge went to far as to commend counsel for what he called his `lucid F submissions', and throughout the proceedings and in his judgment, the learned judge talks of `debenture agreement'. If left uncorrected it can create a wrong impression in the lower courts that there are such things as debenture contracts and agreements in company law. Although the words of Chitty, J in Long v Abercorris Slate & Slab Co (1) at 264 to the effect that: G

`I cannot find any precise legal definition of the term ``debenture'', it is not either in law or commerce a strictly technical term of what is called a term of art' H

sound severely pessimistic on the meaning and nature of debentures, it does not mean that the term is incapable of having a precise meaning or that its meaning is so elastic as also to be a species of contract. Of course the rights of the debenture holder are contractual rights against the borrowing company, but these contractual I

A rights relate to the agreement to lend by the lender and to borrow by the creditor. Debentures then are species of documents issued by companies evidencing their indebtedness which [the indebtedness], is normally but not necessarily secured by a charge over the company's property. Debentures which do not provide a charge are called naked debentures. In sum then debentures are a class of securities issued by companies. B

Having put the legal and factual position on the correct footing, we are now in a position to deal with the appeal before us.

C As we have already indicated, the appellant filed a six point memorandum of appeal, but in our view the controlling ground is ground No 3, in which the appellant complained that the learned judge erred on point of law and fact in holding that the debenture agreement (sic) exhibit P1 is a valid debenture for the 1993/1994 loan. D We say this is the controlling ground because the way this ground is determined will affect the outcome of the entire appeal. On this point depends the determination of the question in ground one, that is whether the sale and transfer of the godown by the appellant to the second defendant was legal. It will also determine the question in ground 5, that is whether the respondent was entitled to sell the godown and pass the title to the purchaser. E

The learned Trial Judge made the decision on the validity of the debenture while dealing with issue No 3 which was whether in the circumstances, the plaintiff was entitled to sell and pass title to the purchaser. As already indicated, the learned F judge answered this issue in the affirmative holding that the plaintiff had a good title to pass, but we feel that the first part of the issue which is whether the plaintiff was entitled to sell the premises under the terms of the debenture was not clearly dealt with. This question was a subject of detailed analysis by counsel for the appellant in his final written submissions. In his detailed submissions, learned counsel G stated that the plaintiff (present respondent) was not entitled to sell the godown to recover its loan, because firstly the respondent did not have such power under the debenture under which it purportedly acted. In law, counsel stated, the remedies H available to the debenture holder in case of default in the payment of the principal amount or interest, are to sue for the recovery of the outstanding amount; to file a petition in court for the winding up of the company; to exercise any of the powers conferred by the debenture ie appointing a receiver or if the debenture does not contain such powers, the debenture holder may apply to court for the appointment of a receiver and/or manager, or an order for sale or foreclo- I sure. Learned counsel stated further that as the debenture relied upon by the A plaintiff did not confer on it any power of sale, it was incumbent upon it to apply to the court for an order of sale. Hence, he concluded, as it had neither the power of sale under the debenture nor a court order to sell the godown by public auction, the sale effected by the respondent was illegal, therefore null and void and no title was thereby passed. B

The second reason given by learned counsel in his submission was that when the respondent proceeded to auction the godown on 20 August 1994, it had already been sold on 10 August 1994 hence there was no subject matter to sell on 20 October 1994. In these circumstances, he stated, both the auctioneer and C purchaser acted under a mistake of fact as to the existence of the subject matter so that under s 30(1) of the Law of Contract Ordinance Cap 433, the resulting contract of sale was void.

The learned Trial Judge dealt with the question on the assumption that the D respondent's loan to the appellant was still secured by the debenture and that in selling the godown to recover the loan, the respondent was properly exercising its professed power of sale. After discussing what happens at a sale by public auction, and as to when the contract is concluded, pointing out that such a transaction is subject to the doctrine of caveat emptor, the judge concluded as follows: E

purchaser to enquire whether any default has occurred. The power of sale need not be F absolute, it is enough that a reasonable man, prudently investing his money in land will have reasonable grounds upon which to believe that the lender has power to sell the property. In my view such power is presumed to exist where the sale is by public auction. The power to sell or to be specific, the lender's professed power of sale at the public auction in question is G protected by the operation of the doctrine of estoppel. There are several types of estoppel, but estoppel by reputation is more relevant here. By this doctrine, where the owner of property by words or conduct represents or permits it to be represented that another person is the owner of goods or other properties, any sale of such property by that person is valid against the true H owner as if the seller was actually the owner thereof as regards anyone buying such property on reliance or the reputation. It has also been said that estoppel would arise if the true owner represents or permits it to be represented that he had no interest in the goods. In this case that is how PW1 behaved. He made no I

A attempt to stop the sale until 6 days later when he filed a suit in court. Hence the first defendent is estopped from asserting that the plaintiff could not pass a good title to the purchaser.'

In support of these views the learned judge quoted the remarks of Devlin J in the English case of Eastern Distributors Ltd v Goldring (2) at 608: B

`The class of questions which relate to how far a person who is not the real owner of goods, but who appears to the world, or rather to those who deal with him as owner; and who deal with him on the faith of his apparent ownership should be called to confer upon a third party a greater title than he himself has . . .' C

And in an earlier case, Commonwealth Trust v Aktoy (3) , it was decided that `if someone permits goods to go into possession of another, with all the insignia and D indicia of apparent title, it would be inconsistent with legal principle to permit the transaction to be upset'. However the difference with the present case which the learned judge apparently missed is that in this case the appellant did not permit the premises to go into the possession of the respondent, to the contrary, he did not or refused to surrender the title deeds thereof, and did not register the debenture as required by law. E

But as we have already stated, these findings of the learned Trial Judge were predicated on the premise that the security provided by the debenture was available to the respondent at the time it decided to sell the godown to realise the amount of the loan. Indeed, ever the two reasons given by Counsel for the F appellant in his written submissions on issue No 3, were based on the same assumption and throughout the proceedings in the High Court, the case proceeded on that basis. Both sides in the case saw the wisdom of engaging the G services of more experienced counsel to argue their respective cases in this court. In recognizing the talents of counsel on both sides, we want to say that the parties could not have made better choices. Both Mr Rweyemamu who marshalled the appellants' case, and Professor Fimbo who resisted the appeal on behalf of the respondent, left no stones unturned in their respective fights both at factual and legal levels. Our wish is that such high level performance will become H standard to the greater majority of the members of the Tanzania Bar.

In arguing the appeal, Mr Rweyemamu learned Counsel for the appellants, discarded the premise adopted throughout the trial both by the trial court and counsel who appeared in that court, that the I security provided by the debenture was still available to the respondent at the time A of the sale of the godown by public auction. Mr Rweyemamu submitted that as the debenture was not registered, the loan extended by the respondent to the appellant remained unsecured. He added that under s 79 of the Companies Ordinance, Cap 212, an unregistered debenture is void against the liquidator and any creditor of the company. Therefore, he said, the rights of the respondent as an B unsecured creditor was to demand repayment within forty-two days after its loan became unsecured. After this period, he said, the respondent could not go back to the debenture and purport to exercise the power of sale under it. The only course C open to the respondent as an unsecured creditor, he added, was to proceed by way of ordinary civil suit to recover its unsecured loan. With regard to the allegation that the appellants' sale of the godown to the second defendant was tainted with fraud, Mr Rweyemamu submitted that the fraud, if any, could only D affect the sale to the second defendant if at the time of this sale, the loan advanced by the respondent was still secured by the debenture. This is because, he contended, there can be no fraud in the sale to the second defendant if the debenture no longer acted as security for the respondent's loan. With the E debenture no longer in force, he said, the godown was not encumbered, with the consequence that the appellant was free to dispose it in any manner it wished. This freedom, he added, extended to the manner in which the appellant treated the proceeds of such sales. As a corollary to their argument, Mr Rweyemamu F submitted that as the respondent, the debenture holder, no longer had any rights under the debenture, it could not purport to exercise the power of sale under that debenture even if the said debenture provided such power, hence the respondent had no right to sell the godown, he had no title in the godown which he could pass to any buyer. G

On his part, Professor Fimbo dealt with the debenture at three levels. These were the validity of the debenture at the time the respondent decided to auction the godown. The powers of the debenture holder and the fraudulent acts of the appellant company.

With regard to the status of the debenture at the time the godown was being H auctioned by the respondent, Professor Fimbo submitted that it was still in force. He conceded that the debenture was not registered, but added that it was not registrable under s 8(2)(d) of the Registration of Documents Ordinance Cap 117 because a debenture does not create a trust, and ss (2)(k) of the same Ordinance excludes all documents relating to land from registration under the I

MFALILA JA

A Ordinance. The only law, he said, which requires registration of debentures is the Companies Ordinance Cap 212 under s 80, and that the consequences of non-registration are listed in s 79. But, he added, the only way in which this debenture could be extinguished or brought to an end was through the conditions B in para 17 being satisfied and that there is no evidence indicating that these conditions were satisfied, hence in his submission, the debenture was still subsisting at the time the respondent decided to auction the godown under it.

C Regarding the powers of the debenture holder, Professor Fimbo conceded that no receiver or manager was appointed and that under the terms of the debenture, the respondent could not exercise the power of sale directly, but he urged this court to accept the Trial Judge's justification of the respondent's direct exercise of the power of sale, namely that it was exercising its professed power of sale as lender and that this professed power of sale exercised through a public auction, is protected by operation of the doctrine of estoppel. D

Lastly, regarding the appellants' fraudulent acts, Professor Fimbo painted the following picture of the appellant's conduct and actions which he said were fraudulent and that therefore the subsequent sale of the godown by the appellant to the second defendant was void. He said that the appellant issued a debenture to E the respondent on the security of which the respondent lent moneys to the appellant. After completion of this agreement for an overdraft facility secured by the debenture, the appellant behaved in the following manner.

F Firstly, it failed or neglected to register the debenture with the Registrar of Companies. Secondly, the appellant failed to hand over title deeds to the respondent of the properties charged by the debenture. Thirdly, the appellant suffered distress by the Income Tax Department and upon the sale of its motor vehicle in satisfaction of this distress, the appellant deposited with another bank, CRDB, the proceeds of such sale contrary to the provisions of para 4 of the G debenture which provided that during the continuance of that security (the debenture), the respondent would be appointed and act as the sole banker of the appellant. Fourthly, that the appellant failed to pay the loan after receiving notices from the respondent. Lastly, that even after learning of the sale of the godown H through public auction; sending its officials to the auction and informing its customer of this sale, the appellant still went ahead not only with the sale of the godown to the second defendant, but actually proceeded to execute a deed of transfer in its favour. In addition, Professor Fimbo went on, at the hearing of Civil Case No 18 of I 1994, the appellant committed another act of fraud, in that it concealed from the A High Court the act of transfer of the godown to the second defendant. By concealing vital information from the court, Professor Fimbo submitted, the appellant was defrauding it. Quoting a decision of this court in Mtumwa Rashid v Abdallah Idd and Another (4), Professor Fimbo asserted that a transaction like the B one in the present case, which is tainted with fraud, is void and should be set aside. On this principle, he urged this court to set aside the sale and transfer of the godown by the appellant to the second defendant.

In our view, these strongly opposed positions can only be resolved by the court C applying the relevant provisions of the law. The debenture Exhibit P1 was not registered both under the Registration of Documents Ordinance Cap 117 and the Companies Ordinance Cap 212. The effect of this non-registration according to Mr Rwayemamu was to render the debenture ineffectual leaving the respondent's loan to the appellant unsecured. Section 9 of the Registration of Documents Ordinance provides as follows: D

`9. No document of which the registration is compulsory shall be effectual to pass any land or any interest therein or render such land liable as security for the payment of money, or be received as evidence of any dealing affecting such land unless and until it has been E registered.'

Professor Fimbo's answer to this was that this provision cannot invalidate the debenture because it was not registrable under Cap 117 s 8(2)(d) thereof, as it did F not create a trust and that it was also excluded by the provisions of ss (2)(k). We agree, and that for that reason, the debenture's effectiveness cannot be determined by s 9 of the Registration of Documents Ordinance Cap 117. But the debenture was most certainly compulsorily registrable under the Companies Ordinance. Section 80 thereof provides as follows: G

`80 (1) -- It shall be the duty of a company to send to the Registrar for registration the particulars of every charge created by the company and of the issue of debentures of a series, requiring registration under the last foregoing Section (s 79) but registration of any such H charge may be effected of the application of any person interested therein.

(2) Where registration is effected on the application of some person other than the company, that person shall be entitled to recover from the company the amount of any fees properly paid by him to the registrar of the registration . I

MFALILA JA

AI (3) If any company makes default in sending to the registrar for registration the particulars of any charge created by the company, or of the issues of debentures of a series requiring registration as aforesaid, then, unless the registration has been effected on the application of some other person, the company and every director, manager, secretary or other person, who is knowingly a party to the default, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding twenty thousand shillings for every day during which the default continues.' [emphasis is ours] B

And s 79 provides as follows

C `79 (1) -- Subject to the provisions of this part of this Ordinance, every charge created after the fixed date by a company registered in the territory and being a charge to which this section applies shall, so far as any security or the company's property or undertaking is conferred thereby, be void against the liquidator and any creditor of the company, unless the prescribed particulars of the charge, together with the instrument, if any, by which the charge is created or D evidence, or a copy thereof verified in the prescribed manner, are delivered to or recovered by the registrar for registration in a manner required by this ordinance within forty two days after the date of its creation, but without prejudice to any contractual obligation for repayment of the money thereby secured, and when a charge becomes void under this section the money secured thereby shall immediately become payable. E

(2) This section applies to the following charges.

F (a) A charge for the purpose of securing any issue of debentures.

...

(f) A floating charge on the undertaking or property of the company.' G

This section then applied to the debenture Exhibit P1 issued by the appellant. Professor Fimbo conceded that the debenture Exhibit P1 was required to be registered under s 80 of the Companies Ordinance and that the relevant penalities for default are spelt out in s 79, but he submitted that despite this non-compliance H with s 80, the debenture was still in force because, in his submission, the only way in which this debenture could be brought to any end was through the realisation of the conditions in para 17 of the debenture and that there is no evidence that the conditions in that paragraph had been satisfied. We appreciate the ingenuity of the argument, but with respect it has no validity. A private agreement I cannot replace the clear terms of the law of the land. No one is allowed to contract A out of the law. Sections 80 and 79 of the Companies Ordinance, are quite clear as to the registration of charges and the consequences of non-registration, that if the charge is not registered within forty two days, it becomes void, and the loan so secured becomes immediately payable. Therefore, since this debenture was not B registered under s 80 within forty two days, it became void at the end of that period. The respondent's overdraft facility became unsecured, the debenture as it were passed out of existence. All that the respondent was left with was his contractual rights to recover the debt under ordinary civil litigation. When therefore C the respondent embarked upon the exercise of its purported power of sale under the debenture, and sold the godown through a public auction, it had no such right of sale, it had no interest in the godown which it could pass to any buyer. The sale of the godown by the respondent was null and void and therefore no interest passed to the buyer. D

But even if the debenture Exhibit P1 had been properly registered and was valid at the time of the sale of the godown by the respondent, it would make no difference on the validity of the sale by the respondent, because, under the debenture the respondent had no direct power of sale. All that the debenture provided was for the E appointment of a receiver in the event of a default. The receiver would then act in the interests of both the lender and the borrower. The respondent could not act as receiver under the debenture. As Katiti, J remarked in a ruling in Civil Application No 18 of 1994 relating to the same subject matter: F

`the defendant (present respondent) reserved itself (sic) a blank cheque, to recover its money ie appoint itself a prosecutor, judge, pass judgment/decree execute the same, initiate the public auction and pocket the proceeds thereof'. G

In his submission, Professor Fimbo was aware of this difficulty. As indicated earlier, he conceded that no receiver was appointed in terms of the debenture, nevertheless, he urged this court to agree with the Trial Judge's justification of the respondent's action, namely, that it was properly exercising its professed power of H sale. This may be so, but if the respondent had any power of sale, professed or otherwise, such power could only be derived from the debenture which spelt out the mode of exercising it namely through a receiver duly appointed. The respondent had no direct power of sale which it purportedly exercised in this case. In the circumstances, the respon- I

A dent had no interest in the godown which it could pass to the purchaser at a public auction. The sale was therefore null and void. But as we have already found, the debenture had already been rendered void at the time of the sale of the godown by public auction. We therefore agree with the complaint in ground 3 of B the memorandum of appeal that the learned Trial Judge erred in law and fact in holding that the debenture was valid for the 1993 of 1994 loan. It was rendered void after forty two days for non-registration.

We said earlier that this was the controlling ground of appeal, because the way this ground is resolved would effect the outcome of the appeal. It would affect the C determination of the complaint in ground one namely whether the sale and transfer of the godown by the appellant to the second defendant was legal. The Trial Judge ruled that it was not in that it was tainted with fraud. But this finding D was based on the premise that the debenture was valid and subsisting at the time the two sales by the respondent and the appellant were undertaken and concluded. Since we have found that the debenture was already void at the time of the two sales, the godown was not in any way encumbered as the respondent's loan was unsecured, the appellant was free to deal with it in any manner it wished. There could be no fraud in the appellant selling its unencumbered property or E depositing the proceeds of any such sale in any bank it wished, since the debenture which restricted its banking transactions to the respondent was no longer in existence. Hence the instances of fraud enumerated by Professor Fimbo against the appellant have no relevance. We therefore say that the sale and transfer of the godown by the appellant to the second defendant was perfectly legal. F

Our resolution of the complaint in ground 3 also effectively determines the complaint in ground 5 that is whether the respondent was entitled to sell the godown and pass the title to the purchaser at the public auction. The learned Trial G Judge found that he had such right and title, but we have already held in the course of determining the complaint in ground 3 that the respondent was not entitled to sell the godown and had no title to pass to the purchaser. With these findings, the complaints in grounds 4 and 6 automatically fall away, ground 2 was abandoned. However, we would like to say in connection with the complaint in H ground 6 that we agree with it. The Trial Judge was wrong to grant reliefs which were not asked for in the pleadings, namely the rectification of the register and the registration of the purchase at the public auction.

Before we end, we would like to point out that the respondent I found itself in this predicament largely through the ineptitude of its legal A department. For instance, how could the respondent's legal department sit idly by without monitoring the security of the loan the respondent had advanced to the appellant? The respondent's legal department was either negligent or incompetent, for we cannot see how they could have failed to ensure that the appellant complied with s 80 of the Companies Ordinance, or taken steps themselves and registered B the debenture as they are empowered by ss (1) of that section, because the respondent was surely `a person interested therein'. After such registration, the respondent could then have compelled the appellant to comply with s 83 of the Ordinance that is endorsing the certificate of registration on the debenture. C

The result of our findings on grounds 1, 3 and 5 is that this appeal succeeds. We allow the appeal and set aside the judgment and order of the High Court. The appellant will have its costs of this appeal and those in the court below. We also allow costs for two Counsel as well as the preparation of the record because if the D record was defective or incomplete, the rules allowed the respondent to file a supplementary record. The costs so incurred would then be considered. E

Nyalali, CJ

D This is a ruling on a preliminary objection raised by Counsel for the second and third respondents against the hearing of the application for stay of execution pending appeal. The applicant, namely Willow Investment, is represented by Mr Maira, learned advocate, whereby the respondents, namely Mrs Mbombo Ntuba, hereinafter called, the first respondent, and OCS Company, hereinafter called, the E second respondent, and Gecamines, hereinafter called, the third respondent, are represented by Mr Wambali and Mr Mwaikusa, learned advocates, the objection is based on three grounds which read as follows: F

(a) That the application has been filed without complying with Rule 44 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979;

(b) That the High Court decree, the execution of which is sought to be stayed by the application, is neither attached to the said application nor otherwise made known to the respondents; and G

(c) That the third named respondent, who was not a party to the matter whose decision has given rise to the intended appeal as well as to this application has been joined as a party without the leave of the court.

H In the course of hearing the objection, the court pointed out to the parties another basis which appeared to affect the competency of the application for stay of execution and that is the failure by the intended appellant to seek leave to appeal to this court. In the course of arguing in support of the objection, Mr Mwaikusa, learned advocate, conceded to the effect that ground number one I was misconceived, since in the light of precedent, an application for stay of A execution cannot be entertained by the High Court after notice of appeal has been given, as is the position in the present case.

With regard to the second ground, a consensus emerged between counsel on B both sides to the effect that the use of the word `decree' in the notice of motion for stay of execution is a misnomer and should be understood to refer to a decree consequent upon the ruling by Mapigano, J, dated 6 February 1997. In the light of that understanding, Mr Mwaikusa learned advocate indicated an intention on their side to seek permission to file a counter affidavit before the application could be heard. C

On the third ground, Mr Maira, learned advocate after being made aware of the contents of a relevant part of the record of proceedings in the High Court, conceded that the third respondent was wrongly joined to the application, as that party had been withdrawn therefrom. D

As to the point raised by the court, it is accepted by both sides that the ruling by Mapigano, J, which is sought to be challenged in the intended appeal, is in law not appellable as a matter of right but requires leave to appeal granted by either the High Court or this Court. It is also accepted by both sided that no steps have been E taken to date to seek such leave, and that, in fact, since Mapigano, J's ruling was given on 6 February 1997, such steps are already time-barred by virtue of the provisions of para (b) of Rule 43 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979. F

After the arguments on both sides were given at 10.40 am this morning, I pronounced an order directing the application to be struck off but I reserved my reasons until 2.00 pm today. I now proceed to give them.

It is apparent that the real problem facing this application at this stage is the point G raised by the Court. Of course I have no doubts whatsoever about the propriety of this move. The court has inherent jurisdiction under Rule 3 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979, to raise to the parties, early in the proceedings, any point which concerns the competency of the proceedings before it, so as to avoid, H not only unnecessary costs to the parties, but also avoid waste of precious court time.

Mr Maira's submissions on this point are to the effect that the only pre-requisite for an application for stay of execution under Rule 9 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979, is the prior existence of a notice of appeal, and that since such notice exists I

A here, the court should proceed to hear the application on its merits. The submissions by Mr Mwaikusa and Mr Wambali, are to the effect that since the intended appeal can be made only with leave of the court and since any move to seek such leave is already time-barred, the court cannot proceed to hear the application but should strike it out by virtue of the court's inherent jurisdiction. B

As already indicated in the interim order which I delivered at 10.40 am this morning, I am satisfied that this application is incompetent at this stage. Obviously the power of the court to grant a stay under Rule 9 is exercisable only in C proceedings which are properly before the court. It is apparent from the record that this application was filed in this court on 21 February 1997, that is, a day after the time for seeking leave to appeal, expired. As already mentioned, no move has been made up to now to seek such leave. In the light of this state of affairs, I am fully satisfied that as matters stand at present, this application is incompetent and cannot be heard. That is why I ordered it to be struck off this morning. D

On January 17, 1996, the applicant Adamu Mwaibabile was brought before the E district court at Songea charged with receiving a document knowing that the same was communicated to him in contravention of the National Security Act, 1970, contrary to s 4(3) of that Act. He denied the charge and it is to be observed that there was a written sanction by the Director of Public Prosecutions that he should be so prosecuted, as required under s 16 the Act. F

The matter arose in this way: By a curious letter dated April 27, 1995, one Mrs Mangwehe, a regional local government officer, directed the Songea Town Director to ensure that the applicant was not granted any business licence for the year 1995/1996. Mrs Mangwehe made it absolutely clear that this directive G emanated from the Songea Regional Commissioner of the day, one Nicodemas M Banduka. On the following day the applicant came by a document which carried the same message, what was described at the trial as a photocopy of the copy of the letter addressed to the Town Director. It disturbed him and he took it to the Town Council Chairman and left it with him. Days later the applicant was H summoned at the police station and interrogated, resulting into the prosecution.

The applicant was convicted of the offence and the trial magis- I

A trate handed down a twelve month jail sentence. He is aggrieved by the trial judgment and has brought it to appeal. A number of grounds are taken in the petition of appeal.

What is now before me is an application that appears has overwhelming prospects of succeeding. Mr Shaidi, Principal State Attorney, has expressed the same view. Properly so, I think. Some of the grounds raised in the petition appear substantial and probably irresistible. B

The first of these grounds related to the failure on the part of the prosecution to produce the document which was the subject-matter of the charge. The record is completely silent as to why the document could not be tendered in evidence. Mr C Shaidi has observed that this was a material lacuna and I entirely agree with him.

The second ground relates to the circumstances under which the document in question came into the applicant's possession. It is quite clear from s 4(3) of the Act that where an accused person proves that such document was D communicated to him against his wish he must be released from the charge. And the court has to bear in mind that the onus of proof thrown on the accused person in that respect is not the beyond reasonable doubt threshold. It is sufficient if he E succeeds in proving a prima facia case. From the very beginning, and throughout the trial, the applicant's account was that the document was slipped into his office through the space at the bottom of his door by a person he did not see or know. This was the only account given as to how the applicant came by the document. Mr Shaidi accepts the view that it was a reasonable account and I am inclined to associate myself with that view. F

The third ground relates to the mental element ie the applicant's awareness at the time when he came into possession of the document. In order to find him guilty of the offence it was inter alia necessary for the prosecution to prove, and for the magistrate to be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt, that at the time he received G the document he knew or had reasonable grounds to believe that the same was communicated to him in contravention of the provisions of the Act. There was hardly any such proof.

In the circumstances this application should be granted. H

Accordingly, the applicant is to be released on bail pending the hearing of his appeal and his release is to be effected without any surety. I

This application is by Jamaat Ansaar Sunna who are represented by Dr A J Saffari, learned advocate. The applicant is seeking an order for additional evidence, which application is resisted by the respondent, advocated for by Mr Mwakajinga, learned counsel.

Counsel for the respondent requested that this application be stood down until a H preliminary objection for which he filed a notice way back in July, 1996 is disposed of. Dr Saffari pointed out that he was aware of that application and that he had already filed a counter-affidavit. I decided to go ahead and hear this application. I appreciate of course that if the respondent's preliminary objection is upheld the main appeal would automatically disappear, but I I

MAKAME JA

A think it is not desirable that this application should remain unattended until after the other application is heard.

This present bridge should be crossed now -- if later the preliminary objection is sustained there would be no occasion to adduce additional evidence even if today's application is allowed. If the preliminary objection is upheld the order for B additional evidence will already be there. If I do not allow this application that would be the end of this matter.

It is evident that the intended appeal arises from a sensitive litigation involving titles to land. Dr Saffari submitted that since the disposal of the matter in the High Court he has researched and discovered the existence of some survey maps which C would have established that there was no double allocation of the plot in issue, and so the High Court (Kyando, J) would not have arrived at the conclusion reached if it was aware of it. Appreciating the true picture would avoid the demolition of a mosque already in use. D

While I find it engaging Mr Mwakajinga's retort that a demolition of the mosque would be justice itself, for indeed justice consists of giving each man his due, I think it will be more just that the evidence alleged to have come to light after the determination of the matter in the High Court should be adduced, in the E circumstances. I take into account, in considering Dr Saffari's submission, the fact that the applicant's case was handled by a string of advocates, four in all before Dr Saffari, and this might have made the applicant fall between several stools, as it were. F

I grant the applicant's prayer for additional evidence regarding the alleged survey maps and order the trial High Court to take such additional evidence, in terms of Rule 34(1)(b) of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules.

I make no order as to costs. G

Msumi, J
This ruling is on the three preliminary legal issues raised by the defendant in their joint written statement of defence filed in court on 5 February 1995. The two defendants are Inspector General of I
MSUMI J
A Police and Attorney-General. The suit against them is based on tort. As they appear in the written statement of defence, the said three preliminary objections are:

(i) That the suit is incompetent and was filed in contravention of s 6(2) of Government proceedings Act 1967 as amended by Act 30 of 1994. B

(ii) That the suit is time barred.

(iii) That the verification clause is fatally defective for failure to disclose the source of information. C

On the direction of the court counsel for each party presented written submissions. Amplifying the first issue, Mr Ngwembe, State Attorney argued that s 6(2) of the Government Proceedings Act as amended by Act 30 of 1994 provides that any party who intends to sue the Government must give notice of not less than 90 days of such intention to the minister or department involved in the suit in D question and a copy of the same to the Attorney-General.

This is what the section says:

`S 6(2) no suit against the government shall be instituted, and heard unless the claimant E previously submits to the Government Minister, department or officer concerned a notice of not less than ninety days (90) of his intention to sue the government, and he shall send a copy of his claim to the Attorney General.'

F No doubt that from the wording of this section the prior issue of notice to the government institution or officer concerned and the Attorney-General is a mandatory pre-requisite condition before one sues the government. It is on this realisation that in his reply to the written statement of defence, plaintiff tried to G controvert the defendants contention by submitting that the required notice was in fact issued to the Inspector General of Police four months before filing of the suit. To substantiate this claim a copy of the alleged notice was attached as annexure to his reply. But the said notice is incomplete because a copy of the same was not sent to the Attorney-General. This shortcoming is among matters raised by counsel for the defendants in his written submission. H

In his conspiciously short submission, Mr Kashumbugu, counsel for the plaintiff, conveniently avoided to make any comment on the merits or otherwise of all the three preliminary issues. Instead he decided to impugn the written statement of defence for being filed I outside the period prescribed by the court. Hence he urged the court to allow the A plaintiff to prove his case ex-parte under Order 8 Rule 4(1)(b) of the Civil Procedure Code for defendant's failure to file a defence. With respect I am not persuaded by this argument. Admittedly defendants were required to file their defence by 16 January 1996 but they did so on 5 February 1996. However, B according to the court file, by 21 March 1996 plaintiff was already served with the alleged belated written statement of defence and presented his reply to it on 24 April 1996. In his reply plaintiff never challenged the said defence for being filed outside the prescribed time. On the contrary Mr Kashumbugu joined with the counsel for the defendants on 29 May 1996 in informing the court that pleadings C were complete and requested for a hearing date. Under these circumstances the court must be taken to have impliedly allowed the defendants to file their defence on 5 February 1996 and plaintiff must be impliedly taken to have had no objection against the filing of the defence on that date. D

I think it will be an abuse of court process to uphold the plaintiff's contention. Fairness demands that a party who intends to raise a preliminary issue, should do so at an earliest opportunity. In the present case plaintiff ought to have raised the issue in question in his reply to the said defence. He cannot be allowed to do so E now after a period of about one year since he came aware of the alleged issue. The first preliminary issue is therefore sustained. Plaintiff failed to comply with the mandatory provision of s 6(2) of Government Proceedings Act hence the suit is incompetent.

As regards the second issue, plaintiff became aware of the alleged vandalisation F of his property worth Shs 40,000,000/= on 25 February 1984 after he was released from detention. It was from that day or thereabout when the cause of action arose. According to para 6 of the first schedule to the Law of Limitation Act 10 of 1971, limitation period for suits founded on tort is three years. This suit was G filed sometimes in May 1995. The second issue is also upheld in that the suit is time barred as it was filed almost twelve years after the cause of action has arose.
As regards the third issue I am of respectful opinion that the learned counsel for the defendants has seriously misunderstood the provisions of Order 6 Rule 15(2) H of the Civil Procedure Code and the comment by Sarkar on the identical provision of the Indian Code of Civil Procedure. Neither Order 6 Rule 15(2) nor the commentary of the learned author does it require verification clause in a plaint or written statement of defence to disclose source of information or grounds of belief of the matter pleaded. What the verifier is I
MSUMI J
A required to do is to itemise in the verification clause matters which are of his personal knowledge and those based on information or belief. As I said earlier the verifier is not bound to state the source of his information or belief. It appears that the learned counsel is confusing Order 6 Rule 15(2) with Order 19 Rule (1) of the Civil Procedure Code which deals with affidavit. It is provided in the later provision that: B

`3 -- (1) Affidavit shall be confined to such facts as the deponent is able of his own knowledge to prove, except on interlocutory applications, on which statement of his belief may be admitted. C
Provided that the grounds thereof are stated'.
There is no such statutory disclosure requirement for verification in pleadings which is defined under Order 6 Rule 1 to mean:

`... plaint or written statement of defence (including a written statement of defence filed by a D third party) and such other subsequent pleadings as may be presented in accordance with Rule 13 of Order VIII.'

E From these observations the third preliminary issue is overruled. On the other hand I respectfully sustain the first and second issue. The suit is incompetent hence dismissed with costs for non compliance by the plaintiff of s 6(2) of the Government Proceedings Act and filed outside the statutory limitation period of three years. F

The appellant was convicted of possession of moshi in contravention of ss 30 and 34(1) of Act 62 of 1966 and was sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment. A D co-accused was sentenced to a fine of 10,000/=. On appeal against the sentence,
Held:

Lugakingira, J G
The appellant and another person who was the second accused at the trial were on their own pleas of guilty convicted of being in unlawful possession of moshi contrary to ss 30 and 34(1), Act 62 of 1966. I have perused the record and satisfied myself that the pleas were unequivocal. The problem was with sentencing. The appellant was sentenced to twelve month's imprisonment H because he said nothing in mitigation; the second accused, an 18-year-old female, was fined Shs 10,000/= because she told the trial magistrate: `I pray to be fined'. This appeal is against the sentence. The appellant claims that he is hard of hearing and did not understand what was transpiring at the sentencing. He also lists mitigating factors I

A which include advanced age, poor health and `a dozen of grandsons and granddaughters'.
The appellant's claim that he has lost the capacity of hearing makes no sense and must be rejected for a lie because he is challenging the sentence only, not the conviction. The real problem in the case is indeed whether the disparity in B sentencing was justified. For the information of the trial magistrate, however, even the second accused said nothing amounting to mitigation of sentence but asked for the sentence she preferred. If sentence is going to proceed on the wishes of accused persons, very soon they will also be shopping for the prisons they prefer as is the case in some countries. C

For the further information of the trial magistrate even the `mitigated' sentence he imposed on the second accused was illegal. The offence attracts a maximum fine of Shs 5,000/= but he ordered her to pay twice over!

D I think the disparity was unjustified. Where two or more persons are jointly convicted of an offence, a severer sentence on one cannot be justified by his failure to advance mitigating factors but by aggravating factors on his side.

E Failure and even refusal to speak in mitigation is not an aggravating factor for it is within the accused's lawful discretion. A wrong principle was thus applied in this case and the appeal ought to succeed.

Learned counsel for the Republic also wondered whether it was proper for the arresting officer to prosecute the case, but I see no difficulty in this. There is no F rule really, against this, and in view of the prompt and unequivocal pleas in this case, I think there was no failure of justice. This court has in fact had the occasion to say that there was no bar for a prosecutor to be a witness in the case he prosecutes: see for example R v Sarwan Singh (1).

G The appellant has been in prison since 22 October 1996, a period of six months. I think that serves the justice of the case. I allow the appeal and reduce the sentence to result in his immediate release. In revision I also set aside the sentence imposed on the second accused and substitute a fine of Shs 5,000/=. She should be refunded the extra Shs 5,000/=. H

In the original suit appellant sued the respondents in the Court of Resident Magistrate Kisutu. On 8 November 1993 the suit was dismissed under Order 9 Rule 8 of the Civil Procedure Code for non appearance of the appellant. In response to this order, appellant filed a chamber application requesting the court to set aside the dismissal order. The said application was dismissed with costs on H the ground that it was defective as the chamber summons was not stamped with a court seal. Dissatisfied with this finding appellant decided to lodge the present appeal.
Counsel for each party was required to make his submission in writing and submit it by respective scheduled dates. Up to the time I
MSUMI J
A of preparation of this ruling, counsel for the appellant had not presented his submission. So in the preparation of this judgment the court had only the advantage of the written submissions presented by counsels for the respondents. Without prejudice to his arguments against the appeal on its merits, Mr Kisusi, counsel for the first respondent raised two preliminary objections. His first B argument is that the ruling of the trial court does not amount to a decree against which the appellant would have an automatic right to appeal. The said ruling embodied an order and s 74 and Order 40 Rule (1) of the Civil Procedure Code C specify the orders which can be appealed against. According to the learned counsel the order in question is not among those specified for appeal. I am of a different respectful opinion. The order dismissing the application to set aside the dismissal order was made under Order 9 Rule 9 which, under Order 40 Rule 1(c) is appellable. It is surprising that the learned counsel could not see this clear provision. D
The second objection, to which Mr Nchimbi, counsel for the second respondent, associates himself, is that the chamber summons has not been stamped with a court seal. It is true that it was necessary that the chamber summons had such E stamp. But is the appellant responsible for this omission. It was for the court to imprint such stamp after the appellant had paid the necessary fees. It was unfair for the learned resident magistrate to punish the appellant for non-compliance of an action of which the appellant had no power to ensure its compliance. Hence this objection is also overruled. F
On the merits of the appeal, Mr Kisusi has submitted that the appellant has no valid ground to complain against the ruling of the trial court. He contends that since the chamber summons was not stamped with a court seal, the same was a nullity. In support of this view the learned counsel cited the judgment of this court in G the case of C P C International PLC v Zainab Grain

Millers Ltd (1), In principle it is true that a chamber summons without a court seal is of no legal effect. However, it is not good law that such defect should be a ground for dismissal of a suit. Essentially a chamber summons is an order of the court requiring parties to H appear before the court on a specified date for the purpose of entertaining prayers sought by the applicant. Thus any defect on such order should, at most, have the effect of lacking legal force of commanding the appearance of the parties. Any party who default appearance by command of such summons cannot be subject to the legal conse- I quences provided under the relevant provisions of the law. A

In conclusion, this appeal is allowed with costs. The trial court is directed to re-admit the application for setting aside the dismissal order. B

Kisanga JA
This is an application for extension of time to file notice of appeal to this Court. The same application was previously made to the High Court (Bubeshi, J) but was refused. C
Very briefly the background to this matter is as follows: This Court in Civil Appeal No 27 of 1995 struck out the appeal, upon a preliminary objection being taken by the opposite party, on the ground that the said appeal was hopelessly out of time. Following that, the applicant applied to the High Court for extension of time to file D fresh notice of appeal but that application was refused, hence this further application to restore the appeal.
Before me the applicant was represented by Mr Lukwaro, learned advocate, while the respondent was advocated for by Mr Uzanda, learned advocate. In his notice of motion Mr Lukwaro sets out prayer for several orders, the first one being one for E the extension of time to file a notice of appeal. I propose to deal with this one first because the fate of the other orders prayed for necessarily depends on whether or not I grant the extension of time to file notice of appeal. F
The record shows that there were two sets of proceedings in this matter. The first set is the one culminating in the judgment of Mrema J, while the other one concerns an application for leave to file a memorandum out of time to review that judgment, and culminates in the ruling of Bubeshi J refusing the application. In both cases the applicant who was aggrieved, gave notices of intention to appeal and G duly applied to the Registrar for copies of proceedings. His advocate also sent to the Registrar a reminder for the supply of the proceedings relating to the judgment of Mrema, J. The Registrar supplied the proceedings, and acting under Rule 83(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules, he issued a certificate excluding the application of H the limitation period in respect of the proceedings culminating in the ruling of Bubeshi, J; he issued no such certificate, however, in respect of the proceeding culminating in the judgment by Mrema J. Relying on such certificate, counsel for the applicant proceeded to prepare and file the record of appeal in Civil Appeal No 27 of 1995 against the judgment of Mrema J. It is clear, therefore, that the learned counsel relied on the wrong certificate of exemption by the Registrar to file the record of appeal in Civil Appeal No 27 of 1995. That is to say, there was no certificate of exemption by the Registrar to save the purported Civil Appeal No 27 of 1995 I against the judgment of Mrema J. It is clear, therefore, that the learned counsel A relied on the wrong certificate of exemption by the Registrar to file the record of appeal in Civil Appeal No 27 of 1995. That is to say, there was no certificate of exemption by the Registrar to save the purported Civil Appeal No 27 of 1995 which was long time barred. It is against this background that that appeal, as stated earlier, was struck out as being hopelessly out of time. B

Mr Lukwaro's concern is that the applicant should now be allowed to restore the appeal because the original appeal ie Civil Appeal No 27 of 1995 was struck out partly due to the fault of the Registrar. Counsel contended that the Registrar wrongly supplied a certificate of exemption relating to the ruling by Bubeshi J C notwithstanding that the applicant's counsel had applied to the Registrar, and sent a reminder, for the supply of the proceedings relating to the judgment by Mrema J. According to counsel, had the Registrar granted the certificate in respect of the proceedings relating to the judgment of Mrema J the Civil Appeal No 27 of 1995 D would have thereby been saved; it would not have been struck out for being time barred. Therefore, counsel maintained, the applicant should be allowed extension of time to file fresh notice of appeal, thereby affording an opportunity for the Registrar to grant the appropriate certificate of exemption relating to the judgment of Mrema J. In effect counsel conceded that he wrongly relied on the Registrar's E certificate to file the record of appeal in Civil Appeal No 27 of 1995, but contended that such error on his part was induced by the Registrar by wrongly granting a certificate in respect of the proceedings respecting the ruling by Bubeshi J instead on granting one in respect of the proceedings culminating in the judgment of F Mrema J.

I have carefully considered the submissions by the learned counsel but I could not accede to them. To my mind the Registrar acted properly in granting the certificate G of exemption in respect of the proceedings culminating in the ruling by Bubeshi J because the applicant had given notice of intention to appeal against that ruling and had duly applied to be supplied with a copy of proceedings pertaining thereto. The applicant did not at any time intimate to the Registrar that it had abandoned H the appeal against the ruling in question or that it was no longer taking any steps to pursue it. In those circumstances the Registrar cannot, in my view, be faulted for supplying, as he did, copy of the proceedings relating to the ruling in question and his certificate pertaining thereto. In other words the Registrar supplied the proceedings and the certificate pertaining I

A thereto in response to the standing request by the appellant to be supplied with the same. As the Registrar was performing his lawful duty, therefore, he could not be said to have misled the applicant's counsel or to have induced him to act mistakenly or wrongly.

B On the other hand it is quite apparent that counsel for the applicant is the one to blame for what happened. Had he exercised the minimum degree of diligence, he would have noticed at once that the Registrar's certificate of exemption accompanying the copy of the proceedings sent to him was not what he wanted for the purpose of processing his appeal against the judgment of Mrema J. He C would, no doubt, have asked for the appropriate certificate, and the Registrar would certainly have obliged. Counsel did not do that, and so he can only have himself to blame for the ill consequences flowing from such failure.

Mr Lukwaro views this failure as an oversight on his part. That is to say, he D concedes that he was responsible for the Civil Appeal No 27 of 1995 being struck out as being hopelessly out of time, and for not having obtained the Registrar's certificate which would have validated that appeal. The question now is whether such an oversight amounted to sufficient cause in terms of Rule 8 of the Court of appeal Rules for granting extension of time now to file a fresh notice of appeal, ie E to restore the appeal. Mr Lukwaro submitted that such oversight constituted sufficient cause within the meaning of the rule but, when asked, he could cite no authority to support the contention.

Mr Uzanda, strongly opposing the application, viewed Mr Lukwaro's handling of this F matter as amounting to negligence which, he contended, cannot afford sufficient cause for granting the extension sought. In support of this submission he cited a number of authorities, in particular the cases of Daphne Parry v Murray Alexander Carson (1) and Harram Singh Bhogal v Javda Karsan (2). G

I am quite clear in my mind that the state of affairs in this case was brought about by the failure of the applicant's counsel to act diligently. He proceeded to lodge the record of appeal in Civil Appeal No 27 of 1995 which was obviously out of time, but without incorporating the Registrar's certificate of exemption, pertaining to the H judgment being appealed against to validate the appeal. Counsel has the duty to ensure that the papers be filed in court not in error.

In this particular case he had a duty, inter alia, to ascertain that the record in Civil Appeal No 27 of 1995 did incorporate the Registrar's certificate of exemption pertaining to the proceedings cul- I minating in the judgment of Mrema, J. That Mr Lukwaro did not do. It is quite A apparent that his handling of this aspect of the matter was highly irresponsible, to say the least.

The case is almost on all fours with the case of Harram Singh cited above. There, as in the present case, the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa had struck out an B appeal as being incompetent, the reason for the incompetence being that the record of appeal did not incorporate a copy of the formal or drawn order being appealed against. Whereupon, again as in this case, the intending appellant sought to restore the appeal by applying for leave to file out of time an appeal against that order. The application was brought on the plea, inter alia, that the C omission to file a certified copy of the formal order was due to an honest but mistaken opinion of his advocate. It was held that that alone could not constitute a sufficient cause for granting extension of time. It seems plain to me that in the instant case lack of diligence on the part of counsel, or an oversight as Mr Lukwaro calls it, would be even more devoid of merit as a plea for the extension of time. In D the result, therefore, I am of the view that no sufficient cause has been disclosed for enlarging the time as prayed.

As intimated earlier, the applicant prayed for several other orders which were E necessarily dependant upon the prayer for the extension of time to file a notice of appeal which I have refused. With that refusal, therefore, it is now not necessary to consider the prayer for the other orders. In the event the application is dismissed with costs. F

HIGH COURT CIVIL CASE 65 OF 1994
24 April 1997
Flynote
Contract - Breach of - Negligence - Damages - Quantum. C
-Headnote
The plaintiff sued the defendant for damages arising out of breach of contract. The plaintiff had hired the defendant's motor-vehicle to transport and deliver 9000 litres of fuel which he had bought from a third party. When the fuel was delivered it was put into the incorrect tanks and mixed with other fuel which rendered it all, bar 1500 litres, useless. The plaintiff rejected the delivery of 7500 litres which were D then stored by defendant when they reacted to a notice from the plaintiff's advocate and offered to pay the cost of the fuel mixed up at cost price over 20 monthly instalments. The plaintiff did not accept this and issued the present suit, claiming 40,000,000/= as general damages, being compensation for damage caused to his business and personal integrity as a businessman, and 2,427,250/= as special damages arising from the loss of the fuel products he had purchased. E
Held:

(i) It was clear from the evidence that the defendant's employees had been negligent in delivering the fuel to the plaintiff; F

(ii) Under the Tanzanian Sale of Goods Ord, Cap 214 s 32(1) where the seller delivered to the buyer a quantity of goods less than contracted , the buyer, in accepting the goods so delivered, had to pay for them at the contracted price. In the instant case the plaintiff had rejected the 7500 litres. The defendant had breached the terms G of the contract in not delivering petrol and diesel in their natural chemical form. The defendant continued to hold the contract alive however until the time when its advocate wrote to the plaintiff's advocate disclaiming negligence and liability. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to sue for breach of contract and damages arising therefrom;

(iii) The circumstance that the plaintiff's agency agreement was H terminated by BP (T) Ltd was not one which would have been contemplated by the defendant when agreeing to transport the goods to the plaintiff. It was a circumstance far removed from the original intentions of the parties and could not be held against the defendant;

(ii) The plaintiff's loss of profit occasioned by the breach had to be determined by the period between the date of delivery and the date of repudiation of the contract, a period of 42 days. I

(iii) The plaintiff had not been unreasonable in rejecting the defendant's A offer of payment by instalment.

(iv) The plaintiff was entitled to be compensated for the loss of the value of the consignment and the loss of profit thereon.

(v) The plaintiff was also entitled to compensation for the tortures which were inflicted by his anguish of mind and for the loss of his goodwill and an amount of 1,800,000/= by way of general damages would suffice. B

Dr Lamwai and Magafu for the plaintiff

Matata for the defendant.

Judgment

Mrema J G

This is a simple suit arising from an alleged breach of contract between Jackson Mussetti, the plaintiff and M/S Blue Star Service Station, the defendant. The plaintiff agreed to pay for the transport costs for the delivery of nine thousand litres of petroleum products the plaintiff had purchased from M/S BP Tanzania Ltd, at H Mwanza South Depot and the defendant accepted to transport and deliver the said goods at the plaintiff's place of business, to wit, Musoma Service Station. This agreement was reached at the depot of BP Tanzania Ltd, on 14 August 1994 between one Mr Mafuru, the plaintiff's employee, and one Latiff, the defendant's employee and driver. I

MREMA J

A The agreement was further cemented or ratified by Selum Nurjin (DW1) who gave the driver and his turnboy (DW2) a go ahead, after the latter had reported to PW1's office in the presence of one Mr Mafuru, PW1's employee.

B It then turned out at the Musoma Service Station the delivery of the goods created a problem. In the course of the delivery there occurred a mess up to the effect that petrol was mixed up with diesel when off loading the products into the underground tanks at the plaintiff's service station. The mess up was discovered there and then, as the delivery of the same continued, and it transpired that seven thousand five hundred litres out of the nine thousand litres had been off loaded and so mixed up. The one thousand five hundred litres which had not been mixed up C was delivered into underground tank not yet polluted. The plaintiff (PW1) whose attention was drawn by PW3, one Tabu Athumani, who was PW1's pump attendant at the station, refused to honour delivery and possession of the goods. Instead, he (PW1) ordered Latiff, DW1's driver, to siphon out the seven thousand D five hundred litres of the products spoilt and return them to the tanker-chambers and have them returned to the defendant, Norjin (DW1), in Mwanza.

E A few days later, ie on 20 September 1994, the plaintiff, through Dr Lamwai, sent a demand note to the plaintiff demanding compensation for the mixed up products, to wit, petrol and diesel. This assertion is affirmed by the defendant's response, through his advocate, Mr Matata, by a letter dated 26 September 1994, F denying liability and there instead claiming compensation in the amount of Shs 2,800,000/= against the plaintiff attributing that liability to a loss of business for grounding his tanker TZ 45524 because of continuing to hold the `dead stock' from 14 August up to 24 August 1994. The latter (exhibit P3) averred that the seven thousand five hundred litres of petroleum products were delivered to the plaintiff's G station as agreed and the tanker emptied the said goods into the station's underground tanks as duly instructed by the plaintiff's pump attendant. Therefore, the defendant threw the blame to the plaintiff on the account of negligence caused by PW1's employees or servant. In the alternative, however, the defendant offered to pay the cost of the fuel (mixed up), ie seven thousand five hundred litres, at cost price by monthly instalment of Shs 100 000/=. H

The plaintiff did not see the offer as being a reasonable package, hence the present suit. As per the plaintiff's prayer in para 3 of the plaint, the plaintiff is claiming against the defendant a sums of Shs 40,000,000/= as general damages, being compensation to da- I mage caused to his business's reputation and his personal integrity as A businessman. He is also claiming Shs 2,427,250/= as special damages arising from loss of the fuel products he had purchased from BP Tanzania Ltd. According to para 4 of the plaint, the value of the products, apparently as bought from the BP Depot, was Shs 2,185,000/=. Para 5 of the plaint accuses the defendant in that the B latter's servants or employees negligently mixed up petrol and diesel at the time of delivery thereby mixing the products in wrong tanks in consequence of which the mixtures were rendered unsaleable. In the result, the plaintiff pleads that the defendant is vicariously liable for the negligent or wrongful acts of his servants or employees. C

The particulars of negligence as pleaded by the plaintiff are:

(a) Failure of the defendant's employee to recognize the compartments of their tanker, Registration No TZ 45524 contained petrol and which contained diesel. D

(b) In consequence of (a) above, delivery by the defendant's servants of fuel into the wrong tanks and mixing the products up.

(c) The plaintiff will rely on the doctrine of res ipse loquitur. E

It is the plaintiff's assertion that as the rule of the negligence referred to at para 5 of the plaint, the plaintiff suffered loss. He (plaintiff) splitted special damages into two: (a) Loss of the consignment amounted to Shs 2,185,000/=; and (b) Loss of profit on the consignment, he put it at Shs 242 250/=, giving a total amount of special damages at Shs 2,427,250/=. He has also raised a claim on costs at Shs 600 F 000/= being charges for following up on the loss, thus raising the total on special damages to Shs 3,027,250/=.

As to general damages, the plaintiff has averred at para 7 of the plaint to the effect that in consequence of the loss resulting from the defendant's servants negligence, the plaintiff failed to carry on his business and in the result his service station remained without business; hence his prayer that the defendant be ordered to pay the plaintiff compensation in the sum of Shs 40,000,000/= as general G damages -- for the loss of business, pain and suffering incurred.

Finally the plaintiff prays that the defendant also be condemned to pay costs on the decretal sum at the court's rate from the date of judgment up to payment in full, H plus the costs of the suit and incidentals thereto.

As for the defendant, through his advocate Mr Matata, the Written Statement of Defence contains general denials save for the for- I

A mal admissions at some of the paragraphs of the plaint. With regard to the denials, the defendant strongly refuted that his servants were negligent as alleged at para 5 of the plaint (see para 6 of the WSD) and requires the plaintiff to prove the allegation as required by the law. He also refuted the allegation contained at para 8 of the plaint, that avers that the plaintiff's several demands to the defendant B for compensation were ignored and or refused by the defendant, to the effect that the defendant's offer to purchase the mixed up products at costs price was turned down by the plaintiff.

C Besides the denials by the defendant, a counter claim has been raised by the defendant as follows: that, upon the refusal by the plaintiff to take possession of the delivered products the defendant transported the same to Mwanza BP Service Station where the M/Vehicle tanker was grounded from 14th day up to 24th of August, 1994. Thereafter the contents were emptied into an underground tank. Thus, the defendant prays for the following orders: D

(1) Shs 100 000/= per day for the loss of use of the tanker as per para 11 (ie the immediate averment above);

(2) Shs 15 000/= per day for the non-use of the underground tank at the defendant's service station from the 25 August 1994 until the date the E plaintiff takes delivery of the disputed petroleum products;

(3) Shs 90 000/= being the transport charges of the product from Mwanza BP depot to the plaintiff's BP service station at Musoma. F

(4) General damages of Shs 5,000,000/= for breach of contract.

(5) Costs of the suit.

Although the plaintiff, through his advocate, indicated in his reply to the WSD that he would raise a preliminary point of law to the effect that the defendant's G counter-claim do not have any cause of action against the plaintiff, as no delivery remained with the plaintiff after the mixing up, at the hearing, however Mr Magafu apparently made no reference to it. It is apparent, therefore, he tacitly abandoned the contention and I have no reason to refer to that preliminary objection which was never argued. H

Only as a matter of record, it is also to be observed, though not important, that before the hearing of the suit the parties under went mediation process before another judge but they failed to settle. Therefore the suit had to be heard in full.

Issues were drawn and agreed as follows: I

MREMA J

(1) Who was negligent between the parties? A

(2) Who of the parties breached the contract?

(3) Consequent upon the breach of the contract, who between the parties suffered damages?

(4) What relief, if any, are the parties entitled to?

In answering the above questions, no solutions can be made without resorting to B evidence. Once the first issue is answered, it is easier to find out who breached the contract. I therefore, begin with that most difficult question, ie the first question.

The plaintiff's case is that no sooner had the defendant's lorry-tanker reached the C Musoma Service Station than its driver, Latiff, parked it at the station and went away. He left the turnboy there. As we have seen in the evidence, the turnboy was Baltazar Mtwale (DW2). According to Mussetti (PW1), he (Mussetti) was present together with his pump attendant, Tabu (PW3). He and Tabu climbed on to the D tanker and took measurements of the contents in the tanker's chambers using a measuring rod-stick. That they also took samples to examine the quality of the fuel products. He confirmed that both the quality and quantity answered the description of the petroleum products he had ordered. Then they (PW1 and PW3), according E to Mussetti, showed the turnboy the sign boards identifying the various tanks -- for petrol, diesel and kerosene. DW2 was then left to proceed to discharge the liquid products from their respective chambers into the respective underground tanks at the station. PW1, did not, however, tell the court where he went thereafter, F although we shall soon hear that he was called by PW3 (Tabu) from his office when the problem arose. As for Tabu, PW1 said that she continued to serve the public (customers). The rest of the evidence is as told by Tabu (PW3), beginning where a customer was sold diesel and when his motor bicycle failed to have his engine propelled. It was this alleged customer who caused investigation to be G carried out by PW1 and PW3 only to discover that petrol had been mixed up into the diesel underground tank, and diesel emptied into petrol underground tank.

Both prosecution witnesses (PW1 and PW3) claimed that the driver (Latiff), upon H interrogation as why that happened, admitted to the effect that he (the driver) had failed to detail the turnboy about the change when the loading of the goods was done at the BP Depot Mwanza South. That the change was that, this time as opposed to normal practice, the last two chambers of the tanker were loaded with petrol and the first chamber with diesel. The I

A court was further told by PW1 that in order to create evidence he (Mussetti) took the driver to the police. There, according to PW1 and PW3, Latiff repeated the same story, confessing his negligence and undertook to return the spoilt goods, seven thousand five hundred litres to his boss in Mwanza. Thus, according to the two witness's story, the turnboy put in writing (see exh P1), but I think it is better to reproduce the contents thereof, and I quote: B

But before I proceed with the evidence of PW1 and PW3, I propose to deal with the contentions raised by the parties concerning exh P1 first. PW1 admitted that the words `yaliyochanganywa na wao wenyewe' do not appear in the copy attached to the plaint. One may, therefore be astounded to note that the same D photostatic copy attached with the plaint which was in the possession of the plaintiff did not bear the latter quoted words as did the original copy which was also in the hands of the plaintiff. This means, therefore, that PW1 produced two documents which talk two different things. The consequences resulting from such E contradictions are that PW1 is a liar as far as both the documents are concerned. The defendant apparently is not disputing the photostatic copy which do not bear the last words in dispute. PW1 tried to convince me to believe that the F omission of the disputed words might have been occasioned by a carbon paper, in that the words did not pass through the carbon ribbon to reflect on the second copy of the original. At times that does happen but the situation as it is apparent from the facts of the case is not one adopting such a proposition. I do not agree with the plaintiff because had he not produced the copy which he attached to the G plaint I might have agreed with him. For it was not possible for him to extract the copy without the original, and that being the case it was impossible to have the same document reading two different things. The plaintiff knows why and I say no more. But I will not reject both the documents because the defence is not disputing H the copy attached to the plaint. I therefore adopt its contents as being exactly what Latiff wrote but through the handwriting of Maiga, the defendant's driver, and signed by Latiff. That is without the words: `Yaliyochanganywa na wao wenyewe.' Having said that, I return to the evidence of PW1 and PW3. Again, I do not agree with PW1 that the one thousand five hundred litres not returned to DW1 was due to the fact that they failed to I

syphon them out of the underground tanks. DW2 told the court that, that amount of A quantity was emptied into an underground tank which had not been contaminated. This piece of evidence was not disturbed by the plaintiff and, in my view, that evidence appears more probable than untrue because there is no explanation why PW1 did not complain against the one thousand five hundred B litres. I find PW1 to be a liar the second time when he told us that the one thousand five hundred litres were removed by the BP Tanzania officials when they went to service the tanks. The products were not waste products and that explains why PW1 did not return them or complain against the value thereof. On the C premise, therefore, one may reasonable say that the defendant did execute part of the contract by delivering part of the goods he contracted to carry and deliver at PW's service station. The plaintiff having accepted part of the goods, that portion in itself was complete save for payment of the cost of delivery which the defendant is entitled to sue and recover the costs relevant to the amount of goods delivered. D However, the amount of petroleum products carried for delivery to the plaintiff by the defendant is not an issue before me and I have no reason to labour my mind on it. We are concerned with the seven thousand five hundred mixed up litres of petrol and diesel.

The question as who was negligent still remains unanswered. I agree, with E respect, on the contradictions pointed out by Mr Matata touching the evidence of PW1 and PW3. I agree that PW1 was most unlikely present at the station when the lorry tanker arrived there. The story he gave appears to be a narration from PW3. If he was present as he claimed I do not see why he could not have seen F either the turnboy or the driver delivering the disputed goods into wrong underground tanks. He was not present at the station but perhaps he was in the office and that is why PW1 went to call him when the mess occurred. As PW1 does not appear to be a credible witness, I will, therefore, attach no weight in his evidence. I am therefore left with the evidence of PW3 and DW2, indeed at the scene. G

Mtwale (DW2), on behalf of the defendant, gave a diametrically opposite story against that of Tabu (PW3). He told the court that when they reached PW1's service station on 14 August 1994 they found PW3 alone, PW1 was not present. H That PW3 allowed them to off load the goods but this was after confirmation as to the correctness of quantity and quality of the goods was affirmed by Tabu (PW3). The driver of the lorry-tanker was present throughout, according to DW2. This defence witness claimed that it was only him (DW2) who went out to eat when the delivery of the goods was I

MREMA J

A continuing in the presence of the driver Latiff. But that before DW2 went out they started delivering diesel and later petrol. He further claimed that Latiff had told him that the first chamber/compartment of the tanker was loaded with diesel and the two last chambers with petrol. So, it is claimed, they emptied the diesel into the underground tank which Tabu (PW3) was claimed to have told them that was for B diesel but later turned out to be for petrol when a customer complained. However, DW2 admitted that he did not go to the police with PW1's employee, Mr Mafuru, who had new arrived from Mwanza. He said, those who went were Latiff, PW3 and Mafuru. It follows, therefore, that what transpired there (at the police) C was not to the knowledge of DW2. But Latiff was not called to tell us who were those people present at the police station when Latiff signed exh P1. As DW2 did not go to the police station he cannot confirm to us that PW1 never went to the police station. Therefore, what actuated Latiff to agree to syphon out the spoilt D seven thousand five hundred litres of petroleum products and return the same to the lorry tanker and ferried it back to Mwanza, this remains a question not answered by the defendant. In that connection the only evidence present is that of PW3 who also went to the police station. Although PW3 was PW1's employee, I can see nothing from the circumstances of the case discrediting her evidence E because Latiff signed a voucher exhibit P1 confirming that the seven thousand five hundred litres were mixed up and were being returned to Mwanza, which was done. The question then, is, why Latiff if not guilty party, acted the way he did? If he was innocent, I can conceive nothing either legal or factual to justify the return of the mixed up petroleum products to the defendant in Mwanza. F

The defendant's main defence is that the delivery was in accordance with Tabu's identification of the underground tanks to Latiff and DW2. That sounds a good defence. But, then what prompted Latiff to return the goods? The court received no G evidence proving undue influence on the part of the driver. If the driver was unduly influenced at the police station thereby causing him to act the way he did I would have found it good defence for the defendant. But there is no such evidence. Again, if the story as told by DW2 had any grain of truth, I wonder why Nurdin H (DW1) did not immediately take steps, either to return the goods to PW1 or to sue him for refusal to accept delivery and possession of the goods as per their agreement. To say it differently, he would have sued PW1 for damages for breach of contract. As if there was no breach of contract by the plaintiff, DW1 (Nurdin) accepted the returned goods and I kept them at his Blue Star Service Station from 15 August 1994 to 24 August 1994. A I say 15 August 1994 because DW2 affirmed in evidence that after the problem had arisen on 14 August 1994 at Musoma, they slept there and returned to Mwanza on the following day, ie 15 August 1994. Even after 24 August 1994 we have DW2's evidence, and also corroborated by DW1, to the effect that the mixed B up products were then discharged into an underground tank at DW1's Blue Star Service Station for storage for thirty days. However, I observe that DW2 made an incorrect statement, if not a lie, when he said that the disputed seven thousand five hundred litres remained in the lorry tanker for thirty days and that he slept in the lorry tanker for thirty days. This statement goes counter DW1's statement who C said that the products remained in the tanker from 14 August 1994 to 24 August 1994 inclusive before it was emptied into an underground tank.

Be that as it may, however, the significance of DW1's acceptance of the refused D goods by PW1 was ratification of PW1's complaint that DW1's servants, workers or employees negligently delivered the disputed products in wrong tanks underground at PW1's service station, Musoma. And to further affirm DW1's conduct implying that he had accepted the liability he remained quiet until PW1, E through Dr Lamwai, wrote the demand notice (dated 20 September 1994) for compensation as already stated briefly above. The incident took place on 14 August 1994 and until 26 September 1994 when DW1 responded (exh P3), indeed after being alerted, and that was a period of one month plus. Notwithstanding the F denials and counter claims raised in exh P3, the defendant appeared to admit liability and this is affirmed by the offer he made at the last paragraph of the letter, the salient words which read, quoting them ipsissima verba, as follows:

`Without prejudice to the right (sic) to the aforementioned compensation our client offers to pay G for the said 7 500 litres of diesel at cost price by monthly instalments of Shs 100 000/=.'

In sum, considering the fact that the key witness for defence, one Latiff, was not H called to give evidence, coupled with the conduct of the defendant, Nurdin, after the mess up and the return of the goods to him by PW1, all is nothing but a highly probable inference that what Tabu Athumani (PW3) told this court was nothing but the truth. While the law requires that whoever asserts in a civil litigation must be capable to prove his/her assertion on the reasonable acceptance of evidence, cum on the reasonable balance of probabil- I

A ity, the same burden is not relieved of the defendant to offer evidence in rebuttal, also on the preponderance of evidence. I am, therefore, satisfied that Tabu (PW3) gave plausible and probable evidence worth to believe and I accept it. In those circumstances, as I have endeavored to lucidate herein above, I am in full agreement with the learned advocate for the plaintiff that the defendant's servants were negligent. This answers the first question. B

The next question is who of the parties breached the contract?

Mr Matata, learned advocate for the defendant, in his written submissions, contended that the evidence adduced shows that the defendant's explanation of the occurrence that resulted into the mixing up of the fuel is more probable one C than that of the plaintiff. With respect, this I have ruled was not the case. He further submitted that in returning the fuel to the defendant without payment plaintiff is in breach of the contract for hiring the tanker TZ 45524 on the account that the D defendant performed his part of the contract to transport the fuel from BP (T) depot in Mwanza to the plaintiff's petrol service station at Musoma. Indeed, with respect, I find this to be an incorrect proposition because for a contract to be complete the offer by DW1 to transport PW1's goods must also be accepted by E PW1 if the delivery is as agreed by the parties. But that was not so in this case and that explains why PW1 refused to accept the delivery the way he did. Mr Magafu, learned counsel for the plaintiff submitted that the defendant's counter claim has no merit because all the problems were caused by the negligence of the defendant's employees. He brushed aside the contention by his adversary on the F issue of contributory negligence on the part of his client (the plaintiff). Instead, he suggested that it was the defendant who breached the contract because of the negligence of his employees, as they failed to take all necessary precautions at the time of off-loading the products. Thus, he said, the defendant is liable for G breach of contract for failure to exercise due diligence and thereby caused the plaintiff to suffer damage. I respectfully commend both the advocates for their industrious efforts they laboured on to assist this court to reach a just and logical conclusion in this matter. On my part I have not remained idle. I have examined not only the evidence but also every aspect of contention raised by each one of them. H

For any performance of a contract each party to the contract owes a duty to the other. Just like a seller has a duty to deliver the goods, and the buyer to accept and pay for them, in accordance with the contract of sale (as spelt out by s 29 of the Sale of Goods I Ordinance), so is a transporter or carrier having the obligation to transport and A deliver the goods to the buyer thereof or the hirer of the motor vehicle, and the latter has a correlative duty to accept the goods and pay for transportation charges. It is crystal clear, therefore, that, unless otherwise agreed, delivery of the goods and payment of the price are concurrent conditions; the seller or transporter B must be ready and willing to give possession of the goods to the buyer in exchange for the price, and the buyer (also hirer) must be ready and willing to pay the price in exchange for possession of the goods (see s 30 of Sale of Goods Ordinance Cap 214). In the instant case we have no doubt that the plaintiff hired C the defendant's motor vehicle to transport and deliver the goods he had purchased from a third party (BP (T) Ltd) for a price, and there is no doubt as well that the defendant agreed to transport and deliver the very goods the plaintiff had purchased from a third person to the plaintiff. The latter would have executed his D obligation if he paid the price money he had agreed to pay the defendant. But this did not happen because the defendant did not deliver to the plaintiffs's possession the 9 000 litres of petroleum products as agreed between the parties for a price of Shs 120 000/= at delivery. It is no longer in dispute that the defendant E delivered to the plaintiff only one thousand five hundred litres of saleable fuel products which was less that the agreed quantity, that is nine thousand litres, hence seven thousand five hundred litres less. Even under the Sale of Goods Ordinance, Cap 214 s 32(1) stipulates that where the seller delivers to the buyer a F quantity of goods less than contracted to sell, the buyer in accepting the goods so delivered must pay for them at the contract rate. Our instant case is analogous to an occurrence of a situation relevant under s 32(3) which says:

> `Where the seller delivers to buyer the goods he contracted to sell mixed with goods of a G different description not included in the contract, the buyer may accept the goods which are in accordance with the contract and reject the rest, or he may reject the whole.'

The plaintiff in this case rejected the seven thousand five hundred litres of H petroleum products which the defendant's employees negligently mixed petrol and diesel, an act that pierced the fundamental root of the contract. It was not the intention of the plaintiff to be delivered to his possession mixtures of petrol and diesel, nor had the defendant offered to so do. The fundamental term of the contract was for the defendant to deliver petrol and diesel in their natural I

A chemical form as delivered from the BP Depot. Therefore, when the defendant delivered to the plaintiff mixtures of petrol and diesel he committed a breach of an express term which entitled the plaintiff to reject the products so delivered. By refusing to accept the goods it did not mean that the plaintiff repudiated the contract. He refused to accept the goods and pay for their transportation and B waited to see the defendant fulfilling his obligation. In the case of RF Mboya v Mewa Mangata (1) although the facts were not the same as the ones in the present case. Platt J was discussing a similar situation involving the rule of acceptance in the law of contract and had the following to say, inter alia: C

`Assuming arguendo that the failure to deliver a workable vehicle constituted a breach going to the root of the contract, for the defendants to rely on that breach as a justification for their own non-performance, they should have refused delivery of the vehicle upon learning of the breach. Having retained the vehicle, the defendants have converted what might have been a breach of D a condition ... and their only remedy is by way of damages caused by the unsatisfactory state of vehicle' . . . also adopting the same view in The National Cash Register Ltd v Stanley [1921] 3 KB 292.'

E Adopting the above proposition, which I respectfully do, in the instant case, what the defendant would have done was to return the goods to the plaintiff if he had believed Latiff's story that the mess up at the plaintiff's petrol service station was due to negligence of the plaintiff's employees. As I have already said above the F defendant did not do that because that story of negligence on the part of the plaintiff's employees never existed. I am more inclined to a factual reflection that the story given by Nurdin (DW1) and his employee Baltazar (DW2) is nothing but an afterthought, it being framed up aimed to exculpate the defendant from the G blame and liability. The defendant's act to continue to store the goods up to 26 September 1994 when they reacted to the plaintiff's advocate's demand notice, which notice was a demand to the defendant to comply with the terms of contract, was, in my view, another manifestation, indeed clear to the eye and mind, that the H defendant continued to hold the contract alive. He then breached it on 26 September 1994 when his advocate Mr Matata wrote to the plaintiff's advocate, Dr Lamwai, disclaiming negligence and liability. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to sue for breach of contract and damage arising therefrom. A similar view was reached in an English case, Frost v Knight (2) at 112, and the rule set out in 8 Hals- I bury's Laws of England, 3rd ed, p 203, para 344 which reads: A

`The repudiation of the contract by one party does not of itself discharge the contract but the other party has the option of treating the contract as at an end, or of waiting until the time of performance has arrived, before making any claim for breach of contract ... If he elects to wait, he remains liable to perform his part of the contract, and enables the party in default not only to perform his part of the contract notwithstanding his previous repudiation of it, but to take B advantage of any supervening circumstances which would justify him in declining to perform it.' C

The above proposition (cited) was also followed in Tin Containers Ltd v Kencon (3). As G H L Fridman said in his book Sale of Goods at pp 221 and 222 the meaning of acceptance involves duty to accept and take possession, just as the duty to deliver is concerned with giving possession of the goods, say to the buyer. This common law rule was codified in English statute, ie the Sale of Goods Act, D 1893, and adopted in the Tanzanian Statute, see s 37 of the Sale of Goods Ordinance; which provides:

`37. The buyer is deemed to have accepted the goods when he intimates to the seller that he E has accepted them or when the goods have been delivered to him, and he does any act in relation to them which is inconsistent with the ownership of the seller, or when, after the lapse of reasonable time, he retains the goods without intimating to the seller that he has rejected them.'

Let it not be misunderstood, however, that the law applicable in the instant matter F are the provisions of the Sale of Goods Ordinance Cap 214. If any provision thereto has been quoted in this judgment, this has only been so done for the purpose of lucidating any point in controversy, and also simply because the G provisions of the Ordinance have `hand and glove' relationship with the law of contract. The provisions of the Sale of Goods Ordinance would have been very much relevant here if the delivery of the goods under discussion were to be delivered by M/S BP (T) Ltd who were the seller of the products to the plaintiff. Now, can it be said that the defendant was an agent of M/S BP (T) Ltd? But what H ever was the case, the principle applicable is the same. The difference in this case is that the plaintiff is no longer bound to pay the purchase price of the goods to the defendant because that price was paid to M/S BP (T) Ltd. In a way, therefore, in my view, the position of the I

A defendant in this case was not different from that of a bailee who had nothing to do with ownership of the goods but possession thereof. Possession would pass away from him to the buyer or owner as soon as both possession and property (in terms of ownership) is wholly transferred to the buyer or owner. This is not what happened in this case. B

From the foregoing reasons and on the strength of the few authorities I have adopted and relied on I am satisfied that the defendant breached the contract thereby entitling the plaintiff to sue for damages. The law as to payment of price for delivery of goods still stands -- as per the common law principle; therefore the C buyer must be ready and willing to pay the price in exchange, as for instance, for the transportation of goods. The plaintiff in this case has been complained of by the defendant for not having paid the price for the delivery of the goods to the plaintiff. But since possession must go together with acceptance of the goods the D plaintiff was not legally bound to pay for the transportation of the goods as the latter were not accepted by him for the reasons already stated above. He is not, therefore, blamable for not paying the transport charges to the defendant who was as yet to deliver the goods to him. He is therefore exonerated from the blame and the defendant is not entitled to any damages -- as no breach was committed by the plaintiff. This terminates the second issue. E

After disposing of the two questions above the third question is no longer difficult. It goes without saying that the party who suffered loss or damages was the plaintiff. But I am not intending to say that the defendant did not suffer any damages or F loss. Indeed he incurred loss when his lorry travelled to Musoma from Mwanza to deliver the said goods. Apart from costs spent to fuel the lorry tanker from Mwanza to Musoma the defendant was also expecting to get some profit from the price G agreed between him and the plaintiff, though controversial in evidence whether it was Shs 120 000/= or Shs 90 000/= single journey. Both the journeys, since the lorry had to return the rejected goods the price would have been either Shs 180 000/= or Shs 240 000/=. The defendant must have also paid allowances and H wages to the driver and turn-boy. But all these losses are not consequent to the plaintiff's negligence but to the defendant's employees, hence the maxim Volent none fit injuria. The defendant therefore carries injuries of his own making or mistakes. In sum the plaintiff suffered bona fide losses by no fault of his own and must be compensated by the party at fault. I say no more on the third issue, and I move to I consider the last but not unimportant issue. A

Having held that the plaintiff deserves compensation, the question that follows is what quantum? Each case depends on the facts and circumstances. For instance in one English case: Thompson v Robinson (Gunmakers) Ltd (4), the defendant refused to accept delivery of a `Vanguard' car which they had contracted to buy B from the plaintiffs. The plaintiff returned the car to the supplier who took it back free from any claim for damages. The plaintiffs claimed as damages their loss of profit. The defendants said that the plaintiffs had suffered no loss of profit and the damages should be nominal. It was admitted that there was no shortage of `Vanguard' cars to meet all immediate demands in the locality. It was held by C Upjohn, J that the plaintiff's loss was the loss of their bargain and they were entitled to recover the loss of profit. And in Charter v Sullivan (5), the facts were similar to those in Thompson (supra) except that the car was a `Hillman' and the plaintiff could sell all the Hillman cars that he could get. The Court of Appeal held D that the plaintiff was entitled only to nominal damages, for he had shown no `loss directly and naturally resulting from the defendant's breach of contract'. This principle was enunciated a long time ago in England, in the case of Hadley v Baxendale (6), Alderson B delivering the judgment of the court, the substance of which reads as follows: E

> `Now we think the proper rule in such a case as the present is this: Where two parties have made a contract which one of them had broken, the damages which the other party ought to receive in respect of such breach of contract should be such as may fairly and reasonably be F considered either arising naturally, ie according to the usual course of things, from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both the parties, at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it. Now, if the special circumstances under which the contract was actually made were communicated to the defendants by the plaintiffs, and thus known to both parties, the G damages resulting from the breach of such a contract, which they would reasonably contemplate, would be the amount of injury which would ordinarily follow from a breach of contract under the special circumstances so known and communicated ...' H

The court further stated that, `on the other hand, if these special circumstances were wholly unknown to the party breaking the contract, he, at the most, could only be supposed to have had in his contemplation the amount of injury which would arise generally'. I

MREMA J

A Mnzavas J (as he then was), in considering a similar situation involving remoteness of damages and measure of damages in Nhuvya s/o Subajiwa v Jackson s/o Chilewa (7) followed, with approval, that principle in Hadley (supra) which to date is still good law.

Applying the above cited rule in the present case, the question is whether from the B facts of the case we can infer special circumstances which were wholly unknown to the party breaking the contract, namely, the defendant? The plaintiff claimed that he suffered damages or loss as the result of termination of his agency with BP (T) Ltd when the Western Branch Manager, one Mr Njau, served on him (plaintiff) a letter dated Monday, 24 October 1994, terminating his C dealership at BP Musoma Service Station as per exh P2. Such a circumstance, in my view, would not have been contemplated by the defendant when agreeing to transport and deliver the said goods to the plaintiff, that the plaintiff's agency would be terminated. It is a circumstance which is by far quite remote from the original D intentions of the parties and as such it would be absurd, if not unjust to direct such remoteness of damages against the defendant. As already stated above the defendant (DW1) repudiated the contract on 26 September 1994 and this means, E in my view, the loss in profit incurred by the plaintiff as the result of the breach is measured between the date of delivery was supposed to take place and the date of repudiation of the contract, which was 14 August 1994 and 26 September 1994. That was a period of forty two days.

It has been submitted, in evidence, that the plaintiff suffered loss of profits for a F continuous period of eight months. As was stated in Roth & Co v Tayson, Townsed & Co (8), and followed in the judgment of Dunkirk Colliery Co v Lever (9), per James, LJ, that the standard required of the injured party in the mitigation of damages is to ensure that he does not act unreasonably. The plaintiff, after the defendant repudiated the contract on 26 September 1994, decided to exercise the G option of accepting that repudiation and then proceeded to sue for breach of the contract. If he (PW1) chose to disregard to refuse to accept it then it would mean that the contract remained in full effect and the position might have been different. In a situation like the latter example it was observed in White & Carter (Councils) Ltd v McGregor (10) that the injured party has no duty to mitigate. In the light of many authorities I have read I am not in the inclination to accept the proposition by H the plaintiff that he is entitled to be compensated loss of profits for a period of eight months. The reason why his service station was out of rendering services to the members of the public for the period of I eight months, as put and proposed by the plaintiff, is partly because of the refusal A by the BP (T) Ltd to service the contaminated underground tanks at the plaintiff's station and partly because the plaintiff's dealership was withdrawn by the proprietor of the Musoma Service Station, namely, BP (T) Ltd on 24 October 1994 (see exh P2). The non-service of the tanks was not anything to be contemplated in B the contract of the parties, and if any breach of contract was committed as the result of terminating PW1's agency the consequences thereof would not have affected the defendant. The plaintiff was not less required to do than what Scrutoon LJ, said in concurrence with the views of McCardie, J in Payzu Ltd v Saunders (11), that, and I quote: C

`I am of the same opinion. Whether it be more correct to say that a plaintiff must minimise his damages, or to say that he can recover no more than he would have suffered if he acted reasonably because any further damages do not reasonably arise from the defendant's breach, the result is the same ... Mr Mathews has contended that in considering what steps D should be taken to mitigate the damage all contractual relations with the party must be excluded. That is contrary to my experience. In certain cases of personal service it may be unreasonable to expect a plaintiff to consider an offer from the other party who has grossly injured him; but in commercial contracts it is generally reasonable to accept an offer from the E party in default. However, it is always a question of fact. About the law there is no difficulty.'

In the instant case, it has been contended on behalf of the defendant that the F plaintiff unreasonably refused to accept the offer by the defendant to pay or purchase the mixed up products at cost price. But, in my inclined view, I think that the plaintiff in deciding whether to accept the defendant's offer would greatly depend upon consideration as to the terms in which the offer was made, its bona G fides or otherwise, its relation to their own business method and financial position, and all the circumstances of the case. And, after all, I think that an acceptance of the offer would not preclude an action for damages for the actual loss sustained. In other words, the plaintiff could have accepted the offer to receive Shs 100 000/= by instalments per month until the whole amount of Shs H 2,000,000/= plus is paid off but that would not operate as a bar against the plaintiff to sue for other damages denied by the defendant. So, it seems right, therefore, to suggest that the plaintiff was entitled to take the first course as he did to claim for full damages, or he could have taken the latter proposed course and then taken action to I

A recover the balance. For this reason I find the defendant's argument, that is on the aspect of the plaintiff's refusal to accept the offer of payment by instalment at the rate of Shs 100 000/=, as not maintainable because the offer was apparently individualistic with inconsiderate self centred interest.

B What amount in terms of profit then did the plaintiff lose for a period of 42 days? It is the plaintiff's case that for the period his service station remained partially operative, only kerosene was selling, he was incurring a loss of Shs 30 000/= profit margin per day. That is, the Shs 30

000/= profit margin is exclusive of all other considerations as to costs and incidentals. Although such claim falls under C special damages and ought to be strictly proved, particularly by production of receipts, however, I tend to rely on the evidence of PW1 and Tabu (PW3) that the sales of fuel products at the station was two thousand litres plus. PW1 further said that one litre of petrol, without specifying whether it was super or regular, cost Shs D 210/= as purchase price and Shs 228/90= selling price at the material time. This was not disputed by the opposite party. The difference between selling price and purchase price, is Shs 33/10. Suppose this was the profit realized from the sale of one litre of petrol regular, a sale of one thousand litres per day would realize Shs E 33 100/= profit. In normal circumstances it was possible that the plaintiff was able to sell not less than one thousand litres of petrol, be it regular or super, whose prices differ. Computing this figure of Shs 33 100/= as a day's profit from the sales F of one thousand litres by the number of the days the plaintiff incurred loss in profit, which I have found to be forty two days, it would mean that the plaintiff would have earned Shs 1,260,000/= as profit. But the plaintiff has requested compensation of Shs 242 250/= being loss of profit on the consignment. There is G no prayer for loss of profit incurred during the period the defendant had kept the contract alive before repudiating it. The law is that the injured party must be compensated for what he asked for in his pleadings. Under the circumstances I will not award more than the Shs 242 250/= he had pleaded, being loss of profit on the consignment. Accordingly I grant the prayer sought at para 6(a) and (b), that is H the loss of the consignment in the sum of Shs 2,185,000 and Shs 242 250/= loss of profit on the consignment, respectively, although he could have earned more on the loss of profit had this claim been pleaded and argued properly. Item 6(c) falls under special damages which ought to be strictly proved. Definitely the plaintiff might have incurred costs in pursuing the matter when the I mess up occurred at his business place. As the plaintiff has not strictly proved the A claim I refuse to grant it under this sub-heading. However, I reserve the claim to be considered under the head of general damages.

I now move to consider prayer 9(b) of the plaint, the plaintiff has prayed for Shs 40,000,000/= as general damages. Rufus Isaac, King's Counsel, in submitting on B the question of damages in a suit for defamatory libel against the plaintiff; in E Hulton and Co v Jones (12), contended that aggravated damages should not be assessed in the light of the negligent part only but also upon proof of evidence of malice on the part of the defendant, an argument which I find to be good and C sound. It has been said in many judicial authorities in the Tanzanian Jurisdiction and elsewhere, that damages for breach of contract must be in the nature of compensation not punishment, and that the general rule applicable to such cases was as in effect stated by Cockburn CJ in Engel v Fitch at 330 and I respectfully quote the salient words, which are: D

`By the law of England as a general rule a vendor who from whatever cause fails to perform his contract is bound; as was said by Lord Wensleydale in the case relevant, to place the purchaser, so far as money will do it, in the position he would have been performed. If a man E sells a cargo of goods not yet to come to hand, but which he believes to have been consigned to him from abroad, and the goods fail to arrive, it will be no answer to the intended purchaser to say that a third party who had engaged to consign the goods to the seller had deceived or disappointed him. The purchaser will be entitled to the difference between the contract price and the market price.' F

But there is more than that in the instant case. The goods were not delivered to the plaintiffs only but also the defendant's employees did worse than good to the plaintiff through their unchallenged negligent act. By contaminating the plaintiff's G underground tanks through mixing petrol and diesel made it impossible for the plaintiff to continue using the tanks commercially until they were serviced by the owners of the tanks -- M/S BP (T) Ltd. By regulation, as stated in evidence, the plaintiff could not take personal undertaking to service the tanks to enable him resume his business operation. We have been told in evidence that M/S BP (T) H Ltd became stubborn and were reluctant to perform their duties to put back the tanks into operational condition. It is not also in dispute that the plaintiff did not sit back to wait for a miracle to take place. He went as far as complaining to the Minister for Water and Energy, as it then was. It I

MREMA J

A is the plaintiff's evidence that the clean up exercise of the tanks was done about April 1995, which is about a period of eight months from 18 August 1994 when the plaintiff rang and complained to one Saukiwa, one of the BP's sales officer at the depot, Mwanza South. This piece of evidence has not been contradicted by the defence. Even if we were to assume, arguendo, that the tanks B were serviced after a period of three months, still, definitely, the plaintiff would lose about Shs 1,800,000/= as profit at the rate of Shs 30 000/= per day, which amount I consider to be reasonable in the circumstance. Although the defendant claimed that the entire lot of seven thousand five hundred litres of spoilt petrol and C diesel mixtures were destroyed by emptying the same into the waters of the Lake Victoria, nevertheless, there has not been one iota of evidence vouching for the alleged destruction, except for the bare words of DW1 and DW2. Both the law D and equity put me to an inclination that the plaintiff deserves some compensation resulting from the tortures which inflicted his anguish of mind while moving up and down to insist on the proprietors of the Musoma Service Station to make good the damage caused to the underground tanks caused by the E defendant's employees' negligence. Indeed, I have no doubt, the plaintiff was already in possession of business goodwill and ostensibly, I believe, he had established business relationships with at least few customers who were making use of his petrol service station. When this problem arose definitely some of those `permanent' customers must have lost that goodwill already established with the F plaintiff and therefore changed their minds and moved to other service stations they considered to be more reliable and reputable. On the premise I am lured to accepting the plaintiff's proposition that as a result of the mess up consequent upon the defendant's negligence, his business reputation was perceived G negatively. For the foregoing reasons I can conceive nothing better in the circumstances than ordering the defendant to compensate the plaintiff (PW1) the damage he suffered, and for this I decree a sum of Shs 1,800,000/= as general damages.

H Also I allow the plaintiff's prayer 9(c) to the effect that the defendant is condemned to pay interest on the decretal amount at the court's rate from the date of judgment untill when payment is made in full. Costs to the plaintiff as against the defendant at para 9(d) of the plaint.
The plaintiff had stated at para 5(c) of the plaint that the plaintiff would seek to rely on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitor; it is strange, however, the plaintiff's counsel, Mr Magafu, did not seem I eager to draw to its attention (that legal defence) in his submission, although he A simply submitted that when a person fails to fulfil a duty to take care he is responsible for this act, even though he acts as a servant. He referred the court to an English case Yuille v B & B Fisheries (Leigh) Ltd and Bates (14). Mr Magafu B sent to us his written submission from Dar es Salaam. He did not attach to his written submission the substance of the decision in the case he cited and, on my part, with regret, I must confess that I have not had the opportunity to read the cited case because our library (at Mwanza) does not seem to be in possession of that case.
Be that as it may, I agree with the learned defendant's counsel that the doctrine of C res ipsa loquitur which the plaintiff sought to rely on applies to negligent liability cases in which, inter alia, there is no direct evidence as to why and how the occurrence, consequent upon negligence, took place, and therefore, leave the evidence adduced before the Court for the latter to draw reasonable inference D from the facts available and the circumstances therefrom and make deduction as what was the probable cause of the accident or occurrence. As stated in the Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd ed, vol 28, para 81 at 79, that the maxim res ipsa E loquitur applies only where the causes of the accident are unknown but the inference of negligence is clear from the nature of the accident, and the defendant is therefore liable if he does not produce evidence to counter inference, and this proposition was discussed in McArthur v Dominion Cartridge Co (15). If the F causes are sufficiently known, the case ceases to be one where the facts speak for themselves and the court has to determine whether or not, from the known facts, negligence is to be inferred -- also see Barkway v South Wales Transport Co Ltd (16) House Lords at 394, per Lord Porter. In the East African situation, the G doctrine was considered, though motor accident cases, in Dewshi v Kuldp's Touring Co (17); Embu Public Road Services Ltd v Riimi (18); Msuri Muhhidn v Nazzor Bin Seif El Kassaby and Another (19); but to mention a few. The significance of the rule (doctrine) in all these cases is that a defendant can only be successful in relying on the doctrine if he can show or prove that there was no H negligence on his part which contributed to the occurrence (accident), or that there was a probable cause of the accident which did not connote negligence on his part, or the accident or occurrence was due to circumstances not within his control. It is on such facts or circumstances a Trial Judge or magistrate can make a finding of fact as whether a defendant has succeeded in establishing the facts which rebut the presumption of negligence on his part. Once the defen- I
MREMA J

A dant's explanation is accepted as being true, the burden to prove that the defendant was negligent still remains on the plaintiff.

In the present case I am not eager to delve at lengths into the various cases in which the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was discussed because I have already made a finding to the effect that it is the defendant who by necessary inference B from the evidence available tacitly admitted to have negligently mixed up petrol and diesel thereby contaminating the plaintiff's underground tanks. I rejected the defendant's evidence that it was the plaintiff's employee (PW3) who was negligent by showing DW2 and DW1's driver the wrong tanks and consequently resulted C into the emptying of the petrol and diesel into wrong underground tanks. Thus, having rejected the defendant's defence, it follows as day follows night that the defendant's counter claim abysmally fails. I dismiss the counter claim with costs to the plaintiff. In sum, the plaintiff's claim succeeds, but to the following extent as hereunder shown: D

(1) The claim of Shs 40,000,000/= as per para 9(b) of the plaint is reduced to Shs 1,800,000/=;

(2) the plaintiff to be compensated Shs 2,185,000/= being loss of the E consignment of seven thousand five hundred litres of petrol as prayed at para 6(b) of the plaint, and Shs 242 250/= loss of profit on the consignment, thus making a total of Shs 2,427,250/=;

(3) Interest on the decretal amount at the court's rate from the date of judgment till when payment is made in full, and F

(4) Costs to the plaintiff as against the defendant as prayed at para 9(d) of the plaint.

Msumi J:

This is an application for the prerogative orders of certiorari and mandamus. H These orders are sought against the decision of the Minister for Lands and Housing in revoking the right of occupancy granted to the applicant on 1 April 1989 for plot No 3 at Ununio area, Kinondoni District. According to the submission of Mr Mwidunda, the learned State Attorney who advocated for the respondent the contentious revocation was effected by an order issued on 9 March 1995. For unknown reasons, however, respondent did not I

A make available to the court the said revocation order. And it appears applicant became aware of the said order by a notice published in a copy of Uhuru newspaper.

As procedurally required, the application is supported by the affidavit and B statement deposed by the applicant. Among other things, applicant asserted that at the time when the revocation was done he had partially developed the suit plot and had submitted plans to the then City Council for a building permit. In fact he contended that his application for a building permit had been pending for over two years.

C In response to the applicant's contentions, respondent filed a counter affidavit deposed by the Commissioner for Lands one Emil Temigunga Luyangi who generally disputed all the contentions and demanded the applicant to strictly prove them.

D To augment the affidavit and statement of the applicant, Mr Muccadam, advocate, submitted the following grounds. In order for a revocation order to be legally valid it must have been made on one or more of the grounds stipulated under s 10(1) of the Land Ordinance. The learned counsel respectfully argued that in the present case the purported revocation is not on any of these grounds. Secondly he submitted that it was not legally sufficient for the President to endorse E the word `Nakubali' in the minute sheet in which the Minister for lands made the proposal for the said revocation. To his understanding of the law the learned counsel was of the respectful view that there ought to have been executed an instrument signed under his seal. F

Thirdly he challenged the counter affidavit when it stated that the revocation was done by the Minister on behalf of the President. He contended that the law does not empower the President to delegate this power. And lastly before the revocation order was issued applicant was not sufficiently notified of the President's intent to G do so and require him to show cause why that intent should not have been effected. For this reason, the learned counsel argued, his client was condemned unheard.

H In reply to the first argument, counsel for the respondent submitted that the revocation was done after the applicant had failed to develop the suit plot as stipulated in the condition for offer of the right of occupancy. On the second and third arguments, the learned counsel cited the decision of the Court of Appeal in Agro Industries Ltd v AG Civil Appeal (1) as an authority for his submission that the word `Nakubali' endorsed by the President in the minute sheet is a legally sufficient expression by the President that he has revoked the I said right of occupancy. In other words there is no legal requirement that such A expression should have been in a form of an instrument signed by the President under his seal. Also relying on the same authority the learned counsel argued that the Minister for Lands and Housing acted properly when he signed the revocation order on behalf of the President. And lastly the learned counsel submitted that B applicant was sufficiently notified of the President's intent to revoke the suit right of occupancy for breach of development condition unless he showed cause why the same should not have been effected.

Let me first deal with the second and third grounds together. With respect I totally C agree with Mr Mwidunda's exposition of the law on the basis of the decision in the Agro Industries case, supra. The President is not required to execute a sealed instrument in order to render his revocation order legally sustainable. Similarly the Minister was not acting on the power delegated to him by the President. He was just executing the revocation order which had already been issued by the President. D

The issue raised in the first and fourth grounds are whether applicant was sufficiently notified of the intended revocation and the ground for it and secondly whether the President considered the reasons furnished by the applicant opposing E the intended revocation. As far as the first issue is concerned, I have no doubt in my mind that applicant was sufficiently notified and required to show cause why his right of occupancy should not have been revoked. However my answer to the second issue is on the negative. F

In is quite evident from the counter affidavit of the Commissioner for Lands that the reasons furnished by applicant were not considered in deciding whether or not the suit right of occupancy should have been revoked. In para 5 of his affidavit the applicant said: G

> `That I have partially developed the land and I have plans submitted to City Council for approval of my project on the land since March, 1992.'

And in support of this assertion application made available to the court and H respondent a cash receipt dated 15 March 1992 for Shs 840/= issued by the City Council in the name of the applicant in which it is clearly indicated that the said payment was for submission of the building plans in respect of plot 3 Ununio. Quite surprisingly the Commissioner for Lands in para 3 of his counter affidavit said: I

MSUMI J
A `That the contents of para 4 and 5 of the affidavit are strongly denied and it is stated the applicant's right of occupancy was revoked lawfully and properly.'
It is obvious that the Commissioner did not understand what the applicant was B contending in the said paragraph of his affidavit or he decided to be evasive. This assessment is also applicable to the learned counsel for the respondent because in his reply to the submission of the applicant he said nothing on the argument raised by his colleague that the suit plot had been partially developed when it was recommended to the President for revocation. C
From what has transpired, I am of the respectful opinion that the President did not consider the grounds given by the applicant before the suit right of occupancy was revoked. This could have happened either the officers concerned did not furnish me with the said grounds or after being so furnished, the President decided not to D consider them. In my opinion the former possibility appears to be the most likely one. However the effect of either of the possibility is the same. It amounted to condemning of the applicant unheard. The principle of natural justice which requires a person to be afforded with opportunity to defend himself necessarily implies that the person determining the matter will consider the party's defence E before making a decision which affects the right of such party. Failure to consider such defence is as bad as not affording the party an opportunity of the right of hearing.
F For the aforementioned reasons it is held that the revocation order is bad in law for it was issued in contravention of the principles of natural justice in that the applicant was not given the right of hearing. This application is therefore granted with costs. The said revocation order is hereby quashed and it is directed that the right of occupancy of the applicant be restored. G

The applicant applied for an order to stay the execution of a judgment granted D against it pending an appeal. The applicant contended that if it were not granted the applicant would suffer great loss and damage as the amount involved was great and would cause its business to come to a standstill. It was contended further that the chances of success on appeal were high. The respondent opposed the application and contended that they were in a sound financial position E and would be able to pay in the event of the appeal going against them. The respondent denied that the prospects on appeal favoured the applicant.

Held:

(i) The fact that the amount of loss and damage the applicant was likely to F sustain if no stay order was granted was not a sufficient reason for the granting of an order: the decretal amount, if paid, was capable of being paid by the respondent. The submission that if a stay order was not granted the applicant, a large public corporation, would suffer such irreparable loss that it was incapable of being being atoned by way of damages, was unacceptable; G

(ii) The chances of success of an intended appeal, though a relevant factor in certain situations, could only be meaningfully be assessed later on appeal after hearing arguments from both sides. This was a general principle which was not without exception;

(iii) The circumstances of the present case were such that even H though the loss and damage that the applicant was likely to sustain if stay of execution were not granted could be atoned by way of damages, there were still lingering doubts whether a stay was not warranted on account of other factors: the prospects of appeal and the balance of convenience. The Court accordingly decided to exercise its discretionary powers under Rule 9(2)(b) and granted a stay subject to the condition that the applicant deposit the decretal amount in court. I

Lubuva JA:

This is an application for stay of execution. It is filed under Rule 9(2)(b) of the D Court's rules. The applicant is seeking an order from this Court that the execution of the High Court decision in Civil Case No 283 of 1988 dated 4 February 1997 be stayed pending the determination of the intended appeal in respect of which a notice of appeal has been filed.

Before the High Court, the respondent in this application had filed a suit against the E applicant, Tanzania Posts and Telecommunications Corporation. The suit was fixed for hearing on 20 May 1994 when the respondent failed to appear in court. As a result, an order was issued granting the respondent leave to prove the suit ex-parte. The applicant filed an application for setting aside the order of 20 May F 1994 for ex-parte proof. On 4 February 1997 the High Court (Kyando, J) held that the applicant had failed to show good cause for the failure to appear before the court on 20 May 1994. The application was dismissed. In the same proceedings judgment was entered for the respondent on the basis of the affidavit filed by the G respondent for ex-parte proof. That decision (4 February 1997) is the subject of this application.

The application is supported by an affidavit deposed by one M C Ndunguru, a legal officer with the applicant corporation. In the affidavit it is deposed that if stay of H execution is not granted the applicant will suffer great loss and damage as the amount involved is very big which would cause the applicant's business to come to a standstill. Mrs Gama, learned Counsel from the Tanzania Legal Corporation appeared for the applicant. In her submission she urged two points. First that if the execution takes place the applicant would suffer an irreparable loss and damage. As the amount I involved is a large sum of money, the business of the applicant would be so A affected that it would be brought to a stand still, she insisted. Secondly, that the intended appeal has great chance of success because, she said, the decision of the High Court of 4 February 1997 raises fundamental legal issues. For these reasons, she urged the Court to exercise its discretionary powers under Rule 9(2)(b) of the Court's Rules, 1979. B

Opposing the application, Mr Maira, learned counsel represented the respondent. He advanced the following reasons for opposing the application: that there was no merit in the application because, apart from asserting that the amount involved is large and that if execution takes place, the business of the applicant would be C brought to a standstill, otherwise no special circumstances have been advanced for the stay order. He submitted further that his client, the respondent is in sound financial position in which case, in the event the applicant succeeds in the intended appeal, the amount, the subject matter of the decree would be repaid. Thirdly, Mr Maira pressed that the intended appeal has very slim chances of D success. And so, Mr Maira invited the Court to dismiss the application because, in his view, there was no reason why the respondent should be denied of his right to enjoy the fruits of his successful litigation. E

I will first deal with the discretionary powers of the Court in matters pertaining to application for stay of execution under Rule 9(2)(b) of the Court's Rules, 1979. As rightly submitted by Mr Maira, learned Counsel, in exercising the Court's discretion, such discretion should at all times be exercised judicially. This is in F order to ensure that the ends of justice in each case are attained. In order for this to be achieved, each case must be taken on its merits and circumstances. In the light of this general principle I will next examine the relevant factors for the granting or otherwise of the stay order in the instant case. G

In the first place, what is the loss and damage that the applicant is likely to sustain if no stay order is granted. As already indicated, Mrs Gama, learned Counsel for the applicant had urged that because the amount involved is huge, the applicant's H business would be brought to a stand still. With respect, I am unable to accept this as sufficient reason for the granting of a stay of execution. It is elementary that the loss involved should be such as would not be atoned by way of an award of damages. On this, there is an unbroken chain of authorities including decisions of this Court. Very recently, in Tanzania Cotton Marketing Board v Cogecot Cotton I

A Company SA (1) this principle was revisited. In this case, I am respectively in agreement with Mr Maira that the decretal amount if paid is capable of being repaid by the respondent. I cannot accept the submission by Mrs Gama that if a stay order is not granted, the applicant, a renowned public corporation would suffer B such irreparable loss that is incapable of being atoned by way of damages. Furthermore, in the instant matter, no sufficient ground has been laid upon which the Court could satisfy itself that in fact, such substantial loss would occur. With respect, mere claim that the applicant's business would be affected is not enough.

C I would now consider the other factor, namely, the chances of success of the intended appeal. Mrs Gama has vehemently urged that the intended appeal has overwhelming chances of success. This of course was strongly resisted by Mr D Maira, learned Counsel for the respondent. It is however relevant at this juncture, to reflect that this Court has on numerous occasions taken the view that the chances of success of an intended appeal though a relevant factor in certain situations, it can only meaningfully be assessed later on appeal after hearing arguments from both sides. See Transport Equipment Ltd v Reginald John Nolan E (2); Joseph K Mlay v Ahmed Mohamed (3). This, it is common knowledge is but a general principle which in my view, is not without exception. There are situations in which as a matter of exception to the rule and depending on the circumstances of the case, the chances of success can be gauged right away. In this case, one peculiar feature emerges quite clearly from the ruling of the High Court. That is F that, on 4 February 1997, the matter was set for a decision on the application for setting aside the order of 20 May 1994 which granted leave to the respondent to prove the suit ex parte. Having decided on that by rejecting and dismissing the G application the matter did not end there. The learned judge embarked on another exercise ie judgment was entered for the respondent on the basis of the affidavit as ex-parte proof. Ordinarily, with the dismissal of the application for setting aside the order of 20 May 1994, the matter should have been set for another date for ex-parte proof. As it was done, the opportunity for the applicant to appeal against that decision refusing to set aside the order of 20 May 1994 was shuttered by the entry of the ex-parte judgment. The propriety of this in my view, may well be a deserving legal point for close examination on appeal. H

Lastly, I think it desirable to consider the case within the principle of the balance of convenience. It is all the more so in matters involving the exercise of discretionary powers after considering the I various relevant factors. The modern and current trend in this direction is AI demonstrated by the following English case of Wincester Cigarette Machinery Ltd v Payne and Another (No 2) in which it was inter alia stated:

`In recent cases it has been said that the practice of the court had moved on from the principle B that the only ground for a stay was the reasonable probability that damages and costs paid would not be repaid if the appeal succeeded. Those cases hold that the approach of the court now was a matter of common sense and a balance of advantage ...' (emphasis supplied) C

In the instant case, the circumstances are such that even though the loss and damage that the applicant is likely to sustain if stay of execution is not granted can be atoned by way of damages, still I have lingering doubts in my mind whether a stay order is not warranted on account of other factors. These are, as already D pointed out, the prospects of the intended appeal and the balance of convenience. Consequently, having regard to the circumstances of the case, I am convinced that it accords with common sense and a sense of convenience that the discretionary powers of the Court under Rule 9(2)(b) to grant a stay of execution E pending appeal could appropriately be invoked. Accordingly, it is ordered that the execution of the decision of the High Court in Civil Case No 283 of 1988 dated 4 February 1997 be stayed pending the determination of the intended appeal. It is further ordered that the stay order is granted upon the condition that the applicant deposits the decretal amount in court. Costs in the cause. It is so ordered. F

Mfalila JA: H

This is an application to strike out the notice of appeal filed by the respondent for appealing against the ruling of Mapigano J dated 25 April 1996 refusing to issue a certificate or to certify a point of law to this Court, following his judgment dated 17 October 1995. Mapigano J ruled that there was no point of law involved for him to certify. Following this ruling, the respondent filed the notice of appeal the same day, that is on 25 April 1996. But since then the I respondent did nothing to prosecute the intended appeal, hence the applicant's A submission that the said notice of appeal be struck out.

Before proceeding further, I wish to correct the record that the notice of appeal being impugned in this application relates to the ruling of Mapigano J dated 25 April 1996 and not his judgment dated 17 October 1995. Hence the notice of appeal filed by the respondent on 25 April 1996 is in time and not time barred as stated in the applicant's affidavit. B

However, with regard to the lack of essential steps being taken, Mr Magesa, Counsel for the respondent, submitted that they did take essential steps in that they filed an application for extension of time within which to appeal against the ruling of Mapigaro J and that they did this as early as March 1997. The short C answer to this with respect is that this is not an essential step envisaged in Rule 82. What is envisaged in that rule are steps which advance the hearing of the appeal not explanations for delays. In this particular case, one of the most essential steps was to apply for leave to appeal against the ruling of Mapigano J of D 25 April 1996, for there was no right of appeal to this Court against that ruling. This was not done, all that was done was simply to apply for extension of time within which to appeal as if there was a right of appeal without leave. E

The notice of appeal was filed on 25 April 1996 and nothing essential has been done to-date to prosecute the appeal not even as far as the record shows, applying for copy of records with copy to the applicant.

In the circumstances I am satisfied that the respondent has failed to take essential F steps to prosecute the appeal for the last one year. This delay is more than inordinate.
I allow this application and order that the notice of appeal dated 25 April 1996 be and is hereby struck out with costs. G

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Delay in prosecution of - What constitutes - Failure to serve applicant with a copy of notice of appeal and failure to lodge the appeal within 60 days D
-Headnote
The applicant applied for the striking out the respondent's notice of appeal for failure to take essential steps, viz the failure to serve a copy of the notice of appeal on the applicant or his counsel and to lodge the appeal within 60 days of the filing of the notice of appeal. E
The respondent contended that it had attempted to serve the copy of the notice of the appeal on the applicant who had refused to accept such service and directed the respondent to his legal counsel. The respondent contended further that it had in fact served the notice on the applicant's counsel. F
Held:

(i) Where a party has engaged the services of counsel then he is perfectly entitled to direct that any service relating to that case be effected on his counsel: he was not obliged to accept service personally;

(ii) On the probabilities and facts of the matter it could not be held that the documents were received by or on behalf of applicant's counsel. G

(iii) The failure to serve the applicant with a copy of the notice of appeal within 7 days as required by Rule 77(1) and the failure to lodge the appeal within 60 days of the notice as required by Rule 83(1) were in the absence of any extension of time by the court, grounds which warranted the striking out of the notice of appeal. Kisanga JA: A
This is an application to strike out a notice of appeal for failure to take two essential steps, namely (1) to serve a copy of the notice of appeal on the applicant or his counsel and (2) to lodge the appeal within sixty days of the filing of the notice of appeal. The matter originates from the decision by the High Court (Bubeshi J) refusing an application to restore Civil Appeal No 91 of 1994 which had been B dismissed for want of prosecution. Following such refusal the respondent company was aggrieved, duly gave notice of its intention to appeal and obtained leave to appeal to this Court against the refusal. Meantime, however, and as C already intimated, the applicant has now brought this notice of motion seeking to have the notice of appeal struck out on the grounds as indicated above. Before me the applicant was represented by Mr J R Kambamwene, learned advocate while Mr D C Mbezi, learned advocate, appeared for the respondent company. D
The notice of motion is duly supported by the affidavit of Mr Kambamwene and that of the applicant himself. Both affidavits are to the effect that the respondent has failed to serve the applicant or his counsel with a copy of the notice of appeal and has failed to lodge the appeal within sixty days of the notice of appeal. Elaborating E on this in his oral submission, Mr Kambamwene maintained that as regards the failure to lodge the appeal within the prescribed period of sixty days, the respondent could not benefit from the exception under Rule 83(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules because the respondent did not serve the applicant or his counsel with any copy of a letter to the Registrar requesting for proceedings of the case in question. F
In response to this, two counter-affidavits were filed by Mr Mbezi and by one Mr Hyera, a principal officer of the respondent company. The depositions are to the effect that at first, attempt was made to serve on the applicant personally a copy of G the letter to the Registrar applying for proceedings, but that the applicant declined service and directed that the service be effected on his advocate, which was accordingly done within the time prescribed by the Court of Appeal Rules. H
It is elementary in matters of procedure that he who makes an allegation has the burden of proving it. In the context of this case Mr Mbezi and his client have the burden of proving their claim that they did serve on Mr Kambamwene, the applicant's advocate, the two documents in issue ie the copy of the notice of appeal and the copy of the letter to the Registrar applying for proceedings. In an I
KISANGA JA
A attempt to discharge that burden Mr Mbezi produced a dispatch book which was allegedly signed to acknowledge receipt of the two documents. According to Mr Hyera who claims to have effected the service, he went to Mr Kambamwene's chambers in Dar es Salaam and there handed to someone an envelope containing B the two documents. The handing ever of the envelope was against signature in the said dispatch book, but Mr Hyera does not know the name or otherwise the identity of the person so receiving the envelope and signing for it. Mr Kambamwene completely refuted the allegation.

C I have anxiously considered this matter in the course of which I have examined closely the relevant page of the dispatch book produced by Mr Mbezi. There is one striking feature which appears on this page. The spot corresponding to the alleged signature is rubbed off and completely obliterated such that no signature is identifiable there. In other words it is not possible for anyone to say that the D signature which has been rubbed off was or was not of a person working at Mr Kambamwene's chambers. As such, therefore, the dispatch book is completely worthless as evidence to prove that the two documents in question were received by, or on behalf of, Mr Kambamwene, the applicant's counsel as alleged. In other E words the signature which has been rubbed off from the dispatch book could be of any person quite unconnected with Mr Kambamwene or his chambers. Indeed Mr Mbezi conceded this point.

If the dispatch book cannot be relied upon to prove service of the two documents on the applicant's advocate, then what other evidence is there to prove it? I could find none. F

Mr Mbezi in another dimension contended that the two documents should be deemed to have been duly served on the applicant personally when he declined to accept them and directed them to be served on his advocate. With due respect I G cannot agree. Where a party to a case has engaged the services of counsel then in my view he is perfectly entitled to direct that any service relating to that case be effected on his counsel. He may, of course, accept service personally and then pass it on to his lawyer, but to my mind he is not obliged or bound to do so. Nor can such a party properly be said to have refused service in so doing. For, H all that he has done is to direct that the service be effected on his agent, and if such agent does exist and is identifiable then the party could not properly be said to have refused service; rather the party is merely saying that the matter should be referred to his agent who is better placed in terms of, say, expertise to deal with the matter. The position would be differ- I ent if the said agent does not in fact exist; but this was not the position in the A present case because the applicant's advocate was known and could be located. I am therefore of the settled view that no service was effected on the applicant personally when he declined and directed that the same be effected on his counsel.

In yet another desperate attempt to resist the application Mr Mbezi referred to a B letter (EMS dated 4 December 1995) addressed to Mr Kambamwene and apparently enclosing copies of the two documents in question. According to the learned counsel, the two documents were thereby duly served on Mr Kambamwene, the applicant's advocate. However, as rightly pointed out by Mr Kambamwene, on the date of that letter ie 4 December 1995 the time for serving C the documents on the applicant had long elapsed, although the documents themselves were apparently written on time.

The net result, therefore, is that the respondent has failed to prove the allegation that the two documents ie a copy of the notice of appeal and a copy of the letter to D the Registrar applying for the proceedings of the case, were duly served on the applicant or his counsel. Since there has been no application for extension of time to serve these documents on the applicant, the present application must succeed. As Mr Kambamwene rightly pointed out, the respondent company cannot in terms of the exception under Rule 83(1) of the Rules claim protection against the time E running against it because the applicant was not duly served with a copy of the letter to the Registrar applying for court proceedings in the case. That is to say, the time for lodging the appeal has long elapsed, and there is nothing to salvage that situation. F

Thus, failure to serve the applicant with a copy of the notice of appeal within seven days of the notice as required by Rule 77(1) of the Rules, and failure to lodge the appeal within 60 days of the notice as required by Rule 83(1) are, in the absence of any evidence of extension of time by the Court to do these things, grounds which warrant the striking out of the notice of appeal, which I hereby do. The applicant is to have his costs. G

Kisanga JA: H

This is an application for extension of time to serve on the respondent a copy of the notice of appeal and a copy of the letter to the Registrar applying for proceedings in the case. The applicant is advocated for by Mr E H Mbuya while the respondent appeared and resisted the application in person.

The ground for the application, as set out in the affidavits of Mr Mbuya and his clerk, one Elda Maro, is that the said Elda Maro, I through inadvertence, failed to serve the two documents above mentioned on the A respondent's advocate.

The respondent vigorously resisted the application on the ground that inadvertence on Mr Mbuya's clerk does not amount to sufficient cause for granting extension of time, and that Mr Mbuya must take responsibility for the failing of his clerk. He added that this case has been in the courts for too long so that granting this B application would serve to deny him further the right to enjoy the fruits of his victory which he has consistently won in the lower courts.

I have given due consideration to the arguments advanced by both sides. Under Rule 8 of the Court of Appeal Rules this Court has power to grant the extension of C time sought if sufficient cause is shown for doing so. Although generally speaking a plea of inadvertence is not sufficient, nevertheless I think that extension of time may be granted upon such plea in certain cases, for example, where the party putting forward such plea is shown to have acted reasonably diligently to discover the omission and upon such discovery, he acted promptly to seek D remedy for it. In the instant case Mr Mbuya's clerk is shown to have overlooked serving the respondent's advocate with the documents in question on 27 November 1995 when she filed the notice of appeal in Court. Mr Mbuya in his affidavit says that he discovered this omission on 2 February 1996 when he was E conducting regular checks of his files. In his oral submission he stated that he was conducting such check upon resumption of business following the court Christmas vacation which starts in mid-December and finishes at the end of January each year. By this I understood Mr Mbuya to say that he took off time to F rest during the court Christmas vacation and went back to work only after such vacation was over. If this is so, then Mr Mbuya had just about two working weeks between the date of the omission by his clerk, ie on 27 November 1995 and the date he discovered the omission on 2 February 1996. The rest of the time was G taken up by the court Christmas vacation. It seems to me that Mr Mbuya acted reasonably diligently whereby he was able to discover the omission within the space of only two weeks. And upon discovery of the omission on 2 February 1996 he again acted reasonably promptly by filing this notice of motion in Court on 8 February 1996 seeking to have the omission remedied. He did this before the H matter was set for hearing and indeed before the opposite party took any steps to have the notice of appeal struck out for reasons arising from the omission in question.

In my view the way Mr Mbuya conducted himself in handling this I

A matter following the omission would warrant consideration for enlarging the time in his favour. Accordingly I grant the application. A copy of the notice of appeal and a copy of the letter to the Registrar applying for a copy of court proceedings are to be served on the respondent within three days of this Ruling. Costs of this application shall abide the results of the appeal. B

Mfalila JA: A
This is an application for extension of time within which to file the appeal. The original appeal was struck out by this Court as being incompetent on the ground that no order had been extracted and filed with the appeal. The court then directed that it was open to the appellant in that appeal to institute the appeal afresh by making the appropriate applications. The appropriate application in such B circumstances is one for enlargement of time within which to institute the fresh appeal. The present application is such a one.
Mr Mwale learned Counsel for the first respondent opposed this application on two C grounds. First he said that the application itself is incompetent because it was filed under the wrong rule ie Rule 45 instead of Rule 8. Secondly he said that apart from negligence of Counsel for the applicant, there is no other reason for this delay.
With regard to the first ground, I would say that the omission of Rule 8 from the D heading of the notice of motion cannot affect the validity of the application because it is quite clear from the body of the application itself that it is for the extension of time which can only be made under Rule 8. The error can therefore rectified by simply inserting Rule 8 in the heading of the application, which step is hereby directed to be done. E
With regard to the second point, I am satisfied that a distinction should be made between cases involving real or actual delays and those like the present one which only involve what can be called technical delays in the sense that the original appeal was lodged in time but the present situation arose only because the original F appeal for one reason or another has been found to be incompetent and a fresh appeal has to be instituted. In the circumstances, the negligence if any really refers to the filing of an incompetent appeal not the delay in filing it. The filing of an incompetent appeal having been duly penalised by striking it out, the same cannot be used yet again to determine the timeousness of applying for filing the fresh appeal. In fact in the present case, the applicant acted immediately after the G pronouncement of the ruling of this Court striking out the first appeal.
Secondly by implication this court was minded to give the applicant a second chance when it categorically told the applicant that it was open to him to institute a H fresh appeal by taking the necessary steps towards that goal.
For these reasons I allow this application and extend the time for filing or instituting a fresh appeal in accordance with the following time line: I

Ramadhani JA: A
The applicant, said Himid Mwilima, was the defendant in a suit before the Resident Magistrate's Court at Tabora. As that suit was decided ex-parte, the applicant was aggrieved and sought to set aside the judgment. The case was reopened and both parties were given a hearing. However, the judgment was still in favour of the BI respondent. The applicant appealed to the High Court of Tanzania at Tabora where Mchome J dismissed the appeal on the ground that the ex-parte judgment had not been set aside and thus the subsequent proceedings were void and, therefore, there was no appeal before him. C

The applicant is aggrieved by that decision of Mchome J and has filed a notice of appeal in this Court. Meanwhile he has filed this application praying for an order of stay of execution pending the determination of the appeal.

The applicant before me was represented by Mr Kashumbugu, learned advocate, D while the respondent, the Tabora Regional Trading Co, was represented by one Mohammed Hatib, the sales representative of the respondent here in Dar es Salaam.

I am well aware that Mr Mohammed Hatib, as the sales representative of the E respondent in Dar es Salaam, is not one of the persons mentioned in sub-Rule (3) of Rule 28 as persons who can represent a corporation. Even such persons have to be appointed by resolution under the seal of the company a copy of which has to be filed with the Registrar. So, Mr Hatib cannot be said to have represented the respondent and that in effect the application was heard ex-parte under sub-Rule (6) of Rule 73. F

There is no dispute that the High Court judgment was delivered on 27 March 1996 and that the notice of appeal was filed on 10 April 1996. Mr Kashumbugu also concedes that leave to appeal is required and that to date it has not been obtained. The learned advocate told the Court that an application for extension of time for G filing an application for leave to appeal was presented to the High Court at Tabora on 29 March 1996 but was not received because the file was in Dar es Salaam. Mr Kashumbugu admits that at that time, 29 March, the applicant was already seven H months late to seek leave to appeal. The learned advocate did not say whether or not the application for the enlargement of time in which to file an application for leave to appeal has now been filed.

The situation, then, is that there is a notice of appeal which is inoperative because there is not the prerequisite leave to appeal and that time for applying for such leave has already run out while it I

A does not appear that an application to enlarge that time has been made. In any case, one cannot say without any hesitation that there is an appeal pending in this Court.

I have no doubt in my mind that granting an order of stay of execution pending the determination of a wishful thinking appeal is, to say the least, idle. Stay of execution is a discretion of the Court and, as usual, a discretion has to be exercised judicially. B

This appeal is dismissed. I cannot order any costs as the order is ex-parte. It is so ordered. C

Msumi J: A
What are for determination in this ruling are the preliminary issues raised by the defendants in their Written Statement of Defence on the competence of the suit filed by the plaintiff. First defendant raised three issues but in the course of his submission, his counsel apparently conceded that two of these issues, which are B that the suit is time barred and that the suit immovable property has not been sufficiently described in the plaint as required under the provisions of Ord 7 Rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, were not sustainable. The remaining issue which has also been raised by the other defendants is that the suit is res judicata. It is argued C that prior to this case, plaintiff had filed a suit in this court as Civil Case No 126 of 1986 in which he claimed against the first defendant reliefs similar to those claimed in the present case. The said case was dismissed for plaintiff's failure to adduce evidence in its support. It was an ex-parte decision. D
In reply the learned counsel for the plaintiff contends that the doctrine of res judicata does not apply to a case decided ex-parte because it cannot be said that consequent to such ex-parte judgment the suit has been finally determined. Expectedly the learned counsel could not cite any authority in support of his argument. On the contrary the law is not in harmony with the learned counsel's argument. Just to mention one authority, Mulla on Code of Civil Procedure, vol I 4th ed at 87 says: E

`Ex-parte decrees operate to render the matter decided res judicata, and the defendant's F failure to appear will not deprive the plaintiff of the full benefit of his decree. But in the case of a suit in which a decree is ex-parte, the only matter that can be directly and substantially in issue is the matter in respect of which relief has been claimed by the plaintiff in the plaint. A matter in respect of which no relief is claimed cannot be directly and substantially issue in a suit in which a decree is passed ex-parte though the court may have gone out its way and declare the plaintiff to be entitled to relief in respect of such matter.' (emphasis supplied). G

In the previous case, plaintiff prayed for the following two specific reliefs: H

1. A declatory order confirming the plaintiff as the true and lawful owner of the suit premises viz plot No 61744 Kurasini, Dar es Salaam.

2. A permanent injunction restraining/preventing the defendant from trespassing into the suit premises. I

MSUMI J

A These prayers are exactly the same as those pleaded by the plaintiff in his plaint in the present case. This means that the matter which is directly and substantially in issue in both cases is the same and that the said matter has been finally determined by the ex-parte judgment issued in the previous case. In other words the doctrine of res judicata is operative in this case. B

In conclusion the preliminary objection that the suit is res judicata is upheld hence the said suit is dismissed with costs.

Mruso J:

This court has been moved by the applicant acting through his advocates, M/s D'Souza Chambers, to call for the lower court record in Employment Cause No 13 C of 1995 of the District Court of Arusha (sic) and revise certain proceedings in it under s 44(1)(b) of the Magistrate' Courts Act 1984. Let me hasten to point out that the District Court of Arusha would not have jurisdiction over the dispute if the cause of action occurred in Simanjiro, which is a different territorial jurisdiction from the Arusha district. Besides, if the name of the opposed defendant is anything D to go by, he is supposed to be residing or carrying on business in Simanjiro district. I have used the word `supposed' intentionally because I suspect there may be a question whether the defendant as depicted in the pleadings is a legal person capable of being sued. Even so, these two matters were not argued before me E and I express no decision on them. It is apparent, however, that the respondent intended the proceedings to be filed in the Court of Resident Magistrate, Arusha because the report of the Regional Labour Officer, Arusha which initiated the F proceedings before the lower court was addressed to `The Senior Resident Magistrate, Resident Magistrate (sic) Court, PO Box 104, Arusha', not of the District Court, Arusha. For inexplicable reasons, probably sheer carelessness, the cause was opened in the District Court of Arusha, as the case file cover shows. Indeed, if the cause had been filed in the Court of Resident Magistrate, Arusha as G the respondent Arnold K Makinda appears to have intended, Mr Mbuge, District Magistrate, would not have territorial jurisdiction not to say that he does not sit in the Court of Resident Magistrate, Arusha. Now back to the matters that were presented by the applicant to the High Court for revision. But first, a brief background to these proceedings. The respondent, Makinda, had filed civil case H No 22 of 1994 in the Court of Resident Magistrate, at Arusha against the applicant. On 25 April 1994 the suit was withdrawn at the request of the respondent, then plaintiff. A certified true copy of the prayer to withdraw the suit and the court order making the suit and a Miscellaneous Civil Application No 63 of I

A 1994 was withdrawn has been annexed to the Chamber Application in these revision proceeding. In around February 1995 Employment Cause No 13 of 1995 was filed in court. The advocates for the applicant raised a preliminary point of objection that the case which appeared to be substantially the same case which the respondent had earlier withdrawn was being refiled contrary to the provisions B of Ord 23 Rule (3) of the Civil Procedure Code. Another preliminary point of objection was that assigned District Magistrate, Mr Mbuge, did not have pecuniary jurisdiction in view of the amount of over one million shillings which the respondent C was claiming against the applicant. It was pointed out to the presiding magistrate that his pecuniary jurisdiction, according to Government Notice No 495 of 1990, was limited to shillings 100 000/= in the case of movable property and Shs 150 000/= in the case of immovable property. Both those points of law were overruled D by the presiding District Magistrate. Subsequently, however, the District Magistrate conceded that he had no pecuniary jurisdiction and disqualified himself. The case was reassigned to a Resident Magistrate, Ms Mushi. In the meantime E Government Notice No 432 of 1966 was published in the Official Gazette on 29 November 1996. By that Government Notice the pecuniary jurisdiction of Mr Mbuge as well as that of many other District Magistrates was enhanced to Shs 10 million in the case of movable property and to Shs 12 million in the case of immovable F property. The amount claimed in Employment Cause No 13 of 1995 appeared therefore to be within the pecuniary jurisdiction of Mr Mbuge. So, on 25 March 1997 the Resident Magistrate In-charge re-assigned the case back to Mr Mbuge for trial. The advocates for the applicant urge that even though Mr Mbuge now has G enhanced pecuniary jurisdiction yet the order he made that he had jurisdiction should be quashed and, secondly, that the employment cause which was filed without leave after the withdrawal of Civil Case No 22 of 1994 and the ruling of Mr Mbuge that Order 23 Rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code had not been violated should be quashed and set aside. Finally, that the case should now be reassigned to another magistrate of competent jurisdiction instead of Mr Mbuge because even if the same argument about Employment Cause No 13 of 1995 were to be made again to him he is unlikely to change his mind in view of his own earlier ruling on the matter. H

The respondent was represented in the present proceedings by two firms of advocates namely Makange Chamber and Lengai Chambers. They conceded that the proceedings which were before I

Mr Mbuge before his pecuniary jurisdiction was enhanced were invalid but argued that now he has A jurisdiction and should proceed to hear the case. They also prayed that since it is the magistrate who assumed jurisdiction he did not have, the respondent should not be saddled with costs of these revision proceedings.

Although the respondent claims that he withdrew from court Civil Case No 22 of 1994 with leave to B refile the lower court records before me do not bear him out. It is shown that the respondent who was addressing the RM's Court in Miscellaneous Civil Application No 63 of 1994 said:

> `I pray to withdraw the matter with this court since I have another matter pending before the labour officer.' C

Then he proceeded to say:

> `I have withdrawn both the main suit and the Chamber Application.' D

By the main suit he meant Civil Case No 22 of 1994. So, according to the court record he did not say he withdrew the suit with leave to refile as he now claims. He also did not seek and obtain an affidavit from Mrs P S Fikirini, RM (as she then was) to the effect that the respondent had withdrawn E the suit with leave to refile but that she omitted to record him correctly. If Employment Cause No 13 of 1995 was a suit, therefore, it violated the provisions Order 23 Rule 1(3) of the Civil Procedure Code 1996 because the respondent had no permission of the court to institute the fresh F proceedings. The question is whether the employment cause which appears to have been brought under s 132 of the Employment Ordinance, Cap 366 as amended by Act 5 of 1969 was a suit within the meaning of Order 23 Rule 1(3) of the Civil Procedure Code.

It seems to me that while Civil Case No 22 of 1994 was undoubtedly a `suit' Employment Cause No G 13 of 1995 was not. That cause was not initiated by a plaint as is the case with a suit but by a labour officer's report. The labour officer has statutory authority under s 132 of the Employment Ordinance, again as amended by Act 5 of 1969, to refer to a magistrate employment disputes H which he has failed to settle.

Under s 134 of the Employment Ordinance (as amended by Act 5 of 1969) a magistrate can treat the report `as if the proceedings ... were a civil suit'. Thus, the proceedings initiated by a labour officer's report are not really a suit and even the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code in respect of I such proceedings are relevant only `as

A far as they may be applicable'. The section ends with a proviso that the magistrate shall hear and determine such proceedings according to substantial justice `without undue regard to technicalities of procedure'. It will also be observed (unless the definition of district magistrate in s 133 of the B Employment Ordinance has since 1963 be amended) that any district magistrate whether or not he is a civil magistrate can try proceedings under the Ordinance. I hold, therefore, that the proceedings in Employment Cause No 13 of 1995 are not necessarily invalid for the reasons given by the applicant.

Section 133(1) of the Ordinance is in the following words:

C `133(1) Every district magistrate (whether or not he is a civil magistrate) shall have jurisdiction, notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any Ordinance or law respecting the jurisdiction of such magistrate, in all cases and matters arising between employers and their employees and with reference to their relative right and D duties or to any matter on thing or offence for which provision is made in this Ordinance.'

On a casual glance at this subsection one might think that any district magistrate regardless of whether he has territorial jurisdiction could adjudicate an employment dispute brought to court E through a report of a labour officer. But I think that such an understanding of the provisions would be wrong. It cannot be that a district magistrate could go to any place in the country regardless of whether he was posted to the district and proceed to try an employment dispute which was taken to F the court by a labour officer. I think it is basic that the district magistrate has requisite territorial jurisdiction. It is for that reason that I think that after the pleadings have been filed in the correct court, which I believe would be the court of Resident Magistrate, a resident magistrate should be assigned to try it. All this should be done as speedily as possible so that the long outstanding G dispute can be resolved. The respondent should also take opportunity to revisit the question whether he still intends to proceed against the person shown as the defendant.

The proceedings in Employment Cause No 13 of 1995 in the District Court of Arusha are hereby quashed and set aside but since this decision is not based on the grounds advanced by the H respondent, each party to bear their own costs.

16 June 1997

(An appeal from the decision of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam, Kaji J) C

Flynote

Arbitration - Award - Enforcement of - Filing of arbitration award - Not necessary that this be done by arbitrator himself - Arbitration Ordinance s 11(2) Chapter 15.

Arbitration - Award - Enforcement of - Filing of arbitration award - Award forwarded by courier and not registered D post - Compliance with rule 4 of Arbitration Rules, 1957.

-Headnote

The appellant appealed against the decision of the High Court which had granted an application for the formal filing of an arbitration award. The appellant contended (a) that the court had erred in E allowing the filing as there had not been compliance with s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance Chapter 15 in that the arbitrator had not filed the award but had had it filed by a firm of advocates; and (b) that the filing was irregular as the award had been forwarded by DHL courier and not by registered post as required by rule 4 of the Arbitration Rules, 1957. F

Held:

(i) There was no reason for a restrictive interpretation of the provisions of s 11(2) which allowed the arbitrator to `cause the award, or a signed copy of it to be filed in the court'. The import of this was that the arbitrator could either file the award himself in court or G could cause the award to be filed by instructing somebody else to do it on his behalf;

(ii) the words `registered post' had to be interpreted widely enough in order to take into account the current development in communication technology, such as courier postal services, that had taken place since 1957 when the rules were enacted. In the H circumstances the award had been properly filed.

B Lubuva JA:

The appellant, Tanzania Cotton Marketing Board (hereinafter referred to as the appellant) has appealed against the decision of the High Court (Kaji J) sitting in Dar as Salaam in Misc Civil Cause No 34 of 1996. In that case the respondent, Cogecot Cotton Company SA, a limited liability C company incorporated in Geneva, Switzerland had filed an arbitration award in the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam. The background of the case is as follows: Between 1993 and 1994, the appellant and the respondent had entered into a sale agreement for the purchase of raw cotton. D The appellant was the exporter and the respondent was the buyer. A dispute arose between the appellant and the respondent which resulted in the matter being referred to arbitration before the Liverpool Cotton Association Limited. An award granted in favour of the respondent was also confirmed by the Technical Appeal Committee of the Arbitrators. Through the services of M/S E Mkono and Company Advocates the award was filed in the High Court where the appellant raised objection. The main ground of objection was that in filing the award, proper procedure as required under the Arbitration Ordinance was not followed. The learned judge overruled the objection and granted the application for the formal filing of the award. From that decision, this appeal has been F instituted.

At the hearing of this appeal, the appellant was represented by Mr Mselem, learned counsel for the Tanzania Legal Corporation. Mr Mselem, learned counsel had also represented the appellant before G the High Court in this matter. On the other hand, the respondent was represented by Dr Kapinga assisted by Miss Kasonda, learned counsel. Five grounds of appeal had been raised in the memorandum of appeal. However, at the hearing of the appeal, Mr Mselem opted not to argue on H ground five. He argued grounds one and three together. They read as follows:

1. That the learned trial judge erred in law and facts in holding that it is the arbitrator who filed and forwarded the application for the award.

I 3. That the learned trial judge erred in holding that the award is presumed to be duly filed at the instance of the arbitrator.

LUBUVA JA

Arguing these two grounds of appeal Mr Mselem submitted that the filing of the award was done A contrary to the law. He advanced two reasons: First, he said, the mandatory provisions of s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance, chap 15 of the laws were not complied with. That is, according to Mr Mselem, under that section the award should be filed directly by the arbitrator and not through M/S Mkoro and Company Advocates who forwarded the award to the Court. Secondly, Mr Mselem B contended that as the award was forwarded to the Registrar of the High Court by DHL and not by registered post, the procedure involved was in contravention of Rule 4 of the Arbitration Rules, 1957. In concluding his submission on this point Mr Mselem reiterated that as long as the principal C legislation on arbitration and the relevant rules still remain unamended, any other method of communication applied in forwarding the award would be an improper procedure unknown to the law. And so the matter was not properly before the Court Mr Mselem insisted. D

Dr Kapinga, learned counsel for the respondent maintained that M/S Mkono and Company advocates were duly instructed by the arbitrators to forward the award to the Registrar of the High Court for filing. In support of this submission Dr Kapinga referred to the letter dated 1 March 1996 E address to Registrar High Court by the arbitrator. In that letter Dr Kapinga submitted, it is clearly stated that the respondent, a party to the arbitration, had requested the arbitrators to file the award in the High Court. On that basis Dr Kapinga submitted that it was the arbitrator who forwarded the F award as required under s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance. Alternatively, Dr Kapinga took the view that even if it is accepted that M/S Mkono and Company Advocates forwarded the award for filing in Court on behalf of the arbitrators, that would still be proper under the law. The reason for that, Dr Kapinga stated, was that s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance, chap 15 is such that an award can be G filed by some other person who is duly instructed by the arbitrators. It is to be observed that the words used in that section are to the effect that the arbitrators or umpire shall, at the request of the party to the submission cause the award to be filed in the court. In the view of Dr Kapinga, causing H to be filed in the court, means that at the initiative of the arbitrators, any other person who is so instructed can properly file an award in the court as it was done in this case by M/S Mkono and Company Advocates. In support of this contention, Dr Kapinga, learned counsel, referred to the book titled Law of Arbitration by the learned author S D I

LUBUVA JA

A Singh, 9th ed which has an exhaustive and analytical commentary on the Indian Arbitration Act at 251 para 18. Dr Kapinga also drew out attention to the fact that s 15 of the Arbitration Act, 1899 of India is equivalent to our s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance of Tanzania and that India also has the B equivalent of Rules 4 and 5 of our Arbitration Rules, 1957.

The central issue for consideration in this appeal is whether the award was properly filed in the court. Mr Mselem, as already indicated vigorously contended that it was not. At this juncture we think it is appropriate to examine closely the provisions of s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance, chap C 15 of the Laws. It reads:

`11(2) -- The Arbitrators or umpire, shall, at the request of any party to the submission or any person claiming under him, and upon payment of the fees and charges due in respect of arbitration and award, and of the costs D and charges of filing the award cause the award, or a signed copy of it to be filed in the Court, and notice of the filing shall be given to the parties by the arbitrators or umpire' (emphasis supplied).

E From the wording of this subsection, the question that has engaged our minds considerably is whether the law as it stands makes it mandatory for the award to be filed by the arbitrator himself personally. On this, we are, with respect, unable to accept Mr Mselem's submission that as a matter of law, the filing of the award must be done by the arbitrator himself to the exclusion of any F other person. We can find no reason or justification for such a restrictive interpretation of the law. We are respectfully in agreement with Dr Kapinga, learned counsel for the respondent that the wording of this section is such that at the request of the party involved in the arbitration, the G arbitrator can instruct some other person to file the award in Court. In our view, this is because the operative words in the section are those underlined in the extract above. That is, `upon request, the arbitrator shall cause the award to be filed in court'. In our considered opinion, the import of the word `cause' in its literal ordinary meaning is that the arbitrator can either file the award himself in H Court or can cause by instructing somebody else to do it on his behalf. This we think accords more with the practical realities of life where it is not feasible for one to attend to all matters physically in person everywhere. For that reason it is a common phenomenon to have professional bodies such as law firms instructed to take up cases on behalf of other firms or clients in far distant places. We I are reinforced in this view by the commentaries of the learned author S D Singh in this book Law of Arbitration, 9th ed p 251 where in para 18 - A Filing of the award under ss (2) of s 2 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1940, the equivalent of our s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance it is observed:

`The actual filing by the arbitrator or umpire is not essential -- it is sufficient if he causes the award to be filed and B even if he forwards the award by post to the Court there would be sufficient compliance with the provision of sub-section (2). -- The act of filing of the award must be his or on his behalf....'

In the circumstances, we are satisfied that the filing of the award by M/S Mkono and Company C Advocates on the instruction of the arbitrators, was sufficient compliance with s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance. With respect, we can find no fault with the learned Trial Judge in his holding on this point.

On the other hand, the matter could be carried even further. As already indicated, the arbitrators -- D the Liverpool Cotton Association Ltd, by their letter dated 1 March 1996, addressed to the Registrar, High Court Dar es Salaam forwarded the award for filing. That was done in compliance with Rule 4 of the Arbitration Rules, 1957. In that letter the arbitrators in clear terms have stated that E they have been requested by the respondent, a party to the arbitration to cause the filing of the award in court. With the letter all the required documents in terms of Rule 4 were enclosed in a sealed envelope which was forwarded to M/S Mkono and Company Advocates by DHL. As F requested, M/S Mkono and Company Advocates forwarded the sealed envelope to the Registrar High Court with a covering letter of 11 March 1996. The Arbitrator's letter of 1 March 1996 is to the effect that the arbitrators had been requested by the respondents to cause the award to be filed in the High Court and that M/S Mkono and Company had been instructed to pursue the matter in court. G As against this background of facts which are not disputed, Mr Mselem seeks to fault the learned trial judge in holding that it was the arbitrator who forwarded the award for filing in court. We are unable to go along with Mr Mselem, learned counsel on this point. It is common knowledge that the essence and spirit behind the enactment of the law under s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance chap H 15 is the safe receipt of the award. That it should be received by the Registrar, High Court in the form in which it was forwarded by the arbitrator without any tampering. In this case, we can see no reason for suspecting that there was any tampering with the envelope which was received by the Registrar. In I

A his submission before us, Mr Mselem categorically stated that he had no evidence to substantiate any suspected tampering with the envelope. We are therefore in agreement with the finding of the learned Trial Judge that the award was safely received by the Registrar. In our B considered opinion, the role played by M/S Mkono and Company Advocates in the handling of the award was that of a conduit, and therefore the learned judge properly directed himself in his finding that the award was filed by the arbitrator. For these reasons we dismiss grounds one and three.

Then Mr Mselem, learned counsel dealt with grounds two and four. The essence of the appellant's C complaint in these grounds is that the award was not filed in accordance with the law because the courier, ie DHL used in forwarding the award is not a registered post in terms of Rule 4 of the Arbitration Rules, 1957. Briefly but firmly it was Mr Mselem's submission that the application for the filing of the award was not made by way of a petition which is a mandatory requirement under Rule D 4. There was therefore no award filed in court in terms of the rules which could be enforced in law, Mr Mselem contended. Furthermore, Mr Mselem contended that it was improper to forward the award by DHL, because the express mandatory requirement of Rule 4 is that the award is to be E forwarded by registered post.

Responding to this submission Dr Kapinga submitted that the expression `registered post' which appears in Rule 4 is not a legal term of art. It should therefore be given a wide interpretation in order F to include the modern method of postage which includes other couriers ie DHL etc, Dr Kapinga urged. On the contention that the application for filing the award was not made by way of a petition as required under Rule 5 of the Arbitration Rules, 1957, Dr Kapinga maintained that in view of the clear wording of s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance, the interpretation of Rule 5 should be such as G not to restrict the operation of the principal legislation. In the light of the provisions of s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance and Rule 4, Dr Kapinga concluded, the filing of the award was in compliance with the requirement of the law.

H We accept Dr Kapinga's submission regarding the interpretation of Rule 4. While it is an undisputed fact that under Rule 4 of the Arbitration Rules, 1957, the award is to be forwarded to the Registrar of the High Court by registered post, the words `registered post' should be interpreted widely enough in order to take into account the current development in communication technology I that has taken place since 1957 when the rules were enacted. It is common knowledge that since that time other modes of postage have been introduced. The DHL system A which was used in this case in among such modes of communication. With due respect to Mr Mselem, learned counsel for the appellant, it is our view that it would be impractical and unrealistic on the part of the court to give such a restrictive interpretation to the words `registered post' which B excludes other courier systems. Similarly, we are unable to accept Mr Mselem's contention that the award was not properly filed because it was not made by way of a petition as provided under Rule 5. It is to be observed that s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance Cap 15 in essence provides to the effect that the arbitrator upon request shall `cause the award' to be filed in Court. It does not in any C way restrict or specify as to how the arbitrator shall cause the award to be filed. Moreover, the words `by registered post and in a sealed envelope' are found in the subsidiary legislation under Rule 4. From the wording of the principal legislation in s 11(2) and the subsidiary legislation in Rule D 4, it is apparent to us that the subsidiary legislation is more restrictive than the principal legislation. In that situation, it is our view that Rule 4 should be interpreted widely in order to accord to it a more meaningful and practical interpretation which is in line with the spirit behind the E enactment of s 11(2) of the principal legislation. In that light we are satisfied that the learned judge correctly came to the conclusion that the award was forwarded by registered post which as we have indicated should also include the DHL system which was used in this case. By parity of reasoning we are also in agreement with the learned judge that the filing of the award was properly done in terms of the law under s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance and Rule 4. We accordingly dismiss grounds two and four.

In conclusion, we consider it appropriate to say something about one other issue which was raised in the course of submissions before us. It is not directly relevant for the purpose of determining the general issue before us, but it is intended to provide guidance to those handling such matters in the future. Dr Kapinga, learned counsel for the respondent had raised the issue as to what happens after the award has been filed. Having regard to the commentaries and authorities from India which has an identical law on arbitration to the Arbitration Ordinance Cap 15, he took the view that it is not necessary as a matter of law to have any further proceedings and ruling after the award has been received by the court. For this proposition, he referred us to the Indian cases of: Volkart Brothers v Achrajram & Others (1) and Achrajsing v Achirajram Sahmi (2).

LUBUVA JA

A In upholding Dr Kapinga on this submission the learned judge lamented:

`This is very interesting because if the position is so then I have wasted my time and energy for nothing. I have wasted my time for merely recording a fact that the award had been caused to be filed at the instance of the B arbitrator....

As already observed, s 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899 is identical to s 11(2) of the Arbitration C Ordinance, Cap 15 of our laws. It is trite principle that in common law jurisdictions statutes which are in pari materia are interpreted similarly. There is a wealth of authority in India regarding the interpretation and application of s 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, the equivalent of s 11(2) of the Arbitration Ordinance in Tanzania. Dealing with a somewhat similar situation in the case of D Volkart Brothers v Achrajram & others (1) the Supreme Court of India held inter alia:

`... the award was executable from the date on which it was received in this Court, namely, 21st June, 1923, and that the subsequent order in 1927 to file it was redundant and at best merely amounted to recording a fact that it E had been caused to be filed at the instance of the arbitrators'.

The principle that from the date of filing, the award is capable of being enforced as though it were a F decree was also underscored in another Indian case of Ahmed Musaji Saleji (3). The Indian legislation being in pari materia with our Arbitration Ordinance Cap 15, we see no reason for giving s 11(2) a different construction. So far in our country the practice in matters of arbitration awards is that the court is moved by an application for an order for filing which is then followed by G proceedings. On the basis of the Indian decisions we are persuaded to take the view that as a matter of law it is not necessary to conduct proceedings before an order for filing is made. In our view, the receipt of the award by the Court Registry constitutes the filing of the award. Thereafter, the court is required to notify the parties who may wish to challenge or to enforce the award in H terms of the law.

For the foregoing reasons, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

The applicant had brought a suit against the respondent and although the plaint had correctly been entitled `in the court of the resident magistrate', the registry decided to open the case in the District Court. The district magistrate rightly realised that he had no jurisdiction to try the matter which was D outside his territorial jurisdiction and returned the case file to the resident magistrate in charge who dismissed the suit and remarked that it had to be filed at Babati District Court.

Held:

The magistrate had misconstrued a letter from the district registrar to the resident magistrate in charge of the court of the resident magistrate of Arusha. The correct import of that letter was not E that no case which could have been filed in the District Courts would be filed in the court of the resident magistrate: the law allowed deserving cases, even from the districts, to be filed in the court of the resident magistrate who had jurisdiction throughout the region. The directive was aimed at cases from the districts which were filed at the court of the resident magistrate for improper ulterior motives. The dismissal order had to be quashed. F

Mroso J:

One Nuhu Yatera Mbaga brought a suit in the Court of Resident Magistrate, Arusha against the National Bank of Commerce and a firm of Auctioneers known as Nakara Auction Mart of Dar es H Salaam. The suit related to a house in Babati which belongs to Mr Mbaga which the defendants in the case allegedly threatened to sell without any justification.

The resident magistrate in charge of the Court of Resident Magistrate at Arusha assigned the case to a distict magistrate, one Mr Mbuge. The district magistrate rightly realised that he had no I jurisdiction to try a dispute the subject matter of which was outside his

A territorial jurisdiction, not to say that he does not sit in the Court of Resident Magistrate. Incidentally, although the plaint in the case was correctly titled `In the Court of Resident Magistrate' the Registry decided to open the case in the District Court of Arusha. This is a recurring careless mistake and the resident magistrate in charge should ensure that her Civil Registry staff know the B difference between the District Court of Arusha and the Court of Resident Magistrate for Arusha region and that cases are filed and opened in the correct registry.
Mr Mbuge, on realising that he had no territorial jurisdiction, returned the case file to the resident C magistrate in charge for reassignment to a resident magistrate who would have requisite jurisdiction.
On 23 May 1997 the resident magistrate in charge wrote thus in the case file:
D `Court: Its very unfortunate that it was an oversight when I assign (sic) this matter to D M Mbuge. In fact I have noted with concerned (sic) the NBC Branch is situated at Babati District, that being the case the Plaintiff ought to file his suit at court of competent jurisdiction and in this respect its Babati District Court unless the plaintiff apply for leave E at the High Court to file his case in the RM's Court Arusha. This court was once minded by his Lordship's (sic) Chief Justice's Circular that suits should and must be filed where the cause action arose and RM's Court was warned and directed not to admit cases/suits from Districts. They are to be filed in their respective Districts. for that F reason the present suit plus Misc Civil Application is dismissed and the same to be filed at Babati District Court.'
After his suit and a pending application were dismissed Mr Mbaga complained to the judge in G charge of the High Court at Arusha substantially saying he has been penalised on the basis of an alleged circular from the Chief Justice of which the public are not aware.
H With respect, Mr Mbaga is not alone for being ignorant of the alleged circular from the Chief Justice, I, too, am not aware of such a circular. What was referred to as a circular from the Chief Justice apparently is a letter with reference No DR.AR/69/Vol.III/7 dated 10 April 1996 which the District Registrar wrote to the resident magistrate in charge of the Court of Resident Magistrate, I Arusha. The substance of the letter is that the Chief Justice who had been visiting some district courts of the Arusha region had received complaints that some people in the districts who had money had been opening cases against their A adversaries at the Court of Resident Magistrate, Arusha knowing that because of financial inability the other parties to the case would not be able to appear in court at Arusha. Because of that ex-parte judgments would be given against them on default. After he received those complaints the Chief Justice directed the District Registrar to write to the resident magistrate in charge B `kukutahadharisha kuhusu mtindo huu wa baadhi ya watu. Aidha, inategemewa kuwa mara upatopo maagize haya, hakuna kesi za aina hiyo zitakazofunguliwa kwenye mahakama yake badala ya huko Wilayani'. (My underlining.) C

The words which I have underlined are significant. The Chief Justice did not direct that no case which could have been filed in the district courts would be filed in the Court of Resident Magistrate. Indeed, the Chief Justice could not have made such an administrative direction because that would fly in the face of the law. The law allows deserving cases, even from the districts to be filed in the D Court of Resident Magistrate which has jurisdiction throughout the region. The directive of the Chief Justice was aimed at the cases from the districts which are filed at the Court of Resident Magistrate for improper ulterior motives and the resident magistrate in charge was being urged to E be on the lookout for such cases and send them right back to the districts to be filed there.

It seems clear to me that the learned Principal Resident Magistrate, who is the resident magistrate in charge, misconstrued the import of the District Registrar's letter to mean that the Chief Justice F had slapped a complete ban on civil cases from the districts being filed in the Court of the Resident Magistrate `unless leave of the High Court' was obtained!

The case and application which the learned Principal Resident Magistrate dismissed related to G defendants who would not fail to appear in Court at Arusha because of financial incapacity. The Board and top management of the first defendant are in Dar es Salaam and their zonal office is at Arusha. The second defendant is said to be of Dar es Salaam. So, in fact, the Court of Resident Magistrate at Arusha would be the most convenient venue for all the parties. The Principal Resident H Magistrate, therefore, erred in dismissing those cases for the reasons she gave.

Using the revisional powers of this court under s 44(1)(a) of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1984 I quash and set aside the dismissal order. The case should be properly opened in the Court of I Resident

The appellant appealed against the dismissal of his election petition for non-appearance and want F of prosecution. The appellant had instituted an action seeking to nullify the election results by which the second respondent had been elected as a member of Parliament for the Mpanda East constituency. The court scheduled the case to be continuously heard between 15

October 1996 and 10 December 1996. The commencement date was pushed to 16 October for the convenience of the court and thereafter to 17 October at the request of the appellant who had transport G difficulties and sent a police message to the court to this effect. He then sent a second message to the effect that his mother had passed away and expected to arrive in time for proceedings on 20 October. The trial court then set down the hearing for 21 October. The appellant sent a third police message stating that he expected his mother's funeral arrangements to have been concluded and H he would be available on 23 October. The court then on 22 October directed the matter to commence on 23 October. When on 23 October the appellant did not put in an appearance the court directed that the matter be adjourned until 29 October for the issuing of a dismissal order which was granted on 29 October in the absence of the appellant.

Nyalali CJ:
This is an appeal by one George M Shambwe, hereinafter called the appellant against the ruling of the High Court at Mbeya, Mwipopo J delivered on 7 March 1997 in favour of the Attorney-General D and one Peter Sigela Nswima, hereinafter called the first respondent and second respondent respectively. The ruling was on an application made by the appellant seeking to restore the appellant's election petition previously dismissed by the same High Court for non-appearance and want of prosecution. The appellant has appeared and conducted the appeal in person, whereas Mr E Salula, learned Senior State Attorney, has represented the first respondent. Two learned advocates, namely, Mr G M Kilindu and Mr Mselem have represented the second respondent. The Memorandum of Appeal contains four grounds of appeal which state as follows: F
`1. The learned trial judge on 24th October, 1996 having specifically fixed the matter for mention on the 29th day of October 1996, consequently proceeded to dismiss the same on the very day meant for mention in contravention of his own order which he categorically made in court on 24th October 1996 thereby making G an error in law.

2. The learned trial judge failed to act judicially for determining and delivering the ruling on the subject matter on the 29th October 1996 in my absence and also the absence of my advocates, without and before fixing the exact hearing date contrary to the law, thereby making also an error in law. H

3. The learned trial judge having sensed that there was a professional misconduct on the part of my former advocates, M/s Lamwai and Co Advocates, of abandoning appearance and communication with the court in relation to the prosecution of my election petition he erred in fact in not finding this to be a reasonable I cause which prevented me appearing in court as required.

A 4. The learned trial judge having graciously granted me time until the 29th October 1996 to prosecute my case and after having been made aware of my voluminous transport problems in Morogoro, Nyololo (Iringa) and Mbeya as per the sworn affidavit and the oral submission of the learned advocate A Kagambo, he erred in fact in not assimilating and evaluating the FIRE INCIDENT gutting my vehicle in the Mbeya Municipality on the 28th October 1996 at 7.30 am and the same vehicle having been repaired by Mzee Mwankusye of Seba B Garage and one Mhgama of Mwakyoma Auto Works both within the Mbeya Municipality at Mwanjelwa on 28th, 29th and 30th of October 1996 a situation which prevented me to arrive in Mpanda before the 29th C October 1996 the day he dismissed my case unlawfully.'

D From the proceedings both in this court and the court below, it is apparent that there is common ground between the parties that the appellant had instituted in the High Court at Mbeya, an election petition, seeking to nullify the election results by which the second respondent was declared duly elected as a member of Parliament for the Mpanda East Constituency. On 3 July 1996, after consultations with and in the presence of the appellant and counsel for the first and second E respondents, the Court scheduled the case to be continuously heard between Tuesday 15 October 1996 and Tuesday 10 December 1996 at Mpanda. For various reasons however, the hearing of the F case did not take off as scheduled until the court dismissed the petition on 29 October 1996.

To begin with, the commencement date of hearing was pushed to 16 October 1996 to allow Mwipopo J to welcome Justices of the Court of Appeal who came to Mbeya on Court of Appeal circuit. Thereafter the commencement date of hearing was pushed to 17 October 1996 at the G request made by the appellant in a police message in which the appellant informed the trial court to the effect that his motor vehicle had broken down at Mikumi on his way to Mpanda. A second police message from the appellant reached the trial court on 16 October to the effect that the appellant's mother had passed away the day before with the result that the appellant expected to arrive in H Mpanda on 20 October after attending to his mother's funeral. The trial court obliged and made an order on 16 October 1996 pushing the commencement date of hearing to 21 October 1996 so that the appellant could be in a position to attend.

A third police message was sent by the appellant to the trial court requesting for the hearing to I commence on 23 October 1996 as the appellant expected to complete his mother's funeral rites on 19 October. The court reluctantly A obliged and by its order made on 22 October 1996, directed the hearing to commence the following day of 23 as requested by the appellant.

It is also common ground that when 23 October came, there was no appearance by the appellant or anyone authorized to appear on his behalf. There is not dispute that the appellant had retained B the services of Mr Alfred Kagambo, learned advocate, before 17 October 1996. Furthermore, there is no dispute that after the failure of the appellant to appear on 23 October, the trial court was moved by counsel for the first and second respondents to dismiss the petition under Rule 22(1) of the Election Petition Rules, 1971. The Court on 24 October reluctantly declined to dismiss the C petition, and stated, inter alia:

`Since the petitioner has abandoned even his previous decorum of at least sending police messages in pretence for caring for the petitioner's wellbeing, ie continuance I hereby slash one week from his ration (quota) of three D weeks period within which the petitioner is allowed to prosecute his petition. That means that if the petitioner or his advocates do not turn up in court at Mpanda until Tuesday 29th October, 1996 this petition will be dismissed as prayed by the respondents on that day ...' E

The trial court further proceeded to direct that, `This petition therefore, is adjourned till Tuesday 29th October, 1996 for any issuance of a dismissal order then, as explained above. If the petitioner turns up before Tuesday 29th October 1996, he is free to move the court in writing to have the court F convene for him to start prosecuting his petition without his own portion of three weeks maximum period granted to him hereinabove, ie up to Tuesday 5th November, 1996.' The court concluded by fixing the case for mention on 29 October 1996. That day came but neither the appellant nor his G advocate appeared. The court consequently dismissed the petition with costs.

Thereafter on 18 November 1996, the appellant filed an application in the High Court seeking to restore the dismissed petition. The application was supported by affidavit. Counter affidavits were H filed for the first and second respondents. After hearing both sides, the High Court, Mwipopo J dismissed the application. Hence this appeal. We propose to deal with the grounds of appeal as they appear in the Memorandum of Appeal.

With regard to ground No 1 we are satisfied that the correct position portrayed in the facts that the I period between Tuesday

NYALALI CJ

A 15 October 1996 and Tuesday 19 December 1996 had been scheduled specifically for continuous hearing of the case at Mpanda, and that when the appellant failed to appear on 23 October 1996 for hearing at Mpanda, the case was adjourned to the 29th of that month. What has to be determined within this factual context is the event which was envisaged to occur on that date. B The appellant contends that since the case was fixed for mention on that day, then in law or practice, the case was meant to come up only for orders and the court had no powers to dismiss the petition for non-appearance or non-prosecution. Counsel for the first and second respondents argue to the contrary to the effect that the court had powers to dismiss the petition on those C grounds on the basis that the appellant knew that the case was fixed for continuous hearing over a period of time, including 29 October 1996, and on the basis that the appellant decided to cut off communication with the court after his third police message. Furthermore, counsel contend that D since the trial court on 24 October adjourned the case for `any issuance of a dismissal order' if the appellant failed to appear on 29 October, the only order or orders that could be made when the E case came up that day in default of appearance by the appellant, was the dismissal order.

We agree with counsel for the first and second respondents that the Court was acting within the scope of its previous order when it dismissed the petition and that it was justified in so doing F because the appellant must have been aware of the hearing date but failed to appear.

As to the second ground of appeal, we are satisfied that it has no merits in view of the fact that the appellant must have known that the case was due for continuous hearing unless the court ordered otherwise either on request by the parties or on its own motion.

G The third ground of appeal also seems to us to have no merits in the light of the fact that the appellant already had the services of Mr Alfred Kagambo, learned advocate, before 17 October 1996. Thus any troubles that appellant might have had previously with M/s Lamwai and Co Advocates, had nothing to do with appellant's failure to appear at Mpanda either on 23 or on 29 H October. We may also point out here that the appellant's conduct in cutting off communication with the court after the third police message, is incomprehensible, to say the least, in the light of his assertion to the effect that after appellant's motor vehicle broke down on 20 October, both the appellant and his advocate realised that they were in no position to make it to Mpanda in time for I court appearance on 23 October, and that they foresaw the case being dismissed on that day. Do the appellant A and his advocate expect a reasonable tribunal to accept that the appellant and his advocate decided to turn round and travel back to Dar es Salaam through Morogoro township without dispatching a police message either from Mikumi or Morogoro requesting for an adjournment in the manner the appellant had successfully done on previous occasions? We are satisfied that no B reasonable tribunal can accept this story as true. The trial High Court was thus correct in rejecting it.

The fourth ground may be disposed of very quickly basically in the same manner as the third C ground. It is incomprehensible and unreasonable to accept that the appellant and his advocate decided not to communicate their misfortune of the fire incident to the court either at Mpanda or at Mbeya, where the incident occurred and where the High Court has its usual venue.

In the final analysis therefore, we are fully satisfied that the learned trial judge was correct in D dismissing the petition with costs on 29 October 1996 and was also correct in subsequently rejecting the application to restore or re-admit the petition. Consequently, we dismiss this appeal with a certificate for costs for one advocate for each respondent. We order accordingly. E

Kaji J:

E The learned Senior Resident Magistrate dealing with a Bill of Costs as a Taxing Officer was faced with two issues, namely:

(1) Whether a Taxing Master is functus officio after making a decision in the absence of the other party.

(2) Can the Civil Procedure Code 1966 be applied together with the Advocates Remuneration F and Taxation of Costs Rules 1991 (GN 515 of 1991)?

It all started as follows:

On 13 March 1996 the applicant/decree holder Halima Aden filed a Bill of Costs in an amount of Shs G 6,289,260/= through her learned counsel Dr Lamwai. The same was fixed for taxation on 29 March 1996.

On the taxation day the applicant's learned counsel was absent, apparently without notice. The H respondent/judgment debtor Ali Fungo who had been served through his advocate Mr Kambamwene was also absent without notice. Neither Kambamwene nor anybody from his chambers appeared. The applicant applied orally to proceed ex-parte whereby her oral application was granted. The Bill of Costs was heard ex-parte whereby it was taxed and allowed at Shs 6,289,260/= as presented.

I Judgment debtor was alerted to this fact. He attempted to have the ex-parte taxation set aside through his advocate Kambamwene but the decree holder's learned A counsel resisted and raised some preliminary objections which included the above issued.

The learned Taxing Master held that since the taxation proceeded ex-parte he still had power to set it aside just as any order. He further held that his powers to set it aside are derived from the Civil B Procedure Code 1966 and that since GN 515 of 1991 does not have any provision for setting aside an ex-parte taxation the Civil Procedure Code 1966 is applicable in such situation.

However he was not sure whether what he had held was right. He therefore referred the matter to this court for clarification apparently under Order 41 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966. C

I have carefully considered the arguments raised by the learned counsels before the trial court. I have also carefully considered the opinion of the learned Taxing Master.

It is my considered view that when a Taxing Master taxes a Bill of costs ex-parte he is not functus D officio as far as an application for setting it aside is concerned just as is the case with any other ex-parte decisions in civil matter. If there is no express provision in the Civil Procedure Code 1966 for setting aside an ex-parte taxation the court can use its inherent powers under s 95 Civil Procedure Code unless there is a provision in the Advocate's Remuneration and Taxation of Costs E Rules 1991 to the contrary.

As far as application of the Civil Procedure Code is concerned the Civil Procedure Code is the enabling law governing the procedure in all civil matters before the High Court, courts of Resident Magistrates and District Courts unless expressly excluded by any provision of any written law F concerned with a particular matter. This is provided for under s 2 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966.

Taxation of a Bill of Costs is a civil matter. Taxation of a Bill of Costs before a Resident Magistrates Court is governed by the Advocate's Remuneration and Taxation of Costs Rules 1991 (GN 515 of G 1991). There is no provision in those Rules expressly excluding the application of the Civil Procedure Code where its application would be relevant.

It is therefore my holding that a Taxing Master is not functus officio after taxing a bill of costs ex-parte as far as an application to set it aside is concerned and that the Civil Procedure Code H 1966 can be applied together with the Advocate's Remuneration and Taxation of Costs Rules 1991 where appropriate.

In an appeal against the decision of the High Court which had entered judgment against the appellant under Order VIII Rule 14(1) it appeared that there had been confusion between the parties as to the annexures to certain documents in the pleadings.

D Held:

As long as the appellant had not been served with the correct annexure he could not have meaningfully responded to the amended plaint or decided to rely on the original written statement of E defence. It was therefore inappropriate in the circumstances to apply Order VIII Rule 14(1).

Makame JA:

The present respondent, Prof Adolphe Simbaulanga, sued the present appellant, Tanzania Olympic G Committee, for a sum of money in connection with some interpretation work the respondent had done at Morogoro during a wrestling seminar. Apparently Prof Simbaulanga is proficient in the French language.

In this appeal the parties retained the same counsel they had in the court below: Mr Said H El-Maamry and Mr Maira, learned advocates, for the appellant and the respondent respectively.

In the original plaint, filed on 27 February 1992, the respondent asked for the principal sum of Shs 440 000/= but this amount transformed into Shs 3,598,500/= in an amended plaint filed in March 1993. Judgment for the higher sum was entered in favour of the present respondent by Mackanja J I on 8 September 1994 under Order 8 Rule 14(1) of the Civil Procedure Code 1966. An application for Stay of Execution was allowed by Omar JA on 27 April 1995 and apparently no A reference was taken from that decision.

There is no controversy that the appellant did not file an amended Written Statement of Defence. Mr El-Maamry submitted, however, that Mackanja J should not have proceeded the way he did and B entered judgment for the plaintiff, for one thing because he, Mr El-Maamry could not have filed an amended Written Statement of Defence because the amended plaint, as served upon his client, was incomplete in that it did not have an important document, annexure C, to the amended plaint; and for another, because, in any event, that was no occasion for Mackanja J to proceed ex-parte C the way he did because there was a Written Statement of Defence, which took the matter out of the ambit of the Rule 14 of Order 8 the learned judge purported to apply. Mr El-Maamry further argued, for good measure, that he was under no necessary obligation to file an amended Written Statement D of Defence. What Mapigano J had done was merely to grant him permission to file an amended Written Statement of Defence, if any: He did not order him to do so necessarily. He asked for leave just in case he wanted to amend. E

On his part Mr Maira submitted that the respondent was served and that Mr Wambali who represented the respondent in court (on 26 May 1993) conceded as much. He argued also that while it was indeed optional for the appellant's counsel to file an amended Written Statement of F Defence, counsel took that option and so, if he changed his mind, he should have indicated that he was not going to exercise it, in the event. According to Mr Maira, the appellant had abandoned the original Written Statement of Defence for otherwise he would have indicated that he was going to rely on it to contend the amended plaint. Mr Maira also urged that Mackanja J rightly acted under G Order 8 Rule 14(1).

We have carefully considered the chronology of events and we are satisfied that the rather frequent change of counsel might have helped to blur things. When on 26 May 1993 Dr Lamwai held the brief for Mr Maira he was wrong to assert that that would be the third extension of time for filing the H amended Written Statement of Defence. It would have been only the second, the only other one being on 21 April 1993 the first mention after Mapigano J's order that Mr El-Maamry be served with a copy of the amended plaint. Also there was in any event no question of re-service of annexure C I three weeks previously as there had not been any earlier service. We

A are satisfied that both learned counsel, Dr Lamwai and Mr Wambali did not really appreciate at that stage that there would be two annexures C. Mr El-Maamry did point out to the Registrar of the High Court, in writing, that he had been furnished with the wrong annexure C, that is 27 March 1991 letter from the appellant, and not the right annexure C, a letter from the Civil Service Department B dated 8 February 1993, which is evidently what had made the amendment to be considered necessary. Indeed the respondent must have contributed to the confusion because, even in this Court's file, what appears as annexure C to the amended plaint, and stapled to the latter, is still the C letter from the appellant. We agree with Mr El-Maamry that as long as he was not served with the right annexure C he could not meaningfully have responded to the amended plaint or decide to rely on the original Written Statement of Defence. It was therefore inappropriate in the circumstances to D apply Order 8 Rule 14(1).

We accordingly allow the appeal and direct the High Court to order that the right annexure C to the amended plaint, that is the letter from the Civil Service Department dated 8 February 1993, be served on the appellant, the original plaintiff, and that he be given time to file an amended Written E Statement of Defence. We order also that costs for this present appeal should follow the event.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Requirements - Order III Rule 3 of the Zanzibar Civil Procedure Decree Cap 8.

-Headnote

At the hearing of an appeal against the rejection of an appeal by the High Court of Zanzibar both D parties expressed the fact that they were experiencing difficulty in respect of the further hearing of the appeal because of the inadequacies of the record. The parties had difficulty particularly with determining which part of the proceedings was a judgment and which was not. E

Held:

(i) A glance through the record revealed a confusing state of the matter as correctly observed by counsel;

(ii) While there was no indication in writing to show that it was either a judgment, ruling or order of the learned judge, the judge had taken the view that as the suit was being F instituted by the appellant, a woman, through her authorised attorney, the power of attorney was not acknowledged in terms of Order III Rule 3 of the Zanzibar Civil Procedure Decree Cap 8. Having taken that view, the judge was of the opinion there was nothing before him and the appeal was not properly before the court and it ws accordingly rejected. This was an interlocutory order and on this basis the decree was extracted and duly signed by the G judge;

(iii) The judge's view on the power of attorney was based on oversight or in complete ignorance of the proviso to Rule 6 under which, if a woman resided outside Zanzibar, it was not necessary to acknowledge the power of attorney in the way the learned judge H envisaged. The power of attorney could be received and acted upon in Zanzibar;

(iv) The Court invoked its powers under Rule 3 and dispensed with the requirements of Rule 89 and quashed the decision of the High Court.

A Patel for the appellant.

Uhuru Khalfan for the respondent.

Lubuva JA:

In this appeal Zainab J M Somji through her authorised attorney is appealing against the decision of B the High Court of Zanzibar (Dahoma J) dated 26 February 1997. In Civil Case No 54 of 1996 before the Regional Court at Vuga, Zanzibar, the appellant had filed a suit against the respondent seeking vacant possession of house No 3362 situated at Mwembeladu within the municipality of C Zanzibar. The respondent had leased the house to tenants who were staying in it. At the commencement of the hearing of the suit before the Regional Court, a preliminary objection was raised by the respondent on the grounds that the suit does not disclose cause of action and that the D suit is time barred. After analysing the submissions of both parties, the learned regional magistrate overruled the objection. It was further held that as there were no triable issues, judgment was passed in favour of the appellant. An order for vacant possession of the house was issued. From that decision, in a three point memorandum of appeal the respondent appealed to the High E Court of Zanzibar. The learned judge, held that the appeal was not properly before the Court, he rejected it. This appeal is against that decision.

In this appeal, the appellant and the respondent are respectively represented by Mr Aja Patel, F learned counsel and Mr Uhuru Khalfan learned State Attorney before the Courts below. The memorandum of appeal filed by Mr Patel, comprised four grounds of appeal. Before us, at the commencement of the hearing of the appeal, Mr Patel, learned counsel in what appeared to us as candid professional frankness confessed that he was in difficulty as to how to proceed with this G appeal. This is because, he said, the manner in which the appeal was determined and the decision arrived at by the learned judge was confusing. Upon the Court's inquiry as to which part of the record is referred to as the judgment, Mr Patel was quick to respond to the effect that, that is one of H the aspects which is indicative of the confusion surroundings this case.

Following Mr Patel's submission on the alleged confusion in the case, the Court invited the learned counsel for both parties to address us on the alleged confusion and the unsatisfactory way in which I the appeal was handled at the High Court of Zanzibar and how to proceed with the appeal. In further elaboration, Mr Patel, learned counsel referred to pp 40 and 41 of the record of appeal. That part of the record concerns A the proceedings of the hearing of the appeal on 26 February 1997. From the proceedings he said, two things emerge. Firstly, the first paragraph at p 40 to the effect that the suit was not instituted according to Ord III Rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Decree regarding the acknowledgement of the B power of attorney was not stated by him, Mr Patel or Mr Uhuru. He said it was introduced by the Court. Secondly, the decision by the learned judge rejecting the appeal does not indicate whether it is a judgment, ruling or order. For that reason, he said, it was difficult to show which part of the C proceedings is the judgment and which is not. He further pointed out that the appeal having been rejected in such a manner the hearing of the appeal before the High Court on merit was left unheard. Consequently, he submitted, it is not clear as to the effect of the High Court decision on the Regional Magistrate's decision. He invited the Court to set aside the decision of the High Court D so that the decision of the Regional Court in which the appellant was successful could be executed.

Mr Uhuru, learned State Attorney also addressed us. He supported Mr Patel on the fact that the issue relating to the power of attorney was introduced by the Court, it was not one of the grounds of E appeal. He was of the firm view that as there was no judgment indicated in writing, the appeal was not properly before this Court because Rule 89(2)(iv) of the Court's rules was not complied with. That is, no copy of the judgment or order was contained in the record of appeal. He urged the Court to invoke Rule 3 and order the matter to be remitted to the High Court with direction to hear F the appeal on merit.

We have given close and anxious consideration to the submissions by the learned counsel for both parties. A glance through the record at pp 40 and 41 reveals a confusing state of the matter as G correctly observed by the learned counsel. We agree with the submission by Mr Patel that the decision of the learned judge on appeal is in such a format that it is difficult to tell where the proceedings of the appeal end and the start of the judgment, ruling order or decision on the matter. This can be seen from the following extract at p 41: H

> Mr Uhuru should have taken an objection as sorn (sic) as he first represented the appellant on 7.11.1995.
>
> On hearing both the advocates the Court is still of the opinion that the suit was instituted contrary to Ord III r. I 3 of Civil

A Procedure Rules and therefore this appeal is not before the Court and is rejected.
Sgd. Saleh A. Dahoma -- Judge

B While we agree that there is no indication in writing to show that it was either a judgment, ruling or order of the learned judge in essence or perception of the matter is as follows: That the learned judge took the view that as the suit was being instituted by the appellant, a woman through her authorised attorney, the power of attorney was not acknowledge in terms of Ord III Rule 3 of the C Zanzibar Civil Procedure Decree, Cap 8. With that view, the learned judge therefore held that there was nothing before him ie the appeal was not properly before the Court. Consequently, the appeal was rejected. it is to be observed however, that as can be seen from the extract above, the learned D judge did not say this in so many words. That in our understanding was the import of the decision. Both Mr Patel, learned counsel and Mr Uhuru, learned State Attorney had expressed the view that the decision as extracted, was confusing, it was not easy to tell if it was a judgment, order or ruling. On this, we think it is relevant to examine closely the submissions by Mr Patel and Mr Uhuru on the E issue of the validity of the power of attorney. It was their submission that it was brought up by the learned judge himself at the commencement of the hearing of the appeal. That to our minds, is indicative of the learned judge's anxiety to ensure himself of the propriety of the acknowledgement F of the power of attorney. Before going into the merits of the appeal, the learned judge made a decision on that point. Though it was not indicated, we are firmly of the view that it was an interlocutory order in which the learned judge decided to reject the appeal, the subject of complaint G in this appeal. It was on the basis of this order that the decree was extracted and duly signed by the learned judge.

Next we intend to deal with the propriety of the interlocutory order issued. As pointed out earlier, it H was the view of the learned judge that under Ord III Rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Decree, as the power of attorney was not acknowledged, it was invalid and so, he rejected the appeal. This we are convinced was done by the learned judge by oversight or in complete ignorance of the proviso to Rule 6 of Ord III of the Civil Procedure Decree. under that proviso, if a woman resides outside I Zanzibar which was then referred as to the Protectorate, it is not necessary to acknowledge the power of attorney in the way that the learned judge envisaged. It is enough to have an A authenticated power of attorney here in Zanzibar. In this case, it is our view that the power of attorney could be received and acted upon here in Zanzibar. With respect, the learned judge erred and misdirected himself in law in rejecting the power of attorney on the basis of Ord III Rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Decree. B

Finally, we come to the issue whether Rule 89(2)(iv) was complied with. This is important because if the rule was not complied with then the appeal would not be competently before us. Mr Uhuru, learned State Attorney was of the view that Rule 89(2)(iv) was not complied with. He however C invited us to invoke Rule 3 in order to dispense with the requirement of Rule

89. We think Mr Uhuru is right in that suggestion. In view of the circumstances of the case, we are in agreement with Mr Uhuru in invoking our powers under Rule 3 and dispense with the requirement of Rule 89. This we have done in dealing with this appeal. D
Consequently, on a proper application of the law and the acceptance of the power of attorney which was rejected in error, the fall back position is that the appeal which was before the High Court would still remain undetermined on merit. Accordingly, for the foregoing reasons the decision of the High E Court of 26 February 1997 rejecting the appeal is quashed and set aside. It is further ordered that the matter be remitted to the High Court with direction to hear the appeal on merit by another judge. It is so ordered.
In conclusion, we wish to make the following observation. In order to avoid confusion of this kind F and time wasting inconvenience, judicial officers particularly at the Regional and High Court level would well be advised as far as possible to conform with the elementary guidelines set out under Ord XXIII Rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Decree in writing Court decisions. C Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Duty of appellate court where there is no judgment -Headnote
The appellant appealed to the High Court from a decision of the district court which had ordered that a case which originated in the trial primary court and which was before the district court on appeal D be tried de novo. The dispute between the parties concerned an alleged encroachment and after both parties had called witnesses the trial court visited the scene of the alleged encroachment and drew a sketch of it. The court decided the case mainly on the basis of its own observations during the visit to the disputed land. The district court held that the trial court had not followed the correct procedure regarding the visit to a locus in quo and nullified the proceedings and ordered a trial de E novo. On appeal,
Held:
(i) That the trial court had not so much failed to observe the necessary guidelines but rather that it had failed to discuss the evidence which had been adduced by the parties and given F a judgment based on that evidence. The substantive complaint was that there was no judgment in law from the primary court;

(ii) If the appellate court believed that there was no judgment at all it should have nullified the judgment and remitted the case to the primary court with a direction that a judgment based on all the evidence which was before it be written;

G (iii) If the appellate court found that there was a judgment but that it was unsatisfactory then it should have proceeded to consider the other grounds of appeal and evaluate the evidence and come to its own conclusion;

H (iv) The court cautioned that an order for a trial de novo should only be made in the clearest of situations.

Mroso J: A

This is an appeal against an order of the District Court (Mbuge DM) as a first appellate court that the case which originated in the trial primary court and which was before the district court on appeal be tried de novo. Let me give a brief background to the present appeal. B

The appellants brought a suit against the respondent in the primary court at West Meru claiming that the respondent had encroached on an area measuring about three acres of their land. Both sides called witnesses and the trial Court visited the locus in quo and drew a sketch plan of it. C

In a very brief judgment the trial primary court apparently decided the case mainly on the basis of its observations during the visit to the disputed land.

The respondent was aggrieved by that decision and appealed to the district court by filing five D grounds of appeal. The district magistrate of the first appellate court did not discuss any of the grounds of appeal.

Instead it observed that the trial Court did not follow guidelines contained in the case of Nizar M H Ladak v Gulamali Fazal Jan Mohamed (1) regarding the visit to a locus in quo by a court. Without E specifically saying so the first appellate court proceeded to nullify the proceedings and decision of the trial Court. It then ordered a trial de novo.

The appellants have filed three grounds of appeal and at the hearing the respective counsel for the parties asked and were granted leave to file written submissions. Mr Sabaya, learned advocate for F the appellants, did not meet the deadline for filing his submissions but he explained in writing his failure to beat the deadline and I have accepted his explanation for his late filing.

The first ground of appeal is that it was unnecessary for the first appellate court to order a trial de G novo because there was enough evidence on which the case could have been decided in favour of the appellants. The second ground of appeal is that having nullified the proceedings in the trial court, it was not necessary to a order a trial de novo. The first appellate court should have left it open for H the appellants to choose to institute fresh proceedings. Let me hasten to remark that it was only the proceedings (and the decision) which were apparently nullified and not the case which was filed in the primary court, that was why the case which was still in the primary court was to be tried de novo. If the whole of the case had been I

MROSO J
A nullified there would be nothing to be tried de novo. A fresh case would have to be filed in court.
The third ground of appeal is the error by the trial court in not taking notes when it visited the locus in quo was not so fundamental as to justify the order of a trial de novo.
B The first appellate court had the power to evaluate the recorded evidence and come to its own conclusion.
It is plain that the trial court did not discuss the relationly lengthy evidence it recorded but appeared to base its decision substantially on its observations at the locus in quo, which really means that it C relied mainly on its own `evidence' rather than on the evidence given on oath by the parties and their respective witness. It could therefore be said with justification that there was no proper judgment from the primary court. So, the crucial point really was not so much that the trial court D failed to observe the guidelines regarding a visit to a locus in quo as contained in the Nizar Ladak case (supra) which was cited by the district magistrate and the learned counsel in their respective written submissions but the glaring failure by the trial Court to discuss the evidence which was adduced by the parties and giving a decision based on that evidence. There is little doubt that there was enough evidence from both sides in the case on which a judgment and decision could have E been based. Indeed, the respondent in his grounds of appeal which he filed on the district court did not complain against the trial court in visiting the disputed land or for its failure to take notes of what was observed during the visit and asking the parties to comment, if they wished, on such notes. His F substantive complaint is that there was no judgment in law from the primary court.
What then should the first appellate court have done in such circumstances?
First, it would have to consider the ground of appeal alleging that the primary court judgment was no G judgment at all. If it agreed with that ground of appeal it would nullify the supposed judgment and remit the case to the primary court with a direction that a judgment based on all the evidence which was before the trial court be written.
H However, if the first appellant court found that there was a primary court judgment but that it was unsatisfactory then it would proceed to consider the other grounds of appeal. In doing so, as a first appellate court, it would be entitled to evaluate the entire evidence and come to its own conclusion. A dissatisfied party could then appeal to the High Court.
I I would agree with the appellants that the non-observance by the trial court of the guide lines in the Nizar Ladak case (supra) did not justify nullification of the entire proceedings before the trial court and the order for a trial de novo. A For that reason I quash and set aside the judgment of the district court and direct the appellate magistrate to consider first the ground of appeal whether the primary court judgment was or was not a judgment in law and then proceed as I have indicated in this judgment. B

I would like to caution the district court as a first appellate court that an order for a trial de novo should only be made in the clearest of situations and where it is unavoidable. This is because a fresh trial entails the recalling of witnesses who may or may no longer be available, not to say that the parties are made to incur expenses and expend their time all over again. C
If I have not considered all the grounds of the appeal and the learned submissions of counsel in detail it is not out of disrespect or that they are not worthy but because I feel that it is premature in view of the direction to the district court which I made above. D
The parties to bear their own costs so far here and in the two courts below.

The appellant appealed against his conviction in a primary court for criminal trespass in H contravention of s 299(a) of the Penal Code and his sentence of Shs 1,000/= or three months' imprisonment. He contended on appeal that it had not been proved that he knew that the land belonged to the respondent. [zJDz]Judgment

Moshi J:

This is a second appeal. The primary court of Mbalizi sentenced the appellant, Saidi N Uledi, and six other persons who did not appeal, to a fine of Shs 1 000/= or three months' imprisonment in default, E consequent upon a conviction for criminal trespass, contrary to s 299(a) of the Penal Code. The matter centered on a thirty acre piece of land whose ownership was being claimed by the respondent, Kalesi Ngonela, on the one hand, and the appellant, on the other.

F The conviction and sentence aggrieved the appellant who preferred an appeal to the district court of Mbeya through the services of his learned advocate, Mr Mwangole. The appeal was dismissed, hence this second appeal which was preferred and argued before me by the same Mr Mwangole, G and resisted on behalf of the respondent by Mrs Makuru, learned Senior State Attorney.

The case for the respondent was this. He inherited the land from his father who died in 1957. He cultivated bulrush millet and reserved part of it for cattle grazing. His four witnesses (SM2-SM5) spoke in support of his claim. Solomon Mwamapasi SM2, in particular, said he witnessed the H inheritance transaction. On 12 February 1994 the respondent found the chairman of Igale village, Amanyisye Mwakalonge, allotting the land to some of his villagers. Amanyisye claimed that when he took over the village leadership in 1993 he was told that the land belonged to Igale village. The appellant and the six accused were villagers of Igale village. In consequence, the respondent sued I the chairman, Amanyisye, on behalf of his villagers, for the land. It was Mbalizi primary court Civil Case No 19 of 1994. In that case three of the A respondent's witnesses in this case (SM2-SM4) testified. In a judgment (exh MA2) delivered on 9 May 1994 the primary court found in favour of the respondent and declared him to be the lawful owner of the land in dispute. No appeal was preferred against that decision which to date has not otherwise been reversed or altered. Then in February 1995 the respondent found the appellant and B the six accuseds cultivating the shamba. He registered a complaint against them with the appropriate village authorities who by a letter (exh MA1) dated 10 February 1995 directed the appellant and his six confederates to stop cultivating the respondent's shamba. But the appellant, who was in the forefront, refused to heed the directive, and cultivation continued. Hence the criminal C proceedings before the primary court of Mbalizi.

MOSHI J

The case of the appellant, on the other hand, was that he inherited the land from his deceased father. Neither the appellant nor his witnesses said when. He then dished it out to the six accuseds who, with the appellant, went into occupation and started to cultivate it. Again the appellant did not D say when this took place. The third accused (SU8) said it was in 1969 whilst the seventh accused (SU12) said it was in 1991. The fifth accused (SU10) said he had been cultivating the land for a long time. And the elder brother of the village chairman aged fifty nine years, Lusubilo Mwakalonge SU4, said he knew of shambas occupied by the appellant since 1962 but the land in dispute was not E among them. The appellant claimed that he was neither a party to Civil Case No 19 of 1994 nor aware of it. F

Both courts below believed the respondent and his witnesses and found, on the basis of, among other grounds, Civil Case No 19 of 1994, that the land in dispute belonged to the respondent, and that the appellant was aware of that case, and that he, in consequence, had no genuine claim of G right over that shamba, and finally that the appellant's guilt as charged was demonstrated beyond reasonable doubt.

Mr Mwangole preferred three grounds of appeal, as he had done in the appeal to the district court, which were to the effect, firstly, that the first appellate court grossly erred in law and in fact in H holding that the appellant knew about the dispute in Civil Case No 19 of 1994 regarding the disputed shamba and, secondly, that the learned Resident Magistrate, who heard the first appeal, erred in law in holding that the appellant had no claim of right over the land in dispute. The learned advocate submitted that on account of that I

A the appellant was neither a party to, nor aware of, Civil Case No 19 of 1994 he had a valid claim of right and that the matter ought to have proceeded as a civil case. The case of Saidi Juma v R (1) was cited and relied upon. Mrs Makuru, for her part, submitted that the appellant had no claim of right as he was, like some of his co-accuseds, aware of Civil Case No 19 of 1994 and that the B shamba belonged to the respondent. Saidi's case (supra), she argued, was distinguishable from this case in that in this case there was a valid judgment of a court of law of a civil nature in favour of the respondent while in that case there was none. And in this case, she concluded, village leaders C were involved while in that case they were not.

I have followed and considered these arguments. In the circumstances of this case I am bound to uphold Mrs Makuru's argument. With respect to Mr Mwangole, the appellant was in a way a party in D Civil Case No 19 of 1994. The allegation in that case was that the land in dispute which was the same subject-matter in this case, was the property of Igale village, and the respondent then sued its chairman on behalf of that village and all its villagers of which the appellant was among them. This would account for the fact that the village chairman had to summon some villagers to testify. It was E unnecessary, in my view, that all the villagers, including the appellant, were to testify. It sufficed that only the village chairman and the villagers to whom he was giving the land to had to testify. And with even greater respect, even assuming that the appellant was not a party in those proceedings, he was, as were his co-accuseds, quite obviously aware of that case and its outcome. The F circumstances were clearly such that he simply could not have missed it. The dispute in that case, as already stated, was over the same piece of land, and the village chairman, who was sued by the respondent, as well as the villagers who testified for the appellant in this case, and the appellant himself and his six co-accuseds, were all of the same village of Igale. It was therefore inconceivable G that this great event of that case touching upon that village, its chairman and its villagers in general, would have missed or escaped the attention of the appellant, particularly so when, firstly, the appellant and his co-accuseds were, as they claimed, in occupation of that land and, secondly, H the village chairman, as established, was allotting that same land to some villagers. Furthermore, the entire village leadership was aware that the land in dispute belonged to the respondent, and it was most unlikely that the appellant, in the circumstances, would not have been aware of that as I well.

MOSHI J

And as though to clinch the matter, one of the witnesses summoned by the appellant in this case A SU4, but spoke against the appellant, was the elder brother of the sued village chairman, and this was clearly indicative of that the appellant was duly aware of the dispute in Civil Case No 19 of 1994 as well as the outcome of the case. Indeed, in the circumstances, the appellant's claim that he had inherited the land from his father was, on proper reflection, an attempt to rob the respondent of his B land. His witnesses were, as demonstrated, at variance on that claim. He and his co-accuseds could not have purportedly occupied that shamba for such a long time without being seen by the respondent or by the sued village chairman for that matter. It was when they invaded the shamba in C February 1995 that the respondent, on seeing them, promptly and swiftly acted in the manner already described. The manner in which the appellant responded or reacted to the village leadership's directive (exh MA1) to stop cultivation was clearly indicative of that he was stubbornly clinging to that which he knew belonged to the respondent, rather than to that which he genuinely D believed belonged to him.

The essence of the offence under s 299(a) of the Penal Code is, firstly, that the entry must be unlawful and, secondly, that the entry must be done with intent to commit an offence or to E intimidate, insult or annoy the person in occupation. There can be no doubt in this case that these ingredients were, in the circumstances, and as demonstrated, established to the required extent. The appellant lacked a bona fide or an honest claim of right in terms of s 9 of the Penal Code when F he entered the land he knew belonged to the respondent. As amply demonstrated, he had entered the land with intention to defraud. Saidi's case (supra) was clearly distinguishable from this case in the manner pointed out by the learned Senior State Attorney. In that case there was a bona fide G claim of right which was not the case here. In this case, but not in that case, the respondent had, and still has, a valid judgment and decree of a court of law in his favour arising fro prior civil proceedings over the same piece of land in which the appellant was a party and/or of which he knew about. H

For all the foregoing reasons, I am satisfied, as was the district court, that the appellant was properly convicted and sentenced. In consequence, this second appeal fails, and it is hereby dismissed in its entirety. I

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeals - From decision of Industrial Court - Such Court subordinate to High D Court - Section 27(1C) of Industrial Court of Tanzania Act envisages review jurisdiction of High Court to quash errors of law committed by Industrial Court.
-Headnote
The applicant sought orders quashing the decision of the Industrial Court which had ruled that it had E no power to investigate a dispute referred to it by the Labour Commissioner under s 9A(1) of the Industrial Court of Tanzania Act. Counsel for the respondent attacked the jurisdiction of the High Court to entertain the application, contending that the applicant should have proceeded by way of appeal in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code.
Held:
F (i) The court had previously held that s 27(1C) was unconstitutional to the extent that it whittled down the right to an appeal and was inconsistent with article 13(b)(a) of the Constitution. The jurisdiction of the court to quash for errors of law on the face of the record was traditionally one which fell under judicial review which was normally sought by G way of application. It was certain that s 27(1C) envisaged such application;

(ii) On the merits of the application, the power of the Industrial Court in relation to trade disputes referred to it by the Minister under ss 4(4)(a) or 8 had to be contrasted with its H power in relation to matters referred to it by the Labour Commissioner under s 9A(1). The former power was adjudicatory whereas the latter was merely investigatory. The Industrial Court was accordingly obliged to investigate the matters referred to it by the Labour Commissioner;

(iii) The Industrial Court had erred in refusing to hold an enquiry into the matters referred to it and in taking the view that there existed no trade dispute between the parties. The I application accordingly had to be granted.

Mapigano, JA:
Felix Luhende, Nyangaki Shilungushella, Deo Kaholwe, Charles Maziku and Michael Mhina were C employees of the Shinyanga Region Co-operative Union (1984) Ltd, the respondent herein. Their respective services were terminated on different dates between 1989 and 1990. Being aggrieved by the said terminations they took their complaints to the applicant of which they were members. The applicant reported the matters to the Labour Commissioner under the provisions of s 9A of the D Industrial Court of Tanzania Act, 1967 as amended by Act No 3 of 1990. Upon the approval of the Minister for Labour the said Commissioner duly referred the matters to the Industrial Court for enquiry, as he considered that there existed a trade dispute between the parties. He wanted the E Industrial Court to make inquiry on procedural and substantive levels, to wit, whether the respondent had followed the laid down procedures when it terminated the services of the five employees, and whether there were good causes for the terminations.
Sitting at Shinyanga to hear the dispute the Industrial Court had to rule on a preliminary legal point F taken on behalf of the respondent as to jurisdiction. The argument advanced was that the Industrial Court had no power to investigate the dispute because the five complaints were not the respondent's employees and that, therefore, the matters referred to it did not constitute a trade G dispute. In its ruling date 27 August 1991 the Court upheld the objection, the assessors dissenting, and it then pleased the Court to `dismiss the complaints and close the file'.
The applicant has come to this Court to challenge the decision and to seek two orders, the first being certiorari to quash the decision and the second being mandamus directing the Industrial H Court to hold an enquiry and then to report to the Minister responsible for Labour matters in accordance with the provisions of s 9A(1) of the Industrial Court of Tanzania Act. The validity of the decision of the Industrial Court is impugned on two grounds. The first is that the Court has no I jurisdiction at all to make a ruling, as it did, on a
MAPIGANO JA
A preliminary objection, and the second ground is that the court erred in refusing to conduct an enquiry into the matters referred to it by the Labour Commissioner and that it had no discretion whatever to refrain from making such enquiry. Let us say right here that to us these grounds appear formidable, and it is not without significance that the respondent has not actually bothered to meet B them.
Before we proceed to consider and determine the two grounds we have to dispose of a preliminary objection which Dr Lamwai, learned counsel, has taken on behalf of the respondent as to the C competence of this court to entertain this application. Dr Lamwai has raised that point in an affidavit, and on behalf of the applicant Mr Kisusi learned counsel, has taken issue with that procedure. We cannot but agree with Mr Kisusi that it is wholly wrong for an affidavit to embody objections on points of law, and we need not point out that the question of jurisdiction is one which pertains to the D realm of law.

An affidavit is essentially a substitute for oral evidence, and should only contain statements of fact and circumstances. That being the case then we hold in common with Sir Udo Udoma, CJ in the case of Uganda v Commissioner of Prisons, Ex-parte Matovu (1), to which we have been referred, E that `such an affidavit must not contain extraneous matter by way of objection or prayer or legal argument or conclusion'.

All the same, we have deemed it desirable to make a few observations about the objection. In F support of the objection Dr Lamwai has urged the point that the High Court has no jurisdiction to grant prerogative orders against the Industrial Court, his reason being that the letter is not subordinate to the former. We have accepted Mr Kisusi's submission that what the applicant is seeking in this cause cannot strictly be called prerogative orders. We have to remind Dr Lamwai G that in our legal system remedies of certiorari and mandamus are, since 1968, simply known as orders. We have rejected Dr Lamwai's contention that the Industrial Court is not subordinate to the High Court. We have not the least hesitation in saying that it is indeed so subordinate, and we have H taken the view that that is exactly what s 27(IC) of the Industrial Court of Tanzania Act signifies, and that that is immaterial that the proceedings of that Court are sometimes presided over by a judge of the High Court. In actual fact that is precisely the say it has always been viewed.

I Dr Lamwai has also urged the point that decisions of the Industrial Court are final and cannot be challenged or questioned except on appeal to the full bench of the High Court on points of law, and, accordingly, that the applicant A should instead have come to this court by way of appeal in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. We regret to say that we cannot accept this proposition.

On his part Mr Kisusi points out, correctly, that there is no provision in the Industrial Court of B Tanzania Act which says that proceedings brought to the High Court to challenge the decisions of the Industrial Court should assume the form or structure of an appeal. He also makes the point that a right of appeal from any decision must as a rule be derived from a statute, and that, therefore, C unless a statute confers the right it is not otherwise available. We are not in full accord with this expression. As we understand the law, the position in Tanzania is that the said rule no longer applies to first appeals, by virtue of article 13(b)(a) of the Constitution whereunder `the right of appeal or another legal remedy' against first instance decisions of courts of law or other bodies D which decide on a person's rights or interests founded on statutory provisions is guaranteed. And in this connection mention might be made of the recent decision of the full bench of this court in Ottu v The AG and Another (2), where it was held that s 27(IC) of the Industrial Court of Tanzania Act E whittles down the right conferred by that constitutional provision; that the section falls outside the purview of article 30(2) of the Constitution; and that therefore the section is unconstitutional and invalid to the extent that it is inconsistent with article 13(b)(a). F

Mr Kisusi is however right to contend that the jurisdiction of this Court to quash for errors of law on the face of the record is traditionally one which falls under judicial review, which is normally sought by way of application. And we are certain that s 27(IC) envisages such application. In the G circumstances we have to overrule the preliminary objection, and we so do.

We now turn to the grounds urged in support of this application. In relation to the first ground the vital question of law is whether the Industrial Court has jurisdiction to make a final or dispositive H decision in a matter referred to it by the Labour Commissioner under s 9A(1) of the Industrial Court of Tanzania Act. Mr Kisusi puts forward the argument that the court does not enjoy such jurisdiction, be it on a preliminary point or otherwise; that all that the Court could have done in this case was to conduct on enquiry into the dispute and then submit its report on it to the Minister; and that it amounted to a wrong assumption of authority when the Court I

A purported to decide the preliminary objection in the manner it did.

Section 9A(1) deals with the matter this way:

`Subject to subsection (2), where any trade dispute exists or is apprehended, the Labour Commissioner may inquire into the causes and circumstances of the trade dispute and, with the approval of the Minister, refer any B matters appearing to him to be connected or relevant to that trade dispute to the Court whether or not the matter or dispute is a trade dispute within the meaning assigned to that expression by section 3, and the court shall inquire into the matters so referred to it and report on them to the Minister.'

C Mr Kisusi invites us to recognize that the power or function of the Industrial Court in relation to trade disputes referred to it by the Minister under s 4(4)(a) or s 8 is to be contrasted with its power in relation to matters referred to it by the Labour Commissioner under s 9A(1). He says that in the D former its function is adjudicatory, ie `to consider the dispute and make an award thereon', while in the latter its function is just investigatory, ie `to inquire into the matters and report on them to the Minister'. this is an unquestionally correct statement of the law and we embrace it. We think that the language of the statute could hardly be more plain in assigning those two distinct functions to the E Industrial Court. We hold that s 9A(1) as read together with s 15(2)(c) imposed an obligation of the Court to investigate the matters referred to it by the Labour Commissioner and report thereon to the Minister. We think and hold that it was, in a very significant sense, an arrogation of power on the F part of the Court to `dismiss the complaints and close the file'.

We come to the second ground. Mr Kisusi submits that the Industrial Court was in patent and serious legal error when it refused to hold an enquiry into the matters referred to it, upon taking the G view that there existed, in fact or in the contemplation of the law, no trade dispute between the parties. Again we are obliged to sustain this contention and we have to observe that much of what we have stated in regard to the first ground is also applicable here. The refusal of the Court to investigate the matters involved a clear disregard of the words of the statute. As we have already H noted, the simple and explicit words of s 9A(1) compelled it to inquire into those matters and report on them to the Minister, regardless of whether or not the matters constituted a trade dispute as defined under s 3. The court's opinion on the question whether the complainants were employees I of the respondent or not should, in our view have been stated in the report to the Minister.

In the final event, we are satisfied that this application is well-grounded. We grant the two remadies A and award the costs to the applicant.

C Rweyemamu and Dr Mwaikusa for the respondent.

Kisanga, JA

During the 1995 general election Mr Stephen Masatu Wasira had been elected Member of D Parliament for the Bunda constituency, but his election was subsequently nullified by the High Court (Lugakingira, J) following an election petition filed by one of his opponents, Mr Joseph Sinde Warioba. Dissatisfied with the nullification of his election Mr Wasira sought to appeal to this Court, but before the appeal was heard Counsel for Mr Warioba, the respondent, filed two preliminary E objections to the appeal alleging two grounds: The first ground alleges non-compliance with Rule 77 of the Court of Appeal Rules in that no copy of the appellant's notice of appeal was served on the respondent or his Counsel. In the second ground it is alleged that the appeal has been instituted out F of time and without prior leave to do so.

At the heading of this preliminary objection, the respondent was represented by Mr J S Rweyemamu and Dr J T Mwaikusa, learned advocates while Dr M R M Lamwai and Mr Marando, G learned advocates appeared for the appellant. Before the hearing of the preliminary objection commenced, Dr Lamwai informed the Court that there was pending before this Court Civil Application No 29 of 1997 in which the appellant is applying for extension of time to serve the notice of appeal on the respondent. He further disclosed that that application was filed under a certificate H of urgency but the Chief Justice by an administrative decision directed that the preliminary objection which was filed earlier be heard first. Dr Lamwai, therefore, at first urged us to review the administrative decision of the Chief Justice and to hear that application first, but after some preliminary observations of the Court he conceded that the preliminary objection has to be heard I first.

KISANGA JA

It was common ground that the judgement of the High Court giving rise to this appeal was delivered A at Musoma on 30 August 1996, and that the appellant promptly filed his notice of appeal on 2 September 1996. However the question whether the appellant served a copy of that notice on the respondent, as required by Rule 77 of the Court of Appeal Rules, is seriously in dispute and is the B subject matter for determination in this proceeding. The appellant asserts that a copy of that notice was duly served on the respondent, but the respondent vehemently denies it. Each side adduced evidence by affidavit in support of their respective claims.

The appellant filed two affidavits. One of them is dated 16 June 1997 and the other, being a reply to C the respondent's counter-affidavit, is dated 29 July 1997. In both affidavits the appellant says in effect that on 2 September 1996 he went to the Mwanza High Court registry where he found Mr Rweyemamu, the advocate who had acted for the respondent in the High Court. He sought to serve D the copy of the notice of appeal on him but Mr Rweyemamu declined service on the ground that his instructions were limited to representing the respondent in the High Court only. Whereupon the appellant decided to go to serve the respondent at the New Mwanza Hotel where he, the respondent, was staying. He arrived at the hotel at about 9 am and upon inquiring he was informed E by one John Natay, a receptionist at the hotel, that the respondent was around. He then left the copy of the notice with John Natay with instructions to deliver it to the respondent. The appellant made no follow up on the matter after that. F

The said John Natay filed an affidavit in support of the appellant's case. He said in effect that on 2 September 1996 he delivered notice of appeal to the respondent on the instructions of the appellant.

The respondent in his counter-affidavit said that he was staying at the New Mwanza Hotel but G checked out of the hotel at 8.30 am on 2 September 1996 to catch a flight to Dar Es Salaam that day. He produced the carbon copy of the coupon of his used ticket which shows that the take off time of his plane that day was 10.05 am. He also produced a copy of the passenger manifest which bears his name as being one of the passengers travelling from Mwanza to Dar es Salaam on 2 H September 1996. For the respondent, therefore, it was contended that having checked out of the hotel at 8.30 am he could not have been served with the said notice of appeal which was allegedly brought to the hotel by the appellant at about 9 am. In response to this, however, the appellant in his I

A reply to the appellant's counter-affidavit maintained that the respondent was still at the hotel by 9 am that day because John Natay confirmed this to him.

Thus it amounts to one man's word against that of another. It is the word of the respondent who B claims that he checked out of the hotel at 8.30 am as against that of the appellant who maintains that the respondent was still at the hotel at 9 am. We now have the task of assessing the material before us and to decide which of the two stories is to be accepted.

C To start with, it is to be observed that the appellant himself did not see the respondent at Mwanza Hotel. He depends entirely on what Natay told him. But Natay does not say what time he delivered the notice to the respondent. So that when the respondent says that he checked out of the hotel at 8.30 am there is nothing to contradict him on that. The appellant's statement that according to D Natay the respondent was still at the hotel at 9 am that day is not enough; it required Natay himself to confirm it on oath, which he has not. As it is now one cannot assume that if Natay were asked he would necessarily have confirmed it. Indeed Natay might very well have come up with his own E version; he might have said that he delivered the notice to the respondent at 11 am which could not be true because by then the respondent, whose flight departure time was 10.05 am, would have already left Mwanza for Dar es Salaam.

In the course of submissions by Counsel, it appeared to be common ground that for domestic F flights passengers are required to report for checking in at the airport one hour before departure time. According to the respondent's used ticket then he had to be at the airport at about 9.05 am, and given that it takes some twenty to thirty minutes to drive to the airport, it seems less likely that the respondent would still be at Mwanza Hotel at 9 am by which time he ought to be at the airport. G On the other hand the respondent's version that he checked out of the hotel at 8.30 am appears more likely because that would give him allowance of about 30 minutes to drive to reach the airport in time for checking in at about 9.05 am.

H Dr Lamwai came up with suggestions that the respondent's departure time for his flight may have been re-scheduled in such a way which made it possible for him to leave the hotel later that 8.30 am. Counsel also contended that the respondent, as a former Prime Minister, travels in style whereby someone would check him in and he does not have to stand in the queue. So that he could have left the hotel late and therefore he need not have left the hotel so early in order to beat the I scheduled time for reporting. However, all this was mere speculation. No evidence whatsoever was adduced to show or suggest that there A were any changes in the scheduled times for reporting or take off, or that someone checked the respondent in while the respondent could remain behind at the hotel for some time. What is more, it was apparent from the passenger manifest that the respondent was travelling in a group of not less B than five passengers, most of them members of his family. No evidence was adduced to show that he severed himself from this group and remained behind at the hotel while the rest proceeded to the airport for checking in on schedule.

On the other hand there are some aspects in the appellant's story which tend to render that story C less probable. First of all when this notice of preliminary objection was served on him, his first reaction was to go to Court and apply for extension of time to serve the notice of appeal on the respondent. He did this in Civil Application No 29 of 1997 which was referred to at the beginning of this Ruling. Paragraph 7 of the affidavit in support of that application is reproduced word for word in D paragraph 10 of the affidavit dated 16 June 1997 which the appellant is relying on in this proceeding. That paragraph says:

> `Further that non-service of the notice upon the 1st respondent is not out of my negligence but out of the fact that E New Mwanza Hotel staff.'

The paragraph appears to be a clear admission by the appellant that the respondent was not served with the notice of appeal, and that is why he says in para 3 of the said affidavit of 16 June F 1996 that he applied to the Court for enlargement of time to serve the respondent accordingly. It is only in that way that the appellant's story can make sense. His subsequent claim that Natay informed him that he duly served the notice of appeal on the respondent sounds more of an G afterthought. For, when confronted with this allegation of non-service of the notice on the respondent, one would normally expect that the first thing appellant would have done was to turn to John Natay and ask him to confirm whether or not he had delivered the notice to the respondent as H instructed. And if the answer was in the affirmative then the natural thing to do was for the appellant to place that information before the Court in answer to the preliminary objection. It is only if John Natay confirmed non-service that the appellant would be expected to move the Court, as he did, for leave to do so out of time. But to say that the appellant would go to Court to ask for such I leave when he already

A knew that the respondent had been duly served sounds odd to say the least. In our view the more likely thing is that the appellant went to Court to apply for leave to serve the respondent with the notice of appeal out of time after he had satisfied himself that the respondent had not been served with such notice.

B There is yet another aspect of the appellant's conduct which raises some concern. A copy of the notice of appeal is directed to the respondent through his advocate, Mr J S Rweyemamu at Mr Rweyemamu's address in Bukoba. This raises a number of questions. First, the case was decided at Musoma. Now, since it is undisputed that both the appellant and the respondent are living in Dar C es Salaam why was it necessary to route the notice through the respondent's advocate in Bukoba instead of sending it direct to the respondent through his address for service in Dar es Salaam which was well known to the appellant? More so especially as the appellant himself travelled to Dar D es Salaam shortly after preparing the notice of appeal on 2 September 1996 because he held a press conference in Dar es Salaam on 8 September 1996.

Again the appellant, appreciating the importance of serving the respondent with the notice, says that he went personally to serve the respondent with the notice at the New Mwanza Hotel. If this is so E then why did he not ascertain that the respondent was in fact served either by himself effecting the service or by waiting for John Natay to return to him and confirm the service on the respondent? Why did the appellant not seek to have the respondent's signature against the receipt of such an important document? Worse still the appellant says in his affidavit that he never made a follow up F on the matter until the notice of preliminary objection was served on him. It is most strange that the appellant would fail to make a follow up on such an important matter. These are some of the G additional matters which is our view, serve to make the appellant's story increasingly less likely.

Considering all the circumstances of the case, therefore, we are satisfied that it is more likely than not that the respondent was not served with a copy of the appellant's notice of appeal. That renders H the appeal defective. Since the appellant did not take steps to remedy the defect until only after he was prompted by the respondent's notice of this preliminary objection, the appeal cannot now be saved. We shall make the final order after considering the other ground of objection.

I As stated earlier, the second leg of the objection alleges that the appeal has been instituted out of time and without leave to do so.

The notice of appeal was lodged in Court on 2 September 1996, and in terms of Rule 83(1) of the A Court of Appeal Rules the appeal ought to have been instituted within sixty days of that date. That is to say, the deadline for instituting the appeal was on 2 November 1996, but the appeal was lodged in Court only on 15 November 1996. That was clearly out of time unless the appellant could rely on B the exception to the sixty days rule provided for in the proviso to Rule 83(1). Mr Rweyemamu submitted that the appellant could not rely on that exception because he had not satisfied one condition for invoking it. Learned Counsel went on to say that contrary to what the law requires, the appellant did not send to the respondent or his advocate a copy of the letter to the Registrar C applying for proceedings in the case; and that indeed there was no evidence that the appellant had written any such letter to the Registrar.

Refuting all this, Dr Lamwai cited a letter in the original court case file, addressed to the Registrar by the appellant and dated 2 September 1996 by which the appellant applied for proceedings in the D case, with a copy of that letter to the respondent in the care of his advocate, Mr M S Rweyemamu at this address in Bukoba. Dr Lamwai, therefore, contended that not only was the letter applying for proceedings written to the Registrar, but that a copy of that letter was also sent to the respondent E through his advocate. Learned Counsel further submitted that proof of service was evidenced by the fact that the letter was copied to the respondent in the care of his advocate, and for this submission he relied on the decision of a single judge of this Court (Mfalila, JA) in the case of F Aluminium Africa Ltd v Adil Abdallah Dhiyebi (1). In that case the learned judge had expressed the view that all that an appellant need show is that he sent to the respondent a copy of his letter to the Registrar applying for proceedings, and that the fact that such letter was copied to the respondent was enough proof (the emphasis is supplied.) G

With due respect, however, Dr Lamwai overlooked the fact that this decision of the single judge was reversed upon a reference to the full Court, vide Reference Civil Application No 6 of 1990. In the H course of hearing that reference the Court found that, upon his own admission, the appellant had not sent to the respondent a copy of his letter to the Registrar even though the letter itself was shown to have been copied to the respondent. Thus the Court did not decide on what constitutes `sending' within the meaning of sub-Rule (2) of Rule 83 of the Rules which requires that a copy of such letter be sent to the respondent. Happily, however, Dr Mwaikusa cited a statu- I

A tory provision which supplies the answer. It is Rule 20(7) of the Court of Appeal Rules which says:

> `20 (7) Where any document is required to be sent to any person, the document may be sent by hand or by B registered post to that person or to any person entitled under Rule 28 to appear on his behalf and notice of the date fixed for the hearing of an application or appeal or for the deliver of judgement or the reasons for any decision may be given by telephone or telegram.'

C For the appellant in the instant case it was merely shown that the letter in question was copied to the respondent's advocate, and nothing more. It is quite clear that that was no proof of service within the meaning of the above rule. We therefore find that the letter in question was not sent to the respondent and, consequently the appellant is not entitled to rely on the exception of Rule 83(1).

D Upon further examination of the original court case file Dr Mwaikusa brought to our attention the fact that the carbon copy of the appellant's letter to the Registrar was still in the file. The learned Counsel submitted that since the said letter to the Registrar is shown to have been copied to the respondent only, it follows that the carbon copy found in the file is the one which was supposed to E be sent to the respondent but was not in fact sent. We have no good reason to differ from that view.

There is yet another point which reinforces our finding that the copy of the said letter to the F Registrar was not sent to the respondent. The appellant, in his Application No 29 of 1997 referred to in para 3 of his affidavit in this proceeding, is applying to this Court for leave to appeal out of time. It seems plain that he took that step because he was satisfied that he could not rely on the exception to Rule 83(1) as he had not sent to the respondent the copy of his letter to the Registrar. His G subsequent claim that the copy was duly sent to the respondent was an afterthought. It was a desperate attempt to save the situation after the administrative decision by the Chief Justice that the preliminary objection be heard first before the appellant's application. It therefore follows that the H appeal which was filed only on 15 November 1996 was time barred and hence bad in law as it was so filed without prior leave to do so.

In the result the preliminary objection is sustained on both grounds of the appellant's failure to serve the respondent with a copy of the notice of appeal, and of instituting the appeal out of time. I Accordingly the appeal is struck out with costs.

The respondent had been granted an extension of time by the Court of Appeal within which to file an appeal after his appeal had previously been struck out on the ground that it was incompetent for not having the extracted order attached. The single judge of the Court of Appeal held that the delay on the part of the respondent had been technical and not actual and that the original appeal, though E incompetent, had been lodged in time. In the present reference the applicant contended that the application ought not to have been granted because it lacked the requisite notice of intention to appeal as with the striking out of the appeal the notice of appeal had also disappeared.

Held: F

(i) Applicant was correct in contending that when the appeal had been struck out the notice of appeal was also struck out: in that situation if a party still wished to appeal a fresh application had to be filed in the High Court seeking extension of time in which to give notice of appeal;

(ii) In determining whether the application should nonetheless be granted, the court took into G account that counsel had been negligent in adopting the correct procedure and this could not constitute sufficient reason for the exercise of the court's discretion.

Lubuva, JA

In the Court of Appeal Civil Application No 6 of 1997, Dr Fortunatus Lwanyantika Masha, the respondent had applied for extension of time within which to file the appeal. The learned single C judge (Mfalida, JA) granted the application in terms of the following order:

(a) The applicant should file the notice of appeal fourteen days from the date of this ruling.

D (b) Thereafter the processing of the appeal including the time table will be in accordance with the rules of this Court.

The applicant being dissatisfied with that decision has filed this reference. In order to appreciate the E sequence of events in the case its background is necessary. Briefly stated, it is as follows: The Civil Appeal No 43 of 1996 to this Court was struck out on the ground that it was incompetent because the extracted order was not annexed. The Court directed that the respondent who was the F appellant, could, if he so wished, institute the appeal afresh by making the appropriate application before the High Court. Following that decision, the respondent filed Miscellaneous Civil Cause No 15 of 1995 in the High Court at Mwanza. In that application the respondent sought to have the extension of time within which to appeal to this Court against the ruling of the High Court (Chipeta, G J). The learned judge dealing with that application held that the High Court had no power to grant extension of time to appeal in a matter where the right of appeal to this Court lies as a matter of right. That the matter had to be dealt with by the Court of Appeal, the learned judge further held. H Consequently, the matter was brought up to this Court in Civil Application No 6 of 1997.

Granting the application, the learned single judge of this Court held that the delay on the part of the respondent was technical, not actual. The learned single judge took the view that the original appeal I though incompetent was lodged in time. In the view of the learned single judge, the respondent acted immediately after the Court had struck out the first A appeal. On these grounds, the learned single judge was convinced that sufficient reason had been given to warrant the extension of time. The application was allowed.

Before us Mr Mwale, learned Counsel, appeared for the respondent. On the other hand Mr Makani and Mr Muhula, learned counsel, advocated for the first applicant. The second applicant, the B Honourable the Attorney General was represented by Mr Werema, learned Senior State Attorney. Mr Mwale vehemently submitted that the application before the learned single judge for extension of time to file the appeal was incompetent because it lacked the pre-requisite notice of intention to C appeal. This he said was because with the striking out of the appeal by this Court in Civil Appeal No 43 of 1996, the notice of appeal also disappeared. And so, Mr Mwale observed, in the absence of the notice of appeal, the application before the learned single judge was incompetent and therefore D the proceedings were a nullity. The order by the learned single judge, Mr Mwale further further submitted, arising from such proceedings is incompetent, it should be set aside. In support of his submission, Mr Mwale referred us to the decision of this Court in the case of Arusha International Conference Centre v Damas Augustine Ndemasi Kavishe (1). E

Responding to the submission by Mr Mwale, Mr Makani, learned Counsel strongly maintained that the application before the learned single judge was competent. He stated that the issue of the F competence of the application was not raised before the single judge and therefore it was not open to be raised at this stage on reference. The only issue before the single judge was an application for extension of time within which to file the appeal, Mr Makani urged. With regard to the notice of G appeal, it was the view of Mr Makani that once an application for extension of time to file the appeal was lodged, by necessary implication there was also an application for extension of time in which to file notice of appeal. If we understood Mr Makani properly, he seemed to be of the view that on account of an implied application regarding notice, the learned single judge granted a relief which was not sought. That is, the first applicant was granted extension of fourteen days within which to H file the notice of appeal.

For the second applicant, Mr Werema, learned Senior State Attorney while conceding that the application before the single judge lacked the requisite notice of appeal, still he insisted that as the matter involved an election petition which of great public interest, I

A the learned single judge was properly vested with jurisdiction to deal with the application.

With respect, we are in agreement with Mr Mwale that when Civil Appeal No 43 of 1996 was struck out, the notice of appeal was also struck out. In that situation, it is our view that if it is still so desired B to appeal, a fresh application has to be filed in the High Court seeking extension of time in which to give notice of appeal. In the case of Arusha International Conference Centre v Damas Augustine Ndemasi Kavishe, (supra) this Court had occasion to consider the effect of striking out an appeal. In that case it was stated:

C `The application for extension of time to file the memorandum and record of appeal presupposes that there is already a notice of appeal in existence. But the notice of appeal which brought into being the appeal which has just D been struck out, disappeared with the striking out of that appeal.'

In this case as pointed out by Mr Makani, learned Counsel it is apparent from the record that the issue of jurisdiction and competence of the application before the learned single judge was not E raised at the hearing of the application. It seems clear to us that the complaint before the learned single judge was that the application was incompetent because Rule 8 was not cited in the heading of the notice of motion. On this, the learned single judge ruled that, that did not affect the validity of the application. We can see no ground for faulting the judge on that. Otherwise the learned single F judge did not have the benefit of hearing the views of the learned Counsel for either of the parties on the issue of jurisdiction. For that reason, the application was determined without addressing the question of jurisdiction as such. However, considering the fact that the Court's proceedings are G governed by the Court of Appeal Rules, 1979, it is our view that it does not matter whether the issue of jurisdiction was raised at the hearing of the application before the single judge. We think the matter was properly raised at the hearing of this reference before us in order to ensure that the mandatory requirement of the rules regarding the processing of appeals was complied with. As it turned out in this case, the notice of appeal, a necessary requirement under Rule 76 which was lacking would not have come to light if the matter was not raised in the Court. For that reason, and with due respect, we do not accept Mr Makani's submission that there was an implied application for extension of time to file notice of appeal. This is because, in situations such as this where, Rule 76 of the Court's rules explicitly provides for notice of appeal as a necessary A condition, compliance with it cannot be attained by implication. It has to be done in fact and nothing short of that. In here, the application before the learned single judge was filed before an application for extension of time to give notice of appeal had been made in the High Court. This fact apparently B the learned single judge realised when he granted an extension of fourteen days in which to file notice of appeal, a relief which was not sought in the application. In the circumstances, we do not think that Mr Makani's assertion on implied notice of appeal does in any way improve the applicant's case. On the other hand, even if Mr Makani's submission that there was an implied application for C extension of time in which to file notice of appeal is accepted, we think such an implied application, if any, would still be incompetent. The reason is that in terms of the provisions of s 11(1) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979 and Rule 8 of the Court's Rules, this Court and the High Court have D concurrent jurisdiction to grant extension of time to give notice of appeal. However, under Rule 44, the application for extension of time shall in the first instance be made to the High Court. In the instant case, no such application had been made to the High Court. Therefore, the matter before E the learned single judge was incompetent for non-compliance with Rule 44. That is, the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application which had not satisfied the conditions set out under this rule. In somewhat similar circumstances, in the case of The Director of Public Prosecutions v F Priska Asha Kwambaza (2) this Court held that as the conditions under Rule 44 were not fulfilled, the learned single judge wrongly assumed jurisdiction. In this case as the application was decided without addressing the issue of jurisdiction, with respect we think if the learned single judge had done so, he would have come to this conclusion. G

Lack of jurisdiction alone would be sufficient to dispose of this reference. But Mr Mwale, learned Counsel had gone further in his submission before us. He contended that in order for the Court to exercise its discretion judiciously under Rule 8 to enlarge time to appeal sufficient reason should be H shown to explain the delay. In this case, Mr Mwale urged, no reason let alone sufficient reason, had been shown by the applicant to explain the delay. Mr Mwale went on in his submission, the distinction drawn by the learned single judge between technical and actual delay did not in his view, amount to sufficient reason. The delay in instituting the ap- I

A peal and seeking extension of time for filing notice of appeal was due to the negligence of the applicant's Counsel which is no sufficient reason, Mr Mwale emphasized. Mr Werema learned Senior State Attorney also conceded that no sufficient reason had been advanced to explain the delay.

B With regard to the merits of the application, Mr Makani ardently maintained that there was no negligence in connection with the application for extension of time either before the single judge of this Court or in the High Court in Mwanza. He said, it was in connection with Civil Appeal No 43 of 1996 in this Court to which negligence could be attributed on account of non-inclusion of an C extracted order. Following the Court's decision in striking out Civil Appeal No 43 of 1996, Mr Makani submitted, the applicant promptly took action. That is, the application in the High Court at Mwanza and then the application before the single judge, the subject of this reference were filed, Mr Makani D observed.

We have given anxious consideration to these submissions on whether sufficient reason had been given to warrant the extension of time. It is common knowledge that it is a matter of discretion on E the part of the Court to extend the time in which to file the appeal or notice of appeal. That such discretion is to be exercised judicially is also elementary. It is however, to be observed that in the exercise of such power, the requisite condition is that sufficient reason is to be given. Dealing with the application for extension of time in which to file the appeal the learned single judge held that the F delay was technical and that the applicant acted immediately after the pronouncement of the ruling of the Court striking out the appeal. Apparently, in an endeavour to comply with the direction of this Court to institute the appeal afresh by an appropriate application before the High Court, the first respondent filed a wrong application in the High Court at Mwanza. That is, he filed an application for G extension of time to appeal to this Court. That was, as correctly stated by Mr Mwale, a wrong application. It is common ground that an application of that nature is filed in this Court. The appropriate application envisaged to be filed in the High Court was an application for extension of time in which to file notice of appeal. Once that application is granted in the High Court, then the H application for extension of time to appeal before a single judge would be filed. As it happened, the application to the single judge of this Court was filed before the appropriate application was made before the High Court and granted. Thus, the delay was caused by the wrong application filed in the I High Court. This, we are convinced, is a clear manifestation of negligence on the part of Counsel. In our view, such negligence A on the part of the Counsel for the first respondent goes to the very root of the matter, it cannot be regarded as a mere slip. On a number of occasions, this Court has held that negligence on the part of Counsel is not sufficient reason for extending time under Rule 8. See the following among others: Maulidi Juma v Abdalla Juma (3), Kiqhoma Ali Malima v Abas Yusuf Mwingamno (4). The Court of B Appeal for Eastern Africa had also dealt with this aspect in the case of Shah Hemraj Bharmas and Brothers v Santosh Kumar w/o J N Bhola (5).

Applying the principle enunciated in these cases to the instant case, we are with respect, satisfied C that the negligence on the part of the Counsel for the first respondent in filing wrong applications which caused the delay cannot constitute sufficient reason. In our understanding, what featured prominently before the learned single judge was the fact that the wrong application to the High Court D was filed immediately after this Court struck out the appeal and that the delay in filing the application which was before him was technical. Had the learned single judge taken into account the fact that it was the Counsel's act of filing wrong applications which caused the delay, we think he would well have come to a different decision. E

In the result, and for the foregoing reasons we are resolutely of the view that the learned single judge dealt with an incompetent application which did not comply with the Court's Rules 44 and 71. Consequently, the proceedings before the learned single judge were a nullity. Accordingly, we allow the reference and set aside the order of the learned single judge dated 21 May 1997. The applicant F is awarded costs for this reference.

(iv) That the district security officer had burnt ballot papers for demonstration;

(v) That candidates' photographs and voting formats to educate the electorate on how to vote had been delayed;

(vi) That the counting exercise had been conducted by the returning officer without involving F the petitioner or his agents;

(vii) That the RF2 forms had been designed in such a way that the results could easily be tampered with;

(viii) That voting had been allowed to drag until until the day after the election was scheduled to have been completed;

G (ix) That in the light of the cumulative irregularities and malpractices and the deployment of FFU, who were mainly concerned with riots, at the election for reasons of intimidation, the election had been rendered not free and fair and the result had to be nullified.

Masanche J
In 1995, our Country witnessed the first multiparty general election. It was an exiting phenomena. Thirteen parties were then in existence in the register of the Registrar of Political Parties. At the D beginning, one thought all parties were going to field candidates to contest for both the parliamentary seats, and the presidential post. Not all the parties fielded candidates.
This judgment is concerned with the parliamentary and presidential elections of Muleba South in Kagera Region. In that constituency five political parties fielded candidates for the parliamentary E seat. Two fielded candidates for the Presidential seat. The parties that fielded candidates were: Chama Cha Mapinduzi (CCM); their candidate was Wilson Mutaganywa Masilingi. (I will refer to him in the rest of the judgment as Mr Masilingi). Then there was the party called NCCR Mageuzi. They fielded a candidate called Prince Mahinja Mulokozi Bagenda (I will refer to him in the rest of the F judgment as Mr Bagenda). There was another Party called CUF (Civil United Front). This Party fielded a candidate called Mr Angelo Mutta. There was another Party called the UDP (United Democratic Party). This party fielded a candidate called Mr Gratian Alphonce Mkoba. The fourth G Party, UMD (Union for Multiparty Democracy) fielded a person called Simon Kashura. These were the candidates for the parliamentary seat.
For the Presidential seat, only two parties fielded candidates. These were the CCM who fielded a H candidate called Benjamin William Mkapa and NCCR Mageuzi who fielded a candidate called Augustine Lyatonga Mrema. The other three parties, as far as Muleba South is concerned, did not field any candidates for the Presidential post. This judgment, as I have to emphasize, concerns only the election for the parliamentary seat.
It is I think desirable, nay, necessary, to mention, at the outset, I

A (especially to a person coming from outside Kagera) that Muleba South was one constituency in the Muleba District. There was another constituency called Muleba North. Muleba North was a fully fledged constituency and had a candidate called Ndimara Tegambwage for the parliamentary post. B Ndimara contested under the umbrella NCCR Mageuzi and won the seat. I have decided to mention this because during the trial, counsels, and, indeed witnesses, mentioned the North quite often.
At the end of these parliamentary elections Mr Masilingi emerged the winner. He scored twenty one C thousand eight hundred and fifty one votes as against the second placed Mr Bagenda, who scored eighteen thousand one hundred and thirty one votes. Masilingi, by simple mathematics became a winner by a majority of three thousand seven hundred and twenty votes. This victory did not please Mr Bagenda and his party. And so, they sought to challenge that victory in a court of law.

D Indeed, Mr Bagenda filed a suit in court to challenge the victory. Mr Bagenda and his party, through Mr Ndyanab, learned counsel have fielded twenty nine witnesses, including Mr Bagenda himself. Mr Masilingi and the Attorney General have fielded fifteen witnesses, including Mr Masilingi himself. While Mr Masilingi presented his case himself, the Attorney General was represented by Mr E Mwambegele, the Senior State Attorney based in Mwanza.

I must state at the outset that the trial of the whole case was commendable. Counsels presented their case with commendable zeal. They left no stone unturned. It was gratifying seeing the learned F counsel Mr Ndyanabo spending a month outside Dar es Salaam. Nobody complained of boredom. Nobody fell sick.

Now, the following issues were framed at the beginning of the whole exercise. Two issues became added up in the course of the hearing. Certainly, nobody can complain about the added issues, G because the law allows doing such a thing (see Ord 16 Rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code). Even my brother Mchome J had to adopt a similar approach in the case of Walid Kabourou v Attorney General (1).

So, the following nine issues were to be adjudicated upon, and it is upon these that the rest of the H judgment will dwell. The issues were as follows:

1. Whether the ballot boxes were brought before the Returning Officers broken into;

I 2. Whether ballot boxes were brought at the Returning Officer's office without escort by either police or petitioners agent;

MASANCHE J

3. Whether petitioner's agents were not provided with Returning Officers Form (RF forms A referred to);

4. Whether the District Security Officer (we came to know him by the name of Mr Aron Mpole, RWM) burnt 30 ballot papers for demonstration at Memory Bar Muleba after he had forcefully taken them from the petitioner's agent one Gerald Omubunda; B

5. Whether candidate's photographs and voting formats to educate the electorate on how to vote were delayed.

6. Whether the counting exercise was conducted by the Returning Officer without involving the petitioner or his agents;

7. Whether the forms for recording the results were designed in such a way that the result C would be easily tampered with;

8. Whether voting exercise proceed uninterrupted until 30 October 1995;

9. To what relief or reliefs are the parties entitled.

So, we had nine issues in all. D

Like the submissions I have received and read, from all the parties involved (Mr Ndyanabo, Mr Mwambegele and Mr Masilingi), I will proceed to discuss these issues in the same order, or seratio. But before I do that, let me give the position at law with regard to General Elections: It seems to me that the established is this that: E

1. `An election petition must be construed more strictly than a plaint in a civil suit. This principle arises because (1) the right to file an election petition is not a common law right but a statutory right; (2) one of the respondents is a person who has been declared by the F Returning Officer to have the confidence of the electorate and the Courts are slow to interfere with such verdicts except when a clear case is made out; and (3) where the petitioner establishes corrupt practices, the successful candidate may not only be unseated but even disqualified to stand as a candidate in future elections.' Nogha's Law of Pleadings 14th Edition. Samatta JK (as he then was) endorses this view in Philip Anania G Masasi v Returning Officer Njombe North Constituency and others (2).

2. It is still available to challenge the validity of an election on the ground of illegalities that are otherwise not expressly stated under 2. 108 [of the Election Act]. H

Secondly, there is the jurisprudential argument which derives from the spirit of the Constitution and the Election Act, and that is democratic elections have to be free and fair. This too, has not been effected and Parliament has no power to legislate against such principle. `An election riddled with chicanery and I

A criminality is not an election in the eyes of the law, because it does not express the true wishes of the electorate.' (Lugakingira J, in Joseph Sinde Warioba v Stephen Masatu Wassira and Anor (3)).

3. The franchise is the very cornerstone of democracy; it is the one right, perhaps more than B any other, upon which all other constitutional rights depend for their effective protection. When the right to vote is denied or abrogated, democracy and freedom fail.' (Lugakingira J in Joseph Sinde Warioba's case supra)

4. It is now the law that number of votes scored by candidates in an election may not per se be used to argue that `after all even if he was given those votes, numerically he will still lag C behind' -- So the cases of Dyamwale v Masomo (4) and Kasusura v Kabuye (5) are now, in advent of the incorporation of fundamental rights in our constitution, of no practical value.

5. The position then is this, as stated by Court of Appeal in Attorney General v Walid D Kabourou (6) that:

`taking into account the principle which underlies the Constitution and the Elections Act 1985, that elections shall be free and fair, ... an election which is generally unfree and unfair is not an election as E envisaged by the Constitution and the Election Act, and consequently anything which renders the election unfree and unfair is in law valid ground for nullification of such purported election.'

6. As has been said in a number of cases on elections, in the end:

F `the trial judge will have to take into account -- the cumulation effect on the election of the proved irregularity'. Masasis' case (supra): Samatta J K.

The Court of Appeal in the case of George M Shambwe v Attorney General (7) had observed that G the petition:

`[rested] entirely on the cumulative adverse effect of the series of alleged non-compliance or irregularities in the conduct of the electoral process.'

H Having said all that, let is now look at the issues framed:

Issue No 1

Whether the ballot boxes were brought before the Returning Officer broken into:

I We had several witnesses who testified on this issue. The story behind this issue is that, after the election exercise, the ballot boxes locked and sealed, would be A transported to Muleba District Headquarters by escortees who would include representatives of the parties that would have taken part. Muleba District Headquarters was supposed to have been the place where different results from the boxes would be added up. The evidence received in Court, B and which has not been much contraverted, is that some boxes for parliamentary results arrived in Muleba in bad shape either no locks or with locks with tampered seals. Of particular attraction to this deficiency were boxes from Nshamba, the birth place of Mr Masilingi and also boxes that emanated from Kimwani. Nshamba and Kimwani were divisions (tarafas). The allegation was that C Kasharunga, which was chosen to be the centre for collection of the boxes en-route Muleba, was the most notorious in the exercise of breaking the boxes.

On this issue we had witnesses like Wencheslaus Joseph PW6 the NCCR polling agent at Itongo, D who testified that in the first place posters for demonstration came late. They were in fact put up or pasted on the wall or whatever place they were to be pasted to, at 11.30 am. Wencheslaus became lucky in that while proceeding home he passed through Nshamba and saw four ballot boxes opened. Sensing some foul play, Wenchslaus told the Court that their senior party official, E Byombalirwa, PW27, decided to escort these to the District Headquarters.

There are other witnesses who testified on this aspect of boxes arriving at both the Divisions and at the Headquarters tampered with. These were Philip Byombalirwa, PW27 -- the one I have just F mentioned: Zuberi Mbyana RW5, the District Education Officer of Muleba District, who called himself a `reserve' polling assistant; Mr Singomba, RW3, the Immigration Officer and one who was an assistant Returning Officer at Kimwani; Mr Aloyce Mpole RW1, the Security Officer, and the G Returning Officer himself, Mr Mtalo RW9. All these testified that some 14 boxes for the parliamentary election and 8 boxes for the presidential election got tampered with.

As for this tampering with the boxes, the respondents give the following explanation: H

1. That some of the boxes arrived at either tarafani or at the headquarters itself with tampered locks and seals because of bad roads which became worse because of the rains that were falling;

2. That the opening of the boxes (at the headquarters and not I

A tarafani -- per Aloyce Mtalo RW9), was done to retrieve RF2s which had been inadvertently locked inside the ballot boxes. The purpose was to get the RF2s and RF2As out as the instructions were that they had to be in special envelopes and ferried away separately.

B Now I agree that the boxes were sent before the Returning Officer at the District Headquarters in bad shape. I do not, however, agree with Mr Mtalo, and Mr Mbyama, that the seals went off and the locks became un-operational because of the bad roads. On the contrary, the boxes were opened to retrieve RF2 forms which had been locked in there. In doing that exercise there was every likelihood C of tampering with the actual votes. Again, from the totality of evidence, I am satisfied that the boxes were opened at the arafa level -- Nshamba and Kasharunga. Opening of boxes at any stage of the electorate process before the destination was contrary to directive that these very Assistant D Returning Officers had received from the Electoral Commission. For example para 5 of the `Maelezo kwa Wasimamizi wa Vituo vya kura' reads:

(h) Funguo na kufuli'

Then, Part Four goes on to state (para 55 (ii)):

F `Makosa mengine mnayoonwa mjiepushe nayo ni haya:

(i) . . .

(ii) Kubandua lakiri, kufungua au kujaribu kufungua masanduku ya kura na bahasha zilizofungwa kama ilivyoolezwa katika Ibara ya 16 na 42 ya maelezo haya.'

G These instructions are quite clear and I am sure the Returning Officer Mr Mtalo and his assistants Mr Singombe RW3 and Mr Kakuleterwa RW6, to mention just a few, knew of these instructions. By the way, in the Kishapu Case Maynard Mwita Bujiku Ng'wanansese v Attorney General my brother Mchome J, went further and said:

`Also among the materials to be handed to the presiding officers before the poll are kufuli lisilofungwa, and `funguo za kufuli.'

Mchome J goes on to say, that:

`And the ballot boxes after being locked and sealed are to be handed to the Returning Officer and not to be opened A on the way.'

Mchome J then concludes:

`These provisions of the law are mandatory and go to the root of an election.' B

I could not have a better assistance than those observations of my brother Mchome J.

The Assistant Returning Officers, even if RF2 forms had been inadvertently locked inside the ballot boxes, ought to have used their good sense and judgment by not opening them en-route. C

I have read the submission by Mr Mwambegele where he says:

`No person testified to have seen fake votes being either put or even seen in the ballot boxes. The petitioner D capitalised on bringing evidence to show that the boxes arrived at

Muleba broken into and as such this remains a mere allegation which did not affect the result of the election.'

I do not agree with Mr Mwambegele. Later in this judgment I will demonstrate how that lapse E affected another issue.

On the first issue I hold in the affirmative that boxes were brought to the Headquarters broken into.

Issue No 2 F

Whether Ballot Boxes brought to the Returning Officer were not escorted by police or petitioner's agent:

The witnesses who came to say something on this issue were the Returning Officer himself, Mr Aloyce Mtalo, Wencheslaus Joseph PW6; Kashaju Bazigiza PW7, Aristides Jeremiah PW10; G Benedict Mutongore RW10, Sam Kashura PW26, to mention just a few. Their evidence, in totality, was clear and simple. The boxes were not escorted by all these who were supposed to have escorted them. And, we are given the reasons for that: It is alleged that there was no space in the vehicles to accommodate the Party agents. Was that explanation plausible? I think it was. But then H one would ask why did the Returning Officer, right at the beginning, not make sure that there was enough transport to ferry the boxes, and most importantly the escortees? Mr Mwambegele, in his submission, admits that there was such a lapse (although he puts it as a `sake of argument') and adds: I

MASANCHE J

A `It is one thing to prove that the boxes were not escorted by neither the police nor Petitioners' agents to the Returning Officer and it is quite another to prove that in that course, some boxes were tampered with.'

B I do not agree with that proposition. In all these election processes, transparency should be always be the target. This aspect of drivers of the lorries leaving behind agents, and in most cases they were agents of the other parties other than CCM, has so notoriously been spoken of that it is unnecessary to labour on the point. I answer the second issue in the affirmative.

C Issue No 3

Whether petitioner's agents were not provided with RF2 Forms:

This issue has also so notoriously been spoken of. The best evidence, of course, came from the D Returning Officer, Mr Mtalo, himself. He admits that RF2 forms were few. He put it this way:

`After discovering that they [RF2] were few, we made a cyclostyling of the copies. But even cyclostyling did not E produce enough copies. I advised my assistants to tell the agents to write on any piece of paper.'

Witnesses, who testified on shortage of these vital forms -- forms that were to bear the entire results of the election, were just too many. There was Valentino Karoli, PW5; Wencheslaus, PW2; F Kashaju Bazigiza PW7; Stanslaus Sotery PW8; Aristides Jeremiah PW9. Frederick Baharuza PW4, for example who was a polling agent of NCCR at Kashenge, talks of inadequacy of these forms. Valentino Karoli of Kiholele Primary School polling station testified that they were refused the G forms, being told that they were not in existence. In other words not a single form was there.

As I say, the issue of RF2s being in short supply is true.

The Attorney General argues on the other hand, that RF2s were indeed in short supply. He goes on to state that, in any case, the law provides that they can be distributed to every polling agent `if H available in sufficient numbers' (s 79I(e) of Election Act).

Now, what I say is this, that in the first place Kagera Region, as a whole, and Muleba District, in particular, received sufficient supplies of RF2s, RF2As and ballot papers. In any case each polling station was supposed to have the two sets for just the five political parties that had contested for the I parliamentary set. This Court was informed of this through Mr Bagenda the petitioner, who was reading Taarifa ya Tume ya Taifa ya Uchaguzi kuhusu Uchaguzi wa Rais na Wabunge 1995 -- a book A which was tendered as Exhibit P15. On p 42 of the book, it is categorically stated that Kagera was, in fact the first region which received its quarter of voting materials from England. The papers were received in Dar es Salaam on 11 October 1995. Truly, the papers (all) were late in reaching Kagera, but they eventually reached Kagera. (See 6.11 on p 44). B

The problem which beset these RF2 forms were necessitated by Mr Mtalo, the Returning Officer, himself who took a casual attitude of the type of work he was supposed to do. Part of his own evidence in fact says: C

> `I did not make a follow up to find out whether what I told them was done. I got a report that all was fine.'

All was not fine with the RF2 forms. There was a serious allegation that many agents, including Mr D Bagenda himself saw piles and piles of RF2 forms in the office of Mr Mtalo. If I make take up the story on this aspect of the case by Mr Bagenda himself, from the proceedings: He said:

> `In the office of Mr Mtalo we found RF2s. Of course the report talks of negligence in Dar es Salaam. But the pattern E was the same in Muleba. I saw them. They were RF2s and not RF5 or RF4. I went there and touched them and asked Mr Mtalo "what are these?"'

Mr Mtalo's reply was:

> `It is not true that there were piles and piles of RF2 forms in my office.' F

He went on to say:

> `I had other forms like RF2A, RF3A and RF5.' G

I have no slight hesitation in saying that Mr Bagenda saw RF2 forms in the office of Mr Mtalo. I have no reason to disbelieve Mr Bagenda who impressed me by being steady and composed in the H dock.

I therefore answer the third issue in the affirmative.

Issue No 4

Whether the District Security Officer (Mr Mpole) burnt thirty I

1997 TLR p230

MASANCHE J

A ballot papers for demonstration at Memory Bar in Muleba:

The story goes that on 28 October 1995, a day before the actual voting, Gerald William Ndyamkama was given between ten to twenty posters (with pictures of candidates) so that they are sent to what ever polling station that was supposed to get them for pasting. He met Mr Mpole, RW1, B the Security Officer of Muleba District on the way. It was roughly between 10.00 am and 12.00 noon. Mr Mpole it is said, asked Gerald, after he (Mr Mpole) had found Gerald with these posters. He said:

C `Wewe ndugu yangu kwa nini unataka kujiingiza katika migogoro?'

Then, it is also said that Mr Mpole told Gerald that it was a criminal offence to be carrying those posters. Then, it is said, Mr Mpole took them away and proceeded to Memory Bar, in that broad daylight, and burnt them with kerosene. The kerosene was brought to him by a barmaid, who of D course was not called as a witness. Poor Gerald, he was later taken into the same bar and given a beer.

This story was controverted by Mr Mpole himself. He, indeed, agreed that such forms were burnt, E but said that they were burnt by Gerald himself because, according to Mr Mpole himself, Gerald had a grudge against Mr Bagenda. Mr Bagenda had refused to pay Gerald some money. What is surprising, however, is that even when Mr Mpole met Mr Bagenda a few minutes after the burning of F the posters, Mr Mpole never told Mr Bagenda that he (Bagenda) had refused a person payment of money. Let me reproduce what Mr Mpole said. Mr Mpole's evidence reads:

`He (Bagenda) said that the act of burning papers I had done was bad. I told him that I had not burnt any papers. I G told him that if any papers were burnt, he should report to the police. I did not tell him that the one who burnt the papers was Gerald (audience laughs).'

Now, after evaluating all the evidence regarding this allegation of burning these papers, I am H satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Mr Mpole burnt these papers for reasons which are obvious -- to prevent Gerald from reaching and teaching his people on the posters.

Frankly speaking I was not impressed at all by the evidence of Mr Mpole. I am just wondering what type of Security Officer this is -- a person who did such a childish thing, and without foreseeing its I consequences. Mr Bagenda has said this, on these posters, (and I agree with him), that actually they are `visual aids'. Mr Bagenda informed the Court that: A

`In any case, in adult education theory, visual aids are most effective. Illiterates become well informed on visual aids. Some old men do not hear well. Pictures are very important to show personality or composure. We would, for example, explain that `our man in the picture is the one with a hat or we would say, `our man is the last one in the B line' or things to that effect.'

Mr Mwambegele has complained, in his submission, that maybe, the barmaid ought to have been called to testify on who had burnt the papers. She should have come to say that it was Mr Mpole C who burnt them. I do not agree with that proposition. In the first place burning of those papers by who ever would have done it was bad enough. It was worse that it was done by a Security Officer. Even if Gerald had burnt them, the blame would have equally been thrown on Mr Mpole. He was a D Security Officer of a country. One of his duties, like any other organ of state, is to see that peace and tranquillity prevail in a country. He would have been castigated for failing to prevent who ever burnt them from burning them. I answer the fourth issue in the affirmative. E

Whether candidate's photographs and voting formats to educate the electorate on how to vote were delayed: F

This issue need not involve us much. Almost all witnesses who were agents of the polling stations -- be it for CCM or the other parties have been at one that these posters were late in going up on Notice Boards or where ever that were to be placed. If I may mention a few of the witnesses who said so: They were Ruben Tibenda PW1; Valentine Karoli; Wencheslaus Joseph PW6; Thadeo G Mugusha. These, with others, testified that posters were pasted late.

As I said earlier on, it was not for fun that the Electoral Commission provided for the issuance of these posters. One would have therefore expected the Returning Officer to have been more vigilant in seeing that they were pasted early. But what did Mr Mtalo do? At p 125 of the proceedings he H says:

`We showed the officials the forms and how to use them. We gave party representatives some of the papers. Some were given to polling agents. They were to be posted on open space at the polling station. I did not get a I

A report from anyone or voter saying that he did not vote because of not having posters.'

With due respect, that is not an acceptable explanation. It is a lackadaisical explanation.

B I answer the fifth issue in the affirmative:

Issue No 6

Whether counting exercise was conducted by the Returning Officer without involving the petitioner on his agents:

C Mr Mtalo has refuted to have conducted the counting without involving the Petitioner. He says he made the totalling at the District Headquarters without Mr Bagenda, the petitioner, because the petitioner himself refused to cooperate.

The story unfurled in Court about this issue is as follows:

D After it was discovered that some ballot boxes from the polling stations had been opened at the tarafa level for purposes of correcting what had gone wrong with regard to where the RF2s were to be preserved, the petitioner and his agents, who included Philip Byombalirwa, asked for a recount. They were refused. This was, indeed contrary to sub section 3 of s 80 of the Election Act No 1 of E 1985 which provides

`The candidate or polling agent may request the Returning Officer to check on any part of the addition to ascertain its accuracy but shall not be entitled to request a recount of all the votes or all the ballot papers from any polling F station, unless the accuracy of the report of the results from that polling station, were disputed by the polling agent or candidate present.'

Subsection 4 reads:

G `Where a request is made pursuant to sub section (3) the Returning Officer shall not unreasonably refuse to check the addition or to recount the ballot papers of any particular polling station.'

I have indeed minuted somewhere in this judgment that with the advent of the Bill of Rights, a H candidate's request for a recount has no debate. Refusing a recount is against the spirit of fair play in the electoral process.

The evidence unfurled in Court is to the effect that the petitioner in no uncertain terms asked for a I recount. He said, in Court, for example:

MASANCHE J

`I insisted on a re-count. If there was a point of dispute which I had, I was entitled to a request of a recount. Some A of the matters in dispute took place at transit point. There were no forms at these transit points. We were entitled to be listened to, and have a recount.'

It was interesting to see how the respondent went about defending this issue. The respondent's B (both) explanation or defence to this vital aspect of the case was a total confusion. Whereas in examination in chief Mr Mtalo said:

`When we discovered that RF2 had no signature or any other problem, we decided to recount, that is, in respect of that particular box.' C

Later Mr Mtalo is recorded to have said:

`We agreed that where there were RF2 or RF2A which were defective or they were not there at all we would make a recount. Where there was no RF2 either inside the boxes or outside the boxes we were to make a recount.' D

Then on cross examination, Mr Mtalo is reported to have said:

`It is not true that I refused a recount for Muleba South.' E

But earlier on, a witness from the respondent's side, Mr Zuberi Mbyana, RW5, the District Education Officer, said something to the contrary. This witness, coming from the respondent's side was so steady and impressive that I intend to quote him extensively. F

Mr Mbyana is a District Education Officer of Muleba District. He is a graduate of the university of Dar es Salaam, having obtained his degree in 1991. Apart from saying something on this particular point of a recount, he said some other pertinent things as I will demonstrate. G

On election materials he said this:

`Some people had told me that they had placed the RF2 forms in boxes. I consulted Kasika who was the boss there, for guidance -- Kasika told me that since the agents were there they should be allowed to open the boxes so H that they hand over the RF2s properly. I told them to open and hand over the RF2 forms to me -- that was for those who had locked them inside.'

About the RF2 forms being pulled out from the boxes, Mr Mbyana agreed that there were such boxes which were broken into. I

MASANCHE J

A And when Mr Zuberi Mbyana, RW5 was cross examined by Mr Ndyanabo for the petitioner he said (now on the recount aspect):

`There was adding up. We were in group. NCCR had wanted a recount of the votes. They were refused. Other parties apart from NCCR agreed for the addition. In the North they did a recount.'

B I think now is opportune time to explain the Muleba North analogy in the counting and adding of votes.

There was evidence that Mr Mtalo was equally a Returning Officer for Muleba North. The petitioner C brought a witness James William Rwayongeza PW28, an Evangelist, who came to tell the Court that as far as Muleba North was concerned, Mr Mtalo had allowed a recount. Something happened when this witness was testifying which I think is not insignificant. To me it goes to real credibility. D There was a time when Mr Masilingi, the first respondent, suggested, in Court that he (James Rweyongeza PW28) was telling lies. We all remember what he retorted.

He said:

E `I have not been taught. I am a God's man. I have handled this Bible. I fear this Bible -- its God's work. Don't talk about my being taught.'

And indeed, as I observed this witness, he looked angry at being told that he had been taught to say F that in Muleba North there was a recount of the votes.

And concluding his evidence, on being led by Mr Ndyanabo, this particular witness said:

`In the North, the misunderstanding was between CCM and NCCR. Mr Mtalo solved it by saying we should do the G counting again. In the South it was the same, Mr Mtalo was called to solve the problem between CCM and NCCR. He allowed in one area and refused in the other. Where he allowed a recount, NCCR Mageuzi won. Where he refused, CCM won.'

H But, why was there a refusal of a recount in Muleba South while in Muleba North such a request was granted? The explanation is a `beat about the bush' Mr Mwambegele, says:

`There was no complaint envisaged by this provision (s 80(3) of the Election Act) and therefore the Returning I Officer was in no way, in a position to accept to recount all the votes from any polling station. For these reasons we humbly submit that the A Petitioner has not proved this issue and pray for the dismissal of the same on account of its not being proved, let alone its not being proved to the standard.'

Without labouring much on the point, it is not true that there was no complaint. There was verbal B complaint from the mouths of Mr Bagenda himself and Phillip Byombalirwa. Again there was the letter from Bagenda (Exh P16).

I answer that sixth issue in the affirmative. C

Issue No 7

Whether RF2 forms were designed in such a way that the results would easily be tampered with: On this issue we can only express opinion.

I am made to understand from the petitioner that these forms were designed by the National D Electoral Commission. I think they have a mandate to design such forms. There have been criticisms from both sides on the format of the forms. Mr Mtalo RW9, the Returning Officer himself said, that:

`The RF2 forms are not in good format. They are prone to tamper. One can pull out the first page and fill fake E numbers.'

Bagenda, the petitioner, said, if I may quote him (at p 65) of the typed proceedings that:

`The design of RF2 is bad. It is a document of the Electoral Commission. I thought, in first place, it ought to have F been eritten `tume ya uchaguzi', so that if it fell in wrong hands we would know where to sent it. Again, I thought they should have put their address there. Right now we do not know whether this belongs to the Government of Tanzania or Tanganyika or Uganda.' G

He went on to say; that:

`The M.P. forms are of two sheets. The two can be separated and on each one can be written anything. The pieces of paper should have been folding, if there was need of having two papers.' H

I think the format of the RF2s is bad. Surprisingly in their report `Taarifa ya Tume ya Taifa Uchaguzi kuhusu Uchaguzi wa Rais na Wabunge 1995,' the Electoral Commission does not point out this I

MASANCHE J

A weakness. But, I am not prepared to say, with exactitude, that in the case before us the RF2 forms were tampered with in a particular way. Maybe, if we have had a recount we would have seen what was tampered with. Surely, however, the forms are badly designed and they are prone to a rig. I answer the seventh issue in the affirmative.

B Issue No 8

Whether voting exercise proceeded uninterrupted until 30 October:

C Well, without beating about the bush, yes, indeed, the voting proceeded to 30 October 1995. Tikenda PW1 said so. Reuben Fredrick PW2 said so. But why did the voting overflow to 30 October 1995? We are told that it was because of the poor supervision of the electoral process by Mr Mtalo RW9. Mr Mwambagele, the learned state attorney for the Attorney General, concedes in his D submission when he says:

`it was interrupted by shortage of ballot papers for parliamentary elections. The papers were sought from the Assistant Returning Officer during which the exercise was stopped but resumed after getting papers'.

E I have already held that there was no short supply of ballot papers from Dar es Salaam. In fact Kagera (according to the Report of the Electoral Commission -- Exh P15) got three thousand six hundred and thirty two extra ballot papers for the parliamentary election. And, it is these shortcomings by the Returning Officer which made the voting go into the night and even overflowing F to the next day, as I have already pointed out. Such things are to be avoided if, in a democratic society, an election is to be seen to be free and fair.

True, it may not be an offence to proceed to vote, until all people in a queue have exercised their G vote. But as we were told, it was envisaged that there would be no such overflow to the next day.

And that is why a polling station was to take a maximum of three hundred registered voters. I answer the eight issue in the affirmative.

H I will jump the ninth issue which is normally adjudicated at the end of civil litigation -- it is to what reliefs are the parties entitled to.

There is a body of submissions from both sides on what appears to be a synthesis of malpractices which, in the course of hearing the petition, have cropped up and which the Court cannot close its I eyes to.

MASANCHE J

There are four typed pages of such submissions by Mr Ndyanabo, learned counsel for the A petitioner, and seven such typed pages by Mr Mwambegele, the learned state attorney for the Attorney General, the second respondent. Mr Masilingi's was the shortest. It has just a page.

In the course of hearing the petition matters have indeed cropped up which in the end we have to make findings on. I think we agree that the following matters have surfaced: B

1. Infiltration of Government Officials for purposes of spoiling the smooth running of the voting; C
2. Creation of an additional polling station at Nkomera (No 159/A/187) Kimea Health Centre without the knowledge of other participating political parties except CCM;
3. Unnecessary deployment of FFU (Field Force Unit) at Muleba during the addition or counting of the votes; and D
4. Creation of transit and processing centres.

These are issues which came to light and which either I have said very little of them in the judgment or not at all.

On infiltration of government officials for purposes of spoiling the smooth running of the voting, this E is what has been unfurled:

During the hearing of the petition, the Court came to know that the Returning Officer Mr Mtalo deployed the following people to participate fully in assisting him, but these have been found to have had no locus standi and a nomclature Assistant Returning Officer `Reserve' was created. The real F Assistant Returning Officers -- proper if I may use that word, who are on record to have been duly appointed and sworn were:

1. Mr Ndyaigati (not called to give evidence) G
2. Mr Kasika (not called to give evidence)
3. Mr Muchunguzi (not called to give evidence)
4. Mr Sing'ombe RW3

It is said that these were appointed by the Electoral Commission itself in Dar es Salaam. The H Returning Officer was empowered to appoint other cadres with specific titles. These were the polling assistants and presiding assistants. These were numerous.

But then there has come a complaint that others were also appointed to the Assistanty Returning Officers `reserve'. And these were: I

MASANCHE J

A 1. Cyprian Minja (not called to testify)

2. Zuberi Masoud Mbyana RW5, The District Education Officer

3. Peter Hollybone Karugira RW10 the District Cultural Officer

4. F M Kaluleterwa RW6 the District Land Officer of Muleba District, and

B 5. The late Philip Chawe.

These were appointed by the Returning Officer as `reserve'. In trying to probe the authenticity and locus standi of these people, some oaths (Exh R3) were tendered in Court. These oaths have been C a subject of criticism. The petitioner's advocate Mr Ndyanabo has asked the Court to see them as forged oath certificates. The reasons for asking these certificates to be regarded as forged are the following:

D 1. That Karugila, RW10, did not tell exactly which type of magistrate swore him in. At first, he said the District Magistrate swore him. When he was shown his alleged certificate of oath, which shows that it was the primary Court Magistrate who swore him, he changed the story and said that it was the Primary Court who swore him. Now, this man is a District E Cultural Officer who completed standard 12 at Grewal Secondary School. He went to a Teachers College and obtained Grade `A' Teaching Certificate. I do not believe that such a person would not know the difference between a primary Court Magistrate and a District F Magistrate.

2. Whereas Mr Karugila was in confusion as who to had swore them in, Mr Ephraim Kaluleterwa, RW6, the other `reserve' officer, said it was the District Magistrate Mr Mashauri who swore them at the District Commissioner's Office. And yet, the same Mr G Mtalo RW9, when cross examined by Mr Ndyanabo (page 136 of the typed proceeding -- way down) replied:

H Now what comes clear to my mind is that these `reserve' officers never took oath at all. I therefore agree that RW3s tendered are forged documents. The Returning Officer must have realised late, after election, that his `reserve' officers never took oath. He must therefore have rushed to the primary Court for a late oath taking, not knowing that the perfunctory way he was I going about the matter would create more problems.

MASANCHE J

It is therefore true that Civil Servants who had nothing to do with the election were made to A supervise the election: this was against s 3.7(4) of the Election Act 1985 which says that:

`Every Returning Officer and Assistant Returning Officer (note there is no Assistant Returning Officer or: Reserve' Officer) shall, before embarking on the functions of that office during any election, take and subscribe to an oath or B secrecy in the prescribed form before a magistrate.'

For purposes of completion on this issue of Government Officials infiltrating without mandate, I must single out one particular official, Mr Karugila. This person was the most troublesome, I am C sorry to say. It was said by Kashaju Bazigiza PW7 that this person was:

`Opening big envelopes. He was opening envelopes of rubber stamps, papers, RF2s and candles and pouring them on the table.' D

This is the person who, again, was attacked very vehemently by Philip Byombalirwa, PW27. The opposition group had put up a case refusing Karugila from having any connection with the election. Philip had said of Karugila. E

`I had a problem with Karugila. He had tampered with previous elections. People saw ... We did not like the behaviour of Karugila. We had put up an objection to Mr Karugila. I notice that the Returning Officer picked him.' F

These allegations were not seriously controverted by the Respondents apart from saying that there were a lot more other people who were listed out by the Byombalirwa group as being not fit to supervise the election as polling assistants or polling agents. Mr Mtalo, in fact, informed the Court G that, if he was to listen to these allegations, he would have nobody to act as polling assistants or polling agents.

I think there was enough evidence to show that Karugila was seriously opposed by the NCCR group and other parties. Mr Mtalo could have easily pulled out Karugila, thus demonstrating to the political H parties that he was bent on making the election free and fair.

Karugila himself came into the witness box and spent considerable time testifying. He was not impressive. He was, in fact, very uneasy. While in the witness box while being cross examined by I Mr

A Mwambegele on the bad picture given of him by the opposition side, especially Philip Byombalirwa, he only hit back by saying that Philip Byombalirwa had abused him. He said at one time at Nshamba:

`Wewe na ufupi wako toka hapa.'

B And the same Karugila called Philip Byombalirwa a `mad' man.

Mr Mwambegele submits that `these [Karugila and the rest] were appointed as polling assistants but were put reserve at the transit points to C await any assignment from the Returning Officer in case of any emergency'.

That is not true. The naked fact is that Mr Matalo allowed them to do what they did without lawful mandate.

D I will, at the end of this judgment, say something on Government Officials who deliberately become over zealous in elections.

The next issue that cropped up in the course of the trial was the deployment of FFU at Muliba during the addition.

The OCD (Officer Commanding District) of Police Muleba Mr Ndegera RW2 confirmed that he E deployed FFU to the scene of addition of votes and counting. According to him, he called them to be `stand by.' He went further to state that the FFU did not beat people.

F But there is evidence on record from Bagenda, that FFU came to the scene in combat gear and were chasing every one from the scene, including Bagenda himself. I am satisfied that FFU were deployed for reasons of intimidation. This was contrary to fair practice in a fair and free election. The ordinary policemen who were there, including the policewoman, D/Cpl Judith, RW4, were G adequate for purposes of maintaining peace.

It is common knowledge that FFU are mainly concerned with riots. Therefore their deployment was deplorable.

I have already said something about creating transit points en-route to Muleba District H Headquarters. I have also held that they were so put up and, indeed, there, RF2 forms, were retrieved. This was a practice against the instructions from the Electoral Commission.

Now, the biggest question comes: Have all these malpractices, in their cumulative form affected the results of Muleba South, to the extent that they were not free and fair and that, therefore, the results I should be nullified? That is the question.

MASANCHE J

Mr Masilingi, the first respondent and the incumbant member of parliament for Muleba South has A submitted that they should not as he himself never got involved. He argued that he never was a party to any malpractice. He said he was cooperative throughout. In any case he is a lawyer, he argued, and would know the dire consequences of malpractices in an election. B

Mr Bagenda, the petitioner, in his evidence on the other hand pointed out that in election petitions the question is not whether the winner became part and parcel of the fraud. The main issue is whether the entire election could be termed free and fair. I add that parties, or contestants may be absolved from any malpractice. But if the whole electoral process gets marred by irregularities and C malpractices whose cumulative effect make the whole election unfree and unfair, a Court of law must declare the elections void, and I must hasten to add, that this is not unnecessarily setting high standard in our electoral process. I would therefore vehemently disagree with the remarks made D recently in Zanzibar by a reputable English journalist, David Martin, who, in a paper he read at a seminar there, the paper being titled `Democracy versus Diplomacy: the case for a Dialogue in Zanzibar.' said:

> `. . . sadly in Africa it is rare for a loser to accept defeat without saying the elections have been rigged, staging or E planning a coup detat, or going to Court. All too often individual ambitions ignore the collective good'. (Reported in Sunday News of 13 July 1997).

That is absolutely not true. F

It is now time, at this earliest opportunity, to impress upon society that, as my brother Lugakingira J said in Warioba's case supra:

> `. . . the franchise is the very cornerstone of democracy; it is the one right, perhaps more than any other, upon which G all other constitutional rights depend for their effective protection'.

The petitioner, Mr Bagenda himself, put it this way: absolving his adversary, the incumbent member of parliament the Hon Mr Wilson Masilingi, he has said, observations to which I entirely agree with, H that in this country:

`We are trying to build democracy. Some things must be corrected as early as this, before it becomes to late. We are fighting for a good system.' I

A I have answered practically all issues framed, in the affirmative. But before I end, I should perhaps put on record that in all these irregularities and malpractices, the culprit has been the Returning Officer Mr Mtalo and his assistants. It could be nothing but over zealousness and a sheer lack of responsibility. I must also single out Mr Mpole, the District Security Officer, who for reasons B best known himself but which border on childishness, burnt demonstration posters.

I end by saying that the irregularities and malpractices I have pointed out in this judgment went to the root of the election, making the whole process meaningless and thus making the election not C free and fair. I have every hope that in future, if not now, government officials who, because of over zealousness mar or spoil the smooth conduct of elections be disciplined.

I allow the petition and declare the parliamentary elections held in Muleba South in November 1995 D null and void and it is set aside. The petition is allowed with costs to be taxed.

But, as I have found the first respondent, Wilson Masilingi, not concerned with these irregularities and malpractices, I order that he be awarded costs by the Attorney General. These costs will also E have to be taxed.

The appellant had been elected as a Member of Parliament but the election was nullified on the A ground, as found by the court in an election petition, that the appellant was a foreigner. In an appeal against the court's decision the appellant contended that the court had erred in dismissing the appellant's application for an adjournment of the petition; that the Court had erred in proceeding to hear the petition in disregard of the apprehensions of bias expressed by the appellant; that the judgment had been entered without due regard to the principles of natural justice; and that the B evidence relied upon by the judge was either inadmissible or inadequate to sustain the findings.

Held:

(i) That the trial judge had acknowledged that the appellant had experienced problems with his previous advocate who had been bereaved. Despite these problems a second C advocate was briefed within a short period. Given the appellant's duties as a member of the Parliamentary Probe Committee it was conceivable that he had had little time to brief his advocate. In the circumstances he had not acted unreasonably and the court ought to have granted the adjournment; D

(ii) The appellant was justified to apprehend that he would not get a fair deal from a judge who was prepared to urge the appellant's advocate to proceed with the conduct of the case notwithstanding that the advocate had insufficient instructions and briefing from the appellant. The appellant's apprehension became even more apparent after what happened E immediately after the judge had ruled against him in the adjournment application and the advocate gave immediate notice of her intention to appeal against the judge's ruling with a request to be supplied with a copy of the ruling. Once the formal notice of intention to appeal had been lodged in the Registry the trial judge was obliged to halt the proceedings at once and allow for the appeal process to take effect: the course adopted by the judge F had effectively thwarted the appeal. The appellant's apprehension of bias was accordingly justified;

(iii) In wrongly dismissing the application for adjournment and proceeding to hear and determine the case after hearing only the petitioner's case, the trial judge thereby G condemned the appellant unheard. This was a serious matter especially as the issue of the appellant's election and citizenship being adjudicated upon were of great constitutional importance.

Kisanga, JA

This is an appeal against the decision of the High Court (Mackanja, J) nullifying the election of the I appellant as a Member of

KISANGA JA

A Parliament for Muhambwe constituency during the 1995 general election. The election was nullified on the ground that the appellant, Mr Arcado Dennis Ntagazwa, is a foreigner ie a citizen of Burundi, and hence a person not qualified for election as Member of Parliament under our law. Before hearing this appeal we heard a preliminary objection raised by the respondent on the ground that the appeal was incompetent in that it was unaccompanied by the drawn up decree. We B overruled the objection orally, and written reasons for doing so have already been given separately. In this appeal the appellant was represented by Dr J T Mwaikusa, learned advocate, while Mr K E Kayaga, learned advocate, appeared for the respondent. Mr Kaduri, learned Principal State C Attorney, appeared as Amicus Curiae.

The respondent had filed a petition in the High Court to oppose the appellant's election as Member of Parliament for Muhambwe constituency. After a ruling on 10 April 1996 on some preliminary D objections to the petition, the matter was set down for hearing on 4 November 1996. Subsequently, however, and for reasons which are not recorded on the file, the hearing was re-scheduled for 2 September 1996, 9 September 1996 and then 16 September 1996. Following the long adjournment of 10 April 1996 to 4 November 1996 the appellant had accepted the appointment as a member of a E Parliamentary Probe Committee to investigate allegations of corruption against some senior Government and CCM officials.

When the new hearing dates were communicated to the appellant, the appellant informed the Court F that the new dates were unsuitable and asked for further adjournment, but when it became evident that the trial judge was not prepared to adjourn the case beyond 16 September 1996, the appellant sought to have the case transferred to another judge but in vain. The trial judge, therefore, G proceeded to hear the petitioner's case, consisting of nine witnesses, in the absence of the appellant or his advocate at the end of which, as stated earlier, he allowed the petition and nullified the appellant's election as Member of Parliament.

In seeking the adjournment the appellant had advanced two main grounds. First, he said he had run H into problems with his advocate who had lost her husband and, acting on the advice given to him by the court on 27 August 1996 in that regard, the appellant engaged another advocate, one Mrs W Gama, on 10 September 1996, but had not had time to give full instructions to her. Thus on 16 September 1996 Mrs Gama appeared in court with limited instructions to ask for adjournment I pending full instructions and briefing from the appellant, but her plea for adjournment was refused and she had to withdraw from the A proceedings.

The appellant's second ground for seeking the adjournment arose from his appointment to the Parliamentary Probe Committee. The appellant disclosed to the court that he had accepted that appointment relying on the hearing date of 4 November 1996 as originally fixed by the court, by B which date the Probe Committee would have finished its work. So that the re-scheduling of the hearing dates to 2 September 1996, 9 September 1996 and 16 September 1996 put the appellant in a difficult position as it came only after the Probe Committee had commenced but before completing its mandate. C

In advancing this ground, the appellant referred the trial judge to two cases involving similar circumstances. These were the two election petitions in Dar es Salaam involving Mr Iddi Simba and Dr Masumbuko Lamwai, respectively. Like the appellant, Mr Simba and Dr Lamwai were members of the said Probe Committee, and their respective cases had been adjourned pending completion D by the Probe Committee of its assignment. Additionally, the appellant complained of bragging by some people among whom were some of his opponents especially in Muhambwe constituency, that the appellant stood no chance of winning the petition because they had bribed the judge. E

The appellant, therefore, asked for the transfer of the case to another judge as he apprehended that in these circumstances he would not get a fair hearing before the trial judge. However, the learned judge, in a lengthy Ruling, and obviously being carried away by emotion at times, discounted all the F points presented to him by the appellant and, having refused to grant the adjournment, proceeded to hear the petition in the absence of the appellant or his counsel, nullifying the appellant's election in the end on the ground that the appellant was a non-citizen of this country. It is from that decision that this appeal now arises. G

Dr Mwaikusa has filed four grounds of appeal. The said grounds together with the accompanying prayers are set out below:

`1. That the learned trial judge erred in law when he dismissed the Appellant's application to adjourn the H hearing of the petition;

2. That the learned trial judge erred in law when he proceeded to hear the petition in disregard of the apprehensions of bias expressed by the Appellant;

3. That the judgment and decree have been entered without due regard to the principles of natural justice; I

A 4. That the evidence relied upon by the learned trial judge was either inadmissible and/or inadequate to sustain the findings and decision entered thereto.

It is proposed to ask this Honourable Court of Appeal to allow this appeal and issue orders that:

B (a) The judgment and decree, as well as the proceedings of the trial court subsequent to 16 September 1996, be quashed and the petition be heard de novo;

(b) The status quo ante be restored;

C (c) The Appellant be paid the costs of this Appeal;

(d) The Appellant be awarded any other relief as this Honourable Court may deem fit and just.'

Dr Mwaikusa, with the leave of the Court, amended the memorandum of appeal by adding an D alternative prayer to prayers (a) and (b), which alternative prayer is for:

`An order reversing the decision of the trial court and declaring that the 1995 election of the Appellant as the E Member of Parliament for Muhambwe constituency was proper and valid.'

We now turn to consider the grounds of appeal separately, starting with the first ground which alleges that the trial judge erred when he refused to adjourn the hearing of the petition. The trial F judge had acknowledged that the appellant was having problems with his previous advocate who had been bereaved, and the trial judge had duly advised the appellant to find another advocate. The advice was given on 27 August 1996 and, accepting it, the appellant instructed another advocate on 10 September 1996. In other words, the appellant, accepting the judge's advice, engaged another G advocate in a matter of two weeks.

The advocate who was engaged on 10 September 1996 could not be given full instructions and briefing, and therefore she was asked to travel from Dar es Salaam to Kigoma and enter appearance in court with a request for adjournment pending full instructions and briefing from the H appellant. The appellant cannot be said to have acted unreasonably here. First considering the expenses involved to hire the service of counsel, it is not surprising for the appellant to say that he could not raise the full advocate fees within two weeks especially after the hearing date was brought I forward from 4 November 1996 to 2 September 1996.

Again considering that the appellant was serving on the Parliamentary Probe Committee, it is A conceivable that he had very little time, as indeed pleaded by him and confirmed by his advocate, between 10 September 1996 and 16 September 1996, to brief his advocate in sufficient detail on what happened during the election process. B

Nor can the appellant be said to have unreasonably absented himself from court on 16 September 1996. He was serving on the Parliamentary Probe Committee. As stated before, he had accepted appointment to that Committee in reliance of the original date of 4 November 1996 fixed by the court for the hearing of his case. Had the court adhered to that date the appellant would have completed C his assignment with the Committee in time for the hearing of his case. The appellant was therefore justified in asking for adjournment pending completion of his assignment with the Committee which he had taken up relying on the original hearing date of his case as fixed by the court. Not only that, Mr Simba and Dr Lamwai who were also serving on this Committee, had their D respective election petitions adjourned by the High Court pending completion of the work of the Committee. Whether the decision to grant those adjournments was right or not, the appellant would have every reason to think that his request for adjournment would equally be granted. He cannot E therefore, be said to have acted unreasonably in seeking the adjournment.

The trial judge was fully appraised of all these matters through the correspondence sent to the court by the appellant. We think that the trial judge wrongly disregarded them when he refused to grant F the appellant's application for adjournment.

The second ground of appeal criticises the judge for proceeding to hear the case notwithstanding the apprehension of bias expressed by the appellant. Again we find merit in this complain. As stated earlier, the appellant managed to engage another advocate within fourteen days after being advised G by the court to do so. But although the said advocate engaged in so short a time pleaded with the judge to grant an adjournment to enable her to obtain the necessary instructions and briefing from the appellant, the judge completely refused and proceeded to hear the case. The appellant was H justified to apprehend that he would not get a fair deal from a judge who was prepared to urge the appellant's advocate to proceed with the conduct of the case notwithstanding that the advocate had insufficient instructions and briefing from the appellant.

Indeed the appellant's apprehension or fear becomes even more I

A apparent in the light of what transpired immediately after the judge had ruled against granting the adjournment. The appellant's advocate immediately gave oral notice of her intention to appeal against the judge's ruling with the request to be supplied with a copy of the ruling. This was followed B by a written notice of intention to appeal addressed to the Registrar and accompanied by request for proceedings, with copies to the court case file and the opposite parties. This notwithstanding, however, the judge immediately proceeded to hear the case until he completed it. He did not pause or stop to allow for the appeal process against his ruling to take effect. Although a formal notice of C intention to appeal was duly given, with a copy to the court case file, there is no evidence that the copy of proceedings which the appellant's advocate had requested for the purposes of the appeal was supplied even though the judge endorsed on the file that the appellant's advocate should be D supplied with the same; and indeed there is no indication that the judge who immediately proceeded to hear the case ever released the case file for the typing out of the proceedings. Be that as it may, it is clear from the judge's ruling that the intended appeal initiated by the notice in question never materialized.

E It must be pointed out that the learned judge acted improperly here. Once the formal notice of intention to appeal was lodged in the Registry the trial judge was obliged to halt the proceedings at once and allow for the appeal process to take effect, or until that notice was withdrawn or was deemed to be withdrawn. But the course adopted by the judge here effectively thwarted the appeal. F That was wrong, and had the correct procedure been adopted the present proceedings might not have been necessary.

Thus the appellant's apprehension of bias was justified in those circumstances; he could not be certain that the judge who was capable of frustrating his appeal would act fairly and impartially in G hearing the petition. Consequently, we are satisfied that his request for the transfer of his case to another judge was wrongly refused by the trial judge.

H The third ground of appeal criticises the trial judge for violating the principles of natural justice. We have to say at once that this complaint is amply justified. In wrongly dismissing the appellant's application for adjournment and proceeding to hear and determine the case after hearing only the petitioner's case, the trial judge thereby condemned the appellant unheard. This was a serious matter, especially as the issue of the appellant's election and citizenship being adjudicated upon I were of great constitutional importance. We therefore have no difficulty at all in upholding this ground of appeal. A

To sum up so far, we have found that the trial judge wrongly dismissed the appellant's application for adjournment, especially after the appellant had expressed reasonable apprehension of bias on the part of the trial judge. We have also found that following such refusal the judge wrongly B proceeded to hear and determine the election petition in total disregard for the principles of natural justice. The effect of these errors was, in our view, to render the proceedings a nullity starting from the day they were continued in the absence of the appellant or his counsel. Consequently we allow C prayers (a) and (b) of the memorandum of the memorandum of appeal. Accordingly it is ordered that the proceedings of the trial court subsequent to 16 September 1996 are hereby declared null and void, and that as from that point the petition be heard de novo before another judge. It is further ordered that pending the final disposal of the petition as ordered, the status quo ante of the parties D is hereby restored.

Having taken this view of the matter, it is now neither necessary nor proper to consider the alternative prayer calling upon us to review the decision of the trial judge on the merits and find that the appellant was duly elected Member of Parliament for Muhambwe constituency. It is for this E reason that we shall not consider ground four of the memorandum of appeal.
In the result, therefore, this appeal is allowed with costs.

CIVIL APPEAL 29 OF 1997
26 September 1997
C (An appeal from the ruling of the high Court of Tanzania, Arusha, Nchalla J)
Flynote
Elections - Election petition - Scrutiny and recount - Scrutiny by way of recount not legally competent relief
D Elections - Election petition - Law to be applied - English law not applicable Elections - Election petition - Scrutiny - Nature of relief
-Headnote
The appellants were the unsuccessful petitioners in the High Court in an election petition. The relief E sought in the High Court was for a `scutiny by way of recount'. The judge in the High Court held that the relief sought was misconceived and incompetent in law and the application was therefore dismissed. The issue for determination on appeal was whether the relief sought was available under the Elections Act, 1985.
Held:
F (i) The matter had been complicated and confused by the manner in which the relief sought had been handled at the trial: scrutiny and recount had been confused as issues;
(ii) The element of recount was not provided for under the Elections Act. Whether the English law concept applied in Tanzania was governed by the Judicature and Application of Laws G Ordinance, Chapter 453, which prescribed two conditions, viz that the statute concerned had to be of general application and there should be no specific legislation in Tanzania dealing with the matter in question. In the instant case neither condition was met;

(iii) Section 112(d) of the Elections Act provided that scrutiny could be obtained where a seat H was claimed for a candidate on the ground that he had a majority of lawful votes. In the present case it had not been indicated in the pleadings that any of the unsuccessful candidates had a majority of votes. Scrutiny had in fact been sought in such generalised form that it amounted in effect to re-doing the whole exercise of counting the votes in the whole constituency;

I (iv) Recount was not one of the reliefs set out under s 112(d) and it was logically incorrect to introduce in the pleadings the element of a recount of votes as a relief in an election petition. As regards scrutiny, the application was A properly rejected on the grounds that the conditions under s 112(d) of the Act and Rule 12 of the Elections (Election Petitions) Rules, 1971 were not satisfied.

Lubuva, JA

On 29 October 1995, general elections were held in this country. This involved parliamentary and presidential elections. In the Karatu constituency, the first respondent, Dr Wilbroad Peter Slaa, a C candidate sponsored by the political party Chama cha Demokrasia na Maendeleo, commonly known by its acronym Chadema, was declared to be the elected member of parliament. The appellants as registered voters, were dissatisfied with the results of the election. They filed an D election petition in the High Court at Arusha ie Miscellaneous Civil Cause No 9 of 1995. From the pleadings, the petition sought among others, the following reliefs: First, the election results in Karatu Constituency to be declared null and void. Secondly, an order for a scrutiny by way of recount. The E Honourable the Attorney General was joined as the second respondent among the parties.

Before the trial commenced, the Court ordered the issue regarding scrutiny to be tried first. During the trial on the issue on scrutiny, the petitioners, the appellants in this appeal, applied for leave to F amend para C in the petition regarding reliefs. As a result, para C was amended by substituting the words `scrutiny by way of recount' for the words `recount of the votes.' At the conclusion of the trial on the issue of scrutiny, the learned judge (Nchalla, J) held that the relief sought for scrutiny by way of recount of voters was misconceived and incompetent in law. The application was therefore G dismissed. This appeal is against the order of dismissal.

In this appeal, the appellants are represented by Mr Musei, learned Counsel. The first respondent, Dr Wilbroad Peter Slaa, is represented by Mr Maira and Mr Mirambo, learned advocates. The H second respondent, the Honourable the Attorney General, is represented by Mrs Lyimo, learned Principal State Attorney. A seven point memorandum of appeal was filed. In paragraphs 6 and 7 of the memorandum of appeal it is stated:

6. The Honourable trial Judge misdirected himself in law in dis- I

LUBUVA JA

A criminating against the voter petitioner respecting the relief of scrutiny under s 112 of the Elections Act No 1 of 1985.

7. That the Honourable trial judge further erred in law in wrongly interpreting and applying the term `scrutiny'.

B From the totality of these grounds, it is our view that one central issue is raised in this appeal. That is, whether the relief sought, namely scrutiny by way of recount of votes is available under the Election Act, 1985. Mr Musei, learned Counsel, strongly contended that the learned trial judge erred in law in not ordering a recount of votes as sought in the reliefs. The reason he stated, was that C while it is conceded that the Election Act, 1985 does not provide for the recount of votes as a relief in an election petition, still he maintained, the relief could be granted by applying the English law. In support of this submission he referred the Court to the book by the distinguished authors, Norman D and Schefield on Parliamentary Elections, Third Edition at page 536 wherein `scrutiny' is described as follows:

`Scrutiny is the term used to describe a reviewing of ballot papers following an order of the Court.

E The petitioner, respondent, their Counsel, solicitors and agents are at liberty to be present at the inspection which takes the form of a recount.

Each side makes its own list of ballot papers which it objects to or claims to be added.'

F On the basis of this authority, Mr Musei further submitted that as the law in Tanzania provides for the relief of scrutiny in an election petition and not a recount, a wide interpretation should be given to the word scrutiny under the English law. He went on in his submission, by applying the English law G under the provision s 2 of the Judicature and application of Laws Ordinance, Chap 453, the relief of a recount would be available as urged by the petitioners, the appellants in this case. That is so, he insisted, because, under the English law, scrutiny takes the from of a recount.

H Mr Maira, learned Counsel for the first respondent was quick to respond to these submissions. He said, Mr Musei's resort to apply the English law is misconceived. As there is a specific legislation governing elections in Tanzania, he stated, the English law cannot be applied. Furthermore Mr Maira urged, by virtue of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance, Chap I 453, in appropriate situations, the English Statutes which would be applied in Tanzania are statutes of general A application. In this case, Mr Maira maintained, the law on elections is not a statute of general application in which case, it would not apply in Tanzania. Addressing himself at length on the law relating to elections in Tanzania Mr Maira stressed that as the conditions set out under s 112

(d) of B the Elections Act 1985 and Rule 12 of the Elections (Election Petitions) Rules 1971 were not satisfied, there was no legal basis for ordering a scrutiny. Mrs Lyimo, learned Principal State Attorney for the second respondent fully associated herself with Mr Maira's submissions. C

As already indicated, the issue in this appeal is whether the relief of a scrutiny was, in the circumstances, available. We wish to make it clear from the outset that it is apparent from the record that in dealing with the issue of scrutiny, the matter was further complicated and confused D by the manner in which it was handled at the trial. As a result, it seems to us that throughout the proceedings on the issue of scrutiny, the learned judge, with respect, confuses scrutiny on one hand and recount on the other. From the record, the sequence of events in the proceedings bears this out. Before the commencement of the trial, the Court ordered the issue on scrutiny to be tried first. What is more, it is also apparent that at some stage, while the issue on scrutiny was still being E tried, the court also allowed an amendment to be effected in the pleadings. The amendment so effected, in our view, introduced a new element to the pleadings. That is, the relief of `scrutiny' as originally sought, was further qualified by adding the words `by way of recount'. The new element of F a recount, as we have observed, is not provided under the Election Act, 1985 as one of the reliefs to be sought in an election petition. Yet, with due respect to the learned trial judge, he allowed the amendment which, to some extent, contributed towards the confusion that ensued in the proceedings that culminated in the ruling, the subject of this appeal. We shall revert to this issue G later.

We shall next deal with the issue whether the English law would be applicable in order to avail the relief of a recount. Mr Musei learned Counsel firmly maintained that it would. With respect, we do H not agree. There is no gainsaying that under the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance, Chap 453, two conditions are necessary for an English statute to apply in Tanzania. First, the statute concerned must be a statute of general application. Secondly, there should be no specific legislation enacted in Tanzania dealing with the matter in question. In the instant case, the first I condition is not

A satisfied because, the legislation involved is not a statute of general application. The second condition is not met either.

This is because in Tanzania there is the Elections Act, 1985 which specifically provides for election matters. In that situation, we can find no basis for applying the English law in Tanzania as B contended by Mr Musei. Consequently, we are in agreement with Mr Maira, learned Counsel for the first respondent that the applicable law in this case was the Elections Act, 1985. In our considered opinion, the English law on parliamentary elections though in part is similar to the Elections Act, C 1985 of Tanzania is not applicable for the reasons we have already given. Having this view, it follows that we are of the view that the amendment to the pleadings in this case which was effected on the authority of the English law, was misconceived under the law in Tanzania.

D Next, we intend to address on the question of scrutiny. This is one of the reliefs that may be claimed under s 112 (d) of the Elections Act, 1985. The question is whether in terms of the provisions of this Act, scrutiny as sought in the petition was warranted. The learned trial judge held that the conditions set out in the Act were not satisfied for which reason, Mr Musei, raises serious E complaint of dissatisfaction. In part, s 112 of the Act provides:

(c) ...

F (d) Where the seat is claimed for an unsuccessful candidate on the ground that he had a majority of lawful votes a scrutiny'

(emphasis supplied)

From the provisions of sub-clause (d) of s 112 of the Elections Act, 1985, a necessary requirement G is that the pleadings should indicate that a named particular candidate who was unsuccessful in the election had a majority of lawful votes. In other words, if certain identified votes which are objected to are to be added, such an unsuccessful candidate would be the winner. In the case before us, apart from the prayer for scrutiny which was, as already pointed out, qualified with the H request for a recount of votes, it is not indicated in the pleadings that any of the unsuccessful candidates, had a majority of votes. Because of this omission in the pleadings, the learned trial judge held that the application was misconceived in terms of s 112 (d) of the Election Act, 1985. He I addressed himself in these words:

LUBUVA JA

`On a careful interpretation of the above quoted provisions in relation to this petition on the issue of scrutiny, I find A that the petitioners did not comply with Section 112(d) of the Elections Act in that they omitted to plead in their petition that a particular unsuccessful candidate in the Karatu Parliamentary elections had a majority of lawful votes.

... Four of the candidates were defeated. Now which one of these four unsuccessful candidates are the petitioners B claiming for scrutiny to be held in his favour?' (Emphasis supplied).

In considering the requirements of the law under s 112(d) of the Act as shown in the above extract of the judgment, the learned judge took into account further conditions which are provided under C Rule 12 of the Elections (Election Petitions) Rules 1971 which provides:

`12 (1) -- `Where scrutiny under the provisions of paragraph (d) of s 112 of the Act is sought wither by the petitioner D or a respondent, the party seeking such scrutiny shall not less than six days before the day fixed for the hearing of the petition, lodge with the Registrar a list of votes intended to be objected to by him and of the objections to each vote. . . . ' E

To our minds, the provisions of this Rule are clear and unambiguous. It is a mandatory requirement that in processing the petition, the party seeking scrutiny shall lodge with the Registrar of the High Court a list of votes intended to be objected to not less than six days before the date fixed for F hearing the petition. In here, no list at all of votes intended to be objected to was lodged, let alone the time prescribed of not less than six days before the day fixed for hearing the petition. With great respect, it is ridiculous and impractical to seek a scrutiny of all the votes in the whole constituency of Karatu as Mr Musei was apparently endeavouring to do in this case. That, to our minds, was not G the objective of the legislature in providing in the Elections Act, 1985 for scrutiny. Needless to overemphasize, scrutiny is aimed at disputed and specified votes which are the subject of scrutiny in order to ascertain the claim by the petitioner that he had a majority of votes. In sum total, in this H case, scrutiny was sought in such generalised form that it amounts in effect to re-doing the whole exercise of counting the votes in the whole constituency. For that reason we are satisfied that the learned judge was justified in his conclusion that the conditions set out under s 112(d) of the Elections Act, 1985 and Rule 12 of the Election Rules, 1971 I

A were not satisfied. We cannot accept Mr Musei's claim that the omission in the pleadings to specify that a particular unsuccessful candidate among the petitioners had a majority of lawful votes was a mere slip. It is a fundamental and mandatory requirement which goes to the very root of the matter with which failure to comply renders the granting of scrutiny untenable. Such, we are B satisfied, was the position in this case. That being the legal requirement which was not complied with, we are unable to accept Mr Musei's assertion that the learned judge erred in holding that the C prayer for scrutiny by recount of the votes was legally misconceived and incompetent.

At this juncture, we pause to consider the distinction between recount and scrutiny. From the record, it is apparent that the learned trial judge referred to recount of votes and scrutiny D interchangeably. In order to clear the confusion, it is desirable to briefly address on the difference between scrutiny and recount in relation to the law. From the outset, it should be made clear that the two reliefs are distinctly different and available under the Elections Act, 1985 at different stages E of the process of counting of votes and the period after the declaration of the election results. These differences have to be looked into against the background of the major changes that have been effected on the Elections Act, 1985. It is common knowledge that the Elections (Amendment) F Act, 1990 and the Elections (Amendment) Act, 1992 together with other subsequent amendments were aimed at, among others, ensuring close supervision and monitoring of the process of voting by presiding officers, polling assistants and polling agents at every stage in the course of counting votes. In the process of counting votes Sections 78 and 80 of the Elections Act, 1985 provide for the G recount of votes at two stages. First, at the stage when the counting of votes is being completed at the polling station. At that stage a presiding officer may be requested for a recount of votes by the candidate or his counting agent present when the counting of votes takes place. Second, when the H addition of votes takes place at the office of the Returning Officer, the candidate or the polling agent present at the polling station may request the Returning Officer to check the addition in order to ascertain the accuracy of the disputed report of the results from the polling stations.

After the addition of votes and declaration of the results, the Elections Act, 1985 does not provide for I the recount of the votes. That is, s 80(3) of the Elections Act, 1985 for the last stage when a recount of votes is sought. For the period that follows after the declaration of the results, to seek a A recount of votes as a relief as it happened in this case would be untenable and misconceived in law. The period that follows after the declaration of results may well involve the time an election petition is filed in Court. It is common knowledge that in an election petition, one of the reliefs that may be claimed is a scrutiny. Section 112 (d) of the Elections Act, 1985 provides for scrutiny B among other reliefs. Recount is not one of the reliefs set out under this section. For this reason, it is in our view legally incorrect to introduce in the pleadings the element of a recount of votes as a relief in an election petition. On that basis and with due respect, we think the learned judge confused and mixed up the two reliefs which are, as already indicated, available at different stages. In part, he C stated:

`Consequently, on the totality of my findings based on the interpretation of the Election Act, 1985 I rule that the prayer for scrutiny by recount of the votes in the 1995 Parliamentary elections for Karatu Constituency is both D misconceived and legally incompetent.'

(emphasis added)

In our view, on the face of this statement, the general impression which emerges is that both the E reliefs for recount and scrutiny were legally incompetent. This, with respect, is not correct because, one of them, namely, scrutiny was a competent prayer allowed by law in an election petition. As already observed, it is the recount of votes that the law does not provide for. It was this relief which F was incompetent and misconceived in law because it was being sought at a stage when the law does not allow as correctly held by the learned judge. In short, it is our view that the two reliefs have been described in such a way that it is misleading and confusing. We are however, satisfied that as regards scrutiny the application was properly rejected on the grounds that the conditions under s G 112(d) of the Elections Act, 1985 and Rule 12 of the Elections (Election Petitions) Rules, 1971 were not satisfied. In the result, despite the mix up and confusion on recount and scrutiny, we agree with the final conclusion that scrutiny was not in the circumstances, available. H

In ground one, Mr Musei, learned Counsel had also raised the issue of res judicata. Having closely listened to his submissions it is apparent that he was not referring to res judicata in its strict sense as provided under s 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. Rather, we understand him to take the I view that it was a contradiction on the

LUBUVA JA

A part of the learned judge to hold that the Court had no jurisdiction to grant a scrutiny contrary to an earlier ruling if the Court on 12 September 1998. With respect, we do not agree with Mr Musei, learned Counsel on this submission. As countered by Mr Maira, learned Counsel and Mrs Lyimo, B learned Principal State Attorney, we agree that there is no contradiction in this ruling, the subject of the appeal and the earlier ruling by the learned trial judge as regards the issue of scrutiny. The reason is simple. That is, that the earlier ruling involved the issue whether the Court had jurisdiction to deal with the application for scrutiny. On that, the learned judge held and correctly so in our view, C that the Court had jurisdiction to deal with the matter. On the other hand, the issue involved in the ruling, the subject of this appeal, was whether in the circumstances of the case scrutiny was warranted. The learned judge was convinced that the requisite conditions were not satisfied for the D granting of scrutiny, and he dismissed the application. On our part, the legal position is so clear that the learned judge can hardly be faulted in his decision of this point. In the earlier ruling the judge was of the view that the Court had jurisdiction to deal with the issue while in the subsequent ruling E which gave rise to this appeal, the Court in exercise of its jurisdiction, dismissed the application on the grounds that there was no merit in it. In those circumstances, we are satisfied that there was no contradiction in between the earlier ruling and the one complained against in this appeal.

We reject this ground.

F In the result, and for the foregoing reasons, the appeal is dismissed with costs to the respondents. We also remit the case to the High Court for continuation of the hearing of the petition where we hope it will proceed expeditiously from the point where the ruling of the High Court of 25 G November 1996 was delivered.

CIVIL APPEAL 18 OF 1995 B

Civil Practice and Procedure - Judgment - Consent judgment - Order XV Rule 1 C
-Headnote

The respondent had sued in the High Court for a declaration that an intended auction of certain property belonging to him was illegal and/or unlawful and in the alternative sought an order to avoid the guarantee agreements between himself and the first appellant. The appellants failed to file their D written statements of defence (WSD) and the matter was put before a judge who entered consent judgment against the appellants on both the main and alternative issues. On appeal it was argued that the judge had misdirected himself on the procedure of recording judgment on admission. It was contended that as there was no WSD there could not have been a first hearing. E

Held:

(i) In the absence of a WSD a judge could still ascertain admissions and denials in a first hearing. The judge could be taken to have acted under Order XV Rule 1 and had therefor given a consent judgment;

(ii) The judge had however erred in giving judgment in favour of the respondent on both the F main and alternative legs of the relief sought: the advocate for the appellant had conceded the first prayer only.

The Uhuru newspaper of 1 May 1993 carried a notice of the instructions of the first appellant, the National Bank of Commerce, to the second appellant, Ahmed Juma, to auction certain property H belonging to the respondent, Ahmed Abderhaman. Consequently the respondent sued for a declaration that the intended auction was illegal and/or unlawful and, in the alternative, but without prejudice to the first prayer, sought an order to avoid the guarantee agreements between himself and the first appellant. I

RAMADHANI JA

A The plaint was filed on 10 May 1993 and on 18 May the appellants were given up to 26 May to file their written statement of defence (WSD). But that was not done. So, on 27 May, time was extended to 16 June but again in vain. However, on 17 June, Mr Akaro, learned advocate for the B appellants, asked the District Registrar to put the matter before a judge `for orders on a prayer to be made which might end up the proceedings immediately -- a probable settlement by consent is had in mind'. The matter was put before Msumi, J as he then was, who gave the following order which is the subject matter of this appeal:

C `In conclusion consent judgment is entered against both defendants. As prayed it is hereby declared that the intended sale by auction of the plaintiff's property to be illegal and unlawful. And consequent to this judgment plaintiff is hereby relieved of any liability arising from the purported guarantee. Plaintiff is entitled to his costs which D are to be taxed.'

The appellants have come with this appeal canvassing two grounds:

E 1. That the learned High Court Judge erred in law and fact by deciding on and entering judgment on matters not specifically admitted by the first appellant.

2. That the learned High Court Judge erred in law by grossly misdirecting himself on the F procedure of recording judgment on admission.

Before us the appellants were represented by Mr Mramba, learned advocate, and the respondent was represented by Dr Lamwai, learned counsel. Mr Mramba started with the second ground of G appeal and submitted that the procedure of recording judgments on admission as set out in Ord XII Rule 1 if the Civil Procedure Code was not followed. That order provides:

`Any party to a suit may give notice, by his pleading or otherwise in writing, that he admits the truth of the whole or H any part of the case of any other party.'

As already said, the appellants have not, to this moment, filed their WSD and so, they cannot be said to have admitted by their `pleading'. Mr Mramba merely made an oral admission before Msumi, I J. Therefore, that provision was not followed, as correctly argued by Mr Mramba. However, the learned advocate conceded that he misled the learned judge as A he did not, in the first place, submit his admission in writing. Anyway that provision is there to be folowed.

Dr Lamwai, on the other hand, submitted that Ord XII Rule 1 was not applicable because the B learned judge used the phrase `consent judgment' and that means he dealt with the matter under Ord XV Rule 1 which provides:

`Where at the first hearing of a suit it appears that the parties are not at issue on any question of law or of fact, the court may at once pronounce judgment.' C

Mr Mramba objected to that and pointed out that as there is no WSD then there could not have been a `first hearing.' Dr Lamwai countered that by submitting that in the vocabulary of the Civil D Procedure Code there is no such thing as `mention' but that every meeting of the court is a `hearing'. The learned advocate submitted that mention is a creation of the courts and not a requirement of the CPC.

Admittedly, the CPC does not talk of mention but, without going into a discussion and determination E of when there can be a first hearing, we think that there can be a hearing without a WSD having been filed. This is clear from Ord X Rule 1 which Dr Lamwai cited in the alternative and/or in addition to Ord XV Rule 1. Now Ord XV Rule 1 provides as follows: F

`At the first hearing of the suit the court shall ascertain from each party or his advocate whether he admits or denies such allegations of facts as are made in the plaint or written statement (if any) of the opposite party, and as are not expressly or by necessary implication admitted or denied by the party against whom they are made. The G court shall record such admissions and denials.' (The emphasis is ours).

It is obvious that in the absence of a WSD a judge can still ascertain admissions and denials and that is done in a hearing, or to be precise in a first hearing. We, therefore, agree with Dr Lamwai that H Msumi, J could be taken to have acted under Ord XV Rule 1 and so, he gave a consent judgement.

However, that rule applies only where `the parties are not at issue on any question of law or of fact'. Can the parties in this appeal be I

RAMADHANI JA

A said not to have been at issue on any question of law or of fact? This takes us to the first ground of appeal.

The appellants, in their first ground, complain that the learned judge erred in law and in fact by entering judgment on matters not specifically admitted by the appellants. Mr Mramba submitted that B they only conceded the first prayer of the respondent which is an `order declaring the said announced intended sale by auction of the plaintiff's properties, scheduled for 15 May 1993, to be illegal and unlawful'. It is better, in order to appreciate fully this complaint, to reproduce what was said before Msumi, J by Mr Mramba, learned advocate for the appellants, and by Mr Msakamari, C learned counsel for the respondent.

Mramba:

`We wish to tell the court that we concede to the plaintiff prayers including main one as contained in 8th paragraph of the plaint. Since the other prayers are in the alternative, we submit that the same cannot be granted after we D have conceded to the main prayer.

We have been forced to take this position because plaintiff was a guarantor to loans taken from the first defendant's bank by M/s Mkwakwani Bazaar Ltd. Plaintiff guaranteed the loans. The intended sale of the plaintiff's E mortgaged property was made without issuing notice to the plaintiff as a guarantor. For this we feel that we have no case against the plaintiff ...'

Msakamari:

F `In the plaint, we have already denied the alleged guarantee. So an order should be made relieving the plaintiff of the said guarantee. And the consequence should be that the title deeds which are currently in the possession of the first defendant be restored to my client ...'

Mramba:

G `It is true that the plaintiff's title deeds are with the first defendant's bank. Unless the plaintiff made the alleged guarantee, one wonders why the said documents came into the possession of the bank. We concede that the intended sale of the house was illegal as no notice was given to the plaintiff.'

H Dr Lamwai conceded that the appellants admitted the first prayer but argued that Mr Mramba specifically told Msumi, J. `We wish to tell the court that we concede to the plaintiff prayers including main one as contained in 8th paragraph of the plaint.' Dr Lamwai pointed out that paragraph 8 of the I plaint is loud and clear in its denial:

`... the plaintiff deny any liability arising from the claimed transactions stated in paragraph 7 above and has already A communicated the said denial to the first Defendant ...'

Paragraph 7 of the plaint provides:

`That the said intended sale by auction is stated to be occasioned by an outstanding loan owed by Messrs B Mkwakwani Bazaar Limited to the bank, which is claimed by the first defendant to have been guaranteed by the Plaintiff. The first Defendant's letter Ref No NBC/54/10/214/Vol II dated 28 April 1993 forms Annexure `B' to this plaint.' C

Dr Lamwai contended that the combined effect of paras 7 and 8 is an unequivocal denial of liability under any guarantee agreement. So, he argued, when Mr Mramba conceded to the prayer contained in paragraph 8, he was conceding to a declaration that the guarantee agreements D between the appellants and the respondent were void.

We must confess that we found the submission of Mr Mramba before Msumi, J not easy to comprehend. Mr Mramba himself was not in a position to explain to us what he had meant by some E of his utterances. With due respect to him, if he had done what he now seeks to fault the learned judge for not having done, that is, if he had followed Ord XII Rule 1 and had made his admissions in writing, he would have marshalled his thoughts and would not have strayed into this muddle. So, we F now have to figure out what was and what was not admitted.

As we have said, prima facie Mr Mramba could be taken to concede the avoidance of the guarantee agreements. But that is what was contained in the second prayer: G

`In the alternative, and without prejudice to the aforesaid prayers; an order declaring that the agreements between the plaintiff and the first defendant is void.'

Now, what the courts do when there is a main prayer and another prayer is asked in the alternative, H is not to grant both of them but to grant one or the other. This is why Mr Mramba said `Since the other prayers are in alternative, we submit that the same cannot be granted after we have conceded to the main prayer'. The main prayer being the declaration that the intended sale was illegal and/or unlawful. I

RAMADHANI JA

A Admittedly, Mr Msakamari pointed out that the plaintiff has clearly denied in the plaint the alleged guarantee and asked Msumi, J, to relieve him of the said guarantee. However, Mr Mramba pointed out to the learned judge that `Unless the Plaintiff made the alleged guarantee, one wonders why the B said documents came into the possession of the bank'. This was after it was admitted that the bank was in possession of the title deeds. Mr Mramba went further to emphasise to the learned judge that `We concede that the intended sale of the house was illegal as no notice was given to the plaintiff'. (Emphasis is ours).

C From that labyrinth before the learned judge, it emerges that Mr Mramba conceded the first prayer only, that is, that the intended sale was illegal and/or unlawful for the simple reason that notice of the sale had not been given to the plaintiff. Mr Mramba did not concede to the avoidance of D the guarantee agreements between the appellants and the respondent. Instead he left that as a triable issue for the respondent to show why the appellants were in possession of the title deeds. We, therefore, do not agree with the learned judge that `consequent to this judgment plaintiff is hereby relieved of any liability arising from the purported guarantee.' That was not part of the E consent judgment. We certainly do not agree with the learned judge that:

`By conceding to the plaintiff's prayer for the nullification of the said sale, inferably defendants must be taken to F concede to plaintiff's denial that he is liable under the alleged guarantee.'

It is abundantly stated by the appellants that they conceded to the nullification of the intended sale because no notice of sale was given to the respondent.

G Therefore, and with all due respect, we uphold only that part of the judgment which declares the intended sale to be illegal and unlawful and we quash the rest. We order that the case goes back to the High Court to proceed with the matter. Of course, we are aware that the appellants have not filed their WSD and that the time given by the court to do that expired before the proceedings of 8 H July 1993. However we leave that matter to be dealt with by the court accordingly.

The appeal is allowed to the extend explained above. Costs follow the event.

We could not find whether or not such leave was granted but there were a number of rulings given by the learned judge, not on procedure but on substance, giving instructions to the tenth and the I

RAMADHANI JA

A eleventh respondents. Anyway, be that as it may, the appeal here is against some those rulings.

On 3 February 1997 the appellants filed a notice of appeal against five different rulings of the learned judge dated 29 October 1996, 12 December 1996, 6 January 1997, 9 January 1997 and 29 B January 1997. Now under Rule 76(2) a notice of appeal is required to be lodged within fourteen days of the date of the decision against which it is desired to appeal. So, the notice of appeal filed on 3 February 1997 is valid only for the ruling of 28 February 1997 and the advocates for the appellants conceded that.

C On 28 January 1997 Dourado, Ag J, gave the following order:

`[P.I.O.] is once again, and finally, ordered to issue an Entry Permit or Special Pass for two years. If he feels that he needs another meeting with the A.G. and the Applicants Counsel, he should arrange to see them immediately. He D should then comply with the order and then complain, if he so wishes.

I am adjourning to 28 January at 8.30 am to satisfy myself that the order has been complied with.'

E However, come 28 January, the learned judge prevaricated and issued another order:

`The above conditions guaranteed by the Deputy Attorney-General in the view of the court substantially meets with the spirit of the order of the court.

F I hope that there will be co-operation on both sides. Should any difficulty arise, Mr Patel should immediately get in touch with the Deputy Attorney-General Othman.'

The `above conditions' referred to in the ruling cited above are

G `A-G's Office and P I O undertakes to do the following:

(a) To give 3 months Pass renewable after 3 months.

(b) Process 1 will keep on being renewed until arbitration proceedings between Government and Zee Hotels Management is finally settled.

H (c) Pass holders will pay $100 each, renewal -- no fee payable. (For two years they would pay $400 each).'

Now Mr Patel and Dr Lamwai, the learned advocates for the appellants, submitted that the learned judge could not suo motu review his order of 24 January without there being an application for I review. The learned advocates pointed out that the learned judge was functus officio. Mr Salum Toufiq, learned Senior State Attorney for the respondents, argued that A the order of 24 January was for the issue of entry permit or special pass for two years. However, Mr Salum continued to inform us that he had not consulted the PIO when he became party to the consent order and that while he eventually contacted him, they came to a workable understanding B which was reduced to the three conditions given above. We submitted that the conditions do substantially implement the order of 24 January. Mr Patel, on the other hand, pointed out that he was not a party to that understanding and he was not allowed by the court to make any comments before the new order was given on 28 January. C

We agree with Mr Patel and Dr Lamwai that the learned judge was functus officio after he had given his order on 24 January in which he said `he is once again, and finally, ordered to issue an Entry Permit or Special Pass for two years' and that on 28 January he was going to satisfy himself that the order was complied with. As we have amply demonstrated, none of the two was done. And D worse, there was no application for review, yet the learned judge went on to review his previous order. Apart from that, there was an officer from the Immigration Department in the Court at the time of hearing this appeal and he assured us that if permits for two years are granted, that period or any remaining portion of it can be cancelled at any moment. Dr Lamwai, in response to our E question, said that the two years should be ordered retrospectively from the date Dourado, Ag J, gave the order.

We, therefore, allow the appeal, quash the order of 28 January and reinstate that of 24 January. The F PIO is to issue to the appellants with the necessary documents for two years from 24 January 1997. We order costs for one advocate only for the following reasons: one, costs were not prayed for two advocates and two, we do not think that this appeal needed two advocates. It is so ordered. G

C Landlord and tenant - Statutory tenancy - Creation of - By previous statutory tenant - Rent Restriction Decree Cap 98 (Zanzibar).

-Headnote

The appellant was the landlord in a tenancy agreement, first with the respondents' late father, who died in 1995, and then with the respondents' late mother who succeeded her husband as statutory D tenant after his death. The respondents claimed in the trial court that they were entitled to succeed their late mother as statutory tenants.

Held:

(i) Section 24(1) of the Rent Restriction Decree, cap 98, recognised the creation of a statutory tenancy to arise from a previous valid tenancy agreement but did not envisage E the creation of a statutory tenancy from another statutory tenancy;

(ii) A statutory tenancy did not as of right pass to another statutory tenant upon the death of the previous statutory tenant;

(iii) The respondents could not be lawful tenants by inheriting the tenancy from their deceased F mother who had herself inherited it from her late husband merely by virtue of having lived in the premises with their mother. The respondents therefore were not statutory tenants;

(iv) Even if the respondents were statutory tenants as they claimed their tenancy was lawfully determined by their landlord, the appellant, giving a month's notice to that effect in G accordance with s 24(1) of the Rent Restriction Decree.

H Hamid, CJ

This is an appeal from the decision of a Rent Restriction Board in which the respondents Subash Gangaram and three others had successfully sued the appellant one Suleiman Moh'd and won their case when the Board declared that they were lawful tenants of the demised premises.

I The simple facts of the events giving rise to this appeal are as follows: Subash Gangaram, Harish Gangaram and Banu Gangaram are the sons and daughters of A the family of the late Mr and Mrs Santobai Gangaram who died in 1995. Mr Santobai Gangaram had been a legal tenant of the demised premises belonging to the appellant for an unspecified period. That the late Santobai had been a tenant of the appellant is beyond any dispute, so also is B the fact that there existed no written tenancy agreement between them. An earlier attempt by the appellant to have the late Santobai evicted from the leased premises had failed in appeal to this court as the appellant had failed to provide the late Santobai with satisfactory alternative C accommodation in accordance with the law. Another attempt by the appellant to have Mrs Santobai evicted from the leased premises after the death of her husband had failed when this court ruled that the late Mrs Santobai Gangaram could not be evicted from the premises as she became a D legal tenant by virtue of surviving the legal tenancy from her late husband Santobai Gangaram, who died while still a legal tenant of the demised premises (applying the interpretation of a `tenant' as per s 24(1) of Rent Restriction Decree Cap 98 the Laws of Zanzibar).

After the death of Mrs Santobai the surviving children of Mr and Mrs Santobai, that is the E respondents, now claim legal tenancy arguing that their late father's tenancy which was `inherited' upon his death by their mother now automatically passes on to them after the death of their mother. The Rent Restriction Board had actually made its decision on that line and had on that basis F endorsed their tenancy. Aggrieved by that decision the landlord, has appealed to this court seeking the reversal of the Board's decision and asking that this court declare the respondents as not legal tenants and consequently order them to hand over to the appellant the vacant possession of the demised premises for the occupation for his now large and overgrown family. Mr A Patel, the G learned counsel for the respondents had advanced a host of arguments supporting the decision of the Board which all boil down to one main point, that the circumstances of this case entitle the respondents to be statutory tenants and therefore renders them to become eligible to the enjoyment of all rights applicable to legal tenants under the law. H

Mr Patel thus asserts that the respondents are statutory tenants. Section 24(1) of the Rent Restriction Decree Cap 98, the Laws of Zanzibar points out the following as conditions of statutory tenancy and I quote: I

HAMID CJ

A `S 24 (1)

A tenant who, under the provisions of this Decree, retains possession of any premises shall, so long as he retains possession, observe and be entitled to the benefit of all terms and conditions of the original contract of tenancy, so far as the same are consistent with the provisions of this Decree and shall be entitled to give B up possession of the premises only on giving such notice as would have been required under the original contract of tenancy, or if no notice would have been so required, then, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary in any law in force in Zanzibar, on giving not less than one months notice: Provided that ...'

C I will approach this section on two fronts. The first will be with regards to whether the respondents are, legally speaking, statutory tenants and the other is, should they be legally statutory tenants, whether they are not subject to eviction at the request or notice of the landlord. Section D 24(1) of the Rent Restriction Decree cited above, pre-supposes a statutory tenant to have acquired tenancy from a pre-existing legal tenancy agreement and I would venture to say that there is a pre-supposition that such existing tenancy agreement be an original agreement between the E landlord and tenant. It would not in itself be a statutory tenancy. It is my view that it is a statutory tenancy where a wife continues to be a tenant in a house whose original tenancy agreement was between her late husband and the landlord whereby upon the death of the husband the wife was entitled to continue with the tenancy, as has been in the present case.

F In such a case it cannot be assumed that there is a tenancy agreement signed between the landlord and the tenant, but a continuation of an agreement as agreed upon by the late husband and the landlord. In this case I fail to find any authority pointing to the fact that a statutory tenancy shall as of right pass over to a potential statutory tenant upon the death of an existing statutory tenant. G That being the case, I am inclined to rule that the respondents in this case who claim to be tenants in the disputed premises by virtue of having been living in the premises with their now deceased mother, the mother who herself inherited the tenancy from her late husband are not and cannot, H under these circumstances be legal tenants. And needless to say, that if they are not legal tenants they should vacate the premises and hand over the same to the appellant, the landlord.

I The second side of my argument hinges upon a supposition that the respondents are indeed statutory tenants, a point which has been accepted and indeed put forward by the learned advocate for the respondents himself. So A the respondents, accepting that they are statutory tenants, are in accordance with s 24(1) of the Rent Restriction Decree Chap 98, the Laws of Zanzibar bound by the terms and conditions of the original contract of tenancy, which in this case, is the contract between the late Santobai Gangaram B and the appellant landlord.

It is a fact that there was no written contract between the appellant and the late Santobai Gangaram and therefore there can be no question of a specific time for the appellant to give notice to quit to the tenant. Section 24(1) cited above stipulates clearly that if no notice is so required, then C notwithstanding any provision to the contrary in any law in force in Zanzibar, the tenants shall be entitled to vacate the premises upon being furnished with notice to vacate for not less than one month.

The section needs no further elaboration. That the landlord notified the respondents to vacate the D demised premises leaves us with no doubt. In fact that is the basis of the present controversy.

This case is more than six months old and therefore the one month's notice requirement in order for the respondents to vacate has already been fulfilled. That being the case I see no reason why E the respondents should not vacate and hand over vacant possession of the demises to the appellant.

Appeal allowed with costs.

The appellant noted an appeal against a finding by the High Court on an election petition that although the respondent had committed an act of corrupt practice, it was unable to certify same to the Director of Elections as s 114 of the Elections Act did not make provision for such certification F and merely made provision for illegal practices.

Held:

(i) Parliament had deliberately retained the reference to illegal practice in s 114 to empower the election court to deal with persons found guilty of that offence where the Director of G Public Prosecutions did not institute criminal proceedings. There could be no good reason why Parliament would exempt persons found guilty of corrupt practices where the Director of Public Prosecutions had not taken up the matter. The omission to re-introduce corrupt practice was accordingly through inadvertence;

H (ii) In interpreting the section to divine the intention of the Legislature it was permissible in this regard to have recourse to the Objects and Reasons of the Bill which was relevant to the enquiry.

(iii) The present was a fit case where the Court should interpret s 114 as including or extending to corrupt practice even though this meant reading words into the section. To do so in the present case would remove absurdity and avoid the discriminatory effect which I would otherwise arise from a literal construction.

Kisanga, JA

During the 1995 general election the first respondent Mr Stephen Masatu Wassira, was elected Member of Parliament for Bunda constituency, but subsequently his election was nullified by the D High Court (Lugakingira, J) upon an election petition filed by the appellant, Mr Joseph Sinde Warioba. In the course of dealing with that petition the trial judge found that the respondent had committed an act of corrupt practice, but declined to certify the same to the Director of Elections in terms of s 114 of the Elections Act. The appellant was aggrieved by such omission, hence this E appeal.

Both at the trial and in this appeal the appellant was represented by Mr J S Rweyemamu and Dr J T Mwaikusa, learned advocates, while Mr M Marando and Dr M Lamwai, learned advocates, appeared for the first respondent; Mr Malamsha, learned Senior State Attorney, was for the second respondent, the Attorney General. The memorandum of appeal contains only one ground of F complaint, namely:

`That the learned trial judge erred in law when, having correctly found the Respondent to have committed corrupt practices, he declined to certify to the Director of Elections that the Respondent is guilty of corrupt practices.' G

The trial judge declined to certify to the Director of Elections because corrupt practice was not made the subject for certifying to the Director under s 114 of the Elections Act. In other words s 114 of the Elections Act provided for certifying to the Director of Elections the finding of illegal practice H only, not corrupt practice. Section 114(1) of the Elections Act says:

`114(1) Where the Court determines that a person if guilty of any illegal practice, it shall certify the same to the Director of Elections ...' I

KISANGA JA

A Counsel for the respondent had contended before the High Court that in the absence of any reference to `corrupt practice' in the provision, there could be no basis for requiring that Court to certify any finding of corrupt practice to the Director of Elections. To counter that argument, counsel for the appellant submitted that the omission to require findings of corrupt practice to be certified to B the Director of Elections was simply through inadvertence. During this appeal counsel arguments again centred on this point to a very large extent, and the immediate question which falls for consideration now is whether the omission was deliberate or was through inadvertence.

C In support of the submission that the omission was through inadvertence, Dr Mwaikusa traced the legislative history of the offence of corrupt practice. This history shows that corrupt practice was made an electoral offence under the Elections Act No 1 of 1985. Thus under s 114(1) of the Act, for D instance, the High Court which had jurisdiction to hear election petitions then was required to report to the Director of Elections any findings of corrupt or illegal practice. In 1990, however, the law was amended by Act No 13 of 1990 whereby the offences of corrupt practice were removed from the Elections Act. Thus ss 94, 96, 97, 98, 100, 102(1) and 107 of the Act relating to corrupt E practices were replaced, and s 114, partly relating to corrupt practice, was also repealed but replaced by provisions which no longer made reference to corrupt practice but to illegal practice F only. So that under sub-sec (1) of s 114, for instance, the obligation to certify to the Director of Elections lay in relation to findings of illegal practice only, and not any findings of corrupt practice as had been the case before. By Act No 20 of 1990 the offences of corrupt practice were transferred to G the Prevention of Corruption Act. In other words, after the coming into operation of Act No 20 of 1990 all electoral offences of corrupt practice were dealt with not under the Elections Act, but under the Prevention of Corruption Act. The offences of illegal practice, however, were not transferred to the Prevention of Corruption Act; they continued to be dealt with under the Elections Act. Thus H under s 114(1) of the Act the findings of any illegal practice, following an election petition, was to be certified to the Director of Elections. Under the 1990 legislation the duty to so certify was cast on the Electoral Commission which was, under that Act, vested with the jurisdiction to hear and determine I election complaints, while under the Elections (Amendment) Act No 6 of 1992 the duty to so certify was cast on the High Court petitions was restored to that court.

KISANGA JA

It is clear from this that the purpose of the Bill is to re-introduce into the Elections Act the offences A of corrupt practice which had been removed from that Act in 1990. Counsel, therefore, contended that there can be no rational explanation why Parliament should restore corrupt practice in ss 94, 96, 97, 98, 100, 102(1) and 107 but deliberately omit to restore it in s 114. Such omission, counsel B maintained, can only be explained on the basis of an oversight or inadvertence.

In response to that, Dr Lamwai took the view that corrupt or illegal practices as re-introduced by ss 94, 96, 97, 98, 100, 102(1) and 107 of the Act envisage that the proceedings relating to the trial of C those offences will be of a criminal nature in which the charge is laid, the Director of Public Prosecutions appears and, if the charge is proved, conviction is entered. The nature of the D proceedings envisaged by s 114(1), however, is different. That provision envisages proceedings where no charge has been laid, the Director of Public Prosecutions does not appear and, if the offence is proved, the court does not convict, but merely determine that the person concerned is guilty of illegal practice. Therefore, counsel contended, the omission to restore corrupt practice in s 114(1) was deliberate in as much as the proceedings envisaged by that section are not of a E criminal nature; they are those which end up not with a conviction but with a mere determination of guilt.

With due respect to Dr Lamwai, we could not accept this argument. The determination referred to under s 114(1) that a person is `guilty' of an illegal practice, is consistent with a criminal trial F because such determination or finding is normally followed by a conviction. Therefore, if an election court is empowered under the provision to make such a determination or finding in respect of illegal practice, there is no good reason why it should not be equally empowered to make the same finding in respect of corrupt practice under that provision, which is in fact what the trial court did in the G present case.

But what is even more important is this: if, as Dr Lamwai argues, corrupt or illegal practice as restored by ss 94, 96, 97, 98, 100, 102(1) and 107 envisaged that the trial of these offences will be H a criminal nature, then the question is: why is illegal practice also retained under s 114(1) where it is envisaged that the trial of that offence under the Act will not be of a criminal nature? In other words, if Dr Lamwai is right, then one could expect consistency whereby both offences ie corrupt and illegal practices are confined within the ambit of ss 94, 96, 97, 98, 100, 102(1) and 107 and that I the offence

KISANGA JA

A of illegal practice would be deleted from s 114. This was not done. Yet, in our view, it cannot be said that the omission to delete illegal practice from s 114 was through inadvertence. For, it is conceivable that there will be instances of alleged illegal practices in which the Director of Public Prosecutions does not consider it fit to institute criminal proceedings. In that case the elections B court has to deal with the allegation or allegations to see whether or not they are proved. It cannot reasonably be said that where the court finds that the allegation of illegal practice is proved the court should sit back and do nothing, the court must act. Therefore, Parliament must have deliberately C retained the reference to illegal practice in s 114 in order to cater for such situations, ie to empower the court to deal with persons found guilty of illegal practice.

Likewise there will be instances of alleged corrupt practices in which the Director of Public D Prosecutions does not consider it fit to mount prosecution, in which case the elections court has to deal with the matter, as was the case in the present case. Once again if the court finds, as indeed it did in this case, that the allegation of corrupt practice is established, can the court reasonably be expected to sit back and do nothing? We think Parliament cannot have intended so, especially E considering the seriousness with which the society views the offence of corruption.

As was demonstrated earlier, Parliament deliberately retained the reference to illegal practice in s 114 to empower the election court to deal with persons found guilty of that offence where the F Director of Public Prosecutions does not institute criminal proceedings.

In our view, there can be no good reason for thinking that Parliament would exempt persons found, by an elections court, guilty of corrupt practices where the Director of Public Prosecutions has not G taken up the matter. It is for this reason that we tend to agree with Dr Mwaikusa's submission that the omission to re-introduce corrupt practice in s 114 was through inadvertence, especially as the objects and reasons for the relevant Bill make it abundantly clear that the intention was to bring back the offences of corrupt practice to the Elections Act.

H Mr Marando objected to any reference to the objects and reasons of the Bill for the purposes of discovering the intention of Parliament when enacting the 1995 legislation to re-introduce corrupt practices into the Elections Act. He contended that for the purposes of discovering that intention, the objects and reasons were irrelevant and should not be looked at at all. However, learned I counsel did not cite any authority in support of this view. For our part, we think that the objects and reasons for the Bill are relevant and that we are entitled to look at A them in trying to discover the intention of Parliament when enacting the law in question.

Given then that the clear intention of Parliament was to restore corrupt practice into the Elections Act, there is no indication that such restoration was meant to be effected only in some parts of the B Act and not in others. We could not gather any such indication from the objects and reasons for the Bill to enact the law in question. We also had the occasion of glancing through the relevant pages of the Hansard. The debate over the Bill focussed on total condemnation of corruption and the great need to stamp it out from the electoral process. There was no indication whatsoever that corruption was to be treated or viewed with less seriousness in any of the provisions of the Act, or that the C intended restoration of the offence was to be effected only in some parts of the Act and not in others. In other words there can be no rational explanation why Parliament should decide to restore corrupt practice in respect of ss 94, 96, 97, 98, 100, 102(1) and 107 only but deliberately omit to do D so in respect of s 114 of the Act.

We are, therefore, firmly of the view that the omission to restore corrupt practice is s 114 of the Act was through inadvertence, and the question that now follows is, what is the remedy? In order to E remedy this, Dr Mwaikusa urged us to interpret or construe s 114 as including, or extending to, corrupt practice, so that corrupt practice is placed side by side with illegal practice and both are treated equally under that provision, as indeed they are in ss 94, 96, 97, 98, 100, 102(1) and 107. To do so, learned counsel went on, would avoid absurdity in the operation of s 114 and would prevent F that provision from being discriminatory in its effect.

Both Dr Lamwai and Mr Marando as well as Mr Malamsha strongly opposed this submission and contended that to do so would amount to amending the statute by adding words to it which is the G function of the Legislature, adding that all that the court can do is to take note of the inadequacy in the law, if the court is satisfied that such inadequacy in fact exists, and draw the attention of the Legislature to it for its remedial action. H

We have considered carefully counsel submissions for both sides. We think that this is a fit case where, as submitted by Dr Mwaikusa, the court should interpret s 114 as including or extending to corrupt practice. The view that nothing should be added to a statutory provision was widely accepted by the courts in England during the nineteenth and first half of the twentieth century. Thus I for

A instance, in R v Judge of the City of London Court (1) at 290 the Court of Appeal (per Lord Esher, MR) said, inter alia, that:

> `... If the words of an Act are clear, you must follow them, even though they lead to a manifest absurdity. The Court B has nothing to do with the question whether the legislature has committed an absurdity.'

Re-affirming that view, the House of Lords (per Lord Atkinson) in the case of Vacher and Sons Ltd v London Society of Compositors (2) at 121 said:

C `... But, as Lord Halsbury laid down in Cooke v Charles A Vogeler Co, a Court of law has nothing to do with the reasonableness or unreasonableness of a provision of a statute, except so far as it may help it in interpreting what the Legislature has said. If the language of a statute be plain, admitting of only one meaning, the Legislature must D be taken to have meant and intended what if has plainly expressed, and whatever it has in clear terms enacted must be enforced though it should lead to absurd or mischievous results.'

However, over the years this position has changed, and the view today is that in interpreting a E statutory provision the court may, in a fit case, read words into the provision. Thus, for instance, in Kammins Ballrooms Co Ltd v Zenith Investments (Torquay) Ltd (3) at 893 the House of Lords (as per Lord Diplock) adopted what was described as the `purposive' approach, instead of the literal F approach, and imputed to Parliament `an intention not to impose a prohibition inconsistent with the objects which the statute was designed to achieve, though the draftsman [had] omitted to incorporate in express words any reference to that intention'.

That approach was re-echoed and elaborated upon by the Court of Appeal in Nothman v Barnet G London Borough (4) at 1246 where Lord Denning, MR said:

`The literal method (of construction) is now completely out of date. It has been replaced by ... the "purposive" approach.... In all cases now in the interpretation of statute we adopt such a construction as will promote the H general legislative purpose underlying the provision. It is no longer necessary for the judges to wring their hands and say: There is nothing we can do about it. Whenever the strict interpretation of a statute gives rise to an absurd and unjust situation, the judges can and should use their good sense to remedy it -- by reading words in, if I necessary -- so as to do what Parliament would have done had they had the situation in mind.'

KISANGA JA
Consistent with such holding, the Court declined to adopt the literal approach, and instead read A words into the provision of the statute which it was construing. We find these last two cases to be very persuasive.
As stated earlier, the objects and reasons for the Bill to enact the Elections Act No 8 of 1995 make it manifestly clear that the intention of the proposed legislation was to re-introduce corrupt practices B into the Elections Act. But that intention was implemented only in part in that corrupt practice was not restored in s 114. Yet there is nothing in the objects and reasons for the Bill, or indeed anywhere else insofar as we could gather, to show or suggest that that intention was to be carried out only C with respect to some sections of the Act and not others. So that to the extent that corrupt practice was not restored in s 114 that section was, in one real sense, incomplete. That is to say, the section does not reflect or fulfil the aim or intention of the Legislature which was to bring back the Elections Act to the status which it was in prior to the 1990 amendment to it. Had the attention of D Parliament been drawn to that point at the time of enacting that law we feel certain that Parliament would readily have taken steps to make the provision complete. Therefore, on the strength of the two cases of Ballrooms and Nothman above which we have found to be very persuasive, the Court E would be justified to interpret s 114 as including or extending to corrupt practice, in order to promote or give effect to the general legislative purpose of restoring corrupt practices to the Elections Act. F
Such construction is even more justified for the purpose of removing the absurdity which arises from the literal construction of s 114. As rightly contended by Dr Mwaikusa, s 114 when construed literally, leads to an absurdity in that it empowers the court to certify to the Director of Elections G findings of illegal practice but gives no such power in relation to corrupt practice. Corrupt practice is not in any way less serious than illegal practice; indeed the learned trial judge was of the view that corrupt practice was the more serious of the two. It would, therefore, be absurd, as Dr Mwaikusa submitted, for Parliament to empower the elections court to certify for sanctions persons found H guilty of illegal practice but to let those found guilty of corrupt practice go scot free, especially considering the fierce war which the society has been waging against corruption in recent years, and continue to do so in the present day. Had

Parliament been appraised of such blatant absurdity at the time of enacting the Act, it would have taken steps to remove it; we feel I
KISANGA JA
A justified to construe s 114 in such a way as to achieve just that which Parliament had set out to do, and no more.
Again such construction is justified in order to remove the discriminatory effect of s 114 which would arise from the literal construction of that provision. Section 114, literally construed, would be B discriminatory in its effect because, as already noted, it empowers the court to certify for sanctions persons found guilty of illegal practice while conferring no such power on the court in respect of those found guilty of corrupt practice which is a similar or even more serious offence. This would contravene Article 13(2) of the Constitution of the United Republic which in effect C prohibits the enactment of any law which is either directly discriminatory or is discriminatory in its effect.
Dr Lamwai's reply to this was twofold. First, if s 114 is discriminatory in its effect, the section is D nonetheless saved under article 30(2) of the Constitution of the United Republic which permits the making of laws that derogate from the guaranteed rights on the grounds of national interest. With due respect to the learned counsel, however, we cannot see how discriminating between persons found guilty of illegal practice and those found guilty of corrupt practice can be said to promote, E preserve or protect the interests of the nation.
Alternatively, Dr Lamwai submitted that if s 114 is discriminatory in its effect then the remedy is not to read the words corrupt practice into it because that would amount to amending the section which the court has no power to do. In his view the remedy is to initiate in the High Court proceedings to F have that section struck down for being inconsistent with the Constitution. Again, with due respect to Dr Lamwai, we could not agree. The issue of construing s 114 was properly before the Court, and the Court is satisfied that literal construction of that section would render it discriminatory in its G effect and hence ultra vires the country's Constitution. In those circumstances we are of the view that the Court is justified, and indeed has a duty, to construe the provision in a manner that brings it into conformity with the Constitution, and it would not be necessary or even desirable to wait for Parliament to amend the section. The question of striking down s 114, as Dr Lamwai submits, does H not arise because that question was not before the Court; what was before the Court was whether or not s 114 should be construed literally.
We have, therefore, decided to adopt the purposive approach in interpreting s 114 in order to I promote the legislative object or purpose of restoring corrupt practices to the Election Act, and to remove the absurdity and the A discriminatory effect which would arise from the literal construction of that section. Underlying the need to remove the discriminatory effect is the need, as demonstrated above, to bring that section into conformity with the country's Constitution. The construction which we have decided to adopt B entails reading into the section the words `corrupt or' immediately before the word `illegal' whenever it occurs in that section. But in so doing we desire to make it clear that we are not amending the section. As amply demonstrated earlier, these words are not being invented by the Court, and they C are not being used in that section for the first time. They were originally used by Parliament in the 1985 Elections Act. Although they were deleted from the Act by the 1990 amendment, Parliament sought to restore them by the 1995 amendment but through inadvertence the words were not restored in s 114. So that all that we are doing is to read into the section the words which D Parliament itself had originally used in the 1985 Elections Act, deleted them from the Act in 1990 and subsequently sought to restore in 1995 but, through inadvertence, omitted to restore them in s 114. Those words are not in any way attributable to the Court; they are the words of Parliament itself; they are the very choice of Parliament and therefore, we cannot properly be said to be E amending the law by merely reading into s 114 the words which are Parliament's own choice. But speaking generally, even if Parliament had not specifically used those words in the 1985 electoral legislation, the Court would still be justified to use those words, or words to that effect, in order to F achieve exactly that which Parliament had set out to do, and which it would have done, had the situation been brought to its attention at the time of passing the Elections (Amendment) Act 1995.

It was also contended that reading the words `corrupt or' into the section would lead to the court G finding the respondent guilty of an offence the consequences of which were not known to him at the time of its commission. That would offend the rule against retroactivity. However, we can find no merit in this. If under s 114 the court certifies to the Director of Elections that a person is guilty of H corrupt practice, the consequences that follow would include deleting from the register of voters the name of the person so certified, and the disqualification of that person for a period of five years from registering as a voter or from voting. But those are precisely the same consequences that follow under s 96 of the Act when a person is convicted of corrupt practice. Therefore it is not correct to I

A say that the consequences of committing the offence of corrupt practice were not known at the time the respondent committed it.

And lastly it was submitted for the respondent that s 114 was in the nature of a penal provision insofar as it required a person found guilty of illegal practice to be certified, for sanctions, to the B Director of Elections. As such, therefore, it was contended, the provision ought to be construed strictly so as not to include, or extend to, corrupt practice. Our view of the matter is that where, as in this case, strict construction gives rise to absurdity or discriminatory effect of the provision, such construction or approach should not be adopted and that is what we have done.

C Thus, for the reasons set out above, we feel justified to read the word `corrupt or' into s 114 and it is not necessary or desirable to wait for Parliament to amend the law. We, therefore, uphold Dr Mwaikusa's submission and find that the learned trial judge, having found that the respondent was guilty of corrupt practice, wrongly declined to certify the same to the Director of Elections. The D appeal is allowed with a direction to the trial court to certify to the Director of Elections in terms of s 114(1) of the Elections Act. The appellant shall have his costs.

H Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Contention that trial court lacked jurisdiction - Such contention can not be raised for first time at the appellate stage - Section 9 Civil Procedure Code 1966.
-Headnote
The appellant filed the present appeal against a judgment of the regional magistrate who had held that the respondent had been unlawfully dismissed. The appellant contended that as the respondent I had been a member of appellant's management cadre the matter should have been heard in the Industrial A Court.

Held:
Objections to the jurisdiction of a court had to be taken at first instance and in the present case, as there had been no objection recorded to the jurisdiction of the trial court, the matter could not be determined in the appellate court. Section 19 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966 was very clear on B this aspect.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
Lyimo for the appellant. C
Mapunda for the respondent.
Bubeshi J:
The appellant National Bank of Commerce has, through the services of Mr Lyimo learned Counsel filed this appeal to challenge the judgment delivered by Chillonji PRM on 10 January 1996. The trial D court after hearing the matter had declared that the summary dismissal imposed by the appellant or the respondent was wrongful and of no effect, and that the respondent was entitled to arrears of salary and other emoluments from September 1991 to 15 June 1992 and full wages from 15 June 1992 until date of re-engagement. The appellant was also condemned to pay costs. The appellants E were aggrieved hence this appeal.

The challenge the decision, the appellant filed four grounds:

1. That the Honourable Resident Magistrate erred in law and facts in not satisfying himself with the jurisdiction of the Court before hearing the suit. F

2. That the Honourable Magistrate erred in law and in facts in finding that the respondent was not negligent in causing the appellant to suffer loss in the sum of Tsh 3,104,817/45. G

3. That the honourable trial magistrate erred in law and facts in holding that the respondent was wrongfully dismissed.

4. That the honourable trial court erred in law and facts in not weighing the evidence of both parties and decide the suit in the balance of probabilities. H

Parties were ordered to file written submissions and they did so timely. Dr Mapunda appeared for the respondent.

In their first ground, the appellants submitted that the trial court lacked jurisdiction to hear the I matter. They contended that the respondent having being found to belong to the management cadre

BUBESHI J

A of the appellant, could only challenge his termination at the Industrial Court, in terms of s 4 of Act 41 of 1967, as amended. The appellants contend that the respondent was wrong to file his suit in the ordinary Courts. The appellants are also saying that it is upon the trial court to satisfy itself that it B is seized with jurisdiction to try a matter. In the alternative the appellant submitted that the trial court had no jurisdiction to hear the matter as no dispute was raised by the respondent concerning the breach of conditions of contracts.

C As regards grounds two, three and four, the appellants argued them together. In their submission the appellants contend that the respondent acted negligently when he stopped PW3 Anthony Mhoja from taking the disputed cheque to the drawer for verification and instead directed PW3 to the office of the branch accountant who was not conversant with fraud and investigation. The appellants insist D that the respondent was negligent in that he stopped his subordinate PW3 from discharging his duties, that he misdirected PW3 to take the disputed cheque to a person not responsible with investigation that he never bothered to make a follow up in the matter until the money was finally paid out to a wrong person, thus occasioning loss to the appellants. They submit therefore that the E respondent's dismissal was proper.

The respondent on his part has responded in the following manner.

F On the issue of jurisdiction, the respondent submitted that the appellants contention that the trial court lacked jurisdiction cannot be entertained at this appellate stage. That this matter was never raised during trial and that in terms of s 79 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966 objections as to jurisdiction must be taken in the trial court at the earliest opportunity before settlement of issues. I am minded to agree with the respondent on this issue. Section 19 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966 G is very clear, it reads;

`No objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any appellate or revisional Court unless such objection was taken in the country first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled H at or before such settlement, and unless there has been a consequent failure a justice.'

This suit was filed on 13 July 1992. Perusal of the Court record does not show that any objection was raised by the appellant as to the trial court's jurisdiction. Judgment was delivered on 10 I January 1996. I think it is highly improper for the appellant to raise the issue of jurisdiction at this stage. The appellant's contention flies in the face of the provision of s 19 sited A above and at best it is an after thought. The appellant has submitted that it is for the trial court to satisfy itself that it has jurisdiction to try a matter. With respect I hold contrary views. It is for the party raising the issue to address the Court and the latter to rule whether or not it has jurisdiction. B

On the premises I am satisfied that this ground of appeal lacks merit and I dismiss it without further ado.

On grounds two, three and four the respondent has submitted that it was the Branch Accountant who verified the cheque and credit slip. That it was this Branch Accountant who authorised payment after being satisfied that the cheque was in order. Respondent denied being negligent or C responsible for the loss.

On this issue I have had time to revisit the evidence or record. On the fateful day, the plaintiff/respondent happened to be visiting the city branch National Bank of Commerce where he met the witness PW3 Anthony Muhoja arguing with a customer over a cheque. PW3 was D suspicious and had wanted the customer to go and verify it with the drawer. The respondent then referred the two to the Branch Accountant one Yassin who, it would appear, ultimately cleared the cheque and authorised that it be paid out. Now the issue here is, who between the two occasioned loss to the appellant. Is it the respondent or the Branch Accountant? Mark you the appellant never E called this Yassin to testify. Can we say that what the respondent did was not reasonable in the circumstances. I think not. If there was any investigation to be done in that direction that would definitely come from Yassin but against this Yassin was not called. We do not know what happened but what is clear is that the cheque was cleared by Yassin and payment authorised. In fact even F DW1 told the Court that he did not know why the respondent was dismissed and that he was not responsible for the loss of the money. The appellant in their submission are imputing ill motive on the part of the respondent. Having gone through the evidence tendered by all witnesses including G DW1, this Court does not share that conclusion. There is no sufficient evidence on record to hold the respondent negligent, in what he did by referring both DW3 Anthony Muhoja and the customer to the Branch Accountant. H

In the final event this Court upholds the decision of the trial court and dismiss the appeal with costs. I

-Headnote
In an application by the two applicants for leave to lodge an appeal against a decision of the D Mwanza District Council out of time, the High Court observed that the second applicant had not been a party to the case at the trial in the district court from which the intended appeal was sought but his name had been brought in for the first time in the formal decree of the district court. The decree had been drafted by the advocate for the applicants who had also drawn the present application and joined the second applicant.
E Held:
(i) No provision of the law allowed the joining of a party as appellant in appeal proceedings who had not been a party to the original proceedings whose judgment and decree were the subject of the appeal;
F (ii) As the second applicant was not a party to the original suit from which the intended appeal originated there was no judgment or decree or anything against him to legitimise his joinder as one of the intended appellants;

(iv) The application was incompetent for misjoinder of parties.
Case Information
Application struck out.
Matata for the applicants.
H Kweka for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mrema J:
Mr Matata, learned advocate for the two applicants, viz, Magu District Council and L M Ndaki, herein this Ruling referred to as the first and second applicant respectively, has filed the present I application on behalf of the applicants under s 14 of the Law of Limitation Act (Act No 10 of 1997) basically for one main reason: and that is for leave to file appeal A out of time. The application is supported by an affidavit deponed to by the advocate for the applicants, Mr C A Matata, Messrs Matata & Company Advocates.

The respondent, one Mhande Nkwabi, was the plaintiff in the Original Civil Case No 11 of 1995, in the Resident Magistrate's Court at Mwanza. In this application it is apparent that he filed a counter affidavit challenging the applicants' grounds deponed to Mr Matata's affidavit. However, at the B hearing of this application Mr Kweka, learned Counsel from the Tanzania Legal Corporation appeared and argued the application on behalf of the respondent.

The facts, as revealed in Mr Matata's affidavit, are as follows: C

2. That the applicant is aggrieved by the trial court's decision -- judgment entered on the 20 June 1996.

3. That on 21 June 1996 the applicant gave notice of intention to appeal against the said D decision and applied for a copy of the said judgment and decree -- notice appended, and marked as annexure `A'.

4. ... On 28 November 1996 the applicants drew up a memorandum of appeal against the E said judgment but could not file the same for lack of requisite copy of a decree as the Law requires.

5. That on 4 December 1996 because of the delay by the trial court to supply a copy of the decree, he drafted (ie Mr Matata) and submitted a draft decree for endorsement of the F Court which endorsement was made on the 12 December 1996 -- application and decree annexed collectively as annexures `B'.

6. ... On 22 January 1997 the applicants were supplied with a copy of the decree whereupon the applicants filed the memorandum of appeal with a copy of the said decree. G

7. That the delay in filing the appeal was beyond the control of the appellant.

8. That by virtue of the provision of s 19(2) of the Law of Limitation Act 10 of 1972 the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree ought to be excluded in computing the period of H Limitation.

Upon these grounds, it is Mr Matata's prayer that this Court makes an order extending the period allowing the applicants file their intended appeal out of time.

The respondent Mhande Nkwabi countered these grounds I

A through his counter affidavit contending, basically, that the application of the applicant is baseless because there is not a single ground in the affidavit deponed to on their behalf by their advocate, Mr Matata, Learned Counsel, which holds any merit as to the reason for the delay.

B I heard the arguments from both the Learned Counsel, Mr Matata for the applicants and Mr Kweka of the Tanzania Legal Corporation for the respondent. But, with respect, and without wasting anybody's time, I wish to state straight away that this application is incompetent before this Court because of misjoinder of parties in the application. It is quite apparent in the RM Civil Case No 11 of C 1995 the parties in that proceeding were Mhande Nkwabi, the plaintiff, and Magu District Council, the defendant. The second applicant in this matter, namely, L M Ndaki, was not a party to that proceeding, he was merely a witness for defence (DW). I know of no provision in our Laws that makes it possible the joining of a party in appeal proceeding who was not a party to the original D proceeding whose judgment and decree are subject of appeal.

I have noted that Mr Matata, the Learned Counsel for the applicants, was also the legal representative of the Magu District Council, the first applicant defendant. If Mr Matata had wished to E make Mr L M Ndaki a party to that proceeding whose judgment and decree he is now seeking to appeal from the district court to this Court he should have done so at that stage. The judgment and decree being sought to appeal to this Court was given against the lone defendant, Magu District Council, and not also against L M Ndaki who was only a witness in that original suit. As Mr L M F Ndaki was not a party to the RM Civil Case No 11 of 1995 there is nothing against him as a party legitimizing him to come to this Court as one of the appellants when there is no decree and or judgment against him in the originating Court.

G In the course of dealing with this exercise I have also been reviewing what Mr Matata has averred at para 5 of his affidavit and cautiously asking myself as to the appropriateness of Mr Matata's action. The said averment reads:

H `That on the 4/12/96 because of the delay by the trial court to supply a copy of the decree, I drafted and submitted a draft decree for endorsement of the Court which endorsement was made on the 12/12/96. A copy of the application and decree are appended hereto....'

I With respect, I am particularly concerned with the copy of the decree, which the learned advocate attached to his affidavit as annexure `B'. As to who drafted it A (the decree) and presented the same to Court for signature, it is now common ground that the author was advocate Matata, as per his own admission. This is where the whole mess sprang up. Mr Matata, being an advocate of long experience ought not, with great respect, to have acted as a lay man, if not contrary to the doctrine of uberrimae fidei. He (Mr Matata) having acted for the B defendant Magu District Council in the District Court, there is no doubt therefore that he knew who were the parties in the original suit, hence any appeal lay against any one of them. But then it appears absurd, if not unbecoming of professional ethics on the part of the same learned advocate C to go ahead to draw a decree on which he callously dragged in one L M Ndaki, the purported present second applicant, as one of the defendant/judgment debtors. In my mind, this clearly shows that Mr Matata drew up the decree enjoining L M Ndaki deliberately for his own interest to same. I D say Mr Matata's conduct in the matter was deliberate because he was very much aware that L M Ndaki was only just a witness in the original proceeding and not a party thereto. How hail, in my considered view, a witness could just out of blue sky be made a judgment debtor in a decree whose subject matter the purported defendant/judgment debtor was never a party! E

Other documents filed by Mr Matata in support of the present application tend to show openly that the learned advocate was not acting with clean hands. For example, the Notice of Appeal issued by him on 21 June 1996 included L M Ndaki as the second defendant, a fact which Mr Matata knew or F ought to have known to be false. It is on the foregoing circumstances I am inclined to the view that the said Learned Counsel has not been acting in good faith and according to his professional ethics.

In the upshot I am satisfied to say that the decree accompanying the Chamber application, and also G the proposed petition of appeal to this Court are nothing but improper if not fake documents as they purport to enjoin a party who was not a defendant in the original suit. And this, in effect, renders the entire application incompetent before this Court and, therefore, invalid. In the result I strike out the application with costs to the respondent. H

State Attorney. He reiterated the contents of the affidavits of Mr Mlambo, Learned State Attorney A Arusha and Mariam Issa Pangani, the personal secretary to the Principal State Attorney, Arusha. It has been explained by the applicants that the notice of appeal and the letter requesting record of proceedings indicated that copies to be served on the respondent. However, because the law B secretary had gone on maternity leave, Mariam Pangani filled the vacancy, but as she was new to the job, she sent the originals and all the copies to the High Court. No copy was sent to the respondent, Mariam Pangani herself, said so in her affidavit. The Attorney-General's Chambers, Arusha became aware of this omission on 3 October 1996 when the office received a letter from C the respondent claiming the execution of the decree.

The respondent, on the other hand, in his counter-affidavit, said that on 19 September 1996, that is forty-nine days after the notice of appeal was filed, he presented to the Attorney-General's Chambers, Arusha, copies of the proceedings, judgment and decree of the case to alert them that D he was taking steps to execute the award. On 30 September, he sent to the Treasury his claim for Shs 29,426,250/= by registered mail with a copy to the applicants. He went on to say that there was some further correspondence with the Treasury and that on 6 November 1996 he sent the E details required by the Treasury copied to the Attorney-General's Chambers, Dar es Salaam and Arusha. On 18 November the respondent went to the Attorney-General's Chambers, Arusha for some other business when a copy of notice of motion for this application was presented to him. He found out that the application had been filed on 13 November. F

Mr Songoro maintained that it was on 3 October 1996 and not earlier, that the Attorney-General's Chambers, Arusha became aware that the respondent had not been served. What the learned Senior State Attorney was doing was refuting the suggestion of the respondent that the G Attorney-General's Chambers, Arusha ought to have been alerted as far back as 19 September when the respondent delivered to them copies of the proceedings, judgment and decree. There are two matters here: First, Mr Songoro, as a very senior legal officer, ought to have known better that H the proper way to contradict the contents of the counter-affidavit of the respondent was not by making statements from the bar but was by filing a reply to the counter-affidavit. That the Attorney-General's Chambers has not done. Second, the affidavit of Mr Mlambo filed in support of the application, states in para 13 that upon receipt of the copy of the letter of the respondent claiming the decretal amount on 3 October I

A 1996, they realised that the respondent had not received a copy of the notice of appeal. But it is curious that the receipt of the copy of that letter signalled to the applicants only one thing; that was that the respondent had not received his copy of the notice of appeal. Someone in the Chambers should have remembered that filing a notice of appeal does not automatically stay execution. So, the respondent could have received his copies but nevertheless, he could have decided to go B ahead with execution. The applicants should have been prompted to another reaction; to file an application for a stay of execution.

C But what is even more baffling, the reaction of the Attorney-General's Chambers, Arusha came after the expiry of forty days from 3 October, when they realised the omission, to 13 November, when they filed this application. Mr Songoro told me that the Chambers, Arusha was trying to find out what had happened. However, the learned Senior State Attorney failed to say whether it was D necessary to use forty days to do just that.

In Transport Equipment Ltd v D P Valambhia (1), this Court refused to extend time within which to serve the respondent with a copy of the notice of appeal. Admittedly, the application in that E reference was made six months after the omission became known. Here the application has been made after one month and ten days. But in that case the applicant was very quick to serve a copy of the notice of appeal to the respondent the day following the realisation of the omission. So, when F he filed that application he had already made an attempt to serve the respondent. Despite that we were not persuaded to extend time. In that reference, just as in this application, the reason advanced for seeking the enlargement of time was the error of a law clerk in the chambers of the G learned advocate for the applicant. We found that not to constitute `sufficient reason' under Rule 8.

Just for purposes of completeness, in Daphne Parry v Murray Alexander Carson (2), the applicant was late for only five days when he applied for extension of time, but the Court of Appeal for East H Africa refused to do so and despite the fact that they thought that the appeal had merit.

I cannot distinguish this application from the reference in Transport Equipment Ltd. There is no sufficient reason advanced to persuade me to exercise the powers under Rule 8. I dismiss the I application with costs. It is so ordered.

The applicant applied for an extension of the time within which to appeal to the Court of Appeal and for leave to appeal to the Court. The proceedings arose from the granting of an ex-parte judgment D against the applicant and the subsequent dismissal of the applicants' application for extension of time to file an application to set aside the ex-parte judgment. The dismissal was based on the fact that the delay had been caused by applicant's gross negligence. A subsequent application for stay E of execution was struck out because no appeal had been filed and an application to the High Court, for extension of time to seek leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal and for leave to appeal against the original ruling was dismissed, the High Court refusing an extension of time to file application to set aside the ex-parte judgment.

Held:

(i) The Court of Appeal and the High Court had concurrent jurisdiction in the present matter. F The applicant had rightly made application to the High Court before coming to the Court of Appeal as under Rule 44, where the Courts had concurrent jurisdiction, first application should be made to the High Court;

(ii) In terms of Rule 43(b) however, where the application had first been made to and refused G by the High Court, a further application had to be made within 14 days of such refusal. A appeal to this Court and for leave to appeal to this Court. The applicant bank is represented by Mr Maira, learned advocate, while the respondent Company is represented by Mr M Marando, learned advocate.

The case has had a chequered history in the Courts where the handling of it by counsel for the B applicant bank leaves a lot to be desired, to say the least. For the purpose of this application the following salient features may be set out by way of the background to the case. On 27 June 1995 an ex-parte judgment was entered by the High Court in favour of the respondent following a default of C appearance by counsel for the applicant. On 7 November 1995 the High Court dismissed the applicant's application for extension of time to file an application to set aside its ex-parte judgment because the delay in filing such application had been due to gross negligence on the part of counsel which, however, could not constitute ground for granting the extension sought. On 11 March 1996 a D single judge of this Court struck out an incompetent application by the applicant's counsel for a stay of execution of the ex-parte decree because no notice of appeal had been filed in relation to that decree or judgment. And on 20 August 1997 the High Court dismissed the applicant's application for extension of time to seek leave to appeal to this Court, and for leave to appeal to this E Court against the High Court Ruling of 7 November 1995, refusing extension of time to file application to set aside the ex-parte judgment, on the ground that no reasons or grounds were advanced in support of that application. There were, in addition, other applications too, which, F however, do not have a direct bearing on the present application. Following the refusal of the last mentioned application therefore, the applicant has now come to this Court by way of a further application under Rules 8 and 43(b) of the Court of Appeal Rules.

G Admittedly, this is a matter where both this Court and the High Court have concurrent jurisdiction. Under s 11(1) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act the High Court has power to extend the time for making an application for leave to appeal to this Court, and this Court has such power under Rule 8 of the Court of Appeal Rules. The applicant rightly made this application to the High Court before H coming to this Court, because under Rule 44 where the High Court and this Court have concurrent jurisdiction, the application shall, in the first instance, be made to the High Court. The further application to this Court, however, is subject to the time limitation prescribed by para (b) of Rule 43 which says:

I `(b)Where an appeal lies with the leave of the Court, application for leave shall be made in the manner prescribed in rules 46 and 47 within fourteen days of the decision against A which it is desired to appeal or, where application for leave to appeal has been made to the High Court and refused, within fourteen days of that refusal.'

This means that where, as in the present case, the application for leave was first made to and B refused by the High Court, then a further application to this Court shall be made within fourteen days of such refusal by the High Court.

As stated earlier, the refusal by the High Court is dated 20 August 1997 and, additionally, it was certified by the District Registrar on 2 September 1997. However, the applicant's notice of motion C was lodged in Court on 8 October 1997. This is long after the expiration of fourteen days of the refusal by the High Court to grant leave, and no leave was obtained or sought for filing this motion out of the prescribed time.

The application is, therefore, time barred and is accordingly dismissed with costs. D

B The respondent filed a suit in the Regional Court for a declaratory judgment of ownership of a house. The plaint stated that the house had been entrusted to the appellant in 1982 and that when later the respondent wanted to take back possession thereof the appellant resisted, claiming that the house had actually been transferred to her by a deed executed by the respondent himself in C 1982. The respondent immediately disowned the transfer deed. The appellant raised preliminary objections: (i) that the suit disclosed no cause of action; (ii) that the action was time-barred; and (iii) that the Court had no jurisdiction. The preliminary objections were overruled and the appellant appealed to the High Court of Zanzibar.

D Held:

(i) In determining whether the suit was time-barred or not, time could not be computed from the time when the deed of transfer was purportedly made because the alleged maker is the respondent; that deed was itself an issue which needed to be proved one way or the other and it could not be relied upon to dispose of the suit on a preliminary objection based E on the law of limitation;

(ii) The conferring of jurisdiction upon the Land Tribunal to adjudicate upon conflicting claims to land did not divest jurisdiction from the ordinary courts in respect of those matters; the law only conferred jurisdiction in such matters to the Land Tribunal without undoing that F which hitherto had been enjoyed by the ordinary courts to handle similar disputes;

(iii) Where jurisdiction was conferred concurrently on courts and on tribunals, proceedings should normally and preferably be commenced in the one placed lower in the hierarchy but that was not to say that the other was thereby deprived on jurisdiction in the matter.

H Kannonyele J:

The plaintiff, Sultan Mohamed Zahran filed a suit Civil Case 48 of 1996 of the Regional Court at Vuga, Zanzibar, seeking a declaratory judgment as to ownership of property (a house) at Michenzani No 6/2 and prohibitory orders on the said property against the defendant, one Bimkubwa I Issa Ali. According to the plaint, the plaintiff had, in 1982, given power of attorney to the defendant to deal with his property situate in Zanzibar in any manner as he would himself, including power to sell A and or dispose of the property in any other (lawful) manner and also to represent him in judicial proceedings or others litigations when and if the need arose. The property thus entrusted to the defendant including the house at Michenzani in the municipality of Zanzibar. Subsequently (the B plaint does not disclose when exactly), the plaintiff demanded for possession of the property at Michenzani which, however, the defendant was not willing to part with easily. Eventually the defendant produced a deed of gift purportedly executed by the plaintiff way back in 1982 conveying the property at Michenzani (supra) to her, the defendant that is. The plaintiff disowns the instrument C purportedly conveying the property to the defendant and claims it is a forgery and fraudulent act by the defendant intended in law to deprive him of the said property. Hence the suit filed in court in June, 1996.

The defendant, advocated by Mr Mnkonje, learned advocate, resisted the suit alleging first, that D there was no cause of action disclosed by the plaintiff; second, that the suit was time-barred and, thirdly, that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the matter taking into account the provisions of the Land Tribunal Act, 7 of 1994. These objections were overruled by the trial Resident Magistrate E who therefore ordered the suit to continue to its logical conclusion. The defendant is appealing against that order.

On appeal, however, only two grounds were raised and argued. It is on the law of limitation and F jurisdiction of the trial court. It was argued before me that the learned Regional Magistrate erred in law in not holding that the suit was not time-barred. It was argued that it was not open to the appellant to redeem the property thirteen years after his right to do so first arose in 1982 when the property was wrongfully taken from him as alleged. Mr Mnkonje cited the schedule to the Law of G Limitation Act which gives the right to recover immovable property the period of twelve years from the date of the alleged wrongful seizure of the property. It is contended that from the wording of paragraph 6 of the amended plaint, the plaintiff had knowledge of the wrongful seizure from 1982 H when, therefore, time started to run against him.

Replying on the law of limitation, Mr Nassor, learned advocate for the respondent submitted that his client was not aware of the wrongful seizure of the property based on the deed of gift whose existence he knew nothing until it was produced to him when he persisted in demands to reclaim I the property. It is argued that since

KANNONYELE J

A the plaintiff did not know of these developments other than the general power of attorney he had given to the defendant, he had no way of knowing of the wrongful seizure not until he was shown the gift deed which, however, he disowns.

B By saying that the plaintiff had not in the plaint shown why he had not filed the suit since 1982 when the alleged wrongful seizure started to count against the plaintiff/appellant, I have no doubt that the appellant's counsel was having in mind the provisions of Ord VII Rule 7 of the Civil Procedure Decree, Cap 8 of the Laws although counsel did not go saying as much in quite clear C words. That rule says:

`Where the suit is instituted after the expiration of the period prescribed by the law of limitation, the plaint shall show the ground upon which exemption from such law is claimed.'

D In my considered opinion, this rule is inapplicable in the circumstances of this case where the plaintiff disowns and, therefore, challenges the validity of the deed of gift which purports to have been executed in 1982. If what he says is true (to be established or proven in evidence), the plaintiff E may be challenged for not fully establishing the cause of action for his failure to disclose as to when exactly the deed of gift was first shown to him which would thereby become the date when the cause of action arose. This, however, is no longer ground of objection now that it was excluded on appeal. But for the purpose of the law of limitation against the appellant, time cannot be F computed from 1982 when the article of conveyance was purportedly made because that is what the plaintiff disowns. Time cannot, therefore, be computed from the date the document was purportedly made because that in itself is an issue which needs proof one way or the other which is only possible upon production of whatever evidence the parties have and which either of them relies G on. Hence a preliminary objection is, in my view, not the proper forum for disposing of such an issue. The trial magistrate was therefore right in refusing to dispose of the suit on a preliminary point based on the law of limitation; the plaintiff could not plead exemption Ord VII Rule 7 computing same from events in 1982 the validity of which he disowns. Based on the law of limitation therefore H this appeal would stand to collapse.

On jurisdiction, s 13 of the Land Tribunal Act 7 of 1994 was cited as taking away primary jurisdiction I of the ordinary courts in respect of all matters respecting conflicting claims to land and vesting the same on the tribunal to be established under s 3 of the Act (supra). The operative words of the A section provide as follows:

`13. The Land Tribunal shall have primary jurisdiction over proceedings instituted where parties have conflicting claims to land, including the following issues: . . .' (my own emphasis). B

The section then goes on to give in paras (a) to (r) specific examples of land disputes which the tribunal can handle under its jurisdiction.

Counsel for the appellant argues that this section (s 13 of the Act) provides (by those words) that C primary jurisdiction on all land matters including recovery of possession shall vest in the Land Tribunal alone and that it was wrong for the court to held that had or retained the jurisdiction only because the Tribunal had not been constituted yet. On the other hand, counsel for the respondent argued that courts do still have jurisdiction because the Tribunal envisaged by the Act, has never D existed as yet and that with inherent powers conferred on the courts under s 129 of the Civil Procedure Decree, the courts are deemed to have powers to handle any suit and do whatever which enhances the interests and ends of justice. E

Mr Nassor, learned advocate further submitted that the hands of the courts should not be fettered to do justice and settle disputes where the sole organ vested with the right to exercise jurisdiction over certain or particular types of disputes does not exist. F

On my part, I do concur that s 13 of the Land Tribunal Act, 1994 confers primary jurisdiction in respect of disputes to land on the Land Tribunal to be established and constituted under ss 3(1) and 4 of that Act. With great respect, however, I do not read anything in that section which can be G construed as divesting jurisdiction from the ordinary courts in respect of matters related to land disputes which but for the coming into force of the Act (supra) they enjoyed hitherto. In my understanding the section does not deprive the courts of their erstwhile jurisdiction over land related disputes previously enjoyed by those courts. The section only confers primary jurisdiction in such H matters to quasi-judicial tribunal over and above but without undoing that which hitherto is enjoyed by the ordinary courts to handle similar disputes. This is concurrent jurisdiction being conferred on two different organs without interfering with same which the elder of the two organs enjoyed hitherto. Incidentally, the older of these organs happens to be the courts which I

A have always enjoyed superior jurisdiction over those of quast-judicial tribunals.

I am fortified in my view by the wording of s 34 of the Magistrates' Courts Act No 6 of 1985 where the possibility of there being two or more courts having concurrent jurisdiction in respect of the same kind of proceedings is lauded. It is therefore not beyond the scope and province of the B legislature that it may have intended to confer adjudication jurisdiction to the tribunal over and above that hitherto enjoyed by the ordinary courts. Be that as it may, what is certain to me is that the section not anywhere in the statute is there provided that primary jurisdiction in land disputes shall vest solely on the Land Tribunal alone. Nor do I read anywhere thereunder where it is provided that C jurisdiction formerly enjoyed by the ordinary courts in land related disputed is thereby divested from those courts or any such of them of any particular description. So jurisdiction of the courts in respect of land disputes in my view, is still intact and in full force notwithstanding the provisions of s D 13 of the Act 7 of 1994.

If I may go further, I may only add that probably, and I emphasize `probably', the magistrate would E have been right if he held that non-appointment of the chairman of the Tribunal by the President as provided under s 4(1) of the Act may, by inference, be construed as a deliberate suspension of the Act by the President for whatever reason which in any case he is not bound to disclose. Only this may be interpreted as an act to suspend the Act so that it may not operate even with its coming into F force as provided under s 1(2) thereof. But this is by no means deprivation of jurisdiction from the courts which hitherto they enjoyed in land disputes.

If anything more, it is that where jurisdiction is conferred concurrently on courts and on tribunals of G various juridical descriptions, proceedings should normally and preferably be commenced in one of themselves lowest placed in the hierarchy. It is undesirable in such situations that original proceedings should go straight to the highly placed again in the set up. But this is not to say that the later is thereby deprived of the primary or original juridical jurisdiction in the matter. To the contrary. H This, together with the other in the foregoing paragraph are, however, only but observations in passing. They are not the scope of this appeal. But even if they were the very fact that the tribunal does not exist and is not operative for the time being would make it more meaningful and I reasonable that the Resident Magistrate entertained the suit. He should now not be hindered to dispose of it and settle the dispute by ineffective purportedly preliminary points of law. It A is not in the interests of justice to do so.

The cumulative and ultimate result of these views is that this appeal is dismissed. The respondent to have his costs in this court and in the court below. It is so ordered. B

Civil Practice and Procedure - Courts - Jurisdiction - Employment law - Redundancy - Parties free to go to Industrial Court or ordinary courts where issues of redundancy concerned
Civil Practice and Procedure - Parties - Representative suits - Proper notice required in terms of Order 1 Rule 8 F

The respondent raised two preliminary objections to the applicants' suit in the High Court, firstly that it was a labour dispute as covered by the Security of Employment Act Cap 574 and the Inductrial G Court Act 1967 and the ordinary courts were therefore barred from hearing such claims by virtue of ss 28 and 42 of the Industrial Court Act, and secondly that the plaint was bad in law in that the court should have issued public notices of institution of the suit to relevant persons and that this had not been done.
Held: H

(i) The plaintiffs' complaint was against what they termed `retrenchment': this was not similar to termination or dismissal but was synonymous with redundancy. There was no

C Dr Mwakyembe for the plaintiffs.

Lyimo for the defendant.

Bubeshi J:

D In course of hearing this suit, Mr Lyimo learned counsel for the defendants has raised two preliminary objections on law. First that this being a labour dispute, it is covered by the Security of Employment Act, Cap 574 and Industrial Court Act, 1967 as amended by Act 2 of 1993. Mr Lyimo has argued that redundancy is covered under s 6(1)(g)8 of Caps 574 and ordinary courts are E therefore barred to hear such claims by virtue ss 28 and 42 of same Act. Similarly that, in terms of s 40(1) of the Industrial Court Act, such claims cannot be heard by ordinary courts. Mr Lyimo therefore is questioning the jurisdiction of this court to hear such a matter. The court was referred to F the case of Kitundu Sisal Estates v Shing (1) and Mohamed v General Manager Kunduchi (2). Mr Lyimo submitted that the appropriate procedure has been lain down under s 4 read together with ss 1 and 2 of the Employment Ordinance.

On the issue of redundancy he submitted that the same is not one of the contractual matters; citing G as an authority in point the decision by the Court of Appeal in the case of Mohamed Kondo & 11 Others v Attorney General (3). Secondly Mr Lyimo attacked the plaint for being bad in law in that it contravenes Ord 6 Rule 15; that the rectification is not dated and neither is it shown where it was verified. Further he complained that Order 1 Rule 8 was not fully complied with by the plaintiff in that H after leave was granted, the court should have issued public notices of institution of the suit to all such persons. He submitted that no such publication has been done and yet the number of the persons affected is about one thousand seven hundred people . Mr Lyimo submitted that in I absence of a proper notice and its service, the essence of Ord 1 Rule 8 is defeated and some one thousand interested persons have been left out. He prayed for the plaint to A be struck out.

Dr Mwakyembe for the plaintiff did not agree. He submitted that the matter before this court is purely contractual -- that it concerns a purported agreement between plaintiff and defendant and that there is no reliance on the Security of Employment Act nor the Employment Ordinance. B

Dr Mwakyembe contended that it was erroneous to suggest that retrenchment is synonymous with termination or dismissal, which fall under Cap 574. He stressed that retrenchment is a contractual matter and it is based on an agreement between employer and employee. C

On verification Dr Mwakyembe was of the view that in event there were mistakes, this could be corrected -- Rule 17 of Ord 8. As to the public notice or publication Dr Mwakyembe submitted that leave of court and been obtained to file a representative suit and a list of those interested has been D accepted by the court therefore public notice/publication has been dispensed with. He also added that this court has the power to order parties to be joined or struck out -- Ord 1 Rules (9) and (10). And were fact of a misjoinder of parties cannot be a reason for the denial of ones rights. E

In reply Mr Lyimo reiterated that the plaintiffs have not fully complied with Rule 8 of Ord 1 which is mandatory, and no leave to amend the plaint has been sought. Mr Lyimo attacked the list attached to the plaint in that it contains names which are not counter-signed. F

Mr Lyimo was of the view that since there are out there some one thousand workers interested in this matter a published notice will be material in this regard.

The issues before this court are two, namely, whether this court has jurisdiction and if so the G plaintiff's plaint is properly verified and that the provisions of Ord 1 Rule 8 have been complied with.

I have had time to peruse the plaint -- and the plaintiff's complaint is against what they prefer to call as retrenchment I do not think this is similar to termination or dismissal. In my view retrenchment is synonymous with redundancy. The issue of redundancy may fall under the Industrial Court Act, H although there is no specific provision that places the issue of redundancy under the Industrial Court Act and therefore employees are free to go to ordinary courts or the Industrial Court where issues of redundancies or retrenchment are concerned. I

BUBESHI J

A I must at this juncture state that the cited authorities by Mr Lyimo dealt with issues of summary dismissal while here the issue is retrenchment and the procedure adopted by the employer Tanzania Harbours Authority. These employees were not dismissed but they were retrenched. The two situations are quite different and I find the cases quoted of little help, if any, to the matter at hand.

B On the defective plaint and lack of public notice. Order 1 Rule (1) is clear, it states:

`Where there are numerous persons having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such persons may, with C the permission of the court sue or be sued . . . on behalf of . . . all persons interested. But the court shall in such case give, at the plaintiff's expense, notice of the institution of the suit to all such persons either by personal service or, where from the number of persons or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable, by public D advertisement, as the court in each case may direct' (emphasis mine)

The essence of this rule is therefore that the `identities of the other persons interested in this claim must be known to the court, although a representative suit is instituted on their behalf. Necessary E because the court is under duty to give notice of the institution of the suit to all such persons and secondly, the doctrine of res judicata applies all such persons' as per Samatta J, as he then was in (PC) Civil Appeal No 74 of 1985.
F It is apparent therefore that failure to comply with Rule 8 in whole in fatal despite the fact that leave was granted. The attached list does not help the plaintiff in that it cannot waive the requirement of Rule 8 cited above.
In premises I uphold the second preliminary objection raised by the defendant. In the event the plaintiff option to pursue this claim in this court, it is mandatory that Rule 8 be fully complied with. G Claim dismissed with costs to the defendant.

This is a short application. Tanga Bohora Jamaat, the applicant organisation, applies under Rule 8 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules 1979 (the Rules) as read together with Rule 87(2) of the said rules for extension of time within which to lodge in this Court's registry and to serve upon the H respondent, Dr Ally Shabhay, notice of cross-appeal. The application is opposed by the respondent.
The background to the application may, I think, be stated as follows. The respondent sued the applicant in the High Court for several reliefs. He was successful only partially. Aggrieved by that part of the decision on which he failed, he lodged an appeal against the same in this Court. Mr I Kalunga, the advocate who represented
SAMATTA JA
A the applicant in the High Court and before this Court in this application, was served with the memorandum of appeal and the record of appeal on or about 14 July 1997. About four weeks later, the applicant organisation, which has its office in Tanga, instructed the learned advocate to lodge a cross-appeal. On 28 August 1997 the learned advocate filed in the registry of this Court the instant B application. Rule 87(2) of the Rules makes it mandatory for a respondent to an appeal who wishes to lodge a cross-appeal to lodge a notice of cross-appeal in the appropriate registry not more than thirty days after the service on him of the memorandum of appeal and record of appeal. Rule 8, however, confers on this Court the power, where sufficient reason is shown, to extend the time C limited by that sub-Rule. The basic question in this application is, therefore, whether such reason has been shown.
In its affidavit supporting the application, sworn by Mr Kalunga, only one reason is given for the delay D in complying with Rule 87(2): it is said that the applicant delayed in instructing its counsel to prefer a cross-appeal. Mr Kalunga urged me to take into account that it was not easy for his client to read the record of appeal and discover an error by the learned trial judge in it, and hold that the delay in lodging notice of cross-appeal was not too unreasonable. Mr Maira, the learned advocate for the E respondent, opposed the application. He submitted that no satisfactory explanation has been given for the delay. The learned advocate went on to urge me to dismiss the application.
F I have carefully considered the competing arguments and in the end I have reached the conclusion that no basis has been shown in this application why the extension of time sought should be granted. As rightly submitted by Mr Maira, in the affidavit sworn in support of the application no explanation whatsoever is given why it took the applicant so long to instruct Mr G Kalunga to lodge a cross-appeal. While I am alive to the need of courts in this country satisfying consumers of justice that they (the courts) always remember that procedural rules are meant to facilitate and not defeat justice, I do not entertain any doubt that what Sir Jocelyn Simon P, said in the following passage in his judgment in Edwards v Edwards (1) at 151, is applicable to the H administration of justice in this country:

`So far as procedural delays are concerned, Parliament has left a discretion in the courts to dispense with the time requirements in certain respects. That does not mean, however, that the rules are to be regarded as, so to speak, I antique timepieces of an ornamental value but no chronometric significance, so that lip service only need be paid to them. On the contrary, in my view the stipulations which Parliament has laid down or sanctioned as to A time are to be observed unless justice clearly indicates that they should be relaxed.'

I agree with Mr Maira that there is, in the instant application, no warrant for relaxation in the applicant's favour the stipulation as to time laid down in Rule 87(2) of the Rules. Those who come B to courts of law must not show unnecessary delay in doing so; they must show great diligence.

The application stands dismissed with costs.

[zJDz]Judgment
Lugakingira J:

The applicant first presented an application, then a petition, before I
1997 TLR p308
LUGAKINGIRA J
A the Resident Magistrate's Court of Musoma challenging his removal as chairman of the respondent council at a sitting of the respondent's councillors. He was seeking a declaration that his removal was void and ineffective and an injunction to prevent a similar decision in future. He B purported to bring the petition under s 27(1)(d) of the Local Government (Urban Authorities) Act 1982, the Local Authorities (Elections) Act 1979 and the Elections (Local Authorities) (Election Petitions) Rules, 1984. The petition was dismissed with costs on a preliminary issue of competence, the court holding that it was misconceived. That done, the Court made the following C further orders:

`Order: Whereas the Court is sure the Petition was misconceived and was brought under the wrong provisions, the Court however entertains some doubt as to whether the declaration sought can be granted in this Court. On that D point of jurisdiction, the Court now would seek clarification from the High Court. The file thus is referred to the High Court under s 71 (sic) and Ord XLI of the Civil Procedure Code No 49 of 1966.'

E I think, with respect, this reference was unnecessary and academic in view of the decision already reached by the Court. The decision of the Court dismissing the petition for being incompetent and misconceived finally disposed of the matter before that Court and was not contingent upon the decision of the High Court. To put it differently, the opinion of this court, if any were to be given, would not influence the outcome of the petition one way or the other, and no-one I F can think of is anxiously waiting for it, for there is no petition still pending in the lower court. Section 77 (not 71 cited in the trial court's order) and Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code are designed for practical but not academic purposes. To cite part of Ord XLI, Rule 1, these provisions may be resorted to --

G `Where, before or on the hearing of a suit in which the decree is not subject to appeal, or where in the execution of any such decree, on which the court trying the suit or appeal, or executing the decree, entertains reasonable doubt ...' (my emphasis)

H It is evident from the words and phrases emphasized that there should be a matter pending in Court, either a trial or an execution, in order for a reference to be made to the High Court. To that end the Court seized of the matter may stay the proceedings pending the decision of the High Court or may, notwithstanding the reference, proceed and pass a decree or make an order contingent I upon the decision of the High Court (Rule 2). In the reference before me, however, the trial court finalised the A matter, leaving nothing to be concluded by any opinion of this Court. I am therefore of the view that the reference was improperly made and cannot be answered the way it was intended.

This reference is important in one aspect: the lower court doubted the nature of the case and its B own jurisdiction, yet it went ahead and disposed of it. With respect, that was improper.

Instead of proceeding to dismiss the petition, the court should have complied with the provisions of Ord XLI, Rule 6(1) which reads:

`6(1) -- Where at any time before judgment a court in which a suit has been instituted doubts whether the suit is C cognizable by that court or is not so cognizable, it may submit the record to the High Court with a statement of its reasons for the doubts as to the nature of the suit.'

There was every reason to doubt whether the proceeding in question was properly presented and D whether it was presented in the proper court. The applicant's prayer actually turned on the prerogative orders of certiorari and prohibition and these are grantable only by the High Court and attract a special procedure. Had the matter been brought to the attention of this Court at the appropriate stage, I have no doubt that appropriate orders would have been made under sub-Rule E (2). Admittedly, the provisions of sub-Rule (1) are permissive but I think in order to ensure that justice is not only done but is also seen to be done a court entertaining doubt as to its jurisdiction F would well be advised to seek the opinion of the High Court instead of pressing ahead with its decision. It is ironical, indeed, that in this case the lower court could press ahead with its decision and still turn around to inquire about its jurisdiction. The inquiry was no longer of any value to the parties but was once again merely academic. G

Apart from these observations, I make no order.

The decree of execution which was sought to be stayed was not attached to the documents nor were its terms disclosed in affidavits filed in support of the application.

Held:

E Since the Court was empowered to impose terms as it thought just upon an order of stay of execution it was assumed that the application would in any event be accompanied by the decision or sufficient information concerning such decision sought to be stayed and in the light of which the Court may determine whether to impose conditions and if so what conditions.

Where the decision sought to be stayed did not accompany the application and no information concerning the terms of F such decision was contained in the affidavit the application could not be anything but incompetent.

Nyalali CJ:

This is an application for stay of execution of the decree of the High Court in a judgment dated 24 H April 1997 pending the hearing and determination of an intended appeal to the Court of Appeal. The application is supported by the affidavit of Salim H Shivji. A counter affidavit was filed by the respondent on 27 November 1997. When the hearing of the application was resumed today, 1 December 1997, after it had been adjourned on 26 November 1997, Mr Matata, learned advocate I asked for leave to file and serve a supplementary affidavit. Initially Mr Rutaisire, learned advocate for the respondent objected to the request, after considering points raised by the Court, he rightly withdrew A the objection and the supplementary affidavit was filed and duly served.

There is one important problem with this application. The decree of which execution is sought to be stayed is neither attached to the documents filed nor are its terms disclosed in affidavits filed in B support of the application.

Mr Rutaisire has submitted that the effect of these omissions is to render the application incompetent. Mr Matata on his side has argued that since there is no specific requirement for the decree to accompany the application, the omission is curable by allowing the applicant to supply the decree which, after considerable delay, was at last supplied to applicant by High Court registry on C 18 November 1997.

The relevant provisions of Rule 9(2) of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979 under which this application is made states: D

> `(2) Subject the provisions of sub-rule (1), the institution of an appeal shall not operate ... to stay execution, but the Court --
> (b) in any civil proceedings, where a notice of appeal has been lodged in accordance with rule 76, order a stay of execution, on such terms as the Court may think just.' E

It is obvious that since the Court is empowered to impose terms as it may think just upon an order of stay of execution, it is assumed that the application would in any event be accompanied with the decision or sufficient information concerning such decision sought to be stayed and in the light of F which the Court may determine whether to impose conditions and if so, what kind of conditions. That being the position, it follows that where the decision sought to be stayed does not accompany the application and no information concerning the terms of such decision is contained in the affidavit, the application can not be anything but incompetent, and I so find. Consequently, this G application is hereby dismissed with costs.

Lubuva JA: F

This is an appeal against the decision of the High Court (Maina J) in High Court Civil Revision No 28 of 1985 dismissing an application for revising Morogoro District Court Civil Case No 16 of 1993. The facts as found at the trial are brief and may be stated as follows: In Civil Case No 16 of 1993 at G Morogoro Resident Magistrate Court, the respondent had sued Ally Abdallah Kigozi, Jamal Suleiman and Said Salim Bakhressa, the appellant who, at the trial were respectively referred to as the first, second and third defendants. The respondent claimed a total of Shs 9,930,910/= as damages suffered following an accident which involved the respondent's lorry Mercedez Benz in H make, Registration No MG 4709. The other motor vehicle Registration No TZC 7632 which collided with the respondent's lorry belonged to the second defendant and its driver was the first defendant. It pulled a trailer, Registration No TZC 91574 belonging to the third defendant as the registered owner. At I

A the end of the trial, the respondent obtained judgment against the defendants who were severally held liable to pay him a total sum of Shs 7,948,457/= including costs and interests. From that decision the third defendant at the trial, Said Salum Bakhressa, the appellant, applied for revision in the High Court. The application for revision was dismissed. The appellant is appealing to this Court.

B Mr Kisusi, learned counsel who represented the appellant in the High Court, is also appearing in this appeal. He has filed an eight-point memorandum of appeal. From these grounds, it is our view that the following are the issues of substance upon which the determination of the appeal turns C around. These are as follows:

1. Whether Mr Mbezi had been instructed to represent the appellant;
2. Whether the service of summons was effected on the appellant and

D 3. The jurisdiction of the Resident Magistrate Court Morogoro to entertain the appellant's application for extension of time.

We will first deal with the question of jurisdiction. This is raised in grounds two and seven of the E memorandum of appeal. As indicated, following the decision in Morogoro Civil Case No 16 of 1993, the matter was taken on appeal as High Court Civil Appeal No 32 of 1994. On 3 August 1994, the appeal was dismissed by the High Court on account of the fact that it was defective. As a result the appellant took the matter back to the Resident Magistrate's Court Morogoro applying for extension of F time in which to apply for extension of time in which to apply for setting aside the decision of 25 April 1994 in Morogoro Civil Case No 16 of 1993, the subject matter of the dismissal by the High Court on 3 August 1994. The learned Senior Resident Magistrate held inter alia that the court had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter which had been dealt with by the High Court (Mackanja J). As G already observed, in Civil Revision No 28 of 1995 the High Court (Maina J) upheld the decision of the Resident Magistrate on the point of jurisdiction.

Mr Kisusi, learned counsel forcefully criticised the learned judge for upholding the trial magistrate on H the question of jurisdiction. In support of this submission, he advanced two reasons. Firstly, that the appellant Said Salim Bakhressa had not appealed to the High Court. It was the first defendant in Morogoro Civil Case No 16 of 1993 who, through the services of Mr Mbezi, learned advocate preferred Civil Appeal No 32 of 1994 Mr Kisusi urged. That is, Mr Mbezi was not instructed to prefer I the appeal on behalf of the appellant. Secondly Mr Kisusi stated, the appeal was dismissed by the High Court on a mere A technicality in which case the applicant was not barred from filing such an application before the Court of the Resident Magistrate at Morogoro.

The respondent who appeared in person at the hearing of the appeal did not have much in B response to this submission. Naturally, being a lay person, he left the matter to the court to decide.

As the complaint on jurisdiction is based on the High Court Civil Appeal No 32 of 1994, we think it is desirable to examine briefly the manner in which the appeal was dealt with by the High Court on 3 C August 1994 (Mackanja J). From the record it is apparent that the learned judge dismissed the appeal because of what he described as incurable defect in that the memorandum of appeal was not accompanied by a copy of the extract of the decree. This is provided for under Ord XXXIX, Rule 1(1) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. However, with respect we think the learned judge invoked a D course of action which is not provided in the Civil Procedure by dismissing the appeal when he found the memorandum of appeal did not conform with the requirement of Ord XXXIX Rule 2. Instead of dismissing the appeal the proper course is to reject or strike out the appeal or return it to the appellant for amendment. Rule 3(1) of Ord XXXIX of the Civil Procedure Code provides to this E effect.

With regard to Mr Kisusi's complaint that the learned judge erred in upholding the decision of the trial magistrate that the magistrate's court at Morogoro had no jurisdiction to entertain the application, we have no hesitation in stating at once that there is no merit in it. As observed, F following the decision in Morogoro Civil Case No 16 of 1993, the matter was taken on appeal on behalf of the appellant and his other two co-defendants. That was Appeal No 32 of 1994 in the High Court at Dar es Salaam which was dismissed on 3 August 1994. Notwithstanding the impropriety of the order of dismissing the appeal in terms of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, we are of G the view that so long as the order still remained unvacated, the remedy open to the appellant was either to appeal to this Court or to seek review of the matter by the High Court. To take the matter back to the Court of the Resident Magistrate at Morogoro, was, with respect, highly misconceived. The claim by Mr Kisusi that the Appeal No 32 of 1994 was dismissed on technicalities as a H justification for that course of action is to say the least, a lame excuse which cannot invest the Court of the Resident Magistrate at Morogoro with jurisdiction to deal with a case that had already been dealt with by the High Court. We are therefore I

A satisfied that the learned judge correctly upheld the trial magistrate in the decision that the trial magistrate's court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. This ground thus fails.

The next important issue concerns the instructions to the advocate. That is, whether in the circumstances of the case, Mr Mbezi, learned counsel was in fact instructed to represent the B appellant. This falls within ground three of the memorandum of appeal. Mr Kisusi vehemently maintained that Mr Mbezi was not instructed by the appellant to represent him (appellant) at the trial. That it was one Islam Ally Salehe who had instructed Mr Mbezi to represent all the three defendants including the appellant. In that case, Mr Kisusi insisted, as the advocate appeared in court on behalf C of the appellant without the instructions of the appellant, the effect of it was that the appellant was not represented at all at the hearing of the case. The learned judge like the trial Senior Resident Magistrate believed that Mr Mbezi, learned advocate had been duly instructed to represent the appellant at the trial. Mr Kisusi strongly seeks to fault the judge on that. In considering this matter the following factors are, to our minds, relevant. First, from the initial stages of the case, it is D common ground that Mr Mbezi, learned advocate was instructed by Islam Ally Salehe (DW2) a nephew of the appellant to defend the three defendants at the trial including the appellant. Generally, there is no formal procedure laid down for instructing an advocate to defend a client in a trial. The instructions may be given by the client himself or any other person in that behalf. Here, the E instructions were given by Islam Ally Salehe (DW2) based in Morogoro and who describes the appellant as his uncle.

F Secondly, Mr Mbezi filed the written statement of defence in the case for the three defendants including the appellant. Thirdly, from the record, it is clear that Mr Mbezi makes it clear in his letter of 29 September 1993 addressed to Mr Massati, learned advocate for the respondent, (the original G plaintiff) that he was instructed by Jamal Suleiman personally and on behalf of Said Suleiman Bakhressa, the appellant. He denied liability on the part of the appellant. Fourthly, on the dates set for the hearing of the case, Mr Mbezi appeared in court in defence of the defendants including the H appellant. Fifthly, it is most unusual and indeed improbable that an advocate would go the whole length in preparing a case as well as conducting its defence in court if he is not assured of the instructions and the attendant fees. With respect, we do not think that Mr Mbezi, a lawyer of long standing, is an exception to this practical principle in the legal practice. From these circumstances, I on a balance of probabilities, we agree with the learned judge that Mr Mbezi, learned counsel was duly instructed to represent the A appellant at the trial. We can find no reason to differ with the learned judge in his finding of fact on this issue. The complaint on this ground is unfounded.

Then there is the question of the service of the summons which was raised in ground three of the B memorandum of appeal. The learned judge was satisfied that the appellant was served. Mr Kisusi, learned counsel has strongly contended that the appellant was not served. He advanced two reasons. One, that the summons was served on an employee of a limited liability company which is a separate legal personality. Second, that as the appellant was at the time outside the country, he was not aware of the case. Having taken the view that Mr Mbezi, learned counsel had been C instructed to represent the appellant, we proceed to examine the issue of the service of summons against that background. We are respectfully in agreement with Mr Kisusi, learned counsel that there was no personal service on the appellant. This is so because the notice of hearing which was D addressed to the appellant was not served on him. According to the process server, it was served on one Holla Salum Hafidh, an employee of Said Salim Bakhressa and Company, a limited liability company. As seen from Annexure `SSB4' the process server had endorsed the summons E in Kiswahili `Bakhressa nimeambiwa yuko nje ya nchi, amesafiri.' This translates to the effect that Bakhressa is away on safari out of the country. It was however the same address ie Paa Street Kariakoo which was indicated in respect of Said Salim Bakhressa as an individual and Said Salum Bakhressa and Company Limited. With that address used in effecting the service of summons the F question is whether the appellant was made aware of the case and the date set for trial. In their affidavits, the appellant and Islam Ally Salehe deny that Holla Salum Hafidh passed on the G summons or message to the appellant. The learned judge did not believe them on this. It being a matter of credibility on the part of the appellant, it is incomprehensible that no affidavit sworn by Holla Salum Hafidh was filed. That would have supported the appellant's claim that the employee Holla Salum Hafidh did not pass on the summons or information regarding the case to the H appellant. Nor is there any explanation by Mr Kisusi, learned counsel as to why the affidavit of Holla was not filed. In somewhat similar situation, in the case of Kighoma Alli Malima v Abas Yusuf Mwingamno (1), counsel for the applicant had failed to file an affidavit of the messenger who was instructed to serve the respondent's counsel to show the reason for failing to I

LUBUVA JA
A effect the service as instructed. There, this Court held, among others that counsel's mistake in not filing the affidavit of the messenger was not sufficient reason for extension of time, it was fatal. In the instant case, the unexplained omission to file the affidavit of Holla was further testimony raising doubts that the appellant was not truthful. Accordingly, applying the principle from the B Kighoma Alli Malima's case (supra) to this case, we are in agreement with the learned judge that the appellant was served. Furthermore, as Mr Mbezi, learned counsel had appeared and defended the appellant throughout the trial, it goes without saying that the question of the case being heard ex-parte does not arise. For these reasons we dismiss the appellant's complaint on service of C summons.
Before concluding this matter, we would like to comment briefly on the following issue. That concerns an advocate's denial to have instructions to represent a party at the trial and to raise that D as a ground of appeal. At the hearing of this appeal, Mr Kisusi had repeatedly made the point that though Mr Mbezi defended the appellant at the trial, he had not been instructed by the appellant. This is also apparent from the affidavits of Mr Mbezi and Mr Kisusi on this point. As observed by Kaji J when granting leave to appeal, this is a very peculiar and novel aspect pertaining to counsel's E instructions to defend. It is common knowledge and elementary that there is no rigid or formal manner in which counsel receive instructions from clients to enter appearance in court. This is a matter for agreement between counsel and clients. Under Ord 3 Rule 4 of the Civil Procedure Code, Mr Kisusi urges that the courts below should have pressed for Mr Mbezi to identify which client among the defendants he was representing. With respect, we do not agree. On record Mr F Mbezi quite clearly stated that he was appearing for all the three defendants including the appellant. The power under Ord 3 Rule 4 of the Civil Procedure Code, is discretionary and it is invoked where G the court has reason to require an advocate to produce written authority by the party to act on behalf of such a party. Otherwise, it is normal practice to take on the word of counsel appearing in court as officers of the court to be authentic. As a matter of fact, at the hearing of the appeal when H the Court asked for a written authority from Mr Kisusi to act for the appellant, he had none! In that situation it is, to say the least, absurd ask for authority from Mr Mbezi in proof that Mr Mbezi was appearing on behalf of the appellant.
I In our considered view what is important from the court's point of view is the ascertainment that the party is represented by counsel of not. In the event that the party is represented by counsel, the court is not bound to go further A behind inquiring whether in fact counsel was instructed. As a matter of ethics, counsel as officers of the court are taken seriously and solemnly on what they say in court. It is therefore highly improper in our view for counsel who has represented a party throughout the trial to swear an affidavit later on B appeal complaining of lack of proper instruction to appear on behalf of the party. We think that this kind of behaviour not only borders on unprofessional misconduct but also gives an opportunity to dishonest losing parties to start cases afresh or institute appeals on grounds that they were represented at the trial without their instruction. This, if left unchecked, would lead to the C perpetration, of injustice and indefinite litigation in court. It is hoped that the relevant authorities in the judicial and the bar would be vigilant against a recurrence of such conduct.

In the event, for the foregoing reasons, we are satisfied that this appeal is devoid of any merit. It is D dismissed with costs.

CRIMINAL APPEAL 33 OF 1996 G

Flynote

Criminal law - Robbery - Proof of - Circumstantial evidence - Evidence must lead to irresistible inference

-Headnote

The Director of Public Prosecutions appealed against the acquittal of the first and second H respondents in the Mbozi District Court on a charge of armed robbery. The evidence was to the effect that 65 bags of coffee had been stolen from the complainant by a group of robbers in a lorry and saloon car. The robbers who were armed with a gun broke into a godown and took 65 bags of coffee, 45 bags of which were subsequently found in the possession of the first respondent. The I villagers whose

A coffee had been stolen followed the lorry and kept guard over the first respondent's house until the police arrived to give them assistance. The first respondent's defence was one of an alibi. He claimed that he had been wrongly identified as one of the robbers and this identification had been based on an inadequate opportunity to make a proper identification. On appeal,

B Held:

There were a number of possibilities as to why some of the stolen coffee had been found in the first respondent's house. These were reasonable possibilities and it was accordingly inappropriate to use circumstantial evidence to convict the first respondent as the circumstantial evidence would C have to have lead irresistibly to the only conclusion that the first respondent was involved in the robbery in some way. The acquittal was accordingly in order.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed and ordered that the coffee in question be returned to the complainant as it had been sufficiently identified as being the complainant's property.

Mwipopo J:

This appeal has been taken by the Director of Public Prosecutions against the acquittal of Elias s/o F Mwashitete as the first respondent who was the first accused in the lower court of Mbozi District Court and of Joseph s/o Michael as the second respondent who was the second accused in the same trial court. The acquittal was from charges of armed robberies contrary to ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code as amended by Act 10 of 1989.

G The appellant at this stage was represented by the learned Mr Mulokozi State Attorney whereas the first respondent Elias s/o Mwashitete was represented by the learned Mr Mkumbe Advocate. The second respondent Joseph s/o Michael has gone underground and can't be traced through his H addresses given to the police at the time of his arrest and even through his address given to the trial court at the time of his acquittal being PO Box 304, Mbozi Mechani of Mlowo village c/o Ten cell leader James s/o Shangwa. Both sides asked the court to proceed with the appeal with the present respondent and defer the appeal against the second respondent to another future date in order to I do quick justice to the first appellant who has always been attending this court both by himself in person and his advocate, The A Mbeya RCO (Regional CID Officer) undertook to continue looking for the second respondent in order to serve him to appear for this appeal.

The written grounds of appeal of the Director of Public Prosecutions were summarized by the learned Mr Mulokozi that the trial court was wrong to acquit the first respondent despite the B overwhelming evidence that the complainants traced the robbers' motor vehicle from the scene of the armed robbers at their Iporoto Village Primary Cooperative Society's go down to the house of C the first respondent at Lungwa Village; that part of their sixty-five bags of coffee stolen and loaded in the robbers motor vehicle at gun point within their sight found their way to the house of the first respondent and the same forty-five bags were properly identified by their owners that the first respondent was seen and identified handing the stolen sixty-five bags of coffee at his house; and D lastly, that the doctrine of recent possession should has been applied to find the first respondent guilty of armed robbery as charged in view that the first respondent was found with the stolen sixty-five bags of coffee hardly five hours after they were robbed from the Iporoto Village Cooperative Society. The other ground of appeal involved an order for restitution of the forty-five E bags of coffee seized by the police from the first respondent to the same first respondent. The learned Mr Mulokozi argued that since the identity of the sixty-five bags of coffee had been well established to belong to different peasant members of Iporoto Cooperative Society by their special F numbers and as shown in Exhibit P4.

On the other hand the learned Mr Mkumbe for the first respondent has vehemently opposed this appeal and supported the decision of the trial Mbozi District Court in acquitting the first respondent G as well as ordering the forty-five bags of coffee to revert to him. The learned Mr Mkumbe Advocate argued that no eye witness identified the first respondent to have been seen at the time of the robbery at Iporoto Cooperative Society.

The learned Mr Mkumbe advocate further argued that the identity purportedly made by PW2 of the first respondent at his house while he was with the occupants of the robbers lorry was dubious and H unreliable for it was based on clothes only at a long distance, 100 paces away at night or dawn, and that the same clothes were not proved to belong to the first respondent.

Similarly, on the identity of the forty-five bags of coffee found at the house of the first respondent, I the learned Mr Mkumbe argued,

A that they belonged to the first respondent who was a good farmer with 61/2 acre coffee farm from which he harvested them and he told the police about them even before they searched his house.

The learned Mr Mkumbe further counter argued that since the family of the first respondent was not B at home for the entire day of 6 September 1995 it was possible that the villagers from Iporoto village who testified as PWs two, four, five and nine and who had kept vigil over the first respondent's house from 5.00 am until 6.00 pm when the police came are the ones who broke his house and planted inside that house the weighing machine of Iporoto Cooperative Society and C marked the forty five bags of coffee of the first respondent with their respective membership numbers in order to fix up the first respondent with this offence.

The ownership of the coffee, according to the learned Mr Mkumbe, was properly held by the trial D magistrate that it should be determined in another civil suit. He cited the case of Athuman s/o Mwarungwe v R (1) as an authority that ownership dispute over property should be determined in a civil suit.

The Trial Magistrate, the learned Mr Safari, seemed to disbelieve the entire story of the prosecution E witnesses that they followed up the lorry of the robbers from their village of Iporoto up to the Lungwa village of the first respondent. He also held that the failure of the Iporoto villagers to mark the numbers of the robbers lorry, to block the road so that it could not leave the first respondent's F house, to raise an alarm and to summon the help of the villagers of Lungwa as well as to call the Lungwa village leaders to testify in court made them untrustworthy of any credibility. The trial magistrate further believed the testimony of the first respondent and held based on the credible defence of the first respondent that the Iporoto villagers are the ones who broke the house of the G first respondent planted in his house the weighing machine of Iporoto Cooperative Society and marked the bags of coffee of the first respondent with their numbers in order to incriminate the first respondent with this crime.

H At the first time the respondents were taken to the Mbozi District Court on 11 September 1995 there were three accused namely Elia s/o Mwashitete the present first respondent who was the first accused, Tobias s/o Mayele who was the second accused and Joseph s/o Michael who was the third accused the present second respondent. The charge sheet too contained two counts of armed robbery contrary to ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code in the first count and the store I breaking and stealing contrary to s 296(1) of the Penal Code.

MWIPOPO J

The same original charge sheet was substituted with another charge sheet on 4 December 95 after A the second accused Tobias s/o Mayele was on 20 November 1995 under 98(1) of the CPA by the withdrawal of the charge in his favour. The present two respondents were left in the present charge sheet to face the trial. The substituted charge sheet contained only one count of armed robbery contrary to of ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code having left out the previously second count of store B breaking and stealing contrary to s 296(1) of the Penal Code.

As much as issues of credibility of witnesses and findings of facts are left to be determined by the trial court there seems to have been grave errors in the finding of the facts of the trial court which C need to be corrected by this court on first appeal. The background of the crime which occurred in Iporoto village twenty kilometres away at the scene of the crime was not considered seriously by the trial court. I better start from there. From the testimonies of PW1 Witson s/o Songa the Manager of Iporoto Rural Cooperative Society, PW2 Mateso s/o Kailon, PW3 Festo s/o Namoyela, PW4 D Fabiano s/o Kamola a committee member of Shanwe Iporoto Cooperative Society, PW7 Raisi s/o Malimoja the village Executive Officer (VEO) of Iporoto village government and PW10 Eliakim s/o Ali the watchman of Iporoto village Cooperative Society the sequence of the events was that at 3.00 am after midnight a lorry and a saloon car came to Iporoto Cooperative Society's coffee godown to E store break and steal coffee from it. PW10 the watchman sneaked into hiding in time to see what occurred. When the thieves started breaking the store he went to ring a bell signifying danger and most of the villagers came out from their homes in full vigour to give help to the watchman to F apprehend the burglars. But, they were met with a terrifying firing of bullets by the armed robbers which kept all the villagers at bay far away and in hiding. The armed robbers continued loading the sixty-five bags of coffee worth Shs 5,516,00/= and left undisturbed. But, it occurred to some G villagers that they should follow the lorry which was not moving very fast with bicycles to see where it went. Among such villagers was PW2 who followed the lorry for twenty kilometres until the lorry ended up in Lungwa village at the house of the first respondent. They didn't know where the saloon H car had gone. They kept in hiding about one hundred paces away from the house seeing the coffee bags being unloaded into the house of the first respondent without raising an alarm until the lorry later left that house for another unknown destination after 5.00 am. They decided to keep vigil over that house until morning when they informed the village leaders about this incident but the I

MWIPOPO J

A village leaders and people refused to render them any help for fear of retribution from the first respondent until 6.00 pm when the police came from the District offices at Vwawa where some of the Iporoto villagers had gone to seek help. During the day more villagers continued pouring around the house of the first respondent until they became a big crowd. Some came with bicycles others B walked on foot for four hours such as PW7 who left Iporoto on foot at 8.30 am and reached the house of the first Respondent at 12.00 noon. Out of the whole crowd no villager from Lungwa village gave them any help of keen interest to enquire what was happening. But, no doubt it was a big C unheard of event in the vicinity for the house of first respondent to remain under guard by strangers from an unknown village. The village leaders of Lungwa were quite nervous and apprehensive of the whole episode, for the police found them at their village government's office also, waiting for the D police to come most likely.

With this background, which was not considered by the trial court in its assessment of the evidence as a whole, I find as a true fact all this narration of prosecution witnesses did happen.

E Since there was firing of guns at Iporoto village all the witnesses from Iporoto knew that the robbers were fully armed and meant business with their guns. It was expecting too much from them that they should have seized the lorry while it was unloading the coffee at the first respondent's house. Similarly they could not have raised an alarm for they could have been easily killed by F exposing themselves to the armed robbers. Failure to identify the numbers of the lorry can be easily be explained in the same vein of being scared to note such numbers and being novice peasants. Further they successfully traced their coffee and kept guard of it until the police came to give them assistance -- fifteen hours later on. The Iporoto villagers are courageous and vigilant citizens who G played their preventive role to protect their property to the best of their intelligence and means for which they ought to be congratulated. With this background I also dismiss the findings of the trial court that the Iporoto villagers are the ones who broke into the house of the first respondent and planted their weighing scales there and printed the bags of coffee of the first respondent with their H numbers in order to incriminate the first respondent. I find the opposite as testified by the prosecution witnesses to be the truth that the forty five coffee bags found in the house of the first respondent were deposited there by the armed robbers out of the loot they stole from Iporoto I Cooperative Society at gun point. Similarly, the weighing scales of Iporoto Cooperative Society was stolen and brought to be kept in the house of the first respondent by the A armed robbers themselves.

As argued by the learned Mr Mulokozi State Attorney the issue of the identity of the forty-five bags of coffee was conclusively proved to belong to the different members of the Iporoto village villagers because their numbers were found marked on the bags and as per their cooperative society's office B book exhibit P 4. To find that the villagers of Iporoto village went and broke the doors of the house of the first respondent and marked the bags with their own numbers is quite absurd for the very Iporoto villagers testified otherwise and the first respondent was not there to see. After all according C to the testimony of PW2 the wife of the first respondent was in that house for the night, morning and until 2.00 pm when she left the house not to return again until when the police came and found nobody in that house not even the children and both 2 wives of the first respondent who lived there had abandoned the house, and the first respondent testified not to know where they went. D

The next issue for consideration is the identity of the first respondent. Both the learned Mr Safari and the learned Mr Mkumbe Advocate held the view that the identity was not safe to base a conviction on it since it was dark and only the clothes of the first respondent were identified and they E did not know each other prior to the day of incident. Further, the identifying witness was standing in hiding one hundred paces away and that no identification parade was made to ascertain if the prosecution witnesses fully recognized the first respondent. F

The only witness who identified the first respondent was PW2 Mateso s/o Kailon. He testified that he saw and identified the first respondent by clothes with a shirt which was reddish with blue dots. This piece of evidence came out of re-examination of this witness (PW2) by the public prosecutor Inspector Sangija. Why didn't he bring it up during examination in chief? Even during cross G examination of this witness (PW2) no question was asked on the identity of the first respondent. So, this question of identifying the first respondent was wrongly admitted in the first place for re-examination and must arise out of cross-examined questions -- unless the court permits such H new questions in which case the other side must be given time to cross examine on the new question arising out of the re-examination. The first respondent was not given such chance to cross examine PW2 after he testified on re-examination that he identified the first respondent from his clothes. On this legal ground of improperly admitting evidence of identification of the respondent I

A in re-examination without affording chance to the first respondent cross examine on it coupled up with other valid reasons on identity of first respondent referred to by the trial magistrate and the learned Mr Mkumbe I find that the first respondent was not properly identified at all to have seen the B armed robberies when they were unloading the stolen coffee at his house. Since none of the prosecution witnesses identified anybody at Iporoto village and improperly identified the first respondent at his house the defence of alibi of the first respondent that he slept with his first wife at his Vwawa house remained unrefuted by the prosecution.

C The next issue for determination is whether the first respondent is guilty of receiving stolen property. Why did the robbers bring the coffee to the first respondent's house? Can it be necessarily inferred that he conspired with them to keep it for them for storage purposes in order to share the loot. There are many possibilities to it but three possibilities seem to be cogent to have D been the case. The first possibility is that the first respondent was part and parcel of the armed robbers as their planner or financier etc and that they brought the forty-five bags of stolen coffee as his share of the loot. In this situation he would be a principal offender and guilty of armed robbery as E charged. The other possibility is that the first respondent was not one of the principal offenders and guilty as charged for armed robbery but a mere receiver of the stolen property as a usual customer -- buyer of the stolen coffee or as a usual storer of the stolen coffee for a fee. In this second possibility he would be a guilty receiver of stolen property for which he could be convicted F as such under s 311(1) of the Penal Code or if the doctrine of recent possession can apply he could be convicted of the principal offence. In this case the doctrine of recent possession would not apply to him for he was not identified to have slept in that house. But, his wife, who was in that house and left the premises at 2.00 pm to hide away from her own house should have been visited G with this offence and so charged. She wasn't even charged for the weighing scales which was found hidden under the bed-mattress in one of the five bedrooms of the first respondent!

H The third possibility, that since the first respondent testified to have mentioned to the police before searching the house that he had forty-seven bags of coffee in his house he too might have been a victim of house breaking and stealing by the same armed robbers as was Iporoto Cooperative Society. The robbers are intelligent people, they might have planned to go and rob the I first respondent just after robbing Iporoto village. They succeeded in breaking the door, but out of the fear that they would A be caught with the marked forty five coffee bags of Iporoto they dumped all the forty five marked coffee bags of Iporoto, kept for themselves the remaining twenty bags from Iporoto which possibility had no good marks on which marks they to erased on the way from Iporoto to Lungwa village and B added up another loot of forty-seven bags of the first respondent which were unmarked to go away with a total of sixty-seven bags of coffee that night!

With these reasonable possibilities it is not easy to use circumstantial evidence to convict the first C respondent with any criminal offence because circumstantial evidence does not irresistibly lend to only one inference that the first respondent received the forty-five bags with guilty knowledge that it was stolen. Had it been his wife who was at home it would have been a different matter.

As for the weighing scales the Public Prosecutor was very funny to have not included it in the D particulars of the offence although it was not disputed that it belonged to Iporoto Cooperative Society. Nevertheless, it was already returned to the same complainant. The finding of the trial court that the forty-five bags need another civil suit to establish its ownership was erroneous and it is hereby quashed. The same forty-five bags were conclusively established to belong to the E respective peasants of Iporoto Cooperative Society as per Exhibit P 4. The same be returned to them immediately. Otherwise, this appeal is dismissed for the over given reasons. F

C (An application for striking out of a notice of appeal from the decision of the High Court of Tanzania, Dar es Salaam, Msumi J)

Flynote

D Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Application to strike out Notice of Appeal - Rule 76(2) of Court of Appeal Rules 1979 - To be read with Rule 6(a) in counting days and computing time scales.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Rule 83 requiring appellant to institute appeal within 60 days of filing E notice of Appeal - Appellant's application for copy of proceedings not complied with by Registry - Appellant having copied leter to all relevant parties - Rule 83 complied with.

-Headnote

F The applicant applied to have the respondent's Notice of Appeal struck out for offending Rule 76(2) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979 and for failure to comply with Rule 83(1) of said Rules. The ruling sought to be appealed against had been delivered on 29 May 1997 and the respondent filed his Notice of Appeal on 12 June 1997. It was contended that that was on the 15th day and so out of G time by one day, counting from the day the Ruling was delivered. Respondent contended that the Notice was filed on the 14th day, arguing that the counting of days commenced with the day after the event and excluding the day of the event. It was also contended that the respondent should have instituted his appeal within 60 days of filing the Notice of Appeal in accordance with Rule 83.

H Held:

(i) That Rule 76(2) had to be read with Rule 6 of the Court of Appeal Rules, subrule (a) of which provided that the computation of days from an event was deemed to be exclusive of the day of the event, and that there was no conflict between the two Rules;

I (ii) That the present respondent, who had applied to the Registry for a copy of the proceedings sought to be appealed against and had not been furnished with any, had complied with the Rules by copying his letter to the relevant parties - there was no legal provision requiring him to keep reminding A the Registry to forward the proceedings and once Rule 83 was complied with the intending applicant was home and dry.

Makame JA:

On behalf of the applicant, Transcontinental Forwarders Ltd, Mr Kinguji learned advocate, has C applied to have the present respondent's Notice of Appeal struck out for offending Rule 76(2) of the Court of Appeal Rules, 1979 and for failure to comply with Rule 83(1) of the said Rules. The respondent's counsel is Mr Majithia learned advocate. D

It is common ground that the ruling by Msumi J (as he then was) sought to be appealed from was delivered on 29 May 1997. It is also agreed by both parties that the respondent filed a Notice of E Appeal on 12 June 1997. Mr Kinguji contends that that was on the fifteenth day and so out of time by one day, counting as he does from the day the Ruling was delivered, and so getting three days in May and twelve days in June, Mr Majithia asserts that he was just in time, having filed on the fourteenth day. He argues that one counts from the morrow of the event, excluding the day of the F event, in the present matter the day the Ruling was delivered, on the 29 May 1997. Rule 76(2) Mr Kinguji is relying on indeed requires that a notice like this one should be lodged within fourteen days. Mr Majithia does not dispute that but contends that Rule 6 of the Court of Appeal G Rules governs the computation of the fourteen days. He cites Rule 6(d) but in my opinion the relevant portion of that Rule, for the purpose of the present issue, is sub-rule (a) which provides:

`a period of days from the happening of an event or the doing of an act or thing shall be deemed to be exclusive of the day in which the event happens or the act or thing is done'. H

I am quite clear in my mind, even without resort to the Law of Limitation Mr Majithia sought to call in aid, that Rule 76(2) and Rule 6 must be read together and that, if that is done, there is no I

A conflict between the two, on a proper construction. The way to go about counting days and computing time scales is spelt out in Rule 6 and that has to be done for `any period of time fixed by these Rules ...', including of course Rule 76. With great respect therefore, I am unable to accept Mr Kinguji's submission that Rule 6 and Rule 76 conflict each other, 29 May 1997 is therefore not to be B counted in this instance in computing the fourteen days.

Mr Kinguji also urged that, in any event, the respondent tarried too long after filing the Notice of Appeal. He should have instituted his appeal within sixty days of filing the Notice, in accordance with C Rule 83. He did not do so, and it is now over six months since the High Court Ruling was delivered. The Notice of Appeal should therefore be deemed to have been withdrawn in terms of Rule 84.

Mr Majithia had a ready answer, and a correct one in my view to this second limb of Mr Kinguji's D argument: Mr Majithia submitted that he applied on 7 June 1997 for a copy of the proceedings etc and to-date he has not been furnished with any. He complied with the Rules by copying his letter to all the relevant parties, including the firm of Patel & Co, advocates to which Mr Kinguji evidently belongs. Mr Kinguji's response to this was that Mr Majithia should not have kept quiet after his 7 E June letter. He should have kept on reminding the Registry. Mr Majithia said in fact he did. I wish to say only that reminding the Registry after applying for a copy of the proceedings etc and copying the request to the other party may indeed be the practical and realistic thing to do, but it is not a F requirement of the law. Once Rule 83 is complied with the intending applicant is home and dry.

The application before me is devoid of merit. It is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Stock theft - Where accused had offered to refund number of cattle stolen, irrelevant that no consistent description of cattle given or that none were tendered.
-Headnote
The appellant was charged with cattle theft in a District Court. The appellant offered to repay PW 1 E the stolen cattle, after which the charge ws withdrawn under s 98(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act and the appellant was discharged. However, the cattle were seized from PW 1 by one M, claiming that they had been paid to PW 1 unlawfully. This led to PW 1 making a fresh complaint which led to appellant being charged, convicted and sentenced. On appeal, it was contended that F there had been no consistent description of the cattle and none were tendered; that the trrial court had not held a preliminary hearing and that PW 1 had no more complaint after being paid and that the matter was concluded with the withdrawal of the initial charge.
Held: G

(i) That neither the failure to tender the cattle nor any defect in the description of some of them had any significance in the case - the fact that the appellant had repaid the cattle was an admission of theft which the trial magistrate was entitled to take into account, which he did, and in these circumstances the Court does not have to see the stolen item or be particular about its identity; H

(ii) That unless the omission to conduct a preliminary hearing had resulted in an unfair trial leading to a failure of justice, which was not the case in casu, it could not be held to be fatal to a proceeding;

Lugakingira J:

This is an appeal against conviction and sentence, the appellant having been convicted of cattle C theft at Magu District Court and sentenced to eight years' imprisonment.

On the night of 2 July 1994 twenty-five head of cattle were stolen from the boma of PW1 Edward Tumbo at Shigala village in Magu district. Acting on a tip, he proceeded to the appellant's home at Igwisi village in Urambo district where he arrived ahead of the appellant. A few days later the D appellant arrived with two other men driving thirty head of cattle. PW1 identified three among them as his own and reported to the Sungusungu. The appellant and one of his companions were arrested and subsequently charged with cattle theft at Urambo District Court in Criminal Case No E 48 of 1994. To avoid trouble the appellant offered to repay the stolen cattle and gave PW1 the three he had identified and an extra twenty two at Kaliua Police Station. Following this event the charge was withdrawn under s 98(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act and the accused persons were F discharged. But PW1 was not that lucky. When the cattle arrived at Shigala there shortly appeared a certain Mazoya who seized them all claiming that they had been paid to PW1 unlawfully. Presumably it was from this turn of events that PW1 was prompted to make a fresh complaint at G Magu and this led to the appellant's arrest and his being charged in this proceeding.

The appellant offered no defence at the trial, stating that he had nothing to say, and called two witnesses, none of whom was helpful to him. Mr Nasimire who argued the appeal on behalf of the H appellant took three points: first, that there was no description or consistent description of the cattle and none were tendered; second, that the trial court did not hold a preliminary hearing; third, that PW1 had no more complaint after being paid and the matter was concluded with the withdrawal of the charge at Urambo. He also persistently referred to two accused persons but I I think that arose from a misreading of the record for this proceeding involved the appellant only.

It is true, in the first place, that none of the twenty five cattle were tendered and this apparently A because fate had conspired against PW1. While PW1 believed that Mazoya kept the cattle with the Village Executive Officer (PW2) or the Ward Executive Officer (PW3), these two denied receiving them. In a word, the cattle had vanished. And there is something interesting about this Mazoya. A B man of the same name from Urambo district stood surety for the appellant at the trial. Assuming, just assuming, that the two Mazoyas were one and the same person, it would appear that the appellant had a hand in the seizure and disappearance of the cattle. As regards description of PW1's original cattle, I am satisfied with the evidence of description adduced by PW1 and his son C PW4, namely, three parallel marks on the cheek and two on the left thigh. And I think neither the failure to tender the cattle nor any defect in the description of three of them had any significance in the circumstances of this case. The appellant had no answer to the prosecution case, and since a D strong case had been made out against him, his conviction was inevitable. In particular the fact that he repaid the cattle was an admission of theft which the trial magistrate was entitled to take into account. He did and said: `It does not appear to me that the accused would have decided to refund the three identified cattle and pay further twenty two head of cattle to PW1 just for fun if he had no E involvement in the incident.' I agree, and in circumstances like these the court does not have to see the stolen item or to be particular about its identity.

It is equally true that the trial court did not conduct a preliminary hearing as required by s 192 of the F Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. Subsection (1) of s 192 is couched in what appears to be mandatory terms and the provision applies equally to accused persons who are represented by advocates as to those who are not so represented. The question now is whether the omission was fatal to the proceeding. I do not think so. The purpose of a preliminary hearing is to identify matters G which are not in dispute so as to cut down on the number of witness and promote a fair and expeditions trial. Unless, therefore, the omission to conduct a preliminary hearing has resulted in an unfair trial leading to a failure of justice, it cannot be held to be fatal to a proceeding. It was not H suggested to me that the appellant had an unfair trial and my examination of the record does not suggest so either. He cross-examined all the prosecution witnesses and at some stage he brought in a defence counsel who subsequently withdrew. He was given the opportunity to defend himself and to call witnesses and elected to make use of the latter. I

A I therefore see no justification for this complaint on procedure and I will say no more about it. It is perhaps not irrelevant to remark also that s 192 has not proved to be as useful as it was expected to be. In subordinate courts one can hardly speak of meaningful preliminary hearings, where any B are held, and in the High Court it is by a large a plea taking exercise.

Finally, it was contended that since PW1 was paid and the charge was withdrawn at Urambo there was no basis for another complaint. I do not agree. The charge at Uramba was withdrawn under s 98(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act and as Mr Mbago who appeared for the Republic rightly pointed C out, the withdrawal did not operate as a bar to subsequent proceedings being preferred against the appellant on the same facts. The fact that PW1 was paid, or tricked into a phoney payment, did not undo a criminal act which was already complete and the offence of cattle theft is not capable of D compromise. This proceeding was therefore properly preferred against the appellant.

The sentence was above the minimum but I think it was deserved. The trial magistrate cited the fact that cattle theft was alarming in his jurisdiction. I will add that the appellant is a daring character who E deserves no leniency. He could steal cattle at Magu and drive them fearlessly for hundreds of kilometers to Urambo. Such men are dangerous. The entire appeal is thus without substance and it is dismissed.

Civil Practice and Procedure - No Case to answer - Submission of `No Case to Answer' in civil C cases - Course which trial court should take upon a submission of no case to answer
-Headnote
This appeal arose out of an action on a contract for sale of an air conditioner. At the D close of the plaintiff's case, the defendant submitted that there was no case to answer: that after all the evidence given for the plaintiff, the burden of proof had not shifted to the defendant. The trial court ruled that the submission was not well founded and immediately pronounced judgment for the plaintiff, now respondent. The defendant appealed: E
Held:

(i) The Civil Procedure Code merely provides for the order to be followed in the production of evidence of parties and provides nothing analogous to the law of criminal procedure providing for a course when a submission of no case is made; F

(ii) The practice of the courts in England, approved by the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa, is that a defendant who makes a submission of `no case to answer' does not lose his right to call witnesses if his submission is not accepted by the court, unless he indicates that he elects to call no witnesses after making the submission;

(iii) The trial court should not proceed to decide the case immediately after the G submission of no case to answer unless it has ascertained that the defendant intends to call no witnesses after the submission of no case to answer;

(iv) In this case, the defendant did not elect not to call any evidence after the submission of no case, and he therefore did not lose his right to call evidence H and denying him that right was a serious error by the trial court.

Kesaria, for the appellant

Miss Sheikh, for the respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

Samatta Ag J: C

This appeal, which is from a decision of the resident magistrate's court of Dar es Salaam, raises a question of law of considerable importance. Stated in broad terms the D question is: What course should a court take when at the end of a plaintiff's case it is submitted by or on behalf of the defendant that there is no case to answer?

In view of the nature of the order I propose to make later in this judgment, the facts of the case which have given rise to that question must be stated in a skeletal form. The E appeal arises out of an action on a contract for sale of an air-conditioner. Immediately after the case for the plaintiff university was closed, Mr Kesaria, on behalf of the defendant company, submitted that there was no case to answer. The pith and substance of his contention was that the evidence which was adduced by the plaintiff F university in support of its claim was so unsatisfactory that it had not shifted the burden of proof on to the defendant company. Miss Sheikh, counsel for the plaintiff university, made a reply at the end of which she invited the court to enter judgment for the plaintiff university. Before embarking upon his submission Mr Kesaria made no indication to the court that he was not going to call any evidence. Indeed, at no time during the submission did he make such an election. The court did not make any attempt to ascertain from him as to what action he proposed to take. In a fifteen page reserved ruling the learned resident magistrate reviewed the evidence before her and came to the conclusion that Mr Kesaria's submission was not well founded. In the course of the ruling she said:

`In my view the plaintiff's evidence has shifted the burden on to the defendant to disprove by a reasonable explanation how they arrived at a decision that they are excluded from liability. Again and again it has been stressed by the courts that where a party relies on a some (sic) assertion and of which he A has special knowledge, he must explain how he says he excludes liability from himself.'

Having said that, the learned resident magistrate went on to point out what, in her opinion, the defendant company had to prove to avoid liability. After holding that the B defendant company had failed to discharge the onus, she concluded thus:

`I therefore find the suit in favour of the plaintiff with all costs and interest.' C

It is that decision which the appellant company appeals against to this court.

Mr Kesaria sought to impugn the decision on grounds of merits. In my view, however, those grounds can properly be examined only if this court is of the view that the learned D resident magistrate directed herself properly in law in delivering judgment before hearing the evidence of the appellant company. To that issue I now devote my attention.

The Civil Procedure Code 1966, does not shed even a wavering light as to what answer E should be given to the question I posed at the beginning of this judgment. There is no provision in the Code which is analogous to that of s 205 or of s 278(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. Order 18, Rule 2 merely makes provision for the order which ought to be followed in the production of the evidence of parties. It is as silent as a graveyard as F to what course a court should take when a submission of no case is made. What, then, should a judge or magistrate do when such a submission is made? Although that is not an unimportant question, strangely enough, as far as the law reports go, no decision in East Africa throws any light upon it. The problem has, however, received G attention in a number of modern English cases which I now proceed to examine.

The first case in point of date is Parry v Aluminium Corporation Ltd (1). The salient facts of the case are lucidly and accurately given in the headnote as follows: H

`An employee in a factory, whose hand was injured in a cutting machine, brought an action against his employers alleging negligence and also breach of statutory duty in that the machine was a dangerous machine and was not securely fenced. At the close of the plaintiff's case, the defendant's I Counsel submitted that there was no case to answer on the ground that, on his own showing, the plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence. The trial judge upheld the defendants' submission and A gave judgment for the defendants.'

The plaintiff appealed to the Court of Appeal. It was held that the learned Trial Judge had misdirected himself in finding that the plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence. In the course of his judgment, Goddard LJ said at 237: B

`I think that in all these cases of negligence, if a judge is asked to rule at the end of the plaintiff's case that the plaintiff has made out no case, it is most desirable that he should adopt the practice, laid C down a great many years ago in this court, when Mathew, LJ was sitting here, and since adopted by Horridge, J who was a judge of the greatest experience in these matters, that the judge should say to counsel who is submitting no case: "Do you elect to call no evidence?" If counsel is content to leave D the case where it is, then the judge can rule. But it is very undesirable for the judge to give a ruling in a case which may afterwards be upset by the Court of Appeal, when the defendant may be in a position to say: "I must have a new trial, because my evidence was never heard." I think in negligence cases the right course is for the judge to refuse to rule unless counsel says that he is going to call no evidence. Horridge, J used to say, if he was sitting with a jury: "Are you going to call E any evidence; or are you going to let the case stay where it is?" If counsel said: "I am not going to say whether I am going to call any evidence," then he would say: "You must call your evidence," and then I will rule whether or not, on the whole of the case, there is a case to go to the jury or not." If a judge is sitting without a jury, he does not have to say that, because he can say he will decide at the F end of the case.'

G `I think that that is the proper course to take in these cases. I do not say that it is the right course in every kind of action, because in defamation cases, for instance, I believe there is authority for saying that, if it is submitted that there is no evidence of malice, the judge is bound to rule. H

Also in slander cases the judge must rule if the submission is made that the words are not actionable without proof of special damage and no special damage is alleged. But I think that the old practice, which I believe most judges adopted, is a sound practice, because it does prevent the chance of a defendant, unsuccessful in this court, asking that the case should go back for a new trial I to have his evidence heard.'

That dictum was approved by the Court of Appeal a year later in the case of Laurie v A Raglan Building Co Ltd (2). That case involved a claim for damages arising out of alleged negligence. At the end of the plaintiff's case the Trial Judge ruled in favour of the submission of counsel for the defendants that no case had been made out for the defendants to meet. In the course of his judgment, with which Goddard and Du Parcq B LJJ agreed, Lord Green MR said at 337:

`The course which the trial took was this. After the evidence for the plaintiff had been concluded, on the question of liability counsel for the defendants submitted that there was no case. It is unfortunate, C I think, that the judge did not follow the practice which ought to be followed in such cases, as has been quite clearly laid down in this court-namely, the practice of refusing to rule on the submission unless counsel for the defendants says that he is going to call no evidence. That must be regarded as the proper practice to follow, and it is to be found very lucidly set out, if I may say so, in the D judgment of Goddard, LJ in Parry v Aluminium Corporation Ltd. However, I do not wish it to be thought that there is any particular magic about that question being asked, because it seems to me that counsel can make it perfectly clear, by words which he uses and by the way in which he acts, that he E does not intend to call any evidence, and, that being so, he must be taken to have given a negative answer to the question which the judge might otherwise have put to him.'
The next case I wish to refer to is Yuill v Yuill (3) at 185. The principal facts of the case F are clearly and, I think, correctly stated in the headnote to the case, which, with gratitude, I proceed to read:

`The petitioner husband sought the dissolution of his marriage with the respondent on the ground of adultery.... When the case for the petitioner was closed, counsel for the respondent made a G submission that there was no case to answer. The Judge ruled against the submission without, however, having called upon counsel for the respondent to elect whether to call evidence or rely on his submission, and heard the evidence of the respondent and the co-respondent. H

He came to the conclusion that upon the petitioner's evidence he ought not to draw the inference that adultery had taken place on August 3, and accepted the evidence of the respondent and co-respondent basing his belief that they were substantially truthful upon "a careful observation of their demeanour" and the opinion which he had formed of their "type of characteristics". He, therefore I dismissed the petition.'

SAMATTA AgJ

On appeal it was contended on behalf of the petitioner that since the submission of no A case to answer had been rejected the petitioner was entitled to a decree. Delivering his judgment, with which the other members of the court-MacKinnon and Du Parcq LJJ agreed, Lord Greene MR said at 184--185: B

`Before I come to the principal question in this case it will be convenient to dispose of two arguments submitted by counsel for the appellant. The first is as follows. In the court below, when the case for the appellant was closed, counsel for the respondent made a submission of no case-not, as I C understand, in the sense that the evidence led by the appellant was insufficient in law to support a decision in his favour-but by way of an invitation to the judge to dismiss the petition without calling on the respondent.

Wallington, J, did not at the time appreciate the nature of counsel's submission: in particular it did not D occur to him that in taking the course which he did the respondent's counsel was in any way intending to call no evidence. In the result he did not follow the practice which, we are informed, has been adopted in the Divorce Division of calling upon the respondent's counsel to elect whether to call evidence or to proceed with his submission. The submission having failed, counsel for the appellant E contended before Wallington, J, that the respondent's counsel, by making the submission, had lost his right to call evidence and that the judge's ruling necessarily meant that the appellant was entitled to a decree. This contention was rejected by Wallington, J. It was, however, repeated before us and we were invited to say that the appellant ought in the circumstances to have been granted a decree F as a matter of course and to allow the appeal accordingly. Alternatively, it was said that if the mere fact that the judge had ruled against the submission of no case was insufficient, we ought in considering the facts to disregard the evidence led by the respondent.

This argument is, in our opinion, based on a misapprehension of the meaning of the practice which G in appropriate cases is followed where counsel for a defendant desires to make a submission of no case. The practice is discussed in Alexander v Rayson, Parry v The Aluminium Corporation, Ltd, and Laurie v Raglan Building Co, Ltd, and I will assume that it is the proper practice to follow in the Divorce Division. It does not mean that counsel by submitting no case ipso facto loses his right to call H evidence if his submission fails.

He only loses that right if he definitely elects to call no evidence. He may make this election expressly or (as in Laurie v Raglan Building Co, Ltd) impliedly. The practice which has to rule unless counsel elects to call no evidence. Where counsel has so elected he is, of course; A bound: but if for any reason, be it through oversight or (as here) through a misapprehension as to the nature of counsel's argument, the judge does not put counsel to his election and no election in fact takes place, counsel is entitled to call his evidence just as much as if he had never made the submission. This argument, therefore, fails.' B

The rule that a party who elects to call no evidence in reliance of his submission of no case loses the right to call his evidence if the submission fails was approved by the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in Overseas Touring Company (Road Services) C Limited v African Produce Agency (1949) Limited and Another (4). At the trial in that case counsel for the second defendant, Mr Wilkinson, went ahead with his submission that the plaintiff had not made out a case for his client to meet despite the fact that the learned Trial Judge had warned him that if he continued with the submission he was not D going to be allowed to call evidence. In the end the learned judge refused to allow him to call evidence. Mr Wilkinson's criticism of the learned judge's decision of refusing to allow him to call evidence was rejected by the Court of Appeal. Sir Kenneth O'Connor P said at 193: E

`On appeal, Mr Wilkinson, for the appellant, argued that the learned judge had been wrong in refusing to allow him to call evidence if he continued with his submission of no case at the close of the plaintiff's evidence and his submission failed. I think, however, that the learned Judge was justified in F taking that course: Yuill v Yuill at 18.'

Unfortunately it was not necessary in that case for the Court of Appeal to examine the entire practice relating to a submission of no case. It therefore confined itself to the G submission made before it.

The next English case in which the practice was examined by the Court of Appeal is Storey v Storey (5). Delivering the judgment of the court which consisted of himself, Hodson and Harman LJJ, Ormerod LJ referred to the cases of Alexander v Rayson (6), Parry v Aluminium Corporation Ltd (1), and Lurie v Raglan Building Co Ltd (2) and then H continued at 281:

`The combined effect of these three cases appears to be that the proper procedure if a submission of no case is made by the defendant in a negligence case is to require him to elect whether to stand on I his submission, and if he does so there cannot thereafter be a new trial.'

The learned Lord Justice went on to quote a passage from the judgment of Lord Greene A MR in Yuill v Yuill (3) and then continued at 282:

`In Wilson v Wilson [1958] 3 All ER 195 Karminski, J, held that it was the established practice of the Divorce Division, other than in exceptional circumstances, that a party making such a submission B must be put to his election.

There are, however, two sets of circumstances under which a defendant may submit that he has no case to answer. In the one case there may be a submission that, accepting the plaintiff's evidence at C its face value, no case has been established in law, and in the other that the evidence led for the plaintiff is so unsatisfactory or unreliable that the court should find that the burden has not been discharged. Laurie v Raglan Building Co Ltd was a clear case of the former, Yuill v Yuill of the latter. In Yuill v Yuill, Lord Green MR, said:

D "In the court below, when the case for the appellant was closed, counsel for the respondent made a submission. It was intended to be a submission of no case-not, as I understand, in the sense that the evidence led by the appellant was insufficient in law to support a decision in his favour-but by way of an invitation to the judge to dismiss the petition without calling on the respondent." E

There can, we think, be no doubt that in the former type of submission a defendant is bound by his election, and there can be no new trial. This rule, in our opinion, however, does not of necessity apply to the second type of case where the judge is invited to dismiss the case because of the unsatisfactory or unreliable nature of the evidence.' F

Another English case which I think I must refer to is Vye v Vye (7). It is not necessary for the present purposes to state the facts of that case. It is the illuminating observations in G the judgment of Sir Jocelyn Simon P, which I think render some guidance as to what the solution of the problem I am confronted with in the instant case ought to be. The learned President said at 34:

`Sometimes, at the end of a plaintiff's, or petitioner's, or complainant's case, but not before, the case may be stopped, either on a submission that there is no case to answer, or on the proper motion of H the court itself; Ramsden v Ramsden, which Baker J, has cited.

Though such action may be taken, it is rarely satisfactory to come to a decision in a matrimonial cause without hearing both sides: see the passage in Ramsden v Ramsden [1954] 2 All ER at p 624 I cited in Storey v Storey, and compare also the Practice Note [1962] 1 All ER

SAMATTA AgJ

448. It is, of course, always open to a defendant or respondent to submit that there is no case to A answer. That is a right that cannot be withheld. He can do that at the end of the complainant's case, but not before. If it is done, it should be made perfectly plain what is the type of the submission. I cite again from Storey v Storey:

"There are, however, two sets of circumstances under which a defendant may submit that he has no B case to answer. In the one case there may be a submission that, accepting the plaintiff's evidence at its face value, no case has been established in law, and in the other that the evidence led for the plaintiff is so unsatisfactory or unreliable that the court should find that the burden of proof has not been discharged." C

It should be made perfectly plain which of those two types of submission is being put forward. That is not to say that they are mutually exclusive. They can, of course be put forward in the alternative; but the court should be perfectly clear on what grounds it is ruling, if it does so rule, that there is no case to answer: see, for example, Disher v Disher [1963] 3 All ER 933; [1965] at 31.' D

Although the problem which the High Court of Uganda was confronted with thirty years ago in Simewo Damulira v B Kassainali Nanji (8) is not identical with the one I am confronted with in the case now under consideration, the observations of Edwards CJ E (as he then was) in that case are, I venture to think, fairly instructive. The facts of that case are succinctly stated in the headnote as follows: `After the appellant (plaintiff) had given evidence the magistrate noted on the file: Close of plaintiff's case, I don't wish to F hear the defendant', and then proceeded to deliver judgment, in which he said `The evidence of the plaintiff leaves me far from satisfied that his claim is genuine'. After holding that there was no warrant in Ord 16, Rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Rules (of Uganda) for the course the trial magistrate took and that resort could not be had to the G practice observed by the High Court in England in Civil cases tried by a jury, the learned Chief Justice said at 174--175:

`I wish to make a clear distinction between the facts of the instant case and a trial where, at the end of the plaintiff's case, it transpires that the plaintiff, even if believed, has made out no case in law H entitling him to any remedy. Suppose, for example, a plaintiff sued for Shs 1,000/= damages on the ground that the defendant had merely been rude to him but did not suggest that he had libeled or slandered him or done or said anything which would, in law, entitle him to recover damages as I compensation or solatium, then in such a case, in spite of the wording of Order 16 rule 2, a Magistrate might well be entitled to stop the case and dismiss the plaintiff's action. As to this, however, I express no A definite opinion. Such a case must await decision when it arises. I am fortified in reaching the conclusion at which I have arrived by a perusal of the words of Lord Justice Romer (as he then was) in the case of Alexander v Rayson, Vol 52, Times LR, page 131 at page 133: B

"Where an action is being heard by a jury it is, of course, quite usual and often very convenient, at the end of the case of the plaintiff, or of the party having the onus of proof, as the defendant here, for the opposing party to ask for the ruling of the Judge whether there is any case to go to the jury, who are C the only judges of fact. It also seems to be not unusual in the King's Bench Division to ask for a similar ruling in actions tried by a Judge alone. We think however, that this is highly inconvenient. For the Judge in such cases is also the judge of fact, and we cannot think it right that the judge of fact should be asked to express any opinion on the evidence until the evidence is completed. Certainly no D one would ever dream of asking a jury at the end of a plaintiff's case to say what verdict they would be prepared to give if the defendant called no evidence, and we fail to see why a Judge should be asked such a question in cases where he, and not a jury, is the Judge who has to determine the facts. In such cases we venture to think that the responsibility for not calling rebutting evidence should E be on the other party's counsel and on no one else."

In my view the same principles must apply where a Judge or Magistrate, of his own motion, in a civil case, feels inclined, after having heard only the evidence of the party on whom is the burden of proof, to dismiss the action. That really seems to be conclusive of the matter now before me. A Judge or F Magistrate in Uganda trying a civil case is in the same position as a Judge of the King's Bench Division in England in an action tried by him sitting alone.'

Having given the matter anxious and, I hope, careful consideration, I readily admit the G justice of the principles underlying the practice observed by and before Her Majesty's High Court of Justice in England in cases tried by a judge alone. In my view that practice is not only founded upon common sense, but its basis is also to be found in the laudable concept of fair play. It does not only aim at justice being done, but it also aims, I venture to think, at justice H being seen to be done. These are noble aims which any system of justice worth a name must be guided by. I am unaware of the existence of any local conditions that would warrant the rejection or modification of that practice in the administration of justice in our I country. On the contrary, I think that the practice makes a powerful and reliable ally of the substantive law, both statutory and unwritten, which our courts are enjoined to apply in the exercise of A their respective civil jurisdictions. With unfeigned respect to the learned resident magistrate, I think she strayed into a grave error in arriving at a final opinion on the case at a stage of the trial when all that she was required to do was to express her opinion as to whether there was a case for the defendant company to meet. At no time before or B during his submission did Mr Kesaria expressly or impliedly elect not to call any evidence. If logic is to prevail, he should not, therefore, have been taken to have lost his right to call evidence. The denial of that right was a serious error. It vitiates the learned resident magistrate's decision. that being so, I am constrained to allow the appeal. C Unfortunately, I cannot order a retrial before another magistrate as I am informed by Miss Sheikh that the key witness for the respondent university has left the country for good and cannot be obtained without a collosal amount of expense. As the outcome of the case may to a large extent depend on credibility of witnesses, it seems unlikely that the D invocation of the provisions of s 35(1) of the Evidence Act 1967, would adequately protect the interests of the respondent university. My regret for not being able to order a retrial before another magistrate is, however, tempered by the reflection that Mr Kesaria E is quite willing to go back before the learned trial magistrate and present the case for his client before her.

For the reasons I have endeavoured to give, I allow the appeal and set aside the lower court's decision.

The learned trial magistrate is directed to re-open the case, hear the evidence of the F defendant company and finally determine the case in accordance with the applicable law.

Criminal Law - Section 39(2)(a) of the Penal Code - Charge of treason - What constitutes.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Interference with a trial court's sentencing on B appeal - Principles applicable.

-Headnote

The First Appellant, together with the Second to Ninth Appellants, were convicted in the High Court of Tanzania at Dar-es-Salaam on three counts of treason, contravening Section 39(2)(a) of the Penal Code. Each was then sentenced to life imprisonment. In C an appeal both against the convictions and sentences, and based on seventy-three substantive grounds of appeal, the Court of Appeal of Tanzania (per Nyalali, CJ) upheld the convictions and sentences in each case and dismissed the appeals in their entirety.

Held: D

(i) The effect on the laying of charges brought about by the enactment of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985, is that the courts of this country are no longer bound to follow English practice and procedure in a criminal trial.

(ii) The word `may' in Section 283(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code (now Section E 298(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985) is unambiguous and crystal clear; and thus the trial judge's summing of the case to his assessors is not mandatory, but is prudent as a matter of practice.

(iii) It is sufficient for the trial Judge to state the substance or gist of the case on both sides to enable the assessors' opinions to be formed on the case in F general or on any particular point required.

(iv) Section 248 of the Criminal Procedure Code (now Section 265 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985) obliges the trial judge, by necessary implication, to take the assessors' opinions before giving judgment.

(v) In deciding whether a magistrate's failure to comply fully with the Chief Justice's G Instructions renders extra-judicial statements inadmissible, the question is whether apart from any such non-compliance, other circumstances suggest that the statements were made involuntarily.

(vi) A conviction on a retracted uncorroborated confession is competent if the court warns itself of the danger of acting upon such a confession and is fully satisfied that such confession cannot but be true. H

(vii) A retracted uncorroborated confession, if truthful, can corroborate other evidence against the confessor.

(viii) Incriminating statements made at a trial within the trial are admissible at the main trial and can be used against their maker at the main trial.

(ix) A conviction on a charge of treason requires proof of an overt act as well as the I perpetrator's appropriate intention and his allegiance to the Republic at the material time.

1996 TLR p14

A (x) An appellate court will not interfere with the sentence imposed by the trial court unless such sentence is manifestly excessive.

(xi) The appeals are dismissed in their entirety.

[zJDz]Judgment

Nyalali CJ: The following matters are not seriously disputed between the parties in this F case. The nine appellants, namely, Hatibu Gandhi alias Captain Hatty Macghee; Captain Christopher Kadego alias Chriss; Lieutenant Eugene Maganga; Captain Metusela Suleiman Kamando; Captain Vitalis Gabriel Mpunda; Captain Rodrick Roushan Roberts; Captain Dietrich Oswald Mbogoro; Captain Zacharia Hanspoppe and P3794 G Lieutenant Badru Rwechungura Kajaja, hereinafter called first appellant, second appellant, third appellant, fourth appellant, fifth appellant, sixth appellant, seventh appellant, eighth appellant and ninth appellant respectively, were jointly with ten others on three counts of treason, contrary to s 39(2)(a) of the Penal Code, and with one H alternative count of misprision of treason, contrary to s 41(b) of the Penal Code.

At the close of the prosecution case five of the accused persons were found to have no case to answer and were accordingly acquitted. The trial then proceeded with the remaining fourteen accused. I

tion called a total of ninety-seven prosecution witnesses, whereas the defence called A forty-three witnesses including the accused persons, all of whom with the exception of the eighth appellant, elected to give unsworn statements in their defence. The first appellant elected to say nothing but called one defence witness. At the end of the long B trial, only the present nine appellants were convicted on the three counts of treason in respect of certain specified overt acts and were each sentenced to imprisonment for life.

The remaining five accused persons were acquitted both on the substantive charges and the one in the alternative. As to the appellants who were convicted on the C substantive counts, the learned Jaji Kiongozi properly did not make a finding in respect of the alternative count of misprision.

For purposes of this appeal, the proceedings were compiled in fifteen volumes of stenographers' records, and four volumes of the Trial Judge's notes. It was a job well D done both by the learned trial Jaji Kiongozi and the court stenographers led by Mr John Luanda from the Court of Appeal Registry.

The nine appellants were aggrieved by the convictions and sentences, hence this appeal to this Court. Mr Lakha, learned advocate, appeared for the first, second and third E appellants; whereas Mr Kashumbugu, learned advocate appeared for the fourth, fifth and sixth appellants. Mr Jedeja, learned advocate, represented the seventh and ninth appellants; whereas Mr Mbuya, learned advocate, appeared for the eighth appellant. Messrs Mwanyika and Massaba, Principal State Attorneys, assisted by Miss Korosso, F State Attorney, appeared for the Republic. A total of seventy-three substantive grounds of appeal were submitted against the judgment of the High Court. The hearing of the appeal took seventeen days and at the end of the appeal we reserved our considered judgment until now.

For reasons that will become apparent in this judgment, this case has an economic G background. The global economic crisis which still exists in the world today started many years ago. As it is well known, there is hardly any country in the world which has not, in one way or the other, suffered from this adverse global economic effect. But the year 1982 was a particularly bad one for Tanzania. Most people in the country were H affected by the economic situation. Faced with such economic adversity, there were those who reacted constructively, and others who reacted destructively. By early 1983 the Government had enacted a draconian legislation known as The Economic Sabotage (Special Provisions) Act 1983, to combat a tide of economic crimes. I

NYALALI CJ

A At the time when the country was facing this economic crisis in 1982, the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth appellants held military commissions in the Tanzania Peoples' Defence Forces, that is TPDF. At the time material to this case in 1982, the second appellant was stationed in a tank unit in Dar es Salaam, whereas the B third appellant was pursuing higher studies at Dar es Salaam University. He was in his final year reading for a BA degree in Political Science. The fourth appellant was a pilot in the TPDF Airwing at Ukonga in Dar es Salaam, and so were the fifth and sixth appellants. As far as the seventh appellant is concerned, he was in the Air Defence C Regiment and was in charge of Battery No 2 in Dar es Salaam; similarly, the eighth appellant was in the same regiment as Chief Engineer. As for the ninth appellant, he happened to be stationed in a military unit at Nachingwea, but was in Dar es Salaam in December 1982. All appellants are Tanzanians by nationality.

D Thereafter, during the same month of December 1982, the first appellant and the fourth appellant visited Zanzibar on several occasions. At about this time the first appellant received a number of guests at house No 80B Drive-In. He, and a number of friends, also used to visit a house at Kinondoni Mkwajuni, that is, house No 65--32P E along Livingstone Street in Dar es Salaam, where he and his friends used to have lunch and indulge in heavy drinking. That house belonged to PW38, that is, Zahara Abdulla Sengumba, who rented it from the National Housing Corporation. She was in some way related to the first appellant. She had agreed to allow the first appellant and his friends to F have their lunch there as and when they wished. For most of the time, material to this case, the first appellant travelled in the city by taxi which he hired from PW1, that is, Abdallah Mhando. Towards the end of December 1982, the first appellant hired another taxi driven by PW45, that is, Nassor Sultan Seif, apparently because PW1 had travelled G outside the country to Harare in Zimbabwe.

During this time, Pius Lugangira alias Father Tom was not sitting idly by at Motel Agip, but made a number of contacts in the city, including a visit to house No 1127 Chole H Road at Masaki in Dar es Salaam. That house belonged to one Christopher Paschal Ngaiza, who was one of the persons jointly charged with the appellants but was acquitted after a full trial. This Christopher Paschal Ngaiza happened to be a relative of the said Pius Lugangira alias Father Tom. Towards the end of December 1982, the said I Pius Lugangira invited a number of people to a meeting at house No 1127 along Chole Road at Masaki in Dar es Salaam on two consecutive days. The meeting was claimed to be a business meeting and was held while A the owner of the house was away from Dar es Salaam.

On 6 January 1983 events took a dramatic and serious turn. A decision by the authorities was made to launch a joint exercise of the Military, Police and the National Security Department to arrest a number of persons suspected of plotting to overthrow B the Government of the United Republic and kill its President. In the course of that exercise, Mohamed Tamim alias Martin Tamim was shot dead by a national security man as he attempted to avoid arrest at Kinondoni Mkwajuni. Subsequently, various persons, both military and civilian were arrested in the joint exercise. The first and C seventh appellants were arrested on 7 January 1983 at Kinondoni Mkwajuni; whereas the fourth appellant was arrested the following day on 8 January 1983, also in the area of Kinondoni Mkwajuni. The fifth, sixth and eighth appellants were arrested in their homes during the night of 7/8 January 1983. The ninth appellant was also arrested in Dar es D Salaam about that time in January 1983. A search for the second and third appellants was made but neither of them was to be seen anywhere in the country until they were retrieved from Kenya in October 1983. Subsequent to the arrests, the first, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth appellants, while in police custody, were interrogated by the E police. Later the first, fifth, sixth and seventh appellants were taken before magistrates to whom they made extra-judicial statements. There was, however, a delay in instituting prosecution in a court of law apparently because a number of important suspects F managed to escape from Keko Remand Prison. The case got off the ground after some of the escapees had been retrieved from Kenya sometime in October 1983. That is as far as the matters which are not seriously in dispute in this case are concerned.

We now turn to matters that are seriously in dispute in this case. It is the prosecution G case that before the first appellant and the late Mohamed Tamimu alias Martin Tamimu, as well as Pius Lugangira alias Father Tom entered the country from abroad between mid-November 1982 and mid-December 1982, they were involved in conceiving and hatching up a plot to overthrow the Government of the United Republic, kill its President H and install their own form of Government upon the belief that the Government then in existence had mismanaged the national economy. They hoped that their own government would provide a cure to the economic problems facing the country. The plot so conceived and hatched up required participation of some elements of the TPDF as I well as some civilians.

NYALALI CJ
A The conspiracy to kill the President of the United Republic constituted the first overt act charged in Count 1. The thrust of the conspiracy which was directed at deposing the President from his lawful office, constituted another separate overt act as stated in Count 2, whereas that part of the conspiracy which was derived at overthrowing the B lawful Government of the United Republic constituted another overt act stated in Count 3. It is part of the prosecution case that the first appellant assisted or facilitated the entry of the late Mohamed Tamimu alias Martin Tamimu from Kenya to Dar es Salaam. This conduct is listed as the second overt act in Count 3. C
Furthermore, the prosecution contends that after the trio had entered the country, they began to approach and recruit persons into their plot. A number of those approached and recruited were elements in the TPDF. Some of them succumbed to the plot, but D there were others who refused outright; whereas some pretended to cooperate with the plotters while reporting the matter to the authorities. Among those who were successfully recruited were the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth appellants. PW46, that is, Captain Mohamed Suleiman Mape of the Navy Unit E refused outright. However, he did not report the matter to the authorities. PW11, that is, Captain Albert Ballati of the Commando Unit pretended to go along while reporting to the authorities. This aspect of recruitment of Captain Ballati constituted the seventh overt act charged in Count 3. The successful recruitment of the fifth appellant and the seventh F appellant constituted overt acts numbers 8 and 9 charged in Count 3. PW8, that is, Staff Sergeant Boniface Temu was another military officer who pretended to go along while reporting to the authorities. His recruitment, into the plot constituted the fourteenth overt act charged in Count 3.
G It is part of the prosecution case that the plotters managed to hold a number of conspiratorial meetings to work out the modalities and details of their plot. Some of these took place at house No 80B Drive-In, while others took place at house No 1127 along Chole Road at Masaki, and at a house at Kinondoni Makaburini. The operations H plan of the coup plot was finalised at the last two meetings held at the Chole Road house and a house at Kinondoni Makaburini, between the end of December 1982 and the beginning at January 1983.
The prosecution further contends that some of the conspirators either deliberately or I unwittingly let the cat out of the bag, so to speak, by making incriminating declarations or remarks to friends and acquaintances in unguarded moments. Instances of such behaviour were the A disclosures made by the first appellant to PW1, that is, Abdallah Mhando in the course of the first appellant being driven in PW1's taxi in the city. Similarly, the second applicant revealed the lot to PW2, that is, Iddi Mushi Stambuli when the two met in a bar house in B Arusha about the middle of December 1982. Also, the ninth appellant revealed the plot to PW3, that is Lieutenant Augustine Pancras Ndejembi when the two met at Lugalo Barracks early in January 1983. The incriminating declarations or remarks made by the second appellant constituted overt act number 10 in Count 3; whereas those by the ninth C appellant constituted overt act number 12 in Count 3.

Finally, it is the prosecution case that the conspirators had reached the stage of making preparations to execute their coup plot on 8 January 1983. Towards that end, the eighth D appellant deliberately mistuned or mishandled Battery No 2 on 6 January 1983, and the seventh appellant instructed PW8, that is, Staff Sergeant Boniface Temu to interfere with Battery No 2 on the eve of the plot, that is, on 7 January 1983. On that same critical day, the first appellant purchased a number of batteries for use in walkie talkie radios E which were intended for monitoring the coup operations as they were meant to occur on 8 January 1983. In order to leave nothing to chance, the first appellant and the late Mohamed Tamimu alias Martin Tamimu sought assistance from the supernatural world by consulting witchdoctors and requesting them for charms to immunise them against F harm by bullets. The conduct of the eighth appellant in mishandling Battery number 2 on 6 January 1983 constituted overt act number 20 in Count 3; whereas that of the seventh appellant of instructing PW8 to interfere with the Battery constituted overt act number 6 of the same Count 3. And the consultations with the witchdoctors constituted overt act G number 6 of the same Count 3.

The defence side, both at the trial and in this appeal, shares one main position. It is a common contention of the defence side that the prosecution case is a fiction, concocted jointly by the police and the National Security Department of the Government to cover up H the death of Mohamed Tamimu alias Martin Tamimu, which occurred on 6 January 1983. Apart from this common position, each appellant has a unique stand against the prosecution case.

We start with the first appellant. His defence as laid down in cross-examination of witnesses for the prosecution and through his defence witness constitutes a general I denial of the prosecution case and an assertion that the material prosecution witnesses are either liars or A unreliable. There is also an alibi to show that between 31 December 1982 and 5 January 1983 the first appellant was away from Dar es Salaam and had gone to pay condolences to his bereaved mother at Mkaramo in Tanga. He denies travelling to Zanzibar to recruit Albert Ballati. As to the extra-judicial confession which he made B before the magistrate, he claims that it was extorted from him by the police. Finally, he contends that he was denied a fair trial when the learned Jaji Kiongozi made remarks in his ruling at the end of the trial-within-a-trial, concerning the admissibility of the first appellant's extra-judicial confession to the effect that the first appellant was a person C who could choose to tell any lie in order to suit himself. That remark drove the first appellant to choose not to say anything in defence in the main trial.

The second appellant's defence, like that of the first appellant, disclosed through D cross-examination of witnesses for the prosecution as well as in the second appellant's unsworn statement from the dock, consists of a general denial of the prosecution case and an assertion that the material prosecution witnesses are either liars or unreliable. There is also an alibi to the effect that during the month of December, the second appellant never visited Arusha as claimed by PW2. E

The third appellant's defence, like that of the first and the second appellants, disclosed through cross-examination of witnesses for the prosecution and in the third appellant's unsworn statement from the dock, consists in a general denial of the prosecution case F and an assertion that the material prosecution witnesses are either liars or unreliable. There is also an alibi to the effect that at the time when he is alleged to have participated in conspiratorial meetings at the Drive-In house early in December 1982, he was busy with his studies at the University of Dar es Salaam.

G The defence of the fourth appellant also consists of a general denial of the prosecution case and an innocent admission of visiting the first appellant at the Drive-In house on two occasions, firstly in connection with the death and burial of the first appellant's sister, and secondly in connection with a Christmas party which the first H appellant hosted. He denies visiting Zanzibar with the first appellant to recruit Captain Albert Ballati, but admits going to Zanzibar on several occasions to buy some building materials for the house he was constructing in Dar es Salaam. Finally, he has an alibi to the effect that at the time when he is alleged to have been attending conspiratorial I meetings in early January 1983, he was busy attending to his sick relative, that is, one Oscar.

NYALALI CJ

The defence of the fifth appellant consists of a general denial of the prosecution case, A although he admits meeting PW46, that is, Captain Mohamed Suleiman Mape of the Navy Unit at Kigamboni. He claims, however, that the meeting was an innocent one connected with his request to have Mape assist the fifth appellant to transport some B fridges from Zanzibar in Naval vessels. He also has an alibi to the effect that at the time when he is alleged to have been attending conspiratorial meetings, he was busy either working in his farm at Kitunda where he had a project to build a house, or he was busy with his pigs. As to his extra-judicial confession, he contends that it was extorted from C him by the police and the national security men.

The defence case of the sixth appellant, like that of the other appellants, consists of a general denial of the prosecution case. There is, however, a specific denial of involvement in the recruitment of the fifth and seventh appellants. There is also an alibi D concerning his movements on 31 December 1982 when it is alleged that he visited New Africa Hotel together with Captain Mapunda and Kamando and recruited the seventh appellant. He contends that at the material time he was with his friends celebrating the end of the year at Mwenge Bar in Ukonga. He, of course, makes an innocent admission E of visiting the first appellant at the Drive-In house once in connection with the death and burial of the first appellant's sister.

The defence case of the seventh appellant, like that of the other appellants, consists of a F general denial of the prosecution case. However, he specifically denies recruiting PW8, that is, Staff Sergeant Boniface Temu and asserts that throughout the period when he is alleged to have been involved in conspiratorial activities, he was on leave effective 24 December 1982 until his arrest. During his leave, he was busy attending to G personal matters on the dates when it is claimed he attended conspiratorial meetings.

As to the eighth appellant, it is his defence that he was on leave away from Dar es Salaam and in Iringa, until 30 December 1982. He denies using his car on 1 January 1983 to drive himself and other conspirators to a meeting at the house along Chole H Road. He asserts that his car was undergoing repairs at the time. He further denies attending a conspiratorial meeting on 3 January 1983, and puts forth an alibi to the effect that he spent most of the morning of that day in the company of a relative, namely one Tonny Roussons, ie DW3, who had arrived from Iringa and was in transit taking pupils to I a school at Arusha. He, however, admits visiting Battery

No 2 on 6 January 1983, but not for conspiratorial purposes, but to make personal A checks to enable him to report to a special meeting which was being held that day to discuss range practice matters.

As to the defence case of the ninth appellant, it consists also of a general denial of the prosecution case. He admits being in Dar es Salaam at the time of his arrest, but B asserts that he had come to Dar es Salaam from his usual station at Nachingwea for medical treatment at Lugalo hospital. He also admits meeting PW3, that is, Lieutenant Augustine Pancras Ndejembi with whom he conversed about a disturbance which had been occasioned by a soldier in PW3's unit when that soldier snatched a gun from a C policeman and made derogatory remarks about the Government. He, however, denies making any treasonable declarations or remarks to PW3 in the course of, or after, such conversation.

Let us now consider the merits of these appeals. The form in which the charges against the appellants were filed or presented in the High Court is similar to the one adopted in D the case of Mattaka v R (1). In that case the Court of Appeal of East Africa had occasion to consider the appropriate form of a treason charge and stated at 500:

E `The Criminal Procedure Code makes no specific provision as to the method of laying a charge for treason contrary to section 39(2) and the prosecution followed the English practice of setting out the various overt acts in each count after having first set out the statement and the particulars of the offence. This procedure has not been questioned and was, in our view, correct. It complied with the F provisions of section 135 of the Criminal Procedure Code as it sets out a statement of the specific offence charged and then gave such particulars as may be necessary for giving reasonable information as to the nature of the offence charged. Section 135 states:

"Every charge or information shall contain, and shall be sufficient if it contains, a statement of G the specific offence or offences with which the accused person is charged, together with such particulars as may be necessary for giving reasonable information as to the nature of the offence charged."

It also complied with the section 138, and the use of the English procedure in setting out the overt acts after the particulars was justified by section 3(3) of the Code which provides that the procedure and practice observed by the High Court in England, as on 28th September, 1945, shall be followed in cases where the procedure is not prescribed by the Code.'

We were asked, in this appeal, by learned Principal State Attorneys for the Republic to give directions as to the propriety of continuing to lay charges in A the form that has been the practice hitherto. We are aware that the Criminal Procedure Code has been replaced by the Criminal Procedure Act 1985, with effect from 1 November 1985 as per Government Notice No 379 of 1985. We are also aware B that the High Court conducted the trial in the present case in accordance with the Criminal Procedure Code, since the trial commenced and ended before the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 came into effect. We are aware too that the provisions of s 3(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code which required compliance with the procedure and C practice of the High Court in England was repealed by s 7 of Act 26 of 1971. We do not, however, think that this change in the law which freed the criminal courts in this country from the requirement to comply with English procedure and practice, where there is no specific statutory provision to the contrary, necessarily entails a change in the D appropriate form of laying a charge for treason. What it means is that the courts in this country are no longer bound to follow English practice and procedure in a criminal trial and are free to develop a practice and procedure which is in keeping with the circumstances prevailing in this country.

Unfortunately, although we were asked to consider the propriety of continuing with the old practice, the request was made half-heartedly without any local circumstances being pointed out to justify a departure from the old practice. We think that this point was not sufficiently argued before us in this case and it would be unsafe to formulate a new procedure or practice without a sound foundation. We hold that the current practice should continue to be used until such a time in the future when a change is made by this Court or the Legislature. We note that the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 reproduced the relevant provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code and cannot therefore be construed to have changed the position concerning the form of laying a treason charge.

We next deal with the general complaints which are common to the grounds of appeal submitted by the appellants. The first complaint is that this case is a fictitious one concocted by the Police and the National Security Department of the Government to cover up the fatal shooting of Mohamed Tamimu alias Martin Tamimu on 6 January 1983. We find this contention ridiculous and untenable for four reasons. Firstly, if the Security Department and the Police needed a cover-up they would have picked the obvious cover-up, that is, they would have claimed that the deceased Mohamed Tamimu was killed accidentally while resisting arrest. After all, there was evidence that the late Mohamed Tamimu had absconded from the army and was A on the run while the army looked for him. Secondly, a cover-up suggesting involvement of some elements of the Army in a coup plot is so sensitive and potentially damaging to national security that no person in his proper mind, and certainly no one in the Police or B National Security Department can conceive such a cover-up, let alone take action to implement it.

Thirdly, the fatal shooting of Mohamed Tamimu alias Martin Tamimu was done by a national security man and not by the police. No convincing reason has been given to C explain why the innocent Police Force would agree to be involved in the cover-up.

Fourthly, there are at least five persons who reported the treasonable conspiracy to the authorities at different times. They are PW2, that is, Lieutenant Iddi Mushi Stambuli, who reported about the middle of December 1982 at Arusha. There is also PW11, that is, D Captain Albert Ballati who reported it in Zanzibar in the third week of December 1982. Also there is PW1, that is, Abdullah Shaban Mhando who reported it in early January 1983, in Dar es Salaam. Similarly, there is PW8, that is, Staff Sergeant Boniface Temu who reported it in Dar es Salaam also in early January 1983. Finally, there is PW3 E Lieutenant Augustine Pancras Ndejembi who reported it in Moshi towards the end of the first week of January 1983. These persons acted independently and at different times and places.

Strong criticisms have been raised in the course of this appeal against these witnesses who claim to have reported the conspiracy to the authorities. Let us examine the main F criticisms. We start with those concerning PW1.

It has been submitted to the effect that PW1 is either a liar or is in any case an unreliable witness. It was argued that it was highly improbable that the first appellant would have G divulged the coup plot to PW1, a mere taxi driver whom the first appellant had hired to drive him in the city. We think that the true position can easily be appreciated by bearing in mind the following factors: PW1 was an old acquaintance of the first appellant; they had been school-mates at Magamba Secondary School in 1965, and PW1 had been H driving the first appellant in his taxi for at least a fortnight before the first appellant divulged to him the coup plot. This association for a fortnight must have renewed and deepened their old acquaintance. Furthermore, the character of the first appellant is very relevant on this point. He is described by a number of witnesses, including PW13, that I is, Sunday Matola; and PW11, that is, Captain Albert Ballati; as well as PW15, that is, Agnes Ballati; and PW39, that is,

Asia Mbwana, as a very talkative and sociable person. Such a talkative and sociable A person, in our view, was likely to divulge the coup plot to an old acquaintance. Furthermore, there is the evidence given by many witnesses, including PW37, that is, Hadija Omari which shows that the first appellant had a weakness for heavy drinking. B The effect of alcohol is well known. It has a tendency to loosen tongues and to remove inhibitions.

Another criticism against PW1 concerns the conspiratorial meetings which are said to have been hosted by the first appellant at house No 80B Drive-In in the early part of December 1982. There was evidence given by PW41, that is, Hope Banyikwa and C PW96, that is, Ibrahim Issa, to the effect that PW1 used to participate in those meetings. It is submitted that if the meetings were conspiratorial as the prosecution contends, then PW1 must have been involved and his evidence has to be treated with great caution. Undoubtedly, this submission has merit. However, it is apparent from the evidence of D PW1 that he was initially uncertain about the information given to him by the first appellant, and he decided to study the movements of the first appellant and his associates before reporting the matter to the authorities. Can such conduct on the part E of PW1 be condemned in a country like ours where it is proclaimed as a part of the national policy that the defence and security of the nation is the responsibility of every Tanzanian and particularly of every patriot? We do not think that the law of this country condemns such patriotic conduct on the part of an individual citizen who decides to F investigate a suspected treason before reporting it to the authorities. Such conduct is commendable and certainly does not, in our criminal law, make him an accomplice or a person with an interest to serve.

It has been argued further that there was an unnecessary delay by PW1 in reporting the G incident to the authorities. Undoubtedly, on the evidence, PW1 made an appointment to report to a senior official of the Intelligence Services, that is, Mr `X' on 15 December 1982. The appointment fell through because PW1's taxi broke down. As the description of the taxi was the only means by which Mr `X' was to identify PW1, it is understandable why PW1 missed the appointment. The following day PW1 flew out of the country to Harare in connection with an earlier commitment of his own. He did not return to Dar es Salaam until 1 January 1983, and managed to contact Mr `X' on 2 January 1983, when he successfully made his report.

It has been argued with some merit that PW1 ought to have cancelled his trip to Harare until after successfully making his report to Mr `X'. But in A passing judgment on the conduct of PW1, one has to bear in mind that PW1 did not know exactly when the coup plot was fixed to take place. And, furthermore, one has to bear in mind that even the security services did not find it necessary to inform the B President about the coup plot until 6 January 1983, although they had already received a report about such a plot as early as mid-December 1982. Under the circumstances, we do not think that the conduct of PW1 can properly be censured. Like the learned Jaji Kiongozi, we find PW1 a credible and reliable witness.

Let us turn to the main criticisms directed against PW11. They are similar to those C directed against PW1. It has been submitted that it was highly improbable that the first appellant and the fourth appellant would seek to recruit PW11 into the conspiracy without first laying the ground for so doing. We think that there is a reasonable D explanation for the conduct of the first and fourth appellants. Firstly, the coup plotters needed the services of commandos, and PW11 was in charge of commandos. Secondly, the economic hardships which provided the motive power for the coup conspiracy, affected practically everyone both within and outside the army. It was, E therefore, reasonable for the plotters to expect to find sympathy from some elements in the army. Furthermore, Captain Ballati had a bad record in the army, as he had killed a fellow soldier. Such a record made him a likely target for coup plotters.

There is also a criticism about the conduct of PW11 in delaying to report the incident to F the authorities. He was first approached in early December 1982, and he was again contacted by the first and fourth appellants on 12 December 1982, when the coup plot was discussed in detail and his assistance was sought. PW11 did not, however, report the matter to his commanding officer, that is, PW16, Major Hamisi Hemedi Nyuni until 31 December 1982. G

PW11 gave an explanation for his delay in reporting. At first he did not believe the information, and thought that the first and fourth appellants could have been sent by the National Security Department to test the loyalty of Army Commanders at a time of H national economic crisis. Later, when he realised that the plot was real, he decided to get more details about it before reporting the matter to the appropriate authorities. As in the case of PW1, we find this explanation reasonable and convincing.

There was also the additional criticism that PW11 delayed in submitting a written report I requested by his Commanding Officer, PW16. PW11 explained that after he had made his oral report to PW16, he was assigned other pressing duties which necessitated a delay in his A submitting his written report. There is no evidence to contradict this assertion. There is another explanation which is inherent in the evidence. The crucial purpose of alerting the authorities about the existence of the coup plot was already accomplished by PW11 B making his oral report. The report was transmitted by PW16 to PW17, that is, Sei Bakari Omari, the Deputy Minister in the Ministry of Defence and National Service in the Union Government. The written report was required for a different purpose. PW16 needed it for discussions with commanding officers and other heads of security services in Zanzibar. C Thus the written report was not as urgent as the oral report and PW11 must have known so.

There is another criticism made against PW11, and it is based upon the fact that he was one of those people arrested in the course of the joint exercise conducted by the army, police and national security department. D We do not think that this criticism has merit. Many people were arrested by the police, undoubtedly because the police did not want to leave a stone unturned after they had taken over the investigations from the National Security Department. On our own evaluation of the totality of the evidence, we are satisfied that PW11 is a credible and reliable witness. E

We now turn to PW8, that is, Staff Sergeant Boniface Temu. Five main criticisms were levelled against this witness. It was submitted that it was improbable for PW8 to take part in the mini-meeting at Banana Bar in Ukonga on 4 January 1983, together with commissioned officers, when he was himself a non-commissioned officer. F We think that the behaviour pattern of soldiers under circumstances of a coup plot cannot be judged by the standard behaviour under normal circumstances. A coup plot is an abnormal event and soldiers involved may behave abnormally. It was also submitted that it was improbable for PW8 G to walk all the way from Banana Bar in Ukonga to State House to report the conspiracy instead of using the Shs 200/- which he claims to have been given by the seventh appellant. It is argued that he would have hired a taxi. We do not think that it is improbable for a soldier to decide to walk from Ukonga to State House H and save the money for better personal use, after all, walking is another way in which a soldier may decide to keep himself physically fit. Moreover, we take judicial notice of the fact that the distance from Ukonga to State House is no more than a walking distance for a soldier.

It is also said that PW8 is uncertain about the time he arrived at State House. We do not think that this uncertainty is surprising, in view of the fact that the witness was testifying about events that took place many years A back. It was also submitted that it was improbable for PW8 to recall what happened in Banana Bar on 4 January 1983 after taking four beers in addition to another two which PW8 had B previously consumed at the house of the seventh appellant en route to Banana Bar. There is no evidence that PW8 got drunk as a result of drinking these beers. On the contrary, there is evidence that the meeting at Banana Bar in the course of which PW8 consumed the four beers, lasted from 7 or 8 pm to 10.00 or 11.00 pm. That being the position, normal metabolism of the body must have prevent PW8 from getting drunk. C
NYALALI CJ
Finally, it was submitted that the fact that PW8 was one of the persons arrested by the police during the crackdown requires that his testimony be treated with caution. The answer given in respect of a similar submission concerning PW11, also applies here. D On our own evaluation of the totality of the evidence of this witness, we are satisfied that he was a credible witness.
We turn next to the main criticism directed against PW2, that is, Lieutenant Iddi Mushi Stambuli. It has been submitted that it was improbable that the 2nd appellant would E divulge the coup plot to PW2. With due respect to Mr Lakha who made this submission, we do not see any improbability when account is taken of the following factors: On the evidence of PW2, the 2nd appellant was an old friend or acquaintance of PW2. In his unsworn testimony given in his defence in the main trial, the second appellant did not F contradict PW2 on this point. Furthermore, PW2 found the second appellant at a counter in the bar house. It can reasonably be inferred that the second appellant had been drinking in the bar house, unless there is evidence to the contrary. There is no such contrary evidence. We have already pointed out the effect of alcohol. It tends to G loosen tongues and remove inhibitions. Under the circumstances, the second appellant was most likely to divulge the plot to his old friend. On the totality of the evidence adduced by the prosecution, we are satisfied that PW2 is a credible and reliable witness.
We turn next to the main criticisms directed against PW3, that is, Lieutenant Augustine H Pancras Ndejembi. It has been submitted that it is highly improbable that the ninth appellant would divulge the coup plot to PW3 who was not closely connected to him. With due respect to Mr Jadeja who made this submission on behalf of the ninth appellant, we can see no improbability in respect of that fact bearing in mind the I following factors: The disclosure was not suddenly made by the ninth appellant to PW3. It was made in the course of mutual discussions between the ninth appellant and PW3 concerning an A incident of a disgruntled soldier who had snatched a firearm from a policeman, caused a disturbance and made derogatory remarks about the Government. That soldier apparently belonged to PW3's Unit. In the course of that conversation PW3 agreed with B the ninth appellant about the validity of the grievances expressed by the soldier, but disproved the manner in which those grievances were expressed by that particular soldier. The ninth appellant responded by expressing full support for the soldier, and informed PW3 that a coup plot was in the offing for the purpose of remedying the C grievances. We think that the ninth appellant must have felt that he could safely divulge the coup plot to PW3 who recognised the validity of the grievances, notwithstanding PW3's disapproval of the conduct of the disgruntled soldier.

The other main criticism directed against this witness concerns his failure to report the D conspiracy to the authorities and instead reporting it to his father. PW3 explained why he acted as he did. He was not sure who in authority was not involved in the coup plot, after the ninth appellant had informed him that even a Major General was involved in the plot. So PW3 decided to be cautious and decided to report to his father in Moshi, who E was then the Area Commissioner in that part of the country. We think this explanation is reasonable. After all, his father was a man of authority in the Government and could take appropriate measures, consequent upon such a report. The evidence shows that that is F what happened. The report was transmitted to the Regional Commissioner of Kilimanjaro Region and thence to the Prime Minister. On our own evaluation of the totality of the evidence, we are satisfied that PW3 is a credible and reliable witness.

Having found all these relevant material witnesses to be credible and reliable, we are led G to the conclusion that no reasonable person can say that the treasonable conspiracy charged in this case is a fiction concocted by the National Security Department and the Police. We are satisfied that there was a treasonable conspiracy as reported by these witnesses. We are satisfied further, that the evidence adduced by these witnesses is H sufficient to bring into operation the provisions of s 12 of the Evidence Act 1967 which states:

`Where there is reasonable ground to believe that two or more persons have conspired together to commit an offence or an actionable wrong, anything said, done or written by anyone of such persons I referring to or in execution of or furtherance of their common intention after the time when such intention was first entertained by anyone of them, is a A relevant fact as against each of the persons believed to be so conspiring as well as for the purpose of proving the existence of conspiracy as for the purpose of showing that any such person was a party to it.' B

We notice that out of the five persons who reported the conspiracy to the authorities, four of them were soldiers of the TPDF. This demonstrates, in our view, how over the years the TPDF has truly become a peoples' defence force-an army which every Tanzanian of good will is entitled to be proud. C

We come next to another general complaint raised by learned advocates for the appellants. Practically all advocates for the appellants have complained against the attitude of the trial Jaji Kiongozi in accepting the evidence of a number of material prosecution witnesses on the basis that he found no reason why such witnesses should D tell lies against the appellants. Learned advocates for the appellants have submitted, in effect, that the learned Jaji Kiongozi's attitude or approach is wrong, since it appears to proceed on the assumption that witnesses for the prosecution were telling the truth unless the contrary was shown. Both Mr Lakha and Mr Jadeja took the occasion to E express a complaint against what they termed to be a general practice by judges in the courts below and magistrates, of adopting a similar attitude. It is the contention of the advocates for the appellants that such an approach appears to shift the burden of proof in a criminal case. F

This criticism by the learned advocates is directed particularly in respect of the Jaji Kiongozi's handling of the evidence given by PW1, PW39, PW41, PW8, PW9, PW31, PW32, PW34 and PW35. We have considered these criticisms very carefully and we have noticed that learned Jaji Kiongozi treated the absence of apparent reasons for lying G against the appellants as only one of the factors for accepting the evidence of the relevant witnesses. For instance, in handling PW1, Abdallah Mhando, the learned Jaji Kiongozi had this to say at 2229 of the Judge's notes:

H `Abdallah Mhando appeared to be well versed with what he told the court. He was a very straightforward witness who stood firm despite long cross-examination by Mr Lakha. I detected no cunning devices in his evidence and I am satisfied that he was a credible witness. There was no reason why he should have decided to tell lies against Macghee. As for his arrest and detention that does not necessarily make him an untruthful witness.'

NYALALI CJ

It is evident that the learned Jaji Kiongozi gave at least four grounds in favour of this A witness, and one of the grounds was the apparent lack of a reason to tell lies against Macghee. Since one of the major tasks of a trial court is to determine whether a witness is telling the truth, it is logical for such a court to consider whether a witness has reason B for lying against an accused person. This is what the learned Jaji Kiongozi appears to have been doing in the present case.

The same approach can be seen in the handling of the other material witnesses. At 2234 of the Judge's notes, the learned Jaji Kiongozi had this to say: C

`Kadego's defence that he did not know Asia, leave alone visiting the Mkwajuni house is, on the evidence available, not true. Why should Asia and Hope tell lies against him? Why should Lt. Stambuli decide to cook-up such a serious story against him? There was no evidence at all that the D two were enemies. On the contrary, they worked together in Monduli and Rombo Districts. On the totality of the evidence, I am satisfied that Kadego's unsworn defence was a clumsy attempt to evade the consequences of his crime. He apparently did not tell the court why he left the country.' E

At least four grounds are given for accepting the evidence of Asia, Hope and Stambuli. Two of the grounds are common to all these witnesses, that is, the absence of a reason for lying and the failure by Kadego to tell the court why he left the country. There are two F additional grounds in favour of Stambuli. Firstly, the absence of enmity and the fact that he had been working together with Kadego in Rombo District. Similar approach applies to the other relevant prosecution witnesses in respect of whom the criticism has been raised by the defence advocates against the Jaji Kiorgozi's attitude. With due respect, we find the criticism misconceived. G

The other main common ground of complaint against the conduct of the learned Jaji Kiongozi was raised by Mr Jadeja, learned advocate, to the effect that the learned Jaji Kiongozi failed to make adequate summing up of the case to the assessors. It is the H contention of Mr Jadeja that it is mandatory for a trial judge to sum up the case to the assessors before taking their opinions. Mr Jadeja has invited this Court to overrule the decision in the case of Andrea v R (2), where it was held to the effect that the summing up to assessors is a discretion and not a mandatory duty of a trial court. Mr Jadeja has invited us to restore the earlier decision in Milligwa v R (3) where it was held to the effect that there was a mandatory duty to sum up the case to the assessors before taking their opinions. We are satisfied that A the decision in Andrea's case is the correct one for the reasons given therein, that is, the relevant statutory provision is unambiguous and crystal clear. We cannot interpret the word may used under s 283(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code (now s 298(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985) to mean shall. To do so would be to do violence to clear B statutory provisions. We, however, agree with the views expressed in Andrea's case that, although it is not mandatory for the trial judge to sum up the case to the assessors before taking their opinions, it is prudent as a matter of practice so to do, except in the C simplest of cases. The present case was not a simple one, and the learned Jaji Kiongozi properly decided to sum up the case to the assessors before taking their opinions. After all, as already mentioned, the case took about a year to complete.

For the avoidance of doubts, we must point out that it is in any event mandatory upon a D trial judge to take the opinions of the assessors before giving judgment. This is a necessary implication of the provisions of s 248 of the Criminal Procedure Code (now s 265 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985) which requires all criminal trials before the High Court to be with the aid of the assessors.
We have examined the summing up of the learned Jaji Kiongozi. It covers ninety-one E pages of fullscap paper. Although it is true that the learned Jaji Kiongozi did not state every detail and it would have been impossible so to do, it is apparent to us that he summed up the substance or gist of the case for the prosecution and the defence. We F do not think a trial judge is required to state all details of the case in his summing up. If he does so, it would cease to be a summing-up. It is sufficient if he states the substance or gist of the case on both sides in a manner which enables the assessors to give their opinions on the case in general, and on any particular point that the trial judge needs G their opinion. This is what appears to have been done in the present case. For instance, in connection with the seventh appellant in respect of whom Mr Jadeja specifically raised this complaint, the learned Jaji Kiongozi summed up the case at length from pp 1976 to 1978 of the Judge's notes. The gist of the prosecution case against the seventh H appellant appears on those pages, whereas the gist of the seventh appellant's defence is dealt with from pp 2006 to 2008 of the Judge's notes. The summing up deals with both the seventh appellant's general denial of the prosecution case and his alibi. For those reasons, we think that the summing up by the learned Jaji Kiongozi in respect of the I seventh appellant and the other appellants cannot be faulted.

NYALALI CJ

Another main common ground of complaint made by the learned advocate for the A appellants is to the effect that the learned Jaji Kiongozi failed to consider or give adequate consideration to the defence of the appellants. This complaint was raised in the course of the appeal in respect of the first, second, third, fourth, seventh and eighth B appellants. We have carefully considered this ground. It is true that the learned Jaji Kiongozi did not consider each and every detail of the defence of these appellants, predictably because the trial took such a long time. It is apparent, however, that the learned Jaji Kiongozi set out and considered the gist or substance of the defence of C each of these appellants. Can it be said that in so doing the learned Jaji Kiongozi failed to consider any material detail of the defence of the appellants? Since the learned Jaji Kiongozi grasped the gist or substance of the case for the defence, he must necessarily have been aware of the material details from which such gist or substance is derived. D This is borne out clearly from p 2228 to p 2264 of the Judge's notes where the learned Jaji Kiongozi dealt at length with the main criticisms levelled by the defence side against the prosecution case.

One other main common ground of complaint is that the magistrates or the Justice of E the Peace, before whom extra-judicial confessions were made, did not comply with all the formalities required when taking such extra-judicial confessions. Unfortunately, neither Mr Lakha nor any of his learned friends who argued this appeal before us, was certain as to the formalities which apply in this country. The learned attorneys for the F Republic contended that the only relevant formalities are those contained in the Judges' Rules issued by the Judges of the Queen's Bench Division in England. The case of Nayinda s/o Batungwa v R (4) was cited in support of that contention. In that case the following words from a ruling of a Judge of the High Court were cited: G

> `The Judges' Rules apply to Tanganyika and therefore before taking a statement from a person in custody the police officer should administer the caution prescribed by Rule 5 of the Judges' Rules....
> In my view, a magistrate who is recording an extra-judicial statement should give the person making H the statement the same caution. In fact it is usually done and there has been a High Court Circular some time ago saying that it should be done.'

We agree that Nayinda's case lends support to the proposition that the English Judges' I Rules, at least as they were at the time of that case, were applied to this country by a High Court Circular.

NYALALI CJ

But that is not the end of the problem. Members of this Court, as well as all the learned A advocates and the Principal State Attorneys who appeared in this appeal, were fully aware throughout the hearing of the appeal that there is a current practice concerning the taking of extra-judicial statements in this country which contains rules which are B more elaborate than the Judges' Rules. Unfortunately, no one was able to assist the Court in the course of the appeal to trace the authoritative source of this current practice. The Court had to conduct further research on its own after the conclusion of the appeal, and this necessarily resulted in an unexpected delay in giving this judgment. C This exercise was, however, worthwhile and rewarding. We are now in a position to say that the current local practice can be traced to the year 1963 when the Magistrates' Courts Act 1963 was enacted. The Act contained provisions for the appointment of Justices of the Peace, both ex-officio and appointees of the Minister responsible for D Legal Affairs. Under s 56(2) of the Act the appropriate judicial authority, that is, the Chief Justice, is empowered `to issue instructions not inconsistent with any law for the time being in force for the guidance and control of Justices in the exercise of their powers, functions and duties and every justice shall comply with and obey such instructions'. E

On the authority of the provisions of s 56(2) of the Act, the Chief Justice issued instructions to Justices of the Peace to guide them on, among other things, the manner of taking extra-judicial statements, and these instructions were published in a booklet by F the Government Printer under the Official Seal of the United Republic, and were effective from the date the Act came into force. This booklet entitled `A Guide for Justices of the Peace' contains on pages four to five the relevant instructions hereinafter called `The Chief Justice's Instructions'. The position, therefore, appears to be that since G 1 July 1964, when the Magistrates' Courts Act 1963 came into force, the taking of extra-judicial statements by Justices of the Peace has in this country been regulated by the Chief Justice's Instructions. The Judges' Rules remain applicable to the police only, for whom they were in any case, originally intended.

The question then arises whether these Instructions to Justices of the Peace extend to H the taking of extra-judicial statements by magistrates as well? There is a misconception in this country, and was apparent in the course of these proceedings both in the High Court and in this Court, that a magistrate of every description is an ex-officio Justice of the Peace. That does not appear to be correct. Under the I Magistrates' Court Act 1963, which has been repealed but substantially reproduced by the Magistrates' Courts Act 1984, the only section which A makes magistrates ex-officio Justices of the Peace is s 52(1)--(now s 58(1) of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1984) which provides:

B `A Primary Court Magistrate shall be a Justice of the Peace for the District for which the Primary Court to which he is assigned is established; and in his capacity as a Justice is hereby assigned to every District Court therein.'

It would seem that only Primary Court Magistrates are ex-officio Justices of the Peace. C The Resident Magistrates and the District Magistrates who took the extra-judicial statements in the present case are not ex-officio Justices of the Peace. Of course, this does not mean that they were not empowered to take extra-judicial statements from persons in custody. They clearly had such powers by virtue of the provisions of s 28 of D the Evidence Act 1967. But are they also bound by the Chief Justice's Instructions when taking extra-judicial statements?

Although the Chief Justice's Instructions specifically refer to Justices of the Peace and make no mention of magistrates, we are satisfied that the instructions were meant to E apply to magistrates also. It is inconceivable, on the grounds of public policy, that there could be two different sets of rules, one applicable to the taking of extra-judicial statements by Justices of the Peace, and another to magistrates when taking such statements. This is because magistrates and Justices of the Peace play the same role F while taking extra-judicial statements. They have, therefore, to be governed by the same rules.

We now come to the crux of the matter. It is indisputable that none of the magistrates who took the extra-judicial statements, which were admitted as exhibits at the trial, fully G complied with the Chief Justice's Instructions. Does this breach of the instructions render the statements inadmissible? We think that the answer to this issue is to be found in the case of Nanyinda s/o Batungwa already cited above. At p 693 of the report it is stated, and we quote: H

`But it must be kept in mind that the Judges' Rules are administrative rules; and breach of them does not automatically result in the exclusion of the statement. The breach is but one of the circumstances, I though the important one, for the trial judge to take into account in deciding whether or not the statement is voluntary.'

Although this decision concerned the Judges' Rules as they then applied to this country, A we are satisfied that the position stated therein applies also to breach of the Chief Justice's Instructions. This means that in as far as the extra-judicial statements of the appellants are concerned, the Court has to consider whether apart from the breach of B the relevant formalities, there are other circumstances which suggest that these extra-judicial statements could have been involuntarily made before the magistrates.

Let us now see whether there are such circumstances relevant to all the appellants who made the extra-judicial statements. It is common ground that the appellants, who made C the extra-judicial statements, had been in police custody shortly before they were taken to the magistrates, and that they either did not complain against treatment by the police, or they expressly informed the magistrates to the effect that they had not been induced by anyone to make the statements. It is also common ground that they were D handed back to the police after they had made the extra-judicial statements. On the basis of this fact, there is a common line of defence by the appellants to the effect that the conduct of the appellants before the magistrates who took the statements was a E mere pretense of freewill so that the particular appellants concerned could avoid a repetition of torture by the police or by the national security men, who had previously tortured them to induce them to confess to the offences charged.

It is part of this line of defence that the appellants concerned ought not to have been F handed back to police custody, but should have been put into judicial custody, that is, put into remand custody by the magistrates after taking the extra-judicial statements.

In our considered opinion, the issue whether or not the particular appellants pretended to be free agents before the magistrates, cannot be resolved in a court of law by other G means except by reference to the conduct and physical appearance of the persons concerned. Only the Almighty God, or perhaps those who claim to have what is known in psychology as Extra Sensory Perception (ESP), can tell directly what goes on in another person's mind without reference to the conduct or physical appearance of that other H person. For most humans, including this Court, what goes on in the minds of another person can reasonably be ascertained only by reference to the conduct or physical appearance of that person.

In the present case, since the appellants who made the extra-judicial statements made it I known to the magistrates that they were free agents, no reasonable tribunal can find otherwise, unless there was something in their physical appearance or conduct which was inconsistent with A being a free agent; or unless there is cogent evidence to show that they had been tortured while in custody before being taken to the magistrates.

With regard to the submission that the appellants concerned ought not to have been B handed back to police custody, but should have been put in remand custody, we do not see how in law such suspects could have been remanded in custody before they were charged in court. In any case, according to the Chief Justice's instructions above mentioned, the suspects are required to be handed back to police custody. C The lengthy steps which a Justice of the Peace or magistrate is instructed to take contain instruction No 10 which reads: `The accused is returned to police custody.' It is followed by the signature of the Justice (or the magistrate) concerned, as the case may be.

Let us now try to see whether there are any unique circumstances which may suggest D that any of the appellants who made the extra-judicial statements might have done so involuntarily. In the case of the first appellant, it is common ground that he informed the magistrate that he had not been tortured. On the evidence, there is nothing in his E conduct or physical appearance to belie this information, since the five old scars which he had on his body, were, according to his testimony, sustained by him about two-and-a-half years before this matter. Those scars, therefore, have no relevance to this case. There is, of course, the suggestion that the magistrate did not sufficiently F identify himself as such to the first appellant. This suggestion, however, is contradicted by the record. For instance, it is quite clear on pp 808, 810, 837 and 838 of the Judge's notes, that the resident magistrate identified himself as a magistrate and the first appellant understood him to be such.

As to the allegation that the first appellant was tortured while in police custody, the G learned Jaji Kiongozi specifically addressed his mind to it and stated in his ruling at the end of the trial that:

> `Having examined with the closest care and attention all the circumstances in which the accused gave his confession, I am satisfied that Superintendent Siame, Mr Y and Mr H told the truth when they H said that they did not torture the accused, so as to induce him to make a statement before the Justice of the Peace.'

With due respect to Mr Lakha, learned advocate, we find nothing in his written or oral submission which can fault the trial Jaji Kiongozi for accepting the evidence of I Superintendent Siame, or Mr `Y'

NYALALI CJ

Or Mr `H' on this point. Moreover, we can find nothing on record to enable us to come to A a conclusion which is different from that arrived at by the learned Jaji Kiongozi, regarding these witnesses on this issue. We are thus led to hold that the extra-judicial statement made by the first appellant was a voluntary one and therefore was properly admitted as evidence in this case. B

What about the circumstances under which the fifth appellant made his extra-judicial statement? It is common ground that he also informed the magistrate to the effect that he had not been tortured while in police custody. Was there anything in his conduct or C physical appearance to suggest the contrary? We can see none. There is of course the suggestion made in his evidence given in the trial within the trial that he could not have told the magistrate otherwise because Mr Masolwa, that is, PW71, and his team were present when the magistrate inquired about the possibility of torture. We do not think that D the fifth appellant's evidence on this point is cogent, because this suggestion was not put forward to Mr Masolwa or the magistrate under cross-examination. The suggestion seems to be an afterthought on the part of the fifth appellant.

The fifth appellant also testified in his trial within the trial that he was given notes by E PW71 to use and that he actually used such notes while giving his extra-judicial statement to the magistrate. This evidence was, however, contradicted not only by PW71 but also by the magistrate in question. Part of the fifth appellant's evidence in his F trial within the trial is to the effect that he was tortured by the police and the national security men while under police custody being taken to the magistrate. The torture was applied to his private parts so severely that those organs from which he had been suffering from a venereal disease got swollen up. This evidence, however, is G contradicted by the evidence of PW75, a medical assistant who examined and treated the fifth appellant in connection with his venereal disease and a fever. The medical assistant noticed nothing wrong with the fifth appellant's private parts apart from this venereal disease which had nothing to do with this matter.

The fifth appellant, while giving his evidence in his defence in the main trial before the H court including the assessors, repeated his assertion about the torture. This assertion was, however, made in unsworn testimony given by the fifth appellant and was therefore not open to cross-examination by the prosecution. It was quite improper on the part of I the fifth appellant to repeat this assertion before the assessors when he was not prepared to give evidence on oath and be cross-examined to test the veracity of his assertion. In the case of Ezera A Kyabanamaize and Another v R (5) the Court of Appeal for East Africa adopted the disapproval expressed by the Court of Criminal Appeal in England in the case of O'Neill and Ackers v R by stating at 313--314: B

`However, what the court desires to call attention to is this: having suggested this to the police, and having repeated the suggestion before the jury, counsel did not call his client to support what he had been instructed to say, and the court has no hesitation in saying that that is not the proper practice ... C In this case a violent attack was made on the police. It was suggested that they had done improper things ... the applicants had the opportunity of going into the witness box at the trial and explaining and supporting what they had instructed their counsel to say. They did not dare to go into the witness box and, therefore, counsel, who knew that they were not going into the witness box, ought not to have D made these suggestions against the police. It is one thing to cross-examine properly and temperately with regard to credit, it is however, entirely wrong to make such suggestions as were made in this case, namely that the police beat the prisoners until they made confessions, and then, when there is the chance for the prisoners to substantiate what has been said by going into the E witness box, for counsel not to call them. The court hopes that notice will be taken of this, and that counsel will refrain, if they do not intend to call their clients, from making charges which, if true, form a defence but which, if there is nothing to support them, ought not to be pursued.' F

The present case is on all fours with what was said in O'Neill's case. Counsel for the appellants who confessed, cross-examined prosecution witnesses extensively before the assessors suggesting that those appellants had been tortured. The appellants when G giving their unsworn statements in their defence before the assessors repeated the suggestions of torture already raised by counsel under cross-examination. This was quite improper. Counsel ought not to have raised the suggestion of torture in the main trial unless their clients were ready to go into the witness box and be cross-examined by the prosecution to test the assertions. H

On our own evaluation of the totality of the evidence, we are satisfied that the fifth appellant was not subjected to any torture to induce him to make the extra-judicial statement which he made to the magistrate. We find, therefore, that the extra-judicial I statement of the fifth appellant was properly admitted as evidence in the trial.

NYALALI CJ

We turn to the extra-judicial statement of the sixth appellant to see whether there are any A circumstances to suggest that the statement could have been involuntarily made. In the evidence given by the sixth appellant in his trial within the trial, it is apparent that he is another person who told the magistrate concerned that he had not been tortured while in B police custody. On the evidence, it would seem that there was nothing either in his conduct or his physical appearance to contradict the information communicated by him to the magistrate, except the admitted fact that the sixth appellant used notes while making his statement to the magistrate. The use of these notes may mean one of three C things: Firstly, it may mean that the sixth appellant was using the notes to assist him to tell a detailed coherent and long story. Secondly, it may mean that the appellant was using the notes to assist him to remember details which are otherwise difficult to remember, such as specific dates in the long past. Thirdly, the sixth appellant could D have used the notes to prompt him to remember a story previously memorised by him. It is contended on the part of the sixth appellant that the third alternative was actually what happened in the present case. Undoubtedly, the extra-judicial statement of the sixth E appellant is a very long and detailed one; it covers eight pages of fullscap paper. According to the evidence of the sixth appellant, given in his trial within the trial, he was given a long and detailed statement by the police to memorise at the CID Headquarters on 18 January 1983. Thereafter, he was returned to his police cell where he remained F until 20 January 1983, when he was taken to the magistrate to make his extra-judicial statement. The sixth appellant did not say in his trial within the trial how long it took him to memorise the police statement at the CID Headquarters on 18 January 1983. But G from his unsworn testimony in his defence in the main trial, it would appear that he was at the CID Headquarters between 10.00 am and 2.00 pm. Whatever be the case, such a long and detailed statement requires much more than four hours to memorise.

Not only that, the sixth appellant would need time to rehearse and refresh his memory before being taken to the magistrate on 20 January 1983, if he was to reproduce it H successfully. On the evidence it does not seem that the sixth appellant was given the opportunity to rehearse or refresh his memory. On the contrary, he spent the whole day of 19 January 1983 in his unpleasant police cell. Such a place was conducive to forgetfulness about details that he might have memorised the previous day. We are I satisfied that under these circumstances, with or without notes, it would have been impossible for the sixth appellant to reproduce such a long detailed story memorised about two A days before. Moreover, there was evidence adduced by the prosecution to contradict the assertion that the police gave him the notes. It would seem that the sixth appellant got the notes in a manner best known to himself and used them to assist him to remember B some details of his past experience and to tell them in coherent manner.

What about the possibility of the sixth appellant being tortured while in police custody before being taken to the magistrate? The learned Jaji Kiongozi specifically considered the point and concluded that there was no such torture. One of the factors which led the C learned Jaji Kiongozi to that conclusion is stated in his ruling thus:

> `If the security and the police had decided to torture Captain Roberts to obtain a statement, why should they have chosen to do so in broad daylight in such a place as the open grounds of D Gymkhana grounds?'

We think this is a cogent point, and we concur with the learned Jaji Kiongozi in his conclusion concerning the torture. He was right in admitting the sixth appellant's extra-judicial statement as evidence in the trial. E

Next we come to the confession of the seventh appellant. On the evidence adduced in the trial within the trial, including the extra-judicial statement of the seventh appellant, it is apparent that he was one of the persons who informed the magistrate concerned to the F effect that he had not been tortured while in police custody. There was nothing either in his conduct or his physical appearance to suggest the contrary. His assertion made in his evidence in his trial within the trial, to the effect that he had been previously tortured while at the CID Headquarters was contradicted by the evidence given on the G prosecution side. On our own evaluation of the evidence, we think that the CID Headquarters is the most improbable place for suspects to be tortured either by the police or the national security men. One would need very cogent evidence to show that such a thing can be done at such a place. There is no such evidence here. H The learned Jaji Kiongozi was of course aware that torture by the police and the national security men has happened in the past in this country; but such tortures happened at places inaccessible to members of the public. Unfortunately, this awareness on the part of the learned Jaji Kiongozi appears to have had an improper influence on him I concerning this case. This can be seen in his ruling where he stated:

NYALALI CJ

A `We know that tortures by the police and members of the security do happen and could very well have happened with Mbogoro.'

This statement of the learned Jaji Kiongozi would seem to indicate that he accepted the probability of the seventh appellant having been tortured while under police custody. If B that is what the learned Jaji Kiongozi thought, then he should not have accepted the extra-judicial statement in evidence. The learned Principal State Attorneys who appeared for the respondent have complained that the learned Jaji Kiongozi allowed himself to be C improperly influenced by matters extraneous to the present case, that is, by cases that he might have heard in the past. We think that the criticism by the learned Principal State Attorneys is justified. The learned Jaji Kiongozi ought to have confined himself to the evidence adduced in the present case concerning the allegations of torture and D decided the matter accordingly. However, we are satisfied that had he done so, he would, on the evidence before him, still have come to the same conclusion as he did, that the statement was voluntary and therefore admissible as evidence in the trial.

We now come to the total case in respect of each of the appellants. We start with the E first appellant. The prosecution case against him, as already stated, has many arrows or aspects directed against him. To begin with, it is alleged that he was one of the four originators of the coup plot. The only evidence concerning the first appellant's F participation in conceiving and hatching up the coup plot is his retracted confession. The law regarding the value and weight to be attached to retracted confessions has been settled in East Africa in a number of cases, culminating with the case of Tuwamoi v Uganda. One of the major legal propositions in Tuwamoi's case is that a court can G convict the maker of an uncorroborated retracted confession if it warns itself of the danger of acting upon such an uncorroborated retracted confession, and is fully satisfied that the retracted confession cannot but be true. In the present case, the learned Jaji Kiongozi was aware of the correct legal position.

In our considered opinion, if this retracted confession is truthful, it implicates the first H appellant beyond reasonable doubt with the overt act of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3. On our own evaluation of the evidence, we are satisfied that the retracted confession of the first appellant is nothing but cogent and truthful. We therefore find him I fully implicated in the overt act of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3. We may also point out at this stage that the evidence of PW1 clearly shows that the role of the first appellant did not end with A the conception and hatching up of the coup plot but he continued to participate in the conspiracy until the very end.

1996 TLR p43
We turn next to his alleged role in arranging or facilitating the entry into the country of a B fellow conspirator, namely, the late Mahomed Tamimu alias Martin Tamimu. As already mentioned, this conduct on the part of the first appellant constitutes overt act number 3 charged in Count 3. The relevant material evidence on this issue is that given by PW22 (Mohamed Omari Hatibu), PW23 (Bakari Daudi Shoka), PW24 (Rehema Samuel C Mayanza), PW25 (Athumani Bakari), PW26 (Hussein Salum Sarai), PW27 (Ramadhani Ali) and PW28 (Bakari Saidi). The totality of this evidence is to the effect that some time in November 1982 the first appellant travelled from Dar es Salaam to Makorora in Tanga D and sent PW22 to Mombasa in Kenya to fetch the late Mohamed Tamimu alias Martin Tamimu and accompany him to Tanzania, where the first appellant met them at Duga and travelled with them by taxi first to Tanga and thence to Dar es Salaam.
Mr Lakha has made a number of criticisms regarding the two crucial prosecution E witnesses on this point, that is, PW 22 and PW24. PW24 testified about the arrival of the first appellant in company of PW22 at her home in Tanga and their subsequent return thereto accompanied by a third person who was introduced to her as Martin. On the evidence of PW22 this third person is no other than the late Mohamed Tamimu alias Martin Tamimu. F
Mr Lakha's main submission is that the evidence of PW22 and PW24 cannot be relied upon, firstly because PW22 is a self-confessed lying witchdoctor and an accomplice, and secondly because PW24 is uncertain about the time of certain events and her G testimony in court contains certain details which are missing in her police statement.
As we shall demonstrate later in this judgment, the fact that PW22 is proved to have used deception in his practice as a witchdoctor does not necessarily make him generally unreliable, because the deception involved was part and parcel of his practice. H As to the issue of being an accomplice, we agree with Mr Lakha that PW22 was at least an accomplice on the alternative charge of misprision of treason, as he failed to report the treasonable conspiracy to the authorities.
However, the evidence of PW24, if accepted, amply corroborates PW22 in material I particulars. We have considered the criticisms
levelled against PW24. We find the uncertainty about dates and hours explicable on the A ground that the witness was testifying about events that took place many years back, and her memory was thus affected by the long lapse of time. As to her testimony in court being more detailed than her police statement, we think this is also explicable on B the ground that a police statement is not meant to be as detailed and as thorough as the testimony given in a trial in court. We are satisfied that PW24 is a credible witness and that her evidence corroborates that of PW22 in material particulars.

The massive and substantially coherent evidence of PW22, PW23, PW24, PW25, C PW26, PW27 and PW28 is not contradicted by other evidence. On the basis of this evidence, there is no doubt whatsoever that the first appellant brought the late Mohamed Tamimu alias Martin Tamimu into the country. What we have to ask ourselves here is whether this conduct of the first appellant was in furtherance of the coup plot. The only D evidence which links the said Mohamed Tamimu alias Martin Tamimu with the coup plot is the extra-judicial statement made by the first appellant. In that statement the first appellant mentions him as one of those who conceived and hatched up the coup plot. On the totality of the evidence, we have no doubt whatsoever that the first appellant E brought his fellow conspirator into the country in furtherance of the plot. It follows, therefore, that overt act number 3 charged in Count 3 is proved against the first appellant.

The next prosecution arrow specifically aimed at the first appellant is that he was F assigned and accepted to recruit some elements of the airwing and commandos of TPDF, and towards that end recruited the fourth, fifth and sixth appellants as well as PW11, that is, Captain Albert Ballati. Although the recruitment of the fourth, fifth and sixth appellants was not specifically averred as an overt act in any of the counts charged, we G think that in law proof of an overt act not specifically charged has the effect of aggravating the offence or offences charged and may, therefore, be relevant to sentencing.

The evidence concerning the recruitment of elements from the airwing, particularly the fourth, fifth and sixth appellants, consists solely of the extra-judicial statements of the H first and fifth appellants. The extra-judicial statement of the first appellant does not specifically mention the names of those recruited from the airwing, but this lacunae in the evidence is filled in by taking into consideration the exta-judicial statement of the fifth appellant. Under the provisions of s 33(1) of the Law of Evidence Act 1967, that I subsection states:

NYALALI CJ

`When two or more persons are being tried jointly for the same offence, or for different offences A arising out of the same transaction, and a confession of the offence or offences charged made by one of those persons affecting himself and some other of those persons is proved, the Court may take that confession into consideration against that other person.' B

The confession of the fifth appellant, if taken into consideration, clearly shows that among those recruited from the airwing were the fourth, fifth and sixth appellants. But what value or weight is to be attached to this extra-judicial statement of the fifth appellant C on this matter? The confession was retracted by the fifth appellant. However, as already mentioned earlier in this judgment, a retracted confession can be a basis for conviction without corroboration if the court is satisfied that such confession cannot but be true, and warns itself of the danger of convicting without corroboration. The learned D Jaji Kiongozi was satisfied that the fifth appellant's confession was nothing but the truth.

This finding of the learned Jaji Kiongozi has been the subject of a strong attack by the advocates for the appellants, who pointed out that there were numbers of proven untruthfulness in the statement. These alleged falsehoods include the alleged E involvement of foreign powers in the coup plot; the alleged involvement of Major Silas Mayunga in the same coup plot; the alleged presence of Father Tom at the Christmas party on 25 December 1982; the alleged conspiratorial meetings on 27 December 1982 F and 28 December 1982; the alleged presence of the first appellant at a meeting at house No 1127 along Chole Road on 31 December 1982, when the first appellant is claimed to have been away from Dar es Salaam, and in Zanzibar; the alleged conspiratorial meeting on 1 January 1983 at house No 1127 along Chole Road when G such meeting never took place, according to the evidence of Steven Buberwa and Oscar Ngaiza, that is PW36 and PW34, respectively; and the alleged presence of the second and third appellants at house No 80B Drive-In on 26 December 1982, and on 27 December 1982, as well as 28 December 1982; while on the evidence of Ibrahim Issa (PW96) these persons never came to that house. H

We agree that on the authority of Aneriko's case a confession which contains material falsehoods, knowingly made by the person confessing, is valueless unless such falsehoods can be separated from the body of the confession. Can it be said that in the present case these falsehoods were knowingly made by the fifth appellant? We do not I think so. The fifth appellant was not among the originators of the coup plot and could therefore easily have been duped into believing that foreign A countries were involved in the coup plot and duped also into believing that Major General Silas Mayunga was involved. It would seem that the originators of the coup plot were engaged in recruitment propaganda to win followers.

With regard to the other falsehoods, they appear to have one common factor. They all B relate to specific dates when certain things are said to have happened or to have been done. Since the fifth appellant in his confession appears to have participated in a number of conspiratorial meetings, there is every likelihood of confusing dates and events, and C thereby giving rise to the misleading impression of lying. Under those circumstances, it cannot be said that the fifth appellant knowingly told lies on these matters. We are satisfied that the confession of the fifth appellant is not disqualified by the rule in Aneriko's case and can therefore be relied upon to inform us about the names of D persons the first appellant recruited from the airwing. We are satisfied, on the evidence, that it was the first appellant who recruited the fifth, sixth and seventh appellants into the coup plot. However, the recruitment exercise was not made a specific overt act charged against the first appellant. It only aggravates the offences charged. E

Next we consider the recruitment by the first appellant of PW11 which constituted overt act number 7 in Count 3. The relevant evidence on this point is that of the extra-judicial statement of the first appellant and the evidence of PW11. In his extra-judicial statement, F the first appellant does not specifically mention the person whom he recruited from the Commando Units in Zanzibar, but this lacunae in the evidence is filled in by the testimony of PW11. We have already considered the evidence of PW11 at length in connection with the common criticisms made by the learned advocates concerning the G prosecution witnesses who claimed to have reported the conspiracy to the authorities. While so considering, we found PW11 to be a credible and reliable witness. His evidence, to the effect that the first appellant visited Zanzibar several times in December 1982, is fully supported by other prosecution witnesses, such as PW12 (Mchuwao H Safisa) and PW13 (Sunday George Matola) as well as by the unsworn testimony of the fourth appellant. On the basis of the testimony of PW11 supported as it is by this other evidence, there can be no doubt that the first appellant recruited PW11. Thus the overt act charged as number 7 in Count 3 is fully proved against the first appellant. I appellant is an allegation to the effect that apart from the first appellant's participation in A the recruitment exercise, he also participated in a number of conspiratorial meetings aimed at consolidating the conspiracy. The evidence of PW41, that is, Hope Banyikwa, shows that the first appellant hosted a number of meetings at house No 80B Drive-In. B She, of course, does not know the nature of those meetings, since she was not one of the participants and was not allowed to hear what went on. The main criticism directed against PW41's evidence concerning these meetings was made by Mr Lakha to the effect that she was uncertain about the exact dates when the meetings took place. We C think there is a reasonable explanation to this uncertainty. The witness was testifying about events that took place many years back, and because of that, her memory could have been afforded by the long lapse of time. Now, were these meetings conspiratorial?

The prosecution case relied mainly on the extra-judicial statements of the fifth and sixth D appellants. The extra-judicial statement of the fifth appellant implicates the first appellant in a number of conspiratorial meetings at the Drive-In house towards the end of December 1982. This extra-judicial statement of the fifth appellant places these meetings on the 26, 27 and 28 December 1982; and clearly shows that they were E conspiratorial except that the one on 26 December 1982 was preceded by a Christmas party, and did not become conspiratorial until the innocent guests had left. The extra-judicial statement of the fifth appellant tallies with that of the sixth appellant except that the extra-judicial statement of the sixth appellant does not disclose the nature of F those meetings. On the appellant's side, it has been submitted to the effect that the evidence of PW41, Hope Banyikwa, is inconsistent with these extra-judicial statements concerning the dates when the alleged meetings were held. It has however been pointed G out that PW41 is uncertain about the dates, because of the long lapse of time. PW41's uncertainty cannot therefore be used to contradict the information given in the two extra-judicial statements which were made not long after the event. But can these two extra-judicial statements be safely acted upon? H

We have already dealt with the extra-judicial statement of the fifth appellant and arrived at an affirmative answer. With regard to the extra-judicial statement of the sixth appellant, similar grounds of complaint were raised concerning the falsehoods contained I therein. We think the answers to these complaints are the same as those given in respect of the extra-judicial statement of the fifth appellant. That is not however the end of the problem. PW41 is not the only A witness to these meetings. There was Ibrahim Issa (PW96) who testified about participating in these meetings and to the effect that they were not conspiratorial but purely social. The learned Principal State Attorneys appeared to provide the answer to B this problem. They pointed out in their submissions to the effect that the meetings in respect of which PW96 testified could not be the same meetings in respect of which PW41 testified. Those in which PW96 participated were attended by about two guests, whereas those in respect of which PW41 testified were attended by about five to six C persons. This larger group of people tallies substantially with the meetings mentioned in the two extra-judicial statements. On the totality of the evidence, there is no doubt that these larger meetings which the first appellant hosted at house No 80B Drive-In were conspiratorial meetings concerning the coup plot and served the purpose of consolidating the original conspiracy. D

Another meeting in which the first appellant is said to have taken part was at house No 1127 along Chole Road in Masaki, Dar es Salaam. On the evidence of PW36, Steven Buberwa, and PW43, Oscar George Ngaiza, this meeting which took place on two E consecutive days was hosted by Pius Mutakubwa Lugangira alias Father Tom. There is a conflict of evidence by these two witnesses concerning the exact dates of these meetings. But bearing in mind the fact that these witnesses were testifying about events which took place many years back, such conflict is to be expected. In substance, the F two witnesses are in agreement that the meeting took place some time towards the end of December 1982. The only evidence which implicates the first appellant with participation in the meetings on the two consecutive days at house No 1127 along Chole Road, Masaki, is to be found in the extra-judicial statements of the fifth, sixth and G seventh appellants. These statements also are the only evidence which disclose the nature of the meetings as being conspiratorial. We have already dealt with the veracity of the extra-judicial statements of the fifth and sixth appellants. It is now the turn of the extra-judicial statement of the seventh appellant.

There are three major complaints concerning the veracity of this extra-judicial statement. H The first two concern the alleged involvement of foreign countries in the coup plot as well as the alleged involvement of Major Silas Mayunga in the same coup plot. We have already dealt with these complaints, particularly in respect of the extra-judicial statement I of the fifth appellant. The answers there apply here.

The third complaint concerns the alleged recruitment of the seventh appellant by the A fourth, fifth and sixth appellants at New Africa Hotel in the evening of 31 December 1982. It is said that this cannot be true since the seventh appellant was, at the material time, celebrating the end of the year at Msasani Officers' Mess. According to the extra-judicial B statement of the seventh appellant, the recruitment took place at New Africa Hotel between 5.15 and 6.00 pm. According to PW8, that is, Staff Sergeant Boniface Temu, the seventh appellant was at Msasani Police Officers' Mess at about 6.00 pm. This time given by PW8 is, in our view, no more than an estimation made many years after the C event. It cannot, therefore, be taken at face value. There is also the evidence of PW9, Cpl Mussa Ramadhani, the Officers' Mess attendant, who testified to the effect that on 31 December 1982 the seventh appellant came to the Officers' Mess at about 8.00 pm. This again is at best no more than an estimate made by the witness many years after D the event. In any case it is not inconsistent with the allegation that the seventh appellant was recruited at New Africa Hotel between 5.15 and 6 pm as stated in the extra-judicial statement of the seventh appellant. It is also to be noted that, unlike the testimony of PW8 and PW9, the extra-judicial statement of the seventh appellant was made not long E after the event and is therefore in that respect more relivable. For this reason, it cannot be said that on the evidence adduced by the prosecution, the extra-judicial statement of the seventh appellant is false when it states that the seventh appellant being recruited at F New Africa Hotel between 5.15 and 6 pm. On the basis of the provisions of s 33(1) of the Law of Evidence Act 1967, the extra-judicial statements of the fifth, sixth and seventh appellants can be taken into account against the first appellant in respect of his participation in the meetings at house No 1127 along Chole Road in Masaki, Dar es G Salaam, if there is a substratum of evidence adduced against the first appellant which can be reinforced by these extra-judicial statements.

Do we have such substratum of evidence against the first appellant? The answer must be in the negative. Apart from these extra-judicial statements, there is no other evidence H which places the first appellant at the meeting in house No 1127 Chole Road, Masaki, Dar es Salaam. We note, however, that this meeting along Chole Road was not averred by the prosecution as a specific overt act against the first appellant. So failure to prove it is not a fatal setback to the prosecution case against the first appellant. I the last one and to have taken place at a house in Kinondoni Makaburini is the same as A that at house No 1127, Chole Road. As to the activities of the first appellant and his friends at the house at Kinondoni Makaburini, the prosecution case does not suggest any conspiratorial activities there. Undoubtedly, there is overwhelming evidence to show B that the first appellant visited this house many times with his friends but for social purposes such as meals and drinks.

The first appellant has put up an alibi as part of his defence. The alibi covers the period between 31 December 1982 and 5 January 1983. During that period he claims to have C been away from Dar es Salaam and was at Mkaramo in Tanga region, where he had gone, together with DW1, that is, Abdallah Hassan Enzi, to pay condolences to his bereaved mother who had lost a husband. The learned Jaji Kiongozi dismissed this alibi as bogus. It was pointed out in the course of this appeal by learned Principal State D Attorneys that this alibi by the first appellant is groundless. This submission is based upon the conduct of the first appellant towards one Issa Akida, that is PW30, who testified to the effect that he met the appellant in Dar es Salaam on 6 January 1983, and spent a night with the first appellant at Kunduchi Beach Hotel. PW30 had come from E Mkaramo where the first appellant's mother lived. On the evidence, the first appellant made quite a lot of inquiries about his mother. It is obvious from the nature of the inquiries that the first appellant had not seen his mother at Mkaramo for quite a long time. The relevant part of the evidence of PW30 was not put in doubt under F cross-examination by advocate for first appellant. On the basis of this evidence, we agree with the view of the learned Jaji Kiongozi that the first appellant's alibi is bogus.

The next set of prosecution arrows directed at the first appellant concerns the allegation G that the first appellant purchased some batteries for walkie talkie radios intended for use in execution of the coup plot. Also there is the allegation concerning his efforts to immunise himself against harm from bullets through the use of charms. The prosecution case in respect of the purchase of batteries for use in walkie talkie radios H rests on the evidence of PW1 and PW79. The evidence of PW1 is to the effect that on 7 January 1983 the first appellant purchased a set of batteries and informed PW1 that they were for use in walkie talkie radios in connection with the coup plot. His evidence is also to the effect that after the purchase of the batteries, PW1 and the first appellant visited I the home of the sixth appellant. The evidence of PW79, is to the effect that a set of walkie talkie batteries was found at the home of the sixth appellant in the A course of a police search after his arrest. On the basis of this evidence, we are satisfied that the first appellant did purchase the said batteries and left them at the home of the sixth appellant, and for that reason we find overt act number 5 in Count 3 proved against the first appellant. B

As to the charms against harm by bullets, the prosecution case rests on the evidence of the two witchdoctors, that is PW22, Mohamed Omari Hatibu and PW23, Bakari Daudi Shoka. The learned trial Jaji Kiongozi accepted the evidence of these witnesses on this point. Mr Lakha has strongly submitted in this appeal that the evidence of these C witnesses ought not to have been accepted since they were self-confessed liars in that they knew that the charms which they purported to provide to the first appellant and his companion would not help them. And yet they proceeded to cheat the first appellant and his companion to obtain their money. D

We think in a case like this one involving the use of witchcraft, witchdoctors are invariably the most competent witnesses to testify about their tricks, since they are directly involved in the matter. The weight to be attached to their evidence would depend E in each case on the totality of the evidence relevant to the issue at hand. It has to be borne in mind that there is still a large section of the population in our country which is inclined to seek help from witchdoctors, as a matter of course, whenever faced with problems or challenges of life. The efficacy of such conduct is a matter of controversy F outside the scope of this case. What we have to ask ourselves is whether the matters testified to by PW22 and PW23 are probable. Is it probable for the first appellant and his companion to seek charms to immunise them against harm by bullets? Bearing in mind about what happened during the Maji Maji uprising in our history, and also what G happened recently in connection with Alice Lakwena's Holy Spirit Movement in Eastern Uganda, we are satisfied that it is probable for the first appellant and his companion to seek such charms. But can we safely rely on the evidence of PW22 and PW23 to go beyond mere probability and find as a fact that the first appellant and his companion H actually sought such charms?

Mr Lakha has submitted that PW22 and PW23 are at least, on the totality of the evidence, accomplices since they did not report the treasonable conspiracy to the authorities. There is merit in this submission, since the first appellant also faced a I charge of misprision of treason in the alternative. The evidence leaves no doubt that the first appellant and his companion made a full confession to these witnesses in the course of their request for charms to protect them against harm A by bullets. We are satisfied on the evidence that PW22 and PW23 are accomplices whose evidence needs corroboration.

So we have to look for corroboration. We find it in the evidence of PW1, whom we have B already found to be a credible witness. His evidence on this aspect of the case particularly under cross-examination is to the effect that the drove the first appellant and his companion to see the two witchdoctors. On the evidence of PW22 and PW23 supported by that of PW1 we are satisfied that the first appellant and his companion C actually sought charms to immunise themselves against harm by bullets which they might face in the course of implementing the coup plot. So overt act number 6 in Count 3 is proved against the first appellant. It is ironical that the first appellant's companion, D that is, Mohamed Tamimu alias Martin Tamimu was shot dead not long afterwards. This incident demonstrates the impotence of charms against bullets.

On the side of the first appellant, it was submitted by Mr Lakha that he did not have a fair trial; since he was driven into a position by certain remarks made by the Jaji Kiongozi on the basis of which it was pointless for him to defend himself in the main trial. It was for E that reason that he elected to remain silent. The relevant remarks appear in the ruling of the Jaji Kiongozi made in the trial within the trial of the first appellant. In concluding the ruling to admit the extra-judicial statement of the first appellant, the learned Jaji Kiongozi stated as follows: F

> `First accused's demeanour and bearing in the witness box left me with a clear impression in my mind that he is the type of person who can choose to say anything to suit his convenience.' G

This description of the character of the first appellant apparently disarmed him and when his turn to defend himself came round, and was informed about his rights in his defence, he informed the court in Kiswahili as follows: H

> `Nimeshasema awali kwamba sina utetezi wowote wa kutoa zaidi katika Mahakama hii kufuatana na remarks ambazo zimetolewa dhidi yangu wakati wa ruling yangu kwenye trial within a trial.'

We are satisfied that the learned Jaji Kiongozi erred in law in making a finding on the I general character of the first appellant in a trial within a trial. The ruling ought to have been confined to the matter in issue, that is, the admissibility of the extra-judicial statement made by the first A appellant. The issue of general character of the first appellant lay outside the scope of the trial within the trial, and fell within the scope of the main trial. We have now to ask ourselves whether this irregularity on the part of the learned Jaji Kiongozi had the effect B of denying the first appellant a fair trial. We have examined the record of the proceedings very closely.

It is apparent that the defences of the first appellant were fully disclosed under cross-examination of the material witnesses for the prosecution and also through the single defence witness who was called by the first appellant to testify to the alibi. It is C apparent also that neither the assessors nor the Jaji Kiongozi took into account the general character of the first appellant in their view of the whole case. Moreover, these remarks were made in the absence of the assessors, whereas the defence of the first appellant was expected and did actually proceed in the presence of the assessors when D the single defence witness testified to the alibi. under these circumstances, we do not think that the first appellant was denied a fair trial. The appellant appears to have over-reacted in response to the remarks made by the Jaji Kiongozi at his trial within the trial, and he consequently denied the assessors and the Jaji Kiongozi the opportunity to E hear him in his defence.

We now turn to the case in respect of the second appellant. The prosecution case against the second appellant is two-pronged. The first thrust seeks to implicate the second appellant in the conspiratorial meetings at house No 80B Drive-In as well as at F house No 1127 along Chole Road, Masaki, Dar es Salaam, and at a house at Kinondoni Makaburini. The second thrust concerns treasonable declarations allegedly made by him to PW2, Lt Iddi Mushi Stambuli, in Arusha. With regard to the second appellant's alleged participation in the meetings at house No 1127 Chole Road, and the house at Kinondoni G Makaburini, the only evidence on this point consists of the retracted extra-judicial statements of the fifth, sixth and seventh appellants. These retracted confessions can only be taken into consideration by virtue of the provisions of s 33(1) of the Law of Evidence Act, to reinforce other evidence adduced against the second appellant. There H is, however, no substratum of evidence which can be reinforced by these extra-judicial statements. In other words, these extra-judicial statements have no leg upon which to stand. The prosecution case, therefore, insofar as it concerns conspiratorial meetings at house No 1127 Chole Road, and at the house at Kinondoni I Makaburini falls to the ground.

As to the meetings at house No 80B Drive-In, the extra-judicial statements of the fifth A and sixth appellants can be taken into consideration to reinforce the evidence of PW41, that is, Hope Banyikwa, who identified the second appellant as one of the persons who participated in the meetings. The appellant's defence on this point is a general denial. B However, the extrajudicial statements of the fifth and sixth appellants, and especially that of the fifth appellant, clearly show that these meetings were conspiratorial in nature. On the basis of the evidence of PW41, supported by these extra-judicial statements, there can be no doubt that the second appellant joined the conspiracy at some stage C after it was conceived and hatched up. This means that the overt acts of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3 are proved against the second appellant.

With regard to the treasonable declarations alleged to have been made by him in Arusha, the only cogent prosecution evidence on this point is that of PW2. D This witness and his testimony has already been dealt with in connection with his reporting of the conspiracy to the authorities. On the defence side, there is an alibi to the effect that the second appellant was at the material time in Dar es Salaam and did not go to Arusha. But this alibi appears to be inconsistent with the line adopted in cross-examining E PW2 in that respect. It was put to this witness that the second appellant had gone to Arusha on a return air ticket and could not therefore have gone to the bus stand to make arrangements for travel back to Dar es Salaam. On p 155 of the stenographers' transcript of the proceedings, it is recorded in Kiswahili: F

Stambuli: Mimi sio muongo.

Lakha: Sasa huko Bus stand alikuwa anafanya nini? G

Stambuli: Labda baada ya kukosa ticketi ya bus akaamua kurudi kwa ndege.

Lakha: Lakini alikuwa na ticket ya regular flight bwana.'

We are of the view that on the basis of this line of cross-examination of PW2, the alibi H put forth by the second appellant falls to the ground.

We are satisfied that the second appellant did make the treasonable declaration as stated by PW2. But does the declaration amount to an overt act? I

Mr Jadeja, learned advocate, made submissions in respect of the ninth appellant which are relevant also to the second appellant. The submissions were to the effect that in law mere words do not amount to overt acts on a A treason charge. He cited Hale's Pleas of the Crown published in 1778. On p 115 of vol 1 there appears the following statement in old English:

B `Therefore though this be regularly true, that words alone make no treason or an overt act, yet it hath these alleys and exceptions.'

Eight exceptions are mentioned therein. One of the exceptions concerns words which explain treasonable conduct. This exception would cover declarations made by the C second appellant to PW2, because the declaration explained why the second appellant had gone to Arusha. According to him, he had gone to Arusha to seek ammunition to be used in the coup plot. On the basis of this evidence, there can be no doubt that overt act number 2 charged in Count 1 is proved against the second appellant. D

We next turn to the case in respect of the third appellant. The prosecution case is on one front, and that concerns the allegation that the third appellant participated in conspiratorial meetings held at house No 80B Drive-In and also at house No 1127 Chole Road, and the house at Kinondoni Makaburini. E The prosecution evidence in respect of the meetings at house No 1127 Chole Road, and at the house in Kinondoni Makaburini is similar to that adduced against the second appellant. It consists only in the extra-judicial confessions of the fifth, sixth and seventh appellants. These confessions can only be taken into account to reinforce a substratum of evidence adduced against the third F appellant. Is there such substratum of evidence? As in the case of the second appellant, there is none. The prosecution case therefore falls to the ground in so far as the meetings at house No 1127 Chole Road, and at the house in Kinondoni Makaruni are G concerned. We remain with the meetings at house No 80B Drive-In. Here there is a substratum of evidence given by PW41 implicating the third appellant with participation in the meetings. The extra-judicial statements given by the sixth and seventh appellants can therefore be taken into consideration to reinforce the evidence of PW41. H Before we can do so, however, we have to consider the case for the defence on this aspect.

On the third appellant's side, it is alleged that at the time when the conspiratorial meetings are said to have taken place, he was busy studying at the Dar es Salaam University where he was preparing for his final examinations. I The third appellant did not call any one from the University of Dar es Salaam to show whether the third appellant was so busy that he could not have attended the conspiratorial meetings. A The failure by the third appellant to call such a witness to support him clearly undermined his alibi. This position was stated by this Court in the case of Lusabanya Styantemi v Republic (7).

There is another reason given by the Jaji Kiongozi in his judgment which shows that the B third appellant's defence cannot hold water. The learned Jaji Kiongozi stated:

> `If he was so busy, why did he so hurriedly leave the country to Kenya. Apparently Maganga did not C think it important to tell the Court why he left his studies and fled to Kenya when he defended himself.'

These views of the learned Jaji Kiongozi were of course not based on the evidence adduced before the assessors, but on evidence given by the third appellant himself in D his trial within the trial concerning the admissibility of a statement he made to the police at Dodoma. The evidence is contained in answers given by the third appellant under cross-examination. Mr Lakha submitted before us that it was improper for the learned E Jaji Kiongozi to take this evidence into account as it was not given in the main trial, but in a trial within a trial in the absence of the assessors. A Privy Council decision was cited in support of this contention. This is the case of Wong Kam-ming v R (8). At 943 of the relevant report their lordships stated: F

> `As part of this case on the main issue, may the prosecution lead evidence regarding the testimony given by the accused on the voire dire. As already related the trial judge originally thought that this question required a negative answer. But he was led to change his mind by the decision in R v Wright G where the Supreme Court of South Australia held that the Crown was entitled to lead such evidence subject to the discretion of the trial judge to disallow it. But the weight of Judicial authority is against such conclusion. The earliest relevant decision appears to be that of the Federal Supreme Court of Southern Rhodesia in Chitambala v R where Clayden, ACJ said:

H "In any criminal trial the accused has the right to elect not to give evidence at the conclusion of the crown case. To regard evidence given by him on the question of admissibility as evidence in the trial itself would mean either that he must be deprived of that right if he wishes properly to contest the admissibility of the statement or that to preserve that right he must abandon I another right in a fair trial, the right to prevent inadmissible statements being led in evidence against him. To me it seems clear that deprivation of

A rights in this manner and a change in a trial of admissibility to a full investigation of the merits cannot be part of the fair criminal trial."

Yet in the instant appeal counsel for the Crown felt constrained to submit that even were the trial judge to exclude a confession on the ground that torture has been used to extort it, any damaging B statement made by the accused on the voire dire could nevertheless be adduced as part of the prosecution case. Boldness could go no further.

Fortunately, for justice, their lordships have concluded that where the confession has been excluded, the argument against ever admitting such evidence as part of the Crown case must prevail. But what C if the confession is held admissible? In such circumstances, it is unlikely that the prosecution will need to do more than rely on the confession itself. Nevertheless, in principle should they be prevented from proving in addition an admission made by the accused on the voire dire? This question has exercised their lordships a great deal. But even in the circumstances predicated it is D preferable to maintain a clear distinction between the issue of voluntariness, which is alone relevant to the voire dire and the issue of guilt falling to be decided in the main trial. To blur this distinction, can lead, as has already been shown, to unfortunate consequences, and their lordships have therefore concluded that the same exclusion of the evidence regarding the voire dire proceedings E from the main trial must be observed regardless of whether the challenged confession be excluded or admitted.'

It is apparent that the decision of the Privy Council in Wong's case differed from the earlier position that had prevailed in a number of jurisdictions including England and F Wales concerning the matter. The earlier position is illustrated by the case of R v Hammond (9).

According to the earlier position, incriminating statements made by an accused person at a trial within a trial could be used against him in the main trial. The prevalence of this G earlier position was referred to in Wong's case when their lordships of the Privy Council stated at 942:

`Although much criticised, that decision has frequently been followed in England and Wales and in many other jurisdictions.' H

The question which arises in this case is whether in this country we should adopt the position as laid down by the Privy Council in Wong's case or follow the earlier position which prevailed a number of Commonwealth jurisdictions as illustrated by Hammond's I case? We think the position in Hammond's case is more appropriate to this country where criminal justice is required to be administered not as a game of A football but as a serious business of acquitting the innocent and convicting the guilty in a reasonable and sensible manner according to law. This Court has emphasized this approach in a recent case, that is, the case of DPP v Peter Rowland Vogel (10). B

1996 TLR p58

We notice that the decision in Wong's case is predicated upon the principle that an accused person ought not to be placed in a dilemma where he has to choose between his right to challenge the admissibility of evidence against him and his right to remain C silent in his defence in the main trial. We also notice, however, that the right of the public to see justice done by the Courts in a reasonable and sensible way according to law was not considered at all by the Privy Council in Wong's case. We think that consideration of this right of the public to see justice done is quite fundamental, since D invariably a trial within a trial takes place in public, and evidence given within such a trial is known to the public, notwithstanding the absence of the jury or assessors as the case may be. Since the authority of the courts depends ultimately upon public confidence in the courts, it is important that a proper balance be maintained between the rights of an E accused person on the one hand and the rights of the public on the other.

In the present case, we have evidence adduced by the third appellant in his trial within the trial, and which was properly admitted within the scope of such a trial, to the effect that he and the second appellant fled to Kenya upon learning that the police were looking F for him and his companion. This evidence was given in the presence of members of the public and the appellants, though in the absence of the assessor. What would the public and the appellants think of our courts if it was said by the Trial Judge that, through some legal fiction, such evidence though properly admitted in the trial within the trial, did G not exist for purposes of determining the guilt of the appellant? They would be justified, in our view, in thinking that the trial was just a game and not a serious business of determining guilt and innocence. Such an attitude, particularly on the part of the public, is H dangerous to the rule of law. Our legal system ought not to encourage it.

The prosecution case against the fourth appellant has two fronts: The first thrust concerns the allegations that he, together with the first appellant, was involved in the I recruitment of PW11, that is, Captain Albert Ballati. The second thrust concerns the allegation that he participated in the conspiratorial meetings at house No 80B

NYALALI CJ

Drive-In as well as at house No 1127 along Chole Road, in Masaki, Dar es Salaam, and A at a house in Kinondoni Makaburini. Let us start with the first allegation. The evidence on this aspect is similar to that adduced against the first appellant, although in addition there is the unsworn testimony given by the fourth appellant in his defence. It is common B ground that the fourth appellant visited Zanzibar several times in December 1982. He claims, on his part, that his visits were innocently connected with his purchase of building materials. But the evidence of PW11 clearly implicates him to the same extent as the first appellant with the recruitment of PW11. On the basis of this evidence, we are C satisfied that the fourth appellant was involved in the recruitment of PW11. Therefore, overt act number 2 charged in Count 3 is proved against the fourth appellant.

The evidence concerning his participation in conspiratorial meetings at house No 1127 Chole Road, and at the house in Kinondoni Makaburini, consists solely of the retracted D confessions of the fifth, sixth and seventh appellants. These confessions can be taken into consideration to reinforce an existing substratum of evidence against the fourth appellant. There is, however, no such substratum of evidence and therefore this allegation, which is not a subject of a separate overt act, has not been proved. What E about the meetings at house No 80B Drive-In?

We have the evidence of PW41, that is Hope Banyikwa who mentioned the fourth appellant as one of the participants in the meetings she described. The evidence of PW41 provides the necessary substratum of evidence which can be reinforced by the F confessions of the co-accused against the fourth appellant. With regard to the alibi of the fourth appellant to the effect that he could not have participated in the conspiratorial meetings as he was busy attending to his sick relative, that is one Oscar, the answer to this is that the meetings at House No 80B Drive-In took place before the fourth appellant G became tied up with attending to his sick relative early in January 1983. According to the prosecution evidence, these particular meetings at this particular place took place in December 1982. The retracted confessions of the fifth and sixth appellants, when taken into account, clearly show that the fourth appellant was one of the conspirators in H respect of this particular meetings at house No 80B Drive-In. It follows, therefore, that the overt act of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3 is proved against the fourth appellant. We next turn to the case in respect of the fifth appellant.

The prosecution case against the fifth appellant is also two-pronged. The first thrust I concerns the allegations that the fifth appellant participated in the conspiratorial meetings at house No 80B Drive-In as well as A at house No 1127 Chole Road, and at the house in Kinondoni Makaburini; also at Banana Bar in Ukonga on the 4 January 1983. The second thrust concerns the allegation that the fifth appellant attempted to recruit PW46, that is, Captain Mohamed Suleiman Mape. Let us start with the first allegation. The prosecution evidence B concerning the alleged participation by the fifth appellant in the conspiratorial meetings at house No 80B Drive-In, and at the house along Chole Road in Masaki in Dar es Salaam, as well as the house at Kinondoni Makaburini, consists entirely at the extra-judicial C statements of the fifth, sixth and seventh appellants. There is, however, no substratum of evidence adduced against the fifth appellant which can be reinforced by these confessions. In her evidence, PW41 did not mention the fifth appellant as one of those D who attended the meetings at house No 80B Drive-In. As it is, these confessions have no leg upon which to stand. The prosecution case therefore collapses insofar as it concerns the allegation of participation in conspiratorial meetings at these places. We may point out that this allegation is not a subject of a separate overt act charged against the appellant.

There remains the meeting at Banana Bar on 4 January 1983. The prosecution case E rests on the evidence of PW8, that is, Staff Sergeant Boniface Temu. We have already dealt with this witness in connection with his credibility and the report he made to the authorities concerning the conspiracy. His evidence clearly shows that the fifth appellant F was one of those who attended the mini-conspiratorial meeting at Banana Bar in Ukonga on 4 January 1983. On the basis of this evidence, the overt acts of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3 are proved against the fifth appellant.

As to the allegation of attempting to recruit PW46, the prosecution case rests on the G testimony of PW46 and the retracted confession of the fifth appellant himself. PW46 refused to join the plot, but he never reported the incident to the authorities. We are satisfied that on that basis this witness is liable for misprision of treason, contrary to s 41(b) of the Penal Code. Since this offence was charged in the alternative against the H fifth appellant, we hold that PW46 was no less than an accomplice whose evidence requires corroboration before it can safely be acted upon. Is there such corroboration? It has been submitted by learned Principal State Attorneys in this appeal, that the retracted confession of the fifth appellant can be used to corroborate the evidence of PW46. On I the face of it, this submission seems to go against a commonly held belief to the effect that a retracted confession cannot corroborate other evidence, A because it also requires corroboration. But there is authority to support the contention of the learned Principal State Attorney. The case of Palalar Melaram Bassan and Wathiobia s/o Kyambuu v R (11) was cited on the point. In that case the Court of Appeal for East Africa stated at 530: B

> `As regards the learned Judge's reference to the statements of each appellant providing corroboration as against that appellant of the accomplice evidence given by Tanganyika, it is true that those statements were retracted. But we see no reason why they should not be taken into account as C corroboration of Tanganyika's evidence. It is of course a well established rule of prudence that it is unsafe to act upon a retracted confession in the absense of corroboration of the confession in a material particular....
> It is true that as a general rule evidence which itself requires corroboration cannot provide D corroboration for other evidence also requiring corroboration. But retracted statements are not the same quality as accomplice evidence.
> We think that a statement made by an accused whether amounting to a confession or not may in a proper case amount to corroboration of accomplice evidence.' E

We think the rationale for this proposition is based upon the evidential value of a retracted confession which is found by the courts to contain nothing but the truth. On the F authority of the case of Tuwamoi v Uganda at 91 supra, such confession is sufficient to support the conviction of the confessor. If a retracted but truthful confession is capable of supporting a conviction against the confessor, why should it not be capable of corroborating other evidence against the confessor? We therefore hold that the retracted G confession of the fifth appellant which, as already found, is truthful, corroborates the evidence of PW46.

The appellant on his side does not deny meeting PW46 on the material day. He claims, however, that he did so innocently, in connection with a request by him to PW46 to H arrange transportation of some fridges from Zanzibar. The evidence of PW46, however, shows that apart from this innocent purpose, the fifth appellant subsequently attempted to recruit PW46. On the basis of the prosecution evidence, we find the allegation against the fifth appellant proved. This allegation has of course not been made an overt act on I any of the counts of treason charged. But as we have already stated, proof of an overt act which is not specifically charged against an accused person has the effect of aggravating the offence charged A and is therefore relevant to sentencing. Let us now turn to the case in respect of the sixth appellant.

The prosecution is presented on one front only concerning the allegation that the sixth appellant participated in the conspiratorial meetings at house No 80B Drive-In, as well as B at house No 1127 Chole Road in Masaki, Dar es Salaam; and subsequently at a house in Kinondoni Makaburini. These meetings were, of course, not made the subject of a separate overt act against this appellant. The only prosecution evidence in respect of the meeting at Kinondoni Makaburini consists of the retracted confessions of the C fourth appellant and seventh appellants. In his own retracted confession, the sixth appellant is silent on the meeting at Kinondoni Makaburini. In law, the retracted confessions of the fifth appellant and seventh appellants can be meaningful only if there D is a substratum of evidence against the sixth appellant which can be reinforced by taking these retracted confessions into account. There is no substratum of evidence against the sixth appellant and the prosecution case therefore falls to the ground insofar as this particular meeting is concerned. This leaves us with the meetings at house No E 80B Drive-In and at house No 1127 along Chole Road in Masaki, Dar es Salaam.

There is the evidence of PW41, that is, Hope Banyikwa. She mentions the sixth appellant as one of the persons who participated in the meetings in respect of which she F testified. The evidence of PW41 provides the necessary substratum of evidence against the sixth appellant. The retracted confession of the fifth appellant is however relevant to these meetings. When this confession is taken into account, there can be no doubt that the sixth appellant was one of the conspirators who participated in the meetings at house No 80B Drive-In. G

As to the meeting at house No 1127 along Chole Road in Masaki, Dar es Salaam, there is the evidence of PW43, that is, Oscar George Ngaiza, who claims to have identified the sixth appellant as one of those who came to participate in the meeting on the second H day. The basis for his identification is that the sixth appellant arrived much earlier at the meeting place before any one else had come, and so PW43 had good reason to notice him. The testimony of PW43 is, however, contradicted on this point by the testimony of PW36, that is, Steven Buberwa. PW36 testified to the effect that the first person to arrive I at the meeting place on the second day was Pius Mutakubwa Lugangira. Because of this contradiction, we felt that it would be unsafe to act upon the evidence of PW43 regarding the identification of A the sixth appellant. The evidence, therefore, proves beyond reasonable doubt that the sixth appellant participated only in the meetings which took place at house No 80B Drive-In. These meetings are sufficient evidence of the overt acts of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3. B

The prosecution case against the seventh appellant is also two-pronged: The first thrust concerns the allegation that the seventh appellant recruited PW8 and instigated him to sabotage a military installation in furtherance of the conspiracy. The second thrust concerns the allegation that the seventh appellant participated in a mini-meeting at C Banana Bar in Ukonga Dar es Salaam on 4 January 1983. Let us start with the second allegation.
The prosecution case rests entirely on the evidence of PW8. We have already dealt with this witness and his testimony in connection with his report of the conspiracy to the D authorities. On the basis of the evidence of that witness, there can be no doubt that the seventh appellant participated in the mini-meeting at Banana Bar in Ukonga on 4 January 1983; and that that meeting was conspiratorial. It follows therefore that the overt acts of conspiracy charged in the first, second and third Counts are proved against the seventh E appellant.
As to the recruitment of PW8 and the instigation by the seventh appellant made to him to sabotage an important military installation, the prosecution case also rests entirely on F the evidence of this witness. In the course of this appeal, some special criticism was directed against PW8's evidence on this aspect of the case. It was submitted that PW8 gave the impression that the seventh appellant was on duty when he is said to have recruited and instigated him. With due respect to Mr Jadeja, learned advocate who G made this criticism, we think that the criticism is unjustified. Firstly, because the point was not put to PW8 under cross-examination at the trial; and secondly, because there was no evidence to suggest that the seventh appellant could not, while on leave, visit this military camp where PW8 worked. After all, the seventh appellant was normally the H man in charge of that military installation. According to PW8 his recruitment was made by the seventh appellant when they met early in the afternoon outside the military camp on 4 January 1983; and that the instigation to sabotage the military installation was made to him by the seventh appellant at Mawenzi Hotel on the evening on 6 January I 1983. The seventh appellant on his side denied recruiting or instigating PW8 as alleged by the prosecution.
NYALALI CJ
On the basis of the evidence of PW8, whom we have already found to be credible and A reliable, and on the strength of the retracted confession of the seventh appellant, which is truthful, there can be no doubt that the seventh appellant did recruit PW8 and instigated him to sabotage the relevant military installation in furtherance of the coup plot. B It follows, therefore, that overt acts numbers 14 and numbers 15 charged in Count 3 are proved against the seventh appellant. We next turn to the case in respect of the eighth appellant.
The prosecution case against the eighth appellant is on two fronts: Firstly there is the C allegation that the eighth appellant participated in conspiratorial meetings at house No 1127 along Chole Road as well as the house at Kinondoni Makaburini. Secondly, there is the allegation that the eighth appellant did sabotage a vital military installation on 6 D January 1983 in furtherance of the coup plot. We start with the first allegation. The only evidence concerning this allegation consists of the extra-judicial statements of the fifth and seventh appellants. The extra-judicial statement of the sixth appellant is silent as far as the eighth appellant is concerned. Now, these retracted confessions of the fifth and E seventh appellants can be taken into consideration only to reinforce an existing substratum of evidence adduced against the eighth appellant concerning his participation in these meetings. There is no substratum of evidence adduced against the eighth appellant on this aspect of the case. This means that the retracted confessions of the fifth and seventh appellants have no leg upon which to stand, and the prosecution F case therefore insofar as it concerns conspiratorial meetings at house No 1127 along Chole Road and the house at Kinondoni Makaburini falls to the ground. These meetings cannot, therefore, be used as evidence of the eighth appellant's involvement in the G conspiracy charged. We must look for other evidence of conspiracy, if any.

We go back to the evidence of PW8, that is, Staff Sergeant Boniface Temu. He testified to the effect that in the evening of 6 January 1983 he and the seventh appellant went to H Mawenzi Hotel where they saw the eighth appellant. After the seventh appellant had some conversation with the eighth appellant, he instructed PW8 to sabotage a vital military installation the following day, and required PW8 to report to the eighth appellant about the results of his assignment. He further testified to the effect that the following I day on 7 January 1983, after sabotaging the relevant military installation, he reported to the eighth appellant and the eighth appellant instructed him not to sleep that day before seeing the seventh appellant. The A conduct of the eighth appellant as disclosed by the evidence of PW8, clearly shows that he was acting in concert with the seventh appellant, who, as already found, was one of the conspirators. By virtue of the provisions of s 12 of the Evidence Act 1967, the B conspiratorial conduct of the seventh appellant in respect of which the eighth appellant acted in concert, can be used as evidence to show that the eighth appellant was also a party to the same conspiracy. On his side, he denies involvement. However, the evidence of PW8 is so compelling that we are led to find that the overt acts of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3 are proved against the eighth appellant. C

As to the allegation of his sabotaging the relevant military installation, it is common ground that on 6 January 1983, the eighth appellant visited Battery No 2 and handled the potential meters of that battery. It is common ground also that the battery then appeared D to be very defective. This was at about 10.30 am. Evidence was given at the trial by PW31, that is, Captain Shabani, and PW32, that is, Lt Christopher Kyariga, to the effect that earlier that day in the morning at about 7.20 am the installation had been checked and found to be functionally in good working order. Thereafter, according to the evidence E of PW31 and PW34, that is Major Henry Jeremia, some Russian experts came to the installation and they left after being informed that everything was in good working order. According to PW31, the eighth appellant thereafter appeared at the scene at about 10.30 am. He handled the potential meters by moving them from left to right, for a declared F purpose of checking the functioning of the installation. The installation was then seen to be very defective. The question then arises, how could this serious defect arise in the light of what had gone before the arrival of the eighth appellant? The prosecution contends that the eighth appellant must have dislocated the installation under the guise G of carrying out a normal checking. The eighth appellant denied this contention. The appellant testified in his defence that he went to check the installation at the material time to enable him to give an accurate report to a special meeting of the regiment which was arranged to take place that day to discuss matters of range practice in which the H installation in question was to be used. This testimony was, however, contradicted by the testimony of PW34 and PW35, that is Lt Colonel Mataji, who was then the Commanding Officer in charge of the relevant air defence regiment. The evidence of I these witnesses shows that the meeting in question had nothing to do with discussions concerning range practice, but was an ordinary executive meeting of the regiment. Moreover, there is an inherent flaw in the testimony of the A eighth appellant. According to him there was a second installation which was to be used in the range practice. This was Battery No 4. The eighth appellant did not check this installation before going to the meeting in question. If the purpose of checking the other B installation, that is, Battery No 2 was to enable the eighth appellant to give an accurate report about the installations that were going to be used in the range practice, how accurate could such a report be said to be without covering the condition of Battery No 4? His testimony on this point is not cogent, and consequently his line of defence on this point collapses. C

There is however a second line of defence on the side of the eighth appellant. It is to the effect that sabotaging Battery No 2 was pointless since the air defence system could have had no role in the coup plot. We think this line of defence is untenable. The D prosecution case, supported by evidence, is to the effect that the conspirators intended to place the air defence system of the City of Dar es Salaam in the hands of fellow conspirators; and for that purpose they intended to move standby situation from Battery No 2 to Battery No 1 where the seventh appellant was in charge. There is evidence also E to the effect that at the material time the remaining batteries, that is, Battery No 3 and Battery No 4 were not in working condition. Undoubtedly, the conspirators would not have failed to realise the importance of having control of the sky over the city of Dar es Salaam. It was necessary to cover the eventuality of a counter coup from the air. In that F respect, the evidence given in the extra-judicial confessions of the fifth and seventh appellants which show that under the coup operation plan, Dar es Salaam International Airport was to be secured by the conspirators on the fateful day is significant.

On p 319 of the stenographers' record of the proceedings, there is evidence given by G PW32, that is, Christopher Beatus Kyariga, to the effect that a serious defect known as `Mistuning' could be occasioned to an air defence battery by mishandling the potential meters, such as rotating them higgledly-piggledly. It is common ground that a mistuning H of the air defence battery concerned was reported by Russian experts who were called subsequently to rectify the defect. On our evaluation of the totality of the evidence, we are satisfied that the eighth appellant must have mishandled the potential meters and rendered the installation defective in furtherance of the conspiracy. We thus find overt I act number 20 charged in Count 3 proved against the eighth appellant.

NYALALI CJ

We finally turn to the case in respect of the ninth appellant. The prosecution case A against the ninth appellant is presented only on one front which concerns the allegation that the ninth appellant made treasonable declarations to PW3, that is, Lt Augustine Pancras Ndejembi. We have already dealt with the credibility of this witness in B connection with his testimony about reporting the conspiracy to the authorities. That evidence shows that the ninth appellant was a party to the conspiracy. On his side, he denies any involvement. In his unsworn testimony given in his defence, he claims to have come to Dar es Salaam not in connection with any coup plot, but for medical C treatment. DW1, that is, Lt Charles Chabruma gave evidence on his side. His unsworn testimony and the testimony of DW1 shows only that the ninth appellant had medical treatment at Lugalo Military Hospital in Dar es Salaam early in November 1982. The evidence does not show that he was still undergoing medical treatment when he met D PW3 towards the end of December 1982 and the beginning of January 1983. There is a suggestion in his unsworn testimony to the effect that he remained in Dar es Salaam until the time of his arrest, waiting to appear before a medical board, which was to determine whether or not the ninth appellant should continue serving in the army. E This suggestion, however, could not be tested under cross-examination as the ninth appellant testified without being sworn.

In our view, it is no more than a suggestion and is completely overwhelmed by the evidence of PW3. We are quite satisfied that the ninth appellant made the treasonable F declarations as testified by PW3.

Mr Jadeja, learned advocate, has submitted in the course of this appeal that as a matter of law the declaration made by the ninth appellant to PW3 does not amount to an overt act. We have already dealt with this point in respect of one of the appellants, but there is G one aspect which we need to point out here. Although it is correct to say that in law, words as a general rule do not constitute overt acts, we think that that legal position applies only to treason by individual persons. It does not apply to treason by more than one person acting under a conspiracy. This is because in law the conspiracy itself H constitutes an overt act and a conspiracy is usually expressed by words spoken by the conspirators.

There is a further point here. The treasonable declarations made by the ninth appellant to PW3 are not only evidence showing that he was a party to the conspiracy, they also I show why the ninth appellant left Nachingwea, where he was normally posted, and came to Dar es Salaam. On p 40 of the Judge's notes of the proceedings PW3 testified: A

NYALALI CJ

`He said he had come to Lugalo from Nachingwea on the pretext that he was being sick and was being treated at Lugalo.' B

This declaration, therefore, falls within the exceptions listed in Hale's Pleas of the Crown cited earlier, and was properly charged as a separate overt act against the ninth appellant.

We now turn to consideration of the guilt of each of the appellants. In respect of the first C appellant, the learned Jaji Kiongozi found the overt acts of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3 proved against the first appellant. We have found the same. The overt acts numbers 2, 5, 6 and 7 in Count 3 were also found established in the court below. We have also come to the same conclusion. We have not considered the overt acts D which were not established at the trial since no appeal was made by the prosecution.

As to the second appellant, the overt acts of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3 as well as overt acts number 2 in Count 1 and number 10 in Count 3 were found established by the trial court. We have also found the same in this appeal. E

With regard to the overt acts concerning the third appellant, the trial court found established the overt acts of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3. There was no other overt act concerning him. We have also come to the same conclusion. F

Turning to the overt acts concerning the fourth appellant, the trial court found established the overt acts of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3 as well as overt act number 7 in Count 3. We have also come to the same conclusion.

With regard to the overt acts concerning the fifth and sixth appellants, the trial court G found established against each of these appellants the overt acts of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3. Similarly overt act number 13 was found established against the fifth appellant. We have come to the same conclusion concerning the overt acts of conspiracy, but we have not found sufficient evidence in respect of overt act number 13 in Count 3. H

We turn next to the seventh appellant. The trial court found established the overt acts of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3. Similarly overt acts numbers 14 and 15 charged in Count 3 were found established. We have also come to the same conclusion. As to the eighth appellant, the court below found established the overt acts I of conspiracy charged in counts 1, 2 and 3 as well as overt act number 20 in Count 3. We have also arrived at the same conclusion. A

Finally, we turn to the overt acts concerning the ninth appellant. The court below found established the overt acts of conspiracy charged in Counts 1, 2 and 3. We have also come to the same conclusion. B

The learned Jaji Kiongozi proceeded to convict each of the appellants upon proof of the overt acts concerned without considering the other ingredients of the offence of treason. With due respect, this was an error on his part. Proof of an overt act on a charge of treason-contrary to s 39(2)(a) of the Penal Code does not necessarily lead to a C conviction. The court must also satisfy itself that the accused had the appropriate intention and was under allegiance to the United Republic at the material time. In the present case, there can be no doubt on the evidence that each of the appellants intended to cause or effect the illegal purposes of the treasonable conspiracy while D under allegiance to the United Republic. The convictions therefore cannot be disturbed by this Court. We now turn to the sentences imposed by the trial court.

Each of the appellants was sentenced to life imprisonment. The maximum penalty for the offence of treason is death. It has been argued by learned advocates for the E appellants that the sentence of life imprisonment is excessive in the present case, since at the time when the appellants were arrested the coup plot had not been implemented and no life or property had been lost or put in danger by the conspirators. It was further F argued that the different roles played by the appellants was not taken into account in imposing the sentence and that the appellants were sentenced not for what they had actually done, but for the probable consequences of their conspiracy. We have seriously considered these arguments and we must point out that the offence of treason, by its G nature and under the circumstances of a coup plot, is a unique offence for which an accused person, if convicted, is invariably sentenced for the probable consequences of his action. This is because, if the coup plot succeeds, the plotters are never tried, never convicted, and never sentenced. It is a reality of life that when a treasonable coup plot H succeeds, the treason ceases to exist.

There is another important point which we must mention. In the new countries of the third world, history shows that coup d'etats do have disastrous consequences on the future of countries which have experienced such events. Most of them have become I what are known jocularly as `Banana Republics' without domestic or international respect. Everyone knows that our country enjoys great international respect. A Because of this state of affairs every Tanzanian, in spite of our current national economic under-development, is able to hold his head high in the international community. Had the appellants succeeded in implementing their coup plot, Tanzania B would have inevitably become a Banana Republic, riddled with coups and counter-coups, and fit only for ridicule by the enemies of Africa for many generations to come. That appalling prospect cannot be ignored in determining an appropriate sentence.

It was also submitted that the appellants acted as they did not out of lust for power, but C in a genuine belief that they could remedy the problems facing the national economy by changing the established Government through a coup d'etat. In considering this argument, we bear in mind the fact that with the exception of the first appellant, the remaining appellants were senior officers in the army. Moreover, on the evidence, all the D appellants appear to be well educated. They must have known that coup d'etats, as opposed to progressive revolutions, have never solved problems of the national economy in the third world, and instead such coup d'etats have made economic problems worse in the countries affected. E

As to the submissions concerning failure by the Jaji Kiongozi to take into account the different roles played by the individual appellants, it is true that there was such a failure. What we have to ask ourselves is whether the learned Jaji Kiongozi would have imposed lesser sentences to all or any of the appellants if he had made a distinction F concerning the different roles played by the appellants. We think the position here cuts both ways. It is probable that some of the appellants, particularly those who played a leading role, could have attracted a heavier sentence- that is the maximum sentence. We think that in the circumstances of this case, it would be unjust to consider a G reduction of the sentences in respect of some of the appellants without considering the possibility of the Jaji Kiongozi enhancing the sentences in respect of some of the appellants. But since we did not hear arguments on either side on the issue of enhancement, we are not in a position to do so now. H

One of the cardinal principles upon which an appellate court may interfere with a sentence imposed by a trial court on the basis of severity of sentence is to the effect that an appellate court will not interfere unless such sentence is manifestly excessive. In the present case, we do not think that the sentences imposed by the trial court are manifestly excessive under the circumstances of this case, since it is probable that the learned Jaji Kiongozi could have imposed higher sentences if he had considered the separate roles played by the appellants. A For this reason, the appeals against the sentences cannot succeed.

In the final analysis, therefore, we now dismiss the appeals of all the appellants in their entirety. B

The Respondent herein obtained judgment against the present Applicant in the Resident Magistrate's Court at Kisutu on 30 May 1990. The Applicant, who filed his notice of appeal outside the permissible period, now applies for leave to appeal against the Magistrates' Court's decision and a stay of execution pending the intended appeal. The H Respondent took the point, broadly, that Applicant's affidavit in support of the application does not state under what provision of the law his application is brought.

Held:

(i) The application being one for leave to appeal out of time and for stay of execution pending the outcome of the appeal, it should reasonably be treated as an application brought in terms of Section 14(1) of the

1996 TLR p72

Law of Limitation Act, 1971, and Order 39 rule 5(4) of the Criminal Procedure Act, respectively.

(ii) In a case where a layman, unaware of the process of the machinery of justice, tries to get relief before the courts, procedural rules should not be used to defeat justice and the irregularities in an affidavit are curable in terms of Section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code.

(iii) Leave to appeal out of time is granted to the Applicant and stay of execution pending the appeal is ordered.

Mkwawa J: This is basically an application for leave to appeal out of time to this court and stay of execution pending the appeal. The applicant was sued by the respondent before the resident magistrate's court at Kisutu whereupon judgment was entered against him. He now seeks to appeal to this court against the decision of the trial court. The applicant has, however, learnt that as he has filed his intended appeal outside the legal permissible period. He has therefore to obtain leave of this court to do so and hence this instant application. This matter proceeded ex-parte because the respondent's advocate refused service summons on the grounds that this application was set down for hearing on 11 April 1991 and not 15 January 1991. This being the state of affairs I find myself compelled to mention that this new date was set down consequent to the applicant's application for an only hearing date under certificate of urgency.

The applicant in his affidavit in support of this application has deposed that judgment against him was delivered on 30 May 1990. On 9 June 1990 he went to the Civil Registry of the Court of the Resident Magistrate at Kisutu with his relevant papers to have them filed for his intended appeal to this court. He further avers that the court official refused the said papers on the grounds that time for his appeal had already expired.

On rebuttal the respondent has through his counter-affidavit challenged this instant application inter alia on the following grounds:

(i) The affidavit does not disclose source of information.

(ii) The chamber summons is misconceived and/or founded on no law.

1996 TLR p73

MKWAWA J

(iii) The applicant has not raised sufficient cause to support this application.

I have carefully considered the arguments raised from both sides. There is no doubt or rather dispute, as it is rightly pointed by the respondent in his counter-affidavit that the B application does not state under what provision of the law this application is brought. But this state of affairs is understandable as the applicant is a layman and had no assistance from a counsel in bringing action. As this is an application for leave to appeal C out of time and stay of execution pending the determination of the intended appeal, it is reasonable and fair to treat it as an application brought under the provisions of s 14(1) of the Law of Limitation Act 10 of 1971 and Order 30 Rule 5(4) of the Criminal Procedure Act respectively. D

I have further noted other irregularities in the deponent's affidavit taking into account the most celebrated case of Standard Goods Corporation Ltd v Harak Chand Nathan & Co (1) where the defunct Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa held that when an affidavit is made in information it should not be acted upon by any court unless the sources of E information are specified. While dwelling on this matter I understand that procedural rules are intended to serve as the hand maiden of justice and not to defeat or frustrate it, and it can be denied that the strict application of the rule in question may in certain cases amount to legal formalisation. In the light of the foregoing I am of the settled view F that this Court like any other court worthy of the name has the duty to look into the matter sympathetically with a broad mind and most realistic approach. In order to do justice to the case, especially in a case where a layman, unaware of the process of the machinery of justice, tries to get remedy procedural rules should not be used to defeat G justice. In my view the irregularities in the affidavit are curable by the provisions of s 95 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The basic point for consideration and determination in the instant application is whether the applicant had reasonable or sufficient cause on which this court may exercise its H discretion and extend the time for appeal as there are no reasons why I should disbelieve the applicant's explanation. Having regard to all the facts and the circumstances of this case, I find that the applicant has shown sufficient cause for allowing his application. In the result leave to appeal of time and stay of execution I pending the determination of the appeal are accordingly granted. The applicant should file his appeal to this court within twenty one days (21) from this date upon paying the A usual fees in time.

The matter to be mentioned before the Registrar on 2 February 1991 with a view to fixing a hearing date. The results of this ruling should be brought to the notice of the respondent. Order accordingly. B

Civil Practice and Procedure - Leave to appeal - Application for - when granted. F
-Headnote
This is an application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal, arising from an order of Masanche J refusing to admit the appeal to hearing and duly striking it out of the registry. The subject matter of the dispute inter partes relates to land. G
Held:

(i) Before entering default judgment, the trial magistrate ought to have invited the plaintiff to prove his case ex-parte.

(ii) The holding that the appeal to this Court is time-barred is contentious, and accordingly cannot be disposed of summarily without hearing the parties' submissions on the question. H

(iii) The matter raises contentious issues of law and is a fit case for further consideration by the Court of Appeal.

Case Information
Application granted.
[zJDz]Judgment
I Msumi J: This is an application for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal. The matter came to this court as an appeal from the District Court. For reasons stipulated in the Order, this court presided by Masanche, J A refused to admit the appeal to hearing hence ordered it to be struck out of the registry. In this application the applicant is seeking leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal. In support of this application the learned counsel advanced three arguments. First he pointed out B that the land in dispute was unregistered and so the matter ought to have started in primary court. The trial District Court had no jurisdiction on the case. Secondly, he is submitting that since the subject matter in this case is land, judgment in default could only be entered after ex-parte proof by the plaintiff. There was no such proof in the C present case. And lastly the learned counsel is challenging this court's holding that the rejected appeal is time barred.
It is evident that the land in dispute is unregistered. This fact has been conceded by the learned counsel for the respondent. The second complaint is equally strong. Before D entering judgment in default, the learned trial magistrate ought to have invited the plaintiff to prove his case ex-parte. And lastly the holding that the appeal to this court is time-barred is contentious. It cannot be dismissed summarily without availing opportunity for submission of the parties. E

In conclusion, I am of the considered view that the three arguments raise contentious issues of law. Hence this is a fit case for further consideration by the Court of Appeal. The application is therefore granted as prayed. F

Contract - Contract of employment - Wrongful termination - Reinstatement of employee to previous position - Claim by employee for various allowances owing and incurred during the period of his suspension. D

-Headnote

The Appellant was employed as a `technical communicator' by the Respondent. Subsequent to the Respondent terminating the Appellant's contract of employment, the Appellant succeeded in having this termination invalidated by the Court of Appeal (Civil E Appeal No. 36 of 1987). The present appeal is lodged against the finding of the Resident Magistrate, Dar es Salaam, at Kisutu, allowing the Appellant only 15,000/= for medical expenses, and dismissing his claims for `depreciation allowance' and `tools box allowance' incurred during the period of his suspension from the Respondent. F

It was not in dispute that his position at the Respondent entitled the Appellant to these allowances. The trial court dismissed the claims on the basis that the Appellant was not employed by the Respondent during the period of his suspension and accordingly did not render any services to the Respondent warranting the claims. G

Held:

(i) The Appellant failed to comply with the Respondent's circular governing medical claims in that he did not consult any of the approved medical organisations and institutions.

(ii) Once there is an order for an employee's reinstatement, he is entitled to all his H rights as the contract of employment has revived with all its incidents.

(iii) The Appellant's claims for the two allowances are upheld, and the appeal succeeds in respects of those two claims.

(iv) The Appellant is allowed his costs in this Court and in the court below. I

Adamjee, for the Respondent. B

Mkwawa J: This appeal arises out of the judgment and decree of the learned senior resident magistrate of the Court of the Resident Magistrate, Dar es Salaam at Kisutu. Before the lower court the appellant had inter alia filed claim for medical expenses, C depreciation allowance and tools box allowances. Those claims were dismissed by the lower court and being aggrieved with the said decision the appellant now appeals to this court.

It is common ground that the suit which gave rise to the instant appeal springs from the D decision of the Court of Appeal (Civ App No 36 of 1987) which invalidated the appellant's termination of employment. It is further common ground that consequent to the decision of the Court of Appeal the appellant was reinstated to his previous employment namely in the respondent's/defendant's company where he worked as a technical communicator. It is further not in dispute that the appellant by the virtue of his E position in office he was entitled to various allowances. He was thus entitled inter alia to allowances like `depreciation allowance, tools allowances and medical allowances.'

The trial court disallowed the depreciation and tools allowances solely on the ground that F during the period of his termination he was not in the employment of the respondent and he thus did not render any services to the respondent to warrant him to base the claims now before me. The appellant had put up a claim of Shs 49,130/= as his medical entitlement. The trial resident magistrate allowed Shs 15,000/= only and disallowed the G rest of the claim.

I feel constrained to mention right from the outset that there has been no cross-appeal from the respondent company. This being the state of affairs this court is only called upon to determine the appeal of the appellant/plaintiff and this is precisely what I will do H though I have my reservations and misgivings in that some of the claims that have been allowed by the trial court. But for the forementioned reasons I will refrain from making any further opinion on them as I have not been called upon to do so.

I The appellant in his memorandum of appeal takes the following grounds:

MKWAWA J

A `1. That the learned trial Senior Resident Magistrate erred in law in holding that I be paid Shs 15,000/= for medical expenses, and not the full amount as per the produced receipts.

2. That the learned trial Senior Resident Magistrate misdirected himself in not awarding me the depreciation allowance which was payable during leave period too. B

3. That the learned trial Senior Resident Magistrate misdirected himself in not awarding me the tools box allowance which was also payable during leave period.'

Before the lower court and in this court the appellant who appeared in person urged the C court to allow his claims on the following grounds:

As regards the medical claims the appellant has maintained in both courts that he was entitled to a refund of the expenses he had undergone principally on the basis that the medicines/drugs that he had purchased were not available in the clinics D authorised/approved by the respondent company.

I now turn to the other claims, namely the depreciation and tools allowances. Here the appellant contends that as the termination was unlawful and that he did not contribute to E the anomalous situation the employer is under obligation to pay him his allowances.

In rebuttal Mr Adamjee for the respondent company argued that generally the appellant can not be paid the allowances in question as at the relevant period he was not physically engaged in any official duties on behalf of the respondent/defendant. Coming to specifics, Mr Adamjee submitted as follows: F

The appellant could not demand to be refunded the expenses he incurred in meeting the medical bills because he did not follow the rules and procedures laid down by the G respondent company. Mr Adamjee submitted that a circular was issued by the respondent company to its management staff, giving names of approved medical organisations and institutions. The available evidence has amply shown that the appellant did not consult any of the approved organisations.

As regards the appellant's claim for depreciation allowance, Mr Adamjee submitted on H behalf of the respondent company that the claim was baseless because the use for the vehicle should be for `official company business'. It could not be argued that at the relevant period the appellant was using his vehicle for official company business as his services, during the relevant period, had been terminated. I

the tools allowance. Here again, he submitted that the appellant was not there to use his A tools. He could not therefore lay any claim on the use of tools as he did not at all use them for the company's business. The crux of the matter is whether the appellant is entitled, in law, to be paid the allowances in question under the forementioned circumstances. B

I will begin with the medical claims. It is beyond dispute that the appellant failed to comply with the circular governing medical claims. I respectfully accept Mr Adamjee's submission that the appellant's claim cannot succeed. The appellant had shown total C disregard for the respondent company's instructions in respect of such claims. I have considerable difficulty in seeing how he should succeed on this ground. For the foregoing reasons this ground fails and it is accordingly so ordered.

I now turn to the depreciation allowance and the tools allowance which I shall deal with D collectively. It is not in dispute that the appellant did not work for the respondent at the time, he was terminated. Bearing this in mind it would be wrong to ask the respondent to pay the appellant the allowances he is now claiming. All things being equal this would amount to unjust enrichment by the appellant. E

On the other hand it has been argued by the appellant that he did not contribute to this anomalous situation. He was in this case ready and willing to work for the respondent but, as the evidence amply demonstrated, the respondent would not let him work. Admittedly an allowance is not a salary. But, it is common knowledge that allowances F are paid out to employees to augument the otherwise low statutory salaries. In the instant matter the lower court has allowed the appellant's claim for the unpaid salaries during the material period and as I had indicated much earlier on the respondent has not cross-appealed to challenge the said decision which I must say is sound in law. G

As it was held in the case of Measure Brothers v Measures (1), which was quoted with approval by this court by Mnzavas JK (as he then was) in the case of Tanzania Harbours Authority v Wendelin Ludger (2), that: H

> `it is elementary justice that one of the parties to a contract shall not get rid of his responsibilities there under by disabling the other contractor from fulfilling his part of the bargain'.

In the instant matter the respondent company wrongly terminated the appellant from I work. Can he now turn round and say that the appellant is not entitled to what he would have received had he been in A employment. I do not hesitate to answer in the negative. Once there is an order for reinstatement the employee is entitled to all his rights as the contract of employment has revived with all its incidents. This appears to be the principle enunciated in Wendelin's case (supra). In my view to hold otherwise would make neither equity, justice or even B sense.

For the foregoing reasons these two grounds of appeal succeed and it is accordingly ordered so. The appellant is to have his costs of this court and that below. C Company Law - Charge to secure a loan - Misstatement on charge document of amount secured - Rectification of.

-Headnote

The Applicant in the present case applied for the rectification of two documents to record G properly a secured amount of US$ 904,000, loaned by the Applicant to the First Respondent. The two documents in question were `Form No.9', being the particulars of a charge to secure a loan from the Applicant, and a Certificate of Registration of Charge (`Form C.2'), held by the Registrar of Companies (Second Respondent). H

Form No.9 repeated the terms of the debenture, issued by the First Respondent as security for the loan from the Applicant, as follows: `Single debenture for US$ 904,000 (or the equivalent thereto (sic) in other convertible currencies) being approximately Shs.16,626,500/=.'

In Form C.2, however, the Second Respondent entered that the debenture was `to I secure the sum of shillings sixteen million six twenty six thousand five hundred (Shs 16,626,500/=) only'.

The Applicant contended that the amount in both documents expressed in shillings was A a misstatement and that both documents should be rectified to state the amount expressed in United States dollars only.

Held:

(i) The loan agreement, which gave rise to the two documents under consideration, indicates clearly that the loan advanced by the Applicant to the B First Respondent was US$ 904,000 by way of a foreign currency loan.

(ii) The amount secured by the debenture throughout it was stated to be US$ 904 000.

(iii) The amount of Shs 16,626,500/= expressed in both documents was clearly a misstatement. C

(iv) The preliminary objections raised by the Respondents, against the bringing of the application itself, the validity of the affidavit used by the Applicant and time-barring of the application, such preliminary objections are overruled.

(v) The application succeeds with costs. D

(vi) The Second Respondent is ordered, within 14 days from the date of delivery of ruling, to rectify forms No.9 and C.2, as well as his register of charges, to show that the amount secured is US$ 904,000.

(vii) The First Respondent is similarly ordered to rectify his register of charges to reflect that the debenture is security for US$ 904,000 only. E

Kyando J: In this application Tanzania Development Finance Co Ltd, the applicant, G applies for the following reliefs against the respondents:

`(a) An order that in both companies Form No 9, being particulars of a charge created by the first respondent to secure a loan from TDFL misstated the amount to Shs 16 626 500/= and a Certificate of Registration of Charge issued by the second respondent in respect thereof be

H rectified so as to properly record the amount secured as being US$904 000 on grounds that the misstatement of the sum secured was due to inadvertence or alternatively, that on grounds stated in the supporting affidavit it is just and equitable to grant the relief. I

(b) Costs of this application.'

KYANDO J

The deponent of the affidavit in support of the application is Rugambwa Cyril John A Pesha, the Company Secretary of the applicant, and in his affidavit it is shown, inter alia, that the objects for which the applicant was established are, amongst others, to lend money with or without security. `As such lender,' he states in para 3 of his affidavit, `the B applicant was to serve as a conduct for channeling external assistance to economically feasible and financially attractive projects in the country so as to effectively utilise the country's development potential. Shortly after its incorporation it commenced to carry on and has since carried on the business in pursuance of the said objects.' C

The above therefore are the functions of the applicant. Needless to say, both the applicant and the first respondent, Calico Textile Industries Ltd, are companies registered under the Companies Ordinance, Cap 212. The second respondent is the registrar of companies in terms of the provisions of the Companies Ordinance. D

In para 4 of the affidavit in support of the application it is stated that pursuant to the objective for the applicant's establishment the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania in 1978 permitted the applicant to borrow funds from the International Bank for E Reconstruction and Development (`The World Bank') for lending to projects in Tanzania. In para 5, it is stated,

`5. That on 27 April 1979; the applicant agreed to provide Calico Textile Industries Limited, the first Respondent herein, with Shs2,500,00/= by way of Income Notes and US $904,000 (or the equivalent F in other convertible currencies) by way of a foreign currency loan.'

The respondents do not dispute that this loan was advanced-as stated by the applicant. It (the loan) was provided under a Loan Agreement entered into between the applicant G and the first respondent dated 8 December 1985 (exh `C' annexed to the affidavit of Mr Pesha). It was then secured by a debenture created and issued by the first respondent. The debenture, in terms of s 79 of the Companies Ordinance, was then registered by the second respondent.

On the top cover of the debenture it is stated in the form of a title or subject as follows: H

`Single Debenture for US $904,000 (or the equivalent thereto in other convertible currencies) being approximately Shs16,626,500/=.' I

In registering the debenture the second respondent entered in the

KYANDO J

Certificate of Registration of a charge (form C2) (exh `F' to Mr Pesha's affidavit) that the A debenture was to secure the sum of shillings sixteen million six twenty six thousand five hundred (T Shs 16 626 500/=) only. The form for the particulars of a mortgage or charge created by a company registered in Tanzania, pursuant to s 79 (supra) (form No 9) (exh `E' to Mr Pesha's affidavit (the second respondent says the correct form No 9 is B annex (i) to his counter affidavit, and I think this is so) had been presented to the second respondent and it was on the basis of it that he issued form C2.

This year the first respondent sent to the second respondent a `Memorandum of C Satisfaction of Mortgage or Charge', dated 6 May 1992. The memorandum is as follows:

`CAP 212

MEMORANDUM OF SATISFACTION D

OF MORTGAGE OR CHARGE

CALICO TEXTILE INDUSTRIES LIMITED P.O. BOX 9021, DAR ES SALAAM, HEREBY gives notice that the registered Charge being DEBENTURE DATED DECEMBER, 1985, TO SECURE THE SUM OF SHILLINGS SIXTEEN MILLION SIX HUNDRED TWENTY SIX THOUSAND FIVE E HUNDRED (T.SHS.16,626,500/= ONLY IN FAVOUR OF TANGANYIKA/TANZANIA DEVELOPMENT FINANCE COMPANY LIMITED of which particulars were registered with the Registrar of Companies on the TWENTIETH day of DECEMBER 1985, was satisfied on the TWENTY THIRD day of F DECEMBER 1988 to the extent of T.SHS. SEVENTEEN MILLION FOUR HUNDRED THIRTY EIGHT AND CENTS THIRTY FIVE (T.SHS.17,418,438/35) ONLY.

In witness whereof the common seal of the company was hereunder affixed the SIXTH day of MAY 1992.' G

A `Declaration Verifying Memorandum of Satisfaction of Mortgage or Charge' in terms s 84 (exh G) was duly issued and the memorandum was annexed to it. On the basis of the memorandum and exh `G' to Mr Pesha's affidavit, the second respondent issued a H certificate (exh `H'). Certifying that the charge created on 18 December 1985 by the first respondent in favour of the applicant `to secure the sum of Shs sixteen million six twenty six thousand five hundred (Shs 16,625,500/=) only has been discharged'. I

The certificate is dated 7 May 1992 and is signed by the second respondent.

KYANDO J

It is now the case for the applicant in this application that the sum of Shs 16 625 500/= A which is indicated in form No 9 and the Certificate of Registration of Charge (form C2) (exhs `E' and `F' respectively) was a misstatement and that it ought to have been mentioned in them that the sum which was secured by the debenture was US $904,00 B only ie without stating the Shs 16 626 500/= as now stated therein. Hence the request that:

`The register of charges be rectified by deleting therefrom reference to T.Shs.16,626,500/= (both in words and figures) so as to reflect the amount secured by the debenture as being US $904,000 only.' C

It is contended by the applicant that by the terms of the loan agreement and the debenture, the money loaned, and secured, was US $904 000 (or the equivalent in other convertible currencies) by way of a foreign currency loan. In para 6 of his affidavit, Mr D Pesha states that the repayment of the loan was to be made in shillings at the National Bank of Commerce selling rate on the date of payment for the foreign currency. Finally, in para 15, he states that the only reference to Shs 16 625 500/= in the loan documents was, as shown already, on the cover of the debenture, and that the reference thereon, E

`was solely meant to state the Tanzania shilling equivalent of the foreign currency loan at the date thereof for the purposes of calculation of stamp duty which was payable in Tanzania shillings. To the extent that T.Shs were referred to in the loan agreement and the debenture it was solely for the F purposes of providing for the manner of payment of the foreign currency loan and not for defining the currency in which the loan was to be secured.'

It is finally the applicant's case that the declaration of satisfaction and the memorandum G of satisfaction of a charge or mortgage (supra) are false and the certificate issued by the second respondent certifying the discharge of the charge is void ab initio.

I have already stated that the respondents do not dispute that the loan was advanced as H asserted by the applicant. Looking through their counter affidavits and written submissions (I required counsel for both sides to file written submission), they do not, too, seem to dispute that the loan advanced was US $904 000 (or the equivalent in other convertible currencies) by way of a foreign currency loan. They did not, in other words, I contend that what was agreed between the parties to be loaned, and what was actually loaned, was

Shs 16 626 500/=. Their contention appears to me to be that even if the agreed loan was A US $904 000 (or the equivalent in other convertible currencies) by way of a foreign currency loan, such amount in the documents of registration of charges Form 9 and C2 (supra) could only have been expressed in Tanzania currency and that amount at the relevant time was equivalent to Shs 16 626 500/=. They make this point in passionate B terms, the first respondent's counsel Mr Ismail submitting, for instance as follows:

`My learned friend has dealt at great length on the loan agreement and the admissions, but suffice it C so may it is the debenture that is important in the application at hand.

The amount secured by the debenture in equivalent to the foreign currency loan ie as at 1985 $904,000 was equivalent to Shillings 16,626,500/=. Indeed it would have been impossible to inset a figure other than Shs.16,626,500/= as at that time that was the value of $904,000. My learned friend is D seeking to insert a foreign currency in the charge! It is my respectful submission that the suggestion is preposterous. The Companies Ordinance like all other legislation in this country is meant to provide for situations in this country. The Bank of Tanzania Act 1966 specifically states in Section 1, of Part III-that "the unit of currency in Tanzania shall be the shilling, each shilling shall be E divided into one hundred cents".

Section 26 of the same Act states--"the bank shall have the sole right to issue bank notes and coins for Tanzania and subject to Section 33, only bank notes and coins issued by the Bank shall be legal tender in Tanzania" (Section 33 is only a transitory section). F

Indeed it would be unlawful for any government department to accept or quantify any documents in a currency other than the Tanzanian shilling. It should always be remembered that currency, like a flag, national anthem etc, are the ingredients of sovereignty and one should not treat such issues lightly. It G would amount to Tanzania subjecting her sovereignty to that of the United States if my learned friends' submissions were accepted. And one can imagine the chaos and mess it would bring. What would be the position if a loan were pegged to the Japanese Yen, Australian dollar, Saudi Arabia's rial, Oman's rial, Dubai's dirham etc etc? Indeed it is a well known fact that institutions and our own H government received aid/loans/grants from various foreign donors-but that it is a matter of international trade and not within the precincts of our courts.

The evidence on record, and even my learned friend admits that the figure of Shs.16 626,500/= was recorded in form 9 as against that of sus. $904,000 without malice. He however submits that it was I done inadvertently. In my respectful submission that that is the understatement of the year. All parties were aware that the debenture was for security of Shs.16,626,500-but the instalments were to be paid at the rate of the dollar to the A shilling at the material time. Indeed the loan agreement was a mere formality, as the money was disbursed to the First Respondent between 1980 to January 1985 (Paragraph 8 of the First Respondent's affidavit)--whereas the debenture and the loan agreement were registered and signed in December 1985.' B

And the second respondent submits:

`It is not my intention to reply to every submission by the Applicant because most of them involve the C Loan Agreement which is a Contract between the Applicant and the First Respondent and the Second respondent is a stranger to the said contract, thus I will only devote to these submissions that concerns me and I submit as follows:

(i) The relief sought by this Application is only one and is clearly stated in paragraph 20 of Mr. D Pesha's Affidavit and with my foremost humble apologies to your Lordship I beg to quote the same as I do hereby quote:

" That in the premises it is just and equitable for an order to be made by this Honourable Court that the register of charges be rectified by deleting therefrom reference to Tshs.16,626,500/= E (both in words and figures) so as to reflect the amount received by the debenture as being US dollars 904,000 only" I quote. (The emphasis is mine.)

(a) In this prayer the Deponent on behalf of the Applicant states that the amount was received by the debenture.

F And this is the Content of his prayer of relief. What his statement means is that the amount was received by somebody else or another entity and not by the first respondent. One wonders as to why there should be an application against the first respondent if the Applicant states that the Applicant was not the recipient of the amount. G

(b) The Applicant is apparently praying for equity. It is my humble submission that it is a principle of law that equity should follow the law and not vise versa.

(c) It is apparent that the Applicant is not applying for an increase or decrease of the amount H but is praying for the substitution, declaration and erasing of the currency Tanzania Shillings and replacement with a foreign currency called US dollars. This prayer is objected to in the strongest terms and intention due to the fact that it is a prayer/application which is totally against the laws of the Sovereign State of United I Republic of Tanzania and the said laws are.

(i) The Companies Ordinance A

Section 2(1) of the Companies Ordinance Cap 212 provides among other things the definition of rules to the Companies Ordinance as follows and I quote:

"Rules" means rules made under section 285 of this Ordinance and includes forms; B

I humbly submit that the Certificate of Registration of a charge is a form and is commonly known as form C2 and therefore is part of the rules to the Companies Ordinance and it was so made under the provisions of Section 285 of the said Cap. 212. Annexure marked (ii) to my Affidavit is a photocopy of the said form C2 otherwise known as certificate of registration of a C charge. The greater part of the said form is prepared and only provides some dotted gaps where the Registrar enters the necessary entries eg. dates, name of the creator of the charge, name of the entity for which the charge is created in favour of, the amount secured-etc.

The said form clearly mentions the currency shillings and leaves no doubt that the currency to D be stated in shillings and no other currency. In Annexure II to my Affidavit I have marked the place where the currency shillings is stated in the form and the marking is in light red colour.

I humbly request your Lordship to see the said mark and note the stated currency. E

The Applicant's prayer is that this Honourable Court should order the deletion or erasing of the term (currency) shilling.

It is my humble submission that if such order was to be issued same would amount to amending form C2 (Certificate of Registration of a Charge) and therefore amending the F rules-which are made under Section 285 of the Companies Ordinance Cap. 212. Section 285 gives the power to make rules to the Minister responsible for Companies Incorporation and with due respect not to the Court.

I further submit that rules to any state are part and parcel of that statute. An Application to the G Court for an order amounting to an amendment of any rules is an application to the Court to amend the statute in question.

With all humbleness and due respect I have to inform the Applicant and remind the Applicant's Advocate that courts of law have powers to interpret laws but not to enact nor amend laws. H

(ii) The Bank of Tanzania Act No. 12 of 1966

(a) Section 24 of Act No. 12 of 1966 provides as follows and I quote "The Unit of currency in I Tanzania shall be the Shilling, each shilling being divided into one hundred cents."

1996 TLR p88

KYANDO J

(b) Section 26 of Act No. 12 of 1966 provides as follows and I quote: A

"The Bank shall have the sole right to issue bank notes and coins in and for Tanzania and, subject to Section 33, only bank notes and coins issued by the bank shall be legal tender in Tanzania.

I submit that from the provisions of the above quoted Sections of the bank of Tanzania Act, Act B No. 12 of 1966 it is too obvious that the currency and legal tender of Tanzania is the shilling or to be more specific Tanzania Shilling and no other currency.

The charge in question is a charge created by a Tanzanian Company in favour of another C Tanzanian Company. It is a charge between two artificial Tanzanians and it is absurd for them to be governed while within Tanzania by a currency and legal tender other than their national currency.

National currency, are like national flags, anthems and borders, they are the landmarks of D sovereignty and they cannot and should not be taken lightly. We know from our recent history that when Idi Amin took our national borders lightly we went to war against him to defend our sovereignty. National currency shares the same status like the borders and the National anthem and an application that the National currency should be deleted from a government E official document is nothing less than an insult to Tanzania and its sovereignty.

It is my submission that this prayer should fail because it contravenes an existing statute enacted by the Parliament of Tanzania. Further that if it is allowed it will set a bad precedent F which will cause untold chaos, mess and confusion in the carrying out of the duties of the Registrar of Companies and the registrar of Charges under the custody of the Registrar will end up being a completely un-systematic registrar containing every conceivable currency on G earth depending on what every applicant prefers. Same would include Dutchemarks, Kroners, Rubles, Rials, Rand, Kwachas, Naira etc.

While I concede that some of the foreign loans are given in foreign currencies, that is a matter of international trade but not within the practice of our Court. Indeed even the national budget H is composed of local resources and foreign resources but the framing of the budget is strictly on the national currency and not any other currency. To allow this prayer to succeed will, to quote the distinguished words of the Honourable Judge Kyanod in the case of Seiff Hamad Shariff v R "will create a bad policy and a wrong policy." I therefore repeat that this prayer and I the whole Application should be dismissed.

He also disputes that there was a misstatement in the forms registering the charge and A on this he submits as follows:

`To do some justice to the submissions of the applicant I will make the following few submissions/replies.

(i) On page two (2) of the submissions of the Learned Advocate of the applicant, the Learned B Advocate states that the first respondent misstated the amount (of money) secured by stating in Form No 9 which is the Applicant's exhibit `E'. This allegation is strongly denied and the true fact is as follows: C

Form No. 9 is divided into five (5) columns two (2) of the columns in which the amount secured by the Mortgage or charge is stated. I humbly crave to draw your Lordship's attention to my Annexure (i). In the said column two the first respondent or his Advocate stated as follows and I quote "Amount Secured by the Mortgage or Charge as US Dollars 904,500 D being approximately Shs.16,626,600/=. The first respondent did not state that the amount secured is Shs.16,626,500/= being approximately US Dollars 904,000." The statement is exactly in the same manner that the Applicant is submitting to the Court and it is surprising E that the Applicant is disputing it, a situation which amounts to disputing his own submission. I humbly submit that there was no misstatement on the part of the first respondent and this submission by the applicant should not be entertained.

There having been no misstatement on the part of the first respondent, it is my submission F that the issuance of the Certificate of Registration of the Charge by the second respondent in the manner it was issued was not occasioned nor influenced by any misstatement by the first respondent. G

The registration and issuance of the certificate was done in accordance with the provisions of the law.

I further submit that if the Second respondent had registered and issued the certificate in any H other manner e.g. entering the amount secured in US Dollars same would have been illegal because it would have contravened the provisions of the governing law.'

The other important arguments made by the respondents are that there is no longer any charge created by the first respondent in favour of the applicant `due to the fact that the I then existing charge was discharged on 6 May, 1992', and that as no application has been made for a declaration that the discharge is null and void the application is A incompetent as there is nothing presently to rectify.

The other argument relates to the legality of the loan agreement of the debenture. It is contended that as execution of the agreement and debenture was made after the B disbursement of the amount of the loan had been made, the loan agreement and the debenture are tainted with illegality.

I propose to consider and deal with all these points seriatim.

The application is made under s 85 of the Companies Ordinance. The section provides: C

`85. The Court, on being satisfied that the omission to register a charge within the time required by this Ordinance, or that the omission or misstatement of any particular with respect to any such charge or in a memorandum of satisfaction, was altered or due to inadvertence or to some other sufficient D cause or is not of a nature to prejudice the position of creditors or shareholders of the company, or that on other grounds it is just and equitable to grant a relief, may on the application of the company or any person interested, and on such terms and conditions as seem to the court just and expedient, order that the time for registration shall be extended or, as the case may be, that the omission or E misstatement shall be rectified and may make such order as to costs of the alterations it thinks fit.'

Section 82 of the Ordinance provides for the Registrar of Charges to be kept by the Registrar of Companies, the second respondent herein. F

There are three important documents to consider in this application: (1) the loan agreement; (ii) the debenture and (iii) forms 9 and C2. In relation to this, especially to the debenture, in the case of In re Mechanisations (Eaglescliffe) Ltd (1), a case cited by G Capt. Kameja, learned counsel for the applicant, the mortgagee presented to the companies registration form CF (corresponding to form No 9 supra) which had been completed by the solicitors of the company in respect of a charge securing certain sums. The particulars therein were misstated as to the amount secured in that no H reference was made therein to interest and additional money secured by the charge. The companies registrar registered the charge as per submitted particulars and issued a certificate under s 98(2) of the Companies Act 1948 (corresponding to s 82 of the Ordinance).

In a subsequent creditor's voluntary winding up, for the total sum advanced by them I including the excess interest and the additional money not mentioned in the particulars of the charge and the registrar's certificate. The Liquidator sought a declaration that in respect of the excess the A charges were void as against him or any creditor for want of registration, arguing that the effect of s 98(2) aforesaid is to make the registrar's certificate conclusive evidence of due registration of a charge securing such amount as is stated on the face of the certificate. Rejecting the argument, Buckley J stated, at 35: B

> `In order to discover the terms and effect of the charge ... one must look at the document creating the charge and not at the register. It is from that document that one will discover what moneys are secured and what is the total amount secured by the charge.' C

Capt Kameja submits that the instrument creating a charge, `in this case debenture, constitutes primary evidence of the extent of the charge and the amount thereunder'. With respect, I agree. In addition I would add that though the amount stated in a loan D agreement may not necessarily all have to be secured, where, as in this case, it is contended the amount stated in the loan agreement was secured by a charge, the agreement becomes, as I have stated already, an important document too, to look at in order to discover what amount was loaned and then secured. E

Now, according to the loan agreement in this case, the loan advanced by the applicant to the first respondent was US $904 000 (or the equivalent in other convertible currencies by way of a foreign currency loan . Looking at the debenture, apart from the cover as F shown, the amount indicated to be secured by it throughout its (the Debenture's) body is stated to be US $904 000. This is the flow of the statement of amounts in the two documents. According to these two documents, what was the amount which was loaned and secured? Obviously US $904 000. There is no mention of T Shs 16 626 500/= in the loan agreement or the body of the debenture. I agree therefore that the G amount which was advanced by the applicant to the first respondent which was then secured by the debenture created and issued by the first respondent in this application is US $904 000. I have already said that even the respondents in their counter-affidavits and submissions do not appear to dispute this. H

Was it necessary to state the US $904 000 only in form No 9 and C2? (In the column `Amount secured by the Mortgage or Charge (In form No 9 Annex (i) to the second respondent's counter affidavit) it is stated that the amount secured is US $904 000 being approximately Shs 16 626 500/=). This is, as stated already, the crucial point in this I matter. The responding arguments on it have been reproduced above. To them Capt Kameja replies as follows:
KYANDO J

`My Lord, the respondents' submission that the amount secured by the debenture was T Shs A 16,626,500/= because under the laws of Tanzania no charge could be registered in foreign currency is as far fetched as it is fanciful. The respondents' arguments in support of national sovereignty, the national flag, national anthem etc. may be patriotic and, perhaps, good material for a political dissertion but, in my view, certainly not practical. Respondents' have not cited any authority, and I am B not aware of one, to support the proposition that a Tanzania person, individual or corporate, cannot borrow money in foreign currency, secure it as a foreign currency debt and repay it in foreign currency.

Equally fanciful in the respondents' submission that the applicant, in the words of counsel for the first C respondent, is "seeking to insert a foreign currency in the charge". My Lord, the charge, being the debenture dated 18 December, 1985, speaks for itself and, at the risk of repeating what I stated in the main submission, I refer to condition 1 of the said debenture which clearly provides that "This Debenture is security for principal moneys not exceeding US $904,000 (or the equivalent thereof in D other convertible currencies) in aggregate together with interest thereon." In this regard, I reiterate my arguments at pages 9 and 10 of the main submission and in particular the fact, which the respondents have not disputed, that "the Tanzania Shilling is not and has never at any material time E been a convertible currency". It is too obvious to be seriously disputed that the Tanzania shilling, being a non-convertible currency, was not contemplated by the parties as being the currency of the charge.

The second respondent also argues that the currency stated in Companies Form C2, i.e. the certificate of registration, is Shillings and that recording the amount secured in any other currency F would amount to amendment of the said form and "therefore amending the rules which are made under section 285 of the Companies Ordinance". My Lord, section 285 of the Companies Ordinance only provides for "General rules and fees for Winding up" and, for sure, registers of such charges G have nothing to do with section 285 aforesaid.

At any rate forms are applied as far as is practicable. Substitution of the word "Shillings" by the words "United States Dollars" in the said form would not have offended any law. In the said Form C.2 issued by the second respondent, and which he apparently holds to be sacrosanct, the second H respondent crossed out the word "charge" and substituted therefore the word "Debentures" so as, in our view, to clearly identify the type of charge created. If the second respondent's argument is pursued to its logical conclusion his own act, above, amounted to an amendment of the form and the rules and the second respondent doesn't even suggest he has powers to make such amendments. I How come then that substituting "United States Dollars" for "Shillings" on the said form so as to specify the currency of the charge suddenly A becomes an amendment of the rules! That would, in our humble submission, be a classic case of hypocritical double standards.'

KYANDO J
With extreme respect, I could not agree more with Capt Kameja in his above B submissions. The immutability except by the Minister's hand, of form C2 has been, as Capt Kameja rightly contends, violated by the second respondent himself. In that form the word `Charge' has been cancelled out by the second respondent and above it the word `Debenture' to accommodate the debenture in this case has been written. If that C form can so easily be changed by the second respondent, why should cancelling the word `Shillings' and writing the words `US Dollars' instead amount to amending the rules, I simply do not comprehend this. As for the other arguments on the point stated earlier on above, Capt Kameja has tackled them all in his reply and all that I can say is D that these arguments of the respondents are to me nothing more than sheer sophistry. I reject them here and hold that the US $904 000 should have been expressed in forms No 9 and C2, including the register of charges, as the amount secured by the debenture created and issued by the first respondent in this case. The loan was a foreign currency E loan, and there was nothing wrong or improper to express it in foreign currencies in form No 9 and C2.
The statement of T Shs 16 626 500/= in relation to US $904 000 in form No 9 and C2 does, in view of the fast falling value of the Tanzania Shilling, to any mind now look F ludicrous. I accept as true the explanation given by the applicant for stating the equivalent of T Shs 16 626 500/= and I think it was because of the purposes stated in that explanation that the amount was stated as a mere approximation of US $904 000. If indeed the amount was intended to be the amount to be secured by the debenture, an G actual amount would have been stated and not a mere approximation.
Concerning the arguments or point that the charge has been discharged, I am of the view that such arguments or points can be valid only if the loan of US $904 000 has been paid or notified. The applicant says it has not and if that is so, the so-called H discharge is no discharge at all. This is because it is based on the erroneous assumption that the loan was for Shs 16 626 500/= whereas it was not, it was for US $904 000. No valid discharge has ever taken place therefore. The one effected by the second respondent on the basis of the first respondent's memorandum and declaration I of correctness of the memorandum is hereby quashed and set aside.
KYANDO J
As regards the legality or otherwise of the loan agreement and the debenture, I detect no A illegality in these and I reject the respondents' arguments in relation to this.

The other arguments made by the respondents on the merits of the application do not seem to be worth any consideration here. I find them all without any substance and I reject all of them here. B

They (the respondents) have also raised several preliminary points of objection to the application. One of them is that the application is wrongly made under s 95 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966. I am of the view that this point would have been valid if the C application did not cite s 85 of the Companies Ordinance as well. As it, however, cites this latter section, s 95 Civil Procedure Code can be ignored without the application being affected in any way.

Another point is that the affidavit of Mr Pesha is defective in that the sources of some of D the information are not disclosed. Capt Kameja has replied to this by referring the court to the decision of Georges CJ as he then was in The National Bank of Commerce v Mannbha Shankarbhai Desai (2) wherein the learned Chief Justice stated: E

`Similarly, paragraphs 9-1 are clearly sworn to on information and belief, and since the source has not been set out, the paragraphs are clearly bad and should be struck out. There remains a body of evidence sufficiently vouched in the affidavits from personal knowledge or from information and belief F with sources specified to enable the matter to be disposed of.'

In the present case, the information necessary for the full and final determination of the application has been properly sworn to and the important documents exhibited. These are the loan agreement, the debenture, forms No 9 and C2 and those relating to the G `satisfaction' of the charge. The point raised therefore is of little, if any, weight.

Finally, there is the point on limitation. It is contended by the respondents that the application is time-barred. However, the following answer, with which I agree, by Capt H Kameja in his reply to the contentions of the respondents suffices to dispose of the contentions in favour of the applicant:

`My Lord, the first respondent has also raised an objection based on the law of limitation. This objection holds no water. The application herein was based on the ground that the misstatement of I the particulars was inadvertent or, alternatively, that it is just and equitable to grant relief. In Black's Law Dictionary, already cited, the word "inadvertence" is said at page 759 A thereof to be used chiefly in statutory and rule enumerations of the grounds on which a judgment or decree may be vacated or set aside; as "mistake,...". It connotes a mistake occasioned by intention or excusable neglect. Thus in this case the application is for relief from the consequences of the respondents' mistakes. B

Section 26(c) of the law of Limitation Act, No. 10 of 1971 provides that where the proceeding is for relief from the consequences of a mistake the period of limitation shall not begin to run until the Plaintiff has discovered the mistake, or could, which reasonable diligence, have discovered it. C

In this case, Mr. Pesha, the applicant's Company Secretary, has responded, in paragraph 4 of the reply to the second respondent's counter affidavit, that he inadvertently overlooked the misstatement of the amount secured at the time the certificate of registration was issued and that he first discovered the misstatement after receiving the second respondent's letter dated 16 April, 1992. The D respondents have not tendered any evidence to show that the applicant was in fact aware of the mistake, that is to say the misstatement of the amount secured, on a date earlier than 16 April, 1992 or that he did not discover it earlier for lack of reasonable diligence.

It is submitted that in this case the period of limitation did not start to run until April, 1992 and since E the application was filed on 29 May, 1992 well within the period of limitation of sixty days provided for under item 21 of Part III of the First Schedule to the law of Limitation Act the objection cannot succeed.' F

On the whole, the preliminary objections raised by the respondents are really of faint, if any, valued and that is why I did not consider them worthy to be dealt with before dealing with the application on its merits. I overrule all of them.

Should the application be granted? The statement in forms No 9 and C2 that the loan G secured by the first respondent's debenture was US $904 000 being equivalent to T Shs 16 626 500/= or Shs 16 626 500/= respectively is clearly a misstatement. The correct amount secured by the debenture is US $904 000 (or the equivalent in other convertible currencies) by way of a foreign currency loan as per the debenture itself. It was a H misstatement therefore to state in these forms that the amount of the loan secured was US $904 000 being equivalent T Shs 16 626 500/= (form No 9) or Shs 16 626 500/= (form C2). That mistake has to be rectified in all justice and fairness. I find and am satisfied, therefore, that it is just and equitable that the relief sought by this application be I granted. As was done in the In re Mechanisations (Eaglescliffe) Ltd case (supra) therefore, I grant the application A as prayed, with costs to the applicant. The second respondent is hereby ordered to, within fourteen days from the date of the delivery of this ruling, rectify forms No 9 and C2 (plus his register of charges) to show that the amount secured by the debenture discussed in this case is US $904 000 (or its equivalent in other convertible currency) by B way of a foreign loan, or, simply US $904 000 without any reference to T Shs 16 626 500/=. The first respondent is ordered also to rectify his register of charges in relation to this loan so that it is shown therein that the debenture is security for US $904 000 only, as the debenture itself states. MISC CIVIL CAUSE NO 101 OF 1991

24 November, 1992 F
Flynote
Administrative Law - Orders certiorari and mandamus - Minister of Labour reversing, on appeal to him, a decision of the Conciliation Board - Whether Minister acted without jurisdiction - G Sections 26 and 51 of the Security of Employment Act - Regulation 4 of the Security of Employment (Disciplinary Proceedings) Regulations, 1965.
-Headnote
On 5 September 1990, the Applicants were summarily dismissed from their H employment at the First Respondent company without the required `Form No. 10'. The Applicants, aggrieved by their dismissal, then appealed to the Conciliation Board, which subsequently ordered, on 22 July 1991, the Applicants' reinstatement. Aggrieved by the Board's decision, the First Respondent appealed to the Minister of Labour (the Second I Respondent). In his decision dated 13 November 1991, the Minister reversed the Board's decision reinstating the Applicants.
The Applicants challenge the Minister's decision on the grounds that First Respondent's A referral of the matter to the Minister was improper since First Respondent had not filled out `Form No. 10', allegedly required by law. The Applicants seek orders of certiorari, quashing the Minister's ruling overturning the Board's decision, and mandamus, ordering the First Respondent to reinstate the Applicants pursuant to the Board's decision. B
Held:

(i) The requirement in Section 51 of the Security of Employment Act, that the prescribed forms are to be used `for the purpose of this Act', is mandatory, and it follows that Form 10, as contained in the Third Schedule to Regulation 4 of the regulations to the Act, should have been used. C

(ii) The First Respondent had lost his right to appeal to the Minister since the proviso to Section 26(1) of the Act, that the employer's right of appeal is made subject to compliance with the `appropriate procedures', had not been complied with.

(iii) The First Respondent's appeal was accordingly not properly before the D Minister, who lacked jurisdiction to reverse the Board's decision.

(iv) The orders of certiorari are granted as prayed, and the Minister's decision dated 13 November 1991 is declared null and void.

(v) The Conciliation Board's decision dated 22 July 1991 is restored, and is ordered to be enforced. E

(vi) The Applicants are entitled to their costs.

Mkude J: This is an application for orders of certiorari to remove into this court and F quash the decision of the Minister for Labour dated 13 November 1991 and mandamus to enforce the decision of reinstatement made by the Conciliation Board on 22 July 1991 as a decree of the court. Shaban Nassoro and Douglas Utonga, the applicants, were employed by Tanzania Portland Cement Company Limited, the first respondent herein, G as security officers. On 6 June 1990 the employer served them with proposal form No 1 imposing on them summary dismissal, alleging breach of para (h) of the Disciplinary Code under the Security of Employment Act 1964. The charge arose out of `irregularities in respect of cement loaded on 25 May 1990 in vehicle reg No 86985/84'. H

On 5 September 1990 the applicants were served with letters of summary dismissal from their employer without the required form No 10. The applicants were aggrieved by the disciplinary penalty imposed on them and appealed to the Conciliation Board. The Board heard the parties and by its decision dated 22 July 1991 ordered the I reinstatement of the applicants by the first respondent herein. The first respondent, as employer, was aggrieved by the decision of the A Conciliation Board and appealed to the Minister for Labour. The decision of the Conciliation Board was reversed by the Minister and his decision dated 13 November 1991 and so the services of the applicants were now to be terminated instead of reinstatement ordered by the Conciliation Board. It is this decision which is being B challenged by the applicants mainly on the ground that the reference to the Minister was improper since the employer had not filled up form No 10 as required by law. The argument is that the purported appeal to the Minister was not properly before him and so C the Minister acted without jurisdiction when he reversed the decision of the Conciliation Board. Hence this application for orders of certiorari and mandamus.

Mr Mrugaruga, a senior labour officer who represented the second respondent filed a counter-affidavit in which he admits that the employer had not filled up form 10. For this D reason I fail to understand him when he says in his submissions that the Minister had followed the laid down procedure and was fair in reaching his decision.

It seems to me that the Minister cannot be said to have followed the laid down procedure E when he sits and determines an appeal which is not properly before him. The appeal to the Minister was referred to him under the provisions of s 26(1) of the Security of Employment Act, which provides as follows:

> (a) the summary dismissal or proposed summary dismissal of an employee is confirmed by a Board and, subsequent to such confirmation, the Committee, or, in a case to which the proviso to subsection (1) of section 21 or section 22 applies, the local representative of the G Union, informs the Board that it or he supports the employee, the employee; or
>
> (b) the summary dismissed or proposed summary dismissal of an employee is not confirmed by a Board, the employer--
> may, within fourteen days after receiving notice of the decision of the Board refer the same to the Minister;

H Provided that an employer may not refer a decision to the Minister in any case in which he has not complied with the appropriate procedures specified in head (b) of this Part.'

The applicant's complaint on the employer's failure to fill up form No 10 is based on the I provisions of s 51 of the Security of Employment Act which provides as follows:

`51. The Minister may prescribe forms to be used for the purpose of this Act and any forms prescribed A shall be used, with such variations as the circumstances require, for the matters and in the cases for which they are prescribed.'

The plain meaning of this provision is that if there is a form prescribed by the Minister B relating to any relevant matter then that form must be used. It is mandatory. The use of form No 10 is prescribed under the provisions of reg 4 of the Security Employment (Disciplinary Proceedings) Regulations, 1965 as follows: C

`4. A written note of the imposition of a disciplinary penalty in the form set out in the Third Schedule shall be handed to the employee if he is available: Provided that, save in the case of summary dismissal, where the employer hands to the employee a copy of a report to a labour officer in the form D 1A stating that a disciplinary penalty has been imposed, no other note of such imposition shall be required.'

In the present case the employer purported to dismiss the applicants summarily and there is no suggestion that the applicants were not available. It follows that the mandatory provisions of reg 4 had to be complied with by the employer purported to E dismiss the applicants summarily and there is no suggestion that the applicants were not available. It follows that the mandatory provisions of reg 4 had to be complied with by the employer by using form No 10 contained in the third schedule to the regulations. As it is admitted by Mr Mrugaruga that the employer did not comply with this requirement, it F follows that the `appropriate procedures' specified in head (b) (which deals with Imposition of Disciplinary Penalties by Employers) have not been complied with by the employer, Tanzania Portland Cement Company Limited. G

Accordingly I hold that the employer had lost his right to refer the decision of the Conciliation Board to the Minister under the proviso to s 26(1) of the Security of Employment Act. It follows that the appeal by the employer, the first respondent herein, was not properly before the Minister and so the Minister lacked jurisdiction when he H reversed the decision of the Conciliation Board. For that reason the orders of certiorari and mandamus will be issued as prayed and I hereby declare that the Minister's decision in this matter dated 13 November 1991 is null and void. Accordingly the decision of the Conciliation Board dated 22 July 1991 is hereby restored and I order that it be enforced according to law. I

The applicants will have their costs for this application.

On 10 August 1990, the Resident Magistrate's Court of Dar es Salaam at Kisutu issued an order returning motor vehicle TZ 77961 to the present Appellant. Some four days later (14 August 1990), and at the instance of an objector, one Mr Mbaga, the same court D reversed its decision of 10 August 1990 and ordered the vehicle in question to be released to Mr Mbaga on the basis that the Appellant failed to disclose to the court that proceedings in respect of the vehicle were pending in the High Court and that the order of 10 August 1990 was at variance with an interlocutory order already made by the High Court. E
The Appellant appeals against the Magistrate's order of 14 August 1990.
Held:

(i) Any appeal seeking the reversal of the order made on 14 August 1990 can affect Mr Mbaga in his possession of the vehicle and such appeal must cite Mr Mbaga as a respondent in order to enable him to be heard. F

(ii) It is against the rules of natural justice to condemn a man without giving him a hearing.

(iii) The appeal is dismissed and no order is made as to costs.

Ordered accordingly. G

Mkude J: On 10 August 1990 the Resident Magistrate's Court of Dar es Salaam at H Kisutu issued an order seizing motor vehicle TZ 77961 and gave it to Omari Farouk Karamaldin, the appellant herein. This was in civil case No 93 of 1990 in which the appellant had successfully sued one Justinan Rugeiyamu Kahwa and the said vehicle was seized in satisfaction of the decree. Then on 14 August 1990, following objection I proceedings filed by one Mzava alias Praygod Mbaga, the same court reversed its decision of 10 August 1990 and set aside the order of seizure and directed that the vehicle TZ 77961 be A released to Mbaga, the objector. The reason for this step by the court is contained in its ruling which is the subject matter of this appeal. The ruling states in part:

'An application has been filed by Mr Mkatte objecting to an order which was made by this court B ordering the seizure of a motor vehicle which was in the possession of his client and handing it to the respondent. The order was made by this court on 10 August 1990. When that application was made, the respondent who was the plaintiff in this case did not disclose to this court at all that the motor vehicle which is the subject matter of this case is also a subject matter of a case which had C been filed at the High Court earlier on and it is still pending.

Apparently the order which has been made by this court is in a total variance with an interlocutory order which has already been made by the High Court. D

As correctly submitted by Mr Mkatte if at all this fact was disclosed to this court, this court would have never issued the order which is issued.'

It will be seen that the effect of the order arising from this ruling is to vest possession of E the vehicle in Mr Mbaga from whom the vehicle was taken under the order of 10 August 1990. It follows that any appeal seeking the reversal of the order from that ruling must cite Mr Mbaga as a respondent so that he can be heard before the order depriving him of the possession of the vehicle can be made. F

The present appeal falls short of that. Instead only Justinan Rugeiyamu Kahwa is cited as respondent and Mbaga does not feature at all. I note that one of the prayers of the appellant is 'that the first ruling of the same court be upheld and confirmed'. G

What the appellant calls `the first ruling' is the ruling dated 10 August 1990 which gave him possession of the vehicle after taking it away from Mbaga. In other words, the appellant is now asking this court to make an order under which the vehicle will be taken away from Mbaga while Mr Mbaga was not given the opportunity to be heard. The H appellant did not see it fit to join him in his appeal.

It is against the rules of natural justice to condemn a man without giving him a hearing. It is against the constitutionally guaranteed rights to deprive a man of property without a hearing.

Accordingly this appeal fails and I dismiss it. I make nor order as to costs. I Administrative Law - Orders of certiorari and mandamus - Application for leave to apply for - C Election Complaints Panel decision - Sections 17(2) and 18(2) of Part VII of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance (as amended by Act 55 of 1968) and Section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Law of Limitation - Time-barring - Section 18(3) of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance. The Election Complaints Panel of the Electoral Commission of Tanzania in Election Complaint No.47 of 1990 had dismissed with costs an election complaint lodged by seven complainants, the present Applicants, against one Chediel Yohane Mgonja and the Attorney General. The Panel had upheld two preliminary objections raised by the Attorney General that the complaint was time-barred, and also that the complainants' allegations were not supported by any previous complaint made through the supervisory delegates' or the Returning Officer's reports, as required by Section 40(1) of the Elections Act.

-Headnote

The Applicants contended that, in upholding the preliminary objections taken, the Panel denied them their right to be heard by the Panel before it took its decision to dismiss their complaint.

Held:

(i) The six-month period stipulated in Section 18(3) of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance for the application for leave, must be taken to exclude the time required for obtaining a copy of the ruling from which it is sought to appeal.

(ii) The application is thus made in time and is allowed.

(iii) The application succeeds and leave is granted to the Applicants to apply for orders of certiorari and mandamus.

(iv) The costs of the application are made costs in the cause.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mkude J:

This is an application for leave to apply for orders of certiorari and mandamus made under the provisions of ss 17(2) and 18(2) of Part

MKUDE J

VII of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) of s 17(2) and 18(2) of Part VII of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance (as amended by Act 55 of 1968) and s 95 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Election Complaints Panel of the Electoral Commission of Tanzania in Election Complaint No 47 of 1990 had dismissed with costs an election complaint by seven complainants, the applicants herein, against Chediel Yohane Mgonja and the Attorney-General. The Panel upheld two preliminary objections raised by counsel for the Attorney-General namely, that the complaint was time barred and that the allegations made by the complainants were not supported by any previous complaint made through the reports of the supervisory delegates or the returning officer as required by s 4C(1) of the Elections Act.

The applicants are aggrieved by the decision of the Panel and the gravamen of their complaint is that they were denied the right to be heard before the Panel made its decision dismissing their complaint. Having read the affidavit of Senzia Alphonce Mbaga and heard the oral testimony of Elinazi Elieza Mbalazi and the statement in support of the application I am satisfied that there are grounds for an application for orders of certiorari and mandamus.

Before I conclude this matter let me say a word or two on the question of litigation. Under the provisions of s 18(3) of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance the application for leave must be made not later than six months from the date of the decision or proceeding sought to be quashed. In the present case F the decision of the Election Complaints Panel was given on 5 July 1991 while the present application was filed on 19 May 1992. I note, however, that the secretary of the Electoral Commission of Tanzania sent the complainants' lawyers a copy of the ruling under cover of a letter dated 12 December 1991. The letter ref No ECC/C.50/52/II reads G as follows:

`Please refer to your letters Ref Nos YAM/285 dated first August 1991, 24 August, 1991 and 11th October 1991 on the above subject.

The delay in replying was caused by the absence of the entire secretariat up-country since February H 1991 for purposes of hearing election complaints. We have just come back to the office. Be that as it may, we forward herewith a certified copy of the ruling in this matter as requested.'

It follows that despite their effort in applying for a copy of the ruling early in August 1991 I the applicants did not receive it from the Electoral Commission until a few days after 12 December 1991. Now, although there is A no express provision in the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance excluding the time requisite for obtaining a copy of ruling in computing the period of six months from the date of the ruling I hold that such time must B be excluded as is the case in several other pieces of legislation providing for limitation of time. I hold therefore that this application is made within time and I allow it.

In the final result this application succeeds and I hereby grant leave to the complainants/applicants to apply for orders of certiorari and mandamus. Costs will be in the cause. C

-Headnote
On 15 November 1990, the Respondent filed an application before the Regional Housing Tribunal for the eviction of the Appellant from the Respondent's house. The application H failed. On becoming aware of the application's failure on 29 November 1990, the Respondent's advocate applied for the necessary documentation from the Regional Tribunal in order to lodge an appeal to the Appeals Tribunal. On 23 February 1991, an application was duly lodged with the Appeals Tribunal requesting leave for lodging a I notice of appeal and for appealing out of time. The Tribunal granted this application.
1996 TLR p105
The Appellant appeals against this ruling of the Appeals Tribunal. A
Held:

(i) In terms of Rules 5 and 7 of the Housing Appeals Tribunal (Appeals) Rules, 1987, the appeal itself and the notice of appeal, respectively, were out of time.

(ii) The Tribunal could, in terms of Rule 5, extend the period for lodging the appeal, B but it is nowhere provided that it could as well extend the period for lodging a notice of appeal.

(iii) The Tribunal accordingly had no power to extend the time for lodging a notice of appeal.

(iv) The requirement of Rule 6, which stipulates that an application for leave to C appeal out of time should set out the reasons why the application cannot be filed in time, must be satisfied and `sound reasons' be shown before consideration can be given to whether leave should be granted in order to allow a point of law to be determined.

(v) The Appeals Tribunal erred in taking into account factors not provided for by law in granting the application. D

(vi) The appeal succeeds, and the Appellant is awarded her costs of appeal.

Kinguji, for the appellant.
Rutabingwa, for the respondent. F
[zJDz]Judgment
Kyando J:
This is an appeal from the decision of the Housing Appeals Tribunal granting an application by the respondent herein leave to lodge a notice of appeal and an appeal with the Tribunal out of time.
The facts of the matter are that the Aga Khan Education Services, the respondents G herein, filed an application in the Housing Tribunal of Dar es Salaam Region seeking the eviction of Mrs Kanchan Venesh Parekh, the appellant, from their house situated at Upanga, Dar es Salaam. The application was unsuccessful, in terms of the decision of H the Regional Tribunal rendered on 15 November 1990. It (the decision) was apparently given or delivered in the absence of the parties. The respondent's advocate became aware of it on 29 November 1990. On becoming so aware he applied for the necessary documents from the Regional Tribunal to prepare an appeal to the Housing Appeals I Tribunal. On 23 February 1991 has lodged with the latter Tribunal and application for leave for lodging a notice of appeal and for appealing out of time. The Tribunal as A indicated, granted the application, but the appellant was dissatisfied with that decision. She therefore brought this appeal to this court.

She is represented by Mr Kinguji, learned advocate, while the respondents are B represented by Mr Rutabingwa of the Tanzania Legal Corporation.

Rule 7 of the Housing Appeals Tribunal (Appeals) Rules, 1987 provides:

`7(1) Any party who desires to appeal to the Appeals Tribunal shall lodge a written notice in quadruple C with the Registrar or the Chairman of the Tribunal which passed the decision, order or determination appealed against.

(2) Every notice shall be lodged within fourteen (14) days of the date of the decision against which it is desired to appeal.' D

And Rule 5 provides as follows:

`5. No appeal to the Housing Appeals Tribunal from an order, decision or determination of Regional Housing Tribunal shall be made later than forty five (45) days from the date of the order, decision or E determination appealed from.

Provided that the Appeals Tribunal may, for good and sufficient cause grant any party leave to appeal out of time. When any such leave is granted, the Appeals Tribunal shall specify the date by which the appeal shall be lodged.' F

In the instant case, the Appeals Tribunal observed that the applicant's advocate should have filed the notice on 29 November 1990 when he learned about the decision of the Regional Housing Tribunal. If he did so, he would have been in time, for 29 November 1990 was the last day in computing the period of 14 days from the date of the decision of G the Regional Tribunal.

At p 2--3 of the cyclostyled ruling of the Appeals Tribunal it is stated:

`Both gentlemen members found no good cause for delaying to file notice of appeal immediately after H learning about the judgment on 29.11.90. Since notice of appeal is not accompanied by anything, there was no reason for waiting until he received a copy of the judgment.

Since no appeal can be accepted without notice of appeal being filed in time the second prayer for I leave to appeal out of time must also fail.

Indeed preparation of notice does not necessarily have to wait until you get a copy of judgment. It is A simply a notice that you have not been satisfied with the decision and that you are intending to appeal.

If after receiving copy of judgment you find there are no reasons or chances of success then you can withdraw it. Therefore when the applicant's advocate learned about the judgment on 29.11.90 which B was the last day for notice of appeal he would have filed the same on the same day or thereabout and not to sit down ideal till 23.2.91.'

All the above seems to me to be alright. But in spite of that the Tribunal, as shown, granted the application. In doing so it said it wanted to consider an important point of law C discerned in the proposed petition of appeal. The question which arises is whether the Tribunal had powers to extend time, after having found that both the notice and the appeal were out of time. Mr Kinguji says in his written submissions that the Tribunal had no such power. Mr Rutabingwa, on the other hand, says it had. Kinguji relies on Rule 7 of D the Housing Appeals Tribunal (Appeals) Rules, while Mr Rutabingwa relies on Rule 5.

In my view, the two rules should not be mixed up; they provide for different things altogether. While Rule 5 deals with appeals, Rule 7 deals with notice to appeal. Now E looking at the two rules closely, it is clear that while Rule 5 has a proviso, empowering the Appeals Tribunal to enlarge time for lodging of an appeal, Rule 7 which deals with notice has no provision for extension of time for lodging of a notice. In the present case, not only was the appeal out of time, the notice too was out of time. And whilst the F Tribunal could under Rule 5 extend the period for lodging the appeal it is no where provided that it could as well extend the period for lodging a notice. (And the Tribunal correctly notes that without a notice there cannot be an appeal.) The Tribunal acted without powers, and erred, therefore when it concluded in its decision: G

`In view of this applicant's application for leave to file notice of appeal out of time is hereby granted. He must do so within 14 days from today. ...' H

As amply shown, it had no power to enlarge the time for giving notice.

But besides the above point, did the Tribunal act in accordance with the law in granting the application on the ground that there was an important point of law in the intended I appeal only? Rule 6 of the Housing Appeals Tribunal (Appeals) Rules, provides:

KYANDO J

A '6. An application for leave to appeal out of time to the Appeals Tribunal shall be in writing supported by an affidavit setting out the reasons why a petition of appeal was not or cannot be filed within forty-five days after the date of the decision or order against which it is desired to appeal, and shall be accompanied by the petition of B appeal or shall set out the grounds of objection to the decision or order.'

Mr Kinguji in his submissions argues that the Tribunal had no right to consider the petition: he says it should only have concerned itself with the reasons why the respondent failed to appeal in time. In C reply, Mr Rutabingwa contends that the requirement of a petition of appeal by Rule 6 implies that the Tribunal is supposed to look into the likelihood of the appeal succeeding 'on precisely whether there are grounds raised which may invite intervention of the Appeals Tribunal'. In support of this he D sites the decision of Mwalusanya J in Samson Kashosha Gabba v Charles Kingongo Gabba (1) and quotes the following passage from the judgment of the learned Judge:

'... one of the most important points to consider whether or not to allow an appeal out of time is the likelihood of E success of the intended appeal. The points raised in the intended memorandum of appeal as well as the judgment of the trial court have to be considered to see if the intended appeal has any chances of success. While reasons for the delay in appealing in time are relevant, yet those are not the only material consideration in those matters.'

F Rule 6 specifically requires that the reasons for the delay must be stated in the affidavit in support of an application for leave to appeal out of time. As for chances of success, these are provided for only inferentially by Rule 6, by requiring that a copy of the intended petition should accompany the application. It follows therefore that under the Housing Appeals Tribunal (Appeals) G Rules, the important considerations are the reasons why a petition of appeal was not or cannot be filed within time. Not only this, the chances of success cannot by themselves be, in my view, the sole ground for granting an application for leave to appeal out of time. All the reasons advanced by H the respondents in this case were rejected by the Appeals Tribunal. So was it justified in granting it on the only ground that a point of law was involved in the case? In my view, it was not. That ground could only have been given considera tion of if there were also sound reasons why the I applicant for extension of time could not file his appeal in time.

KYANDO J

But even if Mr Rutabingwa were right in the submissions he makes, thinking that chances of A success is the most important consideration in determining an application for leave to appeal out of time was the decision of the Appeals Tribunal in this case based on that consideration? Following is what the Tribunal said: B

'But in going through the petition together with the record to see whether if the application for appeal out of time is allowed there are overwhelming chances of success I have discovered that there is an important point of law involved, that is whether the respondent (appellant herein) is a protected tenant or a tenant at will. The C respondent's husband was employed by the appellants as a teacher whereby he was also offered accommodation on monthly rent by being deducted 15% of his salary. When he died his wife (respondent) continued to live there although not employed by the applicants. The applicants want her out to give room for their employees. She is refusing to vacate pleading protection as a protected tenant. The applicants are saying she is D not a protected tenant and therefore not entitled to the protections of protected tenants.

It will be in the interests of justice if this application is granted so that this issue can properly be dealt with.'

As can be seen, while the tribunal makes references to overwhelming chances of success, its E decision to grant the application does not rest on that ground. It rests instead on the consideration that there is an important point of law involved in the intended appeal and that it will be in the interests of justice for the point to be properly dealt with by it, ie the Appeals Tribunal. There is no F finding at all by the Tribunal that the intended appeal has overwhelming chances of success either on the point it wanted to properly deal with or on any other ground. The consideration relied on by Mr Rutabingwa in his submissions therefore was not the consideration on which the decision of the Tribunal was based. G

In short, the Appeals Tribunal in this matter did not act within the ambit of the provisions of Rule 6 of the Housing Appeals Tribunal (Appeals) Rules in considering and determining the application for leave to appeal out of time. This was an error on its part for it took into account matters not provided for by law in granting the application. H

Finally, Mr Rutabingwa submits that he was, after all, in time in lodging the notice and the appeal. I do not think I should treat such submissions with any seriousness here. He is I the one who went before the Appeals Tribunal pleading that he was out of time in filing notice and his appeal and sought leave to file them out of time. Today he says he was in time! Why did he not say so before the Appeals Tribunal? A The Tribunal agreed with him and held that he was out of time: he cannot now turn round and start submitting that he was in time. I reject such submissions by Mr Rutabingwa.

I held in the result, that the Appeals Tribunal had no power to extend the time for lodging B notice of appeal in this matter. As an appeal to the Appeals Tribunal has to be preceded by a notice of intention to appeal, no prayer or valid appeal could have been lodged in the matter in the absence of such notice. Finally, the Tribunal based its decision in granting the application for leave to appeal on wrong considerations. For C these reasons, this appeal succeeds. It is allowed and the appellant is awarded the costs of the appeal.

The Second Applicant was once the owner of a house which he built on Plot 2254 Block A 83, Dar es Salaam, and held the property since 1955 on a 99-year term. Pursuant to the Acquisition of Buildings Act, 1971, the building was acquired by the government in 1971. The Second Applicant then left Tanzania to live in the United Kingdom for several years. The First Applicant is the daughter of the Second Applicant and the holder of a B power of attorney given by him.

On 7 April 1978, the Second Applicant executed a power of attorney in favour of his younger brother, the First Respondent, to acquire leasehold estates. In 1984, and by virtue of this power, the First Respondent applied to the Registrar of Buildings for the C grant of a long-term lease in the building in question. At the instance of the Registrar of Buildings, a deed was drawn in the name of the First Respondent, thus effectively making him the grantee of the lease in respect of two apartments. The First Respondent has since held himself out as the lawful owner of the estate and kept the Applicants out of the premises.

The Applicants contended that the present situation was the result of an incidence of D trust violated and that the entry in the land register was obtained by fraud or made under a mistake.

The Applicants accordingly sought to have the memorial in the land register corrected by substituting as grantee of the lease the name of the Second Applicant for that of the First Respondent. E

The Respondents took various points that, inter alia, the First Applicant had no right to be before the Court, notwithstanding her power of attorney, further that Order 43 rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code is confined to interlocutory proceedings and cannot ground a final order, and finally that an application for rectification in terms of Section 99(1) of the F Land Registration Ordinance should first be made to the Registrar of Titles and that the matter only properly comes to the High Court by way of an appeal.

The Court was called upon to rule on these various points taken by the Respondents.

Held: G

(i) Order 3 rule 2(a) of the Civil Procedure Code allows the grantee of a power of attorney to launch an application on behalf of the grantor, and the language of the power in question expressly appoints the First Applicant `to commence prosecute legal proceedings of all laids (sic)'. H

(ii) Where, however, the principal under a power of attorney applies to or appears before a court, his attorney has no locus standi.

(iii) The First Applicant is accordingly improperly joined as a claimant for rectification, but her affidavits should not therefore be inadmissible and valueless, and she should thus in justice be deemed to be a witness. I

(iv) Cap. 334 does not prescribe the procedure for making an application

MAPIGANO J

A for rectification, and it is a `wrong idea' that Order 43 rule 2 does not embrace applications for final orders.

(v) Section 99(1) of Cap. 334 offers a choice of forum for rectification between the High Court and the Registrar of Titles: one can either make a requisition to the Registrar, or institute a legal action in the High Court. B

(vi) Section 14(1) of the Law of Limitation Act permits the Court the power, suo motu and for any reasonable or sufficient cause, to extend the six-month period allowed by law to institute an appeal or application.

(vii) For the purposes of an extension of time in terms of Section 14(1), the C Applicants' ignorance or bona fide mistake of law may be taken into consideration in determining whether the discretion ought to be exercised.

(viii) The period of limitation is extended to the day upon which the application was instituted in this Court.

Mapigano J: E

Parin A A Jaffer along with her father Amirali A Jaffer have jointly applied for rectification of the land register. They are advocated for by Dr Mapunda. Their application is made under s 99(1)(b), (d) and (f) of the Land Registration Ordinance, cap 334, as well as s F 95 and Order 43 rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. The respondents are Abdulrasul A Jaffer, the National Housing Corporation and the Registrar of Titles who are represented by Mr Ismail, Mr and Mr Shungu, respectively.

Objection has been taken as to the form in which the application is presented, the G joinder of Parin and the whole competency of the application. This is what I am now called upon to rule on.

The second applicant Amirali was once the owner of Plot 2254 Block 83 Mwisho/Zaramo Streets, Dar es Salaam, and held the property since 1955 on a 99 year term and H happened to build a house thereon. In 1971 the building was acquired by the Government and vested in the Registrar of Buildings. This was in the wake of the enactment of the Acquisition of Buildings Act, 1971. Amirali had then left Tanzania and gone to the United Kingdom where he stayed for several years. I

On 7 April 1978 Amirali executed a power of attorney, annexure

PAJ2, which, inter alia, conferred authority on his young brother, ie the first respondent, A to acquire leasehold estates. In 1984 the first respondent made an application to the Registrar of Buildings by virtue of the power of attorney for grant of a long term lease in the acquired building. He was probably stimulated and authentically afforded a sense of B hope by a scheme established by the Government under which an ex-owner of an acquired building could be granted such lease in respect of the portion he occupied at the time of the acquisition.
His exertion met with success, though the power had by then yet to be filed at the Land Registry as required under s 96(1) of cap 334. (It has since been revoked by Amirali.) C Prima facie, it cannot be said that the first respondent's application, ie annexure PAJ3, travelled outside the authority given to him vide annexure PAJ2. There was however some questionable development. At the instance of the Registrar of Buildings, as D evidenced by annexure PAJ4, the lawyers drew a deed in the name of the first respondent and this effectively made the first respondent the grantee of the lease in respect of two apartments. The lease was registered under Filed Document No 75149 and the first respondent has thenceforth held himself out as the lawful owner of the E estate and kept the applicants out of the premises, which has gone hard with them.
In short, the applicants are aggrieved by the grant of the lease to the first respondent. They claim that the disposition was an incidence of a trust violated, that annexure PAJ2 F did not authorize the first respondent to acquire title to the lease in his own name, and that the entry in the land register was obtained by fraud or made under a mistake. All this is denied by the respondents and, accordingly, one of the major issues in this long drawn out dispute is whether or not the lease in question is defeasible by reason of fraud and/or mistake. G
As indicated at the outset, the applicants seek to have the memorial in the land register corrected by substituting as grantee of the lease the name of the second applicant for that of the first respondent.
The first material ground of the preliminary objection is that the first applicant has no H right to be heard in this application, notwithstanding that she has been give a power of attorney, annexure PAJ10, by the second applicant. Mr Ismail has actually gone a step further and taken objection to the validity of that power, arguing that the bringing of this I application is outside the terms of that power, and drawing my attention to the provision of Order 3 Rule
2(a) of the CPC. Accordingly, it has been submitted, first, that her name should be A struck out from the record; and, secondly, that her affidavits should be excluded.
As every lawyer perfectly understands, a power of attorney is a formal instrument by which one person empowers another to represent him or act in his stead for certain B purposes. Under Order 3 Rule 2(a) CPC a grantee of such power is competent to go to law and make application on behalf of the grantor, providing that the instrument gives him such authority, and I am acutely aware that the terms of such instrument should receive a strict construction as giving only such authority as it confers expressly or by C necessary implication. Having examined annexure PAJ10, I am clearly of the opinion that its language brings it squarely within the operation of Order 3 Rule 2(a). For it expressly appoints the first applicant `to commence prosecute legal proceedings of all laids'.

On the other hand it is imperative under Order 3 Rule 2(a) that all applications, acts and D appearances be made or done by the attorney on behalf of and in the name of the principal. By the same token where the principal himself makes or does an application, appearance or act, his attorney has no locus standi. In the premises I have to sustain E the submission that Parin is improperly joined as a claimant for rectification. At the same time I am unable to endorse the view that their bona fide misjoinder should render Parin's affidavits inadmissible or valueless. I accept the suggestion that Parin should in justice be deemed to be a witness.

It will be recalled that one of the enabling provisions cited on the chamber summons is F Order 43 Rule 2 CPC. The second ground concerns the applicability of that provision. Mr Ismail has pressed upon me the argument that this provision is confined to interlocutory proceedings and that no final orders can be made thereunder. The complementary G argument of Mr Maira is that rectification should have been pursued by way of a suit, in view of the strong and serious resistance thereto. Dr Mapunda has disagreed with all this, point out that Cap 334 does not prescribe the procedure of making an application for rectification and the shape the application should assume and I go with him. H

I think there can be no doubt that a person who wants the register rectified can apply to the High Court in terms of s 99 and that the Court can entertain the proceeding irrespective of whether it is contentious. Dr Mapunda is right that there is no provisions in Cap 334 as to the procedure of making such application. In the circumstances the I same rules of procedure and practice have to be resorted to, so far as they can be made applicable, as are currently in force in respect of A ordinary applications before the High Court.

It may be observed by the way that strictly Cap 334 does not limit the mode of the proceedings in which rectification may be sought. So it is perfectly arguable that one of the methods of compelling a rectification of the register is through a decree pronounced B on a suit, or a mandamus, particularly when the fault is alleged to lie with the Registrar.

It is a wrong idea that Order 43 Rule 2 does not embrace applications for final orders. Take, for instance, the order that can be delivered under s 9 CPC that a suit is barred by C res judicate, which finally disposes of the rights of the parties in the suit. Surely such order is obtainable upon an application brought in the form prescribed by Order 43 Rule 2?

According to Mr Ismail, and this is the third ground, an application for rectification under D s 99(1) must be made to the Registrar of Titles first and that the matter properly comes to the High Court on appeal only.

Mr Maira has grappled with the `if' aspect of the matter. Even if the High Court has original jurisdiction, he says, the matter should, as a mater of procedure and practice, be E submitted to the Registrar for him to inquire into and decide, before recourse is had to litigation. Mr Maira takes some satisfaction from the provision of s 13 of the CPC his implied assumptions being, therefore, that this is a suit and that the CPC is applicable.

Dr Mapunda has a different view. His submission is that s 99(1) of Cap 334 gives F concurrent power to the High Court and the Registrar to entertain applications for rectification. He has also charged the Registrar with some blame for the distress the applicants have undergone and alleged that he, the Registrar, has advised the G applicants to go to court, clearly implying that it would have been a futile exercise to make an application to him.

It is manifestly clear upon the applications, affidavits and the appendant papers that no distinct request or demand has been made to the Registrar in respect of the relief sought. And looking critically at those documents I can hardly see any demonstrable H complaint levelled against the Registrar. There is also nothing material to support the allegation that the Registrar has advised the applicants to sue for rectification by court process. In actual fact the attitude of certain higher quarters, as disclosed by correspondence, was that Amirali should address his complaint to the Registrar. I

In view of the clear language of s 99(1) of Cap 334, it seems to me

rather absurd for counsel to argue that an application for rectification is not cognizable A by the High Court in the first instance. Quite clearly that section offers a choice of forum between the High Court and the Registrar: one can either make a requisition to the Registrar for rectification, or institute a legal action in the High Court in that respect. B

There is, in my opinion, a good sense indeed and sound juridical reason for the legislation of such option. Circumstances may be easily envisaged where the exclusion of the High Court from the exercise of original jurisdiction in the matter would palpably be injudicious and preposterous. I would point to one such circumstance in particular. C Consider a situation where a person imputes deliberate fault to the Registrar in relation to an entry in the register, it would undoubtedly be a serious anomaly if the law were to lay down that he should still go to the Registrar for remedy.

Section 13 of the CPC insofar as it is relevant enjoins that every suit shall be D commenced in the court of the lowest grade competent to try it. The words of this section do not appear to be sufficiently apt to cover the circumstances of this application, because `court of the lowest grade' in the context of that section refers only E to courts to which the CPC applies. Nevertheless I prefer the view that it is a good policy which may be extended to analogous situations. This is out of the recognition that the rule is meant to check the overcrowding of legal actions in the courts of the higher grade. Thus where the Law provides extra-judicial machinery alongside a judicial one for F resolving a certain cause, the extra-judicial machinery should, in general, be exhausted before recourse is had to the judicial process.

Of course s 13 is only a rule of procedure and not of jurisdiction, and, therefore, the court of the higher grade is not bound to take advantage of it and may, if it prefers, retain the suit. In the light of what the Registrar has deposed in his affidavit, it is only proper G that this application be adjudicated upon by this Court, unless it is barred otherwise. That brings me to the last ground. It is said for the respondents that the application is time-barred, even granting that the cause of action accrued in 1988 as the second H applicant seems to contend. In the view of Mr Ismail the matter falls under item 21 in Part III of the First Schedule to the Law of Limitation Act, 1971, which prescribes that an applicant must take legal proceeding inside of six months. Against that Dr Mapunda has argued that the proceedings should properly be deemed to fall under item 22 in Part I of I the Schedule which prescribes a period of twelve years, in as much as the subject-matter is essentially the recovery of a lease. Mr Ismail is right. All applications under the CPC, the Magistrates Courts Act A or other written law for which no period of Limitation is provided in the Law of Limitation Act or any other written law, fall under item 21 in Part III of the Schedule.

Pausing here and with that in mind, I do imagine that a more inured and shrewd forensic B advice to the applicants would have been to bring the matter to this Court in the form of a suit, or to make an application to the Registrar of Titles to which the provisions of the Law Limitation Act are not applicable.

But as just indicated, that is not the end of the matter. Looking at the circumstances C surrounding this case, I have come to take the view that it is one that admits of the application of s 14(1) of the Law of Limitation Act, and it is also my considered judicial view that this Court can proceed to do so suo motu. That section provides that the court may, for any reasonable or sufficient cause, extend the period of limitation for the D institution of an appeal or an application, other than an application for the execution of a decree, notwithstanding the provisions of the Act.

I have been driven to that conclusion upon considering the sustained but vain extra-legal efforts that the applicants have made to bring their grievance and plight to the attention of E the authorities, including the President. And there can hardly be any doubt that they have done so in total ignorance of the law of limitation.

Provisions which give exceptions to the operation of the statute are, in principle, to be interpreted literally. Accordingly, in the contemplation of s 14(1) of the statute the term F `reasonable or sufficient cause' should be given such construction. Section 21 of that statute which relates to analogous fruitless proceedings, though not applicable to this matter, indicates that the Legislature intended to show indulgence to a diligent party who G has acted bona fide under a mistake, and the persuasive Indian authorities hold that the equity of that section applies equally to cases arising under s 14. Indeed, all the High Courts in India are now in agreement that for the purpose of s 14 ignorance or bona fide mistake of law may be taken into consideration in determining whether the discretion ought to be exercised. H

I will, and do hereby, extend the period of limitation to the day the application was instituted in this court, and with that I overrule the preliminary objection. I

MISC. CRIMINAL CAUSE NO 14 OF 1993 B
31 May, 1993
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Bail pending appeal - Principles applicable - Section C 368(1)(a)(i) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.
Criminal Law - Malicious damage to property - What constitutes the offence.
-Headnote
The Applicant was convicted of malicious damage to property in the District Court of the D Ilala District, contrary to Section 326(1) of the Penal Code, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment. The present is an application for bail pending the outcome of an appeal.
In the course of its ruling, the Court enunciated certain well-established principles to be followed when determining such applications:

(i) The principle that bail is a right is applicable only to cases where the accused E person has not yet been convicted;

(ii) Bail pending an appeal can be granted only where there are exceptional and unusual reasons or where there is an overwhelming probability that the appeal would succeed;

(iii) Where an argument on the facts needs detailed references to the text of the F evidence or the judgment to support it, it cannot be said that the appeal has overwhelming chances of success;

(iv) Since no general principle exists that a person released on bail pending appeal will not be sent back to prison if his appeal fails, the court is reluctant to order that a convicted person be released on bail pending the outcome of the appeal; G

(v) Deciding whether bail in a matter such as the present should be granted involves balancing the liberty of the individual with the proper administration of justice;

(vi) Conversely to an application for bail pending trial, the onus in an application for bail pending an appeal is on the individual, who must satisfy the court that H justice will not be jeopardised, and that either exceptional and unusual reasons exist for bail, or that his appeal has overwhelming prospects of success.

Held:

(i) The learned Magistrate erred at the trial in not considering and deciding whether I the subjective element of the offence of malicious damage to property was present.
1996 TLR p119

(ii) This failure by the learned Magistrate was so serious as to be capable of A constituting a warrant for faulting his decision.

(iii) There were overwhelming prospects that on appeal the Court would hold that the Applicant's version of the events was a sufficient defence to the charge.

(iv) There were accordingly overwhelming prospects of success in the appeal. B

(v) The application was allowed, and the Applicant was granted bail in the sum of Shs. 100,000/= with two sureties, each in the like sum.

Samatta JK:

In this application, Lawrence Mateso, applies, under s 368(1)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985, for bail pending the hearing of his appeal. He was convicted by the District Court of Ilala District of malicious damage to property, contrary to s 326(1) of the F Penal Code, and was sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

The subject of the charge laid at the applicant's door was a structure which had been constructed on Plot No 132, Mbezi Beach, Dar es Salaam. It was not seriously disputed that in May last year the applicant, using some labourers, wilfully demolished this G structure. Was the demolition unlawful? The prosecution alleged and sought to prove that it was. Their case was that the plot was the property of one Jafari Ngonyani, who was PW3 at the trial. The witness gave evidence to the effect that, following instructions H from the President of the United Republic of Tanzania, the plot was vested in him by the relevant public authority. He produced as an exhibit a certificate of occupancy in his name. The applicant, on the other hand, gave evidence which was intended to demonstrate that the demolition was lawful. Briefly, his case was that the plot in question I was his; it was vested in him in 1988. Four years later one Chilemba disputed before the District Court his (the applicant's) ownership of the plot, but he lost the case. The applicant produced a copy of the A court's judgment, entered ex-parte, as an exhibit. The burden of the applicant's story was in essence that he believed that he was entitled to demolish whatever was on the plot. Although he did not expressly say so, he seemed to base his contention on a B concept equivalent to the concept underlying the Latin maxim of great antiquity: Aedificatio solo, solo cedit (What is built on the land is to be regarded as having become part of the land). Unfortunately, the learned trial magistrate does not appear to have given his mind to this aspect of the defence case.

The principles which this Court applies in determining applications for bail pending C appeal are I think, well established now. They include the following:

1. A clear distinction has to be drawn between the granting of bail to a person yet D to be tried and granting bail to a convict. It is of great importance that it should be clearly understood that the principle that bail is a right is applicable only to cases where the accused persons have not yet been convicted, it does not apply to cases, like the one now before me, where the accused persons have been convicted. E

2. Bail pending the hearing of an appeal can be granted only if there are exceptional and unusual reasons or where an overwhelming probability that the appeal in question would succeed exists; see Raghbir Singh Lamba v R (1); In F re R v Sakerbai M A Gangji (2); Hasanali Walji v R (3); Attilosio s/o Mosca v R (4); Mipawa v R (5); Singh v R (6) and Michael v R (7).

3. It cannot be said, where an argument on the facts needs detailed references to the text of the evidence or the judgment to support it, that the appeal has G overwhelming chances of success: see Hassanali Walji's case (supra).

4. There is no general principle that a person released on bail pending the hearing of an appeal will not be sent back to prison if his appeal fails. The non-existence H of such a principle gives rise to a reluctance on the part of the court to order that a convicted person be released on bail pending the hearing of his appeal.

5. The execution of the task of deciding whether a person who has been convicted should be granted bail involves balancing the considerations of the I liberty of the individual and proper administration of justice.

SAMATTA JK

A 6. Whereas in an application for bail pending trial the onus lies on the prosecution to satisfy the court that the interests of justice would or might be jeopardised if the accused is released on bail, in an application for bail pending the hearing of an appeal the onus is upon the applicant; he must satisfy the court that justice will not be endangered and that either exceptional and unusual reasons exist or B that his appeal has overwhelming chances of success. The court will grant him bail only if it is satisfied that justice requires that that be done.

In the instant case would I be justified to grant bail to the applicant? With the above C principles in mind, I proceed to answer that question. What constitutes the offence of malicious damage to property? I start with that. Before a person is convicted of that offence, malice, inter alia, must be admitted or proved. But the word malice here is not used in the sense understood by the layman; it is used in a technical sense. Here the D word does not necessarily mean personal spite against the owner or possessor of the damaged property. It is enough if the accused intended wrongful damage to the property, because if that intention is admitted or demonstrated to have existed, the law will presume malice. The presumption is, of course, rebuttable. It follows from all this that a E bona fide assertion of right-whether or not the belief was founded in law-is, putting it in general terms, a sufficient defence to a charge of malicious damage to property. The decisiveness does not lie in the lawfulness of what the accused did but in the question whether the accused believed he was entitled to do what he did. The accused's belief F need not be a reasonable one, for the unreasonableness of the belief is a matter which goes only to credibility. The unreasonableness of the alleged belief may be so great as to lead, when considered with other factors to an irresistible conclusion that the accused G could not have acted bona fide when he damaged the property in question. But where it is accepted (or where there is a reasonable doubt on the matter) that the accused damaged the property under the honest but mistaken belief that the said property was his or that he had a right to do what he did to it he has not committed the offence of H malicious damage to property. In the instant case, as already pointed out, the learned trial magistrate did not address himself to the important task of deciding what the accused believed when he caused the destruction of the structure on the disputed plot. While guarding myself against any statement which could be taken as amounting to expressing opinion on the merits of the appeal, I cannot but say that the learned I magistrate's omission was a very serious one, particularly when it is considered in the light of one of the ingredients of the offence of A malicious damage to property I have discussed above. In my opinion the error is so serious as to be capable of being considered by this Court as constituting a warrant for faulting the learned magistrate's decision. Clearly, this was a case in which each B claimant-the complainant, Jafari Ngonyani, and the applicant-was armed with an official document which on the face of it supported his claim of ownership of the disputed plot. In these circumstances, it was absolutely necessary for the learned magistrate to consider the defence of claim of right and make a finding as to whether the applicant C caused the destruction of the structure in the honest belief that the plot was his and, therefore, he had the right in law to cause the said destruction. In what appeared to me to be a half-hearted submission Mr Kamba, counsel for the Republic, contended that the D applicant's appeal has `a narrow chance of succeeding'. With respect, I disagree. For reasons I have endeavoured to give, albeit briefly, I agree with Dr Lamwai, counsel for the applicant, that the appeal has overwhelming chances of success. In my opinion, there are overwhelming chances that after hearing the appeal this Court will hold that the story which the applicant put before the Trial Court was a sufficient defence to the E charge he faced. Accordingly, I allow the application. The applicant is granted bail pending the hearing of the appeal in the sum of Shs 100 000/= with two sureties each in the like sum. F

Filton (Tanzania) Ltd is the defendant in a main action and the Applicant in this A application. The Co-operative and Development Bank is the plaintiff in the main action and the Respondent in this application.

The Applicant sought an order that he be allowed to proceed with an oral application for the consolidation of civil cases under various case numbers. The application was B brought under the proviso to Rule 2 Order 43 of the Civil Procedure Code, which states that all applications under the Code shall be made by chamber summons supported by affidavit `provided that the court may where it considers fit to do so, entertain an application made orally ....'.

Held:

C (i) An application by chamber summons supported by affidavit gives two important opportunities to the respondent: notice of the remedy which the applicant seeks, and the course the applicant will take in establishing the justification for the remedy sought.

(ii) Unless there is something approximating an emergency, the Court will not lightly abandon a procedure and a practice which have been tested by time and D are well-founded.

(iii) An oral application may accordingly be allowed in very rare and non-contentious litigation, or where prompt action is required to protect the parties' interests, such as immediately upon the pronouncement of judgment.

(iv) There is neither urgency nor the need to depart from the established rules of E practice and procedure.

(v) The application to proceed orally is dismissed with costs.

(vi) The defendant is granted leave to lodge an application by chamber summons supported by affidavit, in the normal manner, with costs to be in the cause. F

Mackanja J: G

Mr Mchora, one of the learned defence counsel, is applying for an order that he be allowed to proceed with an oral application for consolidation of Civil Cases No 122, 123, 124, 125 and 126, all of 1993. This application is made under the proviso to Rule 2 of H Order 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. Rule 2 makes it mandatory, unless otherwise provided, that all applications under the Civil Procedure Code shall be made by a chamber summons supported by affidavit:

I 'Provided that the court may where it considers fit to do so, entertain an application made orally....'

MACKANJA J
An oral application may also be made where all the parties to the suit by a written A memorandum signed by them or their advocates consent to the order applied for. Basically the oral application is sought because the written application has not been admitted by the Honourable the Principal Judge. In that connection Mr Mchora applied to B the court to withdraw all the papers relating to the written chamber application which was not admitted.
Mr Kisusi, learned counsel for the plaintiff/respondent, does not oppose the withdrawal of the written documents relating to the written application. He, however, opposes the C institution of the oral application on the grounds that the defence has neither suggested nor indicated why this is a fit matter for an oral application as opposed to the normal court practice of written applications supported by affidavit. Learned counsel has argued, and I think quite correctly, that there must be very good reasons why a party to a civil D action will be allowed to institute proceedings save according to the general practice of the Court. And since the proviso referred to grants discretionary powers, Mr Kisusi's contention that that discretion should, as is normal practice, be exercised judiciously, is also sound.
Learned counsel for the plaintiffs has raised another point, that the application, if made E orally, will affect six cases. That the mere number of cases entails the consideration of a collosal amount of facts in order to determine whether the six cases are fit for consolidation. He has raised concern that it is extremely difficult to digest orally facts involving six cases. There is no doubt that if the application is made in writing the F respondents will get advance notice which will enable them to prepare themselves; this is a fact which cannot be over emphasized. And, of course, as learned counsel for the plaintiffs/respondents has pointed out, instructions which were given by the Honourable G the Principal Judge, if any, are of an administrative nature an are therefore not binding on this Court. This argument brings us to one important consideration; under what circumstances can an oral application be made?
Mr Mchora argues that the circumstances which are required by the proviso came in place after the honourable the Principal Judge made the directive. I have gone through the record and I find no such instructions from the Honourable the Principal Judge, which form part of the record of this case. It is important to note, however, that this application is brought under s 95 of the Civil Procedure Code. According to Mr Mchora, applications of this nature are meant to provide avenues of justice which are not available in the orders and that, ipso facto, this application falls under Order 43 Rule 3. I have examined A the law cited and I find nothing from what Mr Mchora has said which would justify this application to be proceeded with orally and not according to the general practice of this Court whereby applications are made by Chamber Summons supported by affidvit. B

The nature of civil litigation is such that it offers equal opportunity to both parties. It is not one of surprises. Every stage in the process of litigation is regulated by rules which create an elaborate procedure for pleading. As a general rule, the defendant or respondent, as the case may be, is entitled to know the case against him by advance C notice by way of a summons of whatever nature. And by the established practice of this Court all chamber summonses are supported by affidavit. This procedure has not been maintained over the ages for nothing. For one thing, an affidavit is evidence which sets D out how the applicant intends to establish the justification for the remedy he seeks from the court. The affidavit also provides evidentiary proof of what it contains. So that an application by chamber summons supported by affidavit gives two important opportunities to the respondent: notice of the remedy which the applicant seeks and the E course the applicant shall take in establishing his justification for the remedy. Unless there is something like an emergency, therefore, the Court will not lightly abandon a procedure and practice which have been tested by time and which are well-founded. In this regard an oral application may be allowed to proceed in very rare and non-contentions litigation; or where it is necessary to take prompt action for the purpose F of safeguarding the interest of the parties, especially immediately after judgment is pronounced. The purpose of such an application, therefore, should be designed to maintain the status quo such as during intermediate periods between execution of decree and hearing of an appeal against such decree; to prevent prejudice to the G applicant and to prevent one party from outwitting the opposite party by maintaining a fair balance between them.

I see neither the urgency nor the need in the instant application which justifies a deviation from an established procedure and general rule of practice. In the result the application H to proceed orally fails and is dismissed with costs. It is directed that the defendant may, if he so wishes, lodge an application by chamber summons supported by affidavit in line with the established practice of this Court. Costs shall be in the course. I

The Respondents were ordered to vacate certain premises pursuant to a decree of the D Dar es Salaam Regional Housing Tribunal passed on 19 October 1992. Upon lodging a notice of appeal with the Housing Appeals Tribunal, the Respondents filed for (and duly obtained) an order for stay of execution from the Resident Magistrate at Kisutu in terms of Order 21 rule 24 of the Civil Procedure Code. E

The Applicant applies for the revision of the Magistrate's order, in terms of Section 79(1) and Order 43 rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Applicant contends that the Magistrate granted the stay of execution without jurisdiction and/or pursuant to a material irregularity and accordingly asks that execution be ordered to proceed forthwith. F

Held:

(i) The only reason the Resident Magistrate's court granted a stay of execution was because a notice of appeal had already been filed in the Housing Appeals Tribunal.

(ii) The mere filing of a notice of appeal cannot amount to sufficient cause, for the G purposes of Order 21 rule 24, for an order staying execution by the executing court.

(iii) No sufficient explanation was given as to why the application for stay of execution was brought before the executing court and not to either the Regional Housing Tribunal or the Housing Appeals Tribunal.

(iv) The order of the Resident Magistrate's court staying execution is therefore ultra H vires its powers.

(v) The Resident Magistrate's order is quashed, and execution is permitted until such time as a lawful order for stay of execution is issued.

Mkude J: A

The Dar es Salaam Regional Housing Tribunal passed a decree on 19 October 1992 under which the respondents herein were to vacate certain premises. The respondents promptly lodged a notice of appeal against the decision in the Housing Appeals Tribunal B and on 27 October 1992 they filed an application for stay of execution in the court of the Resident Magistrate at Kisutu under Order 21 Rule 24 of the Civil Procedure Code. The application was heard on 16 November 1992 and in a ruling dated 19 November 1992 the respondents herein were granted stay of execution as prayed. This application C for revision under s 79(1) proviso to Rule 2 thereof is brought by the decree holder complaining that the court of the Resident Magistrate had acted without jurisdiction and/or with material irregularity when it granted the order to stay of execution. Mr Mwajasho, learned advocate, appeared for the applicant/decree holder while Mr D Magessa, learned advocate, appeared for the respondent/judgment debtor. Mr Mwajasho urged the court to revise the ruling of the Resident Magistrates' Court and order execution to proceed forthwith.

Mr Mwajasho put forward three grounds for seeking revision of the order for stay of E execution by the Resident magistrates' Court, viz:

(i) that no sufficient cause was shown by the respondent as to why up to 19 November 1992 they had failed to make an application for stay to either the F court which passed the decree (ie the Dar es Salaam Regional Housing Tribunal) or to the court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree (ie the Housing Appeals Tribunal).

(ii) that by granting an order for stay of execution for an unspecified period and G exceeding thirty days from the date of the decree (ie 19 October 1992) the Resident Magistrate's Court exceeded its jurisdiction.

(iii) that by entertaining the application for stay of execution when there was no appeal preferred from the decree of 19 October 1992 the court exercised its H jurisdiction with material irregularity.

The three grounds relied on by Mr Mwajasho are in accordance with the provisions of s 79(1) of the Civil Procedure Code spelling out the situations in which this court can I exercise its revisional jurisdiction. I will therefore deal with each ground in turn.

MKUDE J

It is common ground between the parties that the Resident Magistrate's Court at Kisutu A acted in the capacity of an executing court and the respondents had made their application for stay of execution under the provisions of Order 21 r 24(1) of the Civil Procedure Code, which provides as follows:

B `24(1) The court to which a decree has been sent for execution shall, upon sufficient cause being shown, stay the execution of such decree for a reasonable time, to enable the judgment debtor to apply to the court by which the decree was passed or to any court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or the execution thereof, for an order to stay execution or for any other order C relating to the decree or execution which might have been made by such court of first instance or appellate court if execution had been issued thereby, or if application for execution had been made thereto.'

One thing that stands out clearly in this provision is that the power of the executing court D in ordering stay of execution is very much restricted. The real power for stay of execution is vested in the court that passed the decree and the court having appellate jurisdiction in the respect of the decree. The power enjoyed by the executing court has the following limitations, inter alia--

(i) sufficient cause must be shown by the applicant why the power should be exercised by the executing court.

(ii) the period of stay granted must be reasonable F

(iii) the stay is granted only in order to enable the applicant to apply to the court which passed the decree or the court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree.

After going through the ruling of the Resident Magistrates' Court dated 19 November 1992 and hearing learned counsel's arguments I am satisfied that the court erred and G the order as made cannot be left to stand.

I gather from the ruling of the Resident Magistrates' Court that the only reason stay of execution was granted is that the applicant had already by that time filed a notice of appeal in the Housing Appeals Tribunal. With due respect the mere filing of a notice of H appeal cannot amount to sufficient cause for the stay of execution by the executing court. Since the power to order stay is primarily that of the court which passed the decree or the appellate court, a sufficient explanation must be given why the application for stay is sent to the executing court and not to one of the two courts, in this case the I Dar es Salaam Regional Housing Tribunal on the Housing

MKUDE J

Appeals Tribunal. As no such explanation was given by the judgment debtors the A executing court ought to have declined to exercise that power. Let me hasten to add that what is involved here is not a question of ouster of jurisdiction of the Resident Magistrates' Court in rent matters. The point is that as long as the Resident Magistrates' B Court acts as the executing court its powers are limited by the statutory provisions of Order 21 Rule 2(1) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Grounds two and three go together. The requirement that the period of stay of execution granted must be reasonable is tied up with the need to enable the judgment debtor to C apply to the court by which the decree was passed or the court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree. It must be emphasized here that the power given to the executing court under Order 21 Rule 24(1) is not a general power of stay. That power as stated above, is enjoyed only by the court which passed the decree or the D appellate court having jurisdiction in respect of the decree under true provisions of Order 39 Rule 5. Rule 5 of Order 39 provides as follows:

`5(1) An appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from E except so far as the Court may order, nor shall execution of a decree be stayed by reason only of an appeal having been preferred from the decree; but the court may for sufficient cause order stay of execution of such decree.

(2) Where an application is made for stay of execution of an appealable decree before the expiration of the time allowed for appealing therefrom, the court which passed the decree may on sufficient F cause shown order the execution to be stayed.

(3) No order for stay of execution shall be made under subrule (1) or subrule (2) unless the High Court or the court making it is satisfied-

(a) that substantial loss may result to the party applying for stay of execution unless the order is G made;

(b) that the application has been made without unreasonable delay; and

(c) that security has been given by the applicant for the due performance of such decree or order as may ultimately be binding upon him. H

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in subrule (3) the court may make an ex-parte order for stay of execution pending the hearing of the application.'

I note in the present case that the order granting stay of execution is not made in order to I enable the judgment debtor to apply to the Dar es Salaam Regional Housing Tribunal or the Housing Tribunal. It is an order for stay of executing pending the determination of the appeal. This A order is clearly outside the scope of the order envisaged in Order 21 Rule 24 and it is therefore ultra vires.

For the above reasons I am satisfied that the Resident Magistrates' Court exceeded its jurisdiction when it made the order for stay of execution dated 19 November 1992. The B order is hereby quashed and the decree holder is at liberty to proceed with execution of the decree until such time that a lawful order for stay of execution is issued. The applicant/decree will have his costs for this application and in the court below. C

Samatta JK: This is an application for an interlocutory injunction restraining His H Excellency Ali Hassan Mwinyi, the President of the United Republic, from discharging presidential functions pending the determination of Civil Case No 206 of 1993, filed in this Court, in which the applicant seeks, inter alia, the following declarations:

I (1) The Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania (herein-

A after referred to as the Constitution) was violated by Zanzibar joining an organisation known as Islamic Conference Organisation.

(2) The President is guilty of allowing or enabling that violation to take place and is therefore personally answerable for the violation. B

(3) His Excellency Ali Hassan Mwinyi's continued exercise of presidential powers is unconstitutional as well as a potential danger to the well-being of the United Republic and its citizens.

The application has been strenuously opposed by Mr Salula, Senior State Attorney, on C behalf of the respondent. Although he is a teacher by profession, the applicant, who appeared in person at the hearing, has argued the application, including legal issues, with much confidence.

At the hearing Mr Salula raised a preliminary objection to the application. He based the D objection on three principal grounds. These are:

1. The application is incompetent because the affidavit sworn and filed by the E applicant in support of it is fatally defective in that it does not comply with the provisions of Order 19 Rule 3(1) of the Civil Procedure Code.

2. The application contravenes s 46A of the Constitution in that it attempts to move the court to do an act in respect of which Parliament has provided a F special and entirely different procedure. In other words, this Court does not have jurisdiction to make the order sought by the applicant.

3. The provisions of s 11(2) of the Government Proceedings Act, 1967, and those of Order 37 Rule 2 of Civil Procedure Code as amended by the Govt G Proceedings (Procedure) Rules, 1968 (Govt Notice No 376 of 1968) prohibit the granting of the kind of injunction sought in this application.

In performing my task in the instant application I must make it perfectly clear that I bear H in mind, inter alia, the following principles:

1. A court will not be deterred from a conclusion because of regret at its consequences: Hornal v Neuberger Products Ltd (1) at 978.

I 2. It is wrong for a court of law to be anxious or to appear to be anxious to avoid treading on executive toes.

SAMATTA JK

A 3. A constitution is a living instrument which must be construed in the light of present day conditions. The complexities of our society must be taken into account in interpreting it. A workable constitution is a priceless asset to any country.

4. A constitution should be given a generous and purposive construction:Attorney-General of the Gambia v Momodou Jobe (2). B Respect must, of course, be paid to the language used in the instrument.

5. The balance of power between the three branches of government, namely, the executive, the legislature and the judiciary, and the relationship of the courts to C the other two branches must be carefully maintained. Any statutory alteration of that balance must be in unmistakable terms. One branch of government should not usurp the powers of another branch.

6. The notion, apparently harboured by some people in this country, that the D President of the United Republic is above the law is subversive of the Constitution and the laws. All Government leaders, including the President, are, like the humblest citizen, bound to comply with the laws of this country. The maxim `The King can do no wrong' has no place in our law even if the word `President' is substituted for the word `King'. Everyone and every institution or E organisation in this country is enjoined to pay respect to the principle of supremacy of the law, see s 26(1) of the Constitution.

7. Flexibility in the application of procedural law is a desirable thing, for it assists to F ensure that at the end of the day justice triumphs. When it comes to the issue of compliance with rules of procedures the instinct for strictness should, where appropriate, be subdued. Substance rather than form should be the courts' primary concern. G

Having stated the above principles, I turn now to consider Mr Salula's preliminary objection. I propose to start with the argument concerning the applicant's affidavit. As will be recalled, it was the learned Senior State Attorney's contention that the affidavit is defective for non-compliance with the provisions of Order 19 Rule 3(1) of the Civil H Procedure Code. Order 19 Rule 3(1) provides:

`3.-(1) Affidavits shall be confined to such facts as the deponent is able of his knowledge to prove, except on interlocutory applications, on which statements of his belief may be admitted: I

Provided that the grounds thereof are stated'.

SAMATTA JK

It cannot be argued, and the applicant, if I understood him correctly as I believe I did, did A not venture to argue, that the supporting affidavit in this application strictly complied with the above quoted provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. I would not, on that ground alone, however, drive the applicant from the judgment seat in this application. It is the B function of a court of justice to try to get to the bottom of the real dispute and to determine what are the real issues in the matter before it provided, of course, no party can be prejudiced. As already remarked, substance rather than form should be the courts' primary concern. If legal steps can be taken to cure any defects in a pleading or C an affidavit, without substantially prejudicing with the opposite party, a court of justice should grant leave to the party to take these remedial steps, if he so wishes. I would call attention to the elaborated words of Lord Collins MR, in Re Coles and Ravenshear (3)

D `Although a court cannot conduct its business without a code of procedure, the relation of the rules of practice to the work of justice is intended to be that of handmaid rather than mistress; and the court ought not to be so far bound and tied by the rules, which are after all only intended as general rules of procedure, as to be compelled to do what will cause injustice in the particular case'. E

If I will be satisfied that this court has jurisdiction to grant the relief sought by the applicant, I will be prepared to grant leave to him to take remedial stops. I now turn, therefore, to the question whether this court has that jurisdiction. F

Mr Salula's submission on this point was that, as the Constitution contains specific provisions governing how and under what circumstances a person holding the office of the President of the United Republic will cease, temporarily or otherwise, to hold that office, the suspension or removal of such a person from office is not by way of judicial G process. In support of that submission the learned Senior State Attorney cited s 42(2) and (3) of the Constitution as read with s 46A of the same legislation. Countering that argument, the applicant contended, among other things, that s 26(2), 30(3) and 108(2) of the Constitution, whether read together or separately, empower this court to grant the H temporary injunction sought. Section 42 (2) and (3) of the Constitution reads as follows:

`42-(1) ...

(2) Unless he sooner resigns or dies, a person elected as President shall, subject to subsection (3) I of this section, hold office for a term of five years from the date on which he is elected President.

1996 TLR p135

SAMATTA JK

A (3) A person elected President shall hold the office of President until:

(a) the day when his successor in office takes the oath of office; or

(b) the date when he dies in office; or

(c) the day of his resignation from that office; or

(d) he ceases to hold the office of President in accordance with the provisions of this constitution.' B

Section 46A provides as follows:

`46A.-(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of article 46 of this Constitution the National Assembly may C pass a resolution to remove the President from office if a motion to impeach the President is moved and passed in accordance with the provisions of this Article.

(2) Subject to the other provisions of this article, no motion to impeach the President shall be moved save only if it is alleged that the President- D

(a) has committed acts which generally violate the Constitution or the law concerning the ethics of public leaders;

(b) has committed acts which contravene the conditions concerning the registration of political parties specified in article 20(2) of this Constitution; or

E (c) has conducted himself in a manner which lowers the esteem of the office of President of the United Republic, and no such motion shall be moved within twenty months from the time when a similar motion was previously moved and rejected by the National Assembly.

(3) The National assembly shall not pass a motion to impeach the President save only if- F

(a) a written notice signed and supported by not less the twenty per cent of all the member of Parliament is submitted to the Speaker thirty days prior to the sitting at which such motion is intended to be moved in the National Assembly, specifying the wrong committed by the G president and proposing that a Special Committee of Inquiry be constituted to inquire into the charges brought against the President.

(b) at any time after the Speaker receives the notice duly signed by the Member of Parliament and satisfies himself that the provisions of the Constitution for the moving of the motion have been H complied with, to vote on the motion to constitute a Special Committee of Inquiry, and if it is supported by not less than two thirds of all the Members of Parliament, the Speaker shall announce the names of the members of the Special Committee of Inquiry I

(4) The Special Committee of Inquiry for the purpose of this article shall consist of the following members, that is to say-

A (a) the Chief Justice of the United Republic who shall be the Chairman of the Committee;

(b) the Chief Justice of Tanzania Zanzibar; and

(c) seven members appointed by the Speaker in accordance with the Standing Orders of the National Assembly and taking into account the proportional representation amongst the B political parties represented in the National Assembly.

(5) In the event that the National Assembly passes the motion to constitute a Special Committee of Inquiry, the President shall be deemed to be out of office, and the duties and functions of the office of president shall be discharged in accordance with the provisions of article 37(3) of this Constitution C until the Speaker shall inform the President about the resolution of the National Assembly in connection with the charges brought against him.

(7) As soon as possible and in any event within a period of not more than ninety days, the Special Committee of Inquiry shall submit its report to the Speaker.

E (8) After the Speaker receives the report of the Special Committee of Inquiry, the report shall be tabled before the National Assembly in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the Standing Orders of the National Assembly.

(9) After the report of the Special Committee of Inquiry is submitted pursuant to sub-article (8) the F National Assembly shall discuss the report and shall afford the President the opportunity to be heard, and then by the votes of not less than two thirds majority of all the Members of Parliament, the National Assembly shall pass a resolution either that the charges against the President have been proved and that he is unworthy of continuing to hold the office of President, or that the charges have not been proved.

(10) In the event the National Assembly passes a resolution that the charges against the President have been proved and that he is unworthy of continuing to hold the office of President, the Speaker shall inform the President and the Chairman of the Electoral Commission about such resolution of the National Assembly, whereupon the President shall be obliged to resign before the expiry of three days from the day the National Assembly passed the resolution.

(11) In the event the President ceases to hold the office of President by reason of the charges against him being proved he shall not be entitled to receive any payment by way of pension or to receive any benefits or other privileges which he has under the Constitution or any other law enacted by Parliament.'

SAMATTA JK

The sections of the Constitution which were the main-stay of the applicant's contention A that the Court has the jurisdiction to make an injunction order which has the effect of suspending the President of the United Republic from office read as follows:

`26(2) B

`Every person is entitled, subject to the procedure provided by the law, to institute proceedings for the protection of the Constitution and legality'.

`30(4) C

`Subject to the other provisions of this Constitution, the High Court shall have and may exercise original jurisdiction to hear and determine any matter brought before it in pursuance of this section; and an Act of Parliament may make provision with respect to-

(a) the procedure regulating the institution of proceedings under this section; D

(b) the powers, practice and procedure of the High Court in relation to the hearing of proceedings instituted under this section;

(c) ensuring the more efficient exercise of the powers of the High Court, the protection and enforcement of the basic rights, freedom and duties in accordance with this Constitution.' E

`108(2)

`Where it is not expressly stated in this Constitution or in any other legislation that any specific matter shall be first heard and determined in a certain court, the High Court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine that matter. In addition, the High Court shall have jurisdiction in respect of any other F matter which, in accordance with legal traditions and conventional practices obtaining is ordinarily to be heard and determined by the High Court; save that, the provisions of this section shall apply subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal of Tanzania as provided for in this Constitution or in any other legislation'. G

I have given careful and earnest consideration to the competing arguments addressed to me on the issue of jurisdiction and in the end I am satisfied that Mr Salula's argument is sound in law. The principle that the functions of one branch of government should not H encroach on the functions of another branch is a very important principle, one of the principles which ensure that the task of governing a State is executed smoothly and peacefully.

It seems to me to be an incontrovertible proposition of law, having regard to the use of I the words `in accordance with the provisions of this constitution' in s 42(3)(d) of the Constitution, that removal or suspension from office of the President of the United Republic is the A legislature's exclusive prerogative. Since s 46A of Constitution lays down the procedure to be used in removing or suspending the President, the attempt to remove or suspend him by a procedure other than that would not be legal. If Parliament had intended this B Court to exercise concurrent jurisdiction of dealing with politico-constitutional offences it could easily have said so when enacting s 46A of the Constitution. The omission to provide such a provision in the constitution would appear to strongly suggest that Parliament did not want judicial process to be used in removing or suspending the C President from office. It is not for this Court to say whether or not that was a wise decision. None of the sections of the Constitution cited by the applicant compels me to hold a different view. The right granted by s 26(2) to institute proceedings for the protection of the Constitution and legality cannot, in my considered opinion, be regarded D as providing an authority to this Court to grant a relief which, according to the Constitution itself, is a remedy available only through a parliamentary procedure. As regards s 30(4), the following can be said. The subsection deals with the subject of limitations upon and the enforcement and protection of basic rights and duties. No issue E concerning basic rights arises in the instant application. With regard to enforcement of duties, it can be said without inaccuracy, I think, that that matter does not authorise the court to hold that the President can be removed or suspended from office in a manner other than that which the Constitution has specifically provided for. As for s 108(2), let F me say without ambiguity that I know of no legal traditions or conventional practices which authorise this Court to try alleged politico-constitutional offences, and the applicant cited none in his argument. It may well be (and I say no more than that, G because the issue is not before me at this stage of the case) that the court has jurisdiction to give a declaratory judgment as to the commission or otherwise of such offences, but I will, I hope, be forgiven for stating the obvious, namely, that a temporary injunction and a declaratory judgment are two different things.

But under the common law does this court not have the jurisdiction to grant the H injunction sought by the applicant? I can, I think, answer that question very briefly. Under the common law (the Crown Proceedings Act, 1948, reaffirmed the rule) no injunction can lie against the Crown: see SA de Smith: Judicial Review Administrative Action, 2nd I ed pp 461--462; Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th ed para 168 p 161. It follows from this position that under that law this court could not have jurisdiction to issue an injunction against the President. In A any case, any rule of common law granting this court such a jurisdiction would, by necessary implication, have been abolished in this country by the provisions of s 42 and 46A of the Constitution.

While paying due respect to the applicant's gallantry, I have, for the reasons I have given, B reached a clear conclusion that this Court lacks jurisdiction to grant the relief sought by the applicant in this application. This conclusion renders it unnecessary to decide whether, as was strenuously contended by Mr Salula, the provisions of s 11(2) of the Government Proceedings Act, 1967, and these of Order 37 Rule 2 of the Civil Procedure C Code as amended by the Government Proceedings (Procedure) Rules, 1968, stand in the applicant's path in the instant application.

The point taken in limine succeeds and the application for interlocutory injunction is rejected. D

Mkude J: C
This is an application for extension of time to appeal against the order of the District Court of Knondoni refusing leave to appeal out of time. The applicant had lost the case in the Primary Court of Magomeni and failed to appeal against the decision of the Primary Court within the statutory thirty days. She applied for leave to appeal out of time but the D district court dismissed her application against the order of the district court and so she is now seeking leave to appeal out of time. In the course of her submissions the applicant was at pains to explain why she was late in appealing to the district court against the decision of the district court which refused her leave to appeal out of time, E even after prompting from the court.
In reply, Mr Lipiki, learned counsel for the respondent, raised a preliminary objection to the effect that the application is incompetent as it has been made under the wrong provision. The chamber summons shows that the application is made under s 95 of the F Civil Procedure Code, while the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to primary courts. Mr Lipiki submitted that as the matter originated in the primary court the application should have been made under Rule 3 of the Civil Procedure (Appeals in Proceedings originating in Primary Courts) Rules 1964. He contended further that Rule 3 G contains mandatory requirements which an applicant for extension of time must comply with or else the application will be rejected as incompetent. He cited the case of Stanley Karama Mariki v Chihiyo Kisia w/o Nderingo (1) as authority for this.

Mr Lipiki further contended that even if the court should hold the application to be H competent the applicant has given no good reason for the delay. He submitted that, as shown in the counter-affidavit, the applicant sought justice outside the court while the case was pending in court and that is when she wasted time. Mr Lipiki pointed out that I the applicant had been to the Minister for Home Affairs and CCM at a time when she ought to have been pursuing her appeal in the courts. She had even been to the Mfanyakazi Newspaper complaining A instead of coming to court and pursue her appeal. Mr Lipiki concluded by urging the court to dismiss the application with costs.
I respectfully agree with Mr Lipiki, learned counsel for the respondent, that this application is incompetent. Section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code cited in the chamber B summons has no application in view of the provisions of s 2 of the Civil Procedure Code which provides as follows:

`2. Subject to the express provisions of any written law, the provisions of the Code shall apply to all C proceedings in the High Court of the United Republic, Courts of resident magistrates and district courts.'

As pointed out by Mr Lipiki provision is made under Rule 3 of the Civil Procedure D (Appeals in Proceedings originating in Primary Courts) Rules, 1964. It follows that there is no occasion for invoking the inherent powers of the court under Section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code even if the Code were applicable. See Aero Helicopter (T) Ltd v F N Jansen (2) in which it was held that where there is a law making provision for exercise of E power by a court then inherent powers of the court cannot be invoked.
The applicant has not given any explanation for failing to appeal against the order of the district court in time. The fact that she was busy complaining to CCM and the Minister for Home Affairs is not sufficient reason for extending time. F
For the above reasons this application fails and I dismiss it with costs.

E

-Headnote

The Applicant arrived in Tanzania during the course of 1987 and was subsequently granted a `Residence Permit Class 'A' No.004307', issued on 14 September 1990. Renewed on 16 September 1993, the permit was to remain current until 12 September F 1994. In the interim, however, it was cancelled by the Director of Immigration Services and duly confirmed by the Minister for Home Affairs, on 2 December 1993.

In a letter to the Applicant, the Director advanced that `the power conferred upon me under s.15(2) of the Immigration Act No.8 of 1972' constituted the reason for the cancellation of the Applicant's permit. G

The Applicant's counsel contended that the unstated reason for the cancellation of the permit was due to certain criminal charges pending against the Applicant, and that the effect of such cancellation was that the Applicant, as persona non grata in the Republic, could not clear his name by defending the charges. H

The Applicant accordingly sought the invalidation of the cancellation of the permit on account of the alleged bias of the Minister and also on the basis that the Applicant was `punished' unheard.

Held:

(i) The Applicant learnt of the cancellation of his permit from a third party, since he I was himself out of the country at the time of cancellation and the letter of cancellation was served upon his son.

1996 TLR p142

(ii) The Applicant was charged under laws and by authorities independent of the A powers of the Minister.

(iii) A foreign alien (sic) has no right to enter the Republic except by leave; and should leave be granted, he cannot overstay the permissible period by a single day.

(iv) Once a permit is granted to an immigrant, he has the right to remain in the B Republic until such permit expires. If, however, the permit should be revoked during its currency, the immigration authorities have a duty to give reasons for such revocation and to afford the affected person the opportunity of being heard, prior to a final decision being taken.

(v) Discretionary powers must be exercised fairly, and this requires adherence to C the rules of natural justice which include the right to be heard. There is nothing in Section 15(1) of the Immigration Act which ousts that right.

(vi) Although the Applicant had a legitimate expectation of remaining in the country until the expiry of his permit, that expectation could have been justifiably D extinguished if, and only if, he had been given an opportunity of making representations to the authorities.

(vii) In the result, the following orders of certiorari are made:

the Director's decision, cancelling the Applicant's permit is quashed; the Minister's decision, confirming the Director's decision of cancellation, is E quashed; and the Minister's order of deportation of the Applicant is quashed.

(xi) A mandamus is issued, ordering the Director to restore `Residence Permit Class `A' No.0043607' to the Applicant forthwith.

It is not disputed at all that the applicant came to Tanzania sometime in 1987 and subsequently established some business here in Dar es Salaam. In order to regularise his stay in this country he applied for, and was granted, residence permit class `A'. According to Hassen Rajabu Maiga, a Senior Immigration Officer who swore the counter I affidavit and who was summoned to be cross-examined at the instance of the applicant, the applicant was, for the first time, issued with Residence Permit Class `A' No 004307 on 14 September 1990. This permit A was renewed on 16 September 1993; it was to remain current until the 12 September 1994. This was not to be because the residence permit was cancelled on 2 December 1993. According to law the cancellation was made by the Director of the Immigration B Services, an exercise which was confirmed by the Minister responsible for Home Affairs. The Minister's confirmation is contained in a letter with Ref No HAS 152/113/03/F/50 dated 2 December 1993. That letter is addressed to the applicant; the operative part reads: C

`I, Augustine Lyatonga Mrema (MP), Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Home Affairs, do hereby confirm under s 15(2) of the Immigration Act 1972 that Residence Permit Class `A' No 0043607, issued to you is hereby cancelled and that you are required to leave the country by the 2nd December, 1993. D

I, also hereby, order under section 23 of the Immigration Act No 8 of 1972 that you, Mr Mohamed Jawad Mroeh (sic) are prohibited from entering and staying in Tanzania ...'.

The reason which was advanced for the cancellation of the residence permit is E contained in the letter which communicated that decision to the applicant. It was written on 2 December 1993 by the office of the Director of Immigration Services. The operative part reads:

`Please take note that by the power conferred upon me under s 15(2) of the Immigration Act No 8 of F 1972, I hereby cancel, in the public interest, your residence permit class `A' No 0043607 issued on 14/9/90 and renewed on 16/9/93 valid until 12/9/94.

Your stay in the United Republic of Tanzania shall, therefore, be unlawful under section 6(f) of the Immigration Act No 8 of 1972 ...' G

He was ordered to surrender his residence permit and to leave the country not later than the day the letter was written. He was advised to appoint an agent of his own choice to take care of his movable and immovable property he might have in the country during his H absence. Both letters have been annexed to the affidavit which supports the application.

Mr El-Maamry, learned advocate for the applicant, maintains that the action which was taken against his client is unfair, because for all the years that he lived in this country he led a clean faultless life. In spite of all this the Minister for Home Affairs did, on 22 I October 1993 call a press conference at which he accused the applicant of having illegally exported US $401,208 to foreign banks. That he ordered the arrest of the A applicant who was consequently arrested on 23 October 1993. On 25 October 1993, charged with two counts of forgery and uttering a false document concerning some US $6,000 in Criminal Case No 1273/93. That although the Minister has accused the applicant of wrong-doing involving a larger amount of money, the criminal charges B reflected a smaller amount. That when this case came up for mention in court on 23 November 1993 the applicant who was admitted to bail, applied for leave to travel to Spain for treatment to his eye. The prosecution is alleged to have raised no objection to this overseas trip and the court of the Resident Magistrate, Kisutu duly granted him leave C of absence. The applicant's son, Ali Mohamed Jawad Mrouch, was bound over to produce his father before the court on 22 December 1993, a date on which hearing of the case was fixed. Ali Mohamed Jawad Mrouch has sworn an affidavit in which he testifies to the above matters. From the forgoing facts it is now clear that the applicant's D residence permit was cancelled while he was out of the country-and while criminal matters were pending in court against him. The letter which communicated the cancellation of the residence permit was served on his son. So he came to know this matter through a third person. E

Mr El-Maamry contends that both the cancellation of the resident permit and the order which declared the applicant a probited immigrant were unlawful because they were made and confirmed by the same authority who had initiated criminal proceedings F against his client. The effect of the order which declared the applicant persona non grata was, of course, to disable the applicant from coming back to stand trial on criminal charges which were preffered against him in Criminal Case No 1273/93 of the Kisutu Court of Resident Magistrate. In the view of Mr El-Maamry these orders were unlawful G because they were intended to prevent the applicant from demonstrating his innocence. He based his submissions on the judgment in R v Brixton Prison Governor, Ex parte Soblem (1) at 907. For if he was guilty of the charges which faced him the law would have taken its full natural course. Mr El-Maamry contends that his client was not allowed H to clear his name although there was no evidence against him. He cited as an example the fact that although the Minister had accused him of offences involving a larger sum of US $401,208 the criminal charges against him involved only US $6,000.

Another point which the applicant persues relates to his right to be heard before he is I punished.

MACKANJA J

Mr El-Maamry submits that the applicant was denied his basic right to be heard before A he was condemned. That the applicant has been stigmatized and that the only remedy is to quash the orders because they were taken illegally and injudiciously and that the Republic failed to establish the public interest which they claim was the basis for B expelling the applicant from the country. Mr El-Maamry contends further that the Minister has made himself a judge in his own cause by ordering the arrest, the prosecution and confirming the cancellation of the applicant's residence permit. This, he says, is a clear manifestation of a denial of natural justice. Mr El-Maamry has referred to several English C decisions which to a large extent are irrelevant to the matters which are before me. Suffice it to say at this point that he contends that the Minister, on account of accusations which are made by Mr El-Maamry, should have disqualified himself in a matter in which he had a personal interest. Mr El-Maamry also questions the powers of D the Director of Public Prosecutions when he entered nolle prosequi in the case which faced the applicant. He invites this Court to quash that decision so that the applicant may be allowed to demonstrate his innocence.

So, from the foregoing submissions the applicant is raising the following important E issues:

1. The criminal proceedings which were instituted against him should be proceeded with to their conclusion so that he cleans his name, so to speak. F

2. That the cancellation of the residence permit and the deportation order are invalidated on account of the fact that the Minister's decision is tainted with bias.

3. The applicant was punished unheard. G

Mr Mallaba, learned State Attorney who represents the Republic, has invited this Court to dismiss the application. He has submitted that the existence of a criminal case against the applicant has nothing to do with the cancellation of his residence permit and H his subsequently being declared a prohibited immigrant. It is Mr Mallaba's contention that the two, that is the institution of the criminal case and the applicant's immigration status, have nothing in common. He argues that the criminal prosecution is a police matter and the other is an Immigration Department issue. And that there is no evidence I that both matters were instituted in tandem by the Minister.

MACKANJA J

Be that as it may have been, the applicant has not led evidence which does on a A balance of probability show that the criminal charges were instituted at the instance of, or under pressure from, the Minister. The only evidence there is the affidavit of Ali Mohamed Jawad Mrouch, the applicant's son. He deposes on nothing which touches on B these allegations. What remains are statements from the Bar and press reports. Statements made from the Bar or press reports cannot be substituted for probative evidence. I would therefore say that the applicant was prosecuted, and his charges later discontinued, under laws and by authorities which are independent of the powers of Minister for Home Affairs. In these circumstances, I would agree with Mr Mallaba that the C existence of the criminal charges or the discontinuation of those criminal charges cannot be a bar for the appropriate authority to discharge its duty under the Immigration Act. If the applicant feels that his name has been tarnished his remedy cannot be contained in proceedings of this nature. These observations answer the first and second D issues which I have framed.

I now turn to the third issue: was the applicant denied natural justice?

The Republic concedes that the right to be heard is one of the principles of natural E justice which all the judicial and quasi-judicial bodies are required to observe. Mr Mallaba contends, however, that the Director of Immigration Services and the Minister did not exercise a quasi-judicial function when the former cancelled the applicant's residence and when the Minister confirmed that cancellation. Mr Mallaba stated that even if the F Director and the Minister were quasi-judicial bodies, s 15(1) of the Immigration Act waves the right to be heard. That section provides:

`Section 15(1) Every residence permit issued under this Act shall be subject to the condition that if at G any time the holder thereof is notified by the Principal Immigration Officer that the permit has been cancelled in accordance with ss (2) the holder shall, within such time that the Principal Immigration Officer may specify, leave Tanzania.' H

Subsection (2) of s 15 empowers the Principal Immigration Officer (now the Director) to cancel a residence permit provided it is confirmed by the Minister for Home Affairs. All that is required of the Director, according to Mr Mallaba, is to notify the foreign alien of I the changed circumstance in his immigration status, and if the Minister is satisfied, he will confirm the cancellation. The language used in this legislation uses the word shall, which implies that it is mandatory. A

On the fact of it, it appears that the foreign alien whose permit is cancelled shall leave Tanzania at the time he is notified that his permit has been cancelled. In Mr Mallaba's B interpretation of s 15(1) an alien's right of being heard is extinguished by that statute. He finds support for this contention in an English decision in Schmidt v Secretary of State for Home Affairs (2) in which the same issue was discussed. Lord Denning was of this view, at 908 and 909: C

`... I quite agree, of course, that where a Police Officer has power to deprive a person of his liberty or his property, the general principle is that it is not to be done without his being given an opportunity of being heard and of making representations on his own behalf. But in case of aliens, it is rather D different; for they have no right to be here except by licence of the Crown. And it has been held that the Home Secretary is not bound to hear representations on their behalf, even in the case of a deportation order, though, in practice he usually does so...'.

As regards an alien who has no valid residence permit I would also agree with Lord E Denning that a foreign alien has no right to enter this country except by leave; and if he is given leave to be in the country for a limited period, he has no right to overstay a single day. However, as Lord Denning says in Schmidt v Secretary of State (supra) at 909 in respect of those aliens who have residence permits: F

`... If the permit is revoked before the time limits expires, he ought, I think, to be given an opportunity of making representations for he would have a legitimate expectation of being allowed to stay for the permitted time. Except in such a case a foreign alien has no right-and I would add, no legitimate expectation-of being allowed ...'. G

From the above exposition of the law, with which I fully agree, a foreign alien has no right to stay in this country without a permit. But once a permit has been given to him then he H is entitled to stay until it expires. If it is revoked mid-term, then the immigration authorities have a duty to given him the reasons and an opportunity of being heard before the final decision is taken.

Now, Mr Mallaba contends that the functions of the Director and the Minister are administrative and purely discretionary; hence the rules of natural justice do not apply. I Well, I need not overemphasize the point that a discretion has to be exercised fairly; it cannot be exercised fairly if the decision is arbitrary. In fact, decretionery powers cannot A be exercised fairly without adhering to rules of natural justice, including the right to be heard. There is nothing in s 15(1) of the Immigration Act which ousts that right of being heard in an appropriate case of a person whose lawful story has been abruptly discontinued before the expiry of his residence permit. The English case of Ridge v B Baldwin (3) is sufficient persuasive authority for the view that the distinction between administrative and judicial powers is largely not a valid one. Lord Denning says at page 909 in Schmidt v Secretary of State (supra) that: C

`... Some of the judgments in those cases were based on the fact that the Home Secretary was exercising an administrative power and not a judicial act.

But the distinction is no longer valid ... an administrative body may, in a proper case, be bound to give D a person who is affected by their decision an opportunity of making representations. It all depends on whether he has some right or interest, or, I would add, some legitimate expectation, of which it would not be fair to deprive him without hearing what he has to say....'

I have already held that the applicant has a legitimate expectation of staying in the E country until the expiry of his residence permit. That expectation could be extinguished justifiably if, and only if, he had first been given an opportunity to make representations to the authorities. It is after hearing him that the authorities could have justly decided, after F considering those representations, that it was in the public interest to revoke the permit. In the circumstances the application succeeds.

Upon the foregoing considerations I hereby issue an order of certiorari quashing the order of the Director of the Department of Immigration Services which cancelled the G applicant's Residence Permit Class `A' and an order of certiorari quashing the decision of the Minister for Home Affairs which confirmed the aforementioned cancellation. Persuant to the above order, I further issue an order of certiorari quashing the Minister's order deporting the applicant from this country. Finally I issue an order of mandamus H against the Director of Immigration Services ordering her to restore Residence Permit Class `A', No 0043607, to the applicant forthwith.
The applicant shall have his costs. I

Principles of Natural Justice -- Right to be heard -- Whether proof ex-parte of dissolution of marriage constitutes a violation of such right.
-Headnote
On 28 December 1989, the Respondent in this appeal was granted leave by the court below to prove her petition for the dissolution of marriage ex-parte on 29 January 1990. D The Respondent duly appeared on the latter date, proved the dissolution of the marriage and obtained an order from the court to that effect.
The Appellant appeals against that order on the basis that no notice had been sent to him informing him of the proceedings to take place on 28 December 1989, and that E accordingly he could not have known of the petition date of 29 Januuary 1990.
Held:

(i) As a result of the ex-parte proof adduced on 29 January 1990, the Appellant was effectively and wrongfully denied the right to be heard and accordingly clearly condemned unheard. F

(ii) Such violation of the Appellant's right to be heard constituted a contravention of one of the basic principles of natural justice.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwaikasu, J:

This is an appeal by one Fabian Munraha against the judgment of the lower court which on 5 March 1990 dissolved the appellant's marriage to one Rukaya Munraha. H

The judgment of the lower court has been impugned on the grounds, inter alia that the appellant was condemned unheard for no fault of his. In that, as shall presently hereinafter be demonstrated, I think he is quite right. I

The saga appears to have started on 30 October 1989. As the typed record of the lower court shows, on that day only the appellant, then respondent, appeared. The case was then adjourned for mention on 9 A November 1989 when a hearing date was to be fixed. When the case was called for mention on 9 November 1989, the appellant did not appear but counsel for the petitioner appeared. On that day a hearing date was fixed and that came to be 28 December 1989. When the case came up for hearing on 28 December 1989 in absence of the appellant B then respondent, it was submitted by Mr Kashumbugu, learned counsel for the petitioner that since the appellant was present on 30 October 1989 and was aware of the hearing date, then the respondent should be allowed to proceed to prove her petition C ex-parte. That was then accordingly granted by the lower court. The ex-parte proof was then fixed for 29 January 1990.

MWAIKASU J

At this point it is to be pointed out that the lower court erred in granting such leave for such ex-parte proof. For it is evident that though the appellant was present on 30 D October 1989 the day when the respondent did not appear and the case had to be adjourned to 9 November 1989 for mention for the purposes of fixing a hearing date, in such mention date when the hearing was fixed for 28 December 1989 the appellant did not appear. Yet no notice was ever sent to him to notify him of such hearing date as E fixed on 9 November 1989 when he was absent. There is no evidence to show that the appellant was ever made aware in any way of the hearing date on 28 December 1989. And when he was present on 30 October 1989 such hearing date was not at all suggested, that is why the case had to be adjourned to 9 November 1989 to consider a F suitable hearing date.

Thus the respondent was, on 28 December 1989 granted leave to prove the case ex-parte and did proceed to prove the same on 29 January 1990 without the knowledge of the appellant, and on the basis of such ex-parte proof the marriage was dissolved, the G appellant was clearly thereby condemned unheard. The appellant was therefore effectively and wrongfully denied the right to be heard, thus contravening one of the basic principles of natural justice.

Consequently, on that ground alone, and without going further to consider other grounds H raised, I allow this appeal, quash the decision of the lower court with an order that the case be remitted back to the lower court for retrial, hoping that this time the lower court will ensure that both parties are afforded equal opportunity to be heard before final determination of the case. Order accordingly. I

Debtor and Creditor - Mortgage of property as security for a loan - Intended sale of the property by C mortgagee - Injunction sought restraining the intended sale - Whether grounds exist for such inunction.

-Headnote

The Applicant is a shareholder and a director of a company known as Union Metal D Works Ltd (`the company'). The company obtained a loan from the Respondent on 15 June 1992 in the amount of Shs. 57,701,602.00. As security for that loan, the Applicant mortgaged certain property in favour of the Respondent.

Acting on behalf of the company, the Applicant went to Europe to purchase certain E machinery for the company's business. In order to facilitate the purchase, the Respondent opened a letter of credit on behalf of the company in favour of FIDE, a Swedish firm and seller of the machinery. Notwithstanding FIDE's failure to comply with the terms of the letter of credit, the Respondent nevertheless and with full knowledge of such failure paid over to FIDE the amount indicated in the letter of credit. F

The Applicant contended that the company had not repaid the loan on account of the Respondent having paid contrary to the letter of credit and having thus accepted defective machinery.

The Applicant accordingly sought an injunction restraining the Respondent from exercising its rights in respect of the mortgaged property and selling it. G

The Court noted that, although duly served, the Respondent did not appear, and thus the application falls to be determined with reference solely to the Applicant's affidavit.

Held:

1996 TLR p153
[zJDz]Judgment
Mackanja J: A
The applicant has deponed in the affidavit which supports the application that he is a shareholder and a director of a limited liability company known as Union Metal Works Ltd. The aforesaid company secured from the respondent company a loan which together with interest, was amounting to Shs 57,701,602.00/= as at 15 June 1992. The B applicant mortgaged as security for that loan his real property known as `Plot No 8, Block `A' Service Trade Sinza in Dar Es Salaam' for which he holds a letter of offer No D/KN/A/22620/1 dated 1 July 1992. The applicant states in his affidavit that M/S Union Metal Works Ltd have failed to repay the loan and the respondent wants to exercise his C rights under the mortgage by selling the security for the loan.
The purpose of this application is to seek an injunction which will restrain the respondent, its agents and/or servants from carrying out the proposed sale. The D applicant swears in his affidavit that the sale, which amounts to foreclosing, offends the law of this country. Mr Lebba, advocating for the applicant, did not address the court on the legal issues his client claims are pertinent to this application. As well as that, the applicant's affidavit is quiet on any possible course of action once, if at all, the reliefs he E seeks are granted. The situation has been compounded by the apparent lack of interest on the part of the respondent who, although duly served, did not contest the application because it failed to appear. So there is only the evidence of the applicant upon which this application will be determined. F
There is evidence from the applicant's affidavit to the effect that the funds which were advanced to his company were provided by the Swedish International Development Authority (SIDA) to developing entrepreneurs in the country. Having secured the loan, and with the full knowledge of the respondent and the Swedish Co-ordinator of the fund G the applicant left for Europe in search of appropriate machinery. He swears that while in Frankfurt, Germany, the Swedish Co-ordinator lured him to sellers in Sweden.

According to the applicant, the Swedish Co-ordinator with the full knowledge of the respondent, advised him to procure the machinery from Sweden allegedly because it H would be easier to pay for it. It is alleged further that the respondent facilitated the purchase of the machinery from Sweden by opening a letter of credit No LCFB 233/88 for Swedish Kroner (SEK) 955,000 then equivalent to Tanzania Shs 16,114,446.00/= in I favour of FIDE, a Swedish firm. It is the further contention of the applicant that the respondents were agents of Union Metal A Works in all the above financial transactions. That, although the sellers breached the conditions contained in the letter of credit, the respondent, with full knowledge of that breach, went ahead to pay the sellers.
Ultimately the machinery arrived and the entire consignment was found defective and B completely unfit. The applicant lodged a protest to the respondent in respect of the defective machinery. The applicant now claims that the loan has not been repaid due to the fact that the respondent failed to adhere to the conditions in the letter of credit and consequently paid for defective machines. Hence this application. C

I am satisfied, from the above evidence, that the applicant has given sufficient cause why the injunction should issue. In the result the application is allowed and the reliefs sought are granted. D

[zJDz]Judgment

Mroso JA: C

The accused Nicolaus s/o Mamuu was charged with murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code. While police investigations were still in progress he escaped from custody. About a year later the public prosecutor informed the District Court of Rombo before whom the accused had been charged that the police though it was futile to continue D looking for the accused and, therefore, applied to withdraw the charge of murder against the accused under s 98(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. That provision is in the following words-- E

`98. In any trial before a subordinate court any public prosecutor may, with the consent of the court or on the instructions of the Director of Public Prosecutions, at any time before judgment is pronounced, withdraw from the prosecution of any person either generally or in respect of one or more of the offences with which such person is charged; and upon such withdrawal-- F

(a) if it is made before the accused is called upon to make his defence, he shall be discharged, but such discharged of in accused person shall not operate as a bar to subsequent proceedings against him on account of the same facts;

(b) ...' (not relevant). (emphasis provided). G

It will be noted that s 98 speaks of `any trial before a subordinate court', which means that it is applicable only in a case which is triable by a subordinate court. It is not resorted to where the offence is not triable by a court other than a subordinate court. H

According to the First Schedule to the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 the offence of murder (wrongly shown as s 197 instead of the correct s 196 of the Penal Code) is triable only by the High Court (or by a subordinate court with extended jurisdiction under s 173 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985). I

The District Court of Rombo was neither a High Court nor a subordinate Court with extended jurisdiction and, therefore, would not have jurisdiction to A try a murder charge. It follows that since a murder charge is not normally triable by a subordinate court, s 98 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 would not be employed to withdraw it from the court. The appropriate legal provision would be s 91(1) of the B Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 under which the Director of Public Prosecutions can enter a nolle prosequi to terminate any case before a court, at any time before judgment or verdict is given.

The termination of the murder charge against the accused under s 98(a) of the Criminal C Procedure Act, 1985 was incompetent and, therefore, the order of the District Court discharging the accused is quashed and set aside. The charge of murder against the accused is restored. If the D.P.P. is minded to terminate the charge, that would be done according to law. D

The High Court at Tabora allowed a petition by the Respondent filed under Section 108 D of the Elections Act, 1985, as amended, and duly declared the results of a certain parliamentary by-election null and void. The Third Appellant, Azim Suleman Premji, had as a result of the by-election been declared the new M.P. for Kigoma Urban Constituency. E
The present appeal is a consolidation of two separate appeals begun, on the one hand, by the aggrieved Third Appellant, and on the other hand, by the First and Second Appellants jointly. The First Appellant was joined as a respondent in the High Court petition as a necessary party, pursuant to rule 4(1) of the Elections (Election Petitions) Rules, 1971. The Second Appellant, Radio Tanzania Dar es Salaam, was sued in the F petition because the Respondent alleged that its broadcasts had affected the results of the by-election.
On 28 December 1994, this Court dismissed the appeal with costs, including those incurred in the Court below. The Court's reasons were supplied on 31 January, 1995. G
The facts appear from the reasons for judgment.
Held:
(i) The High Court of this country has a supervisory jurisdiction to inquire into the legality of anything done or made by a public authority, and this jurisdiction includes the power to inquire into the legality of an official proclamation by the H Electoral Commission (tamko rasmi).

(ii) The Electoral Commission is empowered in terms of the Elections Act to make only such regulations as are in furtherance of specific provisions of the Act or in furtherance of the purpose of the whole Act. This power of the Commission is, I however, to be exercised subject to the underlying constitutional principle which requires democratic

A elections to be free and fair, and this principle should be read into the Elections Act.

(iii) Although, in casu, the tamko rasmi was issued in the furtherance of free and fair elections, it is invalid due to the Vice-Chairman of the Electoral Commission having signed it instead of the Chairman, as is required by Section 3 of the Act. B

(iv) There are grounds other than those stated in Section 108 of the Elections Act for the nullification of election results. Such other grounds include `anything which renders the elections unfree (sic) or unfair', as well as any law which seeks to protect `unfree (sic)' or unfair elections, since such would be unconstitutional.

C (v) The mere removal of illegal and corrupt practices from Section 108 does not have the effect of rendering such practices permissible in terms of the Elections Act, 1985. Instead, the effect of such removal is that such practices are no longer per se sufficient grounds for the nullification of election results. Such practices are still relevant, however, in determing whether elections were conducted freely and fairly. D

(vi) A `corrupt practice' for the purposes of the Elections Act is not necessarily the same as corruption under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1972. A `corrupt practice' under the Elections Act may be construed either as being a failure to abstain from committing the offence of bribery, as defined in Section 97 of the E Elections Act, or as being a misconduct which renders the election unfair.

(vii) In casu, the maintenance work of the Kigoma-Ujiji road during the election campaign constituted non-compliance with the prohibition against electoral bribery, and was executed with the corrupt motive of influencing voters to vote F for the CCM candidate and accordingly affected the results of the election.

(viii) In casu, further, the political campaigning by Mrema and Kiula (both M.P.'s) prior to the permissible campaigning period having begun, was illegal and must have affected the results of the by-election.

(ix) Radio Tanzania Dar es Salaam was purely a government department, at the G material time, with no separate legal personality enabling it to be joined as a party to the petition separately from the Attorney General (First Appellant), who represents the government.

(x) CCM was given more air-time on Radio Tanzania Dar es Salaam than were given other political parties, and its broadcasts generally were biased in favour H of the CCM candidate, such that it must have influenced the by-election results in favour of the CCM candidate.

(xi) When a candidate in an election or a counting agent expresses dissatisfaction following the counting process, Section 78 of the Act grants a recount to the dissatisfied individual as his only course of action.

I (xii) The public statements made by various officials of the CCM in respect of opposition parties generally, and the Respondent's party

1996 TLR p159

A specifically, were clearly defamatory, and such statements cannot be justified during electioneering since elections are required to be conducted not only with due observance of the Constitution and the Elections Act, but also of the general law of the land which forbids defamation.

(xiii) In deciding matters of citizenship, the law on the subject is contained in the B Citizenship Act, 1961 Cap. 512, and the British Nationality Act, 1948. The three factors which determine citizenship by birth are firstly, being born in Tanganyika by 8 December 1961; secondly, being a citizen of the U.K. and Colonies or being a British protected person on 8 December 1961; and finally, having at least one parent born in Tanganyika. C

(xiv) According to the law of this country, the Third Appellant at birth acquired the nationality of both his parents, which nationality continued until he was required to choose between his original Indian citizenship and Tanzanian citizenship. D The Third Appellant accordingly lost any Tanzanian citizenship since he failed to renounce his Indian citizenship.

(xv) The appeal is dismissed with costs, including those incurred in the court below.

[zJDz]Judgment

Nyalali CJ:

This is a consolidation of two appeals involving the Attorney-General and Radio H Tanzania Dar es Salaam as the joint appellants in the first appeal, and Azim Suleman Premji as the appellant in the second appeal and in which the respondent is Dr Aman Walid Kabourou. The two appeals have been instituted in this court against the judgment of the High Court at Tabora where the respondent had filed an election petition under I section 108 of the

1996 TLR p160

NYALALI CJ

Elections Act, 1985 as amended by the Elections (Amendment) Act, 1992, seeking the A nullification of the results of a parliamentary by-election in which the third appellant, namely, Azim Suleman Premji, who had been a candidate sponsored by Chama Cha Mapinduzi, otherwise commonly know by its acronym as CCM, had been declared to be duly elected as the new member of parliament for Kigoma Urban Constituency. The B respondent, that is, Dr Aman Walid Kabourou, had also been a candidate sponsored by Chama Cha Demokrasia na Maendeleo otherwise commonly known by its acronymn as CHADEMA. There were four other political parties which fielded candidates to contest C the by-election, which was one of several by-elections to occur since Tanzania decided to become a multi-party democratic state. The Attorney-General was joined as a respondent to the petition in the High Court by virtue of the requirements of Rule 4(1) of the Elections (Elections Petitions) Rules, 1971. The said Azim Suleman Premji and D Radio Tanzania Dar es Salaam were the second and third respondents respectively. The High Court, Mchome J, granted the petition and declared the by-election results void. Predictably, those against whom judgment was given, were aggrieved by the decision of the High Court hence this appeal to this court. The Attorney-General and E Radio Tanzania Dar es Salaam are represented by Mr Werema, Senior State Attorney, assisted by Mr Matupa, State Attorney, whereas the said Azim Suleman Premji is represented by Mr Mselem, learned advocate, assisted by Mr Nyangarika, learned advocate. The respondent in this appeal, that is, Dr Aman Walid Kabourou is F represented by Mr Makani, learned advocate, assisted by Mr Boaz, learned advocate.

The memorandum of appeal submitted for the Attorney-General contains nine grounds of appeal whereas that submitted for the said Azim Suleman Premji, contains eleven grounds of appeal. Most of the grounds of appeal are common to all appellants. The G grounds of appeal submitted for the Attorney-General read as follows:

1. That the Honourable Judge erred in law in holding that `Tamko Rasmi' is not repugnant or ultra vires powers of the Electoral Commission and in relying on H the `Tamko Rasmi' to void the elections.

2. That the Honourable Judge erred in fact in holding that there was a corrupt practice and erred in law in holding that a corrupt practice is a tenable complaint under the Elections Act.

I 3. That the Honourable Judge erred in fact and law in holding that road construction in Kigoma during the campaign period

A was executed with the corrupt motive of influencing voters to vote for CCM candidate and that this affected the results of elections.

4. That the Honourable Judge erred in law in holding that there are grounds other than those stated in section 108 which can void the elections. B

5. That the Honourable Judge erred both in fact and law in holding that the campaign by the CCM National Chairman, Hon Augustine L Mrema, Minister for Home Affairs and Nalaila Kiula, Minister for Transport, Communications and C Works were illegal and that they affected the results of elections. The Honourable Judge failed to evaluate the evidence of all witnesses who testified on illegal campaigns.

6. That the Honourable Judge erred in law in holding that Radio Tanzania Dar es Salaam was properly joined as a co-respondent and that RTD was an agent for a CCM candidate. D

7. That the Honourable Judge erred in law in holding that RTD broadcasts affected the results of the Elections.

8. That the Honourable Judge erred in fact and law in holding that the counting of E votes was not proper and that a recount was requested by the respondent and denied by the returning officer.

9. That the Honourable Judge erred in fact and law in holding that the non-filling of complaint Form (CF 7) by the respondent was due to security risk in the counting room and that this omission was not fatal to the Election Petition. F

All the above cited grounds of appeal submitted on behalf of the Attorney-General also appear in the Memorandum of appeal submitted on behalf of the said Azim Suleman Premji. There are however two additional grounds in Premji's memorandum of appeal. G These are numbers two and four. They read as follows:

`2. That the Honorable Judge erred in law and fact by holding that the appellant is solely liable to pay the petitioner's costs.

4. That the Honourable Judge erred in fact by holding that the top CCM leaders Ali Hassan H Mwinyi, Horace Kolimba, Kingunge Ngombale-Mwiru, A L Mrema and Nalaila Kiula uttered defamatory statements regarding the respondent and his party and erred in law in holding that such statements affected Elections and hence a ground to void the Elections.' I

It is apparent from the nature of all these grounds of appeal and the issues raised at the trial in the High Court and in the course of hearing this appeal, A that they directly concern matters which urgently require judicial clarification to ensure that our country continues on the road of peaceful and orderly transformation from a one party state into a multi-party democracy. With this background, and bearing in mind the B immediate needs of the people of Kigoma Urban constituency to have an early decision in this case and of the fact that the matters requiring judicial clarification are of general public interest, particularly in view of the general parliamentary and presidential elections expected towards the end of next year, we have decided to deliver now our C decision on the points raised in the grounds of appeal, including the ground raised suo motu by the Bench concerning the nationality of the third appellant, but to reserve our reasons to be given later early next year on a date to be notified to the parties. These therefore are the decisions, in respect of which reasons will be given early next year. We D start with the grounds of appeal as contained in the Memorandum of Appeal of the Attorney-General and which appear also in that of the third appellant, Azim Suleman Premji.

In respect of ground number 1 in both memoranda of appeal, we find that the National E Electoral Commission had legal power to issue the `Tamko Rasmi' tendered at the trial as exhibit P15 but that under the circumstances of this case, that `Tamko Rasmi' was invalid. As to ground number 2 of the Attorney-General and number 3 of the third appellant, we find that the learned Trial Judge was correct in holding that there was a F corrupt practice and that a corrupt practice is a tenable complaint under the Elections Act. With regard to ground number 3 of the Attorney-General and number 5 of the third appellant, we find that the learned Trial Judge was correct in law in holding that the road construction in Kigoma during the campaign period was executed with the corrupt G motive of influencing voters to vote for CCM candidate and that this affected the results of the election. As to ground number 4 of the Attorney-General and number 6 of the third appellant, we are satisfied and find that there are grounds other than those mentioned under s 108 of the Elections Act, 1985 as amended by Act 6 of 1992 for nullification of H election results. On ground number 5 of the Attorney-General and number 7 of the third appellant, we are satisfied and find that the learned Trial Judge was correct in law in holding that the campaign by Hon Augustine L Mrema, Minister for Home Affairs and Hon I Nalaila Kiula, Minister for Transport, Communications and Works were illegal campaigns and that they affected the results. We however find that the holding by the learned Trial Judge to the A effect that the campaign by the CCM Chairman, Ali Hassan Mwinyi was also illegal is incorrect in law.

We regard to ground number 6 of the Attorney-General and number 8 of the third appellant, we find that the learned Trial Judge erred in law in holding that Radio Tanzania B Dar es Salaam was properly joined as a co-respondent or party to the petition. As to ground number 7 of the Attorney-General and 9 of the third appellant, we are satisfied and find that the learned Trial Judge was correct in law in holding that the broadcasts of Radio Tanzania Dar es Salaam affected the results of the elections. On ground number C 8 of the Attorney-General and number 10 of the third appellant, we are satisfied and we find that the Trial Judge was correct in holding that the counting of the votes was not proper. On ground number 9 of the Attorney-General and number 11 of the third appellant, we are satisfied and find that the learned Trial Judge was correct in holding D that the failure to fill in form CF--7 by the respondent was due to security risk in the counting room and that the failure was not fatal to the election petition. As to ground number 2 of the third appellant, we are satisfied and we find that the learned Trial Judge E was wrong in law in holding that the third appellant was solely liable to pay the petitioner's costs. Finally as to ground number 4 of the third appellant, we are satisfied and find that the learned Trial Judge was correct in holding that CCM Chairman Ali Hassan Mwinyi, Horace Kolimba (Secretary General of CCM) and Kingunge F Ngombale-Mwiru and A I Mrema uttered defamatory statements regarding the respondent and his party and that such statements affected the results. However, we are also satisfied and find that the learned Trial Judge erred in holding that the statements made by Nalaila Kiula were defamatory. As to the point of nationality or G citizenship of the third appellant, we are satisfied and find that the third appellant was not a Tanzanian citizen at the time of the by-election. As already mentioned, we shall give our full reasons early next year.

In conclusion, the appeals substantially fail and with the few exceptions where we have faulted the Trial Judge, we dismiss the appeals with costs both in this Court and the H Court below.

Nyalali CJ:

On the 28th December 1994 we delivered our judgment in these two consolidated I appeals but we reserved our reasons until now. However, before we proceed to give our reasons which are the basis of our judgment, we must present the matters which constitute the framework of our A reasons. We start with the matters which appear not to be in dispute between the parties to this cause. The parliamentary by election which is the subject of this case was organised and supervised by the National Electoral Commission established under the B Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania. The functions and powers of the National Electoral Commission are derived from the Constitution and the Elections Act, 1985 as amended from time to time. Its membership includes a chairman and vice-chairman. At the time material to this case, both the chairman and vice-chairman C are justices of this Court. One Mr Alex Thomas Danzi, who gave evidence as the sixth witness for the respondents at the trial in the High Court, was at the material time serving under the Commission as Director of Elections and Secretary to the Commission.

1996 TLR p164

There is also no dispute between the parties that prior to election day, the National D Electoral Commission appointed one Augustine Mudogo to act as a returning officer for the by-election. His substantive employment at the time was that of Director of Kigoma-Ujiji Town Council. After his appointment as a returning officer, he proceeded to E nominate eighteen assistant returning officers to help him in his duties.

The National Electoral Commission took other steps in connection with the by-election. These steps include the issuing of an official proclamation in Kiswahilli titled `Tamako Rasmi La Tume Ya Taifa Ya Uchaguzi Ya Jamhuri Ya Muungano', hereinafter called F simply `Tamko Rasmi.' Furthermore, he declared the period between 9 November 1993 and 22 November 1993 as being the period for registration of voters, the 17 November as the date for nomination of candidates, the period between 30 January and 12 G February 1994 as being the period for election campaigns and the 13 February 1994 as the polling day.

There is also no dispute between the parties that prior to the period prescribed by the Electoral Commission as the election campaigns period, the then Minister for Home H Affairs and Deputy Prime Minister, namely, Augustine Lyatonga Mrema, and the Minister for Communications, Transport and Works, namely, Nalaila Kiula, visited Kigoma Urban Constituency. The former visited the constituency twice, first on 14 January 1994 and second on 29 January 1994. The latter visited once on 26 January 1994. Both ministers I addressed public rallies attended by many people. Furthermore it is undisputed that among the problems which the people of Kigoma Urban Constituency regarded as most pressing were the problems of Burundi and A Rwanda refugees and the bad condition of the Kigoma-Ujiji Road.

1996 TLR p165

Again it would seem that there is no dispute between the parties to this case, that six political parties contested this by-election. The most serious contenders were Chama Cha Mapinduzi, commonly known by its acronym as CCM, and Chama Cha B Demokrasia Na Maendeleo, commonly known by its acronym as CHADEMA. As already mentioned in our judgment, the third appellant, namely Azim Suleman Premji was a candidate sponsored by CCM, whereas the respondent, namely, Dr Aman Walid C Kabourou, was a candidate sponsored by CHADEMA.

The parties are also not in dispute regarding the following matters concerning the status of the third appellant. He was born in 1954 in Kigoma Town. According to his birth certificate tendered at the trial as exhibit P18, both his parents, namely Suleiman Premji D and Nurbanu Suleiman Premji were of Indian nationality. One of these parents, namely, the said Nurbanu Suleiman Premji was born in this country at Dodoma in 1926. Subsequently both parents applied and became Tanzanian citizens by registration in 1963. In the same year, third appellant's father wrote a letter to the Principal Immigration E Officer seeking clarification about the status of his children. The letter, tendered at the trial as exhibit P22 got no response. When the third appellant attained the age of 18 years in 1972 he applied for and obtained a Tanzanian passport. He is currently the F holder of a Tanzanian Passport No 0020324 issued at Kigoma on 20th August 1992.

No dispute exists between the parties that during the period of election campaigns, a number of prominent politicians from the contesting political parties went to Kigoma Urban Constituency to campaign for the candidates sponsored by their respective G political parties. Among them were His Excellency Ali Hassan Mwinyi, President of the United Republic of Tanzania and National Chairman of CCM; Kingunge Ngombale-Mwiru, MP a Minister without portfolio and National Publicity Secretary of CCM and Horace Kolimba, MP, a Minister in the President's Office and then Secretary H General of CCM. The campaigns were covered by the Press and Radio Tanzania, Dar-es-Salaam.

Furthermore, there is no dispute between the parties to this case that after the conclusion of the polling process, the counting of voters took place at Bangwe Prison I Hall. The Returning Officer, that is, the first witness for the respondents at the trial (RWL) appointed 15 pupils from Kigoma Secondary School to act as enumerators. The A process at Bangwe Prison Hall involved the following undisputed steps. At the beginning there was inspection of the ballot boxed by the candidates and their counting agents followed by the verification of the number of votes in each ballot box compared to the number of relevant registered voters. Thereafter all the ballot papers were put into drum. B Then four enumerators picked the ballot papers from the drum and handed them to six other enumerators seated at tables and each representing one of the six political parties contesting the election. Each of these six enumerators was to receive only the ballot papers for the political party he or she represented, and to put such ballot papers into C bundles of one hundred each. Behind each one of these six enumerators was a counting agent of the relevant political party. The process went on smoothly until the drum was empty of ballot papers and the six enumerators completed putting the ballot D papers into bundles. It was apparent that CCM and CHADEMA had most of the bundles and that CCM had more bundles than CHADEMA.

Again there is no dispute between the parties that after all the ballot papers had been put into bundles, a representative of CHADEMA expressed dissatisfaction with the situation E and it was agreed by representatives of CCM, and CHADEMA and by the returning officer that representatives of CCM and CHADEMA should go through the bundles of each other. The exercise was completed as far as CHADEMA'S bundles are concerned and 53 bundles and a part were established. The exercise for CCM bundles however F was not completed. It was stopped. Neither the Respondent in this appeal nor any of his counting agents filled in the Form CF--7. The election results as announced by the Returning Officer were as follows: G

1. CCM: 9,475 votes
2. CHADEMA 5,366 votes
3. PONA 169 votes
4. TPP 45 votes H
5. NRA 36 votes
6. TADEA 24 votes

It was on the basis of these figures that the third appellant was declared the winner of the by-election.

We now turn to the relevant matters which are in dispute between the parties. It was part I of the petitioner's case at the trial in the Eight Court that in order to ensure that the by-election for Kigema Urban Constituency A would be free and fair, the Electoral Commission, exercising its powers granted by the Constitution and the Elections Act 1985, made and issued a number of directives, regulations and notifications, including the Tamko Rasmi for compliance or observance B by all those concerned. In this way, the Electoral Commission prescribed and specified the period for election campaigns, mandated all contesting political parties to refrain from inter alia, using abusive or defamatory language or intimidation, and to educate voters about democracy and political tolerance. The Electoral Commission also C mandated the Ruling party to refrain from furthering its election campaign by using government employees and property or by using the government positions or officers held by some of its party leaders. In the same way the government was mandated to act impartially between the political parties, to disengage or distance itself from the D electioneering activities of the ruling party and to give equal opportunity through the radio and the government press to all contesting political parties.

It was part of the petitioner's case at the trial in the High Court that CCM and its candidate or their agents as well as the government or its agents violated many of the E regulations, directives or notifications made and issued by the National Electoral Commission, in that during their visits to Kigoma Urban Constituency, Hon Augustine Lyatonga Mrema (MP) the then Minister of Home Affairs and Deputy Prime Minister, and Hon Nalaila Kiula, (MP), Minister of Communications, Transport and Works, conducted F election campaigns for CCM and its candidate prior to the prescribed campaigns period; and in that during such premature campaigns, the Hon Augustine Lyatonga Mrema, intimidated the voters against voting for a non-CCM candidate; and in that during the official election campaigns period, His Excellency, President Ali Hassan Mwinyi used government property, that is, government aircraft and motor vehicles; and in that he also used defamatory language in furtherance of the election campaign in favour of the CCM candidate, and in that Hon Kingunge Ngombale-Mwiru used intimidating language against the CHADEMA candidate, and in that Hon Horace Kolimba, (MP), Minister in the President's Office and the then Secretary General of CCM, intimidated the voters against voting for a non-CCM candidate.

Furthermore, it was part of the petitioner's case that Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam, which is government owned, openly campaigned for CCM, and favoured CCM is giving opportunity for publicity in respect of the election campaigns. It was also part of the petitioner's case A that the central government, contrary to established programmes and practices intervened and took over from the Kigoma-Ujiji Town Council the maintenance work of the sensitive Kigoma-Ujiji Road in furtherance of the election campaign for the CCM B candidate. It was the contention for the petitioner that this act was corruptly done by the government to influence the voters infavour of the CCM candidate, and that the visits by Hon Augustine Lyatonga Merema, (MP) and Nalaila Kiula (MP) were connected with that corrupt objective. C

Also, it was part of the case for the Petitioner at the trial in the High Court that the process of counting votes at Bangwe Prison Hall was not completed but was prematurely stopped by the returning officer ostensibly for security reasons.

Finally, it was part of the case for the petitioner in the High Court that the CCM D candidate, that is Azim Suleman Premji was not a Tanzanian citizen and therefore not qualified to stand as a candidate in the parliamentary by-election. In conclusion the petitioner's case at the trial was to the effect that the violations of the rules of election conduct affected the results of the election, and that in any event the election of the CCM E candidate was null and void since he was not a Tanzanian citizen.

On the other hand the case for the defence at the trial consisted in the denial of the petitioner's case and in the assertion that the Tamko Rasmi made by the Electorial Commission was invalid as it was ultra vires the powers of the Commission and, in any F event, was not properly made and issued. Furthermore, it was the contention for the defence at the trial to the effect that under the multi-party system, it was no longer required to prescribe a specific period for election campaigns. It was also part of the defence base that CCM paid for the expenses of using government property by the G President in connection with the by-election campaigns, and that in any event, there was no justification for restricting the President of the United Republic in using official transport and other facilities attached to his office while campaigning for a candidate of the President's political party. As to the visits to Kigoma by the two cabinet ministers, H that is, Hon Augustine Lyatonga Mrema, (MP) and Hon Nalalla Kiula (MP), the defence case was an assertion to the effect that none of the ministers went to Kigoma for electioneering purposes but that the former went there in connection with his ministerial I responsibilities for the Burundi-Rwanda refugees and the latter went there in connection with his A ministerial responsibilities for maintenance of the Kigoma-Ujiji road. Furthermore, it was part of the defence case that the works being undertaken on the road were part of an on going maintenance programme and had nothing to do with the by-election. As to the defamation and intimidation allegedly made by CCM leaders, the defence case consisted mainly of general denial. As to the process of counting, the defence case is an B assertion to the effect that the counting process was completed and that the final exercise of going through the bundles of votes was not part of the counting process but was an exercise of verification requested by CHADEMA representatives and agreed to by the returning officer and representatives of CCM to ascertain the state of the votes in C the bundles. That exercise of verification was stopped at the instance of CHADEMA representatives after being satisfied with the position.

Again, it was part of the case in defence to the petition that Radio Tanzania D Dar-es-Salaam, as a government department, was wrongly joined to the petition in which the Attorney-General was the sole and proper party to be joined. Furthermore, it was the defence case that Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam did everything possible within its limited resources to give equal opportunity of publicity to the contesting political E parties and was not in any way favouring CCM. Finally it was the contention of the defence to the petition to the effect that according to the relevant law and the available evidence, the CCM candidate was a Tanzanian citizen and therefore fully qualified to contest the by-election.

Fifteen main issues were framed by the High Court for its decision. The findings of the F High Court on many of these issues form the basis of the grounds of the two appeals as set out in our judgment. Before we give our reasons for our decisions on those grounds of appeal, we have to deal with a preliminary matter which arose at the commencement G of hearing of this appeal. Mr Makani, learned advocate for the respondent in this appeal gave a Notice of Preliminary Objection seeking to strike out grounds numbers one, three and six from the memorandum of appeal of the third appellant, and grounds numbers one, two and four from the memorandum of appeal of the first and second appellants. H After hearing both sides, we overruled the objection with costs.

We reserved our reasons until now. The argument of Mr Makani in support of the objection is that the above mentioned grounds of appeal are too general and not concise. With due respect to learned counsel, we do not think that he is correct because I the two memoranda of appeal in which the relevant grounds of appeal are to be found are in full conformity with the provisions of Rule 86 of the Court of Appeal Rules, A 1979 and because the particular grounds of appeal are traceable to specific parties of the judgment of the High Court. That is why we overruled the objection. For purposes of clarity, we need only to add that the order for costs is payable in any event. B

We now come to our reasons in support of our findings on ground number one in both memoranda of appeal concerning the validity of the Tamko Rasmi. We begin naturally by considering whether courts of law have jurisdiction to inquire into the validity of the C Tamko Rasmi in view of the provisions of sub-article (12) of article 74 of the Constitution. That sub-article as amended by Act 4 of 1992 states:

`No Court shall have jurisdiction to inquire into anything done by the Electoral Commission in the D exercise of its functions according to the provisions of this Constitution.'

On the face of it, it appears that the Constitution expressly prohibits the courts from inquiring into the validity of such things like the Tamko Rasmi, but on a deeper consideration of the principles that underlie the Constitution, it is obvious that such an E interpretation of the Constitution is wrong. One of the fundamental principles of any democratic constitution, including ours, is the Rule of Law. The Principle is so obvious and elementary in a democracy, that it does not have to be expressly stated in a democratic constitution. However, perhaps for purposes of clarity, there is an express F provision to that effect under the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania. It is Sub-Article (1) of Article 26 which states:

`Every person is obliged to comply with this Constitution and the laws of the United Republic.' G

In the light of this principle, we respectfully agree with the submission of Mr Werema, Learned Senior State Attorney to the effect that Sub-Article (12) of Article 73 of the Constitution cannot be interpreted so as to protect unconstitutional or illegal acts or H deeds, see the recent famous case of Anismic Ltd v Foreign Compensation Commission (1). Since Tanzania has reverted to de jure multi-party democracy, it is time the same was similarly articulated here. We are satisfied and we find that the High Court in this country, like the High Court in England, has a supervisory jurisdiction to I inquire into the legality of anything done or made by public authority, much as the Tamko Rasmi. As a collorary, this Court has similar jurisdiction to do so A in a matter properly before it, as in the present case.

We now come to our reasons in support of our finding to the effect that the Electoral Commission is empowered to make and issue the Tamko Rasmi but under the B circumstances of this case, the Tamko Rasmi is invalid. It is patently clear that the Electoral Commission derives its powers under the Constitution and the Elections Act, 1985 as amended from time to time. Under para (b) of sub-article (6) of article 74 as amended by Act 4 of 1992, read together with ss (2) of s 4 of the Elections Act, 1985 as C amended by Act 6 of 1992 it is provided that, `The Commission shall be responsible for the overall supervision of the general conduct of all Parliamentary and Presidential Elections in the United Republic'. Similarly under ss (1) of s 124 of the Elections Act 1985, it is provided that: D

`(1) The commission may make regulations for the better carrying out of the provisions of this Act and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing, may make regulations--

(a) prescribing anything, which under the provisions of the purposes of this Act, may be prescribed; E

(b) prescribing forms of documents and declarations for the purposes of this Act.'

We have emphasised the relevant parts of this sub-section. Those parts clearly show F that the Commission is empowered to make regulations `for the better carrying out of the provisions of the Act' and to prescribe `anything' or `forms of documents and declarations' `for the purposes of this Act'.

In our considered opinion, we are satisfied that on a true and proper interpretation of the G above cited provisions of the Elections Act, the Electoral Commission is empowered to make regulations not only in furtherance of specific provisions of the Act, but also in furtherance of the purposes of the whole Act. From the scheme of the Act as manifested in the various provisions of the Act, including the provisions for secrecy of the ballot and H for polling agents, counting agents, one person one vote, one candidate one seat, as well as those provisions concerning election campaigns and election offences, it is evident that the overriding purpose of the Elections Act is to secure the election of the President of the United Republic and the members of the parliament of the United I Republic in a free and fair election. It is also implicit from the provisions of the Constitution concerning the people, such as the preamble envisaging a representative A parliament elected by the people; Article 5 on the franchise or the right to vote; article 8(1)(a)(c) and (c) on sovereignty of the people, democracy, accountability to the people and people's participation in their government; article 21 on the fundamental right to participate in the affairs of the government either directly or through freely elected B representatives, that there is an underlying constitutional principle that requires democratic elections to be free and fair.

It is our considered opinion that this constitutional principle of free and fair elections has to be read into the Elections Act 1985, not only because of the express provisions of ss C (2) of s 1 of the Act which require the Elections Act, 1985 `to be read as one with the Constitution ...' but also because the Constitution is the basis of the elections. It follows therefore that the Electoral Commission has power to make regulations to ensure Free D and Fair Elections under both the Elections Act, 1985 and the Constitution. On a close examination of the contents of Tamko Rasmi, we respectfully agree with Messrs Makani and Boaz, learned counsel for the respondent in this appeal that the Tamko Rasmi was made and issued by the Electoral Commission to ensure a free and fair by-election in E Kigoma Urban Constituency. Unfortunately however, the Electoral Commission did not properly exercise its power as prescribed under s 3 of the Act which states:

F `All regulations, directions and notices which the Commission is empowered to make, issue or give, shall be deemed to have been validly made, issued or given, if they are made, issued or given under the signature of the Chairman of the Commission or the Director of Elections'.

There is no controversy in this appeal that the Tamko Rasmi was not signed by the G Chairman or the Director of Elections as specifically required by the Act. Instead it was signed by the Vice-Chairman of the Electoral Commission. Since there is no provision under the Act or any other relevant law authorizing the Vice-Chairman to sign such H regulation, the Tamko Rasmi was clearly invalid as we mentioned in our judgment.

There is another point concerning the Tamko Rasmi which we need to mention not for purposes of supporting our judgment but as legal guidance for the conduct of future elections. It was argued in this appeal by learned counsel on the appellants' side to the I effect that the Tamko Rasmi was legally ineffective since it was neither published in the Official Gazette nor otherwise made known to all the parties to the A by-election. Of course there is no controversy between the parties to this appeal that the Tamko Rasmi was not published in the Official Gazette and that such publication is not necessary for the validity of the Tamko Rasmi by virtue of the provisions of s 3 of the Act. It is our considered opinion that there is a distinction between the validity of a B regulation on the one hand, and the commencement or coming into effect of such regulation on the other hand. The validity of a regulation, including the Tamko Rasmi lies in compliance with the conditions for making it. Such conditions may exist in the C provisions of the Act which confers the power to make regulations or, under s 32 of the Interpretation of Laws and General Clauses, Act 1972 which concerns `provisions with respect to power to make subsidiary legislation'. In the case of regulations made under s 124 of the Elections Act, 1985 read together with s 3 of the same Act, it is apparent that D one of the essential conditions for the validity of such regulation is the signature of the Chairman or the Director of Elections.

As to commencement of subsidiary legislation, the relevant provision is s 27 of the Interpretation of Laws and General Clauses Act, 1972 which states: E

`Any subsidiary legislation published in the Gazette shall come into force on the date of such publication or, if it is provided either in the subsidiary legislation or in the Act that such subsidiary legislation or any provisions thereof shall come into force on some other date, such subsidiary F legislation or as the case may be such provisions thereof shall, subject to s 28, come into force on such other date.'

Section 28 concerns retrospective operation of subsidiary legislation. Unfortunately, the Tamko Rasmi was neither published nor did it specify when it was to come into effect. G Furthermore the Act under which the Tamko Rasmi was made does not specify the commencement of such regulations. Thus had the Tamko Rasmi been properly signed, it is doubtful if it could be construed to have come into effect on a certain date, if at all it did. We hope that this situation would be avoided in the future by the Electoral H Commission.

As to the reasons in support of our finding on ground number one of the two appeals, these are connected to the reasons which support our finding on ground number 4 of the Attorney-General's Memorandum of Appeal, which is number 6 of the Third Appellant's I Memorandum of Appeal. Our finding on these grounds con-curs with that of the trial court to the effect that there are grounds other than those stated A under s 108 of the Elections Act for nullification of election results. The finding is based partly on the reasons relied upon by the learned Trial Judge and partly on additional reasons. Section 108 as amended by Act 6 of 1992 states:

B `108(1) The Election of a Candidate as a member shall not be questioned save on an election petition.

(2) The Election of a candidate as a member shall be declared void on any of the following groups which are proved to the satisfaction of the court namely--

C (a) that, during the election campaign, statements were made by the candidate or on his behalf and with his knowledge and consent or approval with intent to exploit tribal, racial or religious issues or differences pertinent to the election or relating to any of the candidates or where the candidates are not of the same sex, with intent to exploit such difference; D

(b) non-compliance with the provisions of this Act relating to election if it appears that the election was not conducted in accordance with principles laid down in such provisions and that such non-compliance affected the result of the election;

E (c) that the candidate was at the time of his election a person not qualified for election as a member.

(3) Notwithstanding the provisions of ss (2) where upon trial of an election petition respecting an election under this Act the court finds that an illegal practice in connection with the election has been committed by or with the knowledge or approval of any of the candidate' agents and the court further F finds, after giving the Attorney-General or his representative an opportunity of being heard, that the candidate has proved to the court--

(a) that no illegal practice was committed by (the) candidate himself or with the knowledge and consent or approval of such candidate or his agent; and G

(b) that the candidate took all reasonable means for preventing the commission of any illegal practices at such an election;

(c) that in all respects the election was free from illegal practice on the part of the candidate and his agents;

then, if the court so recommends, the election of such candidate shall not by reason of any such practice be void'. H

The learned Trial Judge, Mchome J, was of the opinion that the grounds listed under paras (a) to (c) of ss (2) above cited are not exhaustive by reason of the fact that the word `only' is not used therein. He was also of the opinion that the defences provided I under paras (a) to (b) of ss (3) for illegal practice necessarily imply that illegal practices are grounds for nullification of election results though not expressly A stated to that effect under section 108. As we have already stated, we concur with the reasons given by Mchome J, and we have additional reasons for upholding his finding. First, we are satisfied that the established rule of interpretation embodied in the Latin Maxim `Expressio Unius Est Exclusio Alterius' that is, where matters are expressly B stated, then any other matters of the same class not so expressly stated are excluded, does not apply to s 108 because that section provides defences to matters which are not expressly stated therein. Second, taking into account the principle which underlies C the Constitution and the Elections Act, 1985 that elections shall be free and fair, we are of the considered opinion that an election which is generally unfree and unfair is not an election at all as envisaged by the Constitution and the Elections Act, and consequently anything which renders the elections unfree or, and unfair is in law valid ground for D nullification of such purported election. We are further of the considered opinion that any law which seeks to protect unfree and unfair elections from nullification would be unconstitutional.

For purposes of clarity we need to point out here that the removal of illegal practices and E corrupt practices from s 108 by the Elections (Amendment) Act 1992 (Act 6 of 1992) as specific grounds for nullification of election results cannot be construed as having the effect of making illegal practices or corrupt practices permissible under the Elections Act, 1985. What the amendment achieved was to make illegal practices and corrupt F practices per se no longer sufficient grounds for nullification of election results under the circumstances stipulated under s 108(3)(a) and (d) as it then was before the amendment. Paragraph (a) of ss (3), as it then was, stated;

G `that by reason of corrupt or illegal practices committed in circumstances whether similar to those before enumerated or not the majority of voters were, or may have been, prevented from electing the candidate whom they preferred.'

As to para (d) it stated: H

`that a corrupt or illegal practice was committed in connection with the election by or with the knowledge and consent or approval of the candidate or by or with the knowledge and consent or approval of any of his agents;' I

In our considered opinion, illegal and corrupt practices are still relevant either as non-compliances or as electoral misconduct which renders elections A unfree or, and unfair, contrary to the principles and objectives which underlie the Constitution and the Elections Act.

It is pertinent to point out for purposes of clarity that it is conceivable to have generally B free and fair elections but which are afflicted with a non-compliance of specific provisions of the Elections Act and which affects the results of the elections. In other words not every non-compliance which affects the results of an election necessarily makes an election unfree and unfair. A case in point is where a significant number of C unregistered persons are allowed to vote in an election but not for any particular candidate. Such an incident would clearly be a non-compliance with the provisions of s 61(a) and (b) concerning methods of voting. A non-compliance of this nature may affect the results but does not necessarily make the election unfree and unfair. D

The last point we need to point out, in view of the forthcoming presidential and parliamentary elections is a lacunae or gap in the Elections Act concerning presidential elections. Section 108 deals only with challenges to elections of constituency members of the Parliament of the United Republic. This is clear under s 2 which defines a E `member' as being `in relation to the National Assembly, a constituency member'. We can find no provision concerning disputed Presidential elections. We cannot understand why this lacunae was not remedied under the Elections (Amendment) (No 2) Act, 1992 F (Act 21 of 1992) which amended the provisions of the Elections Act, 1985 concerning presidential elections. The amendments therein contained went as far as the apply to presidential elections, the provisions of Chapters IV and V of the Elections Act, 1985 which deal with qualification of candidates and election procedure respectively. Chapter G VII which deals with invalidation of election results was not applied to presidential elections. The omission is puzzling, since in multi-party Presidential Elections, such lacunae is an invitation to political chaos. We hope appropriate amendments of the relevant law would be made before the forthcoming multi-party presidential elections. H

Let us now revert to our finding, concurring with Mchome J, on ground number 2 of the Attorney General's Memorandum of Appeal, which is ground number 3 of the third appellant's Memorandum of Appeal. This concerns the holding that there was a corrupt I practice and that such practice is a tenable complaint under the Elections Act. We have already disposed of the question of corrupt practice being a tenable complaint. With regard to the existence of a corrupt practice, A the finding by Mchome J to the effect that the third appellant corruptly offered to turn his building popularly known as `Azim Magorofani' into a dispensary providing free services to the people of Kigoma Urban Constituency appears to be based mainly on the B credibility of witnesses. There were contradictions between the witnesses for either side. The learned Trial Judge was of the view that the contradictions between the witnesses for the petitioner's side concerning whether what was promised was a dispensary or a clinic were minor compared to the contradictions on the defence side on C whether the corrupt offer was greeted with cheers or silence from the public attending the election rally. Furthermore, the learned Trial Judge found one of the witnesses for the defence side to be a liar. We can find no basis for differing with the learned Trial Judge in his evaluation of the credibility of the relevant witnesses. D

Next we come to our reasons in support of our finding on ground number 3 in the Attorney-General's Memorandum of Appeal, which is number 5 in the third appellant's Memorandum of Appeal, in which we upheld the finding of the learned Trial Judge to the E effect that the road construction in Kigoma during the campaign period was executed with the corrupt motive of influencing voters to vote for the CCM candidate and that it affected the results of the election. The basis of the finding of the learned Trial Judge appears to be threefold. Firstly, he was of the view that the maintenance work of the F Kigoma-Ujiji road was undertaken by the Central Government as a reward for the people of Kigoma urban constituency agreeing to vote for the CCM candidate. Secondly, he was of the view that the undertaking by the Central Government was not made in the ordinary course of business of government. Thirdly he was also of the view that since G the undertaking was made by prominent cabinet ministers at well attended public rallies in the constituency, it must have influenced the voters to vote for the CCM candidate.

We respectfully agree with these reasons. There was credible evidence given by witnesses who attended the public rallies addressed by Augustine Lyatonga Mrema, the H then Minister of Home Affairs and Deputy Prime Minister, and by Nalaila Kiula, the Minister of Communications, Transport and Works. These witnesses include one Kanyari Donatus, the sixth witness for the petitioner (PW 6), one Ramadhani Juma Kalovya, the seventh witness for the petitioner (PW 7), one Hamisi Shabani Maranda, I the ninth witness for the petitioner (PW 9), one Kudra Mussa, the tenth witness for the petitioner (PW.10) A who tape-recorded one of the speeches made by Hon Augustine Lyatonga Mrema, and one Mwinyi Baruti, the eleventh witness for the petitioner (PW 11). The testimony of the witnesses who attended the public rallies addressed by Hon Augustine Lyatonga B Mrema and Hon Nalaila Kiula shows clearly that the Kigoma-Ujiji road was being repaired by the central government as consideration for the people of Kigoma Urban constituency agreeing to vote for the CCM candidate. PW 6 in a part of his testimony told the trial High Court regarding Hon Mrema's speech: C

`He asked if you get a tarmac road will you have any quarrel with CCM? And the citizens said they would have none. He asked how many would vote for CCM if we gave you a tarmac road. All people raised up their arms ...' D

PW 11, in a part of his testimony concerning the speech made by Hon Nalaila Kiula, told the trial High Court:

`Then he said I have come here to remove the stigma you are putting on CCM. The tarmac you wanted will be put on the road by the Government'. E

Further on the witness said, inter alia:

`he said he was sent by the President to remove the stigma or in Kiswahili "nuksi" which was thrown at CCM'. F

No witness was produced by the other side to seriously contradict these or other witnesses who testified to the same effect. On a paper evaluation of the relevant evidence directly linking the road works with voting for CCM, no reasonable court or G tribunal can come to a conclusion other than that the maintenance work of the Kigoma-Ujiji road was valuable consideration given by the central government to the people of Kigoma Urban Constituency for agreeing to vote for the CCM candidate. H

As to the second reason, it is beyond controversy on the evidence that the Kigoma-Ujiji Town Council had failed to live up to its responsibilities of maintaining the road in question under the road maintenance programme which had been in existence for a long time. There was credible evidence given by one Ven Kayamba Ndyamkama, the I seventh witness for the Defence (RW 7) who is a road maintenance management engineer in the relevant ministry headquarters in Dar-es-Salaam, to the effect that the responsibility of maintenance of A the country's roads is divided between the central government and the local authorities, and that local authorities can request the central Government to assist in maintenance of local authority roads, whenever the need arose. The evidence given by one Augustine Mudogo, the first witness for the defence (RW 1) who is the Director of Kigoma-Ujiji B Town Council, appears to show that the central government had assisted his council in maintenance of the road in question by providing funds amounting to Shs7,000,000/= in 1992 and Shs10,000,000/= in 1993. The evidence of this witness together with that of RW 7 however shows that at the time of the by-election, the central government decided C to take over the maintenance work of the Kigoma-Ujiji road, and Hon Augustine Lyatonga Mrema instructed RW 1 to put aside the Shs10,000,000/= which had been previously supplied and intended by the central government to assist the town council. This sudden D and total intervention by the central government, in the absence of an earthquake or similar disaster or situation affecting the Kigoma-Ujiji road is clearly way out of the ordinary course of government business.

With regard to the third reason relied upon by the learned Trial Judge concerning the E large number of people who attended the public rallies addressed, and corruptly influenced by Hon Mrema and Hon Kiula, there was evidence given by witnesses for the petitioner, which was not seriously contradicted by the defence, and which showed that large numbers of people attended these rallies. F

It was contended by counsel for the appellants to the effect that there was no one who testified about being influenced to vote for CCM by this road maintenance undertaking. However, the contention collapsed when counsel for the appellants conceded that under G the principle of secrecy of the ballot, no one could be expected to testify to that effect. In our considered opinion the fact of influence affecting the vote can be inferred from the circumstantial evidence relating to the large number of people who attended the public rallies, the pressing desire of the people of Kigoma Urban constituency to have their H road repaired and the respect usually given by the people of this country to ministers of their government.

For purposes of clarity we need to point out here that a corrupt practice under the Elections Act, 1985 is not necessarily the same as corruption under the Prevention of I Corruption Act, 1972. This can be seen under the provisions of s 97 of the Elections Act which states various categories of persons deemed guilty of bribery. It is evident that such persons are not necessarily guilty under the Prevention of Corruption A Act, 1972.

We need to point out further that a corrupt practice under the Elections Act is capable of being construed, as we mentioned earlier, either as being a non-compliance in the sense of being a failure to abstain from committing the offence of bribery as defined B under s 97 of the Elections Act, or as, where it is extensively done, as a misconduct which renders the election unfair. In the present case the corrupt undertaking to repair the road amounted not only to a non-compliance with the prohibition against electoral bribery contra s 97 C of the Elections Act, but was also unfair to the political parties which were challenging CCM. Had the Tamko Rasmi been properly signed and therefore valid, the intervention by the central government would also have been a non-compliance with the directives of the Electoral Commission against the use of government property in furtherance of the campaign of one political party. D
With regard to our finding on ground number 5 in the Attorney-General's Memorandum of Appeal, which is number 7 in the third appellant's Memorandum of Appeal, in which we upheld the learned Trial Judge to the effect that the campaigns by Hon Augustine E Lyatonga Mrema, (MP) and Hon Nalaila Kiula (MP) were illegal campaigns which affected the results of the by-election; and in which we faulted the finding concerning the campaign of the CCM Chairman, Ali Hassan Mwinyi, our reasons are as follows. We are satisfied that under the Elections Act, 1985 read together with the Constitution, the F Electoral Commission is empowered to prescribe a specific period for election campaigns as it did in the present case. As we have already mentioned earlier, this power is derived under article 74(6)(b) of the Constitution read together with s 124 of the Elections Act.
Of course no where in the Elections Act, 1985 is to be found a specific provision G requiring the Electoral Commission to prescribe a period for election campaigns. We are of the view that the absence of such a requirement does not derogate from the general power of the Electoral Commission to do so. We think it is wise for the Commission to continue to do so in order to ensure the fairness of elections and to H enable to effectively supervise such elections.
In the present case, the period prescribed for campaigns was from 31 January to 12 February 1994. By campaigning before the commencement of this period, Hon Mrema (MP) and Hon Kiula (MP) did conduct illegal campaigns, which on the authority of the I case of Ndugu Basil P Mramba and the Attorney-General v Ndugu Leons S

Ngalai, (2) such illegal campaigns were non-compliance. As already mentioned earlier in A respect of another point, many people attended the campaign rallies addressed by these ministers. On the basis of the circumstantial evidence mentioned earlier, the illegal campaigns must have affected the results of the by-election.
The learned Trial Judge however erred in holding that the election campaign conducted B by CCM Chairman Ali Hassan Mwinyi was also illegal. All the evidence show that the CCM Chairman, who is also President of the United Republic, arrived in Kigoma for election campaign purposes on 10th February 1994. That was within the prescribed period. The fact that some government property was used in connection with the visit C and campaign did not turn his campaign into an illegal one. What can be said is that if the Tamko Rasmi had been valid, such use of government property might have been a violation of the prohibition contained in the Tamko Rasmi. But since the Tamko Rasmi D was invalid we do not have to go into the details of the matter except on one aspect. We must point out that in a country like ours with a constitution establishing an Executive President, who is also Commander-in-Chief, restrictions concerning his conduct during multi-party election campaigns must be such as not to endanger his personal security or E disable him from effectively discharging his constitutional responsibilities as President and Commander-in-Chief. We think that restrictions which adversely affect the President's ability to discharge his responsibilities at anytime would be unconstitutional. On the other hand, since fairness is one of the important elements in a democratic F election, the use of government property or government employees by the President during election campaigns in a manner which is not necessary for his personal security or the discharge of the responsibilities of the Office of President or Commander-in-Chief G is prohibited in accordance with the principle of fairness. We think that a violation of this prohibition, if it renders elections generally unfair, will result in nullification of elections results. As for the reasons in support of our finding on ground number 6 of the H Attorney-General's Memorandum of Appeal, which is number 8 in the third appellant's Memorandum, in which we faulted the learned Trial Judge in holding that Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam was properly joined as a party to the petition, it is obvious that the learned Trial Judge was led to his erroneous conclusion by replying entirely on I procedural law, where substantive law is also involved. The issue framed for decision by the High Court at the trial was,

`whether the third respondent was properly joined in this petition'. In resolving this issue A the trial court relied on the provisions of Rule 4(2) and (3) of the Election Petition Rules, 1971 as well as the case of Attorney-General v Amiri Zuberi Muya and Abdallah Zuberi Muya (3) which considered the procedural aspect of joinder of parties in election petitions. B

Unfortunately, the learned Trial Judge in the case before us failed to notice that, unlike in the Amiri Zuberi Muya case, there is a matter of substantive law involved, and that is whether Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam is a legal person capable of being joined to the election petition. Learned counsel on both sides in this appeal conceded and we think C rightly so, that Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam was at the material time purely a government department which is not separately established by any law as a body corporate. Learned counsel on both sides rightly concurred with us that under those circumstances Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam, had no legal capacity to be joined as a D party to the petition, separately from the Attorney-General, who represents the government.

We must now turn to the reasons supporting our finding on ground number 7 of the Attorney-General's Memorandum of Appeal, which is number 9 of the third appellant's E Memorandum of Appeal, on which we confirmed the finding of the learned Trial Judge to the effect that the broadcasts of Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam affected the results in favour of the CCM candidate. During the hearing of this appeal, it was argued by learned counsel for the appellants to the effect that no evidence was adduced at the trial to show F that the people in Kigoma Urban Constituency possess any radio sets or receivers and that they listened to the relevant broadcasts of Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam during the material time.

With due respect to learned counsel for the appellants, we think that this is a desperate G argument. It is common knowledge in this country, and which therefore requires no evidential proof, that there is a large number of people both in the rural and urban areas of Tanzania who possess radio sets or receivers and who regularly listen to Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam. On that premise, it can reasonably be inferred that a large H number of people in Kigoma Urban Constituency must have listened to the broadcasts of Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam regarding the by-election in their constituency. But did these broadcasts affect the results of the by-election in favour of the CCM candidate? I

To answer this question, one must consider two aspects of the matter. The first is the air time given by Radio Tanzania Dar-es-

Salaam for the campaigns in favour of the CCM candidate compared to the campaigns A in favour of the other political parties contesting the by-election. From the evidence given by Eric Raymond Mchatta, the fifteenth witness for the petitioner (PW 15), which was not seriously challenged by the defence, it is quite clear that the CCM campaigns B were given more air time compared to the combined air time given for the campaigns of the other political parties contesting the by-election. The explanation given for this glaring inequality as per the evidence of Habib Juma Hyundo, the eighth witness for the defence (RW 8), who is the chief editor of Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam, is that, apart from C CCM, the other political parties did not know how to utilize the facilities of Radio Tanzania, Dar-es-Salaam. Taking into account that Radio Tanzania, Dar-es-Salaam is government property, we are of the considered opinion that this is not a sufficient explanation. As a government radio, and in fairness to the contesting political parties, it D was duty bound to take the initiative to offer such political parties equal air time and let them choose to utilize the whole or part of the air time thus offered. We are satisfied that it was the absence of such a system which allowed CCM to utilize more air time than the other political parties. E

The second aspect of the matter is the nature of the contents of the relevant broadcasts by Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam. It is apparent from the evidence that the broadcasts, including surprisingly those made to reflect the official position of Radio Tanzania, F Dar-es-Salaam itself, were biased in favour of the CCM candidate. The surprising example is the programme known as Mazungumzo Baada Ya Habari aired for a number of days during the period of the by-election campaigns commencing on 4 February 1994. Ostensibly what was aired in the programme was meant to congratulate CCM on G its 17 birthday the following day. But as it turned out, the programme went on for a number of days and much of its contents were clearly political campaign material in favour of the CCM candidate. We need only to reproduce a few parts of the board case to demonstrate what we mean. In one part it says in Kiswahili: H

`Na kwa bahati nzuri sana, wapiga kura wa JIMBO LA ILEJE wiki iliyopita waliitun za CCM zawadi ya kuanzia sherehe za kuzaliwa kwake kwa kumchagua kwa kura nyingi sana mgombea wake wa kiti cha Bunge Ndugu CHEYO. Hivi sasa, CCM inasubiri kwa hamu kubwa kuona kama itapata zawadi ya I kukamilisha sherehe zake hizo kutoka kwa wapiga kura wa Jimbo la KIGOMA MJINI.

1996 TLR p184

NYALALI CJ

A MATOKEO ya uchaguzi mdogo wa Jimbo la Ileje yanatudhihirishia mambo mengi muhimu ambayo yanapaswa kuzingatiwa na kila mwanasiasa, na hasa kila mpinzani wa CCM na kila Chama cha Siasa nchini.

UKWELI wa kwanza na wa dhahiri kabisa ni kwamba CCM bado ni chama chenye nguvu kubwa sana na chenye wapenzi wengi walio wanachama na wasio wanachama. Tunasema CCM ina wapenzi B ambao hata siyo wanachama wake kwa sababu kuna baadhi ya watu wanafanya makosa kwa kufikiria tu kuhusu namba ya wanachama wa CCM wenye kadi na kupiga hesabu zao zote za kisiasa kwa kuzingatia nambari hiyo ambayo haijafikia hata milioni tano.

KOSA JINGINE kubwa wanalofanya ni kudhani kwamba WATANZANIA wote wasio wana-CCM kwa C lazima watavipigia kura vyama vingine. HIYO siyo kweli hata kidogo'

Yet in another part it says: D

`CCM tokea awali imekuwa Chama cha Umma badala ya wateule wachache. Tena imekuwa na sera nzuri ambazo zimeitikia matakwa ya wananchi wote kwa wakati wote ambao imekuwa katika uongozi'. E

Having examined the contents of various broadcasts of Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam, including the above mentioned Mazungumzo Baada Ya Habari, and bearing in mind the time tested maxim that information is power, we were bound to conclude, as the learned F Trial Judge did, to the effect that these broadcasts in favour of CCM must have influenced the by-election results in favour of the CCM candidate.

Let us now turn to our reasons supporting our finding on ground number 8 of the Attorney-General's Memorandum of Appeal, which is number 10 of the third appellant's G Memorandum of Appeal, on which we upheld the finding of the learned Trial Judge to the effect that the counting of the votes was not proper. It is apparent from the proceedings in the High Court and before this Court, that although there is great controversy on whether the process of counting the votes was completed or H prematurely stopped before the results were announced, there is common ground, that the final exercise undertaken by agreement between CCM and CHADEMA representatives and approved by the returning officer, involved going through the bundles of votes for each political party, after a representative of CHADEMA had expressed I dissatisfaction with the position reached. It is this exercise of going through the bundle of votes which was stopped after a number of CCM bundles had been gone through.

NYALALI CJ

The first question that arises here is whether this exercise is permitted by law. In our A considered opinion, we are satisfied that the answer is in the negative. Under s 78 of the Elections Act, there is only one course of action open where, as was the case here, a candidate or counting agent expresses dissatisfaction, and that course of action is for the returning officer to grant a recount. On the authority of the case of The B Attorney-General v Joseph Musa Monko (4), the returning officer is duty bound to grant a first and second request for recount. This was not done in the present case. Instead, an extraneous exercise was undertaken. This was clearly not proper in law. C

A more serious impropriety however concerns the petitioner's complaint to the effect that the actual counting of the votes never really started, and that the exercise of going through the bundles which was aborted on alleged security grounds, was merely for the purpose of ascertaining whether the bundles were correct in the number and kind of D votes contained therein. Ample evidence was adduced on both sides on this aspect of the case. The evidence on the defence side was intended to show that the counting of votes had been completed when the exercise of going through the bundles was undertaken at the request of a CHADEMA representative. The learned Trial Judge, after E evaluating the evidence on both sides, accepted the version given for the petitioner's side. Was the learned Trial Judge correct in so doing?

We have given the evidence a fresh look, and we are satisfied that the learned Trial Judge was correct, particularly when account is taken of the report made by a journalist F of Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam, concerning the activities that were then going on in the counting hall. That report, by one Abbisay Stephen, was broadcast on the state radio and an official record of the programme was made and kept by Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam. A transcript of the record was produced as exhibit R 49 as part of the G evidence for the defence. It is our considered opinion that since Radio Tanzania Dar-es-Salaam is a government department managed by public servants, the record of that broadcast was properly admitted as evidence under the provisions of s 37 of the Evidence Act, 1967 which states: H

`Any entry in any public or other official book, register or record, stating a fact in issue or relevant fact, and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty or by other person in performance of I a duty specially enjoined by law of the country in which such book, register or record is kept, is itself a relevant fact.'

1996 TLR p186

NYALALI CJ

That record reads in Kiswahili as follows: A

`Asante Mbonde zoezi la kuhesabu kura lilianza saa moja asubuhi kule Bangwe Magereza na zoezi hilo litaendelea mpaka saa 10 jioni. Tatizo lililojitokeza ni kwamba ilipofika saa kumi kura zilikuwa B zimepangwa vizuri kura 100 kwa kila mgombea ili kurahisisha kazi ya kuhesabu kura. Sasa ilipofika saa kumi jioni ndiyo ikabidi waanze kuhesabu kura ili kuhakikisha kwamba kweli zile ambazo zinafungashwa 100/100 ni kweli zimetimia. Zoezi hilo litaendeleo mpaka usiku'.

We are of the considered opinion that this evidence corroborates the evidence given for C the petitioner's side to the effect that the exercise of going through the bundles of votes was purely for the purpose of ascertaining the state of the bundles of votes prior to the actual process of counting the votes case for each candidate. It follows therefore D that since this exercise of ascertaining the state of the bundles was prematurely stopped allegedly on security grounds, the counting process had not been concluded when the election results were announced by the returning officer.

Next we come to the reasons in support of our finding on ground number 9 of the E Attorney-General's Memorandum of Appeal on which we concurred with the finding of the learned Trial Judge to the effect that the failure of the petitioner to fill in form CF--7 at the end of the activities in the counting hall was due to alleged security risk. Obviously, having found that the counting process was aborted, we were bound, like the learned F Trial Judge, to accept the evidence given for the petitioner to the effect that the abortion of the counting process allegedly for security reasons was the cause of the failure by the petitioner to fill in Form CF--7 as required by the regulations of the Electoral Commission. We are also satisfied that there is no longer any provision under the G Elections Act, 1985 as amended or under any other relevant law which renders the failure by the petitioner to fill in Form CF--7 fatal to the petition. Undoubtedly, in a proper case, such a failure could undermine the credibility of a petitioner or his or her agent. This is not such a case.

We now move on to give our reasons in support of our finding on ground number 2 of H the Memorandum of Appeal of the third appellant, on which we faulted the finding of the learned Trial Judge that the third appellant is solely liable to pay the petitioner's costs. We are of the considered opinion that the third appellant is liable to pay only those costs I arising from the electoral misdeeds committed either by himself or by his agents including the political party which sponsored him, and which constitute the grounds for nullification of the election results. A He is not liable to pay the costs arising from the misdeeds of agents of the Electoral Commission or the government. Those are payable by the government of the United Republic. For purposes of clarity, we hold that the illegal campaigns conducted by Hon Augustine Lyatonga Mrema and Hon Nalaila Kiula are to be construed as having been B done under the auspices of the political party which sponsored the candidature of the third appellant.

Next we turn to the reasons supporting our finding on ground number 4 of the third C appellant's Memorandum of Appeal on which we upheld the finding of the learned Trial Judge to the effect that the CCM Chairman, Ali Hassan Mwinyi; the then CCM Secretary-General, Horace Kolimba; the CCM National Publicity Secretary, Kingunge Ngombale-Mwiru, and the Hon Augustine Lyatonga Mrema, (MP), then Minister of Home D Affairs and Deputy Prime Minister uttered defamatory statements regarding the petitioner and his political party and that such statements affected the election results. We however faulted the learned Trial Judge in holding that the statements made by Hon Nalaila Kiula, (MP), Minister of Communications, Transport and Works were defamatory. E

We have given the evidence adduced on this point a fresh look as we are bound to do in a first appeal. The evidence consists in the testimony of witnesses who attended the campaign meetings or rallies addressed by these eminent persons. All the testimony F was given on the side of the petitioner. The defence produced no witness to contradict the petitioner's witnesses. PW 6, one of the witnesses for the petitioner told the trial High Court in a part of his testimony as follows:

G `On the 15/1/94 I was near Kawawa stadium. We were there waiting to hear the speech of the Minister for Home Affairs Lyatonga Mrema. Almost the whole town was there ... then Mr Mrema's speech followed.

He started to warn us against opposition parties. He said who knows not how to die should look at the grave. He asked us to go to Lake Tanganyika and see Burundi Refugees and said they were a H product of opposition parties. At Lake Tanganyika Stadium there were thousands of Burundi Refugees who were living in real hardships. They slept outside and had no shelter from rain or sun.'

In another part of his testimony the same witness told the trial High Court: I

1996 TLR p188

NYALALI CJ

A `... He repeated that if other parties were elected this will be a cause for war like in Angola, Burundi, Liberia, etc ...'

Another witness for the petitioner, that is PW 7, in a part of his testimony told the trial High Court regarding the speech by Hon Mrema (MP): B

`... Then he continued "don't you know that opposition parties will bring chaos and a breach of the peace in this country?" ...'

There is yet another witness for the petitioner, that is, Salim s/o Malick, the eighth C witness (PW 8) who, in a part of his testimony, regarding a campaign speech delivered by Hon Kingunge Ngombale-Mwiru (MP), told the trial High Court:

`A lot of people attended that meeting. They could be three or four thousand people ... some of the D words by the speaker Mr Ngombale-Mwiru are that the person we want to elect first tore the national flag and if he had failed to respect the national flag, will he respect you? He said that that person does not respect his mother. He comes and lives in a hotel instead of at his mother's house. He said E his mother lives in a mud house. Even when his father died he did not come to bury him but stayed in the United States of America....'

There is another witness for the petitioner, namely, Hamisi Shabani Maranda, the ninth witness (PW 9) who in a part of his testimony concerning a campaign speech by Hon F Horace Kolimba, told the trial High Court:

`... Kolimba told us that electing another party besides CCM is to bring war and refugees like in Burundi, Rwanda and other countries. There were very many people, between 20 and 25 thousand G people. The whole town was called by loud speaker to attend the meeting ...'

Another witness for the petitioner namely, George Mazula, the second witness, (PW 2) who in a part of his testimony concerning a campaign speech given by the CCM National H Chairman,

His Excellency President Ali Hassan Mwinyi, told the trial High Court:

`... I heard him talking. He talked many things but one of them is calling opponents puppets and mercenaries.... And that those puppets were given money and people should take the money and eat I it as it was their money.... I was not expecting such words from a president but he uttered them'

1996 TLR p189

NYALALI CJ

In another part of his testimony, this witness told the trial High Court: A `... "Mamluki au Vibaraka" are mercenaries or people paid by outsiders to do something for them ...' B

Further on the witness testified inter alia:

`At that meeting the President said, "Hawa wapinzani vibaraka, mamluki wamepewa pesa, wananchi zichukueni mzile".' C

The evidence adduced at the trial shows that these statements were widely published in the press. There can be no doubt that those who uttered those statements were aware that the statements would be published in the press.

It is our considered opinion that the statements disclosed by all this testimony, were D defamatory of the political parties in opposition to CCM, and in particular, to the petitioner and his political party. In addition, the statements made by Hon Mrema MP, and Hon Horace Kolimba MP were intimidating to the electorate of Kigoma Urban constituency. Since defamation is an offence under the law of the land, everyone is prohibited from E committing it at all times including during election campaigns. We are satisfied that legally indefensible or inexcusable defamation committed in furtherance of an election campaign, as was done in the present case amounts to a breach of sub-article 26 of the Constitution which categorically states, `Every person is obliged to comply with this F Constitution and the laws of the United Republic'. It is our view that this constitutional command applies at all times. It follows therefore that presidential and parliamentary elections are required to be conducted not only with due observance of the Constitution G and the Elections Act, but also with due observance of the general law of the land. We are further satisfied that because of the large number of people who attended these campaign rallies and the respect of people of this country usually give to their President and his ministers, the defamatory and intimidatory statements in question must have affected the election results. As to the statement made by Hon Nalaila Kiula (MP) H Minister of Communications, Transport and Works about the road works being aimed at removing a stigma from CCM, we are satisfied that his remarks did not amount to defamation of anyone.

Finally we come at last to the reasons in support of our finding concerning the I citizenship of the third appellant. The issue of citizenship was extensively argued at the trial in the High Court. The learned Trial Judge A decided to resolve the issue by giving the third appellant the benefit of the doubt. Although the petitioner's side made no cross-appeal to us on the issue, we decided to raise the issue on our own initiative in this appeal in the interest of justice. We did so B because citizenship is the basis of everything else that is exercised by political parties and candidates under the Elections Act. Undoubtedly we have the jurisdiction to do so under the provisions of s 4(2) and (3) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 as amended by Act 17 of 1993 concerning powers of revision. C It is apparent on the face of the record that the learned Trial Judge used the wrong approach in resolving the issue. He seems to have approached it as an issue which required to be resolved on the basis of Indian law, rather than on the basis of the law of Tanzania. This can be seen from the following extract of his judgment: D

1996 TLR p190

NYALALI CJ

`As for the citizenship issue it had been argued that the Indian book referred to by the Petitioner is an old 1968 book and the condition prevailing at present in India has not been proved. Mr Makani for the Petitioner had argued that the author of that book is of high repute and that book is an authority used E in the UK, Canada, the USA and Tanzania.

... I do not doubt the genuineness of the book cited.... But taken as it is and presumed to be expounding on the true position of the Law of India the book explains the position on or before 1968. The present position is not clear. India being a fellow Commonwealth country with whom our country F shares diplomatic relations I see no reason why the Petitioner's side did not secure a copy from the Indian High Commission in Dar-es-Salaam of the present state of the law in India to prove their case.

... We have no evidence on the true present situation on how much Parliament in India has legislated G on this issue at present moment. The burden is on the Petitioner to prove that the 2nd Respondent is not a Tanzanian citizen beyond reasonable doubt. That burden has not been discharged to the satisfaction of the court.'

The book on the law in India, which the learned Trial Judge mentions in this part of his H judgment, is authored by H M Seorvai on `Constitutional Law of India'. We think that had the learned Trial Judge approached the issue of citizenship correctly and applied the law of Tanzania, he would have come to the same conclusion as we have done, that the I CCM candidate was not Tanzanian at the time of the election.

NYALALI CJ

The relevant law on the issue is the Citizenship Act 1961 Cap 512 read together with the A British Nationality Act, 1948. Under the scheme of the Citizenship Act, 1961, there are three main categories of Tanzanian citizenship, that is, citizenship by birth, citizenship by descent, and citizenship by registration as defined or provided under s 2 and 10 of the B Citizenship Act, 1961. Under s 10 a citizen by birth `means a person who is citizen of the United Republic--

(a) by virtue of section 3 of this Act.

(b) by virtue of the combined effect of ss (1) of s 1 of this Act and para 1 of the Fourth Schedule to C the Extension and Amendment of Laws (No 5) Decree, 1964; or

(c) by virtue of his birth in Zanzibar and the effect of para 2 of the Fourth Schedule to the Extension and Amendment of Laws (No 5) Decree, 1964.' D

Similarly under the same section, citizen by descent `means a person who is a citizen of the United Republic--

(a) by virtue of s 4 of this Act; or

(b) by virtue of the combined effect of ss (2) of s 1 of this Act or of s 4 of this Act as in force E immediately before the commencement of the Extension and Amendment of Laws (No 5) Decree, 1964, and of para 1 of the Fourth Schedule to the said Decree;

(c) by virtue of the combined effect of his being a Zanzibar subject by descent in accordance with F the former law of Zanzibar (and had that law remained in force until immediately before Union Day) and of para 2 of the Fourth Schedule to the said Decree.'

As to the provisions concerning the acquisition of citizenship by registration, these are to be found under s 2 of the Act read together with Part II of the Citizenship Ordinance, Cap 452. The position of the third appellant clearly does not fall within the category of G citizenship by registration or citizenship by descent. It falls within the category of citizenship by birth within the scope of ss (1) of s 1 of the Act, which states:

H `Every person who, having been born in Tanganyika is on the eight day of December, 1961, a citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonies or a British protected person shall become a citizen of Tanganyika on the ninth day of December, 1961:

Provided that a person shall not become a citizen of Tanganyika by virtue of this sub-section if neither I of his parents was born in Tanganyia'.

1996 TLR p192

NYALALI CJ

Undoubtedly on the facts of this case, this sub-section of s 1 has to be read together A with the provisions of s 6 of the Act which concerns dual citizenship. On the facts of this case the relevant part is ss (1) of s 6 as amended by Act 24 of 1970. It states:

B `Any person who, upon the attainment of the age of 18 years, is a citizen of the United Republic or was a citizen of the former Republic of Tanganyika and also is or was a citizen of some country other than the United Republic or the former Republic of Tanganyika shall, subject to the provisions of ss (7) of this section, cease to be a citizen of the United Republic upon the specified date unless he has C renounced his citizenship of that other country, taken the oath of allegiance and, in the case of a citizen by descent, made and registered such declaration of his intention concerning residence as may be prescribed by Parliament.'

It is apparent that there are three factors which determine citizenship by birth within the D scope of ss (1) of s 1 of the Act. These are firstly, being born in Tanganyika by 8 December 1961; secondly, being a citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonies or being a British protected person on 8 December 1961, and thirdly and finally having at least one parent who was born in Tanganyika. E

It follows therefore that the impression given in the decision of the High Court in the case of Abdallah Salim Ali Absalaam (5) to the effect that only one factor is required in determining citizenship by birth under ss (1) of s 1 cannot be correct. In that case, Georges, CJ as he then was, is reported to have held: F

`Section 1(1) of the Citizenship Act, 1961 designates persons born in Tanganyika as citizens, "provided that person shall not be a citizen if neither of his parents was born in Tanganyika." this section clearly requires only that one parent have been born in Tanganyka ...' G

We are of the considered opinion that the wrong impression need not arise if one bears in mind that the factor of parentage appears in a proviso which qualifies a preceding statement in ss (1). The proceeding statement designates persons born in Tanganyika and who are citizens of the United Kingdom and Colonies or are British protected H persons on the 8 December 1961, as citizens of Tanganyika. Clearly the fact of having one parent born in Tanganyika is not sufficient to confer citizenship by birth within the scope of ss (1) of s 1 of the Act.

For purposes of clarity we need to point out here that citizenship of the United Kingdom and Colonies exists under the law of Tanzania only for the purpose of determining I citizenship by birth within the scope of ss (1) of s 1 of the Act, and is not recognized as a parallel citizenship which A a citizen of Tanzania continued to have after 9 December 1961. It would seem that once citizenship of the United Kingdom and Colonies served its purpose of determining citizenship by birth for those born before 9 December 1961, it disappeared from their B lives. Bearing in mind that one of the objectives of the Citizenship Act 1961 is the exclusion of plurality or duality of citizenship, we are satisfied that this must be the correct interpretation of the law. The contrary interpretation leads to an absurdity in the sense that the vast majority of people born in Tanganyika before 9 December 1961 C would be construed to have continued with the colonial citizenship of the United Kingdom and colonies and subsequently forfeited their new citizenship of Tanganyika for failure to renounce their colonial citizenship under s 6 of the Act. We do not think that such absurdity was the intended effect of the Act.

Let us now turn to the specific position of the third appellant. There is no dispute D between the parties that he was born in Tanganyika in 1954 and, one of his parents, that is, his mother, was similarly born in 1926. The first question that has to be resolved is whether the third appellant was a citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonies or was a E British protected person at the time of his birth. The answer is to be found under the provisions of s 4 of the British Nationality Act, 1948 which states:

`Subject to the provisions of this section, every person born within the United Kingdom and Colonies F after the commencement of this Act shall be a citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonies by birth:

Provided that a person shall not be such a citizen by virtue of this section if at the time of his birth--

(a) his father possesses such immunity from suit and legal process as is accorded to an envoy of a foreign sovereign power accredited to His Majesty, and is not a citizen of the United G Kingdom and Colonies; or

(b) his father is an enemy alien and the birth occurs in a place then under occupation by the enemy.'

It seems to us that since Tanganyika was, as defined under s 32 of the British Nationality H Act, 1948 a colony of the United Kingdom at the time when the third appellant was born therein in 1954, he must have been a citizen by birth of the United Kingdom and Colonies. Undoubtedly that was the legal position concerning the vast majority of people I born in the colony known as Tanganyika before the 9 December 1961.

1996 TLR p194

NYALALI CJ

However, the third appellant's legal position was significantly different from that of the A vast majority of people. Unlike them, the third appellant was at the time of his birth not only a citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonies by virtue of the provisions of s 4 of the British Nationality Act, 1948, but he was also a citizen of India. This can be seen from B the particulars of his birth certificate which was produced in evidence at the trial in the High Court. The particulars show that both parents of the third appellant were of Indian Nationality at the time of his birth. We are satisfied that the term `nationality' as used for purposes of registration of births under the Births and Deaths Registration Ordinance, C Cap 108 connotes citizenship. We take judicial notice of the fact that at the time of the third appellant's birth in 1954, India had been an independent nation state for almost 7 years with its own citizens. We are satisfied that, according to the law of this country, the third appellant must be regarded as having acquired the nationality or citizenship of D both his parents at the time he was born, and that such nationality or citizenship is presumed to have continued until the time when under Tanzanian law he was required to choose between Tanzanian citizenship or Indian citizenship, unless such presumption is rebutted by credible evidence. In our considered opinion, the burden of E rebutting such a presumption lies with the person who seeks to rebut it. In the present case, it was for the third appellant to satisfy the trial High Court that his Indian citizenship ceased to exist before he was required under Tanzanian law to renounce it according to the provisions of ss (1) of s 6 read together with ss (7) of the Citizenship Act, 1961. F

We note that according to ss (6) of s 6 of the Citizenship Act as amended by Act No 24 of 1979, the specified date for a person like the third appellant who was still a minor on the 9 December, 1961, is the date of attaining the age of majority, which is 18 years. Sub-section (7) provides for parliamentary extension of the specified date wherever appropriate.

Since it is apparent from the record of the proceedings in the trial High Court that the third appellant produced no evidence to show that his Indian citizenship had ceased to exist at the time he attained the age of 18 years, that is, in 1972, and in the absence of his renunciation of such Indian citizenship in 1972, then, unless there was an extension granted by Parliament for the required renunciation, the third appellant must have automatically lost his Tanzanian citizenship in 1972 that is, at the time he applied for and obtained his first Tanzanian Passport. As this court is not aware of any parliamentary extension for renunciation being granted to the third appellant under the A provisions of ss (7) of s 6 of the Citizenship Act, we are satisfied that the trial High Court ought not to have given the third appellant the benefit of doubt but should have found that he was not a Tanzanian citizen at the time of the by-election.

In conclusion, these then are the reasons which compelled us to make the findings we B did in our judgment delivered on 28th December 1994.

Subsequent to a divorce, the present Appellant applied to the Dodoma Urban Primary Court for the division of the matrimonial assets, which consisted of `130 head of cattle, 28 sheep, 8 goats, 6 donkeys, two houses of corrugated iron sheets and two thatched G houses'. She was awarded only one corrugated iron house. She now appeals to this Court against that award.
The trial court held that the animals were not liable for distribution since the Respondent had inherited them from his father before the marriage, and were thus the Respondent's personal property. H
Held:

(i) Personal property is liable for distribution in terms of Section 114(3) of the Law of Marriage Act when such property has been `substantially improved' during the marriage by the joint efforts of the spouses.

(ii) There was evidence to suggest that some cattle were purchased during the I subsistence of the marriage with the proceeds of crop sales.

A (iii) Some heads of cattle had been jointly acquired by the spouses as a bride price following the marriage of their two daughters.

Mwalusanya J:

After a divorce case, the appellant Mrs Anna Kanungha applied at Dodoma Urban C Primary Court for the division of the matrimonial assets between her and her ex-husband the respondent Mr Andrea Kanungha. The matrimonial assets to be divided consisted of 130 head of cattle, 28 sheep, 8 goats, 6 donkeys, two houses of corrugated iron sheets and two thatched houses. The trial court awarded only one house of D corrugated iron sheets and she was denied the rest. She appealed to Dodoma District Court which quashed the proceedings allegedly because they were a nullity on the ground that the assessors did not give their opinions in writing before the judgment was written. She has now appealed to this court challenging the decisions of the two courts E below.

The learned resident magistrate was patently wrong. And I have to observe that this is not the first time the learned resident magistrate has committed such a gross misinterpretation as regards GN No 2 of 1988. The law as introduced by GN No 2 of 1988 is that after she closes the defendants case the trial magistrate should not record F the opinions of the assessors as had been the case before. All that the trial magistrate has to do, is to consult or confer with the assessors as to what they thought about the case, and this consultation does not have to be reduced to writing. After agreeing on the G decision, the trial magistrate writes a judgment which includes the views of the trial magistrate and the assessors. Then the trial magistrate and the two assessors sign that judgment. If one dissents, a dissenting judgment is written and signed by the one dissenting. So in this case the trial court properly complied with the law, as the judgment H is duly signed by the trial magistrate and both assessors.

Now was the trial court correct in dividing the matrimonial assets the way it did? The appellant has told this court that she is satisfied with the way the houses were divided. Her concern is about the heads of cattle of which she was deprived. There was no I dispute at the trial that the assets consisted of 130 head of cattle; 28 sheep, 8 goats and 6 donkeys. The trial court held that the said cattle were not liable for distribution because they are the personal property of the A respondent which he had inherited from his father before he married the appellant.

The trial court was clearly wrong. There are three grounds for saying so. First because under s 114 (3) of the Law Marriage Act No 5 of 1971 such personal property is liable for B distribution so long as the same has been substantially improved during marriage by the joint efforts of the spouses. In the case at hand there can be doubt that the appellant had helped to improve the cattle by going to graze them in the bush (as is common with the Wagogo) and by cleaning the kraal. So she is entitled to a share. C

Secondly, there was evidence at the trial to the effect that some cattle were realised by buying after the spouses had sold their joint crops. Such contention was not seriously challenged, as respondent merely stated that he had inherited 30 head of cattle which D had reproduced. Even if the 30 head of cattle had reproduced, there was room to accept that some had been bought.

Thirdly, and which is more important is the fact that there was uncontroverted evidence adduced at the trial to the effect that some heads of cattle were jointly acquired by the spouses as bride price when their two daughters got married. It is said one daughter E was married for 20 head of cattle and 20 goats, while the other daughter was married for 18 head of cattle and 15 goats. So in all there were 38 head of cattle and 35 goats acquired through brideprice. When I enquired from the respondent about this revelation, he conceded that it was true. Therefore I am at a loss as to why the trial court held that F there was no joint heads of cattle liable for distribution. The trial court clearly erred.

Considering the fact that the spouses are now old, they being allegedly married in 1950, and considering the fact that respondent has some two other younger wives, with a number of children, I will give the appellant a lesser portion of the cattle. In the event I G award the appellant 10 head of cattle, two goats and six sheep. The award of a house given to the appellant by the trial court is endorsed.

In fine the judgment of the District Court is set aside. The decision of the trial court is H upheld but varied to the extent indicated above. The appeal is allowed with costs. Order accordingly.

[zJDz]Judgment
Bubeshi J: I
The applicants Mr Leonard Reed Harrison and Kwigema Samson
1996 TLR p199
BUBESHI J
Gabba filed an application by way of chamber summons for the order of adoption of one A Antony Hongera Gabba herein after to be called the infant. Supporting their applications is an affidavit deponed by Mr Leonard Reed Harrison.
The background to this petition is that the infant Antony Hongera Gabba was born of B Kwigema Samson Gabba and Rogather Kwayu of Dar es Salaam on 29 July 1979 at Geita. That Mr Leonard Reed Harrison and Kwigema Samson Gabba have been living together for the last seven years and that though not legally married dowry was paid in accordance with Sukuma customary law. That the putative father of the infant Antony C has consented to the said adoption and that the petitioners are keen to adopt the infant so that he may be taken abroad for further studies. The petitioner Mr Leonard Reed Harrison is a citizen of the United States of America but has been living in this country since 1971 under a `Class A' resident permit. D
Following this application, this Court appointed the Commissioner for Social Welfare to act as curator ad litem to the infant and the petition was so served on him.
On the day of the hearing of the petition, the Court invited Mrs Kyara from the social E welfare department, to submit her report on the matter in terms of rule 13 of the Rules of Court GN 1942 No 321. The report submitted and marked `A' had the following salient points:

-- that it was not possible to establish the petitioners marital status as no legal or F formal document to that effect was produced though it was contended that cohabitation was approved by Kwigemas parents under customary law.

-- that the consent by the putative father produced to the curator ad litem was not duly signed and efforts to clarify this anomaly proved futile as the putative father G was out of the country for further studies.

-- that Mr Leonard Reed Harrison is a USA Citizen but his residential status in this country could not be established though he has lived in Tanzania for the last 27 years ie, from 1971. H

-- that discussions with the infant Anthony revealed that the infant has not had time to discuss with his real father on the issue-the concern also echoed with the mother Kwigema.

All in all the curator ad litem was therefore not recommending the proposed adoption of I the infant to the petitioners.

1996 TLR p200

BUBESHI J

In reply thereto Mr Leonard Harrison Reed said as far as he knows he is a businessman A residing in this country under `Class A' Residence Permit. As to the marital Status, his customary law marriage to Kwigema was in accordance with Sukuma customary law.

Kwigema on her part did not have much to say except to emphasize their willingness in adopting the child. B

In accordance with s 3(2) of the Adoption Ordinance cap 335 an adoption order may be made on the application of two spouses authorising them jointly to adoption an infant. Before me is an application or petition issued jointly by Leonard Reed Harrison and C Kwigema Samson Gabba for the adoption of Anthony Hongora Gabba, the son of Kwigema Gabba.

The petitioners have been living in cohabitation for the last seven years and dowry was paid in accordance with Sukuma customary law. That may be so, but in order that those D two may be recognised as husband and wife (spouse) for the purpose of adoption, it is my considered view that their marriage has to be registered as per s 43 of the law of Marriage Act 1971. That proviso reads:

Section 43(4)

E `when a marriage is contracted in the presence of a registration officer ... according to customary law rites, it shall be the duty of the registration officer to take necessary steps to register the marriage with the district registrar ...'

and again under F

Section 43(5)

`when a marriage is contracted according to customary law rites and there is no registration officer present, it shall be the duty of the parties to apply for registration, within thirty days of the marriage, to the registrar....' G

Hence the petitioner's purported marriage under the Sukuma customary law rites should be registered according to the law so that they may be termed as spouses within the meaning of the adoption ordinance. H

As to the issue of consent by the putative father one Rogather Kwayu, it is unfortunate that the consent form sent to the social welfare department was not signed. I think it should be duly signed. The court's copy is dated 20 December 1994 and one wonders why the copy sent to the Social Welfare Department bears no date. I

Regarding the residential status of Mr Harrison. I think this is an important issue. The petitioner Mr Leonard Reed Harrison has to satisfy the Social A Welfare Department of his residential status in this country by submitting to them the necessary permit from the Immigration Department. This is important as no adoption order shall be made in respect of any applicant who is not resident in Territory-Section 4(5) thereto of cap 335. In the final analysis, this application cannot succeed and it is B hereby dismissed. The parties are at liberty to reapply after having clarified the issues raised above.

I make no order as to costs. C

The Applicants applied for an order in this Court permitting them to institute proceedings G in the Resident Magistrate's court against the Respondent on behalf of more than 68 other co-applicants. The Applicants also sought an injunction restraining the Respondent from `demolishing, damaging, alienating or disposing' of the properties in the principal suit to be instituted.

Held: H

(i) The law allows representative suits, but any application for leave to bring a suit in this way should be entertained by the court that will hear the suit in due course.

(ii) It would be premature for this Court to grant the injunction sought before the main suit has been filed. I

(iii) Leave is granted to the Applicants to file the main suit, and the application succeeds to this extent only.

[zJDz]Judgment
Bebeshi J:
Mr Lugue, learned counsel filed an application under s 63(1) of the Magistrates Court Act 1984 and also under Order 1 Rule 8, and Order 437 Rule 1(b) and s 95 of Civil C Procedure Code 1966 seeking on behalf of the plaintiffs/applicants the following orders:
(a) that this court grant leave to the applicants to file the suit arising from unsurveyed land at the court of the resident magistrate D
(b) that this court grant leave to the applicants to file a representative suit on behalf of the other applicants
(c) that this court issue an interim injunction restraining the respondents from demolishing, damaging, alienating or disposing of the properties in the suit land E until the matters concerning the said land are adjudicated on merit by the court of law

This application is supported by the affidavit as deponed by one Faraji S Mziray on behalf of the other applicants. F
Appearing on behalf of the respondents of the city council was Mr Eustace learned counsel who submitted before me that he was not challenging the first prayer, that is, applying for leave to have this matter heard by the resident magistrate's court as the applicants had engaged the services of counsel. Mr Eustace however was challenging the second and third prayers. G
Mr Lugue learned counsel on the issue of representation submitted that since there were more that 68 applicants he though it prudent that the three applicants be allowed to represent the rest. In fact he said the law allows representative suits Order 1 Rule 8 of H the Civil Procedure Code 1966. To echo that Mr Faraji S Mziray deponed in his affidavit para two thereto, that the 68 interested persons have appointed Mussa Hamisi Shah, Feraji S Mziray and Lucas Japhet Kija to appear in court on their behalf.

Mr Eustace who was opposed to the prayer submitted that this issue should be I presented before the court that going to try the suit and not this court. I think Mr Eustace is correct. The law allows for representative suits but such application should be handled by the appropriate court that A will hear the suit, and since I am inclined to grant leave for this matter to be filed at the resident magistrate's court, it would be in order if this application is addressed to the competent court once a suit has been filed. B

Likewise on the third prayer. The court would not at this juncture grant the injunction prayed against the respondents. As I understand the current position is that counsel for applicants after being granted leave by this court will then proceed to file the suit at the resident magistrate's court. Once he has done so, it would therefore be open to him to C apply for the injunction or not. It would, in my view, be rather premature for counsel to ask this court to grant the injunction when the suit has not been filed. In that regard the authority cited before me of Frank Marealle v Paul Kyauka Njau (1) is not relevant here.

In the final analysis, the application succeeds to the extent that only the first prayer is D allowed. The second and third prayers are not allowed.

The plaintiff claimed that during the era of the one-party state the ruling party, of which the defendants were its trustees, had acquired many properties through subventions from the government and compulsory contributons from millions of people, the majority of whom were, like the plaintiff, not members of the party. The funds so received as D subventions were misused or mismanaged leading to a huge debt burden upon Tanzanians. The plaintiff sought an order for the defendants to pay the said debt and a declaration that the defendants had no right to the properties they had purportedly acquired. The defendants raised preliminary objections regarding, inter alia, E non-compliance with the law for representative suits and the justiciability of the claims. The court also considered the plaintiff's locus standi.

Held:

(i) Locus standi is governed by common law according to which a person bringing a matter to court should be able to show that his right or interest has been F breached or interfered with;

(ii) The High Court has the power to modify the applied common law so as to make it suit local conditions;

(iii) The rule of locus standi, in so far as it relates to human rights litigation, must be wide; but there is no basis or justification for widening it to a similar extent in a G private interest litigation as in this case;

(iv) Although the plaint does not expressly say so, it is plain that the plaintiff has purported to file the suit on behalf of himself and also on behalf of all Tanzanians who are not members of the ruling party; but as the suit has been filed without adopting the procedure laid down in Order I Rule 8 of the Civil H Procedure Code, 1966, for instituting representative suits, it is incompetent in law;

(v) Public rights can only be asserted in a civil action by the Attorney General as the guardian of the public interest and a private person can only bring such an action if he claims that the breach complained of constitutes an infringement of his private right or inflicts special damage to him in particular; I

(vi) The plaint in this case does not assert that the plaintiff has suffered any special damage over and above other Tanzanians on account of the A defendants' alleged misconduct:

(vii) The management of public funds, like the management of the economy and foreign policy of the country, is the prerogative of the executive which, in the exercise of its powers in that field, is accountable to Parliament and does not fall under judicial superintendance or scrutiny; B

(viii) The remedy, if any, for any wrong allegedly committed in relation to funds received by the ruling party does not lie in the judicial field.

Samatta JK:

One of the principal questions I have to decide in this matter is whether the plaintiff (now the respondent), Mr Lujuna Shubi Ballonzi, Senior, has locus standi or standing to bring the action which is now before this Court. In his plaint the respondent has sued the G registered trustees of Chama Cha Mapinduzi (hereinafter referred to by its acronym, CCM), praying for the following reliefs, among others:

(1) a declaration that CCM is not a political party; H

(2) an order that the defendants be dissolved and liquidated;

(3) a declaration that the defendants have no rights to movable and immovable properties which they have `purported' to acquire by using subventions from the Consolidated Fund;

(4) an order that the defendants pay all external debts amounting to not less than I seven billion dollars `incurred on behalf of Tanzanians'; and

1996 TLR p206

SAMATTA JK

(5) a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from using and/or alienating A properties in their possession.

In the plaint the respondent avers, inter alia:

The application was heard ex-parte because, although he was duly served with notice of hearing, the respondent, who was not legally represented, did not appear at the hearing.

`3. That the Defendants on or about the 5th day of February, 1977, took all assets of the B Tanganyika National African Union of Tanganyika and the Afro Shiraz Party of Zanzibar (`The Founder Parties').

4. That the Founder Parties were, without authority and mandate of the people, receiving subventions from the Consolidated Fund of Tanzania and compulsory contributions from people residing in Tanzania and others doing business with Tanzania and used those C moneys to acquire movable and immovable properties which were then registered in their respective names. Alternatively the founder parties should have used those funds prudently for the benefit of all Tanzanians.

5. The Defendants without the authority and mandate of the people of Tanzania constituted D themselves a state party on or about the 5th day of February, 1977, and continued to receive and use funds from the Consolidated Fund and compulsory contributions aforesaid in the same manner as the Founder Parties until the 30th day of June, 1992.

6. That the Defendants are continuing to coerce the business community to contribute to them E funds by using their position as a de facto Government. These funds can only be received for and on behalf of all Tanzanians.

7. That the Defendants, without the authority and mandate of Tanzanians, transferred to F themselves assets that they had acquired from the Founder Parties and registered them in their names and further acquired other properties from the subventions referred to in paragraph 5 herein and registered them in their names.

8. That the Defendants have no right to the properties referred to in para 7 herein because these G properties were purchased, acquired and/or constructed from funds which belonged to the peoples of Tanzania the overwhelming majority of whom are not members of the Defendants and therefore can hold such properties as trustees of the people of Tanzania and not as Trustees of CCM. H

9. The Plaintiff has never been a member of the Founder Parties and CCM but has contributed to the funding of the Consolidated Fund through payment of taxes and has been forced on several occasions to contribute towards CCM which moneys have found their way in the coffers of the Defendants. I

10. It is estimated that the Defendants have accumulated properties worth shillings seven hundred and eighty billion

(Shs.780,000,000,000/=) from state funds and have used one trillion shillings A (Shs.1,000,000,000,000/=) to activities unrelated to welfare of Tanzanians and have through mismanagements, outright theft and autocracy incurred an external debt of dollars seven billion (7,000,000,000) ostensibly on behalf of Tanzanians but without the authority and mandate of the people. B

11. That on the 1st day of July, 1992, the Defendants have in an autocratic manner constituted themselves as a political party and continue to cling on properties referred to in para 7 herein as theirs and have shown no intention to return them to the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania despite demand. C

14. For purposes of jurisdiction and court fees the value of the subject matter of the suit is in excess of four trillion shillings (Shs 4,000,000,000,000/=).' D

I have decided to quote the averments in the plaint in extenso because of the unusual character of the case. The defendants (now the applicants) have filed, under Order 6, Rule 16 and s 95 of the Civil Procedure Code (the Code) and s 2(2) of the Judicature E and Application of Laws Ordinance, Cap 453, an application in which they pray that the plaint be struck out on one or more of the following grounds:

(1) it discloses no reasonable cause of action; F

(2) it is scandalous, frivolous and vexatious; and

(3) it is an abuse of the process of the Court.

The application was heard ex-parte because, although he was duly served with notice of G hearing, the respondent, who was not legally represented, did not appear at the hearing.

Mr Uzanda (who was assisted by Ambassador Rutakyamirwa and Miss Mujasiri) strenuously attacked, from several fronts, the respondent's right in law to bring his action against the applicants. The learned advocate contended that the suit is incompetent for H not disclosing a cause of action and for being scandalous, frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of this Court. He advanced four grounds in support of that contention. Those grounds may, without doing any injustice to the very skillful manner in I which the learned advocate put forward his arguments, be summarised as follows:

1996 TLR p208

SAMATTA JK

A (1) The purported representative suit is incompetent because the mandatory provisions of Order I, rule 8 of the Code have not been complied with.

(2) The suit is incompetent in law because no cause of action on trust has been disclosed by the plaint.

B (3) Assuming that the respondent has (properly) pleaded a trust, the non-compliance with the provisions of s 67 of the Code is fatal to the suit.

(4) Since the case is based on averments that the applicants were receiving subventions from the Consolidated Fund, the suit should have been instituted C against the Government, and not against the applicants. In any case, the payment of those funds is not a justiciable issue or one which is subject to review by the courts.

In this country, locus standi is governed by the common law. According to that law, in D order to maintain proceedings successfully, a plaintiff or an applicant must show not only that the court has power to determine the issue but also that he is entitled to bring the matter before the court: see Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th ed, para 49 at p 52. E Courts do not have power to determine issues of general interest: see Re I G Farbenindustrie AG Agreement (1). They can only accord protection to interests which are regarded as being entitled to legal recognition. They will thus not make any determination of any issue that is academic, hypothetical, premature or dead. Because F a court of law is a court of justice and not an academy of law, to maintain an action before it a litigant must assert interference with or deprivation of, or threat of interference with or deprivation of, a right or interest which the law takes cognizance of. Since courts will protect only enforceable interests, nebulous or shadowy interests do not suffice for G the purpose of suing or making an application. Of course, provided the interest is recognised by law, the smallness of it is immaterial. It must also be distinctly understood, I think, that not every damage or loss can be the subject matter of court proceedings. The maxim damnum sine injuria esse potest (there may be damage or H loss inflicted without any act being done which the law deems an injury) is, without any shadow of doubt, part of the law of this country. An example of damnum absque injuria (loss without a wrongful act) is where a man sets up a shop in order to attract the customers of another shop. In Gregory v Camden London Borough (2), at 203G--H, I Paul J describes the common law principle in these terms:

A `There are many acts which cause loss which give no legal rights. Before one can come to a court of law, one must suffer an injuria as well as damnum; one must have suffered a legal wrong as well as an actual loss of money or amenity or something else'.

Under s 2(2) of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance, Cap 453, this Court B has, of course, power to modify the common law so as to make it suit local conditions. Commenting on identical power conferred on the High Court of East Africa by the proviso to article 15 of the East Africa Order in Council (S R & O 1902 No 661) as amended by the East Africa Order in Council of 1911, in Nyali Ltd v Attorney-General (3), C Denning LJ said, at 653:

`The ... proviso says, however, that the common law is to apply "subject to such qualifications as local circumstances render necessary". This wise provision should, I think, be liberally construed. It is D a recognition that the common law cannot be applied in a foreign land without considerable qualification. Just as with an English oak, so with the English common law. You cannot transplant it to the African continent and expect it to retain the tough character which it has in England. It will flourish indeed but it needs careful tending. So with the common law. It has many principles of E manifest justice and good sense which can be applied with advantage to peoples of every race and colour all the world over: but it has also many refinements, subtleties and technicalities which are not suited to other folk. These off-shoots must be cut away. In these far off lands the people must have a law which they understand and which they will respect. The common law cannot fulfil this role except F with considerable qualifications. The task of making these qualifications is entrusted to the judges of these lands. It is a great task. I trust that they will not fail therein'.

In this country, is there any logical basis for modifying the common law rule of locus G standi? In India the Supreme Court has widened that rule. The new approach there is described by Mr Justice P N Baghwati, a former Chief Justice of that country, in his article Fundamental Rights in their Economic, Social and Cultural Context, published in Developing Human Rights Jurisprudence, vol 2 at 83, in the following terms: H

`... there was difficulty in enforcing the human rights of the poor and the disadvantaged, because they are not aware of their rights, they lack the capacity to assert those rights and they do not have the material resources to approach the courts in cases other than criminal. As a result a large range of I human rights remain unenforced. We therefore developed the strategy of public interest litigation. We held in a seminal A decision that the ordinary rule of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence is that an action can be brought only by a person to whom legal injury is caused. However, this rule must be departed from in the cases of poor and disadvantaged classes of people where legal injury is caused to a person or class of persons B who, by reason of poverty or disability or socially or economically disadvantaged position, cannot approach the courts for judicial redress. Thus we held that any member of the public, or social action groups acting bona fide, can approach the court seeking judicial redress for the legal injury caused to C such person or class of persons, and that in such a case the court will not insist on a regular petition being filed by the public spirited individual or social action group espousing their cause and will readily respond-even if its jurisdiction is invoked merely by means of a letter addressed to it, as can happen in the case of habeas corpus actions. This widening of the rule of locus standi D introduced a new dimension in the judicial process and opened a new vista of a totally different kind of litigation for enforcing the basis human rights of poor and underprivileged sections of the community, and ensuring basis human rights dignity. Much of the human rights jurisprudence in India has been built up by the courts as a result of public interest litigation. The Courts have been E enforcing basic human rights of the deprived and vulnerable sections of the society in cases under trial as well as convicted prisoners, women in distress, children in jails and juvenile institutions, bonded and migrant workmen, unorganised labour "untouchables' and `scheduled tubes', landless agricultural labourers who are denied minimum wages or who are victims of faulty mechanisation, F slum and pavement dwellers and victims of extra-judicial executions and many more'.

If I may respectfully say so, there is, I think, some justification for extending the rule of locus standi in the direction taken by the Supreme Court of India. The provisions of s G 26(2) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania (the Constitution) do not seem to extend the rule to the degree done by the Supreme Court (of India). Bearing in mind the realities of our society, including the comparable educational backwardness and poverty of the majority of the people, I would respectfully agree with the following H observations by Mr Justice Kayode, a former justice of the Supreme Court of Nigeria, made in his article The Role of The Judge in Advancing Human Rights in Developing Human Rights Jurisprudence, vol 3, at 100:

I `It is submitted that the greatest excuse of the advocate of restraint in locus standi is that there would be floodgate if everyone is given

A hearing in (Human Rights cases). No one would advocate floodgate in ordinary cases, but as has been submitted earlier, human rights are special rights and special rights deserve special treatment. If floodgate it entails, let there be one, once it is a matter of human rights'. B

An ordinary person is likely to be more conversant with his private law rights than with his public law rights. By necessity the rule of locus standi insofar as it relates to human rights litigation, must be wide. I can see no warrant for making similar extension to the rule as far as private interest litigation is concerned. Since I do not think it would be right C to consider the respondent's suit as falling under the purview of human rights litigation, I proceed, being guided by, among others, the cases I have cited supra, to consider the merits or otherwise of Mr Uzanda's submissions.

Although in the plaint he does not expressly say so, it is as plain as a pikestaff that the D respondent has purported to file the suit not only on his own behalf but also on behalf of all Tanzanians who are not members of CCM. As already indicated, Mr Uzanda contends that the suit is incompetent in law on the ground that the provisions of Order I, Rule 8 of the Civil Procedure Code have not been complied with. I have no doubt that E this contention is unanswerable. Rule 8 of Order 1 reads:

`8 - (1) Where there are numerous persons having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such persons may, with the permission of the court, sue or be sued, or may defend, in such suit, on F behalf of or for the benefit of all persons so interested. But the court shall in such case give, at the plaintiff's expense, notice of the institution of the suit to all such persons either by personal service or, where from the number of persons or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable, by public advertisement, as the court in each case may direct. G

(2) Any person on whose behalf or for whose benefit a suit is instituted or defended under sub-rule (1) may apply to the court to be made a party to such suit'. H

This rule is almost in pari materia with Order I, Rule 8(1), (2) and (3) of the Civil Procedure Code of India. Commenting on the latter rule, the learned authors of Sir John Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Code of Civil Procedure, 3rd ed, vol II, state as follows, at 1403: I

`The foundation of Order I, rule 8 CPC is to be found in a principle which transcends the personal or parochial nature of the combatants who are arrayed as parties to the suit. It affects the rights of other persons not present before the A Court. Hence a duty is cast on the Court itself to follow meticulously the procedure prescribed by Order 1, rule 8. In view of the far reaching consequences of a decree passed in what is described in law as a representative suit, it is necessary that the relevant provisions must be treated as peremptory and mandatory'. B

And at 1405, the learned authors state as follows:

`A representative suit cannot be said to have been validly instituted unless and until the mandatory C provisions of Order 1 rule of the Civil Procedure Code are complied with. The provision contained in Order 1, rule 8, CPC ... is mandatory and not merely directory and is an essential precondition for the trial of the case as a representative suit. It is imperative that the two conditions provided in rule 8 of Order 1, should be complied with, namely, (1) the permission of the Court should be obtained and (2) D the Court should, at the expense of the plaintiffs, issue notice of the institution of the suit to all such persons either by personal service or where from the number of persons, or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable, by public advertisement, as the Court may direct'. E

In my view, these two passages also accurately state our law. A person cannot seek to advance the claims of a group of persons without adopting the procedure laid down in Rule 8 of Order 1 of the Code. He cannot, as the respondent in the case now before me F has purported to do, institute a representative suit without first obtaining leave of the court to bring such suit. When such suit is instituted without that leave, it must struck out for being incompetent in law. Common interest litigation can be conducted only in accordance with the provisions of Order I, Rule 8 of the Code. As already remarked, G failure to comply with those mandatory provisions is fatal to any such suit or application. This is, in law, a sufficient ground for striking out the respondent's purported representative suit.

As was very rightly pointed out by Mr Uzanda in his submission, nowhere in his plaint H has the respondent asserted that, as a result of the applicants' alleged misconduct, he has suffered special damage over and above other Tanzanians or millions of Tanzanians who are not members of CCM. It is a principle of the law of this country that public rights can only be asserted in a civil action by the Attorney-General as the I guardian of the public interest. Except where statutory provisions provide otherwise, a private person can only bring an action to restrain a threatened breach of the law if his claim is based on an A allegation that the threatened breach will constitute an infringement of his private right or will inflict special damage on him. What, as far as common law is concerned, are authorities for these propositions? To answer that question, I would cite Attorney-General (McWhirter) v Independent Broadcasting Authority (4) and Gouriet v B Union of Post Office Workers (5), two of the cases Mr Uzanda referred me to in the course of his very attractive submission. I do not consider it necessary to go into the facts of those cases. Both cases concerned the scope of the common law general C principle that a private person is not entitled in law to bring an action in his own name for the purpose of preventing or seeking compensation for public wrongs. In the former case, Lord Denning, MR said at 696:

D `If a government department or a public authority transgresses the law laid down by Parliament, or threatens to transgress it, can a member of the public come to the court and draw the matter to its attention? He may himself be injuriously affected by the breach. So may thousands of others like him. Is each and every one of them debarred from access to the courts? The law is clear that no one of E them can bring an action for damages, unless he has suffered special damage over and above everyone else. That was settled in 1535 in a case in the Year Books. That rule was laid down in order to avoid multiplicity of actions. The argument was put in this way: "If one of those injured were allowed to sue, a thousand might do so: and that was considered intolerable." Sir William Blackstone F in his commentaries said:

"... it would be unreasonable to multiply suits, by giving every man a separate right of action, for whom damnifies him in common only with the rest of his fellow-subjects".

But does this rule-which prevents anyone suing for damage-also prevent any member of the public G from seeking a declaration or an injunction? (These) are discretionary remedies, to which no one has a right, but which the court can grant if it thinks fit. The usual course, no doubt, is for the member of the public who is aggrieved to go to the Attorney-General and ask him to intervene-either ex officio H or by granting leave to use his name in a relator action. In all proper cases the Attorney General will, no doubt, give his leave. But it is a matter for his discretion.'

The Master of the Rolls then went on to consider whether the aggrieved member of the I public had any access to court if the Attorney-General unreasonably refused to give the leave sought.

He answered the question in the affirmative. In the course of giving that answer, he A made, if I may respectfully say so, very helpful observations on the role of the Attorney-General in this respect. He said, at 697:

`It is settled in our constitutional law that in matters which concern the public at large the B Attorney-General is the guardian of public interest. Although he is a member of the government of the day, it is his duty to represent the public interest with complete objectivity and detachment. He must act independently of any external pressure from whatever quarter it may come. As the guardian of the C public interest, the Attorney-General has a special duty in regard to the enforcement of the law.

His duty has been thus stated by members of this court who, each in his turn, had held the office of Attorney-General. In 1879 in Attorney-General v Great Eastern Railway Co at 500 Baggalay LJ said: D

"It is in the interest of the public that the law should in all respects be respected and observed, and if the law is transgressed or threatened to be transgressed ... it is the duty of the Attorney-General to take the necessary steps to enforce it, nor does it make any difference whether he sues ex officio, at the instance of relators". E

In 1924 Sir Ernest Pollock MR repeated those very words with approval: see Attorney-General v Westminster City Council (6), at 165. To these I would add the words of Lord Abinger CB who had himself been Attorney-General in Deare v Attorney-General F (7) at 208:

`... it has been the practice, which I hope never will be discontinued, for the officers of the Crown to throw no difficulty in the way of any proceeding for the purpose of bringing matters before a Court of G justice, where any real point of difficulty that requires judicial decision has occurred'.

In Gouriet's case supra, Lord Wilbereforce analysed the common law principle at great length. In the course of his judgment, he said, at 80: H

`It can be properly said to be a fundamental principle of English law that private rights can be asserted by individuals, but that public rights can only be asserted by the Attorney-General as representing the public. In terms of constitutional law, the rights of the public are vested in the Crown, I and the Attorney-General enforces them as an officer of the Crown, and just as the Attorney-General has in general no power to interfere with the assertion of private rights, so in general no private person has the right A of representing the public in the assertion of public rights. If he tries to do so his action can be struck out.' (the emphasis is supplied)

And at 83b--c, his Lordship said: B

`That it is the exclusive right of the Attorney-General to represent the public interest, even where individuals might be interested in a larger view of the matter, is not technical, not procedural, not fictional. It is constitutional. I agree with Lord Westbury LC that it is also wise.' C

And at 83b--c, his Lordship said:

Do the provisions of s 26(2) of the Constitution entitle the respondent to bring the action now before this Court? I think not. In the first place, in his plaint the respondent has not complained of unconstitutionality or illegality. Although he is a lawyer by profession, he D has not cited any provision of the Constitution or any other law which has been violated by the applicants. This omission is, in my view, a matter of no surprise. The respondent could not have made such citations because under the Constitution and law then in force no unconstitutionality or illegality could arise in the applicants receiving from the E government the moneys they are said to have received on behalf of CCM, or in the government making those disbursements. I will be forgiven, I hope, for stating the obvious, namely, the constitutionality or legality of yesterday's actions cannot be tested by today's constitution or law. Secondly, it is my considered view that those provisions F were not intended to, and do not, abolish the application in Tanzania of the common law principle that a private person cannot assert rights belonging to the public. In my judgment, they merely reduce the scope of the rule. As far as public nuisance and public charity are concerned, two or more private persons may, under s 66 and 67 of the Code G respectively, bring a relator action. But to do so, those persons must obtain the consent of the Attorney-General: see Tricumdass Mulji and An v Khimji Vullabhdass and Others (8) and Lutifunnissa Bibi and Others v Nazirun Bibi (9). The provisions of those two sections are mandatory; suits to which the sections apply can only be instituted in H accordance with their provisions. It cannot be denied that the instant suit has not been instituted in compliance with the provisions of s 67. It may well be-and I stress that I say no more than that-that the trustees of a political party can, in law, seek from this Court I some of the reliefs the respondent has purported to pray for in the instant case.

SAMATTA JK

Lastly, I must deal with Mr Uzanda's submission concerning subventions which were A being made to the applicants. I am not disposed to think that all the issues raised by the respondent in his plaint are not justiciable. Some of those issues can, in my opinion, be properly examined in courts of law provided they are raised by a party having locus B standi. Whether CCM is a properly registered political party, for example, is plainly a question of law, whose answer must lie in the Constitution and the Political Parties Act. Nevertheless, I agree with the learned advocate's submission that the remedy, if any, for any wrong allegedly committed in relation to subventions received by the applicants C does not lie in the judicial field. In general, the management of public funds, like the management of the economy and foreign policy of the country, is the prerogative of the executive; it is not amenable to judicial process. In the exercise of its powers in that field the executive is accountable to parliament. It would be straining to the utmost the power D of judicial innovation to say that in the exercise of its powers in that area the executive falls under judicial superintendence or scrutiny. Generally speaking, judicial process is unsuitable for determining issues arising from the exercise of those powers. I find considerable support for that proposition in the observations made by Lord Diplock in E Council of Civil Service Unions and Others v Minister for the Civil Service (10), albeit in a somewhat different context. At 411 his Lordship said:

F `... The reasons for the decision-maker taking one course rather than another do not normally involve questions to which, if disputed, the judicial process is adapted to provide the right answer; by which I mean that the kind of evidence that is admissible under judicial procedures and the way in which it has to be adduced tend to exclude from the attention of the court competing policy considerations G which, if the executive discretion is to be wisely exercised, need to be weighed against one another-a balancing exercise which judges by their upbringing and experience are ill-qualified to perform.'

An assertion that the exercise of every governmental power is subject to judicial scrutiny would not be a sustainable proposition.

Judging from what he avers in his plaint, Mr Ballonzi, Senior, feels very strongly about the weaknesses of the political system which existed in this country before the multi-party system was adopted a few years ago, but the law regards him as lacking status to maintain the proceedings he has instituted before this Court. While he may deserve commendation for his vigilance in support of democracy, the applicants have demonstrated to my satisfaction that his suit has A been properly framed and some of his causes of action are incontestably bad in law. The suit will not lie.

The application is granted and the suit is, under s 95 of the Civil Procedure Code, struck out. The applicants will have their costs. B

Administrative Law -- Decision-making by public authorities -- Whether there is a duty to give reasons for decisions reached -- Section 26 of the Security of Employment Act 1964 F

Common Law -- Application of common law in Tanzania -- Power of the High Court to modify the common law applicable in Tanzania -- Section 2(2) of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance, Cap 453 G

Administrative Law -- Exclusion of the jurisdiction of the courts by finality clauses -- Statute providing that the Minister's decision shall be final and conclusive -- Effect thereof -- Section 27(1)(a) of the Security of Employment Act 1964

-Headnote

The applicant company, aggrieved by the decision of the Labour Conciliation Board H re-instating an employee whose services had been terminated, referred the matter to the Minister for Labour under s 26 of the Security of Employment Act 1964, Cap 574. The Minister lawfully delegated his power to deal with the reference to the Commissioner for Labour who confirmed the decision of the Conciliation Board but gave no reasons at all I for reaching that decision. Section 27(1) of the Act stated that the decision of the Minister was final and conclusive. The applicant sought an order of certiorari to quash that decision contending that the failure A to give reasons rendered the decision a nullity.

Held:

(i) Under common law there is no general requirement that public authorities should give reasons for their decisions but that position has been under criticism; B

(ii) The interests of justice call for the existence, in common law, of a general rule requiring public authorities to give reasons for their decisions;

(iii) Under s 2(2) of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance, Cap 453, the High Court has power to vary the common law to make it suit local conditions; C the conditions of the people of Tanzania make it a fundamental requirement of fairplay and justice that parties should know at the end of the day why a particular decision has been taken;

(iv) The provision that the Minister's decision is final and conclusive does not mean that the decision cannot be reviewed by the High Court; indeed no appeal will lie D against such a decision but an aggrieved party may come to the High Court and ask for prerogative orders;

(v) Quashing the Labour Commissioner's decision and letting the matter lie there will be unsatisfactory as it will leave in force the decision of the Conciliation Board; an order of mandamus, therefore, can be issued by the High Court E invoking its inherent powers notwithstanding that there is no prayer for the same;

(vi) To ensure that justice is done and also it is seen to be done the order of mandamus should be directed to the Minister himself, not the Commissioner for Labour. F

L. Kalunga, for the applicant A

P. Mwidunda, Senior State Attorney, for the respondents

Samatta JK: In one of his well-known books, The Road to Justice, Sir Alfred Denning discusses the importance of a judge giving reasons for his decision. He states as follows, at 29: B

`The judge must give reasons for his decision: for by so doing, he gives proof that he has heard and considered the evidence and arguments that have been produced before him on each side: and also that he has not taken extraneous considerations into account. It is of course true that his decision C may be correct even though he should give no reasons for it or even give a wrong reason: but, in order that a trial should be fair, it is necessary, not only that a correct decision should be reached, but also that it should be seen to be based on reasons; and that can only be seen if the judge himself states his reasons. Furthermore if his reasons are at fault, then they afford a basis on which the party D aggrieved by his decision can appeal to a higher court. No judge is infallible, and every system of justice must provide for an appeal to a higher court to correct the errors of the judge below. The cry of Paul "I appeal unto Caesar" represents a deep-seated human response. But no appeal can properly be determined unless the appellate court knows the reasons for the decision of the lower court. For E that purpose, if for no other, the judge who tries the case must give his reasons.'

In the application now before me I have to determine whether in making his decision on a F reference to the Minister for Labour (the Minister) under s 26 of the Security Employment Act 1964, Cap 574 (the Act), the Labour Commissioner (the Commissioner), who exercises powers delegated to him by the Minister under s 44, is under obligation in law to give reasons. The application, by way of chamber summons, G is for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash the Labour Commissioner's decision by which he confirmed a decision reached by the Conciliation Board of Dar es Salaam that the respondent, whose services with his employer, the applicant company, were terminated, be re-instated. The reference to the Minister consisted of a two-page H document in which the Board's decision was strenuously attacked. The Commissioner's decision, which was communicated to the applicant company on Form 8, was couched, when translated, in the following words: `In accordance with s 26(2) of the security of Employment Act, 1964, I confirm the decision of the conciliation Board. The employee I should be re-instated'. Not a single reason was given for this decision. Section 27(1) of the Act makes a decision of the Minister under s 26 final and conclusive. The A subsection reads as follows:

`27.--(1) The decision of the Minister on a reference to him under s 26, and, subject to any decision B on a reference to the Minister therefrom, the decision of a Board on a reference to it under this Part--

(a) shall be final and conclusive; and

(b) shall be binding on the parties to the reference, and the relationship between the parties in consequence of the matters in respect of which the reference was made shall be determined accordingly; and C

(c) may be enforced in any court of competent jurisdiction as if it were a decree'.

Mr Kalunga, for the applicant company, strenuously attacked the Commissioner's D decision. He contended that the failure by the Commissioner to give reasons for the decision makes it a nullity. According to the learned advocate, although in the past the decision-maker had no duty under the law to give reasons for his decision, the trend in some common law jurisdictions now is to establish a right to reasons. He went on to E submit that, to prevent decisions based on caprice or mala fide, a right to reasons should be recognised. Mr Mwidunda, Senior State Attorney, representing all the three respondents, opposed the application. Quite rightly, he drew my attention to the fact that there is no provision in the Act imposing a duty on the Minister or Commissioner to give F reasons for their decisions made under s 26 of the Act. According to the learned Senior State Attorney, instead of bringing the present application the applicant should have sought from the Commissioner reasons for his decision. Mr Mwidunda urged me to dismiss the application. G

What is the law on this matter? There is, under the common law, no general requirement that public authorities should give reasons for their decisions: see Breen v Amalgamated Engineering Union and Others (1), 190--191; R v Gaming Board for Great Britain Ex p Benaim and Khaida (2) In the former case, Lord Denning MR, posed and H proceeded to answer the question whether a statutory or domestic body is bound in law to give reasons for its decision. He said, at pp 190--191:

`... ought such a body, statutory or domestic, to give reasons for its decision ... ? Not always, but I sometimes. It all depends on what is fair in the circumstances'.

SAMATTA JK

The absence in common law of a general rule requiring a decision-maker to give A reasons for his decision has been criticized by Professor H W R Wade in his book Administrative Law, 6th ed at 548 where he states as follows:

B `Unless the citizen can discover the reasoning behind the decision, he may be unable to tell whether it is reviewable or not, and so he may be deprived of the protection of the law. A right to reasons is therefore an indispensable part of a sound system of judicial review. Natural justice may provide the best rubric for it, since the giving of reasons is required by the ordinary man's sense of justice. It is C also a healthy discipline for all who exercise power over others. "No single factor has inhibited the development of English administrative law as seriously as the absence of any general obligation upon public authorities to give reasons for their decisions". ' D

And at 934 of the same book, the learned author states:

`Reasoned decisions are not only vital for the purpose of showing the citizen that he is receiving justice: they are also a valuable discipline for the tribunal itself ... [F]or decisions generally a statement of reasons is one of the essentials of justice.' E

The importance of giving reasons for a decision is also discussed by Geoffrey A Flick in his book Natural Justice, Principles and Practical Application in which, at 87--88, he says: F

`... First, the requirement of a reasoned opinion provides considerable assurance that the decision will be better as a result of its being properly thought out. Second, reasons will enable a person who has a right of appeal to determine whether he has good grounds for an appeal and will inform him of the case he will have to meet if he does decide to appeal. In this regard, if an administrative G determination is not the result of a unanimous votes of the decision makers, the minority opinion may be of considerable value to an unsuccessful party.... Third, reasons will make a tribunal more amenable to the supervisory jurisdiction of the courts and will ensure that a tribunal is acting within its powers. H

That is to say, reasons will inform a person why a decision has been made and will make manifest any errors of law. Fourth, reasoned opinions will encourage public confidence in the administrative process. As was noted in a leading English case, even though a decision may be perfectly correct, if a party was not given reasons he "was left with the real grievance that he was not told why the I decision had been" (In re Poyser and Mills' Arbitration [1964] 2QB 478). The exposure to public scrutiny and criticism is healthy.... Fifth, reasons act as a check on the A exercise of discretion and expertise and will ensure that a tribunal was performed its functions of considering relevant factors (Davies v Price [1958] 1WLR 434), and will prevent arbitrary action: Donaldson v Board of Education of North Wildwood 320 A 2d 857 [1974]. Reasoned opinions also B provide additional guidance to those who advise parties as to their future conduct ...'

I would add that, insofar as natural persons are concerned, giving reasons for a decision constitutes a recognition that the parties are rational beings. C

Should I, in determining the instant application, apply the common law as it now stands or should I apply it after modifying it? This Court has, under s 2(2) of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance, Cap 453, power to vary that law so as to make it suit D local conditions. Should I use that power in this matter? I think I should. It seems to me that the interests of justice call for the existence, in common law, of a general rule making it mandatory in matters of importance for public authorities, a term I use to include statutory and domestic bodies, to give reasons for their decisions. But what are E matters of importance? It is neither desirable nor possible to define that term, but certainly it should be taken to include all matters in which the liberty, livelihood or reputation of the individual is concerned or in which proprietary or pecuniary rights or F interests are at stake. In any other situation the decision-maker should be bound to give reasons only if he is requested by a party to do so. In reaching the view that in this branch of the common law variation is necessary I have been greatly encouraged by the memorable words of Denning LJ, in Nyali Ltd v Attorney-General (3) Discussing the G proviso to article 15 of the East Africa Order in Council, 1902, as amended by the East Africa Order in Council of 1911, which conferred similar power on the High Court of East Africa to modify the common law, the learned Lord Justice said, at 653: H

`The ... proviso says, however, that the common law is to apply "subject to such qualifications as local circumstances render necessary". This wise provision should, I think, be liberally construed. It is a recognition that the common law cannot be applied in a foreign land without considerable qualification. Just as with an English oak, so with the English common law. You cannot transplant it I to the African continent and expect it to retain the tough character which it has in England. It will flourish indeed but it needs careful tending. So with the A common law. It has many principles of manifest justice and good sense which can be applied with advantage to peoples of every race and colour all the world over: but it has many refinements, which are not suited to other folk. These off-shoots must be cut away. In these far off lands the people must B have a law which they understand and which they will respect. The common law cannot fulfil this role except with considerable qualifications. The task of making these qualifications is entrusted to the judges of these lands. It is a great task. I trust that they will not fail therein.' C

Some people may argue that varying the common law in the manner I have indicated would result in placing more burden on the already busy decision-makers. This is an attractive argument, but I think Geoffrey A Flick's counter-argument in his book, cited supra, outweighs that argument. At p 89, the learned author states: D

`At least two arguments have been advanced against the giving of reasons. First, the giving of reasons would impose additional administrative burden and might well be an undue drain on the resources of an agency ... Such burdens may even result in the giving of canned reasons. Second, E reasons may hinder the manner in which a discretion is exercised and it may be though that the exercise of some discretion should be unreviewable by the courts. But considerations of administrative expediency should not mitigate principles of fairness and few, if any, discretion should be unreviewable.' F

In my considered opinion, it is a matter beyond rational controversy that, to borrow the language of the learned author in the book just cited, fundamental requirement of fair play requires that parties should know at the end of the day why a particular decision has G been taken. I think it is intolerable in a democratic society that the law should allow a decision-maker to whom an appeal or reference is made to make his decision without giving reasons why he has reached that decision. `The giving of reasons', said Lord Denning MR in Breen's case supra (at 191), `is one of the fundamentals of good H administration'. Bearing in mind the vast differences which exist between our people and those of England in both social and cultural fields and especially their knowledge of, and attitudes towards, decision-making public bodies, and taking into consideration the comparable educational backwardness of the majority of our people, I think it is in the I interests of justice and fair play that the common law relating to the giving of reasons for decisions should be qualified in the A manner I have endeavoured to indicate. In my considered opinion, a duty to give reasons and a right to them should be recognised by our law and treated as being of decisive importance in administrative justice. Although a decision of the Minister or B Commissioner under s 26 of the Act is, according s 27(1), cited supra, final and conclusive, that does not mean the decision is not subject to review by courts. That remedy is not excluded by those or similar words: see Healey v Ministry of Health (4); R v Medical Appeal Tribunal Ex parte (5); Taylor v National Assistance Board (6), and C Tehrani and Another v Rostron (7). No appeal will lie against decisions protected by such words or phrases, but an aggrieved party may come to this Court and ask for prerogative orders. Nullity of a decision is not protected by words `final' or `conclusive'. It follows, as day follows night, that the decision which the applicant company has D complained against in the instant proceedings falls under this Court's surveillance. It should, perhaps, also be pointed out that neither the failure nor the refusal of a decision-maker to give reasons for his decision is a sufficient exclusion of the Court's surveillance: see Padfield v Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (8). E

I have sufficiently demonstrated, I hope, why I am of the opinion that the Commissioner's failure to give reasons for his impugned decision is a serious irregularity which makes that decision a nullity in law. An order for certiorari, like other prerogative orders, is a discretionary remedy. In my considered opinion, every factor in this matter speaks for F the discretion being exercised in favour of the applicant company. Mr Mwidunda submitted that certiorari cannot be used as an appeal. I agree. But it is a rule of common law that where a determination by a tribunal has been quashed by certiorari, the court G may, in its discretion, refrain from awarding a mandamus to direct the tribunal to redetermine the matter if satisfied that the tribunal will duly observe the law upon a rehearing, notwithstanding that the court could have effectively enforced an order of mandamus: see Halsbury's Laws of England, vol I, para 125 at 135. Should I invoke that H discretion and confine myself to quashing the Commissioner's decision or should I, notwithstanding that there is no such prayer in the application, make an order of mandamus directing redetermination of the reference? I confess that this question has exercised my mind quite considerably, but in the end I have reached a clear opinion on it. I Quashing the Commissioner's decision and letting the matter lie there will be unsatisfactory to the applicant company as the decision of the Conciliation Board complained against will still A be in force. It seems to me, having given the matter careful attention, that an order of mandamus should be made, but it must be directed to the Minister himself and not the Commissioner. I am, of course, aware that by Govt Notice No 283 of 1971 the Minister B has, in terms of s 44 of the Act, delegated the functions imposed and the powers conferred upon him to hear and decide refences to the Commissioner. It is my view that that delegation does not make it legally impossible for this Court to make an order of mandamus directing the Minister to determine the applicant company's reference. The C law is that delegation does not imply a parting with powers by the person who grants the delegation; see Huth v Clarke (9); Gordon, Dadds & Co v

Morris and Others (10); and Manton v Brighton Corporation (11). In Huth's case supra Lord Coleridge CJ said at 394--395: D

`But delegation does not imply a denudation of power and authority.... The word "delegation" implies that powers are committed to another person or body which are as a rule always subject to resumption by the power delegating, and many examples of this might be given. Unless, therefore, it E is controlled by statute, the delegating power can at any time resume its authority.'

And at the latter page, Wills J, said, among other things:

`Delegation, as the word is generally used, does not imply a parting with powers by the person who F grants the delegation, but points rather to the conferring of an authority to do things which otherwise that person would have to do himself. The best illustration of the use of the word is afforded by the maxim, Delegates non protest delegate, as to the meaning of which it is significant that it is dealt with in Broom's Legal Maxims under the law of contracts: it is never used by the legal G writers, so far as I am aware, as implying that the delegating person parts with his power in such a manner as to denude himself of his rights.'

While I do not case any aspersions upon the ability of the Commissioner to deal with the H reference with an impartial mind, I feel that, for justice not only to be done, but also to be seen to be done, the reference should now be determined by someone else, the Minister himself. I entertain no doubt that I have inherent power to make the order of I mandamus notwithstanding that there is no prayer for it.

Before parting with this application, I should like to make it perfectly clear that throughout A this ruling I have assumed, without deciding, that the conferring of adjudicatory powers upon the Minister does not violate the Constitution of the United Republic.

For the reasons I have given, I grant the application for order of certiorari and hereby B quash the Commissioner's decision confirming the decision of the Conciliation Board. The Minister for Labour, the first respondent, is hereby directed to personally determine the applicant company's reference in accordance with law as laid down in this ruling. There will be an order for costs against the respondents. C

Mroso J:

The appellant was the successful party in the Primary Court at Magugu but lost when the respondent appealed against that decision to the District Court. Aggrieved by the E loss of victory, he has appealed to this court to have the decision of the Primary Court restored.

The respondent had brought action in the Primary Court to recover about two acres of land which allegedly the appellant had wrongfully expropriated in 1990. The respondent's evidence before the trial court was that the appellant had invited him to cultivate the F disputed shamba in common and that they did so for two years. His witness Nyerei Mkuyu did not support the respondent on the contention that initially-presumably in 1974-the shamba was cultivated in common between the appellant and the respondent. His evidence was that he had been seeking the respondent cultivate the disputed G shamba between 1974 and 1990.

On the other hand, the appellant said in his evidence that he started to cultivate the shamba in dispute from 1974 and in 1976 he helped the respondent to acquire a piece of land to his north and each of them developed their respective shambas on his own. In H 1984 while he was away the respondent allegedly cultivated the appellant's shamba without his consent. The appellant could not confront the respondent until in 1989 because he was ill. The appellant was supported in his evidence by Siriri John and I Stephano Myombo. The trial Primary Court visited the locus inquo and after considering the available evidence found that the disputed shamba belonged to the A appellant. The first appellate court reversed the decision of the trial court on the basis that the parties had cultivated the disputed shamba in common until 1977 when the arrangement ceased and `The land remained the property of the appellant'. Further, that the B respondent (then appellant) has a house on the disputed shamba and lives in it.

It is apparent that the first appellate court misconstrued the evidence. The appellant never conceded that he cultivated the disputed shamba in common with the respondent. C Indeed, none of the witnesses of the respondent or of the appellant ever said the shamba was cultivated by the parties in common. Furthermore, the house which the first appellate court referred to is not in fact on the disputed shamba, as the sketch map drawn by the trial court clearly shows the house is on a shamba of the respondent over D which there is no dispute. It follows that there were no valid reasons for the first appellate court to reverse the decision of the trial court.

The respondent filed in this court a memorandum in reply to the appellant's appeal. One of the grounds against the appeal is that the ground of appeal were E entitled--`Memorandum of Appeal', instead of `Petition of Appeal'. It has been argued by the respondent that, for that reason, the appellant's appeal is incompetent. He cited a decision of this court (Munuo J) -- Naigise Likimbalunye v Naibele Loibuke (1) in which it was held that grounds of appeal in a case originating in the primary court which bear a F heading `Memorandum of Appeal' instead of the words `Petition of Appeal', which words are found in s 25(3) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984, is incompetent and must be struck out.

With due respect to my colleague, I am unable to agree. I am aware that the Magistrates' G Courts Act, 1984 uses the words `Petition of Appeal' rather than `Memorandum of Appeal' when referring to grounds of appeal in a case originating in the primary court. The Civil Procedure Code, 1966 on the other hand uses the words `Memorandum of Appeal' when referring to grounds of appeal in a case originating from the District Court H or the Court of Resident Magistrate. The Criminal Procedure Code, 1985 uses the words `petition of appeal' when referring to grounds of appeal in a case originating in the District Court or the Court of Resident Magistrate. The Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules uses the words `Memorandum of Appeal' regarding the grounds of appeal in both I criminal and civil appeals to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania.

What substantive distinction can one make from the use of the words `petition' or A `memorandum' when referring to grounds of appeal to a higher court? I must confess, I can see no such distinction although I would say that it would be preferable if an intending appellant uses the word adopted by the legislature for the relevant type of B appeal. In my view, if an appellant uses the word `memorandum' instead of the word `petition' in connection with his grounds of appeal in a case originating in the primary court, that alone cannot render the appeal incompetent. That would be making a mountain out of a mouse mound unnecessarily. C

The second objection to the appeal is that the grounds of appeal are not accompanied by a copy of the judgment appealed against. This grounds of appeal are in fact accompanied by an irrelevant copy of judgment. That was careless of the appellant but it does not render the appeal incompetent because the law, section 25 of the Magistrates' D Courts Act, 1984, makes not requirement for the petition of appeal to be accompanied by a copy of the judgment or even of the decree appealed against.
For the reasons already given, the appeal is allowed. The decision of the first appellate court is quashed and set aside. The decision of the trial primary court is restored. The E appellant to get his costs.

Held:
C (i) In a civil case a defendant can, at the close of the plaintiff's case, submit that there is no case to answer, and a submission of no case to answer in a civil case stands on the same footing as a submission of no case to answer in a criminal case, save that there is a difference in the standard of proof;

D (ii) When dismissal of the plaintiff's case on the basis that no case has been made out is prayed for, the court should not ask itself whether the evidence adduced by the plaintiff establishes what would finally be required to be established, but whether there is evidence upon which a court, applying its mind reasonably to such evidence, could or might (not should or ought to) find for the plaintiff;

E (iii) A submission of no case to answer cannot be upheld if there is sufficient evidence on record upon which a court might make a reasonable mistake and enter judgment for the plaintiff;

(iv) The test to be applied at the close of the defendant's case is `what ought a reasonable court to do', while the test to be applied in determining a submission of no case to answer is `what might a reasonable court do'; F

(v) As the claim that Zanzibar joined the OIC is not admitted by the defendant, the burden is on the plaintiff to establish that fact and he has not succeeded to do that; the exhibits he has tendered in court only show the Government's efforts to find out whether Zanzibar joining the OIC would be constitutional; G

(vi) The general belief among members of the public that Zanzibar had joined the OIC is not a basis for holding that the plaintiff had discharged his burden in this case;

(vii) No admissible evidence has been given to show the role which the President played in Zanzibar joining the OIC; the evidence of radio and newspaper reports H brought by the plaintiff is hearsay and inadmissible under s 62 of the Evidence Act, 1967.

[zJDz]Judgment

Samatta JK: B

In this matter the plaintiff seeks various reliefs including the following declarations:

1. The Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania (the Constitution) was violated by Zanzibar joining an organisation known as the Organisation of C Islamic Conference (OIC);

2. His Excellency Ali Hassan Mwinyi, the President of the United Republic, is guilty of permitting or enabling that violation to take place and is, therefore, personally answerable for the violation; and D

3. His Excellency Ali Hassan Mwinyi's continued exercise of presidential powers is unconstitutional as well as a potential danger to the well-being of the United Republic and its citizens.

At the close of the plaintiff's case, Mr Mwidunda, counsel for the respondent, submitted E that the respondent had no case to answer, and invited me to dismiss the suit. He elected to call no evidence.

The plaintiff's pleading is in a form of plaint. It seemed to me that the matter should have been brought by way of a petition but, bearing in mind that the plaintiff was unrepresented, I was not inclined to drive him off the judgment seat on that ground. F Accordingly, I allowed him to prosecute the case as filed. Only one witness gave evidence-the plaintiff himself. His evidence can, I think, be summarised as follows. He is a teacher by profession, teaching at Kibasila Secondary School. He has a Master's Degree in Physics. He told the court that sometime in 1992 he learnt through the press G that Zanzibar had joined the OIC. He knows as a fact that later President Mwinyi announced to the nation on Radio Tanzania that Zanzibar had joined the OIC and that she had done so in her own economic interests. The plaintiff then produced, without any objection from Mr Mwidunda, three letters: one from the then Attorney-General to the H Minister for Foreign Affairs and International Co-operation (Exh P1); the second is a letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs and International Co-operation to the Attorney General (Exh P2), responding to Exh P1; and the third one is a letter from the I Attorney-General to the Prime Minister and first Vice-President (Exh P3). In view of the importance of their contents in determining the issues before me, I propose, at the risk of making this ruling A unduly long, to quote them in extenso.

All the three letters are in Swahili. Exh P1 reads as follows:

UMOJA WA ORGANIZATION OF THE

ISLAMIC CONFERENCE

Kutokana na waraka wako wenye somo lililotajwa hapo juu uliopelekwa CCM, uchambuzi wa G muundo wa chombo hicho unaonekana wazi kuwa ulipoanza ulikuwa na misimamo yenye maana ya kujikinga kiuchumi na kisiasa.

Wanachama wa mwanzo waanzilishi walikuwa Pakistan na Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. Hizo ni nchi zenye katiba ambayo ni wazi kabisa imefungwa kwenye misingi ya dini ya Kiislam kutokana na Katiba zao. H

Ni kweli kuna utatanishi juu ya chombo hiki, kama inavyoeleweka, na kutokana na jina lake-au lengo lake ni kusambaza Uislam au kuwasilimisha watu kwa hila-au kwa nguvu. Wanachama wake sio wote wenye kuamini dini ya Kiislam, au ndivyo Katiba inavyosema. Maelezo hayo hayana misingi ya ukweli. I

Katika jumla ya wanachama wake asilimia 90 ya mataifa na wanachama wanaofuata mtindo wa circularism na siyo itikadi ya kidini.

SAMATTA JK

Mataifa yote ya Kiarabu kama Egypt na Indonesia wana Katiba ya secular-state inayooanisha dini A zote ikiwa pamoja na nchi za Ghuba, Sudan na Afrika ya Kaskazini zote zinafuata mitindo ya dunia kwenye katiba zao. Hivi sasa wenye katiba ya kujifunga na udini kuwa ni policy ni Iran; Pakistan na Saudi Arabia. Zilizobaki kama Comoros na Mauritania wanajiita Jamhuri za Kiislam bila kufuata B taratibu na sheria za Kiislam, wala kwenye katiba zao hazionyeshi hivyo na taratibu za utawala wao ni wa kidunia na kufuata sheria za madola.

Kwa kuendeleza somo hilo kwa ajili ya uchambuzi zaidi ili tuelewe mwenendo wa jumuia hiyo, kuna haja ya kueleza kuwa Equatorial Guinea, Lebanon, Cameroon na Uganda Madola hayo yote yana C katiba inayofuata mtindo wa kimataifa. Hata hivyo kuangalia tu jina kunaleta tafsiri isiyo na uchambuzi kwa sababu nchi zingine asilimia kubwa si wanaofuata dini ya Kiislam wamekuwa wanachama, ama kwa ajili ya historia au kwa mengine. D

Umoja unaonyesha kuwa unashughulikia zaidi wanachama wake kama ilivyo taratibu za Umoja wowote ule duniani.

UPIGAJI KURA

Wanaopiga kura ni wanachama, lakini umoja unatoa mwanya kwa `OBSERVER' na dola inapata faida zote za maendeleo bila ya kuwa mwanachama kamili. Kwa kifupi, ni mwanachama ndiye E anayefaidikazaidi; na kati ya Mwangalizi na asiye mwanachama, misaada hutolewa zaidi kwa mwanachama.

TANZANIA

Tanzania ni Muungano wa dola mbili yenye katiba moja, ambayo inatamka wazi kuwa Tanzania ni nchi isiyo na dini ila wananchi wake wanazo dini zao. Ina maana kidunia Tanzania Secular F state-isiyovutiwa na dini ya mtu. Pia katika Katiba Tanzania imeruhusu wananchi wake kuweza kufanya ibada zao wanazoamini bila ya bugudha. Bali Tanzania ni Jamhuri ya Muungano iliyounganisha dola mbili, bila ya kujali ukubwa wala uchumi: lakini katiba imeweka wazi vyombo vya G Muungano, yaani moja katika uzito wa jamhuri ni siasa ya mambo ya nje ambacho ni chombo kimoja katika vyombo vinavyosimamiwa na Katiba ya Muungano.

Unapojiunga kuwa mwanachama atakayewakilishwa kwenye vikao vya unongozi wa juu atakuwa Rais wa Jamhuri. Bendera itakayopepea itakuwa ni ile ya Tanzania. Siasa itakayoendeshwa itakuwa H iliyounganishwa kikatiba, yaani siasa ya kimataifa. Kutokana na maelekezo hayo, ushaur wetu ni kama ufuatao.

(a) Kama ni lazima kuwa katika Umoja wa Organisation of the Islamic Conference, tufuatilie msimamo wa Nigeria na Mozambique ambao walikuwa observer; na pia kwa sababu Tanzania imefaidika kupatiwa misaada kutokana IOC kwa ajili ya mradi wa Kibiti-Lindi bila ya I kuwa mwanachama.

A (b) Indonesia si mwanachama kutokana na katiba yake, lakini walianza kujiunga kama permanent participant na hadi leo Dunia inaamini wanachama, lakini katiba ilibidi waitafutie mbinu ya kisheria na wakatokana na msimamo huo. Pengine Tanzania tungeendeleza uchunguzi juu ya mtindo huo.

(c) Tanzania inawesa ikawa associate member na itakuwa non voting (sic) member bila ya B kupinga katiba ya Jamhuri ya Muungano.

Kwa kumaliza na kwa kukubali kuwa Katiba ni yetu inayotuongoza-uamuzi wetu ni lazima kuangalia maslahi ya Taifa na kuepusha fikra potofu miongoni mwa wananchi wa dola yetu. Hivyo kwa Zanzibar C kujiunga peekee ni suala la katiba. Ufumbuzi ni kama nilivyoelezea hapo juu.

KUH: MAOMBI YA ZANZIBAR KUJIUNGA NA `THE ORGANISATION OF ISLAMIC CONFERENCE'

1. Kwa Dokezo lako la tarehe 21 Septemba, 1991 ulinitaka nifanye uchambuzi wa kisheria na nikupe maoni yangu.

2. Nimefanya uchambuzi wa Katiba ya `Organisation' hiyo pamoja na Katiba ya Jamhuri ya Muungano F wa Tanzania. Kutokana na uchambuzi huo, maoni na ushauri wangu ni kama ifuatavyo:

(i) Chimbuko la Umoja huu ni Mkutano wa viongozi wa Nchi na Serikali uliofanyika Rabat, Morocco, 1969.

(ii) Ni `Inter-Governmental Organisation' ambayo wanachama wake ni nchi za Kiislam. G

(iii) Mikutano yake ni ya `Heads of State' na mingine ni ya `Foreign Affairs Ministers' wa nchi za Kiislamu.

(iv) Madhumuni yake Kimsingi ni ya Kidini na mengine ni ya Kisiasa. Article II Ibara ya 1 lengo ni `to promote Islamic Solidarity among member States' yanayofuata toka Ibara ya 2 hadi 7 Kidini H na mengine ni ya Kisiasa.

3. Kwa kuzingatia misingi ya malengo na shabaha ya Umoja huu kama Katiba yao inavyooanisha kwa upande wa Tanzania kuwa mambo ya msingi ya kuzingatia kabla ya kufikia uamuzi juu ya Zanzibar kujiunga. Kwanza kwa jinsi Muungano ulivyo Kikatiba, Tanzania ni nchi moja na ni Jamhuri I yha Muungano-One State and a United Sovereign Republic. Katika hali hiyo:

(i) Ilivyokuwa uanachama wa Umoja huoni wa Dola, itakuwa ni kinyume cha Katiba kwa sehemu A moja ya Jamhuri kujiunga kama nchi na kuacha nyingine.

(ii) Pili, mambo ya uhusiano na nchi za Nje Kikatiba na Kimazoea ni mambo yanayoendeshwa Kimuungano (International Relations). B

(iii) Tatu, Siasa na sera ya nchi yetu Tanzania ni kwamba Serikali na Dola havina dini. Watu wake ndiyo waumini. Hivyo, wakati wote msimamo ni kutochanganya mambo ya Dola na Dini.

(iv) Kwa siasa yetu jinsi ilivyo, kujiunga na Umoja huo kama Dola inazusha maswali ya msingi. Mabadiliko ya msimamo kisiasa juu ya Dini na mfumo wa kuendesha shughuli kwa sehemu C moja ya Tanzania na kuacha nyingine.

4. USHAURI

Kwa kuzingatia mfumo wa siasa ya Tanzania na Katiba yake kama Nchi moja (One Sovereign State) tangu 1964 na tangu 1969 Umoja huo umekuwepo bila sisi kujiunga, nashauri: D

(a) Ni kinyume cha Katiba kwa Zanzibar kujiunga Katika Chombo ambacho wanachama wake ni dola za Kiislamu.

(b) Kama ni mwafaka na imeamuliwa na kukubalika ni Tanzania ndiyo inaweza kujiunga. Hii ni baada ya kubadili sera na Siasa yetu juu ya Dini na Dola. E

(c) Waziri wa Mambo ya Nje na Ushirkiano wa Kimataifa, naye kwa maelezo yake haoni ni sawa kufanya hivyo.

--Nakala ya maoni yake imeambatanishwa.

(d) Nakubali ikiwa ni lazima, kama alivyoshauri Waziri wa Mambo ya Nje kutafuta njia ya kushirikiana katika mikutano ya OIC kwa misingi waliyowezakufanya nchi ambazo si za F Kiislam ingawa Katiba ya Umoja huo inataka hivyo (Islamic State).

(e) La busara kama ndiyo linakubaliwa na IOC ni kwa vyombo vya Waislamu kama vile BAKWATA, BALUKTA NK kujiunga na siyo Dola. Hiyo ndiyo ingekuwa njia sahihi isiyokiuka Katiba au Siasa ya nchi. Kwa jinsi iliivyoletwa, na kwa mfumo wa Kikatiba tulio nao sasa na siasa yetu G kwa maoni yangu ni suala nyeti ambalo uamuzi wake ukifanywa kwa pupa unaweza kutuletea hali ya vuragu.

Nakurejeshea nakala ya Katiba ya OIC.

MWANASHERIA MKUU WA SERIKALI'

The plaintiff asserted that on December 17, 1992 the Hon Hassan Diria, the then Minister for Foreign Affairs and International Co-operation, admitted at a press conference that Zanzibar had joined the OIC. The plaintiff did not, however, say that he I was present at the press conference. When cross-examined by Mr Mwidunda, he said that he came to learn that Zanzibar had joined the OIC when he read several A newspapers, including Motomoto and Daily News. No copy of the constitution of the OIC was produced before me. It is not disputed that the National Assembly of the United Republic formed a committee to probe Zanzibar's alleged membership of the OIC and B that that Committee's report was debated in the House. Essentially, this was the evidence laid before me. At the commencement of the trial the following issues were framed:

1. Whether Zanzibar joined the OIC.

C 2. If the answer to the first issue is in the affirmative, was that action contrary to the provisions of s 1, 8(2), 19(2), 26(1) and 42(5) or any other provision of the Constitution the United Republic of Tanzania?

3. Did President Ali Hassan Mwinyi allow Zanzibar to join the OIC or did he in any way facilitate that step being taken? D

4. If the answer to Issue No 3 is in the negative, did President Ali Hassan Mwinyi condone Zanzibar's act of joining the OIC and, if he did, did that constitute a violation of any provision of the Constitution of the United Republic?

E 5. Did President Ali Hassan Mwinyi omit to take remedial steps after Zanzibar joined the OIC? If the answer to question is in the affirmative, did the omission constitute a violation of any provision of the constitution of the United Republic?

6. If President Ali Hassan Mwinyi violated the Constitution of the United Republic F as alleged, do any or more of those violations make him unfit to continue occupying the office of President of the United Republic?

7. What reliefs, if any, are the parties entitled to? As already pointed out, at the close of the plaintiff's case Mr Mwidunda submitted that the plaintiff had made G out no case. The learned Senior State Attorney invited me to dismiss the case at that stage. The plaintiff, who, as already remarked, appeared in person, contended that the defendant has a case to answer. Mr Mwidunda contended, inter alia, that to establish a case to answer against the defendant the plaintiff H had to give or adduce evidence concerning, inter alia, what the OIC is, its objectives and juridical nature. According to the learned Senior State Attorney, the contents of Exhibits P1, P2 and P3 do not in any way support the averment that Zanzibar joined the OIC. Those letters, Mr Mwidunda submits, were no I more than `consultative correspondence'. The plaintiff, on the other hand, submits that, to use his own words, "the fact that Zanzibar joined the OIC is a A fact of common knowledge for non-issues cannot occupy the Government and the parliament of the United Republic of Tanzania".

Can a defendant, at the close of a plaintiff's case submit in law that there is no case to B answer? Eighteen years ago, in Daikin Air Conditioning (EA) Ltd v Harvard University (1), I ventured to answer that question in the affirmative. I adhere to that view. A submission of no case to answer in a civil case stands on the same footing as a C submission of no case to answer in a criminal case, save that there is a difference in the standard of proof. What, then, is the test to be applied when such a submission is made? As I understand the law, when the dismissal of the plaintiff's case on the basis that no case has been made out is prayed for, the court should not ask itself whether the D evidence given and/or adduced by the plaintiff establishes what would finally be required to be established, but whether there is evidence upon which a court, applying its mind reasonably to such evidence, could or might (not should nor ought to) find for the plaintiff. The submission of no case to answer cannot be upheld if there is sufficient E evidence on record on which a court might make a reasonable mistake and enter a judgment for the plaintiff. Whereas the test to be applied at the close of the defendant's case is what ought a reasonable court to do?, the one to be applied in determining the validity or otherwise of a submission of no case to answer is what might a reasonable F court do?: See Supreme Service Station (1969) (Pvt) Ltd v Fox and Goodridge (Pvt) Ltd (2). The latter test I have described is the one I must apply in determining Mr Mwidunda's submission in the matter now before me.

It is a general rule of law that all facts in issue and relevant facts must be established by G evidence, either oral or documentary. There are two exceptions to this rule: (1) facts judicially noticeable under s 59 of the Evidence Act, 1967 (the Act); and (2) facts admitted. Since the averment that Zanzibar has joined the OIC is not admitted by the H defendant, there is onus on the plaintiff to establish that fact to the degree required by law. Has he succeeded to do so? My answer is no. While there may exist a general belief among members of the public in the country that Zanzibar joined the organisation, that belief cannot in law constitute the basis for holding that the plaintiff has discharged his onus in this case. The general belief does not authorise a court of law to take judicial I notice of the alleged fact under s 59 of the Act. The plaintiff had to place before this Court evidence A which demonstrated, to the degree I have endeavoured to explain, that Zanzibar did become a member of the OIC or from which that conclusion could reasonably be drawn. I have sympathetically examined the evidence laid before me and in the end I am of the B clear opinion that the plaintiff's evidence does not even begin to establish Zanzibar's membership of the OIC. The plaintiff has not, strangely, produced before this Court a copy of the constitution of the organisation. It is difficult to see how he believed that this Court could hold that Zanzibar became a member of the organisation without examining C the organisation's constitution. Be that as it may, the contents of Exh P1, P2 and P3 do not, in my considered opinion, establish a prima facie case that Zanzibar joined the organisation. Those letters reveal no more than the Government's efforts to find out whether Zanzibar joining the organisation would be constitutional. In my settled opinion, D there is no basis for acceding to the plaintiff's contention that he has made out a case on the first issue.

But assuming I am wrong in so holding, I ask myself whether there is enough evidence before this Court authorising me to call upon the defendant to answer the plaintiff's case E insofar as the third, fourth and fifth issues are concerned? Here, too, I have examined the evidence on record with much sympathy but in the end I feel compelled to answer the question in the negative. There is, in my opinion, no admissible evidence which reveals the role which the President played in Zanzibar joining the OIC, assuming she F did. The evidence which the plaintiff though established the President's role-radio and newspaper reports-is nothing but heresay evidence. Under s 62 of the Act that evidence was clearly inadmissible to establish the alleged role. At best, the plaintiff's evidence on G the third, fourth and fifth issues is speculative. A court of law cannot, even at the stage which the case before me has reached, make a finding on the basis of such evidence. The documentary evidence laid before me is not at all helpful to the plaintiff on the three issues.

For the reasons I have given, I am of opinion that Mr Mwidunda's submission that the H defendant has no case to answer must be upheld. Having reached that conclusion, I do not find it necessary to deal with Mr Mwidunda's other arguments concerning limits of this Court's power to give declaratory judgments.

The suit is dismissed with costs. I

On 1 January 1993, the Second Appellant, who is an employee of the First Appellant, collided with the Respondent's vehicle. Upon the Respondent filing suit against the Appellants, the latter refused service of the summons. The trial Magistrate subsequently allowed the Respondent to file an affidavit for ex-parte proof of damages and judgment. F The magistrate then awarded the Respondent Shs 550,000/=, representing the repair costs of the Respondent's vehicle, as well as Shs 8,640,000/= as compensation for loss of use of the vehicle.

The Appellants appealed to this Court by challenging the validity of the trial court's judgment and contending, firstly, that it was not a proper judgment for failure to contain G `a concise statement of the case, the points for determination, the decision thereon, and the reasons for such decision'; and secondly, that the amounts awarded on both heads of damage were unrealistic.

Held:

(i) Order 8 rule 14(2)(b) requires a plaintiff to apply formally to court for permission H to proceed with ex parte proof of damages allegedly suffered; and the Respondent in casu failed to comply with this requirement in the court below.

(ii) Although Rules 4 and 5 of Order 20 of the Civil Procedure Code require judgments to contain a concise statement of the case, the points for I determination, the decision arrived at and the reasons for such decision, the content of each judgment depends upon the parti-

A cular case and there is thus no specific format as to how a judgment should be presented.

(iii) Affidavits, like any other piece of evidence, must be analysed and evaluated by the court even when unchallenged; and the court's scrutiny thereof is all the more important in cases where pecuniary compensation is claimed. In casu, B the filed affidavit was not proof of the loss alleged since there was no evidence before the court as to how the relevant figures had been arrived at.

(iv) The appeal is allowed with costs, to the extent that the case is remitted to another magistrate who is instructed to admit further evidence.

Cases referred to:

1. Transport Equipment Limited v D P Valambhia Civil Case No 210 of 1989 (unreported)

Kapinga, for the appellants.

Mutaitima, for the respondent.

Bubeshi J:

The appellants in this case are Caritas Tanzania and Natal Fidelis who is an employee of the first appellant. Both appellants are aggrieved by the decision of the trial magistrate wherein on 3 February 1994 an ex-parte judgment was entered against them in favour of the respondent one Stuward Mkwawa who had his vehicle damaged by the second appellant whilst driving the vehicle belonging to the first appellant. The trial magistrate awarded the respondent:

-- Shs 550,000/= as costs of repair to his vehicle

-- Compensation for loss of use of the tune of Shs 8,640,000/=.

The facts of this case briefly stated are that the plaintiff, now respondent, filed a suit against the defendants, now appellants, claiming Shs 550,000/= as costs of repair to his damaged vehicle and Shs 8,640,000/= being loss of use when the respondent vehicle stayed idle after the accident. It is not in dispute that the respondent's vehicle was damaged by the second appellant on 1 January 1993. Liability was admitted but since the appellants did not respond to the respondent's claim, the latter decided to take the matter to court. The case was assigned for mention on 16 December 1993 and when the summons for disposal of suit was served on the appellants, the latter refused to be served. The trial magistrate then allowed the respondent to file an affidavit for experts proof and subsequently judgment was entered in favour of the respondent as prayed. It may be pertinent to mention here that as the appellants had refused to be served on 14 December 1993, the subsequent events took place without their being aware.

Mr Kapinga learned counsel for the appellants has filed four grounds of appeal against the judgment of the trial magistrate. There are:

(a) that the learned trial magistrate erred for failing to write a judgment.

(b) in the alternative to (a) above that the learned magistrate erred in law and in fact in awarding the respondent the sum of Shs 550,000/= as costs of repair

(c) that the award of compensation in the sum of Shs 8,640,000/= to the respondent for loss of use of the motor vehicle was unreasonable and was not supported by evidence.

(d) that the damage caused to the respondents vehicle ie rear left gate dented, left gate window glass broken and rear bumber bent could not prevent the respondents vehicle from operations nor could it, in the ordinary course of business take ten months to repair.

--that the learned magistrate failed to take into account the principle of mitigation of damages.

In his submission Mr Kapinga went on to elaborate on the grounds. Mr Kapinga learned counsel attacked the `judgment' of the trial magistrate in that it was not a proper judgment as required by Order 20 Rules 3 and 4 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966. The judgment of the trial magistrate read:

`Order: Upon filing the ex-parte affidavit, judgment is entered in favour of plaintiff as prayed.' G

Mr Kapinga submitted before this court that what was written by the trial magistrate was not a proper judgment. That Order 20 Rules 3 and 4 makes it mandatory that a judgment must be written and shall contain `a concise Statement of the case, the points for H determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for such decision'. That the trial magistrate failed to write a judgment and therefore even the decree that followed could not agree with the judgment as there was none trial since there is no judgment then there could be no decree. Mr Kapinga urged the court to allow the appeal on this ground with alone costs. I

Without prejudice to the foregoing, should the Court hold that there is an appealable judgment and decree, Mr Kapinga submitted that there was no A proof that the respondent expended the sum of Shs 550,000/= on repairs. There was no receipt tendered by the respondent. According to Mr Kapinga, the trial magistrate should have deducted the sum of Shs 180,000/= as there was no proof of panel beating and B spraying' to the tune of Shs 180,000/=. This sum ought to have been deducted from the total sum claimed.

On the issue of the loss of use Mr Kapinga learned counsel is challenging the figure of Shs 8,640,000/= as being unrealistic. That the date of the repair to the vehicle is not C known although annexure `C' (an invoice of Sanbern Engineering Services Limited) would suggest that the repairs were probably done on 15 July 1993 some 194 days after the accident. Mr Kapinga was of the view that the time spent to repair the vehicle was unreasonably long considering the nature of the damage to the vehicle. According to Mr Kapinga a reasonable period would not exceed two weeks. Furthermore it was Mr D Kapinga's contention that the respondent's vehicle could not have been operational for all the 280 days and made 40 trips daily without interruption. This is not feasible in practice and the trial magistrate did not take that into account. That it was necessary for E the respondent to support his claim of loss of use by produce some evidence of operations prior to the accident so as to indicate the trend of his income from operations of the vehicle.

That the award of Shs 8,640,000/= was speculative and not supported by evidence, urgued Mr Kapinga for the appellants. In addition, Mr Kapinga submitted that going by the F vehicle inspection Report annexure `A' to the affidavit not be prevented from being operational or take 10 months to repair. The damage described in the said inspection report read as follows:

`after accident

G Rear lift gate dented; Lift gate window glass broken; Rear bumper bent'

Finally Mr Kapinga submitted that the respondent had a legal duty to mitigate the loss after the accident. That if the vehicle was damaged on 1 January 1993, the respondent H should have taken immediate steps to repair his vehicle and repair it within two weeks at the most and not ten months.

Armed with all this, learned counsel for the appellants asked the court to allow the appeal with costs. I Appearing for the respondent Mr Mutaitima from Tanzania Legal Corporation replied as follows.

BUBESHI J

As to the issue of the format of a paper judgment counsel submitted that the law does A not stipulate a particular format of how a judgment should look like and that no decision has been reversed simply because the judgment is too short. The respondent has cited the case of Transport Equipment Limited v D P Valambhia (1) by Rubama J (as he then B was); that the procedure was not faulted by the Court of Appeal.

On the issue of costs of repair to the vehicle, counsel submitted that the relevant document, annexure C, was produced before the court. This was not contradicted by the applicants/defendants. That the respondent could not produce receipt since the C monies were yet to be paid.

On the compensation for loss of use counsel for the respondent submitted that there was such evidence available before the trial magistrate. And since the affidavit was not open for challenge the trial magistrate was not in error. It was counsel's contention that D the claim was sufficiently proved. As to the duty to mitigate loss, counsel for respondents while conceding that the respondent has a duty in Law to mitigate loss was of the opinion that it was the appellants who preversed the respondents from so doing by their refusal to sign the insurance forms. The appellants cannot be heard now to rely on E that equitable doctrine.

All in all the respondents are submitting that the appeal be dismissed with costs for lack of substance.

I have had time to study the record of this case. The revelations are that the appellants then defendants were served with summons to appear for the mention (and not hearing) F on 16 December 1993. The appellants refused to acknowledge service of summons and the Court was entitled to enter judgment for the plaintiff.

However, I think the trial magistrate ought to have been guided by the procedure under Order 9 Rule 6(1)(a)ii(B) which reads: G

`6 (1) where the plaintiff appears and the defendant does not appear when the suit is called for hearing then

(a)(i)...

(ii) If the suit is before any court other then the High Court. H

(A) ...

(B) the summons issued was a summons to appear and it is proved that the summons was duly served, the court may enter judgment for the plaintiff.'

In the instant case it is evident the court proceeded under Order 8 Rule 14(2)(b). The I relevant proviso reads:

1996 TLR p244

BUBESHI J

A `14(1) ...

(2) In any case in which a defendant who is required under subrule (2) of Rule (1) to present his written statement of defence fails to do so within the period specified in the summons the Court may--

B (a) ...

(b) in any other case, upon application in writing by the plaintiff, fix a day for ex-parte proof and may pronounce judgment in favour of the plaintiff upon such proof of his claim.' (Emphasis supplied) C

I say the trial magistrate was in error to act under this provision because in the first instance the summons issue to the defendants now appellants did not require him to present their defence within a period stated. The summons issued to the appellants D required them to appear in court without fail and produce documents they intended to rely on, Secondly, the plaintiff did not formerly apply to court for ex-parte proof in terms of Order 8 Rule 14(2)(b) above cited. I would therefore agree with Mr Kapinga learned counsel for the appellants that the procedure adopted by the trial magistrate was irregular. E

Coming now to the first ground of appeal-the judgment. Rules 4 and 5 of Order 20 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966 provide that a judgment should contain a concise statement of the case, the points, for determination, the decision that was reached and the reason for such decision. F

There is however no specific format of how a judgment should look. It is sufficient if it is formulated to contain the elements stated hereinabove. And the contents in each judgment would on the whole depend on each individual case. G

What happened in the case/appeal before me is that after the plaintiff had filed an affidavit for ex-parte proof pursuant to an order of the trial magistrate, the latter recorded the order that `Upon filing the ex-parte affidavit, judgment is entered in favour of the plaintiff as prayed Sgd.' H

In my humble view the trial magistrate strayed into an error when he entered judgment for the plaintiff without evaluating the contents of the affidavit in as far as proof for damages or claim was concerned. An affidavit like any other piece of evidence has to be I analysed and evaluated even where it is not being challenged. One does not merely file an affidavit and expect the trial court to act on it wholesale without A some scrutiny. The scrutiny of the affidavit is more so in such cases as the appeal before me where damages and or compensation are being claimed. Paragraph 9 of the plaintiffs affidavit states: B

`9, That shillings five hundred and fifty thousand was required to repair the vehicle as shown on an invoice by Sanbern Engineering Services Limited annexed hereto and marked C.'

The immediate question that comes to my mind is: was this figure (Shs 550,000/=) the C actual sum that the plaintiff paid for the repair? Was there a receipt issued? The respondent has stated that `the respondent could not produce a receipt because the monies were yet to be paid'. D

That being the case the actual repair expenses could not be the sum of Shs 550,000/=.

Similarly for the compensation figure of Shs 8,640,000/= there was no evidence to show how this figure had been arrived at. It was the duty of the trial magistrate to analyse the E evidence before him and come to his own conclusion. By merely adopting the filed affidavit is not proof in such a case. What I wish to emphasize is that whether it is a long judgment or a short one, each case has to examined on its own facts. And the facts of each will dictate what type of judgment shall emanate therefrom. In cases for ex-parte F proof by affidavit the trial magistrate has a duty to examine the filed affidavit and satisfy himself whether the alleged claim has been proved by the affidavit or otherwise.

That being the position I am inclined to allow the appeal and order that the case be heard G before another magistrate with mandate to admit further evidence. And to the extent this appeal is allowed with costs.

The Plaintiff is a hunting-safari tour operator. It takes its clients on such safaris in Tanzania, collects fees from them, remits a portion thereof to the Government and then exports the trophies from the hunt to its clients in their home countries.

The First Defendant, in its turn, allocates to the Plaintiff various hunting blocks for the E purpose of its safaris. In letters dated 3 March 1990 and 24 January 1995, the First Defendant informed the Plaintiff that it was confiscating the Plaintiff's trophies for failure to remit fees, and that it was withdrawing the Plaintiff's hunting blocks and removing it from the list of operating companies, respectively. F

Aggrieved by the First Defendant's decisions as aforesaid, the Plaintiff obtained two orders against it. On 31 January 1995, the Plaintiff obtained a temporary injunction ordering the First Defendant to suspend the withdrawal of the blocks, pending the outcome of a chamber summons suit (filed the same day) for the determination of the G validity of the First Defendant's decision. On 12 May 1995, a consent order was made in regard to the chamber summons that the terms of the consent order made by Kyando J in Misc. Cause No. 84 of 1994 should be honoured by the First Defendant.

The Plaintiff applies to this Court for the committal of the First Defendant, in that it is alleged that he is in default of the above two orders for failure to return the blocks to the H Plaintiff.

Held:

(i) On the facts before the Court, the First Defendant had actually failed to carry out his obligations and that his failure constituted a breach of the orders.

I (ii) The First Defendant understood the purport of the orders and even went so far as to re-allocate the blocks in question to other persons. It

A has accordingly deliberately set the Court at defiance and actually flouted the orders of the Court.

(iii) The prime object of contempt of court proceedings is to vindicate the rule of law, rather than to punish an individual. The punitive jurisdiction of the court to punish for contempt is based upon the fundamental principle that it is for the good of the public and the parties that such orders should not be despised or slighted. B

(iv) Civil contempt does not require immediate imprisonment, for it is also punishable by the imposition of a fine.

(v) The penalty, in casu, which corresponds to the measure of contempt and the injury to the public interest, is that the First Defendant personally is fined in the C amount of Shs. 200,000/=, payable within seven days, failing which, incarceration for three months.

(vi) Costs in favour of the Plaintiff.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mapigano, J:

Disciplinary proceeding has been brought by the plaintiff company against the Director of E Wildlife by which an order to commit the said Director to prison for contempt of court is sought, and in this ruling I will refer to him simply as `The Director'.

The abbreviated background of the matter is this. The plaintiff is an outfitter of tourist hunting safaris, and was allocated hunting blocks by the Director for that purpose. It has appointed agents abroad to look for and bring clients to Tanzania for hunting expeditions. F The agents are required to collect fees from the clients and transmit a portion of the sum so levied to Tanzania; and on its part the plaintiff is required to export the trophies gathered by the clients during the expeditions to them. G

By a letter dated 3 January 1990 the Director notified the plaintiff of his decision to confiscate the trophies acquired by its clients during the 1988/89 hunting season. His action was allegedly based upon a default on the part of the plaintiff to cause the fees to be remitted. And by a letter dated 24 January 1995 he notified the plaintiff of his decision H to withdraw the hunting blocks from it and to remove it `from the list of operating companies in Tanzania', the justification of the action being the allegation that the plaintiff had failed to export the trophies.

Aggrieved, the plaintiff instituted this suit on 31 January 1995 to impugn the validity of the I decision of the Director and to seek, inter alia, a nullification of the decision and a restoration of the blocks to it. A

1996 TLR p248

MAPIGANO J

On the same day the plaintiff took out a chamber summons applying for a temporary injunction to restrain the Director from giving effect to his decision. Again on the same B day it obtained an interim order, upon an ex-parte verbal application, which enjoined the Director to suspend the withdrawal of the blocks pending the hearing and determination of the chamber summons.

On 12 May 1995 a consent order was made in regard to the chamber summons that the terms of the consent order made by Kyando, J in Misc cause No 84 of 1994 should be C honoured by the Director.

The charge against the Director in this committal proceeding is that he has refused to comply with the orders of 31 January 1995 and 12 May 1995, in that he has not returned the blocks to the plaintiff D

I pause here to say a few words about Misc cause No 84 of 1994, which I will henceforth call `The other case' or `that case'. It was an application for prerogative reliefs brought by the plaintiff, along with two others, against the Principal Secretary in the Ministry of E Tourism, Natural Resources and Environment. In relation to the plaintiff that case was in all respects similar with this suit, save, as just mentioned, for the parties impugned and the mode of proceedings, and this is virtually recognised by the Director vide para 25(c) of his counter-affidavit in the injunction proceeding in this case, and it may also be F observed that that counter-affidavit is almost a replica of the one he filed in that case. I should, therefore, be permitted to pay attention and make references to some of the materials and documents obtaining therein and adopt certain findings which were pronounced by this court. G

Upon an application for a temporary injunction brought by the applicants in that case, Kyando J gave an order on 15 August 1994 that the status quo be maintained and that order still subsists. The Director, though not a party, felt obliged to restore the blocks to the applicants, and he did so in the same month. But he later turned round and H dispossessed the applicants of the blocks. Committal proceedings were then brought by the applicants against the Principal Secretary and the Director for contempt. The applications failed. This Court held that the Principal Secretary was not answerable for the wrongs which were committed by the Director; and that although the conduct of the I Director could be regarded as perverse and detractive of the status quo order, he could not be held to be in contempt, regard being had to the fact that he was neither a party to the substantive A application or the person who was restrained by the injunction.

The Director has deposed in para 13 of his counter-affidavit in the instant application, as he did in the other case, but the plaintiff denies, like it did in that case, that the restoration B of the blocks to the plaintiff in August 1994, was made upon the plaintiff's undertaking that it would pay the requisite block fees. I dealt with this point in the other case. I did not accept the Director's assertion.

In para 15 of the counter-affidavit the Director makes the allegation that the blocks were C available to the plaintiff for utilisation for the whole of the 1994/95 hunting season, which started in July 1994 and ended in March 1995. This allegation is undoubtedly false, and the letter of 24 January 1995 gives him that lie.

The Director also makes the allegation in para 10 of the counter-affidavit, that what D engendered the withdrawal of the blocks was a failure on the part of the plaintiff to meet the requisite block fees. I just cannot help thinking that the Director has misconceived the present proceeding, if he does not have a serious credibility problem. No doubt, his deposition is at variance with what he wrote in his letter of 24 January 1995. As we have E already seen, he stated in that letter, in terms explicit, that his decision was predicated upon the plaintiff's failure to consign trophies to its clients abroad.

The essence of the Director's arguments in paras 8 and 9 of the counter-affidavit is that the real purpose of the order given by Kyando J on 15 August 1994 in the other case F was the preservation of the condition in which things were at the time when the order was made. I have also dealt with this point in that case. I held that the true intent of that order was the preservation of the state of things which obtained at the time of filing that case until the rights of the parties could be ascertained and finally determined. And I G demonstrate that that is exactly what the director took the order to connote.

Paragraph 26 of the counter-affidavit sets out two contentions. The first is that there is no suit which has been properly instituted in court, and that an interim injunction cannot H thus be granted. I must suppose that this contention has reference to the other case. The second argument is that the injunction granted by this court has passed out, given the provision of GN 508/91, which in so far as is relevant, stipulates that a temporary injunction prevails for a period of six months only, unless that period is extended. I

I am quite unable to agree. The Director has possibly overlooked the fact that the second injunction order in this case was made on 12 May 1995, and it A cannot, therefore, be said that its period has expired. If the Director has in mind the ex-parte order of 31 January 1995, it is pointed out to him that the breaches charged are said to have occurred when that order was still in force, which renders GN 508/91 absolutely irrelevant. B

I proceed to consider and decide the question whether the Director is in breach. The order of 31 January 1995 directed the Director to suspend the withdrawal of the suit-blocks. As the plaintiff rightly contends, that order was meant to prevail until it was C discharged or superseded by another order. As long as it existed it should have been obeyed by the Director. And to all intents and purposes the order had the effect of restoring the relationship of the parties to what it was before 24 January 1995. But what has happened is that the Director has not only refused to suspend the withdrawal but has purported to re-allocate the blocks to other persons. D

The order of 12 May 1995 displaced the ex-parte order. But as I have already pointed out, that order embraced the terms of the order of 15 August 1994 made in the other case and those terms were designed to preserve the state of things existing at the time E that case was instituted. I should also repeat, by way of emphasis, that that is exactly what the Director perceived it to imply!

In the circumstances I entertain no doubt whatever that the Director has actually failed to carry out his obligations and that his failure constitutes a breach. F

Next, I have to consider and decide the point whether the Director is in contempt. His contention in para 29 of the counter-affidavit is that there was no intention on his part to show disrespect to the Court, and his plea is that he should be pardoned.

I have given the matter my best consideration and I am sorry to say that I have been G unable to accept the Director's contention. The Director does not deny that he was cognizant of the orders, and I may repeat again that he understood their purport. But he still refused to give possession of the blocks back to the plaintiff. Not only that. He proceeded to reallocate the blocks to other persons. This, in my view, is clear evidence, H and I am satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that Mr Ndolanga, the incumbent Director, has deliberately set the court at defiance and actually flouted the orders of the Court.

Lastly, I have to consider and determine the question of punishment, which has also I exercised my mind greatly. Disregard of orders of court is certainly a matter of gravity, whatever the order may be and irrespective of whether it has been irregularly or erroneously made. The punitive A jurisdiction of the court to punish for breach is based upon the fundamental principle that it is for the good of the public and the parties that such orders should not be despised or slighted. And I think it is neither incongruous nor extravagant to add that a party, however highly placed or well-circumstanced he may happen to be, ought to know that he is B obliged to obey the orders given by courts, and indeed, that is perfectly consistent with the much talked about rule of law concept.

The prime object of proceedings of this nature is to vindicate the rule of law by a finding C of contempt, rather than to punish an individual. It seems to me, however, that Mr Ndolanga's degree of contumacy is sufficiently great to justify this court in inflicting punishment upon him. Indeed, I consider his contempt as bordering on flagrance in the very least. But I have, nevertheless, hesitated to send him to prison straightaway. D

The law holds that civil contempt is also punishable by imposition of fine. The penalty I award, which in my judgment corresponds to the measure of contempt and the injury due to the public interest, is that Mr Ndolanga is to pay a sum of two hundred thousand shillings (Shs 200,000/=) as a fine within a space of seven days from today, and if he E defaults, to go to jail to serve a term of three months. It is so ordered. It is also ordered that he pays the costs incurred by the plaintiff in this application.

The First Appellant filed a representative suit on behalf of the other appellants against the Respondents. The First Respondent is the liquidator of Zambia Tanzania Road Services Ltd, the Second Respondent. The Appellants were all employees of the Second Respondent. E

During August 1985, the Second Respondent was placed into liquidation. The Second Respondent then informed the Appellants that their terminal benefits could not be paid immediately, owing to the financial state of the now liquidated Second Respondent and bearing in mind the order of preference of the various creditors. After obtaining a 'loan' from the Government of Tanzania, one of the shareholders, the Appellants were paid F Shs 32,761,927/= in total and in full and final settlement of their claims. This payment was made in July 1987, some two years after their due date in August 1985.

The Appellants duly filed a suit in the court below for Shs 84,779,770/05, being in respect of `repatriation costs, luggage allowance, outstation allowance and a subsistence G allowance for 664 days' based on the devaluation of the Tanzanian shilling, increased transport costs and outstation allowances which had taken place over the two-year period since the company's liquidation when the benefits were due and payable.

The trial Judge found that the claims were valid, but dismissed them on the basis that the claims had not been proved as required by the Companies (Winding Up) Rules, H 1929, and that therefore the entire claim was premature.

The Appellants appeal on the ground that the trial Judge erred in holding that the suit was premature and that therefore there was no cause of action.

Mfalila, JA:

The appellant William Kimaro filed a representative suit in the High Court, on behalf of himself and 475 other fellow ex-employees of Zambia Tanzania Road Services Ltd. The D suit was filed against the liquidators of the said company because it was then under liquidation. The liquidators are Coopers & Lybrand, the present respondents. The appellant demanded a total of Shs 84,779,770.05/= being the difference between repatriation costs paid in July 1987 but calculated at the rates obtaining on 8 August E 1985 when the company was wound up and those actually obtaining in July 1987.

Perhaps a brief background to the claim would clarify the position. Zambia Tanzania Road Services Ltd was a limited liability company incorporated in Zambia and was F registered in Tanzania as a branch of a foreign company, but the shareholders of the company were the Governments of Tanzania and Zambia and an Italian company named Intersommer Condrad Spa. The appellant and his colleagues were employees of the Tanzania branch of the company. In August 1985 the shareholders passed a G resolution to liquidate the company. On 26 August 1985 the respondents as liquidators terminated the employment of all the employees except a few. But due to financial difficulties, the liquidators could not pay the employees' terminal benefits immediately. All H that the liquidators could do in the circumstances was to ask all employees to leave for their respective homes but to leave their contact addresses behind through which they could be reached. The appellant said that he and his colleagues could not leave for their homes because they had no money to pay for themselves and their families as well as I freight for their personal belongings. They therefore remained at their respective stations in Dar es Salaam, Iringa and Mbeya. The respondents were faced with the problem of paying the appellants who were classified A as unsecured creditors ahead of other secured creditors of the company. To get round the problem, the respondents approached one of the shareholders, the Government of Tanzania for a loan equivalent to the sum claimed by the appellants. The Government of B Tanzania agreed and advanced the amount needed to the respondents through the National Transport Corporation. On receipt of this loan, the liquidators paid the appellants all their entitlements which included salaries and/or allowances and repatriation costs. All these amounted to Shs 32,761,927/=. These payments were C effected in July 1987, ie two years after the payments were due in August 1985 when the company was liquidated. The appellants accepted these payments as representing their full claims and that they had no further claims against the respondents. However, the appellants later became of the view that these payments fell far short of their actual D requirements and lodged fresh claims with the respondents who rejected them, maintaining that the appellants no longer had any claims against them, they having been paid in full all their entitlements. Following the rejection of their additional claims by the respondents, the appellants lodged this claim in the High Court and in para 14 of their E plaint, they stated:

`14. That the plaintiffs are claiming from the defendants a total of Shs 84,779,770/05/= being repatriation costs, luggage allowance and outstation allowance. The plaintiffs are entitled to be paid the same by the defendants because the defendants failed and/or neglected to pay F them their terminal benefits immediately after serving them the notices of termination as required by the law and had a duty to pay them the repatriation costs, luggage allowances and outstation allowances taking into account the devaluation of the Tanzania shilling, increased G transport costs and outstation allowances.'

The appellants also claimed an interest of 30 per cent per annum on the sum claimed from the date of filing to the date of final judgment plus costs. H

We agree with the Trial Judge that the claim as framed was vague although it appears to have been drawn up by a very brilliant lawyer, the late Malingumu Rutashobya. However, in the course of the hearing, the evidence revealed that the appellants were actually I claiming the difference between the repatriation costs including luggage allowances which were paid in July 1987 but calculated at 1985 rates when the company was wound up and the actual costs of repatriation in July A 1987 at the time of payment. The appellants also made it clear that this figure of Shs 84,779,770/05/= includes subsistence allowances for 664 days which they spent while waiting at their respective stations to be paid their entitlements.

At the commencement of the trial, three issues were framed, issues on which would B depend the outcome of the case. These were as follows:

(1) whether the defendants assured the plaintiffs that all terminal benefits would be paid immediately C

(2) whether the defendants requested the plaintiffs to remain at their respective work stations after issuing them with notices of termination

(3) whether the defendants neglected to provide or pay the plaintiff's terminal benefits D

(4) to what reliefs are entitled.

With regard to issues (1) and (2), the appellant who gave evidence as PW1 told the Trial Court: E

`We were informed that the company had been wound up and we were given two weeks' leave. After that the General Manager announced that their services were being terminated and that they would be paid their terminal benefits . . . it was the liquidator who was actually terminating our employment. We were required to leave an address for the purposes of future correspondence. But we did not F leave any addresses because we had not been paid our benefits as employees.'

It is clear that this statement does not contain any suggestion that the respondents as G liquidators promised the appellants that all their terminal benefits would be paid immediately, and also that they were told to remain at their respective stations after being issued with notices of termination pending the payment in full of their claims. In the circumstances, the Trial Judge answered both these issues in the negative. H

With regard to the third issue, the Trial Judge accepted the evidence given by the liquidator Mr Mundolwa, that the respondents as liquidators did not pay the appellants' terminal benefits sooner because of negligence, he said that the appellants' terminal I benefits could not be paid immediately because there was no money, the company was insolvent. He produced documents to establish this and that on the contrary every effort was made to secure the necessary funds from one A of the shareholders, efforts which enabled the appellants to be paid even ahead of secured creditors. In the circumstances, the judge held that it could not be said that the respondents neglected to pay the appellants their terminal benefits, because there was B no money available for this purpose until after the same was borrowed from one of the shareholders. Accordingly he also answered this issue in the negative.

Having answered all the main issues in the negative, the Trial Judge then proceeded to deal with the last standard ancillary issue, namely to what reliefs are the parties entitled? C In answering this question the judge asked himself whether the appellants' two pronged claim is maintainable in law. The first prong concerned their claim for the difference between the rates of fare and freight charges obtaining on 26 August 1985 when they were computed and July 1987 when the payments were made, arguing that D between these two dates the fares to their homes as well as freight charges had almost doubled. The second prong concerned their claim for subsistence allowances for 664 days they spend waiting to be paid their terminal benefits. The judge held that both these E claims were properly made and are supported by s 53 of the Employment Ordinance, but he dismissed them because they had not been proved as required by the Companies (Winding up) Rules, and that therefore the entire claim was premature.

In this appeal, Mr Semgalawe who appeared for the appellants, filed only one ground of F appeal, namely that the Trial Judge erred in law in holding that the suit is premature and that therefore there was no cause of action. At the hearing of this appeal and in support of this ground, Mr Semgalawe argued that there was no need for further proof of the debt G made up of additional claims because the liquidator was merely being asked to pay what he had already paid particularly when what was being asked were statutory claims.

On our part we think it was not correct for the Trial Judge to determine the validity of these claims after saying that they were premature. This was virtually pre-empting the H decision of the liquidator. The liquidator should be left free to determine the validity of each debt submitted to him. In our view, the Trial Judge should have based his decision on the reasons he gave at p 131 of his judgment and should not have discussed the validity of the claims in law. In this passage, the judge stated: I

`I agree with Mrs Maajar that whatever claims there may be they must be brought in accordance with the Companies (Winding Up) Rules 1929. In para 15 of the A plaint, it is stated that "plaintiffs have repeatedly demanded the aforementioned amount from the defendants but the defendants have refused and/or neglected to pay them the same". This may be so, but that would not be enough because the Companies (Winding Up) Rules 1929 require any debt to be proved by an affidavit verifying the debt. The plaintiffs do not claim to have done so. Therefore B until such proof is done there cannot be any cause of action.'

We agree, and say that the Rules do not make any distinction between debts arising out C of different claims. The original claims were subjected to proof and paid, and additional claims must be treated separately and subjected to the same process of proof under the Rules. This was not done, accordingly we agree with Dr Nguluma, counsel for the respondents that the two claims in this suit amounting to Shs 84,779,770/05/= were D prematurely lodged in court. There is no need to go further than this lest we prejudice any proceedings that may come from the liquidator for proof of these claims.

For these reasons we are satisfied that this appeal has no merit and we dismiss it in its entirety with costs. E

On 11 September 1992, the High Court (per Kyando, J) ordered the rectification of B certain official forms held by the Appellant's, in which forms a loan amount secured by a debenture was stipulated variously as being US$ 904,000 or Shs. 16,626,500/= or both. The trial Court found that the clear intention of the parties at all material times was that the amount expressed in dollars had been advanced and that accordingly the amount C repayable, as evidenced by the amount secured by the debenture (as well as the relevent official forms), should reflect the amount in dollars only without reference to the Tanzanian shilling equivalent. The Court ordered rectification accordingly.
The First Appellant is the debtor under the loan and debenture, the Second Appellant is D the Registrar of Companies (holder of the official forms) and the Respondent is the creditor in terms of the loan and debenture.
The Appellants appeal against the order of rectification, submitting that the trial Judge erred in law for various reasons in holding that Respondent's application was competent.
Held: E

(i) Since the loan had not been repaid in the full amount expressed in dollars, it could not be said that the debt had already been discharged and thus an application for rectification could be brought.

(ii) The trial Judge was correct in finding that the actual terms of the loan should be established with reference to the document creating the charge, being the debenture, in casu. F

(iii) The trial Judge correctly found, further, that the Second Appellant's certificate of discharge of the debt was invalid and fell to be set aside, since such discharge was based on the repaid amount expressed in shillings, and not in dollars.

(iv) The First Appellant's misstatement in its memorandum to the Second Appellant G to the effect that the debt had been discharged, was a false declaration on its part and amounted to fraudulent conduct.

(v) The period of limitation for the bringing of legal proceedings in the Law of Limitation Act does not begin to run until the victim of fraud has discovered the fraud.

(vi) The application was brought timeously before the trial court since it was H brought within 60 days of the discovery of the First Appellant's fraudulent misrepresentation to the Second Appellant.

(vii) The appeal is dismissed with costs.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga JA:

This appeal arises from the decision of the High Court (Kyando J) allowing an application C for the rectification of errors under s 85 of the Companies Ordinance Cap 212.

Briefly the background to the case was as follows: In April 1979 the first appellant, Calico Textile Industries Ltd (hereinafter referred to simply as Calico Textile) and Tanzania Development Finance Company Ltd (hereinafter referred to by its acronym TDFCL) D entered into a loan agreement whereby Calico Textile was to receive from TDFCL a loan of US $904,000 (or the equivalent thereof in other convertible currencies) by way of a foreign currency loan. In point of fact TDFCL was acting essentially as a conduit in an E arrangement whereby it was allowed to borrow from the World Bank for re-lending to feasible projects in Tanzania, and the Tanzanian Government guaranteed repayment by TDFCL to the World Bank. Calico Textile having obtained the said loan, issued a single debenture to TDFCL as security for the principal sum of US $904,000 with interest F thereon. All the moneys, including the principal and interest as secured under the debenture, were repayable in Tanzanian shillings converted to the currency of the loan at the rate of exchange ruling on the date of repayment.

Calico Textile received full payment of the loan as agreed and it started repayment in accordance with the terms of the agreement. Meantime the debenture was, in G compliance with statutory requirement, filed with the second respondent, the Registrar of Companies (hereinafter referred to as the Registrar) for registration as a charge. On its cover page the debenture was shown to be a security `for US $904,000 (or the H equivalent thereto in other convertible currencies) being approximately Shs 16,626,500/=', but in its body it was shown to be a security for a foreign currency loan only; there was no reference to the Tanzania shillings. Also filed with the Registrar in compliance with statutory requirement, was form No 9, being particulars of the said I debenture, and showing that the amount secured was `US $904,000 being approximately Shs 16,626,500/='.

Acting on the information filed the Registrar issued form C2, the certificate of registration A of the charge showing that the debenture secured in favour of TDFCL was Shs 16,626,500/= only; no reference was made to foreign currency. As mentioned earlier, Calico Textile had started repaying the foreign currency loan on the terms as agreed, B and it continued to do so for some time. The case for TDFCL is that before that loan was fully repaid, Calico Textile on 7 May 1992 filed with the Registrar Form No 10 wherein it declared that the charge as registered, being a debenture to secure Shs 16,626,500/= only in favour of TDFCL, had been satisfied to the extent of Shs C 17,418,438.35/=. Acting on that information the Registrar on the same day issued a certificate to the effect that the debenture was discharged. TDFCL claims that from that time to the time of bringing this action Calico Textile no longer repaid or serviced the foreign currency loan.

The case for TDFCL was that Calico Textile was aware of the misstatement on the D cover page of the debenture, in the particulars on Form No 9 and in the Registrar's certificate of registration Form C2 that the debenture was for Shs 16,626,500/= or approximately that amount while, to its knowledge, the true position was that the debenture was a security for US $904,000 or the equivalent thereof in other convertible E currencies as was expressly stated in the loan agreement and in the body of the debenture. Again Calico Textile knew that it had not fully repaid the foreign currency loan. Thus TDFCL contends that with the knowledge of such misstatement of the particulars of the loan and of the non-payment of part of the foreign currency loan, the declaration by F Calico Textile to the Registrar that the charge had been satisfied was obviously false, and that the Registrar's purported certificate of discharge based, as it was, on such false declaration was necessarily void. In its prayer, therefore, TDFCL asked for an order for the rectification of the misstatement of the particulars on Form No 9 and on the G certificate of registration of Form C2 by deleting therefrom all reference to Shs 16,626,500/= so as to reflect the amount secured by the debenture as being US $904,000 only. As intimated before, the learned Trial Judge granted the application and made orders in the following terms: H

`I grant the application as prayed, with costs to the applicant. The second respondent is hereby ordered to, within fourteen (14) days from the date of the delivery of this ruling, rectify forms No 9 and C2 (plus his register of charges) to show that the amount secured by the Debenture discussed in this I case is US $904,000 (or its equivalent in other convertible currency) by way of a foreign loan, or, simply US $904,000 without any reference to A Shs 16,626,500/=. The first respondent is ordered also to rectify his register of charges in relation to this loan so that it is shown therein that the Debenture is security for US $904,000 only, as the Debenture itself states.' B

It is from that decision that this appeal is preferred.

In this appeal the first appellant, Calico Textile, is represented by Mr M A Ismail, learned advocate, the second appellant, the Registrar, is represented by Mr S B Salula, learned Senior State Attorney while the respondent, TDFCL is represented by Captain A K C Kameja, learned advocate. Mr Ismail had filed five grounds of appeal but at the hearing he abandoned grounds 1 and 5 and argued the remaining three. Mr Salula filed four grounds but argued only the fourth ground because he abandoned ground 3 while grounds 1 and 2 were covered by Mr Ismail in the course of his submissions. Therefore D altogether Mr Ismail and Mr Salula argued a total of four grounds which, for convenience are set out and renumbered as follows --

1. The learned judge grossly erred in law in not holding that there could be no E rectification of the debenture/charge as the latter was already satisfied/discharged.

2. The learned judge erred in law in not holding that the application of the respondent was legally incompetent.

3. The learned judge erred in law in not holding that the application was time barred. F

4. The learned judge erred in law in issuing decrees which are not enforceable in law.

The thrust of Mr Ismail's submission on the first ground is that once the charge was G certified by the Registrar on 7 May 1992 to have been discharged, then this application which was filed only subsequently on 29 May 1992 was misconceived. For, as at the date of filing that application the charge no longer existed, and therefore no application for rectification could properly be made in respect of a non-existent charge. Learned H counsel took the view that in the circumstances what TDFCL should have done was to apply to Court to have the charge restored in the first instance after which it was then open to it to apply for the desired rectification of errors in respect of the restored charge.

Mr Ismail who had also represented Calico Textile at the trial had raised this point there I but the Trial Judge rejected it saying in effect that the purported discharge was invalid in as much as the foreign currency loan had not A been fully repaid. We are in complete agreement with the learned judge on this. There was ample evidence that Calico Textile has not repaid fully the foreign currency loan, and Calico Textile can have been under no misapprehension whatsoever about it. For instance, in para 18 of the applicant's affidavit it was stated that as at the date Calico B Textile made the declaration to the Registrar that the charge had been satisfied, there still remained US $534,736 unpaid by Calico Textile to TDFCL. That averment was not controverted. Indeed both at the trial and during this appeal it was not seriously C contended on behalf of Calico Textile that the foreign currency loan has been fully repaid. Even the grounds of appeal filed in this court do not put forward any such suggestion. Once it was rightly found that the foreign currency loan was not fully repaid, then the High Court judge was entitled to hold, as he did, that the Registrar's certificate of D discharge was invalid as it was based on Calico Textile's false declaration that the charge securing that loan was satisfied, meaning that the loan itself was fully repaid.

There was the related question as to the amount of money secured by the debenture. That question arose because the Registrar's certificate of registration shows that the E debenture was a security for Shs 16,626,500/= only while TDFCL contended that it was for US $904,000 (or the equivalent thereof in other convertible currencies). Mr Ismail appeared to take the view that the Registrar's certificate was conclusive evidence of the amount secured. The learned Trial Judge resolved that question by holding that the F debenture was a security for US $904,000 (or the equivalent thereof in other convertible currencies). In doing so he cited with approval the decision in the English case of In re Mechanisations (Eaglescliffe) Ltd (1) which said in effect that in order to ascertain the terms and effect of the charge one has to look at the document creating the charge and G not at the register.

Like the Trial Judge we are satisfied that that view correctly represents the law of this country on that point. Applying that principle to the facts of the present case then, it is common ground that both in the loan agreement and in the body of the debenture the H amount of money stated is US $904,000 (or the equivalent thereof in other convertible currencies). The only variation of this appears on the cover page of the debenture wherein it is stated thus: I

`Single Debenture for US $904,000 (or the equivalent thereof in other convertible currencies) being approximately Shs 16,626,500/=.'

KISANGA JA

It cannot seriously be maintained that the debenture was created as a security for Shs A 16,626,500/= when there was no reference to that sum, or to that currency for that matter, either in the loan agreement or in the body of the debenture itself. Had the parties contemplated Tanzania Shillings as the currency of the loan, they would certainly have B shown this in the loan agreement or in the body of the debenture.

It was submitted on behalf of TDFCL that Shs 16,626,500/= was inserted on the cover page of the debenture only for the purposes of determining the stamp duty which was payable in Tanzanian money upon registration of the debenture. That submission was C not refuted and to our minds it sounds plausible. In any case we are firstly of the view that in ascertaining the terms and effect of the debenture one should not merely look at the title page of the debenture and ignore what is stated in the body of the debenture D itself; rather one should look at the document as a whole which is exactly what the Trial Judge did. In addition the learned judge found that the loan agreement made no reference to Tanzania Shillings. Consequently he came to the conclusion that the debenture was a security for US $904,000 (or the equivalent thereof in other convertible currencies). We are unable to say that he erred. E

In our view, therefore, the Trial Judge rightly found that the Registrar's certificate of discharge of the debenture was invalid in as much as it was based on Calico Textile's false declaration that the debenture was satisfied when it was not. Consequently it was F open to the learned judge to set aside, as he did, the purported discharge certified by the Registrar because it was in fact no discharge at all; it was simply void. We reject Mr Ismail's contention that the proper thing for TDFCL to have done was to apply to Court to have the charge restored in the first instance. For, as we have amply demonstrated, the G charge had not in fact been discharged; and as will be shown later, it was not necessary to bring separate actions, first for setting aside the purported discharge of the debenture and then for rectification of the misstatement.

That disposes of the first ground of appeal. The second ground appears to be a H necessary corollary of the first ground. It alleges that the application by TDFCL was legally incompetent because, as we understand it, the applicant was seeking for rectification of errors in respect of a debenture which no longer existed as it had already been discharged. We have already held that the debenture in question has not been I discharged and that it is still subsisting. The application was, therefore, legally competent, and this ground of appeal equally fails.

KISANGA JA

On the third ground alleging that the application was time barred, there was evidence A that the debenture was registered in 1985 while this application was brought in 1992, that is, over six years later. Mr Ismail rightly pointed out that under the Companies Ordinance (Cap 212) no time limit is provided for within which such application should B be brought. However, counsel for both sides rightly took the view that in those circumstances para 21 of Part III of the First Schedule to the Law of Limitation Act applied, in which case the application should have been brought within 60 days of the registration of the debenture. Mr Ismail charged that the application was not brought C within that time limit, nor was there an application to the Court for the extension of that period. Learned counsel, therefore, contended that the application was wrongly entertained and it ought to have been thrown on a preliminary objection.

In response to that submission Captain Kameja contended that the application was not D time barred. In his view the period of limitation did not begin to run against TDFCL, his client, until on 16 April 1992 when the Registrar wrote to TDFCL following its appointment of a receiver in respect of Calico Textile concerning the debenture in question. That, according to Captain Kameja,was the time when TDFCL learnt for the E first time of the misstatement of the registered particulars of the debenture and that that was when time started to run. However, counsel went on, as soon as it was practicable thereafter, ie on 2 June 1992, TDFCL filed this application. All this was duly supported by the affidavit sworn on behalf of TDFCL by its then company secretary, Mr R C J Pesha, F and no counter affidavit or affidavit in reply was filed in response thereto. Then, relying on the provisions of s 26(c) of the Law of Limitation Act, Captain Kameja submitted that the application was brought within 60 days of his client's becoming aware of the misstatement and, therefore, the application was timeous. G

Section 26 says that:

> `26. Where in the case of any proceeding for which a period of limitation is prescribed--
>
> H (a) the proceeding is based on the fraud of the party against whom the proceeding is prosecuted or of his agent, or of any person through whom such party or agent claims; or
>
> (b) the right of action is concealed by the fraud of any such person as aforesaid; or
>
> I (c) the proceeding is for relief from the consequences of a mistake,
>
> the period of limitation shall not begin to run until the plaintiff has

1996 TLR p265

KISANGA JA

> A discovered the fraud or the mistake, or could, with reasonable diligence, have discovered it:'

There follows a proviso which, however, is not relevant to the facts of the present case.

We think that Captain Kameja relied on the wrong paragraph of s 26. In our view the B relevant provision here was para (a). First of all it is to be noted that the matter involving this case started off as an innocent misstatement, but at a later stage it assumed the character of fraud. It began when the Registrar registered the particulars of the debenture as being a security for Shs 16,626,500/= only. This information appeared for C the first time on the cover page of the debenture which, as already noted, stated that the debenture was for US $904,000 (or the equivalent thereof in other convertible currencies) being approximately Shs 16,626,500/=. It again appeared on Form No 9, being the particulars of the charge sent to the Registrar for registration, and showing that D the debenture was for US $904,000 being approximately Shs 16,626,500/=. In registering the debenture, the Registrar obviously misstated the particulars thereof as being security for Shs 16,626,500/= only when in the loan agreement and in the body of E the debenture itself there was no reference whatsoever to Tanzania Shillings, and indeed it was made clear therein that the loan was a foreign currency loan and the debenture was the security for such loan. However, the misstatement by the Registrar was innocent because the Registrar is not shown to be a party who stood to gain from F such misstatement or who assisted another party to gain from such misstatement. So that if the story had ended there then in our view, Captain Kameja for TDFCL could properly have invoked s 26(c) above quoted to say that this was a proceeding for relief from the consequences of a mistake or misstatement. G

The situation, however, changed when Calico Textile, acting on that innocent misstatement, declared in its memorandum to the Registrar that the debenture had been satisfied when, as shown already, it knew fully well that it had not. Such false H declaration was not an innocent misstatement or mistake on the part of Calico Textile. It was a deliberate act whereby Calico Textile took advantage of the Registrar's innocent misstatement of the terms and effect of the debenture and sought to extinguish its liability under the debenture to the detriment of TDFCL. Such conduct was fraudulent. It I could not possibly be said to amount to an innocent misstatement or mistake in the light of the full knowledge by Calico

Textile that the foreign currency loan, for which the debenture in question was a security, A had not been fully repaid.

Thus in terms of s 26(a) above quoted the proceeding involves or is based on the fraudulent conduct of Calico Textile. In other words this proceeding necessarily arose out of Calico Textile's fraudulent misrepresentation to the Registrar that the debenture B had been satisfied. Therefore the issue of limitation in bringing such proceeding must be considered in the light of such fraudulent conduct of Calico Textile. Incidentally it is appropriate to point out here that it would be unnecessary to bring two separate actions, C as canvassed by Mr Ismail, first to set aside the Registrar's purported certificate of discharge which was based on the fraudulent misrepresentation of Calico Textile, and then another one for the rectification of the misstatements or errors. That would amount to a multiplicity of actions involving unnecessary expense in terms of time and money while the end result would be exactly the same. Not only that. Calico Textile's fraudulent D misrepresentation to the Registrar and the misstatement in the particulars of the charge (Form No 9), and in the Registrar's certificates of registration (Form C2) and of discharge are so closely connected that one could not meaningfully talk about them separately. We are increasingly of the view that it was open to the learned High Court E judge to entertain the application for the rectification of errors and, in the process, to consider the validity or otherwise of the Registrar's certificate of discharge and make the appropriate order.

The question now falling for consideration is, when did the period of limitation begin to F run in this case? The relevant part of s 26 cited above says that:

`the period of limitation shall not begin to run until the plaintiff has discovered the fraud or the mistake, or could, with reasonable diligence, have discovered it' (The emphasis is supplied.) G

The view was taken that the period of limitation began to run on 6 May 1986 when Mr Pesha on behalf of TDFCL received the Registrar's certificate of registration containing the misstatement, because at that point Mr Pesha could, with reasonable diligence, have H discovered the misstatement and hence the fraud underlying the said certificate. We think, however, that that view is untenable. In our view the expression `.. could, with reasonable diligence, have discovered it' refers to mistake only; it does not refer to fraud. I We say so because in our opinion s 26 above quoted, and indeed the law in general, seek to protect victims of fraud, not the perpetrators of fraud. Now if the above quoted expression is to be given literal A interpretation, it would mean that the period of limitation begins to run when the victim of fraud could, with reasonable diligence, have discovered the fraud. So that a perpetrator of fraud could then set up a defence saying: `Yes, I committed the fraud, but I am not B liable because the victim thereof did not discover the fraud within the limitation period even though he (the victim) could, with reasonable diligence, have done so.' That, in our view, would be totally unacceptable. It is contrary to all principle and good conscience to allow the perpetrator of fraud to enjoy the fruits of his own vice. C

Such interpretation runs counter to the long established principle laid down, inter alia, by the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in the case of Lolkilite Ole Ndinoni v Netwala Ole Nebele (2) wherein it was stated: `A cardinal rule of interpretation is that one must, whenever one can, place such interpretation on a statute as will not lead to an absurdity.' D More recently in the English case of Nothman v London Borough of Barnet (3) the Court of Appeal said in effect that the literal rule of statutory construction has been replaced by the purposive approach. That the Courts should adopt such a construction E as will promote the general legislative purpose underlying the statute. And that whenever the strict interpretation of a statute gives rise to an absurd and unjust situation, the judges can and should use their good sense to remedy it, by reading words in, if necessary, so as to do what parliament would have done had they had the situation in mind. F

We are of the settled view that the expression under review in this case is one where literal interpretation of it would lead to absurdity by enabling a perpetrator of fraud to benefit from his own vice, and to cause gross injustice to the victim of the fraud. It G cannot have been in the contemplation of the Legislature to enact such a provision. Consistent with the approach in Nothman's case above cited, therefore, we consider it necessary to read words into the provision to mean that the period of limitation does not begin to run until the victim of fraud has discovered the fraud. The words `... could, with H reasonable diligence, have discovered it' in that provision are to be limited to mistake. We think this is what Parliament would have done had they had the situation in mind.

We now apply this interpretation to the facts of the present case. As stated before, this was a matter which started off as an innocent misstatement but later developed into a I fraud which eventually sparked off this litigation. In our view the limitation period started to run after the discovery of the fraud which sparked off the litigation. A

Mr Pesha discovered the fraud through the Registrar's letter dated 16 April 1992. According to that letter Calico Textile had misrepresented to the Registrar that it had B discharged its obligation under the debenture. It is that discovery which led to the institution of this proceeding by TDFCL's application dated 2 June 1992. We therefore uphold Captain Kameja's submission that the application was timeous because it was brought within 60 days of the discovery of Calico Textile's fraudulent misrepresentation C to the Registrar that it had discharged the debenture, knowing fully well that it had not.

Mr Ismail referred us to s 3 of the Law of Limitation Act and strenuously contended that once the application was found to be time barred, the Trial Judge had no power to D extend the time on his own and proceed to hear it on the merit as he did. In support of such submission learned counsel referred us to the decision of the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in the case of Osman v The United India Fire and General Insurance Company Ltd (4). With due respect to the learned counsel, however, the provisions of E the law he has cited and his submissions on the point are all irrelevant because, as we have endeavoured to show, the application here was timeous and, therefore, the question of the Trial Judge extending the time did not arise. The third ground of appeal, therefore, also fails. F

Ground 4 criticises the Trial Judge for issuing decrees which are not enforceable in law. There is some merit in this ground. The learned judge granted the application as prayed, meaning that (a) Form No 9 being the particulars of the charge delivered by Calico G Textile to the Registrar for registration be rectified, and (b) Form C2 being the certificate of registration of the charge issued by the Registrar also be rectified. It is clear that Form No 9 is to be rectified by its author, Calico Textile while Form C2 is also to be rectified by its author, the Registrar. The learned judge, therefore, erred when he went on to order H the Registrar to rectify Form No 9; that form is to be rectified by Calico Textile. However, the error was not fatal because no one was prejudiced thereby. The error is accordingly corrected as indicated above while the rest of the award is affirmed.

In the final analysis, and for the reasons set out herein before, the appeal fails and it is I dismissed with costs.

-Headnote
The applicant applied for revision of a judgment and decree of the High Court. The E respondent filed a preliminary objection contending that the application was incompetent as it did not fall within the provisions of section 4(2) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1978. It appeared that the present application was brought ten months after delivery of the judgment sought to be revised and five months after rejection of the application for extension of time. F
Held:

(i) The Court could, on its own motion and at any time, invoke its revisional jurisdiction in respect of proceedings in the High Court;

(ii) Except under exceptional circumstances, a party to proceedings in the High G Court could not invoke the revisional jurisdiction of the Court as an alternative to the appellate jurisdiction of the Court;

(iii) A party to proceedings in the High Court could invoke the revisional jurisdiction of the Court in matters which were not appealable with or without leave;

(iv) A party to proceedings in the High Court could invoke the revisonal jurisdiction H of the Court where the appellate process has been blocked by judicial process: the decision of the applicant's application for extension of time to apply for leave to appeal did not amount to a judicial process which blocked the applicant's move. The Court of appeal had concurrent jurisdiction with the High Court to grant extensions of time and it was therefore open to the applicant to I come to court to seek extension of time after the High Court had refused it:

A the reliance on the court's revisional jurisdiction was clearly misconceived.

[zJDz]Judgment

Nyalali, CJ:

This is an application by Notice of Motion filed by Halais Pro-Chemie Industries Ltd, D hereinafter called the applicant, requesting the Court, `to call for and examine the record of the proceedings, judgment and decree of the High Court of Tanzania at Dar es Salaam Misc Civil Appeal No 8 of 1992 in order to satisfy itself as to the correctness of the adjudication in the aforementioned appeal and for an order nullifying the entire E proceedings in the said appeal on the grounds that the appeal was not properly before the Court and for an order that the respondent pays the costs of this application.'. The respondent to the application is one Wella A G. The application is supported by affidavit deposed to by Colman Mark Ngalo, learned advocate for the applicant. An affidavit in F reply deposed to by Francis Uzanda, learned advocate for the respondent, was subsequently filed. Thereafter a preliminary objection was filed on behalf of the respondent stating inter alia that: G

`... the application is incompetent as it does not fall within the provisions of s 4(2) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979, No 15 of 1979 as amended by s 2 of the Appellate Jurisdiction (Amendment) Act, 1993, No 17 of 1993, and as such the application be struck out with costs.' H

When the application came up for hearing on 18 August 1995, we heard arguments from both sides concerning the preliminary objection. As at some point of the hearing, learned counsel for the applicant relied on authority which he promised to produce later, we I decided, at the conclusion of the hearing, to reserve our final decision to a future date to be notified to the parties. We have now received the authority thus promised. It is Moses Mwakibete v The Editor-Uhuru and two A others (1).

From the affidavits filed in this case and the submissions made before us by counsel on both sides, there is no dispute that after the High Court at Dar es Salaam delivered its judgment on 1 July 1994 in Civil Appeal No 8 of 1992 between Halais Pro-Chemie B Industries Ltd and Wella AG, the applicant gave notice of appeal to the Court of Appeal against that judgment. The notice was lodged in the High Court on 11 July 1994 and was filed in this court on 14 July 1994. Thereafter on 9 September 1994, the applicant filed in the High Court an application for extension of time to apply for leave to appeal to this C court as required by law. That application was dismissed by the High Court with costs on 9 January 1993.

On 8 May 1995, that is about 10 months after delivery of the judgment sought to be revised, and five months after rejection of the application for extension of time, the D present application was filed in the court.

The issue before us is whether the present application is competent. Ever since this Court was invested with revisional jurisdiction by the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 as amended, the issue of competency appears to have been raised and decided upon in at E least two cases. The first one is Mwakibete's case, (supra). The second one is Transport Equipment Ltd v D P Valambhia (2). In Mwakibete's case, this Court stated, inter alia:

F `The revisional jurisdiction of this Court is provided by the Appellate Jurisdiction Act (Amendment) Act 17 of 1993-s 2(2) and (3). The jurisdiction in ss (2) is exercised either in the course of hearing an appeal or incidental to an appeal. Subsection (3) enables this Court to call for and examine the record of any proceedings before the High Court for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the G correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, order or any other decision made thereon and as to the regularity of any proceedings in the High Court ...

Before proceeding to hear such application on merits this Court must satisfy itself whether it is being properly moved to exercise its revisional jurisdiction. The revisional powers conferred by ss (3) were H not meant to be used as an alternative to the appellate jurisdiction of this Court, unless it is acting on its own motion, cannot properly be moved to use its revisional powers in ss (3) in cases where the applicant has the right to appeal with or without leave and has not exercised that option ...' I

Further on this Court stated:

1996 TLR p272

NYALALI CJ

A `In our view this Court can be moved to use its revisional jurisdiction under ss (3) only in cases where there is no right of appeal or where there is, it has been blocked by judicial process. Lastly where such right exists but was not taken, good and sufficient reason are given why no appeal was lodged.' B

In the case of Transport Equipment Ltd (supra) which appears to have been decided without reference to Mwakibete's case, this Court stated, inter alia:

`The appellate jurisdiction and the revisional jurisdiction of this Court are, in most cases, mutually C exclusive. If there is a right of appeal then that has to be pursued and, except for sufficient reason amounting to exceptional circumstances, there cannot be resort to the revisional jurisdiction of this Court. The fact that a person through his own fault has forfeited that right cannot, in our view, be D automatic right of appeal then he can use the revisional jurisdiction after he has sought leave but has been refused. However, the Court may, suo motu, embark on revision whether or not the right of appeal exists or whether or not it has been exercised in the first instance.'

We think that Mwakibete's case read together with the case of Transport Equipment Ltd E are authority for the following legal propositions concerning the revisional jurisdiction of the Court under ss (3) of s 4 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979:

(i) The Court may, on its own motion and at any time, invoke its revisional F jurisdiction in respect of proceedings in the High Court;

(ii) Except under exceptional circumstances, a party to proceedings in the High Court cannot invoke the revisional jurisdiction of the Court as an alternative to the appellate jurisdiction of the Court; G

(iii) A party to proceedings in the High Court may invoke the revisional jurisdiction of the Court in matters which are not appealable with or without leave;

(iv) A party to proceedings in the High Court may invoke the revisional jurisdiction of the Court where the appellate process has been blocked by judicial process.' H

The matter before us clearly does not fall under propositions (i), (ii) and (iii). Does it fall under proposition (iv)? Can it be said that the decision of the High Court dismissing the applicant's application for extension of time to apply for leave to appeal amounts to a I judicial process which blocked the applicant's move? We do not think so. Under the provisions of rr 8 and 44 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, A 1979, the Court of Appeal has concurrent jurisdiction with the High Court to grant extensions of time, and it was thus open to the applicant to come to the Court to seek extension of time after the High Court refused to grant it. Instead of doing so, the applicant now seeks to invoke the revisional jurisdiction of the Court. This move is B clearly misconceived. This position is underscored by the fact that the Notice of Appeal is still lying idle in this Court. The present application is obviously incompetent.

There is another basis which renders this application incompetent. As already C mentioned, this application for revision was made about 10 months after delivery of the judgment sought to be revised. In our considered opinion, this application is hopelessly time-barred. Under the provisions of s 3 read together with the First Schedule to the Law of Limitation Act, 1971 (Act 10 of 1971), specifically para 21 of the First Schedule, the D period within which an application like this one ought to have been instituted is 60 days. By any standard, a 10 months' delay is too late. Obviously this application is not properly before us and we are bound to strike it out with costs and we so order. E

Elections - Election petition - Jurisdiction of High Court to enquire into election of President - Jurisdiction ousted by article 41(7) of Constitution

1996 TLR p274

-Headnote

The petitioners sought declaratory orders in the High Court that the whole electoral A process nationwide be nullified; that the electoral Commission be reconstituted after some condition was fulfilled; that fresh general elections be held nationwide; that the third and fourth respondents be barred from participating in any elections for five years; and for ancillary relief. The petitioners contended that the misconduct complained of had B been made throughout the country and in almost every constituency; that the Presidential election was involved in the petition; and that once a Presidential candidate was declared elected, the jurisdiction of the Court was ousted.

The respondents raised preliminary objections that the application was incompetent C because the supporting affidavit did not conform with the provisions of order XIX rule 3(1) of the Civil Procedure Code; that the application should be dismissed because on a balance of convenience the second respondent would suffer greater injury than his adversaries; and that the petitioners had not shown that they were likely to succeed in D their petition. It was contended that the founding affidavit contained assertions of fact which were not in the deponent's personal knowledge.

Held:

(i) What was contained in the the founding affidavit was knowledge obtained by the deponent from other people who allegedly witnessed the misconduct. In those circumstances the affidavit did not comply with rule 3(1) which required E the affidavit to be confined to facts of which the deponent had personal knowledge. Where an affidavit was based on the deponent's beliefs, grounds for such beliefs had to be disclosed. Failure to disclose the source of information rendered the affidavit defective. The petition had to fail on this ground alone.

F (ii) Article 41(7) of the Constitution, in unambiguous language, ousted the jurisdiction of the High Court to inquire into the election of the President once the National Electoral Commission had declared the election results. If it was necessary to vest in the court powers it was asked to exercise, then Parliament should have made it clear in the Constitution in relation to this very important matter. G

Mackanja J:

This is an application of great public interest. We are asked by the applicants to order the Director of Elections, the second respondent, not to declare any results in the B on-going general elections pending the final determination of the petition which is the genesis of this application. We are also asked to order the said Director of Elections not to proceed with the conduct of elections in Dar es Salaam Region pending the C determination of the said petition.

The matters we are called upon to decide will be put in clearer focus after a brief reference to the pleadings in the petition. According to para 1 of the petition Mr Augustino Lyatonga Mrema, Professor Ibrahim Lipumba, and Mr John Cheyo, the first, second and D third petitioners, respectively, are presidential candidates for NCCR-MAGEUZI, CUF and UPD, in that order. Chief Abdallah Fundikira, Flora Kambona, Thomas Ngowi, Wilfrem Mwakitwange and Emanuel Makaidi, the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and the eighth petitioners are, in terms of para 2 of the petition, registered voters of political E parties listed as UMD, TADEA, NCCR-MAGEUZI, PONA and NLD. And the ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelth, thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth petitioners are, in terms of the third and the fourth paragraphs, officials of various ranks of NCCR-MAGEUZI, CUF, TADEA, F UPDP, NAREA and CHADEMA political parties. The petitioners are alleging a number of irregularities which, in their contention, have rendered the 29 October Presidential and Parliamentary elections not free and fair. They seek declaratory orders in the manner claimed in para 12 of the petition, namely that the whole electoral process nationwide be nullified; that the Electoral Commission be reconstituted after some condition is fulfilled; G that fresh general elections be held nationwide; that the third and fourth respondents be barred from participating in any elections for five years; the usual claim for costs; and the traditional prayer for any reliefs this Court may deem fit to award. H

In these proceedings Dr Lamwai and Dr Mvungi advocate for the petitioners. Mr Salula (Senior State Attorney), Mr Mwidunda and Mrs Katinda (State Attorneys) appear for the first and second respondents; Mr Kapinga appears for the third respondent and Mr I Muccadam appears for the fourth respondent. Although all the respondents were served with the chamber summons with which the application was instituted, Dr Lamwai has made it clear during his submissions that A the relief his clients seek is directed at the second respondent.

As is the practice of this court this application is supported by an affidavit. In this case the supporting affidavit was sworn by Willy Ringo Tenga, the Acting General-Secretary B of the NCCR-MAGEUZI. He appears in these proceedings as the ninth petitioner. He swears partly on matters which form the subject of the petition, and partly, according to para 4 of that affidavit, that they have been compelled to bring the petition at this stage on the following grounds: C

(a) that the misconducts complained of in the petition have been made throughout the country and practically in every constituency;

D (b) that the Presidential election is involved in the petition; and

(c) that once a presidential candidate is declared elected, the jurisdiction of this Court is ousted.

Dr Lamwai has argued very forcefully in support of the application, especially as regards E the evidential quality of the affidavit which supports the application. He contends that according to para 3 of that affidavit the elections were illegal and that they were not free and fair. He realises the normal practice of filing petitions under s 108 of the Elections Act but he contends that it became necessary for them to file a petition respecting the F entire presidential and parliamentary elections because art 41(7) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania ousts the jurisdiction of this Court once a presidential candidate has been declared a winner. If, therefore, the equitable order they seek from this Court is not issued, this Court will cease to have jurisdiction to hear any petition G against the President's election. When he was asked from what law this Court derives power to declare the general elections null and void in one petition, Dr Lamwai responded by saying that the Court derives that inherent power from s 2(2) of the H Judicature and Application of Law Ordinance which confers on this Court unlimited civil jurisdiction. Thus if, in his view, it is found that the whole general election is irregular, then the entire electoral process and its results should be nullified. He has drawn our attention to para 9 of the petition under which all the alleged irregularities are listed. At I some stage in his submissions, however, Dr Lamwai abandoned his application for a restraining order against the declaration of results involving parliamentary candidates because almost all the results are out by now. A So we are left with the President and the Dar es Salaam elections.

As regards the presidential elections, it is the contention of Dr Lamwai that it is not the intention of the Constitution, nor of the law, to close the Court's jurisdiction in declaring a B president who is not elected in a free and fair election. He therefore urged that the case be concluded before the general elections for Dar es Salaam Region are held, presumably if the petition will succeed. For if those elections are conducted before the determination of the petition, the whole proceeding will be superfluous. It is their C complaint that the President will not be elected lawfully during the ongoing elections and that the nation should not be compelled to live with a president who is forced upon it. So that the election of another president would rather be delayed as no vacuum in the presidency will thereby be created. The incumbent President has, according to Dr D Lamwai, and we think he is right, all the constitutional authority until he hands over the reigns of power to the presidential candidate who will be declared the winner. So His Excellency President Ali Hassan Mwinyi will be constitutionally in power until another president is elected. In a country which has respect for the rule of law, however, the E delay in electing another president should not be inordinate.

Now, there are several conditions-precedent before the applicants can succeed. Dr Lamwai has cited Ibrahim Mancharle Marwa v The Attorney-General and the Director of Elections (1) where this Court (Mapigano, J) recently held that one of those conditions is F that there must be a serious question to be tried on the facts alleged, and a probability that the plaintiff will be entitled to the relief prayed in the substantive claim. It is learned counsel's submissions that they have a strong case if they are given an opportunity to lead evidence in proof of the allegations which are contained in para 9 of the petition. G

It is the contention of the petitioners that the Dar es Salaam elections will be illegal because they contravene s 67(1) of the Elections Act in that the power to postpone an H election is conferred on a returning officer. Learned counsel's attention was drawn to the fact that the Dar es Salaam elections are not covered in the petition. He responded by saying that he has covered those elections in his arguments because his clients have as one of their prayers to have the National Electoral Commission dissolved and I reconstituted, which means that the Commission cannot therefore conduct the elections. We doubt if this contention is sound.

MACKANJA J

It is the further contention of Dr Lamwai that the petitioners will be prejudiced if the Dar A es Salaam elections are conducted because the irregularities they complain of in the petition have not been rectified. As well as that, it is the petitions' contention that parliamentary election results so far declared create prejudices in the electorate in B favour of the winning political party. Dr Lamwai has ruled out the possibility of the electorate being sympathetic with the political parties which appear not to have done well in the elections so far.

Mr Salula has opposed this application very strongly. He raised several grounds in C addition to the three preliminary objections which are contained in the affidavit of Alex Banzi who swore it on behalf of the second respondent. Two of the preliminary objections were abandoned after Dr Lamwai dropped his clients' prayer which related to an order which was intended to restrain the second respondent from declaring D Parliamentary election results. We had, however, directed earlier on in these proceedings that what was brought as preliminary objections could be pursued by Mr Salula in his submissions when arguing the main application for injunction. Suffice it to say at the moment that Mr Salula contends, on the basis of the remaining ground of E what constituted the three preliminary objections, that the application is incompetent because the supporting affidavit does not conform to the provisions of Order 19, Rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code. Secondly, he argues that the application should be dismissed because, on a balance of convenience, the second respondent would suffer F greater injury than his adversaries. Thirdly, that the petitioners have not shown that they are likely to succeed in their petition. We have decided to dispose of these issues one after another.

It is Mr Salula's contention that Dr Tenga's affidavit contains assertions of fact which are G not in his personal knowledge. He submits that the matters Dr Tenga deponed on could not have been in his personal knowledge because he was all the time around in Dar es Salaam. So that he could not, unless he was informed by someone else, have known that there was misconduct throughout the country and practically in every H constituency as he asserts in para 4(a) of his affidavit.

We agree with Dr Lamwai that what is contained in Dr Tenga's affidavit is evidence which cannot be assailed by learned counsel's statement from the Bar as Mr Salula does. But that is far from saying that the credibility of a deponent, much the same I position as applies to a witness, cannot be put under scrutiny. We know that like all human beings, Dr Tenga is not omnipresent. He has not sworn that he visited A every polling station, let alone every constituency, to see for himself and to acquire personal knowledge of the alleged misconducts. If he therefore came to know of any misconduct it must have been in his official capacity as Acting General Secretary of B NCCR-MAGEUZI. He therefore acquired knowledge of what is contained in para 4(a) of his affidavit from other people; from people who allege to have witnessed the misconduct, if any. We are satisfied that in those circumstances the affidavit does not conform to the clear provisions of Order 19, Rule 3(1) of the Civil Procedure Code which C lays down a mandatory condition that:

>
> (1) Affidavits shall be confined to such facts as the deponent is able of his own knowledge to prove, except on interlocutory applications on which statements of his belief may be admitted: D
> Provided that grounds thereof are stated.'

It is a statutory requirement that where an affidavit is based on the deponent's beliefs, grounds for such beliefs must be disclosed. So also, it is now settled law in this country that where an affidavit is based on information received from others, the source of that E information must be disclosed. Decisions of the Court of Appeal and this Court on this issue abound, but the most recent authority is the Court of Appeal decision in Salima Vuai Foum v Registrar of Co-operative Societies & Three Others (2). Their Lordships had this to say at p 4 of their typed judgment: F

> `The principle is that where an affidavit is made on (an) information, it should not be acted upon by any court unless the sources of the information are specified ...' G

Failure to disclose the source of information renders the affidavit defective. Since the affidavit which supports this application is incurably defective the application has been rendered incompetent. It would fail on that account alone. H

In his second ground Mr Salula submits that some of the applicants have not shown how they will be injured if their application for an injunction is refused. They are not vying for the presidency, he contends. It is his view that even those who are contesting in the presidential election cannot establish any injury. How do they know that they will lose in I the election before the Electoral Commission declares the results? So on a balance of convenience who, between the litigants, will be adversely affected? The second respondent contends that the A Government has already suffered greatly in financial terms. Hence Mr Salula submits that there is evidence from paras 10 and 11 of Alex Banzi's counter affidavit which shows that so far the Government has spent some forty billion shillings for running the B ongoing electoral process and that it has already spent another sum of over two billion shillings for the preparation of the Dar es Salaam rerun of general elections. We understand this plea as being a forbidding reason for another general election if the ones in progress are to be nullified and that, therefore, the second respondent will suffer C immense financial hardship were the electoral process to be reversed.

MACKANJA J

Dr Lamwai does not believe that the government has spent all that money as claimed by the second respondent. Even if the money was spent, he argues, it is like a person who D broadcasts grain seed on rocks; it will not germinate. He submitted, quite correctly, in our view, that democracy has a high price. We, however, do not agree with him on all the indicia of that price as regards our political circumstances. For he went on to make remarks which were loaded with veiled threats of violent repercussions if a decision was E not reached that will be acceptable to the followers of his clients. We have been alarmed by that remark but we will leave it rest there for the moment. We intend to declare our position on it at a later stage. We, however, agree with Dr Lamwai that it will be a black day indeed for this proud country if a government will be thrust upon the F nation through corrupt, fraudulent and rigged elections for fear of nullifying electoral results by reason only of money spent to conduct proved sham elections. Of course the onus to prove that the elections have been rigged in favour of any of the participating parties is upon whoever alleges so. In fact, this application is not the right opportunity at G which any alleged impropriety in the conduct of the general elections can be pursued. It is our considered opinion, nonetheless, that democracy which is expressed through free and fair elections at regular intervals, cannot be compromised for fear of expenses. General elections are a noble and worthy cause on which public funds and resources H must be put to use for the benefit of the public good. That is why it is absolutely necessary that money must be spent to prepare and conduct free and fair elections. It is for these reasons that we find Mr Salula's contention in this behalf wholly untenable. I

We have, earlier on in this ruling, observed that the petitioners contend that they have a good case and that, therefore, their prayer for an injunction restraining the second respondent from declaring Presidential Election A results and from conducting elections for the Dar es Salaam Region should be granted. In particular, they argue through their advocate that the court will cease to have jurisdiction in this matter as article 41(7) of the Constitution ousts that jurisdiction. Mr Salula concedes this constitutional limitation; he argued, however, that the petitioners B can question the validity of article 41 of the Constitution in Court. He concluded his submissions by inviting this court to consider decisions in other jurisdictions which are relevant to this case. He cited India as one of those jurisdictions. C

MACKANJA J

Mr Kapinga submits that the applicants have a duty to adduce evidence in proof of their claims. The only evidence there is, he observes, is the affidavit of Dr Tenga. We have no doubt Mr Kapinga is correct in his submissions. For as he contends, para 3 of that affidavit does no more than saying that: D

`... we are raising several grounds which go into showing the illegality of the whole electoral process and the fact that they were not free and fair.'

These are mere allegations which afford no proof to the claims. What is more they are E claims contained in an affidavit which has been found to be incurably defective. We do not see anything in Dr Lamwai's further submissions which tends to show an improvement in the evidential quality of that affidavit. Nevertheless it is imperative that whoever alleges the existence or the non-existence of a set of facts has a duty to lead F evidence in proof of those facts. This rule of evidence is equally applicable to applications such as this one. More importantly, courts in this country have always been cautious in their approach in considering applications for restraining orders such as is the case here. We think this is a sound approach because as it was observed in the G Indian case of Lakshminarasmhiah and Others v Yorakki Gowder, (3) at 312 while quoting an excerpt from 28 American Jurisprudence at 217,

H `... The extraordinary character of the injunctive remedy and the danger that its use in improper cases may result in serious loss or inconvenience to an innocent party require that the power to issue it should not be lightly indulged in, but should be exercised sparingly and cautiously only after thoughtful deliberation, and with a full conviction on the part of the court of its urgent necessity. In I other words the relief should be awarded only in clear cases, reasonably free from doubt, and, when necessary, to prevent great and

A irreparable injury. The Court should therefore be guided by the fact that the burden of proof rests upon the complaint (sic) to establish the material allegations entitling him to relief.'

This is a sound proposition of law which we intend to apply to the facts in this application. B

It has been argued for the applicants that there is justification for the injunctive remedy because their chances of success are overwhelming and that there is a serious question to be determined. Dr Lamwai has pointed out several instances which he considers pertinent, namely that elections were not conducted on one day; that up to C now elections are going on. Maybe it is so, but these are statements which were made from the Bar: They do not constitute evidence and the issues they raise do not appear in the affidavit which supports the application. We are, after a careful consideration of the law and the application as whole, satisfied that the applicants have failed to show the D existence of any serious question which is to be determined in the petition. And, in any case, we find it difficult to say affirmatively that the petitioners have a strong case in respect of which, on the facts, there is a probability of succeeding in their enterprise. We E base this conclusion on the following grounds: Firstly, the petitioners have not shown how, individually or as a group, they are going to suffer any mischief or any hardship should the presidential elections results be declared or should the Dar es Salaam Region elections be held. Secondly, no proof has been led to show that who, of the F presidential candidates, will win. Thirdly, as Dr Lamwai correctly pointed out at some stage in his submissions while referring to Marwa's case (supra), the applicants must show that on the facts alleged there is a serious question to be determined.

Finally we have to consider if we are vested with the necessary jurisdiction to issue the G equitable remedy in the form of a restraining order which is sought. We are fully aware that jurisdiction is a creature of legislation. Dr Lamwai referred us to s 2(2) of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance which gives to this Court unfettered civil jurisdiction in cases where there are no specific provisions. We agree with him in H principle generally, but we find specific provisions in the Elections Act, 1985 which confer jurisdiction on this Court in respect of specified electoral issues. On the other hand, however, article 41(7) of the Constitution is unambiguous language, ousts the jurisdiction of this Court to inquire into the election of the President once the National I Electoral Commission has declared the election results. It provides

A `41 ...

(7) Iwapo mgombea ametangazwa na Tume ya Uchaguzi kwamba amechaguliwa kuwa Rais kwa Mujibu wa ibara hii, basi hakuna Mahakama yeyote itakayokuwa na mamlaka ya kuchunguza kuchaguliwa kwake.' B

Whereas, therefore, article 41(1) to (7) of the Constitution makes provision for the election of the President, it does not grant jurisdiction to any court to inquire into the fact of that election. We are mindful of the fact that the duty of this Court is to interpret and to implement the law as we find it and not to question the validity of that law unless a C petition has been lodged in the appropriate manner, the purpose of which is to challenge the validity of a particular piece of legislation. It is therefore open to the applicants to see how they can challenge article 41(7) of the Constitution. In the meantime, it is our view that if it was necessary to vest in this Court powers we are asked to exercise, then D Parliament in its undoubted wisdom should have made it clear in the Constitution in relation to this very important matter.

Apart from the foregoing, reference was also made to the applicability of s 11 of the Government Proceedings Act. We have considered those provisions but we do not see, E in view of the above observations, the relevance of that piece of legislation to this application. We will not make any further comment on it.

There are three more issues we have to cover. One of them relates to Mr Muccadam's affidavit. We rejected that affidavit but we reserved our reasons. The following are our F reasons. It is undisputed that Mr Muccadam is an advocate of this Court and courts subordinate to it. He is empowered by Order 3, Rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code to appear and to act for litigants. In that connection he is empowered to swear affidavits in relation to matters which arise from the conduct of cases and on matters which are not G in the personal knowledge of his clients. As we have seen Order 19, Rule 3 requires that affidavits should be confined to such facts as the deponent is able of his own knowledge to prove; the only exception being on interlocutory applications where statements of belief may be admitted subject to the condition that the grounds for such H belief are given. In the instant case all matters on which Mr Muccadam deponed are in the personal knowledge of the fourth respondent's trustees.

We therefore rejected that affidavit because it did not conform to the statutory I requirements as laid down under Order 19, Rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code.

MACKANJA J

Another matter we have found necessary to address is Dr Lamwai's conduct in court. At A one stage during his submissions a question was put to him and he gave a very unexpected answer. He wanted the Court to tell him whether to answer that question in his capacity as a politician or as an advocate. We did not expect that Dr Lamwai, a B distinguished advocate of this Court, would have wanted to turn a session of the High Court into a political circus. We consider that attitude as being very discourteous to this Court and we do not expect him to behave in the manner he did.

What is more grave, however, is when he informed the Court during his submissions C that followers of his clients will not accept a decision which will not be in their favour! We consider those remarks to constitute an act of intimidation of this Court and an interference in the due process of the law. Those remarks will not in any way influence our decision one way or the other; we reaffirm our resolve to dispense justice fairly, D without fear or favour. In the same vein we decry and deprecate any act which, though unwittingly, will have the effect of inciting members of the public to disobey the constitutional authority of this Court. We are satisfied, however, that Tanzanians are a peaceful people who are sufficiently mature politically and who will not be influenced by E those unfortunate remarks.

For the reasons we have given, the application for the two injunctive reliefs, which are:

F (1) an order to restrain the second respondent, the Director of Elections, from declaring the Presidential elections in the on-going general elections, and

(2) an order to restrain the same second respondent from conducting the elections for Dar es Salaam Region; G is dismissed with costs.

The application before this Court is for stay of execution pending appeal. At the commencement of the hearing, Mr Majithia raised a preliminary point, that the application should be dismissed because when it was filed, there was no appeal. He referred the court to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Ujagar Singh v Runda Coffee H Estates Ltd (1) that `an appeal must be in being before an application for stay can be entertained by the Court appealed from'.

On his part, the applicant said that he could not file an appeal immediately because he had not been supplied with a copy of the proceedings and ruling of the Principal Resident Magistrate. He admitted that he only gave notice of appeal but he had not filed I an appeal.

MAINA J

There is no dispute that the applicant had not filed an appeal when he applied for stay of A execution. The application was made under Order 21 Rule 24(1) and Order 57 Rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, but as Mr Majithia submitted the Principal Resident Magistrate dealt with three provisions exhaustively. They are not relevant to the B application before this Court. Order 24 deals with stay of execution by a Court which issued the decree. The relevant provision on stay of execution pending appeal is Order 39 Rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code. I agree with Mr Majithia that a court cannot entertain an application for stay of execution pending appeal when no appeal has been C filed. But as the applicant pointed out, he filed the appeal immediately after he obtained certified copies of the proceedings and ruling of the district court

I think it is pertinent to state here that the dispute between the parties is over tenancy of premises which belong to the second respondent, the National Housing Corporation. D The applicant is in possession of the premises. He resists the eviction, and his appeal filed after this application was filed, is against the decision of the district Court which dismissed his application for stay of execution.

In my view, Order 39 Rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code which gives power to the Court E to grant a stay of execution pending appeal contemplates that an appeal has been filed and the appellant then seeks the order for stay of execution. If there is no appeal filed, there cannot be a basis to apply for stay of execution. It is true that the applicant filed the appeal after this application was filed. But as the Court of Appeal said in the case of F Ujagar Singh v Runda Coffee (supra) the Court cannot entertain an application for stay of execution where no appeal has been filed.
The preliminary objection is upheld, and the application is dismissed.

Bubeshi J: G

The petitioner Ernest Andrew Chitalika has filed this chamber summons for winding up of a company pursuant to s 163 as read together with ss 167(d), 172 and 173 of Cap 212. The grounds for this application are stated in the petition filed. I shall reproduce the salient features of the petition as follows: H

-- that the petitioner is one of the only two directors and shareholders who appear in this petition, of a company known as Safe Business and Construction Company Ltd which is to be wound up by this Court. I

-- that the respondent in this petition made impossible as to the

BUBESHI J

A existence of the said company by `disqualifying' the petitioner no longer to be one of the directors by his letter dated 22 June 1994 herein attached as Annexure A. In fact his utterance that the other director was disqualified led the respondent to hold privately the property of the said company, namely M/V Land B Rover 109-with registration No UJ 2203, concrete vibrator, vacuum pump and an electric drilling machine. These properties are valued at Shs 12,495,000/= in total.

-- that a demand note was sent to the respondent which so far has not been successful as expected, showing that the respondent is not ready to settle this C dispute out of Court. The said demand note was sent to the respondent by post under the power of attorney of one Joseph Mihayo, which were conferred to him, by the petition in this suit. A certificate of posting a registered mail is annexed hereto as Annexure B.

D -- that the petitioner avers that Safe Business and Construction Company Ltd, under the directorship of the petitioner and respondent in this petition, and the same persons are the only subscribers to the Memorandum and Articles of Association as verified by a letter by one Mahingile, a Senior Assistant Registrar of Companies-his letter is Annexure C. E

-- that the respondent unlawfully and contrary to the company's regulations, after he had written the aforementioned letter of disqualification, swindled company's fund to the amount of Shs 1,350,000/= without the consent of the petitioner as F shown by bank statements-Annexure D. The petitioner in this case cautioned the bank with a letter dated 1 December 1994-Annexure E.

-- that the company incurred some costs for the maintenance of the said M/V Land Rover UJ 2203 amounting to Shs 718,950/= as per Annexure F. G

-- that the cause of action has arisen in Dar es Salaam within the jurisdiction of this court; given the fact that the petitioner demands the respondent to surrender property of the said company valued at Shs 13,845,000/=. H

The petitioner is praying for

(a) an order of the court declaring the winding up of the aforementioned company;

I (b) an order that the said property as per paras 4 to 7 of the petition be surrendered by the respondent.

1996 TLR p289

BUBESHI J

A (c) an order that the respondent pays to the petitioner costs of this application.

-- an order that the respondent pays to the petitioner interest at the court's rate of interest on the decretal amount from date of filing of this petition to the date of full settlement. B

-- any other relief as this court may deem fit to grant.

Mr Lyimo, who appeared for the petitioner, argued with some force that the existence of the company is not untenable. It was Mr Lyimo's argument that this company had initially C two directors-the petitioner and the respondent; that these two subscribers are also the shareholders to the company. It was Mr Lyimo's contention that since the disqualification of the petitioner by the respondent these two partners cannot work together. That the respondent has locked the office and moved out some of the D company's properties to an unknown place. It was therefore impossible for the company to operate under prevailing circumstances. Mr Lyimo was of the view that under the prevailing circumstances of disharmony between the two directors, the operation of the E company is in serious doubt and therefore it should be wound up by order of this court. In the alternative, added Mr Lyimo, the Court should find that due to the disagreement between the two directors, the operation of the company has been rendered impossible, this court, in exercise of its discretion to wind up the company and appoint an official receiver or liquidator so that the same may perform his legal duties to creditors and/or F shareholders.

The respondent who preferred to argue his own case before the Court put up some forceful arguments to challenge the petition.

He stated before the Court that since the inception of this company there were four G original shareholders: Steven, Ainea, Francis and Ernest. The subscribers were to be two-the petitioner Ernest and himself. The respondent told the Court that the petitioner is the cause of all the problems now facing their company. That the petitioner had withdrawn some Shs 872,000/= which he has not accounted for and referred the court H to Annexure D. The respondent disputed the contents in statement Annexure F produced by the petitioner. The respondent informed the Court that contrary to what has been stated by the petitioner, it is the same petitioner who has dissociated from the company and formed his own company by the name of Eric Business and Construction I Company. He added further that the petitioner has banked a forged cheque in their account and a criminal case No 57 of 1994 is pending in Court. That the A petitioner is the one who has locked the office forcing the respondent to look for another venue from which to conduct their company business. As to the Land Rover the respondent said it was his own personal vehicle that he had left with the petitioner who took the registration card and added his (petitioner's) name. This matter also is still B pending in court with the registration card under police custody. The respondent also added that they have tried to summon the petitioner to come and attend to company's business but all in vain hence they sent him a message to hand over the office and C company's properties. To this request the petitioner has not responded. It was the respondent's submission that since theirs was a private company no winding up procedures can be applied--the respondent is relying on s 140 of Cap 212. He also argued that s 167(d) is confined to members of the company and not directors. The D respondent prayed for the dismissal of the petition as it does not apply in their case at hand.

In reply Mr Lyimo on behalf of the petitioner said that as far as this company is concerned it has only two directors and therefore any resolution that was passed to E disqualify the petitioner was therefore null and void.

Having heard the parties, it is evident that the two directors cannot work together any longer. The atmosphere within which they are supposed to transact business is tainted with accusations of fraud. Not only that but there are criminal charges filed in court against one of the directors and one wonders whether under such conditions, this F company can really survive.

The petitioner has asked this Court to wind up the company under ss 163, 167(d), 172 and 173 of Cap 212. Section 163 of Cap 212 reads: G

`163 The High Court shall have jurisdiction to wind up any company registered in the Territory.'

And again s 167 lays down circumstances in which a company may be wound up by H court. The petitioner has relied on s 167(d) of Cap 212 which reads:

`A company may be wound up by the Court if--

(a) . . . .

I (b) . . . .

(c) . . . .

A (d) the number of members is reduced, in the case of a private company below two or in the case of any other company below seven.'

Mr Lyimo arguing for the petitioner has submitted that as of 12 September 1994 their company had two directors: the respondent and the petitioner. Also these two persons B are also the subscribers to the memorandum and articles of association and therefore the shareholders and no change has been effected in the company since it was incorporated. This information was transmitted to the petitioner by the office of the Registrar of Companies. C

However this information is challenged by the respondent. According to him a certified board resolution was filed with the Registrar of Companies on 12 July 1994. The contents of the resolution were twofold-the disqualification of the petitioner as a director and the appointment of one Steven P Mgaya as a new Director. Pursuant to this D resolution, a demand note of 14 March 1995 was communicated to one Joseph Mihayo (purportedly holding a power of attorney on behalf of the petitioner) to inform him of the current situation. We have therefore two contradictory informations emanating from the office of the Registrar of Companies. While the petitioner is informed on 12 September E 1994 that he is still one of the directors to the company; the same office on 12 July 1994 acknowledged the change in directorship as presented by the respondent. It is therefore rather a confused state of affairs. And in that vein the respondent was correct to contend that their company has at the moment two directors-one Steven P Mgaya F having replaced the petitioner.

In terms of s 163 and 167(f) this court has the power to wind up any company registered in this country. Section 167(f) of Cap 212 reads: G

`167 A company may be wound up by the court if:

(a) . . . .

(b) . . . .

(c) . . . . H

(d) . . . .

(e) . . . .

(f) the court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up.'

In my considered view I think it would be just if this company is wound up because as I remarked earlier on in my ruling the former directors are not in talking terms so to speak; each director is accusing the other A director of one of the other; accusations of fraud are abounding. The petitioner is contending that he is still one of the directors while the respondent has submitted evidence that the petitioner's name was deleted and a replacement appointed. The office B of the Registrar of Company is also not very helpful in this regard by giving contradictory statements of affairs.

In the final event, this Court in exercise of its discretion under s 167(f) has deemed it fit to wind up this company and appoints the Registrar of Companies to act as the official receiver in terms of s 179 of Cap 212. C

I make no order as to costs.

Kannonyele J: C

The plaintiff entered into a written sale agreement with the defendant for the purchase of a hut at an agreed price of Shs 40,000/=. He, the plaintiff, paid the defendant Shs 20,000/= advance towards the agreed price of Shs 40,000/=. No time was fixed for final payment of the balance. Also no date is indicated in the sale agreement as to when the D same was made. In the written statement of defence, however, the defendant said the sale was in 1991 and her evidence at the trial, she said the sale was in 1990.

The contractual relations were strained following the plaintiff's delay in paying the defendant the balance of Shs 20,000/= as had been agreed between them. Despite E demands through agents, the plaintiff had not yet paid the balance by early 1993. The defendant herself approached the plaintiff to press her demands for the balance payment in the said early 1993. The plaintiff offered Shs 15,000/= which the defendant F refused insisting for full payment of the balance. Plaintiff would not pay it whereupon the defendant concedes (in her evidence at the trial) to have remarked that because of his delay, the plaintiff would now have to pay Shs 10,000/= more over and above the agreed sum of Shs 20,000/=. The plaintiff had not yet paid the amount by early 1993. The G defendant complained to the `Shekha' at Mwanakwerekwe. It was there revealed that the defendant had now decided to rescind the contract upon refund of the plaintiff's Shs 20,000/= advance payment. Plaintiff refused to receive the refunded money insisting for full performance of the contract. She instituted the case in April 1994. H

The defendant won the suit before the court of first instance where it was held that she was entitled to rescind the contract under the principle of unreasonable delay. She was required to refund the Shs 20,000/= earlier advanced to her. This judgment of the I primary court was reversed on appeal by the plaintiff to the district court. The latter held that the plaintiff was entitled to claim for performance on account of the renewed terms in early 1993-a reference to the Shs 10,000/= A additional demand at that juncture (supra). On a further appeal to the resident magistrate's court by the defendant, however, judgment of the primary court was restored. Still aggrieved, the plaintiff is now appealing to this court. The plaintiff's seven grounds of appeal may be summarised into three namely: B

1. That the resident magistrate erred for not taking into account the fact that the defendant had earlier refused Shs 15,000/= as part payment of the balance Shs 20,000/=.

C 2. That the resident magistrate erred in failing to take into account the fact that for two years the defendant was away to the rural areas without prior arrangements for payment through an agent hand, inapplicability of the principle of unreasonable delay, and

D 3. That it was in fact the defendant who is in fact guilty for breach of the contract.

There is no dispute as to formation of a contract between the parties in this case. Rather, it is what transcends after the formation of such contract. And precisely it is a E question whether there was frustrating delay by the guilty party herein to perform his part of the bargain. On my part, I subscribe to the view held by the trial court and the second appellate court that the delay of over two years for the payment of Shs 20,000/= only under the present economy was unreasonably frustrating and, therefore, that the F defendant was entitled to rescind the contract under the circumstances. After a delay of over two years, I think the defendant was entitled to refuse receipt of Shs 15,000/= in early 1993 which amount was less than the agreed sum. And when the plaintiff was still G not able to pay the contractual balance even a year later (in early 1994), I think the defendant was entitled to rescind the contract under the circumstances. Defendant's alleged absence to the rural areas could not have been a sufficient licence to non-payment or delayed payment where the defendant was sending her agent to receive H the amount due. As a defensive gesture, the plaintiff should have paid the claimed amount to the agent and then it would have been up to the defendant and her agent to sort their affairs assuming that the agent were to misappropriate the amount.

Regard is being had of the fact that in a contract for the sale of land or immovable I property as the case was here it would normally be presumed that time was not the essence of the contract. Indeed this is the more likely in this case where no reference at all was given to time, neither A time for entering into the agreement nor that intended for final performance. However, as already pointed out, a delay of over two years for the payment of Shs 20,000/= only is considered as unreasonably frustrating delay under the present economic situations B where even small children talk of business in terms of millions of shillings. True, the guilty party must not merely be late but be unreasonably so (British & Commonwealth Holdings Plc v Quadrex Holdings Inc

(1)). I accede to the view held by the trial court and the resident magistrate's court that the plaintiff was unreasonably late here in completing C his part of the bargain and the defendant was entitled to rescission of the contract after so much of the delay. Equity will not relieve a party the consequences of his own neglect (Caltex (India) Ltd v Bhaghwan Devi Marodia (2)).
I am satisfied that despite the practical problem which normally arises where time is not D originally intended to be the essence of the contract and yet one party becomes guilty of delay, this is a suitable case in which to apply the principle in Universal Cargo Carriers Corp v Citati (3) that where time is not of the essence, late performance will be ground for termination of the contract where it (ie the time) causes frustrating delay. E This, I think, should suffice to dispose of all the grounds of appeal lodged in this case.
This appeal is therefore dismissed in toto.
Appellant to have his costs in this court and in the courts below. F

The plaintiff company, a limited liability company, brought suit against the defendants for A a permanent injunction preventing them from putting the plaintiff into receivership and claiming damages for the advertising of the alleged fact of having been cut into receivership. The defendants raised two preliminary objections, viz that as a specified public corporation under the Public Corporations (Amendment) Act 16 of 1993, the B plaintiff had no locus standi to bring the suit, and, secondly, that having been put under receivership the plaintiff had no power to apply for the relief which it sought.
Held:
(i) In terms of the provisions of Act 16 of 1993 the plaintiff could not institute legal C proceedings on its own: it had to do so at least jointly with PRSC;

(ii) The authority cited by the defendants for the second proposition was no authority for saying that a company placed under receivershp could not challenge the appointment of a receiver or being placed under receivership. D

Mr Mziray for the applicant/plaintiff company.

Kyando, J:

The plaintiff, a limited liability company incorporated under the Companies Ordinance, F Cap 212, has brought a suit against the defendants seeking that they be restrained, by a permanent injunction, from putting it under receivership. It also claims damages for having been advertised as having been placed under receivership. Pending the determination of the suit it has filed an application in which it seeks that (1) the G respondents/defendants be restrained from `commission of illegal and unjustified acts of putting under receivership the applicant company'; (2) the respondents/defendants be restrained from harassing and/or interfering with the applicant's premises; (3) costs and (4) any other reliefs. H

The defendants, through their counsel, Mr Uzanda have raised points by way of preliminary objections to the application. These are that (1) Ubungo Garments Limited-in receivership-having been declared a specified Public Corporation under the Public Corporations (Amendment) Act (16 of 1993) have no locus standi to file the application I as the powers of the applicant/plaintiff company to institute or cause proceedings to be instituted have since been vested entirely in the Presidential Parastatal Sector Reform Commission (PSRC); (2) the A applicant company having been put under receivership by the National Bank of Commerce effective 17 November 1995 it (the applicant) has no power to apply for a temporary injunction against the National Bank of Commerce and for the receivers appointed by the said Bank. B

I do not think the second point raised by the respondents is tenable in the circumstances of this case.

Mr Uzanda relies on the following passage from the case of Moss Steamship Co v Whitney (1) in support of his arguments on the point: C

`The appointment of a receiver and manager over the assets and business of a company does not dissolve or amibilate the company, but it does entirely support the company in the conduct of its business and deprives it of all power to enter into contracts in relation to that business or to sell, D pledge, or otherwise dispose of the property put into the possession or under the control of the receiver manager. The business of the company is carried on by the receiver and manager, but not as the company's agent. He supersedes the company and the transactions are his transactions on E which he is personally liable with a right to be indemnified out of the assets of the company in respect of liabilities which he may incur.'

But, in my view and with respect, this passage applies to a situation where the appointment of a receiver has been made and there is no resistance or challenge to it. In F the instant matter the very appointment of a receiver by the second respondent is being challenged and this in fact is the suit which the applicant company has brought. The passage above is no authority for saying that a company placed under receivership cannot challenge the appointment of a receiver or being placed under receivership. That G passage, as stated already is therefore inapplicable to the present case and I overrule Mr Uzanda on the second point above.

Concerning the first point Mr Uzanda submits that under GN 400 of 1995 upon a company or corporation being declared a specific public corporation its supervision, H management and control vest in the Parastatal Sector Reform Commission. He sites ss 39, 40 and 43 of the Public Corporations (Amendment) Act, 1993.

The applicant company on the other hand relies on s 42 which provides: I `Notwithstanding that a public corporation may be declared a specified public corporation it shall be the duty of the Board of every Public Corporation. A

(a) to ensure that the corporation continues to carry out its functions in accordance with its statement of corporate strategy and

(b) to cooperate with and ensure that the officers and employees of such corporation cooperate with the commission in order to facilitate that the restructuring of the Public Corporation is B successfully achieved.'

So, according to the applicant/plaintiff company, declaration of a corporation as a specified public corporation does not affect its continuing to run its activities, until such C time that the said public corporation has been put under receivership. It is contended on behalf of the applicant/plaintiff company that supervision, management and control of the applicant company is not at all with the PRSC. `This is further, it is contended, proved' by the fact that to date the said Parastal Sector (sic!) has not issued a notice of D receivership to the applicant's company as it has been the case with other specified public corporations'.

Now it is undisputed that the applicant/plaintiff company has been declared a specified public corporation. Once a corporation has been so declared, its state in my view is E diminished, as Mr Uzanda rightly submits, it becomes subject to the supervision management and (though it continues to run it continues for the limited and specified purposes as provided for in s 42), and control of PRSC. It cannot on its own institute legal proceedings. It has to do so at least jointly with PRSC. This has not been done in F this case and I have, hereby do, uphold the first preliminary point raised on behalf of the respondents/defendants. The application for temporary injunction is struck out for incompetence, it having been led by a person with no locus standi to file it. The G respondents/defendants are awarded the costs of the application.

Magistrates' Courts - Jurisdiction - Jurisdiction of Resident Magistrate to hear and determine C case filed in a district court - Magistrates' Courts Act 1985 (Z)
-Headnote
A suit was instituted in the district court and dragged on for some months. Before it was determined the presiding district magistrate was promoted to resident magistrate. But D he proceeded hearing it and finally gave judgment, and ordered attachment of the appellant's property in execution of the judgment. The appellant filed an application objecting to the attachment of his motor vehicle in execution of the judgment. The application was dismissed by the same resident magistrate, formerly district magistrate. On appeal, the High Court raised the question of jurisdictional irregularity by the trial court(s): E
Held:

(i) Unlike Mainland Tanzania where a district magistrate and a resident magistrate at the same station normally have concurrent jurisdiction in respect of cases filed in the District Court at that station, in Zanzibar the two courts are different and distinct; F

(ii) Besides the differences in their original jurisdiction, district courts and district magistrates have appellate and revisional jurisdiction over primary courts, while resident magistrates and their courts have similar jurisdiction over matters from the district courts;

(iii) A resident magistrate has no original jurisdiction over cases instituted and registered in the district courts; G

(iv) The presiding magistrate in this case had no jurisdiction to proceed to hearing the case after being promoted to resident magistrate, and all proceedings after the date of promotion are a nullity for lack of jurisdiction. H

[zJDz]Judgment
Kannonyele, J: A

On 28 October 1993 one Abdulhalim Ali Khatib filed a suit against Jafar Ibrahim Abdalla claiming for Shs 800,000/= with interest plus costs of the suit. He also claimed for unliquidated damages connected with the claimed amount. The suit, civil case No 60 of 1993 was instituted in the district court of Zanzibar at Vuga. B

On 1 November 1993 one Mr Haroub Sh Pandu, learned District Magistrate mentioned the suit for the first time, with the parties in absentia. He ordered the parties to attend on 15 November 1993 for another mention of the suit. Mr Pandu, District Magistrate C continued to mention the suit up to 24 February 1994 with three more mentions in between. On 2 March 1994 the case was transferred to Adam S Abdulla, another learned District Magistrate before whom consent judgment was entered on 21 June 1994 in respect of Shs 700,000/= out of the total amount claimed. That notwithstanding, D the case dragged on up to 9 February 1995 before Adam S Abdullah (then still as a District Magistrate).

Mr Adam S Abdullah was promoted Resident Magistrate sometime between 9 February 1995 and 9 March 1995. Despite this new development, however, Mr Adam S Abdullah E continued to deal with the case on the latter date and beyond, now as Resident Magistrate. However, no formal transfer was made to transfer the case from the district court to the court of a Resident Magistrate. (Unfortunately there is no provision in the Magistrate's Court Act (No 6 of 1985) providing for the transfer of cases from the district F or any other court to any of the others as there is (s 33) in respect of cases instituted in a primary court).

On 31 August 1995 Mr Adam S Abdullah pronounced ex-parte judgment against the defendant in respect of Shs 100,000/= whose liability the defendant had contested. On 4 G September 1995 Mr S Abdullah Adam, the Resident Magistrate ordered for the attachment of the defendant's property in satisfaction of the total decretal amount which had now high-rocketed to some Shs 2,463,150/=. On 8 November 1995 another Muharami Mgeni Mzee filed a Miscellaneous Application No 22 of 1995 of the Resident H Magistrate's Court at Vuga in Zanzibar which was a carry forward of the proceedings in Civil Case No 60 of 1993 of the district court of Zanzibar at Vuga (supra). The parties, namely the plaintiff and defendant in District Court Civil Case No 60 of 1993 were made co-respondents in the Misc Application No 22 of 1995 of the Resident Magistrate's Court I at Vuga, Zanzibar filed by Muharami Mgeni. Muharami was objecting to the attachment or seizure of his property (a motor vehicle) in execution of the decree in Civil Case No 60 of 1993 of A the district Court of Zanzibar (supra). Adam S Abdullah, the Resident Magistrate heard and dismissed Muharami's application on 17 November 1995. This appeal is against the ruling of dismissal dated 17 November 1995 in RM's Misc Application No 22 of 1995 B (supra). At the hearing of the appeal on 22 March 1996, I drew attention of both counsel to the apparent jurisdictional irregularities. Both counsel then agreed not to argue the appeal but rather left it to court to deal with the matter in a manner as to it deemed proper. C

Reserving my reasons for a more opportune time, I this morning nullified and quashed for illegality all the proceedings as they were before the Resident Magistrate with effect from 9 March 1995. I now give those reasons.

Unlike the law on the mainland Tanzania where the term `district magistrate' includes a D resident magistrate (s 2 Act 2 of 1984), the situation in Zanzibar is different. So that whereas a district magistrate and a resident magistrate at the same station on the mainland normally have concurrent jurisdiction in respect of all cases filed in the district court at the station, the position is different here in Zanzibar. Here a district court and E magistrate are respectively quite different and distinct from those of a resident magistrate's court, as the case may be. In Zanzibar, a district magistrate is one appointed under s 10 of the Magistrate's Court Act 6 of 1985 and his jurisdiction is conferred under ss 11 and 13 whereas general powers are provided under ss 12 and 14 F of the Act (supra). These provisions are quite different and distinct from those under s 19 on the one hand and ss 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24 which respectively provide for the appointment, jurisdiction and general powers of a resident magistrate on the other. Apart from the respective distinct original jurisdictions of these magistrates and/or their courts, G separate appellate, revisional and supervisory jurisdiction are conferred on them respectively under ss 12, 13, 16 and 17 on the one hand and ss 24 and 25 on the other. So that whereas district courts and/or magistrates are conferred with appellate and revisional jurisdictions over cases from primary courts, resident magistrates and their H courts are vested with such powers (appellate and revisional) in respect of those cases from district courts. By these provisions therefore, cases originating from primary courts are only appealable to the district court and those from the district courts to the courts of resident magistrates. I

On the other hand, only cases from resident magistrates and their courts are directly appealable to the High Court whereas those from district courts can A only find their way to the High Court by way of second appeal thereto. This sufficiently accounts for the distinct and separate jurisdictions of district courts on the one hand and the resident magistrate's courts on the other. Briefly, ours in Zanzibar is a four-tier B system of courts from primary courts to the High Court whereas on the mainland Tanzania, it is a three-tier system of courts from primary courts to the High Court; it is a three-tier system by merging together district and resident magistrates' courts whose appeals both go directly to the High Court which is different from the situation in C Zanzibar. It is hoped that thenceforth magistrates in our jurisdiction will appreciate these jurisdictional distinctions particularly between district courts and magistrates on the one hand and resident magistrates and/or courts on the other.

Coming back to the instant case, what emerges from the foregoing is that resident D magistrates have no original jurisdiction over cases registered and instituted in the district courts. That means that if a district magistrate is promoted resident magistrate, he or she will cease to exercise original jurisdiction over those cases instituted in the district court even if he does not physically move from the station. In such situations, E such magistrates should only and within a reasonably short time after the promotion finish only those cases which have reached advanced stages, say only awaiting judgment and proximately like cases and not otherwise. Such magistrates should not unduly and unnecessarily too long cling on to cases over whose jurisdiction they have F since been divested by way of promotion. And when they cling on those cases which it is deemed necessary to do so, they should in such cases only handle the cases retaining their old titles. They should not in these cases assume their new titles to which G they have just been promoted because as such newly promoted magistrates they do not retain with them original jurisdiction over the lower court from which they have been elevated. Just as much as it would be odd for a newly promoted district magistrate to cling on his/her erstwhile primary court cases or a high court judge to cling on his/her H erstwhile subordinate court cases, so it should be for a newly promoted resident magistrate. He should fight shy to cling on his/her erstwhile district court cases.

All proceedings connected with this case but conducted before Adam the Resident Magistrate with effect from 9 March 1995 to end were all but a nullity and therefore of no I effect on account of illegality for want of jurisdiction. I quashed all such proceedings and declared the emergent orders therefrom as non-consequential. Instead the record is A remitted to the district to proceed afresh before another district magistrate who will proceed from where the matter had reached on 9 February 1995 before Mr Adam S Abdullah was promoted resident magistrate. It is so ordered. B

Civil Practice and Procedure - Parties - Joinder - Application for prerogative orders of certiorari and mandamus against Minister for Labour arising from reinstatement by Conciliation Board of employees whose services had been terminated - Application by employees to be joined as F co-respondents in application for prerogative orders unnecessary and dismissed

The original applicant, Tanzania Portland Cement Co Ltd, filed an application for prerogative orders of certiorari and mandamus against the Minister for Labour. The application arose from the reinstatement by the Conciliation Board of 17 employees G whose services had been terminated by the original applicant. In the present application the 17 employees sought to be joined as co-respondents in the original application against the Minister. The original applicant opposed the application on a number of bases including one that the present applicants' presence in the proceedings was unnecessary. H

Held:

(i) To join the present applicants as co-respondents would not affect the decision of the main application: the application was not directed at them as employees but was directed against the Minister's decision. Their presence was accordingly unnecessary in the proceedings. I

[zJDz]Judgment

Bubeshi J:

On 4 October 1994 Messrs Tanzania Portland Cement Company Ltd hereinafter to be known as the original applicant, filed through their counsel, Mr Mhina of the Legal C Consultancy Services Committee University of Dar es Salaam, an application for prerogative orders of certiorari and mandamus against the Minister for Labour. This application was supported by the affidavit of one Gervas Mazukulu Mbonimpa, an D administrative officer in the original applicant's company.

Before this application was heard the second applicants Pius Sangali and 16 others filed an application to have their names added as the second respondents in the first application. It is not in dispute that these second applicants were formerly employees of E the original applicant and had their services terminated by their employer effective 13 January 1993. Subsequently the Conciliation Board ordered the applicant to reinstate them. As the first applicant was not happy with that decision referred the matter to the Minister, who also confirmed the Board's decision. Hence the application by the first F application for prerogative orders of certiorari and mandamus.

Whilst that application was yet to be heard, the second applicants who were formerly employees of the first applicants filed an application to have their names joined as G second respondents-the first respondent is of course the Minister for Labour. The original applicants have forcefully hoisted this application.

In their submission the new applicants have annexed to their application an affidavit by one Pius Sangali, the relevant paragraphs read as follows: H

`2. That I am authorised by my fellow employees above to depose the facts of this case to which I am very conversant with.

4. That Pius Sangali and 15 others mentioned in para 3 of Mbonimpa's affidavit are the very I people mentioned in para 1 of this affidavit.

1996 TLR p305

BUBESHI J

A 5. That the relief sought in the application of Tanzania Portland Cement Co Ltd arises out of the alleged termination or dismissal of Pius Sangali and 15 others and there is common questions of law and fact which arise between the three parties.

6. That we are interested as to all the relief claimed in the application against the Minister for Labour. B

7. That in the circumstances, our presence in court as second respondents is necessary in order to enable the Court to effectually and completely adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the application by Tanzania Portland Cement Co Ltd.' C

This application has been preferred under s 95, Order 1 or 3, 4, 5, 8, 10(2), (4) of the Civil Procedure Code 1966.

At the outset the original applicants have raised several preliminary objections. It may be D pertinent to state from here. Mr Mhina learned counsel for the original applicants:

(a) That Mr Mrugaruga an officer in the office of the Labour Commissioner has no corus standi in this present application. That the Labour Commissioner E appearance is restricted in matters of appeal under the Employment Ordinance. Mr Mhina also attacked the presence of Mr Mrugaruga contending that there has been no satisfactory evidence of due authorisation from the F instant applicants. And as a result the belated power of attorney that was filed in court ex-post facto cannot cure the irregularity of incompetence as it was defective, it had no stamp duty and also the applicants themselves do normally attend court.

(b) The application by the instant applicants is improperly before this court for want G of payment of court fees. The instant applicants have relied on s 143 of the Employment Ordinance as exempting them from payment of court fees. Mr Mhina for the original applicants is contending that since the instant applicants chamber summons was brought under the provisions of the Civil Procedure H Code the reliance of exemption under s 143 of the Employment Ordinance was out of place.

Third objection is grounded on the view that there is no common question of law or fact that could arise if separate proceedings were brought against the Minister and the I instant applicants, in terms of Order 1 Rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966. According to Mr

BUBESHI J

Mhina the instant applicants have made a bare allegation in para 5 of their affidavit but A questions of fact do not normally arise in proceedings respecting prerogative orders. In addition thereto these common questions of law as would affect both the Minister and the instant applicants have not been spelt out. B

The fourth objection raised by the original applicants is that the orders of certiorari and mandamus which the original applicants have applied for are in the nature of public law remedies. They do not lie against individuals as such but against public bodies and officers exercising statutory fractions. C

The fifth objection raised by the original applicants is the instant applicants cannot at this juncture seek to be joined as co-respondents when leave for application for orders of mandamus and certiorari was granted by this court to the original applicant on 15 D September 1994. And it was granted on the understanding that there are mable issues of law engaging the original applicant and the Minister. The instant applicants are strangers to the said leave. Hence the instant applicants endeavour to join the proceedings is belated, an after though incompetent and with due respect a product of misguided advice. E

The seventh objection raised by the original applicants challenged the sworn affidavit by Pius Sangali particularly paras 5, 6 and 7 thereto as containing the kind of matters that a layman can be expected to have personal knowledge as claimed in para 9 of the affidavit. F

All in all the original applicants pray that this court dismiss the instant applicants with costs.

In their replies the instant application have replied to the preliminary objections as under.

It is their submission that there are common questions of law and facts which arise G between the three parties following the termination of the applicants Pius Sangali and 16 others. That the applicants believe that their presence in court as co-respondents is necessary in order to enable the court to effectually and completely adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the application by Tanzania Portland Cement Co Ltd. H The applicants contend that Mr Mrugaruga acting through the Labour Commissioner is duly authorised to represent the employees in court. They place reliance on the provisions of ss 8 and 141(1) of Employment Ordinance Cap 366 as amended by Act No 5 of 1969. Also under s 95, Ord 111 Rule 1, 2(a) and 6(2) of the CPC 1966. That Mr I Mrugaruga is holding the powers of attorney of Pius Sangali and 16 others and that a certified copy of the power of attorney was filed in court as required by Order 111 Rule A 6(2) of the Civil Procedure Code 1966. The stamp duty was duly affixed to the instrument that was registered on 31 January 1995 by the Registrar of Titles.

Mr Mrugaruga has sought to distinguish their case with the case of Naiman Moiro v B Naicejlet Zablon (1) in that of the 17 donors of powers of attorneys not all are present in court. Therefore Mr Mrugaruga is presenting the instant applicants who are not in court.

Mr Mrugaruga is also challenging the application for orders of certiorari and mandamus on the basis that it is immature and improperly brought before the High Court because C the differences, questions or disputes arising from summary dismissal had first to pass through various stages before they can be entertained by the court.

At the very outset I wish to make it clear to the parties and in particular the instant D applicants that I am at this moment and time dealing with the preliminary objections as raised by the original applicants. The outcome of this shall determine whether the application for the prerogative orders shall be heard on merits or not. In that event I shall not attempt to answer Mr Mrugaruga's submissions on the merits of the application by the original applicants. E

Likewise Mr Mrugaruga submitted that it was their sincere belief that the instant applicants were exempted from payment of court fees in terms of s 143 of Employment Order Cap 366.
As explained earlier in my ruling the original applicant M/S Tanzania Portland Cement Co F Ltd had through their advocate Mr Mhina applied for and was granted leave to apply for prerogative orders of certiorari and mandamus. And indeed it was granted on the understanding that there are triable issues of law engaging the original applicants and the Minister. And indeed as submitted by Mr Mhina the instant applicants are strangers G to that leave and can it be said that there exist triable issues of law concerning the original applicants and the instant applicants? The instant applicants contend that there are and that para 5 of their affidavit bears them out. Paragraph 5 of Pius Sangali's affidavit filed in this court in support of an application to add the names of the second H defendant reads:

`5.That the relief sought in the application of Tanzania Portland Cement Co Ltd arises out of the alleged termination or dismissal of Pius Sangali and 15 others and there is common questions of I law and fact which arise between the three parties.'

BUBESHI J

I have had time to study their written submission but could not stick a finger on the A same. In the same vein I would uphold the original applicants last preliminary objection that the deponent was duly bound to disclose his legal source of information regarding his evokement in para 5. Non-observation of such rules may lead the Court to declare an B affidavit defective and hence no legal consequence.
Prerogative orders are public remedies touching upon questions of law. In this particular case the original applicants have applied for the prerogative orders of certiorari and mandamus in relation to the decision of the Minister for Labour dated 27 June 1994 C which enjoins the original applicant to re-instate the instant applicants. In my humble view the application filed by the original application challenges the Minister's decision to re-instate the instant applicants. Both the relief which are being sought and the grounds D on which the said reliefs are also sought would ultimately affect the instant applicants in one way or the other. One respondent here may be the Minister for Labour who is no doubt a public body for the purposes of this application. And orders sought for cannot be directed at the instant applicants but the public body in this case the Minister in relation E to his decision to reinstate the instant applicants. Can it seriously be argued that to join them as co-respondent in this application would affect the decision of the main application? To that question my considered view would be definitely no. And I say so F because the application is not directed at them as employees but the application is so directed against the Minister's decision. Hence their presence in court as co-respondents is not necessary that they will be affected by the decision of the application once it has been determined. In this regard I would hold that the decision G reached by my brother Judge Kyando in Tanzania Portland Cement Co Ltd v Mwihechi and Minister for Labour (2) has my full support. That application is almost on all forms with this instant application save that in the former the applicants had joined Mwihechi a former employee as a first respondent, whereas in the latter application the employees H are praying to be joined as co-respondents.

There were other preliminary points which had been raised by the original applicants. Such objections lay in the field of non-payment of the requisite court fees, Mr Mrugaruga appearance on behalf of the applicants including the power of attorney assigned to him I by the applicants. It was Mr Mrugaruga's submission that:

A `the employer does not like to see the face of Mr Mrugaruga in this case and that the applicants are prepared to go it alone or engage another representative if the Court so orders.'

Before I conclude I think it is the duty of this Court to put this matter straight with due respect to Mr Mrugaruga. I did not get the impression that the original applicants did not B wish him to appear in this case. And Mr Mrugaruga ascertains that his appearance in this case should not be the reason for dismissing the application, is in my humble view it should not. I am satisfied that each party has submitted some valid arguments to which I am highly indebted to. C

However, since I am inclined to uphold the preliminary objections raised by the original applicants I have not deemed it necessary to recount each and every objection. Suffice it to say I have after giving this matter a serious thought opined that the instant applicants presence as co-respondents is not necessary and in that regard I would dismiss their D application with costs.

CIVIL APPEAL NO 39 OF 1994 G

Contract - Fraud - Effect - Judgment obtained on basis of fraud by one of the parties - Decision set aside on appeal

-Headnote

The appellant company was the defendant in a suit in the High Court in which the respondent sued it for breach of contract arising from the purchase of consignments of I rice. The Court held that the ultimate oral agreement between the parties was an agency agreement and that the appellant, on whom the onus had been placed, had not discharged the onus of proving A that it had fully paid the contract price by showing that it had re-sold the suit rice to the respondent. On appeal the appellant contended that the judgment had been obtained by fraud and that if the trial judge had been in possession of all the information the decision would not have gone against the appellant. B

Held:

(i) It was clear that the learned judge was not aware that the respondent had concealed that 63,600 bags out of 74,000 bags of rice had been sold and that proceeds of the sales had not been accounted for to the appellant and the fraud had directly affected the reasoning of the court. C

(ii) The fraud, concealment and deception on the part of the respondent entailed that the judgment so obtained could not stand.

[zJDz]Judgment

Ramadhani, JA:

The appellant company, Saidi Salim Bakhressa & Co Ltd, which was the defendant, was adjudged by Mapigano, J to pay US $1,847,527,32 to the respondent company, VIP F Engineering and Marketing Ltd, which was the plaintiff. The appellant is aggrieved by that decision and hence this appeal.

Three different suits have been filed between these two parties on different aspects of basically the same subject matter. In the Court of Appeal there have been three G applications apart from this appeal. It is, therefore, going to be necessary at certain junctures in this judgment to pause and give some brief account of the other two suits or the three applications as the case may be.

The appellant concluded two contracts with the respondent under which the appellant H was to buy from the latter some rice described as `Vietnamese Long Grain White Rice 15 per cent broken'. The rice was packed in bags of 50 kgs and labelled `VIP Long Grain White Rice'. So, the rice has interchangeably been referred to by either of the above two descriptions. I

The first contract was signed on 30 November 1992 for 5,000 metric tons (MT) to be delivered in Dar es Salaam on 10 January

1993. The total price was US $1,650,000 payable in Tanzanian shillings. Upon signing A the contract, the appellant was to pay US $330,000. However, the consignment did not arrive until 15 March 1993, that is, two months and a few days after the agreed date. At that time, also, the appellant had only paid a total of US $293,355.44, that is, $36,644.56 short of the amount agreed on. It is important to note that both parties were in breach. B

Curiously enough, despite what has been narrated above, the parties entered into a second contract on 26 January 1993, that is some 16 days after the failure to deliver the rice under the first contract. The second contract was for the sale of another 5,000 MT C of similar rice but at a higher price of US $1,750,000. Delivery was to be on 25 February 1993.

Both lots of rice were transported in the same ship which arrived in Dar es Salaam on 15 March 1993. On that day some misunderstanding arose between the parties which D was resolved by a third agreement which will be referred to in this judgment as the oral agreement. The existence of the oral agreement has never been disputed. The parties, however, do not agree upon the content of the oral agreement.

Before we proceed, we want to make it abundantly clear that both parties have breached E the two written contracts. So, it is idle for either party to accuse the other of being guilty of breach. In our view the breaches were condoned and hence the conclusion of the second written contract and the oral agreement.

Both parties agree that the first lot of 6,047,05 MT of rice was taken by the appellant and F that the suit rice was taken by the respondent. The dispute surrounding the suit rice is as to the capacity in which the respondent took that lot. Did he take it as an agent of the appellant or as an owner of the lot? That was the issue before Mapigano, J who then had to decide what was owed and to whom. G

Before us and on behalf of the appellant were Messrs Said El-Maamry, M Chandoo and Kisusi, learned advocates. The respondent had the services of Mrs M K Rwebangira and Capt A K Kameja, learned advocates.

With respect to the suit rice, as already said, the dispute is in what capacity the H respondent handled it. The appellant claims that it sold back that lot to the respondent, that is, the respondent was the owner. The respondent, on the other hand, maintains that it was the agent of the appellant. All this boils down to what were the terms of the oral agreement. I

It is necessary to explain briefly how the oral agreement was disclosed in this litigation.

RAMADHANI JA

The respondent in the plaint mentioned the two written contracts, when they were A entered into and the schedule of payment, but said nothing about the delivery date. The plaint went straight to mention that the appellant took delivery of the rice on 15 March 1993 and that the plaintiff (the respondent) claims US $1,882,391.66. In the WSD the B appellant disclosed the existence of the oral agreement and alleged that the suit rice was resold to the respondent at a price of Shs 8,400/= per bag of 50 kg and that the proceeds were to be deducted `from the funds of the plaintiffs'. In the reply to the WSD the respondent denied the resale and alleged that there was an agency agreement and C that the respondent was the agent of the appellant for selling the suit rice.

The learned judge then framed the first issue:

> `Whether the oral agreement entered by the parties on 15 March 1993 was an agency agreement, as D averred by the plaintiffs, or an agreement for resale, as averred by the defendants.'

One wonders with Mr Chandoo why such an important material fact of agency was not pleaded in the plaint. This is especially so when the respondent was aware of the appellant's assertion of resale since 6 May 1993 at the meeting in the office of Dr Idris E Rashid (PW2) then of the NBC. Why was that point not pleaded in the plaint drawn on 15 July 1993?

Be it as it may, the learned judge held that `where the execution of a document and receipt of consideration are admitted, but satisfaction or discharge of the debt is F pleaded, the onus of proving the plea is on the defendant, which gives the defendant the right to begin'.

So, the appellant, though it was the defendant, started to prove its case that it had fully paid the contract price by showing that it had resold the suit rice to the respondent. At G the end of the day the learned judge came to the conclusion:

`I have considered and weighed the evidence carefully and in the last analysis I consider that the scales are evenly balanced. The rule is that where the evidence on both sides is equally balanced, H the onus is not discharged. The defendant on whom the onus has been placed must accordingly fail. The suit thus succeeds.'

It was thus held that the oral agreement was an agency agreement. I

The appellant is aggrieved and has three grounds on this aspect of how the issue of oral agreement came up in the pleadings and how it was disposed of. In ground five the appellant submits that the reply of the respondent to A the WSD ought to have been struck out because leave of the Court was not sought in accordance with Order 8 Rule 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. Alternatively, in ground six, the appellant seeks to expunge para 8 of the reply which introduced the B notion of agency to the oral agreement for being inconsistent with the plaint. If either of the two grounds succeeds, then the issue of the appellant being with the burden of proof would not arise. So, in ground two the appellant argues that the learned judge erred in shifting the legal burden of proof to the appellant and that the plaint ought to have been dismissed for lack of proof. C

In the alternative the appellant submits in ground seven that if there was agency it has not been proved that there is a custom requiring the principal to compensate the agent for losses incurred in selling the rice. Again, in ground eight the appellant contends that the respondent is guilty of breaching the alleged agency agreement and so they should D not have succeeded.

However, in the first ground, the appellant submits that there was fraud, deception and concealment of facts on the part of the respondent which misled the High Court to deciding in its favour. This contention is very serious and, if upheld, it would render the E other grounds superfluous. So, we intend to deal with it first.

The contentions in ground one of the appeal directly concern the order by Mackanja, J in Misc Civil Application No 117 of 1993. It is therefore necessary to deal with that application in order to appreciate the contention in ground one of the appeal. F

While the main suit, Civil Case 112 of 1993, the subject of this appeal, was in progress the respondent opened Misc Civil Application 117 of 1993 on 8 September 1993 seeking for an order to dispose of the suit rice by sale. The picture painted before Mackanja, J was that the suit rice was in the physical possession of the respondent, that not a single G bag had been sold, that its continued existence caused inconvenience to the owners of go-downs and that it could deteriorate. Mackanja, J ordered sale by auction. The learned judge also ordered that the proceedings in Civil Application 117 of 1993 form part of Civil Case No 112 of 1993. H

Let us pause here and digress a bit. The last quoted order of Mackanja, J indicates what ought to have been the case. Rather than there being a separate application for the sale of the suit rice there ought to have been an application for interlocutory orders within the main suit. We wonder why the respondent chose to multiply application unless it was to I confuse the Court and thereby derive some advantage.

RAMADHANI JA

To go back to the subject, after the order of Mackanja, J the Court broker advertised in A Uhuru indicating that the suit rice was in Mwanza, Kigoma and Bukoba and showed how much was where. That made the appellant suspicious and caused it to make enquiries at the Tanzania Harbours Authority, as a result of which it applied to this Court to take B additional evidence under Rule 34(1)(b) in Civil Application No 18 of 1995. That application was granted.

The appellant filed affidavits by 16 different persons adducing additional evidence. The respondent, on the other hand, filed nine counter-affidavits, seven of which were sworn C by Mr J B Rugemalira (PW1) in reply to seven additional witnesses of the appellant. Two other persons filed a counter-affidavit each corroborating two counter-affidavits of Mr Rugemalira.

The picture painted by the additional evidence is so vivid and revealing. The whole of the D rice which was brought was 200,000 bags of 50 kg each. The appellant took possession of 120,911 bags. As 721 bags were shortlanded, the respondent took 78,360 bags. Out of that lot 74,000 bags were sent up-country. So, the picture that the 10,400 bags which the Court broker found up-country was the entire consignment sent E there was smashed to pieces. The broker was only told of suit rice being sent to Bukoba, Mwanza and Kigoma. He was not told that 16,000 bags were sent to Arusha and that 10,000 bags were sent to Mtwara. All the bags sent to those two towns were completely sold, contrary to the story given to Mackanja, J that not a single bag had been F sold. So, a total of 48,000 bags were sent to Bukoba, Mwanza and Kigoma. Most of those bags were sold except the 10,400 bags which were found by the Court broker.

Another revelation is that from Mtwara the respondent received Shs 78/= million while G from Kigoma he got Shs 15/= million. Until the time Mr Rugemalira swore his counter-affidavit on 3 August 1995, the respondent was still awaiting Shs 17,754,000/= from Kigoma. The amounts realised from the sales in the other places were not given. H

Mr Rugemalira in his seven counter-affidavits admits what has been stated above. He explained that the whole of the suit rice sent to Arusha and Mtwara and those bags which were sold in Bukoba, Mwanza and Kigoma were constructively transferred back to Dar es Salaam. Thus, Mr Rugemalira deposed, more bags were found by the Court I broker in Dar es Salaam than what should have been. The broker found 68,659 bags instead of 4,368.

RAMADHANI JA
Mr Chandoo submitted that all the information given above was within the full knowledge A of the respondent who deliberately decided to conceal it. So, the learned advocated contended, Mackanja, J decided the application before him without being fully seized of all the facts and that the respondent obtained the order in his favour by fraud, deception B or concealment. Mr Chandoo cited Meek v Fleming (1) as authority for the proposition that a decision so obtained is void and cannot be allowed to stand.

Capt Kameja started by submitting that the accusation of fraud is misconceived. He contended that if there was any fraud it was committed before the High Court and so it C cannot be a ground of appeal. The learned advocate submitted that what the appellant should have done was to file a fresh suit in the High Court to set aside the judgment allegedly obtained by fraud. Alternatively, Capt Kameja submitted, the respondent could D have asked the High Court to review that decision. He cited our decision in Transport Equipment Ltd v P Valambhia (2) as authority for that submission.
Secondly, Capt Kameja contended that the rice sold by the Court broker was the suit rice. He reminded the Court that the suit rice was described as `Vietnamese Long Grain E White Rice 15 per cent Broken' and that it was placed in bags inscribed `VIP Long Grain White Rice'. Capt Kameja pointed out that the Court broker auctioned `3952.95 metric tons of VIP Long Grain White Rice'. He argued that what was auctioned was the suit rice.
The learned counsel conceded that some of the suit rice sent up-country was sold F before the auction but he reiterated the argument of constructive transfer. Capt Kameja explained that as the respondent had received his own 14,000 MT of similarly described rice in Dar es Salaam, then for every bag that was sold up-country the respondent allotted another bag in Dar es Salaam from his lot and gave it to the broker to auction. G That, the learned advocate said, is what they meant by constructive transfer.
Thirdly, Capt Kameja contended that there was no concealment deliberately or otherwise, because the respondent had no duty or obligation to disclose that information. This, he said, was because of the matter in issue in the suit before Mapigano, J; agency H or resale. The learned advocate submitted that where the rice was and how much was realised from the sales pertained to the manner of executing the agency relationship and not whether there was agency or resale. In addition to that Capt Kameja submitted that the appellant knew or had opportunity to find out those facts now claimed I to have been concealed. He pointed out that at the hearing of the suit Mr El-Maamry cross-examined PW3 on the sale of the suit rice up-country. A The answer, he said, was `I do not know if any bag has been sold by our sub-agent. PW1 probably knows.'. Capt Kameja argued that Mr El-Maamry did not pursue the matter any further. He pointed out that the learned advocate ought to have recalled PW1 B for further cross-examination on that. This, Capt Kameja submitted, tallies with the stand taken by the appellant that there was a resale for then where the rice was and how much had been realised was of no concern to the appellant.

Alternatively, Capt Kameja argued that even if thee was concealment of such facts there C was no miscarriage of justice occasioned. The facts said to have been concealed, the learned advocate contended, would not, if known, disprove agency but would go to show that there was a breach of agency duties by the respondent. Capt Kameja argued that D as the issue was not whether there was breach or not, then the concealment, if any, did not occasion injustice to the appellant. The learned advocate submitted that Meek v Fleming (supra) is distinguishable as the matters concealed in that case, unlike in the present one, were directly in issue.

We listened to Capt Kameja anxiously but at the end of the day we were not persuaded E by his arguments. It is not easy to see why the respondent should take this implacable stand in the veritable presence of that which they deny. The ingenuous coinage of the concept of constructive transfer betrays them, to say the least.

A Concise Law Dictionary by P G Osborn defined `constructive' as: F

> `A right, liability or status created by the law without reference to the intention of the parties; eg a constructive trust or constructive notice.' G

We are not aware that the law has created such `a right, liability or status' as constructive transfer. But we are also not saying that the categories of `constructive' are closed. However, we have not been persuaded to canonize this novel concept because it departs from the general basis of the presently known concepts of constructive. The H basis of the existing concepts is that the subject must exist and then the law merely construes its implication. There has to be malice, for instance, which the law will then imply to have been directed against the unintended victim in constructive malice. But here what was said to be constructively transferred was the rice which had already been I sold and so was not existing. We do not think that this point should detain us.

RAMADHANI JA

We are of the opinion that the rice sold by the Court broker was not the suit rice except A for the 10,400 bags found up-country. This fact was concealed from Mackanja, J. Since the learned judge ordered that the proceedings before him, Civil Application No 117 of 1993 should form part of the proceedings of Civil Case No 112 of 1993 before Mapigano, J, the subject of this appeal, then the deceit was carried over. However, that B does not portray the whole situation. Mr Masilingi, in his written submission to Mapigano, J on behalf of the respondent, said `suit rice was not sold until the plaintiff obtained an order of the Court'. That, with the hindsight, is patently false. C

Mapigano, J also in his judgment said:

> `They (respondents) took 3952.95 metric tons of the goods and sent part of the lot to their sub-agents at Mwanza, Bukoba and Kigoma. But the whole goods consigned to the sub-agents were not sold. D The sub-agents reported that the price of Shs 8,400/= was no longer available. This situation was occasioned by an influx of the same goods which other traders had imported and released into the market at Shs 8,000/= per 50 kg. This information was relayed to

DW1 and he was asked to reduce the price to Shs 8,000/=. But he insisted upon a price of Shs 8,400/='. E

The learned judge did not know that out of 78,368 bags taken by the respondents, 74,000 bags were sent up-country. Had he known that he would not have said a `part of the lot' was sent to sub-agents. The learned judge was also not aware that apart from F the three towns he named there were Arusha and Mtwara which had received a total of 26,000 bags. Then he was taken for a ride when he gulped hook, line and sinker the concoction that `the whole goods consigned to the sub-agents were not sold'. The G respondent concealed from him the fact that 63,000 bags out of 74,000 bags had been sold and that proceeds from the sales have not been accounted for to the appellant, the so-called principal.

So, the deceit and/or the concealment though perpetrated before Mackanja, J directly affected the reasoning of Mapigano, J. We entertain no doubt that if Mapigano, J was H seized with the truth he would not have held that the scales were evenly balanced and that the appellant had failed to prove his case. The new evidence would undoubtedly have tilted the scales in favour of the appellant. I

We agree with Mr Chandoo that the facts revealed go to show the conduct of the respondent with resect to the suit rice. That conduct is material in determining the issue of whether the respondent was an agent of the A appellant or was the owner of the suit rice, that is, there was a resale.

We are satisfied that there was fraud, concealment and deception on the part of the respondent. It is trite law that judgment so obtained cannot be allowed to stand. B

However, there is a question posed by Capt Kameja and that is whether it is proper for this Court to annul the judgment of the High Court on the grounds of fraud committed in the High Court. This present appeal is distinguishable from that of Transport Equipment C Ltd v Valambhia (supra). In that appeal there was mere allegation of fraud. Here leave was asked for and was granted, as already said, to adduce additional evidence which has revealed beyond doubt, and the respondent has conceded as much, that material facts which were within the knowledge of the respondent were concealed. The D respondent could have sought a reference from the decision of the single judge allowing additional evidence. That was not done. Additional evidence is now before this Court. So, this Court can decide the issue. E

The decision of Mapigano, J that:

> `There will, therefore, be a decree granted to the plaintiffs for US $1,847,527.32, payable in Tanzania Shillings at the National Bank official rate ruling on the day of payment, less the net amount to be realised from the auction sales; for interest at the bank rate from 15 March 1993 until final payment; and for costs ...' F is set aside because it was obtained by fraud.

Now we go to the 6,074.05 MT of rice whose ownership is not disputed and so the appellant is duty bound to pay for it.

The respondent in his plaint said that the appellant on 15 March 1993 took delivery of the G 10,000 MT of rice worth US $3,400,000. The respondent then went on to describe the terms of payment as being 20 per cent of the contract price on signing of the contract, 30 per cent on the arrival of the ship in the port of Dar es Salaam and that the balance was to be settled 60 days from the date of the arrival of the ship. The respondent H complained that the appellant failed to honour that agreed schedule of payment and concluded in para 12 of the plaint:

`The plaintiff claims from the defendant the sum of US $1,882,391.66 or the equivalent in Shs I 836,162,328.40 as per the official exchange rate ruling on 14 July 1993.'

RAMADHANI JA

The appellant, on the other hand, in para 6 of the WSD stated: A

`... All in all, all payments have been made to the plaintiff for the 6047.05 tons of rice within the stipulated time from the date of arrival of the ship.' B

In his reply, the respondent in para 8 did not categorically deny the allegations of the appellant that the latter has fully paid for the 6,047.05 MT. The respondent merely stated:

`As regards para 6, the original payment schedule had to change following the oral agreement C entered into to facilitate quick sales in order to enable the defendants pay the price by 7 May 1993 (the date the plaintiffs were liable to the bank for the loan) ... But the defendants did not pay the balance by 7 May 1993, nor did they pay by 15 May 1993 which was 60 days from the date of the ship's arrival when they were contractually supposed to have paid the full balance.' D

The respondent recapitulated his claim for US $1,882,391.66 in paras 10 and 11 of his reply.

In Court when giving his evidence on oath, said Bakhressa (DW1) stated again: `I paid for the 6,047.05 MT which I bought from the plaintiffs.' DW1 was not contradicted in E cross-examination.

That the position of the appellant has consistently been that it has fully paid for the lot it has taken is attested to by Suleiman Abdallah Abubakar (PW3), a director of the respondent. He said in examination-in-chief: F

`We subsequently wrote defendants about his indebtedness to us. They replied, maintaining that they had fully paid the price of the rice.' G

The learned Trial Judge (Mapigano, J) did not make a finding one way or the other on this. He divided the rice into the two lots mentioned above and found that the first lot of 6,047.05 MT was taken by the appellant and that the suit rice was the one in dispute. He H finally decided that the appellant is liable to pay US $1,847,527.32 less any amount that would be realised from the sale by auction of the suit rice. The learned judge did not show how that figure was arrived at. That is attacked by the appellant in ground nine of appeal. I

But in all fairness to the learned judge the payment for the non-suit rice was not an issue before him. Two issues were framed:

A (1) Whether the oral agreement entered by the parties on 15 March 1993 was an agency agreement, as averred by the plaintiffs, or an agreement for sale, as averred by the defendants.

(2) To what reliefs are the parties entitled.

Now, the determination of the first issue, that is, whether agency or outright sale B pertained to the suit rice (the 3,952.95 MT) and not to the 6,047.05 MT, the non-suit rice. The reliefs to which the parties were entitled, in our opinion, also related to the suit rice.

No issue was framed with respect of the 6,047.05 MT of rice. In any case the appellant C asserted that it had fully paid for that lot and that was not controverted.

Finally, there are a number of grounds argued by Mrs Rwebangira for affirming the decision of Mapigano, J, but with respect, we agree with Mr Chandoo that those grounds cannot stand since the ground of fraud has been upheld. D

The appeal is allowed with costs for three counsel.

This was an election petition against the results of the 1994 local government elections A in Meatu District. The appellant was a registered voter in one of the wards and he sought to nullify the election results in all the wards of the entire district. The trial court magistrate upheld a preliminary objection to the effect that the appellant had no locus standi. He appealed to the High Court. At the hearing of the appeal the parties were B directed to make their submissions to court in writing and the advocate for the appellant submitted to court a document with five sentences only:

Held:

(i) Submissions to court must contain reasons and bases for legal and factual C propositions put forward by learned counsels as officers of the court; the five sentence document submitted on behalf of the appellant does not constitute any written submissions as required by the court;

(ii) The law gives a right to a registered voter in local government elections to D petition to court against election results in the ward in which he is registered as a voter; the petitioner in this case was a registered voter in only one ward and had no locus standi to petition against the election results in all the wards in the district.

Byabusha, for the Appellant

Masalu, for the Respondents

[zJDz]Judgment

Mackanja, J: F

The appellant was a registered voter in the last councillors' elections in Meatu District. He petitioned before the Resident Magistrate's Court at Shinyanga which has jurisdiction over Meatu District, for the nullification of election results in the whole of Meatu District. His petition was based on 14 instances of alleged non-compliance. If he had succeeded, G the elections would have had to be rerun in the whole of that district.

On the first day of hearing Mr Masalu, learned advocate for the respondents, namely the Returning Officer for Meatu District and the Director of Elections raised a preliminary H point of objection to the effect that the petitioner had no locus standi to impugn election results in the whole district. It was argued by Mr Masalu, who was upheld on this point by the Trial Court, that according to the provisions of s 110 of the Local Government (Elections) Act 4 of 1979 the appellant's right to challenge the election results was I restricted to the ward in which he had registered to vote. He therefore had no right to challenge elections results in wards in which he was not registered as a voter. In reaching A this decision the Trial Court considered the application of ss 19(1) and 110(a) of the Local Government (Elections) Act, 1979. So the petition was dismissed because the appellant had no locus standi. He was aggrieved, hence this appeal. B

The memorandum of appeal contains only two grounds. Firstly, it is contended that the learned Resident Magistrate erred in law when he dismissed the petition on the ground that the appellant had no capacity to petition against the election results in the whole of Meatu District without considering the requirements of ss 110(a) and 111(a) of the Local C Government (Elections) Act. Secondly, that the Trial Court erred in law and in fact and thereby mishandled the petition as it raised triable issues which ought to have been determined on merit after a full hearing.

Let me say right away that the second ground raises no cause of complaint at all, D because these issues could be heard and determined if the appellant had succeeded in establishing that he had locus standi in prosecuting his case. Once the Trial Court held that he did not have that capacity the petition became incompetent, and therefore null and void. Such being the position the petition ceased to have triable issues before the E subordinate court because there remained nothing to determine. In this connection, and as Mr Masalu has correctly pointed out, s 111 of the Act which makes provision for reliefs which can be awarded to a successful petitioner has no relevance at all to the stage at which the petition was dismissed. So there remains only the first ground of F appeal to be considered.

As regards the first ground of appeal when this appeal was called for hearing the parties were directed to make formal written submissions. It would appear that Mr Byabusha, an advocate based in Musoma, was engaged by the appellant to prepare the written G submissions for the appellant. He did so and filed a document with five sentences, the operative part of which read thus:

`May it please your Lordship,

In addition to my grounds of appeal I wish to submit that the learned Trial Resident Magistrate H misconstrued s 19(1) of the Local Government (Elections) Act, 1979 No 4 since that section relates to a voter and not a petitioner like myself. A petitioner is governed by the provisions quoted in my first ground of appeal ...'

Learned counsel who drew the appellant's submissions did not care to make a correct I citation of the Act, nor did he find it necessary to elaborate on the alleged misconstruction of s 19(a) although he should have realised that his generalisation is pregnant with serious aspersion on the A professional capability of the learned Trial Magistrate. I find it unnecessary to admonish learned counsel but he should realise that what he drew for his client are not submissions at all. Submissions must contain reasons and bases for legal and factual B propositions which are put forward by learned counsel as officers of the court. In these circumstances the appellant has not filed any written submissions as required by the Court.

With or without submissions the first ground of appeal raises an important point of law. Has the appellant locus standi to pursue his mission as he alleges? And what is locus C standi, or the right to sue is based on very firm and sound principles in this country and elsewhere with comparable jurisdiction to our own. It is now well settled in India, England and East Africa that the traditional rule regarding locus standi is that judicial redress is available only to a person who has a legal injury by reason of the violation of his legal D right by the impugned action be it by a public authority or by a private individual. The injury could be to property, body, mind, reputation or to some statutory or constitutional right such as free and fair elections. It is in these circumstances that a voter can be said E to be aggrieved by the election results which are rigged in favour of one of the contestants or by election results which have been influenced by non-compliance with statutory electoral procedures. As a voter, therefore, the appellant could, in an appropriate case, be aggrieved by the local government election results. The issue then F to what extent his right to challenge these results find expression in the law which created his right to vote.

The appellant's right to petition the Court against election results starts with his being registered as a voter. Section 15 of the Local Government (Elections) Act confers qualification to register as a voter to every Tanzanian who has attained the age of 18 G years unless he is otherwise disqualified under s 16. The appellant enjoyed an unqualified right to be registered as a voter. The second condition is that every Tanzanian cannot be allowed to be registered in every ward in which elections are to be H held. Section 17 unambiguously declares that no person shall be registered as a voter in more than one ward. The appellant was bound by this condition, and he does not say that he violated the law by being registered in more than one ward.

It would appear that being qualified to register as a voter per se does not confer the right I to challenge election results to such a person. According to s 110(a) an election petition, the civil action by which election results can be challenged, can be presented by one or more of the A following persons, namely:

> `(a) a person who lawfully voted or had a right to vote at the election to which the petition relates; B
>
> (b) a person claiming to have had a right to be nominated or elected at election;
>
> (c) a person alleging himself to have been candidate at the election;
>
> (d) the Attorney-General.' C

The appellant falls under the first category.

Section 110 cannot bring out the intended meaning if it is to be construed in isolation. As Mr Masalu correctly pointed out, those provisions have to be read together with s 19(1) of the same Act. It provides: D

> `19(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, a person registered as a voter in any ward shall be entitled to vote at any election in that ward, and shall be entitled so to vote only at the ward where he is registered and not elsewhere.' E

In fact the proviso to ss (2) of s 19 declares that a person shall not vote at any polling station other than the polling station allocated to him.

In my view of the law I have considered above, anyone who is qualified to register as a F voter can only vote if he is registered. So the law creates two rights. The first one is the right to register as a voter; the second one is the right to vote after registration as a voter. In my construction of s 110(a) a person who can present a petition is that who registered to vote. It does not matter if he exercised his right to vote or not. In any case the right to vote can be exercised in the ward in which the petitioner was registered, and G the interest he can pursue by an election petition challenging the election results will be limited to the ward in which he was registered to vote.

The combined effect of ss 19(a) and 110(a) of the Local Government (Elections) Act is, therefore, that a voter may be aggrieved by the results in the ward in which he was H registered to vote. That is where his constitutional interest in free and fair elections lies. The appellant cannot, in good judgment, find fault in election results in other wards in which the elections have been satisfied by the fairness of the electoral exercise. He simply does not have locus standi beyond his own ward. The appeal does not therefore I have any merit.
The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Administrative law - Power to act - National Sports Council appointing a screening committee to C screen applicants for Football Association of Tanzania executive committee - In absence of rules having been promulgated in terms of s 28 of Act 6 of 1971, screening committees appointed as a matter of practice and had power so to act Administrative law - Screening committee - Application of rules of natural justice - Bias on part of D chairman - Chairman ought to have recused himself in view of previous disagreement
-Headnote
The applicants applied for an order of certiorari to quash the decision of the Screening Committee of the National Sports Council (the respondent) barring the applicant from E contesting the election for the Executive Committee of the Football Association of Tanzania (FAT). The applicants alleged that the Screening Committee lacked authority to act and the Chairman ought to have recused himself as he was unable to act without a tint of bias against the first applicant. F
Held:
(i) The National Sports Council was a body corporate established by Act 12 of 1967 and one of its duties was to screen candidates for FAT leadership. The power to make regulations for the establishment and composition of committees was contained in s 28(d) of Act 6 of 1971. It appeared that no G regulations had been made by the Minister in terms of s 28. In the absence of clear guidelines it could not be said that the committee acted without authority: it was for the applicant to tell the court what procedure, legal or otherwise, had been flouted by the chairman or the committee itself. The respondent, in its wisdom, had adopted a practice and in the absence of a clear breach of a H particular law or regulation pertaining to the activities of the set up committee the committee's actions could not be held to be unlawful.

(ii) Although the chairman of the respondent denied the allegations of having a grudge against the first applicant, it was quite a plausible proposition and the I chairman ought to have recused himself from chairing the committee when he knew that the first applicant was one of the candidates.

Bubeshi, J:

The applicants, Muhidin Ahmad Ndolanga, Kassim Kashulwe, Abdul Msimbazi and C Abdallah Bulembo were amongst members of the Executive Committee of the Football Association of Tanzania (hereinafter to be called FAT) for the 1993--1995 tenure. The applicants want this court to exercise its discretion and grant the following orders, namely:

D -- an order to certiorari to quash the decision of the Screening Committee of the National Sports Council (hereinafter to be called the `respondent') of 29 March 1996 barring the applicants from contesting FAT election.

-- an order of mandamus to compel the respondent to rescind their purported E decision of scrutinising and barring the current members of the Executive Committee from contesting the FAT election.

-- an order that the scrutiny of the names of the people who were vying for various posts in the Executive Committee of FAT was unlawful. F

-- costs of this application

-- any other reliefs that this hon court may deem proper and just to grant; and

In the alternative: G

-- that there was a failure on the part of the respondent to act judicially

-- that there was a failure of natural justice

-- that their (respondents) acts were unreasonable and unfair. H

The applicants are represented by learned counsels Deogratias Lyimo and Kassim Nyangarika. They have also filed affidavits to support their application. The respondents who have strongly contested the applicants were represented by Mr Kalolo Bundale, I learned counsel and relied upon the affidavits of said Hamad ElMaamry, the chairman of the respondent, and supplementary affidavits filed by Michael Wambura and Dr Ramadhan Dau, members of the respondent A council.

In the pleadings and in course of final submissions it was submitted for the respondents that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. That in accordance to art B 53(2)(e) and (f) of the FAT constitution, the application before this court was premature. I propose to dispose of this matter at this juncture. Under art 53(2)(e) and (f) appeals from the National Sports Council shall be submitted to the Minister responsible for sports whose decision shall be final. Likewise the respondent have invoked art 53 of FIFA C statute on settlement of disputes as barring sports matters from being referred to courts of law before the laid down machinery thereof has been exhausted. Similarly, they have cited art 29 of the CAF statute on disputes where disagreements of like natures have to be referred to arbitration tribunal and not civil courts. The issue then is whether these D ouster clauses bar this court from hearing this application.

While I agree with the respondent on the ouster clauses, as contained in the relevant laws cited above, it is now settled and there are authorities abound that an applicant for the prerogative order of certiorari is not obliged to exhaust the prescribed administrative E machinery before resorting to a court of law, where the applicant claims that the decision complained of was reached without jurisdiction or in contravention of the rules of natural justice, the existence of such a machinery is irrelevant. In the application before me it is the legality of the committee that is in issue and if the committee had F such legal basis, that its decision was vitiated by the breach of the rules of natural justice. These are issues of law which should properly be formulated and answered by a court of law; and in attempting to answer them, this court does not in any way impinge G upon the power of the administrative tribunal, in this instance, the Ministerial powers under art 58(2)(e) and (f), of FAT constitution if at the end of this ruling there is still a decision standing. In the premises, I am satisfied that this court has jurisdiction in the H matter and I proceed to consider the application and I start with the order of certiorari. It may be pertinent at this juncture therefore to say something on the appeal pending before the Minister. Proceedings for certiorari are quite different from proceedings by way of appeal, in the latter case the appellate body is required to hear the case either generally or on particular issues raised in the appeal and for the purposes of this case all I appeals are directed to the Minister responsible for sports. In proceedings for certiorari this court is required to exercise its supervisory function to ensure that a particular body acts in A accordance with the rule of law.

The following salient points are not in dispute. The applicants were amongst the members of the Executive Committee of Football Association of Tanzania-hereinafter to be referred as FAT-for the period 1993--1995. That on 28 March 1996 an ad hoc B screening committee, hereinafter to be called the `Committee' was appointed by the chairman of the respondent to screen names of all contestant vying for posts in the FAT leadership. The committee did its job for two consecutive days, 29--30 March 1996, and the result of the exercise was announced at a press conference on 31 March 1996. The C applicants were amongst those disqualified to contest for the election due to take place in Dodoma on 3 April 1996. That soon after the applicants addressed an appeal to the Minister responsible for Sports against the decision of the committee and the appeal D has remained undetermined to date, it is not in dispute that the ordinary general assembly of FAT was held in Dodoma on 3 April 1996 with the first applicant presiding and the other applicants were amongst the members of the assembly and listed on the agenda were 11 items and that by the time the meeting was suspended by a court E order, there were some five items pending. That as per FAT constitution, not every special general assembly, that is an Election Assembly is proceeded by an ordinary general assembly.

The applicants have listed the following as being matters in dispute namely: F

-- whether the chairman of the National Sports Council-hereinafter to be referred as `NSC' is empowered by law to appoint an ad hoc screening committee

G -- whether the said committee has exclusive powers in law to screen and disqualify the applicants in the circumstances of the case

-- whether the committee was duly and fairly constituted

-- whether the committee observed the rules of natural justice

H -- whether the applicants were formally notified on the result of their application to contest the FAT election

-- whether the reasons given by the committee for the disqualification of the applicants were justified in law in the circumstances of this case

I -- whether applicants were given reasonable opportunity to be heard on the constitution or composition of the committee

1996 TLR p329

BUBESHI J

A -- whether the applicants appealed to the Minister in time to enable him to determine the appeal and whether the Minister was justified to leave the appeal undetermined to date

-- whether the applicants have other remedies other than the courts in the circumstances of this case

B -- what are the reliefs, the parties are entitled to

And as submitted by the respondent, the issues are:

-- whether the conditions precedent for the issuance of prerogative orders have been met

-- whether the respondent complied with the rules of natural justice C

-- whether the applicants should meet the expenses for the adjourned elections.

And as formulated by the court this issues are: D whether the prerogative orders of certiorari and mandamus can issue in the circumstances of this case.

The National Sports Council is a body corporate, established by Act 12 of 1967 as amended by Act 6 of 1971. Amongst its functions are: E 4(1)(a) to develop, promote and control all forms of amateur sports on a national basis in conjunction with sports association.

The NSC also is charged with the duty to oversee elections of FAT. Article 49 of the FAT constitution 1995 provides that: F

`Uchambuzi wa majina ya wagombea uongozi wa FAT utafanywa na mabaraza ya ngazi husika'

Freely translated it reads: G

`Screening of names of aspirants to FAT leadership will be done by the relevant sports councils.'

And art 51(c) of same constitution provides for election of leadership at national level to H be supervised by the National Sports Council. The applicants have challenged the powers of the chairman of the respondent to appoint the committee, the constitution and composition thereof, the legal powers of the committee and whether it conducted itself in accordance with the rules of natural justice and without bias. I

The chairman of the respondent who have strongly opposed the application, has deponed in para 5 of his affidavit that the names of the committee were A approved by him upon proposal by the Secretary-General. That the NSC is charged with the responsibility to supervise the FAT elections at all levels is not disputed. Indeed it is one of the functions of the NSC as per arts 49 and 51 of the FAT constitution. The B power to make regulations for the establishment and composition of committees is contained in s 28(d) of Act 6 of 1971. The relevant proviso reads:

BUBESHI J

Section 28 The Minister may make regulations for the better carrying into effect the purposes and C provisions of this Act and in particular for

(a) . ..

(b) . . .

(c) . . .

(d) the establishment and composition of committees to which the council may delegate its D functions.

The question I ask myself is whether the committee set up by the chairman of the respondent to screen the names of applicants and others was a creature of s 28(d) cited above. The chairman of the respondent has not submitted that the committee he E set up in consultation with his secretary-general was in pursuance of regulations made by the Minister as per s 28 of Act 6 of 1971. The respondent's chairman has contended that such committees have been appointed as a matter of practice and the practice and procedure has been in existence since 1995. F

Both counsels have conceded that up to now there are no regulations made by the Minister in terms of s 28 of Act 6 of 1971. I must remark that, in my considered opinion the obligation to alert the Minister on the provisions of s 28 of Act 6 of 1971 is squarely on the shoulders of the respondent. They are the ones mostly concerned and to be G affected and guided by the provisions which has been in existence for the last 24 years or so. Of course s 28 of Act 6 of 1971 is not mandatory that the Minister make regulations but I think it is prudent if such legal provisions are taken into consideration in H the conduct of such matters. It is hoped that the regulations would be promulgated soon.

Counsels for applicants have submitted that in absence of regulations in terms of s 28 of the committee set up by the respondents' chairman was illegal. Counsels for the applicants were of the view that it is for the Minister to appoint the committee. With I respect, I disagree and would be inclined to agree with Mr Kalolo for the respondent that the Minister may make regulations for the establishment and A composition of such committees to which the council may delegate its functions. The Minister does not appoint committees. To date these regulations have not been formed and neither has the law been amended. I take it therefore that the law guiding the procedure of the council is still Act 12 of 1967. B

The respondent has submitted that in absence of committees established under the provisions of s 28 of Act 6 of 1971, we then have to resort to practice. What has been the practice that has operated within the council since 1975?

The applicant has vehemently argued that the whole exercise of the chairman of the C respondent appointing the committee was an illegality, that the committee had no legal powers to do the screening. The applicant has submitted that if anything the screening exercise was to be done by the full council. D

To this the respondent has been quick to counter by the argument that the full council consists of 30 members and it had been the practice to have such ad hoc committees screen the aspirants. That the applicants were subjected to a similar procedure in 1992 and therefore he is estopped from complaining. E

As observed earlier on in my ruling, it is evident therefore that the National Sports Council has been conducting its business for the last 24 years or so without legally constituted committees. The respondent has appended to his written submission names of members in the following committees: F

- -- Kamati ya Utendaji na Fedha
- -- Kamati ya Utafiti, Mipango na maendeleo
- -- Kamati ya Ufundi na Vifaa
- -- Kamati ya Rufaa na Nidhamu
- -- Kamati ndogo ya Fedha na mali G

I hasten to add that the functions of these committees have not been spelt out, hence this court is left to speculate whether the ad hoc screening committee was an independent committee or it was required by practice to submit its findings to one of the H committees above mentioned.

In the absence of clear guidelines so established it cannot be said that the committee acted without authority. It was for the applicant to tell this court what procedure legal or otherwise has been flouted by the chairman or the committee itself. The NSC in its I wisdom has adopted this practice and in the absence of clear breach of a particular law or regulation pertaining to the activities of the set up committee, I would decline A to hold that committee's actions were unlawful. It would have been different if there had been clear functions earmarked for each committee of the council. I hold therefore that the chairman had powers in terms of the schedule to Act 12 of 1963 -- s 3(2) B thereto, to appoint the committee to transact the screening business on behalf of the council as it was done in February 1993.

Now that I have found the committee to have the mandate to transact business on behalf of the council, the next equally important issue is whether the said committee conducted C itself in accordance with the rules of natural justice and fair play.

The applicants have averred vide paras 6, 7 and 8 of the affidavit deponed to by the first applicant that there was a denial of natural justice in that: D

(a) the chairman of the committee could not have acted without a tint of bias as they had exchanged words over the CAF membership.

(b) there were rumours abound that the first applicant's name would not be cleared due to that misunderstanding. E

(c) they were not given opportunity to challenge the composition of the committee.

(d) they were not officially notified of the reasons -- para 12 of the first applicant's affidavit.

F (e) their appeal to the Minister has remained undetermined to date.

The respondent have strongly denied the allegations. On the CAF membership saga, the chairman of the respondent has submitted that he holds no grudge against the first G applicant, although he was disappointed by his lies. He submits further that he has never been biased towards the first applicant and that there were eight members on the committee where the chairman's influence was not proved. That if anything, the applicants had all the time to object to the committees composition if they thought they would not be fairly treated. H

The chairman of the respondent has submitted that all the aspirants were invited to a press conference on 31 March 199 and hence there was no need to officially inform the applicants. As to the appeal to the Minister the respondent have submitted that as the I issue had already been referred to a court of law, it became sub judice.

It is trite to remark that an administrative body exercising functions that impinge directly A on legally recognised interests, owes it as a duty to act judicially in accordance with rules of natural justice which basically means the adoption of fair procedure, which fundamentally demands freedom from interest and bias on the part of the administrative body and the right to a fair hearing for those who are immediately effected by its B decision.

That the first applicant and the chairman of the respondent have exchanged words over the CAF membership issue is common ground. I have read submissions by counsels on this point.

However I am inclined to the views expressed by the first applicant that the C respondent chairman may be harbouring a grudge over that issue. It is quite a plausible proposition.
The respondent chairman has submitted that the applicants were equally free to reject the committee membership, the chairman included and since they did not do so they are estopped from complaining. That the applicants and in particular the first applicant could D have objected to be screened by the committee is not an unreasonable proposition, the short notice notwithstanding. However, in my view it was also the duty of the chairman of the respondent to recuse himself from chairing the committee especially so E when he knew that the first applicant was one of the aspirants. That the chairman of the respondent chaired the screening exercise where the applicants were disqualified could not exonerate him from a tint of bias. I am indeed fortified in this view by the persuasive authority cited by the applicants: Metropolitan Properties Co Ltd v Lennon F and Another (1), where at 599 the distinguished jurist Lord Denning remarked that:

`. . . justice must be rooted in confidence and confidence is destroyed when right minded people go away thinking that the judge was biased ...' G

Equally true today is the time old adage that justice must not be done, but must also be manifestly seen to be done. In the event, it may not be necessary at this juncture to deal with the other complaints raised by the applicants. H
In the final event, I find that the chairman of the National Sports Council had the mandate to set up the committee as per the practice of the council. Likewise I hold that the committee had the mandate in the absence of clear breach of any legal provision or regulation hereto, to conduct business on behalf of the council. However, the said I committee failed to observe rules of justice and fair play. In the premises, the application for the order of certiorari is granted. The decision of the A committee is hereby quashed and the National Sports Council is directed to redo the exercise of screening aspirants vying for posts in FAT leadership election. The application succeeds with costs. B

The appellants appealed against a preliminary ruling by the High Court in an election petition in which the learned judge had ruled that the petition suffered from vagueness and imprecision in a number of respects and he struck out the offending paragraphs. On appeal the appellant attacked the learned judge's finding on the lack of specificity in the pleadings and contended that the absence of such specificity implied that the alleged irregularities occurred at polling stations throughout the country and likewise in respect of other allegations the lack of specificity implied that the irregularities occurred on a large scale and over the full period of the election. The appellant contended further that the learned judge had erred in not granting leave to amend.

Held:

(i) It was not correct in law to infer a fact which had not been specifically pleaded in the petition.

(ii) An order to amend the offending parts of the petition or supply further and better particulars would not necessarily have resulted in delay in the disposal of the petition since the Court could have prevented such delay by prescribing a specific period within which the amendments or further particulars were to be effected by the petititioner and the period within which the respondents were to file their answers, if any.

(iii) The principles upon which amendments to pleadings should be made needed to be reaffirmed: Amendments sought before the hearing should be freely allowed if they could be made without injustice to the other side and there was no injustice if the other side could be compensated by costs.

(iv) The striking out of the offending parts in the present matter amounted to a dismissal of the petition and this was not required in the interests of justice.

Nyalali, CJ:

This is an appeal by one George M Shambwe, hereinafter called the appellant, against a G preliminary ruling by B P Moshi, J in an election petition case currently pending in the High Court at Mbeya, where the Attorney-General and one Peter S Nswima, appear as the first and second respondents respectively. The second respondent was the successful candidate in the Parliamentary multi-party elections held in October 1995 in H Mpanda East Constituency. The appellant, who stood as a candidate sponsored by the National Convention for Construction and Reform-Mageuzi political party, was unsuccessful. Consequently, he petitioned against the election results. The petition contains six main paragraphs. The sixth paragraph concerns allegations of a number of I non-compliance with the provisions of the Elections Act which allegedly rendered the elections unfree and unfair. The particulars of the allegations are listed in A subparas (a) and (y).

Both the first and second respondents filed separate answers to the petition. In their answers, they not only traversed the various allegations contained in para six, but also raised an objection to the effect that the particulars of non-compliance as contained in B subparas (a) to (y) are vague and unspecific. When the objection came up for hearing on 26 February 1996, Mr Magafu, learned advocate for the appellant conceded that the particulars contained in paras 6(c), 6(e), 6(k), 6(p), 6(q), 6(r), 6(w) and 6(y) `suffer from material insufficiency'. Counsel for the appellant however resisted the respondents' C request for the defective paragraphs to be struck out and argued that the Court had discretion to have the appellant provide further and better particulars or amend the defective paragraphs under Order 6, Rule 5 and 16 respectively.

With regard to the remaining subparagraphs, that is (a), (b), (d), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (l), D (m), (n), (o), (r), (s), (t), (u), and (x), learned advocate for the appellant contended that they were neither vague nor imprecise but contained sufficient particulars as required by law.

The learned Trial Judge, after hearing both sides and reviewing the relevant law E concluded that, in addition to the subparagraphs conceded by the appellant, the petition suffered from vagueness and imprecision also in subparas (a), (b), (d), (f), (i), (j), (m) and (n). As to subparas (g), (h), (s) and (u), the learned Trial Judge was of the view that F they contained sufficient particulars as required by law. He was further of the view that subparas (1) and (r) disclosed no cause of action. He apparently made no finding on subpara (o).

In the light of these findings, the learned Trial Judge decided to strike out all defective G subparagraphs, that is (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (i), (j), (k), (l), (m), (n), (p), (q), (r), (v), (w) and (y). The appellant was aggrieved by this decision, hence this appeal to this Court. The memorandum of appeal contains three grounds of appeal as follows: H

`1. That the learned judge erred in law and in fact in holding that paras 6(a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (i), (j), (k), (l), (m), (n), (p), (q), (r), (v), (w) and (y) of the petition were bad in law for being vague and unspecific.

2. That the learned Judge erred in law and in fact in holding that the said paragraphs could have I been struck out on the said grounds without proof that there had been a demand for a

A statement of further and better particulars and that demand has not been met.

3. That having found that those paragraphs offended the law of pleading, the learned Judge erred in not granting leave to amend the petition so that particulars could be given.' B

In the course of presenting the case for the appellant, Dr Lamwai, learned advocate for the appellant rightly conceded that he cannot challenge the finding of the Trial Judge on the subparagraphs which the appellant, through his advocate, conceded in the High Court as being vague and imprecise. He was, however, entitled to challenge the C consequential decision to strike out the offending subparagraphs. With regard to the subparagraphs of which alleged defects were not conceded in the High Court, Dr Lamwai reiterated Mr Magafu's submission to the effect that the subparagraphs D contained sufficient particulars as required by law. Specifically with regard to subparas (a), (d), (f), (i), (j), (m) and (n). Dr Lamwai contends in effect that it is not necessary in law to name or specify the polling stations where the irregularities of non-proclamation, recording of voters' registration certificates, improper campaigns, insecure polling E booths, non-posting of voters list, voting by unregistered people and destruction of ballot papers are alleged to have occurred. According to Dr Lamwai, the absence of such specificity in the pleadings implies that the alleged irregularities occurred at all polling stations throughout the constituency. Dr Lamwai, however, cited no authority to support his contention. F

With regard to the finding of the learned Trial Judge on subpara (b) to the effect that the alleged inadequacy of election materials needed to be specified, Dr Lamwai similarly contended in effect that the absence of specificity implied that the inadequacy applied to G all kinds of polling materials. Similarly with regard to the alleged persecution of NCCR-Mageuzi members he contended in effect that the absence of specificity as to the time when it occurred implies that the alleged persecution took place during the election period. As already said, no authority was cited to us in support of the proposition H that silence in the petitions' pleadings gives rise to any implied fact. As to the finding of the learned Trial Judge on subpara (r) to the effect that no cause of action was disclosed by the alleged use of the peoples' militia to provide security contrary to the terms of an agreement between the political parties, Dr Lamwai correctly conceded that violation of I such agreement per se disclosed no cause of action and that a cause of action would exist if it is alleged that the terms of the agreement were embodied in directives issued by the Electoral A Commission under the Elections Act.

The first issue for consideration therefore is whether it is correct in law to imply a fact which is not specifically pleaded in the petition. The answer in our view is to be found B under the relevant provisions of the elections (Elections Petitions) Rules, 1971, the Civil Procedure Code, 1966 and the principles that underlie those provisions. We can find no rule either under the elections (Elections Petitions) Rules, 1971 or under the Civil Procedure Code to support Dr Lamwai's contention. On the other hand we recognise C that the main principle which requires disclosure of material facts in the pleadings is the well-known and established principle of fair trial. This principle has many corollaries including the rule that each party is entitled to have any and every particular of material facts which is cited in Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, 8th ed at 1197. Commenting on D Rule 4 of Order 6 of the Indian Civil Procedure Code, which is the same as our Rule 4 Order 6 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966, Mulla states:

`The object of this rule is to furnish the opposite party with such particulars regarding the suit as are E necessary to enable him to find out what case he has to meet. It is but right and proper that each party should have any and every particular that will enable him to know his opponents case and prepare himself accordingly, but he is not entitled to have any information as to the evidence by which they are intended to be proved. What particulars are to be stated must depend on the peculiar F circumstances of the case, but generally, as much certainty and particularity must be insisted on as is reasonable, having regard to the circumstances and to the nature of the acts themselves.'

Thus bearing in mind the fundamental principle of fair trial and the consequential rules, G including the rules which the Trial Judge extensively reviewed in his ruling, we are satisfied that it is not correct in law to imply a fact which is not specifically pleaded in the petition. The position is of course different where the defendant fails to specifically deny H an allegation of the plaintiff, in which case an admission of that allegation may be implied under the provisions of subrule 5 of Order 8 of the Civil Procedure Code. It follows therefore that we agree with the learned Trial Judge that the contested subparagraphs in question are indeed vague and imprecise. I

The next issue is whether the Court below was correct in striking out the vague and imprecise subparagraphs. Dr Lamwai has submitted to the effect that A the Court below had under the circumstances of this case only two options in its discretions. The first option is to order the amendment of the offending subparagraphs under the provisions of Order 6 Rule 16 of the Civil Procedure Code which states: B

`The Court may, at any stage of the proceedings, order to be struck out or amended any matter in any pleading which may be unnecessary or scandalous or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial to the suit.' C

It is Dr Lamwai's contention that it was not open for the Court to strike out the offending subparagraphs under Rule 16 because to do so would amount to dismissing the election petition on grounds of irregularity contrary to the provisions of Rule 27(1) of the D Elections (Elections Petitions) Rules 1971. Mrs Makuru, learned Senior State Attorney and Mr Kilindu, learned advocate for the first and second respondents respectively have countered Dr Lamwai's contention by submitting to the effect that the provisions of Rule 27(1) do not apply to a decision to strike out under Order 6, Rule 16 of the Civil E Procedure Code. They further submitted to the effect that the Court properly exercised its discretion to strike out the offending parts of the petition because the petitioner/appellant had failed to take corrective measures in response to the objection raised in the answers filed by the respondents. Furthermore, counsel for the F respondents argued that an order to amend would result in delay in the disposal of the petition. Dr Lamwai's short answer is to the effect that no delay would result if the Court prescribed a specific period during which the amendments were to be effected.

The second option open to the Court, according to Dr Lamwai, is an order for further and G better particulars to be provided by the petitioner within a prescribed period in accordance with the provisions of Order 6 Rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code. The position of counsel for the respondents on this aspect of the case is similar to the one concerning amendment. H

We have carefully considered the arguments on both sides and we are satisfied that an order to amend the offending parts of the petition or supply further and better particulars would not necessarily have resulted in delay in the disposal of the petition, since the Court could have prevented such delay by prescribing a specific period within which the I amendments of further particulars were to be effected by the petitioner and the period within which the respondents were to file their answers, if any. For purposes of future guidance, we wish A to emphasise that in the interests of efficacy of justice, it should be the rule rather than the exception, to prescribe specific periods of compliance with court orders.

We need also to reaffirm the principles upon which amendments to pleadings should be B made. These were stated by the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in the case of Eastern Bakery v Castelino (1). That Court stated at 462, `It will be sufficient for purposes of the present case, to say that amendments to pleadings sought before the hearing should be freely allowed, if they can be made without injustice to the other side, C and there is no injustice if the other side can be compensated by costs.'

As to the question whether striking out the offending parts of the petition amounts to dismissal of the petition, we have had to consider whether the petition is unlikely to succeed without proving the allegations which have been struck out. We note that the D petition in this case rests entirely on the cumulative adverse effect of a series of alleged non-compliance or irregularities in the conduct of the electoral process in the Mpanda East Constituency. This is evident from the concluding paragraph of the petition where it is stated that `The petitioner submits that all these non-compliance adversely effected E the results in that a substantial number of voters were prevented from voting for the candidate of their choice'. We also note that most of the 17 subparagraphs which were struck out, contain allegations which are so serious that if all of them are proved, the F petition is likely to succeed. For all these reasons, we are satisfied that this petition is unlikely to succeed without proving the allegations which have been struck out. We thus find that the order by the Court below striking out the offending parts of the petition amounts to dismissal of the petition.

The next issue that must now be considered is whether the Court below erred in acting G as it did. The answer is to be found in the provisions of subrule 1 of Rule 27 of the Elections (Elections Petitions) Rules 1971 which states:

`(1) Save as is expressly provided to the contrary in these rules, no petition shall be dismissed for the H reason only of non-compliance with any of the provisions of these rules or for the reason only of any other procedural irregularity unless the court is of the opinion that such non-compliance or irregularity has resulted or is likely to result into miscarriage of justice.'

I

The part which we have emphasised clearly shows that the court below could have properly struck out the offending parts of the petition if it was of the A opinion that the irregularities had resulted or were likely to result into a miscarriage of justice. What then was the opinion of that court which led it to do what it did? It is to be found towards the end of the ruling of the learned Trial Judge, where he states, `I am B settled in my own mind that the interests of fair trial, in the circumstances, speak out loudly in favour of an order to strike out the offending subparagraphs ..'.

With due respect to the learned Trial Judge, we do not think that the interests of fair trial spoke out loudly in favour of the order of striking out the offending subparagraphs. C Bearing in mind the fact that the case was still in its very early stages and was only about four months old, the learned Trial Judge clearly erred in failing to appreciate that the true interests of fair trial, and therefore of justice, required that the Court should D exercise its discretion in favour of ordering the petitioner to amend the offending parts of the petition, or to provide further and better particulars in terms of Order 6, Rule 16 and 5, respectively. As already mentioned earlier, in making such order, the Court would have prescribed the periods within which the parties should complete consequential pleadings. Had the Trial Judge done so, this petition would most likely have been E concluded or nearing its conclusion by now.

For all these reasons, it is obvious that this appeal must succeed with costs to the appellant. In order to avoid delay of the petition, it is appropriate that we exercise the powers of the High Court by doing what the High Court should have done as we are F authorised by s 4(1) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979. We therefore now allow the appeal set aside the ruling of the High Court with costs and order that:

G (i) The appellant/petitioner amends those parts of the petition which were struck out by the High Court so as to give better particulars of the allegations contained therein;

(ii) The appellant/petitioner to file the above mentioned amendments in the High Court at Mbeya and to serve the same to the respondents within 10 days from today; H

(iii) The respondents to file their amended answers, if they so desire, in the High Court at Mbeya and to serve the same upon the appellant/petitioner within 10 days after being served with the amended petition;

I (iv) The respondents are to be paid the costs in respect of the amendments; and

A (v) The case be brought up before a judge to fix a hearing date or dates in the presence of the parties, soon after completion of the amendments.
We order accordingly. B

Mr Muganda, learned counsel has applied on behalf of his client for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal in terms of s 5(1)(c) of the Appellate A Jurisdiction Act 1979, against the judgment of this court delivered on 8 January 1997. Mr Muganda has submitted that there are two points for determination by the Court of Appeal, namely: B `whether there was a conversion of marriage in Act, 1971 and secondly on the division terms of s 11 of the Law of Marriage Act of matrimonial assets as endorsed by this court.'

Mr Muganda's view or interpretation of the law is that in circumstances of this case there C was no conversion of marriage and that his client had no capacity to marry under s 160. Hence the division of matrimonial assets ordered was erroneous.

Mr Magafu on the other hand has resisted the application for leave. He submitted that the decision of the case was based on s 160(1) and (2) in the case of Hemed S Tamino D v Renata Mashavo (1). Again he submitted that on division of matrimonial assets, the Court of Appeal dealt with that point in the case of Bi Hawa Mohamed.

Mr Muganda in his reply said that ss 160 and 11 of the Law of Marriage must go hand in E hand. There must be capacity to marry before presumption of marriage can hold.

Mr Muganda was in essence saying that since there was no conversion of marriage to polygamous marriage, the applicant could not be covered under s 160(1) and (2). He submitted further that the Hemed case cited above by Mr Magafu was distinguishable F from the facts.

I have had time to deliberate on the issues posed by this appeal and have come to the conclusion that leave be granted to enable the Court of Appeal to determine the points of law raised, namely: G

Whether on the facts of this case the respondent was entitled to a share of the matrimonial assets.

The facts of the Hemed case (supra) would appear to be distinguishable. Application granted.

The appellant appealed against the decision of the District Court of Dodoma which had D allowed the plaintiff's claim for breach of contract. The appellant submitted that the court had erred in denying him his right to call his defence witnesses. It appeared that at the trial on 10 February 1995 the appellant had stated that he was ready for defence and gave his submissions. Thereafter the respondent made his oral submission in reply after E an adjournment. The appellant then stated that he had intended to call witnesses and thought that he would call his witnesses. The submission was resisted by the respondent who was permitted only to file written submissions.

Held:

F (i) Although the record was not clear as to whether the appellant's submission on 10 February 1995 was an opening speech or a submission of no case to answer, on the assumption that it was an opening speech then he ought to have been given the opportunity to produce his evidence, if any, by bringing in his witnesses. The failure to do so infringed a fundamental principle of law of a party's right to be heard.

G (ii) Even assuming that the submission of 10 February 1995 was one of no case to answer, the magistrate was obliged to make a ruling on it and, in any event, the appellant being a layman, the magistrate ought to have informed him of the consequences of such submission.

Msoffe, J: A

This is an appeal against the decision of the District Court of Dodoma allowing the respondent's claim for Shs 1,200,000/= as damages for an alleged breach of contract. The facts giving rise to the case are well stated in the judgment of the Trial Court-which B facts I do not have to repeat for purposes of determining this appeal.

In the memorandum of appeal there are two grounds. In my judgment, the first ground will be enough to determine the appeal. Therefore no discussion will be made in this judgment about the second ground. C

The first ground of appeal reads as follows:

`1. That the Trial Court erred in denying the appellant his right to call his defence witnesses.'

The above complaint has a bearing on the Trial Court's proceedings of 10 February D 1995 and 10 March 1995. On 10 February 1995 one Mr Robert (a representative of the appellant company) is on record as having said, inter alia, `I am ready for defence and here are my submissions'. Thereafter he gave his oral submission after which Mr Nyabiri, learned advocate for the appellant prayed for an adjournment to prepare his E reply to the above submission. Accordingly the case was adjourned to 10 March 1995 when Mr Nyabiri made his oral submission in reply. Thereafter the defendant (through Mr Robert) said: F

`I had the intent of calling my witnesses. Up to 10 February 1995 there were some witnesses. What I thought is that today my witnesses would tender the evidence.'

In my reading of this submission I understand it to mean that the said Mr Robert actually G wanted to have witnesses testify for the defence. Anyhow, the submission was resisted by Mr

Nyabiri and the Court upheld him. Thereafter Mr Robert intimated that he wanted to file final written submissions and accordingly the case was adjourned to 17 March 1995. Up to this date the final submissions were yet to be filed and so the case H was adjourned for judgment.

Order 18 Rule 2 of The Civil Procedure Code, 1966 reads as follows: I

`2(1) On the day fixed for the hearing of the suit or any other day to which the hearing is adjourned, the party having the right to begin

A shall state his case and produce his evidence in support of the issues which he is bound to prove.

(2) The other party shall then state his case and produce his evidence (if any) and may then address the court generally on the whole case.

(3) The party beginning may then reply generally on the whole case. B

Subrule (2) is relevant for purposes of this appeal. It is clear here that after a plaintiff has stated his case then a defendant would likewise state his case and produce his evidence, if any. If my understanding of the law is correct, by stating his case a party C would actually be making his opening speech or address-though I must admit that this practice is rarely used in our jurisdiction in so far as civil matters are concerned. The issue then is whether Mr Robert's submission of 10 February 1995 was an opening D speech or a submission of no case to answer. Apparently the record is not too clear about this, but the said submission could have meant either of the two. However, assuming that it was an opening speech in which Mr Robert was stating the defence case, then he ought to have been given the opportunity to produce his evidence, if any, E by bringing in his witnesses, etc. This was not done thereby infringing a fundamental principle of law of a party's right to be heard.

Even assuming that the submission of 10 February 1995 was one of no case to answer, still I think the magistrate was expected to make a ruling on it. In any case, according to F case law the magistrate was bound to inform the defendant of the consequences of a submission of no case to answer ie that in the event he was not upheld then he would forfeit the right to call evidence. Yuill v Yuill (1) and Mathuri v Nyaga (2). It is clear from these authorities that in a given situation a defendant is given the opportunity to elect G whether or not to give the submission of no case to answer bearing in mind the resultant consequences. In Mathuri's case, for instance, Singh J had this to say at 180:

H `The position is that if a defendant in a civil case submits at the end of the plaintiff's case that there is no case which he is required to meet, then he is in effect saying that he does not want to offer any evidence. Such position does occasionally arise. The defendant may have some irrefutable point of law on his side. But that is a decision which a defendant should not take lightly, because he is I depriving himself of the right to offer evidence. The practice, therefore, is that the court points out to the defendant the seriousness of the decision he is making

A and gives him an opportunity to reconsider the matter. If the defendant still persists in pleading no case, then the Court makes note of this and proceeds as though the defendant had no evidence to offer.' (Emphasis added).

In the totality of the foregoing, I think this would be a fit case for allowing the appeal with B an order for a retrial. Accordingly the appeal is allowed with the result that there will be a trial de novo before a different magistrate rested with the necessary jurisdiction. Since the court was partly to blame for the above mentioned state of affairs there will be no order as to costs. C

Perhaps a word in passing. It seems to me that if Mr Robert--a layman in the legal parlance-had been properly guided by the court on 10 February 1995 perhaps he would have approached the matter differently. It will not be out of context to remind the learned magistrate of an observation made by this court (Kwikima Ag J (as he then was)) in the D case of Simon Chitanda v Abdula Kisoma (3) thus:

`Where the parties to a suit are laymen conducting their own cases, the trial court should scrutinise the pleadings and in general furnish any necessary guidance.' (Emphasis added) E

In this case, Mr Robert-a layman as aforesaid-ought to have been guided by the court where possible or necessary. F

Limitation - Right of action for recovery of land where owner deceased - Period of twelve years I runs from death of deceased irrespective of when letters of administration granted - Limitation may be raised at any stage of proceedings

1996 TLR p348

-Headnote

The appellants appealed against a decision of the court of the Resident Magistrate who A had allowed the respondent's suit that she was the owner of certain property and had awarded her certain damages. It appeared that the property had belonged to the respondent's husband who had died in 1979. The deceased's sons had sold the property to the two purchasers who subsequently sold it to the appellants. The B respondent applied for letters of administration in August 1991 in respect of the deceased estate and these were granted in February 1992. Armed with this grant the Land Office cancelled the two previous registrations and transferred the ownership to the respondent. At the trial the appellants had raised the question of limitation but the magistrate struck out the defence on the ground that it had not been pleaded earlier. C

On appeal,
Held:

(i) In terms of s 3(1) of the Law of Limitation Act it was immaterial whether limitation had been set up as a defence and the magistrate had accordingly erred in this respect. D

(ii) The limitation period in respect of land, irrespective of when letters of administration had been granted, was 12 years and on this basis the respondent's claim was time-barred.

[zJDz]Judgment

Msumi, J:

In the original case respondent Hadija Yusuf successfully sued the appellants for vacant F possession of the suit house. Upholding the suit, the learned Trial Resident Magistrate held that the suit property belongs to the respondent and also upheld her claim of Shs 30,000/= per month as specific damages. Being dissatisfied with these findings, the two appellants Yusuf Same and Hawa Dada, with the assistance of Mr Raithatha, advocate, G decided to file the present appeal.

The unchallenged facts of this case are that the suit house originally belonged to the late Juma Abdallah Samanya who died in Moshi in 1979. Among the heirs of the deceased are his two sons namely Haruni Juma and Abdallah Juma. Respondent is disputably H claiming to be the deceased widow hence one of the legal heirs. On 4 August 1981 the Kariakoo primary court appointed Haruni Juma administrator of the deceased estate. Prior to this on 17 July 1981 Haruni Juma and his brother Abdallah Juma describing themselves as the legal representatives of the deceased, sold the suit house to Omar I Mansur and Salmin Said. However, transfer of the said house to the buyers was effected on 2 September 1981 when consent of the land officer was A obtained. Through a deed of transfer executed by Oman Mansur and Salmin Said and consented by the land officer on 29 August 1986, the suit house was again sold to the two appellants. They bought it for a sum of Shs 150,000/=. B

In August 1991 respondent opened in this court Probate and Administration Case No 64 of 1991 in which she applied for letters of administration in respect of the deceased estate. In her petition respondent asserted, among other facts, that there had been no previous proceedings for grant of probate or administration in respect of the deceased C estate. She was accordingly granted letters of administration on 25 February 1992. Armed with this grant, respondent applied to the Land Office for the transfer of the suit house in her name. On receipt of this application the land office cancelled the two previous transactions vide which the suit property was transferred to Omar Mansoor and D Salmin Said and later to the two appellants. And instead, by a transfer deed consented by the land officer on 23 October 1992, ownership of the suit house was vested in the respondent. It is on these facts that the learned Trial Resident Magistrate made a finding that the suit house belongs to the respondent. E

The memorandum of appeal contains 11 grounds. However, essentially the appeal is against two main findings which are that the trial Resident Magistrate refused to entertain the issue of limitation because it was not raised in the pleadings and secondly that he declared null and void the two transactions vesting ownership of the suit house to F Omar Mansoor and Salmin Said, and the appellants. Let me start with limitation.

Out of the three issues framed by the Trial Court, the first issue is whether the suit is time barred. In dismissing this issue the learned Trial Resident Magistrate said: G

`At the outset I must say issue No 1 does not feature in the whole case. Nothing has been said on this issue. Further to that the issues are framed from and based on the pleadings. Going by the pleadings in this case I have not been able to see anywhere the issue of limitation raised. The first H issue is therefore struck out.'

Attractive as it might appear to be this view is respectfully wrong. It is evident that the learned Resident Magistrate is not aware of the provision of s 3(1) of the Law of Limitation Act which says: I

`Subject to the provisions of this Act, every proceeding described in

A the first column of the First Schedule to this Act and which is instituted after the period of limitation prescribed therefore opposite thereto in the second column, shall be dismissed whether or not limitation has been set up as a defence'. (Emphasis supplied)

Thus in the present case the fact that appellants did not raise as a defence in his B pleadings the issue of limitation was not a bar against raising it at a later stage. Whether the issue was raised as a defence or not limitation is a relevant issue at any stage of the proceedings. The Trial Magistrate was thus wrong in striking out as he did. Having said this, the question in this case is whether the respondent's suit is time barred. C

The suit filed in the Trial Court is for recovery of land hence the limitation period is 12 years. As for the determination of accrual of right of action and computation of period of limitation for this suit the relevant provisions are ss 9(1) and 35 of the Law of Limitation D Act. Section 9(1) says:

`Where a person institutes a suit to recover land of a deceased person, whether under a will or intestacy and deceased person was, on the date of his death, in possession of the land and was the E last person entitled to the land to be in possession of the land, the right of action shall be deemed to have accrued on the date of death.'

And s 35 says:

`for the purposes of the provisions of this Act relating to suits for the recovery of land, an administrator F of the estate of a deceased person shall be taken to claim as if there had been no interval of time between the death of the deceased person and the grant of the letters of administration or, as the case may be, of the probate.' G

Applying these provisions to the present case respondent's right of action accrued from 14 January 1979 when the deceased died. The computation of this period still begins from that date despite the fact that respondent was granted letters of administration on 25 February 1992, that is about 12 years after death of the deceased. In fact what H actually happened is that by the time when respondent was granted the letters of administration her cause of action had already been time barred. And at the time when she filed the suit on 8 July 1993 respondent was late by over two years. The arguments I of Mr Raithatha on the issue of limitation are valid hence it is held that the suit against the appellants was incompetent as it was time barred.

MSUMI J

On the issue of who is the lawful owner of the suit house, the learned Trial Resident A Magistrate resolved it in favour of the respondent. His flow of argument starts by faulting Haruni Juma for entering into sale agreement with Omar Mansur and Salmin Said for the suit house on 17 July 1981 before he was granted letters of administration on 4 August B 1981. He argued that the purported sale was unlawful as at that time Haruni Juma had no interest in the suit house which he could validly pass. With respect this argument is unsupportable. The transfer of the suit property was effected on 2 September 1981 well after Haruni Juma had obtained the letters of administration. The sale agreement by C itself had no legal effect of vesting the property in the buyers. Its effect was to bind the parties, subject to obtaining the consent of the land officer, to abide with the terms of agreement. But the actual passing of the property was effected after the consent was obtained. Since at the time when the land officer consented to the transfer Haruni Juma D had already been appointed administrator, the transaction was legally proper.

Furthermore the learned Trial Magistrate held that Haruni Juma's appointment by Kariakoo primary court as administrator of the deceased estate was fraudulent hence the High Court in the Probate and Administration Case No 64 of 1992 declared the said E appointment null and void. Fortunately I was able to get the record of Probate and Administration Case No 53 of 1992 and nowhere is it shown that the court made the alleged nullification. In fact respondent falsely stated in her petition that there had been no previous proceedings for probate or administration in respect of the deceased estate. F The High Court was not aware of the appointment of Haruni Juma hence it could not have declared it null and void. It is evident that had it been aware of this fact, the court would not have upheld the respondent's petition for letters of administration. Thus if there is anybody to be accused of fraud it is the respondent. G

As noted earlier, the order granting the respondent letters of administration was improperly made in so far as there was already another grant made to Haruni Juma. If respondent had any grievances against the said appointment she should have raised it H in the proceedings vide which the appointment was made. For this reason her appointment which was made by this court in Case No 64 of 1991 cannot be left to stand simultaneously with the preceding grant made by Kariakoo Primary Court. In the exercise of court's inherent power as provided under s 95 of Civil Procedure Code, the I appointment of respondent made by this court in Case No 64 of 1991 is set aside.

In conclusion this appeal is allowed with costs. Appellants are declared to be the lawful A owners of the suit house. Thus they are entitled to be refunded the rents they had been paying to the respondent. B

Administrative law - Licence - Issue of - Discretion must be exercised with a judicial mind - Authority having acted under a false belief that applicant's vessel exceeded 500 BHP - Decision quashed - Authority ordered to reconsider H
-Headnote
The applicants applied for various orders against the respondents arising out of the refusal of a fishing licence for the 1996 fishing period. In 1994 the Minister for Tourism, Natural Resources and the Environment (the 2nd respondent) promulgated Government Notice 370 of 1994 whereby it was ordered that fishing vessels had to comply with I certain specifications relating to overall length, tonnage and engine power. It was specified that the vessel's main engine bhp should not exceed 500. The applicants' vessel was modified for these purposes and although it marginally exceeded A the maximum length its engine power was reduced to comply with the requirements. Notwithstanding the modification, the licence was not granted.

Aggrieved by this decision the applicant applied to court for the following relief: B

(i) an order of certiorari to remove into the court GN 370 of 1994 for the purpose of it being quashed for being unreasonable; (ii) an order of certiorari to remove into the court the decision made by the first and second respondents refusing to issue a fishing licence and for the quashing thereof; (iii) an order of mandamus directing the first and second respondents to issue a fishing licence and to C guide their action in terms of the provisions of the National Investment (Promotion and Protection) Act 10 of 1990; (iv) an order of mandamus directing the first and second respondents to respect the certificate of approval issued to the applicants by the third respondent; (v) an order of mandamus directing the third respondent to respect the certificate of approval issued to the applicants D and protect them from irregular procedure.

Held:

(i) Government Notice 370 of 1994 had been made under s 7 of the Fisheries Act 6 of 1970 which empowered the Minister responsible for fisheries to make E regulations for inter alia the protection of fish resources. There was nothing to indicate that the Minister had acted ultra vires in sanctioning GN 370. Neither was there anything to show that GN 370 was unreasonable.

(ii) There was no provision which stipulated that once the IPC issued an investor with a certificate of approval then the Director of Fisheries or the Minister had to issue him with a fishing licence. F

(iii) If the third respondent had a duty of care to protect the applicants and he breached that duty of care and the applicants had suffered a financial loss then the remedy was to be found somewhere else and not by an order of mandamus.

(iv) The discretion which the first respondent had to exercise in awarding fishing G licences had to be exercised with a judicial mind: in refusing the applicant's licence the first and second respondents had acted under a false belief that the appellant's vessel exceeded the specified 500 bhp and the decision was accordingly not reached on the basis of fairness and justice and had to be quashed. H

(vi) An order of mandamus was however not appropriate: the respondents were rather required to reconsider the applicants' application for a fishing licence on the basis of fairness and justice.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kaji, J: A

This is an application by the applicants Adecon Fisheries (T) Ltd and Mr Ebrahim Halday for orders of certiorari and mandamus.

It has been filed under s 2(2) of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance Cap 543, s 95 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1996, s 17(C) of the Law Reform (Fatal B Accidents and Miscellaneous Provision Ordinance) Amendment Act 55 of 1968, and any other enabling provision of the law.

The first applicant Adecon is a corporate company registered under the Companies Ordinance Cap 212 and has been doing fishing and exporting of frozen prawns for some C years.

The second applicant Iqbal is a citizen of Tanzania and the managing director of the first applicant company.

The first respondent is the Director of Fisheries in the Ministry of Tourism and Natural Resource and is entrusted, among other duties, with the authority to issue licences for D fishing or dealing in fish on fish products in Tanzania.

The second respondent is the Minister for Tourism, Natural Resources and Environment and under s 22 of the Fisheries Regulations 1989 he acts as an appellate body on issues arising under the Fisheries Act 6 of 1970. E

The third respondent is the Director-General of the Investment Promotion Centre established under the National Investment (Production and Protection) Act 10 of 1990 responsible for approving investors and for issuing certificates of approval. F

The fourth respondent is the Attorney-General who is the chief legal advisor to the Government.

In 1996 the Minister for Tourism, Natural Resources and Environment (ie second respondent) sanctioned Government Notice No 370 of 1994 whereby inter alia, it was ordered that any person who until the first day of March 1994 was using for fishing any G vessel/trawler in Lake Victoria or in the Indian Ocean (Tanzania Territorial Waters) shall, effective from 1 January 1996 have ceased to use that vessel for fishing unless the said vessel had complied with the specifications made thereunder. The said specifications showed that such a vessel should not exceed the overall length of 25,0 metres, 150 H gross registered tonnage (GRT) 2nd 500 main engine brake horse power (BHP).

For the 1996 fishing period the applicants were denied a fishing licence by the first respondent on the ground that their vessel exceeded the specified specifications. Their I appeal to the second respondent was rejected. They were aggrieved. They lodged this application praying for an order of certiorari to remove into this court the Government A Notice No 370 of 1994 for the purpose of being quashed for being unreasonable. And also to remove into this court the decisions made by the first and second respondents to refuse issuing fishing licence for 1996 fishing season for the purpose of being quashed. B

They also prayed for an order of mandamus so that the first and second respondents should be ordered to issue an appropriate fishing licence to the applicants and to guide their actions in accordance with the provisions of the National Investment (Promotion C and Protection) Act 10 of 1990. Also an order of mandamus should be directed to the third respondent to respect the certificate of approval issued to the applicants and to protect them from irregular procedure being bona fide investors protected by the laws of Tanzania. D

Elaborating on these the applicants submitted that the first and second respondents failed to act reasonably by failing to hold due and proper note of the fact that the applicants had rectified their vessel to the required specification of 500 BHP and that the reduction of the BHP was witnessed by a principal marine surveyor in the name of Mr E Josephat Shanta Notionata. And further that immediately after the meeting held on 19 January 1995 as per para 8 of the respondent's affidavit the applicants started making efforts to comply with the requirements of the law whereby a survey certificate was later issued by Capt Mokiwa after receiving a letter from the Ministry of Works confirming the F reduction. The applicants went on submitting that a ship is not like a bicycle or a saloon car which can be rectified or removed within a short notice and that the letter from the second respondent directing the applicants to move within a short notice and to make alternative arrangement was, in their view, very unreasonable in the circumstances. G

The applicants went on submitting that the respondents acted unreasonably by failing to consider the eminent loss of government revenue, the loss of income to the applicants, and the consequent breach of the hire purchase agreement resulting into losses of the H applicant's money already paid and the great possibility of repossession of the ship by the seller.

The applicants went on submitting that the principal secretary of the second respondent Ministry is among the members who sat to approve the applicant's application of the IPC whereby no objection was raised as to the size of the ship. It is therefore their view that I there was no scientific proof supporting the specification in GN 370 of 1994, and therefore in their view GN 370 of 1994 is unreasonable both in law and A in fact.

The applicants complained that the first and second respondents acted with bias by issuing fishing licences to other vessels which had not complied with GN 370 of 1994. These vessels which were mentioned in para 7.2 of the statement are MFV Emilia with B 256.36 GRT 992 BHP, MFV Arusha with 155,8 GRT 550 BHP, MFV Odyseas with 660 BHP MFV Al-Wally with 624 BHP and MFV Mama Leda with the length of 25 metres. While under s 14 of the Fisheries Act 6 of 1970 the Minister has a discretion to exempt any person or organisation from all or any of the provisions of that Act or any subsidiary C legislation made thereunder if doing so is in the public interest, it is their submission that the first respondent did not disclose anywhere what public interest was considered in granting the other vessels licences. It is their submission that the second respondent D in refusing their appeal to issue the licence to the applicants was biased and was made without any due regard to the public interest.

The applicants were also not happy with the third respondent.

In their submission they submitted that the third respondent had a duty and responsibility E to oversee promotion and protection of investors in accordance with the law and especially s 5 of the National Investment (Promotion and Protection) Act 10 of 1990 which says: F

> `5(1), To keep under review and advise the government periodically on policies, strategies and procedure relating to the promotion and regulation of investments and matters connected therewith, and to recommend action necessary for the encouragement of private investments including simplification of procedures effecting investment and legislative measures. G

5(2)(K), To assist holder of certificate of approval in securing all licences, authorisations, approvals and permits required to enable any approval granted by the centre to have full effect.' H

It is their complaint that when their application for a licence was refused they contacted the third respondent. But the third respondent did nothing to assist them nor did the third respondent make any effort to discuss the issue with the first and second respondents to advise them accordingly. I

The applicants further submitted that there has been no co-ordination between the second and third respondents as a result the third respondent issued them with a certificate of approval for the year 1996 but the first A and second respondents refused to issue them with a fishing licence. It is their view that it was useless for them to follow the procedure laid down by the law which is not honoured by the second respondent thereby rendering that law a useless piece of B document. They said the enactment of GN 370 of 1994 shows how the third respondent failed to protect the applicants and investors in general especially that it affected the main aspect of investment.

The applicants went on submitting through their learned counsel Mrs Kato that the first, C second and third respondents failed to analyse the state of the applicant's loan which had been guaranteed and approved by the Bank of Tanzania. And further that the respondents failed to appreciate the amount of capital and efforts that had been put in the approved project. They said the vessel is valued at US$2.5 million which was purchased under a hire purchase agreement through the Bank of Tanzania. They are D making a monthly payment of US$20,833.33 for setting of the loan to Ellafonissos which is a fishing and shipping company of Greece to whom they have so far paid US$1,514,770 of the purchase price which they also stand to lose if this application is not granted. They ended up by reminding this court that since the first and second E respondents have already issued fishing licences to other vessels which contravene GN 370 of 1994 then an order for mandamus prayed for can be made against the first and second respondents as it is within their powers. F

The respondents resisted the application. They were represented by Mr Songoro, learned State Attorney. Mr Songoro relying heavily on the counter affidavit deponed by M S Veridiana Nkwabi Macha, learned State Attorney submitted that the applicant's application for a fishing licence for the 1996 fishing season was rejected because their vessel did not meet the specification laid down in GN 370 of 1994 in that its Gross G Registered Tonnage (GRT) was 222 as against the specified 150 GRT, its length was 26.76 metres as against the specified 25.0 metres, and its brake horse power (BHP) was 700 and later reduced to 500 BHP. He said under s 15 of the Fisheries Act, the first H respondent has power to deny fishing licences to certain types of vessel, and he did to the applicants' vessel, for the purpose of conserving a diminishing fishery resources. He said if the applicant's vessel would be allowed to carry on fishing activities, it would cause a big mixing of water with debris and mud to the extent of endangering fishery resources. I

Mr Songoro went on submitting that in an application for certior-
1996 TLR p358
KAJI J
ari and mandamus like this one the crucial issue is whether the decision of the first and A second respondents was proper or erroneous in law, in view of GN370 of 1994.
It was his humble submission that the applicant's application did not point or disclose: B

(a) That there was an error on the face of the record in respect of the decision of the first and second respondents.

(b) That there was any violation of the principle of natural justice.

(c) That the respondents acted in excess of without jurisdiction. C

(d) That the respondents took into consideration extraneous consideration in reaching their decisions.

With all this it was the learned State Attorney's submission that there is no basis for this honourable court to quash the decision of the first and second respondents. He said D economic and policy consideration cannot defeat express provisions of the law.
The learned State Attorney went on submitting that the fact that the BHP was reduced to the required specification that per se was not enough to enable the applicants to be issued with a fishing licence because the lenght and GRT exceeded the specifications. E He said the first and second respondents cannot be held to have acted unreasonably because the applicants were given two years in which they were to have their vessel rectified or replaced with a vessel with the required specifications. It was the learned F State Attorney's submission that a period of two years was sufficient time and cannot be held to be unreasonable; and further that the applicants should not be heard complaining about losses because they decided to keep the vessel at their own risk because it did not meet the required specification. G
The learned State Attorney dismissed the applicant's sympathy for loss of government revenue in that since there is evidence that fishery resource is being depleted granting a fishing licence to the applicants would result into more depletion which would also cause a loss of revenue to the government. H
As far as the applicant's complaint for discrimination is concerned the learned State Attorney replied that the Fisheries Department is in a gradual process of phasing out fishing trawlers to avoid total depletion of the resource; and that it was only unfortunate the hammer fell on the applicants as a first move. It was the learned State Attorney's I submission that the act of issuing fishing licences even to some vessels which had exceeded specifications was not with bias.
KAJI J
The learned State Attorney went on replying that the question of costs incurred by the A applicants cannot be a good ground for contravening the law. That is why licences are issued annually to allow relevant authorities to determine the state of the resources before the commencement of the fishing season and issuance of fishing licence. B
With all this the learned State Attorney called upon this court to dismiss this application.
The applicants are praying for five remedies, namely:

C 1. For an order of certiorari to remove into this court Government Notice No 370 of 1994 for the purpose of it being quashed for being unreasonable.

2. For an order of certiorari to remove into this court the decision made by the first and second respondent's refusing to issue a fishing licence to the applicants for the 1996 fishing season. D

3. For an order of mandamus directing the first and second respondents to issue an appropriate fishing licence to the applicants and to guide their action in accordance with the provisions of the National Investment (Promotion and Protection) Act 10 of 1990. E

4. For an order of mandamus directing the first and second respondents to respect the certificate of approval issued to the applicants by the third respondent as bona fide investors protected by the laws of Tanzania. F

5. For an order of mandamus directing the third respondent to respect the certificate of approval issued to the applicants and protect them from irregular procedure.

I will deal with them one after another although not necessarily in seriatim. G

Before going into the merits or demerits of these prayers I must make it clear that it is a well-known principle of law that granting a prerogative order is a discretion of the court and that the court will only do so if that is the only remedy to meet the justice of that case. H

Now as far as the first prayer is concerned the applicant's allegation is that GN 370 of 1994 is unreasonable because there is no scientific proof supporting the specification made thereunder. The learned State Attorney's reply is that that Government Notice is not unreasonable because it was sanctioned for the purpose of conserving a diminishing fishery resource. I

The crucial issue therefore is whether this GN is reasonable. In deciding whether this GN is reasonable or unreasonable we must look at the provision A under which it was made, that is, whether it is ultra vires or intra vires.

This was made under s 7 of the Fisheries Act 6 of 1970. Under that provision of the law the Minister responsible for fisheries has got powers to make regulations for the better B carrying out the objects and purposes of that Act and may, by such regulations, make provisions which, in his opinion, are necessary or expedient for the purposes of protecting, conserving, developing, regulating or controlling the capture, collection, gathering, manufacture, storage or marketing of fish, fish products, aquatic flora or C products of aquatic flora.

The object and purpose of the Fisheries Act 6 of 1970 is inter alia to protect, conserve and control fish, fish products etc according to the wording of the title of that Act. D

According to the learned State Attorney GN 370 of 1994 was sanctioned to conserve diminishing fishery resources. It is my considered view that there is nothing indicating that the Minister acted ultra vires in sanctioning GN 370 of 1994. Likewise there is nothing indicating that GN 370 of 1994 is unreasonable. It was not necessary for the E Minister to show the amount of the diminishing fish. At any rate that would be impossible.

In view of this applicant's prayer for an order of certiorari to remove into this court GN 370 of 1994 for the purpose of being quashed is rejected. F

I will deal with the second and third prayer later.
I now move to the fourth prayer. The applicants are requesting this court to issue an order of mandamus directing the first and second respondents to respect the certificate of approval issued by the applicants by the third respondent as bona fide investors G protected by the laws of this country. According to the applicants since they were issued with a certificate of approval by the third respondent, the first and second respondents were duty bound to honour that certificate of approval and issue them with a fishing licence for that period. With respect to the learned counsel for the applicants I did not H come across a provision saying that once the Investment Promotion Centre issues an investor with a certificate of approval then the Director of Fisheries or the Minister responsible for fisheries must issue him with a fishing licence. Had it been an ordinary suit I wouldn't hesitate to hold that there is no cause of action. But for the purpose of a I prerogative order of mandamus I hold that there are no sufficient grounds for the order prayed for.
1996 TLR p361
KAJI J
In view of this the applicant's prayer for an order of mandamus directing the first and A second respondents to respect the certificate of approval issued by the third respondent to the applicants is rejected.
As far as the fifth prayer is concerned the applicants are praying for an order of B mandamus directing the third respondent to respect the certificate of approval issued to the applicants and to protect them from irregular procedure. According to the applicants, the third respondent has a duty to protect investors as per his obligations under s 5 of the National Investment (Promotion and Protection) Act 10 of 1990. It is the applicant's C feeling that the third respondent abdicated from that obligation because when they were refused a fishing licence by the first and second respondents, the third respondent refusing to respect the certificate so issued. With respect to the learned counsel for the applicants, I do not see how the question of mandamus comes in. If the third respondent D had a duty of care to protect the applicants and he breached that duty of care as a result the applicants have suffered a great financial loss, then the remedy can be found somewhere also and not by an order of mandamus. For that reason the applicant's prayer for an order of mandamus directing the third respondent to respect the certificate E of approval is rejected.
I now come to the first and second prayers. Under these prayers the applicants are praying for an order of certiorari to remove into this court the first and second respondent's decision refusing to issue the applicants with a fishing licence for the F purpose of quashing it, and an order of mandamus directing the first and second respondents to issue the applicants with a fishing licence.
According to the applicants the first and second respondents acted unreasonably in refusing them a fishing licence on the ground of failing to meet the required specification G in that they had reduced the BHP from 750 to the required specification of 500 and the length exceeded very slightly the required length in that their vessel was only 26 OM as against the specified 25 OM. They went on arguing that the first and second respondents were biased because they allowed other fishing vessels which exceeded H the specified specification by far. They cited some examples of the said vessels. And that no public interest was involved.

In reply the learned State Attorney replied that under the Fisheries Act 1970 the second respondent can exempt any person or organisation from all or any of the provisions of I this Act or of any subsidiary legislation made thereunder if in his opinion it is in the public interest so to do (s 14) and that the move to phase out all vessels which A exceeded the specification was a gradual process and that it was only unfortunate that the hammer fell on the applicants as the first victim. He denied any bias or discrimination.
When a law allows discretion then that discretion must be exercised with a judicial mind. B It must be exercised on the basis of fairness and justice. It must not be exercised with a bias or discriminatory mind.
In the present case the crucial issue in this respect is whether in refusing the applicants application for the 1996 fishing licence while granting fishing licences to other vessels C with similar defects the first and second respondents exercised their discretion with a judicial mind without bias or discrimination.
The second respondents rejected the applicant's appeal on the ground that their vessel exceeded the 500 BHP (see Annexure A5). D
This shows clearly that the first and second respondents in refusing the applicant's application acted under a false belief that the appellant's vessel exceeded the specified 500 BHP. There is an undisputed fact in Annexure A4 that the applicant's vessel had its BHP been reduced to 500 as witnessed by a principal marine surveyor from Hellenic E Register of Shipping Mr Josephat Shanta Nationata as confirmed by the Registrar of Ships. Hellenic Register of Shipping is an authorised classification society with power to issue statutory survey certificates on behalf of the Tanzania Government.
Looking at the vessels which were issued with fishing licences although they exceeded F the specified specification as listed by the applicants it would appear that they were allowed because none of them exceeded all three specifications unlike the applicant's vessel which appeared to have exceeded all specifications. MFV Emilia had 256.36 GRT and 992 BHP, MFV Arusha 155 GRT and 550 BHP, MFV Odyseas 600 BHP, MFV G Al-Wally 624 BHP and MFV Mama Leda with the length of 25 metres. Had the first and second respondents addressed their mind to the proper 500 BHP of the applicant's vessel their decision would probably have been different.
Since the first and second respondents refused the applicant's application on a wrong H belief that the applicant's vessel exceeded all three specifications, their decision was not based on the basis of fairness and justice. It was not free from apprehension of bias and discrimination. It is hereby quashed.
The court has been asked to issue an order of mandamus directing the first and second I respondents to issue the applicants with an appropriate fishing licence. But it must be borne in mind that the court is not supposed to use the powers of other organs with powers vested on them by A law. Its duty is only to see to it that such powers are properly used. It is only in very rare occasions (if any) when a court can order specific performance against a government organ. The proper cause is to declare or rather to direct what is to be done. B

In view of this the first and second respondents are hereby directed to reconsider the applicant's application for a fishing licence on the basis of fairness, justice and without bias or discrimination. This is to be done within fourteen (14) days from the date of delivery of this ruling. C

Landlord and tenant - Regional Housing Tribunal - Proceedings of - Participation of laymembers - Opinion to be sought before chairman prepares judgment - Section 11(4) of Rent Restriction Act 1984 G

-Headnote

The appellants appealed against a decision of the Housing Appeals Tribunal which had upheld a decision of the Regional Housing Tribunal at Dar es Salaam in favour of the respondent. The hearing of the application by the Housing Tribunal proceeded over a number of days and with a number of different laymembers participating at various H times. One of the laymembers was however present at most of the hearings but was not consulted by the chairman before the judgment was prepared. On appeal the appellants contended that this was a fatal flaw which vitiated the proceedings.

Msumi, J:
This is an appeal against the judgment of the Housing Appeals Tribunal of Tanzania. The C original suit was filed and determined by the Regional Housing Tribunal of Dar es Salaam whereby respondent claimed vacant possession of the suit premises and arrears of rents. Judgment was entered in his favour and this prompted the appellants to appeal to the Housing Appeals Tribunal whose decision the appellants are now D challenging in this court.
The dispute is centred on a tenancy agreement between the appellants as tenants and respondents as landlord. According to the proceedings in the original record respondent E is accusing the appellants for non-payment of rents and disrepair of the suit house. On their part appellants are denying both allegations.
Basically the memorandum of appeal contains two grounds. In the first ground Mr Kalunga, learned counsel for the appellants is contending that the Deputy Chairman of F Housing Appeals Tribunal erred when he held that there was a lease agreement between the appellants and the respondent and that the rent payable was US $1200 per month paid in Germany. The second ground is against the Deputy Chairman's decision that the trial Chairman of Regional Housing Tribunal was right in not seeking the opinion G of the lay-members before giving his judgment. Let me start with the second ground.
It is on record that when the application began to be heard on 21 February 1994 the two lay-members who set with the chairman were Sungura and Mrisho. After partly taking the evidence of the respondent the case was adjourned to 28 February 1994. The H names of the two lay-members who participated on that day are Sungura and Chiunga who presumably replaced Mrisho. Again the case was adjourned to 16 March 1994 for continuation of the evidence of the respondent. On that day Sungura and Mrisho are shown to be the participating members. After the respondent had finished giving his I evidence there had been a number of abortive hearing dates until on 27 July 1994 when the chairman sitting with Chiunga and Mrisho as lay-members A recorded the evidence of two witnesses and thereby closed the case for the plaintiff. Before opening of the case for the defendant, the tribunal dealt with interlocutory proceedings consisting of submissions of the counsels for both parties. Two B interlocutory rulings, both of them in favour of the respondent, were issued. Eventually the case was scheduled for defence on 5 October 1994. Though their advocate, Mr Kalunga was present, none of the appellants appeared. The tribunal decided to proceed with the matter and allowed Mr Kalunga to make his final submission which followed with C reply from Dr Mapunda for the respondent and counter reply from Mr Kalunga. The participating lay-members on that day were Sungura and Chiunga. But without consulting either of them, the chairman proceeded with the preparation of the judgment which he delivered on 17 October 1994. D

Reiterating the argument he raised in the first appeal, Mr Kalunga is arguing that before writing his judgment, the trial chairman ought to have sought the opinion of at least lay-member

Sungura who participated from the beginning of the trial. His failure to do so was in breach of s 11(4) of the Rent Restriction Act, 1984. As quite rightly observed by E the Appeal Tribunal, this subsection must be read together with ss (3) of the same section. This is what the two provisions read:

`11(3) Notwithstanding the provisions of ss (1) if in the course of any proceedings before the tribunal F either or both members of the tribunal who were present at the commencement of the proceedings is or are present, the chairman and the remaining member (if any) may continue and conclude the proceedings notwithstanding such absence.

(4) At the conclusion of any proceedings before the tribunal the chairman shall seek and record the G opinion of other members present at such conclusion.'

In his judgment the deputy chairman of the Appeal Tribunal observed, among other things, that it was quite irregular for the trial chairman to keep on changing members as H the records indicate. However, on the question whether the trial chairman was right in not seeking the opinion of the members, the deputy chairman was of the following view:

`... But much as the mix up contravened the provisions of s 11(3) of the said Act, we don't think that I after the learned chairman had decided not to record the opinion of the members he was in breach of s 11(4) because the members present should be those who commenced the hearing and thereby A continued to be present during the continuation of the hearing to the end.'

The whole purpose of having lay-members is to embody the notion of public participation B in the adjudication of landlords-tenants disputes. But together with this aim the law took cognizance of the fact that it might not be possible to get the participating members for continuation of the case after it had been adjourned. Subsection (3) is intended to take care of such eventualities. And in order to be able to contribute usefully in the decision of C the case, a lay-member must be present in court when evidence for each party is being adduced. In the present appeal the case for the respondent is basically made of the testimony of the respondent himself. The other two witnesses who testified for the respondent's case have not substantially added anything to it. Indeed the judgments of D both tribunals are based on the evidence of the respondent and the submissions of the counsels. According to the records, lay-member Songoro was present at the commencement of the case and at subsequent sittings when respondent completed his E evidence and when the trial was concluded by submissions of both counsels. Thus unlike other members who sat in this case at different times, Songoro is supposed to be well abreast with the substantive evidence of the whole case. The provisions of s 11(3) Rent Restruction Act, 1984 could not be invoked to justify omission of his opinion. F Where a lay-member has participated at the commencement of the case to its conclusion and he has been present in court in all subsequent sittings when the determining evidence was adduced, his opinion must be sought before the chairman prepares his judgment. Failure to do so will be contravening the mandatory provision of s G 11(4) of the Act and is the circumstances of this case, this defect is fatal to the whole proceedings. The mere fact that a lay-member has missed some of the sittings in the trial does not automatically disqualify him from giving his opinion if, as in the present case, he had been present when substantive and determining evidence was being H adduced. Hence it is on this understanding that the decision of the trial chairman to readmit lay-member Songoro even after he had missed some of the sittings can be legally justified.

In conclusion, without considering whether or not the parties entered into a lease I agreement, I uphold this appeal on the observations made concerning the second ground. The judgment and proceedings of the Regional Housing Tribunal are nullified and it is hereby ordered that the A suit to start afresh before another chairman with competent jurisdiction.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kaji, J:

This is an application by the applicant Yuasa Battery (EA) Ltd for the following A orders/reliefs:

(i) That time within which to apply for leave to apply for an order of certiorari to B remove into this court and quash the decision of the Conciliation Board of Dar es Salaam made on 28 February 1994 be extended by enough time as would enable the applicant to make such an application.

(ii) That subject to extension of time being granted as prayed in item (i) above, C leave be granted to the applicant to apply to this court for an order of certiorari to remove into this court and quash the decision of the Conciliation Board of Dar es Salaam made on 28 February 1994 in the matter involving Eliakunda Mbonea, Said A Pazi and Halima M Selemani as complainant and Yuasa D Battery (EA) Ltd as the respondents as well as the decision made on 16 February 1995 by the Labour Commissioner on a reference to him by Yuasa Battery (EA) Ltd against the aforesaid decision of the Conciliation Board.

(iii) That the execution of the decision of the Conciliation Board of Dar es Salaam E made on 28 February 1994 as well as that of the Labour Commissioner made on 16 February 1995 in the reference giving rise to this cause be stayed pending the determination of the application for an order of certiorari to remove into this court and quash the said decisions. F

It has been made under s 2(2) of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance Cap 453, s 17(2) of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Cap 360, as added by the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) G Ordinance (Amendment) Act, 1968 and s 14(1) of the Law of Limitation Act 10 of 1971, and all other enabling provisions of law.

Upon perusing the affidavit deponed by Mr Juma Ibrahim Nzwalia who is the Assistant General Manager of the applicant company, and upon perusing the written submission of the applicant's learned counsel Mr Kisusi have been quite satisfied that the applicant's H delay was neither deliberate nor through negligence but that the applicant was first trying to exhaust all available remedies before resorting to the discretionary remedy of a prerogative order of certiorari. This was in line with the principle laid down in the cases of I R v Hillingdon London Borough (1) and R v Paddington Valuation Officer (2).

KAJI J

In view of this I hold that the applicant's delay was with sufficient cause. A

For that reason I allow the applicant's first prayer.

As far as the second prayer is concerned, after perusing the written submission by the applicant's learned counsel I have been quite satisfied that the applicant has established B a prima facie case for leave to apply for an order of certiorari.

In view of this leave is granted for applicant to apply for an order of certiorari to remove into this court the decision of the Dar es Salaam Conciliation Board dated 28 February 1994 and the decision of the Labour Commissioner dated 16 February 1995 for the C purposes of the said decisions to be quashed.

Also after perusing Mr Nzwalla's affidavit especially para 14 together with the written submission of the learned counsel for the applicant I have been quite satisfied that if execution is not stayed the industrial relations at the place of work is likely going to be D damaged irreparably as such execution would mean reinstating the three employees thereby imposing upon the parties a master-servant relationship when they are still fighting fiercely in a legal battle. The industrial harmony and sound management will very E likely be jeopardised. For that reason I allow the application for stay of execution pending determination of the applicant's application for the order of certiorari.

The applicant to file the necessary papers within 14 days from the date of delivery of this ruling.

-Headnote

The appellant and two others were convicted of burglary and stealing. They were D prosecuted as a result of a search, ordered under s 34 of the Police Force Ordinance, which led to the seizure of one radio set stolen from the house burgled. On appeal it was argued for the appellant that the trial leading to his conviction was null and void because s 34(4) of the Police Force Ordinance requires all prosecutions conducted as a result of E any exercise of powers under that section not to be commenced save with the leave of the Director of Public Prosecutions:

Held:

(i) Section 34(4) of the Police Force Ordinance provides that `no prosecution' such as the one in the instant case `shall be commenced without the leave of the Director of Public Prosecutions'; F

(ii) In order to protect people against possible abuse of the due process of the law it is mandatory that s 34(4) of the Ordinance be construed strictly;

[zJDz]Judgment

Mackanja, J: I

The appellant and one Geras Jeremia were convicted of burglary contrary to s 294(1) of the Penal Code in respect of the first count.

MACKANJA J

These two men and the third accused, a young woman aged 20 years, were convicted A on the second count in respect of stealing contrary to s 265 of the Penal Code. Only the appellant, who featured as the second accused during the trial, has appealed. He has raised four grounds in his appeal. Mr Mahuma, who represents him, was granted leave to argue the fourth ground first. It is there contended that the trial of the appellant in B the lower court is a nullity for non-compliance with s 34(4) of the Police Force Ordinance Cap 332 as amended by s 397 of the Criminal Procedure Act 9 of 1985. Mr Mahuma's submissions will be understood if the events which led to the prosecution of the appellant are brought out. C

The events are fairly brief. It was found as a fact by the lower court that the appellant and the said Geras Jeremia burgled the residential house of one Leonard Daud at 3.00 am on the night of 21 February 1996. In tandem with that burglary the appellant and his D co-accused persons were found to have stolen one radio from that house. The recovery of the radio is the genesis of the fourth ground of appeal.

According to the record of proceedings before the lower court the radio was seized from the room in which the third accused spent nights. The seizure of the radio came about E after that room was searched by D/C Sembulya (PW2) who was armed with a search order, Exh P2. A search order is Police Form (PF) 91 which is issued under s 34 of the Police Force Ordinance. PF 91 with serial No 304842, Exh P2 tells it all. It is Mr Mahuma's contention that no prosecution should have been commenced without the F consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions as required by ss (4) of s 34 of the Police Force Ordinance, and that non-compliance with these provisions has rendered the prosecution of the accused persons null and void. For this reason he has invited me to quash the conviction and to set aside the sentence. G

Mr Kabuguzi, learned State Attorney, has conceded that he finds a fundamental point of law and fact from the record of proceedings of the lower court which has been raised in the fourth ground of appeal. He admits that it is mandatory to comply with s 34 of the H Police Force Ordinance. He intimated, however, that the construction of that section should be such that where there are circumstances proving the commission of an offence the Court should desist from interfering with a conviction. He believes that the non-compliance was a technical error which can be overridden by the larger interest in I justice. Thus he prayed that the appeal be dismissed.

MACKANJA J

The provisions which are the subject of these contentions are these: A

`34(4) No prosecution resulting from the exercise of powers under this section shall be commenced without the leave of Director of Public Prosecution.' (The emphasis is mine.) B

The operative word is `shall'. What is the effect of this word when used in statutes? The word `shall', according to The Collins English Dictionary, second Ed, is used in documents to indicate compulsion. Black's Law Dictionary (Abridged sixth ed) goes C further, the learned authors say thus:

`Shall. As used in statutes, contracts, or the like, this word is generally imperative or mandatory. In common or ordinary parlance and in its ordinary signification, the term "shall" is a word of command, D and one which has always or which must be given a compulsory meaning as denoting obligation ...'

MP Tandom, the learned author of Interpretation of Statutes, fifth ed says at 97 that: E

`From the mere use of the word "shall" it does not necessarily follow that the provisions are mandatory for all purposes. The meaning of the word "shall" has to be determined by looking at all the provisions of the section and in particular the context in which it is used. The word "shall" is F mandatory if certain penal consequences ensue the failure to take action under the particular provisions ...'

It may be safely stated that generally the word `shall' does not always mean that the enactment is obligatory; it depends upon the context in which the word `shall' occurs G and the other circumstances. In fact authorities on the use of the word `shall' are agreed that, although the word in ordinary usage means `must', it is not inconsistent with discretion. Where, however, its application or use infringes on an individual's basic rights, its use should be restricted to its natural and ordinary meaning. H

A criminal trial involves a number of basic rights the most immediate one being the right to a fair trial. A trial will not be fair if it is not in conformity with the law. In the instant case the prosecution was commenced without the consent of the Director for Public Prosecutions. It is not for nothing that the consent was made a pre-condition for any trial. I Speaking for myself I find that the intention to legislate on a consent was intended to protect individuals against unwarranted and sham trials. In order to protect people against possible A abuse of the due process of the law it is mandatory that s 34(4) of the Police Force Ordinance be construed strictly in the ordinary and natural meanings of words employed in its provisions. In this connection the argument by learned State Counsel is untenable, B for justice is not just if the accused is not accorded a fair trial. The contravention of the provisions of ss (4) of s 34 of the Police Force Ordinance has therefore rendered the proceedings before the lower court null and void. I would therefore quash the proceedings and order a fresh trial according to law if the Republic is still interested. C

The convictions against Geras Jeremia, Peter Thomas alias Peter Toshi and Halima Mussa alias Kase are quashed and sentence set aside. Because the accused persons have served only a minor part of the sentence in respect of the first count I direct that they be tried afresh in conformity with the law if the Director of Public Prosecution still D desires to do so. Unless, therefore, their continued incarceration is justified on account of other lawful matters, each of the accused persons is discharged from prison forthwith. E proven that the girl defiled, who was two years of age, had been penetrated. A

Held:

(i) The evidence adduced did not show that there had been penetration: if there had been penetration, the complainant, being a very young girl, would have shown some injury. B

(ii) The evidence did however prove the offence of attempted defilement and the conviction had to be changed accordingly.

(iii) In the light of the changed conviction and an incorrect sentence having been imposed (the minimum sentence now being 20 years' imprisonment by virtue of Act 19 of 1992) the sentence had to be imposed afresh. An appropriate C sentence would be 10 years' imprisonment and 12 strokes.

Case Information

Ordered accordingly.

Mbago for the respondent D

[zJDz]Judgment
Sekule, J:
The appellant was charged with, and convicted of the offence of defilement, contrary to s 136(1) of the Penal Code.
The particulars of the offence were that on or about 8 April 1994 at about 11.00 hrs at E Nyakato area within the township and District of Musoma, Mara Region did carnally know one Buya d/o Sylivester a girl under the age of fourteen years.
Upon conviction the appellant was sentenced to fifteen years imprisonment. He was F also ordered to suffer twelve strokes of the cane.
The appellant has now appealed to this court against conviction and sentence.
The case for the prosecution at the trial was briefly that PW1, Farida Mohamed was a G tenant in a house where the appellant also lived. She had a two-year old daughter, Buya Sylivester. On the material day, at about 11.30 hrs she was in her room. She then heard her daughter Buya crying sharply in the appellant's room. She rushed there and found the appellant lying on top of the child. He was naked. She raised an alarm and PW2, H Masunga was the first person to arrive at the scene. Semen looking stuff was seen on the vagina parts of the child and on her buttocks. The appellant was arrested and taken to a ten cell leader, one Ramadhani M Muyenjwa and he was subsequently charged. I
The child, Buya was examined. It was observed on the PF3 which was produced at the trial thus:
1996 TLR p375
SEKULE J
A `Hakuna jeraha lolote la kimwili au la sehemu za uzazi lilionekana. Uchafu ulikutwa sehemu za kike umeonyesha mbegu nyingi za kiume.'
The appellant denied to have been involved in the commission of the offence charged. The appellant was present at the hearing of the appeal and complained that he was not B taken to hospital.
Mr Mbago, learned State Attorney appeared for the respondent Republic.
It was his submission that the appellant was caught red-handed lying naked on the top of C the child and that sperms was found on the child's vagina.
Mr Mbago, however, observed that going by the contents of the PF3, there was no penetration. It was therefore his submission that the offence of defilement was not proved beyond reasonable doubt. And that the evidence adduced disclosed the offence D of attempted defilement contrary to s 136(2) of the Penal Code. And that this is the offence which the appellant ought to have been convicted. He contended the appellant should now be convicted of that offence and sentenced accordingly. Mr Mbago also submitted that the appellant was not a young person in terms of the provisions of Cap 13. E
I have examined and considered the evidence on record as well as the appellant's grounds of appeal and I am satisfied that the evidence on record clearly established that the appellant was found red-handed lying naked on top of the child. See the evidence of PW1 which was amply supported in this regard by the evidence of PW2, and to some F extent by the evidence of PW3.

Sperm was also seen on the vaginal parts of the child, see the testimony of PW1, PW2 and PW3 and again this was also confirmed by the doctor who examined the child as the PF3 shows. G
The appellant contended at the hearing of the appeal that the girl in question was about fourteen years of age. This certainly is not true in the light of the clear evidence from PW1, PW2 that the girl was two years of age. And the appellant did not controvert this evidence at the trial. H
From this evidence, like the trial court, I am satisfied that the appellant sexually assaulted the child, Buya Sylivester.
The next issue for consideration is whether the full offence of defilement was established. The Trial Court found it to be have been established. I
I have also on my part considered this issue, and I tend to agree with Mr Mbago, learned State Attorney that from the evidence
SEKULE J
adduced the full offence of defilement was not established. The PF3 shows that there A was no penetration for the doctor observed that there was no injury on or in the vagina of the child, except that a lot of sperm was seen on the vaginal parts. The victim as the evidence shows was a child of about two years of age. I am therefore inclined to the B view that if there was penetration, she should certainly have sustained some injury in her private parts. That she did not sustain any injury in her private parts, it is as already said a clear indication that there was no penetration. And in the circumstances, therefore, the full offence of defilement was not committed. C
It is, however, my considered opinion that the evidence adduced did disclose and establish beyond doubt the offence of attempted defilement, contrary to s 136(2) of the Penal Code.
I would and do hereby therefore quash the appellant's conviction for the offence of defilement and substituted therefore a conviction for the offence of attempted defilement. D
The appellant, though, did not commit the full offence of defilement on the child; in the sense that there was no penetration. This was but a question of luck not lack of resolve on his part to commit that ghastly act on the child. He behaved and acted beastly. The full offence of defilement under s 136(1) of the Penal Code attracts a maximum E sentence of life imprisonment with or without corporal punishment. And by virtue of Act 19 of 1992 it now attracts a minimum sentence of twenty years' imprisonment. It was therefore with respect wrong for the trial magistrate to impose a sentence of fifteen years for the full offence of defilement. F
The offence of attempted defilement contrary to s 136(2) of the Penal Code, the offence for which the appellant has now been convicted attracts a maximum sentence of fourteen years' imprisonment, with or without corporal punishment. I would therefore set G aside the sentence of fifteen years which was imposed for the full offence of defilement. But as observed though the appellant has now been convicted for the offence of attempted defilement; there is no doubt he acted beastly and acts of this kind must also be firmly discouraged. A deterrent sentence was therefore called for, I would H and do hereby sentence the appellant to a sentence of ten years' imprisonment. The corporal punishment sentence imposed by the trial court is retained. This appeal partly succeeds and partly fails in the manner indicated above.

In essence the appeal is dismissed as specified above. I

Civil Practice and Procedure - Recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments - Jurisdiction C of court where provisions of Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Ordinance, Cap 8 of the Revised Laws inapplicable - Common law applicable - Under common law, enforcement must be sought by bringing an action on the debt. D
-Headnote
The applicant sought the review of orders made in regard to the registration of a judgment granted in Zaire. The applicant contended that the Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Ordinance, Cap 8 of the Revised Laws, was inapplicable and that certain irregularities attended the registration which rendered it invalid. E
Held:

(i) The provisions of Cap 8 were inapplicable. This however did not imply that the Court lacked jurisdiction to enforce a judgment given in Zaire. The Court's jurisdiction to enforce judgments given in foreign countries emanated from F statutory law, common law and treaties. In the absence of any such written law and treaty in relation to Zaire, judgments of that country were enforceable at common law in Tanzania on what had come to be known as the doctrine of obligation.

(ii) A judgment creditor who sought to enforce a foreign judgment at common law could not do so by direct execution of the judgment: enforcement had to be G sought by bringing an action on the debt. The proceedings instituted in the present matter were bad as they did not comply with this requirement.

[zJDz]Judgment
Mapigano, J:

Four companies figure in this matter. They are Willow Investment, OCS and Gecamines I which are resident in Zaire, and one called Marina Metal Works which is based in Kenya. Willow Investment obtained a judgment in Lubumbashi for a colossal sum of US$336,073,260.00 against A OCS to which Gecamines is admittedly indebted to the tune of US$69,048,051.59, and that is the genesis for this case.

Upon an application brought by Willow Investment the foreign judgment was registered B by this Court on 9 August 1996, and on 15 August 1996 an order was made for the execution of the decree by attachment and sale of movable goods belonging to Gecamines which were lying at the Dar es Salaam port. The order was carried out and the goods were purchased by Marina Metal Works. The application was made under the C Foreign Judgments (Reciprocal Enforcement) Ordinance, Cap 8 of the Revised Laws and this Court proceeded on the footing that the Ordinance was applicable.
The Ordinance is designed to facilitate the direct enforcement of certain foreign judgments in Tanganyika. As the preamble says, it makes provisions for the D enforcement in Tanganyika of judgments given in foreign countries which accord reciprocal treatment to judgments given in Tanganyika, for facilitating the enforcement in foreign countries of judgments given in Tanganyika, and for other purposes connected E with such matters. It was passed in July 1935. In its original terms s 3(1) provided that if the Governor in Council is satisfied that substantial reciprocity of treatment would be accorded by a foreign country in respect of recognition and enforcement of judgments given in the superior courts of Tanganyika, he may by order direct that Part I of the Ordinance be extended to that country. F
By virtue and exercise of those powers the Governor in Council extended the benefits conferred by Part I to judgments given in the superior courts of the countries specified in the schedule to GN 8 and 9 of 1936. The power conferred on the Governor has passed G to the president in due course but the countries to which the benefits are extended have remained the same to date.
By s 4 a judgment creditor under a judgment to which Part I applies, may apply to the High Court to have the judgment registered in the High Court, and unless any of the circumstances stipulated in the Ordinance obtains the Court is obliged to order the H judgment registered. A judgment so registered is for the purposes of execution of the same force and effect and subject to the same control, and proceedings may be taken thereon, as if it had originally been given in Tanganyika. I Gecamines is aggrieved by all the orders that have been made in regard to the registration of the judgment, the attachment of the goods and the sale of the same. It has applied for the review of the orders and the A application is brought under the provisions of Order 42 of the Civil Procedure Code. Two material grounds have been submitted in support of the application.

The first ground is that the Ordinance, ie Cap 8 is inapplicable, and reference has been B made to the provision of s 3 and GN 8 and 9 of 1936. It is accordingly submitted that this Court has no jurisdiction to order a registration of a judgment given in Zaire and that, therefore, both the registration and the sale should be set aside.

The second ground is urged on the basis of a supposition that the provisions of the C Ordinance are applicable. It is that the registration and execution orders are impaired by palpable irregularities. The first point urged by Mr Nassor for Gecamines is that the existence of the conditions laid down under s 4(1) were not established. This has reference to the proviso that a judgment shall not be registered if at the date of the D application it has been wholly satisfied or it could not be enforced by execution in the country of the original court. In the counter-affidavit filed by Gecamines Mr Mutshipanguhas has deposed, vide para 3, that to the best of his knowledge the law in Zaire forbids the attachment of goods belonging to a parastatal body and that E Gecamines is one such body. Mr Nassor has cited s 88 of the Tanzania Railways Corporation Act, 1977 to substantiate his assertion that such situation is not peculiar to Zaire.

Secondly it is said that there was a non-compliance with the provisions of Rule 8 of GN 15 of 1936, which rule imperatively calls for the service of a written notice of the F registration of such a judgment on the judgment debtor which notice should also tell him that he has a right to apply on the grounds prescribed in the ordinance to have the registration set aside, and state the period within which he may do so. G

Thirdly, it is contended that the Court went wrong when it ordered the attachment of Gecamines' property without giving due notice to Gecamines and affording it proper opportunity to be heard.

On behalf of Willow Investment Mr Maira has conceded that the Ordinance is H inapplicable. But to him that does not in any way connote an absence of jurisdiction for the High Court to enforce the judgment. He has maintained that art 108(1) and (2) and s 2 of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance, Cap 453, give the High Court power to order the registration and enforcement of the judgment in accordance with the I common law. He has suggested that the registration should have been sought and ordered under s 95 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the mistakes made in the registration and A enforcement of the judgment are mere irregularities.

Mr Maira has pointed out that Gecamines has been coupled in the proceeding not as Willow's judgment debtor but basically as Willow's judgment debtor's debtor, and that as B such Gecamines had no right of audience before the attachment was ordered. Counsel has referred this Court to Rule 45 of Order 21 of the Civil Procedure Code which provides for the attachment of debts which are due to judgment debtors. C

With regard to the sale Mr Maira has contended that as innocent purchaser of the goods for value Marina Metal Works cannot be prejudiced by whatever flaw that has attended the registration and sale of the goods. His authority is Rule 76 of Order 21 of the Civil Procedure

Code, which, I think, is better read along with Rule 2 of Ord 75. Mr Nassor D has countered by arguing that there is no occasion for this Court to invoke the provision of Rule 76 of Order 21.
It seems to me most of Mr Nassor's arguments are irresistible. I must agree that the provisions of Cap 8 are inapplicable. That does not, however, imply that this Court lacks E jurisdiction to enforce a judgment given in Zaire. The effect of s 8 of the Ordinance to which my attention has been drawn is merely that where a judgment is capable of registration under the Ordinance the judgment creditor is barred from instituting any other kind of proceeding for its enforcement, such as an action upon the judgment or a suit on the original cause of action. F
The jurisdiction of this Court to enforce judgments given in foreign countries emanates from statutory law, common law and treaties. In the absence of any such written law and treaty in relation to Zaire, judgments given in that country are, I think, enforceable at G common law in Tanganyika on what has become to be known as the doctrine of obligation. In accordance with that doctrine, where a foreign court of competent jurisdiction has adjudicated a certain sum to be due from one person to another, the liability to pay that sum becomes a legal obligation that is recognised and enforceable in H Tanganyika. The foreign judgment is strictly not enforceable as such, but is to be regarded as creating a simple contract debt enforceable by an action of debt. Once the judgment is proved, the burden would lie on the judgment debtor to show cause why he should not perform the obligation. This is consistent with s 11 of the Civil Procedure I Code. It follows that a judgment creditor who seeks to enforce a foreign judgment at common law cannot do so by direct execution of the judgment. A Enforcement must be sought by bringing an action on the debt. The procedure obtaining in England would serve as a model. The evidence would be on affidavit and the defendant should be given proper opportunity of showing cause why the foreign B judgment should not be recognised or enforced. If a decree is ultimately passed in favour of the plaintiff, he may proceed to execute it in Tanganyika in the manner provided by the Civil Procedure Code.

For the foregoing reasons I have to hold that the proceeding for enforcement of the judgment was bad altogether. C
The position of the purchaser should be viewed in the light of the fact that there was no valid legal basis for the attachment of the goods. With due respect to Mr Maira, it is in my opinion a completely wrong idea that the provision of Rule 76 of Order 21 avails D Marina Metal Works. The scope of that rule is obviously limited. The rule pertains to only irregularities attending the mode of publishing and conducting the sale of the goods by public auction. It presupposes pre-existence of valid orders for attachment and sale. As, I think, sufficiently demonstrated, the mistake here is basic. The mistake fatally affects E the validity of the registration and enforcement of the judgment.
It is right and fair to grant this application. In the final event the registration of the judgment as well as the attachment and sale of the goods are set aside, and Gecamines will have its costs. F

Banking - Negligence by banker - What constitutes - Failure to act on instructions of customer where court order had frozen account
Banking - Effect of court order on deposit account
-Headnote
The appellant had instituted suit against the respondent bank in the High Court at Dar es E Salaam claiming damages as a result of negligence by the respondent bank in opening a deposit account as instructed by the appellant. The High Court dismissed the suit and the appellant accordingly noted an appeal contending that the trial Judge had erred in holding that the respondent was not negligent in failing to open the deposit F account. It appeared from the evidence that the appellant was a customer of the respondent bank and had deposited with the bank a personal cheque in an amount of Shs 14 million drawn on his current account with another bank. The money was part of a decretal sum paid to him by the High Court as a result of a suit in another matter. One of G the judgment debtors in that matter appealed to the Court of Appeal against the decision and on 29 December 1987, on the very day on which the appellant deposited the amount into his current account, an application for stay of execution was filed in respect of the pending appeal in that matter. The appellant instructed the respondent bank to transfer the amount into a deposit account durable for a month but the H respondent failed to comply with this instruction. On 20 January 1988 the High Court made an order that pending the application for stay of execution, monies were to remain where they were and the status quo was to be maintained. The respondent bank relied in part on a ledger card which made reference to a block on the funds in terms of a court I order dated 6 January 1988. Counsel for the appellant submitted that the presumption under section 77 of the Evidence Act, 1967, applied only to matters in the ordinary course of banking business and that in the present case the A presumption did not arise because it was not part of a banker's business to receive court orders.
Held:
(i) While it was true that it was not part of a banker's business to receive any court B orders, it was certainly the law that the account of a bank's customer was liable to court attachment by garnishee order and the law in Tanzania was similar to that applicable in England. The presumption concerning the relevant entries was rebutted by two important factors, viz the court record produced at the trial disclosed no court order prior to that of 20 January. Neither was there C any trace of either the office file or the purported order mentioned in the bank's ledger card. In the light of the available evidence there could be no other conclusion than that the respondent bank received no court order prior to the order made on 20 January.

(ii) On the available evidence, the order must have been communicated to the D respondent bank soon after it was made, ie on or about 20 January 1988.

(iii) The effect of the order was that the deposit account in favour of the appellant was neither to be operated by the appellant nor to be utilized by the respondent bank and the result was that it frustrated the contract between the appellant and E the respondent bank before the date when the deposit account was expected to mature. The appellant's claim was accordingly flawed.

[zJDz]Judgment

Nyalali, CJ:

Felix Rutazengelera, hereinafter called the appellant, instituted a suit in the High Court at G Dar es Salaam in respect of a sum of money which he had deposited with the Cooperative and Rural Development Bank, hereinafter called the respondent bank. The suit was for damages allegedly suffered by the appellant as a result of negligence by the respondent bank in opening a deposit account as instructed by the appellant. The High H Court, Chua, J dismissed the suit with costs. The appellant was aggrieved by that decision, hence this appeal to this court. Mr Semgalawe, learned counsel, appears for the appellant in this appeal, whereas Mr Kalunga, learned counsel appears for the respondent bank. I

The memorandum of appeal contains two grounds which state as follows:

1996 TLR p384

NYALALI CJ

A `1. The Trial Judge erred in fact and in law in holding that the respondents were not negligent in failing to open a deposit account for the appellant as they were complying with court orders and therefore the appellant was not entitled to claim damages and interest.

2. The Trial Judge erred in law deciding that there is no merit in the prayers of the appellant, one B being loss of profit in the appellant's business, the reason being that the Trial Judge wonders as to why the appellant took no steps to raise money from his other business to mitigate such a loss, and that the Trial Judge was left with the impression that the appellant C had deliberately inflated the value of the orders that the appellant missed and the profit that could have accrued if the appellant had been able to supply the timber.'

In the course of hearing this appeal, the second ground was withdrawn by counsel for D the appellant. From the proceedings both in this court and the court below, it is apparent that the following matters are not in dispute between the parties. At the material time, the appellant was a customer of the respondent bank, where he had a current account at its Lumumba branch. He was also a customer of the National Bank of Commerce where E he had another current account at its City Drive Branch. On 29 December 1987 the appellant deposited a sum of Shs 14,000,000/= by personal cheque drawn on his current account with the National Bank of Commerce. The money thus deposited was part of a decretal sum of Shs 16,474,176/70 paid to him by the High Court at Dar es F Salaam, being the proceeds of a decree made in High Court Civil Case No 92 of 1982, in which the appellant, using the name of Felix Bwogi, was the decree holder. One of the judgment debtors in that case, namely the Registrar of Buildings, appealed to the Court of Appeal against the decision of the High Court. On 29 December 1987, that is the very G day when the appellant deposited Shs 14,000,000/= in his current account at the Lumumba branch of the respondent bank, an application for stay of execution was filed in the High Court by the Registrar of Buildings in respect of the pending appeal. H

There is also no dispute that after depositing the cheque of Shs 14,000,000/= the appellant instructed the respondent bank to transfer that money into a deposit account durable for a month. The respondent bank failed to comply with the appellant's instructions. On 20 January 1988, the High Court, Kyando, J made the following interim I order in respect of the application for stay of execution:

1996 TLR p385

NYALALI CJ

A `The application for stay of execution is indeed filed so until it is determined, monies are to remain where they are and status quo is to be maintained as Mr Kesaria has prayed for.'

There is also no dispute between the parties that thereafter there was a series of communications between the appellant and the respondent bank in the course of which B the appellant was informed by the respondent bank to the effect that his instructions were not complied with because of a court order. There is also no dispute that the appeal by the Registrar of Buildings was eventually heard by the Court of Appeal. The appeal was partly successful. On 7 December 1989, the High Court directed the C respondent bank to transfer to the High Court a sum of Shs 16,474,176/70 standing to the credit of the appellant at the bank. The respondent bank transferred only what it had in favour of the appellant, that is, the sum of Shs 14,000,000/=. D

With regard to matters which are in dispute between the parties to this appeal, it is the appellant's case that the respondent bank was duty bound to comply promptly with appellant's instructions to open a deposit account for the sum of Shs 14,000,000/=. It is E part of the appellant's case that there was no court order which prevented the respondent bank from complying with the relevant instructions, but the respondent bank negligently failed to do so thereby causing the appellant to suffer material loss.

The respondent bank's case on the other hand is to the effect that soon after the appellant had given instructions in respect of the deposit account, a court order was F received blocking the appellant's current account, with the result that the respondent bank was prevented from complying with those instructions.

The first important issue for consideration and decision in this case is whether the G respondent bank received any court order prior to the order made by Kyando, J on 20 January 1988. This issue was raised at the trial and in his judgment, the learned Trial Judge stated:

`Learned counsel for the plaintiff Mr Ukonga drew the attention of the court to the fact that the defence H had failed to render in court the order that the High Court had passed whose effect was to freeze the account of the plaintiff. I find the omission to have been a serious slip on the part of the defence. Nevertheless the omission was cured by the tendering of the court record which left no doubt at all on the fact that the plaintiff had been awarded the sum of 16.4 million shillings and that on 20 January I 1988 the High Court ordered that the money should be left where it was ...'

NYALALI CJ

It is apparent that the learned Trial Judge found no evidence to suggest that a court order A existed prior to the order made on 20 January 1988. In the course of hearing this appeal, Mr Kalunga, learned counsel for the respondent, pointed to a document produced at the trial as Exhibit D2, being a copy of a ledger card in respect of the appellant's current bank account. The ledger card contains four significant handwritten B entries at different positions which read as follows:

Care. No withdrawal refer to chief manager 6 January 1988

No withdrawal C

Block as per High Court Order Ref No MC/S/Gen1/25 dd 6 January 1988

BLOCKED

Account closed and balance remitted to the High Court of Tanzania Box 9004 DSM vide our BP/Cheque No BP/012929 dd 14 December 1989 D

Garnishee Order dd 7 December 1989 from High Court of Tanzania regarding civil case No 92/82.

Mr Kalunga has submitted to the effect that these handwritten entries are evidence of the E existence of a court order made on 6 January 1988 by virtue of the provisions of s 77 of the Evidence Act, 1967 which states:

`Subject to this Act, a copy of an entry in a banker's book shall in all legal proceedings be received as F prima facie evidence of such entry and the matters, transactions and accounts therein recorded.'

Mr Semgalawe has counter submitted to the effect that the presumption under s 77 applies only to matters of ordinary course of banking business, and that in the present case the presumption does not arise because it is not part of a banker's business to G receive court orders.

With due respect, we think Mr Semgalawe's counter submission is misconceived. While it is true that it is not part of a banker's business to receive any court orders, it is H certainly the law that the account of a bank's customer is liable to court attachment by Garnishee Order. The law in this country is similar to that applicable in England. According to EP Ellinger and E Lomnicka in Modern Banking Law, 2nd ed, p 339--340 the learned authors state: I

`At one stage there were doubts regarding the applicability of garnishee proceedings to accounts maintained with banks. In the case

A of current accounts the doubts were based on the fact that payment was due on demand ... The point was resolved in Joachimson v Swiss Bank Corporation, where Bankers, L J observed that the service of the garnishee notice on the bank operated as a demand.... From a commercial point of view, however, it is sound to enable a judgment creditor to levy execution against the balance standing to B the credit of his debtor's current account, as in practice the funds serve the same purpose as cash.'

The same learned authors state at p 340 in respect of deposit accounts: C

`... For the purpose of garnishee proceedings such accounts were traditionally divided into fixed deposits maturing at an agreed time, and deposit and savings accounts the balance of which was repayable subject to the giving of a minimum period of notice by the customer.... There was authority D for the general view that a debt owed by a bank to a customer and maturing at a given future date was `owing and accruing' and could be garnisheed, but that the amount could not be claimed by the garnishment creditor from the bank before the agreed maturity date ...'

That being the position, it is natural to expect a bank which receives a garnishee order, E to make an entry in its books in respect of a customer's account which is subjected to a garnishee order. The crucial point in this case, however, which ought to have been addressed by counsel for the appellant, is whether the circumstances in this case do F not rebut the presumption arising under s 77. We are satisfied that the presumption concerning the relevant entries is rebutted by two important factors. First, the court record which was produced at the trial disclosed no court order made by the High Court before the order by Kyando, J. Second, there is no trace of either the office file or the purported order Ref No MC/S/GEN1/25 dd 6 January 1988 which is mentioned in the G bank's ledger card. In the light of the available evidence there can be no other conclusion other than that the respondent bank received no court order prior to the order made by Kyando, J and we so find.

The next important issue is whether the Order by Kyando, J was received by the H respondent bank, and if so, what was its legal effect?

Mr Semgalawe, learned counsel for the appellant has submitted to the effect that there is no evidence to suggest that the court order made by Kyando, J on 20 January 1988 was received by the respondent bank. With due respect we think there are two pieces of I circumstantial evidence to the effect that the court order must have been received by the respondent bank. The first piece relates to the circumstances and A the nature of the court order itself. The order was interlocutory and was made pending the hearing of the application for stay of execution of court decree, pending appeal. Furthermore, the order was made in respect of money which was apparently moving B fast. According to the documents in the court record produced at the trial as exhibit D2, the appellant was paid the sum of Shs 16,474,176/70 on 24 December 1987 as per payment voucher No 127/12 in response to his letter dated 23 December 1987. Between C the date of that payment to the date of the application for stay of execution filed on 29 December 1987, that money moved from the High Court to the National Bank of Commerce and thence, a substantial part of it, to the respondent bank. It is obvious that the order by Kyando, J was a matter of urgency. We have asked ourselves whether under those circumstances it is likely that the order by Kyando, J would not be D communicated to the respondent bank.

The second piece of evidence concerns the conduct of the appellant. In his letter dated 22 June 1990 (Exhibit 7F) addressed to the Chief Manager of the respondent bank, the E appellant apparently conceded that the order by Kyando, J influenced the conduct of the parties. The fifth paragraph of that letter states:

`I only honour the court order issued by Kyando, J and this clearly means that all the transactions that took place from 31 December 1987, to the date of the aforesaid order were illegal, as far as two F accounts above referred were concerned.'

Furthermore, in the last paragraph but one, the appellant wrote:

`Finally, I refer to your letter of 24 May 1988 under ref No CRDB/General/TBM which to me was a G confession of your own negligence, because there was no instruction or order before 20 January 1988. I also refer you to my letter dated 21 May 1988, in which I asked you to give me a certificate of my fixed deposit account, but you neglected to do so.' H

We have carefully evaluated these two pieces of circumstantial evidence, and we are satisfied in our minds that the order by Kyando, J must have been communicated to the respondent bank soon after it was made-that is-on or about 20 January 1988. I

We turn now to the legal consequences of that order. It is established law that the relationship between a bank and its customer is contractual. As stated by E P Ellinger and E Lomnicka in their Modern Banking Law, 2nd A Ed, p 108:

`The essence of the contract of banker and customer is, therefore, the bank's right to use the money for its own purposes and its undertaking to repay an amount equal to that paid in, with or without B interest, either at call or at a fixed time.'

Under the circumstances of this case, we have no doubt that a contract existed between the appellant and the respondent bank since 29 December 1987 in respect of Shs C 14,000,000/= in a deposit account which was to mature in a month's time. The question arises whether the deposit account matured as agreed or whether it was frozen as asserted by Mr Kalunga, learned counsel for the respondent bank.

Unfortunately the expression `freezing a bank account' does not seem to have been D judicially defined. However, we are certain in our minds that the terms of the order made by Kyando, J that `... the monies are to remain where they are and status quo is to be maintained ...' means that the deposit account in favour of the appellant was neither to be operated by the appellant nor to be utilised by the respondent bank. E

That being the position, we are of the considered opinion that the effect of the court order was to frustrate the contract between the appellant and the respondent bank before the date when the deposit account was expected to mature on or about 29 January 1988. F The principle of frustration of contract is of course well-known under the common law. That principle has not been abolished in this country by the Law of Contract Ordinance, Cap 433, which appears not to cover all aspects of the law of contract. The question which arises here is what was the fate of the appellant's rights in the money deposited G under the frustrated contract? We are of the view that the appellant's rights in the principal sum and in any interest that may have accrued, were attached by the garnishee order. This means that from 20 January 1988, all that money standing to the credit of the appellant but not exceeding the sum of Shs 16,474,176/70 was subject to further directions of the court. Those directions came on 7 December 1989 when the H money was required to be remitted to the High Court. There is no evidence to show that there was any other money not covered by the court orders.

It is thus evident that appellant's claim is flawed. This appeal must fail and we hereby dismiss it in its entirety with costs. I

Income tax - Withholding tax - Objection to - Jurisdiction of court - Remedies provided by C sections 91 and 93 of Income Tax Act not appropriate for disputed application of s 34(2B)

-Headnote

The applicants, aggrieved by the imposition of withholding tax on them by the first D respondent in terms of section 34(2B) of the Income Tax Act, sought certain orders in the High Court against the respondents. The third respondent raised an objection to the proceedings, contending that the matter went beyond the cognizance of the court. It was contended that the High Court would not entertain such an application if an adequate remedy was otherwise available and that such other remedy was available in the form of E the mechanism provided by sections 91 and 93 of the Income Tax Act for addressing and determining such disputes. The applicant argued that this rule fettering the jurisdiction did not apply where, as in the present case, a party had come to the Court with the contention that the imposition of the tax was wholly without the authority of the law and/or the alternative remedy was of an onerous and burdensome character. F

Held:

(i) A deduction made pursuant to section 34(2B) was not predicated upon an assessment of income tax by the Commissioner and was therefore not the kind of assessment envisaged by sections 91 and 93 and the applicants' G complaints were not amenable to the provisions of the Income Tax Act. The intended application was perfectly justiciable in the High Court.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mapigano, J: A

The applicants are aggrieved by the decision of the first respondent, the Commissioner of Income Tax, contained in the two letters annexed to their statement, to impose withholding tax on them under the provision of s 34(2B) of the Income Tax Act, 1973 in respect of the auction sales of their coffee beans conducted by the second respondent, B the Tanzania Coffee Board, and to require the latter to deduct or collect the amounts and remit the same to him. They have come to this court to seek the prerogative orders of certiorari, mandamus and prohibition.

The third respondent, the Attorney-General who is joined in the proceeding by virtue of C the provision of the law has raised an objection, which is that the matter goes beyond the cognizance of this court. The point is urged upon the principle that the High Court will not entertain such application if an adequate remedy is otherwise available. On behalf of D the Attorney-General Mr Songoro, State Attorney has pointed out that there is a mechanism provided by the Income Tax Act, vide ss 91 and 93 for addressing and determining such disputes. Mr Songoro has accordingly submitted that the remedy provided by that Act is the proper remedy which ought to be resorted to by the applicant, and that therefore, leave to seek the prerogative orders should be refused. E

Dr Kapinga, counsel for the applicants sees things differently. His proposition is that the principle that the jurisdiction of the High Court would be fettered by the availability of an alternative remedy does not apply here, as in this case, a party has come to the court F with a contention that the imposition of the tax is wholly without the authority of the law and/or where, like in the instant case, the special or alternative remedy is of an onerous and burdensome character. Dr Kapinga has drawn on two authorities to bolster up his opinion, ie R v

Paddington Valuation Officer Hammatlas Harilal Mehts v State of Nadhya G Predesh and Others (2). Counsel has also referred this court to the provision of s 93(5) of the Income Tax Act which makes the lodging of an appeal against the decision of the Commissioner conditional to the assessee's depositing half of the whole amount of tax assessed together with any interest due under s 101. H

Section 34(2B) of the Income Tax Act provides as follows:

`Every person shall upon payment of any amount to any person in respect of any fee, charge or like I consideration for goods supplied or services rendered, which is chargeable to tax, deduct from that amount ax at a rate of two per cent of the gross amount payable.'

MAPIGANO J

It is elucidated under ss (2C) that the requirement prescribed above only applies to A payments made by the Government agency, local government authority, parastatal organisation and companies.

The point urged by the applicants is essentially that the section was misconstrued and misapplied by the Commissioner, because no payments have been made by the B second respondent in respect of the subject matters of the impeached intended deductions. This is a troublesome and momentous point, and that probably explains why the Annexures seem to evince a state of uncertainty on the part of the Commissioner demonstrated by his approbation and disapprobation. I am satisfied that the applicants C have a good arguable case against the decision and directive of the Commissioner which deserves serious consideration, and it is relevant to observe that the Attorney-General appears to hold the same view.

The decisions cited by Dr Kapinga strongly support the proposition that where the whole D basis of a decision or action of a public body or official is impugned, and where the alternative remedy provided by a statute is not convenient, beneficial and effectual as the prerogative remedies, the High Court can entertain an application to review the impugned decision or action and upon the merits of the particular case make or refuse E to make the prerogative orders. The two decisions are highly persuasive authorities, and no one can deny that they are entitled to the highest respect, considering the ranks of the courts which pronounced them, ie the Court of Appeal of England and the Supreme Court of India. I respectfully adopt the views expressed therein as correct. F

Dr Kapinga would have me find that the present case comes four square within the principle restated in those two cases. But Mr Songoro thinks otherwise, and the question I have to decide is whether there is really a machinery given by the Income Tax Act for G questioning the decision and directive of the Commissioner impugned in this application. As shown, Mr Songoro has relied on the provisions of ss 91 and 93 of the Act.

Those provisions relate to objections to assessment of income tax made by the commissioner in terms of part XIV of the Act, and to the rights of appeal to the Appeals H Board and Tribunal in that connection. The vital question is whether there has been any such assessment here. In fine, the applicants contend, by para 16 of their statement which appears at p 12 but which should be renumbered para 17, that a deduction made under s 34(2B) is not an assessment of income tax, and that there is nothing in the Act I which provides for any remedy against an erroneous deduction of tax made under the section.

MAPIGANO J

That is an attractive point, and it is interesting, gratifying and significant that in one of the A annexures, ie the letter dated 6 February 1996, the Commissioner has more or less expressed the same view. This is what he states in para 7:

`Let me mention in passing that withholding tax from payments in respect of goods or services is B merely a mechanism of payment of advance tax which is ultimately set off from he final income tax liability chargeable on the assessee in the respective year of income. In case any such assessee ... is aggrieved on the tax assessed when served with a final notice of assessment, the assessee is at C liberty to dispute the assessment pursuant to s 91 and 93 of the Income Tax Act, 1973.'

I understand this to imply that it is premature for the applicants to seek the remedy given by ss 91 and 93. If that is the case, then in my judgment it underscores the idea that a D deduction made pursuant to s 34(2B) is not predicated upon an assessment of income tax by the Commissioner, and is thus not the kind of assessment which is envisaged by ss 91 and 93.

I accept the idea that the applicants' complaints are not amenable to the provisions of the Income Tax Act. E

I hold, therefore, that the intended application is perfectly justifiable in this court. Leave is accordingly granted.

Lubuva, JA: H

At the commencement of the hearing of this appeal following the court's prompting it transpired that the record of appeal was not complete. That is, the record of appeal did not incorporate an extract of the order of the High Court dated 2 August 1990 appealed I against. When called upon to address the court on this point, Mr Banturaki, learned counsel for the appellant was apparently not quite clear on the effect of non-compliance with Rule 89 regarding the extract of A the order. He seemed to be of the view that as the ruling appealed against was already part of the record at p 28 of the proceedings, it was not necessary to have it extracted and itemised in the index. However, on further reflection, he correctly in our view B conceded that the record of appeal was incomplete contrary to the provisions of Rule 89(1)(h) of the court's rules. In these circumstances, Mr Banturaki left the matter for the court to decide.

For the respondent, Mr Kahangwa, learned counsel was brief and precise. He stated that C the omission to incorporate the extract of the order appealed against was a violation of a mandatory requirement of Rule 89 of the court's rules. For this reason, he urged the court to strike out the appeal which, he said was incompetent.

The need for stringent and vigorous adherence to the court's rules in the processing of D appeals before this court hardly needs to be overemphasised. There is a series of decisions of this court to that effect. Time and again we have struck out appeals in which the records of appeal do not incorporate either the decrees or orders appealed against. Among others see for instance: (1) Abdul Aziz Ali Salim v Hafsa Saleh E Mahmoud and (2) Euroconsult (Africa) BV v French & Hastings.

In these cases, we struck out the appeals on the ground that the records were incomplete contrary to the requirement of Rule 89.

In the instant case, the appeal arises from the ruling of the High Court at Mwanza F (Munyera, J) dated 2 August 1990. Under the provisions of Rule 89(1)(h) it is a mandatory requirement for the record of appeal to contain copies of the documents listed therein one of which is the order appealed against. This was not included and Mr Banturaki had no plausible explanation for it except that he said it was due to an G oversight. Neither did he apply to be allowed to file a supplementary record in order to rectify the matter. In view of the mandatory requirement of the Rule 89, a fact which is as already pointed out was conceded by Mr Banturaki, there is no way in which we can proceed with this appeal based on an incomplete record. H
Accordingly under Rule 3 of the court's rules, the appeal is struck out. No order as to costs.

The appellant, Abdul Abdallah, was convicted of the offence of robbery with violence contrary to s 285 of the Penal Code by Kinutu Resident Magistrate's Court and sentenced to thirty years imprisonment. On appeal to the High Court the decision of the district court was upheld and the appeal dismissed. H

Still dissatisfied he has come to this Court. Before us Miss Munisi, learned State Attorney, raised a preliminary objection and argued that the notice of appeal was lodged out of time and asked us to strike out the appeal as being incompetent. When the Court asked the learned state attorney whether she had anything to say about I

MNZAVAS JA

A the sentence of thirty years imprisonment she conceded that the sentence was illegal as the offence was committed before Act No 10 of 1989 came into operation and asked the Court to use its powers of revision in dealing with the unlawful sentence.

B With respect we agree with the learned state attorney that the notice of appeal is hopelessly out of time as it was filed 14 April 1993 over one year after the judgment of the High Court was delivered on 10 February 1992. Rule 61(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules required the appellant to file his notice adopted within 14 C days of the date of the High Court decision. The appeal before us is therefore imcompetent. However, in exercise of our powers of revision under s 4(2) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979, as amended by Act No 17 of 1993 it is our considered view that the sentence of 30 years imprisonment imposed by the district court and upheld by the High Court was clearly illegal. The charge shows D that the offence of robbery was committed on 11 May 1989. At that time the law applicable was the Minimum Sentence Act 1972 which provided under s 5(b) a minimum sentence of seven years imprisonment for robbery. Act No 10 of 1989 under which the appellant was sentenced to thirty years imprisonment for the offence of robbery came into operation on 21 May 1989 - ten days after the E appellant committed the offence. As Act No 10 of 1989 was not meant to apply ex post facto it was clearly wrong for the two courts below to sentence the appellant under a law which was not in existence at the time he committed the offence.

F It is our view that there was ample evidence in support of the conviction but as we have already mentioned, the sentence of thirty years imprisonment was illegal; and, in the exercise of our revisional powers we set it aside and in substitution therefore the appellant is sentenced to seven years imprisonment.

C Kisanga, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

The appellant was charged with and convicted of murder contrary to s 196 of the Penal Code and sentenced to death by the High Court (Maina, J) sitting at Dar es Salaam. He has now appealed against both conviction and sentence. D

The background to this case may be set out briefly as follows: The appellant was the stepfather of one Adnani Mohamed in that he was for some time married to Adnani's mother (PW1) but later the marriage was dissolved at the instance of E PW1. Adnani was born before the marriage between PW1 and the appellant, and the said marriage was blessed with one daughter named Sauda. Upon the dissolution of the marriage the appellant was also ordered to provide Shs 400/= per month for Sauda.

F Following the dissolution of the marriage, PW1 left the matrimonial home and went to live with her sister in the same locality, taking with her the two children Adnani and Sauda. It is claimed that the appellant resented the act of PW1 obtaining a divorce against him, and on that account he nursed a grudge. Thus G within two weeks of the divorce the appellant went up to PW1 and uttered threats to kill her. It is further claimed that on the following day the appellant went to the nursery school where Adnani, then aged about ten years, was a pupil and lured him away on the pretext that he was going to buy him some buns. Adnani has nor H been seen since. The appellant was charged and convicted in the district court for stealing the child Adnani and was sentenced to three years' jail term. Subsequently he was charged in the High Court with the murder of the said Adnani. As intimated earlier, he was convicted as charged and sentenced to death, hence this appeal.

I Before us the appellant is represented by Mr Mselem, learned advocate, and Mr Tendwa, Senior State Attorney, appears for the respondent Republic. Mr Mselem filed three grounds of appeal the substance of A which was that death of the said Adnani was not proved sufficiently or at all and that even if it was, the appellant cannot be said for certain to be connected with such death.

The evidence adduced in support of the charge was wholly circumstantial. In B convicting the appellant the learned Trial Judge found that Adnani was last seen alive in the company of the appellant on 3 February 1986; he has not been seen again from that day. Since it was more than five years following such disappearance, and since the appellant could give no explanation of such disappearance, the learned judge, acting under s 117 of the Evidence Act C presumed that Adnani is dead, and further found the appellant to be responsible for such death. He found pieces of circumstantial evidence which connected the appellant sufficiently with Adnani's death. These consisted of the appellant's anger due to PW1's act of obtaining divorce against him, the appellant's threat to kill PW1 and the appellant's conviction by the district court for stealing the child Adnani and the prison sentence imposed thereon from which the appellant preferred no appeal. D

The finding that the child Adnani was last seen in the appellant's company on 3 E February 1986 was based on the evidence of PW3 and PW4 both being persons of tender age of about 12 years and who had attended the nursery school with Adnani. They testified that on the day in question the appellant, whom they did not know before, went to their school and took Adnani away claiming that he was Adnani's father and that he was going to buy Adnani some buns. The two children F later identified the appellant at an identification parade arranged by the police. The Trial Judge was impressed by the demeanor of both witnesses, he found them truthful and said that if their evidence required corroboration then in terms of s 127(4) of the Evidence Act each of them corroborated the other. G

Mr Mselem strongly criticised the Trial Judge for accepting and acting on the evidence of the two children. He charged that their evidence involved inconsistencies and contradictions which sufficiently rendered that evidence unreliable and completely worthless. We think there is some justification in this H criticism. PW4 claimed that he could identify the appellant as the one who took away Adnani from the nursery school because he (the appellant) had a scar on his forehead. At the time of giving evidence in court, however, he stated that he could find no such scar on the appellant's forehead. Then the question is, what happened to the I

A scar? PW6 is the other child who also claimed to have seen the appellant take away Adnani from the school. He makes no mention of any scar on the appellant. Again the question is, if the witnesses are talking of one and the same person why should one only, and not both, have noticed the scar? The same witness PW4 stated that he made a statement to the police one month after seeing the appellant B at the school. This would be around March 1986. But the said police statement which he himself acknowledged to be his is dated 4 November 1987. That is to say, he made it to the police well over one and a half years following the incident at C the school. Again the question is, what is the explanation for this marked difference in the time of making the police statement? The witness further stated that during the identification parade at the police station there were three rows of people from which he could identify the appellant. Yet other prosecution evidence as supported by that of the appellant shows that there was only one row or line of people. No explanation is given for such discrepancy.

D Turning now to PW3 he stated that during the identification parade there were two lines or rows of people which, as already demonstrated was not true: there was only one line. He also claimed that the identification parade was conducted in 1989 which contradicts the evidence of the police officer (PW5) who said that he conducted the parade in 1986. E

Such were the inconsistencies and the contradictions involving the evidence of the F two children on which the appellant's conviction was largely based. In his evaluation of the evidence the learned judge made not a single reference to these inconsistencies and contradictions. Nor did he make any mention of them in his summing up to the assessors. He merely accepted the evidence of the two G children at its face value. That was clearly wrong. He had a duty to consider the inconsistencies and contradictions and try to resolve them if he could. Else he had to decide whether the inconsistencies and contradictions were only minor or H whether they were such as did go to the root of the matter. Mr Tendwa, learned Senior State Attorney, who sought to support the conviction, submitted that the inconsistencies and contradictions were not material and therefore were of no consequence. With due respect to learned counsel, we think differently. Had the learned judge directed himself and the assessors on the issue as indicated, we are unable to say for certain that he would have found the two children truthful and would have accepted their evidence without any reservation as he did. More so especially considering that the children who gave evidence not on I oath were testifying to events which took place when they were aged only about A seven years. While still on the evidence of these children, there is one aspect of it which is not consistent with the evidence of Adnani's mother (PW1). She said that on the day her son disappeared she went to the nursery school and upon inquiring she was informed by one teacher that he (the teacher) had not seen Adnani and that B Adnani's name was not recorded in the daily attendance Register. The said teacher, or for that matter, any other teacher from that school, was not called as a witness. But the question is, if according to the two children, PW3 and PW4, C Adnani went to school with them, why was his name not in the daily attendance register? This was yet another feature in the prosecution evidence which was not entirely satisfactory and which was never considered or referred to by the Trial Judge. D

It seems obvious to us that the link between the appellant and Adnani's alleged disappearance on 3 February 1986 was most essential, but in the absence of any cogent evidence to establish such link the charge against the appellant could not possibly be sustained. The other pieces of circumstantial evidence available tend to implicate the appellant only lightly or remotely. Take for instance the appellant's E conviction in the district court for stealing the child Adnani in respect of which a prison term of 3 years was imposed, and the fact that the appellant did not appeal. Relying on s 43A of the Evidence Act, 1967 the learned Trial Judge found it to be conclusively proved that the appellant stole the child Adnani. Then attaching F considerable weight to this, the judge took the view that since the appellant's defence to the present charge consisted of a mere denial, then in terms of s 117 of the Evidence Act the child Adnani is properly presumed to be dead and further that the appellant is properly to be held answerable for Adnani's death. With due G respect to the learned judge, however, this does not necessarily follow. Even if it be conclusively established that the appellant stole the child Adnani, that could not properly lead to the conclusion drawn by the learned judge. For, it is one thing to steal a child but quite another to kill it. The appellant after stealing the child may H have passed it on to some other person or persons for purposes not connected with killing. The appellant might or might not know what that other person subsequently did with the child, but upon a charge of the murder of that child the onus is on the prosecution to prove not only the death of the child but also the connection or link between the appellant and such death. In a criminal case like this I

KISANGA JA

A one that burden is always on the prosecution; it never shifts and no duty is cast on the appellant to establish his innocence.

Likewise the evidence of the appellant's threat to kill PW1 does not advance the case for the prosecution any further. In the first place, since the appellant's threat was to kill PW1, it is not apparent why the appellant should choose to execute it on B PW1's young and innocent child rather than on PW1 herself. In any case such threat could not exclude the possibility of some other person or persons committing evil acts or mischief against PW1 or her son.

C Upon our careful study of the record, we have come to the conclusion that the evidence so far adduced fell far short of proving the charge brought against the appellant.

We accordingly allow the appeal, quash the conviction and set aside the sentence, with an order for the appellant's immediate release from prison unless he is otherwise lawfully held. D

In a contract concluded in Arusha the appellant agreed to sell a set of farm A implements to the first respondent, delivery of the same to be effected in Dar es Salaam. Part of the contract price was paid through a loan from the second respondent. After payment of the contract price the first respondent's Managing Director travelled to Dar es Salaam to take delivery of the goods but he could not because they were not yet ready for collection; some pre-delivery services had to be done to them and a customs clearance certificate obtained. He was asked to B go and come back a number of times and each time the implements were not ready. He even threatened to rescind the contract. Finally, the implements were consigned to the appellant's office in Arusha, with the first respondent's Managing Director, anxious to speed up the process, giving a lot of assistance. The railway C wagon carrying the consignment to Arusha had an accident on the way causing damage to a tractor, which was part of the implements bought, and on account of which the first respondent refused to accept the goods. The respondents sued for breach of contract before the High Court and were successful. On appeal the appellant sought to convince the court that when the accident occurred, property in the goods had already passed to the first respondent. D

Held:

(i) Where there is a contract of sale of unascertained goods by description and goods of that description in a deliverable state are unconditionally appropriated to the contract, property in the goods thereupon passes to the buyer; E

(ii) The contract in this case was for the sale of unascertained goods by description but their appropriation to the contract was not unconditional; it was subject to the appellant doing some pre-delivery services to them and obtaining a customs clearance certificate, and property in the goods, therefore, did not pass from the appellant to the first respondent; F

(iii) Since the consignor of the goods was the appellant's office in Dar es Salaam and the consignee was the appellant's office in Arusha, the appellant remained the owner of the goods notwithstanding that the said goods had been appropriated to the contract; G

(iv) As the appellant company failed to deliver the farm implements in accordance with the terms of the contract, it was in breach of the contract.

Kisanga, J.A.: delivered the following considered judgment of the court: I

1995 TLR p10

KISANGA JA

A This appeal arises from the decision of the High Court (Nchalla, J) allowing the respondents' claim based on a breach of contract for the sale of goods. The background to the case may be summarized briefly as follows: Under a written contract, Incar Tanzania Ltd, Arusha, the appellant in this appeal, agreed to sell a B set of farming implements to the first respondent company. The implements consisted of a Fiat tractor, a harrow and a chisel plough. The contract was concluded at Arusha and delivery of the equipment was to be effected in Dar es Salaam. The contract price was paid partly through a loan of Shs 4,000,000/= C from the Co-operative and Rural Development Bank (CRDB), the second respondent, and partly from the first respondent's own resources in the sum of Shs 202,000/=. After the contract price was paid PW1, managing director of the respondent company, travelled to Dar es Salaam to take delivery of the D implements there only to find that the items were not ready for collection. There was yet to be done pre-delivery service to these implements and a customs clearance certificate in respect of them was yet to be obtained. It was not possible to register the tractor before a customs clearance certificate was obtained in E respect of it by the appellant company. The respondent was asked to go and come back a number of times but on each occasion he found the implements not yet ready for collection. Out of frustration he treatened to rescind the contract and demanded a refund of the purchase price which he had paid at Arusha; but in vain.

F Thereafter the appellant company alleged that PW1 decided to take delivery of the implements despite the absence of a customs clearance certificate. PW1, however stated that a new arrangements was reached whereby he was to travel back to Arusha and the appellant company was to transport the implements to its Arusha branch where he (PW1) was to take delivery of the same. The Trial Judge believed the version of PW1; we think he was entitled so to do. G

Again the appellant company asserted that on PW1's own request, it took the implements to the railway station, Dar es Salaam and loaded them on a railway wagon chosen by PW1 himself, for transportation to Arusha. The consignment so H loaded included a trailer sold by the appellant to one Mr Mario Gikas of Arusha. The appellant claimed that before PW1 left Arusha for Dar es Salaam, Mr Gikas had arranged with him (PW1) to transport his trailer to Arusha. On the basis of such arrangement, the appellant went on, it (the appellant) handed over the trailer to PW1 in Dar es Salaam who duly made his own arrangements to transport it to- I gether with his own implements to Arusha. PW1, however, denied completely A making the alleged arrangement with Mr Gikas, adding that at the time material to this suit Mr Gikas was not an acquaintance of his. Yet Mr Gikas was not called in support of the alleged arrangement with PW1 for the transportation of his trailer.

According to PW1, however, it is the appellant company which undertook to B transport the implements to Arusha, but as he was anxious that the implements should reach Arusha as soon as possible he did a number of things, on being asked by the appellant company, in order to facilitate or speed up the process. Thus for instance he was sent to look for a railway wagon on which to load the C implements, although the one he found proved to be too small and the appellant had to look for another one as an alternative. He also paid the charges for hiring the wagon and for the guard to escort the goods on a promise that these payments, altogether amounting to Shs 81,220/=, would be refunded to him by the appellant's office at Arusha. Upon making those payments, he signed a D consignment note which shows the sender of the goods to be Incar Tanzania Ltd Dar es Salaam and the consignee to be Incar Tanzania Ltd Arusha. The consignment note also shows the goods to have been loaded by the sender. PW1 E took the consignment note to the appellant's office in Dar es Salaam. There he was instructed to take the said consignment note together with the cash receipts in respect of payment for transport and escort charges and the contract documents to the appellant's office at Arusha where the implements would be delivered to him. He did as instructed. Upon handing over the documents to the F appellant's office at Arusha he was asked to go away and that the office would take delivery of the implements, register the tractor in the name of his company and CRDB and then deliver it to him. In the meantime PW1, on behalf of his company entered into a contract to plough 200 acres of land for one Mr K Patel. G He did this in anticipation of the new tractor because although he had seven other tractors these were old and were not enough to carry out the ploughing contract. The learned Trial Judge accepted PW1's account in preference to the claim by the appellant that PW1 received the implements in Dar es Salaam and took it upon H himself to transport them to Arusha. He found that it is the appellant company which sent the implements in question together with Mr Gikas's trailer as a single dispatch consigned from the appellant's office in Dar es Salaam to its Arusha office.

Following the handing over of the documents by PW1 at the appellant's office in Arusha, a representative of the appellant's of- I

KISANGA JA

A fice there visited the Railways Office at Arusha a number of times to inquire if the consignment had arrived, and at least on one occasion he also telephoned their head office in Dar es Salaam which confirmed that the goods had been dispatched. Subsequently he was informed by the Railways Office Arusha that the wagon carrying the consignment had sustained an accident at a place called B Hedaru, a long distance away from Arusha. He drove all the way to Hedaru to view the scene for himself without asking PW1 to accompany him or informing him about the accident. He noticed that the tractor had been damaged in the course of the accident.

C After the consignment had reached Arusha, the railway authorities duly advised the appellant as the consignee to collect the goods. The appellant did so, after showing some reluctance, and also paid demurrage charges arising from the delay in collecting the goods. The appellant then asked PW1 to take delivery of the D implements but according to the appellant PW1 refused to do so because of the damaged tractor. The damage was estimated at Shs 300,000/= being the cost of purchasing the necessary spares, plus about a half that amount being labour charges. PW1 was asked to bear the cost of buying the spares while the appellant would bear the labour charges. PW1, however refused and insisted on replacement of the tractor, and since no agreement could be reached, the respondent brought this suit alleging breach of contract and asking for the following reliefs: E

`(i) The plaintiff claims specific performance by the defendant of the plaintiffs written contract to deliver the said TRACTOR, HARROW and CHISEL PLOUGH as specified in the contract marked annexture `A'. F

(ii) Damages for loss of use of the said farm implements by the plaintiffs at the rate of Shs 20,000/= per day from the day of non-delivery to the date of judgment.

(iii) Damages for loss of contract of ploughing 200 acres between M/s Magugu Farm Ltd and Niru Patel at the rate of Shs 2,000/= per acre totalling Shs 400,000/= see attached copy of contract between M/s Magugu Farm & Niru Patel. G

(iv) Costs of this action.

(v) Interest at court rate in damages and costs from non-delivery till payment in full. H

(vi) Any other relief or further relief as the nature of this action may admit.'

Upon finding that the appellant had failed to deliver the implements in accordance with the terms of the contract, the Trial Judge gave reliefs set out in the decree as follows: I

KISANGA JA

`It is ordered that the plaintiffs are entitled to, and are awarded the following reliefs: A

(1) Specific performance, if the same is feasible, plus general and special damages, including costs and interest as claimed and set out here below; or

(2) Refund of the Shs 4,283,420/= to the 1st plaintiff (PW1) being prepaid price, plus the B difference between the prepaid price and the full market price of the goods as at 15.8.89 with interest at bank rate from the date of payment of the purchase price on 24.7.89 till final payment. Thereafter if PW1 finds it reasonable to purchase similar goods elsewhere because the type and make of the goods (New Fiat tractor 100 horse C power) he had contracted for is or may not be available, he can do so with the money refunded to him, excluding the interest on the purchase price or principal sum and he may charge the defendant company with the difference, if any, in price; and D

(3) Special damages under head (ii) of the reliefs. These damages are to be computed in the following manner, that is to say Shs 20,000/= per day from 15.8.89 to 31.12.89. And thereafter for each succeeding year till the date of full payment, computation shall be Shs 20,000/= per day from July, to December, respectively. It is considered that during E the months of April to June annually, ploughing almost ceases in Arusha zone, and transportation dwindles, hence the reduction to Shs 10,000/= from the Shs 20,000/= daily rate earnings for that period. Also there will be a deduction of 40% from the total sum to be realized under this head to cater for mitigated damages and for service of the tractor; and F

(4) Special damages in the amount of Shs 400,000/= for loss of ploughing contract (Exh P7) as indicated under head (iii) of the reliefs, however, less 50% to cater for mitigated damages; and

(5) Costs to be taxed; and G

(6) Interest on damages and costs at court rate and in the appropriate scale effective from the date of filing the suit on 7.10.89 till full payment; and

(7) General damages which deem fit and just to assess and award basing on the H devaluation of our Tanzania shilling pegged to the US Dollar and the resultant inflation rate. In 1989 when PW1 paid the purchase price to the defendant company, the rate was about Shs 110/= to the dollar. Today the current exchange rate is about Shs 302/= to the dollar. If my mathematical calculations serve me right, our shilling has from 1989 to 1992 fallen down to the dollar by about 274%. For I

KISANGA JA

A this reason, and under the circumstance of this case, I award to PW1 30% of the said devaluation and inflation rate annually on the purchase price or principal sum of Shs 4, 2823,420/= from 15.8.89 till full satisfaction.'

B It is against that background that this appeal has been preferred.

Before us the appellant was represented by Mr R C Kesaria and Mr J C D'Souza while the respondent was represented by Mr M Maira and Mr W A L Mirambo. Counsel for the appellant filed a total of 26 grounds of appeal and at the hearing we also granted them leave to argue another four additional grounds. Essentially the C issue raised in these grounds is that the appellant duly delivered the farm implements to PW1, or to the railways (the carrier) at Dar es Salaam for transmission to PW1, in accordance with the terms of the contract, and that once that was done then property in the goods passed so that the appellant was no D longer responsible for the damage caused to the goods while in transit to Arusha. Counsel for the appellant took the view that this was a contract for the sale of unascertained goods which was governed by the provisions of Rule V of s 20 of the Sale of Goods Ordinance (Cap. 214). He therefore criticised the Trial Judge for E failing to hold that `where there is a contract for the sale of unascertained goods by description and goods of that description, and in a deliverable state are unconditionally appropriated to the contract (as was the case here) the property in the goods thereupon passes to the buyer.'

F We agree with learned counsel that this was a contract for the sale of unascertained or largely unascertained goods by description. This was so because the tractor which formed part of the goods was ascertained only by its chassis and engine numbers. That was not sufficient to ascertain it because it was not known that the body looked like or what colour it was. What is more the G other two implements, namely, the harrow and the chisel were completely unascertained. We also agree that the goods were appropriated to the contract when they were pointed out to PW1 in the appellant's workshop at Pugu Road in Dar es Salaam or at the time of loading them on the wagon at the railway station Dar es Salaam for transmission to Arusha. H However, we do not agree that the appropriation was unconditional. Our view is that the appellant had reserved the right of disposal of the goods, and this made the appropriation conditional thereby preventing the property in the goods from passing to PW1. Section 21(1) of the Sale of Goods Ordinance provides that: I

`Where there is a contract for the sale of specific goods, or where goods are subsequently A appropriated to the contract, the seller may, by the terms of the contract or appropriation, reserve the right of disposal of the goods until certain conditions are fulfilled. In such case notwithstanding the delivery of the goods to a buyer, or to a carrier or other bailee or custodier for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, the property in the goods does not pass to the buyer until the conditions imposed by the seller are fulfilled.' B

It is clear from the evidence that when PW1 arrived in Dar es Salaam the goods were not ready for collection because there was a pre-delivery service to be done on them and a customs clearance certificate to be obtained in respect of them. C DW2 clearly stated that it was the duty of the appellant to obtain the certificate and DW1 demonstrated to PW1 the futility of collecting the goods without such certificate. This is what he said: D

'I told him (PW1) that so long as the customs documents were not ready then it was not possible for him to collect and register the tractor. PW1 knew this very well.'

Consistent with that stand, the appellant must have decided that in order to avoid E further inconvenience of keeping PW1 longer in Dar es Salaam and in order to avert the threat by PW1 to rescind the contract, he (PW1) could return to Arusha and take delivery of the implements there after the appellant had done the needful. In other words the appellant, appreciating its obligation to carry out pre-delivery F service to the implements and, in particular, to obtain a customs clearance certificate without which it was useless for PW1 to take delivery of the implements, appropriated the goods to the contract but reserved its right of disposal thereof pending the doing of the two things. It was necessary to reserve the right of disposal thus in order to enable the appellant to take delivery of the goods at its Arusha branch for the purpose of doing those two things. G

The Trial Judge rightly rejected the appellant's claim that PW1 insisted on, and eventually succeeded in, taking delivery of the implements at Dar es Salaam. For that would be a useless exercise, and according to DW1 he (PW1) knew it. Then H why should PW1 engage in such a useless exercise? Again if he had taken delivery of the implements at Dar es Salaam, what was the point of consigning them to the appellant at Arusha instead of to himself?

It is true that PW1 did a number of things in connection with the I

A dispatch of the goods to Arusha. For instance, he initially looked for a railway wagon on which to load the implements. He paid the transport charges including paying for the escort; he signed the consignment note. His explanation was that he did these things, upon being asked by the appellant, in order to facilitate the whole exercise because he was interested to see that the implements reach Arusha as soon as possible. We can find no ground for saying that the Trial Judge should B have rejected that explanation.

Counsel for the appellant strenuously contended that there was unconditional appropriation of the goods to the contract when the appellant handed over the C implements to the railway authorities for transmission to Arusha. Learned counsel further contended that following such unconditional appropriation, the property in the goods passed to PW1 so that even if it is held that the appellant continued to be in possession of the goods, it did so as a mere bailee. No doubt, this view is based on the provisions of Rule V(2) of s 20 of the Sale of Goods Ordinance which says that: D

'(2) Where in pursuance of the contract the seller delivers the goods to the buyer or to a carrier or other bailee or custodier (whether named by the buyer or not) for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, and does not reserve the right of disposal, he is deemed to have unconditonally appropriated the goods to the contract.' E

But as already demonstrated, this was a case of conditional appropriation of goods to the contract by reason of the appellant reserving the right of disposal. F

This view is reaffirmed by the provisions of s 21(2) of the Sale of Goods Ordinance which provides that:

G '(2) Where goods are shipped, and by the bill of lading the goods are deliverable to the order of the seller or his agent, the seller is prima facie deemed to reserve the right of disposal.'

H Since the appellant consigned the goods from its Dar es Salaam office to its Arusha office, it is prima facie deemed to have reserved the right of disposal. The appellant gave no explanation to rebut that presumption, and on the evidence we could find none. On the other hand the presumption is confirmed by the appellant's intention to take delivery of and repossess the implements at Arusha in order to do pre-delivery service and obtain the requisite customs clearance certificate in respect of them. Because of such reservation of the right of disposal, therefore, the property in the goods did not I pass, and the appellant remained the owner after appropriating the goods to the A contract.

Indeed the conduct of the appellant after appropriating the goods to the contract was consistent with its ownership of those goods. The evidence shows that PW1 took the consignment note in respect of the implements in question to the appellant's representative at its Dar es Salaam office, whereupon the said B representative in turn instructed him to take it to the appellant's representative at its Arusha office for action and he did so. The Trial Judge accepted that evidence and we could not fault him. The consignment note shown the consignor of the goods to be the appellant's office at Arusha. Neither the appellant's representative at Dar es Salaam office nor at Arusha expressed surprise that the goods were consigned by its office in Dar es Salaam to its office at Arusha. Quite clearly such C conduct is consistent with the view that although the appellant had duly appropriated the goods to the contract, it was still the owner of those goods. In fact, upon the goods arriving at Arusha, the railway authorities there completely D refused to recognize anyone else but the appellant as the owner of the goods.

The acts of the appellant's representative rushing to the scene of the accident at E Hedaru which is so far away without informing PW1 about the accident, the appellant's taking delivery of the goods at Arusha and paying demurrage charges in respect thereof are consistent with the appellant's ownership of the goods. If the appellant was not the owner of the goods why should it take delivery of the goods and pay demurrage charges in the sum of Shs 376,000/=? And why has it (the appellant) not lodged a claim against PW1 for a refund of this sum? F

There is yet another matter to be alluded to in this respect. The Trial Judge rightly accepted the evidence that there was no arrangement between PW1 and Mr Mario Gikas to transport the latter's trailer from Dar es Salaam to Arusha. That goes to G confirm that the whole consignment comprising PW1's implements and Mr Gika's trailer had been sent by the appellant. That is to say the appellant was the owner of the whole consignment, and that is why it (the appellant) accepted the responsibility of repairing at cost Mr Gika's trailer which was damaged in the H accident. Now, if the appellant was the owner in respect of the trailer, how come that it was not the owner in respect of the implements comprised in the very same consignment?

The evidence on record, therefore, amply justifies the finding that upon appropriating the goods to the contract, the appellant re- I

KISANGA JA

A served the right of disposal. That rendered the appropriation only conditional and thereby prevented the property in the goods from passing. The appellant remained the owner of the goods to-date.

We heard lengthy arguments on whether or not there was any binding variation of B the written contract to change the place of delivery from Dar es Salaam to Arusha, and whether or not the goods were in a deliverable state. We were also referred to numerous authorities in that regard. However, those questions are of little or no relevance now once it is held that there has been no transfer of ownership from the appellant, because the claim is that the appellant has failed to deliver the goods, whatever state they be in and whether at Dar es Salaam or at Arusha. C

It was also submitted that after the accident which caused damage to the tractor, PW1 wrongly refused to take delivery of the tractor at Arusha when the damage caused to it was only slight, the evidence being that PW1 was asked to bear the D cost of buying the necessary spares amounting to Shs 300,000/= while the appellant was to bear the labour charges. PW1 denied any such offer having been made to him. But even if the appellant's version is accepted that PW1 refused the E offer and insisted on replacement of the tractor, such refusal in our view cannot be said to be unreasonable. For, there is no legal basis for making PW1 responsible for damage caused to the tractor at a time when that tractor was owned by, and in the possession and care of, someone else.

F Thus on the evidence we are satisfied that the appellant failed to deliver the farm implements to PW1 in accordance with the terms of the contract and therefore the learned Trial Judge was justified to find that the appellant was in breach of the contract.

As regards the award, counsel for the appellant criticised the Trial Judge for giving G the respondent an option to purchase a new tractor of similar type on an option to purchase a new tractor of similar type on an open ended price scale and to charge the price difference to the appellant. The learned judge was also criticised for allowing the respondent to recover the difference between the pre-paid purchase price and the market price obtaining on the day of the accident when H there was no evidence of any such difference. We think that there is merit in the complaint. Accordingly, that part of the award is varied as follows: The appellant is to refund to the first respondent (PW1) Shs 4,483,420/= being the pre-paid purchase price with interest at bank rate from the date of payment of the purchase price till final payment.

Counsel criticised the aware of special damages for loss of use at I the rate of between Shs 20,000/= and Shs 10,000/= per day without proof thereof. A In support of his claim for special damages PW1 said:

'To-date I have not been supplied with the tractor, harrow and chisel plough. I have sufferred great loss thereby. I used to realize 20,000/= per day from ploughing 20 acres per day at B 1,000/= per acre at the material time. I used to transport sand, stones, sugar cane. This is on hire basis. Each trip cost Shs 7,000/=. At the material time I had contracted to plough 200 acres for Mr Patel who had paid me Shs 400,000/= in advance. Due to lack of tractor I could not plough those acres.' C

That evidence was not controverted and therefore the learned Trial Judge rightly took it into account when assessing the award. However, we could find no evidence to support his using different rates per day in computing the damages payable for loss of use depending on the different seasons of the year. With that in D mind, we think that a uniform rate of reckoning the damages would be appropriate.

Accordingly we vary this part of the award to the extent of allowing the respondent (PW1) to recover damages for loss of the use at the rate of Shs 10,000/= per day E plus interest at court rate from the day of non-delivery i.e. October, 1989 till the date of judgment.

Counsel objected to the award of Shs 400,000/= on the grounds that PW1 had F entered into the ploughing contract prematurely, that he had other tractors and ploughs and that in any event the award was a duplication in the light of the award for loss of use already given.

We find merit in the objection on this head especially on the ground that this was a duplication. The award of Shs 400,000/= damages was in respect of loss sustained for the period during which PW1 would have executed the ploughing contract. That period is not ascertainable; it might have been ten or fifteen days, for instance. But such period is included in the award already made for loss of use and calculated at Shs 10,000/= per day from the day of non-delivery to the day of G judgment. Such award is clearly a duplication which ought not to be allowed. We would accordingly set aside the award of Shs 400,000/=. H

Once the awards which we have upheld were made, we think that the award for general damages, taking into account devaluation and inflation, are no longer justified. The award under that head is accordingly set aside. I

KISANGA JA

A We now come to the question of costs. As stated earlier on in this judgment, both sides were represented by two advocates. At the conclusion of the hearing of the appeal each side asked for a certificate of costs for two counsel. The B application has merit. The case was long and obviously complicated. It required a great deal of effort and patience to analyse the issues involved and to look up the relevant provisions of the law. Accordingly, for the reasons set out herein before, the appeal is substantially dismissed, with a certificate of costs for two counsel. C

[zJDz]Judgment
Chua, J.: B
A preliminary objection has been raised to the claim filed in this court on the basis that the matter is res judicata. It was contended by counsel for the defendants that the matter directly and substantially in issue in the present suit was directly and substantially in issue to RM Civil Case No 114 of 1988. C
From copies of the ex-parte judgment and decree passed in RM Civil Case No 114 of 1988 it is clear that judgment was entered in the following terms 'I grant all the prayers prayed in the plaint by the plaintiff'. A copy of the decree reads: D

'The applicant plaintiff having filed this suit praying for

(a) A declaration that he is still an employee of the defendant,

(b) The plaintiff should continue to occupy the house at Kanazi Street Kinondoni. E

(c) Costs

(d) Any other relief.

Having heard the plaintiff ex-parte and now this suit coming for final disposal before me it is hereby ordered and decreed that I am satisfied that the plaintiff has proved his case as required by law. In the circumstances I grant all the prayers prayed in the plaint by the plaintiff'. F

In the present suit the plaintiff is claiming Shs 6,122,402/= being arrears of salary and fringe benefits plus Shs 20,000,000/= being general damages. The decision of G the RM's Court in RM Civil Case No 114 of 1988 does not decide this claim.

It was submitted by counsel for the defendant that paras 3, 4 and 5 of the plaint contravene Order VII rule 2 of the CPC and should therefore be struck off. It has not, however, been shown how Order VII rule 2 has been contravened for the rule prescribes: H

Where the plaintiff seeks the recovery of money, the plaint shall state the precise amount claimed:

Provided that where the plaintiff sues for mesne profits or for an amount which will be found due to him on taking unsettled I

A accounts between him and the defendant, the plaint shall state approximately the amount sued for.

In the present case the plaintiff has stated the amounts he is claiming and how he B arrived at those figures is a matter of evidence. Also by providing further and better particulars the defendant will be in a position to know exactly what is being claimed in terms of salaries and various types of fringe benefits.

Finally it was submitted that the suit was barred by limitation. Mr Somgalawe for the plaintiff countered this argument by asserting that this is a suit based on C judgment and therefore under s 6(c) of the Law of Limitation Act the right of action accrued on the date the judgment was delivered which in this case was 23 May 1989. Under the 1st Schedule, item 16 of the Law of Limitation Act the period allowed for such suits is twelve years. I agree with the observations of Mr Somgalawe regarding limitation.

D I should reiterate that for res judicata to apply not only must it be shown that the matter directly and substantially in issue in the contemplated suit is the same as that involved in a former suit between the same parties, but it must also be shown that the matter was finally heard and determined by a competent court. In this case, though it was argued that in the lower court the plaintiff had tried to obtain E the sum of Shs 6,122,402/= in the course of executing the decree of the court, there was no evidence to show that the issue as to how that sum was arrived at F was heard and finally determined before the decree of the court was drawn up. In my view therefore res judicata is not applicable in this case and for reasons already spelled out the other points raised are rejected. The suit should proceed for trial but before the next hearing date the plaintiff must amend the plaint so that he indicates clearly how much he is claiming under the different categories of employment rights and fringe benefits. The respondent was convicted by the District Court for shop breaking and stealing contrary to s 296(1) of the Penal Code. On appeal, the High Court declared his trial a nullity because the trial court had granted adjournments beyond an aggregate of 60 days contrary to s 225(4) and (5) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. The Director of Public Prosecutions appealed against that decision of the High Court.
Held: Breach of the provisions of s 225(4) and (5) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985, does not necessarily vitiate the trial unless it is shown that the accused person has been prejudiced in his defence or that the adjournments did affect the substance of the conduct of the trial.

In this appeal the Republic was represented by Mr Mono, learned Principal State Attorney, but the respondent was absent and unrepresented. When the appeal first B came on for hearing on 21 October 1993 the Court was informed by the Registry that the summons to the respondent was returned unserved. Upon Application by the Republic, the hearing was adjourned to a later date in the Session to allow for the prosecution to make another attempt to serve the C respondent. On 1 November 1993 the Court was informed that the summons to the respondent was returned unserved with the endorsement on it to the effect that the respondent escaped upon seeing the process server. Whereupon the Court directed process by substituted service through publication of the notice of hearing D in the Uhuru newspaper. On 17 November 1994 during the current Session, the Court was informed by the Registry that substituted service was duly effected through publication of the notice of hearing in the Uhuru newspaper on 1 and 2 November, 1994. The Court took this to constitute sufficient notice and proceeded to hear the appeal. E

Mr Mono filed and argued only one ground of appeal, the essence of which was that the learned High Court judge erred in holding that a breach of s 225(4) and (5) of the Criminal Procedure Act renders the trial a nullity. For this view he relied on the decision of this Court in the case of John Joseph Onenge and Another v Republic (1) involving similar facts. F

In the present case the learned High Court judge found that the trial court had granted adjournments after the expiry of the aggregate of 60 days periods in terms of the time frame stipulated under s 225 of the Criminal Procedure Act without the G requisite certificates by the specified officers pursuant to paras (a), (b) and (c) of ss (4) of that section. In the case of John Joseph Onenge and Another cited above, we held that a breach of s 225(1) and (4) which did not effect the substance of the trial does not render the trial a nullity. That principle equally H applies here. For, as in that case, it has not been suggested that the granting of adjournments in the present case prejudiced the respondent in his defence or in any way affected the conduct of his trial.

Perhaps it is pertinent to note here that during the adjournments the respondent was out on bail, unlike in the case of John Joseph Onenge and Another where the appellants remained in remand I custody. So the principle here applies with even greater force, but the main point A being emphasized is that the adjournments did not in any way affect the conduct of the trial, the process by which the issue of the respondent's guilt or innocence was determined.

At the same time we desire to make it quite clear that we do not in any way view lightly breaches of the provisions of s 225 of the Criminal Procedure Act which have been designed to protect and safeguard the liberty of the accused person in a criminal case. B

Section 225 of the Act is an important provision for the safeguard of the basic rights of an individual accused of a criminal offence. It is for that reason that we C renew our call upon the magistracy to be more vigilant in the application of that section in order to ensure that accused persons really enjoy the protection which the provisions of that section seek to accord to them.

For the foregoing reasons we allow the appeal by the Republic and set aside the D judgment of the High Court. In fairness to the High Court, however, we have to add that our decision in the case of John Joseph Onenge and Another v Republic above cited was handed down only after the judgment of the High Court in this case was given. So that the learned High Court judge cannot have been aware of that judgment before he delivered his own. We have every reason to think that had he seen that judgment before he would have decided the case before him differently. E

The learned High Court Judge, having declared the proceedings of the District Court a nullity, rightly refrained from considering the merits of the appeal before him, and instead ordered a trial denovo. However, in the light of the decision we F have taken of setting aside the judgment of the High Court, we remit the matter to that Court with a direction that the Court now proceeds to consider the appeal on the merits. Civil Practice and Procedure - Summons to appear - Summons or Notice to appear returned unserved - Effect thereof C

Civil Practice and Procedure - Failure of party to appear for hearing - Summons returned unserved but appellant informed of hearing date orally by process server - Whether acceptable

-Headnote

D The appellant's first appeal to the District Court was dismissed due to the appellant's non-appearance. When the District Court called the appeal for hearing, the respondent informed the court that the process server had orally informed the appellant of the hearing. The appellant applied to the District Court to set aside the order of dismissal on the ground that he was not served with a hearing notice. The District Court dismissed this application, and he appealed to the High Court of Tanzania. E

Held: (i) If a summons or notice of a hearing date is returned unserved, that is evidence that the party concerned was not informed of the hearing date;

(ii) It is contrary to the law for the process server or anyone else to orally notify parties of a hearing date.

[zJDz]Judgment

G Maina, J:

This is an appeal by Ramadhani Amiri against the decision of the Kinondoni District Court which dismissed his application to set aside the dismissal of his appeal to that court.

H The respondent Yusufu Rajabu had successfully sued the appellant in the primary court at Manzese for a house. It was alleged that the appellant had pledged his house for a loan of Shs 50,000/= and when he failed to repay the money, within the period agreed, the respondent sued for the house, and he was successful. The appellant appealed to the district court. The hearing was fixed for 14 February 1991. The appellant was not served with the notice of hearing because he had travelled to Rufiji. The endorsement on I the notice speaks for itself. It states that the appellant was bereaved, as his A mother had died, and he had travelled to Rufiji.

When the appeal was called for hearing on 14 February 1991 the respondent informed the court that the appellant was notified verbally on 5 February 1991 by a process server of the hearing date. The hearing of the appeal was adjourned to 15 B February 1991 when the court process server said that he had verbally informed the appellant of the hearing date. The district magistrate dismissed the appeal for non-appearance.

The appellant later applied to set aside the dismissal of the appeal. His reasons were that he was not served with the notice of hearing for he was away in Rufiji, until 16 February 1991 when he returned to Dar es Salaam. The district magistrate disbelieved him and dismissed the application. C

The procedure adapted by the district magistrate is strange. It is strange because the notice of hearing of the appeal was returned to the court unserved, and yet he D accepted oral evidence by the process server to contradict the endorsement on the notice. If the appellant had returned from Rufiji before the hearing date and the process server saw him, then a fresh notice would have been issued and served on the appellant. It has never been procedure for a process server or anyone else E to notify parties verbally of the hearing date. If the courts were to accept evidence that a party has been notified verbally of a hearing date, that will create chaos and miscarriage of justice in the whole judicial process. The procedure laid down in the law must be followed. If a summons or notice is returned unserved, that is evidence that the party concerned was not informed of the hearing date. F

Since the notice was returned to the court unserved, that was clear evidence that the appellant was not aware of the hearing date. The district court erred in law in accepting oral evidence by the process server that the appellant was aware of the hearing date. The dismissal of the appeal before the district court cannot be G allowed to stand. The appellant gave sufficient cause for his no-appearance when the appeal was called for hearing - that he was not aware of the hearing date.

The order dismissing the appeal before the District Court is set aside. The appeal is remitted to the District Court for hearing according to law. H

The appellant Kasongi Yabisa was sentenced to death by the High Court sitting in Mwanza (Masanche, J) consequent upon his conviction for the murder of one, Mbalu d/o Yabisa on or about 19 October 1984 at Malembe Village, within the district of Kwimba, in Mwanza region. I

Mr Muhula, learned advocate, appeared for the appellant while Mr Magoma, A learned Senior State Attorney, appeared for the Republic.
Mr Muhula, learned Counsel for the appellant told the Court:

'I have thoroughly read the record and I have come to the conclusion that I have very little B ground to argue the appeal in favour of the appellant. I have informed my client accordingly.'

In reply Mr Magoma, learned Senior State Attorney said: C

'The Republic supports the conviction. It is my view that there was ample evidence in support of the conviction.'

In this case the following facts were not seriously in dispute:

The appellant and the deceased were brother and sister and they lived in the same homestead. The appellant was married and had children. The deceased was not and was childless. D

About a month before the death of the deceased the appellant and his family vacated the house in which they were living with the deceased and built a separate house some distance away from deceased homestead. E

The deceased was left to live in the former homestead alone. A week or so after the appellant had left to live in his new house villagers passing by the house of the deceased started smelling a foul odor emanating from the deceased's pit-latrine. As the deceased was nowhere to be seen in the village news reached authorities F and the local 'Katibu Kata', (PW3) went to appellant's homestead and interrogated him as to the whereabouts of his sister, the deceased. Initially the appellant told the 'Katibu Kata' that the deceased had left the village to Geita to look for her sheep. On further interrogation the appellant confessed to the 'Katibu Kata' G that he killed the deceased because he honestly believed that she was a witch and that she was responsible, by reason of witchcraft, for the death of one of his children. The appellant then led the 'Katibu Kata' and other villagers to deceased's pit-latrine where he had dumped deceased's body. The matter was reported to the police and a dead body was removed from the pit and identified as that of the deceased. H

There was also appellant's confession to a justice of the peace PW1 - exhibit P3, in which the appellant gave a detailed statement as to why he killed the deceased. He says, inter alia: I

E Doctor's post-mortem report - exhibit P1 was to the effect that the deceased died of asphyxia. This tallies with appellant's confession that he strangled the deceased to death.

There can be no doubt in this case that the appellant killed his sister, the deceased, in the honest belief that she was responsible, by reason of witchcraft, for the death of his daughter, Luja Kasongi. However, as there was no sudden shock which might have deprived the appellant of his self-control the killing was murder. F

'To constitute a defence in a charge of murder the belief in witchcraft must be founded on some physical and not metaphysical act' - See the decision in R v Akope s/o Karuon and Another (1). G

On the evidence we are satisfied that the learned Trial Judge was right in convicting the appellant of the offence of murder as charged. The sentence of death is mandatory.

In the event we dismiss the appeal in its entirety. H

The petitioner was a human rights campaigner and political activist. In his petition he invited the High Court to consider whether certain amendments to the Constitution were validly made as they appear to infringe the right to participation in national public affairs and freedom of association, both of which are guaranteed by the Constitution. The petitioner also invited the Court to declare a number of statutory provi- H

A sions unconstitutional for infringing rights and freedoms guaranteed under the Constitution. These were some provisions of the Political Parties Act 1992 which, the petitioner claimed, infringed freedom of association; some provisions of the election laws which made it impossible for independent candidates to contest in B elections; certain provisions of the Newspapers Act 1976 which he claimed were arbitrary and liable to abuse, and an infringement to freedom of expression; and certain provisions of the Police Force Ordinance, Cap 322, and the Political Parties Act 1992 which, he claimed, infringed the constitutional right to peaceful assembly and public expression by requiring a permit to be obtained before one C can hold a public meeting or a rally. The petitioner also sought a declaration whether or not the appointment of people from Zanzibar to offices in Mainland Tanzania dealing with non-union matters was constitutional. Besides opposing the petition on substantive grounds, preliminary objections were raised for the Respondent regarding whether the petitioner had locus standi, whether he had a cause of action, and whether the issues he raised were justiciable.

D Held:

(i) The orthodox common law position regarding locus standi no longer holds good in the context of constitutional litigation in that the notion of sufficient personal interest over and above the interest of the general public has more to do with private law rather than public law; in matters of public interest litigation the Court will not deny standing to a genuine and bona fide litigant even where he has no personal interest in the matter; E

(ii) In the circumstances of Tanzania, if a public spirited individual springs up in search of the Court's intervention against legislation or actions that pervert the Constitution, the Court, as guardian and trustee of the Constitution, must grant him standing; F

(iii) The principles of public interest litigation are expressed in the Constitution of Tanzania by vesting in every person the capacity of an individual by virtue of articles 12 to 24 of the Constitution, and the capacity of a member of the community by virtue of articles 25 to 28 of the Constitution, thereby equipping the individual with double standing to sue; G

(iv) The petitioner in this case has locus standi by virtue of article 30(3) of the Constitution which entitles a person who alleges that a basic right is being or is likely to be contravened in relation to him to institute proceedings for relief in the High Court, as well as by virtue of article 26(2) of the Constitution which entitles every person to institute H proceedings for the protection of the Constitution and of legality;

(v) Article 26(2) of the Constitution is an independent and additional source of standing according to which personal interest is not necessary in order to institute proceedings; the article is tailored for the community and it enacts into the Constitution of Tanzania the doctrine of public interest litigation; I

(vi) In this petition the dispute is over the validity of various laws and that A suffices to constitute a cause of action; it is not always necessary for powers under those laws to be exercised first so as to give rise to a cause of action;

(vii) Fundamental rights are not gifts from the state but they inhere in a person by virtue of birth, and they are prior to the state and the law; the enactment of those rights in the Constitution is mere evidence of their B recognition and the intention that they should be enforceable in a court of law, and an intention that those rights should not be arbitrarily restricted by the state;

(viii) Parliament is given very wide powers to amend constitutional provisions, including those providing for basic human rights, but those powers of Parliament can only be exercised subject to the limits imposed by articles 30(2) and 31 of the Constitution; what is beyond the powers of Parliament C to amend is only the ethic of human rights but not the letter by which those rights are expressed;

(ix) The constitutional amendments which brought article 20(2) and (3) of the D Constitution laying conditions for registration of political parties, and those in article 39 of the Constitution relating to qualifications to contest in presidential, parliamentary and local government elections, were all validly enacted; the amendments do not abrogate, beyond the limits set by article 30(2) of the Constitution, freedom of association and the right to participate in national public affairs which are guaranteed under the Constitution; E

(x) As the issue of the constitutionality of certain provisions of the Political Parties Act 1992 is also substantially an issue in an appeal already pending before the Court of Appeal, in terms of s 8 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966, decision on that issue is stayed until the outcome of the said appeal; F

(xi) The constitutionality of a statutory provision is not found in what could happen in its operation but in what it actually provides for; the mere possibility of a statutory provision being abused in actual operation will not make it invalid;

(xii) Section 40 of the Police Force Ordinance, Cap 322, and s 11(1) of the G Political Parties Act 1992, hi-jack the right to peaceful assembly and procession guaranteed under the constitution and place it under the personal disposition and absolute discretion of the District Commissioner without adequate or any safeguard against arbitrary exercise of that discretion; they infringe the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and procession, and are therefore unconstitutional; H

(xiii) Section 41 of the Police Force Ordinance does not take away the right to hold assemblies or processions but only empowers the Police and the magistracy to step in for preserving peace and order whenever the holding or continuance of an assembly or procession is likely to cause a breach of the peace; it seeks to ensure public safety and public order, and is therefore a valid provision saved by article 30(2)(b) of the Constitution; I

A (xiv) Sections 42 and 43 of the Police Force Ordinance, which define an unlawful assembly and punish it, are constituitionally valid provisions which seek to ensure public safety and order, and to ensure that the rights and freedoms of others, and the public interest, are not prejudiced by the misuse of an individual rights and freedom;

B (xv) As article 21(1) of the Constituion entitles every citizen to participate in the government of the country, either directly or through freely elected representatives, it is illogical for that Constitiution to provide, as it does in articles 20(4) and 39, 67 and 77 as amended, that no person shall be compelled to belong to a political party and in the same breath to provide that no person shall run for office except through a political party; C

(xvi) The right of every citizen to participate in government under article 21(1) of the Constitution is to be exercised according to a procedure set by or under a law; while participation through a political party is a procedure, the requirement that participation shall be through a political party only is not a procedural matter but a substantive condition taking away the right to participate for citizens who do not belong to political parties; D

(xvii) In interpreting the Constituion when a constitutional provision enacting a fundamental right appears to conflict with another constitutional provision, the Court is enjoined to incline to the realisation of the fundamental rights and may disregard the other provision if its application would result in E injustice; it is the fundamental rights, and not the restrictions on them which are fundamental, and it is the fundamental rights which the Court is enjoined to guard jealously, not the restrictions. F

(xviiI) The amendments made in articles 39, 67 and 77 of the Constituion, restricting the right to contest in elections to political party candidates only, are capable of being abused to confine the right of governing to a few and to render illusory the emergence of a truly democratic society; not withstanding those restrictions, it shall be lawful for private candidates to contest elections along with political party candidates; G

(ix) Breach of the Constitution is such a grave and serious matter that cannot be established by mere inference but by proof beyond reasonable doubt; in this case it has not been proved that the appointment of persons from Zanzibar to offices in non-union departments in Tanzania Mainland is in breach of the Constitution of the United Republic. D. Mbezi and R. Rweyongeza, for the petitioner

K.M. Mussa, for the respondent

B Lugakingira, J.:

This was an unusual petition. In its content and demands it constitutes several petitions in one which range from challenges to the validity of diverse laws to the protection of the Constitution and legality. The petitioner, the Rev Christopher Mtikila, is a human rights campainer-cum-political activist and was represented by C learned counsel Mr Dominic Mbezi who was assisted by Mr Richard Rweyongeza. The respondent Attorney General was represented by Mr Kipenka Msemembo Mussa, a Senior State Attorney. I wish to commend them all for the industry and brilliance that went into the preparation and presentation of arguments. D

The petition originally raised very diverse issues, many of them rather political in flavour and substance, and this prompted Mr Mussa to raise a litany of preliminary objections which the Court resolved in the early stages of the proceeding. The E objections were grounded in questions of the petitioner's locus standi cause of action and justiciability of some of the issues. At the end of the day a number of matters were struck out and issues were then framed for the survivors. In view of the character of the petition which had to be amended several times it is better to paraphrase these issues rather than merely list them. F

The first issue is a general one and is tied up with the second and fifth issues. It seeks to establish generally whether the fundamental rights guaranteed in Part III, Chapter One of the Constitution of the United Republic, 1977 are immutable. The G inquiry is prompted by a set of amendments to the Constitution vide the Eighth Constitutional Amendment Act, 1992 (No 4). The Act amends arts 39, 67 and 77 in a manner which appears to infringe the right of participation in national public affairs which is guaranteed by art 21(1); it also amends art 20 in a manner which H appears to infringe the freedom of association which is guaranteed in sub-art (1) thereof. To put it differently, the problem posed in the first issue is whether the amendments to the Constitution were validly made and, if not, whether they can be declared void pursuant to the provisions of art 64(5).

The second issue turns on the provisions of ss 8, 9, 10 and 15 of the Political Parties Act, 1992 (No 5) which was enacted pursuant to I the amendment to art 20. These provisions are alleged to inhibit the formation of A political parties and therefore to infringe the freedom of association. I am called upon to declare them unconstitutional and void. The fifth issue arises from the amendment to arts 39, 67 and 77 as well as s 39 of the Local Authorities (Elections) Act, 1979. These amendments renders it impossible for independent candidates to contest presidential, parliamentary or local council elections. I am again called upon to remedy the situation. B

In the third issue the petition takes on ss 5(2), 13, 25 and 37--47 of the Newspapers Act, 1976 (No 3). Section 5(2) empowers the Minister responsible for matters relating to newspapers to exclude any newspaper from the operation of C any of the provisions relating to the registration of newspapers. Section 13 empowers the Minister to require any publisher of a newspaper to execute and register a bond in the office of the Registrar of Newspapers. Section 25 empowers D the Minister to order cessation of publication of any newspaper. Sections 37 - 47 are concerned with defamation and the punishment for libel. Finally, the petition takes on para 12(1) of the Government Notice No 166 of 1977 which empowers the Registrar to refuse registration of a newspaper. It is contended that all these provisions are arbitrary and liable to abuse and constitute as infringement to the freedom of expression which is guaranteed under art 18(1). E

The fourth issue turns on the freedom of peaceful assembly and public expression and questions the constitutionality of ss 40, 41, 42 and 43 of the Police Force Ordinance, Cap. 322 as well as s 11(1) and (2) of the Political Parties Act. These F provisions make it necessary for permits to be obtained in order to hold meetings or organise processions and also provide for police duties in relation thereto. In the sixth and final issue a declaration is sought on the constitutionality of the appointment of Zanzibaris to non-Union posts on the Mainland. G

In my ruling in the preliminary objections I reserved for consideration at this stage the questions of local standi, cause of action and justiciability and I will proceed to do so before considering the matters set out above.

Arguing the question of locus standi, no doubt with a mind to the common law H orthodox position, Mr Mussa submitted that the petitioner had to show a sufficient interest in the outcome. He considered this to be implied in art 30(3) of the Constitution. In his view the petitioner had to demonstrate a greater personal interest than that of the general public, and cited the Nigerian case of Thomas & Ors v Olufoseye (1) in support of his argument. I

A In that case it was held by the Court of Appeal that under s 6(6)(b) of the 1979 Nigerian Constitution it was necessary for the appellants to establish a sufficient interest in maintaining the action and this should be a personal interest over and above that of the general public. Adomola, JCA said at p 650:

B 'It is also the law as laid down in the (Adesanya) case that, to entitle a person to invoke judicial power, he must show that either his personal interest will immediately be or has been adversely affected by the action or that he has sustained or is in immediate danger of sustaining an injury to himself and which interest or injury is over and above that of the general public.' C

Basing on this, Mr Mussa went on to assert that the crucial factor in the petition was the petitioner himself and not the contents of the petition. Furthermore, he contended that art 26(2) of the Constitution did not in itself confer locus standi and appeared to read the provision as if it were not independent in itself. D

In response Mr Mbezi argued that standing was certainly conferred on the petitioner by art 26(2) and that personal interest (or injury) did not have to be disclosed in that context. He maintained that the alleged illegality of the laws was E sufficient to justify the petition under that provision. Mr Mbezi further stated that the petitioner acquired locus standi under art 30(3) as well and referred to the dispersal of his meeting under the provisions of the Police Force Ordinance, the refusal to register his party under the provisions of the Political Parties Act and the F banning of Michapo and Cheka newspapers (his alleged mouthpieces) as sufficiently demonstrating the petitioner's interest within the contemplation of art 30(3). Mr Mbezi further argued that in view of the provisions of art 64(5) the Court could be moved into action by any petitioner.

G I have given due consideration to the contending arguments and feel called upon to deal with the subject at some length. The status of a litigant in administrative law is a crucial factor and it has assumed an added dimension in constitutional law in the wake of written constitutions. In English common law the litigant's locus standi was the handmaid of judicial review of administrative actions. H Whenever a private individual challenged the decision of an administrative body the question always arose whether that individual had sufficient interest in the decision to justify the court's intervention. Hence, it is stated in Wade and Phillips, Constitutional Law (1965: 672): I

'In administrative law it is necessary for a complainant to have a peculiar grievance which is A not suffered in common with the rest of the public.'

The turning point in England came with the procedural reforms in judicial review, vide s 31 of the Supreme Court Act, 1983, which was to lead in the course of the B 1980 to the recognition of the existence of public law as a distinct sphere from private law. In other parts of the Commonwealth, notably India and Canada, a similar but imperseptible development came to manifest itself in the doctrine of public interest litigation. Traditionally, common law confines standing to litigate in C protection of public rights to the Attorney general and this was reaffirmed by the House of Lords in Guriet v Union of Post Office Workers (2), and the Attorney General's discretion in such cases may be exercised at the instance of an individual. D

But before even the enactment of the Supreme Court Act a liberal view of standing was already taking shape and a generous approach to the issue was already considered desirable. This is illustrated by the words of Lord Diplock in IRC v National Federation of Self-Employed and Small Businesses Ltd (3) at p 107: E

'It would, in my view, be a grave lacuna in our system of public law if a pressure group, like the federation or even a single spirited taxpayer, were prevented by out-dated technical rules of locus standi from bringing the matter to the attention of the a court to vindicate the rule of law and get the unlawful conduct stopped.' F

Yet more contemporary developments indicate that in England judges are beginning to acknowledge the possible appearance of apparent 'busy-bodies' where public interest litigation is concerned. The late Raymond Blackburn, a G lawyer and former Member of Parliament, litigated several public interest questions in which he evidently had no greater interest than the other members of the public. In R v Metropolitan Police Commissioner, ex parte Blackburn, (4), he challenged police policy in not enforcing the gaming or obscenity laws, and in Blackburn v Attorney General (5), he challenged Government policy in joining the European Community. H

The developments in Canada have been no less breathtaking and we there find more generous standing rules applied than elsewhere in the older Commonwealth. This has been largely facilitated by the existence of a written constitution and the incorporation of a charter of basic rights. The taxpayer is the central figure in the Canadian I

1995 TLR p40
LUGAKINGIRA J
A approach. In Thorson v AG of Canada, (6), a taxpayer was allowed by a majority to challenge the constitutionality of the Official Languages Act.
Laskin, J, speaking for the majority, contemplated '... whether a question of constitutionality should be immunized from judicial review by denying standing to anyone to challenge the impugned statute.' It was observed that standing in B constitutional cases was a matter for the exercise of judicial discretion. In the case of Nova Scotia Board of Censors v McNeil, (7), the Supreme Court again granted standing to a taxpayer to challenge the validity of a provincial Act regulating film C and theatre shows. This position is also illustrated in Minister of Justice v Borowski (8) where the majority granted standing to a taxpayer impugning federal legislation allowing abortion, and ruled:
D '... to establish status as a plaintiff in a suit seeking a declaration that the legislation is invalid, if there is a serious issue of invalidity, a person need only to show that he is affected by it directly or that he has a genuine interest as a citizen in the validity of the legislation and that there is no other and effective manner in which the issue may be brought before the Court.'
E The Canadian Supreme Court has in fact extended the liberalising affect of these judgments beyond constitutional cases.
Finally, it is important to revisit the Nigerian position. What was said in Thomas (1) was not merely an expression of the seeming inflexibility of s 6(6)(b) of the 1979 F Nigerian Constitution but it was also a product of colonial heritage. Soon after the attainment of independence Nigerian courts found themselves having to determine when and under what circumstances would a litigant be accorded standing to challenge the constitutionality of a statute or to ask for a judicial review. In Olawayin v AG of Northern Nigeria (9) the plaintiff had challenged the G constitutionality of a law which prohibited children from engaging in political activities. The trial court dismissed the claim on the ground that no right of the plaintiff was alleged to have been infringed and that it would be contrary to public principle to make the declaration asked for in vacuo. He appealed to the Federal H Supreme Court which dismissed the appeal on the same ground of absence of sufficient interest. In a classic restatement of the orthodox common law approach, Unsworth, FJ said, at p. 274:
'There was no suggestion that the appellant was in imminent danger of coming into conflict with the law or that there has been any real or I
direct interference with his normal business or other activities - the appellant failed to show A that he had a sufficient interest to sustain a claim - to hold that there was an interest here would amount to saying that a private individual obtains an interest by the mere enactment of a law which may in future come in conflict.

Curiously, the Nigerian courts remained stuck in that position even when the 1979 B Constitution suggested a way out with the clause -

'Any person who alleges that any of the provisions of this chapter has been, is being or likely to be contravened in any State in relation to him may apply to a High Court in that State for redress.' C

This is illustrated in the much criticized decision in Adesanya v President of Nigeria & Anor (10). In that case the appellant brought action challenging the appointment by the President of the second respondent to the chairmanship of the D Federal Electoral Commission. The latter was at the material time the Chief Judge of Bendel State and was, therefore, disqualified from being appointed a member of the Commission. When the matter came up for final disposal before the Supreme Court it was unanimously held that the appellant had no locus standi E to bring the action on the ground that he had not demonstrated the appointment and subsequent confirmation by the Senate of the second respondent had in any way infringed his civil rights and obligations. Significantly, though, Fatayi-Williams, CJN who delivered the leading judgment had these interesting remarks to make (at p 20): F

'I take significant cognizance of the fact that Nigeria is a developing country with a multi-ethnic society and a written Federal Constitution, where rumour mongering is the pastime of the market places and the construction sites. To deny any member of such a society who is aware G or believes, or is led to believe, that there has been an infraction of any of the provisions of our Constitution, or that any law passed by any of our Legislative Houses, whether Federal or State, is unconstitutional, access to a Court of law to air his grievance on the flimsy excuse of lack of sufficient interest is to provide a ready receipe for organized disenchantment with the judicial process.' H

There was unfavorable reaction from the public and the profession to the Adesanya decision and the ambivalence of the Chief Justice in the above passage provided more ammunition. Henceforth many of the Nigerian courts preferred to use the broad and I

A liberal part of the judgment of the Chief Justice. Therefore, in Chief Isagba v Alege (11), Omosun, J accorded standing to a plaintiff by holding that any Nigerian taxpayer had sufficient interest in the observance of the provisions of the Constitution by any organ of the State or its agency. And in AG of Bendel State v AG of Nigerian (12), Obaseki, JSC, who was a party to the decision in Adesanya, came around to say: B

'The constitution has opened the gates to the courts by its provisions and there can be no justifiable reasons for closing the gates against those who do not want to be governed by a law enacted NOT in accordance with the provisions of the constitution.' C

The shift in Nigeria was sealed in Adediran v Interland Transport Ltd (13), where Karibi-Whyte, JSC said:

D '. . . the restriction imposed at common law on the right of action - is inconsistent with the provisions of s 6(6)(b) of the Constitution, 1979 and to that I think the high constitutional policy involved in s 6(6)(b) is the removal of the obstacles erected by the common law requirements against individuals bringing actions before the court against the government and its institutions . . .' E

It was necessary to treat the subject at this length in order to demonstrate that Mr Mussa's appreciation of locus standi in the context of constitutional litigation no longer holds good. The notion of personal interest, personal injury or sufficient interest over and above the interest of the general public has more to do with F private law as distinct from public law. In matters of public interest litigation this Court will not deny standing to a genuine and bona fide litigant even where he has no personal interest in the matter. This position also accords with the decision in G Benazir Bhutto v Federation of Pakistan (14), where it was held by the Supreme Court that the traditional rule of locus standi can be dispensed with and procedure available in public interest litigation can be made use of if the petitionis brought to the court by a person acting bona fide.

H The relevance of public interest litigation in Tanzania cannot be over-emphasized. Having regard to our socio-economic conditions, this development promises more hope to our people than any other strategy currently in place. First of all, illiteracy is still rampant. We were recently told that Tanzania is second in Africa in wiping out illiteracy but that is statistical juggling which is not reflected on the ground. If we were that literate it would have been unnecessary for I

Hanang District Council to pass by-laws for compulsory adult education which A were recently published as Government Notice No 191 of 1994. By reason of this illiteracy a greater part of the population is unaware of their rights, let alone how the same can be realised. Secondly, Tanzanians are massively poor. Our ranking in B the world on the basis of per capita income has persistently been the source of embarrassment. Public interest litigation is a sophisticated mechanism which requires professional handling. By reason of limited resources the vast majority of our people cannot afford to engage lawyers even where they were aware of the infringement of their rights and the perversion of the constitution. C

Other factors could be listed but perhaps the most painful of all is that over the years since independence Tanzanians have developed a culture of apathy and silence. This, in large measure, is a product of institutionalised mono-party politics which in its repressive dimension, like detention without trial, supped up initiative and guts. The people found contentment in being receivers without being seekers. D Our leaders very well recognise this, and with the emergence of transparency in governance they have not hesitated to affirm it. When the National Assembly was debating Hon. JS Warioba's private motion on the desirability of a referendum before some features of the Constitution were tampered with, Hon. Sukwa Said E Sukwa, after two interruptions by his colleagues, continued and said (Parliamentary Debates, 26 August 1994):

'Mheshimiwa Spika, nilisema kwamba tatizo la nchi yetu sic wananchi. Lazima tukubali hili F kwa kweli, tatizo ni sisi viongozi. Kama sisi viongozi tutakubaliana, wananchi hawana matatizo. Mimi nina hakika Mheshimiwa Spika. Kama viongozi wa Tanzania wote, wa pande zote mbili wa Zanzibar na wa Tanzania Bara, tutakubali kusema Kesho Serikali moja, basi itakuwa kesho, na wananchi watafanya maandamano kuunga mkono. Maana wananchi wetu hawana tatizo. Kwa nini tunawapolekea hili tatizo? Nasema tatizo ni sisi viongozi.' G

Given all these and other circumstances, if there should spring up a public-spirited individual and seek the Court's intervention against legislation or actions that H pervert the Constitution, the Court, as guardian and trustee of the Constitution and what it stands for, is under an obligation to rise up to the occasion and grant him standing.

The present petitioner is such an individual.

These principles find expression in our constitution. It is apparent I

1995 TLR p44

LUGAKINGIRA J

A from the scheme of Part III, Chapter One of the Constitution that every person in Tanzania is vested with a double capacity: the capacity as an individual and the capacity as a member of the community. In his former capacity he enjoys all the basic rights set out in art 12 to art 24; in the latter capacity he is bound to discharge duties towards the community as indicated in art 25 to art 28. This B scheme reflects the modern trend in constituionalism which recognises the pre-emimence of the community in the formulation of the constitution. It is recognised that rights are correlative with functions: we have them that we may make our contribution to the social end. Our Constitution goes further to C emphazise the two capacities by equipping the individual with a double standing to sue. In the first place he is vested with standing by art 30(3) which states:

D '(3) Where any person alleges that any provision of this Part of this Chapter or any law involving a basic right or duty has been, is being or is likely to be contravened in relation to him in any part of the United Republic, he may, without prejudice to any other action or remedy lawfully available to him in respect of the same matter, institute proceedings for relief in the High Court.'

E This provision, in my view, caters for both personal and public interest litigation for at times the two may prove inseparable. A person who sues because he desires to be an independent parliamentary candidate where the system does not so allow necessarily shoulders the burden for the public. It is also important to note F that under this provision action lies where a person's right 'has been, is being or is likely to be contravened.' These are plain and clear words which admit of no controversy. Standing is therefore available under the Constitution even where contravention of a basic right is reasonably apprehended. The case of Thomas G (1), and in as much as it was decided in deference to the much criticized decision in Adesanya (10), has no relevance in the context of our Constitution. In the upshot it is not correct to say, as Mr Mussa suggested, that the petitioner has no locus standi because he cannot show that his rights have already been infringed. In my view he is within the purview of art 30(3) if there is in existence a law the operation of which is likely to contravene his basis rights. H

Standing is additionally conferred by art 26(2), and this states:

'(2) Every person is entitled, subject to the procedure provided for by the law, to institute proceedings for the protection of the Constitution and legality.' I

Mr Mussa suggested that this provision has to be read with art 30(3) and cannot A be used in lieu of the latter. With respect, I cannot agree. It is a cardinal rule of statutory and constitutional interpretation that every provision stands independent of the other and has a special function to perform unless the contrary intention appears. There is nothing in art 26(2) or elsewhere to link it to art 30(3). The only B linkage is to art 30(4) and this is one of procedure rather than substance. Clause (4) empowers Parliament to make provision for the procedure relating to institution of proceedings under the article. It has not done so to date but that does not mean that the court is hamstrung. In DPP v Daudi Pete, (15), the Court of Appeal stated C in that ' - until the Parliament legislates under sub-art (4) the enforcement of the Basic Rights, Freedoms and Duties may be effected under the procedure and practice that is available in the High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, depending on the nature of the remedy sought.' I hold art 26(2) to be an D independent and additional source of standing which can be invoked by a litigant depending on the nature of his claim. Under this provision, too, and having regard to the objective thereof - the protection of the Constitution and legality - a E proceeding may be instituted to challenge either the validity of a law which appears to be inconsistent with the Constitution or the legality of decision or action that appears to be contrary to the Constitution or the law of the land. Personal interest is not an ingredient in this provision; it is tailored for the community and falls under the sub-title 'Duties to the Society.' It occurs to me, therefore, that art 26(2) enacts F into our Constitution the doctrine of public interest litigation. It is then not in logic or foreign precedent that we have to go for this doctrine; it is already with us in our own Constitution.

I hasten to emphasize, however, that standing will be granted on the basis of public interest litigation where the petition is bona fide and evidently for the public G good and where the Court can provide an effective remedy. This point is underscored in Peoples Union for Democratic Rights v Minister of Home Affairs (16), where it was stated that 'public interest litigation' meant nothing more than what it stated, namely, it is a litigation in the interest of the public. It is not the type of litigation which is meant to satisfy the curiosity of the people, but it is a litigation H which is instituted with a desire that the court would be able to give effective relief to the whole or a section of the society. It is emphasized in the case that the condition which must be fulfilled before public interest litigation is entertained by the court is that the court should be in a position I

A to give effective and complete relief. If no effective or complete relief can be granted, the court should not entertain public interest litigation.

I gave serious consideration to the matters raised in this petition and the prayers connected therewith and I was persuaded that in quite a number of areas the B public interest overwhelmed what appeared to be a private factor. I therefore allowed arguments to proceed on the issues reviewed above. But in the light of those arguments and what is stated in this paragraph, it may be necessary to reconsider the position of one issue at the appropriate stage later. Meanwhile I will C turn to dispose of the question of cause of action. Cause of action is not a problem in this petition. Mr Mussa seemed to suggest, but I respectfully disagree, that in order for cause of action to arise an event injurious to the rights of the petitioner must have taken place. In my view, where the issue is whether a law is unconstitutional the court looks at the law itself but not at how it works. The D following passage from Chitaley & Rao, The Constitutionof India (1970: 686), citing Prahalad Jena v State (17), is to the point:

E 'In order to determine whether a particular law is repugnant or inconsistent with the Fundamental Rights it is the provisions of the Act that must be looked at and not the manner in which the power under the provision is actually exercised. Inconsistency or repugnancy does not depend upon the exercise of the power by virtue of the provisions in the Act but on the nature of the provisions themselves.' F

I agree and I do not wish to add anything more. In this petition the dispute is over the validity of various laws and this, in my view, constitutes the necessary cause of action. A situation could certainly arise where the cause of action would depend upon actual exercise of power. Such a situation is exemplified in this petition G where the constitutionality of the appointment of Zanzibaris to non-union positions on the Mainland is questioned. In that context it is the appointments themselves that constitute the cause of action, but that has to do with the validity of the action H rather than a law. There now remains the question of justiciability of the claims but since that has more to do with the first of the issues, I will now turn to consider them.

The first issue seeks to determine the immutability of basic rights enacted in the Constitution. This turns on the power of the Parliament to amend the provisions providing for these rights. Specifi- I cally, what is at issue are the amendments to art 20 and art 39 of the Constitution A vide the Eighth Constitutional Amendment Act, 1992. In its original form art 20 read as follows:

'20 - (1) Subject to the laws of the land, every person is entitled to freedom of peaceful assembly, association and public expression, that is to say, the right to assemble freely and B peaceably, to associate with other persons and, in particular, to form or belong to organisations or associations formed for the purposes of protecting or furthering his or any other interests.

(2) Subject to the relevant laws of the land, a person shall not be compelled to belong to any association. C

In its amended form clause (1) remains unaffected, hence the rights and freedoms spelt out therein remain as before. Our interest in this petition centres on the freedom of association which, under the present multi-party system, includes the D formation of political parties. Clause (2) was also unaffected by the amendment save that it now became clause (4). In between there are new clauses (2) and (3) which it is necessary to set out in full. (The translation from Kiswahili is partly my own and partly adapted). E

(2) Without prejudice to subsection (1) no political party shall qualify for registration if by its constitution and policy -

(a) it aims to advocate or further the interests of -

(i) any religious belief of group;

(ii) any tribal, ethnic or racial group; F

(iii) only a specific area within any part of the United Republic;

(b) it advocates the breaking up of the Union constituting, the United Republic;

(c) it accepts or advocates the use of force or violence as a means of attaining its political objectives; G

(d) it advocates or aims to carry on its political activities exclusively in one part of the United Republic; or

(e) it does not allow periodic and democratic elections of its leadership

(3) Parliament may enact legislation prescribing conditions which will ensure compliance by political parties with the provisions of subsec 2 in relation to the people's freedom and right of association and assembly. H

Pursuant to clause (3), Parliament enacted the Political Parties Act, 1992 providing for the registration of political parties and other matters. Clause (2) above was lifted in its entirety and re- I

A enacted as s 9(2) of the Act. In addition s 8 of the Act provided for a two-stage registration - provisional and full registration. Provisional registration is done upon fulfilment of the conditions prescribed in s 9; full registration is effected after fulfilment of the conditions in s 10 which reads:

B '10 - No political party shall be qualified to be fully registered unless -

(a) it has been provisionally registered;

(b) it has obtained not less than two hundred members who are qualified to be registered as voters for the purpose of parliamentary elections from each of at least ten Regions C of the United Republic out of which at least two Regions are in Tanzania Zanzibar being one Region each from Zanzibar and Pemba; and

(c) it has submitted the names of the national leadership of the party and such leadership draws its members from both Tanzania Zanzibar and Tanzania Mainland; D

(d) it has submitted to the Registrar the location of its head office within the United Republic and a postal address to which notices and other communications may be sent.

E It is contended by the petitioner that ss 8, 9 and 10 of the Political Parties Act are unconstitutional in the sense that they impose enough conditions on the formation of political parties and thereby inhibiting enjoyment of the freedom of association enacted in art 20(1). It is further contended that art 20(2) and (3) from which those sections derive are for the same reason unconstitutional. I am therefore invited to strike out art 20(2) and (3) of the Constitution as well as ss 8, 9, 10 and 15 of the Political Parties Act. F

On the other hand, art 39 previously provided as follows:

G '39. No person shall be eligible for election to the office of President of the United Republic unless he -

(a) has attained the age of forty years; and

(b) is otherwise qualified for election as a Member of the National Assembly or of the (Zanzibar) House of Representatives.

H As amended by the Eighth Constitutional Amendment Act, the above paragraphs are retained but re-numbered (b) and (d) respectively. There is added new paragraphs (a) and (c) which state (my translation):

(a) is a citizen of the United Republic by birth;

(d) is a member of and sponsored by a political party. I

1995 TLR p49

LUGAKINGIRA J

The requirement for membership of and sponsorship by a political party is A extended to candidacy for the National Assembly in art 67 and art 77 as well as for local councils in s 39 of the Local Authorities (Elections) Act 1979 as amended by the Local Authorities (Elections) (Amendment) Act, 1992 (No 7), s 9. The petitioner contends that the requirement for membership of and sponsorship by a political party abridges the right to participate in national public affairs granted by art 21(1) which states: B

'21 - (1) Every citizen of the United Republic is entitled to take part in the government of the country, either directly or through freely chosen representatives, in accordance with procedure provided by or under the law. C

I am therefore called upon to strike out para (d) in art 39 and wherever else the requirement for membership of and sponsorship by a political party occurs. D

As stated earlier the issue of immutability turns on Parliament's power to amend the Constitution. In assessing this power it is appropriate to recall, in the first place, that fundamental rights are not gifts from the State. They inhere in a person by reason of his birth and are therefore prior to the State and the law. In our times E one method of judging the character of a government is to look at the extent to which it recognises and protects human rights. The raison d'etre for any government is its ability to secure the welfare of the governed. Its claim to the allegiance of the governed has to be in terms of what that allegiance is to serve. Allegiance has to be correlative with rights. Modern constitutions like our own have F enacted fundamental rights in their provisions. This does not mean that the rights are thereby created; rather it is evidence of their recognition and the intention that they should be enforceable in a court of law. It can therefore be argued that the very decision to translate fundamental rights into a written code is by itself a restraint upon the powers of Parliament to act arbitrarily. G

As aptly observed by Chief Justice Nasim Hassan Shah in Muhammed Nawaz Sharif v President at Pakistan (18), at p 557: H

'Fundamental Rights in essence are restraints on the arbitrary exercise of power by the State in relation to any activity that an individual can engage. Although constitutional guarantees are often couched in permissive terminology, in essence they impose limitations on the power of the State to restrict such activities. Moreover, Basic or Fundamental Rights of individuals which presently stand I

1995 TLR p50

LUGAKINGIRA J

A formally incorporated in the modern constitutional documents derive their lineage from and are traceable to the ancient Natural Law.

Our Constitution confers on Parliament very wide powers of amendment but these powers are by no means unlimited. These powers are to be found in art 98(1) and (2) and it is necessary to set out the relevant parts. B

'98 - (1) Parliament may enact legislation altering any provision of this Constitution - (emphasis added)

C (2) For the purpose of construing the provisions of subsec (1), references to alteration of any provision of this Constitution or of any law include references to the amendment or modification, of those provisions, suspension or repeal and replacement of the provisions or the re-enactment or modification in the application of those provisions.

D These powers are evidently wide. It has to be accepted, in the first place, that Parliament has power to amend even those provisions providing for basic human rights. Secondly, that power is not confined to a small sphere.

E It extends to modification of those provisions, suspension or repeal and replacement of same, re-enactment or modification in the application thereof. Drastic as some of these terms may sound, I still do not believe that they authorise abrogation from the Constitution of these rights. The provisions of art 98 should be read in the light of the clawback clauses in art 30(2) and 31. The former reads as follows: F

'(2) It is hereby declared that no provision contained in this Part of this Constitution, which stipulates the basic human rights, freedoms and duties, shall be construed as invalidating any existing law or prohibiting the enactment of any law or the doing of any lawful act under such law, making provision for - G

(a) ensuring that the rights and freedoms of others or the public interest are not prejudiced by the misuse of the individual rights and freedoms; H

(b) ensuring the interests of defence, public safety, public order, public morality, public health, rural and urban development planning, the development planning, the development and utilisation of mineral resources or the development or utilisation of any other property in such manner as to promote the public benefit;

(c) ensuring the execution of the judgment or order of a court given or made in any civil or criminal proceeding; I

(d) the protection of the reputation, rights and freedoms of others or the private lives of A persons involved in any court proceedings, prohibiting the disclosure of confidential information, or the safeguarding of the dignity, authority and independence of the courts;

(e) imposing restrictions, supervision and control over the establishment, management and operation of societies and private companies in the country; or B

(f) enabling any other thing to be done which promotes, enhances or protects the national interest generally.

Article 31, on the other hand, empowers Parliament, notwithstanding the C provisions of art 30(2), to legislate for measures derogating from the provisions of art 14 (Right to live) and art 15 (Right to personal freedom) during periods of emergency, or in ordinary times in relation to individuals who are believed to be conducting themselves in a manner that endangers or compromises national security. We may also refer to art 97(1) which provides in part - D

(1) subject to the other provisions of this Constitution, the legislative power of Parliament shall be exercised through the National Assembly ...

Reading all these provisions together, it occurs to me that Parliament's power in E relation to the amendment of the provisions under Part III of Chapter One of the Constitution can only be exercised within the limits of art 30(2) and art 31. Hence, F even if it is a suspension, or a repeal and replacement it must be justifiable within the scope of the two provisions. I have therefore come to the conclusion, and Mr Mussa concedes, that Parliament's power of amendment are not unlimited. It should be recognised, on the other hand, that society can never be static. New times bring with them new needs and aspirations. Society's perception G of basic human rights is therefore bound to change according to changed circumstances, and that makes it imperative for Parliament to have power to alter every provision of the Constitution. What remains immutable, therefore, is the ethic of human rights but not the letter by which they are expressed. H

We turn to consider whether the amendments complained of were not within the constitutional limits, beginning with art 20(2) and (3). The former does not abrogate or abridge beyond the purview of art 30(2) the right of association guaranteed under art 20(1). It merely lays down the conditions a political party has to fulfil before registration and all these conditions are within the perimeters of art I

A 30(2). The conditions are clearly aimed at the promotion and enhancement of public safety, public order and national cohesion. There cannot be any such thing as absolute or uncontrolled liberty wholly freedom without restraint, for that would lead to anarchy and disorder. Indeed, in a young country like ours, nothing could be B more suicidal than to licence parties based on tribe, race or religion. The problem with art 20(3) is even less apparent. It is an enabling provision giving Parliament power to enact a law for the registration of political parties and for ensuring compliance with art 20(2) by those parties. It does not expressly tell C Parliament what to write in that law. I am satisfied and hold that art 20(2) and (3) were validly enacted. There remains, however, the provisions of the Political Parties Act which fall for comment under the second issue. Next is art 39 and allied articles and provisions relating to presidential, parliamentary and local council candidacies. Once again, I am unfortunate in having to say that these D amendments were within the powers of the Parliament. They do not abrogate but merely modify the application of art 21(1) by providing that participation in national public affairs shall be through political parties. As seen earlier, modification in application is covered under art 98(2). I also think that the amendments are within E the ambit of art 30(2) if public order be taken as having supplied the inspiration. These amendments were, therefore, validly made. It should be understood, however, that I am at this juncture talking of validity in strict legal terms; the amendments are otherwise not free from difficulties and these are dealt with under the fifth issue. F

The Court's power to declare a law void is founded in art 64(5). Having held that the impugned constitutional amendments were validly made, I do not have to consider whether such amendments are 'law' within the meaning of the article. I have read in this connection the interesting arguments in the cases of Golaknath v State of Punjab (19) and Kesavananda v State of Keral (20) but in view of the G decision I have reached, I am unable to take advantage of them.

The second issue questions the constitutionality of ss 8, 9 10 and 15 of the H Political Parties Act. Much effort had gone into this matter when I was obliged to admit that the trial of this issue should have been stayed. Last year the petitioner filed at the Dar es Salaam registry of this Court an application for orders of certicrari and mandamus. That was Miscellaneous Civil Cause No 67 of 1993, the applicants being himself and the Democratic Party and the respondents being the Attorney General and the Registrar of Political Parties. The grounds for the application were that the Registrar I was biased in refusing to register the Democratic Party and that the Political A Parties Act (apparently the whole of it) was unconstitutional and void. He was praying for orders to quash the Registrar's decision and to direct him to reconsider the Democratic Party's application according to law. The application was heard and subsequently dismissed by Maina, J on 14 December, 1993. Two days later B the petitioner lodged a notice of appeal. There is now pending before the Court of Appeal a Civil Appeal No 24 of 1994, in which the first ground of appeal states:

'The learned judge erred in law in failing to hold that section 8 and 10 of the Political Parties C Act, 1992, Act No 5 of 1992 are violative of art 13(6)(a) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania and therefore null and void on the ground that they do not provide for fair hearing before the Second Respondent's decision to refuse full registration of a political party.

The memorandum concludes: D

'It is proposed to ask the Court for the following orders: -

(i) an order striking out ss 8, 10 and 16 of the Political Parties Act, 1992.' E

In the present petition I am confronted with the same prayer with slight variation, namely, to strike out ss 8, 9 10 and 15 of the same Act. In other words a suit in which the matter in issue is substantially in issue in another suit between the same parties is pending in another court in the country. It seems also that the Dar F es Salaam suit was instituted earlier because the record of this petition shows that its trial was being put off to await the outcome of the former. In those proceedings we do not have a prescribed procedure but we have invariably invoked and been guided by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. Section 8 of the Code provides thus: G

8. No court shall proceed with the trial of any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly or substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title where such suit is pending in the same or any other court in Tanganyika having jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed. H

This provision is in parimateria with s 10 of the Indian Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. Mulla observes in relation to the latter that the object is to prevent courts of concurrent jurisdiction from simul- I

A taneously trying two parallel suits in respect of the same matter in issue. It goes on to claim, citing a 1919 obscure authority, that the section enacts merely a rule of procedure and a decree passed in contravention of it is not a nullity and cannot be disregarded in execution proceedings. I think, however, that this might be true where the subsequent suit is decided without knowledge of the existence of the previous suit. B

It is the pendancy of the previously instituted suit that constitutes a bar to the trial of the subsequent suit. The word 'suit' has been held to include 'appeal': see Raj Spinning Mills v AG King Ltd (21). The 'matter in issue' in the provision has also C been construed as having reference to the entire subject matter in controversy between the parties and not merely one or more of the several issues: see Hariram v Hazi Mohamed (22). The same position was stated by the Court of Appeal of Eastern Africa in Jadva Karson v Harman Singh Bhogal (23), when they were considering s 6 of Kenya Civil Procedure Ordinance which is again in D parimateria with our s 8. The case before me is, of course, a novelty. Like the eye of a butterfly, it is a composite of several petitions wrapped up into one. When considering the expression 'matter in issue' one has to consider each issue independently for they have no relationship. There is not one subject matter in E controversy between the parties but several. In these circumstances the second issue is severable as it could indeed have been tried in a separate suit. In the circumstances of this case 'matter in issue' must be taken to be matter in issue in each of the six issues framed and I am satisfied that the same matter is in issue in the appeal pending before the Court of Appeal. F

In Jinnat Bibi v Howeah Jute Mills Co Ltd (24), it was held that the provisions of s 10 of the Indian Code were mandatory and left no discretion to the courts in respect of the stay of suits when circumstances are such as to invoke the G operation of that section. It was further held that one test of the application of that to a particular case is whether on the final decision being reached in the previous suit such decision would operate as res judicata in the subsequent suit. Indian decisions are certainly not binding on this Court, but they deserve the greatest respect where they expound a provision which was previously our own and which remains in parimateria with our own. H

The Indian Code of Civil Procedure was in application in Tanganyika until 1966 and s 10 thereof is in parimateria with our s 8. It is therefore not only in courtesy but also in common sense that I consider myself entitled to rely on these decisions. In so doing, I I hold that the provisions of s 8 of our code are mandatory and provide no room for A discretion in circumstances where it is invokable. It is invokable in the instant case. Moreover, there is no doubt that the final decision in the pending appeal would operate as res judicata in the instant petition. The question is not whether I am in a position to decide the matter ahead of the Court of Appeal; courts of law B are not racecourses. The point is that I am bound to stop in my tracks and let the previous suit proceed to finality because the decision on the matter in issue would operate as res judicata on the same matter in the suit before me. I will therefore stay the decision on the second issue until the outcome of Civil Appeal No 24 of 1994. C

In the third issue the Court is invited to pronounce on the constitutionality of ss 5(2), 13, 25, 37-47 of the Newspapers Act, 1976 and para 12 of GN No 166 of 1977. I have two observations to make in this connection. First, it must be realised that the constitutionality of a provision or statue is not found in what could happen D in its operation but in what it actual provides for. Where a provision is reasonable and valid the mere possibility of its being abused in actual operation will not make it invalid: Collector of Customs (Madras) v NS Chetty (25). It seems E to me, with respect, that much of what was said against the above provisions reflected generally on what could happen in their operation rather than on what they actually provided for. I was generally referred to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Kukutia ole Pumbum v Attorney General (26), but I think that case F covers a different situation - the situation where a person was deprived of his right to sue unless he was permitted to do so by the defendant (the Government). The provisions complained of however, are administrative and implementational and their constitutionality can only be challenged if they were not within the power of the Legislature to enact them. G

Secondly, and most importantly, I have unfortunately come to doubt the petitioner's standing in this issue. As stated before, our Constitution confers a double capacity on every person - his personal and his community capacities. Now, in what capacity did the petitioner take up these provisions? It cannot be in his personal H capacity because there is nothing in the provisions or any of them which is shown to have contravened, is contravening or is likely to contravene his right to receive or impart information. The contravention has to be read in the provisions themselves. It transpires that the petitioner's complaint is in fact founded on the banning of the 'Michapo' and 'Cheka' newspapers vide Government Notice I

A No 8 of 1993. That is improper. The use or misuse of the powers granted by s 25, the relevant provision in that connection, has nothing to do with the validity of that provision as such. What would be relevant is whether Parliament had no power to grant those powers. As for the misfortunes of 'Michapo' and 'Cheka' the B doors were open for the option of judicial review but it seems better options were found. Can we alternatively say that this issue falls under public interest litigation? I don't think so either. As seen before, public interest litigation is litigation in the interest of the public. In other words, the general public, or section thereof, must C be seen to be aggrieved by the state of the law and to be desirous of redress. There could probably be provisions in the Newspaper Act one could consider oppressive, unreasonable and even unconstitutional, but that is beside the point; the point is that there is no evidence of public agitation against that law. And by 'public' I do not mean merely newspaper editors but the Tanzanian public D generally. Ironically, whatever ills this law may be identified with appear to be overshadowed by the unprecedented upsurge of private newspapers in recent years. As stated in Sanjeev Coke Manufacturing Co v Bharat Coking Coal Ltd E (27), courts are not authorised to make disembodied pronouncements on serious and cloudly issues of constitutional policy without battle lines being properly drawn. Judicial pronouncements cannot be immaculate legal conceptions. It is but right that no important point of law should be decided without a proper issue between parties properly ranged on either side and a crossing of the swords. It is F inexpedient for the Court to delve into problems which do not arise and express opinion thereon. In the premises I decline to pronounce on the third issue.

The fourth issue brings us to the provisions of the Police Force Ordinance and the Political Parties Act touching on assemblies and processions. Under s 40 of the G former a permit is necessary to organise an assembly or procession in a public place. The permit is grantable by the District Commissioner. Similarly, political parties require a permit from the District Commissioner to hold public meetings pursuant to the provisions of s 11(1) of the Political Parties Act. Section 41 of the H Ordinance empowers a police officer above the rank of inspector or any magistrate to stop or prevent any assembly or procession if the holding or continuance of it "is imminently likely to cause a breach of the peace, or to prejudice the public safety ...' The police officer or magistrate may therefore give orders, including orders for the dispersal of the assembly or procession. Section 42 defines what constitutes an unlawful assembly or I procession, namely, an assembly or procession not authorised by a permit, where A one is required, or one held in contravention of the conditions thereon or in disregard of orders by the police or magistrate. Section 43 is the penal provision for disobediences, etc. These provisions i.e. ss 41, 42 and 43, are imported into the Political Parties Act vide s 11(2) thereof. It was argued for the petitioner that B these provisions are inconsistent with the freedom of peaceful assembly and public expression which is guaranteed under art 20(1). Mr Mussa, on the other hand, thought they were all supervisory in character, intended to ensure peace and good order, to the end that the rights and freedoms may be better enjoyed. C

A better approach to these provisions is to distinguish their functions. First of all, there is the requirement for a permit grantable by the District Commissioner and this falls under s 40 of the Ordinance and s 11(1) of the Act. Next there is control of the meetings and processions and this falls under s 41, the exercise of that D power being vested in the police and the magistracy. Finally, we have the criminal law provisions in ss 42 and 42. In considering the question of constitutionality these distinctions have to be kept in mind. I draw these distinctions also because not all meetings or processions require a permit, yet all attract police and magisterial supervision. By virtue of GN No 169 of 1958, religious processions as E well as religions, social, educational, entertainment and sporting assemblies do not require a permit; by virtue of GN No 98 of 1960 assemblies convened by rural local authorities within the areas of their jurisdiction do not require a permit; and by virtue GN No 237 of 1962 assemblies convened by Municipal or Town Councils within the area of their jurisdiction do not require permits either; but all these F events attract police and magisterial supervision. Let us now look at the character of the three divisions in relation to the Constitution. Section 40(2) provides in part: G

'(2) Any person who is desirous of convening, collecting, forming or organising any assembly or procession in any public place, shall first make application for a permit in that behalf to the District Commissioner . . . and if the District Commissioner is satisfied, having regard to all H the circumstances, . . . that the assembly or procession is not likely to cause a breach of the peace . . . he shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section (3), issue a permit . . .'

Section 11(1) of the Political Parties Act is to the same effect although it does not expressly set out all that is in the above provi- I

A sion. These provisions may then be contrasted with the provisions of art 20(1) which states in part:

(1) Subject to the laws of the land, every person is entitled to freedom of peaceful assembly, association and public expression, that is to say, the right to assemble freely and peaceably . . . B

The Constitution is the basic or paramount law of the land and cannot be overridden by any other law. Where, as in the above provision, the enjoyment of a constitutional right is 'subject to the laws of the land,' the necessary implication is that those laws must be lawful laws. A law which seeks to make the exercise of C those rights subject to the permission of another person cannot be consistent with the express provisions of the Constitution for it makes the exercise illusory. In this class are s 40 of the Police Force Ordinance and s 11(1) of the Political Parties Act. Both provisions hijack the right to peaceful assembly and procession D guaranteed under the Constitution and place it under the personal disposition of the District Commissioner. It is a right which cannot be enjoyed unless the District Commissioner permits. That is precisely the position that was encountered in ole Pumbun (26) where the right to sue the Government could not be exercised save with the permission of the Government. The Court of Appeal was prompted to say: - E

'. . . a law which seeks to limit or derogate from the basic right of the individual on grounds of F public interest will be saved by art 30(2) of the Constitution only if it satisfies two essential requirements: First such a law must be lawful in the sense that it is not arbitrary. It should make adequate safeguards against arbitrary decision, and provide effective controls against abuse by those in authority when using the law. Secondly, the limitation imposed by such law must not be more than is reasonably necessary to achieve the legitimate object. This is what G is also known as the principle of proportionality . . . If the law . . . does not meet both requirements, such law is not saved by art 30(2) of the Constitution, it is null and void.'

H Section 40 does not meet these requirements. It is in the absolute discretion of the District Commissioner to determine the circumstances conductive to the organisation of an assembly or procession; there is no adequate or any safeguards against arbitrary exercise of that discretion and there is no mechanism for challenging his decisions, except probably by way of judicial review which is tortuous and unbeneficial for the purpose of assemblies and pro- I cessions. I have easily come to the conclusion that the requirement for a permit A infringes the freedom of peaceful assembly and procession and is therefore unconstitutional. It is not irrelevant to add, either, that in the Tanzanian context this freedom is rendered the more illusory by the stark truth that the power to grant permits is vested in cadres of the ruling party. B

Coming to s 41, I am of the view that the provision does not operate to take away the right to hold assemblies or processions. it only empowers the police and the magistracy to step in for the preservation of peace and order. The provision is thus saved by art 30(2)(b), it being in furtherance of the State's normal functions of C ensuring public safety and public order and is reasonably justifiable in a democratic society. As rightly remarked by Mr. Mussa the enjoyment of basic human rights presupposes the existence of law and order. A provision like s 41 is therefore a necessary concomitant to the realisation of these rights. Moreover, there is inherent in the provision a safeguard against arbitrary use. It comes into D play when the holding or continuance of an assembly or procession 'is imminently likely to cause a breach of the peace, or to prejudice the public safety or the maintenance of public order or to be used for any unlawful purpose,' (emphasis added) and therefore meets what is termed the 'clear and present danger' test. In Muhammed Nawaz Sharif (18) cited earlier, Saleem Akhtar, J said, at pp 832--833: E

'Every restriction (on basic rights) must pass the test of reasonableness and overriding public interest. Restriction can be imposed and freedom . . . may be curtailed provided it is justified F by the 'clear and present danger' test enunciated in Saia v New York (1948) 334 US 558 that the substantive evil must be extremely serious and the degree of imminence extremely high.'

Section 41, in my view, is conditioned on a clear and present danger where the G substantive evil is extremely serious and the degree of imminence extremely high. A situation befitting the application of the provision can be found in the Guyanese case of CR Ramson v Lloyed Barker and the Attorney General (28). That case H arose from the dispersal of a political meeting by the police. The plaintiff, an Attorney-at-Law, was standing near his motor car parked by the roadside discussing with a colleague the methods used by the police to disperse the crowd. A policeman came up, held the plaintiff by his arm and asked him what he was doing there, and was told 'that is my business.' Other policemen came I

A up and surrounded the plaintiff, who was then jabbed several times in the ribs with a baton by another policeman who ordered him into the car. The plaintiff and his colleague then got into the car unwillingly and drove away. The plaintiff later brought action alleging, inter alia, an infringement of his right to freedom of assembly, expression and movement. It was held by the Court of Appeal that there B was no infringement of the constiutional right to the freedom of assembly, expression or movement as the action of the police was not directed towards a hindrance or deprivation of these constitutional freedoms.

C These factors apart, it is equally apparent that the petitioner admits the legitimate role of the police at assemblies and processions although, somehow, he does not realise that this role is specially authorised by s 41. Para 19(h) of the petition states in part:

D 'The court should also declare that a citizen has right to convene a peaceful assembly or public rally and the right to make a peaceful demonstration or procession without a permit from anybody except that he should just inform the police before doing so'. (my emphasis).

E I would not wish to believe that by this prayer it is intended that the police should attend assemblies and processions to applaud the actors and fold their arms in the face of an imminent break down in law and order. I am satisfied that s 41 is a valid provision.

F Finally, ss 42 and 43. The former defines an unlawful assembly or procession and the latter punishes the same. Article 30(2)(a) and (b) of the constitution empowers the Legislature to enact legislation for ensuring that the rights and freedoms of others or the public interest are not prejudiced by the misuse of the individual rights and freedoms and for ensuring public safety and public order. This power, in my view, includes the power to prescribe penalties for criminal G breaches. In other words, the penalties are necessarily concomitant to the effective exercise of police and magisterial powers under the other provisions. I consider the provisions valid as well.

H At this stage I will proceed to show the significance of the distinction I have been making. I have held that the requirement for a permit is unconstitutional but not the police magisterial and penal role. The crucial question now is whether these aspects can be severed. Severance is provided for under art 64(5) which states that 'any other law inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution . . . shall, to the extent of the inconsistency, be void.' It is therefore established that where the valid portion is severable from the rest, I that portion will be maintained provided it is sufficient to carry out the purpose of A the Act. Delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in AG of Alberta v AG of Canada (29) at p 516, Viscount Simon said:

'The real question is whether what remains is so inextricably bound up with the part declared B invalid that what remains cannot independently survive, or as it has sometimes been put, whether on a fair reivew of the whole matter it can be assumed that the Legislature would have enacted what survives without enacting the part that is ultra vires at all.' C

I am in no doubt whatsoever that the permit aspect can be expunged and expelled from the law without prejudicing the rest. This is illustrated by the fact that the supervisory aspects already operate independently where a permit is not required. It is evident, therefore, that the Legislature could have enacted the supervisory aspects without enacting the permit aspect. Having held, and I repeat, that the D requirement for a permit is unconstitutional and void, I direct the provisions of s 40 of the Police Force Ordinance and s 11(1)(a) of the Political Parties Act, and all provisions relating thereto and connected therewith, shall henceforth be read as if all reference to a permit were removed. It follows that from this moment it shall be E lawful for any person or body to convene, collect, form or organise and address an assembly or procession in any public place without first having to obtain a permit from the District Commissioner. Until the Legislature makes appropriate arrangements for this purpose, it shall be sufficient for a notice of such assembly or procession to be lodged with the police, being delivered a copy to the District commissioner for his information. F

In reaching this decision, I am certainly aware of the decision cited to me in C Mtikila & Ors VR (30). In that case the present petitioner and others were charged before the District Court of Dodoma with three counts, the first of which alleged G 'refusing to desist from convening a meeting or assembly after being warned not to do so by police officers contrary to ss 41 and 42 of the Police Force Ordinance, Cap 322.' They were convicted and fined Shs 500/= each. They appealed to this H Court and it was contended, inter alia, that s 41 was unconstitutional. Mwalusanya, J agreed and said: 'I construe s 41 of the Police Force Ordinance to be void. From now onwards this section is deleted from the Statute Book.' I am given to understand that an appeal has been lodged against that decision. I

LUGAKINGIRA J

A The fact that an appeal is pending naturally restrains me in my comments on that decision, yet I cannot avoid to show, albeit briefly, why I find that decision difficult to go by. The learned judge did not merely hold s 41 to be unconstitutional; he went further and held the entire trial to be a nullity. He said between pp 23 and 25 of his judgment: B

'In my judgment I find that the denial by the trial magistrate to have the appellants have access to the documents they required for their defence was a fundamental defect which is not curable - The error is so fundamental that it has rendered the whole trial a nullity.' C

This is significant indeed. It is established practice that where a matter can be disposed of without recourse to the Constitution, the Constitution should not be involved at all. The Court will pronounce on the constitutionality of a statue only when it is necessary for the decision of the case to do so: Wahid Munwar Khan v D State (31). In that case a passage from Coday's Treatise on Constitutional Limitations was also cited in these terms:

E 'In any case where a constitutional question is raised, though it may be legitimately presented by the record, yet if the record presents some other clear ground the court may rest its judgment on that ground alone, if the other questions are immaterial having regard to the view taken by the court.'

F The Supreme Court of Zimbabwe expressed the same view in Minister of Home Affairs v Hickke & Ors (32), where Georges, CJ said (at 758):

'Courts will not normally consider a constitutional question unless the existence of a remedy depends upon it; if a remedy is available to an applicant under some other legislative G provision or on some other basis, whether legal or factual, a court will usually decline to determine whether there has been, in addition, a breach of the Declaration of Rights.'

H And here at home the Court of Appeal had this to say in Attorney General v WK Butambala (33):

'We need hardly say that our Constitution is a serious and solemn document. We think that invoking it and knocking down laws or portions of them should be reserved for appropriate and really serious occasions.' I

1995 TLR p63

LUGAKINGIRA J

The court continued: A

'... it is not desirable to reach a situation where we have 'ambulance courts' which go round looking for situations where we can invalidate statutes.'

It is evident that the appeal under reference could have been disposed of on the B ground that the trial was a nullity without going into the constitutionality of s 41. It is indeed curious that a trial which was adjudged a nullity could still provide the basis for striking down s 41. On these grounds and others, I was unable to benefit from the decision of my learned brother. C

The fifth issue takes us back to the amendments to the Constitution and elsewhere which make membership of and sponsorship by a political party mandatory for a person to contest presidential, parliamentary or local authority elections. I held that the amendment was constitutionally valid but I reserved my D position on their practical implications until this stage. It is essential for the purpose of the present exercise, and for ease of reference, to set out side by side the provisions of art 21(1), art 20(4) and art 39(c), the last mentioned being representative of allied amendments elsewhere. Article 21(1) reads as follows: E

'(1) Every citizen of the United Republic is entitled to take part in the government of the country, either directly or through freely chosen representatives, in accordance with procedure provided by or under the law.' F

Article 20(4) states (my translation):

'(4) Without prejudice to the relevant laws, no person shall be compelled to belong to any party or organisation, or for any political party to be refused registration by reason only of its ideology or philosophy.' G

And art 39(c) states (my translation):

'39. No person shall be eligible for election to the office of President of the United Republic unless he - H

(a) ...; (b) ...

(c) is a member of and sponsored by a political party.'

As generally understood the citizen's right to participate in the government of his country implies three considerations: the right to I

1995 TLR p64

LUGAKINGIRA J

A the franchise, meaning the right to elect his representatives; the right to represent, meaning the right to be elected to law making bodies; and the right to be chosen to political office. These three rights are, in my view, epitomized in the provisions of art 21(1), subject, of course, to the qualifications which expediency may dictate for the exercise of these rights, e.g literacy and age.

But while B accepting the relevancy of such qualifications it has to be admitted in the first place that the concept of basic human rights has a utilitarian aspect to it: to whom are these rights to be useful? Harold Laski (A Grammar of Politics, 1967, at 92) responds thus:

C 'There is only one possible answer. In any State the demands of each citizen for the fulfilment of his best self must be taken as of equal worth; and the utility of a right is therefore its value to all the members of the State. The rights, for instance, of freedom of speech does not mean for those in authority, or for members of some special church or class. Freedom of speech is a right either equally applicable to all citizens without distinction or not applicable at all. D

These remarks are no more applicable in political philosophy than they are in human rights jurisprudence. The matter is brought into focus if we substitute the right to participate in the government of one's country for the freedom of speech. E The proposition would then be that the right to participate in the government of one's country is not reserved for those in authority, or for members of some special class or groups, but it is a right either equally applicable to all citizens F without distinction or not applicable at all. This utilitarian factor is writ large in art 21(1) for it speaks of 'every citizen' being entitled to participate in the government of his country. It could easily have said 'Every member of a political party ...,' but it G did not, and this could not have been without cause. it will be recalled, indeed, that the provision existed in its present terms ever since the one-party era. At that time all political activity had to be conducted under the auspices and control of Chama Cha Mapinduzi, and it could have been argued that this left no room for H independent candidates. It is certainly this notion which was at the base of Mr. Mussa's submission to the effect that the amendments did not take away the right for independent candidates for such right never existed before. The argument is no doubt attractive, but, at least with effect from 1 July, 1992, art 21(1) has to be read in a multi-party and non-party context. That is what I can gather from art 20(4) - previously art 20(2) - which was deliberately rephrased to accommodate both situations. It is I illogical for a law to provide that no person shall be compelled to belong to a A political party and in the same breath to provide that no person shall run for office except through a political party. If it were the intention of the Legislature to exclude non-party citizens from participating in the government of their country, it could easily have done so vide the same Eighth Constitutional Amendment Act by removing the generality in art 21(1). B

The position, as I see it, is now this: By virtue of art 21(1) every citizen is entitled to participate in the government of the country, and by virtue of the provisions of art 20(4) such citizen does not have to be a member of any political party; yet by C virtue of art 39(c) and others to that effect, no citizen can run for office unless he is a member of and sponsored by a political party. This is intriguing. I am aware that the exercise of the right under art 21(1) has to be 'in accordance with procedure provided by or under the law,' but I think that while participation through a political D party is a procedure, the exercise of the right of participation through a political party only is not a procedure but an issue of substance. The message is: either you belong to a political party or you have no right to participate. There is additionally the dimension of free elections alluded to in art 21. A citizen may E participate in the government 'either directly or through freely chosen representatives.' It is contrary to every notion of free elections if non-party citizens are compelled to vote for party candidates. In the midst of this unusual dilemma I had to turn to the canons of statutory and constitutional interpretation. F

When the framers of the Constitution declared the fundamental rights in Part III of Chapter One thereof, they did not do so in vain, it must have been with the intention that these rights should be exercisable. It is therefore established that the provisions of the Constitution should always be given a generous and purposive G construction. In AG of Gambia v Jobe (34), at 565, Lord Diplock said:

'A constitution and in particular that part of it which protects and entrenches fundamental rights and freedoms to which all persons in the State are to be entitled, is to be given a generous and purposive construction. H

This echoes what was said earlier in British Coal Corporation v The King (35), to the effect that in interpreting a consistitutent or organic statute the construction most beneficial to widest possible amplitude of its powers must be adopted. And not much later, in I

A James v Commonwealth of Australia (36), at 614 Lord Wright, MR said:

'It is true that a Constitution must not be construed in any narrow and pedantic sense. The words used are necessarily general, and their full import and true meaning can often be B appreciated when considered, as the years go on, in relative to the vicissitudes of fact which from time to time emerge. It is not that the meaning of the word changes, but the changing circumstances illustrate and illuminate the full import of the meaning.'

C This approach is directed principally at resolving difficulties which may be inherent in a single provision. The strategy, according to these authorities, is to approach the provision generously and liberally particularly where it enacts a fundamental right. The case before me takes us a stage further. What happens D when a provision of the constitution enacting a fundamental right appears to be in conflict with another provision in the Constitution? In that case the principle of harmonization has to be called in aid. The principle holds that the entire Constitution has to be read as an integrated whole, no one particular provision destroying the other but each sustaining the other; see Muhammed Nawaz Sharif E (18) at 601. If the balancing act should succeed, the Court is enjoined to give effect to all the contending provisions. Otherwise, the court is enjoined to incline to the realisation of the fundamental rights and may for that purpose disregard even the clear words of a provision if their application would result in gross injustice. Chitaley, at 716, renders the position thus: F

'. . . it must be remembered that the operation of any fundamental right may be excluded by any other Article of the constitution or may be subject to an exception laid down in some other G Article. In such cases it is the duty of the Court to construe the different Articles in the Constitution in such a way as to harmonise them and try to give effect to all the Articles as far as possible and it is only if such reconciliation is not possible, one of the conflicting Articles will have to yield to the other.' H

These propositions are by no means novel but are well known in common law jurisdictions. They rest, above all, on the realisation that it is the fundamental rights which are fundamental and not the restrictions. In the case of Sturat v Crowninshield (37), at 550, Chief Justice Marshall of the Supreme Court of the United States said: I

'Although the spirit of an instrument, especially a Constitution, is to be respected not the less A than its letter, yet the spirit is to be collected chiefly from its words. It would be dangerous in the extreme to infer from extrinsic circumstances that a case for which the words of an instrument expressly provide shall be exempt from its operation. Where words conflict with each other, where the different clauses of an instrument bear upon each other and would be inconsistent unless the natural and common words be varied, construction becomes B necessary, and a departure from the obvious meaning of words is justifiable. But if in any case the plain meaning of a provision, not contradicted by any other provision in the same instrument is to be disregarded, because we believe the framers of that instrument could not intend what they say, it must be one in which the absurdity and injustice of applying the C provision to the case would be so monstrous that all mankind would, without hesitation, unite in rejecting the application.'

In the instant petition, the following factors emerge. First, art 39(c) and allied D amendments are restrictions on the exercise of a fundamental right and not fundamental in themselves. It is the fundamental rights, but not their restrictions, that this Court is enjoined to guard jealously. Secondly, the scheme of our E Constitution contemplates the full exercise of the fundamental rights enacted therein save as they may be limited in terms of the provisions of art 30(2) and art 31(1). Although the amendments pass the test of validity by virtue of the very wide definition of 'alteration' in art 98(2), it is only tenuously that they come within the ambit of art 30(2). Thirdly, the literal application of the amendments could lead to F monstrous and nationally injurious results. It is believed that there are between three and four million people in this country who subscribe to some political party, leaving well over twenty millions a free decision in the government of their country is unjust, monstrous and potentially calamitous. Fourth, it must be said that any G talk of 'parties' at this juncture in the country's history cannot be serious. Apart from Chama cha Mapinduzi whose presence is all pervasive, the rest exist more in name than in practice. The amendments are therefore capable of being abused H to confine the right of governing into the hands of members of a class and to render illusory the emergence of a truly democratic society. I do not wish to believe that that was the intention of the Legislature. Finally, art 21(1) can in fact operate alongside art 39 and allied amendments, without the latter's exclusionary properties, there being nothing strange in having party and independent candidates in any election. I

LUGAKINGIRA J

A For everything I have endeavored to state and notwithstanding the exclusionary elements to that effect in arts 39, 67 and 77 of the Constitution as well as s 39 of the Local Authorities

(Elections) Act 1979, I declare and direct that it shall be lawful for independent candidates, along with candidates sponsored by political parties, to contest presidential, parliamentary and local council elections. This will not apply to the council elections due in a few days. B

We now come to the sixth and final issue. A declaration is sought to the effect that it is unconstitutional for the President to appoint Zanzibaris to head non-union ministries and departments on the Mainland. This matter invites a bit of the union's history. When Tanganyika and Zanzibar united in 1964 the Constitution of the C former was adopted as the interim Constitution of the United Republic, modified as to provide for a separate government for Zanzibar in matters other than those reserved to the union Government. At the same time the Government of D Tanganyika was abolished. The union operated under interim constitutions until the promulgation of the 1977 Constitution.

Article 4(3) of the Constitution provides for the division of governmental functions on the basis of union and non-union matters. Authority in respect of all union E matters as well as non-union matters in and for the Mainland is vested in the Union Government by art 34(1). Likewise all executive power of the United Republic with respect of union matters and with respect to non-union matters in and for the Mainland is vested in the President. He may exercise that power either directly or F through delegation to other persons holding office in the services of the United Republic. The President is also empowered to constitute and abolish offices and, pursuant to the provisions of art 36(2), he has power to appoint persons to offices in the public services of the United Republic subject to the other provisions of the Constitution. In the exercise of the functions of his office the President has G unfettered discretion apart from complying with the provisions of the Constitution and the law. Article 55(1) additionally empowers the President to appoint Ministers who 'shall be responsible for such offices as the President may from time to time . . . establish.' He also has power to appoint Regional Commissioners for regions in the Mainland. Zanzibar retains its internal autonomy in respect of non-union H matters falling on that side. It was argued by Mr Mbezi that the structure of the Constitution points to a dual role for the Union Government, i.e. as a Government responsible for Uniion Matters and as a Government responsible for non-Union Matters for and in I the Mainland. He also submitted that the division of union from non-union matters A could not have been done without a purpose. In his view non-union matters on the Mainland have to be run by Mainlanders, and the fact that they are constitutionally placed under the Union Government does not amount to their unionisation. He therefore thinks that the appointment of Zanzibaris to run these matters offends art 4(3). Mr Mussa responded by pointing out that no provision in B the Constitution compelled the President not to appoint Zanzibaris to such positions and that it would actually be discriminatory if he did not do so. In his view the exercise of the power of appointment was a matter of policy but not one founded on the Constitution. C

The issue of Zanzibaris in 'Mainland' ministries is presently a matter of considerable interest, and seems to derive more drive from the polarised political situation which culminated in the ill-fated parliamentary motion for a government of Tanganyika. But sentiments apart, one would certainly wish to know the jurisdical D position of non-union matters in and for the Mainland. The dualism factor asserted by Mr Mbezi was recognised and articulated by the Court of Appeal in Haji v Nungu & Anor (38), where Chief Justice Nyalali further stated (at p 231) that in the basic structure of the Constitution there are 'matters which concern E exclusively that area which before the Union constituted what was then known as Tanganyika ...' He went on to say that 'These matters under the scheme of the Constitution fall under the exclusive domain of the Government of the United Republic. The Revolutionary Government of Zanzibar has no jurisdiction over F these matters.' Of course that case was concerned with a different matter - the jurisdiction of the High Court of the United Republic in election petitions - yet, even with that reference to the exclusive domain of the Government of the United Republic over Tanganyika matters, I cannot read a suggestion of the unionization G of those matters. There are various types of constitutions which are classified as federal and ours could carry that appellation in the absence of a standard or ideal type of a federal constitution. It is not uncommon for such constitutions to enumerate the areas reserved to the federated states, leaving the rest to the federal or central government. The founders of our Union could easily have done H that. They could have enumerated the spheres in which the Zanzibar Government would exercise power and leave the rest to the Union Government. In that case the philosophy of changu, changu; chako, chetu (mine is mine; yours is ours) would have made considerable sense, for everything in and I

A for the Mainland would have then been a union matter. But that was carefully avoided. Instead the Constitution enumerates union matters only and expressly declares the rest to be non-union; and this is so, according to art 4(3), 'For the purpose of the more efficient discharge of public affairs . . . and for the effective division of functions in relation to those affairs . . .' I think, with respect, there is B reason to insist on the significance of the division. It occurs to me, that the fact of the non-union matters on the Mainland side being under the Union Government does not derogate from their character. They remain 'matters which concern C exclusively that area which before the Union constituted what was then known as Tanganyika, and is presently referred to under the constitution as Tanzania Mainland.' to quote the Chief Justice again. And since the Constitution also recognises the necessity 'for the effective division of functions' in the discharge of public affairs in the United Republic, the appointment of Zanzibaris to positions of authority in non-union matters in the Mainland could have the effect of blurring that division. D

That said, however, it is difficult to draw the inference of unconstitutionality, which the Court was called upon to draw, in relation to those appointments. The E provisions to which I have referred, notably art 36(2) and art 55(1), do not limit the President in his choice of officers or Ministers or in their disposition. The furthest we can go is to fall back to the words 'subject to the other provisions of this F Constitution' in art 36(2) and this would lead to the division of union and non-union matters in art 4(3). It can then be suggested that to keep the division effective there is an implied invitation to keep Tanganyika matters Tanganyikan. A breach of the Constitution, however, is such a grave and serious affair that it cannot be arrived at by mere inferences, however attractive and I apprehend that this would require proof beyond reasonable doubt. I have therefore not found myself in a position to make the declaration sought and I desist from doing so. G

Finally, each party prayed for costs. I cannot find my way to award any. In the first place the record suggests that this was a legal aid case and I don't quite see how the question of costs arises. Additionally, I think this was a balanced case where both sides won and lost. The parties will therefore bear their respective costs. H

(1) Ismailia Council of Eastern Tanzania v. NHC, Civil Revision No.12 of 1994, HC-DSM (Unreported)

Rweyemamu, for the appellant
[zJDz]Judgment
Mwaikasu, J.:
This is an appeal by Bhupendra P Oza, against the enforcement order of the lower court in RM Misc. Case No 141 of 1993, in execution of an eviction order made by the Regional Housing Tribunal of Dar es Salaam, in Application No 423 of 1988. H
1995 TLR p72
MWAIKASU J
A The application for the execution of the eviction order made by the Regional Housing Tribunal was filed by the Respondent, the National Housing Corporation, and admitted by the lower court on 14 May 1993. Whereupon on 17 May 1993, the lower court made the following order:
B 'Upon the application for execution of decree filed here in by the Decree Holder, Let the Eviction to be is issued as prayed' such application for the execution of the eviction order issued by the Regional C Housing Tribunal does not indicate that a notice of the same had been served upon the Regional Housing Tribunal, as required under s 48(1) of the Rent Restriction Act 1984.
That then is the subject of complaint by the tespondent which has engineered this appeal, it being contended by Mr Novatus Rweyemamu, learned counsel for the D appellant that failure by the respondent to serve notice of such filing of the order of the Regional Housing Tribunal with the lower court for execution rendered the ensuing enforcement order by the lower court, a nullity.
It is the submission by the learned counsel for the appellant that service of the E notice prescribed by s 48 of the Rent Restriction Act is a condition precedent for the enforcement as a decree of the determination or order of a Regional Housing Tribunal. So that failure by the respondent to serve the notice aforesaid on the Tribunal above mentioned, rendered the enforcement of the determination of the Tribunal incompetent, null and void. F
It is further the submission by the learned counsel for the appellant that the requirement of the service of the notice of filing on the Tribunal and the transmission by the Tribunal to the RM's court of the record of proceedings of the G said Tribunal is intended to make the RM's court aware of the contents of the Tribunal's record of proceedings, so that the RM's court may take certain matters in the said record into account before exercising its discretion to enforce the Tribunal's determination order as a decree. Accordingly, on the above grounds it has been prayed that the appeal be allowed setting aside the eviction order served upon the appellant, with costs. H
In reply to such submission, it has been submitted for the respondent that the lower court acted properly when it enforced the order/decree of the Regional Housing Tribunal immediately after the same had been filed with the court, on the ground that under s 48 of the Rent Restriction Act 1984, which gives power to the RM's court to enforce the determination/orders of the Regional Housing Tribunal there is I

MWAIKASU J

nothing about the period after which enforcement should be done. It has further A been contended for the respondent without any supportive document that the respondent, after filing the application for execution did serve notice of such filing to the Regional Housing Tribunal as required by law and that that is the reason why the court proceeded to evict the appellant from the suit promises. This court B has then been referred to the decision of this court in the case of Ismailia Council of Eastern Tanzania v NHC (1) where it was held that the filing of proceedings of the Regional Housing Tribunal is not mandatory and that the court was right in ordering execution without copies of proceedings. It was therefore been prayed that this appeal be dismissed with costs. C

In reply to such submissions for the respondent learned counsel for the appellant has submitted, inter alia, that the decision in the revision case referred to above was distinguishable from the instant case, in that whereas in the instant case, the issue for determination is failure by the respondent to serve notice to the Tribunal D of his filing of the authenticated copy of the Regional Housing Tribunal, with the RM's court, in the revision case cited above the issue was the failure of the Tribunal to transmit its record of its proceedings in respect of the order the subject of enforcement by the RM's court. E

As at the centre of this appeal is the controversy as to the import of the provision under s 48 of the Rent Restriction Act 1984, I propose to reproduce it in extenso for ease of reference. That section provides: F

'48 - (1) A duly authenticated copy of the determination or order of the tribunal may be filed in the court by any party to the proceedings and on such order being served in the tribunal, by any party filing the same, such determination or order may be enforced as a decree of the court. G

(2) In any case in which such determination or order has been filed by a party, the tribunal shall, on being served with notice of the filing of such determination or order transmit to the court its record of the proceedings before it and the same shall be filed by the court along with the certified copy of the determination or order.' (Emphasis supplied). H

In my judgment, it is my considered opinion that while I have no quarrel with the soundness of the decision of this court in the Ismailia's revision case cited above in the light of the facts of that case, in the instant case and in the light of the facts before the lower court and the provision of the law cited above, the contention by the I

A learned counsel for the appellant appears to be sound. I am clearly of the view that the filing of a duly authenticated copy of the determination or order of the Regional Housing Tribunal with the RM's court, and the notification of the same to the Regional Housing Tribunal. by the party so filing such tribunal's determination or order for enforcement by the RM's court, are two conditions precedent, to the B action by the RM's court to enforce such tribunal's determination/order. This put in simple terms before in RM's court may take any action to enforce the determination or order of a Regional Housing Tribunal, the party intending to C enforce the same must, first, file with the court a duly authenticated copy of the determination or order of the tribunal and second, serve the tribunal with notice of such filing of the determination or order of the tribunal in the court. Without the two steps having been accomplished, the RM's court would be incompetent to embark on the enforcement of the determination or order of the Tribunal before it. D

I do however, entirely agree with the respondent, that once the two steps referred to above have been accomplished, the RM's court need not, as was also held in the Ismailia's case cited above, wait for the proceedings of the tribunal before taking necessary measures for the enforcement of the determination or order of the tribunal. E

Now while it is the contention and submission of the learned counsel for the appellant that when the lower court acted upon the respondent's application before it to have the tribunal's determination enforced, no notice of the filing of such application with the court was served upon the tribunal. In its submission, the F respondent corporation has contended that such notice was served upon the tribunal. Apparently no evidence of service of such notice is to be found in the record of the lower court, nor is there anything to substantiate such claim by the respondent certainly as the respondent was the one in the best position to know G how such service was effected, the respondent corporation was duly bound to furnish this court with documentary evidence to substantiate such claim.

This court is therefore inclined to go by the argument for the appellant that the respondent did, in fact, fail to serve the tribunal with notice of the filing by the H respondent of the tribunal's determination with the lower court. Thus, as observed earlier, in the circumstances the lower court was incompetent to enforce the tribunals determination/order that led to the eviction of the appellant from the suit premises.

This court notes, however, that in the proceedings before the Regional Housing Tribunal that led to the eviction order being I made against the appellant, on appeal by the appellant to the Housing Appeals A Tribunal against such decision the appellant lost and there appears no intention to appeal against the decision of the Housing Appeals Tribunal. It follows therefore that the eviction order made by the Regional Housing Tribunal against the appellant still stands. B

The effect therefore of this judgment is to allow the appeal with costs, quashing the enforcement proceedings of the lower court with liberty for the respondent to file afresh with the lower court such determination, order of the tribunal for enforcement in full compliance, with the requirements of s 48 of the Rent C Restriction Act, 1984, that is to say with due notice to the tribunal of such filing by the respondent. U.H. Khalfani, for the first respondent
Mbwezeleni, for the second, third and fourth and fourth respondents
[zJDz]Judgment
E Lubuva, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:
Before the High Court of Zanzibar, the appellant filed a chamber application seeking to move the court to order the first respondent, the Registrar of F Co-operative Societies in Zanzibar, to make available to the appellant the record of the 'Maendeleo Stores' Co-operative Society. The appellant had been a member and the secretary of the said Co-operative Society whose registration number was 55 of 1980. The Chamber application, was supported by an affidavit which was sworn to by the appellant as the applicant. G

In the course of hearing the Chamber application which was filed by Mr Ajar Patel, learned counsel for the appellant, a preliminary objection was raised against the validity of the appellant's affidavit by Mr Mbwezeleni, learned counsel for the H second, third and fourth respondents supported by Mr Uhuru Hemed Khalfani learned State Attorney for the first respondent, the Registrar of Co-operative Societies. Upholding the objection, the learned Chief Justice of Zanzibar held the appellant's affidavit as incompetent since it was without verification and did not reveal the source of the deponent's information and knowledge I of some of the facts stated in the affidavit. Consequently, the Chamber application was dismissed. A Dissatisfied with the order of the dismissal of the Chamber application, the appellant has lodged this appeal. The memorandum of appeal filed by Mr A Patel learned counsel for the appellant contains six grounds of appeal out of which we think one essential point emerges. That is, that the learned Chief Justice erred in B holding that the affidavit attached to the Chamber application was defective in law for not disclosing the source of the deponent's information and for want of verification clause. At the hearing of the appeal, Mr Uhuru Hemed Khalfani learned C State Attorney for the first respondent took a preliminary objection that the appeal was incompetent in that the requirement of Rule 90(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules, 1979 were not complied with. He had served the notice for the objection under Rule 100 of the Court's Rules. It was Mr Khalfani's contention that D though the copies of the memorandum of appeal were filed at the Court's Zanzibar sub-registry on 26 June 1994, the first respondent was served with the memorandum of appeal on 21 November 1994 which was not within the prescribed time under the Court's Rules. He urged the court to dismiss the appeal. However, when it was brought to his attention by Mr Patel, learned counsel, that E the application of Rule 90(1) is subject to Rule 79 being complied with by the respondent to serve the appellant with his (respondent) address after receiving the notice of appeal by the appellant, Mr Khalfani learned State Attorney, withdrew the F preliminary objection. The appeal was thus proceeded with on its merits.

For the appellant, Mr Ajar Patel, learned counsel, submitted that the learned Chief Justice could not be faulted in his holding that the appellant's affidavit was incompetent as it lacked verification and did not disclose the source of the deponent's knowledge and information. However, he strongly criticized the learned G Chief Justice for not exercising the discretion to require the dependent to amend the affidavit so as to disclose the source of information. If we understood Mr Patel H correctly, he was of the view that in the interest of justice the learned Chief Justice should have exercised the discretion vested in him to order for the amendment of the affidavit. Furthermore, it was Mr Patel's submission that as the respondents did not file a counter affidavit to challenge the appellant's affidavit, it was an admission on the part of the respondents of the truthfulness of what was stated in the appellant's affidavit. For this proposition Mr I

LUBUVA JA

A Patel, learned counsel, did not have any specific authority on the point but had vague recollection of this court's decision in some case in the Mwanza Registry.

For the second, third and fourth respondents and on behalf of Mr Khalfani for the first respondent, Mr Mbwezeleni made brief but pertinent submissions. First, Mr B Mbwezeleni contended that as a matter of law, the learned Chief Justice properly rejected the affidavit of the appellant which was incompetent due to lack of verification and the non-specification of the source of information by the deponent. Mr Mbwezeleni referred us to the case of Mtale v January Kapembwa (1). C Secondly, Mr Mbwezeleni submitted that as the affidavit was incompetent, the appellant was not bound to react to it and that that could not be taken as an admission of truth in what was stated in the affidavit of the appellant. He urged the court to dismiss the appeal.

D As rightly pointed out by Mr Mbwezeleni, learned counsel for the appellants, we think the only issue for consideration in this appeal is the validity of the affidavit deponed by the appellant. From the record as well as the submission of both counsel, it is an undisputed fact that the appellant's affidavit which was an essential part of the appellant's application before the learned Chief Justice had E neither the verification clause nor did it specify the source of the information deponed by the appellant. To our minds, the legal position regarding affidavits which are without verification or specification of source of information is crystal clear. From case law, numerous cases have been decided by this court and the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa on this point. F

The principle is that where an affidavit is made on an information, it should not be acted upon by any court unless the sources of the information are specified. This was reiterated by the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in the case of Standard G Goods Incorporation Ltd v Harakhchand Nathu & Co (2). Again, in the case of Bombay Flour Mill v Hunibhai M Patel (3), it was held that as the affidavit did not state the deponent's means of knowledge or his source's of information and belief, the affidavit was defective and incompetent, the application based on the affidavit was dismissed. Likewise, in the case of Mtale v January Kapembwa (1), which H was cited by Mr Mbwezeleni, the High Court of Tanzania correctly in our view, applied the above principle.

Applying this principle to the instant case, we have no hesitation in agreeing with Mr Mbwezeleni, learned counsel for the appellant, that the affidavit in question being defective and in- I competent was properly rejected by the learned Chief Justice of Zanzibar. As A already indicated, affidavits and what matters which affidavits should be confined are governed by law. In that case, even if we were to accept Mr Patel's submission that the respondents' failure to counter the appellant's affidavit amounted to acceptance of the truthfulness of what the appellant had stated in the affidavit, still we are with respect, unable to appreciate how that would validate such clear and B unambiguous legal requirement in an affidavit. Furthermore, as Mr Patel correctly conceded, it being a matter of discretion for the court to require the appellant (applicant) to amend the affidavit so as to specify the sources of information deposed to, we can hardly fault the learned Chief Justice for exercising C the discretion in the way it was done. We cannot by any stretch of imagination say that the exercise of the discretion was done wrongly. On the whole, we are satisfied that in the appellant's affidavit it is nowhere stated, in respect of the D affidavit as a whole or of any paragraph or allegation in it, that the facts deposed to, or any and if so which of them, are true to the deponent's knowledge, or as advised by his advocate, or are true to the best of his information and belief. For that reason, we are with respect, in agreement with Mr Mbwezeleni, learned E counsel for the appellant that the affidavit being defective and incompetent was properly rejected. We are thus of the settled view that the learned Chief Justice was entitled to dismiss the application which was based on the strength of the affidavit.

Accordingly, we dismiss the appeal with costs. F

H The respondents, father and son, had acquired land rights under customary law recognized as deemed rights of occupancy under section 2 of the Land Ordinance (Cap.113) over 20 acres in Mbulu District, Arusha Region, which they had cleared in 1943. They occupied and used the land until they were dispossessed during 'Operation Vijiji' under the Villages and Ujamaa Villages Act, 1975. They successefully sued for the recovery of that land and regained possession of it in 1990 under a Court decree. An appeal against that judgment was still pending in the I

High Court when the Regulation of Land Tenure (Established Villages) Act, 1992, A was passed. The effect of this Act was to extinguish customary rights in land acquired before 'operation Vijiji' in 'an established village', to prohibit the right to compensation for such extinction, to oust the jurisdiction of the courts, terminate relevant court proceedings and prohibit the enforcement of any relevant court decision. Proceedings under the 1992 Act were to be instituted only in local land tribunals. The respondents then petitioned the High Court alleging breaches of B their fundamental rights and obtained a declaration from the High Court that the 1992 Act was invalid for inconsistency with the Constitution in that its provisions violated the petitioners' rights of equality before the law, of freedom from deprivation of property without fair compensation, and of access to the courts to protect their rights. The Court ordered the offending Act to be struck out of the statute book. The Attorney General appealed to the Court of Appeal on the grounds that these holdings were erroneous, that customary land rights were not forms of property protected by the Constitution and that although certain sections of the 1992 Act violated the Constitution the whole Act could not be invalidated on that ground alone.

Held:

(i) Customary or deemed rights in land, though by their nature are nothing but rights to occupy and use the land, are nevertheless real property protected by the provisions of Article 24 of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania and their deprivation of a customary or deemed right of occupancy without fair compensation is prohibited by the Constitution;

(ii) Fair compensation is not confined to unexhausted improvements; where there are no unexhausted improvements but some effort has been put into the land by the occupier, that occupier becomes entitled to protection under Article 24(2) of the Constitution and fair compensation is payable for deprivation of property and land;

(iii) Sections 3 and 4 of the 1992 Act which provide for extinction of customary rights in land but prohibit the payment of compensation with the implicit exception of unexhausted improvements only are violative of Article 24(1) of the Constitution and are null and void;

(iv) The provisions of the 1992 Act relating to extinction of customary rights were not applicable to the respondents because their customary rights in land had been extinguished before the 1992 Act and before the basic human rights under the constitution became enforceable in 1988 by virtue of section 5(2) of the Constitution (Consequential, Transitional and Temporary Provisions) Act, 1984;

(v) Act No 22 of 1992 cannot be construed to be discriminatory within the meaning of Article 13(5) of the Constitution because that Act was passed to deal with a problem peculiar to rural areas;

(vi) The act of extinguishing the relevant customary or deemed rights of occupancy did not amount to acquisition of such rights;

A (vii) Wherever the Constitution establishes or permits the establishment of any other institution or body with executive or legislative or judicial power, such institution or body is meant to function not in lieu of or in derogation of the three central pillars of the state, but only in aid of and subordinate to those pillars;

B (viii) Any purported ouster of jurisdiction of the ordinary courts to deal with any justiciable dispute is unconstitutional;

(ix) A court has inherent power to make a consequantial order striking out an invalid statute from the statute book;

(x) Where the unconstitutional provisions of a statute may be severed leaving the remainder of the statute functioning then the court should uphold the remainder of the statute and invalidate only the offending provisions; C

(xi) With regard to s 5(1) and (2) of the 1992 Act, which prohibits access to the courts or tribunal, terminates proceedings pending in Court or tribunal and prohibits enforcement of decisions of any court or tribunal concerning land disputes falling within the 1992 Act that entire section is unconstitutional and therefore null and void as it encroaches upon the sphere of the judicature contrary to Article 4 of the Constitution and denies an aggrieved party remedy before an impartial tribunal contrary to Article 13(6)(a) of the same Constitution. [zJDz]Judgment

Nyalali, C.J., delivered the following considered judgment of the court:

H This case clearly demonstrates how an understanding of our country's past is crucial to a better understanding of our present, and why it is important while understanding our past, to avoid living in that past. The respondents, namely, Lohay Akonaay and Loseph Lohay are father and son, living in the village of Kambi ya Simba, Mbulumbulu Ward, Mbulu District, in Arusha Region. In January 1987 they successfully instituted a suit in the court of the Resident I

NYALALI CJ
Magistrate for Arusha Region for recovery of a piece of land held under customary A law. An eviction order was subsequently issued for eviction of the judgment debtors and the respondents were given possession of the piece of land in question. There is currently an appeal pending in the High Court at Arusha against the judgment of the trial court. This is Arusha High Court Civil Appeal No 6 of 1991. B While this appeal was pending, a new law, which came into force on 28 December 1992, was enacted by Parliament, declaring the extinction of customary rights in land, prohibiting the payment of compensation for such extinction, ousting the jurisdiction of the courts, terminating proceedings pending in the courts, and prohibiting the enforcement of any court decision or decree concerning matters in respect of which jurisdiction was ousted. The law also C established, inter alia, a tribunal with exclusive jurisdiction to deal with the matters taken out of the jurisdiction of the courts. This new law is the Regulation of Land Tenure (Established Villages) Act, 1992, Act No 22 of 1992, hereinafter called Act No 22 of 1992. D
Aggrieved by this new law, the respondents petitioned against the Attorney-General in the High Court, under arts 30(3) and 26(2) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania, for a declaration to the effect that the new law is unconstitutional and consequently null and void. The High Court, Munuo, J, E granted the petition and order the new law struck off the statute book. The Attorney-General was aggrieved by the judgment and order of the High Court, hence he sought and obtained leave to appeal to this Court. Mr Felix Mrema, the learned Deputy Attorney-General, assisted by Mr Sasi Salula, State Attorney, appeared for the Attorney-General, where Messrs Lobulu and Sang'ka, learned F advocates, appeared for the respondents.
From the proceedings in this court and the court below, it is apparent that there is no dispute between the parties that during the colonial days, the respondents G acquired a piece of land under customary law. Between 1970 and 1977 there was a country-wide operation undertaken in the rural areas by the Government and the ruling party, to move and settle the majority of the scattered rural population into villages on the mainland of Tanzania. One such village was Kambi ya Simba H village, where the respondents reside. During this exercise, commonly referred to as Operation Vijiji, there was wide-spread re-allocation of land between the villagers concerned. Among those affected by the operation were the respondents, who were moved away from the land they had acquired during the colonial days to another piece of land within the same I
NYALALI CJ
A village. The respondents were apparently not satisfied with this reallocation and it was for the purpose of recovering their original piece of land that they instituted the legal action already mentioned. Before the case was concluded in 1989, subsidiary legislation was made by the appropriate Minister under the Land B Development (Specified Areas) Regulations, 1936 read together with the Rural Lands (Planning and Utilization) Act, 1973, Act No 14 of 1973 extinguishing all customary rights in land in 92 villages listed in a schedule. This is the Extinction of Customary Land Right Order, 1987 published as Government Notice No 83 of 13 February 1987. The order vested the land concerned in the respective District C Councils having jurisdiction over the area where the land is situated. The respondents' village is listed as Number 22 in that schedule. All the 92 villages listed under the Order, including the respondents' village, are in areas within Arusha Region.

D The Memorandum of appeal submitted to us for the appellant contains nine grounds of appeal, two of which, that is grounds numbers 8 and 9, were abandoned in the course of hearing the appeal. The remaining seven grounds of appeal read as follows:

E 1. That the Honourable Trial Judge erred in fact and law in holding that a deemed Right of Occupancy as defined in s 2 of the Land Ordinance Cap 113 is 'property' for the purposes of art 24(1) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania 1977 and as such its deprivation is unconstitutional.

F 2. That the Honourable Trial Judge erred in law and fact in holding that s 4 of the Regulation of Land Tenure (Established Villages) Act, 1992, precludes compensation for unexhausted improvements.

3. That the Honourable Trial Judge erred in law and fact in holding that any G statutory provision ousting the jurisdiction of the courts is contrary to the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania.

4. That the Honourable Trial Judge erred in law by holding that the whole of the Regulation of Land Tenure (Established Villages) Act 1992 is unconstitutional. H

5. That the Honourable Trial Judge erred in law and fact in holding that the Regulation of Land Tenure (Established Villages) Act 1992 did acquire the Respondents' land and re-allocated the same to other people and in holding that the Act was discriminatory.

6. That having declared the Regulation of Land Tenure (Estab- I lished Villages) Act 1992 unconstitutional, the Honourable Judge erred in law A in proceeding to strike it down.

7. The Honourable Trial Judge erred in fact by quoting and considering a wrong and non-existing section of the law.

The respondents on their part submitted two notices before the hearing of the B appeal. The first is a Notice of Motion purportedly under Rule 3 of the Tanzania court of Appeal Rules, 1979, and the second, is a Notice of Grounds for affirming the decision in terms of Rule 93 of the same. The Notice of Motion sought to have the court strike out the grounds of appeal numbers 1, 5, 8 and 9. After hearing both C sides, we were satisfied that the procedure adopted by the respondents was contrary to rules 45 and 55 which require such an application to be made before a single judge. We therefore ordered the Notice of Motion to be struck off the record.

As to the Notice of Grounds for affirming the decision of the High Court, it reads as follows: D

1. As the appellant had not pleaded in his reply to the petition facts or points of law showing controversy, the court ought to have held that the petition stands unopposed. E

2. Since the respondents have a court decree in their favour, the Legislature cannot nullify the said decree as it is against public policy and against the Constitution of Tanzania.
3. As the respondents have improved the land, they are by that reason alone entitled to compensation in the manner stipulated in the Constitution and that compensation is payable before their rights in land could be extinguished. F
4. Possession and use of land constitute 'property' capable of protection under the Constitution of Tanzania. Act No 22 of 1992 is therefore unconstitutional to the extent that it seeks to deny compensation for loss of use; it denies right to be heard before extinction of the right.
5. Operation Vijiji gave no person a right to occupy or use somebody else's land, hence no rights could have been acquired as a result of that 'operation'. G
6. The victims of Operation Vijiji are entitled to reparations, The Constitution cannot therefore be interpreted to worsen their plight. H
7. The land is the respondents' only means to sustain life. Their rights therein cannot therefore be extinguished or acquired in the manner the Legislature seeks to do without violating the respondents' constitutional right to life.
For purposes of clarity, we are going to deal with the grounds of appeal one by one, and in the process, take into account the I

A grounds submitted by the respondents for affirming the decision wherever they are relevant to our decision.
Ground number one raises an issue which has far-reaching consequences to the majority of the people of this country, who depend on land for their livelihood. Article 24 of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania recognizes the B right of every person in Tanzania to acquire and own property and to have such property protected. Sub-article (2) of that provision prohibits the forfeiture or expropriation of such property without fair compensation. It is the contention of the Attorney-General, as eloquently articulated before us by Mr Felix Mrema, Deputy C Attorney-General, that a 'right of occupancy' which includes customary rights in land as defined under s 2 of the Land Ordinance, Cap 113 of the Revised Laws of Tanzania Mainland, is not property within the meaning of art 24 of the Constitution and is therefore not protected by the Constitution. The Deputy Attorney-General D cited a number of authorities, including the case of Amodu Tijan v The Secretary Southern Nigeria (1) and the case of Mtoro Bin Mwamba v The Attorney-General (2), the latter arising from our own jurisdiction. The effect of these authorities is E that customary rights in land are by their nature not rights of ownership of land, but rights to use or occupy land, the ownership of which is vested in the community or communal authority. The Deputy Attorney-General also contended to the effect that the express words of the Constitution under art 24 makes the right to property, 'subject to the relevant laws of the land.' F
Mr Lobulu for the respondents has countered Mr Mrema's contention by submitting to the effect that whatever the nature of customary rights in land, such rights have every characteristic of property, as commonly known, and therefore fall within the scope of art 24 of the Constitution. He cited a number of authorities in support of G that position, including the Zimbabwe case of Hewlett v Minister of Finance (3), and the cases of Shah v Attorney-General (2), and the scholarly article by Thomas Allen, Lecturer in Law, University of Newcastle, published in the International and Comparative Law Quarterly, vol 42, July 1993 on H 'Commonwealth Constitutions and the right not to be deprived of property'.

Undoubtedly the learned Trial Judge, appears to have been of the view that customary or deemed rights of occupancy are property within the scope of art 24 of the Constitution when she stated in her judgment: I

NYALALI CJ

'I have already noted earlier on that the petitioners legally possess the suit land under A customary land tenure under s 2 of the Land Ordinance Cap 113. They have not in this application sought any special status, rights or privileges and the court has not conferred any on the petitioners. Like all other law abiding citizens of this country, the petitioners are equally entitled to basic human rights including the right to possess the deemed rights of occupancy they lawfully acquired pursuant to art 24(1) of the Constitution and s 2 of the Land Ordinance, B Cap 113.'

Is the Trial Judge correct? We have considered this momentous issue with the judicial care it deserves. We realize that if the Deputy Attorney-General is correct, C then most of the inhabitants of Tanzania mainland are no better than squatters in their own country. It is a serious proposition. Of course if that is the correct position in law, it is our duty to agree with the Deputy Attorney-General, without fear or favour, after closely examining the relevant law and the principles underlying it. D

In order to ascertain the correct legal position, we have had to look at the historical background of the written law of land tenure on the mainland of Tanzania, since the establishment of British Rule. This exercise has been most helpful in giving us E an understanding of the nature of rights or interests in land on the mainland of Tanzania. This historical background shows that the overriding legal concern of the British authorities, no doubt under the influence of the Mandate of the League of Nations and subsequently of the Trusteeship Council, with regard to land, was F to safeguard, protect, and not to derogate from, the rights in land of the indigenous inhabitants. This is apparent in the Preamble to what was then known as the Land Tenure Ordinance, Cap 113 which came into force on 26 January, 1923. The Preamble reads: G

'Whereas it is expedient that the existing customary rights of the natives of the Tanganyika Territory to use and enjoy the land of the Territory and the natural fruits thereof in sufficient quantity to enable them to provide for the sustenance of themselves their families and their posterity should be assured, protected and preserved; H

And whereas it is expedient that the rights and obligations of the Government in regard to the whole of the lands within the Territory and also the rights and obligations of cultivators or other persons claiming to have an interest in such lands should be defined by law. Be it therefore enacted by the Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Tanganyika Territory as follows....' I

1995 TLR p88

NYALALI CJ

A It is well known that after a series of minor amendments over a period of time, the Land Tenure Ordinance assumed its present title and form as the Land Ordinance, Cap 113. Its basic features remain the same up to now. One of the basic features is that all land is declared to be public land and is vested in the governing authority on trust for the benefit of the indigenous inhabitants of this country. This appears in s 3 and 4 of the Ordinance. B

The underlying principle of assuring, protecting and preserving customary rights in land is also reflected under art 8 of the Trusteeship Agreement, under which the mainland of Tanzania was entrusted by the United Nations to the British Government. Article 8 reads: C

'In framing laws relating to the holding or transfer of land and natural resources, the Administering Authority shall take into consideration native laws and customs, and shall respect the rights and safeguard the interests, both present and future, of the native D population. No native land or natural resources may be transferred except between natives, save with the previous consent of the competent public authority. No real rights over native land or natural resources in favour of non-natives may be created except with the same consent.' E

With this background in mind, can it be said that the customary or deemed rights of occupancy recognized under the Land Ordinance are not property qualifying for protection under art 24 of the Constitution? The Deputy Attorney-General has F submitted to the effect that the customary or deemed rights of occupancy, though in ordinary parlance may be regarded as property, are not constitutional property within the scope of art 24 because they lack the minimum characteristics of property as outlined by Thomas Allen in his article earlier mentioned where he states: G

'The precise content of the bundle of rights varies between legal systems, but nonetheless it is applied throughout the Commonwealth. At a minimum, the bundle has been taken to include the right to exclude others from the thing owned, the right to use or receive income from it, and the right to transfer to others. According to the majority of Commonwealth cases, an individual H has property once he or she has a sufficient quantity of these rights in a thing. What is 'sufficient' appears to vary from case to case, but it is doubtful that a single strand of the bundle would be considered property on its own.'

According to the Deputy Attorney-General customary or deemed I

1995 TLR p89

rights of occupancy lack two of the three essential characteristics of property. A First, the owner of such a right cannot exclude all others since the land is subject to the superior title of the President of the United Republic in whom the land is vested. Second, under s 4 of the Land Ordinance, the occupier of such land cannot transfer title without the consent of the President. B

With due respect to the Deputy Attorney-General, we do not think that his contention on both points is correct. As we have already mentioned, the correct interpretation of s 4 and related sections above mentioned is that the President holds public land on trust for the indigenous inhabitants of that land. From this legal C position, two important things follow. Firstly, as trustee of public land, the President's power is limited in that he cannot deal with public land in a manner in which he wishes or which is detrimental to the beneficiaries of public land. In the words of s 6(1) of the Ordinance, the President may deal with public land only 'where it appears to him to be in the general interests of Tanganyika'. Secondly, as D trustee, the President cannot be the beneficiary of public land. In other words, he is excluded from the beneficial interest.

With regard to the requirement of consent for the validity of title to the occupation and use of public lands, we do not think that the requirement applied to the E beneficiaries of public land, since such an interpretation would lead to the absurdity of transforming the inhabitants of this country, who have been in occupation of land under customary law from time to immemorial, into mass squatters in their own country. Clearly that could not have been the intention of those who enacted the Land Ordinance. It is a well known rule of interpretation that F a law should not be interpreted to lead to an absurdity. We find support from the provisions of art 8 of the Trusteeship agreement which expressly exempted dispositions of land between the indigenous inhabitants from the requirement of prior consent of the governing authority. In our considered opinion, such consent is G required only in cases involving disposition of land by indigenous inhabitants or natives to non-natives in order to safeguard the interests of the former. We are satisfied in our minds that the indigenous population of this country are validly in occupation of land as beneficiaries of such land under customary law and any H disposition of land between them under customary law is valid and requires no prior consent from the president.

We are of course aware of the provisions of the Land Regulations, 1948 and specifically reg 3 which requires every disposition of a Right of Occupancy to be in writing and to be approved by the I

A President. In our considered opinion the Land Regulations apply only to a Right of Occupancy granted under s 6 of the Land Ordinance and have no applicability to customary or deemed rights of occupancy, where consent by a public authority is required only in the case of a transfer by a native to a non-native. A contrary interpretation would result in the absurdity we have mentioned earlier. B

As to the contention by the Deputy Attorney-General to the effect that the right to property under art 24 of the Constitution is derogated from by the provision contained therein which subjects it to 'the relevant laws of the land', we do not C think that, in principle, that expression, which is to be found in other parts of the Constitution, can be interpreted in a manner which subordinates the Constitution to any other law. It is a fundamental principle in any democratic society that the Constitution is supreme to every other law or institution. Bearing this in mind, we D are satisfied that the relevant proviso means that what is stated in the particular part of the Constitution is to be exercised in accordance with relevant law. It hardly needs to be said that such regulatory relevant law must not be inconsistent with the Constitution.

E For all these reasons therefore we have been led to the conclusion that customary or deemed rights in land, though by their nature are nothing but rights to occupy and use the land, are nevertheless real property protected by the provisions of art 24 of the Constitution. It follows therefore that deprivation of a customary or deemed right of occupancy without fair compensation is prohibited by the Constitution. The prohibition of course extends to a granted right of F occupancy. What is fair compensation depends on the circumstances of each case. In some cases a reallocation of land may be fair compensation. Fair F compensation however is not confined to what is known in law as unexhausted improvements. Obviously where there are unexhausted improvements, the G constitution as well as the ordinary land law requires fair compensation to be paid for its deprivation.

H We are also of the firm view that where there are no unexhausted improvements, but some effort has been put into the land by the occupier, that occupier is entitled to protection under art 24(2) and fair compensation is payable for deprivation of property. We are led to this conclusion by the principle, stated by Mwalimu Julius K Nyerere in 1958 and which appears in his book 'Freedom and Unity', published by Oxford University Press, 1966. Nyerere states, inter alia: I

'When I use my energy and talent to clear a piece of ground for my use it is clear that I am A trying to transform this basic gift from God so that it can satisfy a human need. It is true, however, that this land is not mine, but the efforts made by me in clearing that land enable me to lay claim of ownership over the cleared piece of ground. But it is not really the land itself that belongs to me but only the cleared ground which will remain mine as long as I continue to B work on it. By clearing that ground I have actually added to its value and have enabled it to be used to satisfy a human need. Whoever then takes this piece of ground must pay me for adding value to it through clearing it by my own labour.' C

This in our view, deserves to be described as 'the Nyerere Doctrine of Land Value' and we fully accept it as correct in law.

We now turn to the second ground of appeal. This one poses no difficulties. The genesis of this ground of appeal is the finding of the Trial Judge where she states, D

'In the light of the provision of art 24(1) and (2) of the Constitution, s 3 and 4 of Act No 22 of 1992 violate the Constitution by denying the petitioners the right to go on possessing their deemed rights of occupancy and what is worse, denying the petitioners compensation under s 3(4) of Act No 22 of 1992.' E

Like both sides to this case, we are also of the view that the learned Trial Judge erred in holding that the provisions of s 4 of Act No 22 of 1992 denied the petitioners or any other occupier compensation for unexhausted improvements. The clear language of that section precludes compensation purely on the basis of extinction of customary rights in land. The section reads: F

'No compensation shall be payable only on account of loss of any right or interest in or over land which has been extinguished under s 3 of this Act.' G

But as we have already said, the correct constitutional position prohibits not only deprivation of unexhausted improvements without fair compensation, but every deprivation where there is value added to the land. We shall consider the constitutionality of s 4 later in this judgment. H

Ground number 3 attacks the finding of the Trial Judge to the effect that the provisions of Act No 22 of 1992 which oust the jurisdiction of the Courts from dealing with disputes in matters covered by the Act are unconstitutional. The relevant part of the judgment of the High Court reads as follows: I

NYALALI CJ

A 'The effect of ss 5 and 6 of Act No 22 of 1992 is to oust the jurisdiction of the Courts of law in land disputes arising under the controversial Act No 22 of 1992 and exclusively vesting such jurisdiction in land tribunals. Such ousting of the courts jurisdiction by ss 5 and 6 of Act No 22 of 1992 violates arts 30(1), (3), (4) and 108 of the Constitution.' B

The Deputy Attorney-General has submitted to the effect that the Constitution allows, specifically under art 13(6)(a), for the existence of bodies or institutions other than the courts for adjudication of disputes. Such bodies or institutions C include the Land Tribunal vested with exclusive jurisdiction under s 6 of Act No 22 of 1992. We are greatful for the interesting submission made by the Deputy Attorney-General on this point, but with due respect, we are satisfied that he is only partly right. We agree that the Constitution allows the establishment of D quasi-judicial bodies, such as the Land Tribunal. What we do not agree is that the Constitution allows the courts to be ousted of jurisdiction by confering exclusive jurisdiction on such quasi-judicial bodies. It is the basic structure of a democratic constitution that state power is divided and distributed between three state pillars. These are the Executive, vested with executive power; the Legislature vested with E legislative power, and the Judicature vested with judicial powers. This is clearly so stated under art 4 of the Constitution. This basic structure is essential to any democratic constitution and cannot be changed or abridged while retaining the F democratic nature of the constitution. It follows therefore that wherever the constitution establishes or permits the establishment of any other institution or body with executive or legislative or judicial power, such institution or body is meant to function not in lieu of or in derogation of these three central pillars of the state, but only in aid of and subordinate to those pillars. It follows therefore that G since our Constitution is democratic, any purported ouster of jurisdiction of the ordinary courts to deal with any justiciable dispute is unconstitutional. What can properly be done wherever need arises to confer adjudicative jurisdiction on bodies other than the courts, is to provide for finality of adjudication, such as by appeal or review to a superior court, such as the High Court or Court of Appeal. H

Let us skip over ground number 4 which is the concluding ground of the whole appeal. We shall deal with it later. For now, we turn to ground number 5. This ground relates to that part of the judgment of the learned Trial Judge, where she states: I

NYALALI CJ

'It is reverse discrimination to confiscate the petitioners deemed right of occupancy and A reallocate the same to some other needy persons because by doing so the petitioners are deprived of their right to own land upon which they depend for a livelihood which was why they acquired it back in 1943.'

There is merit in this ground of appeal. Act No 22 of 1992 cannot be construed to B be discriminatory within the meaning provided by art 13(5) of the Constitution. Mr Sang'ka's valiant attempt to show that the Act is discriminatory in the sense that it deals only with people in the rural areas and not those in the urban areas was correctly answered by the Deputy Attorney-General that the Act was enacted to C deal with a problem peculiar to rural areas. We also agree with the learned Deputy Attorney-General, that the act of extinguishing the relevant customary or deemed rights of occupancy did not amount to acquisition of such rights. As it was stated in the Zimbabwe case of Hewlett v Minister of Finance (3) cited earlier where an D extract of a judgment of Viscount Dilhome is reproduced stating:

'Their Lordships agree that a person may be deprived of his property by mere negative or restrictive provision but it does not follow that such a provision which leads to deprivation also leads to compulsory acquisition or use.' E

It is apparent that, during Operation Vijiji what happened was that some significant number of people were deprived of their pieces of land which they held under F customary law, and were given in exchange other prices of land in the villages established pursuant to Operation Vijiji. This exercise was undertaken not in accordance with any law but purely as a matter of government policy. It is not apparent why the government chose to act outside the law, when there was legislation which could have allowed the government to act according to law, as it was bound to. We have in mind the Rural Lands (Planning and Utilization) Act, G 1973, Act No 14 of 1973, which empowers the President to declare specified areas to regulate land development and to make regulations to that effect, including regulations extinguishing customary rights in land and providing for H compensation for unexhausted improvements, as was done in the case of Rufiji District under Government Notice Nos 25 of 10 May 1974 and 216 of 30 August 1974. The inexplicable failure to act according to law, predictably led some aggrieved villagers to seek remedies in the courts by claiming recovery of the I

A lands they were dispossessed during the exercise. Not surprisingly most succeeded. To avoid the unraveling of the entire exercise and the imminent danger to law and order, the Land Development (Specified Areas) Regulations, 1986 and the Extinction of Customary Land Rights Order, 1987 were made under Government Notice No 659 of 12 December 1986 and Government Notice No 88 of 13 February 1987 respectively. As we have already mentioned earlier in this B judgment, Government Notice No 88 of 13 February 1987 extinguished customary land rights in certain villages in Arusha Region, including the village of Kambi ya Simba where the respondents come from. We shall consider the legal effect of this Government Notice later in this judgment. C

For the moment we must turn to ground number 6 of the appeal. Although the Deputy Attorney-General was very forceful in submitting to the effect that the learned Trial Judge erred in striking down from the statute book those provisions of D Act No 22 of 1992 which she found to be unconstitutional, he cited no authority and indicated no appropriate practice in countries with jurisdiction similar on what may be described as the authority or force of reason by arguing that the Doctrine E of Separation of Powers dictates that only the Legislature has powers to strike out a statute from the statute book. We would agree with the learned Deputy Attorney-General in so far as valid statutes are concerned. We are unable, on the authority of reason, to agree with him in the case of statutes found by a competent court to be null and void. In such a situation, we are satisfied that such court has F inherent powers to make a consequential order striking out such invalid statute from the statute book. We are aware that in the recent few weeks some legislative measures have been made by Parliament concerning this point. Whatever those measures may be, they do not affect this case which was decided by the High Court a year ago. G

Ground number 7 is next and it poses no difficulty at all. It refers to that part of the High Court's judgment where the learned Trial Judge states:

H 'Furthermore s 3(4) of Act No 22 of 1992 forbids any compensation on account of the loss of any right or interest in or over land which has been extinguished under s 3 of Act No 22 of 1992.'

As both sides agree, the reference to s 3(4) must have been a slip of the pen. There is no such section. The learned Trial Judge must I have been thinking of s 4 and would undoubtedly have corrected the error under A the Slip Rule had her attention been drawn to it.

We must now return to ground number 4. The genesis of this ground is that part of the judgment of the trial court where it states:

'For reasons demonstrated above the court finds that ss 3, 4, 5 and 6 of Act No 22 of 1992 the B Regulation of Land Tenure (Established Villages) Act 1992 violate some provisions of the Constitution thereby contravening art 64(5) of the Constitution. The unconstitutional Act No 22 of 1992 is hereby declared null and void and accordingly struck down ...'.

The learned Deputy Attorney-General contends in effect that the learned Trial C Judge, having found only four sections out of twelve to be unconstitutional ought to have confined herself only to striking down the four offending sections and not the entire statute. There is merit in this ground of appeal. There is persuasive authority D to the effect that where the unconstitutional provisions of a statute may be severed leaving the remainder of the statute functioning, then the court should uphold the remainder of the statute and invalidate only the offending provisions. See the case of Attorney-General of Alberta v Attorney-General of Canada (5). E

In the present case, for the reasons we have given earlier, we are satisfied that ss 3 and 4 which provide for the extinction of customary rights in land but prohibit the payment of compensation with the implicit exception of unexhausted improvements only are violative of art 24(1) of the Constitution and are null and void. Section 4 would be valid if it covered compensation for value added to land F within the scope of the Nyerere Doctrine of Land Value.

But as we have pointed out earlier in this judgment, this finding has no effect in the villages of Arusha Region including Kambi ya Simba, which are listed in the schedule to Government Notice No 88 of 1987. The customary rights in land in G those listed villages were declared extinct before the provisions of the Constitution, which embody the Basic Human Rights became enforceable in 1988 by virtue of the provisions of s 5(2) of the Constitution (Consequential, Transitional and Temporary Provisions) Act, 1984. This means that since the provisions of the H Basic Human Rights section are not retrospective, when the 1992 Act was enacted by Parliament, there were no customary rights in land in any of the listed villages of Arusha Region. This applies also to other areas, such as Rufiji District where, as we have shown, customary rights in land were extinguished by law in the early 1970s. Bearing in mind that the I

A 1992 Act, which can correctly be described as draconian legislation, was prompted by a situation in some villages in Arusha Region, it is puzzling that a decision to make a new law was made where no new law was needed. A little research by the Attorney General's Chambers would have laid bare the indisputable fact that customary rights in land in the villages concerned had been extinguished a year before the Bill of Rights came into force. With due respect to B those concerned, we feel that this was unnecessary panic characteristic of people used to living in our past rather that in our present which is governed by a constitution embodying a bill of rights. Such behavior does not augur well for good governance. C

With regard to s 5(1) and (2), which prohibits access to the courts or tribunal, terminates proceedings pending in court or tribunal and prohibits enforcement of decisions of any court or tribunal concerning land disputes falling within the 1992 Act, we are satisfied, like the learned Trial Judge, that the entire section is D unconstitutional and therefore null and void, as it encroaches upon the sphere of the judicature contrary to art 4 of the Constitution and denies an aggrieved party remedy before an impartial tribunal contrary to art 13(6)(a) of the same Constitution. E

The position concerning s 6 is slightly different. That section reads:

> 'No proceeding may be instituted under this Act, other than in the Tribunal having jurisdiction over the area in which the dispute arises.' F

Clearly this section is unconstitutional only to the extent that it purports to exclude access to the courts. The offending parts may, however, be severed so that the G remainder reads 'Proceedings may be instituted under this Act in Tribunal having jurisdiction over the area in which the dispute arises.' This would leave the door open for an aggrieved party to seek a remedy in the courts, although such courts would not normally entertain a matter for which a special forum has been established, unless the aggrieved party can satisfy the court that no appropriate remedy is available in the special forum. H

The remainder of the provisions of the 1992 Act, including s 7, which can be read without the proviso referring to the invalidated s 3, can function in respect of the matters stated under s 7 of the Act. To that extent, therefore, the learned Trial Judge was wrong in I striking down the entire statute. To that extent we hereby reverse the decision of A the court below. As neither side is a clear winner in this case, the appeal is partly allowed and partly dismissed. We make no order as to costs. B

The High Court of Tanzania at Dodoma convicted the appellants of the offence of murder but sentenced each of them to life imprisonment, instead of the mandatory death sentence, on the ground that the death penalty was unconstitutional. The High Court grounded its conviction on evidence of identification given by two H witnesses and corroborated by another witness. The appellants appealed against conviction attacking the Court's basing the conviction on the evidence of identification which they argued was deficient, suspect and incredible, and not meriting of any corroboration. The respondent cross-appealed against the sentence of life imprisonment and the decision that the death penalty was unconstitutional. I
