There is also another reason for which the decision of the trial court cannot be spared of strictures. Under section 19 (2) of the Rent Restriction Act 1962 Cap. 479 (as amended), no order for ejectment or recovery of possession of premises can be made unless the court is satisfied by the landlord that having regard to all the circumstances of C the case it is reasonable to make such an order. So after the court had found that the tenant was in arrears of rent, it had to proceed further and make a specific finding as to whether it was reasonable to make an order of ejectment. That much the trial court failed to do and so it erred. Perhaps it could be said it is unreasonable to condemn the D tenant unheard and so decline to make an order of ejectment. There are numerous other factors to be considered as to whether it is reasonable to make an order of ejectment.

For the reasons optimised above the proceedings of the trial court have to be revised. I F accordingly set aside the ex-parte judgment and order that the suit proceed to trial in accordance with the law.

Application allowed.

G

[zRPz]IN THE MATTER OF THE DETENTION OF DISHON SUSA YAMO AND JOHN YAMO AND THE REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 119 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mushi J

4 June, 1985
MISCELLANEOUS CRIMINAL CAUSE 7 OF 1985
Flynote
Administrative Law - Application for habeas corpus - Detainees held under a deportation order under which they had previously been detained and subsequently released - H Whether detainees legally held.
-Headnote
Dishon Susa Yamo and John Yamo were arrested and detained in 1984 under a deportation order issued in 1983. Towards the end of 1984 they were released. In I March 1985, they were arrested again. When their arrest and detention were questioned in court the authorities produced a photostat copy A of the 1983 deportation order. The court considered whether the arrest and detention of the two persons in 1985 under the 1983 deportation order was legal.
1985 TLR p120
MUSHI J
Held: (i) The release of the detainees towards the end of 1984 meant that the B deportation order under which they were being held had been rescinded;

(ii) once the deportation order has been rescinded against a deportee, the deportation order dies as against that particular person and it can never apply to him again; C

(iii) the arrest and detention of the two persons in 1985 under the rescinded deportation order was illegal.
Case Information
Order accordingly D
No case referred to.
Tendwa, for the Republic
Judgment
Mushi, J.: This is an application for Habeas corpus under Section E 348(1) of Criminal Procedure Code. The application has been filed by one Patrick Odongo Yamo for and on behalf of his two brothers by the names of Dishon Susa Yamo and John Yamo. The application is supported by affidavit which states as follows:

1. That I am the brother of one Dishon Susa Yamo and John Yamo who are both under F custody and incarcerated at Tarime Prison.

2. That the two referred to in Para 1 hereof were arrested at Kowak Village in Tarime District on 30th March, 1985 and so far no charges have been preferred against them. G

3. That earlier on the two referred to in Para 1 hereof were arrested by the police and were only released after I complained to the State Attorney in Mwanza.

4. That the two referred to in Para 1 hereof are being held illegally by the Police in Tarime. H

5. That I pray that this Application be granted and the relevant authorities be ordered to release the two referred in Para 1 hereof forthwith.

The application was set down for hearing on 24.5.85 and as the complaint was against I the Police and or Prison authorities in their capacities as agents of Government, the application together with the affidavit were served on the A Attorney General through his Chambers in Mwanza. On the hearing date, the Attorney General was represented by Mr. Tendwa, State Attorney from Mwanza Chambers.

1985 TLR p121

MUSHI J

In support of the affidavit, Mr. Patrick Odongo Yamo, the applicant, stated that Dishon B Susa Yamo and John Yamo were arrested at Tarime on 30/3/85 by police and were taken to police custody on allegations that they were in possession of ammunition contrary to law but when their houses were searched nothing illegal was found in their premises. The applicant stated that from the date the two people were arrested no charge has been made against them nor have they been sent before a court of law and it C is not known why these people have been detained or what is going to happen to them. The applicant further said that these same persons were arrested in July 1984 on allegations that they were habitual criminals. The applicant said that after the two people were arrested and noting that no charges were brought against them, he complained to D the Regional Party Chairman and Regional Commissioner of Mara Region as well as to the Attorney General's Chambers in Mwanza. As a result of his complaints, the two brothers were released in December 1984. The applicant said that the same persons were arrested again this year and detained without charges being preferred against E them, he had no alternative except to file this application to request the court to summon the authority who are holding the two persons illegally to produce the persons and to show cause as to why they should not be set at liberty.

Mr. Tendwa had no objection to the application and he was of the view that the F authority holding the two persons be summoned to appear so that it can be determined as to the legality of these persons' detention.

Having read the affidavit and hear the applicant, I was satisfied that summons be issued as requested. As we were not sure as who was actually holding the detainees I directed the summons be issued and in the following manner: G

You: The Regional Prisons Officer Mara
Region and/or The Officer in charge
Prison Tarime District H

AND

The Regional Police Commander Mara Region and/or The Officer Commanding District Tarime District I

1985 TLR p122

ARE HEREBY

Ordered, without fail, to bring before this court on 31/5/85 at 9.00 a.m. the following A persons who are alleged to be unlawfully detained by you. The persons are Dishon Susa Yamo and John Yamo.

You are required to bring with you the original of any warrant or order for the detention, B if any, for the above mentioned persons or show causes why the persons so detained should not be released forthwith.

GIVEN UNDER my hand today the 24th day of May, 1985.

Sgd. N.M. MUSHI C

JUDGE

On 31st May 1985, none of the persons mentioned in the summons appeared as D required. However a prison warden brought to the court two people who were Dishon Susa Yamo and John Yamo. These are the people who were said to be illegally held.

The persons alleged to have been illegally detained having appeared in person they were allowed to narrate what their problems are. Dishon Susa Yamo, stated and I quote: E

D. S. YAMO & J. YAMO & THE REPUBLIC (Mushi, J.)

I am being arrested very often but I do not know what crime I have committed. I want to know F what offence I have committed. At first I was arrested on 11/7/84 but I was released on 16/12/84. When I was arrested they told me that I was a cattle thief but I have never stolen any cattle. I was not charged with any offence. I was released by OCD Tarime. Again on 30/3/85 G police came and arrested me, upto-now I am in remand and I haven't been charged with any offence.

And John Yamo said:

Last year in July on 11th I was arrested. I was remanded till 16/12/84 when we were released. H On 30/3/85 I was arrested again and sent to Tarime Police station where I was released on 5/4/85. I was told to go home but I was required to report back on 9/4/85. I reported as I was told by O.C.D. Tarime. When I reported as I was told, the O.C.D. asked me whether last year I I had been arrested. I told him that I had been arrested and I was released by himself. The O.C.D. told me that my problem was a difficult one and I would be locked up. A The O.C.D. told me to stop "maneno". Since then I have been in remand. I have not been told what offence I have committed.

1985 TLR p123

MUSHI J

Mr. Tendwa - State Attorney who appeared for the Republic informed the Court that on B 27/7/84 a complaint was received in their office from one J.P. Yame working with Ministry of Justice complaining about his two brothers - i.e. Dishon Susa Yamo and John Yamo who were being held by the Police at Tarime and he wanted to know if they had been lawfully detained. As a result of this complaint, on 8/8/1984 a letter was C written to the R.C.O. Mara enquiring about the matter. Mr. Tendwa further stated that their office received a copy of a letter written to O.C.D. Tarime by the R.C.O asking for explanation as to why the applicants were in remand without being charged. Mr. Tendwa stated further that there was no reply from either R.C.O or O.C.D. Tarime. But in December, 1984 the person who wrote the complaint called in their office in D Mwanza and informed them that his two brothers i.e. Dishon Susa Yamo and John Yamo had been released. Again, Mr. Tendwa stated, that on 13/5/1985 another complaint was received in his office to the effect that Dishon Susa Yamo and John Yamo had been arrested on 30/3/85 and that up to the date of the complaint, the two people E had not been charged. This time the complaint was written by one Patrick Odongo Yamo. This is the person who filed the application for summons to issue on behalf of the applicants and he is their brother. After receiving the complaint, a letter was written to R.C.O. Mara enquiring about the position of the applicants. Up to the time of the F hearing of this applications, no reply had been received. However, Mr. Tendwa, stated that the Prison Sergent who brought the applicants handed to him a photostat copy of a deportation order under Cap. 38. The deportation order was from Regional Prisons Officer Mara. The said deportation order is signed by the President and it is dated 24th G September, 1983. And the two applicants are among 280 people listed to be deported from Mara Region to Ruvuma Region. The applicants are listed as Nos. 210 - Susa Yamo and 211 - John Yamo.

Mr. Tendwa continued and stated, and I quote:

I fail to understand as to why the two people were not arrested since September 1983 until H July 1984. It is not known whether their arrest in July 1984 was in connection with the deportation order or another matter. Even if the two applicants were arrested in connection with the order of the President of 24/12/84, again I do not know as to why they were rearrested I in March 1985. I have no idea as to whether there was any other order to arrest them. The persons who are in A sound position to give explanations regarding the arrests and release of these applicants are the Regional Police Commander, Mara, the Regional Prisons Officer Mara, The Regional Crime Officer Mara and the O.C.D. of Tarime District but all of these officers were served but B none of them came. I have no information at all as to why these officers did not come.

The question before me now, is whether on the facts as have been revealed, and to a very large extent undisputed, are the applicants being held illegally or not. It would C appear to me that by sending a photostat copy of the deportation order signed by the President the Regional Prisons Officer, Mara, is telling us that the two applicants are lawfully being held since their names appear among the people to be deported listed in the order.

Under Cap. 38, the President may order a person to be deported to any part of the D country if he is satisfied that such person is conducting himself so as to be dangerous to peace and good order in any part of the country. This is provided under section (2) of Cap. 38 which if I may reproduce here reads: E

2. Where it is shown by evidence on oath, to the satisfaction of the President, that any person is conducting himself so as to be dangerous to peace and good order in any part of Tanganyika, or is endeavouring to excite enmity between the people of the F United Republic and the Government or is intriguing against Government, the President may, if he thinks fit by order under his hand and official seal, order that person to be deported from any part of the Territory to any other part of the Territory. G

And by section 3 there is no appeal against a deportation order made under the Ordinance. And this is not an appeal against the said order. In fact what the applicants are saying is that they are not even aware of the deportation order otherwise they would H not have made this application. The deportation order is dated 24th September 1983. As the learned State Attorney pointed out it is not known as to why it took so long to arrest the applicants if at all the arrests in July, 1984 were in connection with the deportation order. There is no evidence to show that the arrests of July, 1984 were in connection with the deportation order. If it had been so, the applicants should have I been informed that they were being deported and their family members be informed. An order of deportation is not a secret document. The reasons which make the President order a A particular person to be deported from one part of the country to another may be secret but the order of deportation itself is not secret thing.

Assuming that the arrest of July 1984 were in connection with the deportation order in question, then the arrests were lawful and their detention was also lawful under the B deportation order dated 24th September 1983. There is evidence from the applicants themselves to the effect that after being arrested in July 1984 they were released in December 1984 and they were free citizens until 30/3/85 when their liberty was taken away by the Police at Tarime by arresting them and locking them up till today. The C question is whether their arrests in March 1985 and their continued detention is lawful. The answer to this question is clearly No. This is so because if we assume that the applicants were detained under the deportation order, then their release in December must have been under section 8 of Deportation Ordinance. This section reads and I D quote:

> 8. The President may by order under his hand and official seal, vary or rescind any order of deportation made under this Ordinance, or without varying or rescinding the order of E deportation, may grant permission in writing to the person deportated to leave for a temporary purpose the part of Tanganyika to which he has been deported for some other part named in such permission. Such permission may be granted subject to such conditions as to the President may deem proper, and any person who shall fail to F comply with the conditions attached to any permission granted to him as aforesaid, shall be liable to the penalties provided in the next section.

As the section clearly says, after a deportation order has been issued against a particular G person such person can only be released by the order of the President in writing and under the official seal. If the President wishes the deportee to be released, he will rescind the order. Or without rescinding the deportation order, the President may vary the deportation order in any manner that he deems fit or grant permission to the deportee H to leave one part of the country temporarily or otherwise on conditions that may be specified by the president in writing. Since the applicants were released in December 1984, and it had not been shown that their release was other than under Section 8 of Cap. 38 quoted above, and further that it has not been shown that their release was I conditional in any manner, the only logical conclusion is that the deportation order against them was A rescinded. It must be so because there has been no allegation that particular person and it can never apply to him again. In this particular case, the moment the deportees, Dishon Susa Yamo and John Yamo, were released, the deportation order dated 24th September 1983 ceased to apply against them. If the President is again satisfied that the B applicants ought to be deported, a new deportation order has to be issued as if the former one had not been made. Since it has not been shown for what offence the applicants were arrested on 30/3/85 and under what authority they are being detained, their arrests and detention can be nothing other than illegal. No citizen of this country or C any lawful visitor to this country ought to have his freedom or liberty restrained by the Police for any second unless such person has contravened any of the provisions of the law of the state. It is therefore declared that the arrests of Dishon Susa Yamo and John Yamo on 30/3/85 and their continued detention is unlawful and illegal. And as no cause D has been shown as to why they should not be released, it is ordered that Dishon Susa Yamo and John Yamo be released forthwith from the Prison. As both persons are before the Court, it is ordered that this order takes effect as of this moment and the two persons are declared freed and may go about their business unrestrained.

1985 TLR 126
MUSHI J
As for the Prison and Police officers who were summoned to appear and answer the E complaint levelled against them, but have decided to disobey the order to them I say:
The laws which they are enforcing against others are equally enforceable against them. F Order accordingly.
1985 TLR p127
A
[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTION v OPHANT MONYANCHA 1985 TLR 127 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mwalusanya J

June 15, 1985
CRIMINAL APPEAL 10 OF 1985 B
Flynote
Evidence - Admissibility - Admissibility of Statements made to the Police - Admissibility of Statement tendered in court in the absence of their makers - Evidence Act, 1967, s 34B(2) C
-Headnote
The respondent was charged with two offences of corruptly soliciting and receiving a bribe c/s 3 of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1971. The prosecution sought to rely on Police statements made by two witnesses but the two witnesses were not in court. The trial magistrate held that the statements were inadmissible in evidence. In the event the D prosecution failed to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt and the respondent was accordingly acquitted. The Director of Public Prosecutions appealed to the High Court arguing that the trial magistrate erred in rejecting the statements because the conditions for admitting them had been fulfilled according to s.34B(2)(a) of the Evidence Act, 1967. E

Held: The correct interpretation of s.34B(2) of the Evidence Act, 1967, is that in order for a statement to be admissible under that section, all the conditions laid down in all the paragraphs, that is from (a) to (f), of the subsection must be met. As the conditions laid F down in some of the paragraphs were not met in this case, the trial magistrate correctly rejected the admission of the two statements.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed. G

Case referred to:

1. R v Hassan Jumanne, High Court, Dodoma

Criminal Revision 2 of 1983 (unreported)

S. Kidela, for the appellant H

Judgment

Mwalusanya, J.: The D.P.P. is appealing against the acquittal of Police Constable No. C.4458 Ophant s/o Monyancha who was acquitted by the Mwanza District Court for two offences of corruptly soliciting and receiving a bribe c/s 3 I (1) and 3 (a) of the Prevention of Corruption Act ,No. 16 of 1971. It was alleged at the trial that respondent solicited and received Sh.400/= from one Omar Aden as an inducement to him for A releasing the said Omar Aden on police bail. The said Omar Aden had been in police custody in connection with the contravention of the provisions of the Immigration Act.

1985 TLR p128

MWALUSANYA J

The said Omar Aden could not be procured as a witness for the prosecution at the trial B as he had apparently already gone back home to Somalia. The prosecution, in the circumstances, sought to produce as evidence the police statement of Omar Aden under s. 34B (2) of the Evidence Act No. 6 of 1967 as amended by Act No. 19 of 1980. The trial magistrate held that the police statement was inadmissible in evidence, as was C the other similar police statement of one Philip Joseph Tarimo. In the final analysis the learned trial magistrate held that in the absence of the police statement of Omar Aden or his oral evidence, the prosecution could not succeed to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt. So the respondent was accordingly acquitted.

At the hearing of the appeal the State Attorney Mr. Kidela conceded that in the absence D of police statement of Omar Aden or his oral testimony, the prosecution could not succeed to prove its case beyond any reasonable doubt. However he argued that the trial magistrate erred in rejecting the police statements of Omar Aden and Philip Joseph Tarimo under s. 34B (2) (a) of the Evidence Act, as all the conditions for its admission, E were fulfilled by the prosecution. So he concluded by submitting that had the trial magistrate not misdirected himself, a conviction would have been entered.

In my judgment I find that there appears to be a misconception looming large with the F Republic, as regards the correct interpretation of s. 34B (2) of the Evidence Act (as amended). The State Attorney thinks if any of the conditions (a) to (f) of s.34B (2) are fulfilled then the Police statement is admissible in evidence. Pursuant to that reasoning, the second ground of appeal in the Memo of Appeal reads: G

That having made a finding that Omar Aden was out of the country, the trial magistrate should have admitted the same Omar Aden's statement under s.34B(2) (a) for the Evidence Act, 1967.

However the view held by the State Attorney is clearly wrong. In order for a statement H to be admissible under that section, all the conditions laid down under s.34B (2) that is from (a) to (f) must be met. That is the correct interpretation of that section. On delving into the law reports and other materials I note that this legal point is not virgin soil as Lugakingira, J. had occasion to deal with the matter and he holds a similar view. In the I unreported case of Dodoma High Court Crim. Revision No. 2 of 1983

1985 TLR p129

MWALUSANYA J

of R. v Hassan s/o Jumanne, Judge Lugakingira had this to say: A

The provisions of s. 34B (2) are cumulative and all the paragraphs (a) to (f) have to be satisfied. Hence to admit the statement, it must be reasonably impracticable to call the deponent; the statement must have been signed by him; it must contain a declaration of the B person who read it to the effect that it was so read.

So that is the position in law, and not what the State Attorney wanted the court to believe.

Now in the present appeal, the trial magistrate held that the police statement was not C admissible because the condition under s.34B (2) (c) was not fulfilled in that the statement did not contain a declaration on liability for perjury. During the hearing of the appeal the State Attorney Mr. Kidela produced the police statement for this court to peruse. On perusal I was satisfied that no such declaration on liability for perjury was D made. The derelict was crucial as it is the one which at least lends assurance to the fact that the maker would speak the truth to escape prosecution for perjury. Therefore the absence of the declaration was definitely fatal. If we were to hold otherwise, a miscarriage of justice might result. So I hold that the trial magistrate rightly rejected the admission in evidence of the two police statements. E

It would also appear that the condition laid down under s.34B (2) (d) was not fulfilled in that a copy of the police statement was not served on the accused before the hearing of the case. It was only produced in the course of the trial when the prosecutor sought to F tender it in evidence. That was clearly wrong and I think that irregularity was also fatal. And the condition laid down under s.34B (2) (e) stipulates that the accused may object to the admissibility of the police statement within ten days of its service. In this case as soon as the prosecutor applied to court to have the police statements admitted, the accused objected in the following terms: G

The taxi driver (Philip Joseph Tarimo) has not left the country. Omar Aden is not dead. Let the prosecution make efforts to trace him so that he can come and say if I received the money H from him as alleged. The statement of the witness may be false.

The objection to the admission of the two police statements could not have been clearer if the above abstract is anything to go by. And as there was objection, the two statements could not be admitted in evidence. I

From the foregoing I am of the considered view that the trial magistrate correctly rejected the admission of the two police statements. It would have A been a travesty of justice if the two statements were admitted in evidence contrary to the rules of evidence.

1985 TLR p130

Like the learned State Attorney I hold the solid view that without the testimony of the witness Omar Aden or his police statement, the prosecution could not succeed to prove B its case beyond any reasonable doubt. This is because anything attributed to Omar Aden would be hearsay evidence which is inadmissible in evidence and cannot be the basis for a conviction.

In the event I hold that the trial court correctly applied the law in acquitting the respondent. The appeal by the D.P.P. is hereby dismissed.

C Appeal dismissed

1985 TLR p130

D

[zRPz]FIDELIS TINDWA v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 130 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mtwara

Judge Msumi J

April 6, 1985

MISCELLANEOUS CRIMINAL APPLICATION 4 OF 1985 E

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Bail - Bail under the Economic and Organised Crime Control Act 1984 - Application for bail to the High Court not sitting as an Economic Crimes F Court - Economic and Organised Crime Control Act 1984, ss.29(4) and 35(1).

-Headnote

The applicant appeared before the District Court charged with cattle theft, an offence scheduled as an economic crime under the Economic and Organised Crime Control Act, G 1984. He applied to the High Court for bail. The application was made under s. 35(1) of the Act but the High Court was not sitting as an Economic Crimes Court.

Held: (i) Applications for bail under s.35(1) of the Economic and Organised Crime H Control Act, 1984 are entertainable by the High Court only when sitting as an Economic Crimes Court, and after the accused person has been arraigned in that court properly constituted;

(ii) the application in this case ought to have been filed under s.29(4) of the Act; I all the same the error committed here did not cause an embarrassment to the prosecution.

1985 TLR p131

MSUMI J

Case Information

Application allowed. A

No cases referred to.

L. Haule, for the applicant

Judgment

Msumi, J.: Applicant stands charged in the District Court of Songea B with one count of cattle theft contrary to sections 265 and 268(1) and (3) of the Penal Code. This is an economic offence as listed in the First Schedule of the Economic and Organised Crime Control Act No. 13 of 1984. The sanction of the Director of Public C Prosecution for the arraignment of the applicant before this court sitting as an Economic Crimes Court has not yet been obtained. The applicant is thus requesting to be released on bail pending the said sanction of the Director of Public Prosecution. But erroneously the learned defence counsel, Mr. Haule who prosecuted this application on D behalf of the applicant has filed the Chamber Application under section 35(1) of the Economic and Organised Crimes Act. With respect, this is wrong. Application for bail under section 35(1) is only entertainable by this court when sitting as an Economic Crimes Court. And the composition of such court is one High Court Judge plus two lay members. And secondly bail application under section 35(1) is sought after accused has E been arraigned in the economic court. The application ought to have been filed under section 29(4) of the Act. I am of the opinion, however, that this error did not cause any embarrassment to the prosecution. But the learned defence counsel is warned to take note to this exposition of the law for his future guidance. F

It has been deposed in the affidavit that applicant is a man with known place of abode and has some reliable persons who are ready and able to stand surety for him. And the applicant has been in remand custody since December last year. In the prevailing circumstances it is quite likely that it will take longer time before accused is committed G for trial before this court. The learned Senior State Attorney who appeared for the Republic had nothing to say either against or in support of the application. He said he had no communication from the police in Songea hence he is ignorant of the whole case.

From what has been deposed so far, I am certain that accused will appear in court for H his trial if he is released on bail. I am farther of the opinion that it is not for interest of justice that he should continue to be in incarceration. This application is therefore granted. Accused is granted bail on the following conditions. He should execute a bond of Shs. 50,000/= and produce two reliable sureties who will each sign a bond of Shs. I 50,000/=. Accused and his sureties to appear before the Resident

1985 TLR p132

Magistrate in charge Ruvuma for the execution of the bonds. A

Application allowed.

1985 TLR p132
B
[zRPz]MAAGWI KIMITO v GIBENO WEREMA 1985 TLR 132 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Nyalali CJ, Mustafa CJ, Kisanga, JJA

Flynote
C Customary Law - Its status vis-a-vis other law - Section 9 Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance, Cap. 453.
Customary Law - Kuria customary laws - Whether widow, sole heir of her deceased D husband's estate, is liable to pay the debts of her late husband.
Customary Law - Kuria customary law - Liability of a widow, sole heir, to refund bride price received by her deceased husband - Whether such liability extends beyond the assets which she actually received in the estate of her deceased husband. E
-Headnote
The appellant instituted a suit in a Primary Court for refund of thirty six head of cattle which he had paid in respect of his marriage to one Nyamohanga d/o Makongo which marriage was subsequently dissolved. The cattle were received by her brother. By the F time of the suit the brother had died, so that suit was filed against the respondent, widow and sole heir of the deceased estate in accordance with Kuria customary law. The appellant was successful in both the Primary and District Courts though the latter court reduced the number of refundable cattle from 36 to 20. On appeal to the High G Court both decisions of the two lower courts were overturned on the ground that the payment, receiving and refunding of bride price is a clan affair and should not be saddled on a poor widow. On further appeal the Court of Appeal of Tanzania considered the place of customary laws in Tanzania generally and the propriety of the High Court decision. H
Held: (i) The customary laws of this country now have the same status in our courts as any other law subject only to the Constitution and any statutory law that may provide to the contrary;
(ii) since under Kuria customs the respondent was the sole heir to her deceased I husband's property and nobody else, likewise she was
1985 TLR p133
NYALALI CJ
liable to pay the deceased's debts; A
(iii) an heir is liable to pay in full the debts which the deceased was liable to pay;
(iv) it is not only correct in law but proper in principle that the respondent, who is the sole heir of her deceased husband, be liable to refund the bride price which her B husband received in respect of the marriage of his sister to the appellant.
Case Information

Order accordingly.

Case referred to: C

1. Abdallah Kombe v Said s/o Leveri (1962) IX Digest of Appeals from Local Courts, p.11

Judgment

Nyalali, C.J. delivered the following considered judgment of the Court:- This case demonstrates how certain principles and rules of African customary law still operate in D what may be termed as the indigenous and majority African sector of the community in this country to the exclusion of principles and rules derived from English Law. The appellant Maagwi Kimito instituted a suit in the Primary Court at Nyanwigwa in Tarime district for refund of thirty six head of cattle which he had paid in respect of his marriage E to Nyamohanga d/o Makongo. The cattle were received by her brother, that is, one Werema s/o Makongo, who is the late husband of the respondent, namely Gibeno w/o Werema. The marriage between the Appellant and Nyamohanga d/o Werema was dissolved in court sometime in 1978, after the death of the respondent's husband. Under F the relevant customary law, the respondent became her husband's sole heir. So the appellant sued her in her capacity as such sole heir. He was successful in the trial Primary Court. The respondent appealed to the District Court at Tarime which upheld the decision of the Primary Court, though it reduced the number of refundable cattle from thirty six to twenty (20). She further appealed to the High Court at Mwanza which G overturned both decisions of the two courts below and gave judgment for the respondent. The appellant was aggrieved by the decision of the High Court hence this appeal to this court on a point of law certified under section 4(2)(c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979. In certifying the matter for appeal to this Court, Munyera, J. H stated, inter alia:

Under Kuria customs she was the sole heir to her deceased's husband's property and nobody else is allowed to inherit anything. Likewise she was liable to pay the deceased's I debts. But the learned appellate judge decided against this established Kuria custom and ruled that the payment of the deceased's debts was a clan affair. The A applicant was not satisfied and seeks to appeal to C.A.T. I find that there is a question to be considered by the C.A.T. whether the respondent should be absolved from meeting the deceased's debts while she is the sole heir of the deceased's estate. I certify that the intended appeal raises a point of law.... B

1985 TLR p134

NYALALI CJ

In overturning the decisions of the two courts below, the High Court, Mfalila, J. stated:

The most important point is the question of the appellant's liability in her capacity as the wife of C the late Werema. The Primary Court as well as the District Court accepted the advice of the assessors that the appellant was rightly sued for the return of bride price for under Kuria customary law a widow is responsible for her husband's debts if she has taken over his D properties. I also agree for it only makes good sense. But this rule surely must be referring to the debts existing at the time of death. It cannot include unknown future events, i.e. refund of bride price. The payment, receiving, and refunding of bride price is a clan affair. Suppose there was another sister in the late Werema's family and she was to get married, would the E family allow the appellant to collect the bride price simply because she took Werema's properties at his death? or would people like her brother-in-law (D.W.2) Werema's elder brother claim the booly? I cannot imagine the family allowing her to collect the bride price for F any of the daughters. If she has no right to receive the bride price for the daughters, why should she have the duty to refund the bride price of the divorced daughter? Those who would receive the bride price in Werema's place, should be the people to have the duty to refund the bride price in Werema's place. This poor widow should not be saddled with payment of family G debt.

Undoubtedly the Learned Judge expressed very strong views and sentiments on the issue but do these strong views and sentiments reflect the correct legal position on the H matter? Although it is apparent that the Learned Judge appreciated that this matter was governed by the customary law of the Kuria community to which the parties belong, it is not quite clear whether his views and sentiments were derived from or guided by Kuria customary law and practice.

It must be firmly stated at this juncture that customary law, where applicable, has the I same status in the courts of this country as any other law. It is so stated under section 9 of the Judicature and Application of Laws A Ordinance, Chapter 453 of the Revised Laws which needs to be quoted hereunder in extenso:

(1) Customary law shall be applicable to, and courts shall exercise jurisdiction in accordance therewith in matters of a civil nature: B

(a) between members of a community in which rules of customary law relevant to the matter are established and accepted, or between a member of one community and a member of another community if the rules of customary law of both communities make C similar provision for the matter; or

(b) relating to any matter of status of, or succession to, a person who is or was a member of a community in which rules of customary law relevant to the matter are established and accepted; or D

(c) in any other case in which, by reason of the connection of any relevant issue with any customary right or obligation, it is appropriate that when defendant be treated as a E member of the community in which such right or obligation obtains and it is fitting and just that the matter be dealt with in accordance with customary law instead of the law that would otherwise be applicable; F

except in any case where it is apparent, from the nature of any relevant act or transaction, manner of life or business, that the matter is or was to be regulated otherwise than by customary law: G

Provided that:

(i) where, in accordance with paragraph (a), (b) or (c) of this subsection customary law is applicable to any matter, it shall not cease to be applicable on account of any act or H transaction designed to avoid, for an unjust purpose, the applicability of customary law; and

(ii) nothing in this subsection shall preclude any court from applying the rules of Islamic law in matters of marriage,divorce, guardianship, inheritance, waqf and similar I matters in relation to members of a community which follows that law.

1985 TLR p136

NYALALI CJ

(2) It is hereby declared for the avoidance of doubts that: A

(a) a person may become a member of such a community as is referred to in subsection (1), notwithstanding he was hitherto a member of some other community (and whether B or not any customary law is established or accepted in such other community), by his adoption of the way of life of the first-mentioned community as one of themselves, and such adoption or acceptance may have effect either generally or for particular purposes;

(b) a person may cease to be a member of a community by reason of his adoption of the C way of life of some other community (whether or not any customary law is established or accepted in such other community) as one of themselves, but shall not be treated as having ceased to be a member of a community solely by his absence therefrom. D

(3) In any proceedings where the law applicable is customary law, the court shall apply the customary law prevailing within the area of its local jurisdiction, or if there is more than one such law, the law applicable in the area in which the act, transaction or matter E occurred or arose, unless it is satisfied that customary law to be applied is some other law:

Provided that the court shall not apply any rule or practice of customary law which is F abolished, prohibited, punishable, declared unlawful or expressly or impliedly dis-applied or superseded by any Ordinance or Act of Tanzania or Act of the Common-services/Organization.

(3A) Notwithstanding the provisions of this Act the rules of customary law and the rules of G Islamic Law shall not apply in regard to any matter provided for in the Law of Marriage Act, 1971.

(4) For the avoidance of doubts it is hereby declared that the reference to an Ordinance or H Act of Tanzania in subsection (3) shall not include any law or practice (other than any such Ordinance or Act or Act of the Common Services Organization) applied to, or I enforceable in, Tanzania in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of the Indian

1985 TLR p137

NYALALI CJ

Acts (Application) Ordinance, of subsection (1) of section 2 of the Land (Law of Property and A Conveyancing) Ordinance, or of subsection (2) of section 2 or section 7 of this Ordinance, or any English Act declared to be in force by order made under section 10 of the Land (Law of Property and Conveyancing) Ordinance.

When this appeal came before us for the first time, we called for additional evidence to B be taken on various pertinent points involved in the main issue as we were under the impression that the relevant customary law remained uncodified and undeclared. We were at the time unaware of the Customary Law Declaration, 1963 as well as The Local C Customary Law (Declaration (No.4) of 1963 which are contained in Government Notice No. 279 of 1963 and Government Notice No. 436 of 1963 respectively. These customary law declarations or statements were made applicable to members of African Communities in the locality where the parties belong by Government Notice No. 604 of D 1963 and Government Notice No. 130 of 1964.

Obviously the rules dealing with refund of bride price and those dealing with inheritance are the ones that concern us here, since the suit is for recovery or refund of bride price and it was brought against the respondent in her capacity, not as a widow but as the sole E heir of the man to whom the bride price was paid. The relevant rule of the issue is Rule 37B of the First Schedule to the Local Customary Law (Declaration) Order, 1963 which states in Kiswahili:

Mtu anayeweza kudaiwa kurudisha mahari ni yule aliyepokea mahari au mrithi wake. F

Translated into English, it reads "the person liable to be sued for refund of bride price is either the person who received it or his heir". It must be pointed out that this rule is not G superseded by any provision of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 or any other statute.

In the case before us, the respondent Gibeno w/o Warema is the sole heir of her husband who received the bride price in question. She was clearly liable under the rule to be sued as it was done by the appellant. However, an important point arises, and that H is whether her liability to refund the bride price extends beyond the assets which she actually received in the estate of her deceased husband. Under principles and rules derived from English Law an heir's liabilities are limited to the assets of the estate which heor she received from the deceased. I

What is the position under customary law?

1985 TLR p138

NYALALI CJ

The relevant rules are found in the Second Schedule to the Local Customary Law A (Declaration)(No.4) Order, 1963. The relevant rules are reproduced in English translations by R.W. James and G.M. Fimbo in their book titled Customary Land Law of Tanzania, First Edition at page 166. These are rules 11, 12 and 13 and they read: B

11. If the intestate's property is not sufficient to pay the deceased's debts important debts will be paid first and the rest will be paid proportionately.

12. he rest of the debt is satisfied by the heirs from their own property.

13. Claims and debts are inheritable. C

It is clear from these rules, especially rule 12 that an heir is liable to pay in full the debts where the deceased's estate are insufficient to pay all the debts in full. It is clear from the provisions of rules 11, 12 and 13 that a three - stages procedure will be involved in D satisfying the liabilities. Firstly, payment in full is made in respect of important debts. Secondly, if the important debts are fully discharged from the assets, the remainder of the debts are paid out proportionately. Thirdly, in any event, the balance of the debts are paid out in full by the heirs from their own property. This position is undoubtedly E startling to anyone used to the English system. It happened to Spry, J. in the case of Abdallah Kombe v Said s/o Leveri in Local Court Civil Appeal No. 47 of 1962 reported in A Digest of Appeals from Local Court (1962) Vol.IX at page 11. He was dealing with a similar matter among members of the Wapare Community.

He stated: F

The assessors who sat with me expressed the opinion that under Pare customary law, an heir is liable for the debts of his predecessor even though he inherits no property; and that G such debts will pass from one generation to another .... Under the provisions of section 15 of the Local Courts Ordinance (Cap 299) the law to be applied is the customary law prevailing in the area, so far as it is not repugnant to natural justice or morality. The customary laws to which I have referred are certainly not repugnant to morality, indeed, I am much impressed by H the high sense of obligation which they reflect. I think, however that it is repugnant to justice that a person should be saddled with a debt which he has not himself incurred, the incurring of which he may not have approved and from which he had derived no benefit. I think it is I utterly wrong that a child may be born with a burden of debt which he may never be able to discharge. I hold A therefore, that this customary law is one which the Court will not enforce.

1985 TLR p139

NYALALI CJ

At the time of this decision by Spry, J. the Courts had power to disregard any customary law which was considered "repugnant to natural justice or morality". What that meant in B fact was any customary law which was incompatible with the prevailing English sense of justice or morality. Such power of the Court no longer exists by virtue of the provisions of section 9 of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance. The customary laws of this country now have the same status in our courts as any other law, C subject only to the Constitution and any statutory law that may provide to the contrary. As James and Fimbo properly point out on page 173 of their book cited above, our codified customary law now constitutes the indigenous common law of the African communities concerned. D

The principle behind "the high sense of obligation" which much impressed Spry, J. in Abdalla Kombe's case is one which the people of indigenous African culture of this country (and perhaps elsewhere in Africa) have always had towards their predecessors. It is a principle which reflects their need to take care of the interests and reputations of E their predecessors, not only when the latter are disabled by old age and when in other cultures of the world such people are regarded only as a burden fit for old people's homes, but even long after their death. If, according to Spry, J., it is considered "repugnant to justice that a person should be saddled with a debt which he had not himself incurred, the incurring of which he may not have approved and from which he F had derived no benefit", why, one may ask, is it justified for a person to inherit a fortune from his predecessor for which he may have done absolutely nothing towards its acquisition?

What justification is there for the world wide practice by which governments incur national debts which are inherited by the next generation of their citizens? Surely, the G inheritability of debts under African customary law cannot be considered to be a human aberration. However, a person is not compelled to become an heir to a deceased. But once the person accepts to be an heir, the responsibility described above devolves upon that person. H

In the present case therefore, it is not only correct in law but proper in principle that the respondent, who is the sole heir of her deceased husband be liable to refund the bride price which her husband received in respect of the marriage of his sister to the appellant. The trial Primary Court found that thirty six head of cattle were refundable, but the I District Court, on appeal, reduced the number to twenty, after making allowance for the duration of the marriage in accordance with customary rules. We are bound to interfere A with the judgment of the High Court by allowing the appeal and setting it aside and restoring the judgment of the District Court.

1985 TLR p140
NYALALI CJ
B Order accordingly.
1985 TLR p140
C
[zRPz]RAMADHANI KAMBI MKINGA v RAMADHANI SAIDI 1985 TLR 140 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mapigano J

12 February, 1986
CIVIL APPEAL 17 OF 1985
Flynote
Land Law - Right of Occupancy - Land held under a right of occupancy - Land purchased D under dubious circumstances - Purchaser effects unexhausted improvements -Whether purchaser entitled to compensation for such unexhausted improvements.
-Headnote
The appellant is the owner of land held under a right of occupancy. While he was in E prison the respondent bought it for Shs. 4,000/=, did not effect necessary transfer to himself, built a house on the land and made other improvements. After his release from prison the appellant claimed back his land. The trial court decided in his favour but F ordered him to pay the respondent compensation for the unexhausted improvements effected on the land. The appellant appealed against the compensation order.
Held: (i) Where A knowingly or recklessly enters upon B's land in circumstances that G amount to a trespass and B promptly makes protests against his entry, A is not legally entitled to be paid any compensation by B for any of the improvements he might have effected on the land in the course of the trespass;
(ii) the respondent is not entitled to compensation for the unexhausted H improvements because he did not enter upon the appellant's land in good faith.
Case Information
Appeal allowed. I
Cases referred to:
1. Saidi Kirungura v Issa Khamisi [1973] L.R.T. n.28
1985 TLR p141

MAPIGANO J

2. Alli Mangosongo v Crispina Magenje [1977] L.R.T. n.18 A
3. Anna Benedict v Sefu Mrisho and Another [1977] L.R.T. n. 36
4. Hamisi Sinahela v Assan Mbele [1974] L.R.T. n.28

Mr. Rahim, for the appellant B

Judgment

Mapigano, J.: This is an appeal against the order that the learned resident magistrate made at the end of his judgment dated 8/12/83, requiring the appellant to make reasonable compensation to the respondent in respect of certain improvements that the respondent had carried out on the plot of the appellant. The C learned magistrate did not go further and assess and fix the quantum of the said compensation.

It was common ground that the appellant Ramadhani Kambi Mkinga was since July, 1977 the grantee of a right of occupancy in a parcel of land described by the land office as plot No. 475 Block 8, Mwananyamala B Area, Dar es Salaam, and held a certificate D of title bearing No. 135791, valid for a period of 33 years. He had sought and obtained a building permit from the City Council, but his desire to start constructing a dwelling-house on the plot met a drawback. On 10/10/77 he was convicted of an offence by the district court at Kisutu and was consequently sent to jail for a term of eight years. While he was serving the term he got wind of an unsettling rumour that the E respondent Ramadhani Said had entered upon the plot and occupied it. Naturally he was perturbed. According to him, he had not authorised any one to sell the plot. He wrote the land office to protest. As he came to find out on being discharged from prison on 10/2/83, the land office was not at all in the know about the respondent's purchase of F the plot. According to the records of the land office, the right of occupancy over the plot was still vested in the appellant. All that happened when he called at the land office to make enquiries is that he was required to pay the land rent and service charges that had fallen due.

However, the appellant's inspection of the plot had confirmed the rumour that had H filtered into the prison. He observed that the respondent had erected a building on the plot. The appellant instituted these proceedings in the court of Resident Magistrate at Kisutu upon the respondent's refusal to acknowledge that the appellant was still the owner of the suit-plot.

The respondent contested the action, claiming that he had purchased the plot for shs,4,000/= from DW.2 Hadija Sultani, the mother of the appellant. According to him, this Hadija and one Maulidi had approached him and disclosed to him that they were earnestly looking for someone to buy the plot for shs. 4,000/=. According to him, this I Maulidi had custody of the certificate of occupancy. According to him, he became interested in the proposal and on or about 9/1/78 he agreed to buy and bought the plot at the price A proposed. He was then given the certificate of occupancy as well as the building permit, both documents showing that the right in the plot had been granted to Ramadhani Kambi Mkinga. According to him, when he questioned Hadija about these particulars, she replied to say that Ramadhani Kambi Mkinga was her son, that he was in prison and B that he had authorized her to sell the plot. He said he was satisfied with her explanation and started constructing a house on the plot without bothering to check out with the appellant or to have the disposition approved by the land office.

Hadija was called by the respondent. She denied making any offer to the respondent in C respect of the plot. She also denied ever receiving any instruction from the appellant to sell the plot and holding herself out as having been authoritised to do so. Further, she denied having been a party to the purported sale. For reasons that were not recorded Maulidi was not called. D

The learned magistrate considered the evidence and held that the purported sale was invalid and that the appellant is still the holder of the right of occupancy over the plot. That decision was justified by the evidence and in actual fact no cross-appeal has been preferred from it, which is a strong indication that the respondent is satisfied with that E decision.

In effect the learned magistrate found that the appellant had never appointed either Hadija or Maulidi to be his agent to sell the plot and that if any of the two persons professed to contract on behalf of the appellant, she or he was actually practising false F pretences. The magistrate appears to have cleared Hadija and to have attributed blame to Maulidi. For myself, I would go further. I would say that the righteousness or bonafides of the respondent at the time of the transaction is also seriously questionable, considering in particular the fact that the matter of transfer of a right of occupancy in Dar G es Salaam is not a trifling affair. That plausibly explains two singular things: why the appellant made no efforts to ascertain Hadija's authority to act for the appellant and who for years he never bothered to secure the consent of the authorities to the transfer.

The magistrate next found that the respondent had wrongfully entered upon the plot, in H the language of the law, that he had committed a trespass. That finding cannot be faulted and again it is to be noted that no cross-appeal has been lodged by the respondent against it.

Then the magistrate proceeded to deal with the issue of reliefs and went into that matter in the following manner: I

1985 TLR p143

MAPIGANO J

The defendant (respondent) was innocent for what he purchased turned out to be some one's A plot and made improvement on it. Is he entitled to any compensation for these improvements? The defendant had an apparent reason for making the improvements. The plaintiff should not benefit from them without compensation. Therefore it is ordered that the house in this suit plot be demolished and plaintiff compensates the defendant a reasonable B compensation for the improvements done on the plot.

I may pause to remark that it is difficult to follow the logic of this decision. The order of the learned magistrate seems to be self-contradictory. On one hand he ordered that the C house the respondent had constructed on the plot should be pulled down while on the other he required the appellant to pay compensation to the respondent for the benefits of the improvement that the respondent had effected on the land. I put the question: what benefits if the house was to be demolished? D

As pointed out at the outset, the appellant is dissatisfied with this part of the learned magistrate's judgment. Mr Rahim who advocated for the appellant submitted that the learned magistrate erred in awarding the respondent compensation, in view of the magistrate's earlier finding that the respondent was a trespasser. He referred this court E to the decision in Saidi Kaangura v Issa Khamisi, [1973] L.R.T. no.28. I will reflect on this decision, but let me first turn to the two decisions that the learned magistrate supposedly relied on.

The first is Alli Mangosongo v Chrispina Magenje, [1977] L.R.T. n. 18. In that case the appellant was permitted to till a piece of land of the respondent, but he was expressly F told not to grow permanent crops there. In due course the respondent disregarded the instruction and grew permanent crops. The appellant promptly protested, but the respondent reacted by laying claim to the land in question. When the matter came to appeal before the High Court, Kisanga, J. (as he then was) held that a person is entitled G to compensation for improvement effected on the land if at the time of carrying out such improvement he had apparent justification for doing so, for example; he said, where he bought and developed the land in good faith but it later transpires that the seller had in fact no title to such land which he could have passed to him. On the facts of that case H the learned judge took the view that the appellant had grown the permanent crops in bad faith and accordingly held that he was not entitled to any compensation in respect of those crops.

The second authority which the learned magistrate cited is Anna Benedict v Sefu Mrisho and Another, [1977] L.R.T. no. 36. There the right of occupancy in the plot in I dispute had been vested in the appellant.

1985 TLR p144

MAPIGANO J

Subsequently a body of officials incompetently purported to re-allocate the right to the A respondent, upon which the respondent entered upon the land and started constructing a house thereon. The District Court of Morogoro held that the appellant was still the rightful holder of the right and granted him vacant possession of the house the respondent had built, on condition that he first should pay full compensation to the respondent. B Dissatisfied with the compensation order, the appellant took it to appeal, on the ground, inter alia, that since the respondent was a trespasser he was not entitled to any compensation. In the High Court the appeal came before the late Biron, J. who held that C the respondent was not strictly a trespasser as he had been misled into believing that he had lawfully acquired the right of occupancy over the plot. The learned judge was of the view that the case came four square within the principles which were applied by Mnzavas, J. (now elevated to JK) in Hamisi Sinahela v Assan Mbwele, [1974] L.R.T. n, 28: viz that a party should not reap the benefit of the improvement to the land effected D by the opposing party without paying for such benefit and compensating the opposite party for his expenditure in so improving the value of the land. Biron, J. went on to observe that that viewpoint finds bases in both the equitable doctrine of unjust enrichment and the legal principle laid down in section 72 of the Law of Contract E Ordinance. So Anna Benedict v Sefu Mrisho and Another was also a case of good faith.

Saidi Karungura v Issa Khamisi, on which the appellant relies, was dissimilar. There it was not in dispute that the appellant had trespassed upon the land of the respondent and proceeded to erect a house thereon. And what's more, the District Court found that F he had done so with full knowledge that the land was at the material time owned and occupied by the respondent. And what's even more, the court also found that the respondent had promptly protested against the appellant's entry and doings. In these premises the court held that the appellant was not entitled to any compensation for any G unexhausted improvement he might have made on the land. The decision was wholly affirmed by the late Mwakasendo, Ag. J. (as he then was) on appeal. It was a case of bad faith.

As demonstrated, one theme runs through all these cases and it is this: where A H knowingly or recklessly enters upon B's land in circumstances that amount to a trespass, and B promptly (i.e. at the earliest possible opportunity) makes protests against his entry, A is not legally entitled to be paid any compensation by B for any of the improvements he might have effected on the land in this course of the trespass

The instant case is, on balance, such a case. In my opinion this is not a case of the I respondent having entered on the land in good faith. By his own admission, he knew, at the material time, that the person in whom the right of A occupancy over the plot was vested was undergoing imprisonment. If it is true that the mother of the appellant told him that she had been clothed with authority to transact for the appellant, which is in grave doubt and which story the learned magistrate disbelieved, he ought to have been wary and thoughtful enough to check out her story with the B appellant. It would not have been difficult to do so.

In any event there is a circumstance that argued against the award of compensation. The house in question is a wattle and daub structure and it is very much doubtful that it was constructed in accordance with the conditions of the right of occupancy and the building C rules of the City Council. Probability is that if the appellant leaves it to stand he may one day be called upon to pull it down.

In the final result I allow this appeal and set aside the trial magistrate's order awarding compensation to the respondent. The appellant will have his costs in both this court and in the lower court. D

Delivered to the parties.

Appeal allowed.

1985 TLR p145

E

[zRPz]YUSUFU MNTAMBO AND OTHERS v MOEZ ALIDINA 1985 TLR 145 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mapigano J

3 December, 1985
CIVIL APPEAL 9 OF 1985 F
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Requirement that a memorandum of appeal be accompanied by a copy of the order appealed against - What amounts to a copy of the G order appealed against - 0.40 r. 2, 0.39 r. 1 and s.3 of the Civil Procedure Code.
-Headnote
Order 40 rule 2 read together with Order 39 rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code provide H that in order for a memorandum of appeal to be competent it must be accompanied by a copy of the order appealed against. The Court considered what amounts to a copy of the order appealed against.
Held: An order is a separate entity which has to be abstracted from the ruling, supplied I and exhibited.
1985 TLR 146
MAPIGANO J
Case Information
Order accordingly. A
Cases referred to:

1. Kotak v Kooverji [1967] E.A. 348
2. Warsama and Mohamed v Ibrahim [1971] H.C.D. 78

M. Marando, for the appellants B
M. Raithatha, for the respondent.
Judgment
Mapigano, J.: The appellants are dissatisfied with the decision of the principal resident magistrate at Kisutu titled Ruling/order and dated 11/2/85, refusing C their application for temporary injunction, and have come to this court. Mr. Rainthatha representing the respondent has taken a preliminary point namely that the memorandum of appeal is incompetent in that it is not accompanied by a copy of the order appealed from as required by the provision of 0.40 r.2. C.P.C. (as read together D with 0.39 r. 1 C.P.C.) He has urged this court to strike out the appeal and cited the decision in Kotak's case [1967] E.A. 348 which he said is on all fours with the present appeal.
0.39 r.1 is framed in imperative terms. It imposes a mandatory and not a directory requirement that every memorandum of appeal must be accompanied by a copy of the E decree appealed from. 0.40 r.2 assimilates the provision of 0.39 r.1 and read mutatis mutandis it says that in the case of an appeal from an order the memorandum of appeal must be accompanied by a copy of the order appealed against. By section 3 C.P.C. order is the formal expression of the decision of the court. It is now settled by several F judicial pronouncements, too many to mention, that the attachment of a copy of the order appealed from is absolutely essential and that where the appellant has failed to comply with the provision of 0.40 r. 2 the appeal is not properly before the Court and must be dismissed. G

Responding, Mr. Marando counsel for the respondent submitted that the Ruling which is attached to the memorandum of appeal is essentially an order or incorporates the order appealed from and sufficiently meets the requirement of 0.40 r.2. He made reference to the decision of this Court in Warsama & Mohamed v Ibarahim [1971] H.C.D. 78. H

In the case just mentioned the appellant obtained an order from the trial court for vacant possession of their premises. They then duly commenced execution and had the Court Broker extract shs.1,972/= from the occupant, the respondent, who happened to be not the tenant. The respondent objected to the execution and it seems the issues were: I (a) whether the respondent was a statutory tenant; (b) whether the decree passed against the respondent was enforceable against him; and (c) whether the sum of A shs.1,972/= paid to the Court Broker was refundable to the respondent. In its Ruling the trial court answered all these issues in the affirmative. On appeal to the High Court at Arusha against that decision, the respondent argued as a preliminary point, relying on Kotak's case, that the memorandum of appeal having been filled without a separate B copy of the order appealed from, the appeal was incompetent, notwithstanding that a copy of the Ruling was attached.

1985 TLr p147

MAPIGANO J

Kwikima Ag. J. was of the opinion that there was no need to draw a separate order, because, he stated, purporting to distinguish Kotak's case, the learned magistrate had C incorporated the order in his Ruling which stated at the bottom paragraph that "in the whole therefore, I rule that the objector is a statutory tenant of the suit premises and the decree passed against the judgment-debtor is not enforceable against him and that the payment of shs.1,972/= paid to the Court Broker as a result of the attachment levied by him should be refunded to the objector". D

With due respect to the learned acting judge, I fail to see on what material respects that case was distinguishable from Kotak's case. In actual fact it was also the appellant's argument in Kotak's case that the copy of the Ruling contained also a copy of the order and the late Hamlyn, J. implicitly accepted the respondent's contention that an order is a E separate entity which has to be abstracted from the Ruling, supplied and exhibited. I think the provision of 0.40 r. 2 is plain and clear. It contemplates a separate copy of the order appealed from.

I can hardly imagine a comprehensive Ruling that does not contain answers or decisions F on the points raised in an application, and as we know, the summary of those answers are often to be found at or towards the end of the Ruling and are the very stuff by which the order that has to be drawn is constituted. If therefore Mr. Marando's argument is valid then the provision of the rule under consideration will be rendered trifling if not G nugatory. I understand that procedural rules are intended to serve as the handmaidens of justice and not to defeat or frustrate it, and it cannot be denied that the strict application of the rule in question may in certain cases amount to a mere legal formalism. However, I do not feel that I have a mandate to disregard the omission to attach a separate copy of the order to the memorandum of appeal. H

In the event, the preliminary point is sustained and the appeal is dismissed. The respondent will have his costs in this court.

Delivered before the advocates.

I Order accordingly.

1985 TLR p148

A

[zRPz]JOHN SAPULI AND TWO OTHERS v RAJABU A. ATHUMANI MROPE AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL 1985 TLR 148 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mtwara

Judge Bwana, PRM - EJ

24 July, 1986

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL CASE 1 OF 1985 B

Flynote

Election petition - Burden of Proof - Allegation that the victor is not a citizen of Tanzania - Burden of proving citizenship of victor.

Evidence - Burden of Proof - Citizenship challenged - The one challenging has the burden C of proof.

-Headnote

The petitioners, voters, were dissatisfied with the 1985 Parliamentary General Elections results in the Masasi Constituency. They challenged the election of the first respondent on the ground that he was not a citizen of Tanzania. The Court heard evidence on who the parents of the first respondent were and where they were born and also the birth D place of the second respondent.

Held: (i) The burden of proof of the citizenship of the first respondent lies with the petitioners to show that he is not a citizen of the United Republic as he claims; E

(ii) there is no evidence to show that the second respondent was not born in Tanzania.

Case Information

Petition dismissed. F

Case referred to:

1. In re Abdallah Salim Ali Ab-Salaam [1967] H.C.D. no. 1974

Kumwembe, for the Petitioners

Kaduri, for the Second Respondent G

Judgment

Dr. S.J. Bwana, P.R.M. - E.J.: In the 1985 Parliamentary General Elections in the Masasi Constituency, Rajabu Athumani Mrope emerged the victor, beating his opponent, Kate Sylvia Magdalene Kamba, the then incumbent Member of H Parliament.

Following the outcome of this election, three voters in the Constituency namely John Sapuli, Mathew Kannonyele and Stephen Rashid (hereinafter referred to as the Petitioners) filed a petition alleging that (as per paragraph 5(a) of their petition) Rajabu I Athumani Mrope (hereinafter referred to as the First Respondent) is not, and was not at all times material to the election, a citizen of the United Republic of Tanzania in terms of the A Citizenship Ordinance Cap. 452 by reason whereof he is not, and was not at all... qualified to be elected as a Constituency Member of Parliament... as per section 36 of the Elections Act, Number 1 of 1985.

1985 TLR p149

BWANA PRM - EJ

In support of their allegations, they called five witnesses. They therefore asked this Court B to:

(a) declare that the election in Masasi Constituency is void;

(b) declare that the nomination of the First Respondent was invalid;

(c) declare that First Respondent's election as a Member of Parliament for the said C Constituency in October, 1985 elections is void;

(d) Costs of this Petition.

In other words, the only issue in this Petition is whether the First Respondent was at all material times a citizen of Tanzania. D

The three Petitioners namely John Sapuli, Mathew Kannonyele and Stephen Rashid testified before this Court as PW.1, PW.2 and PW.3 respectively. Common elements in their evidence are that:

1. They became suspicious of the citizenship of the First Respondent after reading his E personal particulars - Form 12 - which did not show in which village he was born and where he studied (Exh. P1).

2. During the election campaign in the district, each one of the Petitioners had intended to F question the First Respondent on that issue of where he was born but that each time they were not allowed to do so by the elections' supervisor, one Violet Bushiri. She told them to raise questions which were only in line with the election manifesto. G

3. After the election results were out and having learnt that First Respondent had won, they coincidentally met outside the Returning Officer's Offices at Masasi from where H they decided to follow up the issue. They were told by the same Returning Officer (R.O.), Vicent Awasi (2 RW.1) that he was powerless - the most they could do was to file a petition with the High Court - hence, this case.

Again, it is worth noting at this early stage that both PW.2 and PW.3 attended the I Special Annual District Conference of the Party, in line with the provisions of section 40 (1) of Act No.1 of 1985. However, both of them A claim that they could not raise the question of citizenship of the First Respondent because the procedure was not followed particularly the one that allows delegates to question each aspirant after his or her particulars are read out. PW.2 and 3 show (and it is partly admitted by 2 RW.1) that because the conference started late, delegates B decided not to question any of the aspirants. Masasi Constituency had five aspirants and after the Returning Officer had read the personal particulars of each aspirant, there were shouts from the delegates .... "apite, apite, tumemwona". C

After the personal particulars were read out a secret poll was taken and First Respondent polled fourth. However, the National Executive Committee nominated him as one of the two candidates.

The other five PW's testified or attempted to show that First Respondent was not a citizen of Tanzania because his parents moved into Tanzania from Mozambique across Ruvuma river in 1947. At that time the First Respondent was already born although still D an infant being carried (although Mwenye Ndimila Saidi - PW.6 - shows that at the time the First Respondent was walking on his own, aged about 4 years).

Ali Masisa, PW.4 testified before this Court that he knows the First Respondent from the time his parents crossed from Mozambique and settled first at Mkongo village. He E knew the names of both parents of First Respondent. They crossed into Tanzania during the leadership of Mwenye (Village Elderman) Lenyago under Jumbe Ndimila, alias Abdulhman Saidi. PW.4 showed further in cross-examination that he saw the parents of First Respondent cross into Tanzania but could not tell where First Respondent nor his F parents were born. He states:

It is possible you were (meaning First Respondent) born in Tanzania and then went to Mozambique for a while and then returned. G

The same witness could not tell the First Respondent's parents' clan and could not name other people who crossed into Tanzania from Mozambique in the like manner. When cross-examined further by Mr. Mlewa, learned Counsel for the Second Respondent, PW.4 admitted first to have seen First Respondent's parents after they had crossed into H Tanzania - and were living in a neighbouring village. He said he was told of their coming by the one who ferried them across. He stated further:

It is likely that they went for a visit to Mozambique. I

Hamis Ismail Liuta, PW.5, told this Court that he was just told of the coming of the First Respondent's family. He does not know the tribe nor the Mrope A clan. He does not know any of his (Mrope's) surviving relatives. He never saw the family cross the river. Mwenye Ndimila Saidi, PW.6, claimed to have been the Jumbe of the area incorporating Njisa and Mkongo - an area where the parents of First Responder settled. Their arrival was reported to him by Mwenye Linyago. He never B kept record of people moving into his area, although as a Jumbe, he was duty-bound to do so. PW.6 shows further that he could not tell where and when the First Respondent nor his parents were born. He cannot even recall these parents of First Respondent.

Saidi Hassani Mfaume, PW.7, schooled together with First Respondent at Makanya C Primary School but did not know First Respondent's parents.

Athumani Chingombe PW.8, is the only eye witness who claims to have seen the First Respondent's family cross into Tanzania from Mozambique. He even gave them fish to prepare a meal. PW.8 shows that the family was ferried across the river by one D Abdulkarim Chiwata, now deceased. At that time First Respondent was still an infant. He does not know where and when the First Respondent or his parents were born "however it was in Mozambique" he alleges. He states further:

I can't tell if all people who cross into Tanzania from Mozambique are not Tanzanian Citizens. E

He named one Binti Mpapako alias Binti Ayuba as being the Maternal grand mother of the first Respondent. That name is claimed not to be know to the First Respondent, let alone his witnesses. F

In his defence, supported by four witnesses, the First Respondent (RW.1) supports the correctness of the contents of his Written Statement of Defence. He shows further that he is a citizen by birth having been born at Masuguri - Lipunguru settlement (later, after the villagilisation, to be called Nanderu) in Masasi district. His mother was born at the G same village while his father, the late Athumani Pilika, was born at Sindano - Pataula village in Masasi district. His parents moved to Makanya and later on to Njisa. Eventually in 1974 his mother moved to Mikangaula.

As far as the election irregularities are concerned, contrary to the claims by the PW.5, H R.W.1 shows that all the procedure was complied with and people were given chances to file with the Returning Officer any objections they had. They never did.

R.W. 1 shows that Fatu d/o Mkori his mother, is a Mngoni by tribe. Her mother is Zainabu Matola. R.W.1's father was a Mmakua. Zainabu Matola is still alive, and she I is Mngoni by tribe as well. Binti Mpapaku, a name alleged to be of R.W.1's grandmother, is disputed. He knows nobody by that A name.

1985 TLR p152

BWANA PRM - EJ

Omari Saidi, R.W.2 is said to be an uncle of RW.3. He was already born when Fatu Mkori (RW.3) was born at Lipunguru Masuguri area. In cross-examination RW.2 stated that both parents of Zainabu Matola were Tanzanians. Her mother was Mngoni B from Songea and her father a Myao from Tunduru. He was present when the parents of RW.1 got married at Lipunguru. When RW.1 was born, the Jumbe of their area was Lita Mtira and not Mwenye Ndimila of Njisa (PW.6) because Lipunguru and Njisa belonged to different Jumbes at that time.

Fatu Mkori, R.W.3, is the mother of RW.1 She testified that her mother Zainabu Matola C (and not Binti Mpapaku) came from Songea. RW.1 was born at Lipunguru - Masuguri and went to school at Makanya. Athumani Ilika used to tell her that he came from Sindano - Pataula.

Sadiki Saidi, RW.4 testified that his parents and those of RW.3 lived together at Lipunguru - Masuguri after having shifted from Matogoro in Songea. He, together with D RW.3 grew up together at Lipunguru Masuguri and knew her mother.

Abdulhman Mtamba, RW.5 was a young brother of the late Piliko, the father of RW.1. They shared the mother but are from different fathers. When RW.1 was born at E Lipunguru - Masuguri, Piliku informed them and RW.5 went to see the new born baby.

Vincent Allan Awasi, 2 RW.1, was the Returning Officer. He showed that during the special District Party Conference, the procedure was not properly followed in the sense the delegates themselves decided not to question the aspirants after each one's personal F particulars were read. According to him, he fulfilled his duties as a Returning Officer as provided for by the Law. He never received any complaints before the election or other irregularities especially on the issue of citizenship of First Respondent.

In their submissions, both Mr. Kaduri, Counsel for 2nd Respondent and Mr. G Kumbwembe, Counsel for the Petitioners raised similar allegations against the adverse party. These include inter alia:

1. The credibility of the evidence (and the witnesses themselves) of the adverse party. H

2. Both cited the case of In re Abdallah Salim Ali Ab-Salaam [1967] H.C.D No. 174 to support their cases.

On the part of Mr. Kumwembe - that the burden of proof of the citizenship of First I Respondent lies with him. Mr. Kaduri argued that the minimum requirement is one of the parents to be a citizen. Mr.

Kumwembe raised the issue of laxity on the part of the Party, the Government and their A respective machineries. This laxity, he claims, led to a failure to get proper and correct particulars of aspirants like the First Respondent in the present case.

Before proceeding further, I will deal with the issues raised in the submissions, starting B with the question of laxity on the part of the Party, the Government and their respective machineries. Party machineries which, according to the procedure provided for by the Law, which deal with the electoral process, are the Political Committee of the Party, the Electoral Conference, the National Executive Committee, the Central Committee, and others that C may be assigned special duties. Government organs, according to Mr. Kumwembe, include the State Security Machinery. The argument that there was laxity in all these machineries is not a subject matter at this stage and as the Elections Act shows under section 108: D

S.108 (1) The election of a candidate as a Member of Parliament shall not be questionable save on an election petition (emphasis mine).

But sub-section (2) of Section 108 precludes this Court from going deeper into that E argument. So whether or not there was laxity, this Court has no power to review or entertain such an argument - either by way of petition or otherwise.

Another argument raised in the submissions was on the issue of Citizenship as per Cap. F 512 amplified by the case of In re Abdallah Salim Ali Ab-Salaam [1967] H.C.D No. 174.

In that case, the Hon. P.T. Georges, C.J. (as then he was) stated inter alia:

The burden of proving Citizenship is on the applicant. G

Mr. Kumwembe argues that by virtue of that statement, the Petitioners in this case had a duty of just establishing that First Respondent is not a citizen. The burden of proof (beyond reasonable doubts) would then shift to the First Respondent. H

I differ with Mr. Kumwembe on this line of argument on the following grounds - First, the case of re Abdalla is remarkably different from the present one. In the former the applicant sought to establish his citizenship status. Therefore the duty was on him to do so. In the present case, the

First Respondent's citizenship status is being challenged. It I is therefore left to those challenging it, the Petitioners, to prove their case. Secondly, the fact that First Respondent's particulars were admitted by all the relevant election A organs as being correct, the duty to prove the contrary lies with the one having the contrary views - that is the Petitioners. Therefore the burden of proof of the Citizenship of First Respondent lies with the Petitioners - to show that he is not a citizen of the United Republic as he claims. B

1985 TLR p154

BWANA PRM - EJ

Then there is the issue of credibility of the witnesses. I start with Mr. Kumwembe's arguments against the Respondent's witnesses. It would be proper at this juncture to remark that the learned Counsel for the Petitioners tended to base the credibility of the petitioners' witnesses on the ground that all of them, except one, PW.8, are literate - a C dangerous ground from which to base one's case. Truth or lies can be told by a literate as well as by an illiterate witness. What is basic, in establishing the credibility of a witness is the witnesses' knowledge of facts, intelligence, integrity, veracity, ejusdem generis. Literacy is an added advantage but not a conclusive one. D

One may argue further and include matters such as powers of recollection, memory and perception. Be that as it may, Mr. Kumwembe has requested this Court to disbelieve the Respondent's witnesses on the following grounds: E

RW.5 - was at the time of the birth of First Respondent too young to know the background of the parents of the First Respondent and that he was not closely related to Piliku.

RW.3 - should not be trusted because she cannot read and write and her evidence was not F straight forward especially regarding the number of children she had in such a short time of 14 years. That the number of children was not corroborated. Concerning her birth, only RW.2 was to testify. No attempts had been made to bring her mother Zainabu Matola to testify. The G Counsel also suspected the real names of that witness, hence the true relationship between the two.

RW.4 - is said to be a mere distant neighbour and gave contradictory statements concerning H his origin (Songea) and that of First Respondent's mother.

I had the opportunity of seeing all these witnesses and recording their evidence. On certain aspects I do agree with the learned Counsel that contradicting information was given - for example: On the question of how many children RW.3 had - 4, 5 or 9. I Eventually it was settled to be

1985 TLR p155

BWANA PRM - EJ

9. But I note as well that the confusion may have emerged from the interpretation A between Kingoni and Kiswahili. At one stage she may have understood how many children were alive (the number 5) or how many were born of the late Piliku (the number 4). But I find her to be a credible witness.

Likewise the other Respondent's witnesses, their being illiterate notwithstanding, I did B not dispute their evidence especially on the basic testimony of where First Respondent and his parents were born. Other side issues, such as the educational background of the First Respondent, left much to be desired. But that was not the substantive issue before this Court. C

I now move to the issue of credibility on the part of the Petitioners' witnesses. The claims of Mr. Kaduri, for the Second Respondent, are not, strictly observing, related to the demeanour of the Petitioners witnesses but rather to the strength of their evidence in support of their Petition. This Court would agree with this line but to a certain extent. D Their evidence, of course, comes later for scrutiny when examining their case. However, in the case of recording evidence, the Court made note of PW.3's reluctance to establish in examination in chief as to when he met the other Petitioners so as to file their Petition. It was a crucial question - attempting to establish whether the Petitioners really wanted E to establish the Citizenship of First Respondent or were merely looking for ways to unseat him after the unexpected election results had occurred.
Again, the Court noted PW.6's attitude when being cross-examined by Kaduri, Counsel for the Second Respondent.
Be that as it may, the important point to note on this question of credibility of witnesses F on both sides is that at no stage the Petitioners succeeded in establishing a credibility gap on the fact of Respondent's witnesses on the place and time of birth of the First Respondent and that of his parents. The issues of the educational background of First G Respondents; the real names of RW.2; the number of children RW.3 had or the frontier nature of the Southern tribes, all are immaterial to the present case. Even if they were still they would not affect, to that extent, the crucial issue of the Citizenship of the First Respondent.
I now move to the crucial matter - the First Respondent-is he or was he at all material H times to the election a citizen of the United Republic of Tanzania?
Section 36 of the Election Act, No. 1 of 1985 simply refers the matter to Article 67 of the Constitution. The relevant portions of this Article are 67 (1) and 67 (2) (a). I
While aspiring to become a candidate, First Respondent filled in the following forms:
1985 TLR p156
BWANA PRM - EJ

1. Karatasi ya Uteuzi - Form No. 10 A
2. Tamko la Kisheria - Form No. 11 (Exh.D2)
3. Habari Binafsi - Form No.12 (Exh.P2)

In all these forms, First Respondent stated that he was a Citizen of the United Republic of Tanzania. B
In support of his case, First Respondent called four witnesses to show that he is a Citizen by birth, that both his parents were born in, and are Citizens of, Tanzania.
Fatu Mkori, RW.3, was born at Lipunguru - Masuguri. This is supported by Omari Saidi, RW.2, her uncle. Both testified that Fatu's grant parents originated from Songea C at a place (according to RW.4) called Matogoro. She grew up at Lipunguru - Masuguri, together with Sadiki Saidi, RW.4, whose parents had also originated from the same place, Matogoro in Songea. RW.4 was born earlier at Lipunguru Masuguri, so he knew RW.3 as she grew up at that village. This Lipunguru Masuguri later came to be D called Nanderu village.

The late Athuman Piliku, the father of First Respondent is said to have been born at Sindano Patakula. His only surviving brother, Abdulkarim Mtamba, RW.5, called this place Mwiti - Patakula. The change of name - Sindano or Mwiti - was raised by Mr. E Kumwembe only in his final submissions. He never cross-examined RW.5 on that point.

RW.2 stated further that Zainabu Matola's father was Myao from Tunduru and her mother was Mngoni from Songea. He was present when RW.3 married the father of First Respondent. The wedding took place at Lipunguru Masuguri. F

Both RW.2 and RW.5 testified that when First Respondent was born, they were informed. RW.2 shows First Respondent was born at Lipunguru during the "jumbehood" of one Lita Mtira - a traditional way of recording event, I believe. RW.5, stated that Piliku came to give notice of the birth of First Respondent and he G accompanied him to Lipunguru to see the child. RW.5 notes the place where Piliku and RW.5's other grand parents were born and lived at Patakula and because they are buried there. Patakula is in Tanzania.

In their allegations the Petitioners attempted to prove to the contrary. PWs 1 to 3 had H mere suspicions. The other witnesses would therefore be the relevant ones in their attempt to prove their claims.

As shown earlier in this judgment, Ali Masisa, PW.4, stated that he knew First Respondent after his parents had crossed into Tanzania and lived in a neighbouring village; He lived at Mkonona village. He however admitted that he did not know where I First Respondent was born. "It is likely that they went for a visit to Mozambique for a while and then returned". It is the A view of this Court that this witness does not have clear information as to where First Respondent nor his parents were born.

Likewise Hamisi Ismail Liuta, PW.5 was just told of guests from Mozambique. He never witnessed their coming. In fact when he came to Makanya, "I found his parents B had built a boma at Mkongo before they could build a permanent residence" - he stated. He admitted as not knowing the tribe or clan of First Respondent's father nor does he know where both parents were born. His evidence is also not conclusive in trying to establish the allegations before this Court.

Mwenye Ndimila Saidi, PW.6 a jumbe, admitted just to have been told of the coming of C First Respondent's parents by Menye Linyago. He said he visited them and saw First Respondent walking around, being a child of about 4 years. This piece of evidence contradicts all the others who claim to have seen the First Respondent as an infant, being D carried at the back of her mother. He could not tell where the parents of the First Respondent were born. Indeed this piece of evidence cannot be taken as conclusive proof or even corroborating the first two above. The most it can do is to contradict them. The credibility of this witness has already been discussed above. E Saidi Hassan Mfaume, PW.7, merely went to school with First Respondent therefore his evidence is not relevant to the present issue.

Athumani Chingombe, PW.8, as stated earlier, is the only eye witness who may have seen the parents of First Respondent cross into Tanzania from Mozambique and settling temporarily at Mkongo. He could recall him later only after being introduced by Maalim Twalib Nyama. F
I had serious problems in trying to believe the evidence of this witness, especially after he had admitted in Court to have been "approached" by Stephen Rashid, PW.3, to come and testify on this issue. My doubts are centred on: G

1. He cannot tell or remember other similar immigrants who crossed into Tanzania.
2. He heard the family of First Respondent shout for help from across that part of a wide river.
3. At the same time he admits not to know where First Respondent and his parents were H born. He merely alleges "but it was in Mozambique". No further support is given. Admittedly he adds, "not all people who cross from Mozambique are not Tanzanian Citizens: It is therefore not sufficient proof to disqualify the citizenship of a person by relying on such general allegations. I

1985 TLR p158

In view of the above PWs' evidence, it is not established beyond doubts as to where the A First Respondent and his parents were born. It is not enough merely to allege that they came from Mozambique. It should have been shown where in Mozambique. What is clearly shown all PWs 4 and 8 is that they do not know where First Respondent and his parents were born. B
On the other hand, I am convinced beyond doubts that the Respondent's witnesses have established beyond the blue skies (even though the burden is not on their side) that First Respondent is and was born in Tanzania. So were his parents. Therefore he is a citizen of Tanzania by birth. In consequence thereof and in accordance with the provisions of C section 113 of the Election Act No. 1 of 1985, I do declare that the election in Masasi Constituency in the Parliamentary Elections of October, 1985 was proper. I declare further that the nomination, election and declaration of First Respondent, Rajabu Athumani Mrope, was legally valid. Therefore I dismiss this Petition in its entirety with Costs. D
Petition dismissed.

1985 TLR p158

E

[zRPz]SAMSON KAYORA AND LEONARD MSIMBA v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 158 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tabora
Judge Maina J

April 23, 1986
CRIMINAL APPEALS 101 & 108 OF 1985 F
Flynote
Criminal Law - Exporting restricted goods - Definition of "export" - Section 2 East African Customs and Transfer Tax Management Act (44 of 1967).

Criminal Law - Exporting restricted goods - Whether restricted goods may include goods G not specifically declared to be restricted.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Pleas - Plea of guilty to an offence not properly disclosed in the charge and by the facts - Whether unequivocal.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Charge and statement of facts not disclosing H the offence alleged - Whether proper.
-Headnote
The first appellant was convicted on his own plea of guilty to a charge of exporting restricted goods to Burundi c/ss 146(c) and 155(a) of the East African Customs and Transfer Tax Management Act, 44 of 1967. He was sentenced I to a fine of Shs.3000/= and the goods and the vehicle, which belonged to the second appellant and in which the goods were being carried, A were ordered to be forfeited. The particulars of the charge alleged that the first appellant was found in Kasulu District exporting maize flour, beans and maize, all of them in modest quantities, to Burundi. To that charge the appellant replied: "It is true I exported B the crops to Burundi from Tanzania without a permit." No law was cited under which the said goods were declared to be restricted goods.
1985 TLR p159
MAINA J
Held: (i) "Export" means to take or cause to be taken out of the country. Since the first appellant was found and arrested with the goods in Tanzania, he cannot be said to have C exported the goods to Burundi from Tanzania;

(ii) it is necessary for the prosecution to establish that the goods in question are lawfully declared "restricted goods." As the charge and the facts did not disclose this, the conviction cannot be upheld;

(iii) although the appellant purported to plead guilty to the offence of exporting D goods to Burundi, the charge and the facts as given by the prosecution were not consistent with that plea.

Case Information
Appeal allowed.
No cases referred to. E
Kwikima, for the appellants
Mussa and Nyabiri, for the respondent.
Judgment
Maina, J.: These two appeals are consolidated. The first appellant F Samson Kayora was charged with, and convicted of, exporting restricted goods contrary to section 146(c) and 155(a) of the East African Customs Management Act. He was sentenced to a fine of Shs.3,000/= or twelve months imprisonment in default. The vehicle in which the goods were being carried was forfeited to the Government. G The second appellant, Leonard Msimba, is the registered owner of the motor vehicle, and he is appealing against the order of forfeiture.

The first appellant was jointly charged with twenty-six others. He was the fourteenth accused in the charge sheet. The particulars of the charge allege, inter alia, that the H appellant was found at Migongo village, Kasulu district, exporting to Burundi restricted goods, to wit, three tins of maize flour, two tins of beans and one quarter of a tin of maize. When the charge was read over to the appellant he is recorded as saying "It is true I exported the crops to Burundi from Tanzania without a permit." The prosecutor I then outlined the facts. In so far as the first appellant is concerned, the facts allege that at the time of his arrest the appellant "used his motor vehicle Reg. No. UJ 945 to export the crops". The appellant is A recorded as admitting the facts as correct. He was accordingly convicted on his own plea of guilty and sentenced as above. The orders of forfeiture of the goods and the motor vehicle were then made.

Mr. Kwikima, learned counsel for the appellants, submitted first of all, that the plea by the first appellant was equivocal. He said that the first appellant could not have pleaded B guilty to the offence in all its ingredients. Learned Counsel further said that the goods found with the first appellant were of small quantities and some are perishable so that they were not for export. Mr Kwikima added that there was no Government Notice brought to the attention of the Court to show that those goods were restricted goods. C Finally, he said that the first appellant was found in Migongo village in Kasulu district within Tanzania and so he could not have said that he exported the goods. Mr. Mussa learned State Attorney conceded and said that the Republic did not support the conviction.

I think there is force in what Mr. Kwikima has said. The first appellant could not have D told the court that he exported the goods to Burundi while the particulars of the offence and the facts given by the prosecutor clearly show that the first appellant was arrested in Migongo village within Kasulu district in Tanzania, with those goods. The plea is inconsistent with the facts. Since the first appellant, like the other accused who were E jointly charged with him, was arrested in Tanzania with those goods, I do not see how he could be said to have exported the goods "to Burundi from Tanzania". He could not possibly have said that he exported them to Burundi.

Section 2 of the E.A. Customs and Transfer Tax Management Act gives the following F definition of the term "export":

> export with its grammatical variations and cognate expressions means to take or cause to be taken out of the Partner States. G

For the purpose of the Act, it is provided in section 2(2)(c) that "in the case of goods exported overland, the time of exportation shall be deemed to be the time at which such goods pass across the boundaries of the Partner States". When the first appellant was arrested on 13.10.1985 at 5.00 a.m., he had not taken those goods out of the country. H In the circumstances, the first appellant's conviction cannot stand.

I may also add for the benefit of the learned trial magistrate that since the charge and the facts did not disclose under which legislation, principal or subsidiary, those goods were declared to be "restricted goods" for the purpose of the Act, the first appellant's conviction cannot be I sustained. It was necessary for the prosecution to establish that the goods were A declared restricted goods.

As regards the second appellant, I agree with Mr. Kwikima that the forfeiture of the motor vehicle cannot stand. Since the first appellant's conviction cannot be sustained, it follows that the sentence and order of forfeiture must be set aside. It is noted that the B order of forfeiture was made even without giving an opportunity to the owner of the motor vehicle to oppose the order. However, since the conviction is not sustained, I do not wish to consider that aspect of the case.
These appeals are allowed. The conviction of the first appellant is quashed and the C sentence and order of forfeiture are set aside. If the first appellant has paid the fine, it should be refunded to him in full.
For the avoidance of doubt, the second appellant's motor vehicle Reg. No. UJ945 should be returned to him.
In exercise of revisional jurisdiction, I quash the convictions of the twenty-six accused D persons who were jointly charged with the first appellant, as the pleas and facts were similar. The sentences and order of forfeiture of their properties are set aside. The fines, if paid, should be refunded to them in full.
E Appeal allowed.
1985 TLR p161
F
[zRPz]M/S KANYARWE BUILDING CONTRACTOR v THE ATTORNEY GENERAL AND ANOTHER 1985 TLR 161 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mwalusanya J

31 July 1986
CIVIL CASE 18 OF 1985 G
Flynote
Contract - Frustration - When doctrine of frustration may be invoked.
Contract - Repudiation - Circumstances under which a partymay be said to have repudiated a contract.
Contract - Damages - Remoteness - Installation of water tank where water was scarce to H facilitate performance of the contract - Contract terminated - Whether damages in respect of construction of the water tank recoverable.
-Headnote
The plaintiff sued the first defendant and the Regional Engineer of Works, Kagera I Region (2nd Defendant) for damages for breach of contract.

The plaintiffs were awarded two contracts. The first was to build T.P.D.F. staff A residential quarters at Biharamulo and the second to construct a T.P.D.F. office block and repairing some 19 residential quarters at Rwamishenye.

In April 1983 one of the directors of the plaintiff was detained as an economic saboteur and some building materials and two tipper lorries of the plaintiff were confiscated. In B addition the plaintiff's bank account was stopped. The plaintiffs informed the second defendant by a letter about these developments whereupon the latter ordered the former to stop continuing with the projects on the grounds of either frustration or repudiation of the contract by the plaintiffs. By the time they were stopped the plaintiffs had performed C a substantial part of the contract for part of which they were not paid.

It was argued in favour of the defendants that the letter of the plaintiff to them showed that the plaintiff had repudiated the contract or that the contract was frustrated because of the developments that took place. D

Held: (i) The doctrine of frustration may be invoked where events occur that make the performance of the contract impossible and these frustrating events are not the fault of either party; E

(ii) the facts that one of the directors of the plaintiff company was detained, the company's bank account was stopped from operation and some company's building materials had been confiscated could not ground the invocation of the doctrine of frustration because these developments did not make it impossible for the plaintiff company to continue with the contracts; F

(iii) the plaintiff company did not repudiate the contracts because they did not either expressly or impliedly intimate that they would not honour their side of the bargain;

(iv) the building of a water tank, because of the scarcity of water at Biharamulo G was a matter which the defendant knew or as a reasonable man ought to have known as likely to happen and therefore damages claimed were not remote.

Case Information

Judgment for the plaintiff H

Cases referred to:

1. Twentsche Overseas Trading Co. Ltd. v Uganda Sugar Factory, Ltd. [1945] 12 E.A.C.A. 1 (P.C.)
2. Alibhai Gulam v Mohamed Yusuf [1946] 13 E.A.C.A. 25 (k)
3. Fibrosa v Fairbairns Lauson Combe Barbous Ltd. [1943] A.C. 32. I

1985 TLR p163

MWALUSANYA J

4. Howard & Co. (Africa) Ltd. v Burton [1964] E.A. 540 (C.A.) A
5. Isakiroglou & Co. Ltd. v Noblee Thorl [1962] A.C. 93.
6. Maclaine Watson & Co. Ltd. v Kanji Meghji Shah [1956] 23 E.A.C.A. 366.
7. Rashid Moledina & Co. (Mombasa) Ltd. v Hoima Ginners Ltd. [1967] E.A. 645 (C.A.) B
8. Hadley v Baxendale [1854]9 Exch. 341

9. Woodruff v Dupont [1964] E.A. 404

10. Suisse Atlantique Societe d'Armament Maritime S.A. v N.V. Rotterdamsche Kolen Contrale [1966] 2 W.L.R. 944.

Kahangwa, for the plaintiff. C

Swai, State attorney, for the respondents.

Judgment

Mwalusanya, J: The plaintiff M/S Kanyarwe Building Contractors Ltd. D is suing the two defendants namely the Attorney General (1st Defendant) and the Regional Engineer of Works, Kagera Region (2nd Defendant) for damages for breach of contract. He is claiming a total sum of shs. 3,250,111/= as damages. Both defendants have denied that they were in breach of the contract in question and prayed that the suit be dismissed with costs. E

In view of the pleadings, the first issue that was framed was as to whether the contract was lawfully terminated by the defendants in August 1983. In other words were the defendants entitled in law to read the plaintiff's behaviour as anticipatory breach as to F release them from further obligations? And that leads me to briefly summarise the evidence on the matter. It is common ground that the plaintiff company entered into contracts with the 2nd defendant on 20/1/1983. The first contract for a sum of shs. 9,193,100/= was for the plaintiff company to build T.P.D.F. staff residential quarters, consisting of four big blocks and four small units at Biharamulo. And the second G contract for Shs. 1,426,100/= was for the plaintiff company to construct a T.P.D.F. office block and repairing some 19 residential quarters at Rwamishenye in Bukoba District. According to the terms of the two contracts Exh. A1 and Exh. A2, both projects were to be completed within 20 months effective from 20/1/1983; which means H they were to be completed by 20/8/1984. The plaintiff did not complete the contracts as it was terminated by 2nd defendant in August 1983 on the ground that plaintiff had repudiated the contracts or that the contracts were at an end due to the doctrine of frustration.

The circumstances which led the 2nd defendant to terminate the two contracts were as I follows. The plaintiff company proceeded with its part of the contract until 9/4/1983 when one of the directors of the plaintiff company Mr. Haji Yusuf Amir (P.W.1) was detained as an economic saboteur under A the Economic Sabotage (Special Provisions) Acts No. 9 and 10 of 1983. By then a great part of the contracts had been executed. This is evidenced by the uncontroverted evidence to the effect that by 5/4/1983 at Rwamishenye Project some 50% of the work had been done and the plaintiff was duly paid by the 2nd defendant for that work; and B for the Biharamulo Project by 19/2/1983 some 6% of the work had been executed and the plaintiff company was duly paid Shs.587,846/40 for that work done. According to the testimony of PW.1 when he started to execute the contract on 20/1/83 he had bought a lot of building materials for the two projects and these included cement, bricks, C stones, timbers and nails etc. He also said that the plaintiff company had two tipper lorries for the projects. Not that after the detention of PW.1 work on the projects was at a stand still, because the other director of the plaintiff company Mr.

Haji Alli Kakurwa continued with the work. In any case at both projects the actual construction of the D buildings was assigned to sub-contractors. At Biharamulo there was a sub-contractor named Alfred s/o Isack (PW.2) who continued with the job until he was stopped in August 1983 by the 2nd defendant. And at Rwamishenye the sub-contractor was one Wilfred s/o Kazimoto (PW.4) who testified that he continued the construction with his labourers until he was stopped in August 1983. And according to the storekeeper of the E plaintiff company Mr. Lobenti s/o Mshahili (PW.3) he was in August 1983 chased away from both building sites without being allowed to take away the building materials of his employer.

The 2nd defendant does not dispute the fact that it was he who had ordered the F plaintiff's sub-contractors to stop work in August 1983. He said that he was justified to do so as the plaintiff had repudiated the contract or else the contract was at an end due to frustration as disclosed in the plaintiff's letter dated 20/8/1983 which was accepted as Exh. B at the trial. The letter is written in Kiswahili and when freely translated into G English it reads:

That I would like to inform you that Mr. Haji Yusuf Amir one of our directors of our company has been arrested and detained as an economic saboteur under the Economic Sabotage (Special H Provisions) Act of 1983. Among the property of our company that has been taken by the government on suspicion that it belongs to the detained director are: Corrugated iron sheets, cement, nails, paints and several other minor building materials. Besides being deprived of those essential items for our two building projects, the bank account of our company has I been stopped from operation by the government such that we can't withdrawal our Shs.507,111/45 lying in the bank so that A we use it in our projects. Moreover it should be noted that costs keep on rising considerably whenever any delay is made in executing the contracts. And mind you the company has to pay the sub-contractors and its employees who carry on the work at the two B projects. This company is willing and capable if the government will open the company's Bank Account; and if the company is given back its building materials confiscated and for which we are ready to produce cash sale receipts to establish that it is company property and not personal property of the detained director. As we do not know when the detained company C director will have his case disposed of, we fear that there might be a delay in finishing our part of the contract. So we pray that our company's bank account be immediately opened and the company's building materials as well as vehicles used in the construction business be released please. D

The letter was written to the Regional Tender Board which had awarded the two contracts to the plaintiff company and was inter alia copied to the 2nd defendant. And according to the 2nd defendant Peter s/o Kajuna, in July 1983 he once visited both E building sites and found that work had stopped or as he said no work was in progress at the sites. So he testified that when he received the letter quoted above and his own observations at the site in July 1983, he came to the conclusion that the plaintiff company had repudiated the contract or else the contract was at an end due to the doctrine of F frustration. So he advertised another tender for a new building contractor.

Let me first deal with the issue as to whether on the facts of this case there was a 'frustration of the contract'. It was argued by the defendants that because one of the directors of the plaintiff had been detained and the company's building materials had G been confiscated, then the contract was at an end due to the doctrine of frustration. The doctrine of frustration states that where events occur that make the performance of the contract impossible and these frustrating events are not the fault of either party then the contract is brought to an end with neither party at fault. That doctrine is contained in s. H 56 (2) of the Tanganyika Contract Act, Cap, 433 which states:

A contract to do an act which after the contract is made becomes impossible, becomes void when the act becomes impossible. I

1985 TLR p166

MWALUSANYA J

At the outset let me point out that our courts do not readily invoke the doctrine of A frustration unless it is shown that the contract as originally conceived, bears little or no resemblance to the new state of things. It is not sufficient merely to show that conditions have changed so that one party is in a more onerous position, financially or personally. It should be shown that it is now impossible to perform the contract not merely more B difficult or expensive. In Twentsche Overseas Co. Ltd v Uganda Sugar Factory Ltd. (1945) 12 E.A.C.A. -1 (P.C.) Lord Wright of the Privy Council had expressed the matter in much more eloquent terms when he said: C

It (frustration) is a sort of shorthand: it means that a contract has ceased to bind the parties because the common basis on which by mutual understanding it was based has failed. It would be more accurate to say, not that the contract has been frustrated, but that there has been a failure of what in the contemplation of both parties would be the essential condition or D purpose of the performance.

Then in Alibhai Gulam v Mohamed Yusuf (1946) 13 E.A.C.A. 25 (K) Sir Joseph Sheridan C.J. cited with approval the passage of Viscount Simon L.C. in Febrosa v Fairbairns Lauson Combe Barbour Ltd. [1943] A.C. at p. 40 where in referring to E frustration he said:

The principle is that where supervening events, not due to the default of either party, render the performance of a contract indefinitely impossible and there is no undertaking to be bound in F any event, frustration ensues.

I have underlined the phrase 'indefinitely impossible' for emphasis. Then we have Sir Samuel Quashie - Idun P. who expressed the doctrine in much more telling terms in the case of Howard & Co. (Africa) Ltd. v Burton [1964] E.A. 540 (C.A.) (K.) where G after citing with approval the decision of the House of Lords in Isakiroglou & Co. Ltd. v Noblee Thorl [1962] A.C. 93 he stated that:

The fact that it has become more onerous or more expensive for one party than he thought is H not sufficient to bring about a frustration. It must be more than merely more onerous or more expensive. It must be positively unjust to hold the parties bound. It is often difficult to draw the line. But it must be done. And it is for the courts to do it as matter of law. I

1985 TLR p167

MWALUSANYA J

With those few examples articulating what circumstances amount to frustration, I think A now it is crystal clear that the doctrine was wrongly invoked by the 2nd defendant. With the factors that plaintiff company had disclosed in his letter the execution of the contract would have been more onerous but not impossible. A much more close example is the B Kenyan case of Maclaine Watson & Co. Ltd. v Kanji Meghji Shahs (1956) 23 E.A.C.A. 366. That was a contract for selling rice. The government refused to issue an import licence for rice. With the ban it became very expensive to execute the contract. The buyer argued that the contract was frustrated but the court thought not even though it agreed that it had become more expensive to execute it. C

There is also a further ground supporting a view that there was no frustration. The plaintiff is a corporate body with a certificate of incorporation No. 10191. So it is a separate legal entity quite distinct from its members. And as a company works through D its members and employees, then the detention of a member or director, would not deter the company to continue to work through its other members and directors. I am therefore not persuaded that the 2nd defendant was entitled to invoke the doctrine of frustration.

Next let me now consider the second point as to whether the plaintiff company had at E any time repudiated the contract. Repudiation occurs where one party either expressly or impliedly intimates that he will not honour his side of the bargain. This happens before the end of the contract period. The doctrine is contained in s. 39 of the Tanganyika Law of Contract Act, Cap. 433 which provides: F

> When a party to a contract has refused to perform or disabled himself from performing his promise in its entirety, the promisee may put an end to the contract, unless he has signified, by words or conduct, his acquiescence in its continuance. G

The test for repudiation where there has been no expressed intention to repudiate, is: was the conduct such as to have caused a reasonable person to come to the conclusion that the person did not intend to or was unable to fulfil his contract? A clear example is demonstrated by the case of Rashid Moledina & Co. (Mombasa) Ltd. V. Hoima H Ginners Ltd. [1967] E.A. 645 (C.A.)(K). In that case X contracted to sell coffee to Y. X was in short supply and unsuccessfully tried to come to some agreement with Y. X failed to deliver to other parties and Y, knowing of this failure claimed it amounted to repudiation. It was held by Court that X's behaviour could be treated by Y as I repudiation. In the words of Duffus J.A.:

1985 TLR p167

MWALUSANYA J

> The test must be whether ... the conduct of the respondent through its representatives was A such as to have caused a reasonable person to come to the conclusion that the company did not intend to or was unable to fulfil its contracts.

Applying that test to the facts of this case, I am unable to agree that the plaintiff company B had repudiated the contract either expressly or by conduct. The letter that I quoted above does not in so many words state that the plaintiff company would not go on with the contract but it states simply that they would find it more difficult to perform or rather that there may be a delay in completion of the same. After all the director was detained C on 9/4/1983 and some building materials confiscated on the same day, and yet construction at both projects continued in full swing until the sub-contractors were stopped in August 1983. I don't agree with the testimony of the 2nd defendant that in July 1983 work at both building sites had come to a stand still. On the whole no D reasonable person could, on reading the letter Exh. BI, have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff company intended or was unable to fulfil its part of the contract. The 2nd defendant was wrong to have had reached that conclusion.

In any case even if 2nd defendant had reached the conclusion that the plaintiff had E repudiated the contract yet as correctly submitted by plaintiff's counsel Mr. Kahangwa, the 2nd defendant was precluded from making preemptory determination of the contracts as it was contrary to the agreed stipulations contained in the General Conditions of Contracts and both contracts Exh. AI and Exh. A2 clearly provide that the F two contracts are subject to the General Conditions of the Contract. Now clause 32 of those General Conditions of the Contract provides:

32. Determination of Contract by Employer. G

(a) Default: If the Contractor shall make default in any of the following respects, viz:

(i) If without reasonable cause he wholly suspend the works before completion;

(ii) If he fails to proceed with the works with reasonable diligence; H and if he shall continue such default for fourteen days after a notice by registered post, specifying the default has been given to him by the Principal Secretary (works), the Employer I may without prejudice to any other rights or remedies, thereupon by notice by registered post determine the employment of the Contractor under this Contract: A

Provided that notice in pursuance of this clause shall not be given unreasonably or vexatiously. B

Those conditions clearly provide that in case of default the employer has to write a notice by registered post to the contractor informing him the particulars of the default. And if within 14 days after the first notice the contractor says that he is unable to continue with the contract or the default that was pointed out persists then the employer C may determine the contract and this has to be done by registed post. However none of that procedure was followed by the 2nd defendant. The 2nd defendant acted unreasonably in determining the contract without notice to the contractor. The notice would have put him in the clear picture if the contractor was willing and capable of going D on with the contract despite the temporary drawbacks that had cropped up. In the event then I hold that there was no repudiation of the contract by the plaintiff company. It was the 2nd defendant who was in breach of the contract and so liable in damages. So issue No. 1 is answered in favour of the plaintiff company.

For the moment we skip issue No. 2 and proceed to issue No. 3. Now issue No. 3 E concerns compensation payable to the plaintiff company for the work done and not paid for, up to the time the contract was put to an end by the defendants. The defendants conceded at the commencement of the trial that they were liable for not more than F shs.179,840/40 for the work done at Biharamulo Project but that they were not liable for any work done at Rwamishenye Project. However evidence was brought by the plaintiff company concerning the work done at both projects and that evidence was given by PW.2, PW.2, PW.3 and PW.4. There was unchallenged evidence adduced for the Biharamulo Project indicating that the buildings under construction had all G reached four feet high at the time of the determination of the contract and this is about 20% of the contract sum of shs.9,193,100/= and that comes to Shs. 1,838,620/= and less Shs. 587,846/40 paid out to the plaintiff on 19/2/1983 there remains Shs. 1,238,620/= which plaintiff company now claims. I can see no valid reasons as to why H the defendants concede to pay Shs.179,840/40 only for the Biharamulo Project and not the full sum of shs 1,238,620/=. It is my finding that shs. 1,238,620/= claimed for the Biharamulo Project is a reasonable sum and so I accept it. As for the Rwamishenye Project there was uncontroverted evidence from the witness PW.1, PW.2., PW.3 and PW.4 that about 70% of the contracted work had been done, in that 17 of the 19 I residential staff quarters had been substantially repaired as contracted; and as regards the office block the same had already been erected only A awaiting the finishing touches. In view of the fact that defendants did not offer any challenge to that evidence I accept it and agree that it was 70% of the whole work. As on 5/4/1983 he had done 50% of the work and got paid half of the contracted sum of shs. 1,426,100/= for the Rwamishenye Project, now he is entitled to shs. 285,220/= B being the 20% of the work done between April 1983 and August 1983. I accordingly award shs.285,220/= as compensation for the Rwamishenye Project. Total award for both projects is Shs1,523,840/=

Issue No. 4 and 5 concern compensation payable to the plaintiff company for the building materials (issue No.4) and building tools (issue No.5) that had been left behind C at both building sites after the plaintiff company had been chased away from there. As regards issue No. 4 and 5 the plaintiff's counsel Mr. Kahangwa submitted that compensation was payable as there was enough evidence indicating that tools and building materials to the tune of shs. 123,391/= were left behind. According to PW.1 D and the storekeeper Libent s/o Mshahili (PW.3) the building materials and tools left behind at both sites was as per the list Exh. A3 prepared by the plaintiff company on 29/5/1984. The two sub-contractors PW.2 and PW.4 corroborated that fact. The defendants did not offer any evidence on the matter but in the written statement of E defence it is alleged that building materials were paid for by the 2nd defendant and that as for building tools the same are in custody of the Commander of Biharamulo T.P.D.F. Camp. No evidence was led as to how the building materials were paid for and so I reject outright that contention. As regards the building materials, the defendants cannot F escape liability by claiming that a third party might be having them. When notice to sue was sent it was the duty of the defendants to collect those building tools if they were there and hand them over to the plaintiff company in order to avoid liability. Otherwise they are liable in law. I accordingly award the plaintiff company the sum of G shs.123,391/= as indicated in the list which is Exh. A3 in court.

Now issue No. 2, 6 and 7 concern the quantum of damages that plaintiff company is entitled to, after having won the case. For issue No. 2 the plaintiff company claims shs. 1,585,380/= or ordinary damages being 15% of the total sum of the contract sum and that being the anticipated reasonable profit that plaintiff company would have got on the H two projects. Issue No. 6 is a claim also of ordinary damages for shs. 17,500/= for the installation of a water tank at the Biharamulo. And issue No. 7 concerns any other relief that plaintiff company may be entitled to. I

I will start with issue No. 6 concerning ordinary damages of shs.

1985 TLR p171

MWALUSANYA J

17,500/= for the water tank that was installed. It is uncontroverted that the plaintiff A company built a water tank at the Biharamulo Project because water there is scarce. The defendant did not dispute the fact that shs. 17,500/= was a reasonable sum for constructing a water tank, but contended that the damages were not payable because B they were remote. But plaintiff company submitted those damages were not remote. It is trite knowledge that our law draws a line somewhere and says that damages incurred beyond a certain limit are too remote to be recovered. Damages in contract must therefore be proximate. The modern law regarding remoteness of damages in contract is C founded upon the English case of Hadley v Baxendale (1854) 9 Exch. 341 which case is authority for the statement that damages in contract will be too remote to be recovered unless they are such that the defendant, as a reasonable man, would have foreseen them as likely to result, according to the usual course of things or because of D special facts made known to him. That decision is incorporated in s. 73 (1) of our Tanganyika Contract Act Cap. 433. And the doctrine received explicit judicial recognition in East Africa through the decision of E.A.C.A. in Woodruff v Dupont [1964] E.A. 404. Applying the above doctrine, it is my considered view that the building of a water tank, because of the scarcity of water at Biharamulo, was a matter E which defendant knew or as a reasonable man should have known as likely to happen, and so defendant is liable.

Concerning the ordinary damages of Shs. 1,585,380/= on issue No. 2, I think there is little controversy on the principle of law applicable. Damages are intended to put the injured party in the same financial position as he would have been if the contract had F been performed according to its terms. Therefore the plaintiff company as of right has a claim to the profit that would accrue to him after deducting his expenses, if the contract had been fulfilled. The plaintiff company has put the profit that would have accrued at G 15% of the contract sum. It was the plaintiff's case that normally for building contracts 15% of the contract sum accrue to the contractors and that it is reasonable sum. In my considered view the claim appears a reasonable sum, more so that the defendants did not offer any evidence to contradict that point. The plaintiff's advocate Mr. Kahangwa H cited the English case of Suisse Atlantique Societe de Armement Martime S.A. v N.V. Rotterdamsche Kolen Centrale [1966] 2 W.L.R. 944 in support of his contention on this leg. But I am afraid the case is of no assistance as it concerned a matter of remoteness of damages - that is whether loss of profits was reasonably foreseeable or not. That was a case where plaintiff hired out his ship for carrying of goods for two years and it was agreed that he would be paid a certain sum per trip I made. The ship was to make a number of trips for the two years of contract. The ship failed to make up an anticipated number of trips in the two years and A plaintiff alleged that it was due to the negligence of the defendants. He claimed inter alia loss of profits he would have made if the anticipated number of trips for two years, damages for loss of profits would have been payable but not in the present case where there was no such contract and so no profit was payable. That case is distinguishable B from the present case in that, that case concerned the issue of remoteness of damages that is whether loss of profits was reasonably foreseeable or not; but in our case at hand the issue is simply one of assessment of a quantum of damages which are conceded not to be remote. And as I said earlier I am satisfied that a claim of 15% of the contract C sum amounting to shs. 1,585,380/= is a reasonable sum and I awarded that sum on this head.

Before I sign off I should put on record that it was conceded by the 1st defendant that if the 2nd defendant was in breach of the contract, then 1st defendant would be vicariously liable for the sins of his employee the 2nd defendant because it is common knowledge D that 2nd defendant throughout acted in the usual course of his employer's business.

Be that as it may, the plaintiff company succeeds in toto in its claim. I enter judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of shs. 3,250,111/= as claimed plus costs of the suit. E

Order accordingly.

F

[zRPz]RAMADHANI MASHA v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 172 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

June 3, 1980
CRIMINAL APPEAL 15 OF 1980 G
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Accused sentenced without first being convicted - Whether lawful. H
-Headnote

In a criminal trial for a charge of being in possession of property suspected of having been stolen, the trial court magistrate, after hearing the evidence of both the prosecution and the defence, proceeded to sentence the appellant to imprisonment for a term of six months. But he did so without first convicting him . Four months later, the magistrate I wrote a judgment convicting the appellant as charged.

1985 TLR p173

SISYA J

Held: In a criminal trial, where it is decided that the accused person is guilty, the basic A elements of the decision of the court are conviction and sentence, with the former being a prerequisite of the latter; as there was no conviction when the appellant was sentenced, there was no decision of the court and, the error being incurable under s. 346 of the B Criminal Procedure Code [now s. 388 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985], the sentence passed in this case was unlawful.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No cases referred to. C

W.R. Mramba, for the appellant.

J.S. Mwale, for the respondent.

Judgment

Sisya, J.: The appellant appeared before the District Court at Tanga D and pleaded not guilty to a charge of being in possession of property suspected to have been stolen or unlawfully obtained contrary to section 312(1) of the Penal Code as amended by Act No. 26 of 1971. Trial commenced and proceeded on 3.10.79 before E the Resident Magistrate (W.N.B. Kapaya Esq.), Tanga. The witnesses testified on the Prosecution side and then, upon finding that a prima facie case had been made out sufficient to require him to make a defence to the charge, the appellant too gave evidence in his defence. However, he had no witness to call and, consequently, therefore, none gave evidence on his behalf. F

Immediately after the appellant's evidence in defence the learned Resident Magistrate recorded and I quote from the record of proceedings:-

> Pros: The accused is a first offender - but these offences are too common. I request for a deterrent sentence as an example. G
>
> Mitigation: I have eight children to support and an ageing mother, I look after them.

These are the usual preliminaries before sentence and indeed, as the record shows, H thereafter, the learned Resident Magistrate proceeded to sentence the appellant to imprisonment for a term of six months. He also made an order for forfeiture of six bundles of beads, Exh Pl, which incidentally, were the offending objects in the matter. No conviction was entered against the appellant before sentence then. However, almost I four months later, i.e. on 30/1/80, the learned Resident Magistrate wrote a judgment in which he ended up by convicting him, i.e. the appellant, as charged. A

1985 TLR p174

SISYA J

In his petition of appeal which was drawn on his behalf by learned Counsel, Mr. Mramba, the appellant advances three reasons of appeal namely: B

"1. That the learned trial Magistrate erred in law in sentencing the appellant before judgment and conviction.

2. That on the evidence adduced there was no sufficient evidence upon which a conviction could be founded.

3. That the sentence of six months imprisonment was excessive in the circumstances of C the case."

At the hearing of the appeal Mr. Mramba for the appellant, wisely, withdrew the second and third grounds of appeal. However, on the first ground of appeal Mr. Mramba D submitted that in terms of section 210 of the Criminal Procedure Code it was imperative on the learned Resident Magistrate to enter a conviction prior to sentence. This implies the writing and/or delivery of a judgment whose mode of delivery and its contents are laid down in section 170 and 171 of the Criminal Procedure Code, respectively. Mr. Mramba contended that the learned Resident Magistrate did not comply with these E provisions of the Code and therefore the passing of sentence before conviction was unlawful. He, however, left it to the Court to make the necessary orders.

The learned State Attorney, Mr. Mwale, shared the same views with Mr. Mramba for the appellant in this matter and, consequently, he followed suit in leaving it to this Court F to make the necessary orders.

It is convenient at this stage to set out the provisions of Section 210 of the Criminal Procedure Code. They read:

210. The Court having heard both the complainant and the accused person and their G witnesses and evidence shall convict the accused and pass sentence upon or make an order against him according to law, or shall acquit him, or shall dismiss the charge under section 38 of the Penal Code. H

It sounds clear to me from the above that in a criminal case where the trial Court has decided that the accused person is guilty there are two basic elements of "the decision" and these are conviction, and sentence. The former, i.e. conviction, being a pre-requisite to the latter, i.e. sentence. As aforementioned, the learned Resident Magistrate, in the I instant matter, did not enter any conviction prior to sentence. That being so, particularly because the conviction is a basic element of the decision in the language of section 210 A of the Criminal Procedure Code and a prerequisite to sentence, I do not hesitate to find, which I do, that at the time the appellant was sentenced there was no decision of the Court at all. The sentence that was nevertheless, passed was, therefore, unlawful and it is so declared. The fact that, as aforesaid, the conviction was entered B approximately four months later is immaterial.

Basic and fundamental as this error is I am of the considered opinion that this is not a fit case for invoking provisions of the "curative" section, i.e. section 346 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I may, however, add that the position would, to my mind, have been C completely different had the learned Resident Magistrate entered a conviction or words to the following effect, that is to say "Accused is found guilty and convicted as charged," immediately after the defence case and before the learned Public Prosecutor's plea for a deterrent and exemplary punishment which, itself, is I must say with respect, of dubious legal basis. D

The question that now arises is what order is befitting in this case with regard to the sentence? The answer is simple. In so far as the said sentence has been found and declared to be unlawful the same cannot be allowed to stand and it is accordingly quashed and set aside. I have considered the possibility of remitting this record to the E District Court with directions that the Court now proceeds to pass proper sentence on the appellant. However, I am of the view that that cannot be done without prejudicing the appellant who must have, by now, completed serving the sentence unlawfully passed on him by the trial Court. In the circumstances I am loathe to make any further orders. F

Appeal allowed

1985 TLR p175

G

[zRPz]JUMA BAKARI v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 175 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga

Judge Sisya J

March 16, 1982

CRIMINAL APPEAL 20 OF 1980

Flynote

Criminal Law - Rogue and vagabond - Being a rogue and a vagabond c/s 177(2) of the H Penal Code - Ingredients of the offence.

Criminal Law - False information - Giving false information c/s 122 of the Penal Code - Ingredients of the offence.

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted of being a rogue and a vagabond contrary to s. 177(2) of I the Penal Code. No evidence was adduced to show that he was going about procuring and gathering or collecting alms or charitable contributions A under false or fraudulent pretence. The appellant was also convicted of giving false information to a person employed in the public service contrary s. 122(b) of the Penal Code. The appellant had reported to the Police that he had given some money to PW3 for onward transmission to another person but PW3 had misappropriated the same. B Apparently, he was found guilty because he could not prove the giving of the money to PW3.

1985 TLR p176

SISYA J

Held: (i) To convict a person of being a rogue and vagabond, it must be established that the person was going about as a gatherer or collector of alms, or was endeavouring C to procure charitable contributions of any kind under false or fraudulent pretence; as no evidence was adduced to show any of those things in relation to the appellant, the conviction was illegal;

(ii) the mere failure of the appellant to prove his allegations does not necessarily D make the allegations false; it rests upon the prosecution to prove that the information he gave was false, and that he knew or believed it to be false;

Case Information

Order accordingly. E

Case referred to:

1. Joseph Odhengo Ogongo v R. [1954] 21 E.A.C.A. 302

Judgment

Sisya, J.: For a conviction to stand for the offence of being rogue F and vagabond contrary to section 177(2) of the Penal Code it must be established, beyond all peradventure, that the convict was going about as gatherer or collector of alms, or endeavouring to procure charitable contributions of any nature or kind, under false or fraudulent pretence. Not even a grain of evidence was adduced towards this G end in the instant matter in relation to this appellant. Yet he was, on count one, charged with and convicted of that offence, that is that of being rogue and vagabond contrary to section 177 (2) of the Penal Code, and he was conditionally discharged for a period of twelve months. The conviction is illegal and it cannot, therefore, be allowed to stand. H The same is hereby quashed and the purported order of conditional discharge passed thereon is set aside.

On count two the appellant was charged with and convicted of the offence of giving false information to a person employed in the public service contrary to section 122(b) of the Penal Code. The salient facts of the Prosecution case show that the appellant reported I to the Police that he had given PW3 some money, proceeds of a meat business in which he and PW2 A were interested, for onward transmission to the latter, that is PW2 , but PW3 had misappropriated the same. PW3 was arrested in connection with the matter but he was subsequently released. In their evidence in the Court below both PW2 and PW3 denied that PW3 ever handled any cash from the said meat business. This was contradicted by B the appellant and one Apelesi Moses Shemkingo (DW3) who worked as a labourer in the appellant's butchery at the material time. These two persons asserted that PW3 was actually the person who was the cashier at the appellant's butcher. The learned trial Magistrate rejected the defence story simply by reason of the fact that the handing over C was not reduced in writing. The appellant retorted that there was no handing over certificate because of mutual trust that then existed between them. The Police officer who investigated the case, PW4, had earlier on told the trial Magistrate at the hearing of the case that the appellant had no proof that he handed over the money to PW3. D With due respect to the learned trial Magistrate the mere fact that the appellant failed to prove his allegation does not, ipso facto, mean that the report he made to the Police was false. For a conviction on count two to stand it was incumbent upon the Prosecution to prove, among other things, that the information which the appellant gave E was false and that he himself knew or believed that the same was false. On the evidence on record it cannot be said with moral certainty and to the exclusion of every reasonable doubt that the appellant deliberately made the report which he himself knew was false. For this reason the conviction on count two too is quashed and the sentence passed thereon is set aside. F

SISYA J

The record of proceedings of the trial Court shows that when the charges were being read out to the appellant he, i.e. the latter, behaved in a manner which, by every civilized standard, was disrespectful. The learned trial Magistrate took cognizance of the contempt of Court and, following the procedure laid down in the case of Joseph G Odhengo s/o Ogongo v R. (1954) 21 E.A.C.A. 302 proceeded to deal with him under Section 114 (1)(a) of the Penal Code. The appellant refused and/or neglected to answer relevantly when given an opportunity to do so. He cannot now be heard to complain against the course of action pursued by the trial Magistrate. If anything the H appellant, now has himself to blame because he, albeit unwillingly, forfeited his right to be heard on the point. He was eventually sentenced to three months imprisonment. On my evaluation of what transpired at the material time I am satisfied that the conviction on this count was proper and it is hereby upheld. In the final result this appeal succeeds to the extent indicated. In all other respects it is dismissed. I

Order accordingly.

1985 TLR p178

A

[zRPz]CHAMBO RAMADHANI v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 178 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga

Judge Sisya J

May 6, 1963

CRIMINAL APPEAL 58 OF 1980

Flynote

Criminal Law - House breaking - Breaking into a house with intent to commit an offence, B c/s 294(1) of the Penal Code - Ingredients of the offence.

Criminal Law - House breaking - Time of the commission of the offence - Act of house breaking committed at 11.00 p.m.- Ss.5 and 294 of the Penal Code. C Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - House breaking - Charge of housebreaking not specifying the offence intended to be committed - Effect of the omission.

Evidence - Identification of the accused person - Offence committed at night - Accused identified by fellow villagers who know him well - Whether enough to establish identity. D

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted of housebreaking. The charge did not disclose the offence which the appellant intended to commit in the house broken into. The facts were that E some villagers, having been tipped off that robbers were planning to raid a house on the material night, placed a burning lamp in front of the house and kept vigil in the nearby surrounding bushes. The gang of robbers appeared at 11.00 p.m. Among them, the hiding villagers saw the appellant, a fellow member of their village, before the light was put out and the house broken into. The gang fled when the villagers started shouting. F But one of them was apprehended and he mentioned the appellant as having been one of the fugitives. The appellant raised the defence of alibi but the trial court rejected it. He appealed to the High Court. G

Held: (i) The offence of housebreaking is constituted by entering a building with intent to commit an offence therein and this was not sufficiently shown in this case;

(ii) a charge of house breaking should specify the particulars of the offence intended to be committed in the house broken into; for not making this specification, the H charge in this case was defective;

(iii) although the charge was defective for omitting to specify the offence intended to be committed, the appellant was not prejudiced by the omission and the defect was curable under s.346 of the Criminal Procedure Code [now s. 388 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985]; I

(iv) although the circumstances in which the appellant was identified were not as easy as they would have been had the incident happened in the day time, the A appellant was not a stranger to the villagers who identified him and he was also named by one of the gangsters as being one of his companions; those factors are enough to establish that the appellant was correctly identified as one of the burglars;

(v) as this was housebreaking committed at night, it constituted the offence B termed "burglary" and the charge should have indicated as such;

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

Cases referred to: C

1. Rajabu Abdallah v R., [1967] H.C.D. 416
2. R. v Bakari bin Yusuf, (1940) 7 E.A.C.A. 63

A.T. Akarro, for the Republic. D

Judgment

Sisya, J.: This appellant was charged with two counts of Stealing and Housebreaking respectively. The charge as laid reads:

1st count: Offence Section and Law: Stealing C/S 265 of the Penal Code Cap. 16 Vol. 1 of E the Laws. Particulars of Offence: The person charged on the 7th day of June 1978 at about 14.30 hrs at Bombani village within the District of Muheza in Tanga Region did Steal one Shotgun, makers No 3778 (?), valued at Shs. 1,000/= the property of Jonathan Ngereza. F

2nd count: Offence Section and Law: House breaking with intent to commit a felony c/ss 294(1) of the Penal Code Cap. 16 Vol. 1 of the Laws.

Particulars of Offence: The same person charged on the 1st day of June, 1978 at about 23.00 G hrs at Mashewa Village within the District of Muheza in Tanga Region did break and enter into the dwelling house of Maiko John with intent to commit a felony therein.

He was acquitted and discharged on count one. He was, however, found guilty and H convicted as charged on count two, and he was sentenced to five years imprisonment. He has now appealed to this Court against both conviction and sentence.

As can be observed here in above the charge in count two did not specify the felony or, I rather, the offence which the appellant had allegedly intended to commit. It is clear from the wording of section 294 of the Penal Code that A the intent to commit an offence is a necessary and indispensable ingredient of the offence created by the section. There is a host of cases in which it was authoritatively held that a charge of entering a building with intent to commit an offence therein should specify the particular offence intended. It is clear, therefore, that in so far as the intended B offence was not specified the charge in count two is defective. The short but sharp question that arises is, what effect does this defect have on appeal?

1985 TLR p180

SISYA J

The learned State Attorney, Mr. Akarro submitted that the defect is incurable because the appellant was not informed as to what he was charged with. He based his argument C on the decision of this Court, per Biron J., in the case of Rajabu Abdalla v R. [1967] H.C.D. no. 416. The accused in that case was charged with housebreaking and was convicted of attempted housebreaking. The charge stated that he broke and entered a specified dwelling house "with intent to commit a felony therein", but it did not specify the D felony which had been intended. On appeal Biron J. held that the accused was not informed as to what he was charged with, for the intent, which is an indispensable ingredient of the offence, was never specified and that the defect is not curable on appeal. However in an older case of Rex v Bakari Bin Yusuf (1940) 7E.A.C.A 63 it E was held by the Court of Appeal for Eastern African (in an appeal from the precursor of this Court H.M. High Court of Tanganyika) that an information or charge of entering a dwelling house with intent to commit a felony therein should specify the particular felony intended but failure to do so will not be a fatal defect if the accused was not thereby prejudiced: F

As was said in Balmakand Ram v Cansam Ram (22 Cal at p. 405)" we must be guided, not by the undefined possibility of the accused having been prejudiced, but by some suggestion which a reasonable man can accept, that there has been prejudice to the accused." Where G the Court feels that there is no possibility that the accused can have been prejudiced by some error or omission in the charge or information the provision of section 3335 of the Criminal Procedure Code may properly be applied. H

Where it must be conceded that in some cases this might indeed be a fatal defect I am of a considered view that the decision in the Rajabu Abdalla case is too extreme and that, although extreme cases must yield to principles which logically apply to them, the Rajabu Abdalla case is with respect, unnecessarily extreme. It is thus, to my mind bad I law and ought, therefore, not to be followed. At any rate the decision of the

1985 TLR p181

SISYA J

Court of Appeal in the Bakari Bin Yusuf case does not only make good sense but it is A also binding on this Court.

In the instant matter it must have been plain to the appellant from the evidence of, at least, three witnesses for the Prosecution, viz. PW2, and PW6, that he and his companions, who were tried separately, tried to steal cash and/or whatever they could B lay their hands upon in the complainant's house with armed force. Since the appellant also had the benefit of a full trial I am satisfied that he could not, therefore, have been prejudiced by the omission to specify in the charge that the offence intended was, to be precise, robbery with violence. In the final event I hold that the defect is curable on C appeal under section 346 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the appellant having not been prejudiced at all.

Now, turning to the merits of the appeal itself, the only substantive point for consideration by this Court is the identification of the appellant.

Evidence was given by PW2, PW3 and PW6 to the effect that they had been tipped that D a gang of armed bandits had planned to raid the house of PW3 on the night of 15/6/78. They and other villagers then kept vigil in the surrounding or nearby bushes. Two lamps were lit. One was left burning infront of the house and the other at the back. At about 11.00 p.m. five persons arrived. One of them had a gun whereas the others E had pangas. PW2 and PW3 managed to see and identify the appellant as one of those with pangas. He, i.e. appellant, is a resident of the same village, Mashewa; so the Prosecution witnesses knew him well. As indeed was expected one of the bandits kicked down the lamp in front of the house and it went. Darkness then prevailed but by F then the appellant had already been seen and identified: the others were not. The appellant and his companions broke the front door and at least four of them entered the house. One of them remained outside. At that stage PW2, PW3, PW6 and others came forward from the shrubs while crying out "thieves! thieves!" The intruders bolted out and took to their heels while their gunman was firing in the air. One of the villagers, G Rashidi, who had a gun, responded. He aimed at the fleeing intruders. His bullet hit and physically incapacitated one of the bandits, one Ally. The villagers closed in on the wounded savage whereas his companions fled and escaped. Ally, however, mentioned them all. The appellant's name was not spared: He, appellant, was named as one of the H fugitives. He was, nevertheless, apprehended later.

The appellant raised the defence of alibi but the same was rejected by the learned trial Magistrate and rightly so too. The same hardly raises any reasonable doubt in my mind either.

The learned trial Magistrate found PW2, PW3 and PW6 to be honest and truthful I witnesses. Since he had the advantage of seeing and hearing them and it has never dawned upon me that he palpably abused that great advantage I A am not persuaded that in doing so the learned trial Magistrate erred. I will thus go by his assessment of these witnesses' credit without reservations.

Indeed circumstances favouring identification were not as easy as they would otherwise B have been had the incident taken place in broad day light. Nevertheless, there was a light provided by a burning lamp at the scene before it was violently quenched; the appellant was not a stranger in the eyes of those who identified him - they knew him before and he was their fellow villager, at least two persons, i.e. PW2 and PW3, were able to see and recognise the appellant, and the appellant was named by the wounded C gangster, Ally, as well as being one of his companions. All these factors in their totality satisfy me beyond any peradventure that the appellant was one of the would be robbers on the material night. His identification was, therefore, fully established.

Having regard to the circumstances in which the offence was committed the sentence is D not excessive and the same is hereby confirmed. Before I sign off, let me observe that had the learned trial Magistrate, whom I personally know as an experienced Magistrate, exercised some slight presence of mind public time which has, so far, been wasted in considering whether or not the omission to specify the offence intended in count two is E fatal would have been spared or saved. I refuse to believe that the learned trial Magistrate is ignorant of the fact that the offence intended ought to have been specified in Court. I am, at the same time, prepared to accede that most probably he did not bother to go through the charge sheet before it was admitted or filed. I have time and F again told Magistrates that it is always desirable to do so. Even then, even if the learned trial Magistrate did not look at or go through the charge before admitting it one would have expected him, experienced as he is and if, indeed, he exercised some presence of mind, to have easily spotted out the defect at the time he took the appellant's plea - or G did he not even read over the charge on count two to him?

Again, had the learned trial Magistrate exercised presence of mind at the time he read over the charge in count two he would not have failed to spot that because of the time shown in the charge (23.00 hrs) the proper offence to the charged was not the one H shown but "Burglary". If perhaps the mode of quoting the time confused him then he must have got clarification from PW2, PW3 and PW6, all of whom specifically fixed the time of the commission of the offence at 11.00 p.m. The attention of the learned trial Magistrate is drawn to that portion of Section 294 of the Penal Code which reads: 'If I the offence is committed in the night it is termed "Burglary".....' "Night" is defined in Section 5 of the Penal Code to mean "the interval between seven o'clock in the evening and six o'clock in the A morning."

In the final event this appeal fails and it is dismissed in its entirety.

B Appeal dismissed.

C

[zRPz]KAUTO ALLY v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 183 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

April 14, 1982

CRIMINAL APPEAL 78 OF 1980

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Duplicity - Three separate and distinct D offences charged in the same count - Charge bad for duplicity.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Trial - Naming the accused persons - Serial order of identifying jointly accused persons - Serial order in the judgment inconsistent with serial E order in the charge sheet - Effect of the inconsistency.

-Headnote

The appellant, along with another person, was convicted "as charged" in a trial in which two other co-accused persons were acquitted. The facts were that on the material day F the complainant, a Police Officer, waved at a bus to stop because he had grounds to believe that it was unlawfully overloaded. The bus stopped and the complainant got in for the purpose of counting the number of passengers. As he was about to start counting, the bus conductor ordered the driver to drive on and the latter readily G complied. Then another person pushed the complainant out and he fell off the bus while it was still in motion and he was seriously injured. Subsequently, four persons were jointly charged with the offence of obstructing a Police Officer in the execution of his duty. But the framing of both the charge and the particulars of the offence was such that a number of separate and distinct offences were lumped together in the same single H count. The trial court convicted the first and the second accused, the latter being now the appellant, "as charged", and acquitted the third and the fourth accused. But the charge sheet referred to the appellant as the third accused, and the trial court record also showed similar confusion about the labelling of the other accused persons in the course I of the trial.

1985 TLR p184

SISYA J

Held: (i) The lumping together of separate and distinct offences in a single count as was A done in this case may render a charge bad for duplicity and it enhances the possibility of criminals getting away, inadequately punished or unpunished at all, purely on technical grounds;

(ii) the changing of the labels attached to the different co-accused persons at different stages in the course of the trial causes confusion and brings about doubts as to B whether the person convicted is indeed the one found guilty;

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No cases referred to. C

Judgment

Sisya, J.: This case was a bungle right from the beginning. The charge as laid reads: D

Obstructing a Police Officer due to his execution of duty c/s 243 (b) and (e) of the Penal Code.

There are two obvious errors here. The first is the wording of the offence itself. This is so glaring to the extent that it makes one wonder how it escaped notice of the learned E trial

Magistrate, at least at the time he read it over to the accused; that is to say, if at all he properly arraigned him. Or, if the learned trial Magistrate noticed it, why he did not correct the error accordingly. The second error is in the law cited. Each of the paragraphs of section 243 of the Penal Code - paras. (b) and (c) included - create a F separate and distinct offence. At most offences under these paragraphs may be charged in the alternative but not in the same and single count as was done in this case. Perhaps it may be argued that these errors did not embarass the accused or occasion any miscarriage of justice. That, however, is not the end of the story. G
The particulars of offence read as follows and I quote from the relevant charge sheet:

The persons jointly and together charged on the 7th day of February, 1980, at about 7.30 hrs, at Ikulu (Ndogo), Lushoto District and Tanga Region, did wilfully resist the lawful arrest of one H C. 7745 P.C. Florian a Police Officer employed in the government service, as a result they assaulted the said Police Officer on his right leg and all the arms by pushing him from the bus Reg. no. TZ 4993 Usambara Bus Service and caused him to suffer grievous harm due to his I execution of duty.

1985 TLR p185

SISYA J

These particulars are, so to speak, pregnant with errors - grammatical as well as A substantive. To quote but a few, it was actually the arrest by and not the arrest of P.C. Florian that the accused are said to have resisted. Secondly, there are three overt acts lumped together in the charge, namely wilful resistance to arrest, assault and doing grievous harm. Each one of these is a separate and distinct offence under the Penal B Code; the last one being chargeable under section 225. The importance of a charge as the central point in every criminal proceeding is well known and, therefore, it hardly needs a restatement. The responsibility for the correctness of the charge, undoubtedly lies on the prosecutor. This Court, however, wishes to draw the attention of all C Magistrates to the desirability of their going through the charge before admitting the same. This is not only prudent but it is also one of the ways of lessening the possibility of criminals subsequently getting away either without being punished adequately or even without being punished at all, purely on technical grounds. In the instant matter it could D very well be argued that the charge is bad for duplicity. I will, however, leave this point at that.

Now turning to the facts of the case, there can be no doubt that the star witness is the complainant, i.e. Florian (PW1), himself. His story is a sad one. On the relevant day E and at the material time he was on guard duty at the State Lodge, Lushoto, when he saw a bus registration No. TZ 4993 approach, heading towards the direction of Lushoto. There were at least three persons somewhat precariously perched on the roof rack. It immediately dawned upon him that the said bus must have carried more passengers than it was otherwise authorised to carry. He, therefore, waved at its driver to stop; which he F did at such a distance from where he stood as to enable those on the rack to get down and wade through into the crowded bus. When PW1 got to the bus he ordered its occupants to get down and be counted. Five persons got down. At that stage he boarded the bus and stood at the stairs. In his right hand he held a gun whereas he had G a note book and a pen in the other. At the same time he heard and saw a person "order" the bus driver to drive on. The bus took off, carrying PW1 away with it. He, i.e. PW1, managed to find himself some support where he stood in the bus. After covering a short distance a man, however, approached him and, without any exchange H of words, pushed him out. PW1 fell off the bus while it was still in motion and sustained as a result thereof, among other injuries, a fracture of the left fibula. The bus moved on as if nothing had happened. However, by what must have been a quirk of fate, it did not go far. After covering a bare 112 metres it careered off the road and subsequently it hit a wall on the road side. I

1985 TLR p186

SISYA J

There were four accused persons who appeared in the Court below to answer to this A same mangled charge. They all pleaded not guilty. At the trial that subsequently followed PW.1 identified the first accused as being the conductor of the bus and the person who "ordered" the bus driver to drive on before the count of the passengers begun; the second accused as being the person who pushed him out of the moving bus; B and the fourth accused as being the person who was driving the bus at the material time. PW1 told the trial Court that after the accident the third accused accompanied by the first accused returned to where he lay with his broken leg and began or "order" him to go to the Police station and report the matter because, according to them, he was the C one who cause the accident. All the accused raised the general defence of mere denial.

In his judgment which, with respect, requires extra power of perception to comprehend, the learned trial Magistrate acquitted the third and fourth accused. He, however, convicted the first and second accused persons "as charged" and sentenced then to nine D months and four years imprisonment, respectively. The latter, i.e. the second accused who, incidentally, is the appellant in the instant appeal, was given a stiffer sentence for pushing the Police Officer from the moving bus "to meet his death".

Without going into the merits and demerits of this appeal I feel constrained to, first of all, deal with one point which, to my mind, is very likely to be dispositive of this appeal. In E short it is the identification of this appellant as being the very same person who both PW1 and the trial Magistrate referred to as the second accused. This state of affairs has been brought about by the fact that according to the relevant charge sheet this appellant was the third accused. According to practice one would expect that would also be the F way he appeared in the dock at the trial: That is to say, sit after or next to the man who appeared as second accused, on the one hand, and the man who appeared as fourth accused, on the other. However, in his judgment, in both typed and manuscript forms, the learned trial Magistrate, for reasons beyond my comprehension, labelled this G appellant, Kauto Ally, the second accused. The third accused is shown to have been one Hamad Mngazija. To add to this confusion the record of proceedings itself appears to show that the sitting arrangement of the accused was not as listed in the charge. For example, Faraji Omari, who is shown as fourth accused in the judgment and was H acquitted is shown as second accused in the charge sheet which was read out in Court. It will be recalled that PW1 identified the second accused - no names were mentioned - as being the person who pushed him out.

All in all I entertain grave doubts as to whether or not this appellant was indeed the same I person both PW1 and the trial Magistrate had in mind when they talked of the second accused in the case. In the circumstances it will be dangerous to uphold this conviction which is hereby quashed and A the sentence passed thereon set aside. It is further directed that unless the appellant is being held on some other lawful charges he should be set at liberty forthwith.
1985 TLR p186
B Appeal allowed.
1985 TLR p187
C
[zRPz]REPUBLIC v ATHANASIO MWAGILO 1985 TLR 187 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

December 5, 1981
CRIMINAL REVISION 1 OF 1981
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Alternative verdicts - Verdicts alternative to burglary - D Whether neglect of duty by a watchman is a kindred offence to housebreaking - Criminal Procedure Code s. 186 [now S.305 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985]
-Headnote
The accused was a night watchman at a school and he was charged with breaking into E the school building and stealing therefrom, contrary to s. 296(1) of the Penal Code. The trial court acquitted him of that offence but purporting to act under s.186 of the Criminal Procedure Code [now s. 305 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985], convicted him of neglect of public duty, an offence under s. 121 of the Penal Code. F
Held: The kindred offences of which a person charged with burglary or housebreaking may be convicted under s. 186 of the Criminal Procedure Code are those offences under one of the sections 294 to 298 of the Penal Code; neglect of public duty is not an G offence kindred to burglary or housebreaking and it is not one of those mentioned under s.186 of the Criminal Procedure Code;
Case Information
Order accordingly. H
No Cases referred to.
Judgment

Sisya J.: On 2nd December, 1981, I ordered the immediate release of the accused person from prison, unless, of course, he was being held on some I other lawful charge. I reserved my reasons for so doing. I now proceed to give them.

1985 TLR p188

SISYA J

The accused, a night watchman at Mkonje Primary School, Handeni District, was A charged with the offence of breaking into a school building, the very one which he was supposed to guard, and stealing therefrom various articles including stationery, building materials and sewing machines, all valued at Shs.9,480/=, property of the said Mkonje Primary School. This is an offence under section 296 (1) of the Penal Code. B

After a full trial the learned trial Magistrate found him not guilty of the offence charged and proceeded to acquit him of that offence. However, purporting to act under section 186 of the Criminal Procedure Code the learned trial Magistrate found him guilty of an C offence under section 121 of the Penal Code and proceeded to convict him of that offence and sentenced him to two years imprisonment.

For the benefit of the learned trial Magistrate section 186 of the Criminal Procedure Code may conveniently be reproduced. It reads: D

186. When a person is charged with an offence under one of sections 294 to 298 of the Penal Code and the Court is of the opinion that he is not guilty of that offence but that he is guilty of any other offence under another of the said sections, he may be convicted of that other offence although he was not charged with it. E

It goes without saying that section 122 of the Penal Code is not" another of the said sections", i.e. ss. 294 to 298 of the Penal Code. Putting it differently the purpose of section 186 of the Criminal Procedure Code is to make provision for a person charged F with the offence of burglary or any other offence under sections 294 to 298, but found not guilty of the offence charged to be convicted of a kindred offence under any of these same sections, 294 to 298. Needless to say, there is nothing kindred in the offences of breaking into a building and committing a felony therein and neglect of official duty G contrary to section 121 of the Penal Code. By acting as if there was, all the same, the learned trial Magistrate was clearly wrong. The conviction could not, therefore, stand and that is why the same was quashed. Since nothing will come out of nothing, the sentence that was purported to have been passed thereon too could not stand. The H same thus is accordingly set aside. These are the reasons.

I Order accordingly.

1985 TLR 189

A

[zRPz]ABSOLOMON MWACHELEJI v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 189 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga

Judge Sisya J

March 5, 1984
(PC) CRIMINAL APPEAL 3 OF 1981
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Compensation in criminal trials - Compensation B ordered in the absence of any criminal liability - Whether the order can stand.
-Headnote
The appellant was charged with setting fire to crops contrary to s.321(a) of the Penal C Code. The Primary Court convicted him and sentenced him to pay a fine. It also ordered him to pay compensation. On appeal to the District Court, the conviction was quashed and the sentence was set aside; but the order to pay compensation was upheld. He appealed to the High Court. D
Held: After the appellant was absolved of criminal liability, the compensation order against him remained with no basis and it could not stand.
Appeal allowed. E
No cases referred to.
Judgment
Sisya, J: This is a second appeal and it is against the order of F compensation only. The appellant was charged with the offence of setting fire to crops and growing plants c/s 321 (a) of the Penal Code. After a full trial and conviction he was sentenced by the Maramba Primary Court of Muheza District to pay a fine of shs.400/= or in default of payment thereof to go to jail for three months. He was also ordered to pay shs. 600/= compensation to the complainant. G
Aggrieved he appealed against conviction, sentence and order of compensation to the District Court. On first appeal the District Court quashed the conviction and set aside the sentence but the first appellate court upheld the order of compensation. In his memorandum of appeal the appellant avers that the learned District Magistrate on first H appeal erred in law in upholding the order of compensation. This is a point of law. It is not clear under what provision of the law the learned District Magistrate ordered the compensation after he had found that the appellant was not guilty of the offence charged. To the best of my knowledge the only relevant provisions of the law under which the I learned District Magistrate could have acted are section 31 of the Penal Code and section 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Both these provisions, however, come into play A only when a person has been convicted of an offence. Since the appellant was not convicted of an offence, or rather he had been absolved of criminal liability, I cannot see how this order of compensation can stand. The same is hereby, therefore, quashed and set aside. If the appellant has already paid the compensation then the same should now B be refunded to him. I may mention in passing that the way is left open to the complainant, if he so wishes, to proceed by way of a civil suit against the appellant. All in all this appeal succeeds and it is hereby allowed.

C Appeal allowed
1985 TLR p190
D
[zRPz]BAKARI MSELEMU v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 190 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Maina J

May 26, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 3 OF 1981 E
Flynote
Criminal practice and Procedure - Hearing - Case disposed of in the absence of the accused - No evidence that accused absconded deliberately - Whether conviction proper F and just - Criminal Procedure Code, s. 202A [now s. 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985].
-Headnote
The appellant was released on bail after the close of the prosecution case. He did not G appear on the several occasions when the case was fixed for hearing and he was reported sick and admitted in hospital. Then on one occasion, both the appellant and his sureties being absent, the prosecutor alleged that the appellant was hiding in the forests. On that basis the court ordered the appellant's arrest and subsequently, proceeded to H convict and sentence him in absentia on the basis that he had absconded. This was done under s. 202A of the Criminal Procedure Code [now s. 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985]. There was no evidence that the absence of the appellant was deliberate or I that he and his sureties were informed of the date the case was to be called for hearing.
1985 TLr p191
MAINA J
Held: A trial court can proceed to dispose of a case in the absence of the accused A person under s.202A of the Criminal Procedure Code only where such absence of the accused cannot be explained at all and his whereabouts are completely unknown; as the appellant in this case had been reported sick and there was no evidence that he had B absconded deliberately, the conditions for proceeding in his absence were not met and therefore he was convicted without being given an opportunity to defend himself.
Case Information
Appeal allowed. C
No cases referred.
Judgment
Maina, J.: This is an appeal by Bakari Mselemu against conviction for cattle theft and the sentence of five years imprisonment. D
The prosecution evidence was briefly as follows: On 28.12.1979 a cow was stolen from the complainant, P.W.I Lenyika Kiseri at Sindeni village in Handeni district. About one week later, on 5.1.1980, PW3 Rashidi Suberi met the appellant who said he E had a cow which he wanted to sell. But since Rashidi knew that complainant's cow had been stolen he passed on the information to PW2 Idi Saidi who also informed the complainant. A trap was arranged. On the day the appellant had agreed to meet Rashidi, the complainant who was not known to the appellant turned up and Rashid pretended to buy the cow. The appellant told them that the cow was his property. He F was arrested on the spot and he was sent to the Chairman PW4 Ramadhani, to whom the appellant alleged he had bought the cow for a friend. There was also evidence that the appellant had, on 5.1.80, sent the cow to PW5 Mohamed for safe keeping and that on 6.1.80 when the appellant was trying to sell the cow to PW3 Rashid, the said Mohamed (PW5) was also present. G

At the close of the prosecution case, the appellant was released on bail. He did not appear on the date fixed because as the record shows, his surety reported that the appellant was sick and admitted in hospital. On two subsequent occasions when the case was called for hearing the appellant was absent, and reported sick. On 17.3.1980 H the appellant's brother one Mohamed Mselemu informed the Court that the appellant was still sick and admitted at Kwamkono Mission Hospital. The record does not show whether the appellant's surety was present. On the subsequent occasion when the case was called for hearing both the appellant and his sureties were present and on 15.4.1980 I the prosecutor told the court that he was informed that the appellant was sleeping in the forests. It is on this basis that the court ordered for the appellant's arrest and finally the A court proceeded to pronounce judgment and sentence on the basis that the appellant had absconded.

It is obvious from the record that the appellant was not given an opportunity to defend himself. Although the Magistrate did not specify under what section of the law he decided to proceed with the case in the absence of the appellant it seems he had in mind B section 202A of the Criminal Procedure Code which states:

> Where in any case to which section 202 does not apply, an accused person being tried by a subordinate Court fails to appear on the date fixed for the continuation of the hearing after the C close of the prosecution case or on the date fixed for the passing of sentence, the Court may, if it is satisfied that the accused's attendance cannot be secured without undue delay or expense, proceed to dispose of the case in accordance with the provisions of section 210 as if D the accused, being present had failed to make a statement or adduce any evidence...

In my opinion, a trial Court can only proceed to dispose of the case in the absence of the accused under section 202A of the Criminal Procedure Code where the accused is E absent for no known reason or where his whereabouts are unknown. The appellant in this case was reported sick and admitted in hospital. The surety reported this to the Court and the appellant's brother made the same report. When the Court decided to F issue a warrant of arrest, the appellant and his surety were absent. It is not known whether the surety had been informed of the date the case was to be called for hearing. I think the possibility that the appellant and his surety were unaware of the date the appellant was required in Court cannot be ruled out because when that date was fixed they were not in Court. G

The prosecutor's statement to the Court that the appellant was sleeping in the forests was not based on any evidence. The warrant of arrest issued was not returned to the Court with the necessary endorsement by the officer who was required to execute it. I have not seen a copy of that warrant in the original file. It is therefore difficult to believe H that the appellant who was sick and admitted in hospital had left hospital and disappeared in the forests. It was therefore, in my opinion wrong on the part of the trial Magistrate to proceed with the case in the absence of the appellant, under the circumstances. There is absolutely no evidence that he had absconded or that he deliberately failed to appear in Court on the I date he was required. The appellant was convicted without being given an opportunity A to defend himself.

1985 TLR p193
The learned State Attorney conceded that the proceedings were a nullity and he did not support the conviction. With respect, and for the reasons which I have already given above, I agree with the learned State Attorney. The conviction is quashed and the B sentence is set aside.
I have considered whether I should order a retrial. The appellant was, according to the record of the District Court, committed to prison on 14th October 1980 when he started serving the sentence of five years imprisonment. He has already served two and a half years imprisonment. With the normal prison remission further imprisonment will cause C injustice to the appellant.
It is ordered that the appellant be released from custody forthwith unless he is otherwise lawfully held.
D Appeal allowed.
1985 TLR p193
E
[zRPz]MESCO LUCAS v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 193 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Maina J

May 11, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 4 OF 1981
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Alternative verdicts - Accused charged with F housebreaking but convicted of malicious damage to property - Whether conviction is proper - Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 181 - 188.
-Headnote
The two appellants were charged with housebreaking and stealing a radio cassette but G they were only convicted of stealing the radio; the first accused, however, was also convicted of malicious damage to property. The convictions were based on circumstantial evidence. The finding for malicious damage to property was based upon a H finding that the first accused was a resident of the house from where the radio was stolen and he stole it without having to break in or out of the house, but he intentionally damaged the rear door to make it appear that someone else had broken the door and stolen the radio.

Held: The powers of convicting a person for an offence other than the one charged are I laid down by statute and they do not include a power to return a verdict of malicious damage to property for a charge of housebreaking; A
1985 TLR p194
MAINA J
Case Information
Order accordingly.
Case referred to:
1. R. v Anyandwile Mwaikusa [1968] H.C.D. 270 B
A.T. Akaro, for the Republic.
Judgment
Maina, J.: These two appeals are consolidated. The two appellants, C Hamisi Ally and Mesco Lucas, who I shall refer to respectively as the first and second accused, were charged at the Tanga District Court of two counts: house breaking and stealing. The learned trial magistrate acquitted them of house breaking but he convicted them of stealing and sentenced each of the accused to three years imprisonment. The D first accused was, in addition, convicted of malicious damage to property and he was sentenced to six months imprisonment, to be served concurrently with the sentence for the second count.
The evidence adduced by the prosecution showed that the first accused was staying at E the house belonging to PW.1 Philip Kitenge. On 17.6.1980, PW.1 Philip Kitenge left the first accused at the house and there was a Radio which was Government property which PW 1 Kitenge was using in the course of his duties as a Ward education coordinator. In the evening when Kitenge returned to his house the Radio cassette was not there. The first accused too was missing. Kitenge found out that the rear door of his F house was broken. There was further evidence that on the morning of 17.6.80 - the day the Radio Cassette was stolen, PW3 Idi met the two appellants on a bicycle and on that bicycle there was a bundle wrapped in a sack. About two days later, on G 19.6.1980, PW4 Hassan met the second accused carrying a bundle wrapped in a sack and the witness saw the second accused putting gave a Radio Cassette to the second accused. Then the witness went away leaving the appellants together.
The appellants, in their memoranda of appeal have repeated the defence which they gave H at their trial. The evidence against them was wholly circumstantial and it was considered carefully by the learned trial Magistrate. There could be no doubt that the first accused disappeared from the complainant's house and that was on the morning of 17.6.1980 when the theft was committed. The fact that the first accused was seen riding a bicycle that morning and carrying a bundle which later was found to contain the stolen I Radio Cassette leaves no reasonable doubt that bundle in a house which the witness knew had been abandoned for a long time. This A made PW4 Hassan suspicious. He interrogated the second accused who claimed that he saw a Radio Cassette. The second accused was arrested and finally PW1 Philip Kitenge identified the Radio Cassette as the one stolen from his house.
1985 TLR p195
MAINA J

The first accused denied the charge and also denied that he ever travelled with the B second accused on a bicycle on the morning of 17.6.80. The second accused said that he received the radio - cassette from the first accused. He called a witness, DW3 Daudi who claimed that he saw the first and second accused on 17.6.1980 and that the first C accused doubt the first accused was the thief. There was absolutely no reason to disbelieve PW3 Idi who met the first accused riding that bicycle. As far as the second accused is concerned, apart from the evidence of PW.3 Idi, there is the evidence of PW4 Hassan who saw the second accused only two days after the theft, carrying the stolen Radio cassette in a sack. The evidence by DW3 Daudi was unbelievable. There D was no reason for the first accused to pick a radio cassette form the ground and hand it over to the second accused.

On the evidence on record, there could be no doubt that the two appellants were properly convicted of stealing the Radio cassette and since the stolen property belonged E to the Government, the sentence of three years imprisonment was the minimum under the law.

The learned district magistrate held that the first accused had intentionally damaged the rear door of the complainant to fake a breaking, and so he convicted the first accused of malicious damage to property. I would agree that since the first accused was resident of F that house, he stole the Radio Cassette without having to break in or out of the house. It is clear that he pushed the rear door with some force and caused damage to it so as to make it appear that someone else had broken the door and stolen the radio-cassette. But the point is whether there was any justification for the trial Court to substitute a G conviction for malicious damage to property when the charge was housebreaking. The powers of returning a conviction for an offence other than that charged are expressly laid down in section 181 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It certainly cannot be said that any of these section empowers a Court to substitute a conviction for malicious damage H for housebreaking. In R. v Anyalwile s/o Mwaikusa [1968] H.C.D. No.270 the accused was charged with house breaking but the Court convicted him of malicious damage. In quashing the conviction, Georges, C.J. (as he then was) said:

> There are no specific provisions empowering a Court to convict under section 326 (1) where a I charge has been laid under Section 294 (1). It cannot be said either that section 294 (1) creates an offence consisting of A several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes the offence created under Section 326 (1).

With respect, I agree that the Court cannot convict a person of malicious damage to B property when the charge is one of housebreaking because there are no specific provisions in the Criminal Procedure Code giving the Court powers to do that. I would therefore, for these reasons quash the conviction for malicious damage and the sentence of six months imprisonment imposed on the first accused is set aside. The appeals are, C save as indicated above, dismissed.

D Order accordingly.

E

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v KARIMU TAIBALE 1985 TLR 196 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

April 21, 1982
CRIMINAL REVISION 6 OF 1981
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Defective charges - Charge citing wrong offence and wrong or non-existent provisions of the law - Effect. F Criminal Practice and Procedure - Pleas - Plea of guilty to a defective charge - Whether the plea is unequivocal
-Headnote
The accused person pleaded guilty to a charge which cited wrong as well as non-existent provisions of the law. He also admitted the "facts as charged". A plea of guilty was G entered by the trial court and the accused was convicted accordingly. But the particulars of the charge disclosed various distinct offences under different laws. On revision:
Held: The charge was so fundamentally defective that the accused could as well have H been admitting different offences in the same count and his plea cannot be taken to have been unequivocal;
Cases Information
Conviction quashed. I
No cases referred.
1985 TLR p197
SISYA J
A.T. Akaro, for the Republic. A
Judgment
Sisya, J.: This Court has, in the past, expressed desirability for Magistrates to go through the charge before admitting the same and reading it over to the accused. The idea behind this exercise being that if a clearly defective charge, i.e. a B charge with wrong sections of the law or faulty wording, is presented then the prosecutor may be given a chance to rectify the mistakes before the same is read over to the accused. Needless to say the exercise will serve no purpose if, in the case of errors, no correction is made.
In the matter currently before me the accused, Kalimu Taibale, appeared before the C Senior Resident Magistrate, Tanga, to answer to a charge containing three counts charging him with driving a defective motor vehicle on the public road; failing to carry a certificate of registration; and using a motor vehicle on the public road without a valid certificate of insurance, respectively. The first two are offences under the Road Traffic D Act, no. 30 of 1973. The section and law cited in respect of the third count in the charge as laid is section 6 A (1) and (2) of the Finance Act, No. 12 Part X1/73. The charge is shown to have been "Okayed" by the learned Senior Resident Magistrate.

I have gone through the laws but I have not been able to lay my hands on or set my eyes E upon the law cited in the charge. The Finance Act which was passed in 1973 is actually no. 10 and not 12 of 1973. Part X1 thereof deals with amendments to the Tobacco (Imposition of Tax) Act 1970. Act no. 12 of 1973 is the Acquisition of Shares (Aluminium Africa Company Limited) Act, 1973). Neither of these talks of or has F anything to do with certificates of insurance for motor vehicles.

The wording of the offence in count three is also a misnomer. The correct and proper wording or title of the offence is failure to display on a motor vehicle a certificate of insurance issued in respect of such motor vehicle. This is an offence under Regulation 3 G (1) of the Road Traffic (Display of Certificate of Insurance) Regulations 1974, GN 119 of 1974.

As I think has sufficiently been demonstrated, the offence, section and law quoted in count 3 are, thus, all wrong. That, however, as I will now endeavour to show, is not the end of the story. Forgetting, for the moment, the section and law quoted in the count H under querry the wording of the offence, namely using a motor vehicle on the public road without a valid certificate of insurance against third party risks at all. If so then this is an offence under section 4(1) of the Motor Vehicle Insurance Ordinance, Cap. 169 and one would have expected the accused to have been charged under that law. He was I not. However upon reading the particulars of offence it becomes apparent that the accused actually did have a certificate of insurance on his motor vehicle but the same had expired six months previously. This A is an offence under Regulation 3(2) of GN 119 of 1974. Still forgetting about the section and law quoted in count three, the offence and particulars of offence supposedly in respect of one and the same offence are, actually, in respect of two separate and distinct offences: One, failure to insure a motor vehicle against third party risks - this is B disclosed in the title of the offence - and, two, displaying a certificate which has ceased to be valid - this is clear from the particulars of offence.

The record of proceedings shows that when he was called upon to plead the accused simply replied, "True" to the third count as he is also shown to have done in the other first two counts. A plea of guilty was then entered and when the Public Prosecutor was C called upon to narrate the facts he is recorded to have said, "Facts as charged".

The question that has occupied my mind in this exercise in revision is whether the accused's plea was proper. The learned State Attorney, Mr. Akaro, submitted that it is not unequivocal. I respectfully agree. For reasons already disclosed I am of the firm D view that the charge in count three was defective and that the said defect was fundamental. In so far as the accused could have been admitting two different offences in the same count his plea cannot, under any stretch, be said to have been unequivocal. E

For these reasons the subsequent conviction in count three cannot be allowed to stand. The same is hereby quashed and the sentence passed thereon is, accordingly, set aside. The fine of Shs.600/= which was paid should now be refunded to him.

Mr. Akarro, the learned State Attorney, urged the Court to order a retrial. I, however, F do not feel disposed to make such an order as the matter is now, as it were, almost stale. I, however, leave it to the Public Prosecutor to make up his mind whether or not to proceed with the matter.

Finally, this Court wishes to emphasize, once again, the desirability of magistrates to go G though the charge before admitting the same. Such an exercise should not be done perfunctorily but diligently and for a purpose.

H Conviction quashed.

1985 TLR p199

A

[zRPz]EMMANUEL MOLLEL v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 199 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga

Judge Sisya J

September 29, 1982

(PC) CRIMINAL APPEAL 6 OF 1981

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Assessors - New set of assessors proceeding with a B case commenced with other assessors - Whether court properly constituted.

-Headnote

The appellant was found guilty before a Primary Court and was convicted accordingly. C The finding was by a unanimous decision of the presiding magistrate and two assessors. But the two assessors who sat with the magistrate at the time of convicting had taken over in the hearing of the case from another set of assessors who had heard the case from beginning but did not continued with it to the end. The presiding magistrate, however, was the same from the beginning to the end. D

Held: There is no provision under the law which allows the substitution of a fresh set of assessors for the original set in the same case and the substitution made in this case rendered the court which finally disposed of the case not properly constituted. E

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Case referred to:

1. Dominico Simon v R. [1972] H.C.D. 152 F

W.R. Mramba, for the appellant.

Judgment

Sisya, J.: The short point of law raised in this appeal is, whether G when the Mjesani Primary Court of Muheza District resumed the trial of the appellant on 12.5.81 with a new set of assessors the trial Court was lawfully constituted.

The record of proceedings of the trial Primary Court shows that trial of the appellant commenced on 30.4.81 with E.P. Magula, Esq. Primary Court Magistrate, presiding H and Rashidi Rajab and Bayagayana Pyugula as assessors. Two witnesses including the complainant herself gave evidence. The case was then adjourned to allow the complainant time to bring her witness, one William Msengi, who, for unknown reasons had failed to turn up on that day. When the trial resumed on 12/5/81 Mr. Magula was I still the presiding Magistrate. The assessors this time, however, were Kassimu and Enock Mkumbo. Only one witness, William Msengi, gave evidence and the complainant closed her case. The appellant elected not A to say anything whereupon, after summing up, the Court proceeded to judgment. The appellant was found guilty by a unanimous decision of the presiding Magistrate and the "assessors" and he was convicted as charged and he was sentenced to pay shs.1,000/= fine or to go to jail for six months. He paid the fine. B

The appellant who was represented by learned Counsel, Mr. Mramba, raised the same point, among others, through his same advocate on first appeal before the District Court. In dealing with this point the learned District Magistrate, on first appeal, directed himself in the following terms, and I quote from his judgment: C

> It is true that the assessors were changed but after considering the circumstances of this case I find that the error caused no failure of justice in determining the case as I feel that the decision was just and fair as if the assessors were the same. D

With respect, in arriving at the conclusion which he did in this case I do not feel that the learned District Magistrate proceeded on the right premise. The material question before him on first appeal, and now on second appeal, is not whether or not justice was E done but rather whether the Court which finally disposed of the case was, in law, properly constituted. The situation in the instant matter regarding the position of assessors in the Primary Court is almost on all fours with that in the case of Dominico Simon v R. [1972] H.C.D. 152. In that case, just like in the instant matter, the two F original assessors were replaced by others who did not hear all the evidence presented during the course of the trial. El-Kindy J. (as he then was) expressed the view that the fresh set of assessors could not be substituted for the original set of assessors. The position remains the same even if the accused person did not raise any objection at the G time of substitution. With this I most respectfully agree. It must be conceded that there is no provision in the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1963, covering such an eventuality as the one before this Court in the present appeal. I am, nevertheless, by far, not persuaded that it is proper for a fresh set of assessors to be substituted for the original one. If this were to be permitted then some valuable material - the demeanour of both accused and H witnesses included - would easily escape their knowledge and consequently affect the just determination of the case.

In the Simon case quoted above El- Kindy J. declared the proceedings a nullity. With respect, I hold that that was the only matter. This is because when the Court of first I instance resumed the trial on 12.5.81 and the presiding Magistrate sat with a new set of two assessors the Court was not lawfully constituted, properly so-called. This appeal succeeds on this A ground. The conviction is quashed and the sentence is set aside. It is noted that the appellant paid the fine. It is hereby ordered that the same shall now be refunded to him.
1985 TLR p201
I have left the question of trial de novo open to whoever between the Republic and the complainant may be interested to pursue the matter further. B
This appeal succeeds to that extent indicated.
C Appeal Allowed
1985 TLR p202
D
[zRPz]REPUBLIC v SEMPETO VINCENT 1985 TLR 202 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

April 21, 1982
CRIMINAL REVISION 8 OF 1981
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Reconciliation - Power of the court to order E reconciliation in lieu of penalty - Whether court may order reconciliation in respect of a felony - Criminal Procedure Code, s. 134.
-Headnote
The accused, aged 12, pleaded not guilty to a charge of doing grievous harm contrary to F s. 225 of the Penal Code. On the day fixed for hearing, the court, endeavouring to foster reconciliation under s.134 of the Criminal Procedure Code, ordered stay of the proceedings pending the outcome of the reconciliation. In the end, the court ordered G payment of sh.300/= as compensation by the accused's father. The High Court revised the proceedings.
Held: (i) The offence of doing grievous harm contrary to s. 225 of the Penal Code is a H felony and therefore it is outside the scope of those offences in respect of which the court may promote reconciliation in lieu of a penalty;
(ii) the court had no power to promote reconciliation in this case and therefore the trial court magistrate, his good intentions notwithstanding, acted in excess of I jurisdiction;
1985 TLR p202
Case Information
Order accordingly. A
No cases referred to.

Editorial Note: The Penal Code (Amendment) Act, No. 14 of 1980, s.2 abolishes the distinction between felonies and misdemeanours 'in the Penal Code and any other written B law." It is provided that any reference to a felony or misdemeanour shall be construed as a reference to "an offence". However, this provision has some practical problems. The learned judge makes no reference to this provision in this case. It will also be noted for example that s.388 of the Penal Code provides for punishments of accessories after C the fact to felonies and s. 389 provides for punishments of accessories after the fact to misdemeanours. Many other examples can be given to illustrate that the distinction between felonies and misdemeanours is still of practical significance. D

Judgment

Sisya J.: On 16.2.81 the accused person, Sampeto s/o Vincent, a twelve year old school boy, appeared before the District Magistrate, Pangani, and pleaded not guilty to a single count charging him with doing grievous harm contrary to section 225 of the Penal Code. Hearing was then fixed on 4/3/81 "in a juvenile Court". E

Hearing did not proceed as scheduled. Instead the learned District Magistrate made the following order and I quote from the record of proceedings:

Order: The Court having explained to the parties the procedure of reconciliation u/s 134 of F C.P.C. The parents have undertaken to go back and try to be reconciled. So the trial is suspended pending the outcome of the conciliation. Case to be mentioned on 25/3/81 and accused's bail extended.

On the date fixed for mention the complainant's father is recorded to have informed the G District Magistrate that he and the mother of the accused had failed to agree on the amount payable to him, apparently, as compensation. He wanted sh.300/= whereas she was prepared to pay only a third of that. Finally, the learned Magistrate made the H following order:

Sh.300/= to be paid by the accused's father within a period of 3 months from now and should he fail to do so the amount shall be levied from him in the normal manner. I

1985 TLR p203

SISYA J

Section 134 of the Criminal Procedure Code under which the learned District Magistrate A purported to act provides as follows:

134. In the case of proceedings for common assault or for any other offence of a personal or private nature not amounting to felony the Court may, if of the opinion that the public interest B does not demand the infliction of a penalty, promote reconciliation, and encourage and facilitate the settlement, in an amicable way, of the proceedings on terms of payment of compensation or other terms approved by the Court, and may thereupon order the proceedings to be stayed. C

The offence of doing grievous harm contrary to section 225 of the Penal Code is a felony and therefore it is outside the scope of section 134 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Although, on my part, I have no doubt whatsoever as to the learned District D Magistrate's good intentions in his endeavour to foster reconciliation between the parties to this proceeding I, however, regret to say, which I must, that in doing what he did the learned District Magistrate acted in excess of jurisdiction. He simply had no power to promote reconciliation in this case where the offence allegedly committed is a felony. E The end result is that all his exercises towards reconciliation were a nullity ab initio and they are hereby so declared. The same are quashed and set aside.

I take judicial notice of the fact that the District Magistrate concerned, Mushumbusi Esq., has since ceased to exercise jurisdiction in Pangani District by reason of transfer to F another District. In the event it is hereby directed that the record should now be sent back to Pangani with directions that the matter proceeds before any other Magistrate of competent jurisdiction according to law.
G Order accordingly.
1985 TLR p204
A
[zRPz]AHMED ISMAIL v JUMA RAJABU 1985 TLR 204 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

August 22, 1982
CIVIL CASE 19 OF 1981
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Jurisdiction - High Court District Registries -Suit instituted at B Tanga Registry while the defendant resides, and the cause of action arose within the area of the Arusha Registry - High Court Registries Rules, 1961.
Family Law - Customary Law - Marriage under customary law - Cohabitation and public admission of responsibility for pregnancy - Whether enough to constitute marriage under C customary law - Law of Marriage Act, 1971.
Torts - Damages - Child's education cut short due to pregnancy - Whether parent can claim damages. D
-Headnote
The plaintiff made Maimuna, the defendant's daughter who was a student at a Teachers' Training College, pregnant. As a result her College training was cut short. The plaintiff admitted responsibility for the pregnancy and was consequently made to pay some money at an elders' baraza which convened and proceeded according to local customs E and traditions. Maimuna remained with her parents at Same until four months after delivery. She then joined the plaintiff at Tanga and they lived together and cohabited for six months after which she, along with the baby, went back to her parents. Some weeks later, the defendant refused to allow Maimuna to re-join the plaintiff insisting that his F daughter was not married to the plaintiff. The plaintiff then filed this suit in the High Court at Tanga, where he resides, claiming damages for enticement of his spouse. The defendant counter-claimed Shs. 3,500/= as "damages for loss of expectation" and expenses incurred on his daughter's education until it was cut short. He also raised a G preliminary point that the plaintiff ought to have filed the suit at the Arusha Registry of the High Court which is the registry for the area in which he, the defendant, was resident and the cause of action arose.

Held: (i) According to the High Court Registries Rules, 1961, original proceedings in H the High Court may be instituted in the Registry at Dar es Salaam or in the District Registry for the area in which the cause of action arose or the defendant resides; as Same District, the district where the cause of action arose and the defendant resides is within the area for which the District Registry is Arusha, the suit should have been filed at I the Arusha Registry;

1985 TLR p205

SISYA J

(ii) a marriage certificate, or an entry in a marriage register is prima facie A evidence of marriage and s.43(5) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971, imposes a duty on parties to a customary law marriage to register the marriage; the plaintiff, who claims to be married to the defendant's daughter under customary law, failed to perform that statutory duty, and he also failed to give any evidence to show that he was ever married as he claims; B

(iii) making an unmarried girl pregnant and marriage under customary law rites are two different and separate issues which must be viewed and treated as such; the mere fact that the plaintiff made the defendant's daughter pregnant does not mean that he was married to her;

(iv) cohabiting, as the plaintiff did with the defendant's daughter and with the C defendant's acquiescence from December 1980 to June 1981, is, in the absence of evidence of marriage, not sufficient to raise any presumption of marriage under s.160(1) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971;

(v) maintaining and educating a child is always the responsibility of the parent D and in educating his daughter the defendant was simply discharging his duty; as such there is no loss upon which his counter-claim can be based;

Case Information

Order accordingly. E

No. cases referred to.

Judgment

Sisya, J: In this action the Plaintiff 'Son-in-law' is seeking to recover F from his respondent 'father-in-law" Shs 21,000/= representing damages for enticement of his spouse, plus costs of the suit. The defendant has denied liability to pay the said damages on the ground that his daughter is and/or was, at the material time, not married to the plaintiff. He has also counter-claimed the sum of shs.3,500/= being G "damages for loss of expectation and School expenses which occurred when the plaintiff made the defendant's daughter pregnant and unable to proceed with her studies".

Para 7 of the written statement of defence raises a preliminary point. It reads and I quote. H

7. That the cause of action arose at Makanya in Kilimanjaro Region in the High Court Registry of Arusha and not Tanga.

It is common ground that the defendant resides at Makanya in the Same District of I Kilimanjaro Region; that the alleged marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant's daughter was solemnised at Makanya; and even the wrong complained of was committed at Mkanya. It is only the Plaintiff A who resides at Amboni in the District and Region of Tanga:

5. As regards para 7 the Plaintiff states that the High Court has jurisdiction all over Tanzania save the area under High Court of Zanzibar. B

True. There is only one High Court of Tanzania whose area of jurisdiction extends throughout Tanzania save, of course, the isles. The Plaintiff, however, missed the point. Rule 5 (1) of the High Court Registries Rules, 1961, as amended by Rule 3 of the High Court Registries (Amendment) Rules, 1963, provides as follows: C

5. (1) Original Proceedings in the Court may be instituted either in the Registry at Dar es Salaam or in the District Registry (if any) for the area in which the cause of action arose of where the defendant resides. D

In terms of Rule 2 of the Principal Rules "the Court" here means the High Court. Rule 3 reads: E

In addition to the Registry at Dar es Salaam there shall be a District Registry at such places and for such areas as are set out in the schedule to those Rules ..... F

The said Schedule, as deleted and replaced by the High Court Registries (Consolidation) Notice, Government Notice 194 of 1974, the place of registry for all areas in Tanga Region is Tanga whereas the place of registry for all areas in the Kilimanjaro Region including, if I may say so, Makanya is Arusha. It, therefore, goes without saying that the proper place for suing in the instant matter is, of course, Arusha. By filling the suit at G Tanga the Plaintiff, therefore, erred. I am, however, satisfied that the error has not occasioned any miscarriage of justice

Without prejudice to the foregoing the case for the Plaintiff is that towards the close of 1979 he fell in love with one Maimuna, the defendant's daughter. It is not disputed that H the said Maimuna who, incidentally, did not give evidence at the trial for either or both parties was then pursuing a teaching course. The two of them engaged themselves in premarital intercourse and this resulted in her becoming pregnant. According to the Plaintiff she then urged him to pay dowry to the defendant so that the two of them could marry. Eventually a Baraza was convened at which the defendant agreed that his I daughter should marry the Plaintiff. He, i.e.

defendant, demanded a cow as dowry. The Plaintiff, however, paid out cash shs. 300/= A which represented a cow meant for Maimuna's mother according to the tradition and custom of the Wapare, a tribe to which both parties belong. He was also required to pay and he, in fact, paid shs.50/= as Mazoka and a further shs.173/= for clothing his bride. Thereafter the defendant told him that he could pay the rest of the dowry by B instalment. He, i.e. the defendant, also agreed to continue to accommodate Maimuna until the end of her pregnancy. He, however, announced that Maimuna was the Plaintiff's wife.

The Plaintiff told the Court that in August, 1980 his 'wife', Maimuna, delivered. He paid C for all the delivery expenses. Maimuna and the child, however, continued to stay at the defendant's home until December, 1980, when the Plaintiff went and collected her and took her to Tanga where they cohabited peacefully. While at Tanga their child contracted a disease which defied treatment by local medicinemen. Eventually, upon D agreement between the Plaintiff, his wife, Maimuna, and the Plaintiff's mother, one Asha Sekondo (PW5) who happened to be staying with them at the material time, Maimuna took the child back to Makanya for further management by traditional medicinemen. She left on 10/6/81. While at Makanya she opted, with the Plaintiff's consent, to stay at E her parent's home, i.e the defendant's place. The Plaintiff stated in his evidence that he followed his family at Makanya a couple of weeks later. On his arrival he found his child in good health. It had improved. He then told the defendant that he was going back with his wife. The defendant turned down this proposal. He added that at most the Plaintiff could take along with him his own child only whereas he, i.e. the defendant, F himself remained with his own, i.e. Maimuna. The matter was referred to the local elders but the defendant remained adamant. He insisted that each one of them, that is to say the Plaintiff and Maimuna, should go his or her own way. He, i.e. the defendant also demanded a refund of shs.3,500/= which he claimed represented the cost of educating G Maimuna up to the time the Plaintiff made her pregnant. Eventually, the Plaintiff brought up this suit.

The defendant, in his defence, told the Court that his daughter, Maimuna, was dismissed from the Teachers' Training College, Tabora, where she was undergoing training to became a teacher because she was pregnant. Upon making enquiries he discovered that H the plaintiff was responsible for the said pregnancy. He made effort to contact the Plaintiff through the latter's father, Ismail Mshihiri, and uncle, Earnest Mshihiri. Eventually the Plaintiff responded to his elders' call. When questioned he conceded that he was responsible for Maimuna's pregnancy. The defendant then demanded what is I traditionally known as Ng'ombe wa Mama (a head of cattle meant for the pregnant girl's mother). He also demanded a refund of all the monies which he had spent in educating Maimuna and A which he assessed at shs.3,500/=. According to the defendant the proceedings of the meeting which was held in connection with this matter were recorded on a piece of paper which was tendered as Exh.P.3.

One Rajab Juma (DW4) said that he was the one who recorded the first portion thereof. B The rest was recorded by Earnest Mshihiri (PW2). PW2, however, denied this.

According to the said piece of paper the defendant was claiming from the Plaintiff compensation for deflowering his daughter as well as making her pregnant, traditionally known as Nyeku and Mazoka. He also demanded a refund of what he had spent in C educating his daughter. The amount was then shs.1,750/=.

The defendant told the Court that what he had actually said was that he was prepared to accept shs.1,750/= only if the Plaintiff was prepared to pay there and then. D

The Plaintiff paid shs.350/= representing Mazoka and the girl's mother's cow. Maimuna delivered in August, 1980, while she was still at her parent's home. No maintenance for Maimuna and her child was forthcoming from the Plaintiff. The defendant told the Court that round about the same time his wife fell sick. It then became increasingly difficult for E him to maintain his sick wife as well as Maimuna and her child. He talked over this problem with his own father and eventually the two of them agreed that the plaintiff should be made to maintain his child. According to the defendant the quickest and simplest way of putting this into effect was to permit Maimuna to take the infant to its F father, the plaintiff, which he did. Maimuna then went and, as it were began to cohabit with the plaintiff. The two of them were not married but, so that defendant said, they were simply living together to look after their child. Later Maimuna returned with the child and informed him that the child was not enjoying good health. Subsequent G diagnosis revealed that the child was a victim of malnutrition. The defendant resumed maintenance of the child but later complained to the plaintiff's relatives. It was then decided that the plaintiff should make monthly remittances of shs. 70/= towards the maintenance of the child. This was done for two months only and the plaintiff defaulted again. H

The defendant told the Court that finally he summoned the Plaintiff's father and told him the plaintiff's short-comings. He also reminded him of his claim for a refund of expenses for Maimuna's education. Plaintiff's father advised the defendant to refer the matter to Court. He then filed a suit against the plaintiff in Makanya Primary Court. He tendered the I official receipt on which the requisite Court fees were collected as an exhibit, Exh."I". A The said suit was subsequently withdrawn after the plaintiff had pledged to marry Maimuna. The next thing the defendant saw in connection with the matter was Court summons and a copy of the plaint in this suit.

Both the plaintiff and the defendant called witnesses on their respective sides. Those B who gave evidence on the plaintiff's side, including his uncle, PW2, and mother, PW5, gave evidence to the effect that the marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant's daughter was solemnised under customary law. The evidence of the defendant and his witnesses is to the effect that no such marriage was or has ever been solemnised C between the said two persons.

It is common ground that the marriage between the plaintiff and Maimuna, that is if there is any, was not registered. No marriage certificate was tendered in evidence and chances are that none was ever issued. It is, likewise, now common knowledge that no D dowry in any form, or any part thereof, was and/or has been paid by the plaintiff.

The second issue as drawn is whether there was any marriage between the plaintiff and the respondent's daughter. The onus of proof here, naturally, lies on the plaintiff. It must be conceded that under the Law of Marriage Act both payment or nonpayment of E dowry and failure to register the marriage do not effect the validity of marriage; see Section 41(a) and (h). The defence raised by the defendant in the instant case is, however, not that the marriage was not registered and/or that no dowry has ever been paid but, as aforesaid, rather that there has never been any marriage between the F supposed spouses at all. In terms of section 55 a marriage certificate or an entry in any register of marriages is prima facie evidence of marriage.

Section 43, and in particular, sub-section (5) imposes a duty on parties to a marriage contracted according to customary law rites to register the marriage with the registrar or registration officer G concerned. The plaintiff obviously did not perform this duty and no reason has been given for his failure to do so. Now those who, deliberately or otherwise, fail to perform their duty imposed by the law itself and/or fail to follow the laid down and accepted procedures can only have themselves to blame when things turn against them. I have had the chance of seeing and observing the plaintiff during the several occasions he H appeared before me at the hearing of this suit. He is by no means a raw citizen. One wonders, therefore, what reasons he has for failing to register the marriage, that is to say, if, indeed, there was any solemnised. As the position stands what evidence, it may be asked, is there to show that he and Maimuna ever underwent a ceremony of marriage I albeit according to customary law rites? Of course, in fairness to the plaintiff, there is his own word of month as well as the word of mouth of his witnesses to the effect that the said marriage A was solemnised. On the other hand there is also the word of mouth of the defendant and of an almost equal number of his witnesses to the effect that no such marriage was ever solemnised and that the ceremonies that were performed were in connection with the pregnancy which the defendant's daughter had outside wedlock and for which the B plaintiff was responsible. On my part I see no reason why I should prefer the evidence of the plaintiff and his witnesses to that of the defendant and his witnesses. The end result is that the plaintiff has failed to prove that he and the defendant's daughter, Maimuna, contracted any marriage according to customary law rites. C

It seems to me that the plaintiff and his witnesses are confusing the issue of making an unmarried girl pregnant and that of marriage under customary law rites. These are two different and separate issues and they must be viewed and treated as such. The mere fact that a man has made a girl pregnant does not, ipso facto, mean that he is married to her. D

There are another factors in the instant case which satisfy me the more that no marriage was indeed contracted between the plaintiff and the defendant's daughter. One of this is that it is common ground that dowry is an accepted and essential element of customary law marriage among the Wa-Pare. It is in evidence, which stands uncontradicted and E unshaken, that the minimum amount of dowry payable among the Wa-Pare is four head of cattle and two goats. The plaintiff and all his witnesses, his own mother (PW5) and Mshenga (PW2) included, miserably failed to pronounce how much dowry was demanded let alone paid. It is inconceivable that talks could be had on marriage without F mention of how much dowry was being demanded or payable. This is far and apart from the mode and style of payment. Another factor is that it sounds inconceivable to me that after contracting the alleged marriage the plaintiff could have deemed it fit to allow his "wife" to continue staying at her own parent's home. The plaintiff himself said G that it was because she was pregnant. Indeed she was, so what? It is possible that the plaintiff may have felt that it was inadvisable for Maimuna to travel to Tanga in the condition in which she was. If so then, why, it may be asked was she not told to move to his own parent's home? It is in evidence which is undisputed and which I accept that H the defendant and the plaintiff's parents are neighbours. In fact they live under the same cell of ten houses! Upon contracting the marriage, if indeed it was, then surely Maimuna could have comfortable walked over to the home of the plaintiff's parents and the plaintiff's mother (PW5) would have been available if need arose for her assistance. Finally, even when Maimuna returned to Makanya with the sick child, she stayed at the I defendant's place. Again, I see no justification at all for this arrangement other than proof of lack of any marriage contract A between the plaintiff and Maimuna.

As aforesaid the defendant told the Court that he permitted Maimuna to go and cohabit with the plaintiff simply to ensure that the latter maintained his child. In all the circumstances this explanation sounds plausible. The tendency among many young B men of today to ignore their off spring living with their mothers, and away from themselves, is a fact too notorious to escape judicial notice of this Court. It must, therefore, be found as a fact, which I do, that from December, 1980 to June 1981 Maimuna did cohabit with the Plaintiff. In the absence of evidence of marriage the period is, unfortunately, too short to raise any presumption of marriage under section C 160(1) of the law of Marriage Act, 1971.

As a parting shot, although the plaintiff looks fairly knowledgeable and recalled several dates, he did not mention the date he claims Maimuna married him. None of his witnesses too disclosed the date of marriage. For the aforegoing reasons and on the D evidence adduced in this case I am far from persuaded on a preponderance of probabilities, that there ever was any customary law marriage, or marriage of any other form, between the plaintiff and the defendant's daughter. This is enough to dispose of all the plaintiff's claims against the defendant because the former has no right to damages for E enticement even if I were to assume - which of course I do not - that the defendant did, indeed, allure his daughter, Maimuna into leaving and/or abandoning the Plaintiff.

I now turn to the counter claim. By it the defendant seeks to recover the money which he spent on Maimuna's education. The basis of such a claim is that the claimant has F suffered some loss. It must be conceded that in the normal circumstances maintenance of infant children is the responsibility of the father. It is also the duty of the father to educate his children. By educating Maimuna up to the level which she had reached the defendant was simply discharging his duty under the law. Whatever happened to G Maimuna the fact of the matter remains that she is the defendant's child and she remains with the education or qualification which she managed to attain. The concept of loss upon which the defendant can properly base his claim does not, therefore, arise. For these reasons it goes without saying that the counter claim too is without basis and it also therefore fails. H

In the final event both the suit and the counter claim fail and the same are hereby dismissed. Each party will, however, bear his own Costs.

I Order accordingly

A

[zRPz]K. HASSANI v KITHUKU AND CHALI 1985 TLR 212 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

August 22, 1983
CIVIL CASE 22 OF 1981
Flynote
Torts - Defamation - Allegations of witchcraft uttered before villagers who believe in B witchcraft - Whether defamatory.
Torts - Defamation - Slander - Allegations of killing by witchcraft and possessing C instruments of witchcraft - Whether actionable per se.
Torts - Damages - Amount prayed for without showing any special damage suffered - General damages.
-Headnote
The plaintiff claimed damages for slander. It was alleged,and proved ex-parte, that the first defendant, claiming to have occult powers which enabled him to spot out and D emasculate those practising witchcraft, invaded the plaintiff's compound accompanied by a large crowd of villagers. He then announced to the crowd that the plaintiff had witchcraft powers and instruments with which he was killing the residents of the village, and that the food he used to prepare and serve his guests as Maulid celebrations actually E consisted of goats' excreta and baboon and hyena meat.
Held: (i) The allegations that the plaintiff practised witchcraft, uttered, as they were, to a crowd of villagers who believe in witchcraft, are the kind of words likely to expose the plaintiff to ridicule, hatred or contempt, and are calculated to injure him in his social F standing in his community; they are therefore defamatory;

(ii) while slander is not always actionable per se, the slandering in this case is so actionable because of the imputation that the plaintiff killed human beings, a crime punishable with death, and that he possessed instruments of witchcraft, a crime punished G by imprisonment under the Witchcraft Ordinance;
Case Information
Judgment for the plaintiff
No cases referred to. H
Judgment
Sisya, J.: This is an action for slander. It has been brought by the plaintiff, Karoyo Hassani, but prosecuted by his son, Juma Kumba, to whom he has donated a power of attorney on the I grounds of his own old age, ill health and personal discomfort of attending the Court. A

The plaint is, to say the least, crude and home made. At most it could be the work of some aspiring bush lawyer. The donee of the power of attorney, i.e. Juma Kumba, himself appears, without being derogatory to him, to be as raw as the plaint. I chose to B accommodate him and his plaint all the same because his position is, to my mind, a true representation of the hard facts of our life and also because the said plaint discloses a cause of action. I fully subscribe to the view that substantive justice should never be sacrificed for mere technicalities of the procedural law. The words complained C of and which the first and/or second defendant uttered in relation to the plaintiff were to the effect that he, i.e. the plaintiff, was wizard; he has a two legged pot in his house which turned into snakes and bit people to death; he also has a drum which was made of the genitals of a woman and its drum stick was a male organ; and that the rice and meat D which he prepared and served guests whenever he celebrated 'Maulid' at his house were actually excrements of goats and meat of baboons, respectively.

Both respondents were duly served with copies of the plaint but they failed and/or neglected to file written statements of defence. The hearing, therefore, proceeded and/or was conducted ex parte. E

Three witnesses gave evidence on the side of the plaintiff. These were Juma Kumba (PW1), a neighbour of his, Msafiri Martin (PW2), and his i.e. Juma's older brother, Hamisi Kumba (PW3). Their story is the same and it reveals a somewhat disgusting and absolutely nauseating episode that befell the plaintiff at his own house on 22/8/81. From F the totality of their evidence it becomes clear that the first defendant is a native medicineman who claims to possess occult powers which enable him to spot out and emasculate those who practice witchcraft. During the relevant period he was moving from village to village, apparently on the invitation of the local residents and/or, to the G very least, with the connivance of the local village governments. According to PW3, the second defendant was first accused's companion.

On 22/8/81 during the morning hours the first accused was accompanied by a noisy multitude which was chanting "To Karoyo's!" The said multitude comprised males and H females, young and aged. Those in the frontline bore a coffin like object. They also carried with them some pails of water. Msafiri (PW2) saw and heard the crowd as it passed near his house at 6.00 a.m. He was then cleaning his teeth. Thinking that there was a funeral he, eventually, decided to and did follow the crowd. Juma (PW1) was I then at his father's house with his father, the plaintiff, when he heard and saw the crowd approach.

1985 TLR p214

SISYA J

The evidence of Juma and Msafiri, which stands unopposed, shows that when the crowd A arrived at the plaintiff's house the plaintiff got out of his house. According to Juma he followed suit because he was worried as he did not know where the 'dead body' was being taken to. The first defendant then ordered that the 'coffin' should be carried round the plaintiff's house fourteen times. This was done and then it was placed at the B plaintiff's door. At that stage the plaintiff querried as to what it was that they were doing to him. The first defendant silenced him by telling him to keep quiet, adding that he would see the outcome. Thereafter, the first defendant told girls who were in the crowd to go inside the house and urinate in the pails. This they did and then their urine was C sprinkled at every corner in the room as kafara, i.e. for, as first defendant announced, neutralising purposes. After that the first defendant turned to the plaintiff and began to undress him in public. The plaintiff asked again as to what wrong he had done. The first D defendant's response was as at first: He silenced the plaintiff and added that he would see the outcome. The first defendant removed the plaintiff's cap, coat, kanzu and shoes. It seems the first defendant wanted to continue stripping the old man of his complete attire. According to Hamisi (PW3), who already had had a confrontation with the defendants in another village a few days earlier, he arrived at the plaintiff's house at the time when the latter was resisting having his shirt removed as well. Although he saw the E local village chairman, one Omari Hassani, and the local militiamen among the crowd the sight of the plaintiff being harassed by the first defendant embittered him. Fearing that he may, finally, be forced 'to take the law into his own hands' he left the place immediately and proceeded to the District Headquarters at Muheza and reported the F matter to the District Party and Government officials.

Juma and Msafiri told the Court that after the first defendant had succeeded in having the plaintiff's shoes removed he, i.e. first defendant, then addressed the plaintiff within their hearing, as follows: 'You are finishing Maramba residents. I will talk about your G wizardry so that the people may know about it well. The water and urine which the girls spilled in your house is kafara so that whatever you have inside there is neutralised'. After that the first defendant turned to the crowd and began to announce to them that there was a pot in the house which contained witchcraft; that there was a second pot H with two edges in the bed room; that the said two edges used to turn into vernomous or deadly snakes which bit people; that there was a small drum in the roof which was made of female genitals; that its drum stick was a penis; and that its purpose was for summoning all witches and wizards. After his address the first defendant turned to the plaintiff and asked him if he, i.e. first defendant, should take out all these instruments of I witchcraft from the house. The plaintiff's reply was to the effect that since his permission had hitherto not been sought A there was no point in doing so at that stage. He added that the first defendant could proceed to do whatever he wanted to do. The first defendant said that he would not take the said things out on that day because circumstances were not favourable. He added that he would do so on the following day. B

Both Juma and Msafiri told the Court that the first defendant also told the plaintiff that the rice which he was preparing and feeding people during Maulid celebrations was no rice at all; it was goats' droppings, and the meat was not beef at all but meat of baboons and hyenas. According to Msafiri at this stage he became disgusted and he left and C went away. He, i.e. Msafiri, told the Court that he used to celebrate Maulid festivals at the house of the plaintiff whom he described as a respectable old man.

Juma (PW1) told the Court that the plaintiff urged that whatever could be done should be done there and then. The first defendant, however, remained adamant and insisted D that he would take out the things, presumably for display and consequent destruction, on the morrow at 8.00. He, i.e. the first defendant, then announced to the crowd to disperse and return on the following day. Juma went on to tell the Court what happened to the plaintiff later that very evening, in the night, and on the following day. The said E facts, as also do some of those already narrated here in above, reveal and/or are relevant to the tort of trespass - both to the person and to property - which is not the subject matter, or a part thereof, of this instant proceeding. I, therefore, do not see the point of recounting them. Suffice it to say that had he so wished and/or so acted the F plaintiff could have properly brought up a suit for trespass as well in the present suit.

Be it as it may, as aforementioned, this suit was not contested. The defendants may have left it to their professed occult powers (or was it the girls' urine which was sprinkled in the plaintiff's house?) to neutralise the plaintiff's desire to seek legal redress and/or G protect them from the requisite law suit. If so then they must be living in a fools' paradise. As the position stands the evidence on the plaintiff's side remains unchallenged and uncontradicted and I have absolutely no reason whatsoever to disbelieve it.

I framed out four issues in this case and these are: H

1. Did the defendants, jointly or severally, utter the words complained of?
2. Are the said words defamatory of the plaintiff?
3. If they are, are they actionable per se? I
4. To what reliefs are the parties entitled?

1985 TLR p216

SISYA J

On the first issue I am satisfied, and I so find, that the first defendant did utter the words A complained of. There is, however, no evidence to show that the second defendant was present on 22/8/81 at the plaintiff's house. Hamisi (PW3) mentioned that he saw him, i.e. second defendant, in the company of the first defendant but that was at Daluni and not Maramba. The time was also different in that, according to PW3, that was B about five days before the incident at the plantiff's house. Juma (PW1) also talked of the first accused's companion or student. He, however, did not mention the name of the second accused. In the final event I find that the first defendant uttered the said words alone and I find this as a fact. C

Now, turning to the second issue, I entertain no doubt whatsoever in my mind that the words which the first defendant said of the plaintiff and which the latter has complained of are defamatory of the plaintiff. They are the type of words that are likely to expose the plaintiff to hatred, ridicule or, contempt or calculated to injure him in his social D standing in his community and I find this as a fact. There can be no doubt that these words were spoken to a crowd of villagers who believe in witchcraft - a scourge of our rural as well as part of the urban communities. Needless to say, this was done maliciously as the first defendant knew or had reason to know of the falsity of his words. In short, I answer the second issue in the affirmative. E

To put it briefly slander is or consists of defamatory matter merely spoken. Under common law, except in four cases, the plaintiff in an action for slander must prove special damage. The four exceptional cases are: F

1. Where the words impute to the plaintiff the commission of a criminal offence punishable by imprisonment.
2. Where they impute to him a contagious or infectious disease.
3. Where they are spoken of him as a professional or businessman.
4. Where they impute unchastity or adultery to a woman or girl. G

In the instant matter the words impute to the plaintiff the killing of human beings, of malice aforethought, which is a crime which carries capital punishment. The words also imputed to the plaintiff the possession of instruments of witchcraft, to wit, the two pots, H the drum made of a female organ and its male-organ drum stick, which is a criminal offence punishable by imprisonment under the Witchcraft Ordinance. The words that the plaintiff was practising witchcraft on his fellow residents of Maramba and that he had instruments for that purpose in his house will therefore, support an action for slander, I without special damage and I so hold. This disposes of the third issue.

1985 TLR p217

Finally, I now turn to the issue of the reliefs to which the parties are entitled. In his plaint A the plaintiff prays for Shs.25,000/= which he does not classify as general or special damages. The evidence produced does not show that the plaintiff suffered any special damage as a result of the slanderous words. In Winfield and Jolowicz on Tort, 9th B Edition, at page 249 and 250 the learned authors stated that "where there is no need to prove special damage in defamation, the plaintiff can recover general damages for the injury to his reputation without adducing any evidence that it has in fact been harmed, for the law presumes that some damage will arise in the ordinary course of things. It is enough that the immediate tendency of the words is to impair his reputation". This C passages describes the correct position at law on this aspect of the case so tersely that I, with gratitude, adopt it as my own.

Taking into account the fact that the plaintiff was, as described by Msafiri (PW2), a respectable old man who used to celebrate Maulid in accordance with his religious D beliefs and also the number of specific but false and malicious allegations made by the first defendant and, in all the circumstances of the case I am of the considered view that the amount of Shs. 25,000/= as general damages will meet the justice of the case.

In the final result I give judgment for the plaintiff as prayed with regard to the first E defendant. No case, however, has been made out against the second defendant. The claim against him is consequently dismissed. The first defendant will bear the costs of this suit.

F Judgment for the plaintiff.

1985 TLR p217

G

[zRPz]MWINYIHAMISI KASIMU v ZAINABU BAKARI 1985 TLR 217 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga

Judge Sisya J

December 31, 1985
(PC) MATRIMONIAL APPEAL 3 OF 1982 H
Flynote
Family Law - Divorce under Islamic Law - Dissolution of marriage under Islamic Law - Wife obtaining divorce by self - redemption (khului) - Law of Marriage Act, 1971, s.107(3).
Family Law - Separation of spouse - Whether court may compel a spouse to live with the I other - Law of Marriage Act, 1971, s.40.
1985 TLR p218
Islamic Law - Divorce - Dissolution of marriage under Islamic Law - Wife obtaining divorce A by self- redemption (khului). - Law of Marriage Act, 1971, S.107(3).
-Headnote
The parties were married under Islamic Law and after living together for over 13 years, the respondent petitioned for divorce. The Primary Court dismissed the petition and her B appeal to the District Court was also dismissed. But the District Court magistrate advised that because theirs was an Islamic marriage, the respondent could still obtain divorce by redeeming herself (kujikhului) by returning the dowry which the appellant had paid and that this would be in accord with s.107(3)(c) of the Law of Marriage Act, C 1971. Subsequently the respondent applied to the court to redeem herself as advised, and her application was allowed ex-parte. The husband brought this appeal to the High Court.
Held: (i) In order for the court to make a finding that a marriage is irreparably broken D down and to grant a decree of divorce as per s.107(3) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971, it must be proved firstly, that the parties were married under Islamic Law, secondly, that a Marriage Conciliation Board has certified its failure to reconcile the parties and, thirdly, that subsequent to the Board's failure to reconcile them one of the E parties has done an act which, under Islamic Law, is sufficient to terminate the marriage;

(ii) in order for s.107(3) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971, to come into play, all the three things must be proved to the satisfaction of the court hearing the petition for divorce, and they must be proved before judgment is entered, not after; F

(iii) while it was established to the satisfaction of the court before judgment was entered that the parties were married according to Islamic Law and that the Conciliation Board had failed to reconcile them, the third requirement, that any one of them had done G an act sufficient to terminate the marriage under Islamic Law, was not so established;

(iv) even if the act of the respondent redeeming herself by returning the dowry could constitute an act to terminate marriage under Islamic Law, that act was legally ineffectual in this case because it was done after the court had pronounced judgment; H

(v) as s.140 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971, does not empower any court to compel a wife to live with her husband or a husband with his wife, an application for an order to compel the respondent to return to the appellant cannot be entertained; I

Case Information
Order accordingly
1985 TLR p219
SISYA J
No cases referred to. A
L.G. Haule, for the respondent.
Judgment
Sisya, J.: The appellant and the respondent went through a B ceremony of marriage under Islamic rites on 13th November, 1967. During their thirteenth year of peaceful cohabitation a rift appeared in the union. After making unsuccessful attempts at reconciliation the respondent, eventually, went to Usambara Primary Court of Tanga District and petitioned for divorce.
The petition which the respondent filed in the Court of first instance is not dated, nor C does it show the date of presentation or filing. From an endorsement (the first one in the record of proceedings) in the case file it appears that the latter was done on 25/9/81. Be it as it may the grounds raised by the respondent in her petition for dissolution of the D marriage were two fold, namely cruelty both mental and physical, inflicted by the appellant on her and wilful neglect on the part of the appellant. In support of her claim the respondent who, incidentally, was the only witness on her side swore that there was no understanding of each other between herself and the appellant; that the appellant used to attack her, presumably physically, often; i.e. the appellant, used to pour abuses on her E including accusations that she was having incestuous relations with her own brother; and that he was not providing her with necessaries of life.
The appellant contested the petition and he denied the respondent's allegations. According to him he did everything that he could to please the respondent but the latter F would not care a jot. He provided her with necessaries of life. The only exception was when the respondent deserted the matrimonial home. According to the appellant he suspected that there was a man behind the misunderstandings in their marriage. He concluded by saying that he, nevertheless, was in love with his wife, the respondent.
By a majority decision the Court of first instance found that the respondent had failed to G prove her allegations and consequently establish that the marriage between herself and the appellant had irretrievably broken down. The Court, therefore, dismissed the petition. Aggrieved, the respondent appealed to the District Court.
The learned Principal District Magistrate on first appeal directed himself in the following H terms and I quote from his judgment:

> Nimechunguza kwa makini ushahidi wote uliotolewa mbele ya Mahakama ya Mwanzo, Mwomba rufaa (i.e. the respondent in this instant appeal) hakuthibitisha hata moja ya sababu I alizotoa na kutaka kuachana.

1985 TLR p220
SISYA J

The learned Principal District Magistrate dismissed the respondent's appeal. However, A before proceeding to do so the learned Principal District Magistrate had the following to say and, again, I quote from his judgment:

Kwa kuwa ndoa yao lilifungwa kwa mujibu wa dini ya Kiislamu, na kwa kadiri mambo yalivyo, B Mwomba rufaa anaweza kupata talaka kwa kujigomboa (khului) kama ilivyo katika kifungu cha 107(3)(c) cha sheria ya ndoa. Mpaka atakapofanya hivyo ndoa yao inabaki pale pale haiwezi kuvunjwa. C

Judgment was delivered by the learned Principal District Magistrate on 26/6/82 in the presence of the respondent but in the absence of the appellant.

As can be gleaned from the record of proceedings of the District Court, on 13/9/82 the respondent appeared before the learned Principal District Magistrate and made an D exparte application to redeem (kujikhului) herself by returning the dowry which the appellant had paid. The respondent is recorded to have stated before the learned Principal District Magistrate that she had looked for her husband, the appellant, but failed to trace him. The learned Principal District Magistrate then, with respect, E perfunctorily, ordered as follows:

Amri: Kwa kuwa jitihada za kumtafuta mumewe zimeshindikana na mke hana budi kuachwa kwa hali ya mambo yalivyo kufuatana na sheria za kiislamu. Mke ajigomboe kwa kulipa F khului inayolingana na mahari yaliyotolewa ambayo ni shs. 150/=. Fedha iwekwe amana mahakamani hadi mume atakapojitokeza.

Despite the allegation that the appellant was nowhere to be seen he came to know about G the order. He was dissatisfied and hence this present appeal to this Court.

In his reasons of appeal the appellant asserts that it is not true to say that he was nowhere to be seen and quotes that all process from the Court of first instance were being served on him without difficulty. The appellant complains that the learned Principal H District Magistrate erred on the issue of redemption (khului) and he further urges the Court to make an order against the respondent for restitution of conjugal rights.

This being a second appeal it can, therefore, only be entertained on a point or points of law. The learned Counsel for the respondent, Mr. Haule, argued that both Courts I below erred in failing to find that the marriage between these parties had irreparably broken down because the appellant is a A poor man and, therefore, he cannot afford to support the respondent and further that there was evidence of abuses and insults uttered by the appellant which amounted to cruelty. All these are matters of fact for which, with the greatest respect to the respondent's advocate, this Court has no room for consideration at this time. B

On the other hand there are points of law involved in this appeal and these centre on the interpretation of section 107(3)(c) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971, and on the issue of Redemption (Khului). It seems to me that the learned Principal District Magistrate C completely missed the import of s. 107(3)(c). One of the reasons why he did so is, I think because he read Paragraph (c) separately from the rest of sub-section (3). In fact sub-section (3) of section 107 must be read together and not in parts in order to comprehend the same. To begin with section 107 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971, deals with evidence that a marriage has broken down. Sub-section (3) reads: D

(3) Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that -

(a) the parties were married in Islamic form; and

(b) A Board has certified that it has failed to reconcile the parties; and E

(c) subsequent to the granting by the Board of a certificate that it has failed to reconcile the parties, either of them has done any act or thing which would, but for the provisions of this Act, have dissolved the marriage in accordance with the Islamic law, the Court F shall make a finding that the marriage has irreparably broken down and proceed to grant a decree of divorce.

There are three conditions here all of which must be satisfied before sub-section three can be invoked or before it comes into play. G

Taking the present case as an example, it was established that the parties were married in Islamic form. This satisfies Paragraph (a). That is, however, not the end of the story. We move to the next stage and that is Paragraph (b). A Bakwata conciliatory Board did certify in this instance that it had failed to reconcile the parties. Mention should H perhaps be made that the certificate under reference here is the same as that mentioned in section 101 of the Marriage Act. Then, finally, comes the paragraph under querry, i.e. Paragraph (c). What it, i.e. Para (c), stipulates is that if,after the Board has already issued a certificate that it has failed to reconcile the parties, one of the parties - in this I instance, say, for example, the appellant - does an act or thing which under Islamic law is sufficient to terminate the marriage - for example, he utters or issues a talaka or talaks sufficient to A dissolve the marriage under Islamic law - then the Court hearing the petition is enjoined to make a finding that the marriage has broken down irretrievably and to proceed to grant a decree of divorce. Evidence of performance of the offending act or thing must, invariably, be given at or during the hearing of the petition or putting it B broadly, before judgment and not thereafter. If 'Khului' is an act or thing capable, perse, of dissolving a marriage under Islamic law then, in this instance, the respondent should have done it at any time after the certification by the Board and before judgment. She did not do so. Instead she did it after judgment had already been delivered. C Assuming - which is the most I can do in this matter at the moment - that 'Khului' is one of the acts or things envisaged by Paragraph (c) then, for reasons already given, the one under querry is legally ineffectual, and I so hold.

I have already pointed out above that evidence of the act or thing mentioned in Para (c) must be adduced at the hearing of the petition. In this connection it is open to me to D hold, which I do, that the paragraph (quoted supra) in which the learned Principal District Magistrate advised the respondent to redeem herself under section 107(3)(c) is a serious misdirection in law. Suffice to say that the order of the Court below (dated 13/9/82) allowing the respondent to redeem herself is without any basis in law. The E same cannot be allowed to stand and it is hereby quashed. The end result is that the appellant and the respondent are, in law, still husband and wife. The sh.150/= which were deposited per receipt No.548673 of 13/9/82 should now be refunded to the respondent. F

Para 4 of the appellant's reasons of appeal reads, and I quote:

4. Naiomba Mahakama Kuu itoe Amri ya Mwomba (Sic) rufaa (mke wangu) arudi nyumbani kwangu. G

Section 140 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971, reads:

140. No proceeding may be brought to compel a wife to live with her husband or a husband with his wife... H

This should be sufficient to dispose of Para. 4 of the appellant's reasons of appeal. Much as this Court sympathises with him his plea on this point cannot be entertained as the same is contrary to dictates of the law. I

1985 TLR p223

All in all this appeal succeeds to the extent indicated. It also fails as indicated. I make A no order as to costs.

Order accordingly.

1985 TLR p223

B

[zRPz]RAMADHANI SALIM MTEI v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 223 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga

Judge Sisya J

January 23, 1984

CRIMINAL APPEAL 8 OF 1982 C

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Arms and Ammunition - Suspension of a D licence to own a pistol - Duration of suspension order not specified - Arms and Ammunition Ordinance, Cap. 223, s.31(3).

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Natural justice - Forfeiture of pistol to the Government - Order of forfeiture made without hearing the appellant - Arms and E Ammunition Ordinance, Cap. 223, s.31(4).

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted on his own plea of guilty to a charge of failing to observe safe custody of his pistol, contrary to ss.29(1) and 31 of the Arms and Ammunition F Ordinance, Cap. 223. He was a businessmen based in Arusha and a holder of a pistol legally issued out to him. He had come to Tanga on business and secured a room at a guest house. Before retiring to bed, he requested the guest house care taker on duty to keep the pistol for him in safe custody; but he retained the magazine with eight rounds of G ammunition. The basis of the charge was that in the circumstances he ought to have deposited the pistol at the Police Station. He was sentenced to pay a fine of Shs.500/=. The trial court also suspended his licence to hold a pistol indefinitely, and ordered forfeiture of the pistol itself, as well as its magazine and the eight rounds of ammunition. H He appealed against the order of forfeiture.

Held: (i) The law requires that when a court orders suspension of a licence or permit to hold a firearm under s. 31(3) of the Arms and Ammunition Ordinance, the period of suspension should be specified; consequently the trial magistrate's order was erroneous I for failing to specify the period of suspension;

SISYA J

(ii) the power to order forfeiture of arms under s.31(4) of the Arms and A Ammunition Ordinance is a discretionary power which must be exercised judicially, for failing to call upon the appellant to advance reasons why his pistol, magazine and rounds of ammunition should not be forfeited, the order of forfeiture was made in breach of natural justices;

(iii) in view of the appellant's clean record, the absence of mala fides in his act B of surrendering the pistol to the guest house care taker, and the reasons advanced in the appeal, the order of forfeiture does not remain with much merit;

Case Information

Appeal allowed. C

No cases referred to.

Judgment

Sisya, J.: This appellant was charged with and he was, on his own plea, convicted of the offence of failing to observe safe custody of arms and ammunition D contrary to sections 29(1) and 31 of the Arms and Ammunition Ordinance, Cap. 223, and he was sentenced by the learned Resident Magistrate, Tanga, to pay a fine of Shs.500/= or, in default of payment thereof, to go to jail for a period of one month. The learned Resident Magistrate also suspended his, i.e. appellant's, licence, indefinitely and E ordered forfeiture of his pistol, its magazine and eight round of ammunition which, incidentally, were the offending objects in the case.

The appellant paid the fine. This appeal is against the order of forfeiture only. F

The established facts of the case show that the appellant was, prior to his conviction in this matter, holder of a pistol (Exh. P1) which was legally issued out to him as per Exhibit P3. On 21/1/82 he came to Tanga from Arusha on business. He had his pistol with him and its magazine which carried eight rounds of ammunition. On his arrival in Tanga he G secured a room at Unguja Lodging. Later at about 9.00 p.m. before he retired to bed he requested the guest house's care taker then on duty, one Saidi Ali to keep the pistol for him in safe custody. The appellant, however, retained the magazine and the rounds of ammunition. The handing over was in writing but the relevant piece of paper was not, H as it ought to have been, tendered by the Public Prosecutor who prosecuted the case in the Court below. Thereafter Said Ali went and reported the matter to the Police. Eventually the appellant was arrested and subsequently brought to justice.

In making the orders against which the appellant is now appealing I the learned Resident Magistrate observed that the appellant ought to have deposited the A pistol at the Police Station; that it becomes particularly dangerous when firearms fall into the hands of unauthorised persons; and that observance of regulations, safeguards against increasing armed robberies.

SISYA J

In his petition of appeal which is home made the appellant avers that the learned B Resident Magistrate erred in making the orders of suspension and forfeiture by not taking into account the following factors, that is to say, he was holding the pistol lawfully; that he has held the said pistol since 1974 without breaching any regulation; that as a businessman he needs the firearm for his own protection as well as for the protection of C "tourists" whom he deals with in the course of his business; that he put up at Unguja Lodging after failing to secure accommodation at any one of the big hotels in Tanga; that he was new in Tanga; that he felt insecure at the said Unguja Lodging, that the course of action which he pursued was the best that he could in the circumstances, and that the D offence which he committed was more technical then anything else.

The learned Resident Magistrate derived his powers of suspension from subsection (3) of section 31, Cap. 223, which lays down thus, and I quote: E

(3) Any person so convicted who holds a licence or permit under this Ordinance shall be further liable to forfeiture of his licence or permit or to suspension thereof for such period as the Court thinks fit. F

As can easily be observed this provision of the law is couched in mandatory language. The only option left upon to the Court is to either order forfeiture of a licence or permit, whichever may be the case, or to order suspension thereof. In the instant matter the learned Resident Magistrate opted, as he was perfectly entitled to do, to order G suspension of the appellant's licence.

The law, however, requires that the period of suspension be specified. The learned Resident Magistrate did not do so. By failing to specify the period of suspension the learned Resident Magistrate, therefore, erred. This error, however, is to my mind, H curable on appeal. It is my considered opinion that the period between the date of conviction and order, i.e. 28/1/82, to date is enough to meet the justice of the case.

I now move to the order of forfeiture of the firearms. The relevant provision of the law here is s.31 (4) Cap.223, as amended by Act No. 50 of 1964. It reads: I

(4) All arms or ammunition and any equipment or tool used in the manufacture and A assembling of such arms or ammunition, and any vessel, in respect of which an offence is committed, is liable to be forfeited to Government.

The power to order forfeiture under this provision of the law is discretionary. Needless B to say, such discretion must be exercised judicially.

As can be gleaned from the record of proceedings of the instant matter it becomes apparent that the appellant was not called upon to advance reasons why his pistol, magazine and round of ammunition should not be forfeited to the Government. Such a C move is very important because failing which may be tantamount to denying the appellant his right of being heard on this particular point and consequently resulting in the breach of natural justice. Had the learned Resident Magistrate called upon the appellant to address him on the question of forfeiture I am minded to believe that the latter would D have advanced the reasons which he has now done in his petition of appeal. And had the learned Resident Magistrate heard and considered these reasons it is doubtful if he still would have made the order of forfeiture. This doubt, as the law requires, must be resolved in favour of the appellant. E

I have myself considered the reasons advanced by the appellant as conscientiously as I could and, in all the circumstances of the case, I find them plausible. The appellant has a clean record and he, readily, pleaded guilty when the charge was read out to him. I take this as a sign of contrition. I see no sign of mala fides in his act of surrendering his pistol to the guest house attendant for safe custody, the inherent dangers that exist in such a F move notwithstanding. To my mind it was more of a tactical error than anything else.

All in all, for the reasons given I am satisfied that this appeal has merit and it is hereby allowed. The order of forfeiture is quashed and set aside. It is further directed that subject to licensing regulations the pistol (Exh. P.1), the magazine and eight bullets G (Exh.P3) shall now be restored back to the appellant.

Appeal Allowed

1985 TLR p227

A

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v JOSEPH MATEO 1985 TLR 227 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga

Judge Sisya J

March 7, 1983

CRIMINAL REVISION 15 OF 1982

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Assault causing grievous harm - Three complainants B injured in the same assault - Whether constituting one or three separate offences.

-Headnote

The accused was charged with assault causing grievous harm contrary to s. 225 of the C Penal Code but the facts showed only the offence of unlawful wounding and the trial court convicted him accordingly. But, although three people were injured in the same assault, the accused was charged with and convicted of only one count. On revision by the High Court.

Held: Even though there may have been only one assault, the fact that three different D complainants were injured thereby constitutes three separate and distinct offences which ought to have been charged in three separate counts and a separate conviction entered for each count.

Case Information

Order accordingly. E
No cases referred to.
Judgment
Sisya, J.: The accused appeared before the learned Principal District F Magistrate, Pangani, and pleaded not guilty to three counts of doing grievous harm contrary to section 225 of the Penal Code. After a full trial the learned Principal District Magistrate held that since the three complainants in each count were injured in the same assault the accused ought to have been charged with a single count and not three. He therefore, entered a verdict on only one count. G With respect, this was wrong. Although, indeed, the evidence shows that the injuries were inflicted by the accused on the complainants in the same assault each impact on every one of the complainants was, however, in law, a separate and distinct assault or offence. The same could not, therefore, properly be charged in a single count. H
In this judgment the learned Principal District Magistrate found that the established facts proved the offence of unlawful wounding and not grievous harm. This, I hold, is correct in respect of all the three complainants. The nature of injuries sustained by the I complainants did not amount to grievous harm as defined by the law. As aforesaid the learned Principal District Magistrate then entered a single conviction under section 228 of the Penal Code in count one and proceeded to pass a single sentence A thereon. This was wrong. In exercise of my powers in revision and, on my evaluation of the evidence, I find the accused guilty not as charged but guilty of unlawful wounding contrary to section 228 of the Penal Code in counts two and three and I convict him accordingly.
1985 TLR p228
Regarding sentence, the accused was sentenced to three months imprisonment in count B 1. I also sentence him to three months imprisonment in Counts two and three. Sentences on count 1, 2 and 3 to ran concurrently.
C Order accordingly
1985 TLR p228
D
[zRPz]JEREMIAH SHEMWETA v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 228 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

September 23, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 24 OF 1981
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Judgment - Content of judgment - Judgment making E reference to mere existence of evidence without analysing its weight in reaching at the decision - Criminal Procedure Code, s. 171(1) [now s. 312(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985].

Criminal Law - Theft - Doctrine of recent possession - Appellant found in possession of a F stolen motor concealed in a bag left by a friend - No evidence of knowledge of what the bag contained - Whether guilty of theft.
Evidence - Credibility - Prosecution witnesses giving inconsistent accounts - Doubts created to be resolved for the appellant's benefit G
-Headnote
The appellant and another, who was second accused in the trial court and did not appeal, were jointly charged with and convicted of stealing by servant contrary by to ss. 265 and 270 of the Penal Code. The charge was founded upon the doctrine of recent possession in that the appellant was found in possession of a stolen electric motor, H concealed in a large bag. The appellant's story was that the bag was left at his house by a friend, the second accused, the day before and he did not know what the bag contained until immediately after arrest. The Police found him and the second accused fled upon seeing the Police. The three Police officers who effected the arrest gave rather I conflicting accounts of the story, some confirming and others controverting the appellant's version. In his judgment A the trial court magistrate merely made reference to the existence of some evidence in support of conviction without singling out any pieces of evidence and evaluating them to show how such evidence supports the decision he reached. On appeal: B

Held: (i) By merely making plain references to the evidence adduced without even showing how the said evidence is acceptable as true or correct, the trial court magistrate failed to comply with the requirements of s. 171(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code C [s.312(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985] which requires a trial court to single out in the judgment the points for determination, evaluate the evidence and make findings of fact thereon;

(ii) there was no evidence of fraudulent intent or any falsity in the appellant's claim that he did not know what the bag contained, while there is uncontroverted D evidence to show that the appellant knew the second accused as a fellow employee and had no reason to be nosey with the latter's bag;

(iii) the discrepancies in the various accounts of the story by the prosecution witnesses give rise to some reasonable doubts about the guilt of the appellant; E
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
Cases referred to:

1. Kagaye Bundala v R. [1959] E.A. 900 F
2. Willy John v R. [1956] 23 E.A.C.A. 509
3. Desiderio Kawunya v R. [1953] 20 E.A.C.A. 281
4. Dnikerai Hamkrishan Pandya v R. [1957] E.A. 336

W.R. Mramba, for the appellant G
Judgment

Sisya, J.: This appellant, Jeremiah s/o Shemweta, and another, who has not appealed, were, jointly, charged with and convicted of the offence of stealing by servant contrary to section 265 and 270 of the Penal Code and they were H each sentenced by the learned Senior Resident Magistrate, Tanga, to five years imprisonment under the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972. Dissatisfied the appellant is now appealing to this Court.

The first ground of appeal in his petition of appeal drawn on his behalf by learned I Counsel, Mr. Mramba, is that the learned Senior Magistrate failed to deliver judgment according to the provisions of section 171(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. A

The said section 171(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code reads:

171-(1) Every judgment under the provisions of section 170 shall, except as otherwise expressly provided by this Code, be written by, or reduced to writing under the personal B direction and superintendence of, the presiding judge or magistrate in the language of the Court, and shall contain the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision, and shall be dated and signed by such presiding officer as of the date of which it is pronounced in Open Court. C

After giving a synopsis of the evidence adduced by both sides of the case, that is, the prosecution and the defence, the learned Senior Resident Magistrate then went on to direct himself in the following terms and I quote: D

From the foregoing evidence it is far from being in dispute that the first accused (N.B. Now the appellant) was arrested on the material date with the motor in question at his house. There is evidence showing that the first accused was arrested while trying to load the same onto a E wheelbarrow. There is also evidence showing that as the first accused was being arrested another person ran away from the Scene, the said person was seen by two of the three prosecution witnesses-Police Officers who went to the Scene the said person was said to be the second accused. There is evidence showing a motor had been stolen from the Kiwanda F cha Walemavu in Tanga a place where the second accused was working. After going through all the relevant evidence on record, (I) find that the evidence relied upon by the prosecution has proven its case against both accused person(s) and each is found guilty and convicted as charged. G

With great respect to the learned Senior Resident Magistrate the judgment did not, indeed, comply with the requirement of section 171(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. H It is not sufficient under the said section merely to make plain reference to the evidence adduced, for example, by merely saying that there is evidence showing this and there is evidence showing that, without even stating whether or not the said evidence is acceptable and/or accepted as true and/or correct. I

It may be argued that from his final decision in the case one may reasonably presume A that the learned Senior Resident Magistrate considered all the evidence before him and he, eventually, accepted the prosecution evidence in preference to the defence story. This argument may be viable only as far as the factual aspect of this matter is concerned. B It cannot be stretched beyond that because under the law it was incumbent upon the learned Senior Resident Magistrate, explicitly, to single out in the judgment the point or points for determination, evaluate the evidence and make findings of fact thereon and, applying the law, come to a decision in the matter. This the learned Senior Resident Magistrate failed and/or neglected to do. C

The question that now naturally, arises is, what effect does noncompliance with section 171(1) have on this instant matter. Fortunately, this type of situation is by no means new and the position was authoritatively made clear in the fifties by the precursor of the Court D of Appeal whose decisions are binding on this Court. The relevant authority was, with gratitude, quoted to me by Mr. Mramba, learned Counsel for the appellant. It is the case of Kagoye s/o Bundala v.R. [1959] E.A. 900. on appeal from the decision of the forerunner of this Court, i.e. H.M. Court of Tanganyika. In it the Court of Appeal had this to say at page 901: E

> Clearly the judgment did not comply with the requirements of section 171(1) of the Code ..... A noncompliance with section 171(1) does not, however, necessarily invalidate a conviction, and F this Court, therefore, had to decide whether the conviction was invalidated or whether it could hear and determine the appeal on its merits
>
> A similar question has come before this Court on a number of occasions, but we think that it G will be sufficient if we refer to the most recent reported decision, Willy John v R (1956) 23 E.A.C.A. 509, in which the principle to be applied is clearly stated. That was an appeal from the Supreme Court of Seychelles, and in its judgment the Court said at P.510: H
>
> There is no doubt that the judgment does not comply with the requirements of section 149(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, namely - 'Every such judgment shall, except as other-wise expressly 'provided by this Code, be written "by the presiding Officer of the I Court in the language of the Court, and shall contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and > the reasons for the decision, and shall be dated and signed by the presiding officer in A open Court and at the time of pronouncing it".

>
> The failure to date and sign the judgment is a mere irregularity which can be cured by the application of section 304 of the Criminal Procedure Code since the whole of the record of the B proceedings is in the hand of the trial judge and there was no prejudice to the appellant. But the failure to comply with the other requirements of the section is fatal to the conviction. In Desiderio Kawunya v Regina, (1953) 20 E.A.C.A. 281, this Court held that failure to comply C with the provisions of section 169(1) of the Uganda Criminal Procedure Code which is in similar terms to section 149(1) of the Seychelles Criminal Procedure Code will not necessarily invalidate a conviction if there is sufficient material on the record to enable the Appeal Court to consider the appeal on the merits. In this case there is clearly insufficient D material on the record to enable us to consider the appeal on the merits.

We have therefore to decide whether in the instant appeal there was or was not sufficient E material on the record to enable us to determine the appeal on its merits.

The ratio decidendi of the Bundala case is, therefore, to the effect that non-compliance with section 171(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code notwithstanding the appeal Court still has to decide whether the record of proceedings contains sufficient material for the F determination of the appeal on its merits. It is towards this goal that I now direct my mind. In doing so I am guided by the principle of law that sitting as the first appellate Court in this matter it is incumbent on me to treat the evidence adduced in the case as a whole to that fresh and exhaustive scrutiny which the appellant is entitled to expect in G order to ascertain if the conviction is justified and supported by the evidence, see Dnikerei Hamkrishan Pandya v R. [1957] E.A. 336. The case for the prosecution rested mainly upon the evidence of three witnesses, all Police Officers: These were Detective Sergeant Major Saidi Abadalla (PW1), Sergeant Major Hassan (PW2) and H one Amani Hassani (PW4) who simply described himself as a Police Officer without disclosing his rank, that is to say, if he has any. All these three witnesses for the Prosecution i.e. PW1, PW2 and PW4 are agreed that on the material day acting upon information received they proceeded to the house of this appellant whom they arrested as he I prepared to load the offending object in the case, to wit an electric motor, on to a A wheelbarrow.

The appellant in his defence did not dispute this. In fact he conceded the same although according to him the said motor had already been loaded in the wheelbarrow when the Police pounced on him and the motor. He, i.e. the appellant, however, gave an B explanation as to how the said electric motor which, incidentally, was tendered and admitted as real evidence at the trial and marked Exh "A" came to be in his house.

In his sworn statement in his own defence the appellant stated that on Good Friday in 1981, which was also the day on which he was arrested in connection with this matter, C he was visited by several persons at his house. One of the said visitors was the man with whom he appeared jointly in the Court below. The said person appeared as second accused and I will, throughout hereafter, continue to call him so, i.e. second accused.

The second accused arrived on a bicycle on which he had also carried a bag. The two D of them knew each other before; both of them being subordinate or junior employees in the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare Stationed here at Tanga. He, i.e. the appellant, was office attendant at the office of the Regional Welfare Officer - at the material time this was one Earnest Mtela (PW3) - whereas the second accused was E night guard at the Kiwanda cha Walemavu. As it was still during the morning hours they, i.e. the appellant and second accused, and another visitor, one Mussa Iddi Bakari (DW1) drank tea together. Later, as if to crown all, they all went out to imbibe some liquor. They went on foot, the second accused having left his bicycle at the appellant's F house. They drank liquor until 2.00 p.m. when they returned to the appellant's house. On their arrival the second accused pleaded that he was too drunk to ride his bicycle with the handbag and its contents on the carrier. He, therefore, asked and was permitted to leave the said handbag and its contents behind and collect them on the morrow. Unsuspecting and without any knowledge as to what the bag contained the appellant agreed. G

The appellant stated in his defence that on the following morning the second accused followed him at his place of work and demanded his luggage. Two of them then proceeded to the appellant's house. On the way the second accused hired a wheelbarrow which was being pushed by two boys. At his house the appellant opened H the door and handed over the bag to the second accused. The latter put it in the wheelbarrow. At the same time the Policemen came whereupon the second accused took to his heels and fled. The Policemen then opened up the bag which, incidentally, is actually a big handbag and in it was found an electric motor, Exh. A. I
1985 TLR p234
SISYA J
The appellant's story that there was a wheelbarrow which was under the management of A two persons was confirmed by the three Police Officers who went and arrested the appellant, i.e. PW1, PW2, and PW4. According to PW1 the second accused was not present when the appellant and the two wheelbarrow managers were walking towards the appellants house, where Exh.P."A" was admittedly kept. The impression that one B may derive from this piece of evidence is that the appellant must be the person who hired the wheelbarrow. This was denied by the appellant who, as aforesaid, stated that it was actually the second accused who hired it.
Although it is in evidence on the prosecution own side that it was the same wheelbarrow C and its two managers who were hired to take the motor, Exh.A, to the Police Station and that they did do so, the names of the two persons who pushed the wheelbarrow were not disclosed nor were they, or either of them, called as witnesses in the case. The end result is that the only evidence available on as to who hired the wheelbarrow is that D of the appellant who, again, as aforesaid, stated that it was the second accused. There is absolutely no reason why this piece of evidence should not be believed. I accordingly accept it as true.
The issue of the second accused's flight at the sight of the Policemen was variously described by PW1, PW2 and PW4. According to PW1 he saw the second accused E come out of the house of the appellant while, together with the latter, carrying Exh."A". He, i.e. Second accused, however fled and escaped when the two of them were challenged by the Police. PW2 recalled that the appellant was 'with another person who escaped'. According to his evidence it seems he failed to identify the said escapee. F
This witness, PW2, added that he was the one who, however, later, led by the appellant, went to the house of second accused and arrested him in connection with this same matter. PW4, on the other hand, made absolutely no mention whatsoever of the second G accused, or any other person who allegedly escaped, in his evidence in chief. He went even further in his cross-examination by Mr. Mramba who appeared for the appellant and said: 'I did not see the second accused. I did not see the second accused run away.

I find these discrepancies in the evidence of PW1, PW2 and PW4 almost inexplicable. H These Police men had set out to do the same piece of work and they were all the time together, acting in concert. How then it may be asked, could anyone of them possibly fail to see a person escape, particularly so when, on the other hand it behoves me to believe that not all the three Police men, i.e. PW1, PW2 and PW4, were acting with the I same alertness as would be expected of a police officer duly detailed to pursue a particular assignment. A

Be it as may, the discrepancies under querry on the prosecution own side raise some reasonable doubt as to whether or not the second accused did, indeed, escape on the arrival of PW1, PW2 and PW4. I resolve this doubt for the benefit of the appellant as required by law and consequently I am satisfied, and I so find, that the second accused B took to his heels and fled when he and the appellant were challenged by the Police.

Although the learned Senior Resident Magistrate did not specifically say so in his judgment it sounds clear that he invoked the doctrine of recent possession in arriving at the conclusion which he did in the case. I am strengthened in this because no direct C evidence of theft was adduced in the case.

The appellant gave an explanation as to how Exh. A came to be in his house and/or possession. His version of the story, as summarised here in above, was supported in material particular by Musa Iddi Bakari (DW1).

The defence story on this aspect of the case is in direct conflict with the testimonies of D PW1 and PW4 on the same point. PW1 stated in his evidence that when challenged the appellant said that Exh. A was his own property. PW4 too gave evidence to the same effect on this point. PW2, on the other hand, swore that the appellant "stated that he was given the motor by the second accused who was a fellow employee for safe E keeping." Again, the Police men have contradicted each other on a material point. This raises a reasonable doubt the benefit of which, as usual and according to law, goes to the appellant. I am satisfied, therefore, and I so find that the appellant did point out to the Police Officers, PW1, PW2 and PW4 that Exh. A belonged to the second accused F and that it was temporarily kept in his house for safe custody.

The question arises as to whether the appellant could have failed to querry his fellow employee's ability to own an electric motor. The appellant's reply to this was that till the G time of interception by the Police he did not know what the handbag contained.

As aforementioned the electric motor was tendered as real evidence. I have looked at it in the handbag. When the bag is closed the motor is completely concealed. The appellant's explanation that he did not know what the handbag contained could therefore, jolly well be true. The fact that the appellant was not, so to speak, nosy H cannot be taken to detract adversely from his credit. The material point to note is that there is uncontroverted evidence to show that the appellant knew that second accused before and, further, that there is no conclusive evidence to show that whatever he did, he did the same with the necessary animus furandi.

Had the learned Senior Resident Magistrate evaluated the evidence before him with I judicial objectivity I entertain grave doubts as to whether or not he would still have come to the same conclusion at which he arrived in this case. A On my evaluation of the evidence and in all the circumstances of the case I find that the explanation given by the appellant in his defence is reasonable. This is enough to dispose of this appeal which is hereby allowed. The conviction is quashed and the sentence passed thereon is set side. It is further directed that unless he is being held for B some other lawful purposes the appellant should be released from prison forthwith.
1985 TLR p236
Appeal Allowed
1985 TLR p236
C
[zRPz]SAIDI KIKA v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 236 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

September 23, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 28 OF 1982 D
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Charge and statement of facts not disclosing any offence - Whether conviction proper. E Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Trial court errors not raised by appellant due to ignorance - Power of appellate court.
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted, on his own plea, of transporting agricultural products without a valid permit contrary to ss.3 and 7 of the National Milling Corporation F (Specified Agricultural Products) (Control of Transport) Order 1976, GN80 of 1986. The order prescribes a maximum limit of 30 kgs of paddy and/or rice, which may be transported without a permit. But while alleging in its particulars that the appellant transported three bags of paddy and three bags of rice, the charge did not show the G weight of the products, and the facts as given by the prosecution showed that he was found with three sacks of rice only. The appellant was sentenced to pay a fine of Shs.800/= and the rice was ordered to be forfeited. He appealed against sentence and forfeiture. H
Held: (i) While the charge and the statement of facts are inconsistent in their description of the nature of the offending object, none of them specify its weight, which is essential ingredient of the offence charged;
(ii) by failing to specify the weight of the offending objects, neither the charge nor the statement of facts disclosed any offence; the plea of guilty was therefore I equivocal and not capable of supporting a conviction;

1985 TLR p237
SISYA J
Case Information
Appeal allowed. A
No cases referred to.
Judgment
Sisya, J.: This appellant was convicted, on his own plea, of the B offence of transporting agricultural products without a valid permit contrary to sections 3 and 7 of the National Milling Corporation (Specified Agricultural Products) (Control of Transport) Order, 1976. He was sentenced to pay a fine of shs. 800/=, or in default of payment of the fine, to go to jail for four months. He paid the fine. The offending C objects, i.e. paddy and rice, were ordered forfeited to the government. This appeal is against sentence and the order of forfeiture only.
Upon going through the record of proceedings it was observed that there were some other unsatisfactory aspects of the case which were not raised by the appellant in his D petition of appeal. I, nevertheless, propose to deal with these all the same. This is so because the appellant was not represented by learned counsel at the hearing of the case in the Court below. Had he availed himself of such services then, perhaps, the position would have been different from what it now is. Further, it is because the appellant is a E raw citizen - at least that is the impression I got when I saw him at the hearing of this appeal. The said features under querry stem from the charge it speaks and I quote:

Offence Section and law:

Transporting Agricultural products without a valid permit c/s 3 and 7 of the National F Milling Control of Transport Order (sic) GN 80/176 made under Section 12 and 17 of NMC Act. No. 11/1975.

Particulars of Offence: G

Saidi Kika charged on or about the 26th day of June, 1982 at about 11.30 hours at Makorora within the District and Region of Tanga being not holder of valid permit or authorised person or agent of National Milling Corporation did transport 3 bags of paddy and 3 bags of rice from Kitivo Lushoto District to Tanga without permit from H N.M.C.

The proper citation of the order quoted in the statement of offence is as cited in the opening paragraph of this judgment. According to an endorsement on the relevant I charge sheet it becomes crystal clear that the same passed through the hands of the learned trial Magistrate, at least, before it was "read over and explained" to the appellant. This exercise, that is of A Magistrates going through charge sheets before the same are "admitted" and/or read over to accused persons is commendable and desirable and this Court will be all out in support of it. The said exercise will, however, have no meaning at all if it is done perfunctorily. In this connection Magistrates are, once again, called upon to be B meticulous in whatever exercise they engage themselves in whilst in office. The Magistrate here did not bother about the error in the statement of offence. So much for that.
1985 TLR p238
SISYA J

Section 3 of G.N. 80 of 1976 under which the appellant was charged and convicted and the schedule thereto impose an absolute restriction on the transportation of paddy and/or C rice 'exceeding thirty kilograms at any one time' without a permit issued by the National Milling Corporation. It is manifest, upon reading the provision of the law in point, that the weight of the agricultural product involved is an essential ingredient of the offence. Upon a proper interpretation and construction of s.3 of G.N.80 of 1976 and D by necessary implication the transportation of rice and/or paddy, or any of the other products specified in the schedule for that matter, of or below the weight of thirty kilograms is not an offence at all under that piece of legislation.

In short, by failing to show the weight of the 'three bags of paddy and three bags of rice,' E a material factor and/or essential element, the charge, simply, did not disclose any offence.

Not only that. The statement of the facts of the case as presented by the learned Public Prosecutor which is remarkable for its brevity may, conveniently, be quoted in full. It reads: F Facts are that on 26/6/82 at about 11.30 a.m. at Makorora No. 5428 P.C. Hamidu of Police, Tanga, was on duty. He came across accused carrying three sacks of rice. Accused said he G had brought then from Kitivo, Lushoto, without a permit from N.M.C. Accused said he brought the rice for his children in town."

P.1

The weight of the offending object was, again not given in the statement of facts. As a matter of fact even the said offending object had been 'reduced' 'from three bags of H paddy and three bags of rice' to three bags of rice only. As the position stands it is not clear whether the appellant had, in all six bags; three of paddy and another three containing rice as alleged in the charge or if he had only three bags of rice as stated by the learned Public Prosecutor to the learned trial Magistrate. Be it as I it may, the fact of the matter is that even the statement of facts discloses no offence A under s.3 of G.N. 80 of 1976.

In view of the aforegoing one wonders to what offence the appellant pleaded when he is recorded to have said, "It is true", and a plea of guilty entered. On my part in so far as both the charge as laid and the statement of facts of the case as presented disclose no B offence the appellant's plaint cannot be said to be unequivocal. The proceeding was thus, a nullity ab initio and it is so declared.

In the final result the conviction, sentence and order of forfeiture cannot be allowed to stand and the same are, consequently, avoided. It is further ordered that the fine which C the appellant paid should now be refunded to him and the rice, Exh. P.1, restored to him. In the likely event of the rice having been disposed of then the appellant should be paid its equivalent monetary value. In other words this appeal is allowed.

D Appeal allowed.

E

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Kapoor Ag J

April 10, 1984
(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 29 OF 1982
Flynote
Family Law - Marriage - Presumption of marriage - Parties living together for five years - F Whether a lawful marriage is thereby established - Law of Marriage Act, 1971, s 160(1).
Family Law - Custody of children - Right of custody of a child born out of cohabitation without marriage - Law of Persons, GN 279 of 1963. G
-Headnote
The parties never contracted a marriage but they lived together in cohabitation for five years, out of which a child was born. The respondent claimed custody of the child. He lost in the Primary Court but won when he appealed to the District Court, on the basis H that the parties had lived together for five years and therefore, the court held, they were to be treated as duly married. The appellant appealed to the High Court.
Held: (i) Under s. 160 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971, parties can raise a presumption of marriage if they have stayed together for a period of over two years; but I the presumption is rebuttable and the intention of
1985 TLR p240
s. 160(1) is not to create an alternative procedure of contracting a valid marriage; A

(ii) because the parties were never married, the child born to the appellant is an illegitimate child and the respondent cannot claim it now as he never legitimized it in time by application through the Law of Persons, G.N. 279 of 1963; B
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
Case referred to:

1. Francis Leo v Paschal Simon Maganga [1978] L.R.T. 22 C

Judgment
Kapoor Ag. J.: Appellant was sued by the respondent who claimed custody of his child born to the appellant on 25/2/1982.
The parties had lived together for nearly 5 years - but they were not lawfully married. D The District Magistrate, in a very well written judgment gave custody of the child to the respondent. His reasons for reversing the judgment of the Primary Court were that anyone who sires a child adulterously cannot be held to claim the child.
The District Magistrate reasoned that since the parties had lived together for nearly 5 E years, as husband and wife, they were to be treated as duly married. The authorities that he cited, were relevant to those parties who were lawfully married. With respect to the District Magistrate, I cannot agree with his reasoning, which made him to consider that the respondent and appellant were lawfully married. Under the Law of Marriage Act, F parties can raise a rebuttable presumption of marriage if they were staying together - for a period of over 2 years, in such circumstances as to have acquired the reputation of being husband and wife.

This presumption may be rebutted if it can be proved that the parties had never gone G through a ceremony of marriage recognised under the Act: Francis s/o Leo v Paschal Simon Maganga [1978] LRT n.22.
The intention of the legislature under section 160(1) of the Law of Marriage Act is not to give a general licence of Legal Marriage Status to parties who live together for two years H and above in such circumstances. The Law of Marriage Act lays down strict procedure through which a man and woman capable of contracting a marriage can contract a valid marriage. Section 160(1) of the Law of Marriage Act only creates a rebuttable presumption of Marriage. It does not create another method of contracting a I Lawful Marriage under the Act.
1985 TLR p241
Hence it can be clearly stated that the only method of contracting Lawful Marriage in A Tanzania is by following the laid-down provisions under Part II of the Law of Marriage Act. In this case the parties themselves agree that they have not been lawfully married. They just lived together. The rebuttable presumption is adequately rebutted by the parties themselves. The Primary Court Magistrate had framed this question as an issue B No. 4 and reached the conclusion that the parties were not lawfully married; they were just living together.
Accordingly, the cases cited by the District Magistrate are not relevant to the circumstances of this case. The respondent was not lawfully married to the appellant; C hence the appellant's child born to the appellant on 25/2/82 is an illegitimate child. The respondent could have legitimated this child before it weaned under Rule 181 of G.N. no. 279 of 1963. This the respondent has not done and it is too late in the day now for him to claim this child from the appellant.
I therefore, allow this appeal and grant custody of the child to the appellant. Respondent D to pay appellant's costs of this Court and courts below.
Costs of this appeal are fixed at Shs. 268/= inclusive of court fees paid. E
Appeal allowed
1985 TLR p241
F
[zRPz]REPUBLIC v NJAMA ZUBERI 1985 TLR 241 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

March 9, 1983
MISCELLANEOUS CRIMINAL CAUSE NO.1 OF 1982 G
Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Bail - Bail pending trial for murder where the accused is a child of tender years - Powers of the court - Criminal Procedure Code, s.123 (3). H

-Headnote

This was an application for bail pending trial for murder. The applicant/accused, a child of tender years was held in custody at Handeni, where there were no facilities for keeping juvenile offenders. The boy's parents were able and willing to look after him and to produce him in court as and whenever directed and the charge was likely to be I reduced to manslaughter.

1985 TLR p244

Held: (i) In the interests of the juvenile accused, it is necessary to remove him from A custody where he is likely to associate with adult offenders and other undesirable influence.

Case Information

Order accordingly B

No cases referred to.

Editorial Note: The Criminal Procedure Act, No. 1 of 1985 has no provision equivalent to section 123(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code cited above. The Criminal Procedure Act has completely removed the discretion of granting bail by the High Court in murder C cases.

Judgment

Sisya, J. : This matter has arisen out of my safari to Handeni. The accused, Njama s/o Zuberi a boy of tender years, aged about ten years, stands charged with the capital offence of murder contrary to section 196 of the Penal Code. He is D being held in custody since November, 1982, pending the holding of a preliminary inquiry and the subsequent trial before this Court. It was impressed upon me by the learned District Magistrate, Handeni, that there are no proper facilities for holding juvenile offenders at Handeni Prison. The accused was, at the time of incident, living E with his parents who are able, willing and prepared to look after the accused and produce him before the Court as and whenever directed.

From the depositions so far already in the hands of the Police it sounds very likely that the capital charge will be reduced to one of manslaughter, at the most: The accused is F alleged to have struck the deceased, another infant, with a stone while they were at play.

In all the circumstances of this case I am of the considered view that it is necessary, in the interests of this accused, to remove him from custody where he is likely to associate with adult offenders and/or any other undesirable person. In the final result, in terms of G powers conferred upon me by section 123(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code, I exercise my direction in favour of this accused and hereby direct that from now onwards the accused be released on a recognizance being entered into by his father with H two reliable sureties, each in the sum of Shs.10,000/= It is ordered accordingly.

For the avoidance of any doubt it is hereby stated that this order shall remain in force until such time when further, or any other, orders are made by a Court of competent jurisdiction.

I Application for bail allowed.

A

[zRPz]MWANANCHI ENGINEERING & CONSTRUCTION CO. LTD v REPUBLIC 1985 TLR 243 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

June 22, 1984
CRIMINAL APPEAL NO 2 OF 1983 B
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Charge containing something not known to anyone - Whether proper.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Defective charges - Charge alleging that "bog stearing" was out of order - Both parties understanding "bog stearing" to mean "stearing C system" - Whether the defect in the charge is fatal.
Evidence - Admissibility - Admissibility of Reports - Vehicles Inspection Report admitted under s. 34B(2) of the Evidence Act, 1967 - Whether proper.
Road Traffic - Vehicle inspectors - Appointment of vehicle inspectors - Road Traffic Act, D 1973, s.4(a).
Road Traffic - Vehicle inspection - Vehicles inspected by a person not duly appointed a vehicle inspector - Whether inspection report may be accepted.
Road Traffic - Defective vehicle - Steering mechanism locked due to driver's carelessness E - Whether it amounts to having a defective steering system.
Road Traffic - Defective vehicle - Broken windscreen - Three layer windscreen cracked on one side - Whether the crack amounts to broken windscreen. F Criminal Practice and Procedure - Compensation - Jurisdiction to order compensation in a criminal trial - Order of compensation for vehicle damaged in an accident - Whether criminal court has jurisdiction. G
-Headnote
The appellant company was charged with and convicted of permitting a defective motor vehicle to be driven on the public road contrary to the Road Traffic Act, 1973. It was sentenced to a fine and ordered to pay Shs.8,000/= as compensation to the owner of H another vehicle damaged as a result of the offending act. The defects, as alleged in the charge, were a broken windscreen and a "bog stearing" being out of order. Nobody, not even the trial court magistrate, was able to tell what "bog stearing" meant. The evidence showed that the windscreen was only cracked on one side and the vehicle was I fitted with a security lock in its steering mechanism as a precaution against theft of the vehicle. The locking system and the ignition system were designed to be controlled centrally and simultaneously such that the lock would open immediately upon igniting the engine A and it would lock upon removing the ignition key. But on the material day the central and simultaneous control had developed some faults: the ignition key continued to control and operate the locking system without igniting the engine and the vehicle had to be started by connecting certain wires. Apparently, after starting the engine, the driver B was careless and did not turn the key fully to undo the steering lock. On appeal it was argued, inter alia, that the trial court magistrate should not have relied, as he did, on a motor vehicle inspection report by a person not duly appointed under the Road Traffic Act, 1973. C
1985 TLR p244

Held: (i) "Bog stearing" which was referred to as being defective in the charge is something not known to exist in the present motoring world and by containing something which is not known, the charge was defective;

(ii) as both the prosecution and the defence proceeded on the understanding that "bog stearing" actually meant the steering system, the defect in the charge did not D embarrass the appellant and it did not occasion a miscarriage of justice;

(iii) the Motor Vehicles Inspection Report was improperly admitted in this case because the application of s. 34B(2) of the Evidence Act, 1967 under which it was purportedly admitted is in respect of the admission of written statements and not reports E like this one;

(iv) the admission of the Motor Vehicles Inspection Report was also improper in that the purported report was made by a person who was not a motor vehicles inspector duly appointed by the Minister in accordance with the Road Traffic Act, 1973 F and moreover he did not appear to testify in court and his expertise and experience was dubious;

(v) in view of the evidence showing that the steering system was merely locked due to the carelessness of the driver, a charge alleging defects in the steering system has not been established;

(vi) the evidence shows that the windscreen was only cracked on one side and G it was not letting in water or air; it was not broken as the charge alleged;

(vii) the order for compensation had no basis in this case and in making it the trial court magistrate acted in excess of jurisdiction; H

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No cases referred to.

Mwakajinga, for the appellant I

A.T. Akaro, for the Republic

1985 TLR p245

SISYA J

Judgment

Sisya, J: The appellant company was charged with and convicted of A permitting motor vehicle to be driven on the road while its condition is defective. This is an offence under the Road Traffic Act, 1973. The company was sentenced by the learned District Magistrate, Korogwe, to pay a fine of Shs.750/= or distress in default. The fine was paid. The company was also ordered to pay Shs.8,000/= as B compensation "to the owner of the motor vehicle registration no. TAJ 33". Dissatisfied the appellant company is now appealing.

The particulars of offence in the charge as laid reads:

C The person charged (on 19th day of December, 1980 at about 12.00 hrs at Manundu along Korogwe/Tanga road within the District of Korogwe Tanga Region) being the owner of a m/v Reg. No. SU 1784, L/Rover did permit the said m/v to be driven on the public road while its general mechanical condition was not in good order in that bog stearing (sic) was out of order D and windscreen was broken.

In the third ground of appeal the appellant company avers that the learned trial Magistrate erred in law by convicting it on a charge which was not understood even by E the learned Magistrate himself. At the hearing of this appeal before me it became abundantly clear that the argument here centred on the term "bog stearing". It was submitted by the learned counsel for the appellant, Mr. Mwakajinga, that no such a thing known as "bog stearing" (or is it "bog steering) is known in the whole framework of a F motor vehicle. The learned State Attorney, Mr. Akaro, on the other hand, submitted that "bog steering" is modern terminology. He, however, did not go further and elaborate what it really is. Instead he went on to argue that those who handle motor vehicles know it or, at the very least they are expected to know it. With respect to the learned State Attorney, I think this is placing too much a burden on those who deal with G motor vehicles in one way or the other, and it is also pitching one's expectations unnecessarily high.

True to the appellant's allegation in Para 3 of the petition of appeal the learned trial Magistrate did indeed concede his failure too to comprehend what a 'bog steering' is. H This is clear from the portion of his judgment which reads, and I quote:

I would first of all wish to deal with this question of bog steering. Admittedly even after consulting many English Dictionaries I have failed to grasp what the vehicle inspector meant I when he said the bog steering was out of order.

Indeed if so then one wonders how the learned trial Magistrate expected the appellant to A understand as the duty in law was on him, i.e. the learned Magistrate, to read over and explain the charge to the appellant in a clear and simple language. All this said, I, most respectfully, agree with Mr. Mwakajinga that a "bog steering" does not exist in the present motoring world. I am not competent to talk of the future, which does not B concern us here anyway. At best it is a misnomer for, (as one of the witnesses speculated in the Court below) a Steering box. If so then why, it may be asked, was the charge sheet not amended accordingly?

Be it as it may one thing is clear in my mind and that is by containing something which is not known the charge is defective. The question that naturally arises next is, what effect C does the said defect have on the subsequent proceedings in the Court below?

This issue was, commendably, considered by the learned trial Magistrate in his judgment. He concluded by finding that the defect or error was not fatal because throughout the D trial both the prosecution and the defence proceeded on the understanding that the said 'bog steering' actually meant "the steering box". It is true, and this is apparent from the record of proceedings of the trial Court, that both the Prosecution and the defence took the "bog steering" to mean the Steering system. The evidence which was adduced in the case points to this fact. In the circumstances I am not persuaded that the appellant was E embarrassed in putting up a defence, as the same was in line with the Prosecution case. In other words I am satisfied that the defect under querry did not occasion a miscarriage of justice. So much for this ground 3.

Now, turning to the factual background of this matter, evidence was adduced at the F hearing of the case in the Court below to the effect that the appellant company is owner of a motor vehicle registration No. SU. 1784, a landrover. On the date of incident, at about noon, the branch manager of the appellant company at Korogwe at that time, one Juma Riziki (DW1), instructed one of the company drivers, one Felix Mapunda (PW3), G to drive the said landrover to M/S Sikh Garage to have its windscreen, which had cracked, replaced. The said landrover was fitted with a lock. This was a precautionary measure against motor vehicle thefts. The locking device was fixed to the steering system of the landrover. Originally, this locking system and the ignition system of the H landrover were being controlled centrally and simultaneously; that is to say, immediately upon ignition of the engine of the landrover the lock was automatically opened. Upon switching off the engine and removing the ignition key the locking system was in operation: The steering would lock upon a light twist. I

1985 TLR p247

SISYA J

It is common ground that the centrally controlled mechanism of the ignition and locking A systems of the landrover developed some defects as a result of which each system had to be controlled separately. The key for the locking system had to be turned full and not half way before the vehicle was sent in motion.

The evidence shows that Felix (PW3), the appellant's driver, started the landrover by B connecting certain wires. He then set off for the garage. Following behind him was one Surinder Singh (DW3), an all round automobile engineer who worked for almost a decade in garages in Britain and Europe. He is also owner of the Sikh Garage. While C on the way Felix suddenly felt being pulled on one side. He tried to control the vehicle but failed. The landrover then knocked against a stationary lorry which was parked on the road side. Felix was injured in the accident. Mr. Singh took him in his own vehicle and rushed him to the hospital. He, i.e., Singh, swore that when he was removing Felix D from the landrover he saw the ignition key lying on the floor in the cabin.

The police were informed and both the appellant's landrover and the lorry were sent for inspection. The said inspection was done by a mechanical inspector called George who was employed by the then Ministry of Communication and Works and stationed here at Korogwe. The said George did not give evidence at the hearing of the case. It was E stated that he had gone out of Korogwe for medical treatment. His reports on both vehicles were, however, tendered and admitted in evidence at the trial in the Court below. The one in respect of the appellants landrover is P.1 and the one in respect of the lorry, registration no. TAJ 33 is P.2. The learned trial Magistrate purported to admit F the said motor vehicle inspection reports under Section 34B (2) of the Evidence Act, 1967.

With the greatest respect to the learned trial Magistrate, S.34B(2) is in respect of Written Statements. It does not deal with reports at all. For provisions of this section to come into play all the conditions laid therein must fully be met or satisfied. At any rate G this provision of the law was misapplied here.

At the hearing of this appeal it was argued by Mwakajinga for the appellant company that the learned trial Magistrate misdirected himself on the evidence by placing too much reliance on a motor vehicle inspection report prepared by a person who was not duly H appointed in that field. The learned trial Magistrate dealt with the issue of George's appointment as a vehicles inspector in the following terms and I quote from his judgment:

A mechanical inspector in a Government institution is a very respected person. The I government cannot employ bogus inspectors to inspect its motor vehicles. It would be ridiculous to see competent vehicle inspectors A inspect public motor vehicle while the government motor vehicles are inspected by bogus inspectors. G.N.171/67 does not say that only Police officers are to be appointed examiners and inspectors of motor vehicles. It merely endorsed police officers who were by then gazette to assume the position of vehicle inspectors and B examiners provided they were competent drivers notwithstanding that they had a technical know how or not. But with the present case the motor vehicle had been inspected by a Comworks mechanical inspector. He is a person with technical know how. He is therefore an expert. In my view he was competent and so his report is C admitted in law as that of an expert.

1985 TLR p248

SISYA J

With respect, this passage bristles with misdirections and misconceptions. It is perhaps convenient to start by looking at what the learned trial Magistrate had to say about this D very same man, George. He said, earlier in the same paragraph from which the above passage is quoted:

After perusing the vehicle inspection reports, Exhibit P.1 and P.2, this George appears to have inspected the motor vehicle on behalf of the inspector of vehicles. He doesn't seem to E suggest to the Court that he himself is also a vehicle inspector. His qualifications are not known either.

This passage contains the naked truth on this aspect of the matter. It beats my F comprehension, therefore, how the learned trial Magistrate, almost in the same breath and without more, proceeded to find the same George 'a person with technical know how', 'an expert' and competent to be a motor vehicle inspector. This is simply outrageous.

It seems to me that the learned trial Magistrate completely missed the point which was G raised by Mr. Mwakajinga for the Appellant on this aspect of the case. It must be borned in mind that the appointment of motor vehicle inspectors is a matter of law. The power to appoint vehicle inspectors is vested by law on the authority responsible for road traffic i.e. the Minister for Home Affairs and this power is conferred upon him by H Section 4(a) of the Road Traffic Act, no. 30 of 1973. As was, quite correctly in my view, pointed out by Mr. Mwakajinga in his address to the Court no such appointments have so far been made under this Act no. 30 of 1973. There was appointment of motor vehicles inspectors which was, however, made by Government Notice no. 171 of 1967 I which was, with gratitude, brought to my attention by Mr. Mwakajinga.

1985 TLR p249

SISYA J

The said government notice no. 171 of 1967 was issued under the provisions of the A Traffic Ordinance, Cap. 168. Admittedly the said Cap. 168 was repealed by Act No. 30 of 1973. Section 117(2)(b) thereof reads:

(b) until new appointments are made under this Act, any appointments made under the Traffic B Ordinance repealed by this Act shall be deemed to have been made under this Act.

The head note of GN 171 of 1967 which, with great respect, the learned trial C Magistrate, does not appear to have read or, if he read it, and with even greater respect, he does not appear to have understood, reads:

Appointment of Inspectors and Examining Officers of Motor Vehicles. D

Para or Item 1 thereof reads:

1. All gazetted Police officers who are themselves competent drivers are hereby appointed to be inspectors and Examining officers for the purpose of examining E persons as to their competence in driving motor vehicles.

Now where does a mere endorsement for the assumption of some position by police officers appear in this piece of subsidiary legislation.

By vesting powers of appointment in the Minister of Home Affairs Parliament in its F undoubted wisdom knew what it was doing. Likewise by confining these appointments to gazette Police Officers, and not to any other person with the requisite technical know how, those who made that decision must have known what they were up to. For anyone to depart from the laid down procedure and law will be to stultify the whole G process designed and laid down by the legislature. In the wake of the current call to all to follow and respect the law I am not in the least attracted by the learned trial Magistrates reasoning on this aspect of the case.

Suffice it to say that George was not appointed a motor vehicle inspector. He was not H authorised by law to inspect the appellant's vehicle. The report, P.1, which he prepared was thus wrongly received and treated. The same must be and it is hereby extirpated from the record. This should be sufficient ground for this Court to allow this appeal because without George's report there is no basis for the charge. I

1985 TLR p250

SISYA J

Assuming that I am wrong on this point I have, nevertheless, considered if P.1 could be A taken as expert opinion. I am, however, not aware of any provision of the law on whose authority P.1 may properly be admitted as such. The difficulty is made the more by George's failure to testify at the trial. As the position stands, George still remains a person of dubious expertise. His special knowledge, skill, experience or training to B qualify him as an expert in this field of motor vehicles in unknown and, perhaps, this may be the source of the difficulty which has been experienced over his term "bog steering" in the case. Exhibit P1 is no expert opinion at all.

Again, assuming that the vehicles report, P1, was properly admitted and admissible, the C case for the defence was that there was absolutely nothing wrong with the stearing system as such. The defence argued that the steering locked because Felix (PW3) turned the key only half way and because of the vibrations while the landrover was in motion the said key then must have disentangled itself. D

The story that the steering was locked received support from the Prosecution own side. PW1, the driver of the other lorry, swore that he saw Felix try to struggle with the steering just before the impact. Had the learned trial Magistrate reviewed the evidence with judicial objectivity he would have found that the steering must indeed have locked. Had there been some other defect in the steering then certainly one would have expected E it to show excessive play and not to lock. On my evaluation of the evidence I am satisfied that the steering locked and the explanation given by the defence for so doing is, in all the circumstances of the case plausible. The fault was, indeed, that of Felix who F was careless in turning the key of the lock half way. That was no defect at all and I so hold.

Finally, turning to the windscreen. P1 shows that it was broken. The defence story given by D1, DW2, DW3 and DW4 is that it only had cracks and on the passengers side. According to the defence witnesses the said cracks did not let in air or water at all as the G windscreen had three layers of glass. The only evidence on this point was given by the defence. As aforesaid George himself did not give evidence. There is a difference between a broken windscreen and a cracked windscreen. In the absence of any direct evidence on this point on the prosecution side the defence version stands unshaken and H there was no reason which was advanced by the learned trial Magistrate for rejecting it. On my part cracked windscreen which lets in neither water nor air does not come within the ambit of section 39(1) of the Road Traffic Act.

Before I pen off, let me point out that it has not been easy for this Court to find or see I the basis for the order of compensation. This issue was not properly before the Court, if at all. The learned trial Magistrate, therefore, A overstepped his bounds of propriety when he nevertheless made the order and he acted in excess of his jurisdiction.

All in all, for the reasons given I allow this appeal. The conviction is quashed and the sentence passed thereon is set aside. The fine which was paid should now be refunded B to the appellant company. The order of compensation is also set aside. It is ordered accordingly.

C Appeal allowed.

D

[zRPz]HUSSEIN ALLI KASWESWE v MZEE HAMISI KASWESWE 1985 TLR 252 (CA)

Court Court of appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Mustafa JJA, Makame JJA, Kisanga JJA

October 8, 1985
CIVIL APPEAL 9 OF 1985 E
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Appeal against orders - Appeal against an order on an application for directions of the court u/r 105 of the Probate Rules - Whether ruling of the court is appealable as of right -Civil Procedure Code, ss.3, 22 and Order 43, Rule 2. F
-Headnote
Following issue, by the High Court, of letters of administration to four administrators in a Probate and Administration Cause, one of the four administrators sold a house belonging to the estate, took his one fourth share of the money and deposited the rest in court for G collection by the other three. There was no fraud or improper practice in the whole transaction but the three other administrators wanted to remain joint owners of the property and were ready, for that purpose, to refund the purchase money. Pursuant to R.105 of the Probate Rules, they applied to the High Court for directions. The court H dismissed the application, and they appealed to the Court of Appeal.
Held: (i) The application was not something in the nature of a suit and the ruling of the court on it was not a decree with a right of appeal but an order and, so as to appeal I against the order, there was need to obtain leave to appeal from the High Court;
1985 TLR p251
Case Information
Order accordingly. A
No. cases referred to.
M. Marando, for the appellants.
S. El-Maamry and M. Raithatha, for the respondents. B
Judgment
Mustafa, J.A.: Letters of administration were issued in Probate and Administration Cause No. 44 of 1977 on 2.9.77 by the High Court to four administrators Hussein Ali Kasweswe, Mzee Bin Hamisi Kasweswe, Ashura Ali Kasweswe and Zuena Hamisi Kasweswe. C

On 26.9.79, three of the administrators Hussein, Ashura and Zuena filed a Chamber Application in the High Court asking for the annulment of a sale of house No. 39, Kariakoo, belonging to the estate, by Hamisi to two buyers and for other consequential orders. Hamisi, as administrator had sold the house, and D had taken his one fourth share of the money and deposited the shares of the other three beneficiaries, the remaining administrators, in court for collection by the beneficiates.
There was no allegation of fraud or improper practices on the part of the vendor or purchasers in the sale transaction. The three applicants wanted the house to remain as E the property in their joint names, and were prepared to refund the money to the purchasers and pay the sum due to Hamisi.
The judge (Mtenga, J.) heard the application and held that in terms of section 100 of the Probate and Administration Ordinance Cap. 445, Hamisi as a single administrator had F powers to sell the house and that the sale was proper in the circumstances and dismissed the application. The application was made pursuant to Rule 105 of the Probate Rules seeking for the court's directions. From that Ruling the three administrators are appealing to this court. G

Mr. El-Maamry for the purchasers and Mr. Raithatha for Hamisi raised a preliminary objection to the appeal and submitted that it was incompetent, as no leave to appeal has been obtained from the High Court. They referred to section 4(1)(C) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act and submitted that the ruling of Mtenga, J. was an order and required H leave.

Mr. Marando for the 3 administrators submitted that the ruling was in fact a decree conclusively determining the issues in controversy between the parties and that there was a right of appeal without leave.

We have heard arguments from both sides and looked at sections 3, 22, order 43 Rule I 2 of the Civil Procedure Code and Rule 105 of the

1985 TLR p253

Probate and Administration Rules and we are satisfied that the application was not A something in the nature of a suit as the applicants only asked the court for directions by way of a chamber summons and no evidence as such was adduced. We are satisfied that the ruling was an order and as no leave to appeal was obtained from the High Court, the appeal is incompetent. It is struck out with costs. B

Order accordingly

1985 TLR p253

C

[zRPz]SEIF MARARE v MWADAWA SALUM 1985 TLR 253 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Katiti J

June 10, 1979

PROBATE (PC) CIVIL APPEAL 37 OF 1978 D

Flynote

Administration of Estates - Application for appointment of administrator of deceased's estate - Duty of the court in appointing administrators.

Conflict of Laws - Application for appointment of administrator of a deceased's estate - E Conflict between Islamic Law and Customary Law - Primary court has jurisdiction to decide the law applicable.

-Headnote

The respondent sought and obtained from the Primary Court her appointment as an F administrator of the Estate of the deceased. She maintained that as the sister of the deceased she was entitled to administer the Estate under Islamic Law. The appellant, a nephew of the deceased's husband who had himself died much earlier, disputed the respondent's appointment as administrator. His objections failed both in the Primary G Court and in the District Court, hence this appeal to the High Court.

Held: (i) On application for appointment of an administrator of a deceaced's estate, the duty of the court is to appoint as administrator a person who has an interest in the estate, H and according to the wishes of the deceased if any are expressed;

(ii) as the applicant in this case could only sustain his claim of having an interest in the Estate through Customary Law and the respondent could only sustain her similar claim through Islamic Law, either party may be the interested party depending on what law the court decided to be the law applicable; I

(iii) the Primary Court (having jurisdiction under both Islamic and

1985 TLR p254

KATITI J

Customary Law) applied no wrong principles in appointing the respondent the A administrator.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No cases referred to. B

Judgment

Katiti, J.: Upon the demise of one Zena, one Mwadawa Salum the respondent herein, sought her appointment as an administrator of the estate she claimed was Zena's, in Musoma Urban Primary Court. Despite objections and protestations by C Seif Marare, herein to be referred to as the appellant, the respondent was on mere majority of assessors given judgement, and hence her appointment as an administrator of the claimed estate. The appellant unsatisfied, appealed unsuccessfully to the District Court. The District Court, having upheld the Primary Court's decision, the appellant has appealed to this Court. D

This, is therefore, the 2nd appeal, and this being the 2nd appellate court, that is not easily disposed to disturb concurrent finding of facts of the two lower courts, unless they are obviously wrong, the facts as rightly found are as follows. Late Masudi Magori and late Zena w/o Magori, were husband and wife. They were tribally different, but professed E and lived under the guidance of Islamic religion. Mwadawa Salum was, or, is the sister of Zena w/o Magori. The two spouses were living in a house, that is to be subject to administration.

Human life is short, and Masudi Magori's was no exception. He died only to be survived by his widow (then) Zena w/o Magori. On his death the question of F administration of his Estate was not raised. Zena Magori did not live too long thereafter, as she died too. The two spouses had been living in this house, that was in the name of late Masudi Magori. The house, has a history, that is curious though not ably challenged by the appellant or his witnesses. The evidence unhidingly disclosed, that the plot was G initially bought by Zena's mother from one Said Kisugura, and that after Masudi Magori's retirement as Prison warden, he lived in there with his wife Zena. After the death of Zena's mother the plot was transferred in the name of Masudi Magori by Zena herself. The two spouses were not survived by any child or children, and a period after H Zena's death, Mwadawa Salum, her sister, and a moslem too, sought and obtained her appointment as an administrator of estate. The appellant objects, saying she is not entitled to be so appointed, while the respondent maintained, that, as a sister of late Zena, she was under Islamic Law very close, and therefore entitled to administer the estate. I Having read the record, I have come out unhappily because, while

1985 TLR p255
KATITI J
at no time, did the respondent say she was seeking to inherit the property, although in A fact, she could ultimately be considered the right candidate, the Primary Court, and the District Court in particular treated it as an inheritance situation, and hence the latter's journey into the inheritance. However for the avoidance of doubt, I shall herein consider B her in the right perspective, that she was applying to administer the deceased's estate.
The Court's duties in such a situation is, on application by any person interested in the estate of the deceased to be administered, and with regard to any wishes which may have been expressed by the deceased, to appoint an administrator. It seems to me, that C unless the court considers otherwise, the person to be appointed must have an interest in the estate, and as per wishes of the deceased, if any had been expressed. In this case, the appellant's relation with the deceased - Masudi Magori is evidentially no more than that nephew. Masudi Magori died in 1963, and the fact that nobody came up with a D claim on the said house for such a long time creates a confident impression that late Zena Magori was considered owner or inherited of the said house. It was after the death of Zena Magori that this case came about,
The comparison of relationship between the appellant and late Masudi Magori, on one E hand, and the relationship of the respondent and Zena Magori on the other, provoke questions of laws of inheritance, and the conflict of the same. For while the appellant can only sustain his claim through customary law if applicable, the respondent may claim to inherit the house through Islamic Law, again if applicable. Thus considered in either F way, both parties are interested, in the estate depending on which law is applicable. It follows, in my view, that, if the respondent was appointed an administrator by the Primary Court, as it in fact did, it applied no wrong principles at all. I am therefore confirming the appointment, with a note of caution, that problems of inheritance in respect of the house, and which law to apply in solving the same, might arise when the G actual administration takes place. The appeal is dismissed with no order as to costs.
H Appeal dismissed

1984
Editorial Board

Chairman
The Hon. Mr. Justice F.L. NYALALI, Chief Justice
Court of Appeal of Tanzania
Chief Editor
Dr. L.P. SHAIDI, Senior Lecturer, Faculty of Law, University of Dar es Salaam

Editors
The Hon. Mr. Justice A. RAMADHANI,
Chief Justice, Zanzibar
The Hon. Mr. Justice K.S.K. LUGAKINGIRA
High Court of Tanzania
Mr. M.A. LAKHA,
Advocate, High Court of Tanzania
Mr. E.L.K. MWIPOPO,
Principal State Attorney, Ministry of Justice
Mr. R.J. RWEYEMAMU,
Corporation Counsel, Tanzania Legal Corporation
Mr. A.M. MISKIRY,
State Attorney, Zanzibar
Mr. N.N. NDITI,
Lecturer, Faculty of Law,
University of Dar es Salaam
(Assistant Chief Editor)

SCOPE OF THE SERIES

These Reports cover cases decided in the Court of Appeal of Tanzania and the High Courts of Tanzania and Zanzibar

CITATION

These Reports are cited thus [1984] T.L.R.

Judges of the Court of Appeal of Tanzania in 1984

1.	The Hon. Mr. Justice F.L. Nyalali	Chief Justice
2.	The Hon. Mr. Justice A. Mustafa	Justice of Appeal
3.	The Hon. Mr. Justice L.M. Makame	Justice of Appeal
4.	The Hon. Mr. Justice R.H. Kisanga	Justice of Appeal
5.	The Hon. Mr. Justice Y.M.M. Mwakasendo	Justice of Appeal

Judges of the High Court of Tanzania in 1984

1.	The Hon. Mr. Justice N.S. Mnzavas	Principal Judge (J.K.)
2.	The Hon. Mr. Justice B. Samatta	Puisne Judge
3.	The Hon. Mr. Justice J.B. Mfalila	Puisne Judge
4.	The Hon. Mr. Justice D.P. Mapigano	Puisne Judge
5.	The Hon. Mr. Justice K.S.K. Lugakingira	Puisne Judge
6.	The Hon. Mr. Justice E.W. Katiti	Puisne Judge
7.	The Hon. Mr. Justice B.D. Chipeta	Puisne Judge

8. The Hon. Mr. Justice N.M. Mushi Puisne Judge
9. The Hon. Mr. Justice W.J. Maina Puisne Judge
10. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.A. Mroso Puisne Judge
11. The Hon. Mr. Justice F.A. Munyera Puisne Judge
12. The Hon. Mr. Justice L.J. Chua Puisne Judge
13. The Hon. Mr. Justice R.J. Ruhumbika Puisne Judge
14. The Hon. Mr. Justice Mwakibete Puisne Judge
15. The Hon. Mr. Justice R.B. Maganga Puisne Judge
16. The Hon. Mr. Justice H.E.D. Sisya Puisne Judge
17. The Hon. Mr. Justice Y.S. Rubama Puisne Judge
18. The Hon. Mr. Justice C.G. Mtenga Puisne Judge
20. The Hon. Mr. Justice R.J.A. Mwaikasu Puisne Judge
21. The Hon. mr. Justice Mkatte Puisne Judge
22. The Hon. Mr. Justice A.G. Korosso Puisne Judge
23. The Hon. Mr. Justice A. Bahati Puisne Judge
24. The Hon. Mr. Justice H.A. Msumi Puisne Judge
25. The Hon. Mr. Justice J.L. Mwalusanya Puisne Judge

Judges of the High Court of Zanzibar in 1984

1. The Hon. Mr. Justice A. Ramadhani Chief Justice

Cases Reported

A

[zRPz]KASSIMU YAKUBU MWINYIJUMA v COMMANDING OFFICER - JKT MADUTUPORA AND ANOTHER 1984 TLR 1 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Zanzibar
Judge Ramadhani CJ

July 21, 984.

B CIVIL APPLICATION 4 OF 1984

Flynote

Administrative Law - Declaratory application - Whether a public officer who completes a post - secondary course of a duration of nine months or more who is already over 35 years at the time of completion of his course is liable for call up to National Service.

C Statutory Interpretation - Repealing Act - Effect of repeal and replacement of an Act on rights and obligations acquired under the repealed and replaced Act.

-Headnote

The applicant was a public officer. He was picked by military police and taken to Makutupora D National Service Camp as a person liable for call up. After arriving at Makutupora, he pleaded on several occasions that he was not liable for call up, and produced documents to support his case, but was given promises of action which never materialised. In the end he decided to bring this E application seeking a declaration that he was not liable for call up to the national service by virtue of National Service Act, 1964 (cap. 553) and an order that he be discharged therefrom. The applicant argued that the courses he attended at Moshi and Lang'ata Kenya each lasted less than nine F months and that at the time he completed the accountancy course at Mzumbe he was already over 35 years.

Held: (i) A public officer who completes studies while he is above 35 years of age is not liable for National Service call up;

(ii) age is the central factor for determining whether one is liable for national service call up, G educational qualifications notwithstanding;

(iii) the National Service Act and the subsidiary legislation made thereunder, do not authorise anyone simply to arrest any person believed or suspected to be liable for call up and whisk him off to a national service camp;

H (iv) where an Act repeals and replaces another Act, such repeal and replacement does not operate to affect any right or privilege acquired under the repealed Act.

Case Information

I Application allowed.

No case referred to.

1984 TLR p2

LUGAKINGIRA J

B. Mwambe for the second respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: This was an application for a declaratory judgment. The application was brought A by Kassim Yakubu Mwinyijuma (hereinafter referred to as "the applicant") seeking a declaration that he was not liable for call up to the National Service by virtue of the provisions of the National B Service Act, 1964 (Cap. 553) and an order that he be discharged therefrom. In the application the applicant joined the Commanding Officer, Makutupora JKT 934, and the Attorney General. A summons was sent to the Commanding Officer requiring him to appear and be heard in the C application but for reasons I do not consider informed or respectful, the commanding officer refused to accept service and did not appear at the hearing. The Attorney General was represented by learned Attorney Mr. Mwambe.

The applicant was born on 21 June, 1939. He is now aged forty-five and has started to feel old. D When he grew up he went to school and eventually attained the General Certificate of Education (Ordinary Level) at the then Government Secondary School, Dodoma in December 1965. Immediately after leaving school he joined the Co-operative Division as a co-operative inspector. While in that E appointment he attended three short courses. He pursued the first course at the Co-operative College, Moshi which lasted from 4 January, 1968 to 4 April, 1968. The second course was similarly pursued at the Co-operative College, Moshi and lasted from 9

September, 1971 to 9 October, 1971. The third course was pursued at the Kenyatta Co-operative College, Lang'ata in Kenya and lasted F from 15 May, 1972 to 12 August, 1972. Then on 10 October, 1972 he moved from the Co-operative Division to the Audit and Supervision Fund where he was formally appointed on 18 October, 1972. He is still with the Fund todate. Perhaps I should add, although it is not necessary to do so, that the G Co-operative Division and the Audit and Supervision Fund are both departments in the Prime Minister's Office and under the Commissioner/Registrar of Co-operatives. In effect, therefore, the applicant remained under the same employer, the change of departments notwithstanding. While H working with the Fund the applicant proceeded to the Institute of Development Studies, Mzumbe in July 1974 to pursue a diploma course in accountancy. He completed this course in December 1978 and continued his employment with the Fund.

On 11 May, 1984, while along Kuu Street in Dodoma, he was picked up by the military police and, I despite protests, was taken to

A Makutupora National Service camp as a person liable for call up. He was not even permitted to bid farewell to his family of a wife and eight children but after persistent pleading he was only allowed to see his wife at her place of work before being conveyed to Makutupora. After arriving B there he pleaded on several occasions that he was not liable to call up, and produced documents to support his case, but was given promises of action which never materialised. I should also add here that until his apprehension he had never been served with a notice requiring him to join the National Service. His arguments in support of his case were I think threefold: first, that he had been a public C officer since December 1965; secondly, that the courses at Moshi and Lang'ata had each lasted less than nine months; and, thirdly, that at the time he completed the accountancy course at Mzumbe he was already over thirty-five years. In his brief submissions Mr. Mwambe for the D Attorney General conceded that the applicant was not liable for call up mainly on the ground of age. He did not therefore seek to oppose the application.

The National Service Act, 1964, to which where convenient I shall refer as "The Act", has since its enactment been amended not less than eight times. I therefore had the unenviable task of piecing E together the scattered legislation. As originally enacted in 1964 the Act enabled every male and female for national service. It was then a wholly voluntary affair. Then by Act No. 64 of 1966 the maximum age of eligibility was raised to thirty-five years and by Act No. 11 of 1971 the minimum age F was lowered to sixteen. Act No. 64 was significant in another way: It also introduced categories of persons who were liable to be called up for national service. This was achieved through s. 5 which also created the Third Schedule to the Act. It provided that every citizen, male or female, aged between eighteen and thirty-five and who was a member of the class specified in the Third Schedule G would be liable to have his name entered in the national service register and to be called upon to serve in the National Service. On the whole, these amendments were directed at persons who were to complete Form IV on or after 1 November, 1966 or who had enrolled or were to enrol at any H university and ceased for any reason to be students on or after 21 October, 1966 or persons who, having completed Form IV, had enrolled or were to enrol at educational institutions specified in the Third Schedule and cease for any reason to be students on or after 21 October, 1966, except for I persons who, inter-alia, were public officers at the commencement of the Act. The Schedule specified twenty-one institutions among which was Mzumbe Local Government Training

1984 TLR p4

LUGAKINGIRA J

Centre but not the Co-operative College, Moshi or the Kenyatta Cooperative College, Lang'ata. A Subsequently, the Third Schedule was repealed and replaced by a new schedule vide Government Notice No. 123 of 1970 which was published on 15 May, 1970. The new Schedule set out a longer list of educational institutions which now included the Co-operative College, Moshi and what was then B called the Mzumbe Local Government and Rural Development Training Centre but, again, not the Kenyatta Co-operative College, Lang'ata. There was a further innovation in the new schedule whereby exception was made to persons who, having become public officers after the commencement of the Act, attended in-service courses at the specified institutions where the C duration of the course was less than nine months. The new schedule was in turn repealed without replacement by Act No. 31 of 1974 but its import was incorporated in the present s.5B of the Act. The law as it stands today, therefore, and in so far as it is relevant here, is that every male or female D citizen aged between sixteen and thirty-five and who, having completed Form IV, subsequently enrols in any post-secondary school institution anywhere for a course of studies and ceases to be a student of such institution either because of the completion of the course or because he has abandoned the course after being a student for not less than one-half of its duration, is liable to be E called up. With this background, we can now proceed to determine the position of the applicant. But I should hasten to say that the Act needs to be rationalised and reprinted in one document.

As stated before the applicant took his first post- Form IV courses at the Co-operative College, F Moshi and this lasted from 4 January, 1968 to 4 April, 1968, a period of three months. The original third Schedule did not make a distinction on the duration of a course. But as we have also seen, the Co-operative College, Moshi was not specified in that schedule. Instead, that College came to be specified in the new schedule vide Government Notice No. 123 of 1970. The question now is whether G the applicant became liable for a call up by virtue of Government Notice No. 123 of 1970. I do not think so. In our jurisprudence where an Act repeals and replaces another Act, such repeal and replacement does not operate to affect any right or privilege acquired under the repealed Act. This H principle is embodied in s.14 of the Interpretation of Laws and General Clauses Act, 1972, the relevant parts of which I will quote:

"14. Where an Act repeals any provision of another Act, then unless the contrary intention appears, the I repeal shall

1984 TLR p5

LUGAKINGIRA J

A (a) revive anything not in force or existing at the time which the repeal takes effect; or

(b) ....,

(c) affect any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued, or incurred under the provision so B repealed; or...

Under s.3(1) of the Interpretation Act the term "Act" is defined to include any subsidiary legislation. Government Notice No. 123 of 1970 was therefore an Act which repealed and replaced a provision of C the National Service Act, 1964, namely, the original third schedule thereto. Since the Co-operative College, Moshi was not specified under the original schedule, it follows, in my view, that the applicant had acquired an exemption from the National Service notwithstanding the first course he D pursued at the said College and this exemption, in the absence of contrary intention, was not affected by the subsequent inclusion of that college in Government Notice No. 123 of 1970. It further follows that the applicant continued to enjoy the same exemption when he took the second course from 9 September, 1971 to 9 October, 1971. This is so because although now the College was E specified under Government Notice No. 123 of 1970, that did not operate to deprive him of the exemption already acquired under the original schedule. To put it shortly and differently, once exempted, always exempted. I may be held wrong and it may be shown that the operation of F Government Notice No. 123 of 1970 was not limited by the apparent short-comings of the original schedule. Even so, the applicant's position would remain unaltered. Government Notice No. 123 of 1970 was expressed as not applicable to persons who, having become public officers after the commencement of the Act, attended in-service courses at the specified institutions the duration of G which was less than nine months. The applicant became a public Officer after the commencement of the Act, that is, in December 1965 and each of the two courses he pursued at the Co-operative College, Moshi lasted less than nine months. He was therefore still exempted. I do not have to say H anything about the third course at Lang'ata for that college appeared neither in the original schedule nor in the subsequent schedule and even the course the applicant pursued there similarly lasted less than nine months. At this stage, too, I do not have to say anything about Mzumbe for I the applicant never enrolled there until July 1974 when he was already over thirty-five. But if I were compelled to do so, I would say that even if the applicant had enrolled at Mzumbe before attaining the age of thirty-five, he was then already a public officer and the issue would then have depended on the duration of A the course. I only wish to examine the issue of Mzumbe as respects the accountancy course he pursued there from July 1974 to December 1978.

Perhaps I should start off by making some general propositions as a result of my reading s.5B of the Act as repealed and replaced by Act No. 31 of 1974. It is clear to me that the conditions for call up B are complementary but age is the central factor about which the rest oscillate. In other words, the operation of the educational qualifications is limited by the age factor. I will illustrate this. A person completes form VI and he is at the time aged below thirty-five; he is liable for call up. A person C completes Form IV and pursues a post-secondary school course which he completes or abandons midway before turning thirty-five; he is liable for call up, unless he is already a public officer and the course is of a duration not exceeding nine months. A corollary to these propositions is that where a D person completes Form VI or completes or abandons midway a post-Form IV course AFTER turning thirty-five, he is NOT liable for call up. It may probably be asked whether a person would be E liable for call up where, being in possession of all the qualifications necessary for call up, he succeeds somehow to elude the event until he turns thirty-five. That would, undoubtedly, be an interesting question; but since it does not arise in this application I would not take on myself the burden of a definite opinion. I can only observe that the National service scheme is intended for young citizens as expressed in s.3(2) of the Act. F

We can now apply the above principles to the facts pertaining to the applicant. The applicant was born on 21 June, 1939 and celebrated his thirty-fifth birthday on 21 June, 1974. He enrolled at Mzumbe in July 1974. By that time, therefore, he had already exceeded the age limit necessary for being called up. For this reason and others already stated, I am of the view that the application has G merits and ought to succeed. For the avoidance of doubts I would mention again that the Attorney General did not seek to resist the application.

Before concluding I desire to make an observation on a matter that occasioned me considerable H anxiety. I am having in mind the way and manner the applicant found himself at Makutupora. We have already seen how he was picked up and conveyed to the camp without much ceremony and he had never before been served with a call up notice. The Act sets out the ways in which a person I liable for call up may join the National Service. They are two and are spelt out

A in s.5F(1) and (3). The first is for the person liable for call up to present himself in person to the Registrar within thirty days of his becoming liable. If he fails to do so without reasonable cause he may be prosecuted and punished. The second way is for the Registrar to serve such person a B written notice stating that he is called up for national service and requiring him to present himself at such place and time, and to such authority, as may be specified. If the person fails without reasonable cause to so present himself he may be prosecuted and punished. I was unable to find any provision either in the Act or in the subsidiary legislation made thereunder which authorises C anyone simply to arrest any person believed or suspected to be liable for call up and whisk him off to a National Service Camp. It seems to me, therefore, that the manner the applicant was dealt with was rather overzealous, if not unlawful, and, in the circumstances described by him regrettable. If it D is felt that the existing machinery is not sufficiently helpful the best way to go about it is to secure an amendment to the law.

In conclusion, I allow the application and declare that the applicant is not liable and has never been liable for call up to the National Service. I accordingly order that he should be discharged forthwith E unless on his own election he remains in the camp.

Application Allowed.

F

[zRPz]ROBERT ARANJO v ZENA MWIJUMA 1984 TLR 7 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Maina J

March 14, 1985
G CIVIL APPEAL 22 OF 1984
Flynote
Family Law - Division of matrimonial assets upon dissolution of marriage - Whether court has to consider extent party has contributed to the breakdown of marriage for the purpose of division of matrimonial assets - H Law of Marriage Act, 1971, s.114
-Headnote
This is a second appeal by Robert Aranjo. The Primary Court granted divorce and also ordered that I the appellant should pay his former wife, the respondent, the sum of Shs. 70,818/50 being one quarter of the matrimonial assets acquired during the subsistence of the marriage. The subsequent appeal by the appellant was dismissed by the District Court and hence the A present appeal.
1984 TLR p8
MAINA J
Held: (i) Section 114 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 does not make a distinction for the purpose of division of matrimonial assets between an innocent and guilty party; B

(ii) there is no provision in the Law of Marriage Act requiring the court to consider to what extent a party has contributed to the breakdown of the marriage for the purpose of division of matrimonial assets.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed C
Case referred to:

1. Bi Hawa Mohamed v Ally Sefu Court of Appeal Civil Appeal No. 9 of 1983; D

[zJDz]Judgment
Maina, J.: This is a second appeal by Robert Aranjo. He had petitioned for divorce at the Kilosa Urban Primary Court against Zena Mwijuma who was then his wife. The Primary Court granted the E divorce and also ordered that the appellant should pay his former wife, the respondent, the sum of Shs 70,819/50, being one quarter of the matrimonial assets acquired during the subsistence of the marriage. The appellant filed an appeal in the District Court, and after full hearing the appeal was dismissed.
The appeal before this court is not against the dissolution of the marriage but it is against the order F giving the wife one quarter of the matrimonial assets. The ground for this complaint is that, according to the appellant, the marriage was dissolved due to the wife's desertion and not on appellant's cruelty as held by the District Court. The appellant also claims that the respondent did not contribute anything in the acquiring of those assets. One thing, however, was beyond dispute. G All the assets were acquired during the subsistence of the marriage.

Let me point out that the order for division of matrimonial assets was made under section 114 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971. The court has powers, when granting a decree of divorce or separation, H to make an order for division of matrimonial assets acquired during the marriage by the joint efforts of the parties. The appellant claimed that all the assets were acquired in his own name.

But they were acquired after he was married to the respondent during subsistence of the marriage. I The respondent was a housewife. The

1984 TLR p9

MAINA J

A appellant said he acquired those assets through his own efforts. There has been a lot of dispute as to whether the domestic work done by a housewife should count in the acquisition of matrimonial assets. That

B dispute was settled by the Court of Appeal in the case of Bi Hawa Mohamed v Ally Sefu in Civil Appeal No. 9 of 1983. In that case, the Court of Appeal held that the contribution of a spouse to the welfare of the family should be considered as contribution to the acquisition of matrimonial assets. In this case, while the respondent looked after the house and the welfare of the seven children of the marriage apart from other household chores like cooking, the appellant was able to run his business C and acquire the assets. All the assets were therefore acquired by the joint efforts of the parties. The respondent was entitled to a share.

The appellant further argued that the District Court should have held that the marriage was D dissolved due to the respondent's desertion and not due to the appellant's cruelty. There was evidence that the respondent left the matrimonial home due to the acts of the appellant and those acts were held to amount to cruelty. Be that as it may, the marriage had broken down irreparably and it had to be dissolved. There is no dispute about that. Now, whether the appellant was guilty of E cruelty or the respondent was guilty of desertion, it makes no difference as regards division of matrimonial assets. Section 114 of the Law of Marriage Act does not make a distinction for the F purpose of division of matrimonial assets between an innocent and guilty party. There is no provision in the Law of Marriage Act requiring the court to consider to what extent a party has contributed to the breakdown of the marriage for the purpose of division of matrimonial assets.

There was ample evidence upon which the lower courts held that the value of the matrimonial assets G was Shs. 282,474. The lower courts considered and gave good reasons for awarding the respondent one quarter of the value of those assets, that is, Shs. 70,818.50. The respondent was not only doing domestic work. She even had assisted in the appellant's bakery business. The marriage had lasted for many years, from 1968 till 1982 when it was dissolved. There were seven children of H the marriage, all living with the appellant. All these were relevant factors. I cannot say that the lower courts erred in awarding the respondent one-quarter of the matrimonial assets. In the result, this appeal is dismissed with costs.

I Appeal dismissed.

1984 TLR p10

A

[zRPz]YASINI MIKWANGA v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 10 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mtwara
Judge Msumi J

March 27, 1985
CRIMINAL APPEAL 15 OF 1982
Criminal Law - Contempt of court - Accused refuses to answer a question from a co-accused - Presiding B magistrate overrules such objection - Accused still refuses to reply - Whether accused is guilty of contempt of court, (s.114(2) of the Penal Code).

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Contempt of court - Magistrate convicts accused person in a summary proceeding without drafting a charge of contempt of court - Whether failure to do so occasioned a failure of C justice.
-Headnote
The appellant and three other persons were charged with shopbreaking and stealing contrary to section 296(1) and 265 of the Penal Code. In his defence, the appellant opted to testify on D affirmation, and while he was being cross examined by one of his co-accused, appellant refused to answer one of the questions put to him contending that it was irrelevant. The District Magistrate E overruled the objection and ordered the appellant to answer the question, but the appellant refused to answer it. It was at this juncture that the magistrate decided to take cognizance of the alleged contemptuous conduct and summarily convicted him under the provision of section 114(2) of the Penal Code.
Held: (i) In every case where the court rules out that the witness should answer the question, then F the witness ought to comply, except where he is impaired by physical infirmity or otherwise;

(ii) unlike in formal criminal charge, there are no set rules which a magistrate is required to comply with in drafting a charge of contempt of court under summary proceedings; it is enough for G him to explain to the accused the gist of his offensive conduct, the particular provision of the law which contravenes it and give him an opportunity to make a reply. H
Case Information
Order accordingly
Cases referred to:

1. Joseph Odhengo s/o Ogongo v R. (1954) 21 E.A.C.A. 302.
2. A.G. v Butterworth (1963) 1.Q.B. 696 I

1984 TLR p11
MAINA J
A Y.A.S. Mchora for the Appellant.
[zJDz]Judgment

Msumi, J.: Appellant was summarily convicted of contempt of court contrary to section 114(1)(b) of the Penal Code. He was sentenced to six months imprisonment.

B What happened is that appellant and three other persons were charged with shopbreaking and stealing contrary to section 296(1) and 265 of the Penal Code. In his defence appellant opted to testify on affirmation. And while he was being cross examined by one of his co-accused, appellant C refused to answer one of the questions put to him contending that the same was irrelevant. It would appear the alleged question concerned a case of which appellant was previously convicted. The learned trial district magistrate overruled the objection and ordered the appellant to answer the question. But appellant stuck to his guns; he refused to answer the question. It was then when the D learned trial magistrate decided to take cognizance of the alleged contemptuous conduct and summarily convicted him under the provisions of section 114(2) of the Penal Code.

The learned defence counsel, Mr. Mchora submitted, as his first ground of appeal, that the alleged E offensive conduct of the appellant did not amount to a contempt of court. This view was emphatically shared by the learned Senior State Attorney on behalf of the Republic. With respect, I am of the contrary opinion. Appellant's conduct clearly contravenes subsection 1(b) of section 114. F It appears both learned counsel have in their minds either subsection 1(a) or 1(i) of section 114. Otherwise it is incomprehensible how the conduct of the appellant can be excluded from being contemptuous under subsection 1(b). Perhaps I may do a great service to the learned counsel if I quote the said subsection:

G "114 (1) Any person who -

(a) ....

(b) having been called upon to give evidence in a judicial proceeding, fails to attend or, having attended refuses to be shown or to make an affirmation, having been sworn or affirmed, refuses without H lawful excuse to answer a question or to produce a document or other thing, or remains in the room in which such proceedings is being had or taken, after the witnesses have been ordered to leave such room; is guilty of a misdemeanour, and is liable to imprisonment for six months or to a fine not exceeding five I hundred shillings (the emphasis is mine).

1984 TLR p12

MAINA J

It is true that as an accused, appellant was not a compellable witness hence it cannot be said that he A was called to give evidence. But once appellant had opted to testify in the witness box he automatically subjected himself to all rules governing witnesses. For example like other witnesses he was required either to affirm or swear and he was subject to cross examination. In this case when the B appellant refused to comply with the trial magistrate's order that he should answer the question he was clearly contravening the provision of subsection 1(b) of section 114. In Joseph Odhengo s/o Ogongo v.R ((1954) 21 of E.A.C.A. 302 appellant was summarily convicted of contempt of court contrary to section 116(1) (b) of Kenya Penal code which is in pari materia to our section 114 1(b) of C the Penal Code. In principle the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa agreed with the trial judge that appellant's refusal to answer questions put to him as a witness was contemptuous.

Perhaps one of the questions which may arise at this juncture is whether appellant had lawful excuse D not to answer the question notwithstanding the court's order that he should do so. I am of the view that except where the witness is impaired by physical infirmity or otherwise, in every case once the court rules out that the witness should answer the question then he ought to comply, otherwise E he will be liable for contempt. The trial court's order might be legally wrong; for example where the magistrate allows question which has the effect of extracting some inadmissible evidence such as previous conviction, as in this case. All the same, that order must be obeyed. Any contrary view will F have the undesired effect of creating an impasse in the conduct of the trials. The cardinal aim of creating the offence of contempt of court is to arrest all conducts which are aimed or reasonably feared to be aimed at interfering with proper administration of justice. As pointed out by Lord Donavan in A.G v Butterworth [1963] 1 Q.B. 696 that: G

> The question to be decided... in all cases of alleged contempt of court, is whether the action complained of is calculated to interfere with the proper administration of justice. There is more than one way of so interfering". H

No doubt one of the essential conditions for proper administration of justice is that there should prevail discipline in court throughout any trial. This condition will definitely be undermined if any party in the trial was to be allowed with impunity to defy an order of the court on the ground that the I said order is illegal or

A otherwise improper. I don't think that the legislature meant to tolerate such condition when it impliedly exempted a witness, under s.114(1)(b), from answering a question by giving lawful excuse. Any statutory provision which directly or indirectly purports to strip off the courts' inherent power B of maintaining law and order in the course of a trial must be viewed with circumspection.

In his second ground of appeal the learned defence counsel submitted that the trial magistrate ought to have framed a charge which should have contained the gist of the purported contemptuous C conducts. The learned counsel is of the opinion that the trial magistrate failed to do so hence there resulted a failure of justice. Again the learned Senior State Attorney found this argument irresistible. With respect, I am again unfortunate in finding myself holding a different view. I admit that section 114(2) under which courts are allowed to take cognizance of certain contemptuous conducts and D convict a person summarily has been repeatedly interpreted by this court and courts above as requiring the magistrate to frame a charge before a summary conviction is entered. Thus when dealing with a similar provision in the Penal Code of Kenya in Ogongo's case the Court of Appeal said:

E The observation which we wish to make on this is that, when a Court takes cognizance of an offence under the provision of section 116(2) it is in fact assuming and exercising a jurisdiction to deal summarily with the F offence and that in every such case, it is essential that the court should frame and record the substance of a charge, call upon the person accused to show cause why he should not be convicted on that charge, and give him a fair opportunity to reply.

G I am of the opinion that this requirement is sufficiently complied with where a magistrate adopts any procedure which has the practical effect of notifying the accused of the gist of his offensive conduct and afford him an opportunity to reply. Unlike a formal criminal charge, there are no set H rules which a magistrate is required to comply with in drafting such a charge under summary proceeding. In determining whether the provisions of subsection (2) of section 114 have been complied with the question should be whether the court took the necessary step in explaining to the accused the gist of his offensive conduct, the particular provision of the law which contravenes it, I and lastly give him an opportunity to make a reply. There is no magic formula for attaining these ends. Thus in Ogongo's case the Court of Appeal was of the opinion that these ends have been adequately attained by the trial judge when A he recorded:

A. Charged with refusing without lawful excuse to answer a question contrary to section 115(b) Penal Code. Court takes cognizance of offence under section 116(2) and sentences A, etc. B

Of course in that case the Court of Appeal was also influenced by the fact that the trial court record showed that appellant had been persistently warned by the court to answer questions but in vain. In C the present case, before convicting the appellant the learned trial magistrate recorded:

Court: This accused witness has been repeatedly warned by the court to answer questions put to him by his co-accused but he has deliberately refused to answer. This is, in my view a disrespect to the court and as D such the accused witness has committed the offence of contempt of court contrary to section 114(1)(b) of the Penal Code, Cap. 16.

The accused witness is therefore asked to state his reasons as to why he should not be punished for E contempt of court.

Accused witness states: I have refused to answer the questions put to me by the co-accused (No.3) because they are irrelevant to this instant case except that they are relevant to the previous case (Cr.C. No. 30/81) F which has already been determined by this court on 26/6/1981. I repeat again that I am not going to answer the accused's question in this cross-examination.

And after the appellant's reply, the learned trial magistrate summarily convicted the appellant. With G respect, I am quite convinced that from the court record as quoted above the learned trial magistrate slavishly complied with the provisions of subsection (2) of section 114. The learned defence counsel's argument, which unfortunately was not challenged by the learned Senior State Attorney, as a ground for this appeal is dismissed. H

However, I totally agree with both learned counsel that the sentence of six months' imprisonment imposed against the appellant is illegal. According to section 114(2) under which the summary conviction was entered, the maximum sentence which a court is empowered to impose is a fine of I four hundred shillings or one

1984 TLR p15
A month's imprisonment in default. It is only where accused has been convicted through normal indictment that the court is empowered to impose a maximum sentence of six months or a fine not exceeding five hundred shillings.
B In conclusion appeal against conviction is dismissed. But on the ground of illegality, appeal against sentence is allowed. Hence the sentence of six months' imprisonment is set aside and in substitute appellant is sentenced to imprisonment for one month. This alteration of sentence is of no beneficial value to the appellant as he has already completed serving the said illegal sentence. It is, C however, important for record purposes.
Order accordingly.
1984 TLR p15
D
[zRPz]MULBADAW VILLAGE COUNCIL AND 67 OTHERS v NATIONAL AGRICULTURAL AND FOOD CORPORATION 1984 TLR 15 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge D'Souza Ag J

December 3, 1984
Flynote
E Land Law - Acquisition of land under the Land Acquisition Act, (No. 47 of 1967) - Procedure to be followed.
F Land Law - Acquisition of land under the Land Acquisition Act (No. 47 of 1967) - Whether Act applies to the land belonging to peasants.
Land Law - Right of Occupancy - Whether land held under customary tenure falls under the definition of G right of occupancy - Whether authorities can grant a formal right of occupancy in respect of Land held under customary tenure, i.e. deemed right of occupancy.
-Headnote
H The plaintiffs, a village council and 67 villagers of the same village sued the National Agricultural and Food Corporation (NAFCO) for a large tract of land in Hanang District, damages for trespass and other related reliefs. Detailed facts of the suit appear in the judgment.
I Held: (i) The Land Acquisition Act No. 47 of 1967 applies also to land held under customary tenure;
(ii) the definition of rights of occupancy under the land
1984 TLR p16
D'SOUZA Ag J
Ordinance Cap. 113 and Act 47/1967 includes titles of peasants holding land under customary A tenure;

(iii) The Mulbadaw Village council and Mulbadaw Villagers were lawfully possessing land and they could only be deprived of their land by due operation of Law, not by mere blessings of the government and party leaders in Hanang District and Arusha Region; B

(iv) the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act (No. 47 of 1967) were not followed in acquiring land belonging to Mulbadaw Village Council and Mulbadaw Villagers and therefore such acquisition was unlawful; C

(v) where someone is in lawful occupation of land no valid right of occupancy can be offered to anyone else over the same land unless the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act (No. 47 of 1967) have been complied with.

Case Information

Order accordingly. D

No case referred to.

Musei for plaintiffs

Jundu for the defendant E

Editorial Note: National Agricultural and Food Corporation successfully appealed to the Court of Appeal against this decision in Civil Appeal No. 3 of 1985 (to appear in 1986 T.L.R). F

[zJDz]Judgment

D'Souza Ag. J.: In this suit Mulbadaw village council, registered under the Villages and Ujamaa Villages (Registration) Act 1975 and sixty seven villagers of the same village, in their individual capacity are suing the National Agricultural and Food Corporation (hereinafter referred to as G NAFCO) for a large tract of land in Hanang District, damages for trespass and other connected reliefs. Originally the first plaintiff was stated as Mulbadaw village. On 24th of October 1981 in ruling on a preliminary matter Chuwa J. allowed an amendment of the plaint to put the Mulbadaw village H council properly on record. The land itself in dispute is 6095 acres of pasture land and 200 acres of arable land claimed by the first plaintiff as its property and another 1839 acres of arable land claimed as theirs by the rest of the plaintiffs.

At the beginning of the trial the following issues were agreed on by the parties and adopted as issue I in the case.

1984 TLR p17

D'SOUZA Ag J

A (1) Was the 1st plaintiff owner of 200 acres of farming land and 6,195 acres of pasture land at Mulbadaw village?

(2) Were the 2nd to 67th plaintiffs lawful owners of 1,830 acres of land at Mulbadaw and did the defendant B occupy 3000 acres of land belonging to the plaintiffs and destroy three houses belonging to the 8th, 66th and 67th plaintiffs?

(4) In March 1980 did the defendant occupy another 3000 acres of land belonging to the plaintiffs and destroy six houses belonging to 41st, 46th, 54th, 57th, 58th and 61st plaintiffs?

C (5) In December 1980 did the defendant set on fire and destroy twenty four homesteads belonging to 3rd, 4th, 5th, 10th, 11th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 19th, 22nd, 24th, 33rd, 35th, 36th, 43rd, 44th, 45th, 48th, 49th, 50th, 55th, and 62nd plaintiffs; and destroy in these houses stored crops valued at Shs. 4,800 and also destroy 4281/2 acres of growing maize and beans?

D (6) If the defendant did the actions in issues 3, 4 and 5 above, were their actions lawful?
(7) What reliefs, if any, are the parties entitled to?

E In the defendant's written statement of defence the defendant raised an issue that the plaintiffs had no mandate from the Mulbadaw village council to institute the suit. At the time of framing the issues this was not raised as one of the issues but defendant's counsel cross-examined the plaintiffs' witnesses on it and again raised it in submissions at the end of the case. Counsel for the F defendant also went on to argue that only a few of the 67 villagers gave evidence and as the few had no authority to appear on behalf of the others the claims of those who did not testify ought to be dismissed. Although these arguments were not framed as issues at the beginning they are issues G apparent from the pleadings, the evidence on record and the submissions of both counsel. Under Order XIV rule 5(1) I propose to deal with these as additional issues.

The defendant does not deny that the Mulbadaw village is a registered village under the Villages and Ujamaa Villages Act 1975. PW4 Jonas Samu is the Chairman of the village council. As such he H would be the natural and legal spokesman and representative of the village council. He was not cross-examined on the issue of mandate and his statement, in answer to a question from the court, to the effect that the village council had authorised the filing of the suit stands unchallenged. PW3 I Mohamed Abdi was a member of Mulbadaw village council until the end of 1981. The defendant tried to show that he was not resident in the village. However he had land in the village and the villagers accepted him as a member of the council. PW3's evidence that he was A a resident of Mulbadaw until events forced him to move in 1981 was supported by the evidence of PW1 Frederick Tluway the Katibu Kata (Ward Secretary) of Bosanta in 1974. We stated that PW3 Mohamed Abdi was resident in Mulbadaw even before May 1974. Counsel for the defendant has B brought to the attention of this court the evidence of DW6 Andrew Dally, DW9 Sebastian Gidamashghu, DW3 Joseph Kamili to the effect that Mohamed Abdi was a resident of Endasak and not Mulbadaw. On this issue I believe I have to take the evidence of the defence witnesses with a grain of salt. The evidence of DW4 Karoli Flavian, taken together with Exhibit D.18 shows that C Mohamed Abdi had an old house and mature trees around this house. DW 7 M.A.O. Mwengamba, probably in an unguarded moment, stated, "After this (The meeting of 25.7.79) many villagers moved out but a few objected - e.g. Mohamed Abdi, Hassan Abdi, Ami Habiye .." I also note that when the D plaintiffs filed their amended plaint they also filed a document authorizing their counsel Mr. F.K. Musei to sign the plaint on their behalf and authorizing the plaintiffs Welwel, Mohamed Abdi, Ami, Yusuf and Bangi to represent them in the suit. On these preliminary issues I therefore find in favour of the plaintiffs. E

In this case although the issues, for purposes of convenience were split into six, there is one central issue that is paramount and on which the entire decision will necessarily rest. This issue arises from paragraphs 4 to 6 of the written statement of defence. The defendant does not deny that it entered into and still occupies land at Mulbadaw. It pleads however that it has been carrying out a lawful F Tanzanian national project, the Mulbadaw wheat project, covering 10,000 acres - part of the Hanang Wheat Complex covering 70,000 acres under the Canada - Tanzania Wheat Programme- the area having been identified by the Government for that purpose. In paragraph 5 of the written statement G of defence the defendant states that in order to give way to the said national project the Government and Party (C.C.M) authorities had more than once ordered and notified Mulbadaw villagers to vacate the areas identified for the project. In paragraph 6 the defendant asserts that since H identification of the area for the project by the government the defendant has maintained a lawful occupation of the land as per government directives.

During the course of the hearing of this case the defendant added another fact to its defence. Although the defendant did not apply to amend the written statement of defence I find that both I

A parties led evidence and cross examined on this aspect and I find that in order to do justice between the parties and to sort out the real issues in controversy between them it is necessary to make a decision on this aspect too. This is to the effect that NAFCO has a lawful right of occupancy over the disputed areas.

B Before coming to the decision on the issues, let us consider the defendant's evidence on them. DW.1 Sadiki Omar Libembembe, an Administrative Officer with NAFCO testified that in 1960 the Government started research into the possibilities of large scale growing of wheat in Hanang C District. He produced as exhibit D.1 a Plan made by the British Government's department of surveys and issued by the Ministry of Land and Housing. He stated that in 1969 the Kilimo Department started Bassotu Wheat Scheme and in the same year NAFCO was established by Act 17 of 1969. He D produced photo copies of the national development plans showing that the wheat projects in Hanang were part and parcel of national development plans. On the question of how the projects were implemented vis-a-vis the peasants already in occupation of land in the marked areas he said this:

E When we start a project the peasants are informed through the instruments of the Government and the Party. A letter is written from NAFCO Headquarters to the Regional Party Secretary who was then also the F Regional Commissioner. He then spreads the message to the villagers through the Katibu Kata, etc. The NAFCO Manager in the area also assists in the spread of the information

DW7 MAO Mwengamba, Manager of Mulbdaw wheat project, on this aspect had this to say:

G In the 1980/81 season we had to move people out. The procedure followed was to inform the Katibu Kata of the affected area. On 29.3.1979 I saw the Katibu Kata to inform him to move out the peasants who were in the area earmarked for expansion.

H This witness went on to explain how NAFCO Officers held a meeting on 25.7.79 with the Mulbadaw village authorities who were accordingly informed of the boundaries of Mulbadaw farm.

I On the second facet of the defendant's defence a number of witnesses testified - the main one being one T.M. Hyera (DW2) of the Land Office at Arusha. According to this witness an application

1984 TLR p20

D'SOUZA Ag J

by NAFCO for 22,793 acres of land at Bassetu was approved by the Regional Land Advisory A Committee and by its letter AR/R/1009/22 of 20.1.1973 to NAFCO the Land Office made a formal "offer" of a right of occupancy. There is no evidence on record that this offer of 20.1.73 was accepted and registered. Instead there is a request for a resurvey and division and new offers for smaller units. Accordingly another offer (Ex. D.16) was issued to NAFCO for the Mulbadaw area - B dated 29.7.1981. The same was accepted and fees were paid in August 1981. The offer document was signed by NAFCO in July 1981. The Right of Occupancy was for 99 years back-dated to 1.7.1979. C

At the end of the case for both sides the court specifically directed both counsel to submit on the applicability of Act 47/1967 Land Acquisition Act. Both counsel, Mr. Jundu and Mr Musei did so. Section 3 of the said Act authorizes the President to acquire land where such land is required for any public purpose. S.4(2) provides: D

> Where the President is satisfied that a corporation requires any land for the purpose of construction of any work which in his opinion would be of public utility or in the public interest or in the interest of the national economy, he may, with the approval, to be signified by resolution, of the National Assembly and by order E published in the gazette, declare the purpose for which such land is required to be a public purpose and upon such order being made such purpose shall be deemed to be a public purpose for the purpose of this Act. F

Section 6 of the same Act provides that if the President resolves that any land is required for a public purpose the Minister (for lands) shall give notice of such intention to the persons interested or claiming to be interested in such land. Section 7 provides that the Minister may provide by notice G under s.6 or subsequent notice directing the person concerned to give up possession within a specified period not less than six weeks from the date of publication of such notice in the gazette. The President may, in urgent cases, certify so and possession may be obtained in a lesser period. Section 8 provided for the mode of publication of the notices. H

Counsel for the defendant has argued that the Act is not applicable to land held by peasants under customary land tenure and only applies to formal rights of occupancy. This court is unable to agree. The definition of right of occupancy under Cap. 113 of the Land Ordinance and Act 47/67 includes I titles of peasants holding

1984 TLR p21

D'SOUZA Ag J

A land under customary tenure. Furthermore s.17 of the Land Acquisition Act provides that where any question arises respecting title to any land the party in possession shall be deemed to be lawfully entitled to such land unless the contrary is shown to the satisfaction of the court. In this B matter if the plaintiffs (including 1st plaintiff) were in possession of the disputed land before NAFCO came on the scene they would be deemed to be entitled thereto.

In view of the above it appears that the law and procedure to be followed in acquiring land for public purposes is clear enough. It is also clear from the evidence of the defence witnesses that the law, C though clear, was not followed. However whether the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act can be applied to the facts of this case would depend on this court's decision on issue No. 1 and 2 as framed.

On issue No.1 PW.1 Frederick Tluway, the then Katibu Kata of Bassotu Ward, testified that from D may 1974 to September 1975 he was one of those involved in the establishment of village under "operation vijiji". Mulbadaw was one of the villages established. On the western side its boundary was Bassotu Plantations and Bassotu Lake. On the Eastern side its boundary was the Rift Valley E escarpment. On the Northern side it bordered on the Rift Valley and Ufana Ward in Bashnet. On the south side, the Laq'ang hill. According to this witness these boundaries followed the old boundaries of what was even then called Mulbadaw village. The land within the village was divided into areas for housing, farming areas for cultivation and pastures. According to the evidence of PW3 F Mohamed Guled Mulbadaw village was registered and incorporated under reference Reg. AR/KIJ/266 as per exhibits P.2 and P.3. There was also the evidence of PW.4 Jonas Samu on this issue that Mulbadaw developed into a fully fledged village with 'kayas' and a council. The G defendant has argued that as the village was not registered until 1976 it could not hold land in 1975. I accept the evidence of PW.1 Frederick Tluway. The effect of this evidence is that before the village was incorporated Mulbadaw village was an administrative unit. When it was incorporated it was in H possession and control of all land within the former administrative unit. It is inconceivable that a village was registered or incorporated without any land in its possession and control. Although the first issue was framed based on 'ownership' I find that once the village council the 1st plaintiff establishes lawful possession, it has established the preliminary requirement for a suit in trespass to I land. In view of this I do not consider it necessary to consider the defendant's argument that Mulbadaw village council had no formal right of occupancy over the land within the boundaries given by PW1. Frederick Tluway. I am satisfied that the village A council were in lawful possession and control of the land in question. The first issue is accordingly answered in the positive and in favour of the 1st plaintiff.

1984 TLR p22

D'SOUZA Ag J

On issue No.2 relating to 2nd to 67th plaintiffs the following evidence is relevant. PW1 Frederick Tluway when he supervised "Operation vijiji" in Mulbadaw in 1975 found peasants already in B occupation of the area of Mulbadaw. He did not find NAFCO in the area which they set aside for Mulbadaw village which was later registered and incorporated. Of these he remembered the second and the 54th plaintiffs. We also have the evidence of PW.2 Welwel, PW 3 Mohamed Abdi, PW 4 C Jonas Sama, PW5 Habiye, PW6 Yusuf Ally and PW 7 Bangi Laida that they or other peasants were in occupation for a long time before NAFCO moved into the area. DW1 Sadic Omar Libembembe and DW7 MAO Mwingamba in their evidence also admitted that in 1978 when NAFCO moved into D Mulbadaw area they found peasants living in the area. However Exhibit P.6, minutes of a meeting held by Mulbadaw village on 6/1/81 contained a list of peasants whose crops were destroyed. The list gives the destroyed acreage of each peasant. According to PW3 Mohamed Guled on 6/1/81 the meeting elected a committee to deal with their problems. They visited the farm of each peasant E affected and recorded the damage done. Later in his evidence PW3 Mohamed Guled stated that the list was of 67 people who had their houses or crops destroyed. PW3 was not cross examined on the correctness or otherwise of this list. On the basis of the evidence of PW1 to 7, the admissions made F by DW.1 and DW7 and on the basis of Exhibit P.6 I find that the second to the 67th plaintiffs were in occupation of 1,839 acres of arable land in Mulbadaw village before NAFCO started operations in the area under the administrative jurisdiction of Mulbadaw village council. The village council G recognised that their occupation was lawful and they had been in occupation for a considerable time before NAFCO decided to expand. They had customary tenancies or what are called deemed rights of occupancy.

The defendant does not allege that it entered into vacant land. On the contrary it states that it H rightfully displaced the village council and the peasants after the land was 'identified' for its use - in other words the rights of the peasants and the village council were extinguished or gave way to the superior rights of NAFCO. The court finds the rights of the peasants and the village council could not be extinguished or superseded except by due operation of law. I

1984 TLR p23

D'SOUZA Ag J

A In view of the above issue No.2 is also answered in favour of the plaintiffs.

This court proposes to consider the evidence on issues 3, 4, 5, and 6 jointly as they overlap considerably. However the same can be considered in two parts. Firstly whether NAFCO unlawfully B entered into the land (found in issues No.1 and 2 to be owned by or at least in the lawful occupation of the plaintiffs). The second part is whether houses and crops were destroyed as alleged.

The Defendant contends that it entered the land lawfully with the blessings of government and C party leaders in Hanang District and Arusha Region. It is possible that the leaders concerned were acting in good faith but enthusiasm in implementing national projects should not encourage the taking of short cuts. The Mulbadaw village council and Mulbadaw villagers could only be deprived of their land by due operation of law. The Land Acquisition Act 47/67 provides the law on theD matter. The same Act also envisages situations where land is needed urgently and those in possession can be dispossessed at an enhanced speed. But as already held elsewhere in this judgment the provisions of this law were not followed.

E The Defendant also contends that the land it occupied was land in respect of which it held a valid right of occupancy. The Defendant produced three offers of rights of occupancy as exhibit D.10, D.11 and D.16. There are two reasons why this aspect of the Defendant's defence cannot stand. Firstly where someone is in lawful occupation of land no valid right of occupancy can be offered to F anyone else over the same land unless the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act 47/67 have been complied with. To hold otherwise would mean the Commissioner for Lands, by simple device of making offers of rights of occupancy could bypass the provisions of the law. In view of this I hold G that the right of occupancy offered to NAFCO in respect of Mulbadaw wheat project was not valid. Secondly the offers as per Exhibits D.10 and D.11 were never formally accepted. The offer for Mulbadaw Wheat Project (Ex-D.16) was accepted in July 1981 and the requisite fees paid in August 1981. This was well after NAFCO had evicted the plaintiffs from the land. In other words when H NAFCO set out to expand into Mulbadaw they did not even have a right of occupancy over the area. For the above reasons this court finds that NAFCO's entry into the 8,125 acres in dispute in this case was illegal.

On the second aspect of these issues the Defendant has denied destroying 33 houses belonging to I 8th, 66th, 67th, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 10th, 11th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 19th, 22nd, 24th, 33rd, 35th, 36th, 43rd, 44th, 45th, 48th, 49th, 50th, 55th, 62nd, 41st, 46th, 54th, 57th, 58th, and 61st plaintiffs. The A defendant also denied destroying stored grain worth Shs. 4,800/- and 4281/2 acres of growing maize and beans. On the destroyed houses the defendant appears to state that the peasants voluntarily demolished them. On the stored grain the defendant denied any knowledge of the same. B On the destruction of crops the defendant admits that these were destroyed but states that this was not done by it. In paragraph 4 of the written statement of defence the defendant states that no trespass, blazing of houses and unlawful up rooting of crops had been committed by him (sic) at any point of time but all along since 1978 to present day the defendant has been carrying on a lawful C Tanzania national project.

Let us look at the evidence on this aspect. DW.3 Joseph Kamili was the officer in charge of the police station at Bassotu at all relevant times. He said that while holding that post he had never D received any complaints from peasants in Mulbadaw that NAFCO had burnt down or demolished their houses and destroyed their crops. In the same breath he stated that on 17.10.80 he was chosen as a member of sub-committee appointed by the Bassotu Ward Authorities to look into complaints E from peasants who said their houses had been burnt down. According to this witness when the subcommittee of six visited the areas they only saw some "bomas" or cattle enclosures burnt down. When cross-examined by Mr. Musei for the plaintiffs he said that he did receive complaints from the peasants that their houses were burnt down. He found some houses demolished by the peasants F themselves. D.N. 5 Amos Mwita was in the uncomfortable position of being the officer in charge of law and order in Hanang District at the relevant time. He said he did not personally receive any complaints from the peasants that their crops and houses had been demolished or destroyed - he G received these from the "O.C.S." Bassotu and the Area Commissioner of Hanang District. He received this news by radio call on 8.12.80. He made an investigation and wrote a report (Exhibit D.19) to the Area Commissioner. The relevant part of the report reads: H

> Mnamo tarehe 29/12/80 Mkuu wa Polisi Wilaya ya Hanang alifuatana na baadhi ya walalamikaji walifika sehemu ya mahame yaliyosemwa kuchomwa. Hakuona dalili ya nyumba au mazao kuchomwa ila kulikuwa na masalia ya majivu ya magogo yaliyong'olewa na kuchomwa. Kulikuwa na udongo I

A uliosukumwa na kurudishwa pamoja kwa kitu kama mashine. Walalamikaji .. walishindwa kuonyesha masalia.

On cross-examination he said he saw the remains of some small maize plants that had been ploughed B over. DW.7 MAO Mwangamba, the manager at Mulbadaw at the relevant time also gave similar evidence - that only cattle enclosures or fences surrounding houses had been burnt and that houses had been moved by the peasants themselves. However to the script. He stated that from 3rd to 5th C January 1981 the Katibu Kata, the Mratibu Kata and the police from Bassotu came to Mulbadaw to ask for agricultural equipment to assist in moving out the peasants - tractors and plough. On these three days "the job" was, he said, done. In cross-examination he said that he gave them four tractors driven by the drivers working for NAFCO - Mulbadaw and under his directions. He was D around on the first day of the "operation" and then left for Arusha. DW.10 Charles Kapera the 'O.C.S.' Bassotu in 1979, 1980 and 1981 also gave similar evidence. DW.9 Sebastian Gidamashghu, the Katibu Kata of Bassotu was also one of the people involved in the exercise of removing E peasants from the area. On the side of the plaintiffs on these issues we have the evidence of PW2 Welwel Amsi, PW 3 Mohamed Guled, PW 6 Yusufu Ali, and PW 7 Bangi Laida. Welwel Amsi described the progressive expansion of the Mulbadaw project over 3 years and its effect on the plaintiffs. So did PW.3 Mohamed Guled, PW6 Yusuf Ali and PW7 Bangi Laid. In weighing the F relative credibility of these witnesses on these issues I have taken into account that they must be quite bitter about losing their land, houses, and livelihood. However, I have, with this in mind observed that demeanour and reaction to cross-examination and I find them to be truthful witnesses. G I find that the evidence of DW.3 Joseph Kamili, DW.5 amos Mwita, DW.7 Charles Kapera, all of whom were involved in various stages of removing the peasants, their houses and crops from the disputed land, to be unreliable and self-serving. Aside from these opinions of this court on credibility I find that there are circumstances lending support to the plaintiffs' case. DW.1 Said Omar H Libembembe and DW.7 MAO Mwengamba accepted that there were peasants living in the area before NAFCO moved in. They presumably lived in houses. By the time the suit was filed these houses were no longer there. The Defendant contends that the peasants voluntarily removed them. I In view of the long history of resistance on the part of the peasants I find such voluntary demolition impossible to believe. PW3 Mohamed Guled produced as Exhibits P.6 and P.7 a list compiled by the plaintiffs of the people whose crops were ploughed over and whose houses were A demolished. No cross-examination was led on these exhibits. In view of the above, and considering the evidence as a whole, I find it proved to the extent required in Civil Cases, or even more, that the plaintiffs' growing crops, stored crops and houses were destroyed by the defendant. B

The defendant's counsel urges in his submission that the mischief if any, was done by the officers of the administration and the police. From the beginning this has been a conflict between NAFCO and the plaintiffs. The part played by the administration and police has been at the request and instigation of NAFCO. NAFCO does not deny entering into the land immediately the village and C villagers were ousted. They do not also deny providing active assistance and equipment in the last stages of the operations. In view of the above I find no merit in the defendant's contention that it was a mere on-looker. D

In the final event issues 1 to 6 are answered in favour of the plaintiffs.

In this suit the plaintiffs pray for judgment to be entered against the defendant as follows:

(a) A declaration that the land belongs to the Plaintiffs and an order that the defendant cease E their trespass forthwith.

(b) Special damages in the sum of Shs 545,600/=

(c) General damages for trespass F

(d) Interest

(e) Costs

(f) Any other relief

In view of the findings on the issue in this case prayer (a) is granted as prayed. On the special G damages claimed PW.3 Mohamed Guled testified that 378 acres of growing maize and 501/2 acres of growing beans were ploughed over. He gave the production of maize in the area at 81/2 bags to 15 bags per acre at Shs. 130/- per bag- making a total of Shs. 467,777/- for loss of the maize crop. Fifty H and halfacres of beans were destroyed. According to PW.3 each acre would have produced 4 bags at 275/- a bag making Shs. 56,525/- in lost beans crop. The 33 destroyed houses were valued at Shs 500/- each - making a total of Shs 16,500/-. PW.3 also testified that Safari Sito had 18 bags of maize I burnt and Bangi Laida had 10 bags of maize and 7 bags of beans burnt. As the maize was from the

A previous year's crop PW.3 put it at Shs. 100/- a bag. The figure for the burnt crops was Shs 4,800/=.

The defendant did not challenge these figures either in cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses or through its own witnesses. The figures appear reasonable and I accept them. In the event the B claim for special damages is allowed as prayed at Shs 545,600/-.

In considering the claim for general damages this court considers the following factors:

(a) The plaintiffs have been deprived of the use of their land partially from March 1979 and C totally from January 1981 until to-date. Excluding the 1980/81 crop which has been covered by the award of special damages, the plaintiffs have lost crops for three years.

(b) On only 4281/2 acres of land the plaintiffs were capable of producing over Shs 500,000/- D worth of crops per annum. The total land they were deprived of using was 6,095 acres of pasture and 2030 acres of arable land.

On the other hand I consider that the plaintiffs during their period of deprivation did not have to use any inputs in the form of seed, fertilizer, labour, fuel etc.

E Considering that the 1st plaintiff had only 200 acres of land under cultivation and that the exact use to which the pasture was put was not established, I award the 1st plaintiff Shs. 250,000/- as general damages. The 3rd to the 67th plaintiffs, who owned and used 1830 acres of land are awarded F shs. 1,300,000/- in general damages - the same to be apportioned between them in proportion to the acreage held by each before their eviction by NAFCO. The special and general damages awarded, totalling shs. 1,095,600/- is to bear interest at 9% from the date of judgment until payment in full.

G The plaintiffs are also awarded the costs of this suit, the same to be taxed.

Delivered this 3/12/84 in the presence of Mr. Musei for the plaintiffs and Ndugu H.A. Mapezi of H NAFCO Zonal Office, Arusha for the defendant.

Order Accordingly.

A

[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v ELIATOSHA MOSHA AND ANOTHER 1984 TLR 28 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Nyalali CJ, Mustafa JJA and Kisanga JJA

November 28, 1984

CRIMINAL APPEAL 24 OF 1983 B

Labour Law - Employment Ordinance - Complainant driving and keeping respondent's taxi and retaining 20% of earnings - Whether relationship of Employer and employee existed to attract prosecution for breaches of the Employment Ordinance. C

-Headnote

This is a second appeal by the Director of Public Prosecutions and it concerns a case in which the respondents were charged in the District Court at Mwanza for breaches of certain provisions of the Employment Ordinance, Cap. 366, and the Regulation of Wages and Terms of Employment D Ordinance, Cap. 300 and the Workmen's Compensation Ordinance, Cap. 263. Detailed facts appear in the judgment.

Held: To enable the court to decide satisfactorily whether, on the facts, there existed in law a E relationship of employer and employee it was necessary to adduce evidence to show the degree of control that the respondents had over the driver and the motor vehicle, responsibility for maintenance of the taxi and how the earnings were determined or controlled. F

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

Case referred to:

1. Market Investigations Ltd. v Minister for Social Security [1969] 2 W.L.R. 1. G

Mtaki for the appellant

Rugarabamu for the respondent H

[zJDz]Judgment

Nyalali, C.J.: This is a second appeal by the Director of Public Prosecutions and it concerns a case in which the two respondents namely, Eliatosha Mosha and Denis Mrema were charged in the District Court at Mwanza on four counts, that is: I

NYALALI CJ

A (1) Failure to prepare and maintain a contract of service - contrary to section 35(1) (2) and (3) of the Employment Ordinance - Cap. 336 - in the first count;

(2) Failure to keep a record of wages - contrary to section 17(1) of the Regulation of Wages and Terms of B Employment Ordinance - Cap. 300 - in the second count;

(3) Failure to insure themselves in respect of liability to their employees - contrary to section 25(1) and (2) of the Workmen's Compensation Ordinance - Cap. 263; and

C (4) Failure to pay statutory minimum wages - contrary to section 12 of the Regulation of Wages and Terms of Employment Ordinance - Cap. 300.

They were acquitted on all counts at the trial. The Director of Public Prosecutions was aggrieved by that decision and appealed to the High Court. The appeal was dismissed in its entirety, hence this D appeal to this Court.

It was found by the two courts below that the respondents owned a number of motor vehicles which were used in taxi business in Mwanza township; that one Mwinyasumba Mrema (P.W.1) was one of E the drivers of these taxis for a period of seven years. He used to keep the taxi at his home and he was paid a 20% commission on the taxi earnings. The remainder of the earnings was taken by the respondents. In August 1980 P.W.1 ceased to drive any of the respondents' vehicles apparently as a result of some misunderstandings.

F It is the prosecution case that P.W. 1 was employed by the respondents throughout the period and was therefore covered by the relevant provisions of the Employment Ordinance, the Workmen's Compensation Ordinance, and the Regulation of Wages and Terms of Employment Ordinance, which G were the subject of the charges at the trial. The respondents denied that there existed a relationship of employer and employee between them and P.W. 1 and that the latter operated as an independent contractor under a special business arrangement between him and the respondents.

H The crucial point, as correctly realised by both the two courts below, is whether there was a relationship of employer and employee between the respondents and P.W.1. Unfortunately, as noted by the first appellate judge, the prosecution was poorly handled at the trial with the result that there was a failure to adduce crucial evidence which would have enabled the court to decide the main I issue satisfactorily. Mr. Mtaki, learned State Attorney who appeared on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions, conceded that there was such mishandling of the prosecution case. For instance, no evidence was adduced to show the A degree of control that the respondents had over the motor vehicle or P.W.1; similarly, no evidence was adduced concerning which party was responsible for the maintenance of the taxi; no attempt was made to lead evidence on how the earnings were determined or controlled. Such and like B evidence was necessary to enable the court to decide satisfactorily whether on the facts, there existed in law a relationship of employer and employee.

Mr. Mtaki, learned State Attorney, and Mr. Rugarabamu learned advocate who appeared for the respondents, have cited an authority concerning the relationship which in law amounts to the C relationship of employer and employee. This is the case of Market Investigations Ltd. v Minister of Social Security [1969] 2 W.L.R.I.

This case stipulates a number of factors which ought to be considered in deciding whether a D relationship of employer and employee exists in any particular case. Such factors are suggested as:

1. Control;
2. Ownership of the tools; E
3. Chance of profit; and
4. Risk of loss.

However, we are of the opinion that the present case is so poorly prosecuted that it lacks a number of important facts which are necessary for a conclusive statement by this Court of the relevant F general principles. In any case, only one of the factors stated in the Market Investigations case, that is, the factor of ownership of the tools, can be said to have been proved in the present case. It is common ground that the motor vehicle which was driven by P.W. 1 belonged to the respondents. But that factor alone does not make P.W. 1 an employee of the respondents, since the motor vehicle G could have been hired out to P.W.1 by the respondents. On the facts found by the two courts below, it cannot be said that P.W.1 was an employee of the respondents. The two courts below were correct in acquitting the respondents and in dismissing the first appeal. H

It follows that this appeal cannot succeed and we dismiss it in its entirety. I

Appeal dismissed

1984 TLR p31

A

[zRPz]SALUM JUMA MZERU v OMARI UBAYA 1984 TLR 31 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Bahati J

February 21, 1985

B CIVIL APPEAL 6 of 1984

Flynote

Land Law - Compensation - Compensation for improvements made on another person's plot - Whether the one who made improvements is entitled to compensation.

-Headnote

C The respondent built on the plot of land belonging to the appellant. The respondent was asking for compensation because he did not know that the plot on which he was building had an owner and that he had his letter of offer for the same plot. He said that since he had spent money on the plot D and since he was not to blame for the mistake of giving him an offer for that plot, he was entitled to compensation. The appellant on the other hand argued that the respondent was not entitled to any compensation because he was building on another person's land without even a building permit and had to be stopped from doing so by arresting his workmen on the plot.

E Held:(i) There was no reason for compensation since it was not equitable to force the appellant to take the building he did not want;

F (ii) since the respondent had developed land and since there was no compensation, the respondent could demolish his building and carry away his building materials.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

G Cases referred to:

1. Conway v Whimpy [1951] 2 KB 266

2. Anna Benedict v Mrisho (East African Court of Appeal, No. 41 of 1976 unreported).

H 3. Christopher Nyirabu v M.P. Nyagwaswa (High Court, Dar es Salaam Civil Case No. 61 of 1981 unreported).

A. Omari for the appellant

[zJDz]Judgment

Bahati, J.: The issue in this appeal is whether the respondent should be compensated for the I building he constructed on the plot of land belonging to the appellant. The appellant has argued that the respondent is not entitled to any compensation because the A respondent was building on another person's land without even a building permit and he had to be stopped from doing so by arresting his workmen on the plot. Mr. Omari learned counsel for the appellant cited the cases of Conway v Whimpy [1951] 2 KB 266 and Civil Appeal No. 41 of 1976 Anna B Benedict v Mrisho which is a court of Appeal Case. He also cited my recent decision in the case of Christopher Nyirabu v M.P. Nyagwaswa which is Civil Case No. 61 of 1980 in support of his argument. He concluded by submitting that even the respondent did not ask for any compensation for his building and as such it was wrong for the learned Magistrate to order such compensation. C

1984 TLR p32

BAHATI J

In reply, the respondent said that he was asking for compensation because he did not know that the plot on which he was building had an owner and that he had his letter of offer for the same plot. Since he had spent money on that plot and since he was not to blame for the mistake of giving him D an offer for that plot, he was entitled to compensation.

In a short reply Mr. Omari submitted that the respondent had filed a written reply to the appellant's memorandum of appeal. In that written reply the respondent was saying that he knew that the land in E question was of someone else and that he made the constructions amidst objections by the appellant. Mr. Omari asked the order for compensation to be set aside.

This appeal can be disposed of on the authority of Civil Appeal No. 41 of 1976 Anna Benedict v Mrisho. In that case a committee purported to allocate the plot already allocated to the appellant F (Anna) to the respondent (Mrisho). After allocation Mrisho began constructing a building on the plot. Anna saw this and filed a suit in the Resident Magistrate Court claiming ownership of the land in question. The resident Magistrate's court held that the land belonged to Anna and that Mrisho G should vacate it. But the Resident Magistrate's Court ordered that Anna should pay compensation to Mrisho for the improvement he had put on the land. It should be remembered that Mrisho went on to build on the land even after he had got notice that the land was in dispute. On a final appeal to the H Court of Appeal for East Africa the Court agreed with the High Court that a party should not reap the benefits of the improvements to the land effected by the opposing party without paying for such benefit and compensating the opposite party for this expenditure in so improving the value of land. But this principle of "unjust enrichment", as the court put it, did not apply in that case because I

1984 TLR p33

A the court did not find it equitable to force Anna take up a building which she might not have wanted to build in such a fashion since she might want to build a less expensive building altogether. The Court found that the most reasonable thing to do was to order Mrisho to demolish his building B and take away all his material within a certain period. Failing to do so within that period all the material on the land would become the property of Anna.

I notice that the learned trial Magistrate in our present case referred to the case of Anna Benedict v Sefu Mrisho but unfortunately he was not aware that there was a court of Appeal decision in that C case which set aside the order of compensation as I have shown above. Our present case is on all fours with Anna Benedict's case. Like the Court of Appel in Anna Benedict's case, I do not see any D reason for compensation. The respondent should demolish his building. I therefore allow this appeal. I order that the respondent demolish his building and carry away his building materials within two months from the date of this judgment. If by that date the respondent has not done so then the materials on the plot will become the property of the appellant. It is so ordered. This appeal E is therefore allowed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

1984 TLR p33

F

[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v JACKSON MARO KINYIHA AND TWO OTHERS 1984 TLR 33 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Munyera J

August 14, 1984

G (PC) CRIMINAL APPEAL 15 OF 1984

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Trial before Primary Court - Under s.41(2) of the Magistrates' Courts Act accused has to be asked before making any plea if he is satisfied that his trial should be conducted in the H Primary Court. In this case the accused were asked after they had made their pleas - Whether this occasioned a failure of justice.

-Headnote

Three respondents were charged jointly and with another before a Primary Court with robbery. It I was alleged that the respondents together with others attacked the complainant and his companion and drove away all his cattle. The trial court unanimously convicted them and sentenced the three respondents to seven years' imprisonment each; the fourth was found A to be under age and was discharged absolutely. They appealed to the District Court which quashed their conviction and acquitted them. The Republic appealed against the order of acquittal in relation to the three respondents.

1984 TLR p34

MUNYERA J

Held: (i) Non compliance with the provisions of s.41(2) of the Magistrates' Courts Act was not fatal B for the case could still be transferred to the District Court notwithstanding that pleas had already been taken;

(ii) there was ample evidence to show that the respondents committed the offence of robbery C as charged.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No case referred to. D

[zJDz]Judgment

Munyera, J.: The three respondents were charged jointly and with another (4th accused) before Kenyana Primary Court. They were charged with robbery. It was prosecution's case that on 27/9/82 the complainant (PW.1) was driving a herd of 51 heads of cattle from Kenyana to Buchanchari E Village. He was sending them to his brother for safe custody. He was being helped by one Machota Nyisaba (P.W.2). When they arrived at a place called Nyantare a group of about 8 people was sighted. They were armed with bows and arrows and one of them had a rifle. They attacked the F complainant and his companion (PW.2). The latter ran into a creek for safety. The gang drove all the cattle away, which were never recovered. The robbery took place near Buchanchari Village where the complainant intended to send his cattle. He reported the matter to the village chairman naming the three respondents and the 4th accused as among the gangsters. They were arrested and charged as G stated above. All of them denied that they robbed the complainant. The trial court unanimously convicted them and sentenced the three respondents to seven (7) years' imprisonment each. The 4th accused was found to be under age and was discharged absolutely. All were ordered to pay 51 head H of cattle to the complainant as compensation. They appealed to the District Court and won. The District Magistrate quashed the conviction and acquitted all of them. The Republic appealed against the order of acquittal in relation to the three appellants. The learned counsel for the appellant argued that the prosecution has amply proved the charge and the District Magistrate's order of acquittal I was unjustified.

1984 TLR p35

MUNYERA J

A In reading the record I discovered that the learned District Magistrate had two grounds for reversing the judgment of the trial court; one of law and the other of facts. With regard to the point of law it was submitted by the respondent's advocate (at the first appeal) that the provisions of B Section 41(2) of the Magistrates' Court Act were not complied with because the respondents were asked whether they were content to have their case tried before the Primary Court and this was done after their pleas were taken. The counsel argued that the irregularity was fatal and prayed for a retrial C or if that was uncalled for, an acquittal. It is true the record of the trial court shows that the respondents first appeared before the court on 26/10/82 and were called upon to plead. The case was adjourned till 17/11/82. On that day the trial magistrate wrote "Nimewakumbusha shtaka lao na bado wanakana." Then he wrote "fungu 41(2) (b) MCA limetekelezwa, washtakiwa wanakubali D kesi isikilizwe na mahakama ya mwanzo". Obviously the section was complied with after the pleas had been taken and this offended the provisions of the same section which require that the election be made before pleas were taken. But I do not see what harm the error had caused. If the E respondents so elected the case could still be transferred to the District Court notwithstanding the plea had already been taken. The error did not occasion a failure of justice and was curable under section 32(2) of the M.C.A.

I now turn to the question of facts. There was evidence of the complainant (PW.1) and his aider F (PW.2) that they were attacked by a gang and they recognised the three respondents (and the 4th accused) whom they said they knew very well. The robbery took place at about 4 p.m. so the conditions were favourable. The learned District Magistrate called PW1 and PW 2 liars. I do not G know what lies they had told. The complainant had produced a letter dated 26/9/82 which the Katibu Kata had written authorising him to move 51 head of cattle from Kenyana na Buchanchari. These cattle never reached Buchanchari. Were the complainant and his companion (PW2) telling lies when they said the cattle were stolen on the way? Definitely the answer is No. The cattle were stolen. If H the District Magistrate thought the complainant and his companion cooked up the story against the respondents then there was evidence of an independent witness, Mwiso Matoto (PW4). This witness put the story very clearly. He said on that day cattle belonging to one Kentunguye were I stolen from Buchanchari in grazing. The alarm was raised and he and the respondents joined other people to trace the stolen cattle. They did not find them. On returning they met two people driving a herd of cattle towards Buchanchari. The alarm men thought those two men were A thieves but on approaching them they ascertained that they were innocent people. Despite all contrary advice, the three respondents (and others) attacked those two men and took away the cattle. Although the witness did not say who those two men were, clearly it was the complainant and B his companion. The witness (PW.4) estimates the herd at 50 head or over. The learned District Magistrate branded this witness a liar as well. Again there was evidence of Robert Nyamhanga (PW.3) to the effect that on the material day Ketunguye's cattle were stolen and the three respondents were among the people who responded to the alarm. In the evening these three C respondents and others returned with many cattle but not the ones stolen from Katunguye. They drove those cattle towards a place called Nyamihuru and the cattle vanished. If Ketunguye's cattle which the respondents were tracking had not been recovered, where did they get the cattle they came with? All this proved that the complainant had been robbed of his cattle and the robbers were D the three respondents and others not identified. They were rightly convicted and the sentence of seven (7) years was the minimum prescribed. The order of compensation was mandatory. The appeal is allowed. I set aside the District Magistrate's order of acquittal and restore the conviction recorded E by the trial court and the sentence imposed. The order of compensation is also restored.

The records of the lower courts to be remitted back. The three respondents to be arrested and sent back to prison concerned to serve the remaining sentence. F

Appeal allowed. G

1984 TLR p37

A

[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v ABDI NYENYE 1984 TLR 37 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Lugakingira J

October 10, 1985

B CRIMINAL APPEAL 4 of 1984

Flynote

Criminal Law - Careless driving - Driver fails to exercise control over a motor vehicle thereby swerving left and right and consequently sustaining frontal damage - Whether he is guilty of careless driving c/ss. 63(2)(d) C and 27 (1)(b) of the Road Traffic Act, 1973.

-Headnote

The respondent was a driver with Dodoma Wine Company. It was alleged that one day he took his employer's vehicle which suddenly swerved off the road, smashed into a thicket and sustained D substantial frontal damage. The respondent was charged with two counts, taking a motor vehicle without the owner's consent and with careless driving. The District Court acquitted him on both counts. The Director of Public Prosecutions appealed against the acquittal on the second count.

E Held: (i) The vehicle could not just swerve to the right and left, there must have been a reason for that development otherwise it amounted to careless driving;

E (ii) there was no evidence to show that the steering system suddenly broke or gave way.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Case referred to:

G 1. Patel v R [1968] E.A. 97.

Senguji for the appellant.

[zJDz]Judgment

H Lugakingira, J.: This was an appeal by the Director of Public Prosecutions from the decision of the District Court of Dodoma in a traffic charge.

The respondent Abdi Nyenye, was a driver with the Dodoma Wine Company in Dodoma. On 18.6.83 I he was driving his employer's motor vehicle Reg. No. SU 13037 when, about ten miles from town, the vehicle suddenly swerved off the road, smashed into a thicket and sustained substantial frontal damage. He was charged under the

1984 TLR p38

LUGAKINGIRA J

Road Traffic Act, 1973 with taking a motor vehicle without the owner's consent c/s. 62(1) and with A careless driving c/ss.50, 63(2) (d) and 27(1)(b). He was acquitted on both counts. This appeal was against the acquittal on the second count.

To appreciate the findings of the trial court magistrate and the arguments canvassed on behalf of the DPP before me, it is desirable to set out the particulars of the charge in the second count. So far as is B relevant here the particulars alleged that the respondent did drive the said motor vehicle on the said road carelessly or without reasonable consideration for other persons using the road, to wit, he failed to control the said motor vehicle on the said road as the result he C drove extremely to the left side and overturned thereby causing damage to the said motor vehicle.

In acquitting the respondent the learned trial magistrate held that neither the charge nor the D evidence disclosed careless driving. He was prepared to believe the respondent that the vehicle went off the road because the steering system suddenly broke. Mr. Senguji who appeared for the DPP argued that the trial magistrate erred in finding as he did. He submitted that the charge E disclosed the offences as it alleged specifically that the respondent failed to control the vehicle. He also referred to the evidence on speed, which was adjudged high, and to the further evidence that before the accident the vehicle had one defect, namely, a worn out rear tyre. The respondent reiterated before me that the steering suddenly broke. He maintained that he was otherwise driving F in a normal and reasonable manner.

After studying the charge and weighting the evidence, I think there is force in Mr. Senguji's argument. What the charge was expected to disclose is an act or omission from which careless driving could be inferred. The trial magistrate was apparently aware of this for he said: G

It is essential that the charge sheet states the act of omission complained of, that is, what constitutes the careless driving manner ... it is wrong if I agree that because an accident has occurred the driver must have H been driving carelessly.

This is all correct, and the question is whether in this case the charge did not allege an act or omission which was consistent with careless driving. I find, with respect, that the charge was not I wanting as found by the learned magistrate. It alleged that the respondent "failed

1984 TLR p39

LUGAKINGIRA J

A to control the said motor vehicle." In other words, to put it in the simplest terms, the respondent let the vehicle drive itself, as it were. That was an omission; and when a person drives in such a manner as to permit the vehicle freely to make dangerous swerves, I apprehend that that is a piece of B careless driving. I am therefore unable to agree with the trial magistrate that the charge did not disclose the offence.

What is more, I think there was evidence from which careless driving could be inferred. I do not propose to say anything about alleged speeding for that was an opinion which the evidence does C not clearly demonstrate. However, there was a sketch plan, Exhibit C, which shows that the vehicle suddenly swerved to the right and then to the left to end up in a thicket. The sketch plan and what it shows were not disputed by the respondent. But vehicles do not decide suddenly to swerve this way or that. There must be some reason for that sort of behaviour, and in the absence of a plausible D explanation the only reasonable inference is that the driver was driving carelessly. This is not the same thing as judging issues from the mere fact of the accident. We are here presented with a stated omission, namely, failure to exercise control over the vehicle, and the explanation which would be E expected is whether the behaviour of the vehicle was for reasons beyond the driver's control.

In these remarks I am fortified by the observations of the Court of Appeal in Patel v R. [1968] E.A. 97. In that case the appellant was charged with driving in a manner dangerous to the public c/s 47(1) F of the Kenya Traffic Act. He had been driving in a cautious and orderly manner on a wet road when, suddenly, his car skidded to the right and collided with a car which was being driven in the opposite direction. At the close of the prosecution case the trial magistrate ruled that the appellant had no case to answer. The State appealed to the High Court which reversed that decision and the G appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal. The Court upheld the decision of the High Court and said, inter alia;

> Now before the accident, as we have already said, the road was wet and the car was being driven in a H normal way at a reasonable speed; and then it suddenly skidded or swerved across the road in front of an oncoming vehicle. It is well-known that cars, even on a wet road, do not skid or swerve without reason. It is also well-known that for no reason at all cars do not turn into an oncoming vehicle. Unless an explanation is I given which shows that for all practical purposes the driver of the car was not, for reasons beyond his control, > in control of it, turning immediately infront of an oncoming vehicle is, on the face of it, a patently A dangerous manoeuvre.

That case was concerned with dangerous driving but the principles elucidated therein are not inapplicable to careless driving.

As I have said, the respondent's vehicle could not just swerve to the right and left. There must have B been a reason for that development, otherwise it amounted to careless driving. The prosecution alleged that the vehicle swerved because the respondent was exercising no control over it. I think, with respect, that case had been made out and the onus was cast on the respondent to account for C the swerve by an explanation which could show that it all happened for reasons beyond his control. I am thus of the view, unlike the trial magistrate, that the evidence equally disclosed the offence.

The respondent's explanation was that the steering system suddenly broke or gave way. If that D could be established it could afford a good defence to the charge. It would show that the respondent lost control of the vehicle for reasons beyond his control. But was the explanation true? There was evidence from Inspector James Kombo that the only defect before the accident was a E worn out rear tyre. He also tendered his inspection report, Exhibit B, which testified to the same state. The report does not speak of a broken steering system either before or after the accident, but in Item 10 thereof it speaks only of steering arms being bent after the accident. The respondent never challenged that evidence except as to whether Inspector Kombo went to the scene of F accident, which was irrelevant. In stating that the steering might have broken the trial magistrate never made reference to the evidence of Inspector Kombo and it is doubtful that he would have found as he did if he had done so. There was therefore no explanation for the swerve the vehicle G made and the only inference is that the respondent was not exercising proper control, which amounted to careless driving.

It follows that the appeal succeeds and I allow it accordingly. I set aside the respondent's acquittal on the second count and substitute a conviction. H

The respondent is to be summoned before the trial court for sentencing and consequential orders in accordance with the law.

Appeal allowed. I

1984 TLR p41

A

[zRPz]AMINA BAKARI v RAMADHANI RAJABU 1984 TLR 41 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Lugakingira J

January 14, 1986

B CIVIL APPEAL 17 OF 1984

Flynote

Family Law - Custody of children - Claim for custody of child born after parties were formally divorced.

Family Law - "Children born in wedlock" - Meaning of - Rule 175 of the Customary Law Declaration Order - C Whether Adulterer's claim can be sustained.

-Headnote

This was a suit for the custody of a child who was born after his parents were formally divorced. The appellant claimed that the child was sired by a person other than her former husband. The trial court D refused to grant the respondent's claim for the reason that the appellant had named another person as the father of the child. On appeal the District Court reversed the decision and hence the present appeal.

E Held: Whatever be the correct English expression of "children born in wedlock belong to the father", it provides no justification for denying the spirit of the customary rule from which Rule 175 derives, namely, the preservation of the sanctity and dignity of the marriage institution by refusing F to recognise adultery, a trespass to the marriage, as taking precedence over and ousting the husband's rights.

Case Information

Order accordingly.

G Cases referred to:

1. Richard Mapesa v Rashid Bwana [1978] LRT n.4.
2. Mungasio Munchari v Moseti Meremo [1978] LRT n.6.
3. Masuka v Sigonjwe [1971] H.C.D. n. 92.
4. H Mgowa Madolo v Mgogolo Dododo [1973] LRT n.7.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: This was a suit for custody of a child but it had rather unusual features. The parties were married in the early 1970s. They separated in August 1978 according to the respondent. I On 30/12/78 they were formally divorced before the Primary Court at Merya. According to the respondent again, the appellant was then over eight months' pregnant and gave birth to a male-child on 5/1/79 which was given the name Juma. He sued for custody of the child in 1983 in A order to provide it with proper maintenance. He tendered the child's birth certificate which was issued at Singida on 24/3/79.

The appellant resisted the claim. She alleged that she had been separated from the respondent for three years before she petitioned for divorce. She denied being pregnant at the time of the divorce. B According to her, she got married to one Iddi Tenga in January 1979, got pregnant, and gave birth to a male child on 20/10/79 which was given the name Juma. She tendered clinic attendance cards to evidence the pregnancy and birth. According to her, therefore, the child's father is Iddi Tenga who C in fact gave evidence claiming paternity.

The trial court doubted the respondent's story including his tendering of a certificate. It therefore held that Juma was born on 20/10/79 and was not the respondent's child. The court also purported D to rely on Rule 183 of the Declaration of Customary Law, G.N. No. 279 of 1963, which provides that a man may not deny paternity of a child if named by a woman unless he can prove that he had no sexual relations with her. It interpreted this to mean that even a husband may not claim paternity of a E child if another man has been named by the woman. The decision was reversed by the District Court which took a different view of the evidence and declared the respondent to be Juma's father although it did not grant him custody.

I have said that the case was unusual. Never before have I heard one and the same child being born twice and with documentary evidence on each alleged birth. It simply means that one of the parties F was untruthful, for it is not in the nature of things to permit such a miracle. An added difficulty which greatly exercised the courts below is that the parties were remarkably inconsistent and unreliable where dates were concerned. Even the date of their marriage remained unsettled. In the G divorce certificate Exhibit A - it is not clear by whom or when it was tendered -this date is given as 1972. In the appellant's evidence it is given as 1973 while in the respondent's evidence it is 1974. The respondent was not consistent even on the date of separation. It is either February or March or H August 1978. He was only consistent that the appellant was already pregnant at the time. The same is true of the appellant. At first she stated that she did not know how long the separation lasted before she petitioned for divorce but later said it lasted three years. Her conception of time and her familiarity with the calender must be much doubted as she told the District Court that I divorce was granted in 1983. With

LUGAKINGIRA J

A such evidence and such witnesses the task of any court must be difficult indeed.

One thing is certain, namely, that the parties were divorced on 30/12/78 according to the divorce certificate Exhibit A. The greatest difficulty is to resolve the time of the conception and birth of the B child Juma. Faced with this difficulty, the District Magistrate on first appeal wisely called for and pursued the divorce proceeding in Matrimonial cause No 34 of 1978. He discovered that on 1.12.78 the appellant admitted being pregnant and the argument then centred on the age of the pregnancy. I C have no reason to doubt the learned District Magistrate on the discovery of this admission which he cites several times in his judgment. Now, where did that pregnancy go? The appellant offers no explanation but to deny any knowledge of it.This, I am afraid, is not a little dishonest. Apart from appellant's earlier admission, I note that in the divorce certificate exhibit A., which was taken out on D 2/9/80, a child, Juma Ramadhani, is inserted as a child of the marriage. There is then the birth certificate Exhibit B. It is perfect in every respect and shows that one Juma Kidimwa Ramadhani was born to the parties on 5/1/79. Kidimwa is another of the respondent's names. In law, a birth E certificate is presumed to be genuine, it being a certified copy of an entry in the births register - see s.88 of the Evidence Act, 1967. The burden of rebutting that presumption was in this case on the appellant. In my respectful view it was not rebutted by the production of clinic-cards, Exhibit C., F which have no legal standing and which are altered in not less than twenty places. It required more and better evidence than the apparently conspiratorial stories of the appellant and her present husband. I am therefore in agreement with the learned District Magistrate that Juma was conceived during the subsistence of the marriage and was born on 5/1/79 shortly after its dissolution.

G It is of course uncertain whether the respondent is Juma's natural parent given the uncertainty of the date of separation and the unreliability of the parties generally. The matter, however, is governed by customary law and the courts below proceeded on that footing. It may be mentioned that in H Singida district it is not uncommon to find people with names that have no bearing to their religious persuasions, if any. And even where names indicate any religion, customary law still plays a predominant role. It was therefore not suggested in this case that the parties' matrimonial I relationship was anything but customary. In accordance with Rule 175 of the Declaration already referred to children born to a married couple belong to the husband and this has been interpreted to include children conceived during the subsistence of the marriage but born after its dissolution. Under this rule it is A immaterial that a child is sired adulterously. It belongs to the husband so long as he accepts it. On the facts of this case, it follows that Juma is the respondent's son regardless of how he was conceived.

LUGAKINGIRA J
There have been interesting propositions about a child born to a married couple or "born in B wedlock" and this judgment would be incomplete without reference to them. I am having in mind what was said in Richard Mapesa v Rashid Bwana [1978] LRT n.4 and Mungasio Munchari v Moseti Meremo [1978] LRT. n.6. These decisions propound the view that Rule 175 applies to a child C "born to married parents" or a child which is a "natural product of the physical union between husband and wife". Under this view a child born adulterously does not fall under Rule 175. I have a great deal of respect for my learned brothers who took that view but I think it is an ingenious interpretation which does not find justification in the customary law of which Rule 175 is a mere D declaration. The problem could possibly stem from the proliferation of terms and expressions. We have the original "watoto wanaozaliwa na watu walioona"; we then have "children born to married parents", "children born during the subsistence of a marriage" "children born in wedlock", etc.; but E whatever be the correct English expression it provided no justification for denying the spirit of the customary rule from which Rule 175 derives. This is the preservation of the sanctity and dignity of the marriage institutions by refusing to recognise adultery, a trespass to the marriage, as taking precedence over and ousting the husband's rights. It is thus possible to identify two fundamentals F in the rule. First of all, the contract of marriage confers certain rights on the husband, including the right to children born during the subsistence of the marriage, and this is secured by the payment of bridewealth. Secondly, customary law, like any civilised law, recognises no rights founded in G transgression. It is therefore open neither to the wife nor to her lover to deny the husband's paternity to a child born during the subsistence of the marriage.
These arguments are by no means new. In Masuka v Sigonjwe [1971] H.C.D. n.92 the adulterer filed a case against the husband claiming custody of a child born of the wife, of which the adulterer H claimed to be the father. The wife admitted adultery and said that the adulterer was the true father of the child. The claim failed in both the Primary and the District Courts because according to Gogo customary law every child born during the subsistence of the marriage I

A is a child of such marriage. On appeal to this Court, Hamlyn, J. dismissed the appeal stating:

It would of course be quite improper to allow the claim of the woman in circumstances such as these, or B even to accept such evidence as having any bearing on the matter....It is clear that the local customary law contains not only basic robust commonsense but that it also accords with more sophisticated codes in this matter.

C And in the famous words of Kwikima, A.g J. in the case of Mgowa Madola v Mgogolo Dododo [1973] LRT n. 7:

Anyone who sires a child adulterously cannot be heard to claim it. Even if such were not the accepted D custom, the ethics of our present time would not tolerate an adulterer benefiting from his sin to the detriment of his cuckold.

I agree. I think, therefore, that to the extent that the cases of Richard Mapesa and Mungasio E Muchari held Rule 175 to be inapplicable to children born adulterously, they cannot be said to have been correctly decided. I venture to suggest with perfect respect, that these decisions proceed on a misconception of legitimacy as a biological state when in fact it is a legal status. A child is legitimate F or illegitimate not merely from the circumstances of its birth but because the law declares so. Customary law declares that children born during the subsistence of the marriage are legitimate children of the husband. That is the end of the matter unless the husband himself, but not the wife or the adulterer, elects and is able to rebut the presumption. This also disposes of the trial court's G reference to Rule 183. That provision applies to children born of unmarried women but does not licence a married woman to behave as if she were a wild tree from which any man could gather fruit.

As stated earlier the respondent is the father of the child Juma and I uphold the District Court's H declaration on the issue. I also think that the issue of custody was rightly decided although for different reasons. Juma is now seven years of age and has throughout been in the custody of the appellant. It would not be in his interests to disturb him by placing him in the custody of the respondent, a person he probably does not know. In fact the respondent never appealed against the I order denying him custody and had adduced no evidence as to how he could better secure the child's welfare.

1984 TLR p46

Save for the issue of custody, therefore, the appeal is otherwise dismissed. There will be no order as A to costs.

Order accordingly.

1984 TLR p46

B

[zRPz]RASHID NKUNGU v ALLY MOHAMED 1984 TLR 46 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Singida

Judge Lugakingira J

November 22, 1985

CIVIL APPEAL 22 of 1984 C

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Judgment - Dispute over ownership of land - Whether decision maintainable where the trial court entered judgment after framing the issues without allowing parties to adduce evidence. D

-Headnote

The appellant claimed a piece of land from the respondent. The Primary Court Magistrate framed only one issue, namely, to which party the disputed land belonged. The Magistrate then proceeded to sum up the case to the assessors who gave opinion in favour of appellant. The Magistrate E entered judgment accordingly whereafter the respondent successfully appealed to the District Court. Appellant then brought this appeal.

Held: (i) As no evidence was adduced there was no basis for the summing up to the assessors' and F the judgment that followed;

(ii) pleading which is all there was before the court are not evidence and cannot be the basis of a decision except where they amount to admissions which was not the case in the instant case; G

(iii) the irregularity went to the root of the entire proceeding for, in effect, there was no trial at all.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. H

No case referred to:

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The appellant claimed a piece of land from the respondent. At the commencement of the proceeding in the Primary Court the appellant briefly stated the substance and basis of his I claim and the respondent briefly stated

A the substance of his defence. At that juncture the trial magistrate framed one issue, namely, to which of the parties the disputed land belonged. Then, and without more, he summed up the case to the assessors who gave opinions in favour of the appellant, and judgment was entered accordingly. B The respondent successfully appealed to the District Court, and the appellant brought this appeal.

I do not have to go into the merits of the appeal as I think the proceeding was a nullity. No evidence was adduced. It follows that there was no basis for the purported summing up, the assessors' opinions and the judgment. What there was were just pleadings, but pleadings are not evidence and C cannot be the basis of a decision except where they amount to admissions, which was not the case here. I am of the view that the irregularity went to the root of the entire proceeding for, in effect, there was no trial at all.

The proceeding is quashed in its entirety with liberty to the appellant to institute fresh proceedings D if so minded. The parties will bear their respective costs here and below.

Appeal allowed.

E

[zRPz]MWENDWA MTINANGI v JUMA MAHUMBI 1984 TLR 47 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Singida

Judge Lugakingira J

November 22, 1984

F CIVIL APPEAL 25 OF 1984

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Assessors - Whether trial court's award invalid where assessor does not express opinion.

G Family Law - Cohabitation - Whether court can compel cohabitation - Law of Marriage Act, 1971 section 140.

-Headnote

The respondent sued the appellant before the Primary Court for adultery and claimed compensation. The adultery was found established and compensation awarded but the respondent appealed to the H District Court against the measure of the compensation and the court allowed the appeal. That decision prompted the present appeal.

Held: (i) An award of a Primary Court is a valid award so long as it proceeds on a majority view even I if one of the assessors does not express his opinion thereon;

1984 TLR p48

LUGAKINGIRA J

(ii) in view of section 140 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 no court is empowered to compel A cohabitation.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No case referred to. B

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The respondent sued the appellant before the Primary Court for adultery claiming compensation of seven head of cattle. The adultery was found established but the respondent was awarded two head of cattle only. He appealed to the District Court against the measure of C compensation and the court allowed the appeal, awarding him seven head of cattle or 7,000/= as originally prayed. That prompted the present appeal.

In deciding as he did, the learned appellate magistrate proceeded on two grounds. Firstly, he was of D the view that the trial court's award was invalid because only one of the two assessors did express his opinion on the question of compensation. Secondly, he considered it an aggravating factor attracting enhanced compensation the fact that the appellant "alimtwaa Fatuma (the E respondent's wife) na kuishi naye nyumbani kwake, na kadhalika."

I have given consideration to these grounds but I think, with respect, that they proceed on a misapprehension of the law. First of all, it is true one of the assessors expressed no opinion on compensation on the quantum thereof. However, it has to be appreciated that decisions in Primary F Courts proceed on the majority view, and this includes the view of the trial magistrate. In this case, the trial magistrate adopted the view of one of the assessors in the course of judgment and this, to my mind, made that view a majority view. I am thus unable to agree with the appellate magistrate that G the award was invalid for to say so presupposes that the trial magistrate had no vote, which is incorrect. In my judgment an award of a Primary Court is a valid award so long as it proceeds on a majority view even if one of the assessors does not express his opinion thereon. It is in fact interesting that the assessor who was silent on compensation signed the judgment. In effect, H therefore, the award was unanimous.

Next, I do not see, really, how the appellant's act of cohabiting with the respondent's wife constituted an aggravating factor. After all, that was the adultery complained of. The appellate I magistrate expressed anxiety that the respondent's marriage was imperilled,
1984 TLR p49
A but I cannot see the significance of this since, in fact, that is the effect of adultery. Perhaps more unfortunate is that the learned magistrate's reaction overlooked the local (Nyaturu) law on the subject. According to the assessor who expressed himself on the matter, the customary B compensation for adultery is one calf. The assessor then suggested the imposition of an additional cow because of the trouble the appellant had occasioned to the respondent. In other words, the second cow was good way of exemplary or punitive damages. The trial court thus considered the law and the surrounding circumstances in awarding the compensation it did. I think there is C authority for saying that where the decision of a Primary Court is based on the local customary law that decision cannot be interfered with on appeal unless the law on which it is based is patently unconscionable. I find nothing unconscionable in the Nyaturu law on this subject. On this ground, D too, the decision of the District Court is difficult to support.
The decision of the trial court may be criticized in one aspect. The court also ordered Fatuma to return to the respondent and even threatened her and the appellant with criminal proceedings if she E did not comply with the order. That order was unlawful in view of the provisions of section 140 of the Marriage Act, 1971. Under no circumstances is a court empowered to compel cohabitation.
I allow the appeal with costs, set aside the judgment of the District Court and restore the judgment of the Primary court. The respondent will have his 2000/= which I gather is already paid into the F Primary Court. However, I set aside the order compelling Fatuma to return to the respondent.
Appeal allowed
1984 TLR p49
G
[zRPz]SELEMANI RAMADHANI v ALLY JUMA 1984 TLR 49 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Singida
Judge Lugakingira J

November 23, 1985
CIVIL APPEAL 27 of 1984
Flynote
H Civil Practice and Procedure - Jurisdiction of Primary Courts - Whether a Primary Court has jurisdiction to try a common law tort of malicious prosecution.

-Headnote

The appellant was the complainant in a criminal case in which the respondent was charged with I shop breaking and stealing before Mtinko Primary Court in Singida district. The respondent was acquitted and thereafter he sued the appellant for defamation. The Primary Court allowed the action A awarding the respondent 3,600/= in general and special damages. The appellant's appeal in the District Court failed. This is a second appeal.

1984 TLR p50

LUGAKINGIRA J

Held: (i) In civil proceedings the jurisdiction of a primary court arises, inter alia, where the suit is B founded in customary law;

(ii) the instant suit was in fact that of malicious prosecution, a common law tort, which is an alien concept without expression in customary jurisprudence, therefore the Primary Court was incompetent to try it. C

Case Information

Order accordingly.

Cases referred to: D

1. Daniel v Konyak [1971] H.C.D. n. 323

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: In Criminal Case No. 33/83 of the Primary Court at Mtinko in Singida district, the respondent Ally Juma was prosecuted for shop breaking and stealing. The appellant Selemani E Ramadhani was the complainant in that case. The respondent was acquitted. Thereafter he sued the appellant in the same court for defamation claiming 20,000/= in general damages and 1,600/= in special damages, the latter being his alleged costs in the court of the criminal proceeding. The action was allowed and the respondent was awarded, 3,600/= in general and special damages. This is the F second appeal following the appellant's unsuccessful appeal to the District Court.

Unfortunately, I cannot go into the merits of the appeal seeing, as I do, that the Primary Court had not jurisdiction in the matter. In civil proceedings the jurisdiction of a primary court arises, inter alia, G where the suit is founded in customary law. The instant suit was in fact that of malicious prosecution which is a common law tort. Criminal prosecution, as a machinery for determining guilt or innocence, is a procedure without equivalent in customary practice, but is wholly derived from statute. The tort of malicious prosecution is thus an alien concept which does not find expression in H customary jurisprudence. I am therefore of the view, which view is also to be found in Faniel v Konyak [1971] HCD n.323, that the Primary Court was incompetent to try the suit. This incompetence did not only arise from the point of view of jurisdiction, but was also manifested in the I very handling of the suit. The court never considered whether

1984 TLR p51

A there was reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution and never heard evidence in support of the special damages. In short the suit was virtually untried.

The proceeding is accordingly quashed. The respondent is at liberty to institute the suit in the B Resident Magistrate's court. I make no order as to costs.
Order accordingly.
1984 TLR p51
C
[zRPz]JUMANNE JINGI v NJOKA KIDUDA 1984 TLR 51 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Singida
Judge Lugakingira J

November 26, 1985
CIVIL APPEAL 29 OF 1984
Flynote
D Family Law - Adultery - Damages for - Where party not validly married - Whether suit for damages for adultery can be sustained - Law of Marriage Act, 1971, s. 72(2).
-Headnote
The appellant lost in the Primary Court and the District Court in an action for damages for adultery E and therefore appealed to the High Court.
Held: A suit brought under section 72 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 shall be dismissed if the F defendant satisfies the court that he did not know and could not by exercise of reasonable diligence have known that the person with whom he or she committed the act of adultery was married;
Case Information
G Appeal dismissed.
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
Lugakingira, J.: The appellant lost in the Primary Court and the District Court in an action for H damages for adultery and therefore appealed here.
This appeal ought similarly to fail. There was overwhelming evidence that the respondent's cohabitation with Mwai Amina Maghuna - the lady the appellant calls his wife - was preceded by the I usual and necessary betrothal preliminaries, including the payment of brideprice. The respondent therefore genuinely believed that he was taking a free woman. Section 72(2) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 provides: A
1984 TLR p52
LUGAKINGIRA J

(2) A suit brought under this section shall be dismissed if the defendant satisfies the court that he or she did not know and could not, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, have known that the person with whom he B or she committed the act of adultery was married.

It is evident that by the betrothal and payment of brideprice the respondent reasonably believed that Mwai was unmarried. The suit and the first appeal were therefore rightly dismissed in the light of the C above provision.

I think the appeal ought to fail on yet another ground. It is in fact doubtful whether the appellant was ever validly married to Mwai or was himself an adulterer. The evidence further shows the D following. Mwai was first married to one Karai Kiseke. She then left this man (we do not know how) and "married" the appellant. In 1978 she abandoned the appellant and returned to Karai. In 1982 she was formally divorced from Karai in Matrimonial Cause No. 23/82 of the Primary Court at Ngimu. It E was following this event that she married the respondent in 1983. The fact that Mwai had to be formally divorced from Karai suggests that their marriage was subsisting during her cohabitation with the appellant. At any rate, the burden was on the appellant to prove that he had been validly married to this woman before he could be heard to complain of adultery. This burden was not F discharged as the appellant adduced no evidence of the circumstances in which he came to cohabit with her other than that she had left Karai. Therefore the suit did not disclose a cause of action. For these reasons the appeal is dismissed with costs. G

Appeal dismissed. H

1984 TLR p53

A

[zRPz]JUMA MAKIYA v HAMISI MOHAMED 1984 TLR 53 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Lugakingira J

November 27, 1985

CIVIL APPEAL 34 of 1984

Flynote

B Civil Practice and Procedure - Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules, G.N. No. 310/64 rule 16(1) - Whether withdrawal of suit is conclusive evidence of liability in a claim for compensation.

Civil Practice Procedure - Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules - Whether in a claim for costs, the claimant C must adduce evidence to prove the alleged expenses.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules - Whether Court proceedings are an inconvenience for which damages are recoverable.

-Headnote

D The appellant sued the respondent in a suit for recovery of a piece of land. He later withdrew the claim when proceedings at Singida Urban Primary Court were at an advanced stage. The court made no consequential orders. The respondent then sued the appellant for a sum of 8,214/- being E compensation for lost crops and expenses consequential to the said suit. The court awarded the respondent 600/- for witnesses expenses and 400/- for "inconvenience". It rejected the rest of the claim. The appellant unsuccessfully appealed to the District Court, hence brought this second appeal.

F Held: (i)Under rule 16(1) of the Primary Courts Civil Procedure rules, G.N. No. 310/64, a claimant may at any time withdraw a proceeding or abandon part of his claim and in doing so he would not ipso facto incur liability;

G (ii) the courts below ought not have addressed themselves to the withdrawal of the suit rather than the truth and availability of respondent's claim;

(iii) this having been a claim for costs it was necessary to prove it with documentary or reliable oral evidence without which there was no basis for the award;

H (iv) compensation for "inconvenience" of attending court implies that court proceedings are an inconvenience for which damages are recoverable, a view which should not be subscribed to.

Case Information

I Appeal allowed.

No cases referred to.

1984 TLR p54

LUGAKINGIRA J

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: In Civil Case No. 86/82 of the Urban Primary Court at Singida the appellant Juma A Makiya sued the respondent and two others to recover a piece of land. At an advanced stage of the proceeding the appellant withdrew the suit and it was so marked but without consequential orders. The respondent then commenced the present proceedings claiming in all 8,214/- as compensation for B lost crops and expenses incurred in consequence of the said suit. The trial court awarded him 600/- for witness expenses and 400/- for "inconvenience" and rejected the rest of the claim. The decision was upheld by the District Court and this is the second appeal. C

The problem with the courts below was simple. They addressed themselves to the withdrawal of the suit rather than the truth and availability of the respondent's claim. Under rule 16(1) of the Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules, G.N. No. 310/64, a claimant may at any time withdraw a proceeding or D abandon part of his claim and in doing so he would not ipso facto incur liability. The respondent had, therefore, to establish his claim. I note that he claimed 600/- for three witnesses for four days but there was no scintilla of evidence in support of that expenditure. The respondent's witness Haji Lesso, the only witness who testified in both suits, never alluded to any expenditure. But this E having been a claim for costs it was necessary to prove it with documentary or reliable oral evidence. There was no such evidence and, therefore, there was no basis for the award. It was unsafe to act on the respondent's bare assertion for that could have been anything. I then found it interesting that the respondent was also compensated for the "inconvenience" of attending court. This implies that F court proceedings are an inconvenience for which damages are recoverable. I do not subscribe to that view.

The appeal is allowed with costs, the decisions of the lower courts being set aside. G

Appeal allowed. H

A

[zRPz]PUNDI ILANDA v ALLI KWIMBA 1984 TLR 55 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Singida
Judge Lugakingira J

November 29, 1985

B CIVIL APPEAL 37 OF 1984

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Hearing - Altering the nature of claim at hearing - Whether allowable under Primary Courts' Civil Procedure Rules - Rule 44 of the Primary Court's Civil Procedure Rules.

C Family Law - Maintenance - Compensation for maintenance of deceased's children while cohabiting with their mother.

-Headnote

The appellant commenced the action in the Primary Court claiming compensation for alleged D maintenance of the respondent's deceased brother's children. In the course of testimony, however, the appellant abandoned his original claim and claimed the children themselves. The court ignored the discrepancy and went ahead to grant the compensation against which the respondent successfully appealed against in the District Court hence the present appeal.

E Held:It is nowhere provided in the Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules for a claimant to alter the nature of his claim at the hearing; on the contrary, rule 44 which provides for settlement of issues at F the first hearing implies necessarily that a claimant is limited to the pleadings.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

G Lugakingira, J.: The appellant commenced action in the Primary Court claiming 12,000/- in compensation on the allegation that he had maintained the respondent's deceased brother's four children for twelve years. In the course of his testimony, however the appellant came up with a H different claim, namely the children themselves. The trial court took notice of the discrepancy but ignored it and proceeded to award the appellant the sum claimed. It held, however, that the appellant maintained the children for eight years, that being the period he had cohabited with their mother. I From this decision the respondent successfully appealed to the District Court and that prompted the present appeal.

I think the District Court rightly reversed the decision of the trial court. As the record perfectly A indicates the appellant abandoned his claim and came up with something different. There was no evidence on the claim as such which then ought to have been dismissed. It is however provided in the Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules for a claimant to alter the nature of his claim at the hearing. B On the contrary, rule 44 which provides for settlement of issues at the first hearing implies necessarily that a claimant is limited to the pleadings. The District Court was therefore justified in its action for the irregularity was not a mere technicality which could have been ignored. C

There are indications, indeed, that the irregularity occasioned a failure of justice. Before the District Court the appellant indicated that none of the four children was aged over three years. Now, it is impossible to maintain a child for twelve or even eight years if it is aged three years. The trial court D thus proceeded perilously in the absence of relevant evidence. I had the advantage of seeing and hearing the appellant. He is old and confused. Unfortunately, that does not entitle him to gratuitous judgments.

The appeal is dismissed with costs. E

Appeal dismissed.

1984 TLR p56

F

[zRPz]ELIZABETH SAIWA v YOHANA MPAHI 1984 TLR 56 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Lugakingira J

December 3, 1985

CIVIL APPEAL 56 of 1984 G

Flynote

Family Law - Inheritance - Right of childless widow to share in assets of marriage - Whether contingent upon any considerations - Para 77 of the Customary Law Declaration Order, G.N. No. 279/63. H

-Headnote

The appellant was married to the respondent's brother for twenty years and had no child of the marriage. In January 1984 the husband died in circumstances evoking local suspicions and the appellant was expelled from the village. She then sued the respondent, the administrator of the deceased's estates for her share in the property acquired during her marriage. In the absence of I evidence as to the

1984 TLR p57

LUGAKINGIRA J

A nature and quantity of assets the District Court had reduced the lower court's award of nine head of cattle, thirteen goats, one sheep and Shs. 1,500/- to four head of cattle and 1,500/- as reasonable marriage gratuity. The present appeal challenges that award.

B Held: (i) The right of a childless widow to a share in assets of the marriage is not contingent upon any considerations but is one secured by statute under para 77 of the Customary Law Declaration Order, G.N. No. 279/63;

C (ii) in the absence of evidence on the assets, it is impossible to satisfy the requirements of para 77 of G.N. No. 279/63 and it was entirely to the discretion of the court to decide what payment was reasonable in the circumstances of each case.

Case Information

D Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The appellant was married to the respondent's brother for twenty years. They had E no child but the husband had children from another union. In January 1984 the husband died in circumstances evoking local suspicion and the appellant was expelled from the village. She then sued the respondent, the administrator of the deceased's estates, for her share in the property acquired during the marriage.

F From the beginning the respondent's defence has been that he did not expel the appellant, but the village did. True; the appellant's banishment was preceded by two villagers' meetings, but the argument has no merit since the respondent was a party to, and the moving spirit in, the illegal G enterprise. Besides, the right of a childless widow to a share in assets of the marriage is not contingent upon any considerations - superstitious considerations least of all - but is one secured by statute (see para. 77 of the Customary Law Declaration Order, G.N. No. 279/63).

The problem of the lower courts, the problem I also face, is that there was no evidence of the H existence, nature and quantity of the assets acquired during the marriage. It seems that the appellant relied on the inventory annexed to her pleadings, but, unfortunately, pleadings are not evidence. In his own evidence the respondent claimed that the deceased was survived by four head of cattle and I that these comprised his entire estates. He certainly was not believed by the trial court which awarded the appellant nine head of cattle, thirteen goats, one sheep and 1,500/- for household items as prayed. In the absence of evidence, A however, the District Court reduced this to four head of cattle and 1,500/- as reasonable gratuity for a marriage that lasted 20 years. The present appeal challenges that award.

It is difficult to fault the approach of the District Court. In the absence of evidence on the assets, it is B impossible to satisfy the requirements of para 77 aforesaid. The burden was on the appellant to adduce that evidence and its absence meant a corresponding weakness in her case. It was then entirely to the discretion of the Court to decide what payment was reasonable in the circumstances C of the case. Bearing in mind that the marriage lasted 20 years and considering the appellant's expulsion as a superstitious aberration, I think four head of cattle and 1,500/= satisfied the justice of the case. The appellant will have that or 5, 500/- in cash.

The appeal is therefore dismissed but there will be no order as to costs. D

Appeal dismissed.

E
[zRPz]SUSANA SHIJA v PAULINUS KAZULUNGA 1984 TLR 58 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Katiti J

April 30, 1985
CIVIL APPEAL 4 OF 1984 F
Flynote
Family law - Division of Matrimonial assets in the nature of matrimonial proceedings - Law of Marriage Act, 1971 - Part VI.
Civil Practice and Procedure - Matrimonial Proceedings - Appeal from Primary Court to District Court - Whether any District Court has jurisdiction to hear appeal from Primary Court - Law of Marriage Act, 1971 G s.80 as amended by Act No. 15 of 1980.
-Headnote
The appellant in this case had been granted an ex-parte judgment by the Sengerema Urban Primary Court for a 50% share in a matrimonial house and the respondent's application to have the ex-parte H judgment set aside was unsuccessful, and he filed an appeal in Sengerema District Court. For reasons which are unknown the Senior Resident Magistrate in Mwanza ordered the appeal to be heard in Mwanza by a particular Resident Magistrate who did hear and allow the appeal. The I appellant is now challenging that decision.
1984 TLR p59
KATITI J
A Held: (i) Under section 80 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 as amended by Act No. 15 of 1980 an aggrieved party in any matrimonial proceedings commenced in a Primary Court is allowed to appeal from that court, first, to the District Court;

(ii) under section 16 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 any party, aggrieved by an order, or B decision of the Primary Court is allowed to appeal therefrom to the District Court of the District for which the Primary Court is established.
Case Information
Order accordingly.
C No case referred to.
F.B. Mahatane for the appellants.
S.R. Kahangwa for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
D Katiti, J.: This case has unfortunately may be inadvisably, taken a tortuous meandering, if not also a stumpy course. Susan Shija and Paulinus Kazulunga, herein the appellant and the respondent respectively, who had enthusiastically and wilfully entered a matrimonial bond, publicly promising E monopoly of the same to the exclusion of all others, as wife and husband respectively, found themselves matrimonially asunder in Nyalikungu Primary Court, Maswa, Civil Case No. 6 of 1979. While the issue of custody of the children of the marriage, was revisited in Tabora High Court F Matrimonial (PC) Civil Appeal No. 4 of 1979, the question of division of matrimonial property, in this case a house situated in Sengerema Township, remained an uncomfortable thorn in their flesh. So, Susana Shija filed an action, Civil Case No. 25/1982 in Sengerema Urban Primary Court, seeking division of matrimonial property - i.e. the house situated in Sengerema plot No. 38 Block B. As G claimed by the appellant, the respondent failed, or ignored to honour notices of hearing dates the court allowed the appellant to proceed ex-parte, and hence the court's verdict, that the appellant was entitled to 50% of the value of the house. The respondent's application to have the ex-parte judgment set aside, was unsuccessful.

H The option open to the respondent was to appeal, and indeed, through the services of a Mwanza based advocate Mr. Kahangwa, an appeal was lodged before Sengerema District Court - hence Sengerema District Court Civil Appeal No. 5 of 1984. For reasons that I shudder to speculate on, I unsafe as it is, the Senior Resident Magistrate called for the record in the manner as is hereunder, inter alia shown:

1984 TLR p60

KATITI J

Having perused the file and having checked the District Magistrate's Order, I order that the appeal be heard A here in Mwanza. Mr. Mwihava Resident Magistrate, to hear the same on the date he will fix, and transmit to parties.

Sign. B

Senior Resident Magistrate

I am not here primarily concerned with the confusion between an administrative and a judicial function, inherent in the excerpt above. I shall proceed to point out, that indeed Mr. Mwihava sitting C in Mwanza District Court, heard the appeal lodged in Sengerema District Court, and while the caption of his judgment read, "IN

THE DISTRICT COURT OF SENGEREMA, AT SENGEREMA CIVIL APPEAL NO. 5 OF 1984, the caption of the decree loudly reads - IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF MWANZA, AT MWANZA. D CIVIL APPEAL NO. 6 OF 1984. The culmination of the hearing of this appeal, was that the appeal was allowed, and the Sengerema Primary Court ex-parte judgment and attendant order, or orders were set aside.

The appellant Susan Shija has through the able agency of Mr. Mahatane, an Arusha based advocate E appealed against the decision of the District Court Mwanza, in its appellate capacity, on the following grounds:

(i) That the Learned Resident Magistrate sitting in the District Court At Mwanza, had no jurisdiction to adjucate over the Appeal. F

(ii) That the learned Resident Magistrate, failed to direct himself on the point of law, to the effect that the Application which had been filed at Sengerema Primary Court by the Respondent on 17th January, 1984 was time barred. G

(iii) That Learned Resident Magistrate erred in admitting on appeal the Exhibit of the copy of the Police message, from the hands of the Respondent, who had never had the custody of that document, and who was not the author or the recipient of the same. H

(iv) The Learned Resident Magistrate erred in that he did not note in the record, that there was no evidence by the Respondent that he had informed his employers, that he had been summoned to attend the Court at Sengerema on 15th October 1983, and that the employer had refused that request from him. I

(v) The Learned Resident Magistrate erred, in that he failed to

1984 TLR p61

KATITI J

A take into account the fact that the decree of the Primary Court, had been executed and the house had been sold long before the application for setting aside the decree had been filed in Court.

(vi) The Learned Resident Magistrate erred in law in failing to note that an Application for B division of matrimonial assets under Section 114 of the Law of Marriage Act 1971 is not affected by the provision of Paragraph 21 Part (iii) of the Schedule to the Law of Limitation Act 1971, and that it can be filed in Court independently of the decree of divorce.

C (vii) The Learned Resident Magistrate erred in law in failing to appreciate the heavy burden of proof placed upon the Respondent, in proving the sufficiency of the reasons for failing to attend the hearing of the case.

(viii) The Learned Resident Magistrate erred in law in that he shifted the burden of proving the D insufficiency of the reasons for non-attendance the hearing of a suit.

(ix) The Learned Resident Magistrate erred in taking into account matters not relevant in law in determining the issues before him.

E (x) The Learned Resident Magistrate erred in setting aside the decision of the Primary Court, and the order made thereunder without sufficient grounds.

F REASONS WHEREFOR the Appellant prays the Honourable Court to set aside the decision of....

I shall hereafter deal with all the grounds of appeal seriatim or sequentially if need be. The first ground of appeal, as it does sequentially appear to be, is that the learned Resident Magistrate sitting G in the District Court at Mwanza had no jurisdiction to adjudicate over the appeal. Mr. Mahatane did warriorlike forcefully and eloquently cite several, if not many sections, from the Magistrates' Courts Act Cap 537 and or as repealed and re-enacted with modifications by the Magistrates' Courts Act 1984, that came into application on 1/7/1984.

H Having scrupulously invested efforts and scrutiny over the case generally, I feel convinced and satisfied that the answer to the 1st ground of appeal above, may be gathered from first, the subject matter, second the appellate tier system and third, the courts' territorial jurisdiction obtaining for the I time being. In this case the subject matter was a prayer, subsequent to divorce for the division of matrimonial assets, a house, purportedly acquired through joint efforts by the appellant and the respondent during the life of their marriage. The division of A matrimonial assets being as it does, a prayer, that falls under the provisions of section 114(1) of the Law of Marriage Act 1971, is of the nature of matrimonial proceedings under part VI of the Marriage Act. It does follow jurisdiction wise, that a Primary Court, which Sengerema Urban Court is, has B jurisdiction to entertain, inter alia prayers for division of matrimonial assets, from either of the parties.

1984 TLR p62

KATITI J

The above, I think, is not an exercise in superfluity, as it does establish the jurisdictional base of the Primary Court, in the subject matter, lest the cart is placed in a position to pull the horse. The right of C appeal from the decision of a court, be it original, or of first instance, or intermediate, is statute given, and relevant to this case, it is the Law of Marriage Act, section 80, as amended by Act No. 15 of 1980, that where in a matrimonial proceeding, which proceedings these were, a party is aggrieved D by any decision, or order of a Primary Court, if the action is filed there, may appeal from that Court, first, to the District Court.

The appellate tier system at this stage is, as it will presently and obviously emerge, inextricably linked with territorial jurisdiction. A District Court, exercising jurisdiction within that very district, in E which it is established, - see section 2 and 4 of Magistrates Courts Act 1984 or section 2 and 5 of Magistrates Courts Act Cap. 537. Correspondingly, it is even trite that a Primary Court is established in every district, and does exercise jurisdiction within that very District, in which it is established. It F cannot be imagined I think, in the absence of anarchy which we do not have, that the order and direction of flow of appeals, are other than statutory creatures, to ensure justice. In the direction of flows of appeals posed herein above, we have the legislature through section 20 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1984, or section 16 of the repealed and re-enacted act Cap. 537, providing as follows: G

Section.: 20 (1) Save as hereinafter provided:

(a) ....

(b) In any other proceedings, any party, if aggrieved by an order of the Primary Court, may appeal H herefrom to the District Court of the District for which the Primary Court is established.

I think, first it befits the occasion to untimorously associate myself with the underlining above - it is I mine. But, second, more

A important is the import of the underlined part, that appeals from Primary Courts have to be lodged in the District Court of the District for which the Primary Court is established. If I venture to relevantly relate the import of the above provisions, to the instant case, appeals from Sengerema B Urban Primary Court, or from any primary Court in Sengerema District, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, which we do not have, are supposed to be filed in Sengerema District, which by virtue of Section 80 of the Marriage Act 1971, in case of matrimonial proceedings, and Sections now 4 and 20 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1984, or Sections 5 and 6 of the repealed and C re-enacted Act Cap. 537, has jurisdiction to adjudicate upon such appeals.

Having given anxious consideration to the record in this appeal, I have noted with a shadow of doubt, that the respondent, had infact through Mr. Kahangwa, a Mwanza based advocate appealed D to Sengerema District Court - hence Sengerema District Court Civil Appeal No.

5/1984. But for all we know, this record was summoned by the Senior Resident Magistrate, and asigned to Mr. Mwihava a Resident Magistrate. Although the learned Resident Magistrate's judgment is headed E "IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF SENGEREMA, at Sengerema and the decree signed by him captioned - IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF MWANZA AT MWANZA, there is no shadow of any F doubt, that this appeal was heard and ajudicated upon, at Mwanza, in Mwanza District Court. It is at this juncture, that finally the question whether a Resident Magistrate sitting in Mwanza District Court, or call it any district court in Mwanza District has the legal competence to adjudicate over an appeal, for a different district, be in Sengerema, or over a case registered in Sengerema District Court, becomes immediately pertinent.

G If we pay an obedient visit to the law - see Section 6(1) and 7(1)(c) of the Magistrates Courts Cap 537, now Section 5(1) and 6(1)(c), it is trite law that a court of a Resident Magistrate is duly constituted when held by a Resident Magistrate. But this is no answer to the issue, as in law, the Court of Resident Magistrate per se, has no appellate jurisdiction over matters originating from H Primary courts, neither as per Magistrates Courts Acts, nor does Section 80 of the Marriage Act 1971, confer such powers on a Court of a resident Magistrate. It follows that a Resident Magistrate, holding a resident Magistrate's Court, has no appellate jurisdiction, over matters originating from Primary Courts, in the region to which he is assigned.

I There is an argument, which could be attractive, that, as the term, "District Magistrate" includes a Resident Magistrate, therefore such magistrate has power to hear appeals from Primary Courts. This argument is not totally A fallacious, for it all depends on whether or not the said Resident Magistrate is sitting as a District Magistrate, in the District Court, to exercise jurisdiction, within the District in which such District Court is established. In this case, the Resident Magistrate sitting as he did in the District Court of B Mwanza, established for Mwanza District, could rightly be construed, as having sat therein as a Mwanza District Magistrate, and for the purpose of appeals from Primary Courts, such as Mwanza District Court, has jurisdiction to adjudicate over appeals from Primary Courts established in Mwanza District; and not Sengerema District, as the same Magistrate was not sitting as Sengerema C District Magistrate. It follows as night follow daylight, that the Resident Magistrate, sitting as a District Magistrate, in Mwanza Court, had no competent jurisdiction to adjudicate over appeals registered in Sengerema District Court, and originating from Primary Courts, established in D Sengerema District, unless extended jurisdiction has been conferred upon such contiguous District Courts by the Hon. The Chief Justice, and this has not been done.

As the jurisdiction issue does effectively forestall or preempt other grounds of appeal, it would be undesirable, for fear of prejudging the issue involved to entertain them. For want of legal E jurisdictional competence as manifestly shown above, the judgment and attendant orders, if any, by the resident Magistrate, are hereby declared a nullity. It is hereby ordered that, the proper appeal be heard by a Court of competent jurisdiction - Sengerema District Court. The appeal is allowed with F costs.

Order Accordingly. G

H

[zRPz]PETER NDERIA MUSHI v THE MINISTER FOR LAND HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT 1984 TLR 64 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Mustafa JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

October 1, 1984
CIVIL APPEAL 10 OF 1984
Flynote
Land Law - Customary leasehold - Lease surrendered before application of Enfranchisement Act - Whether land enfranchised - Customary Leaseholds (Enfranchisement) Act No. 47 of 1968. I 1984 TLR p65

A Civil Practice and Procedure - Jurisdiction - Customary leasehold - Customary Land Tribunal and Minister for Lands - Whether they have jurisdiction over land formerly held under a customary leasehold but ceased to be so held before application of Enfranchisement Act.

B Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Customary land Tribunal - Appeal to Minister - Additional evidence - Whether party has right to cross-examine witnesses against him.

C Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Customary Land Tribunal - Appeal to Minister - Parties - Whether persons not parties to original proceedings can be joined.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Customary Land Tribunal - Appeal to Minister - Decision does not identify persons entitled to award - Whether proper.

D Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Customary Land Tribunal - Appeal to Minister - Award given to person not party to proceedings - Whether proper.

-Headnote

The appellant's deceased father had granted a customary lease over land situated at Kibosho to the E respondent's deceased father. Before the Customary Leaseholds (Enfranchisement) Act was applied to Kilimanjaro Region in October 1969, the lease was surrendered by the respondent's father and the appellant's father bequeathed it to the appellant. When the appellant moved into F possession the respondent objected and lodged an unsuccessful complaint in the Primary court. The court found the appellant to be the lawful owner. The respondent then, assisted by the police, evicted a number of people who were occupying part of the land. One of them, Thomas Lesio, unsuccessfully sued him in the Kilimanjaro Customary Law Tribunal which ruled that the matter was G res judicata! An appeal to the Minister for Lands was preferred. The Minister found that the land had been under a customary lease for a long time, and that because the appellant had willingly accepted the people onto the land there were customary leases held by all of them until the day they were evicted. He further found that the land thus held under customary leases had been H enfranchised by the Customary Leaseholds (Enfranchisement) Act 1969 and therefore the appellant could not evict those in occupation. The appellant's application for order of certiorari to quash the Minister's decision was unsuccessful.

I Held: (i) The disputed land is not one to which the Customary Leaseholds (Enfranchisement) Act applies and therefore neither the
1984 TLR p66
KISANGA JA
Kilimanjaro Customary Land Tribunal nor Minister had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the dispute A relating to such land;

(ii) when additional evidence is taken in an appeal to a Minister, the party against whom the appeal is preferred should be afforded an opportunity to cross-examine those who testify against his interest and if necessary, be allowed to call his own additional witnesses; B

(iii) it is clearly wrong to join on appeal a person who was not a party to the trial;

(vi) it is a serious error to award title and possession of land to unidentified persons; such award is practically meaningless; a proper decision must clearly identify the parties whose rights and C obligations have been determined in the particular suit.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No cases referred to. D

T.S. Kinabo and F. Lyasenga for the appellant

M.H.P. Ntingele for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, J.A.: read the following considered judgment of the Court: This appeal arises from the E ruling of the High Court at Arusha (Mroso, J.) refusing to grant an application for certiorari to set aside the decision of the Minister for Lands, Housing and Urban Development in a dispute over a F piece of land situated at Kibosho in Moshi District. The background to this matter may be summarised very briefly as follows.

On 26th January, 1956, one Nderia s/o Nambuo granted a customary lease over the disputed land to one Sindato s/o Obo. The agreement for such lease which was in writing was produced in evidence G and forms part of the record. Sindato died but it is not clear from the evidence when exactly. However, upon Sindato's death Nderia stated that the land was returned to him by Sindato's personal representative, one Bernard. Then there was ample evidence that in 1969 Nderia devised the land to his son Peter, the present appellant, and that the appellant moved into possession. H Sindato's sons, Augustine and Bernard, opposed the appellant's entry and lodged a complaint in court. As a result the appellant was charged with forcible entry vide Kiwoso Primary Court Criminal Case No. 190/1969. However, the court, accepting the evidence as summarised above, acquitted the I appellant on the charge because he had entered
1984 TLR p67
KISANGA JA
A on the land which belonged to himself. The court then went to observe that Sindato's son might enter into an agreement with the appellant for a customary lease upon the usual payment of the customary dues called "masiro" provided the appellant was agreeable, but otherwise the appellant B was entitled to have his land and to compensate Sindato's son for the coffee which Sindato had grown on that land. None of Sindato's sons ever approached the appellant for any such customary lease, and the appellant has continued to be in occupation of the land.

In another dimension, following the acquittal on the criminal charge, the appellant brought a suit for C malicious prosecution against Augustine and Bernard who were the complainants in the criminal case. He got judgment and was awarded damages against Bernard alone. Bernard did not pay the damages ordered, and so the appellant applied for execution of judgment to attach the coffee trees D on the disputed land which trees belonged to Bernard, by virtue of his having inherited them from his father, and for which the appellant had not yet paid compensation. It would seem that after the necessary procedures for a public auction were complied with no one turned up to bid for the E purchase of the coffee trees, and so the appellant, on application, was permitted to buy them in around April 1970. Then it would appear that on 18th May, 1970, the appellant, with the assistance of the police evicted a number of people, including one Thomas Lesio, who were occupying part of the disputed land, and in 1976 the said Thomas Lesio sued him before the Kilimanjaro Customary F Land Tribunal for wrongful eviction from such land. The said Tribunal, after recording the evidence declined to adjudicate on the matter on the ground that the matter was "res judicata" in that the appellant was lawfully in occupation of the disputed land pursuant to a court order. Thomas Lesio G and four others who were not identified appealed to the Minister for Lands, Housing and Urban Development. The Minister found that the land in question had been under customary lease for a long time, and that as a result the appellant willingly accepted Thomas Lesio and four others as his H tenants under the customary lease holding until when he evicted them on 18th May, 1970. He further found that the land, thus held under customary lease, was enfranchised by the Customary Leaseholds (Enfranchisement) Act No. 47 of 1968 which came into operation in Kilimanjaro Region on 10th October, 1969, so that the appellant could no longer regard Thomas Lesio and four others as I his tenants and evict them as he purported to do on 18th May, 1970. He accordingly reversed the decision of the Kilimanjaro Customary
1984 TLR p68
KISANGA JA
Land Tribunal and awarded title and possession of the disputed land to Thomas Lesio and four A others. Dissatisfied with that decision the appellant unsuccessfully applied to the High Court for an order of certiorari, and hence this appeal.
In the High Court the appellant/applicant was represented by Mr. Kinabo but in this Court he was represented by Mr. Lyasenga while the respondent Republic was represented by Mr. Mtingele. Mr. B Lyasenga filed a total of fifteen grounds of complaint, but we think that the whole appeal turns mainly on the issue of jurisdiction, although counsel did not raise it squarely. It would seem plain that a Customary Land Tribunal will have jurisdiction under the Customary Leaseholds C (Enfranchisement) Act if it is shown that the land forming the subject matter of the claim was held under customary land tenure at the time when the Act came into operation. If that test is satisfied then the proceedings before the Tribunal respecting such a matter and any appeal from there to the D Minister would be proper. If, however, the test is not satisfied then the trial proceedings before such Tribunal and any appeal from there to the Minister would be null and void for want of jurisdiction. It is along these lines that we propose to approach this matter.

The Minister when giving his decision stated that this was a clear case of nyarubanja. However, it E becomes necessary for the court to be certain on this point because it goes to the issue of jurisdiction. For, when the Tribunal or the Minister assumes jurisdiction they should make sure that they do so on true and valid grounds. The evidence shows that the only customary lease created on F the land in question during the relevant period is that which Nderia, the appellant's father, granted to Sindato s/o Obo which lease was evidenced in writing on 26th January, 1956. Nderia in his evidence told the Tribunal that upon Sindato's death the land was returned to him by Sindato's son, G one Bernard, and there was overwhelming evidence that after such return of the land, Nderia donated it to his son, the appellant, some time in 1969; the appellant duly occupied the land and he has remained in occupation since.

There was no evidence whatsoever that either Nderia or his son, the appellant, subsequently granted anyone else any lease on this land. Indeed after the criminal case in which the appellant was H acquitted on the charge of forcible entry, the court observed that if the appellant was agreeable, he might grant a customary lease to Sindato's son upon payment of the customary dues called "masiro", but there is no evidence that he has granted any such tenancy to Sindato's son or anyone I at all.

1984 TLR p69

KISANGA JA

A There is yet another matter which seems to warrant consideration and that is this. It is not quite clear how Thomas Lesio is connected with the land in question. For, as has already been stated, the only lease that was created on the disputed land during the relevant period was the one that Nderia B granted to Sindato. But Thomas Lesio is not the son of Sindato. On the evidence Sindato's sons are Bernard, Lesiani, Henri, Agustin and Mathias. Thomas is only shown to be Sindato's nephew, but there is no evidence to suggest that such relationship enabled Thomas to claim, through inheritance, any tenancy granted to Sindato.

C And finally, there was evidence that when the land was leased to Sindato there was an obligation on the part of the leasee to pay customary dues known as "masiro" to the lessor. But there is no indication at all on the evidence that Thomas Lesio ever paid any such customary dues to anyone. D Indeed all along Thomas Lesio has consistently denied that there was any customary lease over the land in question. He makes it very clear that his claim is based on the allegation that the land descended to him through inheritance from his forefathers who held it in their own right and not under customary lease.

E The Minister was therefore wrong in finding that the land in question was enfranchised by the Customary Leaseholds (Enfranchisement) Act, because when the Act came into operation in Kilimanjaro Region on 10th October, 1969, there was no leasehold on the said land which the Act could enfranchise. As was shown earlier, the customary lease over this land terminated when F Bernard returned that land to Nderia and Nderia devised it to the appellant. This must have been before 10th October, 1969, because the judgment in the criminal case in which the appellant was G acquitted on the charge of forcible entry onto this very land after it was thus devised to him is dated 9th June, 1969. Thus it becomes clear that the disputed land is not one to which the Customary Leaseholds (Enfranchisement) Act applies, and for that reason neither the Kilimanjaro Customary Land Tribunal nor the Minister had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the dispute relating to such land.

H That, in our view, was sufficient to dispose of this appeal, but we consider it appropriate to refer at least to some of the grounds of appeal raised by counsel for the appellant. The Minister in dealing with the appeal, directed the taking of additional evidence which he duly took into account in I arriving at his decision. But the record further shows that such additional evidence was taken in the absence of the appellant, and Mr. Lyasenga submitted that this offended against the rules of natural justice. We think that this complaint is justified. The appellant ought to A have been afforded the opportunity to cross examine those who testified against his interest and, if necessary, to call his own additional witnesses.

1984 TLR p70

Again it is noted that at the trial before the Tribunal there was only one complainant, namely B Thomas Lesio. But on appeal before the Minister there were five complainants, namely Thomas Lesio and four others who were not identified, and the Minister in his judgment accordingly awarded the title to Thomas Lesio and four others. This was obviously irregular for two main reasons. First, it was clearly wrong to join on appeal a person who was not a party at the trial. Secondly, it was a C serious error to award title and possession of the land to the four unidentified persons. Such award was practically meaningless. A proper decision must clearly identify the parties whose rights and obligations have been determined in the particular suit. D

Again the Minister in his decision ordered one Patris, the appellant's brother, to give vacant possession to Thomas Lesio and four others. But Patris was never a party at the trial. So that to the extent that the Minister's decision relates to Patris, that decision was equally objectionable on the same grounds as those given in the preceding paragraph. E

For all these reasons we are satisfied that the Minister's decision was a nullity, and that the learned High Court Judge ought to have held so. The appeal therefore succeeds. We accordingly grant the order for certiorari and set aside the Minister's decision. F

Appeal allowed.

1984 TLR p70

G

[zRPz]MACHAME KASKAZINI CORPORATION LIMITED (LAMBO ESTATE) v AIKAELI MBOWE 1984 TLR 70 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Mustafa JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

October 1, 1984

CIVIL APPEAL 11 OF 1984 H

Flynote

Tort - Negligence - Vicarious liability - Unauthorised employee drives employer's vehicle -Scope of employment - Whether employer vicariously liable.
Tort - Costs - Appeal - Defect in preparation of record - Documents omitted - Party successful - Whether I entitled to all costs.
1984 TLR p71
MUSTAFA JA
-Headnote
A The respondent had sued the appellant and one Simon Alfayo Msomari jointly and severally in negligence for damage caused to his house and goods as well as for loss of earnings as a result of such damage. It was established as a fact that on 14th February 1977, Simon, after working hours B and without the authority or knowledge of the appellant, took and drove the vehicle to visit a relative. On his return at 8.15 p.m. he crashed into the respondent's building and was subsequently charged and convicted of reckless driving. The High Court found the appellant vicariously liable for C the tort committed by Simon, his employee, despite the fact that he was not authorised to drive the employer's vehicle at all.
Held: (i) It is a question of fact whether the unauthorised act by a servant is within, or outside the scope of his employment;
D (ii) Simon was not engaged in his employer's business at the material time; the visit to his relative had absolutely no connection with his employment, but was an independent act outside the scope of his employment; his driving the vehicle was an unauthorised act outside the scope of his employment.
E Per curiam: Owing to the defect in the preparation of the record, only half the costs incurred in the item for the preparation of the record of appeal should be awarded to the appellant.
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
F Cases referred to:
1. Marsh v Moores [1974] 2 K.B. 280
2. Canadian Pacific Railway v Lockhard [1942] A.C. 591
O. Sang'ka for the appellant
G P. Jonathan for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mustafa, J.A.: read the following considered judgment of the court: The respondent Aikaeli Mbowe had sued the appellant Machame Kaskazini Corporation Ltd. and one Simon Alfayo Msomari jointly H and severally in the High Court in negligence for damage caused to the respondent's house and goods as well as for loss of earnings as a result of such damage. The High Court (Mwesiumo, J.) gave judgment in favour of the respondent as prayed and the appellant is appealing from that I decision. Simon Msomari has not appealed.
1984 TLR p72
MUSTAFA JA
The appellant is a limited liability company and is engaged in farming, among other activities, in the A Moshi District. Simon, at the material time, was an employee of the appellant as a field officer. The appellant had provided Simon with a motor vehicle and a driver for his work. It was alleged by the appellant that Simon was not authorised to drive any motor vehicle of the appellant's; Simon had to B use a driver. Simon had no valid driving licence.

On the 14th February, 1977, at about 8.15 p.m. Simon drove a Landrover MS 7063 belonging to the appellant and was so negligent that he crashed it into the Bar & Restaurant building of the respondent at Machame, causing considerable damage to the structure. The respondent claimed C Shs. 60,000/= for the damage to the building, Shs. 40,000/= for articles and items of furniture and utensils destroyed in the building and for loss of income arising from the cessation of the business.

As far as Simon is concerned, there was clear evidence that he was negligent and was liable for D damages for his action. The appellant has submitted that, as employer, it was, in this case not vicariously liable for the tort of Simon. The appellant alleges that Simon, at the material time, was not acting in the course of his employment. The appellant also appeals against the award of damages E and the quantum.

The facts are not seriously in dispute. On the 14th February, 1977, Simon had finished work at 6.00 p.m., and the driver had parked the motor vehicle used by Simon in the garage. At 6.45 p.m. Simon without authority and unknown to the appellant, took and drove the vehicle to visit a relative, and F on his return at 8.15 p.m. he crashed into the respondent's building, and lost consciousness. Simon was subsequently charged and convicted of careless driving.

The trial judge frames five issues:

1. Whether Simon was employed by the appellant as a driver; G
2. Whether, if so, Simon was driving in the course of his duties;
3. Whether Simon was negligent;
4. Whether the appellant was vicariously liable;
5. What relief. H

The trial judge found that Simon was not employed as a driver, but as a field officer. He dealt with issues (2) and (3) together. He held that because (1) the appellant did not file a complaint to the police about conversion of the motor vehicle not amounting to theft against Simon but only I recovered from Simon the cost of repairs to the vehicle (2) that as a field officer Simon was clothed with apparent authority to drive the appellant's motor vehicle, A and prima facie Simon was the vehicle owner's agent (3) the action of the appellant in safeguarding and storing the damage items of goods and (4) the appellant's earlier attempts at settlement, he was of the view that Simon was driving negligently and that the appellant was vicariously liable. We fail to understand how any of the above factors, B or a combination of them, on the facts of this case, could be a reason for imposing vicarious liability on the appellant.

As Lynskey, J. stated in Marsh v Moores [1949] 2 KB 208 at 215 (and both Lord Goddard, C.J. and Birkett, J. concurred): C

It is well settled law that a master is liable even for acts which he has not authorised provided they are so connected with the acts which he has authorised that they may rightly be regarded as modes, although improper modes, of doing them. On the other hand, if the unauthorised and wrongful act of the servant is not connected with the authorised act as to be a D mode of doing it but is an independent act, the master is not responsible, for in such a case, the servant is not acting in the course of his employment but has gone outside it.

And he referred to, among other authorities, Canadian Pacific Railway v Lockhart [1942]A.C. 591, 599. E

In Halsbury's Laws of England 4th Edition Vol. 16 paragraph 743 it is stated: F

In order to render the employer liable for the employee's act it is necessary to show that the employee, in doing the act which occasioned the injury, was acting in the course of his employment. An employer is not liable if the act which gave rise to the injury was an independent act unconnected with the employee's employment. If at the time when the injury took place, the G employee was engaged, not on his employer's business, but on his own, the relationship of employer and employee does not exist, and the employer is not therefore liable to third persons for the manner in which it is performed, since he is in the H position of a stranger. In this case it is immaterial whether the employee in using his employer's property with his employer's permission, as long as he is clearly acting on his own behalf, or whether he is using it surreptiously, and is therefore, as regards his employer, trespasser. I

1984 TLR p74

In such cases, it is a question of fact whether the unauthorised act by a servant is within, or outside A the scope of his employment.

Here it is clear that Simon was not engaged in his employer's business at the material time. He had already finished his work. He had taken the motor vehicle clearly on his own behalf, for a visit to his relative. That visit had absolutely no connection with his employment, but was an independent act B outside the scope of his employment. He was not even authorised to drive a motor vehicle. This was an unauthorised act outside the scope of his employment.

We agree with Mr. Sang'ka who appeared for the appellant that the appellant could not be vicariously liable for the negligence of Simon in the circumstances. C

Since we have found in favour of the appellant on the issue of vicarious liability, it is unnecessary to deal with the other grounds of appeal.

We allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the High Court in so far as it concerns the D appellant, and substitute therefor an order dismissing the claim against the appellant. We order that any decretal sum if paid, be returned to the appellant. We allow costs to the appellant both here and below. However, as Mr. Jonathan for the respondent has pointed out, relevant documents like E the ruling by Mwakibete, J. dated 22nd September, 1981, and the ruling by the Chief Justice dated 25th July, 1983, were not included in the record of appeal. Owing to this defect in the preparation of the record, we direct that only half the costs incurred in the item for the preparation of the record of appeal be awarded to the appellant. F

Appeal allowed.

1984 TLR p74

G

[zRPz]AUGUSTUS N. AND D.G. HALIKAS v M. K. MITHANI AND MEHBOOB YUSUFUALI MANJI 1984 TLR 74 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mustafa JJA

CIVIL APPLICATION 8 OF 1984 H

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Notice of motion - Application for leave to appeal to Court of Appeal and leave to appeal out of time - Whether can be made to the Court of Appeal - R. 44 Court of I Appeal Rules G.N. 102 of 1979.

1984 TLR p75

MUSTAFA JJA

A The applicant had filed a notice of motion for an order that leave be granted to appeal to the Court of Appeal and to appeal out of time.

Held: It is clearly stated in rule 44 of the Court of Appeal Rules that whenever an application may be B made to the Court of Appeal or to the High Court, it shall in the first instance be made to the High Court.

Case Information

Application dismissed.

C No cases referred to:

G.M. Fimbo for the applicants.

M.A. Lakha for the respondents.

[zJDz]Judgment

D Mustafa, J.A.: gave the following ruling. The applicant, represented by Professor Fimbo, had filed a notice of motion moving a judge of this court for an order that;

1. leave may be granted to appeal to the Court for Appeal and

E 2. to appeal out of time, on grounds contained in an affidavit filed with the notice of motion.

It will be convenient to set out very briefly the background to this matter. The applicant, and another party, had filed an action in the Dar es Salaam Resident Magistrate's Court being R.M. Civil case No.78 of 1972 against the respondent and two other parties in respect of business premises on Plot F 26, Pugu Road, then owned by the applicant and his co-plaintiff. The claim so far as the respondent was concerned, was that the respondent had illegally entered and occupied the suit G premises, and was a trespasser, and should be evicted. The respondent's defence was that he had entered the suit premises with the consent and leave of the then lawful tenant, in order to manage the tenant's business while the latter was away overseas undergoing treatment. Incidentally the tenant was a relative of the respondent. The tenant died in December 1972. The deceased tenant's H wife came to Tanzania to wind up the deceased's business and estate. In May 1973 the suit premises were acquired by the Registrar of Buildings under the Acquisition of Buildings Act and the respondent applied for and was taken on as a tenant of the suit premises by the Registrar. He then paid rent to the Registrar. In 1975 he was informed by the Registrar that the suit premises were I restored to the applicant who refused to accept the respondent as a tenant and refused to accent rent tendered.

1984 TLR p76

MUSTAFA JJA

The Resident Magistrate gave judgment in R.M. Civil Case No, 78 on 19th April, 1982 in favour of A the respondent. He found that the respondent was not a trespasser and had been a tenant of the Registrar of Buildings and that he was protected by the Rent Restriction Act. He refused to evict the respondent as he found that there was no evidence of alternative accommodation, that it was not B reasonable to make such an order, and that it was not shown that greater hardship would result if such an order was not made.

An appeal from that judgment by the applicant was made to the High Court, and the High Court (Mtenga, J.) upheld the findings of the Resident Magistrate and dismissed the appeal on 16th C November, 1982. The applicant is now seeking leave to appeal and of extension of time to appeal.

Mr. Lakha for the respondent raised a preliminary objection on the ground that the notice of motion was incompetent. He submitted that the main purpose of the notice of motion was to seek leave to D appeal, and such leave has not been refused by the High Court. The applicant had filed a notice in the High Court on 7th March, 1983 for leave to appeal, but the application was not proceeded with and was withdrawn on 13th December, 1983. He submitted that an application for leave to appeal must first go to the High Court, and he referred to Rule 44 of the Court of Appeal Rules. An E application for leave to appeal would be under the provisions of section 4(1)(c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, and Rule 44 of the Court of Appeal Rules would be applicable.

He also submitted that in terms of Rule 55(2) (a) of the Court of Appeal Rules such an application F must come before a full court, not a single judge.

He also referred to Rule 43(2)(a) of the Court of Appeal Rules, and submitted that leave to appeal had to be made within 14 days of the decision, and the application was hopelessly out of time. G

In reply Professor Fimbo submitted that Rule 55(2)(a) of the of the Court of Appeal Rules only applies to an application for leave to appeal but here he has applied for two orders, one for leave to appeal and one for extension of time, and he contended that in these circumstances the provisions of Rule 44 would be inapplicable. He referred to Rule 8 of the Court of Appeal Rules, and submitted H that the Court should only look to that Rule for extension of time for sufficient reason and that Rule 8 overrides other Rules.

I confess I am unable to follow the reasoning of Professor Fimbo. An application for leave to appeal I is different in nature from an application for extension of time, though it is possible that some

1984 TLR p77

MUSTAFA JJA

A elements may sometimes overlap. It is clearly stated in Rule 44 that whenever an application may be made to this Court or to the High Court, it shall in the first instance be made to the High Court. An application for leave to appeal is such an application. In my view such an application has first to B be made to the High Court, and if not, it has to be rejected as incompetent.

On this ground I would reject the application for leave to appeal.

I will also briefly deal with the other matters raised in the preliminary objection argued before me. An C application for leave to appeal cannot be heard by a single judge, only by a full court. However, I would simply have referred or transferred the application to a full court, and would not have considered such an error as fatal. It is true that leave to appeal has to be applied for within 14 days D of a decision, but this delay is not necessarily fatal, if sufficient reason for the delay could be advanced.

That suffices for the preliminary objection.

I also heard arguments on the substance of the notice of motion, so that, if I am wrong on the preliminary objection my views on the merit are available.

E On the issue of leave to appeal, Professor Fimbo submitted that there was an arguable case, and that points of law were involved. Both counsel referred to the proposed memorandum of appeal filed with the notice of motion. I am of the view that all the grounds of appeal apart from ground 2 F concern matters of fact as found by the courts below, and involve no law. Ground 2 and possibly ground 4 would necessarily involve the production of fresh evidence and can be ignored. Professor Fimbo then submitted that there could be a point of law of public importance arising from the appeal. G He conceded that such a point has not been raised in the proposed memorandum of appeal, nor was it raised in the courts below. The point, he submitted was this: "What are the rights of tenants of the Registrar of Buildings after the premises have been restored to the previous owners". I am not convinced that such an issue could arise from the hearing of this appeal judging from the brief H background that I have given at the beginning of this ruling. The issue before the courts below was basically that of trespass, not the incidents attaching to tenancies. If such an issue is to be decided, it must await a suitable opportunity, assuming that a tenancy granted by the Registrar of Buildings I could have incidents different from those of a tenancy granted by an ordinary owner.

1984 TLR p78

MUSTAFA JJA

The next point of law raised by Professor Fimbo was that the 1st appellate judge had not held that A the applicant was entitled to rent from the respondent. Mr. Lakha pointed out that the trial magistrate had ordered payment of rent by the respondent to the applicant, and that order remains, as no cross-appeal has been filed. I am unable to understand Professor Fimbo's submission on this point. B

I am not satisfied that any legal issue or point is involved and I would have refused leave.

As regards extension of time Professor Fimbo submitted that the delay was due (1) to the fault of the former advocate retained by the applicant, that is, Mr. Mahatane and (2) illness of the applicant. He C conceded that the last date for filing the appeal was 20th March, 1983. An application for leave to appeal was made on 7th March, 1983 but he alleged that this application for leave to appeal was withdrawn on 13th December, 1983, by Mr. Mahatane without the knowledge or instruction of the D applicant. He alleged that the applicant came to know of this withdrawal by Mr. Mahatane's letter to the applicant dated 2nd July, 1984.

However, it is clear that a fresh suit was filed by Mr. Mahatane on behalf of the applicant on 14th E December, 1983, a day following the withdrawal of the application for leave to appeal. The plaint was signed by the applicant. The fresh suit was in respect of the same suit premises, and referred to the respondent as having been declared a tenant in R.M. Civil case No, 78 of 1982, and seeking the F respondent's eviction, on the ground among others that he had sublet without permission.

The inference, to my mind, was that the appeal was being deliberately abandoned and fresh action was being taken to evict the respondent. Mr. Lakha stated that this fresh suit R.M. Civil Case No. G 217 of 1983, was dismissed for want of prosecution on 14th September, 1984. The letter of 2nd July, 1984, written by Mr. Mahatane referred only to R.M. Civil Case No, 217 of 1983, and nothing in it concerned the application for leave to appeal. In the circumstances I do not believe that Mr. Mahatane had withdrawn the application for leave to appeal without the authority or knowledge of H the applicant, bearing in mind that the application to the High Court for leave to appeal dated 7th March, 1983, was filed by the applicant himself before Mr Mahatane was engaged as counsel. If Mr. Mahatane had acted as alleged, then this conduct would have been improper, not negligent, and I that would be a matter between the applicant and Mr. Mahatane. It would seem to me that the notice

A of motion filed on 10th October, 1984, after the dismissal of the fresh suit R.M. Civil Case No, 217 of 1983 on 14th September, 1984 could have been an attempt to revive an appeal which had become moribund.

B As to illness, Professor Fimbo referred to a report dated 29th August, 1984, written by a Dr. Wilson of London concerning the applicant. That letter states inter alia "this gentleman on his visit to England from Tanzania while he was here visiting his daughter..." It would seem that while on such a visit the applicant consulted Dr. Wilson and other doctors in London. Admittedly, the C applicant had suffered injuries and illness, but he was about 18 months out of time, he was capable of going on a visit to his daughter in England, and the illnesses occurred from June 1984 onward.

I do not think that he was effectively prevented by illness from filing his appeal for a period of 11/2 D years. I would not have found that the applicant had advanced sufficient reason to extend the time in terms of Rule 8 of the Court of Appeal Rules.

I dismiss the application with costs.

E Application dismissed.

F

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

August 5, [1985]
(PC) CRIMINAL APPEAL 83 OF 1984
Flynote
G Criminal Practice and Procedure - Limitation - Period of Limitation - Purpose of -Whether right of appeal can be indefinite - Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984, s.25(1).
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appearance -Right to appear by accused - Duty of court - Exceptions to H the rule - Effect of such irregularity - Magistrates' Courts Act 1984 ss.34 and 37(2).
Evidence - Confessions - Involuntary confessions - Presence of further relevant fact proving a conduct -Whether admissible - Rules of Evidence in Primary courts, G.N. No. 22/1964 Rule 9 (2) (b).
I Statutory Interpretation - "Failure of Justice'' - Meaning of -Magistrates' Courts Act 1984 s. 37(2).
1984 TLR p80
-Headnote
The appellants were convicted by the Primary Court of robbery with violence. They appealed to the A District Court which upheld the conviction and granted them an open right of appeal to the High Court. In further appeal to the High Court they contended that they were denied justice because of non-appearance caused by lack of notice of hearing by the District Court. They further alleged that B the District Court had accepted doubtful confessions.
Held: (i) The right of appeal cannot be open; granting liberty of an indefinite period of appeal is contrary to s. 25 (1) of the Magistrates' courts Act 1984 which prescribed a period of 30 days; and C defeats the purpose of limitation period which is to avoid chaos in the business of the courts;

(ii) an appellant whether in custody or not, is entitled to be present at the hearing of his appeal, and the court must cause notice of the time and place at which the appeal will be heard to be D given to the appellant or to his advocate;

(iii) exceptions to the notice rule (ii) above can only be made in two circumstances;

(a) (as to the appellant) where an appellant has not indicated in his petition that he wishes to be present; and E

(b) (as to the advocate) where the petition is not signed by the advocate or the court is not informed that he is instructed to appear at the hearing;

(iv) where such a procedural irregularity is proved the decision of such court cannot be F reversed or altered on appeal solely for such error, omission or irregularity unless failure of justice has been occasioned by such irregularity, error or omission;

(v) failure of justice does not mean the conviction of an accused or the dismissal of his appeal; rather, it means failure to give the accused or the appellant a fair and just hearing (by giving G due consideration to the merits of the case);

(vi) although the appellants' confessions were ordinarily inadmissible, the fact that there was an unusual state of affairs concerning the second appellant was relevant and admissible as it tended to prove a conduct from which the second appellant's guilt could be inferred; in such context it does H not matter if illegal means are used in getting at the fact.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed. I

1984 TLR p81

LUGAKINGIRA J

A Cases referred to:

1. Kuruma Son of Kaniu v R. [1955] 1 All E.R. 236, or (1954) 21EACA 242.

D.C. Mbezi for the appellants.

B B. Mwambe for the Republic.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The appellants Joram Mkanghule and Meshack Chilimbe, to whom I shall hereinafter refer as the first and second appellant respectively, were before the Primary Court at C Makang'wa, convicted of robbery with violence and sentenced to seven years' imprisonment each. They unsuccessfully appealed to the District Court, Dodoma, and further appealed.

Mr. D.C. Mbezi appeared for the appellants before this Court and raised a preliminary complaint. It is D an important one and I desire to give it consideration. The appellants had engaged him to file and prosecute their appeal before the District Court. Mr. Mbezi duly filed the appeal on 6th March 1984. The appeal came up for hearing on 1st August, 1984, but neither he nor the appellants were served E with the notice of hearing. Mr. Mbezi informed me that the appeal did not even appear on the court's cause list. However, the proceedings of that date appear as follows.

Cormm: D.H. Lukindo, D.M.

Appellants absent.

F Mr. Mbezi for the Appellants absent.

Memo of appeal together with lower court record perused.

G Sgd.

D.H. Lukindo, D.M. 1/8/84

The court's judgment follows immediately, and is dated the same day, ending with: "Right of appeal to High Court is open."

H Mr. Mbezi's complaint is justified. First of all, the right of appeal cannot be open as such. To grant such liberty, in effect an indefinite period of appeal, is contrary to s.25(1) of the Magistrates' courts Act, 1984 which prescribes a period of thirty days. Any period of limitation has its purpose, the most obvious being to avoid chaos in the business of the courts. It is therefore improper, indeed I irregular, to behave as if limitation did not exist or matter. But I need to say more on this subject since the appellants were not prejudiced by, but stood to gain from, the A indifference of the appellate magistrate.

Secondly, the proceedings cited above are not free from ambiguity. They could be construed to imply that the appellants and/or Mr. Mbezi were absent on their election. I have perused the entire record and it is evident that no notice of hearing was sent out. It may also be true, as claimed by Mr. B Mbezi, that the matter did not even appear on the cause list. It seems that some magistrates are tempted to regard as trivial appeals from primary courts and to dispose of them as a sort of nuisance. Unfortunately, that attitude is wrong as it overlooks the legitimate anxieties of the parties to the case C and, more seriously, it is not available for a court to substitute its attitude for the express provisions of the law. Appearance at the hearing of criminal appeals from Primary Courts is governed by the provisions of s.34 of the Act aforesaid. Generally, an appellant, whether in custody or not, is entitled to be present at the hearing of his appeal, and the court is enjoined to cause notice D of the time and place at which the appeal will be heard to be given to him or to his advocate. There are two exceptions to this rule: Notice need not be given to an appellant who has not indicated in his petition that he wishes to be present; nor need it be given to an advocate unless the petition is E signed by him or the court is otherwise informed that he is instructed to appear at the hearing. In the instant case the petition of appeal was signed and filed by Mr. Mbezi. In view of the provisions aforesaid, I am satisfied that the lower court proceeded irregularly in failing to notify Mr. Mbezi or the appellants of the date of hearing. F
It now falls to consider the effect of this irregularity. Section 37(2) of the Act is relevant in this respect and, in so far as this case is concerned, it provides that the decision of a District Court shall not be reversed or altered on appeal on account of any error, omission or irregularity in any process G unless such error, omission or irregularity has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. To my understanding, a failure of justice does not mean the conviction of an accused or the dismissal of his appeal; rather, it means failure to give the accused or the appellant a fair and just hearing. I am not prepared to say in this case that there was such a failure of justice. The appellants were in fact given H a fair and just hearing notwithstanding their absence and that of their advocate. As indicated in the proceedings of 1st August, the petition of appeal was perused. Even in his judgment the appellate magistrate further stated that he did not agree with the grounds of appeal, an indication I that he gave them consideration. It follows, in my view, that there was a

A fair hearing and the decision of the lower court cannot be disturbed on account of the irregularity. The appeal therefore stands or falls on its merits.
Two matters were taken before me: the identification of the robbers and the reception of doubtful B confessions. Mr. Mbezi, with Mr. Mwambe's support, submitted that there was unreliable evidence of identification and that otherwise the appellants were convicted and their first appeal dismissed on the basis of involuntary confessions. In view of these arguments, I propose to recount the facts at some length.

C The complainant was a cattle dealer. On 5th August, 1983, he went to Nkwenda village the appellants' home place, to purchase cattle and had a pouch containing 20,000/-. Being a stranger in the area, he picked up a friend (PW2) who was a resident of Nkwenda. Around 4 p.m. they came to a D pombe shop where they found both appellants. They told the appellant of their desire and appellant directed them to his home which PW2 knew. They hung around until between 5 and 6 p.m. when PW 2 led the way to the second appellant's home. They were there shown four cattle by the E second appellant's brother but since it was getting late, the second appellant's father, one Simatya, told them to make payment the following day. The complainant and PW 2 turned to go and it was then between 7 and 7.30 p.m. in their estimation. A short distance from Simatya's homestead, PW halted to answer a call of nature. Shortly, the complainant was accosted by two people whom he F identified as the appellants. They asked him where his colleagues were. He duly informed them. In that instant he was attacked and felled and relieved of his pouch. He raised alarms and PW 2 arrived in time to see the appellants flee. More alarms were raised but nobody came to help except women G who were peeping and retreating into their homes. They went to report to the village secretary but he could not help saying that the appellants were fearsome characters. He directed them to the Ward Secretary. The following day the second accused was arrested at his home. The first appellant was H reported to have left for Nkulabi village the previous night. He was followed there and arrested. It seems that upon their arrest the appellants were given a beating and this led to their making written confessions. The second appellant went further. He led the way to his house and indicated a spot under his door saying he had kept the money there. The soil was removed but no money was found. I The appellants were subsequently charged.

1984 TLR p84

LUGAKINGIRA J

I will start with the question of identification. It occurs to me that Mr. Mbezi's argument was based A on a misapprehension of the facts. He thought, and argued, that the complainant and PW 2 met and parted with the appellants at 4 p.m. when in fact they parted after 5 p.m. The four were therefore together at the pombe shop for more than an hour. It is significant that the appellants themselves B denied meeting the complainant or PW 2 at all. Apart from the familiarity arising from the pombe shop meeting, it is equally evident that complainant had ample opportunity to see and identify the appellants at the time of the robbery for he saw them arrive, had a conversation with them, and could even make out who did what. He said: C

Basi tulipozunguka nyumba ya yule Simatya mwenzangu akasema nimsubiri ajisaidie kwanza. Wakati ninamsubiri mwenzangu, washtakiwa hawa wakaja pale nilipokuwa nimesimama. Kitu cha kwanza D mshtakiwa wa pili aliniuliza kuwa mwenzako yuko wapi. Baada ya kumjibu yupo anajisaidia nikakuta nimepigwa kichwa na ngumi kwenye shingo. Akanizoa na kunidondosha chini. Ndipo nikaanza kupiga kelele ... Mshtakiwa wa kwanza alikuwa akinitazama, huku ameshika miguu nikiwa nimedondoshwa chini. E Wakati ule napiga yowe mshtakiwa wa pili alikuwa anachukua pochi yangu iliyokuwa na fedha.

The time of the incident was indeed given as 7.30 p.m. but that was the guess of peasants which F should not be taken seriously. Hence, if in fact the complainant and PW2 left Simatya's at 7.00 p.m. as the complainant stated, and the robbery took place just behind Simatya's house, according to both the complainant and PW2, there could not have elapsed an interval of half an hour. It is G moreover evident that despite the so-called 7.30 p.m., and the use of the term "usiku", it was still possible at the time easily to make out a familiar person. In cross-examination by the first appellant, the complainant further said:

Niliwatambua washtakiwa hawa kwa sababu nilionana nao kuanzia mchana... Ilikuwa saa 1.30 usiku, H ilikuwa rahisi sana kumtambua mshtakiwa. I

1984 TLR p85

LUGAKINGIRA J

A Even PW2 arrived in good time to see the appellants, although both counsel were again inclined to see the evidence differently. According to the complainant, Ndipo nikaanza kupiga kelele mwenzangu akasikia na kuja anakimbia. Washtakiwa walipomuona B wakakimbia.

According to PW2 himself, who also knew the appellants from long before,

C Mara nikasikia mlalamikaji anapiga kelele. Nilienda huku nakimbia nikakuta mlalamikaji kaangushwa chini na washtakiwa hawa. Nilipofika kutaka kuwashika walikimbia. Wakati wanakimbia nilimuona D mshitakiwa ameshika mkononi mkoba wa mlalamikaji ... Tuliwafukuza lakini hatukuweza kuwashika.

From this evidence, which the lower courts believed, I am equally satisfied that the appellants were properly and perfectly identified. The familiarity and the circumstances prevailing gave no room for E mistaken identity. As pointed out by the learned trial magistrate the behaviour of the first appellant was also significant. For no apparent reason he abandoned his home for Nkulabi at 3 a.m. the same night. He could only tell the trial court that he was drinking pombe at Nkulabi but, certainly, that was F not a calling that would have necessitated such an unusual and risky journey. Mr. Mbezi's other observation on identification was on what he called the arrest of the second appellant's brother. He thought that this indicated uncertainty on the part of the complainant and PW2. In fact, this was G another misdirection on the evidence. The man who was picked up was Donald Nkanghule (DW1), the first appellant's brother, not Simon Chilimbe (DW2), the second appellant's brother, and the former was taken along to disclose the whereabouts of his brother. When he did so, he was released.

H There was then the issue of confessions. If what the appellants alleged was true, the confessions were of course inadmissible. However, I am unable to find that their reception prejudiced the appellants. A careful reading of the lower courts' judgments shows that reference to the confessions and the circumstances in which they were obtained are matters arising in the summaries of evidence. I But in arriving at their decisions both courts carefully confined themselves to identification. I therefore see no merit in the argument which, in any case, is irrelevant once it is found, as it, was, that there was accurate identification. But A one thing merits attention. Even though the confessions as such might have been inadmissible, the fact that there was an unusual state of affairs in connection with the second appellant was relevant and admissible under rule 9(2)(b) of the Rules of Evidence in Primary Courts, G.N. No. 22 of 1964, as it tended to prove a conduct from which the second appellant's guilt could be inferred. It B matters not, in that context, that illegal means are used in getting at the fact: see also Kuruma Son of Kaniu v R.[1955] 1 All ER. 236; (1954), 21 EACA 242.

1984 TLR p86

On the whole, with respect to both learned counsel, there is no doubt about the appellants' guilt and C the propriety of their conviction. The appeal is accordingly dismissed. There is only one matter to put right. The trial court had no power whatsoever to order the attachment of the appellants' parents' cattle or money to compensate the complainant. The obligation to furnish compensation is D solely the appellants' and it's none of the court's business that they have no property of their own.

Appeal dismissed.

1984 TLR p86

E

[zRPz]MATHIAS TIMOTHY v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 86 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Lugakingira J

August 7, 1985

F CRIMINAL APPEAL 83 of 1984

Flynote

Evidence - Witnesses - Witness lying on material particular - Danger of believing same witness on other particulars - Whether testimony suspect or discredited. G

-Headnote

The appellant together with another person had been convicted of theft from a Mill. The rest of the accused had been locked inside the Mill while working and it was proved nothing could be disposed of from the Mill, neither could they come out until the following morning. The main witness had lied H on a material particular of the theft, and the trial magistrate, though aware of the readiness of the witness to lie, never warned himself of the danger of believing the same witness on other particulars. On appeal it was considered whether such palpable falsehood had any effect on the testimony of I witness.

1984 TLR p87

LUGAKINGIRA J

A Held: (i) In testimony of a witness, where the issue is one of false evidence, the falsehood has to be considered in weighing the evidence as a whole; and where the falsehood is glaring and fundamental its effect is utterly to destroy confidence in the witness altogether, unless there is other B independent evidence to corroborate the witness.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Cases referred to:

C 1. Musa v Republic [1970] HCD n. 278.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: Originally, this case involved fifteen persons, all employees of the National Milling Corporation in Dodoma. The appellant, Mathias Timothy, was a night watchman with the D Corporation and was the third accused at the trial. The charge consisted of two counts. The first count alleged stealing by servant and involved the first accused only.The second count alleged simple theft and involved the rest of the accused, that is, the second to fifteenth accused. Both E counts related to the same subject matter, that is, theft of 13 bags of sembe flour, two bags of maize and 18 empty bags, all the property of the Corporation and worth 1,569/20. All the accused were acquitted except the appellant and the second accused, one Hassan Juma, who was also a F watchman. Upon conviction these accused were sentenced to three years' imprisonment each. The second accused has not appealed.

It was common ground that on the night of 15 June, 1984 the appellant and the second accused were on duty outside the Corporation's Mill. The rest of the accused were inside the mill where milling G was in progress, and had actually been locked there from outside since 6 p.m. The key to the lock was kept by PW4 at his residence. That was the practice, its inconvenience and implications notwithstanding, and was designed to prevent thefts from the Mill. During the night, therefore, no one could enter or come out of the mill.

H There was information of rampant thefts at the Mill. On that night therefore, No.B.4728/ D/Sgt. John (PW1) and two other unnamed police officers were detailed to keep watch on the premises with a view to foiling any theft. It was alleged by PW3 that around 2.45 a.m. he and his colleagues saw I people throwing bags of sembe, etc. "from inside the milling machine" over the fence surrounding the Mill. He further alleged that they also saw the appellant and the second accused collect those items and take them into a nearby hut which was occupied by PW1. A For no apparent reason no arrest was made then. Instead we are made to believe that when this process was over DSgt. John and his colleagues proceeded to the hut and confronted PW1 over the bags of flour inside and empty bags outside his hut. After PW1 was given a beating, the modus B operandi by many of our officers, he disclosed that the second accused had earlier approached him with a request to keep his "luggage" there. The second accused was sought out and arrested. The appellant, who was not feeling well, was then resting inside a hut within the enclosure. He was similarly followed, dragged out and beaten and told he was a thief. The following morning the rest of C the accused came out of the Mill after it was opened by PW4. They were promptly arrested and all the accused were charged as aforesaid. The appellant denied any knowledge of the theft.

The trial magistrate was incredulous about the evidence of Dsgt. John and said (in his typical style): D

The prosecution evidence is not clear enough to satisfy me that the police exactly saw the packages thrown from inside the concrete fence. The packages are 50kg, and it is hardly to be believed that it can be thrown E out from inside by a person without a ladder hence it have been proved that there was no any kind of ladder around the area.

He then went on to say, "I suspect that the maize flour packages were brought outside in another F way by the guards or other persons before the ambush policeman's arrival." In the upshot he believed D/Sgt. John that "he detected the second accused and third accused persons carrying the packages outside the milling section fence to the hut adjacent to the NMC compound." G
The only issue in this appeal is whether it was safe to believe D/Sgt. John. That the witness lied on a material particular is beyond question. No one at that time, not even with a ladder, could have disposed of anything from the Mill, for those inside were under lock and key and were not let out until the following morning. The trial magistrate, although conscious of D/Sgt. John's readiness to H lie, never warned himself of the danger of believing the same witness on other particulars. In the case of Musa v R [1970] HCD No. 278, it was held that the rejection of part of the testimony of a witness does not necessarily make his whole testimony suspect or discredited. In that case, I however, the issue was one of discrepancies and
1984 TLR p89
A contradictions as opposed to a palpable falsehood as obtains in the instant case. In my view, where the issue is one of false evidence, the falsehood has to be considered in weighing the evidence as a whole; and where the falsehood is glaring and fundamental its effect is utterly to B destroy confidence in the witness altogether, unless there is other independent evidence to corroborate the witness.
In the case before me the falsehood was neither trivial nor immaterial. It formed the very basis of stealing from the Mill. If it is held, as it correctly was, that D/Sgt. John never saw anything thrown C from the Mill, it must necessarily throw doubt on the whole account of the incident, including the allegation of sighting the appellant removing the bags into PW1's hut. There was no other evidence to corroborate D/Sgt. John's testimony. None of the other two officers was called to testify; indeed their very identities remain unknown. Even PW1 never mentioned the appellant in any connection. D In these circumstances, I am not prepared to say that if the trial magistrate had appreciated the effect of D/Sgt. John's falsehood he must have necessarily believed him on the removal of the bags and have convicted the appellant as he did. Although it is not necessary to speculate, it is nevertheless not unreasonable to say that the witness discovered the loot in his rounds, for PW1's E hut was just outside the fence, and it seems to be the information extracted from PW1 that led the witness to make up a story. I consider it most unsafe to sustain the appellants's conviction which was in fact not supported by the Republic.
F I allow the appeal, quash the conviction and sentence and order the appellant's release from custody unless he is further lawfully held.
Appeal allowed.
1984 TLR p89
G
[zRPz]REPUBLIC v MABULA MIHAMBO 1984 TLR 89 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Katiti J

April 30, 1985

H CRIMINAL REVISION 4 OF 1984

Flynote

Criminal Law - Regulation of Prices Act 1973, s. 8(1) - Selling goods above aggregated price - Whether an offence.

I Statutory Interpretation - Aggregate price and Maximum price - Whether same -Meaning of - Regulation of Prices Act 1973, ss.20 and 26.

1984 TLR p90

KATITI J

Statutory Interpretation - Delegated legislation - Construction of- Where doubts arise, benefit of doubt A should be given to the accused.

-Headnote

The accused had been convicted on his own plea of guilty to a charge of selling fish exceeding aggregated maximum price contrary to ss. 20 and 26 of the Regulation of Prices Act 1973. On revision B it was considered whether there was any offence disclosed under the provisions of sections 20 and 26 of the said Act.

Held: (i) Selling goods above aggregated price is not an offence under the Regulation of Prices Act C 1973;

(ii) the powers of the Assistant Price Commissioner is to determine price structures by fixing maximum prices for sale of goods or services, and not aggregate prices;

(iii) aggregate is not the same as maximum and the statutory definition "maximum price" does D not necessarily mean "aggregate price";

(iv) where the construction of a delegated legislation results in ambiguities, or absurdities, or give rise to oppressive doubtful results, the benefit of doubt should always be given to the accused. E

Case Information

Conviction quashed

No case referred to

[zJDz]Judgment

Katiti, J.: The accused person Mabula Mihambo, stood before Bunda District Court, charged under F the provisions of section 20 and 25 of 26 of the Regulations of Prices Act 1973. The charge that provoked curiosity, and hence the revision, was strangely worded, as follows: G

(1) OFFENCE, SECTION AND LAW:

Selling/fish exceeding aggregated maximum Price/s. 20 and 26 of the Price Regulation Act No. 19 of 1973. H

(2) PARTICULARS OF OFFENCE

Mabula Mihambo charged on 3rd day of January 1984 at about 13.30 hours at Bunda Market, within the District of Bunda; Mara Region, did sell fishes (satu) at Shs. 180/= whereas the actual price is Shs. 90/= thus exceeding aggregated maximum price. I

1984 TLR p91

KATITI J

A The above charge, did arise from the price structures, determined, or fixed by the Bunda District Assistant Price Commissioner; under the empowering provisions of Section 7. 9 and 10 of the Regulation of Prices Act 1973, hereafter to be referred to as the Act. The accused having had the B above charge read to him, he is recorded to have pleaded guilty, automatically thereby earning a conviction on his own plea of guilty. He was sentenced to a fine of Shs. 6,500/- or one year imprisonment.

The accused has not appealed. All the same, what did cause uneasiness is the wording, or form of C the charge, and whether any offence under the provisions of sections 20 and 26 of the Act is disclosed. I shall first deal with the aspect of the wording of the charge, whose nagging influence is tangible. Both the statement of offence, and the particulars of offence do aver, that the accused did D sell fish above the aggregated price, and therefore offended the charged sections. Having anxiously considered the charge I fail to imagine what an aggregate price in this case, meant to the accused person, who allegedly sold the commodity, or commodities concerned. Further, while it is not rhetoric, but a factual legal situation, that the Assistant Price Commissioner has power to E determine price structures, in so doing, he has to fix maximum prices for sale of goods, or services (see section 8(1) of the Act), and not aggregate prices. For aggregate priced goods, may not necessarily have the same meaning, as statutorily assigned to, the price-controlled goods, in as F much as, "maximum price", as ordinarily what is aggregated cannot be taken as the maximum. I would therefore, easily conclude that selling goods above aggregated price, is not an offence known to the Regulation of Prices Act 1973.

I was minded to think, that despite the problem of wording, or form above shown in the charge, the G accused must have had substance clear, till I saw and read, the Bunda District Assistant Price Commissioner's Price List Notice Ref. No. BS/10/1/Vol. 14 of 21st June, 1983. In so far as the price is material for purposes in this case, the prices of "ngege" otherwise known as "satu", were fixed as follows:

H (1) Ngege -

(a) Mkubwa (Kigoma) Shs. 15.00

(b) Kawaida Shs. 10.00

(c) Ndogo Shs. 5.0

I With due respect, these swahili terms "mkubwa", "kawaida" and "ndogo" are only expressive of relative sizes, and are not absolute

1984 TLR p92

KATITI J

standard measures, for what is "mkubwa" or "ndogo" or "kawaida" to one, may qualify for a A different size, in the eyes and estimate of another, and in price terms qualify for a different price. For instance, if "ngege" mkubwa (Kigoma) is to sell at Shs. 15/= each, and as to who is determining mkubwa is anybody's guess, one wonders, how "ngege" "mkubwa sana" would sell, and where the B "ngege" is "Mkubwa sana" in the view of the businessman, is the said businessman not entitled to determine his own price, in any case who has the competence to say it is not "mkubwa sana", but only, "mkubwa"? Is it the police, or the complainant, and who decides, when the accused say it is C "mkubwa sana", and by what standard of measure. In the circumstances of this case, these are pertinent, though blind questions. But we had imperial weights and measures, and now we have a metric system, and why these standard measures were not applied beats my mind.

I am posing the above without oblivion, that the Assistant Price Commissioner acted under D delegated powers, to determine price structures under the provisions already above shown. Further I am not under the influence of oblivion, to the fact that, the over-riding principle in the interpretation of legislation, made under power conferred by statute, is that it should be construed in the light of E the enabling statue generally, and in particular so as to be consistent with the substantive provisions, and it is the duty of courts to give a fair and full effect to the same. But where the construction of such legislation results in ambiguities, or absurdities, or give rise to oppressive F doubtful results, the benefit of doubt should always be given to the accused. In this case, as selling above aggregate price is not an offence known to the Regulation of Prices Act 1973, and as otherwise, the measures are of doubtful precision, and left to be subjectively based, G I am satisfied the conviction entered against the accused is very unsafe. The conviction is hereby quashed, and fine order set aside. The fine, or any amount thereof if paid, to be refunded.

Conviction quashed. H

1984 TLR p93

A

[zRPz]NUHU SELEMANI v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 93 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Tanga

Judge Mustafa JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

October 17, 1984

B CRIMINAL APPEAL 5 OF 1984

Flynote

Evidence - Circumstantial evidence - Voice identification by itself in a murder case - Whether C sufficient/reliable.

Evidence - Circumstantial evidence - Exhibit seized in appellant's absence - Neither shown to appellant nor asked of it - Whether sufficient evidence to link it to appellant.

-Headnote

The appellant had been convicted of murder based on purely circumstantial evidence. The first, identification of the voice of the appellant on what he had said to the deceased; and the second D identification of blood stained shirt seized in the appellant's house. On appeal it was considered whether the circumstantial evidence in the case did irresistibly lead to the inevitable inference that it was the appellant who killed the deceased.

E Held: (i) It is notorious that voice identification by itself is not very reliable;

(ii) the evidence by the prosecution to link the shirt to the appellant was insufficient.

F Appeal allowed.

No case referred to.

S. Mwale for the Republic

[zJDz]Judgment

G Mustafa, J.A. read the following considered judgment of the court: The appellant was convicted of murder on purely circumstantial evidence. On the material day the appellant and the deceased had H a little quarrel in a pombe shop, but the quarrel was settled more or less amicably, and each went his separate way. This was according to the evidence of P.W. 3 Maliki Bakari who was a crucial witness for the prosecution. According to P.W. 3, later that evening, he was in his shop serving customers, and at about 8.30 p.m. just before he was to close, the deceased appeared and wanted to I purchase some cigarettes. There was a light in the shop. As he was taking out some cigarettes to sell to the deceased, he heard a voice saying "Aisay, umenitoroka. Ulifikiri sintakuona." P.W. 3 stated that he could A recognize the voice as that of the appellant whom he knew well. Immediately on hearing that statement, the deceased ran off, without his cigarettes. P.W. 3 thereupon assumed that the appellant had run off after the deceased.

Later on the same night, an alarm was raised, and P.W. 3 discovered that the dead body of the B deceased was lying on the road some distance from his shop.

P.W. 3 told the assembled villagers of what he had seen and heard and suggested that the killer must have been the appellant, and a search was made for the appellant. C

P.W. 1 and P.W. 2, both police officers, arrived at the scene. P.W.1 went to the house of the appellant. The appellant was absent, and PW.1 searched the house. He found a shirt which appeared to have blood stains. He seized it. He asked the appellant's wife who was present to whom did the shirt belong. She said it was the appellant's. Later blood samples of the appellant and the deceased D were taken, and they, together with the shirt, were sent to a Government Chemist for analysis. It was discovered that the blood of the deceased and the appellant and the blood stains on the shirt all belonged to the same group. E

On their way back to the police station from the village, the police vehicle in which were P.W. 1 and other police officers and village officials was stopped by the appellant who gave himself up stating that he had heard that the villagers had implicated him in the killing, but that he had not done so, and he was therefore surrendering himself to the Police for proper investigation, presumably. F

The prosecution case depends on two important circumstances. The first would be the voice identification of what the appellant was alleged to have said, as a result of which the deceased suddenly ran away. In view of the fact that the earlier dispute between the appellant and the G deceased was settled amicably, it is difficult to understand why the appellant should have said "you ran away from me", or "that I could not trace you". Also it is notorious that voice identification by itself is not very reliable.

As regards the shirt with blood stains, it is difficult to conclude that it must have been the H appellant's. The shirt was seized in the appellant's absence, and the wife said it was the appellant's shirt, also in his absence. Thereafter it was never shown to the appellant, nor was he asked if the shirt was his. There was insufficient evidence to link the shirt to the appellant on the evidence adduced by the I
1984 TLR p95
A prosecution. It was also not established whether the blood stains on the shirt were extensive or otherwise.
In our view the circumstantial evidence in this case does not irresistibly lead to the inevitable inference that it was the appellant and nobody else who had killed the deceased, in view of the B lacunae in the evidence adduced by the prosecution.
Mr. Mwale for the Republic eventually conceded that he is unable to support the conviction.
In the result we allow the appeal, quash the conviction, set aside the sentence of death imposed on C the appellant, and order that he be released forthwith unless otherwise lawfully detained.
Appeal allowed.
1984 TLR p95
D
[zRPz]REPUBLIC. v MOHAMED SHEDAFFA AND THREE OTHERS 1984 TLR 95 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

November 18, 1985
E CRIMINAL SESSIONS CASE 10 OF 1983
Flynote
Evidence - Dying declaration-Accused's failure to reply to deceased's statement naming him as assailant - F Whether amounts to acknowledgement of the truth of the dying declaration.
Evidence - Dying declaration - Prerequisites before it can have evidential value.
G Evidence - Dying declaration - Repeated several times - Whether proof of the truth of its content.
-Headnote
The accused persons were charged with murder. The evidence consisted of a dying declaration H which the deceased repeated on several occasions identifying the accused as one of his attackers. The accused did not reply to the statement.
Held: (i) It is possible for a conviction to proceed upon evidence consisting of a dying declaration I only, although it is a rule of practice that a dying declaration requires corroboration before it can be acted upon;

(ii) the mere fact that the deceased consistently made precise and substantially identical A statements on several occasions is not evidence that such statements are accurate but only that the deceased was consistent in his belief that the accused had assaulted him.

Case Information

Accused acquitted.

Cases referred to: B

1. Republic v Magiligitia s/o Lumije [1974] LRT n. 57.
2. Rex v Mwinyimbegu s/o Mwinyimvuale [1933] 2 EACA 70.
3. R. v Ramazan Bin Mirandu [1934] 1 EACA 107. C
4. Rex v Mnyovya Bin Msuma [1939] 6 EACA 128.
5. R. v Ally [1971] HCD n 306.
6. Republic v Joseph Ngaikwamo [1977] LRT n.6.
7. Migezo Mibinga v Uganda [1965] E.A. 71.

Chinguwile for the Republic. D

Mbusa for the Accuseds.

[zJDz]Judgment

Sisya, J.: These two accused persons, Mohamed s/o Shedafa (whom I shall hereafter call the first accused) and Isa s/o Jeremiah alias Nyegere (whom I shall call second accused) stand jointly E charged with the murder of one Mohamed s/o Abdalla at Mlalo in the Lushoto District of Tanga Region. Both accused persons denied the truth of the charge.

It is in evidence on the Prosecution side - which evidence was neither challenged nor contradicted F and I accepted it as true - that on the morning of third March, 1980, the deceased was found lying helpless on the ground outside the village pombe club at Mhelo, Mlalo. He had ghastly cut wounds on the face, neck, right elbow, right buttock, right palm and right shoulder. He was removed and G taken to the local dispensary at Mlalo where first aid was administered on him. Thereafter he was taken to the government hospital, Lushoto, for further treatment. About seven days later he died in hospital. A postmortem examination was conducted on the body of the deceased by a Doctor Kombo. The said Dr. Kombo did not give evidence in this case. He somehow proved to be H "elusive" when it came to service of witness summons on him. His presence was, eventually, dispensed with after the Court was satisfied that the same could not be secured without undue delay to the hearing of this case in which the accused have been on tenterhooks for a little over five solid I years. The postmortem examination report

A which was prepared and duly signed by the doctor was, however, tendered and admitted in evidence (P.1). In it the doctor listed the injuries which the deceased suffered, namely cut wounds, and their respective dimensions. He also mentioned that some of the cut wounds had gone septic. B The doctor certified in the report (P.1) that death of the deceased was due to tetanus.

The learned Counsel for both accused, Mr. Mbusa, made an issue out of the last point, namely the cause of the deceased/s death. According to Mr. Mbusa tetanus may set in even on a small wound. C In the instant case, argued Mr. Mbusa, we have not been told which wound was responsible for the setting in of tetanus. With respect, Mr. Mbusa's argument is self defeating. If, as he appears to concede, a small wound is capable of letting in tetanus then, a fortiori, a bigger wound, let alone wounds, would also do the same.

D In the instant case, as aforesaid, the doctor intimated in the postmortem examination report that some of the cut wounds had already putrefied. It is, to my mind and in all the circumstances of this case, reasonable to infer that tetanus must have set in the wounds which were septic. Since the deceased's wounds did not last a year and a day from the day on which they were presumably E inflicted to the day of the deceased's death (see Section 205 of the Penal Code) and in the light of provisions of Section 202 of the Penal Code, on my part, I entertain no doubts whatsoever on the causality of death in this case, the fact that tetanus set in notwithstanding. It is, and indeed it must F be deemed to be, the person who inflicted the cut wounds on the deceased. In short, I am satisfied, and I so find, that the deceased is dead and that he died a violent death.

The only question for serious and careful consideration by the Court in this case is the identification of the person or persons who inflicted the injuries from which the deceased subsequently died. It is G to the Prosecution evidence on this point that I now turn.

One Saudati d/o Saidi (PW1), wife of the deceased person in this case testified that one day her husband, the deceased, bade her goodbye and told her that he was proceeding to a place called H Mikongoloni where there was a festival. Mikongoloni is within the same Mlalo area but apparently some distance away from the deceased's house. The deceased did not return home. On the following morning she joined a search party for the deceased after she had reported the latter's failure to return home to his (i.e. deceased's) mother, sister and friends. It was during the said I search when she (PW1), that same morning, saw the deceased lying with injuries outside Mhelo village pombe club. She asked him what fate had befallen him. He replied that he had been attacked and assaulted by Isa and Shedafa. A According to PW1 she did not know who the said Isa and Shedafa were. However, as a result of the deceased's condemnation she saw members of the search party apprehend the second accused who was also present and among them. It will be recalled that the second accused's first name is Isa. B

Evidence was given by the Senior Primary Court Magistrate, Mlalo, Mr. Raphael Karekamu (PW4) that on the morning of 3rd March, 1989, whilst he was on duty at the Primary Court, Mlalo, the first accused approached him and complained to him of having been assaulted by one Mohamed s/o C Abdalla on the previous evening. Mr. Karekamu listened to the first accused and then he made a formal reception of the said complaint. As he did so the second accused too arrived. Mr. Karekamu asked him, i.e. second accused, what problem he had whereupon the second accused replied that he had gone there merely to see if the first accused whom he (second accused) described as his friend D had lodged his complaint. According to Mr. Karekamu, when asked the second accused replied that he, second accused, was present and witnessed the alleged assault on the first accused by one Mohamed Abdalla on the previous evening. Mr. Karekamu told the Court that, eventually, he E prepared to issue the usual process to the said Mohamed Abdalla as an accused person. Meanwhile he, Mr. Karekamu, received information that a person with serious injuries had been found. The name of the said injured person and the place where he was found tallied with those mentioned by the first accused in his complaint. This aroused his suspicion whereupon he F suspended the issue of the said process to Mohamed Abdalla, he placed the two persons, i.e. first and second accused under the custody of a militiaman, and, at his suggestion, they all set off for the scene of both alleged incidents. After walking a few hundred paces they met a group of persons G which approached from the opposite direction. The said group carried with them an injured person on a hammock. The injured person turned out to be the deceased in this case. Mr. Karekamu told the Court that he stopped the group and he then asked the deceased as to who had inflicted the injuries on him. Again, the deceased mentioned these two accused persons. In a deliberate exercise H to test if the deceased was in control of his faculties Mr. Karekamu asked him if he could point a finger at his alleged assailants. Without hesitation the deceased pointed at these two accused persons and added that the bone of contention was soup. According to Mr. Karekamu neither I accused said anything: However, they looked "sorrowful and confused". Since

A the deceased was in a critical condition Mr. Karekamu desisted from asking him further questions. He was then carried to the local dispensary where he was given first aid before he was referred to the government hospital, Lushoto, for further treatment. Meanwhile both accused were handcuffed and B taken to the Police station, Lushoto. They were at first charged with doing harm to the deceased. Later, when the deceased died, the charge was amended to that of murder.

It is in evidence that while at the dispensary, Mlalo, the deceased was asked again as to who inured C him and he condemned these accused persons.

One of the witnesses who gave evidence on the Prosecution side is the deceased's father, Abdalla s/o Sheshunda (PW5). He swore that he accompanied the deceased to Lushoto government D hospital and he remained there until the deceased's death. Before he died PW5 asked the deceased on two different occasions to name his assailants. On both occasions the deceased mentioned the accused persons. PW5 told the Court that the deceased alleged that he (deceased) had ordered some soup from the first accused. After drinking it he gave the first accused a Shs.20/= currency E note and asked for his balance. The first accused, however, did not want to release it. Instead the second accused came and caught hold of his hands and tackled him to the ground. Meanwhile the first accused cut him with a panga.

F Two witnesses Shabani Msagati (PW2) and Habibu Hamisi (PW3) who described themselves as friends of the deceased gave evidence in the case. They told the Court that they were with the deceased on that fateful evening. According to Shabani (PW2) the deceased was drunk to the extent that he staggered as he walked. Habibu, however, denied that the deceased was drunk on the G material evening. Shabani and Habibu told the Court that the two of them and the deceased stopped at Mhelo village pombe club and they entered the hut in which the first accused used to boil and sell some soup. As they did on many other minor details, Shabani and Habibu differed on H the original cause for their stop at the first accused's soup parlour. Shabani said that they did so that he could pay for the soup which he drank earlier during the day. Habibu, however, said that they actually stopped because the deceased wanted to drink some soup. Habibu told the Court that the deceased went ahead and ordered the soup. He was served the same and he drank it. Thereafter I the first accused demanded payment. The deceased replied that he would pay. To this the first accused reported that he wanted to be paid with haste. He, first accused, abused the deceased as well by saying, "Kumanina A we".

According to Shabani as he was effecting payment the deceased suddenly began to abuse the first accused by saying, "Huna adabu". Both Shabani and Habibu are agreed that the deceased and the first accused then engaged each other in a physical confrontation. The details, again, however, B vary. Shabani stated in his evidence that the deceased pulled the first accused outside the hut and the two of them exchanged blows. In the course of the fight the first accused complained that the deceased bit his finger. Habibu, on the other hand, swore that the deceased and the first accused C only held each other and this took place inside the hut. He and Shabani intervened in time as the two pugilists prepared to hit each other with their hands.

Both Shabani and Habibu told the Court that after separating the deceased and the first accused the deceased left and disappeared. Efforts to trace the deceased in and around the pombe club proved D fruitless. Eventually, believing that the deceased had gone ahead Shabani and Habibu proceeded to their respective houses. Both these two witnesses told the Court that the deceased was all right when they last saw him that evening. Next time they saw him was on the following morning, with E injuries. They too heard the deceased mention these two accused as the persons who injured him. They also swore that the second accused was not present during the fracas in the first accused's hut.

Both accused gave their statements in defence upon affirmation. None of them called witnesses. F The first accused's story as to what happened in his hut on the material night tallies with what Shabani told the Court in his evidence. According to him, however, the abusive words which the deceased addressed to him were, "Kuma maayo. Mboro yake ndefu" and not only "Huna adabu" as G Shabani stated. The first accused told the Court that he was hurt in the fight because the deceased overpowered and hit him. Later he went to the local dispensary for treatment.

The first accused also conceded that on the following morning he went to the Primary Court, Mlalo, and lodged a complaint against the deceased. He did this to the magistrate, PW4. The first accused H denied that the second accused followed him at the Primary Court. He conceded that he was present when Mr. Karekamu questioned the deceased on the way as to who his assailants were and that the deceased then mentioned him. The first accused, however, denied that the second accused I was mentioned as well. According to the

SISYA J

A first accused he reminded the deceased, immediately after the latter had condemned him, that he (deceased) was all right when they parted on the previous evening. The magistrate, PW4, however, stopped the deceased from making a response.

B The second accused too raised the defence of denial. He denied that he followed the first accused to the Primary Court. According to him he was simply called by the Ward Secretary who then asked him what took place at the village pombe club on the previous evening. He expressed ignorance because he finished selling pombe quite early on the material evening. The second C accused also denied that the deceased ever mentioned him as one of the assailants.

Neither accused called any witnesses.

I summed up the case to the assessors. I reminded them that the only evidence in the instant case implicating these two accused persons is what the deceased himself is alleged to have repeatedly D stated to various persons including a magistrate, Mr. Karekamu (PW4). I told them that the said statement by the deceased, in so far as it related to the cause or to circumstances surrounding his death, was admissible in evidence. I, however, warned them that established case law demands that E such statements by dead persons should be corroborated by some other independent evidence before they can be acted upon. The first assessor advised that the two accused are not guilty whereas the second assessor found both accused guilty as charged and she advised that they should be convicted accordingly. The ball is now in my Court and I, necessarily, proceed to play it.

F It is conceded by both learned Counsel that the only evidence implicating these two accused is the deceased's dying declaration which he repeated to several persons including a magistrate, PW4. In it the deceased persistently mentioned these two accused persons as being the persons who G launched a panga attack on him. Evidence on this point was given by wife of the deceased (PW1), the two friends of the deceased (PW2 and PW3), the Senior Primary Court Magistrate (PW4) and the deceased's father (PW5). The second accused, as has been mentioned in the synopsis of the evidence hereinabove, denied that the deceased ever mentioned him. He was supported in this by H his co-accused, i.e. the first accused. If the accused were to be believed on this point then it means that the second accused was arrested and charged in this case for absolutely no reason at all. Prima facie this sounds ridiculous.

I In his statement in his own defence the second accused told the Court that residents of Mhelo village hated him because of his appointment in the Mhelo village pombe club. The second accused himself is not a native of Mhelo village. In saying this the second accused was trying to A demonstrate to the Court that Prosecution witnesses would therefore be willing to lie against him. I am not in the least persuaded by this proposition. At any rate the magistrate, PW4, is not a resident of Mhelo village. In addition to this he is a completely independent witness in this case with B absolutely nothing to gain or lose in this matter. I accept him as a witness of truth, as I also do PW1, PW2, PW3 and PW5 on this point.

SISYA J
In the case of the Republic v Magiligita s/o Lumije [1974] LRT n 57 it was held by Mfalila J., inter alia, that one of the two tests which a dying declaration must satisfy before it can have any C evidential value is that the said dying declaration was in fact made. In the instant case I am satisfied on the evidence adduced, and I so find, that the deceased did make the dying declaration and further that in it the deceased condemned these two accused. By denying that the second accused too was mentioned both first and second accused persons lied in open Court. D
In the case of Rex v Mwinyimbegu s/o Mwinyimvuale and another (1933) 2 E.A.C.A. 70 at page 71 the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa stated, categorically, that it was not prepared to rule that in no circumstances can a conviction proceed upon evidence consisting of a dying declaration only. E By necessary implication a conviction may, therefore, be founded solely on a dying declaration. The same Court, however, warned in the case of R v Ramazan bin Mirandu (1934) 1 EACA 107, that too great value should not always be attached to dying statements, and they should be received with F caution, and, in the case of Rex v Mnyovya bin Msuma (1939) 6 E.A.C.A. 128, that a careful direction must always be given by the trial judge as to the nature of evidence of dying statements and the caution with which it should be received. Concerning dying declarations the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa quoted a passage from Field on Evidence, Seventh Edition, which is more instructive. G It reads:

"The caution with which this kind of testimony should be received has often been commented upon. The test of cross-examination may be wholly wanting; and ... the particulars of the violence may have occurred under H circumstances of confusion and surprise calculated to prevent their being accurately observed. The deceased may have stated his inferences from facts concerning which he may have drawn a wrong conclusion, I or he may have omitted important particulars, from not having his intention called to them".

1984 TLR p103
SISYA J
A The current position is that corroboration is required as a matter of practice before a dying declaration can be acted upon as proof of the content therein - see R. v Ally [1971] HCD n 306; R.v Magiligita s/o Lumije, supra; and Republic v Joseph Ngaikwamo [1977] LRT n.6.
B In arguing out the case before me the learned State Attorney, Miss Chinguwile, submitted that corroboration of the deceased's dying declaration in this instance may be found from the fact that both accused remained silent when the deceased, before whom they had been brought, not only C mentioned but also pointed at them in his condemnation. In support of her argument Miss Chinguwile quoted the Ugandan case of Migezo Mibinga v Uganda [1965] E.A.

71. In that case the appellant was convicted of manslaughter and the only evidence implicating him, as is the position in D this instance, consisted of repeated statements made by the deceased to several persons soon after he was discovered lying injured that it was the appellant who had beaten him. What happened was that the appellant was brought to where the deceased was lying, the deceased pointing at the appellant had said ".... You are the person who has beaten me" and the appellant made no reply. E The learned trial judge who happened to be no lesser a person than the Chief Justice of Uganda himself, Sir Udo Udoma, considered with care the circumstances under which the statements were made and looked for corroboration which he found in the conduct of the appellant when the latter F remained mute after being accused by the deceased in the presence of others of having beaten him. The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa but his appeal was dismissed. The Court of Appeal held, inter alia, that "the probative force of a statement as to the cause of his death by a person since deceased is not enhanced by its being made in the presence of the accused unless G by his conduct, demeanor, etc., the accused has acknowledged its truth and consequently the trial judge should expressly state whether he is satisfied or not that there was such acknowledgement".

H In the present case I am satisfied, on the evidence adduced, that the deceased was in full control of his mental faculties when he made repeated statements that these accused persons were the ones who injured him, including the one which he made in the presence and within the hearing of the accused persons. As aforesaid the first accused swore that he querried the deceased. This is I diametrically opposed to what the Senior Primary Court Magistrate, Mr. Karekamu (PW4) said. One issue here is purely factual and it rests squarely on the question of credibility. Without any hesitation I choose to believe Mr. Karekamu on this point. A As a magistrate his duty in this case is purely to assist the Court in ascertaining the facts. In addition to this nothing has been suggested, let alone established, nor has any fact established itself to show why Mr. Karekamu should deliberately lie and seek to implicate these accused persons in this matter. Mr. Karekamu swore that neither accused made any reply when the deceased B condemned and pointed at them. I find this as a fact. By claiming that he actually did try to challenge the deceased the first accused, again, lied in open Court. The story, however, does not C end there. According to Mr. Karekamu himself the accused persons were not given an opportunity to question the deceased on their condemnation. It is common ground that the deceased was, at the material time, in a critical condition. Nevertheless, having seen the importance of testing the deceased's faculties Mr. Karekamu should also have perceived the importance D of giving the accused an opportunity of putting a few questions to the deceased. As afore intimated this he failed to do.

Mr. Karekamu, however, pointed out that both accused appeared "sorrowful and confused" when the deceased named them as his assailants. I have already found that Mr. Karekamu is an honest E and truthful witness. I am, therefore, prepared to act on his evidence without reservations. That being the case can it, positively, be gainsaid that the accused remained mute simply because of sorrow and confusion at being named and not necessarily as acknowledgement of the truth of the dying declaration? On my part, in all the circumstances of this case - particularly the fact that the F accused were not given an opportunity, albeit for a short time, to question the deceased - I entertain grave doubts as to whether or not by failing to make a reply these two accused persons acknowledged the truth of the dying declaration. The law demands that every doubt must be G resolved in favour of the accused. It is, therefore open to me to find, which I do, that the accused persons' failure to reply to the deceased's statement in the instant case was not or cannot be taken as acknowledgement of its truth. The case of Migezo Mibinga (supra) can thus be distinguished H from the instant one on this ground.

I have considered the accuseds' deliberate lies in open Court. Clearly they are a manifestation of the weakness of the defence case. The position in law is that a conviction should not be grounded on the weakness of the defence case. Can't the lies provide corroborative evidence of the dying I declaration in this case? I have

1984 TLR p105

SISYA J

A considered this question as conscientiously as I could and I have come to the conclusion that they may and they may not. I am satisfied that the accused could have chosen to lie out of sheer stupidity having realised that everyone who came forward stated having heard the deceased B mention these accused as his assailants. But though consistency of reiterated statements is undoubtedly some ground, generally speaking for thinking that the person who makes them believes in their truth, it is no guarantee of accuracy. This is a statement of law but most probably beyond the knowledge of these accused persons.

C In the instant case the dying declaration must be received by the Court with greatest caution. This is because the attack on the deceased was made in the night which according to Shabani (PW2) was a dark night. The circumstances in which the incident took place as described by the deceased D to his father, PW5, differed from what the supposed eye witnesses, i.e. PW2 and PW3, stated. Both PW2 and PW3 swore that there was a physical engagement between the first accused and the deceased on the material evening and that the latter emerged unscathed. If so then the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence of PW2 and PW3 is that the E attack in which the deceased was injured must have taken place in a subsequent incident and in their absence. There is absolutely no evidence whatsoever as to how the deceased managed to see and identify the first and second accused and that the incident did not take place in the same night and in darkness and in circumstances of confusion.

F Indeed, on the evidence of PW2 and PW3 and on the first accused's own statement in defence one may reasonably infer a motive on the part of the first accused to attack the deceased. The first accused was, admittedly, overwhelmed in the first encounter. At the same time the said first G encounter, per se, could also have acted, as a basis for the deceased's inference that the person who attacked him suddenly and in the dark that same night was the first accused. On the evidence on record it cannot be stated with moral certainty and to the exclusion of every reasonable doubt that the deceased could not have erred in so doing.

H Suffice to say that after considering the evidence which has been adduced in this case as carefully as I could I find that it will be dangerous to convict the accused persons. I find them not guilty and I acquit them of the offence charged. Unless they are being held for some other lawful I purposes it is hereby directed that both first and second accused be set at liberty forthwith.

Accuseds acquitted.

1984 TLR p106

A

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v CHARLES KIEGEZO 1984 TLR 106 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga

Judge Sisya J

August 20, 1986

CRIMINAL APPEAL 32 OF 1984

Flynote

Criminal Law - Theft - Discrepancy in accounts - Whether amounts to theft. B

Statutory Interpretation - Person employed in the public service -Person employed by a subsidiary of a parastatal organization - Whether falls within definition of "person employed in the public service", - Penal Code section 5. C

-Headnote

The appellant an employee of a subsidiary of a parastatal organization, was convicted of theft by a person employed in the public service. The evidence was entirely circumstantial in that he had failed to account for some discrepancy in his accounts. D

Held: (i) Mere discrepancy in the accounts per se does not constitute conclusive proof of theft;

(ii) where a person is charged with theft by a person employed in the public service, specific evidence must be led to show that he is employed in the public service instead of merely mentioning E the institution in which he is employed.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed F

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Sisya, J.: This appeal is by the Director of Public Prosecutions against the acquittal by the learned District Magistrate, Muheza, of the respondent, Charles Kiegezo, after his trial on a charge of theft G by a person employed in the public service. He, respondent, was alleged to have stolen cash shs.55,044/= property of his employer, the Ngomeni Kamba Factory.

It is common ground that the respondent was employed at Ngomeni Kamba Factory from 1/7/78 to 22/9/80 when he was dismissed from service. Although it is conceded, as indeed it must, that H therefore he was a servant of the said Ngomeni Kamba Factory the evidence, however, is dead silent as to why he was labelled in charge sheet as a public servant. The term a person employed in the public service is defined by the law, see Section 5 of the Penal Code. By reason thereof I am positive I that an employee of, say, Amboni

1984 TLR p107
SISYA J
A Plastics Factory does not qualify for that term. The point I am driving at is that evidence ought to have been adduced in this case by a competent witness to establish that the respondent was, throughout the relevant period, a person employed in the public service. For purposes of the instant B matter this is mere academic exercise but the learned Public Prosecutor who conducted this case should, however, take note for his future guidance.
Getting back to the facts of the case, it is likewise common ground that the respondent started as an assistant Accountant and from 24/11/78 to the date of his dismissal he became cashier. His duties as C cashier included receipt of all revenue or payments made to the factory and to effect payments for and on behalf of the factory. Every payment to the factory was to be acknowledged by issuance of an official receipt and every payment by the factory was to be effected on or evidenced by a D payment voucher duly authorised. It is alleged in the charge that the respondent stole the money between 24th day of November, 1978, and 27th day of January, 1979. The little that can be gathered from the evidence, however, tends to suggest that there were separate and distinct takings and on different dates from those shown in the charge sheet. In law, each distinct and separate taking or E fraudulent conversion constitutes an offence and each offence must be charged separately, which also means in separate counts albeit in the same charge sheet. In this instance by conglomerating all the supposed distinct takings in a single count the person who framed the charge erred. I do not F propose to say anything more on this point.
With these undisputed facts in the background one would have expected the person who checked the respondent's accounts and discovered the so-called loss to have had an easy task to perform in G so doing as well as in explaining the same to those concerned, including the Courts of law. The man who checked the respondent's accounts and discovered the alleged loss was one Yohana Mshami (PW2), who described himself as the Chief Accountant at Ngomeni Kamba Factory. Contrary to one's expectation Mshami's evidence in this case is not only confusing but it is, itself, H also confused. It is, by far, too much below the standard required of a man of his status. As Chief Accountant, and, more importantly, as the person, as aforesaid, who checked the accounts and discovered the alleged theft, he is a principal witness in the case. I will produce samples from his I text in order to demonstrate the type of his evidence. Fairly early in his evidence-in-chief Mshami is recorded to have said, and I quote from the record of proceedings:
1984 TLR p108
SISYA J
"On 24/11/78 he (i.e. respondent) was charged to become a cashier..... The accused continued with this work A to 27/1/79 ..... When the accused handed the cashier duties to the new cashier it was detected that there was shortage of cash, shs.45,941/25. Again we detected another loss in his cash book which all amounted to shs.55,044/20. Cash short was shs.45,941/25 as follows: B

On the handover on 24/11/78 the former cashier had a cash short of sh.19,279/75 which the accused inherited. This sum ought to be deducted from the actual loss attributed to the accused. Thus the C figure drops to shs.26,661/50 which was actual loss by the accused.

It is not known what Mshami did with the figure of shs.55,044/20 which he, earlier on, had said was the total amount of the sum lost. In his attempt to explain how the amount in the charge was arrived D at Mshami went on to say, and, again, I quote from the record of proceedings:

In December, 1978, the accused paid total cash shs.144,236/20 which had no supporting documents. At the E same time he entered revenue which had no supporting document which amounted to shs.114,406/70 the difference was shs.29,829/40. In January, 1981 the accused paid a total amount of shs.120,185/= and he F entered revenue of shs.95,829/55, difference was shs.34,355/45. There was also difference of shs.13,000/= in six days he worked from 24/11/78 - 30/11/78. In this period he paid total amount of shs.25,603/85, the revenue was shs.12,574/05, the difference was shs.13,029/80. G

It seems Mshami took the difference between the monthly income and the monthly expenditure as the amount 'stolen' by the respondent in that month. I must admit that I have failed to comprehend the rationale behind this. Anyhow, the total amount (i.e. shs.29,829/10 & shs.34,355/45 & H shs.13,029/30) is shs.77,214/65. He, i.e. Mshami, went on to say:

On checking, we detected that there were other payments effected without being recorded in the accused's I cash book. The amount paid by this way amounted to shs.21,208/95. Thus

A the whole difference outlined above minus this sum, the total cash paid unsupported is shs.56,006/60.

This is actually shs.77,214/65 minus shs.21,208/05. Mshami then added:-

B I cannot tell how the accused managed to count money (for) which he had issued no receipt.

C Likewise, it also beats my comprehension how Mshami verified his figures without any documents. One is, thus, left in doubt as to whether the figures said to be of expenditure and even those said to be of revenue are correct and proper. Of equal significance is the fact that at no time or stage in his evidence did Mshami, or any other witness for that matter, swear that he physically D checked the cash and confirmed or verified the alleged deficit. This creates a lacuna in the Prosecution case which is very fundamental in that it goes deep to the root of the Prosecution case.

This flaw also explains why Mshami was very erratic in his figure of the alleged stolen sum. At one E stage in his evidence-in-chief Mshami fixed the figure at shs.103,862/60, "which the Accused stole." He went on to tell the Court that later, however, it was found that some of the payments made by the respondent were 'genuine'. By using his somewhat dubious calculations and F deductions Mshami then eventually settles on shs.55,044/=. This includes three alleged payments of shs.10,994/50, shs.3000/= and shs.7,200/= as per Exhs. PI, P2 and P6 made to him. I, however, hasten to point out that there is not even a grain of evidence to show that the said payments were, in fact, made to him, i.e. respondent.

G In short all that can be said about this matter is that it was a wangle right from the word go. It is clear from the evidence of Mshami that the accounts of the Factory were already in a mess when the respondent was told to take over but, on the evidence and material available, the worst that can be said about the respondent is that he made the said accounts even more hay wire. Criminally, I find H no sufficient evidence on which to found and sustain a conviction.

In the final result this appeal fails and it is hereby dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

1984 TLR p110

A

[zRPz]INSPECTION NOTE 1984 TLR 110 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga

Judge Sisya J

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Jurisdiction - A magistrates' court entertains an offence of intentionally B endangering the safety of persons travelling by railway under section 224(5) of the Penal Code - Offence triable in the High Court - Whether error curable.

[zJDz]Judgment

Sisya, J.: made the following inspection note in the Resident Magistrates' Court of Tanga Criminal C Case Nos. 45 of 1984, Republic v Idd Ramadhani and Mdoe Mduma:

These two accused persons appeared on 28/10/83 before the Principal Resident Magistrate, Tanga, M.M. Luguru Esq., charged, jointly, with a single offence of intentionally endangering the safety of D persons travelling by railway, contrary to section 224(5) of the Penal Code. The offence is triable by the High Court see Section 4 and 5 of the Criminal Procedure Code and Part A of the first Schedule thereto. Mr. Luguru, however, did not only read over and explain the charge to the accused persons. He also asked them to plead thereto and both of them pleaded not guilty to the E charge. These latter steps were a nullity because the learned Principal Resident Magistrate acted without or in excess of his jurisdiction.

Be it as it may, thereafter followed a series of adjournments. The record passed through the hands of several other magistrates, one of whom was S.C. Byabusha Esq., Resident Magistrate. During his F turn Mr. Byabusha made the following endorsement in the file and I quote from the record of proceedings:

> Court: The offence is triable by the High Court. The accused are informed on the procedures and the G prosecutor is directed to initiate steps for a P.I.
>
> Charge is explained to the accused who are not asked to plead. H

As investigations were said to be incomplete there followed another spate of adjournments. Finally, the matter came up before Mr. Luguru again on 7.6.84 when the Public Prosecutor applied "to withdraw (the) charge under section 86(a) C.P.C." The learned Principal Resident Magistrate then made the following endorsement in the file that is to say: I

1984 TLR p111

SISYA J

A "Application granted as prayed, accused discharged under s.86(a) C.P.C."

Coincidentally, the Public Prosecutor who made the application is shown in the record to have been B the same as when the case was first brought before Mr. Luguru and pleas of the accused were taken and recorded.

Again this was an error because a public prosecutor can withdraw from the prosecution of any person under section 86 of the criminal Procedure Code only in cases which are triable by a C subordinate court, of which the instant one was not.

Two things emerge from this matter. The first is that both the learned Principal Resident Magistrate and the Public Prosecutor, a Inspector Exaud, who appeared before him on both occasions under D querry are oblivious of the provisions of section 4 and 5 of the Criminal Procedure Code and part A of the first schedule thereto. They are well advised to acquaint themselves with these provisions of the law.

The second point is that it is abundantly clear that Mr. Luguru, PRM., did not bother to read what E his learned brothers had endorsed in the same file when this same matter was pleaded before them. Had he done so he would almost certainly not have failed to see the endorsement by Mr. Byabusha which I have quoted supra and which demonstrates the proper way of how this matter ought to have F been handled. In this connection Magistrates are reminded that it is desirable to go through the record, particularly the one which has gone through several hands, and acquaint oneself with all the endorsements and/or orders therein before proceeding to the next step.

G For the benefit of the learned Principal Resident Magistrate and his Public Prosecutor the section stating that they ought to have withdrawn from the inquiry is s.222 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

As the accused persons were not prejudiced or embarrassed by these errors I make no orders in this matter. The record should, however, now be sent back to the court of the Resident Magistrate, H Tanga, for safe custody.

Order accordingly

1984 TLR p112

A

[zRPz]SHILLO MZEE v FATUMA AHMED 1984 TLR 112 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga

Judge Sisya J

July 2, 1986
MATRIMONIAL CIVIL APPEAL 1 OF 1984
Flynote
Family Law - Divorce - Petition for divorce filed without certificate from Marriage Conciliatory Board - B Whether irregularity curable - Law of Marriage Act 1971.
Family Law - Injunction - Conditions precedent to its grant under the Law of Marriage Act 1971, Section 138(1). C
-Headnote
The respondent filed a petition for divorce before a Magistrates' Court without a certificate from the Marriage Conciliation Board. Meanwhile, the magistrate issued an order of injunction restraining the appellant from disposing of the matrimonial assets pending the settlement of the dispute. D
Held: (i) In the absence of a certificate from a conciliatory board a petition for divorce becomes premature and incompetent;
(ii) an injunction under section 138(1) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 can only lie where a E matrimonial proceeding is pending before the court making the order.
Case Information
Appeal allowed. F
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
Sisya, J.: The respondent filed a petition in the Court of the Resident Magistrate, Tanga, against her husband, the appellant, for divorce. She also prayed for an injunction restraining her appellant G husband from disposing of, in any manner, a house which she contends is a matrimonial asset. The learned Resident Magistrate found that the petition had hastily been brought to Court without the prerequisite certificate from a Marriage Conciliatory Board. She then 'remitted the case to the H Conciliatory Board for settlement.' Meanwhile the learned trial lady Magistrate granted the application for an order of injunction 'pending the last decision of the dispute.' This appeal is from the decision of the learned trial Magistrate on these two points.
I agree with the learned trial Magistrate that in the absence of a certificate from a Conciliatory Board I and the case not falling under
1984 TLR p113
A any of the exceptions listed in Section 101(a) to (f) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971, the petition was prematurely filed and consequently, therefore, it was incompetent. Having come to that conclusion it was open to the learned trial Magistrate to dismiss the petition and not to, as it were, B leave the matter hanging in the air. So much for that.
Now, turning to the question of injunction, section 138(1) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971, is only applicable where a matrimonial proceeding is pending before the Court making the order. Having C declared that the petition was prematurely filed there was no longer any matrimonial proceeding pending before the Court. The Court was thus not competent to make the order of injunction.

Again, the appellant's complaint on this point is valid. The said order is quashed and set aside.
D In the final result this appeal succeeds and it is accordingly hereby allowed. I, however, make no order as to costs.
Appeal allowed.
1984 TLR p113
E
[zRPz]HEMEDI SAIDI v MOHAMEDI MBILU 1984 TLR 113 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

July 5, 1986
F (PC) CIVIL APPEAL 31(B) OF 1984
Flynote
Evidence - Credibility - District Court finds witnesses for both parties reliable and divided the disputed land amongst the parties - Whether proper.
G Civil Practice and Procedure - Failure of party to call material witnesses on his side - Whether adverse inferences can be drawn against such party.
Land Law - Abandoned shamba occupied and developed by another - Whether developer is trespasser.
-Headnote
H The appellant and respondent laid conflicting claims to a piece of land. At the conclusion of the dispute the trial court decided in favour of respondent. On appeal to a District Court, the decision of I the trial court was overturned and the land was divided equally among the claimants, the District Court ruling that both parties had strong claims.
1984 TLR p114
SISYA J
On further appeal to the High Court, the major issue was credibility of witnesses. A
Held:(i) According to law both parties to a suit cannot tie, but the person whose evidence is heavier than that of the other is the one who must win; B

(ii) in measuring the weight of evidence it is not the number of witnesses that counts most but the quality of the evidence;

(iii) where, for undisclosed reasons, a party fails to call a material witness on his side, the court is entitled to draw an inference that if the witnesses were called they would have given evidence C contrary to the party's interests.
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
No case referred to D
[zJDz]Judgment

Sisya, J.: The respondent brought an action in the Mlola Primary Court of Lushoto District seeking to recover from the appellant a piece of land upon which the latter had allegedly trespassed. Judgment was given against him. On appeal to the District Court the first appellate Court, in its E Solomonic decision, altered the decision of the Court of first instance and ordered that the piece of land in dispute be divided into two equal parts with each party being awarded a part thereof. Aggrieved by that decision the appellant has now appealed to this Court. The question for F consideration in this second appeal is whether the decision of the Court of first instance was justified and supported by the evidence. This is a point of law.

In support of his case before the Court of first instance the respondent, in addition to himself, called G two witnesses on his side. These were Rashidi Senkondo (PW2) and Saidi Bakari (PW3). These and the respondent swore that the latter bought the disputed piece of land from his grandfather, one Mmasa Tumbatu in 1971 for Shs.160/=. The said Mmasa Tumbatu was not called as a witness and he did not therefore, give evidence in the case. The respondent stated in his evidence that in 1982 H he left and went to Upare. It was during that period of his absence when the appellant trespassed upon his land.

In his defence at the hearing of the case by the Court of first instance the appellant stated that he bought the disputed piece of land from one Abed Musa in 1978. The said Abedi Musa (PW2) I

A gave evidence in the case and he confirmed what the appellant stated on this aspect of the case. The said transaction was reduced to writing and the relevant piece of paper was tendered and admitted in evidence at the hearing of the case. The said piece of paper shows that, in all, nine B persons witnessed the transaction and among them was the respondent: His name is the first on the relevant piece of paper.

Abedi Musa (DW2) swore that the disputed piece of land originally belonged to his father, one Musa Senkondo. He was the one who opened up the said piece of land for cultivation from virgin C land. In 1973 the said Musa Senkondo gave the piece of land to his son Abedi Musa. Later that same year, i.e. 1973, Musa Senkondo died. He, i.e. Abedi Musa, continued to cultivate the piece of land until 1978 when he sold the same to the appellant.

D Another witness, Musa Saidi (DW3), swore that he shares a common boundary with the piece of land in dispute. He told the Court that he has been occupying his piece of land since 1959. At that time the piece of land in dispute was being cultivated by father of the appellant, Musa Senkondo. When the said Musa Senkondo died he saw Abedi Musa and his wife cultivating the said piece of E land. In 1978 he noticed that he had a new neighbour on the disputed piece of land. He was the appellant. In September, 1978, the respondent passed the boundary and trespassed upon his, i.e. DW3's, piece of land. It was Abedi (DW2) who came and settled the boundary dispute.

F After the Court of first instance had heard all the evidence both parties made an application to the Court to visit the piece of land in dispute. A date was then duly fixed for that exercise. However, on the said date the respondent successfully moved the Court to abandon the visit because, according G to him, he had just realised that he had sued the wrong party. The proposed visit, if carried out, would thus amount to a waste of money and time. The Court of first instance then proceeded to pass judgment which it did in favour of this appellant. This decision was, as aforesaid, altered by the District Court where the respondent had resorted to by way of a first appeal.

H The learned District Magistrate found that there was to use his own expression, a tug of war over the disputed piece of land between the parties. If I understood him quite correctly, of course there was, and there still is. The learned District Magistrate then went on to observe that each party had I a good claim to the disputed piece of land. He then came forward with the Solomonic decision and halved the piece of land in question with a portion for each party. The only substantive reason raised by the appellant is that the learned District Magistrate acted against the A weight of the evidence.

According to law the person whose evidence is heavier than that of the other is the one who must win. In this instance each party called two witnesses in addition to himself at the hearing of the case in the Court of first instance. In measuring the weight of evidence in such cases as the present one B it is not, however, the number of witnesses whom a party calls on his side which matters. It is the quality of the said evidence. In this connection the evidence of a single witness may be a lot heavier than that of ten witnesses. It is to this issue of the weight of the evidence in this case that I now C turn.

Starting with the respondent's side, as aforesaid he, i.e the respondent, alleged that he bought the disputed piece of land from his grandfather, Mmasa Tumbatu. One would, naturally, have expected the respondent to call the said Mmasa Tumbatu to give evidence. He, however, did not do so nor D did he give any reason why the said Mmasa Tumbatu could not be called as a witness. Again, the respondent stated in his evidence that at one stage he lent the same piece of land in dispute to one Almasi Sebarua for cultivation purposes. The said Almasi Sebarua used it for one year and returned E it to the respondent. Like Mmasa Tumbatu, Almasi Sebarua was another material witness whom, for undisclosed reasons, the respondent failed to call as a witness on his side. In such cases the Courts are entitled in law to draw an inference that if these witnesses were called they would have given evidence contrary to the respondent's interests. The duty to call witnesses is not the Courts F but it is for the party who wants to be believed in his story and win the case. As aforesaid, two witnesses gave evidence on the respondent's side. They merely, so to say, sang the respondent's song that the disputed piece of land was given to the respondent by his grandfather in 1971. They G claim to have been present at the time and to have witnessed the handing over. They, however, did not explain their capacities in which they were, presumably, summoned to witness the transaction.

Now turning to the appellant, as aforesaid, he stated that he bought the piece of land in question H from a person who, himself, also gave evidence and confirmed the story. Not only that. The said person, Abedi Musa, told the Court of first instance how the same piece of land came into his possession. This story was supported in material particular by a person, Musa Saidi (D.W.3), I

1984 TLR p117
A who has been neighbour to the disputed piece of land since 1959, and he still is to date.
In his evidence the appellant expressed surprise why the respondent did not react immediately when B he, appellant, went into occupation in 1978. In fact it is even more surprising that he, respondent, chose not to do anything when the father of Abedi Musa occupied the piece of land in 1959 or when Abedi Musa himself occupied the same piece of land in 1973 and continued to do so for five solid years. In short, on my evaluation of the evidence I find that the evidence adduced by the appellant C was a lot weightier than that of the respondent. The decision of the Court of first instance was thus justified in law.
In the final result, this appeal has merit and it is hereby allowed. The judgment and orders of the District Court are quashed and set aside and the decision of the Primary Court, Mlola is restored. D The respondent is condemned in costs.
Appeal allowed.
1984 TLR p117
E
[zRPz]ALI RASHID SULEIMAN NASSOR LEMKI v HOTEL INTERNATIONALE LIMITED
1984 TLR 117 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mustafa JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

September 14, 1984
F CIVIL APPEAL NO. 15 of 1983
Flynote
Land law - Vacant possession - Whether lack of alternative accommodation is a bar to making an order of G vacant possession - S. 19(1) (e)(ii) of the Rent Restriction Act, 1963.
-Headnote
The appellant had filed an action in the court of the Resident Magistrate, Dar es Salaam seeking to recover vacant possession of the premises on Plot 942/157, Lindi Street, Dar es Salaam and mesne H profits from the respondent who was in occupation as a tenant. The appellant succeeded in the court of the Resident Magistrate. The decision of the Resident Magistrate was reversed on appeal by the High Court. This appeal is against the decision of the High Court.
I Held: In terms of section 19(1)(e) (ii) of the Rent Restriction Act, no order for possession can be made in the absence of alternative accommodation being available.
1984 TLR p118
MUSTAFA JA
Case Information
Appeal dismissed. A

No case referred to.
F.S. Mbuya for the appellant.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mustafa, J.A.: delivered the following judgment of the court: B
The appellant had filed an action in the Court of the Resident Magistrate Dar es Salaam seeking to recover vacant possession of the premises on Plot 942/157, Lindi Street, Dar es Salaam and mesne C profits from the respondent who was in occupation as a tenant. It is common ground that the respondent is a protected tenant under the Rent Restriction Act. The appellant succeeded in the court of the Resident Magistrate, but when an appeal was preferred in the High Court, the decision of the Resident Magistrate's Court was reversed. From the High Court decision the appellant is D appealing to this Court.
The appellant had inherited the premises in question from his father. The respondent had been a tenant of the premises in the time of the appellant's father, when the appellant was a minor. Rent was regularly paid by the respondent. In 1971 the suit premises were acquired by the Registrar of E Buildings under the Acquisition of Buildings Act and the respondent then paid its rent to the Registrar of Buildings. In October 1972, as a result of representations made by P.W.3 Rehma, the appellant's ex-wife, who stated that she was acting on behalf of the appellant, the Registrar of F Buildings "restored" the building in the name of P.W.3 Rehma, and directed that the rental thereof be for the benefit of the appellant and his children. The respondent thereafter paid rent to P.W.3 Rehma.
The appellant alleged that he needed the suit premises, which are commercial premises used in a G hotel business by the respondent, for himself as the appellant wanted to engage himself in the hotel business. The appellant had floated a private limited company, called the Havemore Hotels Company Limited with himself and his ex-wife as the only share holders. Each has one share of shs. 20/=; and the total paid up capital is shs. 40/=. The proposed hotel business would presumably be H run by the Havemore Hotels Company Limited.
In the trial court, the magistrate framed a number of issues and among them were:

(a) is alternative accommodation reasonably equivalent available or would it be available at the time the order takes effect: and I

A (b) would it be reasonable to make an order for possession.

In his judgment the magistrate stated that the issue of alternative accommodation "is the kernel of the entire dispute". However, in considering that issue he thought that it was necessary to consider B whether the refusal to grant vacant possession would cause greater hardship to the landlord or the tenant. And he thought that to decide that point it was necessary to deal with the two issues, alternative accommodation and reasonableness to make a possession order simultaneously. He C compared the respective financial positions and conditions of the parties and concluded that it was just, reasonable and equitable to grant vacant possession to the appellant. He was satisfied that no alternative accommodation was or would be available, but he seemed to suggest that the respondent, being a wealthy party, should have secured a plot and put up a building to serve as D alternative accommodation. In any event he in effect held that the absence of alternative accommodation was no bar to an order for possession being made.

On first appeal, that decision was reversed. The judge in brief, held that:
E (1) the appellant had no locus standi as the ownership of the suit premises was vested in the appellant's ex-wife P.W.3 Rehma.
(2) No order for possession could be made in the absence of alternative accommodation.
F (3) Since the suit premises were to be leased to HavemoreHotels Company Ltd., the appellant did not require the suit premises himself, and thus could not suffer hardship.
G Mr. Mbuya, before us, as he did before the first appellate judge, submitted that, in the circumstances of this case, the lack of alternative accommodation is no bar to the making of an order for possession. We are unable to agree. In terms of section 19(1)(e)(ii) of the Rent Restriction Act, no order for possession can be made in the absence of alternative accommodation being available. H This case comes squarely within those provisions, and clearly is not one for which an exception can be made. On this ground alone the appeal must fail.
We have heard attractive arguments from both learned counsel on the issues of locus standi and whether the appellant could be said to require the suit premises in the context of the part being I played by the Havemore Hotels Company Ltd. Since we have decided the appeal on the alternative accommodation ground, it is not strictly necessary for us to deal with those two interesting points. We will deal with them as and when the A need arises. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.
1984 TLR p120
B
[zRPz]GRACE FRANK NGOWI v DR. FANK ISRAEL NGOWI 1984 TLR 120 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Mustafa JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

August 14, 1984
CIVIL APPEAL NO. 9 OF 1984 C
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Failure to serve copy of application for record of appeal - Whether appeal time barred - Rule 83(2) of Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979. D
Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Effect of failure to serve notice of appeal and memorandum and record of appeal - Rules 77 & 90 of Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeals - Effect of omission of letters and exhibits produced at trial but not reflected in record of appeal - Rule 89(1)(c) & k of Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979. E

-Headnote

The respondent had made an application to strike out the appeal filed by the appellant on the ground that some essential step in the proceedings in the appeal has not been taken or has not been F taken within time, in terms of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979.

Held: An appeal would be struck out where no satisfactory explanation is given as to why the various rules of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979, were not complied with. G

Case Information

Application granted.

No case referred to H

P.M. Jonathan, for the appellant

F.B. Mahatane, for the respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

Mustafa, J.A.: delivered the following judgment of the court: Mr. Mahatane for the respondent has made an application to strike out the appeal filed by the appellant on the I

1984 TLR p121

MUSTAFA JA

A ground that some essential step in the proceedings in the appeal has not been taken or has not been taken within time, in terms of Rule 82 of the Court of Appeal Rules. Mr. Mahatane submitted 5 grounds in support of his application. He contended that the appeal is time barred in terms of Rule B 83 as the appellant was not entitled to exclude the time required for the preparation and delivery of the record from computation as the appellant had not sent a copy of the application for the record copy to the respondent in terms of Rule 83(2). Secondly, he submitted that up to now no notice of appeal has been served on his client, in contravention of Rule 77. Thirdly, the record of appeal was C not served by the appellant on the respondent. He stated that his client came to know of the appeal on 7th August, 1984, from friends and came to Court and obtained a court copy of the appeal record at the Arusha District Registry. The appellant's failure to serve the memorandum and record D of appeal offends Rule 90.

The fourth complaint by Mr. Mahatane refers to the absence of the payment of security for costs of the appeal in contravention of Rule 114.

E The fifth and final ground refers to the defective and insufficient record filed. There was an amended petition in the course of the trial, and such amended petition was not reflected in the record. There were a number of letters and exhibits produced at the trial and no copy of such exhibits was reflected in the record. This offends Rule 89(1)(c) and (k) and in the absence of such F documents it is not possible to properly determine the appeal.

In reply Mr. Jonathan for the appellant admitted all these allegations. As regards the failure to serve the notice of appeal and the memorandum and record of appeal, he stated that a Mr. Minja of the G Arusha District Registry had offered to serve the respondent, but had failed to do so. As regards the non-despatch of a copy of the application for a copy of the record to the respondent, he stated he had inadvertently omitted to do so. In any event, he submitted, as regards these three lapses on his part, no prejudice could have been caused to the respondent.

H In regard to the defective and insufficient records, he stated that he was supplied the said record by the District Registry. It was an oversight that the copies of the exhibits and the amended petition were not included in the record.

I As regards non-payment of the security for costs, he stated that he was doubtful if such was necessary, and stated that, if ordered by the court, such payment would be made.

1984 TLR p122

We are satisfied that Mr. Mahatane's grounds of complaint are valid. Mr. Jonathan has not given A any satisfactory explanation as to why the various rules of the Court of Appeal Rules were not complied with. In the circumstances we strike out the appeal. As this refers to a matrimonial matter, in the exercise of our discretion, we make no order as to costs. B

Application granted.

1984 TLR p122

C

[zRPz]ISSA WARSAMA v SALIM A. BHANJI 1984 TLR 122 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Mustafa JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

August 2, 1984

CIVIL APPEAL NO.7 OF 1984 D

Flynote

Land law - Leases - Whether commercial premises can be recovered by Landlord for residential purposes - S.19(1) (e)(ii) of Rent Restriction Act 1963, Cap.479. E

Land law - Leases - Whether the availability of alternative accommodation is immaterial upon an order for recovery of possession - S. 19(1)(e)(i) and (ii) and s. 19(2) of Rent Restriction Act, 1963 F

-Headnote

The appellant was a monthly tenant of premises owned by one Selemani Yasini in the Municipality of Dodoma. The appellant ran an eating house business in the premises since 1970. In 1981 the premises were sold and the right of occupancy was duly transferred to the respondent who subsequently converted them into residential premises. He gave three months' notice to the G appellant to vacate who refused to do so. The respondent sued the appellant in the Resident Magistrate's Court, Dodoma for eviction and was successful. The appellant appealed from that judgment to the High Court, but was unsuccessful hence the present appeal. H

Held: (i) The judge was right in coming to the conclusion that a landlord may enter into occupation of premises under section 19(1) (e) (ii) intending, as part of his enjoyment thereof to make alterations with a view to change of user; I

(ii) on a proper construction of sections 19(1)(e)(i) and (ii) and

1984 TLR p123

MUSTAFA JA

A 19(2) we do not think that alternative accommodation is immaterial if an order for possession is made.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

B No case referred to.

S. Elmaamry, for the appellant

[zJDz]Judgment

C Mustafa, J.A.: delivered the following judgment of the court: The appellant was a monthly tenant of premises on Plot 2, Block A, Mwangaza Avenue, in the Municipality of Dodoma. The premises were owned by one Selemani Yasin. The appellant ran an eating house business in the premises, since 1970. In February 1981 Yasin sold the premises to the respondent Bhanji and the right of D occupancy was duly transferred to and registered in the name of the respondent. The respondent knew of the tenancy in favour of the appellant.

The respondent had purchased the premises intending to use them for personal occupation, and E proceeded to take steps to obtain, and eventually did obtain, permission to convert them into residential premises. He gave three months' notice to the appellant to vacate. The appellant refused to do so.

In July 1981 the respondent sued the appellant in the Resident Magistrate's Court, Dodoma, for F eviction and was successful. The appellant appealed from that judgment to the High Court, but was unsuccessful; and he is now appealing to this Court.

It is common ground that the appellant became a statutory tenant after the expiration of the notice to quit served on him. The appellant could only be evicted under the provisions of the rent Restriction G Act, 1963, Cap. 479.

Briefly, the Resident Magistrate found that the respondent genuinely required the premises for his own occupation, and was intending to change the user of the premises from business to residential H purposes. He also found that the appellant had interests in two other eating houses in Dodoma, and he thought that the appellant could "amalgamate" his eating house business in the suit premises with those two other eating houses. It would seem that he was of the view that could constitute reasonable alternative accommodation. He concluded that it was reasonable to grant an I order for possession in terms of section 19(1)(e)(ii) of the Rent Restriction Act.

1984 TLR p124

MUSTAFA JA

On first appeal the judge (Lugakingira, J.) upheld the Resident Magistrate's decision. He dealt with A the two substantial grounds of appeal before him. They were:

(a) that the magistrate had erred in holding there was available reasonable alternative accommodation; B

(b) that the magistrate erred in holding that the respondent reasonably required the premises for residential purposes when the suit premises were for commercial purposes. C

The judge found as regards (b) above that there was nothing which restricts a landlord to use commercial premises only for commercial purposes upon regaining possession, and that "there is nothing unusual about commercial premises being converted into residential premises provided the necessary consents are obtained". He was satisfied that the respondent reasonably required the D premises.

As regards (a) above concerning the availability of reasonably equivalent alternative accommodation he held, on his reading of the provisions of section 19(2) and 19(1)(e)(ii) of the Rent E Restriction Act, on the issue of "reasonableness" and "hardship", that a court may order recovery of possession whether alternative accommodation is or is not immediately available.

In arguing the appeal before us Mr. Elmaamry for the appellant relied on two main grounds: F

1. that the judge erred in holding that the suit premises which are admittedly commercial were reasonably required by the landlord when he requires the same for residential purposes;

2. that the judge erred in holding that in ordering recovery of possession it is immaterial whether G alternative accommodation is available or not.

We will have to look at the sections of the Rent Restriction Act referred to: H

19. - (1) No order or judgment for recovery of possession of any premises to which this Act applies, or for the ejectment of a tenant therefrom, shall be made or given unless -

(a) ...

(b) ...

(d)... I

A (e) (i)in the case of a dwelling house, it is reasonably required by the landlord for occupation as a residence for himself or for his wife or children, or for any person bona fide residing, or to reside with him, or for B some person in his whole time employment or in the whole time employment of some tenant from him or for the occupation of the person who is entitled to the enjoyment of such dwelling house under a will or settlement and (except as otherwise provided by this section) the court is satisfied that alternative accommodation, reasonably equivalent, is available or will be available at the time that the order takes effect, C or that the tenant has built or owns a dwelling house suitable for his own accommodation which is available to him or would be so available but for his own act in disposing of the same, or

D (ii) in the case of commercial premises, they are reasonably required by the landlord and (except as otherwise provided by this section) the court is satisfied that alternative accommodation, reasonably equivalent, is available or will be available at the time that the order takes effect or that the tenant has built or E owns commercial premises suitable for his own accommodation which are available to him or would be so available but for his own act in disposing of the same;

F Provided that if within three months next after the date upon which the landlord obtains under the provisions of this paragraph vacant possession of such dwelling house or commercial premises he does not effectively occupy the same he shall give to the tenant who under the provisions of this paragraph was required to give up possession of such house or premises the first option to lease G and take possession of the said house or premises. If any landlord fails to give such possession he shall be guilty of an offence and shall be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding two thousand shillings or to a term of imprisonment not exceeding six months or to both such fine and such imprisonment;

H 19. - (2) In any case arising under subsection (1), no order for the recovery of possession of premises shall be made unless the court is satisfied by or on behalf of the landlord that having regard to all the circumstances I of the case it is reasonable to make such an order and, where the order is sought on any of the grounds specified in paragraphs (c), (e), (h) and (l), that unless such an order is made great hardship will be caused to the landlord. A

It will be seen in section 19(1)(e)(i) that reference is made to a dwelling house reasonably required by the landlord for occupation as a residence etc.; whereas in section 19(1)(e)(ii) that reference is made B to commercial premises which are reasonably required by the landlord, without restriction as to use. For the reasons which the judge gave we think that he was right in coming to the conclusion that C a landlord may enter into occupation of premises under (section 19(1)(e)(ii) intending, as part of his enjoyment thereof to make alternations to the existing buildings or put up a wholly new building which he then proceeds to occupy. His occupation would be no less effective if it involved a change of user ... D

We reject this ground of appeal.

As regards the other ground of appeal, we think that it has merit. On this point we think that the judge erred. On a proper construction of sections 19(1)(e)(i) and (ii) and 19(2), we do not think that E alternative accommodation is immaterial if an order for possession is made. We think that no order for recovery should be made in this case unless-

(a) the premises were reasonably required by the landlord and F

(b) the court is satisfied that reasonable alternative occupation is or will be available (in accordance with section 19(1)(e)(ii)

(c) and the court is satisfied by or on behalf of the landlord that having regard to all the circumstances of the case it is reasonable to make the order and G

(d) that unless such an order is made great hardship will be caused to the landlord (in accordance with section 19(2)).

Indeed in our view the provisions of section 19(2) add a further burden to a landlord's recovery of H possession; we cannot agree with the judge that the provisions of section 19(2) obviate the need of finding alternative accommodation in this case. That is not strange, as rent restriction legislation is normally designed to protect tenants.

The question we have to decide is whether there was alternative accommodation here. Both the I courts below have held that the
1984 TLR p127
A premises were reasonably required by the landlord, that in all the circumstances it was reasonable to make the order, and that great hardship would be caused to the landlord unless such an order was made. We accept those concurrent findings.
B The trial magistrate had in effect held that the appellant had reasonable alternative accommodation in his other two eating house premises. The question is whether he was right in doing so.
We think that each case has to be decided on its own facts, and the alternative accommodation issue is basically a factual issue. Here the trial magistrate had viewed the suit premises, and he C concluded that the appellant could "amalgamate" his eating house business in the suit premises with the other eating house premises, Sabasaba and Arusha Hotels, in which the appellant has interests and shares and which he manages. That would, in the trial magistrate's words, accord D "within the spirit of socialism". The appellant is a resident of Dodoma for many years, whereas the respondent is a new-comer and in desperate need of accommodation. The business at the suit premises was closed at the time of the trial, and had been so closed for the previous 6 or 7 months.
The trial magistrate considered all these factors and concluded that the appellant had reasonable E alternative accommodation. There were some irrelevant factors taken into account by the trial magistrate, but there, nevertheless, was material for him to have come to his conclusion. In the peculiar circumstances of this case, we do not think we should interfere with that finding.
F In the result the appeal fails, and we dismiss it with costs.
Appeal dismissed.
1984 TLR p127
G
[zRPz]SANDHU CONSTRUCTION COMPANY LIMITED v PETER E.M. SHAYO 1984 TLR 127 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Mustafa JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

August 13, 1984
H CIVIL APPEAL NO. 14 OF 1984
Flynote
Tort - Nuisance - Standard to be applied in determining degree of interference by nuisance to comfort or I convenience - Test of average man - Character of neighbourhood.
1984 TLR p128
MUSTAFA JA

Tort - Nuisance - When nuisance is actionable - Test of tolerance and acceptability of discomfort and A inconvenience.

-Headnote

The respondent had sued the appellant in private nuisance and prayed for an injunction to restrain the appellant from continuing the nuisance and for general damages. The respondent had alleged B that his enjoyment of his house situated at Elerai village in the Arusha Municipality was seriously interfered with by the excessive noise, vibrations and obnoxious dust emanating from a stone crusher operated by the appellant situated 30 metres from his house. The respondent himself had a C maize mill operating within the compound of his house. The respondent was successful in the High Court and it is against that decision that the appellant is appealing.

Held: (i) In considering the standard of comfort or convenience of living of the average man, the character of the neighbourhood must be taken into account; an average man's standard of comfort D and convenience involves the toleration of acts done by his neighbour in the course of ordinary and reasonable use of his property;

(ii) a nuisance to be actionable must be such as to be a real interference with the comfort or E convenience of living according to the standard of the average man; discomforts caused are not actionable if they fail to qualify as intolerable or unacceptable; the discomforts must cause suffering to the party complaining. F

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No case referred to

C.M. Ngalo for the appellant

P.M. Jonathan for the respondent. G

[zJDz]Judgment

Mustafa, J.A. delivered the following judgment of the court: The respondent had sued the appellant (hereafter called Saccon) in private nuisance and prayed for an injunction to restrain Saccon from continuing the nuisance and for general damages. The respondent had alleged that his enjoyment H of his house situated at Elerai village in the Arusha municipality was seriously interfered with by the excessive noise, vibrations and obnoxious dust emanating rom a stone crusher operated by Saccon situated 30- metres from his house. The respondent himself has a maize mill operating within the I compound of his house.

1984 TLR p129

MUSTAFA JA

A The respondent succeeded in the High Court (Mwakibete, J.). He obtained an order restraining Saccon from continuing the stone crushing activities and shs. 25,000/= as general damages. From that decision Saccon has appealed.

B Elerai, according to a witness called by the trial judge, Land Officer Wiboga, is used both for residential and service industrial purposes. It is an unsurveyed area. Stone crushers are licensed to operate in Elerai. In fact, apart from the one operated by Saccon, there are three other stone crushers in Elerai.

C To establish his case, the respondent has to show that the interference with his enjoyment of his house and the inconvenience and injury caused him are real and sufficiently serious to constitute an actionable nuisance. In considering the standard of comfort or convenience of living of the average man, the character of the neighbourhood must be taken into account. An average man's standard of D comfort and convenience involves the toleration of acts done by his neighbour in the course of the ordinary and reasonable use of his property.

There can be no absolute standard to be applied; it is always a question of degree whether the E interference with comfort or convenience is serious enough to constitute an actionable nuisance in the circumstances of the case. A nuisance to be actionable must be such as to be a real interference with the comfort or convenience of living according to the standard of the average man. F Discomforts caused are not actionable if they fail to qualify as intolerable or unacceptable. The discomforts must cause suffering to the party complaining.

We will now deal with the facts as adduced in evidence at the trial. The respondent had alleged in his plaint that Saccon's stone crusher had been "causing considerable amount of noise, vibrations G and obnoxious dust to be blown on the plaintiff's residential house impregnating and polluting the air in and about the same", and that he and his family members have been "rendered unhappy and uncomfortable, and suffered great discomfort, inconvenience, disturbance and upset". The H respondent has therefore complained of noise, vibrations and obnoxious dust, and he must establish that one or all of those intangible invasions of his house had reached unacceptable or intolerable levels taking into account the local and environmental circumstances.

I In answer to the respondent's complaint, a team of experts comprised of D.W.3 Dr. Moshi, the Regional Medical Officer, Mr Lyimo the Regional Health Officer, Mr. Msei the Arusha Town

Health Officer and Dr. Bobe of the Occupational Health Services, visited the site and took readings A of sound levels. It was found that the stone crusher in normal full operation reaches 74 decibels, the same level as that reached by the grain mill of the respondent when in operation. When rock was being unloaded into the crusher, the level reached was 50 decibels. Ambient noise in an office B with tabulation machines would be 70 - 80 decibels. The team was of the opinion that the noise levels of the crusher are not unacceptable. The trial judge accepted that finding.

The team could not give an opinion concerning the volume of dust generated, as on their visit, no dust was generated by the working of the crusher because the atmosphere was damp. C

Mr. Jonathan, for the respondent, complained that the team did not take readings of noise levels when the stone crusher and the grain mill were working simultaneously. Dr. Moshi conceded that he overlooked this, but testified that there is a tendency of sound waves to engulf each other, the one D with high frequency tending to engulf the one with low frequency. The sound level of the two working simultaneously would presumably be higher, and could be irritating, depending on where one is positioned.

We are satisfied that as far as the noise factor is concerned the respondent has not established that E it was of an unacceptable level so as to constitute an actionable nuisance. The trial judge erred in finding, on pure speculation, that if the stone crusher and the grain mill were operating simultaneously, the sound level would have become intolerable. There was no such evidence, and F in any event, the respondent's complaint was about the sound level of the stone crusher.
We come to the other factor, that of vibrations. In his evidence, the respondent stated inter alia: G

"There are vibrations - including dust which is the more serious of the two. The dust comes directly onto my flour mill and my house".

That is the extent of his evidence concerning vibration. In any event the trial judge made no finding H on this aspect of the case, and we can find no cogent evidence concerning the volume or intensity of vibrations caused by the crusher so as to determine whether it reached intolerable limits.
As regards dust, a number of witnesses testified that dust was emitted from the stone crusher. I However, again no evidence was

A adduced as to the volume of dust emitted. It is not known whether the dust from the stone crusher is much more than that emitted from the grain mill, though probably the volume from the former would be greater. But we do not know whether it was so great as to be unacceptable. The B trial judge found that the stone crusher emitted dust, but he did not find whether the level emitted was intolerable. Indeed Mr. Jonathan in his address at the trial is alleged to have stated:-

C SHUMA crusher wrongly sited - too - a nuisance to those living in the neighbourhood including plaintiff. Thus SACCON additional nuisance.

That would seem to indicate that the respondent was complaining of dust from both the Saccon and D Shuma stone crushers, although the latter was situated 700 metres away while the former was only 30 metres.
There was an allegation that stone dust could bring about bronchitis, pneumocomiasis, and silicosis. However, expert evidence adduced indicated that dust does not cause bronchitis, but only acts as a E catalyst, whether it is stone dust or any other dust. Dust aggravates the inflammatory process. Dust which causes pneumocomiasis is dust which contains silicates and pneumocomiasis could be caused if iron oxide is isolated from dust. It seems no cases of pneumocomiasis or silicosis has ever F been recorded in Tanzania.
The trial judge would appear to have accepted this expert opinion. Then he proceeded as follows:

G ... I do not think I need call upon the plaintiff to produce evidence that Arusha stone dust contains silica or iron oxide. Nor do I think it prudent to demand evidence from the plaintiff to satisfy me that the process of stone crushing does produce silica and or iron oxide. As long as there is no dispute as to stone dust, with or H without silica or iron oxide, being a potential stone dust health hazard, and the other two diseases too being associated with stone dust - I feel it sufficiently established that stone dust - including Arusha stone dust is a potential hazard ... In my view to be able to hold otherwise there must be clear evidence to suggest that the I stone dust has been tested but the tests have revealed no traces of silica or iron oxide. No such evidence was brought before the court. There was no evidence to suggest that the process of stone crushing is incapable of producing silica or iron oxide ...". A

It seems that the trial judge has cast the onus on Saccon as defendant to establish that stone dust does not contain silica or iron oxide. The correct approach of course was for the respondent as B plaintiff to establish that the stone dust emitted by the stone crusher contained such ingredients. The trial judge seriously misdirected himself. Mr. Jonathan, rightly in our view, does not feel able to support the trial judge on this matter.

We readily agree that the stone dust must have caused the respondent inconvenience and C discomfort. But the respondent has decided to live in an area in which stone crushers operate. There was evidence that stone crushers have been in existence in that area since 1951. Shuma stone crusher was allegedly situated only 15 metres from some residential houses. By living in Elerai the D respondent must be presumed to have agreed to tolerate acts of his neighbours in carrying out their normal and reasonable activities. As far as we can see, Saccon was carrying out its normal activities in operating its stone crusher, and the respondent, in the circumstances, must suffer the resulting discomfort from the stone crusher. If however there was evidence that the noise, hazards to health E or dust volume had reached intolerable or unacceptable levels, then such invasions would constitute an actionable nuisance. But in this case no sufficient evidence has been forthcoming. What the respondent has suffered would seem to be the usual and normal incidents attached to F living in Elerai under present conditions. If the character of the area changes, perhaps dust emitted from a stone crusher would be an actionable nuisance. But in Elerai, it seems that the time is not yet.

Mr. Ngalo for Saccon has also attacked the award of general damages. In the view we take of the G appeal, it is not necessary for us to deal with that matter.

We allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the High Court, and substitute therefor an order dismissing the claim. We award costs to the appellant Saccon both here and below. H

Appeal allowed. I

[zRPz]ABDULRAHMAN SALIM MSANGI v MUNIRA MARGARET 1984 TLR 133 (HC)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Nyalali CJ, Mustafa JJA and Kisanga JJA

January 17, 1983

B H.C. APPEAL NO. 37 OF 1983

Flynote

C Family Law - Dissolution of Islamic marriage - Issue of custody of children upon dissolution of marriage under Islamic law.

-Headnote

The appellant and respondent were married in 1975 according to Moslem rites and their marriage was dissolved in 1982 by Islamic 'talaks' effected by the appellant upon the respondent. The respondent was granted the custody of two children of the marriage aged two and five by the Kadhi's court in Zanzibar. The appellant now objects to the grant of custody of children to the respondent.

D Held: According to Islamic law infants who have not yet attained the age of some understanding, which is usually taken to be seven, are left in the custody of their mothers provided they satisfy the following seven conditions.

E (a) the mother must be of sound mind;
(b) she is a free woman, not a slave;
(c) she should have a religion (Islam);
(d) she should have the ability to bring up children;
(e) she should be faithful;
F (f) she has to be single, and lastly
(g) she must have a domicile.

Case Information

Order accordingly.

G Cases referred to:

1. Kassam Ladha v Khatija binti Abdallah Shariff, 1 Z.L.R 98.
2. Kassim bin Mohammed Barwani v Awadh bin Salim bin Awadh 8 Z.L.R. 24.
3. Suleiman Ali Doongersi v Sherrobinti Kanji 1 Z.L.R. 251.

H 4. Fakir Adam v Suleiman Athuman Swahili and (2) Mama Assora 1 Z.L.R. 282.
5. Saleh Mohamed Sachoo v Jenabai binti Dhala Versi 4 Z.L.R. 67.

I 6. Mohamedali Issaji Bohora v Bachuli binti Karimjee H.C. Civ Appeal No. 16 of 1938.

1984 TLR p134

MUSTAFA JA

7. Salem bin Yeslum v Nuru binti Ahmed & Another 3 Z.L.R. 49. A
8. Salum v Asumini [1969] E.A. 255.

[zJDz]Judgment

Ramadhani, C.J.: The appellant, Abdulrahman, and the respondent, Munira were man and wife who are now divorced. They were married since 1975 and on 30th October, 1982 the appellant wrote out B three talaks divorcing the respondent. Official divorce was prepared some time later. I did not have the opportunity to see that one but it was not necessary for the purpose of this judgment. From the pleadings in the Kadhi's Court it is evident that the appellant was granted the custody of C their two children under the arrangement of the official divorce. These two children are Kheri aged five and Mustafa aged two. Both are boys.

The respondent, Munira, filed a suit before the Kadhi, Sh. Ameir Tajo, Civil Case No. 141/82. She made three claims: first, that she be granted the custody of the two children as they are infants still; D second, that she be paid the sum of Shs. 450/= per month for the period of her iddat, and that she be given accommodation for the duration of her iddat. Shk. Ameir Tajo decided the first and the third issue in favour of the plaintiff, Munira (now the respondent). The Kadhi decided the second E issue against her on the ground that as she has been given three talaks she is not entitled to maintenance.

The appellant now objects to the grant of custody of the children to the respondent. The appellant has said nothing regarding the maintenance of the children if the custody is granted to the F respondent. Likewise, the appellant has not objected to the order of providing accommodation to the respondent. On the other hand the respondent has not objected to the order of not giving her any maintenance during her iddat. Thus the appeal is solely on the issue of custody of children only. G

In entertaining this appeal I invited two Sheikhs to advise me. These are Shk. Mussa Makungi, the Principal of the Islamic School, and Shk. Hamdani Muhiddin. I asked both parties and none objected to either of the two Sheikhs as assessors. They are my advisors. Therefore I did not require them to H give their opinion in the open court. They did so in private. There has been a long practice in this High Court to obtain such advice in appeals of cases involving Islamic Law. In the case of Kassam Ladha v Khatija bint Abdalla Sheriff Z.L.R. 98 Cracknall J. said: I

A ... in recent conversation with a leading local Kadhi he expressed the view that ...

Similarly Sir John Gray, C.J. in Kassim bin Mohammed Barwani v Awadh bin Salim bin Awadh 8 Z.L.R. 24 at page 27 said:

B I have had the advantage of being able to consult the learned Senior Kathi, Seyyid Omar bin Ahmed bin Sumeit of the Shafei School on this matter and he is of the opinion that ...

C There are a number of cases before my predecessors where similar consultation took place. Therefore I do not think that I have erred in getting their opinion. In fact I feel that it has been just as well that I have obtained the opinion from people who are not objected to by the parties and after D the Sheikhs themselves have heard the whole appeal. However, even if I have erred in not treating the two Sheikhs as assessors, which I think I have not, still this judgment is not based on their advice only but on several authorities of this Court on matters of custody.

E The appellant has given nine grounds of appeal. First, that the respondent was a Christian but converted to Islam upon marriage, hence there is a likelihood that she might re-embrace her Christian faith again and as such she cannot properly bring up the two boys according to Islamic rites. Second, that the appellant has a long experience of bringing-up children as his first wife died leaving F him with six children. Thirdly, that if the appellant is granted custody the two boys will be in the company of those other six children. Fourth, that the respondent is not good in upbringing of children. He has given several reasons to prove this allegation. First, the appellant said that the G respondent was entrusting the care of the infants to a paid nurse during working hours and even after office hours she would go on her own ways. The appellant when he had returned from Ethiopia found Kheri in an unsatisfactory condition. Secondly the respondent has drinking habits and that H she had even requested to be sent a bottle of brandy when the appellant was in Ethiopia. Thirdly, the respondent has been interfering when the appellant was helping Kheri in reading. Fourthly, before the divorce the respondent had said that she will do all possible to make the two boys hate the appellant. Fifthly, the respondent works in the hospital and she is at times on night duties hence I she cannot give proper care to the children in those circumstances. Sixth, that the respondent has already been transferred to Dar es Salaam hence she would be taking the children away from the jurisdiction of this Court. Seventh, that it is not true that the A respondent was paying school fees for Kheri at the rate of Shs. 60/= per month because the appellant used to send to her up to Shs. 3,000/= per month while he was in Ethiopia. Eight, that the appellant's going to Ethiopia was due to the call of duty and not because he had failed to look after the children. Lastly, for all the period in which the respondent had custody of the children he has B not been able to see them. Various excuses have been put-up to prevent him access to the children.

The respondent has said as follows: First, as to religion the respondent has said that the appellant himself does not impart any religious instructions or life style to the children. The appellant does C not look after the religious upbringing even of the other older children. For example, he does not send them to religious schools. The respondent said that she was herself undergoing religious instruction. The respondent also pointed out the ways in which her own divorce was against the D Islamic Law as evidence of the appellant's religious indifference. However, these are not relevant to the issue before me and hence I do not deem it necessary to recount them. The respondent has, therefore, asked that religion is a non-issue. Second, regarding the issue of up-bringing of the E children, the respondent has said that she also has a long experience. She said that barely three years after the death of the first wife of the appellant she (the respondent) got married to the appellant. So she has helped him bring up the children for eight years. Apart from the care of the children of the appellant by his first marriage and her own two children, the respondent had taken F care of her own young brothers and sisters before she married. The respondent has objected to the claim that these two children will be in the company of their half-sisters. The respondent has said that only two of the half-sisters are currently at home and then they will soon get married and in any G case plans are under way to sent them to the mainland for schooling. But apart from that, the respondent has submitted that, the half-sisters can never have a better right to the children than she, the natural mother. The respondent has added that the circumstances at the appellant's home are not good and pitiful. However, she did not want to elaborate lest to embarrass the appellant. Then H the respondent has said that if she was incapable of looking after children properly it is obvious that the appellant would not have entrusted her with that when he left for two years in Ethiopia, when he left her not only with these two boys whose custody is in dispute but also with his own I daughters. At the time the appellant left for Ethiopia

1984 TLR p137
MUSTAFA JA
A they had been married for six years, hence the appellant knew the ability of the respondent in taking care of the children. As for the drinking habits the respondent has put the appellant to strict proof of the allegation. The respondent has admitted that during working hours the children are B under the care of a paid nurse. But after office hours she is at home with the children and the nurse goes home. The nurse was not residing within the premises. Only for six months did they have a nurse who resided with them in the house and at that time the respondent was receiving tailoring instructions. The respondent did this after the appellant had given his consent. The respondent C showed a letter from the appellant while he was in Ethiopia as proof of this. After the instructions in tailoring the respondent attended cookery classes. Thus the respondent has denied the allegations that after office hours she went her own ways. All that the respondent did was to allow Kheri to go D to play with the children of the neighbours just like other children. The respondent also admitted that she works in the hospital but added that since 1978 she has never been on a night duty. But besides that when the appellant married he knew of these facts and therefore the question of night E duties is not new. She added that many mothers who are employed with the armed forces, for instance, have night duties. The important thing, she said, was to have a reliable person to be with the children at night when, as a matter of fact, they do not need any care as they are fast asleep. In the day time the mother returns home and she is able to be with the children at the time when they F really need care. As for the sixth ground the respondent has admitted that she has been transferred to Dar es Salaam. However she had pointed out that Tanzania is one country and that the Court orders of one part of the Republic can be executed in the other part. Moreover, both the respondent G and the appellant are not domiciled in Zanzibar. The appellant came because of employment and the respondent followed her husband. A day will come when the appellant will have to return to the Mainland too. In addition the marriage was celebrated on the Mainland while the divorce was H granted in Zanzibar. Likewise the Zanzibar Court may grant her custody of the children while she will stay with them on the Mainland. The respondent has refuted the allegation that she was paying school fees for Kheri out of the Shs.3,000/= that was sent by the appellant. She agreed that amount was being sent but with special instructions as to its use. She added that even after the appellant I returned from Ethiopia she continued paying the fees. The respondent also said that she was the one who was paying the wages of their servant
1984 TLR p138
MUSTAFA JA
which was Shs.350/= per month. Lastly on the question of access the respondent has claimed that A the appellant himself causes uncalled for misunderstanding. Once the appellant wanted the children on a Sunday. The respondent suggested Monday since Sundays are the only days she can be at home with the children the whole day. The appellant became angry at the suggestion and left. The other time the appellant went to fetch the children when they were asleep. The respondent B hesitated to wake them up as that would only make them troublesome. So she suggested to the appellant that he go into the house and wait for them to wake up or else he could return for them afterwards. The appellant rejected both suggestions and instead waited outside. Within a very C short time of waiting he got fed-up and left. The respondent added that whether she likes it or not the appellant is the father of the children and there is no way in which she could deny him access to them.

Sheikh Hamdani asked the appellant what signs makes him think that the respondent will re-embrace D the Christian faith. The appellant replied that the respondent since after marriage did not make any efforts to study Islam and added that the respondent actually converted not because of conviction but for convenience so as to marry. Shk. Hamdani wanted to know what steps the E appellant took to give instruction to the respondent on Islam. The appellant replied that he bought some Islamic books for her to read and made her observe the fast in the Holy Month of Ramadhani.

The respondent also was questioned by Shk. Hamdani whether she knew of the conditions of giving custody to a mother. The respondent replied that she was aware that there were such F conditions but was not aware of what they were. Shk. Makungu wanted the respondent to elucidate on her statement that the appellant would one day go back to the Mainland. The respondent said that both she and the appellant belong to the Pare tribe from Kilimanjaro Region. The only G difference is that they come from different districts: the respondent hails from Same while the appellant comes from Usangi but otherwise they speak the same language. She added that the appellant came to Zanzibar because of employment only. H

The Sheikhs gave me their opinion in private, as I have already said. They said that according to Islamic Law infants who have not yet attained the age of some understanding, which is usually taken to be seven, are left in the custody of their mothers provided they satisfy the following seven conditions. First, the mother must be of sound mind. Second, she is to be a free woman, not a slave. I Third,

A she should have a religion (Islam). Fourth, she should have the ability to bring-up children. Fifth, she should be faithful. Sixth, she has to be single and lastly, she must have a domicile.

Both Sheikhs are in agreement that there are problems with only three of the conditions: religion, B marital status and residence. As for religion the Sheikhs were of the same opinion that it is irrelevant for the time being until such time as the respondent reverts to Christianity. Shk. Mussa Makungu added that there are mere suspicions that she will revert but no reasons were given to support them. C Shk. Hamdani added that lack of knowledge of Islam on the part of the respondent is due to the fault of the appellant who took no pains to instruct her on the same. Moreover, the respondent herself has stated that she is now undergoing religious instruction.

The Sheikhs are agreed that should the respondent re-marry her right of custody will cease and it D will be granted to the appellant. Finally the Sheikhs were agreed again on the issue of domicile. Both the appellant and the respondents are domiciled on the Mainland. They are in Zanzibar just for a while.

The opinion of Shk. Hamdani and Shk. Mussa is that the custody be given to the respondent until E each child attains the age of seven when the preference of each child will be taken as to with whom he will stay. However, the right to custody will cease if the respondent renounces Islam or if she re-marries.

As I have said previously I had asked the Sheikhs for their opinion. However, the decision is on the F Court. I have, therefore, to look into the facts of the matter and the law applicable.

The issue before me is: who between the appellant and the respondent be given the custody of the two boys aged 5 and 2 now that the parties are divorced. I have first of all to determine what is the Islamic Law as applied by this Court in such cases as this.

G The first case I have managed to obtain on custody is that of Kassam Ladha v Khatija binti Abdallah Shariff 1 Z.L.R. 98. This case was in 1900. Cracknall J. decided that according to the Shiaite Law a mother has a right to the custody of her daughter until she attains the age of seven. H She has that right even after the daughter has attained the age of seven provided that the woman does not re-marry. At the age of seven the wishes of the child are paramount.

Then there was the case of Suleiman Ali Doongersi v Sherro binti Kanji 1 Z.L.R. 251. This was in 1906. It was also on Shiaite Law. Lindsey Smith, C.J. following the judgment of Cracknall, J. in the I already cited case, had this to say at page 253:

1984 TLR p140

MUSTAFA JA

... it is a principle of Mohammedan Law that when it is a question of deciding upon the lot of a child of A divorced parents the most important point to consider is the interest of the child itself...

In the case of Fakir Adam v Suleiman Athman Swahili and (2) Mama Assora 1 Z.L.R. 282, Murison, B J. decided that according to Sunni Law a divorced woman has the right to the custody of her daughter up to the time of puberty and beyond if that is in the interest of the child. The learned judge following the above two cited cases added that: C

The parties on each of these cases were Shias, but the decision was to the same effect as this judgment. I ought, perhaps, to add that Sheikh Smit, who is probably the best authority on Mohammedan Law in Zanzibar, gave it to me as his opinion that upon the question of `hizamit' [custody] there is no difference between Shia D and Sunni Law ...

A similar decision as the above three cited cases was made by Doorly, AG. C.J. in the case of Saleh Mohamed Sachoo v Jenabai binti Dhala Versi 4 Z.L.R. 67. E

In all these four cases the issue was regarding daughters but here it is sons. But the law seems to be the same regarding sons. In The Principles of Mohammedan Law by D.F. Mulla (14th ed.) at page 295 it is stated that a son is looked after by his mother until the age of seven. Hedaya (Hamilton's F Translation) at page 138; A Manual of the Law of Marriage by Russel and Suhrawardy at page 320; and Muhammedan Law (An Abridgement) by Fitzgerald (1931) at 99 and 100 all give the right of custody of an infant boy to its mother. I believe it is because of this same law that Shk. Ameir Tajo G gave the custody of these two boys to the respondent and that even Sheikhs Hamdani and Mussa have so advised me, as already said.

Lindsey Smith, C.J. in Dongersi v Kanji, already cited, at page 253 said: H

As Judge Cracknall was Chief Judge here for twenty years, his decision is entitled to great respect and sitting as a Judge of equal jurisdiction I do not think I ought to dissent from his decision. I

1984 TLR p141

MUSTAFA JA

A Likewise Doorly, Ag. C.J. in the case of Sachoo v Versi (already cited above), after referring to the cases of Ladha v Sheriff and Doongersi v Kanji, said at page 68:

The learned Judges, my predecessors, went carefully into the authorities, and I am not prepared to disturb (and B I have no desire to do so) a decision which has been the law of Zanzibar for over thirty years.

C The learned Ag. Chief Justice said that in 1929. I am duty bound, I am convinced, that I too should concur with their lordships and that I should not disturb the decision which has been the law of this country and this High Court for over eighty years now.

Thus deducing from the cases I have cited, and also the expositions of the various learned authors I D have referred to, the Islamic Law applicable in these Islands regarding the custody of children is that it is granted to the mother until the child attains the age of seven years when its wishes are taken into consideration.

However, there are certain conditions precedent to this grant of custody to the mother. The E appellant has given a number of grounds supporting his objection. I can conveniently put them into three groups. First, it has been argued that the respondent is of unsatisfactory conduct and does not deserve being granted custody of the children. Second, the respondent might renounce Islamic faith and hence cannot bring-up the boys as Muslims. Third, the respondent will not reside in the F Islands and hence she will take away the boys from the jurisdiction of this High Court.

As for the first group of objections, no evidence was tendered to support the allegation that the respondent is a drunkard, she is a loiteror and that as a whole she is not fit to be given such G custody. The respondent herself has denounced these allegations of the appellant. Apart from that if the allegations are true it is difficult to comprehend how the appellant dared to leave the respondent with the custody of all the children for two years while he was on duty in Ethiopia. H Moreover the appellant did not point out any thing he found wrong with the children on his return home.

Let me now turn to the ground of religion. As the learned Sheikhs said this is a mere suspicion. There is not a jot of evidence that the respondent will renounce Islam. In the case of Mohamedali I Issanji Bohora v Bachuli binti Karimjee, High Court Civil Appeal No. 16 of 1938, Law, C.J. had this to say:

1984 TLR p142

MUSTAFA JA

In the interest of children safeguards have been provided. Parents may be deprived of that custody for A misconduct. The misconduct alleged by the Appellant is that the Respondent is not bringing up the children as Bohoras.

Of this there is really no evidence. On the other hand, the Respondent says that the children follow the B Bohora religion and go to Mosque. Although the Respondent admittedly is living in a Comorian Community, this has not prevented her from doing her duty towards her children. C

According to the above quoted words a mother still retains her right of custody even when she lives within a Community of a completely different religious denomination provided that she brings up the children in accordance with their own denomination. The case is even stronger where the mother is D of the same denomination except that there is some suspicion that she might change. As for this ground I am in agreement with the Sheikhs that when the respondent renounces Islam then her right of custody will cease.

Lastly is the question of domicile. The respondent has admitted that she is being transferred to Dar es Salaam. The case of Salem bin Islam v Gnawer banti Aimed and Another 3 Z.L.R. 49 is on all E fours with the present one. In that case the plaintiff and the First Defendant had been married and were living in Mombasa. They divorced and the First Defendant came P. 589 to Zanzibar with their infant daughter. The First Defendant gave the infant to her sister, the Second defendant, to bring F her up. Both defendants were married to other men. The Plaintiff sought the custody of the daughter who was of the age of four at the time. The custody was granted to the Plaintiff by the Kadhi. The defendants appealed to the High Court on the grounds that the Plaintiff will take away G the child from the jurisdiction of this Court. Tomlinson, C.J. and Doorly, J. said at page 50:

With regard to the first point raised in this appeal which is to the effect that the Kadhi, ought not to have given the custody to the father knowing that he intended to leave the jurisdiction of the Court, we H are of the opinion that there is no substance in the contention. The marriage and subsequent divorce as well as the birth of the child took place on the mainland and, as far as we can see from the evidence, the plaintiff lives and carries on his trade on the mainland and is a stranger in Zanzibar. I

A In fact it seems to us that it was the mother who removed the child from the place of conjugal domicile and the intended removal by the plaintiff is only a return to its original home."

B In the present case the parties married on the Mainland and there is their domicile in fact. It is true that the divorce proceedings took place in Zanzibar. But they came to Zanzibar simply because of duty and not to change their domicile. Hence for the respondent to go with the children to the Mainland, just as it was in the case I have just cited, is not really taking them away from the C jurisdiction of this Court but in fact she is taking them back to their original and natural home.

However, should I have erred in holding as I do, then under Article 70 of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania of 1977 and Article 55 of the Constitution of the Revolutionary D Government of Zanzibar of 1979 a procedure has been outlined to enable the Courts of the two parts of the Republic to execute orders of each other in their respective jurisdictions.

May be I should just add that even the High Court of Tanzania has the same stand that the custody E of a child is with the mother until the age of seven and in general the welfare of the child should be taken into account. This was the decision of Seaton, J. as he then was, in the case of Salum v Asumini [1969] E.A. 255.

I should point out here that the parties have put up various submissions as mentioned, some of F which I have not discussed. I have merely dealt with those material to the determination of the present appeal.

Therefore, according to the Law of Zanzibar, including the advice of the Sheikhs I am in agreement with the judgment of the Senior Kadhi, Shk. Ameir Tajo, for the reasons I have mentioned above. G The custody of the children Kheri and Mustapha is given to the respondent, Munira, until each of the boys attains the age of seven and then the wishes of the children will be taken into account as to future custody. The respondent will forfeit this right only if she re-marries or if she renounces H Islamic faith. The appellant has access to the children. For the time being he should provide for them.

Order accordingly.

1984 TLR p144

A

[zRPz]DR. C. MHINA v NATALIA M. MHINA 1984 TLR 144 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Nyalali CJ, Mustafa JJA and Kisanga JJA

September 17, 1984

CIVIL APPEAL NO. 16 OF 1984

Flynote

Family law - Custody of Children - Whether allegation of emergency situation has to exist before a B pendente lite order for custody of children.

Family Law - Maintenance of spouse - When court is empowered to make interim order of maintenance. C

-Headnote

The respondent in this appeal had filed a petition for dissolution of her marriage with the appellant and for other reliefs. After the petition had been filed she filed a chamber application supported by an affidavit seeking custody of the children of the marriage and maintenance pendente lite for herself and the children. The trial judge ruled that there were no exceptional circumstances to D warrant the court to make an interim order of custody but granted a maintenance order for the respondent and child. The present appeal is against that ruling. E

Held:An interim order for maintenance should only be made upon hearing both parties.
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
No case referred to. F
R.C. Kesaria for the appellant
M.A. Lakha for the respondent
[zJDz]Judgment
Mustafa, J.A. delivered the following judgment of the court: G
The respondent in this appeal had filed a petition for dissolution of her marriage with the appellant and for other reliefs. After the petition had been filed she filed a chamber application supported by H an affidavit seeking custody of the children of the marriage and maintenance pendente lite for herself and the children.
The application was opposed by the appellant, who filed an affidavit in reply. The application came before the High Court (Mnzavas, J.K.). Mr. Lakha, who has appeared for the appellant I
1984 TLR p145
MUSTAFA JA
A before us also appeared for him at that interlocutory application. He raised a preliminary objection, submitting that as there was no allegation of any emergency situation necessitating an interim order for custody, no order for custody could lie as it was an issue to be decided at the B hearing of the petition. As regards the issue of maintenance he submitted that there was no material before the Court for it to make decision on that matter. He asked for the dismissal of the application.
Mr. Kesaria for the appellant submitted, as he has also done before us, that the court was C empowered by certain of the provisions of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971, to deal with the issues of custody and maintenance in terms of the application filed by the wife.
In his ruling the trial judge held that he could see no exceptional circumstances to warrant a court making an interim order of custody. However, he held that the respondent should pay the wife and D the child who is in her custody shs. 1,200/= per month pending determination of the petition.
Mr. Lakha has attacked that ruling. He submitted that the trial judge should have confined his ruling to the preliminary objection he had raised, and should not have dealt with the merits of the E application at that stage. He complained that his client had in fact been condemned unheard. In our view the judge should have either upheld or rejected the preliminary objection, and if he rejected it, then it was then for the parties to argue the application on the merits. In that event either party F would have had the opportunity of presenting facts and evidence, if any, before the court for it to make a decision.
We agree with Mr. Kesaria that the trial judge was empowered to make an interim order for maintenance, but he should do so only after hearing the parties. Here the argument before him was G on the preliminary objection raised by Mr. Lakha as to the maintainability of the application. He should have confined his ruling to that issue at that stage. However, he went further, and decided the issue of maintenance without giving the appellant an opportunity of presenting his arguments H and evidence on the matter in controversy. That is clearly in error. In the circumstances we allow the appeal and set aside the interim order for maintenance. We make no order as to costs.

I Appeal allowed.

1984 TLR p146

A

[zRPz]FOREIGN MISSION BOARD OF THE SOUTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION v ALEXANDER PANOMARITIS 1984 TLR 146 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Mustafa JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

June 29, 1984

CIVIL APPLICATION 4 OF 1984 B

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Court of Appeal Rules - Notice of appeal, application for leave to appeal and application for a certified copy of the proceedings of the High Court filed within prescribed time - C Inordinate delay by the Court to furnish respondent with a copy of proceedings - Application to strike out notice of appeal due to the delay to prosecute the appeal - Whether application may be granted -Rule 82 of the Rules of the Court of Appeal, 1979. D

-Headnote

The respondent filed a notice of appeal, an application for leave to appeal and an application for a certified copy of the proceedings of the High Court within prescribed time. However there was inordinate delay by the High Court to furnish him with a copy of the proceedings. This prompted E the applicant to file a notice of motion to strike out the notice of appeal on the ground that the respondent had failed to institute and prosecute his appeal.

Held: Since the inordinate delay in furnishing a certified copy of the proceedings of the High Court F cannot be blamed on the respondent no cause of action existed on his part to bar him from instituting and prosecuting his appeal.

Case Information

Application dismissed. G

No case referred to

F.H. Uzanda for the applicant

T.J.R. Tarimo for the respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

Mustafa, J.A. gave the following ruling of the court: This is an application by the applicant to strike H out the notice of appeal filed by the respondent arising from a civil revision matter No. 9 of 1980 in the High Court. The notice of motion to strike out alleged that no appeal lies or that essential steps in the proceedings have not been taken or taken within the prescribed time, in terms of the I provisions of Rule 82 of the Rules of the Court of Appeal.

1984 TLR p147
MUSTAFA JA
A The order of the High Court was made on 26.5.1981. The respondent filed a notice of appeal within 6 days of the ruling, an application for leave to appeal within 9 days and for a certified copy of the proceedings of the High Court within 10 days. All those steps were taken well within the prescribed time.
B However up to 1.2.84 when the appliction to strike out was filed, no record of appeal had been filed, and Mr. Uzanda for the applicant submitted that the inordinate delay was and must have been due to the failure of the respondent to take steps to institute and prosecute his appeal within the C prescribed time in terms of Rule 83 of the Court of Appeal Rules. For the failure of the respondent to take proper and effective steps to institute and prosecute his appeal, the applicant asks for his application to strike out to be granted.
Mr. Tarimo submitted that the proceedings copy was not available for collection by him until 11.2.84 D when he was informed by the court that the proceedings were ready for collection, and he collected the copy of proceedings on 16.2.84. In his affidavit he referred to a meeting with the Chief Justice in which Mr. Uzanda was also present on 21.11.83 when the Registrar of the High Court was E directed by the Chief Justice to provide the respondent with a copy of the proceedings as soon as possible.
We are satisifed, that for reasons beyond the control of the respondent, the copy of proceedings was not ready for collection until 11.2.84. The court must bear the blame for this long and F unexplained delay in furnishing a certified copy of the proceedings. There was a letter on the court record from the Registrar to the respondent dated 10.2.84 which excluded the days (over 900 odd days) taken for the preparation of the copy of proceedings. In view of that letter the respondent had 60 days from 20.2.84 to file his record of appeal, i.e. by about 20.4.84.
G When the application to strike out was filed on 1.2.84, the respondent could not be blamed for the delay, as the court up to that date was unable to furnish him with a certified copy of the proceedings. In our view, the application was filed prematurely, as on the 1st February, 1984, no H cause of action existed for any delay on the part of the respondent to institute and prosecute his appeal.
We are not concerned with the situation after the furnishing of the certified copy of the proceedings to the respondent in this application. That will no doubt be dealt with when the matter arises for I decision.
1984 TLR p148
However this application has to be dismissed, and we so dismiss it with costs. A
Application dismissed
1984 TLR p148
B
[zRPz]REPUBLIC v SAMWEL SHEPUA 1984 TLR 148 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

August 5, 1983
CRIMINAL REVISION 12 OF 1983 C
Flynote
Road Traffic - Causing bodily injury through dangerous driving - Road Traffic Act 1973 ss. 40(1) and D 63(2)(a) - Circumstances constituting the offence.
Road Traffic - Causing bodily injury through dangerous driving - Whether disqualification from driving mandatory.
Criminal Law -Mens rea - Whether necessary on a charge of dangerous driving causing bodily harm under E s.s 40(1) and 42(1)(b) of the Road Traffic Act 1973.
Road Traffic - Requirement to report accident within twelve hours - Whether absolute - Road Traffic Act 1973, s.52(2)(b).
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Charge of causing bodily injury through dangerous driving F brought under s. 42(1)(b) instead of s.40(1) of the Road Traffic Act 1973 - Defective.
-Headnote
The respondent was convicted on his own plea of guilty to two charges. The first offence was causing bodily injury through dangerous driving. The second, as failure to report an accident G contrary to sections 57(2)(b) and 63(2)(d) of the Road Traffic Act 1973. The trial court did not order cancellation of the driving licence. In mitigation the respondent had pleaded before the trial court lack of intention to commit the offence. In the exercise of its revisionary powers the High Court had H the following issues to consider:
First whether the charge of causing bodily injury through dangerous driving could be brought under ss. 42(1)(b) of the Road Traffic Act 1973. Second, whether on a conviction for causing bodily harm through dangerous driving, the court has any discretion to order or not to order the cancellation of a I driving licence. Third, whether
1984 TLR p149
MUSTAFA JA
A intention to drive dangerously is a necessary ingredient of the offence of dangerous driving; and fourth, whether the requirement to report an accident within twelve hours is absolute.
B Held: (i) Where bodily injury is caused as a result of dangerous driving the charge must be brought under sections 40(1) and 63(2)(a) of the Road Traffic Act 1973;
(ii) on conviction under sections 40 or 42 of the Road Traffic Act 1973 cancellation of the driving licence is mandatory; court has discretion only as regards the period of cancellation;
C (iii) on conviction under Ss. 40 and 42 of the Road Traffic Act 1973 a court has discretion to disqualify a driver from obtaining a licence for three years or a shorter period, or not to disqualify him at all;
D (iv) mens rea is not a requisite ingredient of the offence of causing bodily injury through dangerous driving under section 40 of the Road Traffic Act;

(v) the requirement for reporting an accident within twelve hours under section 15(2)(b) is absolute except only where the driver is physically incapacitated by the accident.

Case Information

E Conviction upheld.

V. Lyimo for the Republic.

[zJDz]Judgment

F Lugakingira, J.: In this case the accused was charged on two counts under the Road Traffic Act, 1973. The first count alleged causing bodily injury through dangerous driving and was laid under ss. 42 (1)(b) and 63(2) (b). The second count alleged failure to report an accident c/ss 57 (2) (b) and G 63 (2) (d). The accused was on both counts convicted on his own pleas of guilty and fined accordingly. I was not happy with some features of the case and admitted it to revision.

The first count was laid under s. 42 (1) (b) but, as the framing of the provision indicates, it has H nothing to do with dangerous driving in which bodily injury is caused. It is concerned only with dangerous driving per se. Where bodily injury is in fact caused as a result of dangerous driving the appropriate provision is s. 40 (1) and the penalty provision is s. 63 (2) (a). Further, whether a person I is convicted under s. 42 or s. 40 the law requires that his driving licence shall be cancelled and the person shall be disqualified from obtaining any driving licence for a period of not less than three years, unless for special reasons the court thinks it fit to order otherwise. It seems, however, that the court's A discretion as regards cancellation or suspension of the licence is exercisable only as to the period of such cancellation or suspension but cannot be exercised to dispense with cancellation or suspension altogether. It is only with regard to disqualification that the court may elect to make no order. There was no order of cancellation or disqualification in this case and there was no reference B to these matters. But while bringing these irregularities to the attention of the learned trial magistrate, I do not propose to make any order or issue any directions having regard to the simple and even the unknown facts of the case as a whole.

It was also noted that in mitigation the accused said that he did not intend to commit the offence but C that it was purely accidental. Whether that meant that he did not intend to drive dangerously or to cause injury, I do not know; but probably he meant both. Well, all accidents are, I suppose, accidental. I agree with Mr. Lyimo that in a charge of causing bodly injury through dangerous D driving the law does not look to the driver's mind but it looks to his style, having regard to the circumstances obtaining at the time. It is the fact of dangerous driving which is the basis of liability. Once it is established that on the facts and circumstances of the case the driver's style was uncalled E for, he cannot escape the consequences of that style. His culpability lies in the abuse or non-use of his talents and not on any wish or non-wish in his mind. I am therefore of the view that the mitigation in this case did not vitiate the plea.

With regard to the second count the facts were that the accused reported the accident five days F after it had occurred. My problem was whether he could have reported it earlier since there was no indication as to how far the scene of accident was from the nearest police station. But after studying s. 57 (2) (b) carefully, it seems that the problem does not arise. The provision states that in the case G of an accident such as the accused was involved in the driver has to report the same "as soon as reasonably practicable and in any case not later than twelve hours" after the time it occurred, unless he is incapable of doing so by reason of his own injuries. Having regard to the words I have emphasised, it is evident that the provision is strict and leaves no room for manoeuvre save where H the driver is physically incapacitated. The accused did not allege such incapacitation; that being the case his conviction was justified in law. All in all, I make no orders.

Conviction upheld. I

1984 TLR p151

A

[zRPz]SAFIEL MRISHO v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 151 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge D'Souza Ag J

August 13, 1984

B CRIMINAL APPEAL 40 OF 1983

Flynote

Evidence - Admissions - Words spoken by an accused in his plea of guilty to one count - Whether such words can be used in evidence against him.

-Headnote

C The defence put forward for the first time at the trial was that the vehicle had been driven by another person on the same day. The appellant admitted however, the offence of driving the said motor vehicle on the public road with defects.

D On appeal the issue was whether the accused's plea of guilty to driving a motor vehicle with defects could be used as evidence to the charge of causing death through careless driving.

Held: Words spoken by an accused in his plea count can be used as evidence against him.

Case Informaiton

E Appeal dismissed

Cases referred:

1. R. v Ehsanulhag s/o Karim Bux [1940] 7 E.A.C.A. 48.

F 2. Hamadi Juma v R. [1970] H.C.D. 30.

3. R. v Madirisha Kitikiti [1969] H.C.D. 233.

4. Issa Mohamed v. R. Criminal Appeal 108 of 1968 (PC) of High Court Dar es Salaam.

5. R. v Hazeline [1967] 2 Q.B. 857.

G D. Mbezi for the appellant

Senguji for the respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

H D'Souza, Ag. J.: The appellant Safiel Mrisho was at all material times a private with Tanzania Peoples Defence Forces (T.P.D.F) at Dodoma. He was a driver. On 8/2/82 he was brought before the District Court at Dodoma in Traffic Case No. 50/82 charged with three counts under the Road Treaffic Act No. 30/73. On the first count he was charged with causing death through careless I driving c/s 41 and 63 (2) (b), on the second with failing to report an accident to the nearest police station or police officer within 12 hours c/s 57 (2)(b) and 63 and finally on third count with driving a motor vehicle on a public road A with defects. In each of the three counts the particulars stated that the offence took place on the 4th of February, 1982 at about 19.30 hours along Arusha road within the municipality of Dodoma. The appellant pleaded guilty to the third count and was fined Shs.500/= or 6 months in default. B Thereafter the trial proceeded on the other two accounts.

At the trial PW.1 Shabani Badi stated that on 4.2.82 at 7.15 p.m. he saw an army truck overtaking a Peugeot motor vehicle and crashing into an oncoming cyclist. The army truck did not stop but put off its lights and disappeared. The cyclist, he says, was on his correct side of the road when C knocked. PW.2 Inspector James Kombe was on 4/2/82 informed of the hit and run case. He went to the army camp at Dodoma where he found one truck being repaired. He found the appellant there in uniform. He told the appellant and others present that he suspected that the motor vehicle had been D involved in an accident. He found the front part of the motor vehicle damaged. He found grains of sugar in the front mudguard. He also found a piece of trouser identical to the trouser worn by the cyclist. On cross-examination by the defence counsel PW.2 stated that the front bonnet of the vehicle was damaged. He did not know who drove the vehicle to the police station. He did not keep E the piece of trouser as exhibit. PW.3 Police Constable Bruno went to the scene of the accident on 4/2/82. He found neither the cyclist nor the motor vehicle there. He drew a sketch map of the scene which he tendered in court. At the point of impact there was sugar spread about. The next day he F went to the army camp at Dodoma where he arrested the the appellant, fond the truck, and ordered the appellant to drive it to the police station. He found black threads from the deceased's trousers and sugar particles on the oiltank and mudguard of the motor vehicle. He went to the hospital to see G the cyclist. Later the same day the cyclist died. PW.4 one Joseph Massawe testified that on 4/2/82 he was driving a Peugeot motor vehicle into town, when a military truck, driving fairly fast overtook his vehicle, and crashed into an oncoming cyclist.

In his defence the appellant agreed that he was driving the said motor vehicle No. JW 4390 on the H day in question but he says he returned to the camp and parked the vehicle at 6 p.m. On that day between 13.30 p.m. and 6 p.m. he went to the army unit at Veyula to ferry flour beans, sugar and vegetables. After 6 p.m. he said he went home. The sugar grains found on the motor vehicle must I have come from the sugar he was ferrying for Veyula Unit and not

A from the package deceased was carrying. The black threads must have come from some soldier's clothing. He said on the day his vehicle had no battery and no lights. Cross examined by the prosecution he said that he admitted the third count because on 4/2/82 he had used the motor B vehicle. He agreed the motor vehicle was inspected in his presence and he signed the motor vehicle inspection report. He did not know how the sugar grains got into the front mudguard.

DW.2 Donatus Gasper a T.P.D.F. soldier, stated that on 4.2.82 the appellant was sent to Msalato to C collect fertilizer. He left at noon and returned at 6 p.m. He parked the vehicle and went home. AT 6.20 p.m. one TPDF soldier Samwel Mwita went with the motor vehicle to Chadulu. He returned at 8.30 p.m. He said this Samwel Mwita was a Mechanic. By 13.4.83 he had left employment and gone D home. On cross-examination Dw.2 said he was sure the appellant was ferrying fertilizer and not food stuffs on that day. DW.3 Alphonce Jengela a TPDF staff sergeant testified that he is incharge of transport. He sent appellant to Msalato at 12.00 to collect fertilizer. Appellant was not seen by him again until 6/2/82. Dw.4 Sergeant Togo of TPDF at Veyula testified that between 12.00 noon and E 2.30 p.m. the appellant helped them to ferry foodstuffs, including sugar. He says the youths off-loading the sugar spilled some. When loading it the youths passed the front of the vehicle.

The trial court found that the appellant was the one who drove the truck involved in knocking down F the deceased. It based the finding on the following facts: 1. An army truck was involved in the accident. 2. The truck used by the appellant on the day of the accident was found to have damages in-front. 3. There was sugar on the front mudguard and oil tank of the truck. 4. The deceased at the time he was knocked down was carrying a parcel of sugar that burst during the accident, spilling the G sugar. 5. There were pieces of black thread on the truck. 6. The deceased was wearing a black trouser at the time of the accident.

Learned counsel for the appellant Mr. Mbezi argued that the evidence fell short of proving that the H truck examined by the vehicle inspector was the one that was involved in the accident. He argued that the vehicle inspection report Exh. 'A' did not show any damages after the accident. The pieces of thread were not proved to have come from the deceased's trousers and the sugar on the mudguard and oil tank was explained by the defence.

I In the alternative counsel argued that even if the truck involved in the accident was the same one examined by PW.2 it was not proved in evidence that the appellant was the one who was driving the vehicle at the material time. He A stressed the defence evidence that one Samwel Mwita another soldier had used the motor vehicle after the appellant parked it at the army compound.

The investigation in this case was far from satisfactory. Nobody explained why no definite B comparison of the threads or piece of trouser found on the motor vehicle was made with the deceased's trouser and why both items were not kept as exhibits. It was erroneous for the trial court to consider that piece of evidence. I will consider the effect of this on the conviction later. The same however cannot be said for the sugar found in the front bumper and on the oil tank.

As it was C proved that the deceased was carrying sugar at the time he was knocked down, and that the accident caused this sugar to spread about this was one of the factors the trial court would take into account.

Learned counsel stressed greatly that the defence was wrongly rejected or not given weight. But let D us look at the defence carefully. One day after the accident the appellant was challenged as the perpetrator of the accident. He did not tell the police that another person drove the vehicle after 6.30 p.m. Some four months later during the trial this suggestion was not put to the police witnesses. E Nor was the suggestion that the vehicle had been carrying sugar for the army put forward. As was held in the case of R. v Ehsanulhag s/o Karim Bux (1940) 7 E.A.C.A. 48 it must inevitably affect the mind of the tribunal by detracting from the force of the defence when an explanation of some fact, prima facie inculpatory of the accused which in the circumstances must have been readily available F to him, is not offered until some late stage in the proceedings. In this case the defence appears to have been developed as an afterthought to cater to the prosecution evidence. I would say that the trial court was entitled to reject the defence. This does not mean that because the defence was G rejected the court was entitled to convict. The burden of proving the case beyond a reasonable doubt was still on the prosecution.

Learned counsel for the appellant argued that the vehicle did not show damages as Exh. 'A' did not reveal the same. With respect I cannot agree. Exhibit 'A' has two pages. The report on page two H shows that the front bumper was scratched on the off side and that the front mudguard was cracked on the off side. The report also noted the finding of sugar particles on the bumper bonnet and oil tank. This report was signed by the appellant on both its pages. I

A Aside from, not noting the significance of the appellant signing the vehicle inspection report showing damages/defects before and after the accident the trial court also failed to consider the significance of the appellant's plea of guilty and his agreement to the facts on the third count. In the B case of Hamadi Juma v R. [1970] HCD 30 Seaton, J. held that words spoken by an accused in his plea could not be used as evidence against him. However in an earlier case R v Madirisha Kitikiti [1969] HCD 233 Duff, J., citing a decision by Biron, J. in Issa Mohamed v.R Criminal Appeal 108 (PC) C of 1968 High Court Dar es Salaam and the English decision in R. v Hazeline [1967] 2 Q.B. 857, held that such words can be used in evidence. Of these two conflicting views the latter appears to be sound. I see no reason why words spoken by an accused to anyone else can be evidence against him but not words spoken by him in open court. However in this case things are slightly different as D in this case the appellant agreed to the facts as put to him in the third count. These mentioned the date, time and place of the driving. The date, time and place coincide with the date, time and place the deceased was knocked down. I hold that this admission should have been taken into account against the appellant.

E In this appeal it would appear that the trial court erroneously took into account the evidence of the threads from the trousers of the deceased and equally erroneously failed to take into account other admissible evidence on record.

F Where the trial court has wrongly admitted or rejected evidence at a trial the issue for a first appellate court is whether, on the evidence properly admissible and on record, the trial court would have convicted.

In this case I find that the admissions of fact on the 34th count coupled with the evidence of G reckless driving given by the prosecution witnesses was sufficient to prove the case against the appellant beyond a reasonable doubt.

If any corroborative evidence is needed (which I find was not needed) this can be found in the finding of sugar particles on the appellant's vehicle, the damages to the same, and his agreement to H sign the vehicle inspection report.

I accordingly dismiss this appeal in its entirety.

I Appeal dismissed

1984 TLR p156

A

[zRPz]ALLY KAGURU v HALIMA YANGA 1984 TLR 156 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Maina J

February 10, 1984

(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 45 OF 1983 B

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Assessors - Trial in Primary Court - Opinion and vote of assessors recorded by magistrate - One assessor not present when judgment was read - Whether irregularity curable. C

-Headnote

During the trial both assessors were present and their opinion and vote was recorded by the magistrate. On the date of delivering the judgment one assessor was absent. The issue was whether the irregularity could invalidate the proceedings. D

Held: Although there is no legal requirement for assessors to be present when judgment is delivered provided they give their opinions before a decision is made, it is desirable that they should be present. E

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Maina, J.: The respondent, Halima Yanga, successfully sued the appellant, Ally Kaguru, at the F urban primary court, Singida, for a house valued at Shs.10,000/=. The appellant's appeal to the Singida district court was dismissed. This is a second appeal.

There was no dispute that the house, subject matter of the suit, was being occupied by the G deceased, one Isaka Kamanyile until the time of his death in 1982. The respondent said that she was married to the late Isaka in about 1945. Theirs was a marriage under customary law. During their marriage, the respondent said she built the house now in dispute with the assistance of the deceased Isaka. The respondent said that she supplied all the building materials. They lived in the H house together. They had no children. The respondent had a daughter, apparently by another man, and when she was away in Tanga visiting her daughter, the deceased lived with another woman named. When the respondent returned to the matrimonial home after many years the late I Isaka refused to take

1984 TLR p157

MAINA J

A her back. There was a claim filed before the reconciliation tribunal at Kibaoni in which the respondent claimed her house and household effects. According to a member of the tribunal, Juma Msombe, the deceased admitted that the house was build by joint efforts between the respondent B and the deceased. Unfortunately, the deceased died before the tribunal finalized the dispute. There was also evidence by Jumanne Salum in support of the respondent's evidence that the respondent had build the main house, now in dispute.

Against all that evidence, the appellant alleged that he was related to the late Isaka and that the said C Isaka bequeathed the house to him. Isaka's former wife, Amina was present when Isaka built the house, testified what she did not know who had constructed the house, although she alleged that she was married to the late Isaka and that the house was jointly built by herself and Isaka before D their marriage was dissolved. Idi Ntandu said that he had plastered the house at the request of the late Isaka and that the respondent had been away at Arusha.

Both lower courts found that the house in dispute was built mainly by the respondent but also with some efforts made by her late husband. The lower courts found as a fact that the couple had no E child and this was undisputed. It was held, therefore, that the respondent was entitled to the house. The appellant's first ground of appeal is that the house was build jointly by the late Isaka and his former wife Amina. But the evidence by Amina failed to prove that. Her evidence was discredited as F she could not even tell who had actually constructed it. If the house was built during the time she was living with Isaka and with their joint efforts she could not possibly have failed to name the person who constructed it. Both lower courts rightly found Amina's evidence unworthy of credit and rejected it.

G The appellant's second ground of appeal is that he was given the house by Isaka and that there was a will to that effect. But no such will was tendered in court. Furthermore, Isaka could not have bequeathed what was not his property. The respondent's evidence was supported by that of the H witnesses she called that she built the house with money she obtained after selling millet and that her late husband only assisted her.

The last ground of appeal is that one of the two assessors was not present when judgment was delivered by the primary court. I have only to point out that the record of the trial court shows I clearly that each one of the assessors gave his opinion at the end of the trial. Both said that in their opinion the house belongs to the respondent.

1984 TLR p158

The trial magistrate complied with section 8 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1963, by getting and A recording the opinions of the assessors. The record does not show whether both assessors were present when judgment was delivered in the primary court, but there is nothing in the law which requires assessors to be present when judgment is delivered by a primary court. What is important B is that they must give their opinions before a decision is made. This was done. It is desirable that the assessors be present when judgment is delivered but there is no legal provision requiring their presence in the primary court when judgment is being delivered. Absence of assessors or one of them at the time of delivery of judgment does not in any way invalidate the proceedings. C

I may point out here that even in the proceedings in which the appellant applied for, and was appointed administrator of the estate of the deceased Isaka Kamanyero, in Civil Application No. 10 of 1982 of the Singida Urban Court there is no mention of the house or of any properties left by the D deceased Isaka.

The evidence on record proved, on balance of probabilities, that the house in dispute was the property of the respondent and I can find no reason to interfere with the findings of the lower courts. It is for the foregoing reasons that this appeal is dismissed with costs. E

Appeal dismissed. F

1984 TLR p158

G

[zRPz]RAMADHANI RAMADHANI v SUNGI ANDALU 1984 TLR 158 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Maina J

fEBRUARY 11, 1984

(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 49 OF 1983

Flynote

Family law - Desertion - Compensation for inducing wife to desert - Whether damages recoverable.

Family Law - Marriage - Whether payment of bridewealth per se constitutes a valid marriage. H

-Headnote

The appellant claimed damages from his father in law for inducing his wife to desert him. The claim was based on a marriage which had never taken place since the appellant's only proof of the alleged I marriage was that he had paid some bridewealth.

1984 TLR p159

MAINA J

A Held: (i) Payment of bridewealth, even if proved is not evidence of marriage; there must be clear evidence of a marriage ceremony;

(ii) the onus of proving the existence of a marriage is upon the party who alleges its existence;

B (iii) without proof of marriage, there can be no basis for damages for inducing a spouse to desert.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

C No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Maina, J.: The appellant, Ramadhani Ramadhani, filed a suit in the primary court at Ilongero claiming from the respondent, Sungi Andalu, four head of cattle being what the appellant said was damages D for inducing his wife to desert him. The primary court held that the respondent had wilfully married his daughter Zainabu to another man while the marriage between the appellant and Zainabu subsisted. The respondent was ordered by the primary court to pay the damages claimed. The E respondent however, appealed to the district court at Singida and the learned district magistrate held that there was no marriage at all between the appellant and Zainabu and therefore the respondent had a right to marry his daughter to Alute. The appellant was disatisfied and he now appeals to this court.

F The only issue is whether the appellant and Zainabu were ever married. There was no marriage certificate tendered but the appellant alleged that he married Zainabu in 1973 under customary law and that he had paid three white cows as bridewealth. The respondent vehemently denied that his G daughter Zainabu was at anytime married to the appellant. In fact the respondent claimed that his daughter and the appellant eloped to Arusha and when she returned the daughter was later married to Alute. That evidence was supported by the evidence of Zainabu herself and by the respondent's brother Mwangi Andalu and his son Ramadhani Sungi. As I said, and the learned district magistrate H who heard the first appeal pointed out, the issue is whether the appellant and Zainabu were married. The onus was on the appellant to prove that fact. Without proof of marriage, there can be no basis for damages for inducing Zainabu to desert the appellant.

I The only evidence of existence of marriage between the appellant and the respondent's daughter, Zainabu, was that of payment of bridewealth to the respondent. But the evidence to that effect was unreliable. The appellant A testified that the bridewealth paid consisted of three cows. His witnesses, Ali Amasi and Omari Musa, on the other hand, said that they personally paid one cow and five goats as bridewealth to the respondent. There is an obvious contradiction between the evidence by the appellant and that of his two witnesses, on this issue. That contradiction casts a lot of doubt on the evidence and it is B difficult to believe that any bridewealth was ever paid to the respondent. So, the lower courts were entitled to believe the respondent when he said that no bridewealth was paid and that there was no C marriage between the appellant and the respondent's daughter, Zainabu. The appellant totally failed to prove his allegation that he paid bridewealth to the respondent and his evidence was properly rejected by the lower courts.

Even if, for the sake of argument, the appellant had paid bridewealth, there was no evidence of any marriage ceremony between the appellant and Zainabu. Payment of bridewealth, even if proved, is D not evidence of existence of marriage. There must be clear evidence of a marriage ceremony. The appellant failed to prove that there was such ceremony of marriage. Under section 27(1) of the Law of Marriage Act, No. 5 of 1971, every marriage must be contracted in the presence of at least two E witnesses. If the appellant claimed that he had married Zainabu by customary law, he had to prove that there was such marriage by calling even one witness who was present at such ceremony. The appellant not only failed to prove payment of bridewealth, but he failed to prove that there was F marriage performed between him and respondent's daughter, Zainabu. The respondent and all his witnesses denied existence of such marriage and in the circumstances, the first appeal rightly held that no marriage existed between the appellant and Zainabu. That being the position, the respondent was perfectly free to marry his daughter to Alute or to any other person. G

The appellant's claim for damages was misconceived and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed. H

1984 TLR p161

A

[zRPz]PIA JOSEPH v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 161 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Lugakingira J

B CRIMINAL APPEAL 72 OF 1983

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Alibi - Failure of trial court to consider accused's alibi - Consequences.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Credibility of witnesses - Circumstances that may justify an appellate C court's interference with trial court's finding on credibility.

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted of unlawful wounding on the basis of evidence of witnesses who purported to have identified her in darkness. Appellant claimed that she had been at another place D at the material time. There were some material inconsistencies in the statements of the prosecution witnesses as regards the identification of the accused.

On appeal the issue was whether the appellate court could interfere with the findings of the trial E magistrate on credibility of witnesses.

Held: (i) An appellate court will not lightly interfere in the trial court's finding on credibility unless the evidence reveals fundamental factors of a vitiating nature to which the trial court did not address F itself or address itself properly;

(ii) it is the duty of the court to direct its mind properly to any alibi set up by a prisoner;

(iii) it is a rule of practice, not of law, that corroboration is required of the evidence of a witness G of identification of the accused made under unfavourable conditions.

(iv) a previous threat to commit a particular offence does not constitute conclusive proof of the commission of such offence, but it affords corroboration to other credible evidence.

Case Information

H Appeal allowed.

Cases referred to:

1. Glannibanta [1876] 1 P.D. 283.
2. Pandya v R. [1957] E.A. 336.

I 3. Coghlan v Cumberland [1898] 1 Ch. 704.

4. Abdallah Wendo v R. [1953] 20 E.A.C.A. 166.

1984 TLR p162

LUGAKINGIRA J

5. Waihi v Uganda [1968] E.A. 278. A
6. Mwakawanga v R. [1963] E.A.6.
7. Sekitoleko v Uganda [1967] E.A. 531
8. Manda v.R. [1965] E.A. 193.

Mwambe for the Republic B

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J. Around 11 p.m. on 31.3.1983 the complainant Abdallah Omari Fonga, a resident of Kondoa township, was attacked and injured with a sharp instrument. It occurred as he opened the rear door of his bar on his way out and he claimed to have identified the appellant Pia Joseph as his C assailant with the aid of moonlight. Four days later he reported the appellant to the police whereupon she was arrested and charged with causing grievous harm c/s. 225 of the Penal Code. At the conclusion of the trial she was convicted of unlawful wounding c/s. 228 (1), the trial magistrate D taking a light view of the injury, and was sentenced to two years' imprisonment subject to confirmation. She appealed against the conviction and sentence. At the hearing of the appeal learned counsel for the Republic Mr. Mwamba declined to support the conviction. I agreed and allowed the appeal, setting aside the conviction and sentence, and ordered the appellant's release E from custody. I did so for the reasons set out in this judgment. In view of what will transpire, it is necessary to examine the relationship between the parties along with a summary of the contending evidence. The complainant and the appellant were previous F lovers who had cohabited for a year. At the time of the incident they were estranged, the complainant having become "fed up" with the appellant, and a dispute was pending before the reconciliatory tribunal following a report by the complainant. Earlier that morning they had met at a butchery and the appellant had allegedly threatened the complainant stating: "You are accusing me G before the conciliatory board, but you (will) see it. If I fail to kill you, then I will employ people to kill you." Later that night the complainant was indeed attacked. His evidence as regards the attack and the identity of the attacker was supported by PW2 and PW3 who were with him at the time. In H her defence, however, the appellant stated that she left her house at 8.30 p.m. and proceeded to Kondoa by Night Bar (not the complainant's) where she stayed until midnight. She then returned home accompanied by DW2 and DW3 and straight went to bed. Next day, at about 10 a.m., she got I news of the complainant's attack. She went to the hospital to see

1984 TLR p163

LUGAKINGIRA J

A him but learned that he had not been admitted. She could not go to the complainant's house because (naturally) the complainant's wife was hostile to her. Four days later when she was herself admitted in hospital she heard that the police were looking for her. Upon her discharge she reported B at the police station to inquire and was then accused of this offence. DW2 and DW3 corroborated her alibi.

The trial magistrate decided to believe the complainant and his witnesses. He dismissed the alibi as untrue on the ground that the appellant's witnesses had contradicted themselves. Whereas DW2 C stated that on arrival at the appellant's house from Kondoa By Night Bar he and DW3 went their separate ways, DW3 stated that she and her husband were staying in the same house with the appellant and that actually she (DW3) slept in the appellant's room as the appellant was not feeling well. Because of this contradiction the trial magistrate held that the alibi had not been corroborated D and commented that the defence witnesses were intent on distorting justice.

Although this was a simple case it raises rather significant questions, namely credibility or the role of an appellate court in that regard, the burden of proof in an alibi and corroboration. I will deal with these matters seriatim.

E The law as regards the role of an appellate court in matters of credibility is settled beyond paradventure. The trial court which has seen and heard the witnesses, thereby being privileged to observe their manner and demeanour, is certainly in a better position to assess their credibility than F an appellate court which has not had these advantages. It has therefore been consistently held that an appellate court will not lightly interfere in the trial court's finding on credibility unless the evidence reveals fundamental factors of a vitiating nature to which the trial court did not address itself or address itself properly.

G As a rule of practice, therefore, a first appeal assumes the character of a retrial and as stated in The Glannibanta (1876), 1 P.D. 283, an appellate court:

> cannot excuse itself from the task of weighing conflicting evidence and drawing its own inferences and H conclusions, though it should always bear in mind that it has neither seen nor heard the witnesses, and should make due allowances in this respect.

This case was followed by the Court of Appeal in Pandya v R. [1957] E.A. 336 as was Coghlan v I Gumberland [1898]1 Ch. 704 where it was also stated:

1984 TLR p164

LUGAKINGIRA J

> there may obviously be other circumstances, quite apart from manner and demeanour, which may show A whether a statement is credible or not; and these circumstances may warrant the court in differing from the (trial) judge, even on a question of fact turning on the credibility of witnesses whom the court has not seen. B

In the case before me the trial magistrate stated emphatically that he believed PW2 and PW3. I think, however, that there were factors which, on a proper consideration, raise doubts as to the credibility of the two witnesses. First of all, PW2 was in court when the complainant testified. I am not saying C that it is in every case that a witness will be doubted when he hears the evidence of a preceding witness, but when such first mentioned witness is called to give evidence of precisely the same import as the preceding witness, it cannot be seriously suggested that his is an independent mind. D The court would therefore be bound to approach such evidence with reservations. Secondly, PW3 was an employee of the complainant. Undoubtedly, she had an interest of her own to serve and, unlike the learned trial magistrate, I cannot consider her to have been free of partiality. There E was reason to doubt her as well. Thirdly, neither PW2 nor PW3 reported the appellant anywhere either that night or at any time thereafter. In fact, PW3 escorted the complainant to the police station on route to the hospital at 5 a.m. but neither he nor the complainant himself mentioned the appellant then. Interestingly, too, not a single police officer was called to testify on this or any other aspect. F On the other hand, PW3 abandoned the complainant at the scene and silently went to sleep. Fourthly and finally, PW2 and PW3 contradicted themselves as to who, among them, was in a position to identify the assailant. The relevant portions of their evidence are very revealing and I G take the liberty to cite them. In the words of PW3:

> As Abdallah fell backward on me he left the door open and I ran to it in order to shut it and soon I saw the accused with a bush knife in her hand. I hurried to shut (it) for fear that she would do more harm to Abdallah H ....

But from PW2 we get a different impression, first, as to whether the complainant left the door open or shut upon being attacked and, second, as to who hurried to shut or open it, and who, therefore, I was in a position to see the assailant. He said:

> A I hurried to open the door to see who was the assailant and saw Pia Joseph with a panga. I immediately shut the door to avoid further attack from her.

He then added, and no less significantly:

> B Mama Wawili (i.e. PW3) was behind us and when I hurried to see who was the assailant she remained rubbing off blood on the complainant's forehead.

I think that having regard to these contradictions and the other factors stated in this connection, it C was unsafe to hold that the two witnesses were credible in their purported identification of the assailant. It is therefore difficult to uphold the finding of the trial magistrate.

The same applies to the complainant himself. As just seen he never mentioned the appellant to the D police on the very first occasion. According to his own evidence he did so four days later. Yet no reason was suggested for that four-day silence. The only reasonable inference is that he could not have identified his assailant as claimed but later picked on the appellant ostensibly because of E suspicion. I have already set out the relationship between him and the appellant. It was that of intense enmity. A dispute was actually pending before the elders. I have also indicated how earlier that morning the appellant had threatened to kill the complainant. These were factors which could F lead a person in the complainant position honestly but mistakenly to suspect the appellant. As stated in Abdallah Wendo v R. (1953) 20 EACA 166.

a witness may be honest yet mistaken, and may make erroneous assumptions particularly if he believes that G what he thinks is likely to be true must be true.

It must have been so with the complainant. He had grounds to believe that what he thought was likely to be true must be true. Yet I cannot say that he was also honest in his belief since it took him H four days weighing up the chances. There was therefore prevarication and soul searching and this, in my view, could only have been because he had not recognised or correctly recognised his assailant.

On the other hand, I cannot say that the prior threat by the appellant was not without significance. I But since threats do not necessarily materialise, I cannot say, either, that the threat in this case provided irresistible evidence. A threat made in the circumstances of this case can at best afford corroboration to other credible evidence. In Waihi v A Uganda [1908] E.A. 278 the appellant had announced his intention to kill the deceased and indeed the deceased was killed. The Court of Appeal observed that Evidence of a prior threat or of an announced intention to kill is always admissible evidence against a person B accused of murder, but its probative value varies greatly and may be very small or even amount to nothing.

The Court went on to uphold Waihi's conviction for murder because the threat corroborated other C evidence incriminating him. In the case before me there was an alibi tending to exculpate the appellant and to this I will now turn.

It was confirmed by DW2 and DW3 that indeed the appellant was at Kondoa By Night Bar from around 8.30 p.m. to sometime after midnight and that they escorted her home. The trial magistrate D disbelieved those witnesses because they appeared to contradict themselves as to what happened after they had arrived at the appellant's house. In law the accused has no obligation to prove an alibi. The burden always remains on the prosecution to prove their case beyond reasonable doubt. E The accused, if he elects to testify, is only expected to adduce such evidence as would suggest to the court that his story could possibly be true. As held by this Court in Mwakawanga v R. [1963]E.A. 6: F an accused putting forward an alibi as an answer to a charge made against him does not in law thereby assume any burden of proving that answer. It suffices to secure acquittal that the accused by such evidence as he may choose to adduce introduces into the mind of the court a doubt that is not unreasonable". G

It was similarly held by the High Court of Uganda in Sakitoleko v Uganda [1967] E.A. 531, and I agree, that: H

It is a wrong statement of the law that the burden of proving an alibi lies on the prisoner. It is the duty of a Criminal Court to direct its mind properly to any alibi set up by a prisoner; and, it is only when the court comes to the conclusion that the alibi is unsound that it would be entitled to reject it. As a general rule of law, the I burden of proving the guilt of a prisoner
1984 TLR p167
LUGAKINGIRA J
A beyond reasonable doubt never shifts whether the defence set up is an alibi or something else. That burden always rests on the prosecution."
In the instant case the trial magistrate rejected the appellant's alibi because of an immaterial B contradiction in the defence evidence. He thereby incorrectly cast upon her the burden of proving the alibi beyond reasonable doubt. I say that the contradiction was immaterial because it did not relate to the fact that the appellant had been at Kondoa By Night Bar till midnight or the fact that she C was from there escorted straight home. It related to what DW2 and DW3 did after that.
I think that this is the appropriate juncture to touch on corroboration. Corroborative evidence, as I understand it, is that which has the effect of confirming in material particulars the evidence requiring D corroboration. In the words of the Court of Appeal in Mande v R. [1965] E.A. 193 at p.199.

The corroborative evidence required is that which shows or tends to show that the story of the person whose E evidence is to be corroborated is true.....
The material particulars in this case, the evidence which required corroboration, was whether the appellant was at Kondoa By Night Bar till midnight and whether from there she went straight to bed F so as not to be in a position to commit the attack at 11 p.m. at the complainant's bar. These matters were corroborated. Without belabouring the point further, I think that a reasonable doubt had been raised for the alibi could possibly have been true. This doubt was immensely fortified by the fact G that it took the complainant four days to make up his mind as to who his assailant could have been. Had the trial magistrate directed himself in the manner I have attempted to I cannot say that he would nevertheless have found the appellant guilty of any offence.
H I was therefore of the view, which view I shared with learned counsel for the Republic, that the charge had not been proved beyond reasonable doubt and I allowed the appeal as aforesaid.
Appeal allowed.
1984 TLR p168
A
[zRPz]HENERY TIMOTHEO v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 168 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

July 10, 1984

CRIMINAL APPEAL 4 OF 1984 B

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Revision - Revision of sentence for simple theft enhanced to one of scheduled offence under Minimum Sentences Act 1972 - Magistrate revised sentence in exercise of revisionary jurisdiction - Revision based on facts privately obtained by magistrate - Whether irregularity curable. C

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted of simple theft and sentenced accordingly. Subsequently the proceeding came to the attention of a District Magistrate who purported to revise and enhance the D sentence on the basis of facts privately gathered by Magistrate which the appellant had not had an opportunity to deny or accept.

Held:(i) A conviction or sentence can only proceed on the evidence, if there is a full trial, or on the facts if there is no full trial, stated before the trial court; E

(ii) a subordinate court has no power to review its own decision;

(iii) a sentence imposed in revision is as much appealable as one imposed on appeal. F

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The appellant was before the Primary court at Ulemo in Iramba district charged with G simple theft (termed "Wizi wa Kawaida" in the charge sheet) c/s.265 of the Penal Code. It was alleged that on 1.11.83 he stole some items of clothing worth shs. 656/= the property of an unnamed village shop. He pleaded guilty to the charge. Facts were then narrated by the complainant one H Jumanne Saidi and these facts revealed that the clothes were stolen from Jumanne Saidi's house and there was no mention of any shop or any village. The appellant admitted the facts and was accordingly convicted as charged and sentenced to six months' imprisonment. That was on 8.11.83. I

Subsequently, the proceeding came to the attention of the Senior

1984 TLR p169

LUGAKINGIRA J

A District Magistrate at Kiomboi. He thought there was an error in sentencing and called for the record and proceeded to revise the proceeding. In doing so he contacted a co-operative officer and learned from him that a village known as Makunda was registered. He therefore formed the opinion B that the offence was scheduled. He proceeded to set aside the six-month sentence and substituted therefore a sentence of three years' imprisonment. The appellant appealed against that sentence. I allowed the appeal and set aside the three-year sentence and since the appellant had completed the six-month sentence, I ordered his release from custody. My reasons for doing so are C set out in this judgment.

A conviction or sentence can only proceed on the evidence, if there is a full trial, or on the facts, if there is no full trial, stated before the trial court. It cannot proceed on matters privately sought for D and found by the trial court or a higher court. As indicated above the facts stated in this case did not reveal the owner of the clothes other than Jumanne Saidi. There was no mention of any shop and there was no mention of any village. I think, therefore, that the trial court was justified in convicting and sentencing the appellant outside the provisions of the Minimum Sentences Act, E 1972. It was not open to the learned Senior District Magistrate to alter the sentence on the basis of facts privately obtained by him, which facts the appellant had not had the opportunity to accept or deny. In fact I do not know how the Senior District Magistrate came to learn that the clothes F belonged to Makunda village shop for neither the charge sheet nor the facts on record mention any village. I only learn that Makunda or Makunde village was the address of the appellant and it may well be that the Senior District Magistrate launched his investigations on that clue. In any case, he G acted on private information and by so doing an injustice was occasioned to the appellant.

I have also noticed a curious and vigorous protest by the Senior District Magistrate. In his telegram with which he forwarded the records here he states that he cannot "understand how the appeal can H be entertained by the High Court without first being dealt with by this (his) court." With respect, that view is erroneous. This was an appeal against the sentence imposed by him and it certainly was not in his power to review his own decision. A sentence imposed in revision is as much appealable as a sentence imposed on appeal. It would have been a different matter if the appellant had appealed I against the conviction as well. In that case the appeal would indeed have gone to the District Court and in deciding the appeal the District Court would not have been precluded from setting the sentence aside if it quashed the conviction. A But this being an appeal against the sentence only, it was properly brought to and entertained by this Court.

I allowed the appeal for the reasons first set out above. B

Appeal allowed.

1984 TLR p170

C

[zRPz]ONASAA SHERERENGWA MUSHI v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 170 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Lugakingira J

August 6, 1984

MISCELLANEOUS CRIMINAL CAUSE 22 OF 1984 D

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Bail application - When bail may be denied.

-Headnote

The accused, who was facing a charge of attempted murder applied for bail. It was argued on his behalf that he qualified for bail since he met the principal requirement of availability to stand trial. E The prosecution were not opposed to the application.

Held: (i) The availability of an accused to stand trial is a major, but not sole, test to be applied in considering whether or not to grant bail; a court considering to grant bail is entitled to take into F account all the circumstances pertaining to the case before exercising its discretion one way or another

(ii) the acquiescence of the prosecution is not a determining factor in a bail application and the court may decline to exercise its discretion in favour of the accused notwithstanding the attitude of G the prosecution.

Case Information

Application rejected. H

Cases referred to

1. Alibhai v R. (1943)1 TLR(R) 138
2. Sarongi v R. [1975] LRT n.58

V.D. Lyimo for the Republic I

G. Alimwike for the applicant

1984 TLR p171

LUGAKINGIRA J

[zJDz]Judgment

A Lugakingira, J.: Concerted efforts are being made to secure bail for the accused who is facing a charge of attempted murder. This is the second time in two weeks that this Court has been resorted to in this regard. The first application was made on 23.7.84 when it was alleged that the District B Court had abdicated its duty. I then ruled that the court could grant bail on suitable terms if it considered it safe and desirable to do so. That court was then approached on 26.7.84 but it declined to grant bail, albeit the prosecution's acquiescence, stating that it was neither safe nor proper to do so. That prompted the present application.

C Today, it was argued before me by Mr. Alimwike for the accused that the test to be applied in these matters is whether the accused will be available to stand his trial. He viewed all other considerations as irrelevant except the nature of the charge which he did not consider serious. He D also thought it illogical for bail to be refused when the prosecution were not opposed to it. Truly Mr. Lyimo who appeared for the Republic stated that he was not opposed to bail being granted on the grounds advanced by Mr. Alimwike. He also seemed to imply today, as he did on 23.7.84 when he also appeared, that the charge facing the accused was not a serious one. He went on to state that E he had since interviewed the investigators and they had assured him that there was no likelihood of the accused jumping bail.

I agree that whether or not an accused would be available to stand his trial is a test to be applied in considering whether or not to grant bail. However, I am also settled in my mind that that is not the F sole consideration. A court called upon to consider granting bail is entitled to take into account all the circumstances pertaining to the case before exercising its discretion one way or the other: Alibhai v R. (1943), 1 TLR(R) 138. Indeed s.123 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not purport to G influence the discretion of the courts in this matter. Further, I do not consider the acquiescence of the prosecution a decisive factor in these matters. It is certainly a factor which a court cannot ignore, but in the end the discretion whether or not to grant bail is entirely in the court and it may decline to exercise its discretion in favour of the accused notwithstanding the attitude of the H prosecution: Sarongi v R. [1975] LRT n.58. I must also say that I have found the present attitude not a little interesting. It was previously alleged in the lower court by the prosecution that there were fears that if the accused were released on bail he would escape, alternatively, that his life would be I endangered. For no apparent reason, these fears are said to have been abandoned.

1984 TLR p172
Admittedly, the allegations were not made on oath, but one cannot but recoil at the driving motives A of persons who behave as if these allegations were never made or were made in jest.
As I have said, the accused is charged with attempted murder and with the use of a gun. His victim is said to have been discharged from hospital but that does not reduce the charge to anything less. B Attempted murder is in my view a serious offence and I am impressed that anyone can hold a contrary view. If the accused were convicted the punishment is more likely than not to be severe. Nothing that has been said before me shows that he has the stoicism happily to surrender to this consequence. On the whole, the interests of justice dictate that it is neither safe nor desirable to C grant bail in this case.
Application dismissed. D
1984 TLR p172

[zRPz]BEN ZUBERI MWAMBA v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 172 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge D'Souza Ag J

September 5, 1984
CRIMINAL APPEAL 21 OF 1984 E
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Burden of proof - Corruption offences - Burden lies on prosecution to show reasonable suspicion of corruption or unlawful acquisition - Section 9(1) of the Prevention of F Corruption Act 1971.
Evidence - Hostile witness - Meaning of - Prevention of Corruption Act 1971 - Interpretation - Meaning of "may reasonably be suspected of having corruptly acquired" under section 9(1) of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1971. G
-Headnote
The appellant was charged with various offences of obtaining advantage for inadequate consideration contrary to section 6 and knowingly giving a false account in relation to property contrary to section 8 of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1971. It was alleged that the appellant who H was the Marketing Manager with the Singida Regional Trading Company, a public corporation, acquired various properties by using his position as a public officer. The trial magistrate held that he had acquired the property corruptly because he could give no satisfactory account of how he had acquired the properties. The conviction was quashed on appeal. I

1984 TLR p173

D'SOUZA Ag J

A Held: (i) To prove corruption it is not enough simply to show that the property was acquired illegally or through discreditable means because such property may not necessarily be corruptly acquired;

B (ii) failure by the accused to explain how he acquired property will not in itself justify an inference that it was corruptly acquired;

(iii) an official found in possession of property apparently disproportionate to his means may have acquired it by corruption, or in some way which is illegal or discreditable;

C (iv) before the burden of proof shifts to the defence in offences involving being in possession of property corruptly acquired there must be reasonable suspicion of corruption or unlawful acquisition;

(v) it is not every witness that gives unfavourable evidence that can be declared hostile; for a D witness to become hostile it must be shown that he prevaricates or suppresses the truth.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

E Cases referred to:

1. Teddy Lucas v R. [1977] LRT 33
2. D.P.P. v Felician Tibilikirwa [1973] E.A. 440
3. John Kichuri v R. [1978] L.R.T. n.27.

F G. Alimwike for the appellant

Mwambe for the respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

D'Souza, Ag. J.: The appellant in this case Ben Zuberi Mwamba was charged with seven counts G under the Prevention of Corruption Act 1971. He was convicted on five of these counts. He was acquitted on the fourth and sixth counts.

The particulars of the first count allege that on 19.9.81 he solicited a loan of Shs.100,000/= from one Seleman Abubakar, a person whom he knew or had reason to know was likely to be concerned in a H matter with himself as a public officer, for a consideration he knew or had reason to believe to be inadequate, contrary to s.6 of the corruption Act. On the second count he was alleged to have obtained a loan of Shs.15,000/= from the same Selemani Abubakar for a consideration which he knew I or had reason to believe to be inadequate. In the third count the particulars allege the obtaining a loan of Shs.60,000/= from one Amir Said contrary to the same section of the Corruption Act. On the fifth count he was alleged to have obtained a loan A of Shs.85,000/= from one Selemani Abubakar contrary to the provisions of s.6 of the Corruption Act. The last count alleged that he was found in possession of property reasonably suspected of having been corruptly or unlawfully acquired (contrary to s.9 (1) of the Corruption Act. The B particulars on the last count stated that he "was found to have constructed a house on plot 239 Makole in Dodoma valued at Shs.306,000/= of which value Shs.273,000/= is reasonably or otherwise unlawfully acquired."

1984 TLR p174

D'SOUZA Ag J

Before coming to the findings and conclusions of the trial magistrate I propose to briefly summarise C the evidence produced by both sides in this case.

PW.1 John Shila, an accountant with the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Tanzania, testified that his organisation sold the appellant a motor vehicle and the appellant paid a total of Shs. 160,000/= for it between 16.2.82 and 22.3.82. PW.2 Amri Saidi testified that he was a transporter at Singida and that D the appellant was his relative. He stated that he knew that the appellant was the marketing manager of Singida Regional Trading Company. His buses got diesel from various petrol stations including the Agip petrol station that was run by the Singida Regional Trading Company. He stated E that he gave the appellant a loan of Shs.60,000/=. When probed further on cross-examination by counsel for the appellant, he stated that under the arrangements made by him and the appellant for repayment of the loan he was to be paid an extra Shs.10,000/= which could be his benefit from the transaction. He stated that he could not have begged for fuel oil from the appellant as permits were F issued by the Regional Office.

PW.3 Seleman Abubakar, a transporter at Singida, testified that in August 1981 the appellant who was by then the Marketing Manager of RTC Singida, came to him for a loan of Shs.100,000/=. He G said he gave the appellant a loan of Shs.85,000/= in September 1981 and a further loan of Shs.15,000/= on 22nd March 1982. After that the proceedings read as follows:

Pros: I apply to treat the witness as hostile under s.164 of the Evidence Act. H

Court: I have seen the statement of the witness he made on 9.8.82. In the statement the witness admitted lending the accused Shs.15,000/= only out of the proposed loan of Shs.100,000/=. In court the witness says he I gave the accused

A Shs.85,000/= in 1981. This is a material departure from his earlier statement. The prosecution are granted leave to treat the witness as hostile and are hereby allowed to cross-examine him.

B Thereafter this witness told the court that on one occasion the appellant gave him a permit to get petrol. He agreed that the Shs.85,000/= were not mentioned in his statement but he said, he told the investigator of this amount. He said the investigator was apparently not satisified with his story C regarding the Shs.85,000/= because he could not produce a written record for that amount. At the end of the prosecution and defence cases the court, exercising its discretion under s.151 of the Criminal Procedure Code or s.147 (4) of the Evidence Act, and with the consent of both the prosecution and the defence, recalled PW.3 Selemani Abubakar. He testified that he had agreed with D the appellant to an interest payment of Shs.10,000/= on the loan. He stated that when there was an unusual delay in repayment he started accepting repayment in the form of bags of maize which he sold at a profit and some of which he used for himself and his family.

E PW.4 Hamidu Shabani Kimasharo testified that he was an employee of the Agip petrol station at Singida. He produced two chits written by the appellant and authorising sale of fuel to PW.2 and PW.3. The fuel was supplied and PW.2 and PW.3 paid in cash. PW.4 said they used to borrow fuel F from PW.2 and PW.3. The first chit, produced as exhibit K1 had this endorsement "Tunadaiwa lakini walipe ili baadaye tujuwane." The second chit instructed the petrol station to sell PW.2 fuel as his bus was stranded some 100 miles away without fuel.

PW.5 Alfred John Mwale, the General Manager of Singida R.T.C. testified, among other things, as to G the appellant's duties as Marketing Manager. He stated that when there was a fuel shortage the appellant and the transport officer in the Regional Development Director's office were empowered to issue permits on the basis of certain priorities that were not elaborated. He gave the appellant's H salary at Shs.60,700/= per annum. He admitted that the appellant's wife worked but he did not give further details.

PW.6 Melkiad Swela, an officer of the Anti Corruption Squad, testified on a number of aspects of the case. First that the appellant purchased a land rover from the central synod for Shs.160,000/=. That I PW.2 admitted giving a loan of Shs.60,000/= to the appellant. That PW.3 admitted giving a lona of Shs.15,000/=. The witness produced PW.3's statement as exhibit 'O'. His investigations revealed that PW.2 and PW.3 were A given permits by the appellant to enable them to obtain fuel. That he found out that the appellant had built a house on plot 239 Makole and that at his request the Regional Land Officer valued the house. The value was Shs.306,000/=. The appellant told him that he built the house from the salary B of himself and his wife and a Housing bank loan of Shs.80,000/=. He collected details of the appellant's earnings since he left school in 1971. These show that the appellant earned Shs.97,935.75 between 1971 and 1981 both years inclusive. He found out that in fact the appellant got a loan of Shs.33,000/= and not Shs.80,000/=. He found the appellant with furniture valued C Shs.27,377/=. Cross-examined by counsel for the appellant the witness said that the appellant did tell him that he had a chicken project in Dar es Salaam.

1984 TLR p176

D'SOUZA Ag J

On the loan of Shs. 85,000/= from Amiri Saidi he said: D

> I followed up on whether the Shs.85,000/= was advanced or not. I was not satisfied that the money was advanced. This was because the accused told me he sent the money to Amiri Saidi and then withdrew the E money in small amounts while Amiri Saidi said the accused took the money in one lump sum. I therefore entertained doubt whether the Shs.85,000/= was loaned or not.

He established a connection between the appellant and the witnesses PW.2 and PW.3 in so far as F purchase of petrol was concerned. He finally said that he did not include Shs.85,000/= in the statement recorded from Seleman Abubakar.

The next witness for the prosecution PW.7 Crhistostom Kuyenza, a valuer with the Ministry of G Lands at Dodoma valued the appellant's house at Makole. He found that the title deed was issued in 1975. He valued the house at 1982 construction and market costs. According to their procedures the date of completion was the relevant date for valuation. He did not question the appellant on any aspect before completing his report. He made comparative valuations of two other houses in H Dodoma.

The appellant gave sworn evidence. He denied all the charges against him. He agreed having received the loans from PW.2 and PW.3. He stated however that they were his close relatives and implied that the loans were given partly because of close family ties but not because of any I connection with his employment as marketing

1984 TLR p177

D'SOUZA Ag J

A manager of R.T.C. at Singida. He stated that despite all these factors the loans were not interest free as he had agreed with PW.2 and PW.3 that he would return the loan with interest. PW.3 was to get about 10% interest and PW.2 about 13% on the loans.

He went on to say that fuel in the Region was allocated by the Regional Scarce Commodities B Allocation Committee. Even the R.T.C. had to apply to this Committee. They used to borrow fuel from parastatals and private persons. In such circumstances when R.T.C. got fuel they used to give C priority to those people from whom fuel was borrowed. PW.2 and PW.3 were two such people who used to lend fuel to R.T.C. to enable it to make essential transport trips. Aside from the income from lawful side activities, he hired the Land Rover he bought to the Capital Development Authority who paid him Shs. 25,000/= by cheque on 13.2.84 and Shs.30,921/= on 1.3.84. He produced a receipt D issued by the Regional Agricultural Officer for Shs.3,750/= for ploughing charges and another delivery note for 30 empty gunny bags purchased from Gapex. These documents were in support of his statement that he was producing maize on his shamba. He was also a poultry keeper. In 1979 E and 1980 he made a profit of 7,000/= to 8,000/= per month from keeping broilers. He produced an order form and a receipt for payment for 200 broilers in support of his assertions.

In respect of the house at Makole in Dodoma, the appellant stated that he started construction of the same in 1973. He built the out house with his own earnings and the main house with a T.H.B. F loan. He produced a building plan dated 8.111.77 as Exhibit 9. The plan is in respect of Plot 239 Makole and has been approved by the Building Control Officer of the Capital Development Authority. The plan shows an existing building shaded in red and an unshaded proposed extension. G The appellant stated that the shaded portion was already constructed by 1975. He produced a number of receipts for building materials he bought between 1973 and 1977 to support his statement that building materials were very cheap during that period. The cost of the construction completed before 1975 he put at Shs.20,000/= and the second part he put at Shs.50,000/=. He said that the H valuation officer (PW.7) never came to him for any information regarding construction cost and date of completion of various parts of the house. Cross-examined by the prosecution, he said that his poultry project in Dar es Salaam processed about 200 chicken per month. His shamba on which he I grew maize was 25 acres in area. He admitted that in the written loan agreement with Selemani Abubakar (PW.3) no mention was made of any interest element. Asked about his written reply to a notice from the Anti Corruption Squad he said that he A was given only 24 hours to answer 62 questions and this may explain any discrepancies in the statement. The agreement with PW.2 and PW.3, he insisted, were agreements with his clan relatives.

1984 TLR p178

D'SOUZA Ag J

The appellant called five witnesses in his defence. B

DW.2 Haruna Shabani, the appellant's brother in law testified that he was a resident of Dar es Salaam. He stated that appellant first started rearing chickens at his house in two lots of 100 each. Then the appellant moved the project to his own house where he built a three roomed chicked banda. C

DW.3 Thomas Nyaulingo, a small time builder, testified that between 1973 and 1975 he built for the appellant the part of appellant's house shaded in red on Exhibit 9. He stated that by 1983 prices of building materials had gone up 300% compared to the prices in 1972 - 1975. He had used another building plan and not Exh.9. D

DW.4 Abdalla Saidi Mkoma witnessed the written agreement between PW.3 and the appellant for the loan of Shs.100,000/=. He was not present when the two negotiated terms but was only called to sign the agreement as a witness. E

DW.5 Tiba Mwamba was the appellant's wife. She testified that she worked with the NBC from 1972. She started work with a salary of Shs.350/= p.m., increasing six months later to Shs.410/= per month and in 1977 to 570/= per month. In 1978 her salary went up to 1,650/= p.m. She testified that one 1st F phase of their house they built between 1973 - 1975. Part of the labour work was done by herself and her husband. She testified in support of her husband on the poultry project at Dar es Salaam which she said was profitable. Every month they marketed 200 broilers.

DW.6 Omari Saidi Mkoma, the appellant's cousin and neighbour testified that between 1978 and G early 1981 the appellant had a poultry project at Dar es Salaam. The project had a three roomed 'banda'.

Before I conclude this review of the defence evidence, I must note that before closing the defence case, Mr. Alimwike, Counsel for the appellant, applied that the court invoke its powers under s.151 H of the Criminal Procedure Code or s.147 (4) of the Evidence Act to have PW.3 recalled for clarification of parts of his evidence. The court granted the application without indicating which provision it relied on. In so far as the application was for recall of PW.3, and not an application to call PW.3 as a defence witness, I would find that PW.3 was wrongly put down as DW.7. Whether I the court

1984 TLR p179

D'SOUZA Ag J

A granted counsel's application under s.151 of the Criminal Procedure Code or s.147 (4) of the Evidence Act it is clear that the court was in fact recalling a witness for further examination, as the sections quoted do not relate to calling of defence witnesses.

B The trial court's approach in treating courts 1, 2, 3 and 5 together cannot be faulted as the evidential requirements are more or less the same for all these counts, notwithstanding that count one was for soliciting and the other counts were for obtaining advantage without consideration or for a consideration that the appellant knew or had reason to know was inadequate.

C The trial court found that the loans involved in counts 1, 2, 3 and 5 were solicited and received. There cannot be much dispute about this as even the defence admitted soliciting and receiving the loans.

D The main issue was whether the loans were made for valuable and adequate consideration. On this issue the court said, "In his defence however the accused person showed that there was an interest of 1 per cent on the loans, and that the interest was in the form of bags of maize to be sold at a profit. Even the givers of the loans mentioned the "bags of maize" element of the loans, and each E claimed he received forty (40) bags of maize from the accused person. The accused is shown to have "paid" eighty bags of maize to the two loan givers. The court went on to note paragraph 10 of the appellant's reply to the notice served on him by the Anti Corruption Squad, in which paragraph F the appellant stated that he had a 25 acre farm that he jointly cultivated with 3 other people. The court also noted a receipt showing that the appellant had on 6.5.82 bought maize from National Milling Corporation. The court said it did not believe that the maize was bought for members of the G R.T.C. staff working with the appellant but gave no reasons for this finding. Commenting on the receipt that the appellant produced to show that he bought 30 empty gunny bags from Gapex the court said that this was not sufficient to prove that appellant in fact harvested maize. The court then made the crucial finding that the maize story was a cover up story to hide the fact that the loans were H without consideration.

Learned counsel for the appellant argued that the evidence of PW.3 Selemani Abubakar was wrongly discarded by the trial court as he was wrongly treated as a hostile witness. I find merit in this argument. PW.3 was declared hostile when he stated that he gave the appellant a loan of I Shs.15,000/= and a loan of Shs.85,000/=. The court granted the prosecution leave to treat PW.3 as hostile because in the statement PW.6 recorded from this witness, the witness said there was a loan of A Shs.15,000/= and there was no mention of a loan of Shs.85,000/=. It was held in Teddy Lucas v R. [1977] LRT 33 that not every witness that gives unfavourable evidence is hostile, for a witness may only be found to be hostile if he prevaricates or suppresses the truth in an endeavour to destroy or B damage the case of the party that called him. The same proposition is supported by Sarkar on Evidence, 11th edition, at p. 1317. In this case count five alleged that the appellant obtained a loan of Shs.85,000/= from PW.3. If then PW.3 came to court and said the same thing in that he gave a loan of Shs.85,000/= to the appellant, was PW.3 destroying the prosecution's case or building it up? C

In addition to this very basic irregularity this court finds that despite PW.6's ardent denials, PW.3 must have told him of the Shs.85,000/= loan. If he did not, what was the basis for including count No.5 in the charge sheet? D

From all this, this court finds that the court misdirected itself in declaring PW.3 as hostile and in discarding his evidence.

Both PW.2 and PW.3 testified for the prosecution. They were presented as witnesses of truth and in so far as PW.3 was wrongly declared hostile, he was also presented as a witness of truth by the E prosecution. In making its finding of fact that the loans were without valuable and adequate consideration the trial court treated the evidence of these witnesses as if it were part of the defence case. The Court was aware of the problem when it commented that, "Even the givers of the loans F mentioned the bag of maize elements of the loans." This court finds that this was an erroneous approach to the evidence as a whole as there was no basis for treating PW.2's and PW.3's evidence as if it were defence evidence. In view of the evidence of these two witnesses the finding that the loans were for a consideration that was inadequate or which the appellant had reason to believe to G be inadequate, cannot be supported.

On the 7th count the trial court found the charge proved. The particulars on this count read:

Ben Zuberi Mwamba, being a public officer, on or about the 9th day of August, 1982 in consequence of H investigations carried on pursuant to s.8 (1) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1971, was found to have constructed a house on plot 239 Makole in Dodoma valued at Shs.306,000/= of which value Shs. 273,000/= is reasonably suspected to have been corruptly or otherwise unlawfully acquired. I

1984 TLR p181

D'SOUZA Ag J

A The findings of the trial court relating to this count can be noted before they are scrutinised. The court first noted that the amount of Shs.273,000/= charged in the seventh count was the difference between the value of the house as per PW.7's valuation report and the T.H.B. loan of Shs.33,000/= B which the appellant obtained for building the house. The court then noted that PW.7 based his report from the year shown in the title deed - i.e. 1975 and went on to say, "Then he valued the whole house after valuing comparable properties in Dodoma town whose reports he produced as Exhibits V.1 and V.23. The accused person disputed the valuation report and says that he started C building the house in 1973. The accused produced a building plan dated 8/11/77 which showed that in 1977 the area shaded in red in the plan, which is about three quarters of the whole house was complete. The accused also produced receipts to show the relative cheapness of building materials D in 1977. The accused went on to show how he kept poultry while in Dar es Salaam. This poultry business is the source of extra income on the accused's part as he himself maintains.

The accused says he started building the house in 1973 but the valuer says the title deed to the E house is dated 1975. The accused did not dispute this allegation. Since the house is situated in a surveyed area the accused could not build without getting title to the plot. The accused did not say that he started construction before the plot was allocated to him, so the logical conclusion is that the accused started construction after getting title to the plot. The valuer was therefore right in using F 1975 as the base year on which his report is based. I discount the accused's allegation and that of his witnesses that he started building a house in a surveyed area two years before he got title to the land. The operative year must be the year of the title deed 1975. This is why even the plan G produced by the accused himself is dated 1977, two years after the title was issued to him. The accused could not produce any document like a building permit to show that he started construction in 1973. This is strange in this case where the land is surveyed. Since the basic year is 1975 the H valuation report reflects the correct value of the property. The court accepts the valuation report as the correct statement of the correct value of the house and not the fictitious values which had been pushed back two years before the grant of the title. The report shows that the value of the house is Shs.306,000/=. Deducting the loan from T.H.B. to the accused Shs.33,000/= this leaves Shs.273,000/= I unaccounted for. The valuer said the house had two parts: an out building which was complete and the main house which was not complete at the time of valuation. the accused and his wife said that they used their salaries A to build the house between 1973 and 1976. I have discounted this story because in 1973 there was no title to the plot so they could not have started building in 1973. If anything they should have started in 1975 after the grant of title to them. The court went on to calculate the appellant's total B earnings from his salary from 1971 to 1981 and concluded these would amount to Shs.97,935/75." Thereafter the court went on:

1984 TLR p182

D'SOUZA Ag J

Even if the accused spent the whole of his salary on the house it would not have been sufficient to build even C half the house he built. Let alone the insufficiency of the salary, the notice served on the accused showed that in 1981 and 1982 the accused had an expenditure of Shs.311,299/90. This is an average expenditure of about Shs.13,000/= per month for the period. The highest salary the accused got was Shs.5,065/= per month D before deductions, yet he spent more than twice his gross pay at certain periods!

This expenditure was over and above the amounts put in the construction of his house in Dodoma whose E visible resources were a loan of Shs.33,000/= only. The other source given by the accused is poultry keeping but in the reply to the notice the accused did not mention poultry keeping. He only mentioned his salary and that of his wife as well as a T.H.B. loan of Shs.33,000/=. The story of poultry keeping in Ilala mentioned F during the defence is an afterthought which I find not credible and hereby dismiss.

I find it proved that no satisfactory account has been given on the source of funds of building the house situated on plot 239 Makole area in Dodoma town. I find the 7th count proved and I convict G the accused as charged."

This court has endeavoured to reproduce in detail the findings and arguments of the trial court. The trial court found that the valuation report was based on 1975 as the base year. However I have been H unable to find any such statement in the evidence of PW.2. In fact what he said was, "The current market costs of construction I took as a factor in my valuation is the value as at September 1982." In Exhibit 'V' - the valuation report - the same thing appears. The report is dated 3.9.81. In the report PW.7 says, "My opinion of value is based on evidence availalble of similar properties built I

1984 TLR p183

D'SOUZA Ag J

A recently in the locality." In the next paragraph he says that the "current market cost of construction" of the house was Shs.306,000/=. There is nothing in the evidence to support the trial court's findings that the valuation was based on 1975 as the 'base' year.

B The next finding was to the effect that since the title deed was issued in 1975 then no construction could have taken place before 1975. In his initial reply to the Anti-corruption Squad the appellant stated that he started construction in 1973. The squad made a very thorough investigation in this case. I find it difficult to believe that they failed to check on the history of the C plot and the house. The trial court said that the appellant could not produce any document like a building plan, letter of offer or building permit to show that he started construction in 1973. The trial court totally failed to consider the evidence of DW.3 on this issue. DW.3 Thomas Nyaulingo stated that he built a substantial section of the house from 1973 to 1975.

D The next finding of the second court is its rejection of the appellant's story that he had a poultry keeping project. The court's reasoning on this was that because the appellant did not mention anything about poultry keeping in his reply to the notice form to Anti Corruption Squad, then the E whole story of poultry keeping mentioned in the defence was an afterthought. In paragraph 18 of Exhibit 'N' the appellant stated, "Nilikuwa nikifuga kuku kwa wastani wa kuku 600 hadi 800 kwa mwezi - banda ilikuwa nyuma ya nyumba niliyokuwa nikiishi Ilala ...." Again in paragraph 31 the appellant made the same statement and even suggested the names of two people in Dar es Salaam F who could confirm the existence of the poultry project. The basis for the court's reasoning on this issue would appear to be erroneous.

The whole case for the prosecution on count 7 was based on the valuation report. The valuer did G not take the time factor and inflation in the prices of building materials into account. To that extent I find that the valuation report, based as it is on 1982 prices, was worthless. I find that, even without taking into account the other misdirections on the evidence set out above, this destroys the very basis of the prosecution's case on count 7.

H Aside from this, this court finds that the trial court did not make any attempt to analyse the ingredients of the offence with which the appellant was charged on count 7. The crucial and final finding of the trial court was:

I I find it proved that no satisfactory account has been given of the source of funds of building the house situated on plot 239

1984 TLR p184

D'SOUZA Ag J

Makole area in Dodoma town. I find the 7th count proved ... A

The question that arises is whether s.9 (1) of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1971 creates an offence of failing to give a satisfactory account of sources of funds used to build a house or of one's wealth generally. B

The charge on the 7th count appears to be mixing up together in one count the ingredients of the offences created by s.9 (1) and s.9 (1) A of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1971, as amended by Act 23 of 1973. C

Considering that under s.9 (1)A the court can enter a conviction when the proceedings are commenced and concluded under s.9 (1),
I find that no prejudice was occasioned to the appellant in warning him of the two-pronged nature of the charge against him.
The provisions of s.9(1) were discussed at length in the case of D.P.P. vs. Felician Tibilikirwa [1973] E.A. 440 (C.A.). At page 442 of the report the Court of Appeal had this to say: D

An official found in possession of property apparently disproportionate to his means may have acquired it by corruption, or in some way which is illegal but not corrupt, or possibly in a way which, although not illegal, E might be regarded as discreditable. There must be something in the circumstances that raises a reasonable suspicion of corruption.

In the case of John Kichuri v R. [1978] L.R.T. n.27 Lugakingira Ag. Judge as he then was held that F before the burden of proof shifts to the defence in offences involving being in possession of property corruptly acquired contrary to section 9(1) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, two stages must be covered:

(a) There must be reasonable suspicion that the accused corruptly acquired or received the property found G in his possession

(b) The prosecution must adduce evidence showing that the property was acquired in circumstance suspicious of corruption. H

The same court held further that to prove the charge it is not enough to show that the property was acquired illegally or through discreditable means because such property may not necessarily be I corruptly acquired, and that failure by the accused to explain how

1984 TLR p185
D'SOUZA Ag J

A he acquired the property will not in itself justify an inference that it was corruptly acquired.

Section 9 (1) comes into effect where a public officer "may reasonably be suspected of having corruptly acquired" property and comes into effect where "the circumstances were such as to give B rise to a reasonable suspicion that the accused may have otherwise unlawfully acquired the property." There is slight difference in wording but the effect of the wording appears to throw the initial burden on the prosecution to produce evidence that the property was acquired in C circumstances that raise reasonable suspicions of corruption or unlawful acquisition.

As was envisaged in the Tibilikirwa and Kichuri cases quoted above there could be circumstances whereby the accused acquired the property by discreditable means but not necessarily corruptly or unlawfully.

D Considering the circumstances of this case the prosecution's case, taken at its best, only proved that the appellant did not give a good account of how he got some of the money he used for building his house. There was no evidence to raise suspicion of corrupt acquisition or unlawful E acquisition of the property. The prosecution's evidence amounted to saying that the appellant built a house and its value was Shs.346,000/=, assuming that that was the correct value. Since the issue was the source of the money used to build the house, this court finds that the prosecution had to lead sufficient evidence to show that there was a reason to raise a reasonable suspicion that the F same was corruptly or unlawfully acquired. No attempt was made to lead such evidence. Had PW.2 and PW.3 not testified that the loans bore interest at 10% or more, it is quite possible that the evidence of the loans could have satisfied this requirement. However as this court has found that G the loans were, on the evidence led by the prosecution, made for valuable and adequate consideration these transactions cannot be taken to raise a reasonable suspicion under s.9 (1) and s.9 (1)A. For this additional reason and because this court has found that the prosecution had failed to establish the true construction cost of the building, I find that the appellant is entitled to an H acquittal on the 7th count as well.

In the event this appeal is allowed in its entirety and the convictions, which are not supported by the Republic, are quashed and the sentences are set aside. The appellant is to be released from I prison forthwith unless otherwise lawfully held.

Appeal allowed.

1984 TLR p186

A

[zRPz]NKIRWA SUMARY v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 186 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Mwakibete J

October 28, 1984

(PC) CRIMINAL APPEAL 14 OF 1984 B

Flynote

Criminal Law - Forcible entry on land - Ingredients of the offence - Penal Code, section 85.

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted and given a conditional discharge for the offence of forcible entry into another's land. The facts established showed that he had cultivated and planted maize on disputed C land.

Held: (i) To constitute forcible entry it must be shown that the entry was in a violent manner; in the circumstances of this case this element was lacking. D

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No case referred to

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwakibete, J.: This is a 2nd appeal by one Nkirwa Sumary. He was convicted before a court of 1st E instance, at Maji ya Chai, of forcible entry c/s 85 Penal Code., as applied, and given a one year conditional discharge under s.38 (1) Penal Code. His appeal to the District Court, at Arusha, against both the conviction and sentence was dismissed. Hence this appeal. F

The allegation was that he had forcibly entered on and laid claim to the shamba, the property of one Noel Sarakikya. It is said he had cultivated it and planted maize unauthorized.

Appellant's defence was that he had cultivated a shamba which he genuinely and reasonably believed was his property by inheritence. G

Each of them then called witnesses to establish his claim over the shamba. And it happened that Noel Sarakikya had a stronger case than that of the appellant when the trial court convicted him of forcible entry. Section 85 of the Penal Code says: H

Any person who, in order to take possession thereof, enters any land or ..... in a violent manner, whether such violence consists in actual force applied to any other person or in threats on in breaking open any house or in collecting an unusual number of people, is guilty of the misdemeanour termed 'forcible entry'. I

1984 TLR p187

A So that for one to be convicted of 'forcible entry' one must be shown to have entered on the land in a violent manner, as provided in the section quoted. I have carefully gone through the proceedings before the court of 1st instance but no where is evidence of 'violence' shown in terms B of the law as above. Which means that, on the evidence, a necessary ingredient for the offence of forcible entry was lacking. The conviction was therefore lame and on the basis of this alone the same cannot be allowed to stand - it is quashed and the sentence set aside.

C There is yet another aspect of this case. The nature of the allegation and the defence thereto clearly show that the case involved a dispute over ownership of the shamba in question. That being the case, the controversy is one that ought to have been resolved by civil litigation instead of criminal proceedings. The Republic agrees with the appellant that the case was more of a civil nature D than criminal - as such it would not support the conviction. The appeal would also succed on this point.

This means that because the appellant (Nkirwa) was in occupation of the shamba when criminal proceedings were brought and he still asserts that the shamba belongs to him - Noel Sarakikya may E bring a civil action to establish ownership of the same if he so desires. Of course civil action will be unnecessary if Nkirwa abandons his claim over the shamba.

F Appeal allowed.

1984 TLR p187

G

[zRPz]SCOLASTICA PAULO v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 187 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Mushi J

April 29, 1986

H CRIMINAL APPEAL 40 OF 1984

Flynote

Criminal Law - Malicious damage to property -Uprooting of poles - No proof of damage - Whether the offence committed.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Concurrent sentences - Two sentences of fine or I imprisonment in default thereof imposed - The alternative terms of fine ordered to run concurrently - Whether proper.

1984 TLR p188
MUSHI J
-Headnote
The appellant was charged with two offences. One of them being malicious damage to property in A that she had uprooted poles planted by another person. No evidence to show damage to the poles was adduced. Following conviction on both counts the magistrate sentenced appellant to pay fines or imprisonment for six months on each count. The alternative sentences were to run concurrently. B
Held: (i) To constitute malicious damage to property there must be evidence of damage or destruction of the property;

(ii) Where a person is convicted on more than one count and the court is minded to impose a C sentence of fine or imprisonment in default, then the alternative sentences of imprisonment cannot be ordered to run concurrently, Penal Code, (Cap.20) sections 36 and 29(iii)(a).
Case Information
Appeal allowed D
No case referred to.
A. Maghwai for the Republic.
Flynote
Mushi, J.: Scolastica Paulo, the appellant, in this case, was charged with two counts. In the first E count she was charged with the offence of using abusive language c/s 89 (1) of the Penal Code. And in the second count, she was charged with malicious damage to property c/s 326 (1) of the F Penal Code. She was convicted on both counts and sentenced to a fine of shs.1000/= or six months' imprisonment in default on the first count and shs. 2000/= or six months' imprisonment on the second count. It was further ordered and I quote:- G

"In the event of failure to pay the alternative sentences of imprisonment to run concurrently".
Scolastica is appealing against both convictions and sentences imposed on her. H
Before I deal with the appeal, I wish to correct one error which was committed in sentencing the appellant. As I have quoted above, the trial court ordered that in default of payment of fines the alternative sentence was to run concurrently. This is not allowed by law. The proviso to section 36 of the Penal Code reads and I quote: I
1984 TLR p189
MUSHI J
A Provided that it shall not be lawful for a court to direct that a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of a fine shall be executed concurrently with a former sentence under section 29 (iii) (a) or with any part such sentence.
B What this section means, and it has always been the practice in the courts, is that where a person is convicted on more than one count and the court is minded to impose a sentence of fine and in default of the payment of the fine an alternative term of imprisonment is imposed, then such term of C imprisonment in default of the fine cannot be ordered to run concurrently. The order of the trial court that the sentence of imprisonment in default of fine should run concurrently is accordingly quashed.

Turning now to the appeal itself, as far as the first count is concerned, I am satisfied that the appeal D was lodged without any sufficient ground of complainant. The evidence was overhelming and those who testified were, as the learned trial magistrate found truthful and believable. There is no question at all that the appellant uttered the abusive language which was, to say the least, very vulgar. The substance of the abuse was, more likely than not calculated to cause a breach of the E peace. The sentence imposed can not be said to be excessive. The appeal on this count is dismissed in its entirety.

As regards the second count, the evidence is not cogent enough to support the conviction. The evidence on record merely states that the appellant uprooted poles worth shs.4,000/=. There is no F information as to what type of poles these were and in what manner they were uprooted and for what purposes they were erected. Furthermore and most important there is no evidence as regards in what manner the said poles were damaged. The mere fact that the appellant may have uprooted G some poles does not necessarily amount to malicious damage to those poles. Section 326(1) of Penal Code under which the appellant was charged creates an offence only when some one:

> ... wilfully and unlawfully destroys or damages any property...

H Unless it is shown that by uprooting a pole that pole was destroyed or damaged, the act will amount to a criminal offence under the section. For these reasons, the appeal in the second count is allowed. The conviction is quashed and sentence is set aside. The fine which was paid is to be refunded to the appellant.

I Appeal allowed.

1984 TLR p190

A

[zRPz]WILFRED MLANGA MAREALLE v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 190 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Arusha

Judge Chua J

August 2, 1985

CRIMINAL APPEAL 106 OF 1984

Flynote

Criminal Law - Failure to comply with a lawful order - Essential ingredients of the offence - Penal Code, B section 124.

Criminal Law - Criminal trespass - Ingredients of the offence - Penal Code, section 299(1).

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Injunction - When interim injunction granted in criminal cases - Primary C Courts Civil Procedure Rules 1974, GN 310, section 17(1)(2).

-Headnote

The appeal arose out of rival claims to a piece of land by members of the same family, as a result of which one member was alleged to have criminally trespassed on the land, maliciously damaged some D property and disobeyed a court order. The facts are set out in the following judgment:

Held: (i) An intention to annoy is the requisite mens rea for the offence of criminal trespass; E

(ii) whereas in civil proceedings an interim injunction may be issued ex-parte where the urgency of the matter precludes the possibility of serving the other party, in criminal proceedings it does not issue until an accused is formally brought before the court and charged. F

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No case referred to G

J. Shayo for the appellant

Magohe for the Republic

[zJDz]Judgment

Chua, J.: The appellant Dr. Wilfred Mlanga Marealle was charged in the District Court of Moshi as follows: H

1. Criminal trespass c/s 299 (1) (a) of the Penal Code, it having been alleged that on the 15/12/80 at Marangu Lyamrakana village he unlawfully entered into the farm of Edward David Marealle with intent to annoy. I

A 2. Malicious damage to property c/s 326 (1) of the Penal Code. He is alleged to have uprooted 15 banana plants belonging to Edward Marealle.

3. Failing to comply with a lawful order c/s 124 of the Penal Code. He allegedly failed to comply with an B injunction order issued by Marangu Primary Court in Criminal case Nos. 6/81.

The appellant was convicted in all the counts. In respect of the 1st count he was sentenced to a fine C of 2,000 Shs. or 6 months' imprisonment in default, while for the 2nd count he was sentenced to a fine of 1000 Shs. or 6 months' imprisonment in default and for the 3rd count he was sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment but the sentence was suspended for 9 months. It was also ordered that the D appellant should refrain from entering the disputed land from the 6th August 1984. The appeal is against the conviction, sentence and order of the District Court.

For a proper understanding of the case it is important to refer to its background. Both the appellant and the complainant are brothers begotten by the late Chief David Mlanga Marealle. Their mothers E were different. The late Chief David Marealle had many wives and was blessed with many children. When he died in 1962 he had bequeathed land to all his male children except Akilei who was then a baby. There was a portion of land which appeared not to have been bequeathed specifically to any child, though the complainant had been allowed by his father to graze his cattle F there. That piece of land was considered by some members of the clan to have been the rightful inheritance of Akilei while the complainant and others did not subscribe to that view. In 1968 Akilei Marealle suing through his next friend, the appellant, filed a suit in the Primary Court of Marangu G claiming for the piece of land. He lost the case. The appellant appealed to the District Court Moshi on behalf of Akilei. The District Court Moshi reversed the decision of the primary Court and awarded the land to Akilei. The complainant appealed to the High Court. The appeal was allowed H with costs. The appellant on behalf of Akilei Marealle filed a suit in the Customary Land Tribunal of Kilimanjaro Region claiming for the same land. The Tribunal ruled that the matter was res-judicata and advised the appellant to apply for leave to appeal against the decision of the High Court to the I east African Court of Appeal. The appellant did not pursue the matter further as advised.

1984 TLR p192

CHUA J

Sometime in early October 1980 Mama Monica the mother of the complainant died. On the 7/10/80 A an all male family council was convened by the chairman of the clan Mangi Mkuu Thomas Marealle II. What happened in that meeting is a matter of controversy in this case. According to the complainant, he was asked to give the disputed land to Akilei so that the wish of his mother that the B family should be reconciled be fulfilled. He however refused to release that land. On the other hand according to the appellant, Mama Monica had said before her death that she had had dreams in which her husband directed her to settle the land dispute before her death. In the funeral meeting the land question was brought up. The complainant was asked to release the land to Akilei. The C complainant agreed to release the land from that day and the appellant was appointed to build a house for Akilei and his mother by using subscriptions from family members. Pursuant to what was agreed at the family meeting, the appellant cleared the ground and started building a house. He D denied having seen the injunction order alleged to have been pasted on the building nor received such order by dispatch. He only admitted having received summons which he obeyed by going to the Primary Court Marangu. E

The crucial question which the trial court had to decide was whether the complainant agreed to give the land to Akilei. Although in his evidence the complainant denied having done so, the evidence of Benedict Marealle (P.W.3) was that the complainant agreed to give the land to Akilei and that the clan would contribute towards the cost of putting up a house there. After the agreement was F reached the male members of the clan went to the house of the complainant to brief his wife. The wife fully endorsed the decision of her husband and went on to entertain the clan members with "mbege, a traditional Chagga brew. Mangi Augstine Marealle (D.W.2) told the trial court that after the clan asked the complainant to release the land he agreed to do so. Then the clan members shook G hands with the complainant. The shaking of hands, according to the witness, was an indication that the land reverted back to the clan. I quote the exact words of the witness on this point: "the land became clan property soon after P.W.1 released it at the meeting. It was thus the duty of the H sub-committee to hand over the land to Mama Veronica (the mother of Akilei)".

Since there was controversy on what exactly was agreed on in the clan meeting I found it necessary to summon the chairman Chief Thomas Marealle II. It became necessary to summon him because I minutes purporting to have been taken at the meeting bore signatures
1984 TLR p193
CHUA J
A of all the participants except that of the Chairman and the complainant. The minutes tendered as defence Ext.1 show that the complainant agreed to give the disputed land to Mama Veronica and her children and the appellant was instructed to build a house for them out of contributions made by B clan members. Those who signed the minutes are (1) Mangi Mwitori Petro Marealle, (2) Mzee Benedict Marealle. (3) Mzee Lokila Marealle (4) Mangi Agustin Marealle (5) Ndugu Gaspar Marealle (6) The appellant (7) Ndugu Frank Marealle (8) Ndugu Alfonce Marealle and (9) Ndugu Archibald Marealle.
C In this court Chief Thomas Marealle deposed that he refused to certify the minutes partly because some important matters were omitted and partly because it was wrong for those who attended the meeting to sign them before he certified them. According to him the minutes had D omitted the fact that Edward Marealle was supposed to hand over the land to Akilei after assessment of the value of any improvements and refund of 600 Shs. incurred in prosecuting the suit, already referred to, in the High Court. Otherwise Chief Thomas Marealle was categorical that Edward Marealle had agreed to surrender the land to fulfil the wish of his mother that the clan E members should be reconciled by settling the land question which had driven a divisive wedge into the clan. On the other hand Dr. Archbald Marealle (D.W.3), who, according to Chief Thomas Marealle, was responsible for keeping the minutes, was of the view that the minutes were correctly F recorded. In this he was supported by Mangi Agustine Marealle (D.W.2) and Benedict Marealle (P.W.3) both of whom testified that what was agreed upon is what is recorded in the minutes. There is no reason why they would have signed them if they were inaccurate for there is no evidence that they are illiterate. The signatures of the other attendants, which were not challenged, would appear G to lend strength to the view that the minutes represented substantially what was agreed at the clan meeting. For ease of reference I reproduce below the contents of Defence Ext. (1).
H Mkutano ulifunguliwa mnamo saa 6.30 kwa sala iliyoongozwa na Mwenyekiti. Mwenyekiti akauelezea mkutano madhumuni ya kukutana siku hiyo ni kusahihisha tofauti iliyokuwepo kati ya baadhi ya wanandugu wa marehemu Mangi David Marealle pamoja na kumpatia Mama Foronika (sic) na watoto wake maskani yake I kwani hapo alipo sio pake.
1984 TLR p194
CHUA J
Kabla ya marehemu Mama Monica kufariki dunia, alitoa wosia wake kuwa hakupenda ugomvi uliokuwepo A kati ya baadhi ya wanandugu uendelee na ilikuwa nia yake kabla ya kuaga dunia kuleta amani katika ukoo wa Mangi Mlanga. Mkutano ulielezwa kwamba mama marehemu alikwisha agiza mbege zitayarishwe na ndizi kwa madhumuni ya kutisha pombe na kumwalika Mangi Mkuu aje kusimamia kupatanisha kwa wanandugu B hao. Kauli hii aliitoa akiwa kwenye matibabu Moshi. Bahati mbaya hakupata nafuu ya kutimiza lengo hilo.

Baada ya majadiliano marefu, juu ya kumpatia mama Foronika na jamii yake mahali pa kuishi ukoo ulikubaliana kwa pamoja kuzingatia kauli ya mama Monica na kwa kufanya hivyo ukoo ulimtaka Edward C kuzingatia kauli ya mama marehemu na ya ukoo na kutoa lile shamba ambalo ndilo chanzo cha ugomvi kati yake na baadhi ya wadogo zake. Wanandugu wote waliohusika na ugomvi huo, walipewa nafasi ya kuzungumzia kwa kirefu juu ya tofauti zao. Baada ya hapo Ndugu Edward alikubali bila ya masharti yeyote D na kwa hiari yake kutimiza kauli ya mama ya kuleta amani nyumbani na kutoa hilo shamba kwa makazi ya mama Foronika na watoto wake. Ndugu Edward alizungumzia juu ya fidia ya Shs.600/= ambazo alitumia kuhusiana na ugomvi wa shamba hili siku za nyuma. Ilikubalika kwamba arudishiwe fedha hizo kupitia E kwenye mikono ya Mwenyekiti. Mara tu baada ya tamko la Ndugu Edward, ukoo wote ulifurahi na kuamka na kushikana mikono, huku Mwenyekiti akiunganisha wanandugu waliokuwa na ugomvi. Baada ya yote haya na F amani kuja kati yetu wanandugu, Mwenyekiti alitoa hotuba fupi ya kuwashukuru wote kwa jinsi mkutano ulivyopata mafanikio ya amani ambayo kwa muda mrefu ilikuwa inatafutwa. Kabla ya kufunga mkutano Ndugu Edward alisema tangu leo shamba ni mali ya mama Foronika na watoto wake lakini alitaka ukoo umwonye aache kumnyanyasa na amtambue kwamba yeye ni mwanae na makamu wa Mwenyekiti wa mji huu. Ukoo G uliagiza kwamba:

1. Kamati ndogo iteuliwe na Mwenyekiti aende kumkabidhi ardhi huyo mama Foronika na papo hapo H aonywe pamoja na wanawe waache tabia ya kudharau ukoo.
2. Ukoo uliagiza Ndugu Wilfred Marealle atengeneze ramani ya nyumba kama anayokaa sasa na wanandugu wote wachangie ujenzi wa nyumba hiyo na Wilfred asimamie ujenzi huo na awaarifu ndugu zake. I
3. Wanandugu tuwe tunakutana mara kwa mara kuzungumzia

1984 TLR p195
CHUA J

A nafasi zetu na sio kukutana tu kwenye kilio, haswa sasa kwamba mwenyekiti wa jamii ya Baba Marehemu Mangi Mlanga yuko nyumbani.

Kabla ya kufunga mkutano, ukoo ulionelea kwamba ni vizuri kwenda nyumbani kwa Ndugu Edward na B kumweleza mke wake matokeo ya mkutano huu. Baada ya kauli hiyo Mwenyekiti akafunga mkutano yapata saa tisa mchana kwa sala.

Ndipo sote kwa pamoja tukaondoka na kwenda kwa Ndugu Edward ambapo tulikaribishwa vizuri sana na C mkewe. Mke wa Ndugu Edward alielezwa kikamilifu uamuzi na makubaliano ya mkutano wetu, nae akafurahia amani hiyo iliofikiwa na ukoo na baadae akatushika mikono wote. Tukaendelea na viburudisho nyumbani kwao.

It will be seen from the minutes as quoted above, that they conform to what Benedict Marealle, Archibald Marealle (D.W.3) and Mangi Agustine Marealle (D.W.2) stated was discussed and agreed D upon at the clan meeting. Chief Thomas Marealle agrees that in substance the complainant agreed to release the land only that he contended that there were conditions precedent before the complainant could release the land. The complainant denied having agreed to release the land at all E and thereby adopted a position that was not supported by the rest of the witnesses in the case including that of a prosecution witness. Taking into account the fact that the minutes bore 9 signatures of those who attended the meeting and no less than three witnesses said that indeed that F is substantially what was agreed upon I find that the learned trial Principal District Magistrate erred in not giving weight to what was decided by the clan by referring either to the minutes or to the oral evidence of those who attended.

G Chief Thomas Marealle opined that the title to the land did not pass to Akilei and his mother because no assessment of compensation had been made, and no handing over had been effected. In this view he is probably correct. But that is not the only way of looking at the matter. According to Mangi Agustine Marealle as soon as the complainant said he was giving the land to Mama H Veronika and her children title to the land passed to the clan which would then arrange to pass on the title at a handing over ceremony. Since the preponderance of evidence in this case established that indeed the complainant said he was handing over the land to Mama Veronica from the day of the meeting then this in my view divested him of title which passed on to the clan which was then I supposed to arrange a handing over ceremony and pass on the title to the donees.

1984 TLR p196

CHUA J

If that view is correct then by the time the appellant started clearing the land and constructing the A house the complainant no longer had title to the land, he having passed it on to the clan. If this view is wrong then by the time the appellant cleared the land and started building the house he had the express permission of the clan and the complainant in which case there was no intention to annoy. B Consequently the offence of criminal trespass was not proved at all in the absence of the requisite mens rea.

As regards the offence of malicious damage to property the prosecution had to prove that in uprooting some banana plants the appellant acted maliciously. But since it is clear from the C evidence as a whole that the appellant was an agent of the clan and the humanitarian act of building a house for Akilei and his mother inevitably involved the removal of plants, the view taken by the learned trial magistrate that he acted maliciously can hardly be supported without incurring the risk of appearing irrational. I am unable to support the conviction for malicious damage to property. D

As regards the 3rd count it was alleged that the appellant had failed to comply with an injunction issued by the Marangu Primary Court in Criminal Case No. 6/81. Three questions were crucial in this count. First whether an injunction was served on the appellant. Secondly whether he deliberately E flouted it and thirdly whether the injunction was lawful. As regards the first question Eliueter Masawe (P.W.7) the then Primary Court Magistrate at Marangu, told the District Court that on the 15/1/81 the complainant lodged a complaint to him that the appellant had trespassed on his land F despite the fact that he the complainant, had been ajudged the lawful owner of that land. On the strength of the copies of judgments and other documents which the complainant showed the magistrate, criminal case no. 6/81 was opened and an injunction issued. A copy of the order was handed over to a messenger one Oviviti Atwani (P.W.2) for posting on the building under G construction. There is evidence that the order was seen by the workers at the site but no admissible evidence to show that the appellant who lived at Moshi saw the injunction. P.W.7 said that the complaint was lodged on the 15/1/81 and the injunction was issued on the same day whereas Oviviti H said that he was handed over the injunction on the 5/1/81. Oviviti must have got confused on the dates because another messenger Eliaringa Ndeliso Keni said that he was given the original copy of the injunction on the 15/1.81 for dispatching to the appellant at Moshi.

Although the accused denied having received the order, there as evidence that he signed a dispatch I book which was tendered in

1984 TLR p197

CHUA J

A court. The entry on the dispatch book showed that what was delivered was an injunction order. The substance of the injunction order was that the appellant should desist from interfering with the disputed land and stop constructing the house he was putting up. As regards the copy of B injunction there was nothing beyond mere hearsay that he had acted contemptuously by removing it and ordering his workers to carry on with the work. No person was called to testify that he saw the appellant do that. The hear-say information apparently prompted the Primary Court Magistrate to issue a Warrant of Arrest which was not executed in time before the case was transferred to the C District Court. But since the original order was served on the appellant as shown on the dispatch book and there is evidence that by 23/1/81 the workers were still at the site the appellant can escape liability only if the injunction was not a lawful order. The question then is whether the injunction was lawful.

D The first defect with the injunction is that it was obtained through a fraud. P.W.7 stated categorically that had the complainant told him that the appellant had been allowed by the clan to build the house he would not have issued it. The second defect is that the injunction was issued in E a criminal case while it is an order issuable in a civil suit. The power of the Primary Courts to issue injunctions is spelled out under S.17 (1) (2) of the Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules (G.N. 310/64) which provides:

F An application may be made by any party at any time after a proceeding has been instituted for an injunction restraining any person from alienating, destroying, wasting, damaging or otherwise injuriously dealing with any property the subject of the proceeding.

G (2) Upon receiving an application under this rule the court may examine the applicant and if it is satisfied that grounds exist for ordering an injunction the court may make such order."

H Whereas in civil proceedings an interim injunction may be issued ex-parte where the urgency of the matter precludes the possibility of serving the other party, it is unthinkable to have an injunction issued in a criminal case before the accused is even aware of the charge against him. The Primary Court Magistrate did not in his evidence state under what provision of the Primary Court Criminal I Procedure rules he acted. I have been unable to find an enabling provision which allows a criminal court to issue an interim injunction before the accused is formally brought before it and charged. I am equally unable to find a A precedent in decided cases to support the procedure adopted. It was therefore incumbent on the learned trial magistrate to quash the injunction of the Primary Court for being illegal and find that there was no order legally binding on the appellant. B

1984 TLR p198

For the above reasons I allow the appeal in its entirety with the result that the convictions are quashed and sentences set aside. The fines should be refunded to the appellant.
The complainant should go to a civil court in case he finds it inexpedient to have the matter settled within the family. C
Appeal allowed.
1984 TLR p198
D
[zRPz]SAFINIEL CLEOPA v JOHN KADEGHE 1984 TLR 198 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Chua J

November 29, 1986
(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 16 OF 1983 E
Flynote
Probate and administration - Revocation of appointment of administrator of estate of deceased - Reasons that may justify such revocation. F
-Headnote
The appellant sought to revoke the appointment of the respondent as administrator of the estate of the deceased on the ground that he had misapplied or subjected the estate to loss or damage. It was G established on the evidence available that the administrator had underpriced some property sold and failed to account for the whereabouts of various other properties.
Held: (i) The sale of property at below the market value and failure to account for the whereabouts of H other properties in the custody of the administrator amounts to misapplication of the estate;
(ii) an administrator who misapplies the estate of the deceased or subjects it to a loss or damage is liable to make good such loss or damage. I
1984 TLR p199
CHUA J
Case Information
A Appeal allowed.
No case referred to
J.J.A. Mwale for respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
B Chua, J.: In the Primary court of Same Safiniel Cleopa filed a suit in which she sought for an order of revocation of the appointment of John Kadeghe as Administrator of the estate of the late C husband of the applicant. The Primary Court dismissed the suit. The appellant appealed to the District Court without success and now appeals to this court.

From the mass of evidence adduced at the trial it was clearly established that the respondent John Kadeghe was the brother of the deceased and that he had been appointed administrator of the D estate with the unanimous consent of the other relatives of the deceased including the appellant. It was also established that he has administered the estate since the death of the deceased in 1972. The only question which was at issue was whether he had misapplied the estate or subjected it to loss or damage.

E The most important property that caused controversy was a motor vehicle of the deceased. According to the appellant, shortly before the deceased died he had a Land Rover which was in running order. The respondent sold the Land Rover for 2000 Shs. Out of the 2000 Shs. he deposited 1000 Shs in the accounts of the children of the deceased and used the balance for their welfare. The F sale of a Land Rover for 2000 Shs is a transaction that can hardly be believed especially when it is considered that the vehicle was in running order prior to the death of the deceased. Two thousand shillings could hardly have been sufficient to buy 4 tyres with their rims. What more evidence of G misapplying the estate did the Primary Court and the District Court require?

Next there were 4 heads of modern dairy cattle which were the property of the deceased. Since by the time the deceased died there is evidence that some of them were being milked they must have H delivered. The appellant claims for these cattle. The respondent replied that the cattle had died and that he sold the skins and from the money realized gave the appellant 75 Shs. One is bound to ask what disease killed all the 4 cattle? And what is even more pertinent is what happened to the I calves? The respondent failed to give a satisfactory answer.

1984 TLR p200

CHUA J

Then the appellant referred to two houses built by the deceased at Rogai but alleged to have been A demolished by the respondent. Where did the building materials such as iron sheets go? Other properties of the deceased which appeared not to have been distributed by the respondent were a gun, a Singer sewing machine, a bed, 25 metres of chicken mesh, a sprinkler, plumbing parts, a hose B pipe and a jerry can. In my view the evidence on record showed on a balance of probability that the respondent had misapplied the estate. S.8 of the 5th Schedule of the Magistrates' Courts Act, provides:

> An administrator who misapplies the estate of the deceased or subjects it to loss or damage shall be liable to C make good such loss or damage and an administrator who occasions loss to the estate by neglecting to get in any part of the property of the deceased shall be liable to make good the amount. D

The evidence on record shows that the respondent could have been sued under the above provision. Since the applicant had only sought for revocation the court had to decide whether there was good and sufficient cause to remake the appointment under S.2 (c) of the 5th Schedule of the E Magistrates' Courts Act. In my view misapplying the estate is a good and sufficient cause.

I accordingly allow the appeal with costs. The respondent should surrender any document evidencing his appointment immediately. The appellant and or her son who is now said to be of the age of majority are at liberty to apply in the Primary Court to be appointed as administrators of the F estate jointly or severally and are at liberty to sue the respondent for the value of property he has failed to account for. G

Appeal allowed H

1984 TLR p201

A

[zRPz]HAKIMU MFAUME v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 201 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mtwara

Judge Maina J

November 1, 1984

CRIMINAL APPEAL 3 OF 1983

Flynote

B Criminal Law - Arson - Whether a previous quarrel and threat sufficient for conviction of the offence of arson.

-Headnote

The appellant had quarrelled with his wife whereof the wife ran to her father's house where the C quarrel continued. Later the appellant left his father-in-law's house threatening that he would do something harmful to his father-in-law. Shortly thereafter his father-in-law's house was ablaze. The appellant was subsequently charged and convicted of arson. On appeal:

D Held: (i) Although there may be strong suspicion against the appellant, suspicion however strong is not sufficient evidence to convict.

Case Information

E Appeal allowed.

Cases referred to:

1. Bosco & Lucas Sungura v R. [1967] HCD n. 186

[zJDz]Judgment

F Maina J.: The appellant, Hakimu Mfaume, was convicted of arson. He was sentenced to four years imprisonment. Aggrieved by the decision, he has appealed to this court.

The only evidence against the appellant was that he had quarrelled with his wife and they went G together to his wife's parents where the quarrel continued. The appellant is said to have threatened that he would do something to his father-in-law. He then left. About two hours later, his father-in-law's house was ablaze. The appellant was arrested and charged with burning the house. He denied the charge.

The learned trial magistrate held that the appellant must have burnt the house because of the earlier H threats he uttered. He cited the case of Bosco & Lucas Sungura v R. [1967] HCD n. 186. In that case the appellant had specifically threatened to set the complainant's house on fire. Shortly afterwards the house was seen on fire and the appellant was seen running away from the scene. So, I apart from the threats, there was evidence that appellant was seen at the scene running away from the burning house. In the present case, however, the appellant was not seen at the scene when the house was on fire. There may be strong A suspicion against him because of the threats he uttered. But suspicion, however, strong is not sufficient evidence to convict. Anyone may have set the complainant's house on fire, and not necessarily the appellant. The previous quarrels with the complainant should not be a basis for B convicting the appellant without any other evidence. The learned State Attorney declined to support the conviction, and for good reasons.

1984 TLR p202
This appeal is allowed. The conviction is quashed and the sentence is set aside. The appellant should be released from custody forthwith unless he is otherwise lawfully held. C
Appeal Allowed. D
1984 TLR p202
E
[zRPz]HEMEDI KANJUNJUMELE v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 202 (HC)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Nyalali CJ, Mustafa JJA and Kisanga JJA

April 6, 1985
CRIMINAL APPEAL 70 OF 1983
Flynote
Criminal Law - Uttering a false document - Permit to hold ngoma issued in contravention of an alleged quarantine - Whether the permit which was not required by law amounted to a false document in law - F Whether there was utterance as defined by section 5 of the Penal Code.
-Headnote
The appellant and seven other persons were jointly charged with the offence of disobedience of lawful order contrary to section 124 of the Penal Code. He was charged alone with another count of G uttering a false document contrary to s. 342 of the Penal Code. The seven other accused persons pleaded guilty to the first count and were accordingly convicted on their own pleas of guilty. The charge was however withdrawn in respect of the appellant upon his pleas of not guilty. It was H alleged that the appellant in his official capacity as ward secretary, issued a written permit allowing the other seven accused persons to stage an initiatory ngoma known as "muzuka" contrary to an alleged quarantine imposed over Tunduru district by the District Medical Officer to control the outbreak of cholera. The appellant was subsequently found guilty and convicted of uttering I
1984 TLR p203
MSUMI J
A false document contrary to s.342 of the Penal Code and sentenced to imprisonment for six and half months. He appealed against the conviction and sentence.

B Held:(i) For the offence of uttering a false document to be established, it must be proved that; first the document is false in material particulars about itself, that is, it must state what in fact it is not; secondly the person uttering it must know that the document he is uttering or about to utter is false; and thirdly he must utter it fraudulently, that is to say, he must utter it with a clear intention of C making the other person act to his detriment or that of persons or bodies he represents;

(ii) a document is said to be false if it purports to imitate a genuine one, that involves a comparison of two documents - a genuine one and a false one;

D (iii) in the present case the absence or presence of the foregoing stated elements depends on the determination of the following two issues viz. whether the District Medical Officer had any power under the law to declare the alleged quarantine; and, whether any permit was required under the law to stage the ngoma;

E (iv) the Infectious Disease (Infected Areas) Rules made pursuant to section 17 of the Infections Deceases Ordinance, cap. 96 of the Revised laws have the effect of conferring on the Medical Officers the power to declare quarantine over "infected areas";

(v) "infected area" is defined under section 2 of the Infectious Deceases Ordinance cap. 96 as F any area of or place in which there is, or has recently been, an occurrence of infectious disease and which has been declared by the Minister of Health by Order published in the Gazette to be an infected area for the purpose of the Infectious Disease Ordinance;

G (vi) Tunduru was not at the material time, "an infected area" for the purposes of the Infectious Disease Ordinance; therefore the purported quarantine imposed by the District Medical Officer Tunduru was not legally enforceable and its contravention does not disclose any offence known to law;

H (vii) unless it is specifically stated in a quarantine order or where there is a local by-law requiring it, there is no general law which requires a person to get a permit before he stages a ngoma, and no body can be criminally charged for failure to obtain it; therefore there is no falsity in the purported I permit issued by the appellant since in law there is no such thing as permit to stage ngoma;

1984 TLR p204

MSUMI J

(viii) for the reasons stated above there was no utterance at all as defined under section 5 of the A Penal Code and the holder of the said permit could not act upon it to his detriment;

Per Curiam:

The offence of disobedience of lawful order which the seven other accused persons were convicted B of and sentenced can only be maintained where the order was promulgated vide a specific legislation. In this case the alleged quarantine had no backing of the provisions of the Infectious Disease Ordinance hence it could not be a lawful order within the ambit of section 124 of the Penal C Code.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Cases referred to: D

1. Alley Ali and Another v Republic [1973]LRT no 43
2. Abdallah Yusufu v Republic [1976] LRT no. 57
3. Laisi Kitia v Republic Cr. App. no. 4 of 1982 (H/C Arusha) (unreported)

[zJDz]Judgment

Msumi, J.: Originally appellant was charged jointly with seven other persons with the offence of E disobedience of lawful order contrary to section 124 of the Penal Code. His co-accused were convicted on their pleas of guilty and each was sentenced to pay a fine of Shs.600/= or four months F jail in default. On the other hand consequent to appellant's plea of not guilty, prosecution decided to withdraw the allegation against him under section 86(a) of the Criminal Procedure Code. But in the same charge appellant alone stood charged with uttering false document contrary to section 342 of the Penal Code. After a full trial he was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for G 6 months. His appeal against conviction and sentence was ably prosecuted by the learned Advocate, Mr. Kumwembe.

The background which led to this case is connected to the sporadic outbreaks of cholera which are H currently prevalant all over the country. Typical of note of the proceedings recorded by this particular learned trial magistrate, there is sketchy evidence that at the material time there was cholera outbreak in Tunduru District. It is further alleged that among other measures taken to control the decease was the imposition of quarantine by the District Medical Officer. But contrary to I the alleged quarantine, the seven accused

1984 TLR p205

MSUMI J

A persons who were jointly charged with the appellant were on the material day actively engaged in initiatory ngoma locally known as a "mizuka". This conduct gave rise to the count of Disobedience of Lawful Order contrary to section 124 of the Penal Code. The record further reveals that before B staging the said ngoma the second accused, who apparently was the host, obtained from the appellant a written permit purportedly allowing him to stage the ngoma. Appellant issued that permit in his official capacity as a ward secretary of the area where the ngoma was to be held. It was the said act of the appellant of issuing the purported permit which led him to his being charged under C the provision of section 342 of the Penal Code.

A number of legal issues featured in the course of the hearing of this appeal. In this connection I feel obliged to say that the arguments of both counsels were quite salutary and legally enlightening. One of the questions which this court was invited to consider is whether appellant's conduct in law D amounted to the offence of which he was convicted. On this question the judgment of my brother Mfalila Ag. J., as he then was, in Alley Ali and Another V. Republic [1973] LRT n. 43, has been of great assistance. In his characteristic eloquence his Lordship said:

E .... The elements of the offence of uttering of false document are as follows: First the document must be false in material particulars about itself; in other words it must state what in fact it is not. Secondly, the person F uttering it must know that the document he is uttering or about to utter is false. Thirdly he must utter it fraudulently that is to say he must utter it with the clear intention of making the other person act to his detriment or that of the persons or bodies he represents.

G With respect, I entirely agree with this exposition of the law. In the present case the absence or presence of these elements or any depends on the determination of the following twin issues viz. whether the District Medical Officer had any power under the law to declare the alleged quarantine; H and secondly whether the second accused Hamisi Chidiaonga required any permit, under the law, to stage the ngoma.

Any rational answer to the first question must entail studious perusal of the Infectious Disease Ordinance, cap 96 of the Revised laws. Under section 17 the Director of Medical and Sanitary I Services with the approval of the Minister of Health is empowered to make rules for the purpose, inter alia, of "the prevention of persons entering or leaving an infected area or travelling along road of access there to and in the vicinity thereof, and A their submission to medical examination and interrogation for the purpose of preventing or checking the spread of infectious disease."

Pursuant to this provision the following rules were published vide Government Notice No. 178 of 1935. For the sake of clarity the same are hereby reproduced in full: B

THE INFECTIOUS DISEASE (INFECTED AREAS) RULES

1. These Rules may be cited as the Infectious Decease (Infected Areas) Rules. C

2. Any person entering or leaving an infected area may be required to stop and submit himself to such inquiries or inspection by a medical officer or any person authorized by him in writing in that behalf as D may be necessary to prevent and check the spread of infectious disease.

3. A Medical Officer or anyone duly authorized by him as aforesaid may establish examination posts on E any road in or leading to an infected area and may refuse to permit any person to pass an examination post unless and until he has submitted to inspection and has satisfactorily answered any questions that may properly be put to him for the purpose of obtaining information to assist in preventing and checking F the spread of infectious disease.

4. A Medical Officer or anyone duly authorized by him as aforesaid may require any vehicle entering or leaving an infected area to stop and may call upon any persons riding there one to quit the vehicle for G the purpose of submitting themselves to interrogation and inspection".

It is respectfully submitted that the practical effect of these rules is to confer on Medical Officers the H power to declare quarantine in their respective areas. It is further submitted that the wide definition of the term "Medical Officer of Health" given under section of the Ordinance includes a District Medical Officer. But such declaration of quarantine can only be made over an "infected area" which is defined under section 2 as: I

A any area of or place in which there is, or has recently been, an occurrence of infectious disease, and which has been declared by the Minister of Health by order published in the Gazette to be an infected area for the purpose of this Ordinance (the emphasis is mine).

B Through my research, which is limited to the scant number of books and statutes available here, I could only trace four such orders published between 1949 and 1965. And none of these Orders C included any portion of this region i.e Mtwara, Lindi and Ruvuma. Thus as far as my research is concerned Tunduru is not an "infected area" for the purpose of the Infectious Disease Ordinance. The purported quarantine imposed by the District Medical Officer Tunduru was therefore not legally enforceable. Its contravention does not disclose any offence known in law. Admittedly the spirit D behind the declaration of the said guarantine was quite noble. I don't pretend to be unaware of mortality caused by such infectious disease as cholera. In the absence of better expression, these diseases are inherently lethal. However, this fact does not overrule the trite legal principle that all E offences are creatures of statutes and where they are not so created, whatever our feeling or wishes might be, it is not within the power of the court to emulate the legislature.

With this finding, the question whether there was any requirement, under the law, to get a permit before one staged a ngoma must get a negative reply. Unless it is specifically stated in a quarantine F order, there is no general law which requires a person to get a permit before he stages a ngoma. I am aware of the general practice prevailing all over the country whereby people seek permission from the respective party branch offices and police stations before they hold any functions which G involves the gathering of people. But except where it is backed by a local by-law, such practices do not have the force of law. Nobody can be criminally charged for failure to observe it.

From the above finding it follows that per se there is no falsity in the purported permit issued by the H appellant. Strictly speaking a document is said to be false if it purports to imitate a genuine one. It invariably involves a comparison of two documents -a genuine one and false one. Thus in this case it is absurd to regard the permit in question as false when in law there is no such a thing as permit to stage a ngoma. The purported permit issued by the appellant is actually what it is. It does not I contain falsity about itself. And for that same reason I am doubtful if there was any utterance at all as defined under section 5 of the Penal Code. Legally the holder of the said permit could not act upon A it to his detriment. As I said, there was no need for him to get a permit before he staged the ngoma. His possession of the permit in question did not prejudice him.

As noted at the beginning of this judgment, the other seven accused persons were convicted of B Disobedience of Lawful Order contrary to section 124 of the Penal Code. This provision has been a subject for discussion in a number of decisions of this court. The general consensus is that for an order to be lawful it must have been promulgated vide a specific legislation. In Abdallah Yusufu v C Republic [1976] LRT n. 57, Kisanga, J., as he then was, had the following to say

That section 124 of the Penal Code should be restrictively construed so as to include only those orders, D warrants or commands which have the backing of specific legislation. In other words to prove a charge under section 124 it must be shown that the order, warrant or command which is said to have been disobeyed was made pursuant to specific legislation which confers on a public officer or official the power to issue it. E

Similar observation was made by D'Souza Ag. J. in Laisi Kitia v Republic Cr. App. No. 4 of 1982, Arusha Registry (Unreported). As we have already seen, in this case the alleged quarantine had no F backing of the provisions of Infectious Disease Ordinance. Hence the same could not be a lawful order and thus it is outside the ambit of section 124. The convictions of all accused is therefore faulty.

In conclusion this appeal is allowed; conviction is quashed and sentence set aside. Since appellant G has already served the sentence of 6 months imprisonment, I decline to order for his release. And in the exercise of revisional power, I quashed convictions against the remaining seven accused persons and order that each of them should be refunded his Shs.600/= which he had paid as fine. H

Appeal Allowed.

1984 TLR p209

A

[zRPz]MAHERI MARUGU v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 209 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Katiti J

August 10, 1984

CRIMINAL CASE 85 OF 1983

Flynote

B Criminal Practice and Procedure - Adjournment - Courts powers to adjourn cases under s.201 of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20 - Discretion must be exercised judicially and not arbitrarily.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Trial - Trial in absentia - Whether a subordinate court can proceed with C trial in the absence of the accused where after closure of prosecution's case the accused fails to appear at the date fixed for his defence.

-Headnote

D The appellant was charged and convicted in absentia of cattle theft and sentenced to seven years imprisonment. The trial began on 27 April 1982 and on 15 June 1982 the prosecution closed its case but the appellant was not required to make his defence as provided for under s.206 of Cap. 20. The case was adjourned for unspecified reasons and from this point the case underwent several E mentions and adjournments until the appellant lost co-ordination with the court in the consequence of which he failed to appear for his defence and at the judgment day. The appellant who was out on bail just found himself re-arrested and sent to prison to serve a seven year prison sentence. He appealed.

F Held: (i) While the trial magistrate has discretion under s.201 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Cap. 20 to adjourn cases before and during hearing, the application of this discretion must be done judicially and not arbitrarily;

G (ii) before a subordinate court may proceed under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code to dispose the case in accordance with provisions of s.210 of the Code, two co-existing conditions must be satisfied, namely: the accused must have failed to appear on the date fixed for continuation H of hearing after closure of the prosecution's case with notice of such hearing date, and the trial court must also be satisfied that the accused cannot be secured without undue delay or expense.

Case Information

I Order accordingly.

No case referred to.

1984 TLR p210

KATITI J

[zJDz]Judgment

Katiti, J.: Maheri Marugu, who was before Mugumu District Court, charged as 2nd accused, was A finally found guilty and convicted, in absentia, of cattle theft, and sentenced to seven years imprisonment. Arrested, days after he was sentenced, the same Maheri Marugu was escorted straight to prison. Failing to comprehend as to what this was all about, he has appealed bitterly B complaining as to how he could be imprisoned without being accorded opportunity to defend himself, and to hear judgment against him being pronounced, and hence this appeal.

It may not be easy for anyone to appreciate the appellant's bitterness, unless circumstances C pertaining to the trial are recapitulated. This I shall hereafter do. The appellant having been arraigned on 10/12/1981, the prosecution began adducing evidence on 27/4/1982. On the 15/6/1982, the prosecution closed its case, and without the administration of Section 206 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and for reasons unrecorded, the case was adjourned to 10/7/1982 for defence, but D mentioned on 30/6/192, although the appellant had been released on bail, as from 25/3/1982. The record is unambiguous, that, although the appellant was supposed to defend himself on 10/7/1982, the case came up for mention on 30/6/1982, when the case for ungiven reason was again adjourned E for defence to 15/7/1982, and not on 10/7/1982, a date that had hitherto before been fixed for defence. On 15/7/1982 the appellant was not present, but because the prosecutor had no case file, the case was adjourned again to 22/7/1982 for defence.

But again, for reasons that are on record not apparent, the record was never touched till 24/7/1982, F when the appellant mysteriously found himself present, on his own initiative. The record is again silent as to why, but it was again adjourned to 20/9/1982, and subsequently to 7/10/1982 and 25/10/1982 respectively for defence. Unfortunately, when the appellant failed to appear on G 25/10/1982, the case was adjourned to 2/11/1982 for Judgment, which was in fact delivered on 4/11/1982, without the appellant making his defence, and in absentia of the appellant.

The appellant has appealed. In this case, two aspects remarkably activate my reaction. The first H aspect, is the number of adjournments, to whose unexplained monotony, the appellant finally succumbed, and failed to appear. Apart from the thirteen adjournments that preceded the trial, the appellant also suffered further martyrdom at the instance of eight more adjournments. From the record, even where and when the appellant was present, the trial magistrate, did for no recorded I reasons adjourn the case, and this he did many

1984 TLR p211

KATITI J

A times. I would like it inculcated, that while a trial magistrate has discretion to adjourn a case before ordering a hearing of the same - see section 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20, the application of such discretion must be done judicially, and not arbitrarily. In this case the trial B magistrate adjourned the case, so often and so arbitrarily, not bothering to give reasons why, and not caring to be considerate to the appellant, an approach which is very injudicious. After all, an accused person, innocent till proved guilty, like any other citizen, to sustain life, may have his shamba to cultivate, his business to perform, his office to run, and when arbitrary and frequent C adjournments, make the execution or performance of the above impossible, room is coincidentally created for such accused to default in appearance, and the court involved cannot escape blame. It is in my opinion not irrelevant to point out, that such arbitrary and frequent adjournments generate D disenchantment with the Court system on the part of accused, and further provokes boomerang effect to the Courts, by eroding the respect and confidence the public in general and the accused in particular, may have had in the said courts. In this case, while the appellant may have technically defaulted in appearance, the trial magistrate cannot hold himself blameless.

E As aforementioned, the conviction and sentencing of the appellant in absentia demands a Judicial touch by this court. The record speaks and so does loudly, that, the appellant defaulted in appearance after the closure of the prosecution's case. This being undoubtedly the case of course F without prejudice to my reservations expressed above, the provisions of section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20, are inapplicable, as, though the appellant was absent, the court could not proceed with further hearing, as such further hearing, could in the circumstances of this case only be possible, the prosecution having closed its case, if the appellant was present and G elected to defend himself. I am therefore, without the citation of authority under which the magistrate proceeded, left to presume, that, the magistrate must have applied the provisions of section 202 A of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap 20, to convict and sentence the appellant, H notwithstanding his absence.

I am only naggingly worried by the persistent question, whether, if the trial magistrate had, the provisions of Section 202 A of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap 20 in mind, he properly applied the same. It is perhaps not untimely to delve into how these provisions should apply, and finally see if I they actually were so properly applied. The provisions of section 202 A of the Criminal Procedure Code

1984 TLR p212

KATITI J

Cap 20, in so far as they are applicable to the circumstances of this case, are in effect saying that, A where an accused person being tried by a subordinate Court, does not appear on a date for continuation of hearing, after the closure of the prosecution's case, the Court may, if it is satisfied that the accused's attendance, cannot be secured without undue delay or expense, proceed to B dispose of the case, in accordance with the provisions of section 210 of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap 20, as if the accused being present, has failed or refused to defend himself. As I see, these provisions introduce an element or point of departure, whereby an accused may in given circumstances be convicted in his absence. That being the case, principles of natural Justice being C in danger, it seems necessary that conditions precedent for the conviction of the accused under section 202 A of the Criminal Procedure Code in his absence must strictly be adhered to. After giving the thorough and deserving consideration to the provisions of section 202 A of the Criminal D Procedure Code Cap 20, it seems to me that two conditions precedent, must be present and co-existing, before a Subordinate trial Court, proceeds under section 202 A of the Criminal Procedure Code in the absence of the accused, to dispose of the case in accordance with the provisions of section 210 of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap 20 - they are in my view as follows: E

(1) The accused must have failed to appear on a date fixed for continuation of hearing after the closure of the prosecution's case; with notice of such hearing date and F

(2) The trial Court must also be satisfied that the accused cannot be secured without undue delay or expense.

Normally, while a trial Court may easily know that, the accused has not appeared on a date fixed for G continuation of hearing, after the closure of the prosecution's case, the same Court has no way of satisfying itself, that the accused's attendance cannot be secured without undue delay or expense, unless the same trial Court takes Judicial steps, from which deduction or conclusion, that, the H accused cannot be secured without undue delay or expense may reasonably be made. Two twin approaches are normally made. One, a warrant of arrest is normally issued, and the impossibility to execute the same, may provide ground for the trial Court to reasonably conclude that the accused may not be secured without undue delay or expense. In addition to the issuing of warrant of arrest I or in the alternative to

1984 TLR p213

A the same, the accused's surety, if any, in the course of showing cause why his cognisance should not be forfeited, may shed light on the where abouts of the accused person, so that the trial court is in a position to make a Judicial conclusion, that the accused cannot be secured without B undue delay or expense. In this regard the trial court must apply a Judicial approach to avoid the danger of lightly condemning the accused unheard a violation of principle of natural Justice.

In this case, the trial magistrate never directed himself on the above two conditions precedent. The C trial magistrate never issued any warrant of arrest, nor was the surety summoned at all. Under such circumstances, it is not easy to tell, that, the trial Court put itself in a position to be satisfied that the accused could not be secured without undue delay or expense. Under the circumstances above shown, and with the prudence that must accompany the application of the provisions of D section 202 A of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap 20, I find it unsafe to uphold this conviction. The same said conviction is hereby set aside, and it is ordered that the trial Court resume the trial where it had ended to convict him and proceed as provided by Section 206 of the Criminal Procedure Code E Cap 20. The appellant is hereby, to be released from prison, and may, if circumstances so warrant be released on bail, by trial Court, on such terms as it thinks adequate.

F Order accordingly.

1984 TLR p213

G

[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v JOACHIM KOMBA 1984 TLR 213 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mtwara
Judge Msumi J

October 9, 1985

H CRIMINAL APPEAL 91 OF 1983

Flynote

Criminal Law - Recent possession doctrine - Whether applies to cover all penal offences including murder.

Criminal Law - Recent Possession - whether 8 months is recent enough to justify the application of the I doctrine where the article in question is a radio cassette.

1984 TLR p214

MSUMI J

-Headnote

The respondent was originally charged with burglary contrary to section 294(1) of the Penal Code A and stealing contrary to section 265 of the Penal code. He was found in possession of a radio cassette which had been stolen some eight months earlier together with some household goods from complainant's house which had been burgled. The trial court acquitted the accused on the charge of burglary but convicted him of stealing and subsequently discharged him conditionally under B section 38(1) of the Penal Code. The Republic was dissatisfied with the decision hence the present appeal.

Held: (i) The doctrine of recent possession provides that if a person is found in possession of C recently stolen property and gives no explanation depending on the circumstances of the case, the court may legitimately infer that he is a thief, a breaker or a guilty receiver;

(ii) an inference under the doctrine of recent possession may be drawn to uphold any offence D however penal it may be including the offence of murder;

(iii) there is no general principle for determining the period of time which is recent enough to justify the application of the doctrine of recent possession;

(iv) in the circumstances of this case, eight months after the disappearance of the said stolen E radio cassette is too long for the doctrine of recent possession to be invoked.

(v) when the respondent came into possession of the said radio cassette he knew that it was a stolen property therefore he is found guilty in the alternative receiving stolen property contrary to F section 311(1) of the Penal Code.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Cases Referred to:

1. R. v Bakari Abdallah (1949) 16 E.A.C.A. 84 G
2. Bulala Mabubu v.R. Cr. App. no. 360 of 1977 H/C Mwanza.
3. Shabani Juma v R. [1953] 20 E.A.C.A. 199
4. William Maziku v.R. [1970] H.C.D. 174

Kaduri for the Republic H

[zJDz]Judgment

Msumi, J.: In the District Court of Songea respondent was charged with burglary contrary to section 294(1) of the Penal Code and stealing contrary to section 265 of the Penal Code. After full trial he was acquitted on the first count and convicted on the second count. And invoking the provisions I of

1984 TLR p215

MSUMI J

A section 38(1) of the Penal Code, the trial magistrate discharged the respondent on condition that he did not commit any offence of similar nature within the period of eight months. The Republic is dissatisfied with the said acquittal and conditional discharge hence the present appeal.

B Prosecution relied on the doctrine of recent possession in proving its case. From the totality of the testimonies of the five witnesses who compose the prosecution case the following facts have been sufficiently established. First it is evident that the house of the complainant one Willigis Haule C (PW1) was burgled on the night of 29th January, 1982. On that day complainant had locked his house and went out for a short stroll. When he returned he found it broken into and a number of household items, including one radio cassette, missing. The matter was promptly reported to police station.

D Another established fact is that sometimes in or about August 1982, the alleged stolen radio cassette was found in the possession of the respondent. It is on record that respondent first sold the said radio cassette to Longinus Nchimbi (PW2) for shs.2,100/=. However, the sale had to be revoked after respondent had failed to furnish PW2 with the original cash receipt for the radio E cassette in question. The alleged abortive sale transaction was conducted by Mussa Bakari (PW3) on behalf of PW2. Then sometimes at the end of August, 1982 respondent approached Daniel Mbawala (PW4) and offered him the radio cassette in question for shs.2,100/=. But after some bargain, respondent agreed to sell it for shs.1,700/= out of which PW4 paid shs.1,600/= remaining the F balance of shs.100/=. This sale was witnessed by respondent's village mate one Cosmas Nyika (PW5). When respondent was arrested the radio cassette was with the said buyer (PW4).

G When acquitting the respondent of burglary the learned trial district magistrate gave quite a startling argument. He said:

.... Other five public witnesses did not say anything about the accused person for the first count to break the house of the complainant. It is illegal to convict any accused person from (sic) the suspicion evidence like the i H nstant case ....There is no any public witness who saw or witnessed the accused person breaking the house of the complainant on 29.1.82.

I I find it hard to believe that the learned trial magistrate is ignorant of the doctrine of recent possession. It is clear from the evidence that respondent was found in possession of part of the property stolen from the complainant when his house was burgled. This was about eight months after the A commission of the said offence. Briefly the doctrine provides that if a person is found in possession of property recently stolen and gives no explanation, depending on the circumstances of the case, the court may legitimately infer that he is a thief, a breaker or a guilty receiver. Such inference may B be drawn to uphold any offence however penal it may be. Thus in R. v Bakari s/o Abdallah [1949] 16 EACA 84 it was observed:

that cases often arise which possession by an accused person of property proved to have been very recently C stolen has been held not only to support a presumption of burglary or of breaking and entering but of murder as well, and if all circumstances of a case point to no other reasonable conclusion the presumption can extend to any change however penal. D

Thus it is wrong, as the learned trial magistrate appears to think, because there was no witness who claimed to have seen the respondent breaking into the house of the complainant it necessarily mean that the first count of burglary could not be upheld. There is ample evidence which was quite rightly E believed by learned trial magistrate that respondent was found in possession of the stolen radio cassette about eight months after the commission of the burglary in question. Respondent did not offer any explanation, let alone a reasonable explanation, how he came to possess the same. Instead he just denied to have anything to do with the said radio cassette. It would appear that the learned F trial magistrate was not impressed by this denial hence this explains his convicting him of stealing the radio cassette in question. Now if the learned trial magistrate was convinced, and quite justifiably so, that respondent stole the said radio cassette, and since the said radio cassette was G stolen after the house of the complainant was burgled, it is logically and legally imperative that respondent should be held the burglar of the said house. Respondent could not be held responsible for the theft of the said radio cassette and on the same breath clear him of the burglary which occasioned theft in question. H

Perhaps respondent could have been acquitted of both offences and in substitute convict him of receiving stolen property contrary to section 311(1) of the Penal Code. The question is whether the period of about eight months which elapsed from the commission of the said burglary and stealing I to the time when respondent was found in possession of the radio cassette in question is recent enough

MSUMI J

A to justify an inference that respondent is the actual burglar and thief. There is no general rule in determining this question. My learned brother Katiti, J was audibly clear when he remarked, in Bulale s/o Mabubu v R. Cr. App. No. 360 of 1977, Mwanza. Registry:

B ... But as to what time is near enough to be recent, no acceptable general rule can be given, for the period within which the presumption can operate will vary according to the nature of the properly stolen, for even two months for articles that can easily change hands were not sufficiently recent to raise a strong C presumption against the accused in Shabani s/o Juma v.R. (1953) 20 EACA 199, and yet three weeks were sufficiently recent in the case of possession of stolen radio in the case of William Maziku v R. [1970] HCD 174.

D I am of the opinion that taking into account the nature of the alleged stolen property - a radio cassette - I think eight months are too long for the doctrine to be invoked. It is quite possible that during this period the said radio cassette might have changed hands. Hence the only irresistible E inference is that respondent is a guilty receiver. When he came into possession of the said radio cassette respondent knew that it was a stolen property. He could not have been an innocent receiver. Hence accordingly respondent is acquitted on both counts but in the alternative he is found guilty and convicted of receiving stolen property contrary to section 311(1) of the Penal Code. F Because of this holding I find it not necessary to say anything on propriety of the trial magistrate's order of discharging the respondent conditionally under section 38(1) of the Penal Code. In conclusion this appeal is allowed.

G The trial court's findings are quashed and in substitute accused is found guilty and convicted of receiving stolen property contrary to section 311(1) of the Penal Code.

H Appeal allowed.

1984 TLR p218

A

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v NURU MASUDI MGAWE 1984 TLR 218 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Bahati J

CRIMINAL REVISION 5 OF 1984 B

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Withdrawal of charge - Prosecution applies to withdraw charge u/s. 86(a) Criminal Procedure Code - Court refuses consent to withdraw instead discharges accused u/s. 201 - Whether proper. C

-Headnote

The respondent was charged with causing death through dangerous driving c/ss. 40(8) and 63(2)(a) of the Road Traffic Act. After the case had dragged for one year and nine months the prosecution applied to withdraw the case under s. 86(a) of the Criminal Procedure Code. The court refused its D consent to withdraw the case instead discharged the accused under section 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code. During the revision proceedings the court considered whether the subordinate court acted within its powers.

Held: (i) Section 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code under which the trial magistrate purported to E dismiss the case and discharge the accused was the wrong section;

(ii) the error in citing the wrong section did not occasion any failure of justice and was curable under s. 346 of the criminal Procedure Code; F

(iii) if there is no evidence led in support of the charge then the presiding magistrate has no alternative but to dismiss the charge and acquit the accused person under section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code because failure to adduce evidence implies that the accused has no case to answer; G

(iv) the District Court exercised its discretion judiciously to refuse consent to the prosecution's application to withdraw the case;

(v) where the court refuses to adjourn a case under s.201 of the Criminal Procedure Code then s. 205 automatically applies. H

Case Information

Order accordingly

Cases referred to:

1. R. v Kanji Kotecha [1976] LRT n.41 I
2. R. v Cleophas Katiti [1977] LRT n. 19

1984 TLR p219

BAHATI J

A 3. DPP v Mienda [1978] LRT n. 64

4. R. v Murinda and others [1971] H.C.D. n. 445

Nzali and Rutashobya for the Republic

B Kapinga for the Respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

Bahati, J.: This is a revision case. After one Jumanne Maneno Hangai had written to the court complaining about the district court's order of discharging Nuru Masudi Mgawe the respondent in this revision proceeding, this court called for the District Court's case file for the purpose of C revision. The Director of Public Prosecutions was served with a notice of hearing of this revision.

Mrs. Nzali learned State Attorney appeared on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions and Masudi Mgawe the respondent who was the accused person in the District Court case was served D as well and he appeared in person.

Mrs. Nzali submitted that the case at hand originated from Kivukoni District Court where the respondent was charged with causing death through dangerous driving contrary to section 40(1) E and 63(2) (a) of the Road Traffic Act. The case came to court on 15th November, 1981 for the first time. Then it was adjourned on a number of occasions either due to absence of the accused or because there was no Police Case file or because there were no witnesses. The case was never heard until on 12th August, 1983. The Prosecution applied to withdraw the charge under section F 86(a) of the Criminal Procedure Code. But the trial Magistrate refused the prosecution's consent to withdraw u/s 86(a). The learned trial Magistrate argued that the case had been adjourned many times for lack of the Police case file and that the accused would not be free if discharged u/s 86(a) of G the Criminal Procedure Code because he would be waiting for a trial if the Police file was found. The learned Magistrate discharged the accused u/s 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Mrs. Nzali went on to submit that section 201 did not empower the Magistrate to discharge an accused person. The section only gives power to a subordinate court to grant or refuse adjournment. In this case the Prosecution was not applying for adjournment but for withdrawal. She cited R. v Kanji Kotecha [1976] LRT n.41 which held that section 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code gives a discretion to a H subordinate court to grant or refuse adjournment. Once an adjournment is refused then evidence I must be led in support of the case. Failure to do so gives the trial court power to dismiss the charge and acquit the accused under section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code. She went on to submit that unless a case is withdrawn A by the Prosecution the trial court has no power to dismiss the case for lack of prosecution. She cited R. v Cleophas Kateti [1977] LRT 19 where Lugakingira, Judge held that unless withdrawn by Prosecution a court has no power to dismiss a case for want of prosecution. She submitted further B that the accused had a hand to play in the delay of this case and she prayed that the case be withdrawn u/s 86(a) of the criminal Procedure Code as originally applied for.

The respondent sought for an adjournment to engage an advocate and on the resumed hearing of the case Mr. Kapinga learned counsel for the respondent submitted that the respondent was C brought to court on 15th November, 1981 and he was set free by the court on 12th August, 1983 - a year and 9 months later. Investigations were completed by 15th December, 1981 and on 15th December, 1981 a hearing date was fixed. Yet the record does not show any application for witness D summonses by the Prosecution for the entire period of one year and 9 months. The reason advanced by the Prosecution for failure to proceed with the hearing was that they could not trace their Police file. Even the relatives of the deceased who moved the court to revise this case did not E do so until 2 years and 6 months had passed since the respondent was first charged. Mr. Kapinga went on to submit further that the case had a sad picture of inefficiency and lack of interest on the part of the Prosecution. The Public Prosecutor applied to withdraw the case u/s 86(a) for failure to trace the Police file. The respondent was set free under section 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code. F The Prosecution requires consent of the court in order to withdraw from prosecution of any person. In this case consent was denied and also adjournment was refused by necessary implication The Republic failed to adduce any evidence at all to prove the charge, and the only G alternative left to the Magistrate was to set free the respondent and acquit him u/s 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Mr. Kapinga referred to Kanji Kotecha's case cited by the learned State Attorney above. Mr. Kapinga argued that the trial court had no alternative but to acquit the respondent. Alternatively, by acquitting the respondent the trial court exercised its discretion H judicially and that there was no failure of justice. The court considered the gravity of the offence in its ruling and it also considered how the relatives of the deceased would feel if respondent were set free without trial. The Magistrate blamed the Prosecution for failure to proceed with the case. The I Magistrate considered also the respondent in this

1984 TLR p221

BAHATI J

A case, how he would suffer psychologically if the charge was left still hanging on his neck. In the interest of justice he acquitted the respondent. Mr. Kapinga submitted further that the trial Magistrate had inherent power to do so. He cited DPP v Mienda [1978] LRT n.64 where it was B stated that justice should not be defeated on account of the inefficiency of Police, Prosecutor or the court. Mr. Kapinga submitted also that there was nothing to show by way of affidavit that the Police file or anything else of the Prosecution which delayed the prosecution of this case has been found. It would be unjust for the respondent to go back to the District Court for an indefinite period. C It was in the interest of justice that cases ended as soon as possible. Mr. Kapinga conceded that section 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code as applied by the trial Magistrate was wrong. But, he submitted, this error was curable under section 346 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The only D question was whether the order of the Magistrate had occasioned any failure of justice. He submitted that justice had been done here and he urged the court to equally do justice.

In a brief reply, Mr. Rutashobya learned State Attorney submitted that Kanji Kotecha's case cited by Mrs. Nzali and Mr. Kapinga was not relevant in this case because it related to an acquittal under E section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In this case the trial Magistrate applied section 201 to acquit. Mr. Rutashobya went on to submit that section 86(a) of the Criminal Procedure Code was not meant to be used with a view of giving the accused the right not to be harassed again. The F Public Prosecutor was not asking for an adjournment but to withdraw under section 86(a) and instead of considering the application the trial Magistrate imported irrelevant considerations in the case and then he made the error of exercising the powers under section 205 of the criminal Procedure G Code and purported to use them under section 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code. He pointed out that the fact that he was appearing in this revision case clearly showed that the Republic was interested in the matter and that it would be a very bad precedent if what the trial court did was to be endorsed by this court, for if trial courts could do as what was done in this case it would make it H impossible for the prosecution to use section 86(a) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

After careful perusal of the district court case file and after hearing the parties in this revision, I am satisfied that the Prosecution was to blame for the delay in the finalization of this case. There was I certainly inordinate delay in finalising the case. The question which comes to mind is whether the district court had power to dismiss the charge and acquit the respondent under any section of the Criminal Procedure Code. I should, A perhaps , state here that section 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code under which the learned trial Magistrate purported to dismiss the case and discharge the respondent is the wrong section. It is even conceded by the counsel for the respondent that this section is for the discretion of the court B to adjourn a case which had come for hearing. It has nothing to do with the dismissal of a case and discharge of an accused person. Sections which deal with dismissal of the charge and acquittal of accused or simply acquittal of accused are sections 198, 202 and 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 198 refers to a situation where the complainant does not appear at the hearing. It C empowers the court to dismiss the charge and acquit the accused person. Section 200 applies when the complainant is permitted by the court to withdraw his complaint. It empowers the court to acquit the accused after allowing the withdrawal of the complaint. Section 202 applies where the D complainant does not appear at an adjourned hearing of a case. It empowers the court to dismiss the charge and acquit the accused. And section 205 applies where there is no case to answer. It empowers the court to dismiss the charge and acquit the accused person. E

1984 TLR p222

BAHATI J

In the present case there was an application by the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from the prosecution of the accused u/s 86(a) of the Criminal Procedure Code because the Police case file could not be traced. The learned Magistrate declined to give consent to such withdrawal and instead he apparently dismissed the case under section 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and F discharged the accused person.

It has been urged on this court by Mr. Kapinga for the respondent that the relevant section here was Section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code and that it was wrong for the trial Magistrate to apply G section 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code because it did not occasion any failure of justice. Mr. Rutashobya, learned State Attorney said that section 205 was not relevant here. With due respect to both counsels, I agree with Mr. Kapinga that the error in citing the wrong section did not occasion any failure of justice and the error is therefore curable under section 346 of the criminal H Procedure Code. I also agree that the learned trial Magistrate acted under section 205 of the criminal Procedure Code after he refused the court's consent to withdraw from prosecution of the accused on the part of the public prosecutor and did not adjourn the case. The case of R. v Kanji Kotecha I was cited to the court. The question

1984 TLR p223

BAHATI J

A is whether Kanji Kotecha's case was rightly decided in view of subsequent decisions to the contrary such as R. v Cleophas Kateti and DPP v Mienda cited by learned counsels. In Kanji Kotecha's case it was held that once an application for adjournment by the prosecutor has been B refused, evidence must be led in support of the charge; failure to do so gives the presiding magistrate no alternative but to dismiss the charge and acquit the accused under section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Maganga, Ag. J., as he then was, argued that the legislature could not have given the court power to refuse to grant an adjournment and then failed to provide for the C consequences of such refusal. He argued further that failure to adduce evidence implied that the accused had no case to answer and as such the case would come under the ambit of section 205. Barely a year later Lugakingira, Ag. J., as he then was held in Rep. v. Cleophace Kateti, cited above, D that unless withdrawn by the prosecution a court has no power to dismiss a case for want of prosecution. This holding was in respect of a situation where the complainant is present but unable to offer evidence against the accused and not where the complainant or public prosecutor was absent, Lugakingira, Ag. J., cited the case of R. v. Murinda and others [1971] HCD n.445 where a trial E Magistrate dismissed the charge and acquitted the accused after he had fixed a final date for hearing but the prosecution were not ready to proceed. On revision it was held that a case cannot be dismissed for want of prosecution.

F An even more recent case was decided by Biron J. in D.P.P. v Mienda also cited by learned counsel for the respondent. In this case of Mienda, Baron J. said this:

As I have often reiterated, the subordinate court is the creation of statute and it has no power other than those G conferred upon it by statute. In fine, a subordinate court has no right to dismiss a charge and acquit an accused, where the prosecution is represented and does not agree to such dismissal of the charge or acquittal of an accused.

H In D.P.P. v Mlienda, the trial court had dismissed the case and acquitted the accused because the prosecution failed to adduce evidence because of lack of Police file. The case was dismissed u/s 200 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In R. v Cleophase Kateti, the trial court dismissed the case u/s 198 I and acquitted the accused after refusing further adjournment and after the prosecution had failed to offer more evidence. And in R. v Kanji Kotecha the trial court acquitted the accused person because the trial court refused further adjournment and no more A evidence was adduced by the prosecution.

I have searched for a decision of the Court of Appeal on this question of whether a subordinate court has powers to dismiss a case for failure to offer evidence but I was unable to find any. I am B therefore left with the three decisions cited above two of which are at variance with the first decision namely that in Kanji Kotecha's case. My own interpretation of section 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code is as contained in the decision of Kanji Kotecha's case. I fully agree with my C brother Maganga that under section 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code the trial court has a discretion to adjourn a case or not when it comes up for hearing. I also agree with my brother Maganga's reasoning that the legislature could not have given the court power to refuse an adjournment and then failed to provide for the consequences of such refusal. This argument can be amplified by reference to sections 198 and 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code Section 98 provides D this, inter alia:

.... if the complainant, having notice of the time and place appointed for the hearing of the charge, does not appear, the court shall dismiss the charge and acquit the accused person, unless for some reason it shall think E it proper to adjourn the hearing of the case until some other date, ...

Section 202(1) provides, inter alia, thus: F

... and if the complainant shall not appear the court may dismiss the charge and acquit the accused ...

Section 202 refers to a situation where the hearing or further hearing may be adjourned. Section 198 G refers to a situation where a hearing date is set and the accused appears but the complainant does not appear. Both sections are substantially the same. The result of non-appearance of the complainant and the failure of the complainant to adduce evidence is the same namely that no evidence is adduced. Indeed, the purpose of the appearance of the complainant at the time of H hearing is so that evidence may be led in proof of the charge. Now, if no evidence is led due to non-appearance of the complainant or failure or inability by the complainant to adduce evidence although the complainant is present and in each case the court does not think it proper to adjourn I the hearing of the case until some other date, why should the results being different whereby

1984 TLR p225

BAHATI J

A refusal to adjourn under sections 198 and 202 leads to acquittal of the accused and dismissal of the charge whereas refusal to adjourn under section 201 leads to nothing, i.e., to no refusal to adjourn.

Bearing in mind what I have said above I am in complete agreement with the decision in Kanji Kotecha's case that where the court refuses to adjourn a case under section 201 of the Criminal B Procedure Code then section 205 applies and the case automatically falls under the ambit of section 205. If there is no evidence led in support of the holding charge then the presiding magistrate has no alternative but to dismiss the charge and acquit the accused person under section 205; for failure C to adduce evidence implies that the accused has no case to answer.

For the above reasons, I must differ from the holdings in the cases of R. v Cleophas Kateti and D.P.P. v Mlienda cited above. With due respect to the learned judges who dealt with the above D cited cases, I am unable to agree that the court is unable to do anything about a case which is not withdrawn by the Prosecution under section 86(a) or 86(b) of the Criminal Procedure Code or which does not fall under sections 198, 200, 202 or 81 of the criminal Procedure Code even if the court has E refused to adjourn a case or to withdraw a case at the request of the prosecution.

I therefore answer the first question I asked in the affirmative that the district court had power to dismiss the charge and acquit the respondent under section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code. I also answer the 2nd question whether Kanji Kotecha's case was rightly decided in the affirmative. F As to whether it was just in the circumstances of this case for the district court to act as it did I have no doubt in my mind that the district court exercised its discretion to refuse further adjournment judiciously. I need not repeat what has been said by learned counsel for the G respondent about the inordinate delay in prosecuting this case. I can see no justification for the prosecution to withdraw the charge against the respondent under section 86(a) and then start the prosecution of the respondent all over again after the prosecution had completed investigations right on the first day the respondent appeared in court and after it had taken the prosecution a year H and 9 months to decide to withdraw the case. I am satisfied that the learned trial Magistrate considered all relevant factors and came to the right conclusion. There is a law in our statute books requiring the completion of cases in the district court within 60 days. It would be circumventing I such a law if the prosecution were allowed to withdraw cases and then file the same cases again. This could lead to persecution and not just prosecution, for, if the argument of the Republic is taken to be correct then it means theoretically the prosecution A can withdraw a case under section 86(a) and later on file the same case again in court under a different number and then withdraw it and file it again and so on and so forth ad infinitum. What is to prevent the prosecution from the abuse of court process if all the court may do when an B application to withdraw a case under section 86(a) is presented, is to either grant the application or refuse the application and adjourn the case to another date?

For the above reasons the application to revise the proceeding in this case is granted to the extent C that the respondent is acquitted under section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the charge is dismissed. The order of the learned Magistrate dismissing the charge under section 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code and discharging the accused person is set aside. In its stead it is substituted the order of dismissing the charge under section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code and D acquitting the accused person. Therefore the accused person is acquitted and the charge is dismissed under section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
Order accordingly E

F
[zRPz]REPUBLIC v HASANI SAIDI 1984 TLR 226 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mapigano J

November 15, 1985
CRIMINAL REVISION 1 OF 1984 G
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Essential element of offence left out - Defective - When defect may vitiate proceedings. H Evidence - Corroboration - Failure of magistrate to warn himself of the danger to convict without corroborative evidence - When fatal to proceedings.
-Headnote
The accused was charged with and convicted of the offence of rape. He was sentenced to three years' imprisonment. The case file was sent to the high court for confirmation of sentence. The learned judge who examined the record of the proceedings was of the opinion that the charge was I defective because the particulars of the offence

MAPIGANO J
A did not allege that there was no consent on the part of the woman or that her consent was obtained by force or by means of threats or intimidation or by fear of bodily harm. He was also under the impression that the evidence adduced by the prosecution stood uncorroborated.

B Held: (i) Where a substantial miscarriage of justice has not flown from the defect, the provisions of s. 346 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be brought into play and the conviction be sustained;

C (ii) in this case the accused understood the substance of the case he was meeting as such the defect did not lead to a substantial miscarriage of justice and thus curable under sS. 346 of the Criminal Procedure Code;

(iii) it was not necessary for the trial magistrate to warn himself of the danger of convicting D without corroborative evidence because there was sufficient corroborative evidence.

Case Information

Order accordingly.

E No case referred to.

L. Mapalala for the Republic.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mapigano, J.: It seems that the learned judge who examined the record of these proceedings was of F the opinion that the charge was defective and under the impression that the evidence adduced by the prosecution stood uncorroborated.

With regard to the charge the learned judge was absolutely right and it is only proper that Miss Mapalala counsel for the Republic has readily conceded the point. The accused Hasani Saidi was G brought to the District Court at Kilosa charged with the offence of rape c/ss. 130 and 131 of the Penal Code. The particulars of the offence as set out in the charge sheet averred that "Hasani Saidi charged on the 17th day of June, 1983, at about 16.00 hrs. at Miyombo village, Kilosa district, H Morogoro Region, did have carnal knowledge of one Hagali w/o William". Quite obviously, the charge omitted an essential ingredient of the offence of rape, namely the allegation that there was no consent on the part of the woman, or that her consent was obtained by force or by means of threats or intimidation or by fear of bodily harm. This flaw escaped the attention of the learned district I magistrate and I may charitably attribute his oversight to his failure to pause sufficiently to peruse the particulars.

1984 TLR p228

MAPIGANO J

It is elementary that every criminal charge should set out all essential constituents of the offence A alleged. However, it does not necessarily follow that every defect in the charge will vitiate the proceedings or the judgment. In a proper case, that is, where a substantial miscarriage of justice has not flown from the defect, the provision of section 346 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be B brought into play and the conviction be sustained. This, in my opinion and in agreement with counsel for the Republic, is exactly such a case. The accused understood the substance of the case he was meeting, especially after the complainant Hagali had given her testimony. What's more, it was not his line of defence that Hagali had consented to the intercourse. Should I, therefore, find C that the evidence against him was credible and sufficient to support the conviction I would apply the provision of section 346 above and refrain from disturbing the conviction.

Hagali was a married woman and she lived in Miyombo village. Her evidence shows that at about 4 D p.m. on 17/6/83 she was alone at her shamba guarding it against the incursion of wild pests. The accused, a fellow-villager and an acquaintance, called at the shamba and swiftly caught her and his strong hand went over her mouth to stifle or prevent an outcry. Then he shoved her down, took off E his trousers and in another instant penetrated her and ejaculated inside her. It was easier: she was not wearing any underpants. Her sister in-law appeared at the scene but by then the accused had already indulged his passion and was fleeing. Hagali picked herself up and promptly went to her F balozi to lodge a complaint against him, and thence to the police who had her medically examined on the morrow.

Akiza Yohana (PW2), the said sister in-law, told the court that she saw the accused running off from the scene holding his trousers. Saidi Mfaume (PW3) the balozi confirmed that the complainant G approached him and made a report that she had just been ravished by the accused. He observed bruises on her lips and back. And a medical report also showed that she had sustained a bruise around her upper lip adjacent to the nose.

The accused flatly denied any involvement in the offence. He denied meeting the complainant on H that day and he did not know why she came to frame him. No, he said, there was no bad blood between them. No, he added, she was not mentally unsound.

The learned magistrate believed the prosecution evidence and held that the charge was clinched. He convicted the accused of the I

1984 TLR p229

MAPIGANO J

A offence and handed down a sentence of imprisonment for three years subject to confirmation by this court.

I turn to the question of corroboration. In any sexual offence, if the person against whom the offence is alleged to have been committed is an adult, the court should warn itself that it is not safe B to convict on the uncorroborated testimony of the complainant but that if it is satisfied of the truth of the complainant's evidence it may nevertheless convict. This, as Miss Mapalala pointed out, is a rule of practice and not a rule of law. Evidence in corroboration need not be direct. It is sufficient if C it is circumstantial evidence connecting the accused with the offence, otherwise many such crimes could not be brought to justice. And depending upon the case, evidence in corroboration can consist of one single piece of evidence or several pieces viewed as a whole.

D The conventional wisdom about that rule came from the 17th century English jurist Sir Mathew Hale, who wrote that "rape is an accusation easily to be made and hard to be proved, and harder to be defended by the party accused, the never so innocent". The rationale is the difficulty of disproving a false accusation and the possible damage to a man's reputation, especially if his E community is small and orthodox - belief oriented. And that for a multitude of reasons women may accuse men of sexual assaults to extort money, force marriage, satisfy a childish desire for notoriety, attain personal revenge or obviate a sense of shame after consenting to unseemly intercourse. F Fearful of false charges and in this century much under the sway of Freudian notions about female fantasies, the Western law constructed protections around a rape accused that were, it is said, the envy of murder accused.

There has been a change in attitude in some countries. In some Western jurisdictions the law no longer believes that words of a woman are not to be trusted and when a woman proclaims herself a G victim of rape her testimony receives the same respect as that accorded any man. However, some bizarre cases have unfortunately, given a kind of shudder to that viewpoint. The example par excellence is Detson's. A woman called Cathleen Webb happened to declare this year that she had H lied in 1979 when she accused Detson of raping her. Her testimony and the evidence found on her body and her clothes had the poor man sent to prison for 25 to 50 years! That is perhaps by the way. Our law here still faithfully observes Hale's admonition.

I The trial magistrate did not stop to warn himself of the danger to convict without corroborative evidence. In my view, it was not necessary for him to do so. There was sufficient corroborative evidence. There was the evidence of A Akiza who saw the accused running off from the scene holding his trousers. There was the evidence of the balozi that the complainant showed up sustaining a bruise on her back and lips, which was consistent with her mouth having been gripped as she had recounted, and which also B was a manifestation of a forced sexual intercourse. I am in respectful agreement with the view expressed by the Republic that the evidence led against the accused was sufficiently positive and tangible to found the conviction. I therefore leave the conviction to stand.

Rape is an enormous crime, no doubt. In Tanzania it is punishable by imprisonment for life with or C without corporal penalty. That demonstrates the intensity of the feeling of disgust with which the legislature views it. Incidentally other jurisdictions, olden and modern, express more intense opprobrium. To a great measure that is due to the stigma that is attached to the victim, if unfairly, D the humiliation and trauma that the victim invariably experiences the violation of her freedom of sexual choice and the threat which it poses to the security and morality of society. Ancient Babylonian law considered it a theft of virginity and its servants meted out hefty penalties. E According to the Code of Hammurabi a rapist was to be seized and slain. As to the Biblical Hebrews, both victim and villain shared the same fate of death by stoning. The first book of the Bible, Genesis, narrates the raping incident of Jacob's daughter Dinah and the violent retaliatory action taken by Jacob's sons on the rapist and his tribe. In Britain and USA convicted rapists F receive long prison sentences. A sentence of three years for rape cannot, in my view, be regarded as excessive or as wrong in principle. This was not a story of a young man and a woman going out for a dance, being fond of each other, and things getting out of hand. It was a deliberate planned and violent sexual attack. Indeed, it might be that the magistrate erred on the score of leniency. The G sentence is duly confirmed.

Order accordingly. H

A

[zRPz]CHANDRAKANT VINUBHAI PATEL v FRANK LIONEL MAREALLE AND ANOTHER 1984 TLR 231 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mustafa JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

July 17, 1984
B CIVIL APPEAL 5 OF 1984
Flynote
Land Law - Disposition of an interest in land - Requisite consent not obtained - Agreement void and unenforceable.
C Contract - Delay in payment of instalment - Transaction completed and property in shares had passed - Whether rescission of agreement possible.
Company Law - Shares - Transfer of shares - Act of handing over share certificates duly endorsed in blank D and signing share transfer forms in blank - Whether property in the shares has passed.
-Headnote
The appellant Chandrakant Patel is the legal representative of Vinubhai Patel. The latter entered into an agreement to purchase business and premises of New Sea View Hotel Ltd. (a private limited E liability company) with furniture and fixtures for shs.600,000/= from the respondents. The agreement for the disposition of interest in the said premises did not get consent of the Director of Land Development Services. After the appellant had paid a substantial part of the price and the vendor F had handed over the share certificates endorsed in blank and share transfer forms also signed in blank the respondents sought to rescind the agreement and repossess the hotel.
The high court found that the agreement was not void ab initio despite want of requisite consent from the Director of Land Development Services. He moreover found, inter alia, that the appellant G was fraudulent. He decided in favour of the respondents, ordered repossession of the hotel and awarded damages to the respondents.
On appeal it was argued that the agreement for the disposition of the suit premises was void H because of, among others, want of requisite consent. But, even though, there was other evidence to prove that there was an agreement of sale of the hotel business, that property in the shares of the company passed to the purchaser and, therefore, that the respondent could not rescind it.
I Held: (i) The agreement for the disposition of an interest in land was void for want of consent from the Director of Land Development Services;
1984 TLR p232
MUSTAFA JA
(ii) the delay in paying the instalments could not entitle the respondents to rescind the A transaction once it was completed and the property in the shares had passed;

(iii) the act of handing over the share certificates duly endorsed in blank and the signing of the B share transfer forms in blank constituted prima facie evidence of an unequivocal act of transfer and constituted the deliveree as owner as against the deliveror.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. C

No case referred to.

M. Raithatha, for the appellant

M.A. Lakha, for the respondents D

[zJDz]Judgment

Mustafa, J.A. read the following judgment of the court: On 9th June, 1978, the respondents Frank Marealle and Kisinane Njau Tarimo (now represented by his personal legal representative Emmanuel Tarimo) had filed a case against Fatehali Janmohamed. By their amended plaint dated July l6 1978 E they apparently sued on an agreement dated 6th June, 1977, (hereafter called the agreement) in respect of the sale of the business of New Sea View Hotel Ltd., (a private limited liability company) with furniture and fittings for an inclusive sum of Shs.600,000/= to Janmohmaed. The New Sea View Hotel (hereafter called the hotel) had issued 1,000 fully paid up shares of shs.100/= each, 750 of which were in the name of Frank Marealle and 250 in the name of Tarimo. These two were the only share holders of the hotel. The agreement inter alia provided for the payment of the purchase price G as follows: Shs.350,000/= to be paid at once and the balance by monthly instalments of shs. 25,000/= each. At the date of the filing of the suit, only four instalments had been paid, and another sum of shs. 100,000/= had allegedly been paid to the Income Tax authorities for liabilities incurred prior to the date of sale, leaving a sum of shs. 50,000/= still due and owing. Frank Marealle had H alleged that he had, on 10th March, 1978, demanded re-possession of the hotel and that the defendant Janmohamed had failed to comply. Marealle and his co-plaintiff Tarimo had asked for an order for them to re-possess the hotel, and for damages for loss of income at the rate of shs. 25,000/= I per month.

1984 TLR p233

MUSTAFA JA

A Janmohamed in his amended statement of defence alleged inter alia that he had on 10th December, 1977, irrevocably assigned all his rights and liabilities of the transaction to a third party, who would be responsible for instalment arrears, if any.

B The third party, Vinubhai Patel (now represented by his personal legal representative Chandrakant Patel) took out third party proceedings and was joined as a third party in the suit.

In his amended statement of defence the third party (hereafter called Patel) alleged inter alia that both the plaintiffs had transferred all their respective shares to him and his son and that subject to C the discharge of tax and other liabilities on the part of the plaintiffs, he will pay any balance found due. He denied the right of the plaintiffs to repossess or to damages.

Unfortunately, this case had from the start proceeded on a totally wrong footing. The agreement D was allegedly drafted by a practising advocate. It was a very unusual document. The case and trial would seem to have been based, in one form or another, on the said agreement, and indeed the trial judge decided the case on the basis that it was a valid and enforceable agreement. He found that Marealle's consent to the agreement was obtained by fraud or that certain words subsequently E added to the agreement were added in fraud and the agreement was therefore voidable in terms of the provisions of section 19(1) of the Law of Contract Ordinance, 1961, or alternatively that the defendant Janmohamed had committed a breach of the agreement by assigning it to Patel before F completion of payment of the purchase price. On these grounds the trial judge found for the plaintiffs and ordered possession and damages in their favour.

G The agreement reads in part as follows:

THIS AGREEMENT made this day ....of JUNE One thousand nine hundred and seventy seven (1977) BETWEEN THE SEA VIEW HOTEL (1976) LIMITED, a Limited liability Company incorporated in Tanzania H and having its registered office at Dar es Salaam of Post Office Box No. 542, Dar es Salaam (hereinafter called the vendor) of the one part and FATEHALI RAJABALI JANMOHAMED of P.O. Box 2202 Dar es Salaam I (hereinafter called the purchaser) of the other part. or his nominees: VINUBHAI B. PATEL.

1984 TLR p234

MUSTAFA JA

WHEREAS: the Vendor is the owner of the undivided share in the right of occupancy comprised in the A Certificate of Title No. .... of on and over plot No. ...Ocean Road, Dar es Salaam in the City of Dar es Salaam (hereinafter called the premises).

NOW THIS AGREEMENT WITNESSETH as follows: B

1. The Vendor has agreed to sell to the purchaser and the Purchaser has agreed to buy the aforesaid hotel situated on the aforesaid premises with furniture and fixtures fittings all inclusive for a sum of shs. 600,000/= free from all encumbrances. C

2. ...

3. ...

5. The Vendor shall execute and do all such acts, things and instruments as may be necessary or D convenience to transfer the right title and interest in the said premises to the purchaser.

It will be seen at once that it was an agreement for the disposition of an interest in land which needed consent from the Director of Land Development Services. There was no consent. It is not in E dispute that the Right of Occupancy was in the name of one Bharwani, not in the hotel. Again there was apparently no company seal affixed to the document. That agreement cannot be looked at and cannot form the basis of the suit nor of the judgment. Indeed in their amended plaint, the F plaintiffs in paragraph 9 contended that the agreement was void in law for lack of consent. Presumably they were relying on that ground for the right to recover possession. And in his amended statement of defence Janmohamed in para 2 also averred that the agreement was void in G law for lack of consent. The trial judge, though he framed issue No. 3 in the following terms "is the agreement void in law?", made no finding directly on it. He roamed over arguments concerning whether it was void or not, but did not refer to the lack of consent factor, and the nearest he could be said to have come to a conclusion was in these words in his judgment: H

My view is that taking into account what took place after the signing of the contract between the first plaintiff and the defendant - for example the payment of shs. 350,000/= by the defendant towards the purchase of the I hotel and the subsequent

1984 TLR p235

MUSTAFA JA

A payments of the monthly instalments it would be wrong for the court to say that the contract between the first plaintiff and the defendant was void ab initio.

B It would seem from these words that the judge found that the agreement was valid and enforceable. The payment of the initial purchase price and the instalments could by themselves have been evidence of a contract not necessarily written without reference to the agreement, and we fail to see how those acts could have validated an agreement that was declared by law to be C unenforceable and void. On appeal before us Mr. Lakha for the respondents submitted that the agreement is void, and Mr. Raithatha, for the appellant, agreed. Indeed in Mr. Lakha's notice of grounds for affirming the judge's decision, paragraph 2 reads:

D The learned High Court judge ought to have held that the agreement Exhibit P1 is void in law by reason of not having been properly executed by the company or the second defendant and also for lack of consent requisite in a disposition of an interest in land.

E We are of the view that the agreement is void and since the trial judge has based his decision entirely on a void agreement, his judgment is vitiated as it is based on a fundamental flaw. We will F have to set it aside, unless the judge's decision can be affirmed on other grounds.

Before we proceed any further, we think we will have to consider the evidence tendered in court by Marealle, Tarimo and Janmohamed, Patel died before he could testify. At the trial it transpired that the central issue was whether, when, Marealle handed over possession of the hotel business to G Janmohamed on 6th June, 1977, he did so knowing that Patel in fact was the real purchaser or was interested in purchasing it.

H Janmohamed in evidence testified at one stage as follows:

When I had completed negotiations with Mr. Marealle about the purchase price then Mr. Marealle came to know at Mr. Akena's office that the real purchaser is Mr. V.P. Patel. I told Mr. Marealle that Mr. Patel was I interested. This was in Mr. Akena's office. ... Mr. Marealle did not object when I told him that Mr. V.P. Patel was the real buyer of the hotel.

1984 TLR p236

MUSTAFA JA

Another stage in cross-examination he said inter alia: A

... Marealle had hinted that if he got a good buyer he would sell the hotel. It was on this hint that I told Mr. Patel regarding buying the hotel. I did not reveal to Mr. Marealle that Mr. Patel wanted to buy the hotel. B

... I did not tell him who was buying it. He did not ask me who was buying it. ... Mr. Patel could probably not get the hotel at the price if he had negotiated ... I admitted the contents of P4 that is why I did not reply. ...

In P4, Marealle had written to Janmohamed: C

Furthermore I sold the business specifically to yourself for reasons best known to you. D

Janmohamed had contradicted himself on a vital issue then before the court, and his testimony cannot be believed in any material particular.
Similarly, Marealle in evidence was questioned on a letter dated 5th December, 1977, (Exhibit P7) E written by the managing director of the hotel to him, and which enclosed a cheque for shs. 25,000/= being the 4th instalment payment. In the course of the trial, this letter assumed great importance.
On this matter Marealle said in evidence: F

... Yes, I have received this letter. I do not remember receiving this letter from Sea View Hotel. Yes, it appears I have received it. ... I do not remember receiving a cheque nor the letter dated 5th December, 1977. I do not have the letter. ... G

It was established in evidence, and so admitted by Mr. Marealle, that he had handed over the share certificate in the name of Kisinane Tarimo to Janmohanmed on 6th June, 1977. It was a share certificate for 250 shares. Mr. Marealle had signed in blank the reverse of the share certificate, H obviously with the object of endorsing the shares over to whoever the purchaser was. His possession of Tarimo's share certificate and his handing it over to Janmohamed in the sale transaction, and his endorsement in blank on its reverse, established beyond doubt that he was acting, or holding out as acting, as Tarimo's agent. Yet in his testimony on Tarimo's shares, he I stated inter alia:
1984 TLR p237
MUSTAFA JA
A I have nothing to do with Isinane's shares. I have no power of attorney to sign for him. ... It will be difficult to accept Mr. Marealle's evidence on any point of substance.
B Tarimo also gave evidence. He agreed that Mr. Marealle used to act for him in the business. He had trusted Marealle and had left his share certificate with him. He said:
C I did not authorise him to sell any share. He never consulted me regarding transfer of the shares. Up to now I do not know whether the hotel has been sold. He had no authority to sell my shares without my authority.
D The signature on the plaint resembles that of my son. I did not authorise him to sign on my behalf. ...
Mr. Tarimo was a joint plaintiff with Mr. Marealle in claiming recovery of possession of the hotel premises, and yet stated that he was unaware at the time he testified, if the hotel had been sold. He E even denied that the plaint had been signed by his son on his behalf; yet he had appeared as a plaintiff in the action. According to his conduct he had either authorised or ratified and adopted the action of Marealle and his son, despite his denial. It is difficult to give credence to such a witness.
F We have also to consider the evidence of two defence witnesses D.W.3 Siriaki and D.W.8 Joseph. Their evidence would seem to support Patel's claim that Marealle had sold the business to him and Janmohamed. However, for reasons not very plain to us, the judge was not impressed by G them, and since the judge had remarked that they were, from his observation, witnesses of doubtful credibility, we will discount the evidence of these two witnesses.

These were the witnesses who testified to the material facts in dispute before the trial court and from the above account, none of them can be accepted as witnesses of truth, and no reliance can be H placed on their testimony on any matters of importance or substance.

We have rejected the agreement as being void, and we think that the material witnesses who had testified are not credible or reliable. We will have to rely on other evidence and transactions between the parties to discover the truth in this case. However, there are certain facts which are not I in dispute.

1984 TLR p238

MUSTAFA JA

It is common ground that on 6th June, 1977, Mr. Marealle handed over his share certificate for 750 A shares in the hotel, and Mr. Tarimo's share certificate for 250 shares in the hotel to Janmohamed in the offices of the advocate Mr. Akena. He had accepted a cheque for shs. 350,000/= as part payment of the sale of the hotel, and subsequently received four instalment of shs. 25,000/= each. He had B signed on the back of both the share certificates, endorsing them in blank. At the same time Marealle had signed three transfer of share or stock forms in blank, clearly for the purpose of effecting the share transfers to the purchaser. These shares were duly transferred as to 750 shares C to V.P. Patel, as to 150 shares to S. V. Patel and as to 100 shares to Janmohamed and so registered on the 22nd June, 1977, and share certificates in the names of transferees as above were issued on 23rd June, 1977. Janmohamed took over possession of the hotel business on 6th June, 1977.

On 12th October, 1977, Marealle wrote to the hotel stating that the balance of the purchase price D attracted interest at 9% per annum - (Exhibit T.P1).

On 5th December, 1977, the hotel forwarded a cheque for shs. 25,000/= being the fourth instalment payment to Marealle (Exhibit T.P.7). E

On 6th December, 1977, the hotel by a letter signed by V.P. Patel as managing director, replied denying that any interest was payable, and attempted to clarify the payment position (Exhibit P3).

On 21st December, 1977, Marealle wrote to the Registrar of Companies, purporting to lodge a complaint under section 135 of the Companies Ordinance and asked that no application for change F of directors of the hotel should be made. He made the allegation "The property was specifically sold to Mr. Fatehali payment was to be made in instalment. It has now come to my knowledge that Mr. Fatehali is now in the process of selling the hotel to someone else who is not acceptable to me". G (Exhibit T.P.6).

On 7th January, 1978, Marealle wrote to Janmohamed purporting to rescind the sale agreement and stated inter alia:

> Particularly I have been offended by the fact that it has now come to my knowledge that you have transferred H the business without informing me first while you still have to pay me the balance of the purchase price.
>
> Furthermore, I sold the business specifically to yourself (Exhibit P4). I

1984 TLR p239

MUSTAFA JA

A On 21st February, 1978, Marealle wrote to Janmohamed intimating that he was taking back possession of the hotel and returning a cheque for shs. 350,000/= (Exhibit P5).

Mr. Lakha for Marealle and Tarimo submitted before us that since the agreement was void and since B the share transfers flowed from that agreement, the share transfers were equally void. We disagree. The transfer of shares could be and was a separate transaction, independent of the agreement, as indeed was so averred by Patel in paragraph 10 of his amended statement of defence. Mr. Lakha also submitted that Marealle had handed over the share certificates and the transfer forms signed in C blank to Janmohamed under two conditions, one, that the shares were to be transferred specifically to Janmohamed and only so after all the instalments had been paid. He contended that Jahmohamed had breached both these conditions and Marealle was therefore entitled to rescind the sale, and D though not prayed for, presumably to have the shares re-transferred to him and Tarimo.

Mr. Raithatha submitted that Mr. Marealle had fully divested himself of the shares on his own behalf and on behalf of Tarimo when he handed over the share certificates and endorsed them in blank on E the reverse, and signed the share transfer forms in blank, and had no more interest in the hotel.

We think that Mr. Raithatha is right. We can find no evidence that any conditions were attached to the share transfers. Mr. Marealle is an experienced business man, chairman of and running a number F of limited liability companies with an annual turnover of about 20 million shillings. He knew and must have known the effect of handing over share certificates and share transfer forms signed and endorsed in blank to a buyer of his shares in the course of a sale transaction. We are not persuaded G even from a survey of the correspondence we have set out above, that there were conditions attached to the transfer of shares.

Mr. Lakha and Mr. Raithatha cited extensively from authorities regarding the relationship of principal and agent, the position of an undisclosed principal, the right to assign by a purchaser, and Mr. H Lakha even purported to rely on the plea of nonest factum. With great respect to both learned counsel, we do not think that those matters were really relevant. Learned counsel will forgive us if we do not refer to their numerous authorities cited in argument.

I In our view, this was a straightforward transaction, where one party sold and transferred his shares in a company to another party for a consideration. The act of handing over the share certificates duly endorsed in blank and the signing of the share transfer forms in blank in this case constituted A strong prima facie evidence of an unequivocal act of transfer and constituted the deliveree as owner as against the deliveror. There is no credible evidence to rebut that evidence at all.

Even if it were true that the transfer was subject to the condition that the shares were to be B registered only in the name of Janmohamed, we do not think that could prevent Janmohamed from assigning his shares to Patel. There was nothing special or exclusive in the way of personal consideration in the transaction. The delay in paying the instalment, even if true, could not entitle C Marealle to rescind the transaction once it was completed and the property in the shares had passed. The party in default could be sued for any sum found due and owing.

Mr. Lakha submitted that the share transfers were forged on the ground that Marealle never intended the shares to be transferred to Patel and that the transfer of Tarimo's shares was no D executed by Tarimo. We have already dealt with these contentions. We are satisfied that Marealle purported to and did act as agent for Tarimo, and from the course of conduct of the sale transaction, the filing of the plaint and the admission by Tarimo that Marealle acted for him in the business, we E are of the view that Tarimo had so authorised Marealle as his agent.
The appeal succeeds. We allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the High Court and substitute therefor an order that the claim be dismissed with costs, both here and below. The sum of F shs.350,000/= deposited in Court is to be returned to the respondents/ plaintiffs.
Appeal allowed.
1984 TLR p240
G
[zRPz]AFRIKA MWAMBOGO v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 240 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mbeya
Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Omar JJA

July 10, 1985
CRIMINAL APPEAL 37 OF 1984 H
Flynote
Evidence - Dying declaration - Deceased's persistence in implicating assailant - Whether may be relied upon.
Evidence - Identification - Conditions of identification not ideal -Unsafe to convict in the absence of I corroboration.
1984 TLR p241
MAKAME JA
-Headnote
A The appellant was charged with and convicted of murder. In convicting, the trial judge relied on a dying declaration in which the deceased persistently implicated the appellant as his assailant. He also relied on identification evidence which was not corroborated. The high court decision was attacked on appeal.
B Held: (i) The deceased's persistence in implicating the appellant was mere evidence of consistency and honesty but not of correctness;
(ii) in the circumstances of this case the deceased could have been honestly mistaken in his C belief that it was the appellant who shot at him;
(iii) since the conditions of identification were not ideal it was unsafe to convict in the absence of corroborative evidence.
Case Information

D Appeal allowed.
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
Makame, J.A. read the following judgment of the court. The appellant in this case, Afrika E Mwambogo was sentenced to suffer death following his conviction for the murder of a person called Charles Augustino, an official of the Game Department. The High Court (Chua, J.) was satisfied that it was the appellant who shot the deceased to death in the early evening of 5th March, 1978.
F The Prosecution case against the appellant was based on a Dying Declaration made by the deceased and naming Afrika Mwambogo as the assailant. Mr. Bateyunga, learned counsel, appearing for the appellant before us, has complained that it was unsafe to rely on the G uncorroborated Dying Declaration in the circumstances. Representing the Republic Mr. Teemba, learned Senior State Attorney, supported the conviction.
There was evidence by P.W.1 and P.W.2 that on 5th March, 1978 when they were travelling in P.W.1's motor vehicle at around 6 p.m. they found a person lying on a road, injured. They H recognized him to be the deceased who told them that he had been shot at by Afrika Mwambogo and he asked them to take him to the hospital.
The deceased is said to have continued to implicate the appellant even when he spoke to P.W.3 Ganja Musura the Village Chairman, and to the Police.
I Mr. Bateyunga has pointed out that it was unsafe to convict on the strength of the Dying Declaration in the circumstances, in the absence of some corroborative evidence. He submitted that even though the time of alleged A incident was before sunset the geography of the scene was such that the opportunity for the deceased to see and identify his assailant was not so good so that the deceased might have mistaken the killer for the appellant.
1984 TLR p242
MAKAME JA
Mr. Teemba rightly submitted that it is possible to convict on an uncorroborated Dying Declaration B where the conditions for identification are ideal. He asserts that the Deceased's was one such declaration. The time was around 6 p.m., the deceased was obviously lucid of mind, and the evidence of P.W.2 shows that although the place was a busy one, one could see between the trees C "as there was ample space".
Our first concern in this appeal was whether it had really been established that the Charles Augustino mentioned in this case is really dead. Matters were not as neatly tied up as they should have been and we indicated, during the hearing of this appeal, that we were thinking that we might D have to order additional evidence. None of the two people mentioned in the Postmortem Examination report as having identified the dead body to the doctor, Chausiku Ramadhani and Esau Nchimbi, nor the policeman alleged to be present during the autopsy. P.C. Brown, was called to E testify. We were informed from the bar that none of these people not even the police officer, could be located. We think that the trial court record should reflect such an assertion.

We have since looked at the record more closely and we are satisfied that, in the particular circumstances, there is reasonable certitude that the alleged deceased is indeed dead. The alleged F assault was in the evening of 6th March and the doctor's report, on Charles Augustino's dead body, was completed on the following day. According to PW.1 when he left the deceased in this case in the hands of the Police the latter said they were taking the deceased to the hospital and just G on the following day the police told him that the deceased had died. There was evidence suggestive of the fact that a muzzle loading gun was used to shoot the deceased, while the foreign bodies found in the dead body examined by the doctor are consistent with the weapon alleged to H have been used in this case. The region of the body in which the wounds were found was more or less the same as indicated by the deceased in this case. The totality of these facts persuades us to hold that it is established that the said Charles Augustino in this case is indeed dead. We wish to remark, however, that we find it hard to believe that even the police officer could not be traced. We I would urge the Prosecution

A to endeavour to avoid such lacunae in future which can, in some cases, cause a miscarriage of justice. So much for the identity of the deceased.

Now whether this deceased was killed by this appellant: We are satisfied in view of the evidence; B that the Afrika Mwambogo mentioned by the deceased in his Dying Declaration is the appellant in this case, and none other, and that the deceased and the appellant knew each other. It is also established that the incident occurred before dusk, when one could see and recognize a person from a distance. What bothers us is the geography of the place. The area was richly verdant, and with C trees. One description, by P.W.1, is that "The bush was tall but the grass was about 3 feet high. The bush was thick ... The forest was very thick. A person standing about 20 paces could not be seen".

D The deceased was encumbered with two bottles of milk and, evidently, a gun, and according to what he allegedly told P.W.3, he was shot at before he looked "at the direction" and when he did so is when he saw the appellant running away. The assailant was presumably running away with his back to the appellant, in an area already described, in circumstances of traumatic surprise. In his E judgment the learned trial judge correctly pointed out that there was no evidence of the distance between the assailant and the deceased, no evidence of how long the latter was able to observe the former, or whether the assailant was on the road or in the bush. The learned trial judge seemed F influenced by, among other things, the fact that the appellant and the deceased had known each other before, the sun had not yet set, and that in 1976 the deceased had caused the appellant's arrest. He noted also that 'there was a thick bush around the road' but he did not say what the effect of this might have been.

G Evaluating the evidence on identification, we are respectfully of the view that the conditions of identification cannot be said to have been ideal. Unlike the learned trial judge, we are further unable to assert, as he did, that the Post Mortem Report can make one opine that the deceased was shot at H from the front, with the implied suggestion that this would have promoted the deceased's chances of recognizing his assailant.

We think that the deceased was quite honest in implicating the appellant in the dying Declaration and we agree that he reportedly did so. We are of the carefully considered view, however, that we I cannot safely discount the very real possibility, in the circumstance, that the deceased could have been honestly mistaken in his belief that it was the appellant who shot at him. The deceased's persistence in implicating the appellant, A which seems to have heavily influenced both assessors, is thus mere evidence of consistency, and of honesty even, but not of correctness. This was March, 1978 and only in 1976 the deceased had allegedly accused the appellant of killing a buffalo and the appellant was arrested. The case was B eventually withdrawn, so the appellant was not only known by the deceased to be at large but was presumably believed by the deceased to possess a gun, and able to use it; and have grudges against the deceased. The appellant's name would in the circumstances naturally rush to the deceased's mind, once he was shot at in the bush. C
1984 TLR p244
We are satisfied in the absence of corroboration it would be unsafe to uphold the conviction. We accordingly allow the appeal and consequently quash the conviction, set aside the sentence and order the appellant's immediate release unless he is otherwise lawfully in custody. D
Appeal allowed.
1984 TLR p244
E
[zRPz]ELIASI SEIF v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 244 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Mbeya
Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Omari JJA

July 10, 1985
CRIMINAL APPEAL 19 OF 1984 F
Flynote
Criminal Law - Provocation - One's uncle committing adultery with wife of another uncle - Whether provocation.
Criminal Law - Mistake of fact - No indication whether a witness could have known about the mistake of fact G - Whether failure by prosecution to call such a witness would lead to an adverse inference against the prosecution.
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted of murdering his uncle. On suspicion that the deceased was H committing adultery with the wife of his other uncle, he hit him with a pounding stick. On appeal the defences of provocation and mistake of fact were considered.

Held: (i) A reasonable or ordinary person would not have been provoked by finding one of his uncles or any person committing adultery with the wife of another uncle of his; I
1984 TLR p245

NYALALI CJ

A (ii) a mistake of fact concerns a state of mind of the person making the mistake;

(iii) Stahimili's evidence would have been crucial only if there was indication or a probability that she could have known about the mistake of fact made by the appellant.

Case Information

B Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to.

G. Mbusa and Mushokorwa for the appellant

C E.F. Kapinga, for the Republic

[zJDz]Judgment

Nyalali, C.J. delivered the following judgment of the court: The appellant, namely Eliasi Seif, was charged and convicted in the High Court at Morogoro for the offence of murder c/s 196 of the Penal D Code and was sentenced to suffer death by hanging. He is aggrieved by the conviction and sentence, hence this appeal to this court. Messrs Mbusa and Mushokorwa, learned Counsel appeared for him in this court, whereas Mr. Kapinga, learned State Attorney represented the respondent Republic.

E On the record of proceedings both before this court and the High Court, the following primary and secondary facts are either common ground or undisputed between the parties: Sometime during the night of 28th September, 1976 in Ibingu village within the Kilosa District of Morogoro Region, F the appellant attacked one James Hamisi with a pounding stick or pestle at the home of one Waziri Hamisi. The said James Hamisi was a brother of the said Waziri Hamisi who happened not to be at his home. Waziri Hamisi's wife, namely one Stahimili, was present when the attack took place. The G appellant is a nephew of both Waziri Hamisi and James Hamisi. One Tengeza Saanane - that is the first prosecution witness (P.W.1), a neighbour and cousin of Waziri Hamisi, heard a woman's cry of protest emanating from his cousin's home and decided to go and see what was happening but the appellant threatened to assault him if he went closer to the scene. The said James Hamisi then H managed to escape for his own safety, The following day, the appellant was apprehended in the same village by the second prosecution witness (P.W.2) and he accompanied the said James Waziri who was carried to Kilosa Government Hospital. While at Kilosa, the appellant as re-arrested by the I police. On the 8th October, 1976, the said James Waziri died at the hospital and a postmortem examination was performed by a government doctor.

1984 TLR p246

NYALALI CJ

With regard to primary and secondary matters which, on the proceedings in this court and the court A below, are in dispute between the parties, it is the prosecution case that the death of the deceased resulted from the appellant's attack and that the appellant intentionally killed him without lawful justification or excuse. On the other hand, it is the contention of the defence that the appellant B attacked the deceased thinking that it was a hyena which had invaded his uncle's home. It is part of the defence case that the appellant's actions and thinking were under the influence of alcohol which he had been drinking for a long time.

The first point for consideration and decision is whether the appellant could have been drunk when C he did what he did. The learned trial judge specifically considered this point in his judgment and stated:

Finally, I will consider whether the accused was so drunk so as to be incapable of forming the intent to kill or to D cause grievous bodily harm. The accused himself has denied that he was so drunk although he had been drinking for a long time, namely from 10 a.m. to 12 midnight. The gentlemen assessors did not find any evidence of drunkenness of such a nature which would have made accused incapable of forming the E prerequisite intent. I do not find any evidence of such drunkenness which made the accused incapable of forming the prerequisite intent. F

This finding of the trial court on the issue of drunkenness has not been challenged on appeal and we see no reason to re-examine it further.

The next point for consideration and decision is whether the appellant mistook the deceased for a G hyena when attacking him. The learned trial judge also specifically considered this point in his judgment and stated:

From the evidence as a whole, I find no difficulty in rejecting the defence story about the hyena being in the H house of Stahimili. This story cannot be possibly true for the following reasons: If the story were true, the accused who had more than one occasion to explain why he had assaulted the deceased would have given this story. ... Secondly, if the story of the accused about the hyena were true, the accused who was represented I would have challenged the witnesses in cross-

A examination when they claimed that he told them that he had beaten the deceased because he though it (sic) was a stranger sleeping with his uncle's wife. Nowhere does the accused allude to the hyena story except when he began giving his defence.

B Mr. Mbusa, learned counsel for the appellant, has submitted in effect that the learned trial judge erred in coming to this conclusion on this point as there was a failure by the prosecution to call Stahimili - that is, the appellant's uncle's wife who was present when the attack took place. He C argues that this failure on the part of the prosecution gives rise to an adverse inference that the prosecution decided not to call this eye witness because she would have supported the appellant's evidence concerning his mistake about the hyena. Surprisingly this submission was supported by D Mr. Kapinga on behalf of the Republic, We say 'surprisingly' because Mr. Kapinga did not indicate that he was not supporting the conviction until we pressed him to say so.

With due respect to both Mr. Mbusa and Mr. Kapinga, we do not think that such an adverse E inference can be drawn from the circumstances of this case. A mistake of fact concerns a state of mind of the person making the mistake. So, Stahimili's evidence would have been crucial only if there was indication or a probability that she could have known about the mistake of fact made by F the appellant. In his testimony given in his defence at the trial, the appellant stated inter alia:

When I got to the home of my uncle I said 'Hodi'. The woman replied 'Karibu'. Then she asked who I was. I G told her. Then she asked what I wanted. I told her to give me my clothes for covering myself. She asked where the cloth was. I said it was hung up in the house. Then she said 'who is here?' I asked, 'but the door is shut?' She said, 'There must be something'. Then she opened the door and came out. Then I entered the house. Then I looked under the bed and then I asked, 'what is here?' I got no reply. I did so four times. Then H I saw something move towards me. I then took a pounding stick as I thought it could be a hyena. The stick was inside the house. I hit once. I hit at the face. Then the man I hit ran out. Asked Stahimili who was outside what that man was. Then I told Stahimili to go back to sleep there. But she refused. I then escorted I her to Tengeza's house ...

1984 TLR p248

NYALALI CJ

It is obvious from the appellant's own testimony that Stahimili did not know and could not have A known about the appellant's alleged mistake of fact since she was outside the house when the appellant allegedly was mistaken after he had entered the house to look under the bed. There is no likelihood therefore that her evidence could have supported the appellant's defence or undermined B the prosecution case. That is why we are unable to draw an adverse inference against the prosecution for failure to call her to give evidence in this case, although, of course, the failure makes us curious about what she might have said.

The other important consideration arises from what the appellant stated to P.W.2 and to the police C officer - that is, the third prosecution witness (P.W.3). These witnesses testified to the effect that the appellant told them that he attacked the deceased upon the mistaken belief that the deceased was a stranger committing adultery with his uncle's wife. This evidence raises the issue of D provocation which was specifically considered and ruled out by the trial court. The learned trial judge stated inter alia in his judgment.

The gentlemen assessors were of the view that a reasonable man would have called out for help so as to arrest E the stranger. I am of the same view. I am not convinced that a reasonable man or an ordinary man would have lost his head and reacted by beating the stranger on the head with a pounding stick...

We concur with the view of the gentlemen assessors and the learned trial judge on this point. We F are satisfied that a reasonable or ordinary person would not have been provoked by finding one of his uncles or any person committing adultery with the wife of another uncle of his. At worst he would be shocked and scandalized.

The other important point is whether the deceased died as a result of the appellant's attack. This G issue poses no problem as the medical evidence clearly shows that death was due to head injury and brain damage. Obviously the appellant's attack killed the deceased.

Finally, we have to consider and decide whether the appellant had malice aforethought and had no H lawful justification or excuse in killing the deceased. The learned trial judge found the existence of malice aforethought from the nature of the weapon used and the location of the injury inflicted. We respectfully concur. On the evidence, there could not have been and there was no lawful I justification or excuse for killing the deceased. The appellant was

A therefore properly convicted. Since the sentence of death by hanging is mandatory by law, we dismiss this appeal in its entirety.
Appeal dismissed.

B
[zRPz]JUMA ZUBERI v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 249 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mustafa JJA, Kisanga JJA and Omar JJA

August 15, 1985
C CRIMINAL APPEAL 7 OF 1984
Flynote
D Criminal Law - Murder - Robber abducted child - Robber was the last person to be in custody of or in possession of the child - Child found dead after a month - Whether robber is responsible for the death of the child.
-Headnote
The appellant was recognized as one of the robbers who had waylaid and attacked a party in a motor E vehicle on the road at night. In the course of the robbery a 5 year old child was abducted by the appellant. The child could not be found. A month later remains of a child were found in the bush about 1 mile from the incident. Evidence established that the remains were of the abducted child.
F The appellant was convicted of murdering the child. He appealed to the Court of Appeal arguing, inter alia, that there was no evidence as to the cause of death of the child.
G Held: The appellant had caused the death of the child in terms of section 203(e) of the Penal Code because the child was in his custody and possession and he had abandoned her in the bush and this, certainly, for whatever cause, brought about her death.
Case Information
H Appeal dismissed.
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mustafa, J.A. read the following judgment of the court: The appellant was recognised as one of the I robbers who had waylaid and attacked a party in a motor vehicle on the road at night. P.W.1 and P.W.2, who were passengers in the motor vehicle saw and identified the appellant by the head lights of the vehicle as the appellant A approached it. The appellant was their co-villager and they had known the appellant for a long time before the incident. In the course of the robbery a 5 year old child of P.W.1 was snatched away by the appellant.

MUSTAFA JA

The child could not be found, and a month later, some human bones and a skull and some hair were B discovered in the bush about 1 mile from the incident. Near the bones were the clothes and ear rings worn by the said child at the time she was abducted. The bones and skull were found to be that of a child between 5 - 15 years by the pathologist and the hair was human hair, as found by the C Government Chemist. In our view this evidence sufficiently established that the bones and skull and hair were those of the abducted child.

We are also satisfied that the appellant was properly identified. P.W.1 immediately reported to the D authorities that the appellant was one of the robbers and that it was he who had abducted the child. Both P.W.1 and P.W.2 described the clothes the appellant was allegedly wearing at the time of the robbery, and such clothes were found in the appellant's house when it was searched.

Miss Mutabuzi for the appellant had submitted that there was insufficient evidence of the cause of E death and also that the circumstances do not point irresistibly to the appellant as the one who had killed.

We are satisfied that the appellant was one of the robbers, that he had abducted the child and was F the last person seen with the child when the child was alive. The bones of the child were found a month later about 1 mile from the scene of the incident. The appellant gave no explanation as to what he did to the child after he had abducted her. It is true there is no evidence as to how the child died; she might have been assaulted and killed or might have died of starvation or attacked by wild G animals after she was abandoned in the bush, or from some other cause.

However the child was in the custody and possession of the appellant, and he, at the least, had abandoned her in the bush, and this certainly, for whatever cause, brought about her death. Clearly H the appellant had caused the death of the child in terms of section 203(e) of the Penal Code. We are satisfied that the circumstances irresistibly indicate the appellant as the person, or one of the persons, who had killed the child in the course of a robbery. We think that his conviction for murder was justified. I

Appeal dismissed.

1984 TLR p251

A

[zRPz]SHELL AND BP LTD v WILBARD FULGENCE RWENYAGIRA 1984 TLR 251 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Mustafa JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

October 18, 1985

B CIVIL APPEAL 25 OF 1984

Flynote

Rent Restriction Act - Landlord and Tenant - National Housing Corporation exempted from the provisions of C sections 19 and 20 of the Rent Restriction Act - Such exemption attaches to premises.

Landlord and Tenant - Tenant sublets to its employee - Tenant seeks to repossess premises on employee resigning from employment - Landlord offers tenancy to the subtenant - Whether such offer terminates D tenancy between the landlord and the tenant- Rent Restriction Act, ss. 19 and 20 - G.N. 86 of 1970.

-Headnote

In 1971 the appellant leased some premises for occupation by its employees. In 1972 due to the operation of the Acquisition of Buildings Act the suit premises became vested in the National E Housing Corporation. From then on the appellant continued to pay rent to the National Housing Corporation. The house which was furnished by the appellant was allocated to the respondent, employee of the appellant, in 1974. The respondent resigned from employment of the appellant in March, 1979. The appellant then called upon him to vacate the premises. He refused to vacate F claiming that he was a "lawful tenant/subtenant of Messrs, National Housing Corporation." He produced a document from the National Housing Corporation offering him tenancy of the suit premises.

The trial magistrate found that on the strength of the letter of offer of tenancy to the respondent by G the National Housing Corporation, the landlord, the respondent was the lawful tenant of the premises. The first appellate court agreed with the trial magistrate on this point. The judge held that since National Housing Corporation is exempted from the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the H Rent Restriction Act by virtue of G.N. 86 of 1970 it could recover possession of the suit premises from the appellant without the necessity of going to court. The court was of the view that the letter of offer of tenancy to the respondent constituted the termination of the appellant's tenancy of the suit premises.

I The appellant appealed against the finding that the respondent and not itself is the lawful tenant of the suit premises.

1984 TLR p252

MUSTAFA JA

Held: (i) Exemption from the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the Rent Restriction Act by virtue of A G.N. 86 of 1979 has nothing to do with the termination of tenancy or with the recovery of possession;

(ii) the offer by National Housing Corporation of a tenancy to the respondent could not be construed as an act terminating the appellant's tenancy; B

(iii) the appellant was entitled to recover possession on the termination of the respondent's employment.

Case Information

Order accordingly. C

No case referred to.

M.J. Raithatha, for the respondent

R.C. Kesaria for the appellant

[zJDz]Judgment
Mustafa, J.A. read the following judgment of the court: The background to this appeal is briefly as D follows. A house on Plot 28, Block D along Upanga Road, Dar es Salaam was leased by Shell and B.P. Tanzania Ltd. (hereafter called Shell) from its owner in 1971. Shell had leased the said house E and some other premises for occupation by its own employees. In 1972, due to the operation of the Acquisition of Buildings Act the house became vested in the National Housing Corporation which became its landlord. Shell continued payment of the rent of the house to the National Housing Corporation. Shell had furnished the house and sometime in 1974, Wilbald Fulgence Rwenyagira F (hereafter called the respondent) an employee of Shell, was allocated the said house for his occupation. It is common ground that the respondent occupied the said house by virtue of his employment with Shell, that Shell was paying shs.800/= the monthly rent of the house, and that 12 G 1/2% of the respondent's salary was deducted at source toward such rent. When the respondent occupied the house, he signed an inventory of furniture and articles which was exhibited at the trial court.
The respondent resigned from Shell in March, 1979. Following such resignation Shell called upon H the respondent to vacate the house. By letter date 12.7.79 the respondent wrote back that he expected to move out by the end December, 1979 and he asked Shell to deduct the rentals due until December, 1979 from monies belonging to the respondent in the hands of Shell, and agreed to Shell I checking the furniture in the house.
1984 TLR p253
MUSTAFA JA
A However on 15.8.79 the respondent filed a suit in the Resident Magistrate's Court, Dar es Salaam, claiming that he was the "lawful tenant/sub-tenant of Messrs. National Housing Corporation" in respect of the house on Plot 28 Block D. He complained that Shell was committing unlawful acts in B order to evict him and prayed for an injunction to restrain Shell from doing so. A temporary injunction was issued in favour of the respondent.
Shell filed its defence and denied that the respondent was the lawful tenant or sub-tenant of National Housing Corporation and maintained that the respondent occupied the suit premises as its C employee. As the respondent had left his service with Shell, the respondent had lost his right of occupation and Shell counterclaimed for vacant possession of the premises and the return of the furniture and articles, and for damages for loss of use of such articles and furniture at Shs. 1,000/= D per month until the return of the articles and furniture.
At the trial in the Magistrate's Court the respondent claimed that he had been offered the tenancy of the suit premises by National Housing Corporation. He produced a document from National Housing Corporation dated 16.1.80.
E The trial magistrate found that the respondent was the tenant of the suit premises on the strength of the letter from National Housing Corporation to him dated 16.1.80 and that Shell was not entitled to vacant possession. He also held that as the furniture was in the suit premises Shell had lost its F right to it once National Housing Corporation became the landlord. He gave judgment for Shell in the sum of Shs.5,600/= being rent paid by Shell on behalf of the respondent to the end of December, 1979.

Shell appealed from that judgment to the High Court. The judge (Bahati, J.) held that the National G Housing Corporation was exempted from the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the Rent Restriction Act by virtue of G.N. 86 of 1970 and could recover possession of the suit premises from Shell without the necessity of going to court, despite the provisions of section 11(A) 91) of the Rent Restriction Act. When National Housing Corporation forwarded the document dated 16.1.80 to the H respondent that constituted a valid tenancy agreement and presumably that also constituted the termination of Shell's tenancy of the suit premises. The judge upheld the finding of the Magistrate that the respondent was the tenant of National Housing Corporation of the suit premises and I declined to rule whether the sub-tenancy of the respondent with

1984 TLR p254

MUSTAFA JA

Shell came to an end on the termination of his employment in the circumstances. A

The judge held that the furniture and articles listed in the inventory belonged to Shell and ordered the return of such articles to Shell by the respondent. He also assessed damages for loss of use at the rate of shs. 1,000/= per month from 25.5.79 to the date the furniture and articles are returned to B Shell by the respondent. He also upheld the Magistrate's order that the respondent shall pay Shell the sum of shs. 5,600/= for rent due to 31.12.79.

From that judgment Shell has appealed to this Court. Shell has appealed against the finding that the respondent, and not Shell, is the lawful tenant of the suit premises. The respondent has cross- C appealed against the judge's finding that the furniture was the property of Shell and the order for its return and against both the award of damages and its quantum for loss of use. The respondent in the alternative contended that Shell had not alleged or established that the conditions needed for D re-possession in terms of Section 19(1) (e) and 19(2) of the rent Restriction Act had been complied with.

We will deal with the issue of vacant possession claimed by Shell first. It is clear that National E Housing Corporation became Shell's landlord of the suit premises by virtue of the Acquisition of Buildings Act in 1972. However the tenancy of Shell had not been terminated at any time and Shell remained the tenant of the suit premises. It is true that National Housing Corporation is exempted from the provisions of section 19 and section 20 of the Rent Restriction Act by G.N. No. 86 of 1979, F but those provisions have got nothing to do with the termination of tenancy or with the recovery of possession. Those provisions only create conditions which have to be complied with before possession is granted. There was no evidence of any kind that National Housing Corporation has G terminated Shell's tenancy, or has recovered possession of the premises.

The offer by National Housing Corporation of a tenancy to the respondent by its letter of 16.1.80 could not be construed as an act terminating Shell's tenancy. It is worthless for that purpose. Shell H remains the tenant of the suit premises and the respondent had occupied the premises from Shell by virtue of his employment. Shell was entitled to recover possession on the termination of the respondent's employment. Mr. Raithatha has pointed out that Shell has not established that it I required the premises for some other employee in its employment in terms of section 19(1)(e) of the Rent

1984 TLR p255
MUSTAFA JA
Restriction Act or that it was reasonable to make the order of re-possession in terms of section 19(2) of the said A Act. That is true. However we have carefully considered G.N. 86 of 1970 the relevant part of which reads:

(1) ... B

(2) All premises in respect of which the National Housing Corporation established by the National Housing Corporation Act, 1962, is the landlord, are hereby exempted from the provisions of section 19 and section 20 of the Rent Restriction Act, 1962, and from all other provisions of the said Act which operate so as to confer upon a tenant a D statutory tenancy upon the determination of his contractual tenancy.

Obviously National Housing Corporation is the landlord, albeit the head landlord, in respect of the suit premises. As such the premises are exempted from the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the Rent Restriction Act. Mr. Raithatha submitted that the exemption can only apply if National Housing Corporation is the direct landlord, and is itself involved in re-possession. We do not agree. The exemption would seem to attach to premises of which E National Housing Corporation is the landlord. Such premises are exempted premises, just as certain premises are rent controlled premises. If G.N. 86 of 1979 is construed in accordance with Mr. Raithatha's submission, a curious result will emerge. The respondent would be a protected tenant vis-a-vis Shell, but once National Housing F Corporation recovers possession, the respondent's protection ceases, although he remains in occupation of the same premises. That cannot be right. We agree with Mr. Kesaria's contention that as the suit premises are exempted premises, the conditions of section 19 and section 20 do not apply to Shell for its recovery of the premises from the G respondent. Shell is entitled to an order of possession.

As regards the order for the return of the furniture and articles, the evidence clearly establishes that those articles were supplied by Shell. There was also evidence of demand of the return of the articles by Shell. We are satisfied H that the High Court was right to order damages for loss of use of such articles. We have had sight of the inventory, as had the judge. It is true, as Mr. Raithatha has contended, that the figure of shs. 1,000/= a month for loss of use assessed by the judge is arbitrary. But in view of the variety, range and quantity of the furniture and I articles, consisting of both so-called soft and hard furnishings, we are unable to say that the sum assessed is unreasonable or needs interference. A We do not think that we should substitute our arbitrary figure for that of the judge. It is true that Shell should have led evidence as to the cost or value of the articles, but in the circumstances we do not think that the omission is fatal, as there was sufficient material for an assessment to be made. B
1984 TLR p256

In the result we allow the appeal of Shell, set aside the judgments of the courts below declaring the respondent as the tenant of the suit premises, and substitute therefor an order that the respondent vacates the suit premises on or before 15th November, 1985. The respondent is also to pay mesne C profits to Shell for the suit premises at the rate of Shs. 800/= per month for such sum as would be found due and owing to Shell by the respondent.

The cross appeal of the respondent is dismissed in its entirety.
We award Shell the costs of the appeal and the cross appeal. D
Order accordingly.
1984 TLR p256
E
[zRPz]ALFI EAST AFRICA LTD v THEMI INDUSTRIES & DISTRIBUTORS AGENCY LTD
1984 TLR 256 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mustafa JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

September, 1985
CIVIL APPEAL 28 OF 1984 F
Flynote
Contract - Fraud - Conspiracy between employee of appellant company and respondent company to defraud appellant - Agreement void and unenforceable.
Contract - Sale of machinery - No price agreed - Agreement void for uncertainty - S. 29 Law of Contract G Ordinance, Cap. 433.
-Headnote
Kwast, an employee of the appellant company entered into an agreement on behalf of the appellant with the respondent company. According to the terms of the agreement all the advantages were on H one side, in favour of the respondent. Two pieces of machinery specifically ordered by the appellant for itself were diverted to the respondent by Kwast under the agreement. The respondent was to pay the price of the machinery which price was not mentioned nor was a method of calculating it agreed upon. When Kellner, a Director and principal shareholder of the respondent I company came to know about this he had the Board of Directors cancel the agreement. The respondent then claimed special and general A damages from the appellant for breach of contract.
1984 TLR p257
MUSTAFA JA
The trial judge held, among other things, that there was no evidence of fraud nor was the agreement uncertain as regards the price of machinery. B
On appeal to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania the holdings of the trial judge were attacked. It was argued that the agreement was void for uncertainty and that it was fraudulent.
Held: (i) Price is a fundamental matter in an agreement of sale such as the one under consideration, and as there was C no agreed price there was no agreement; in terms of s. 29 of the Law of Contract Ordinance, Cap. 433, the agreement is void for uncertainty;

(ii) the agreement was unenforceable and void on the ground that it was fraudulent as a result of a conspiracy between Kwast and Themi, the respondent. D

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Case referred to E

1. Courtney & Fairbairn Ltd. v Tolaini Bros (Hotels) Ltd [1975] 1 All E.R. 716.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mustafa, J.A. delivered the following judgment of the court: Themi Industries & Distributors Agency Ltd. F (hereafter called Themi) had filed a case in the High Court against Alfi East Africa Ltd. (hereafter called Alfi) claiming special and general damages arising from an alleged breach by Alfi of an agreement in writing entered into between them on 3d February, 1978. Alfi resisted the claim on the ground that the agreement was void and G unenforceable and was fraudulent and counterclaimed for the return of two pieces of machinery or their value and for loss of use of the machinery as well as for a sum of money allegedly due for raw materials supplied by Alfi to Themi.

The High Court (Maganga, J.) entered judgment for Alfi on the counterclaim by consent in the sum of shs. H 545,192.30 and costs in respect of the item for raw materials supplied by Alfi. The High Court entered judgment, after a trial, in favour of Themi on its claim and awarded it shs. 300,000/= for special and shs. 200,000/= for general damages and costs of the suit. The High Court also I decreed in favour of Alfi on its counterclaim a sum of shs. 839,391.45 being the value of the A machinery.

Alfi has appealed from the judgment, but Themi has not cross-appealed.

It will be convenient at this stage to set out the agreement (hereafter called the Agreement) in full. B

THIS AGREEMENT is made this 3rd day of February, 1978 BETWEEN ALFI EAST AFRICA LIMITED (hereinafter called the "First Company") on one part and THEMI C

INDUSTRY AND DISTRIBUTIORS AGENCY LIMITED (hereinafter called the "Second Company") on the other part.

WHEREAS the parties hitherto who have hitherto carried on the business of manufacturing goods as well as D buying and selling manufactured goods in Tanzania separately on their own respective accounts (and are both registered companies in Tanzania under the Companies Ordinance Cap 212) are desirous of effecting an exclusive business between the two parties: E

NOW IT IS HEREBY AGREED as follows:

I Alfi E.A. Limited hereinafter called the First Company in this deed binds itself to order and import HESTA F BLOW MOULDING MACHINES on behalf or on account of THEMI INDUSTRIES AND DISTRIBUTORS AGENCY LTD (hereinafter called the Second Company IN THIS DEED) for their exclusive use in manufacturing of Torches, Vacuum Flasks, Household goods etc. PROVIDED and on condition that the Second G Company covenants itself as follows:

(a) That the Order and importation of the mould by the First Company will be according to the selection of the second Company. H

(b) That the order and importation will not in any way affect the quote of importation of the first company (Alfi E.A. Ltd).

(c) That Alfi E.A. Ltd hereinafter called the first company will have the first priority and exclusive rights to I buy from THEMI INDUSTRY AND DISTRIBUTORS AGENCY

A LTD the blow moulding items according to the first company's specification.

(d) That the second company covenants that the event of its desire to sell such products to another party other than Alfi E.A. Ltd such desire shall only be executed after full consultation and permission of the B first company within reasonable time.

(e) That payments for the imported moulds and machines by the first company on behalf of the second company will be made by way of deducting directly the cost of manufactured products supplied by C second company to the first company without interest. In the event of the manufactured products failing to satisfy the cost of the imported moulds the second company shall bind itself to pay the outstanding amount from its other sources.

D OTHER CONDITIONS:

Each party hereto hereby undertakes to employ himself diligently in the practice of manufacturing according to E business ethics as to quality and to use his best endeavour to promote the interest there and will deal faithfully and justily with the other Parties hereto.

The Parties further covenants that this agreement can be determined at the option of either party to this F agreement after giving six months notice of the intention to determine and after each party has fully satisfied the other party as to outstanding monies to be paid if any or outstanding orders of goods to be supplied.

G SIGNED for and on behalf of ALFI EAST AFRICA LIMITED in my presence this day
H of.....1978.
SIGNED for and on behalf of
THEMI INDUSTRY AND DISTRIBUTORS
AGENCY LIMITED in my presence
I this.....day of.....1978

DRAWN BY: A M/S KAPOOR & MIRAMBO ADVOCATES
ARUSHA
TANZANIA

J. Kwast had signed for Alfi in the agreement. B

We will deal with the claim by Themi. In its plaint, after referring to the agreement, the material paragraphs are 4, 5 and 10 which read: C

4. In accordance with the terms and conditions of the said agreement the Defendant obtained on account of the Plaintiff HESTA BLOW MOULDING MACHINES. The total costs of these machines amounted to Shs.939,391/45. This sum of Shs. 939,391/45 was to be paid to the Defendant by the Plaintiff by way of supply finished products in D accordance with the defendant's demands from time to time.

5. Pursuant to the said agreement the Defendant regularly supplied all raw materials to the Plaintiff for the Plaintiff's factory at Arusha. Such purchases were paid in cash. E

10. On 17th April, 1979 the Defendant wrote to the Plaintiff (a copy of the said letter is attached herewith and marked Exhibit 'B') canceling the said agreement and demand return F of machinery and payment of all moneys due. By this letter the Defendant committed a breach of the said agreement whereby Plaintiff has suffered damages.

Then Themi claimed special and general damages arising from the refusal of Alfi to continue to G supply raw materials.

In its statement of defence Alfi alleged in paragraphs 2, 3, 5 and 8 as follows:

2. The Defendant states that the Agreement referred to in paragraph 3 of the Plaint was H entered into by the Plaintiff and one J. Kwast purportedly on behalf of the Defendant Company. The Defendant will maintain that the said Agreement is void because it was entered into with the object of defrauding the Defendant Company. I

1984 TLR p261

MUSTAFA JA

A 3. Alternatively and without prejudice to the foregoing the Defendant states that the Agreement was ultra-vires the powers of J. Kwast who executed it.

5. The Defendant has not at any time provided raw materials to the Plaintiff under B contractual arrangements. The Defendant avers that the Plaintiff used to purchase raw materials from the Defendant under credit facilities which have now been stopped by the Defendant. Subject to the foregoing and without prejudice to paragraphs 2 and 3 herein, C the Defendant states that there is no provision in the agreement which requires the defendant to supply the Plaintiff with raw materials.

8. Save that the Defendant wrote the letter referred to in paragraph 10 of the Plaint, the D defendant denies the allegation that there has been a breach of the Agreement and repeats paragraphs 2 and 4 hereof.

E Alfi also filed a counterclaim to which reference has already been made.

Alfi's defence to Themi's claim was basically that the Agreement was unenforceable and was made in fraud between J. Kwast, an employee of Alfi and Themi. Two other matters were also in issue. They were (1) whether J. Kwast had acted ultra vires in signing the Agreement and (2) whether a F sum of Shs. 100,000 paid by Themi for machinery could be appropriated by Alfi to the account for raw materials.

The trial judge, in his judgment, found that J. Kwast had acted intra vires when he executed the Agreement on behalf of Alfi.

G As regards the issue of fraud the judge held that section 14 of the Import Control Ordinance which prohibits the holder of any import licence, without permission, to transfer or assign such licence to another on pain of a penalty, did not render the transfer of the machinery imported in the H name of Alfi and transferred to Themi illegal so as to vitiate the Agreement. He thought that the prohibition was against the transfer of the import licence, not the goods imported. In any event, the details for importation were filled in and Themi had not breached any statutory provisions.

The judge also held that there was no uncertainty as regards the price for the machinery. He held I that in the Agreement it was specifically mentioned how the machinery was to be paid. And, according to Ibrahim Dahal, the Director of Themi, the price of the machinery had been agreed upon A and was not dependent on future negotiation. Although the agreed price was not mentioned by Dahal, the judge found that the piece of evidence stood unrebutted. He held that the agreement was neither fraudulent nor void for uncertainty or lack of consideration. B

1984 TLR p262

As regards the obligation to supply raw materials by Alfi, the judge conceded that there was no such undertaking in the Agreement, but he accepted Dahal's evidence that there was some mutual, presumably oral, agreement between him and Kwast to that effect.

The judge referred to the letter of 17.4.79 written by Alfi cancelling the agreement. We set it out in C full.

Alfi East Africa Limited.
P.O. Box 996,
Arusha. D
17th April, 1979
The Managing Director,
Themi Industry & Distribution Agency, E
P.O. Box 106,
Arusha
Dear Sir, F
Re:CONTRACT BETWEEN ALFI EAST LIMITED AND THEMI INDUSTRY 7 DISTRIBUTION AGENCY

In our Board of Directors Meeting on the 15th April, 1979 the majority of Directors voted to cancel the G contract between both companies. I have also been given instructions not to supply any goods at the moment to you either for your trading or for your manufacturing section and also to collect the outstanding trading balance without further delay. Machinery should be returned straight away. H

Please supply all the containers which you have manufactured up to the time of receiving this letter and stop producing bottles according to our contract. I

1984 TLR p263

MUSTAFA JA

A Yours faithfully,

ALFI EAST AFRICA LIMITED

J. KWAST,

B MANAGING DIRECTOR

c.c. Mr. O. Kellner,

P.O. box 116

ARUSHA.

C The judge held that the letter appeared to confirm the existence of an understanding testified to by Dahal. The judge held that Alfi was bound to supply raw materials to Themi.

The judge also held that Alfi was not entitled to appropriate the shs. 100,000 paid for the machinery D to the raw materials account.

After hearing counsel for Themi and Alfi and after carefully perusing the proceedings and judgment of the trial we are satisfied that J. Kwast had acted intra vires in executing the Agreement on behalf E of Alfi. According to O. Kellner, a Director and principal Shareholder of Alfi, Kwast was de facto, though not de jure, managing director of Alfi. Kwast was held out as a managing director of Alfi and clearly had power to execute the Agreement on behalf of Alfi.

We now turn to the issue of fraud. We have carefully perused the Agreement and analysed the F evidence adduced at the trial. Kwast was only an employee of Alfi. All the shares of Alfi were owned by Kellner and his wife. In terms of the agreement, all the advantages are on one side, in favour of Themi. Alfi was to set up an industry for Themi; in fact was to set up a rival company in G Themi, which was to manufacture goods normally produced by Alfi. Alfi was to provide the capital. Alfi had an import licence quota, and apparently used that quota to obtain the machinery for Themi. Dahal had stated that he had no experience at all of such machinery; in fact Themi had been merely the distributing agent of Alfi products. Themi did not pay a cent for the machinery; in H evidence Dahal said that it was not necessary for him to have money to buy the machinery. Themi had a nominal capital of Shs. 50,000 and a fully paid up capital of shs. 2,000/=. There was no security offered for the machinery, nor indeed was interest payable. The machinery was worth about one I million shillings, presumably in foreign exchange. There was no provision for the repayment period, nor even when repayment was to commence. In fact the price for the A machinery was not mentioned in the Agreement.

Alfi was to provide an assured market for the goods manufactured by Themi. Alfi was also alleged to be liable to supply raw materials to Themi for such manufacture, on credit. The raw materials B supplied amounted nearly to a million shillings. Again there was nothing in the Agreement about the price of such raw materials nor how and in what manner payment was to be made. There was no security provided for such credit sales, nor was interest on outstanding sums mentioned. The Agreement was so blatantly one sided in favour of Themi that it is incredible. The Agreement was C solely for the benefit of Themi at the expense of Alfi.

Dahal alleged that the Agreement was entered into because Alfi had lacked space to put up the two pieces of machinery in Alfi's premises. No other reason was advanced. Dahal said that Kwast had D told him about the lack of space. That could not possibly be true, and Dahal must have known it was not true. According to D.W.2 Vohora, Dahal in 1978 supervised Alfi's activities on the order of Kwast when Kwast went on leave. Dahal worked at Alfi for more than a month and must have E known about Alfi's accommodation capacity. According to D.W.1 Kellner, D.W.2 Vohora and D.W.4 Talib, there was ample space at Alfi for the installation of the two pieces of machinery. Indeed according to D.W.4 Talib, 12 such machines could be installed at Alfi premises. In fact those two pieces of machinery were specifically ordered by Alfi for Alfi, but were diverted to Themi by F Kwast. According to Dahal, he expected a net profit of shs. 100,000 per month if the two machines worked full capacity, enabling him to pay off the machines within a period of a year or so.

When Kellner came to know of this Agreement he was certain that it was a conspiracy between G Kwast and Themi to defraud Alfi and he took prompt steps to cancel it.

Taking into consideration all the evidence and circumstances and the contents of the Agreement we think that it was highly probable that Dahal and Kwast had conspired together to defraud Alfi. H

On the issue of uncertainty, in the Agreement, no price for the machinery was mentioned. In fact Mr. Ismail for Themi conceded that in the Agreement no price was mentioned nor was there a method of ascertaining or calculating such price. He however submitted that the surrounding I circumstances should be looked at.

1984 TLR p265

MUSTAFA JA

He contended, that according to Dahal, both Alfi and Themi knew the price and there was a provision in the A Agreement about how the price was to be paid, that is by sale of the manufactured goods to Alfi. Nevertheless the fact remains that no price has emerged, and if Alfi were to sue Themi for the price of the machinery, it would not be able to do so, as no price has been fixed. It is clear that the price was to be arrived at by mutual negotiations B between Themi and Alfi, which means that the price has still to be agreed. Price is a fundamental matter in an agreement of sale such as the one under consideration and as there was no agreed price there was no agreement, see Courtney & Fairbairn Ltd. v Tolaini Bros (Hotels) Ltd [1975] 1 All ER 716. In terms of section 29 of the C Law of Contract Cap 433 of the Laws the Agreement is void for uncertainty.

In our view Alfi could not appropriate the sum of shs. 1000,000 to the raw materials account when it was paid for the machinery. That sum either goes to the machinery account or is to be returned to Themi. Since however Alfi D had already credited that sum to the raw materials account, perhaps Alfi and Themi could settle the matter between themselves amicably. In any event, Alfi's attempt to appropriate the sum of shs. 100,000 to the raw materials account was wrong. E

We are satisfied that the Agreement was unenforceable and void on the ground:

(1) That it was fraudulent, as a result of a conspiracy between Kwast and Themi.

(2) That it was uncertain, as no price had been agreed. F

We are aware that to establish fraud a high degree of proof is required. In this case we think, on the evidence, that it was most probable that fraud was committed against Alfi by both Kwast and Themi. G

There was no basis for the award of damages to Themi. Even if the Agreement had been enforceable, there was no legal obligation on Alfi to supply raw materials to Themi. No such provision exists in the agreement. At the most Alfi has been supplying such raw materials to Themi, but clearly it was a voluntary act and imported no legal H obligation. The claim by Themi for damages fails.

In the result we allow the appeal. We hold that the agreement is void and unenforceable. We set aside the judgment and decree of the High Court in favour of Themi Industries and Distribution Agency I

1984 TLR p266

Ltd. and substitute therefore an order dismissing the claim. We allow costs to Alfi East Africa Ltd. A both here and below.

We order that since the record of appeal prepared by Alfi was unsatisfactory in that some important documents and certain lines on some pages were missing, no costs be allowed Alfi concerning the preparation of the record of appeal. B

Appeal allowed

1984 TLR p266

C

[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v NURU MASUD MGAWE 1984 TLR 266 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Mustafa JJA, Kisanga JJA and Omar JJA

February 21, 1986

CRIMINAL APPEAL 51 OF 1984 D

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Withdrawal of prosecution under s. 86(a) Criminal Procedure Code - Withdrawal by public prosecutor - Whether consent of court to withdrawal necessary. E

-Headnote

The respondent was charged in court on 15.12.81 and on 12.8.83 the public prosecutor stated that he was unable to trace the police file and applied to withdraw the charge under s.86(a) of the Criminal Procedure Code. The trial magistrate refused his consent to such withdrawal and dismissed the case F under s.201 of the Criminal Procedure Code and dismissed the accused.

On appeal to the high court the learned judge held that the trial magistrate had power to dismiss the charge and acquit the accused under s. 205 not under s. 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code but that the error was curable. G

On further appeal it was argued before the Court of Appeal that withdrawal of a charge by a public prosecutor under s. 86(a) does not need consent of the trial court. H

Held: (i) According to section 86(a) a public prosecutor is entitled as of right, on the instructions of the Director of Public Prosecutions, to withdraw from the prosecution of any person;

(ii) the provisions in sections 201, 202, 205 or 198 of the criminal Procedure Code have nothing to I do with the provisions in section 86 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

1984 TLR p267

MUSTAFA JA

Case Information

A Order accordingly

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

B Mustafa, J.A. delivered the following judgment of the court: This is an appeal by the Republic. In the Magistrate's Court the respondent herein Nuru Masud Mgawe was charged with causing death through dangerous driving contrary to sections 40(1) and 63(2)(a) of the Road Traffic Act No. 30 of 1973.

C The commencement of the trial was inordinately delayed, mainly because the prosecution was unready or without its file. The respondent was charged in Court on 15.12.81, and on 12.8.83 the Public Prosecutor stated that he was unable to trace the Police file and applied to withdraw the charge under section 86(a) of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20 of the Laws. The Magistrate in D his ruling stated inter alia "I object to the prosecution's prayer of withdrawal under Section 86(a) of Criminal Procedure Code and dismiss the case under section 201 of Criminal Procedure Code and discharge the accused".

E The Republic appealed against that order to the High Court by way of revision. The Judge (Bahati, J.) dealt with the matter in great detail and referred to Sections 198, 202 and 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code as well. He also referred to a number of decisions of the High Court, which seem to be in conflict. In the result the Judge held that the Magistrate had power to dismiss the F charge and acquit the accused under section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code, not under section 201 of Criminal Procedure Code. He held that the error is curable and he upheld the Magistrate's order.

With great respect to the trial Magistrate, the learned Judge and Mr. Kapinga who appeared for the G respondent before us, the interpretation of section 86 Criminal Procedure Code is a comparatively simple matter. It seems to us that both the courts below confused the issue of withdrawal from prosecution by the Republic with applications for adjournment, and indeed there are passages in the H judgments below which equate applications for withdrawal with adjournment applications.

Section 86 of Criminal Procedure Code reads:

In any trial before a Subordinate Court any public prosecutor may, with the consent of the court or on the I instructions of the Director of Public Prosecutions, at any time before judgment is pronounced, withdraw from the prosecution of any person, and upon such withdrawal: A

1984 TLR p268

MUSTAFA JA

(a) if it is made before the accused person is called upon to make the defence, he shall be discharged, but such discharge shall not operate as a bar to subsequent proceedings against him on account of the same facts. B

(b) if it is made after the accused person is called upon to make his defence, he shall be acquitted.

Section 80A gives the Director of Public Prosecutions powers to discontinue criminal proceedings at C any stage before judgment, and such powers are exercisable by him in person or any officer subordinate to him acting under his general or special instructions.

Section 2 of Criminal Procedure Code defines a public prosecuter as any person appointed under section 84, and the Attorney General and other judicial officers. D

Section 84 relates to the appointment of Public Prosecutors.

In the Magistrate's Court a Public Prosecutor appeared for the Republic. E

According to section 86(a) a Public Prosecutor is entitled as of right, on the instructions of the Director of Public Prosecutions to withdraw from the prosecution of any person. The consent of the court is needed only for instance in the case of a Private Prosecutor.

The provisions in sections 201, 202, 205 or 198 Criminal Procedure Code have nothing to do with the F provisions in section 86 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It is clear that the trial magistrate erred in refusing the application to withdraw by the Public Prosecutor, and the judge was also in error in upholding the magistrate's order to acquit the respondent in the circumstances. G

We allow the appeal of the Republic, set aside the order of the magistrate dismissing the case and discharging the accused (i.e. respondent) and substitute therefor an order allowing the application by the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from the prosecution under section 86 of the Criminal H Procedure Code Cap. 20.

Order accordingly. I

1984 TLR p269

A

[zRPz]CELESTINE KAMTAMBULA KAZIBA v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 269 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mtwara

Judge Msumi J

March 9, 1985

B CRIMINAL APPEAL 78 OF 1982

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Impersonating a Public Officer contrary to s.100 of the Penal Code - Whether conviction maintainable where accused was originally charged under a wrong sub-section.

-Headnote

C The appellant presented himself and enrolled for a course at Mahiwa Party Ideological College in the name of Captain C.B.E. Mziba of Tanzania Peoples' Defence Forces. It was later discovered that D he was not an employee nor officer of the Tanzania People's Defence Forces. He was charged and convicted of impersonating a public officer contrary to s.100 (1) of the Penal Code. On appeal against conviction:

E Held: (i) The provisions of sub-section (1) comes into play where accused purports to discharge duty, either by doing an act or attend in any place, which he is required to perform in his assumed official post;

(ii) in the instant case the appellant ought to have been charged under subsection (2) as there F wa no duty imposed on him to enroll himself with the college as a result of his being an army captain;

(iii) in the instant case the appellant though charged under the wrong subsection fully understood the kernel of the case against him; therefore, the irregularity is curable under section 346 of the criminal Procedure Code in which case the conviction is taken to have been entered under G subsection (2) of s.100.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

H No cases referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Msumi, J.: After he was convicted of impersonating Public Officer contrary to section 100(1) of the Penal Code, appellant was sentenced to two years imprisonment which was subject to confirmation I by this court. Appellant has filed this appeal to challenge the said conviction and sentence.

1984 TLR p270

MSUMI J

The factual aspect of the prosecution's allegation leaves no room for any rational controversy. On A the material days appellant presented himself before the principal of Mahiwa Party Ideological College as one Captain C.B.E. Mziba of Tanzania People's Defence Forces. And by virtue of the purported public office, appellant enrolled himself as a long course student of the college. It, B however, transpired that in fact appellant was not employed as public officer let alone being a army captain. As I said, these facts are supported by cogent evidence. Nothing has been adduced by the appellant in his defence which has the effect of creating reasonable doubt against this allegation. However, the same expression of satisfaction is not maintainable when it comes to the legal aspect C of the case.

As an attempt to convey my uneasiness effectively let me quote fully the provisions of section 100 of the Penal Code. It reads:

100. Any person who- D

(1) personates any person employed in public service on an occasion when the later is required to do any act or a attend in any place by virtue of his employment; or E

(2) falsely represents himself to be a person employed in the Public service, and assumes to do any act or to attend in any place for the purpose of doing any act by virtue of such employment, is guilty of a misdemeanour.

When admitting this appeal my brother Samatta, J., queried, inter alia, whether in drafting the F charge the public prosecutor intended to use subsection (2) of the section. With respect, the conviction of the appellant under subsection (1) was clearly prompted by the misconception of these two subsections. The provisions of subsection (1) only come into play where accused G purports to discharge duty, either by doing an act or attend in any place, which he is required to perform in his assumed official post. In the instant case it is true that appellant enrolled himself as Captain Mziba but he was not required or duty - bound to enroll himself with the college as a result of his being an army captain. There was no duty imposed on him as such to enroll himself with the H college. He ought to have ben charged under the provisions of subsection (2). For it is clear that appellant assumed to attend the course by virtue of his false representation that he was an army captain. As a general guidance, magistrates are advised that whenever they are called upon to I adjudicate a case preferred under either of the subsections of section

A 100 of the Penal Code, they should particularly be on guard against the common error of mixing up these provisions. For, depending on the particular circumstances of the case, such error may be fatal to the conviction. Quite happily, the same cannot be said in this case. Though charged under B the wrong subsection, appellant fully understood the kernel of the case against him. The situation is curable under section 346 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Thus the conviction is taken to have been entered under subsection (2) of section 100.

C The sentence of two years imprisonment is the maximum provided by the law. I don't think that it is such a bad impersonation case so as to warrant the imposition of the maximum penalty. Appellant's youth age and the fact that he was a first offender ought to have been taken as factors mitigating the intended sentence. Unfortunately any reduction of this sentence at this hour will be D of no practical utility. Appellant has already completed serving the sentence. This appeal is therefore dismissed and the sentence of two years imprisonment is hereby confirmed.

Appeal dismissed.

1984 TLR p271

E

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v MABULA s/o MAGANA 1984 TLR 271 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Katiti J

June 9, 1984

F CRIMINAL REVISION 41 OF 1983

Flynote

G Minimum Sentences Act, 1972 - Compensation Order - Procedure of recovery of compensation - S.7(1).

-Headnote

The accused was charged with and convicted of cattle theft. In addition to a sentence of five years imprisonment he was ordered to pay shs. 2000/= compensation to the complainant or distress in H default. On revision the high court considered the propriety of the distress in default order.

Held: The recovery of compensation as ordered under section 7(1) of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972 is not by distress in default but by presenting or filing an authenticated copy of the compensation order in the District Court having jurisdiction over the area for its execution in the I same manner as if it were a decree passed by such court under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. A

1984 TLR p272

KATITI J

Case Information

Order accordingly.

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Katiti, J.: Mabula s/o Magana was charged with Cattle Theft c/s 268 of the Penal Code with two B others, and was finally found guilty and convicted as charged, and sentenced to five years imprisonment under section 5(c) of the Minimum Sentences Act 1972. The Second and Third accused persons were acquitted. Following on heels was a compensation order that runs as C follows:-

Order:Accused should pay Shs.2,000/= compensation to the complainant (P.W.1) or distress in default. D

What has attracted our attention is the recovery aspect of the compensation ordered, as the sentence is according to law and a mandatory one. What is interesting is compensation order that is to the effect that distress be levied in default of payment of the said compensation. I have only to E recall that cattle theft is an offence scheduled under the Minimum Sentences Act 1972. And where under the same Minimum Sentences Act 1972 a trial court orders payment of compensation where circumstances so dictate, it has so to do under the provisions of section 7(1) of the Minimum Sentences Act 1972. The recovery of compensation as ordered under Section 7(1) of the Minimum F Sentences Act 1972 is not by distress in default, but by presenting, or filing an authenticated copy of the compensation order, in the District Court, having jurisdiction over the area, for execution of the same in the same or like manner as if it were a decree passed by such Court under the provisions G of Civil Procedure Code 1966. It is therefore very clear that the compensation order that distress be levied in default of payment was bad in law. Accordingly the default distress aspect of the order is hereby set aside. H

Order accordingly.

1984 TLR p273
A
[zRPz]REPUBLIC v JOHN s/o GILIED 1984 TLR 273 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Katiti J

My 4, 1984
CRIMINAL REVISION 68 OF 1983
Flynote
B Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Guiding principles when sentencing a child or a young person - Children and Young Persons Ordinance, s. 22(2).
-Headnote
C The accused aged 15 years, was convicted of causing grievous bodily harm. The District Ccourt sentenced him to nine months' imprisonment plus twelve strokes corporal punishment. The case file was called for revision on the propriety of the imprisonment sentence.
D Held: Before a trial magistrate sentences a young person to any term of imprisonment he should, by application of his judicial mind and for sound recorded reasons, have eliminated other methods of legally dealing with such young person as unsuitable.

Case Information
E Order accordingly.
No case referred to.
F S. Kidela, for the Republic.
[zJDz]Judgment
Katiti, J.: The accused/convict John s/o Gilied, having been convicted as charged the trial Magistrate proceeded to sentence him. The trial Magistrate's preamble to sentence speaks loudly G as hereunder:

SENTENCE

An accused is a young one aged 15 years old as per medical proof the wound he inflicted on the skull of the H complainant showed in fact a maim for life. Accused is to face (nine) months imprisonment, plus 12 strokes corporal punishment so as to shock the mind of the accused not to repeat that kind of offence, and make an example for other many cruel youths, who are in mass prevailing in this District. The right of Appeal I explained.
1984 TLR p274
KATITI J
SGD: D.M. Mahizi A
District Magistrate
18/11/1983

The said John Giled had hardly seen the gates of the prison, when he was sent back by the Prison authorities, reminding the trial court of the provisions of section 22, of the Children and Young B Persons Ordinance Cap. 13. It is for the above reason that this case has come to us for revision.

As the learned State Attorney Mr. Kidela submitted, certified as it was that the accused was aged fifteen years of age, then obviously the trial magistrate should have been guided by the provisions C of the Children and Young Persons Ordinance Cap. 13, generally, and the provisions of s.22(2) of the same chapter in particular. This sub-section has the following to say, and I quote: D

Section 22 (2). No young person shall be sentenced to imprisonment, unless the court considers that, none of the other methods in which the case may be legally dealt with, by the provisions of this or any other Ordinance, is suitable.

It is easy to discern that the provisions of section 22 (2) of the Children and Young Persons E Ordinance Cap. 13 do not favour the imprisonment of young persons, unless imprisonment is in the circumstances of the case, the inevitable last resort. It follows therefore, that before a trial magistrate, sentences a young person to any term of imprisonment, he should by application of his F judicial mind and for sound recorded reasons, have eliminated other methods of legally dealing with such young person, as unsuitable.

Apart from sentencing a young person, to a term of imprisonment which should be considered as a G last resort, the following methods of dealing with a young person, upon conviction, give a trial magistrate many options, from which by using his judicial approach, he may choose one or more methods to deal with the young person offender.

The trial magistrate may: H

(a) Impose corporal punishment not exceeding twelve strokes - See Section (6) and 8 (2), of the Corporal Punishment Ordinance Cap. 17. I

1984 TLR p275

KATITI J

A (b) Impose fine, and or order payment of compensation or even costs to be paid by the parent, or guardian, provided the said parent, or guardian, has been given opportunity of being heard on the same - see section 21 of Children and Young Persons Ordinance Cap. 13.

B (c) May place such convicted young person on probation - see section 18 of the Children and Young Persons Ordinance Cap. 13.

C (d) May commit such convicted young person to an Approved School where the Manager of such Approved School has informed the court that, there is a vacancy - see section 24 of Cap. 13.

D (e) The District Court may in addition, or in the alternative.

(i) Discharge the said convicted young person un-conditionally or conditionally.

(ii) Repatriate him/her at the expense of Government to his/her home, or District of origin, where E and when circumstances so warrant.

(iii) Hand such convicted young person to the care of a fit person, or institution named in the order, subject to such person's or institution's willingness and readiness to undertake such care - See F section 23 of Cap. 13.

In this case, the trial court's choice of imprisonment was not judicially reached, despite the onesided sentiments that the trial magistrate did demonstrate. Grievous bodily harm may have been suffered, G and indeed, this was the trial magistrate's conclusion. Be it as it may, this did not disqualify the said trial magistrate, from considering what was in the interests of the accused, nor make him succumb to sentiments that dictated disobedience to the law as

H above shown. I do agree that the complainant suffered grievous harm, but the trial magistrate should not have been oblivious to the fact that the accused was also a first offender. And the said accused being a young person, the same trial magistrate, in coming to his decision to imprison him, he should have shown, why or how in view of the provisions of section 22 (2) of the Children and I Young Persons Ordinance, Cap. 13, the other methods of dealing with him were unsuitable. This he did not. Having considered the case generally, I am of the view that A imprisonment was not necessarily an inevitable course of action. I therefore set aside the imprisonment order, but confirm the corporal punishment awarded. The process to be initiated for the execution of such sentence, subject of course to the provisions of Section 15 (1) of Corporal B Punishment Ordinance Cap. 17, i.e., the doctor has to certify the accused's physical fitness to undergo the same.

Order accordingly. C

1984 TLR p276

D

[zRPz]MSAFIRI s/o KULINDWA v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 276 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Katiti J

May 4, 1984
CRIMINAL APPEAL 125 OF 1983
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Obtaining goods by false pretences - No averment that the pretence was made with intent to defraud - Effect of absence of such averment. E
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted on four counts of obtaining goods by false pretences. The charges did not aver that the pretences were made with intent to defraud. On appeal it was argued whether or F not absence of words "with intent to defraud" in a charge are fatal to conviction.

Held: (i) An intent to defraud is an essential ingredient of the offence of obtaining by false pretences and it is therefore essential that such intent to defraud must be alleged in the particulars of the G offence;

(ii) a charge of obtaining by false pretences which does not include an averment that the pretence was made with intent to defraud is a charge which discloses no offence at law. H

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Cases referred to:

1. Terrah Mukindia v.R. [1966] E.A. 425 I
2. Edward Opiyo s/o Anguro v R. [1968] HCD No. 55

1984 TLR p277

KATITI J

A W.K. Butambala, for the appellant

Swai, for the Republic

[zJDz]Judgment

Katiti, J.: Msafiri s/o Kulindwa, herein the appellant, who was charged severally on counts (1) (2), with 4th B accused on count No. 3, on 4th count with 3rd accused, and on 5th count with 2nd accused, as first accused, was his own witness to his conviction as charged. The appellant, to his chagrin saw his co-accuseds walk out of the court scot-free on acquittal. Aggrieved, the appellant has appealed against conviction.

C Representing the appellant was a Mwanza based advocate Mr. Butambala, while the Republic was represented by a learned State Attorney Mr. Swai. The two counsels demonstrated their professional mettle in their arguments whether or not, the appellant, who was alleged to have uttered the alleged false D routing slips to RTC shop managers, falsely pretending the same had come from the Sales Managers, but paid for the goods listed thereon, committed the offence under the provisions of section 302 of the Penal Code Cap. 16 of the Laws. The two counsels argued with volcanic force of assumption that, intent to E defraud, as an element of the offence under section 302 of the Penal Code Cap. 16 was incorporated, as it should have been in the charges, the appellant who was unrepresented, was facing at his trial.

I have with unmitigated anxiety first scrutinised the charged counts - all the counts-whose sample F representative phraseology of their particulars of offence, runs thus, inter alia, and I quote:

... did present a false Routing Slip to the Shop Manager RTC Shop No. 12, pretending that the routing slip was issued G to him by RTC District Sales Manager to buy I bag of sugar, (Ilula soap, khangas) whereas infact, it was not true.

The above particulars juxtaposed with the wording of section 302 of the Penal Code, will show or reveal, that, the words "with intent to defraud", that virtually control section 302 of the Penal Code, are H significantly absent in the particulars of offences charged, and above reproduced.

What then, is the effect of this omission? I would imagine that no conjurations or incantations need be resorted to, to realise that the offence under the provisions of section 302 of the Penal Code Cap. 16 - "an I intent to defraud" is an essential ingredient of the offence of obtaining by false pretences, and it is therefore essential that such intent to defraud must be alleged, or averred in the particulars of offence in a count charging that A very offence. It follows therefore, that where the charge falls under section 302 of the Penal Code Cap. 16 an omission to incorporate, or allege an intent to defraud in the particulars of that offence, renders the said charge defective. B

1984 TLR p278

KATITI J

Whether or not such defect is curable, which is a question on heels I can do no better than apply the wisdom in the holding in a similar case, Terrah Mukindia v R. [1966] E.A. 425 at page 429, where it was held thus:

Our view is that a charge of false pretences which does not include an averment that, the pretence was made with C intent to defraud is a charge, which discloses no offence at law, and is not merely an irregular or defective charge, which can be put right by application of section 382 of the Criminal Procedure Code. D

While I make necessary concession that, the above case did obtain in Kenya, and has persuasive value, our legal position on the same is not different. I derive comfort in so boldly saying from the case - Edward E Opiyo s/o Anguro v. R. [1968] H.C.D. No. 55, in which the High Court quashing the relevant conviction, had this to hold, and I quote:

... and absence of the words "with intent to defraud" are fatal to conviction, since the accused may not have F understood the charge against him. The false pretence must be set out in the charge with sufficient certainty.

From the above, it is very clear that, the charges did not contain averment that, there was intent to defraud, G and as such, no offences, or offence known to section 302, or any other section in the Penal Code were charged. That means, the convictions were unfortunately misconvieved. The same said convictions are hereby and therefore quashed, and sentences set aside. The appellant to be set free, unless he has H otherwise offended the law.

Appeal allowed. I

1984 TLR p279

A

[zRPz]MWITA MAGORE v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 279 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Munyera J

October 28, 1983

CRIMINAL APPEAL 139 OF 1983

Flynote

B Criminal Practice and Procedure - Cognate offences - Whether causing grievous harm can be substituted for robbery.

-Headnote

The appellant was charged with robbery. The trial magistrate found that the offence of robbery was not C established. He was, however, satisfied that the appellant caused grievous bodily harm to the complainant and convicted him accordingly. On appeal the learned judge considered whether or not it was proper to substitute a conviction of causing grievous harm for that of robbery.

D Held: (i) A conviction of causing grievous harm cannot be substituted for that of robbery, it not being a cognate minor offence to robbery;

(ii) a cognate minor offence is one that forms part of a series of lesser offences which must be E committed in order to complete the major one;

(iii) two minor offences to robbery are assault and stealing.

Case Information

Order accordingly.

F No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Munyera, J.: The appellant was the second accused before Tarime District Court. He was charged jointly with another (1st accused) for robbery. It was stated that on 27/10/82 the complainant, one Joseph G Nchagwa (PW 1), was returning to his village Kwitinyo, from a cattle auction. He was driving his Toyota Pick-up MZF 124. He passed by his shamba. He saw a herd of cattle grazing in the shamba. He parked his vehicle somewhere. He approached the herdsmen who happened to be the appellant and his co-accused. H He protested to them that their cattle were destroying his crops. The two men, armed with pangas, rushed to him. The first accused, with the aid of the appellant cut the complainant with a panga on his back. The latter fell down. The appellant put his hand in the complainant's pockets and made away with I Shs.12,000/= cash and the ignation key. A passery-by, Mchuma Mwita (PW 3) helped the injured complainant. Finally the appellant (and his co-accused) was arrested and charged. In his defence he (like his co- accused) denied that he assaulted and A robbed the complainant. The learned trial magistrate found that the violence visited upon the complainant was not for the purpose of stealing. He acquitted both of them of robbery but convicted them of causing grievous harm c/s 225. He sentenced the appellant to 2 years imprisonment, and released his B co-accused on a 3 year probation. Both of them were ordered to pay compensation of Shs.500/= each to the complainant. Hence this appeal.

There was ample evidence to establish that it was the appellant (and his co-accused) who injured the complainant. The question is whether conviction of causing grievous harm could be substituted for C robbery. Without beating about the bush I would say such a substitution is not possible for simple reason that causing grievous harm is not a cognate minor offence to robbery. A cognate minor offence is the one that forms part of a series of lesser offences which must be committed in order to complete the major one. D Thus in order to commit robbery one must commit two minor offences, assault and stealing. So when a person is tried for robbery assault and stealing are necessarily the subject of the trial and it shall not be unlawful to substitute conviction of either of them for robbery. But one doesn't have to cause grievous E harm in order to commit robbery. It is not a cognate minor offence to robbery and must be specifically charged. In this case it was not included in the charge and was not the subject of the trial. The appellant was unaware of it and its substitution was bad in law. I set aside the conviction of grievous harm and F substitute hereof the one of assault c/s 240. I set aside the sentence of 2 years and substitute thereof the one of 9 months' imprisonment.

Order accordingly. G
1984 TLR p280

[zRPz]SAIDI HATIBU v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 280 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mtwara
Judge Samatta J

August 24, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 66 OF 1980 H
Flynote
Evidence - Confessions - Plea of guilty of a co-accused implicating the other - Whether a confession which can be taken into consideration against that other person - S.33(1) Evidence Act,1967. I
1984 TLR p281
SAMATTA J
A Evidence - Identification - Appellant identified in a bush from a distance of about one hundred yards - Whether safe to act on such evidence.
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted of cattle theft. The trial magistrate relied on two pieces of evidence to convict B the appellant. He relied on a plea of guilty of a co-accused which implicated the appellant and an identification evidence of a witness who said that he saw the appellant and his co-accused in the bush from a distance of about one hundred yards driving some head of cattle. The High Court considered C whether or not the two pieces of evidence could support conviction.
Held: (i) A plea of guilty is a confession of fact and may be made use of as provided for in s.33(1) of the Evidence Act, 1967 provided it is proved;
D (ii) the use of the word "proved" in s.33(1) of the Evidence Act would tend to suggest that evidence must be adduced to establish that the plea was made;
(iii) in this case it was not permissible to invoke the provisions of s.33(1) of the Evidence Act against E the appellant because the plea of guilty of the co-accused was not proved;
(iv) it was unsafe for the trial magistrate to have accepted the identification evidence because the distance was quite long and the fact that the man was in a bush.
Case Information

F Appeal allowed

No case referred to.

G L.K.N. Kaduri, for the Republic.

[zJDz]Judgment

Samatta, J.: This is an appeal from a decision of the Dstrict Court of Masasi district whereby the appellant, SAIDI HATIBU, was convicted of cattle theft, contrary to s.268 of the Penal Code, and was sentenced to a H term of five years' imprisonment. The appellant was jointly charged with one Issa Abdallah, who was convicted upon his own plea of guilty which was couched in the following terms: "It is true that I stole 9 cows and 2 bulls [of] the value of shs.17,600/=. I was together with Saidi Hatibu who is [the] second accused in this case". The trial of the appellant commenced after Issa Abdallah had been sentenced. The I latter, however, was not called as a witness by the prosecution, and no evidence was adduced at the trial to prove that, in his A plea of guilty, Issa Abdallah had implicated the appellant.

The evidence at the trial conclusively established, I think, that, on the night of March 2/3 1980, eleven head of cattle belonging to one Mr. Mauruge Alfani were stolen. The only evidence given at the trial B touching upon the appellant was that of PW3, Mr. Michael Hassani, who testified to the effect that, on the morning of March 3, 1989, while he was at his shamba, he saw the appellant and his co-accused in the bush driving some head of cattle. The witness said that he saw the appellant at a distance of about one C hundred yards. The learned trial magistrate accepted this evidence in its entirety. In arriving at his decision he took into consideration the plea of guilty which the appellant's co-accused had made. He rejected the appellant's testimony which amounted to no more than a general denial of the charge laid at his door. D

Mr. Kaduri, counsel for the Republic, declined to support the learned trial magistrate's decision. He conceded that the quality and quantity of the evidence in the scale against the appellant did not warrant the conclusion the learned magistrate arrived at. With respect, I approve this concession. Although Mr. E Michael Hassani - according to his evidence - knew the appellant before March 3, 19890, it was, in my opinion, unsafe for the learned trial magistrate to have accepted the witness alleged identification of the appellant. According to the witness, he saw the appellant at a distance of about one hundred yards. This F is quite a long distance, and when the fact that the man was in a bush is also taken into consideration, I think the possibility of error cannot safely be excluded. In reaching his impugned decision, the learned magistrate, as already pointed out, also acted on the appellant's co-accused's plea of guilty. With due respect to the learned magistrate, I think he erred in law in doing so. But why am I of this view? This G question I will endeavour to answer. It is perfectly correct to say that a plea of guilty is a confession of fact. The rules of evidence regarding confessions are, therefore, applicable to it. Thus, for example, it may H be made use of as provided for in s.33(1) of the Evidence Act, 1967, which I proceed to read:

When two or more persons are being tried jointly for the same offence, or for different offences arising out of the same transaction, and a confession of the offence or offences charged made by one of those persons affecting himself and I some other
1984 TLR p283
SAMATTA J
A of those persons is proved, the court may take that confession into consideration against that other person.
It is elementary law, I think, that an arraignment does not form part of the trial. The need for a trial arises B only if the accused has joined issue with the Republic or the prosecutor (where the prosecution is a private one) by pleading not guilty. Where, therefore, the accused pleads guilty and is convicted, as happened in the present case, he cannot be said to be on trial. If the accused is not on trial, how can he possibly be said to be jointly tried with his co-accused?
C It was note Evidence Act against the appellant.
It is tempting to part with the case there, but I think it proper to add one word. It is doubtful that a plea of guilty made by the accused can be taken into consideration against his co-accused without the same being D proved during the trial by the testimony of a person who was present in court and who heard the plea being made. The use of the word "proved" in s.33(1) of the Evidence Act would tend to suggest that evidence must be adduced to establish that the plea was made. This would appear to be so even if the magistrate who took down the pleas is the same who later tried the co-accused. Of course the testimony E would rarely be necessary, because ordinarily the prosecution would call the accused as their witness against his co-accused. For reasons which are not apparent on the record of the case, the prosecution did not call the appellant's co-accused as their witness. I hope it is not because the prosecutor thought he F could not in law do so. If that was the reason, I must hasten to point out that the belief was unfounded in law. It is a correct proposition of law, of course, that an accused is not a competent prosecution witness; the prosecution cannot call one co-accused to give evidence against another. But once the proceedings G have been finalised, it is competent for the prosecution to call the accused as their witness against the remaining accused person/s. There is no objection in justice or reason to that being done, because the accused is then no longer in the proceedings.
H It is not without respect that, for the reasons I have endeavoured to give, I am unable to persuade myself to share the learned trial magistrate's opinion that the appellant's alleged guilt was established beyond reasonable doubt.
I Appeal allowed.
1984 TLR p284
A
[zRPz]JONES NDUNGURU v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 284 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mtwara
Judge Samatta J

June 20, 1984
CRIMINAL APPEAL 80 of 1981
Flynote
Evidence - Admissibility - Telegram to establish truthfulness of contents thereof - Whether admissible in evidence - B S.61(1) Evidence Act, 1967.
Evidence - Burden of proof - Proof whether or not appellant was away on official duty - Burden on prosecution. C
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted by a District Court on a charge of obtaining money by false pretences. Without informing his immediate boss in Lindi, but after sending a telegram to the headquarters of his Corporation the appellant went to Dar es Salaam allegedly on official duty. On going back to his station he D claimed and was paid shs.2,542/50 being a refund of money he had used to buy a Lindi - Dar es Salaam return ticket and for subsistence allowance. The prosecution argued that the journey the appellant made was not official and, therefore, he obtained the money by false pretences. To back its argument the prosecution produced a telegram allegedly from the Corporation's headquarters the contents of which E showed that the appellant did not go to Dar es Salaam on official duty. The telegram was admitted in evidence. On appeal:
Held:(i) The reception in evidence of the telegram as establishing the truthfulness of the contents thereof F sinned against the Rule against Hearsay as formulated in s.62(1) of the Evidence Act, 1967;

(ii) there was no admissible evidence against the appellant to prove that while he was in Dar es Salaam he did nothing official; G

(iii) the burden of proving whether or not the appellant was in Dar es Salaam on official duty was on the prosecution.
Case Information
Appeal allowed H
Case referred to:

1. Re London and Globe Finance Corporation [1903] 1 Ch. 728.

[zJDz]Judgment
Samatta, J.: On January 29, 1981, the appellant was charged before the District Court of Lindi district with I obtaining
1984 TLR p285
SAMATTA J
A money by false pretences, contrary to s. 302 of the Penal Code. The particulars of offence were couched in the following language:

... Jones Ndunguru ... on the 21st day of January, 1981, at Gapex Mtama, within the District and Region of Lindi, with B intent to defraud. .. obtained from Betrisia Nongolo shs.2,542/50 by falsely pretending that he went on official journey to Dar es Salaam and thus he was claiming (sic) Night Allowance, while the journey was not official.

C The particulars were, with respect, not a model of elegance or accuracy. Be that as it may, the prosecutor should have used the words 'entitled to' instead of the word 'claiming'. I do not think, however, that the error - for that is what it was - materially prejudiced the appellant in his defence. It is an D error which, therefore, is curable under s. 346 of the Criminal Procedure Code. At the end of the trial the appellant was convicted "as charged" and was sentenced to a term of three years' imprisonment. He thinks the decision robbed him of justice; hence the appeal now at the Bar.

E The evidence which was laid in the scales demonstrated, I think, the following facts. The appellant was employed by the General Agricultural Products Export Corporation, hereinafter referred to by its acronym - GAPEX, as a depot manager and was, at the material time, stationed at Mtama. On January 3, 1981, he sent F a telegraph (Exh.DI) to the General Manager of the Corporation worded as follows, in Swahili:

NAKUJA HUKO HEAD OFFICE BILA KIBALI CHA MENEJA WA TAWI LA LINDI TUA MATATIZO YA KIKAZI.

G He received no reply to this message. Six days later he left for Dar es Salaam. After spending some days there he came back, and on January 21, he resumed duty at Mtama. Before leaving for Dar es Salaam the appellant did not obtain from his immediate boss - the Regional Manager at Lindi - any permission to H make the trip. On his return on January 21 to be more precise, the appellant claimed and was paid the sum of shs.2,542/50 being a refund of money he had used to buy a Lindi - Dar es Salaam return ticket, and for subsistence allowance. It was the case for the prosecutor that the journey the appellant made was not I official and therefore, GAPEX owed him nothing. The appellant, on the other hand, asserted that the journey was official. He claimed that while in Dar es Salaam he had official transactions with the A Personnel Manager.

The learned trial magistrate, having reviewed the evidence before him, was of the settled view that the prosecutor's assertion was correct and the appellant's was unfounded. He accordingly convicted the appellant. Mr. Sengwaji, counsel for the Republic, declined to support the conviction. He conceded that it B was not conclusively established by the prosecution that the journey in question was not official. In this connection he drew my attention to the meaning given to the word 'official' in the CHAMBER'S TWENTIETH CENTURY DICTIONARY (Revised Edition). There the word is defined as meaning C pertaining to an office; depending on the proper office or authority; done by authority; issued or authorised by a public authority or office; recognised in the pharmacopoeia. With respect, I approve the learned state attorney's concession. It is a noble and well-established principle of law, the change of D which can be affected only through legislation, that, as a general rule, in a criminal case the accused bears no burden to satisfy the court of his innocence, it being the duty of the prosecution to establish his guilt, if any. In the instant case, therefore, the appellant bore no burden to convince the learned trial magistrate E that the journey was official. It was for the prosecution to satisfy him, beyond reasonable doubt, that it was not. To discharge that task the prosecutor put in evidence

- through PW2, the Regional Manager - a telegraph, purporting to have been sent to him by the GAPEX headquarters, worded as follows, in Swahili: F

GAPEX MENIJIMENT DAR ES SALAAM WATHIBITISHA SAFARI YAKE NDUGURU [YAANI MWOMBA RUFAA SASA] KUJA DAR ES SALAAM NA KURUDI MTAMA SIYO YA KIKAZI TUA HAKURUHUSIWA KUJILIPA GHARAMA ZA SAFARI G SHILINGI ELFU MBILI MIA TANO ARUBAINI NA MBILI TUA.

With unfeigned respect to the learned trial magistrate, the reception in evidence of this telegram sinned H against the Rule against Hearsay, as formulated in s. 62(1) of the Evidence Act, 1967. The telegram was hearsay - and therefore inadmissible - because it was relied on testimonially, that is to say, as establishing the truthfulness of the contents thereof. The telegram, the law says, I

A should have been shut out of the case. An officer from the GAPEX headquarters who could state as facts the contents of it should have been called as a witness at the trial. Excluding the telegram from the case, one is left with the evidence of the Regional Manager and the appellant himself (only) on the B question. It was asserted by the prosecutor, and admitted by the appellant, that the latter had not obtained the Regional Manager's permission to make the journey to Dar es Salaam. But would that by itself be sufficient to make the claim which was made by the appellant fraudulent? I think not. To prove the charge laid at the appellant's door it had to be conclusively established that, in making the claim the appellant had C the intent to defraud the GAPEX. How can it be said that he had such an intent if he honestly believed that the headquarters of the corporation had no objection to his making the journey? If the telegram the appellant produced as an exhibit at the trial was in fact never transmitted, what was the difficulty, I ask, D calling a postal official to prove, in rebuttal, that fact? The record of the case provides no answer to this not unimportant question. The prosecutor could have sought the trial court's leave under s.207 of the Criminal Procedure Code to adduce evidence in reply. He did not do so and this court is bound, in the E circumstances, to assume that he accepted the telegram (the appellant produced as an exhibit) as being genuine. The intent to defraud is one of the ingredients of the offence of obtaining money by false pretences, the offence which the appellant was charged with. The Penal Code, which creates the offence, F does not define the term 'to defraud,' but the term was given what has come to be regarded as a classic definition eighty years ago by BUCKLEY, J., (later he became LORD WRENBURY) in Re London and Globe Finance Corporation, [1903] 1 Ch. 728. This is what the learned judge said:

G To deceive is, I apprehend, to induce a man to believe that a thing is true which is false, and which the person practising the deceit knows or believes to be false. To defraud is to deprive by deceit: it is by deceit to induce a man H to act to his injury. More tersely it may be put, that to deceive is by falsehood to induce a state of mind; to defraud is by deceit to induce a course of action.

Upon the evidence on record in the instant case, I cannot see how it can correctly be asserted that the I appellant knew or believed that the journey he had made to Dar es Salaam was unofficial. There was enough (reasonable) doubt in this case to entitle the appellant to an acquittal. It was certainly not proved beyond sane doubt that the journey the appellant made did not A pertain to his office. There was no admissible evidence in the scale against him which proved that, while he was in Dar es Salaam, he did nothing (substantially) official. The case against the appellant could not possibly be established without an officer from the GAPEX headquarters testifying before the court to B that effect.
1984 TLR p288
SAMATTA J
The appellant according to the charge laid at his door obtained the shs.2,542/50 by false pretences. The term 'false pretence' is given a definition in the Penal Code: s. 301, as amended by s. 13 of the Penal Code (Amendment) Act, 1980. The section reads as follows: C

Any representation made by words, writing or conduct, of a matter of fact or of intention, which representation is false and the person making it knows to be false or does not believe to be true, is false pretence. D

It was for the prosecutor to satisfy the trial court that the appellant knew that his journey was not official or that he did not believe that his assertion that the journey was official was true. I have no hesitation in E stating, as I do, that the prosecutor failed to discharge that duty.
I have sufficiently demonstrated, I hope, why I am of the view that the great axe could not rightly be let to fall on the appellant. The appeal is allowed, the conviction is quashed and the sentence imposed thereon F is set aside. Any consequential order made by the lower court which is inconsistent with the decision I have arrived in this judgment is hereby set aside. Unless his personal liberty is otherwise assailed, the appellant - if he has not already finished serving the sentence I have just set aside - be released from G custody forthwith.
Appeal allowed. H
1984 TLR p289
A
[zRPz]ZULEIKHA BINT AMOUR v CONSTRUCTION ENGINEERING & BUILDERS LTD 1984 TLR 289 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Zanzibar
Judge Ramadhani CJ

June 6, 1983
CIVIL CASE 25 OF 1982 B
Flynote
Workmen's Compensation Decree - Workmen's Compensation - "Arising out of and in the course of the employment" - Meaning - Workmen's Compensation Decree, s. 6(1).
-Headnote

The plaintiff is the widow of one Issa Bakari Seif, deceased, who was an employee of the defendant. She claimed C the deceased's salary for seven months while he was hospitalized, a gratuity for the 19 months he was in the employment of the defendant and compensation for the death of the deceased. The deceased had met an accident D within the employment premises as he was climbing down some steps to go home after the working hours. He was hospitalized for seven months then he died. The most contentious issue before the court was whether or not the deceased had met the accident and sustained injuries while he was in the course of employment. E

Held: The deceased who sustained injuries while he was leaving the employment premises did sustain such injuries out of and in the course of employment.

Case Information

Judgment for the plaintiff. F

Cases referred to:

1. Hill v Butterley Co. Ltd. [1948] 1 All E.R. 233
2. Campbell v Proud's Engineering Co. Ltd. [1947] 2 All E.R. 97 G
3. Ali Mahdi v Abdulla Mohamed [1961] E.A. 83
4. James Patrick & Co. Proprietary, Ltd. v Sharpe [1954] 3 All E.R. 216.
5. Ogden Industries Pty. Ltd. v Lucas [1969] 1 All E.R. 121 H

[zJDz]Judgment

Ramadhani, C.J.: The plaintiff, Zuleikha Amour Hassan, is the widow of one Issa Bakari Seif, deceased, who was an employee of the defendant. On the other hand the defendant is the Construction Engineers & Builders Ltd. This is a construction company contracted to build the new Post Office at Kijangwani, Zanzibar. I

1984 TLR p290

RAMADHANI CJ

The plaintiff has stated that the deceased was injured in the course of employment of defendant on 20th A January, 1981. He was admitted at the V.I. Lenin Hospital and ultimately died on 26th July, 1981. The plaintiff has claimed the salary of the deceased for seven months at the rate of Shs. 900/= per month i.e. a total of Shs. 6,300/=. She has also claimed a gratuity for the 19 months he had been in the employment of B the defendant and finally she claims compensation Shs. 24,000/= for the death of the deceased.

The defendant objected that the deceased was not injured while in his employment. I am fully satisfied that the deceased had the accident of falling down while he was within the employer's premises. Jamnadas C Bhanji who is an employee of the defendant and who in the course of this suit has thrice appeared together with other officials on behalf of the defendant, told the court that the deceased fell down while climbing down the steps within the premises at Kijangwani and that he (Jamnadas) took the deceased in a D Company's vehicle to the V.I. Lenin Hospital where the deceased was admitted. Apart from that the defendant after being summoned to come to court wrote a letter CEB/EI/I.B/FRI/82 of 12th November, 1982. In that letter he asked the court to defer entertaining the suit for three months and promised that all lawful E claims would be met once the Directorate of the Community Development presented the relevant claims papers. Thus by that letter the defendant admitted the duty to pay compensation. Again on the 28th March, 1983, the representative of the defendant, one Swinder Singh, when asked about the letter reiterated to the court that they were awaiting the papers from the Directorate to make payments. F

Therefore the deceased had the accident and got injured while he was within the premises of the defendant.

On the other hand the plaintiff produced a letter from the defendant which claimed that the deceased had G the accident after the working hours. However, Mr. Sachdev, who came on behalf of the defendant, denounced the letter. He said that the letter was not signed and so any body could have written it. Mr. Sachdev added that the Company was ready to assist the plaintiff inspite of the letter. But the issue here is not assistance but right. H

Though the letter, exhibit B, is not signed and therefore its admissibility is doubtful it brings us to the vital issue in this suit. According to Mr. Jamnadas the deceased had the accident within the employment premises as he was climbing down some steps to go home after the working hours. Therefore the I deceased was not injured while working as the plaintiff claims.

1984 TLR p291

RAMADHANI CJ

The relevant legislation here is the Workmen's Compensation Decree Cap. 65. Sub-section (1) of Section 6 A requires an employer to compensate an employee who gets injured as a result of an accident "arising out of and in the course of the employment". Is the accident in this case covered by that provision?

As I have already said the accident took place after the working hours and as the deceased was going home but B while was still within the premises of employment. In the case of Hill v Butterley Co. Ltd. [1948] 1 All E.R. 233 the plaintiff was an employee of the defendant. As she was crossing the premises of the defendant to get to the office so as to register her name before starting work she slipped on an icy slope and was injured. The Court of C Appeal held that the accident "arose out of and in the course of employment". I do not see any difference between an injury sustained while one goes to work within the employer's premises and that sustained while one goes from work within the employer's premises. D

In another case of Campbell v Proud's Engineering Co-Ltd. [1947] 2 All E.R. 97 a workman was an employee of the defendant and was going for his pay in another office of the defendant which was some distance away. On his way he jumped on the near side of a passing lorry that was going in the same direction. An accident happened and E the workman died. the Court of Appeal held that the workman was going to the office for his pay and he was in the course of his employment. The jumping on the lorry instead of proceeding on foot did not make his journey of a different kind from what it would have been had he used a safer method. In the case before me the deceased did G not even use any unsafe method. He was merely leaving the employment premises which he had to leave. Therefore the injuries arose out of and in the course of employment.

In a case of Tanzania (Mainland) of Ali Mahdi v Abdulla Mohammed [1961] E.A. 83 the respondent was in a lorry of the appellant. Some sand was thrown up by a passing vehicle and entered his eye and caused him to lose it. The High Court of Tanganyika (as it was then) upheld the decision of the District Court that the accident arose out of and in the course of the respondent's employment. The phrase "out of employment" has been given wider H meaning which I think will apply in this case.

Finally I should add that in other jurisdictions within the Commonwealth legislations like this have provided expressly that an injury sustained by a workman while going to or from work at the place of employment and residence is arising out of and in the course of employment. The statute of Victoria, Australia is like I that. That legislation agrees with the decision in Hill v Butterley Co. Ltd. above. I do not think that it was A the intention of our legislation to exclude workmen who sustain injuries on their way to or from work.

1984 TLR p292

RAMADHANI CJ

In the case of James Patrick & Co. Proprietary Ltd. v Sharpe [1954] 3 All E.R. 216 the husband of the B respondent was employed by the appellant. As he was travelling between his place of residence and his place of employment he suffered an auricular fibrillation as a result he died. It was held that the injury arose out of and in the course of employment. This case was governed by the law of Victoria that I have C mentioned that being on the way to work is being at work. Nevertheless the fact is that even such diseases as the one in that case has been taken into consideration. I feel therefore that falling from some steps as one leaves the work premises is even a stronger case.

I therefore find that the injuries sustained by the deceased are covered by the said Sect. 6(1). D

There are certain conditions under this Decree. First, under Sect. 18 (1) the employer is to be informed as soon as possible after the accident. I am satisfied that such notice was given. Mr. Jamnadas said that soon after the accident he reported to the man in charge, one Gurcham Singh, and asked for the keys to E take the deceased to the hospital. The plaintiff also has said that they reported that the deceased was admitted to hospital. Thirdly, the attendance and Pay Register of the defendant has shown that the deceased from 20th January to 24th January was recorded as sick. Then that entry was F cancelled and the deceased was not paid for those four days. This shows that the defendant was aware of the illness of the deceased. It is possible later doubted the information hence the cancellation. But there is abundant evidence from the V.I. Lenin records (Exhibit A) that the deceased was admitted there from 20th G January to 26th July. Hence I am satisfied that the defendant had this information. If he had doubted it then there were no grounds for the doubt.

The Second condition under section 18(2) is that claims for compensation have to be lodged within six H months from the date of the accident or death. Here death occurred on 26 January, 1981. Hence the claims had to be presented before 26th January, 1982. It is not clear exactly when the plaintiff started the claims. She stated that when she wanted to see the defendant she was ignored and so decided to go to JUWATA I and the Directorate of Community Development. A letter 3/ZNZ/Vol.11/1/79 of 19th June, 1982 from

1984 TLR p293

RAMADHANI CJ

A the Secretary of JUWATA of the Urban District to the Junior Minister of Health making inquiries as to whether the death of the deceased was due to injuries sustained out of and in the course of employment. Thus there is no proof whether the claims were presented before 26th July, 1981 or not. However, there is B a proviso that claims presented out of time will be maintained if the delay was due to mistake or other reasonable cause. I am of the well considered opinion that even if the plaintiff was late in presenting her claims, of which there is no evidence, then it was because of some mistake on her part as I would not C expect her, a mere housewife, to know the law.

Let me now turn to the claims themselves. The defendant has said that the deceased had a bad leg to start with and that he was regularly attending treatment. Mr. Jamnadas stated so. But it is equally true that the D deceased received some injuries from the accident within the employment premises. It is possible, therefore, that the accident aggravated the already existing illness. Nevertheless the defendant is obliged to compensate. The case of Ogden Industries Pty Ltd v Lucas [1969] 1 All E.R. 121 is relevant here.

I concede that the deceased must have had some other disease and that is why it took him seven months E in the hospital without the wound healing. Medical records show that he was not diabetic. The wound was discharging and the pus was taken for culture and sensitivity. He was also anemic and they had to give him blood transfusion. I consider all these in the question of the payment of his salary for the seven F months. I have not been told of the terms of employment but they seem to be that of daily paid. Pay was given every week but only for the days one had worked. As there is no law in Zanzibar on these questions of terms of employment I am prepared to take it that an employer in Zanzibar can afford to wait on an G employee for a month. The defendant has shown that he normally pays his employees even for the days they have been ill. Therefore I find that the plaintiff is to get a month's salary of the deceased i.e. Shs. 900/=.

H Section 12 of the Workmen's Compensation Decree provides a compensation equal to the salary of 36 months or to Shs. 24,000/= which ever is the lesser. I find therefore that compensation is Shs. 24,000/=.

Again there is no law in Zanzibar regarding payment of gratuities or severance allowances. But for a I service of 19 months there is a right of receiving some sort of a gratuity. I am prepared to allot a quarter of the total emoluments of the 19 months i.e. Shs. 4,275/=.

1984 TLR p294

I may just add that the Revolutionary Government of Zanzibar uses such formula in the payment of A gratuities.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

1984 TLR p294

B

[zRPz]HIMID MBAYE v THE BRIGADE COMMANDER 1984 TLR 294 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Zanzibar

Judge Ramadhani CJ

December 15, 1983
CIVIL CASE 8 OF 1981 C
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Jurisdiction - One of the parties is a head of a Department of the Union Government - Whether the High Court for Zanzibar can hear and determine the suit. D
Civil Practice and Procedure - Institution of Proceedings - One of the parties is a head of a Department of the Union Government - Procedure before instituting the suit - Civil Procedure Decree, Cap. 8, s. 60.
Landlord and Tenant - Tenant caused damage to premises - Parties did not agree on anything regarding E maintenance of the suit premises - Whether damages recoverable - Rent Restriction Decree, Cap. 98, s. 28(1)(b)(i).
Headnote
The plaintiff filed a suit against the defendant in his official capacity as Commander of the Nyuki Brigade. F Because the defendant is a Union Government Department the court had to resolve two preliminary matters. First, whether or not the High Court for Zanzibar has jurisdiction to entertain such a suit. Second, if the court has such jurisdiction whether there is any procedure to follow before filing such a suit. G
The plaintiff let his premises to the Brigade Commander. When he was given vacant possession of the same much damage had been done on the premises. Although there was no agreement by the parties on anything regarding maintenance of the suit premises the plaintiff sought to recover damages to put the H house into its former state.
Held: (i) The Government Proceedings Act, 1967 does not apply in Zanzibar even though there are I numerous Departments of the Union Government in Zanzibar;
1984 TLR p295
RAMADHANI CJ
A (ii) since there is no law in Zanzibar prohibiting this court from hearing such suits as this one, it is the duty of this court to hear and adjudicate upon this suit;

(iii) under the laws of Zanzibar a two month's written notice to "the Chief Secretary to the Zanzibar B Government" is necessary before the court may entertain a suit against the Government;

(iv) since "the Chief Secretary to the Zanzibar Government" has not been mentioned in the Existing Laws Decree, 1964, such notice may be given to the Attorney-General;

C (v) even though section 60 of the Civil Procedure Decree has specifically mentioned the Zanzibar Government, now that there are two governments in Zanzibar and in view of the intended effect of the legislation (i.e. to notify it before filing a suit) the procedure applies to the Union Government as well;

D (vi) section 28 of the Rent Restriction Decree imposes a duty on the tenant to maintain the premises in the same state, fair wear and tear and damage arising from irresistible force excepted, as that in which the premises were at the commencement of the tenancy;

E (vii) in this case most of the damage is not from irresistible force but due to alterations.

Case Information

Judgment for the plaintiff

Case referred to:

F 1. Abdulhussein Bodalbhoy v Marekwa, 5 Z.L.R. 44

Case Information

Ramadhani, C.J.: In this suit the defendant, the Brigade Commander, is an officer of a Department of the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania as opposed to the Revolutionary Government of Zanzibar. G He is sued in his official capacity as the commander of the Nyuki Brigade.

This suit was filed on 2 April, 1981. Since the defendant is a government department, I ordered that the provision of Sect. 690 of the Civil Procedure Decree Cap. 8, relating to suits against the government, to be H followed. The plaintiff was directed vide our letter Ref. No. 341/81 of 2 June, 1981 to send his claims to the Attorney-General of Zanzibar. He did so by his letter of the same date. The Honourable, Attorney-General replied to the plaintiff vide his letter L.D. 21 Vol. IV/217 of 2 July, 1981 that he should I follow the procedure laid out in the Government Proceedings Ordinance, Cap. 5. (That law had already been replaced though). The plaintiff wrote to the A-G on 6 July, 1981 complaining that he was being inconvenienced. He sent a copy of the A letter to me. I responded on 11 July, 1981 that as the Defence Forces was a department of the Union Government he should follow the advice of the A-G. I also advised him to try to settle the matter out-of-court by corresponding with the Defence Forces Headquarters, Dar es Salaam. The plaintiff B complied with the advice. He wrote to the Chief of Defence Forces (C.D.F.) On 20th July, 1981. I also wrote to the Director of Legal services on 28th July, 1981 (Ref. A/JM/9/81/84) giving support to the plaintiff's letter. An exchange of letters ensued between the Defence Forces, the plaintiff and myself. I do C not think it is necessary to mention all of them. The plaintiff also wrote to the Minister of Justice of Tanzania seeking her fiat as provided under the Government Proceedings Act. The plaintiff was told by the Attorney-General of Tanzania that as Justice is a non-union matter, the Minister of Justice of Tanzania has no jurisdiction in Zanzibar (J/C. 20/30/8 of 15 September, 1981). D

Eventually the suit came for hearing before Msumi, J. on 10th November, 1983. The Army Officer who came on behalf of the defendant had not been given any instructions. The case was adjourned to 22nd November, 1983 and neither of the parties turned-up. However, the defendant sent a letter Ref. No. 301 E KV/1295 - 1 of 19th November, 1983, enclosing a copy of the letter Ref. MMJ/1152 - 1 of October, 1983 from the C.D.F. to the A-G (T). These claims were sent to the A-G so that he could deal with them under the Government Proceedings Act, 1967. I instructed the Registrar of the High Court to write to the A-G (T) to F brief him and indicate to him that more likely that the C.D.F. was unaware of what had transpired. The Registrar did so vide his letter Ref. No. 915/83 of 25th November, 1983. It was also stated that the case was up for mentioned on 24th January, 1984 and that a date for hearing will be fixed then. A reply came to the G effect that the applicable law on the Mainland is the Government Proceedings Act, 1967 as amended by Act No. 40 of 1984. The letter, Ref. 3/C.60/4/1136/8 of 23rd December, 1983, concluded: "The case must be finalised in accordance with the laws and procedure of Zanzibar." H

The case was up on 24th January, 1984 both parties were absent. On 24th February only the plaintiff appeared. The case was heard ex-parte under O XI R 6 (1) (a). I am fully satisfied that the defendant was aware that the case was up for a last mention on 24th January and that the hearing was to be on 24th February. I

1984 TLR p297

RAMADHANI CJ

A Apart from my being so satisfied Law, C.J. had said in Abdulhussein Bodalbhoy v Marekwa 5 Z.L.R. 44 that:

> In my opinion, apart from the Official notice in the 'Gazette' referred to, it is the duty of parties to keep themselves B informed as to when their cases will be tried.

In that case the plaintiff was absent. However, his lordship by using the plural "parties", I have no doubt that he would have arrived at the same opinion had the defendant been absent. I might just add that the C opinion was given taking into account O IX of the Civil Procedure Decree, Cap 4 which is in pari materia with O XI of the present Cap. 8.

The defendant is the Brigade Commander of the Nyuki Brigade which is in Zanzibar. This is one of the D Brigades of the Tanzania Peoples Defence Forces which have been constituted under Article 89 (2) of the Katiba ya Jamhuri ya Muungano wa Tanzania, 1977 and also under Section 4 of the National Defence Act, 1966 (Act NO. 24 of 1966). It is quite evident that under the said Article 89 of the Constitution the Defence E Forces is a Government Department and actually a Department of the Union Government. Apart from that Article, national defence (ulinzi) is a union matter under item 3 of the Second Schedule to the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania. Again Section 2 of the National Defence Act, 1966 extends the application of that law to Zanzibar as well. Hence the defendant is a Head of a Department of F the Union Government.

Under the Government Proceedings Act, 1967 (Act No. 16 of 1967 of the United Republic) a Department of the Union Government cannot be sued without first obtaining a written permission to do so from the G Minister of Justice (Section 6). As the defendant is the Head of a Department of the Union Government he is covered by this provision. The defendant cannot be sued unless such permission is first obtained. However, the Government Proceedings Act, 1967 does not apply in Zanzibar even though there are numerous Departments of the Union Government in Zanzibar. Therefore I have to look at the relevant law H in Zanzibar concerning suits against Government Departments and officials.

Section 60 of the Civil Procedure Decree, Cap. 8 of the Laws of Zanzibar (1958 Series) provides as follows:

I No suit shall be instituted against the Zanzibar Government, or against a public officer ... until the expiration of two months

1984 TLR p298

RAMADHANI CJ

next after notice in writing has been delivered to, or left at the office, the Chief Secretary to the Zanzibar Government A or to the District Commissioner of the District ...

There are two issues regarding this section. One, the section talks about the Zanzibar Government but here we have a Department of the Union Government. Now, does this procedure apply to the Union B Government? I shall deal with this issue shortly. The second issue is which official of the Zanzibar Government is to be regarded to have taken the position of "the Chief Secretary to the Zanzibar Government". C

As for the second issue nowhere has it been stated which official takes the place of the Chief Secretary. Section 3 of the Existing Laws Decree, 1964 (Decree No. 1 of 1964) provides:

(a) references in any existing law to the former Sultan or Prime Minister shall be read as references to the D President;

(b) references in any existing law to the Protectorate shall be read as references to the Republic: E

(c) references in any existing law to the British Resident or to the Resident-in-Council shall be read as reference to the Minister for the time being responsible for the matter in question. F

The Chief Secretary has not been mentioned. Hence when the plaint was filed the plaintiff was advised to send his claims to the Attorney-General of the Revolutionary Government. This was done in the hope that he could be advised by the Chambers where he could lodge his claims. He did this as has already been G told. But secondly, the Attorney-General is the Chief Legal Adviser of the Revolutionary Government of Zanzibar per Article 18 of the 'Katiba ya Serikali ya Mapinduzi, 1979'. Likewise in Order XXXI Rule 4 it is provided that: H

The Attorney-General in any court, or such other person as the President may appoint in this behalf, shall be the agent of the Government for the purpose of receiving process against the Zanzibar Government issued by such court. I

Hence the Attorney-General is in any case concerned.

1984 TLR p299

RAMADHANI CJ

A But there is still the question whether this procedure applies to the Union Government. By looking simply at the precise, clear and unambiguous words used the procedure applies only to the Revolutionary Government of Zanzibar. But at the time this law was enacted there was only one government in Zanzibar B but now there are two governments: The Revolutionary Government and for union matters the Union Government. The two are fused in the same person who is both the President of Zanzibar and the Vice-President of the United Republic. Hence in order to give a correct answer to this question I have to C determine what was the intention of legislating this procedure. I am of the opinion that it was intended that the government should not be taken unaware and merely receive summons to come to court. It was intended that the government should at least have a notice of two months so as to prepare itself before a summons be issued to them or even to settle the matter out of court for it is unbecoming of a government D to be sued. If so that intention is for all governments; be it of Zanzibar or of the Union. In this interpretation I have the support of the Government Proceedings Act, 1967. Though that law does not extend to Zanzibar but this court recognises it as law of the United Republic and the fact that government E too has prescribed a procedure for its being sued.

Thus even though Sect. 60 of the Civil Procedure Decree has specifically mentioned the Zanzibar Government, now that there are two governments in Zanzibar and in view of the intended effect of the F legislation I find that the procedure applies to the Union Government. Hence I answer the question I had posed earlier in the affirmative.

Under the Laws of Zanzibar all that is required is to give a two months notice. After the expiration of that G period the court goes on to hear the case. There is no requirement of securing the written permission of the Minister first.

In the suit before me a notice of over two years, let alone two months, has been given to both Attorney-Generals: of the Revolutionary Government and of the United Republic. Therefore I deemed it H proper to continue with the hearing of the case.

However, should I have erred in holding as I have done, which I am convinced I have not, still this court has jurisdiction to entertain this suit under sub-section (1) of Section 4 of the Civil Procedure Decree which I provides:

1984 TLR p300

RAMADHANI CJ

The courts shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting A suits of which their cognisance is either expressly or impliedly barred.

There is no law in Zanzibar which "expressly or impliedly" bars the Zanzibar courts to hear any suits B against the Union Government. As I have already stated the Government Proceedings Act, 1967 does not extend to Zanzibar. Article 77 of "Katiba ya Serikali ya Mapinduzi, 1979" provides: C

Sheria yeyote iliyotungwa na Bunge la Jamhuri ya Muungano wa Tanzania haitatumika Zanzibar ila kwa mujibu wa masharti ya aya (h) ya ibara ndogo (2) ya ibara ya 94 ya Katiba ya Jamhuri ya Muungano ya 1977. D

That paragraph (h) which has been cited provides:

Sheria yeyote iliyotungwa na Bunge kuhusu jambo lolote haitatumika Tanzania Visiwani ila kwa mujibu wa masharti yafuatayo: E

(i) Sheria hiyo iwe imetamka wazi kwamba itatumika Tanzania Bara na vile vile Tanzania Visiwani au iwe inabadilisha, kurekebisha au kufuta Sheria inayotumika Tanzania Visiwani; au F

(ii) Sheria hiyo iwe inabadilisha au kurekebisha au kufuta sheria iliyokuwa inatumika tangu zamani Tanzania Bara ambayo ilikuwa inatumika pia Tanzania Visiwani kwa mujibu wa Mapatano ya Muungano wa Tanganyika na Zanzibar, ya mwaka 1964 au kwa mujibu wa Sheria

yoyote ambayo ilitamka wazi kwamba itatumika G Tanzania Bara na vile vile Tanzania Visiwani; au

(iii) Sheria hiyo iwe inahusu mambo ya Muungano; na kila inapotajwa Tanzania katika Sheria, ifahamike kuwa Sheria hiyo itatumika nchini Tanzania kwa mujibu wa ufafanuzi uliotolewa na aya hii." H

Now the Government Proceedings Act, 1967 is not among the laws as provided above. Judiciary is not a union matter. Thus even that law cannot be taken to prohibit the Zanzibar courts from hearing suits I against the Union Government.

1984 TLR p301

RAMADHANI CJ

A Section 129 of the Civil Procedure Decree also provides:

Nothing in this Decree shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the court to make such orders B as may be necessary for the end of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the court.

Thus so long as the plaintiff has filed his suit, this court cannot dismiss it and be without authority as to fail to give justice and bring the whole judicial process into contempt. It is imperative that this court hears C and adjudicate on this suit.

By applying the two provisions of the Civil Procedure Decree, therefore, the situation is this: since there is no law in Zanzibar prohibiting this court from hearing such suits as this one it is the duty of this court to hear and adjudicate upon this suit.

D After disposing of the legal issues let me now turn to the claims themselves. The plaintiff is the owner of a house situated at Kidogobasi in Mwera, Zanzibar. The plaintiff was requested by the defendant's letter Ref. 1680 - Vol 1 of 24 May, 1968 which was signed by one Ltd. Col. Seif Bakari, to provide E accommodation to certain army officers. The plaintiff agreed to do so vide his letter of 28 May, 1968. However, he gave certain conditions. It is better if I quote the relevant portion of that letter:

Kuhusu upangaji huo naomba kusema hivi:-

F (1) Tutakodisha nyumba tu pamoja na vitu viliomo ndani - yaani vitanda, makabati, meza, viti etc.

(2) Miti na matunda haimo katika ukodishaji;

(3) Tutakuwa na haki kuingia shambani kwa ajili ya kuchuma matunda na kutazama hali ya shamba kwa wakati wa desturi;

G (4) Kodi ya nyumba pamoja na vitu vyake ni Shs. 100/= (Shilingi mia moja) kwa mwezi.

Tungependa kujua jina la mpangaji - yaani, ni maofisa maalumu kwa binafsi; au inapanga Serikali na kodi tutapokea kwa nani?

H That letter was replied to vide Ref. No. 2143 -1 Vol.II of 3 June 1968 as follows in the material portions:

I Kodi ya nyumba pamoja na vitu vyote viliomo ndani ya nyumba hiyo gharama zake zitalipwa na Jeshi.

1984 TLR p302
RAMADHANI CJ

Bill yako itabidi kuletwa kila mwezi Makao Makuu ya Jeshi. A Kabla ya Ofisa huyo kuhama ni bora mkabidhiyane vyombo vyote viliomo ndani ya nyumba yako.

It was also agreed that the garden would remain in the hands of the plaintiff. The officer who was to occupy the premises was one Lt. Haji Juma. It was requested that the officer be allowed to move into the B house the same day the letter was written. This letter was signed by Colonel Yusufu Himid Maftah.

From those letters it is evident that there was a contract of renting this house to the defendant on the agreed terms. C

On 5 June, 1968 the plaintiff handed over to Lt. Haji Juma in writing the furniture which was in the suit premises. These pieces of furniture were as follows:

(a) two beds and two mattresses;
(b) one chest of drawers; D
(c) one cupboard;
(d) one bench;
(e) one dining table;
(f) one round table;
(g) one occasional table; E
(h) one mirror;
(i) one platter;
(j) one Bombay chair;
(k) two chairs;
(l) two rugs and one carpet; F
(m) one brass basin and one brass kettle;
(n) one basin;
(o) one brass pot.

The plaintiff has stated that after a short while the suit premises were not occupied by army officers but by G people he did not know. The plaintiff has also said that he was receiving rents of Shs. 60/= per month only. He also has complained that the house has been grossly neglected and as a result it had become dilapidated and all the pieces of furniture that were in the house had disappeared. H

On 10th February, 1981 the plaintiff gave the defendant a notice to terminate the contract and hence to vacate the suit premises and to return the missing pieces of furniture. The defendant did not reply. However, the plaintiff went to the Nyuki Brigade Headquarters and they came to some understanding. He I was given vacant possession of the suit premises together with

1984 TLR p303
RAMADHANI CJ

A all arrears of rents. The vacant possession of the premises was rendered on 1 May, 1981 vide letter Ref. No. 5315 (BAO). However, this was after the plaintiff had already filed this suit on 2 April, 1981.

The plaintiff has three claims. First, he claims rents for four months of January, February, March and April B of 1981 before vacant possession was tendered. He thus claims a total of Shs. 240/= at the rate of Shs. 60/= per month. Secondly, he claims the pieces of furniture and other utensils that he had handed over to Lt. Haji Juma. He has estimated their value to be Shs. 10,000/=. Finally he seeks compensation for the C damage to his house amounting to Shs.11,000/=.

As for the arrears of rents the plaintiff produced his letter of 28 June, 1982 to the defendant which was not replied to. It seems that the parties had come to agree on the rent of Shs. 60/= per month instead of Shs. D 100/= eventually. Therefore the arrears of rent to the tune of Shs.240/= has to be paid.

It has been proved that there were certain pieces of furniture which had been handed over to Lt. Haji Juma on behalf of the defendant. The plaintiff has estimated their total value to be Shs. 10,000/=. This value is E that of 1968. However, all of the things would have certainly depreciated by now. Some of them like the two rugs, the carpet and the two mattresses would have been worn out and fit only to be disposed of. As the plaintiff did not give the value of every individual item it is extremely hard to estimate the degree of F depreciation of every one. Even then after almost twelve years I consider a compensation of a total of Shs. 5,000/= to be reasonable.

Then comes the issue of damage to the house. The parties did not agree on anything regarding maintenance of the suit premises. However, the Rent Restriction Decree, Cap. 98 in section 28 outlines the G duties and responsibilities of both the landlord and tenant regarding maintenance except if they have agreed differently. The relevant part is sub-paragraph (i) of paragraph (b) of sub-section (1) of section 28 which imposes on the tenant the duty to:

H maintain the premises in the same state, fair wear and tear and damage arising from irresistible force excepted, as that in which the premises were at the commencement of the tenancy.

I The plaintiff has stated that the defendant has made certain alterations to the house. For example the toilet has been sealed and turned into kitchen. Most of the damage is not from irresistible force but due to the alterations. He claims that he would need Shs.1,000/= to return the house into its A former state. Comparing to the present high building costs I do not think that the amounts claimed are out of proportion in fact it could be lower than the actual costs. Be as it is the plaintiff has claimed that amount and so I grant him what he has prayed for. B

I therefore find in favour of the plaintiff a total of Shs. 16,240/= with costs.

Judgment for the plaintiff. C

1984 TLR p304

D

[zRPz]IN THE MATTER OF APPLICATION BY SIMEON MANYAKI AND IN THE MATTER OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE AND COUNCIL OF THE INSTITUTE OF FINANCE MANAGEMENT 1984 TLR 304 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mapigano J

September 12, 1986
MISC. CIVIL CAUSE 42 OF 1984 E
Flynote
Administrative Law - Natural justice - Disciplinary proceedings in higher educational institution - Failure to F sufficiently appraise a student of the particulars of the prejudicial allegations made against him - Rule of natural justice not complied with.
-Headnote
The applicant was a third year student at the Institute of Finance Management. After the January 1984 G final examinations it was discovered that the examinations papers and model answers had been extensively leaked. The examination results were nullified and students were called upon to re-sit in April, 1984. In addition a committee was set up to probe the leakage and prepare a report. The applicant was one of those persons who were investigated by the probe committee. H
On April 27, 1984, the applicant was officially informed that he had passed the April, 1984 examinations. Five days later, i.e., on May 2, 1984 he was served with a letter terminating his studies at the Institute with immediate effect, nullifying his April, 1984 I
1984 TLR p305
MAPIGANO J
A examination results and barring him from attempting any IFM examinations in future.
The applicant filed the application requesting the High Court to exercise its discretion and grant two orders, namely (i) an order of certiorari to quash the decision of the Executive Committee of the Council of B the Institute of Finance Management dated 2nd May, 1984, and (ii) an order of mandamus requiring the Council of the Institute to award him an Advanced Diploma in Accountancy.
It was argued in favour of the applicant that the probe committee did not sufficiently appraise the applicant C of the prejudicial allegation levelled against him and that he was not afforded opportunity of being heard.
Held: (i) An administrative body exercising functions that impinge directly on legally recognized interests D has a duty to act judicially in accordance with the rules of natural justice,

(ii) disciplinary proceedings in higher educational institutions have to be conducted in conformity with natural justice provided at least the penalty imposed or likely to be imposed is severe;

E (iii) the applicant whose rights and legitimate expectations stood to be so adversely affected by the inquiry had the right:

(a) of being sufficiently appraised of the particulars of the prejudicial allegations that were to be F made or had been made against him, so that he could effectively prepare his answer and collect evidence necessary to rebut the case against him;

(b) subject to the need for withholding details in order to protect other overriding interest, of being G accorded sufficient opportunity of controverting or commenting on the materials that had been tendered or were to be tendered against him;

(c) of presenting his own case;

(d) of being given a reasonable and fair deal

H (iv) the applicant was deprived of his right.

Case Information

Application granted.

Cases referred to:

I 1. R.v Aston University Senate, Exp. Roffey and Another [1969] 2 QBD 538.

1984 TLR p306

MAPIGANO J

2. Glynn v Keele University [1971] 1 WLR 487. A

3. Ceylon University v Fernando [1960] 1 WLR 223.

4. Re Pergamon Press Ltd [1971] Ch. 388.

M. Marando, for the applicant.

S. Mjasiri, for the Respondent. B

[zJDz]Judgment

Mapigano, J.: The applicant Simon Manyaki is a senior accountant with the National Shipping Agencies. He wants this court to exercise its discretion and grant two orders, namely (1) an order of certiorari to C quash the decision of the Executive Committee of the Council of the Institute of Finance Management dated 2 May 1984; and (2) an order of mandamus requiring the Council of that Institute award him a certificate of Advanced Diploma in Accountancy. The application has been stoutly contested by the D Institute.

Most of the salient facts are not in dispute. The applicant was a student at the Institute in Dar es Salaam, pursuing a course of study in accountancy conducted by the Institute during the 1983/84 academic year. He and other students sat for final examinations in January, 1984. Sadly, an outrage had taken place in E connection with the examination papers and model answers and the examinations had been extensively leaked. A good number of the candidates had obtained unauthorised prior access to the examination papers and model answers. The examiners were not slow to apprehend that there had been such a leak. It F was perhaps inevitable, for some of the candidates were so naive, nay thoughtless, that they reproduced the model answers verbatim. It was considered to be a case where the examination as a whole could not properly be said to be a reliable measurement tool of knowledge and expertise of the candidates. A G decision was thus made to (1) nullify the results and require the candidates to re-take the examinations in April, 1984; (2) set up a committee to probe the leakage and prepare a report; and (3) seek assistance of the state security organs to investigate the matter. It was also decided that the results of the April examinations should be tied to and tabled together with the report of the probe committee and to postpone any disciplinary or punitive action against any individual who may have been involved in the affair, H including the nullification of the April examination results, until the final results of the investigations have been submitted. I

1984 TLR p307

MAPIGANO J

A The applicant and the other candidates resat the examinations in early April when the probe committee that was formed was carrying out investigations. On 27 April, 1984 the applicant was officially informed that he had passed the examinations. However, on 2 May 1984 he received a distressing letter from the B Acting Director of the Institute which read as follows:

Re: TERMINATION OF ADVANCED DIPLOMA STUDIES

1. You may remember that the Institute in January, 1984 encountered problems in the final examination process C of the 1983/84 Advanced Diploma in Accounting third year students because of the fact that a good number of the students in that class had unauthorised access to some of the exam papers and/or model answers. D Subsequent to this the Institute set up an independent probe committee to investigate this whole affair.

2. The Executive Committee of the IFM Council which set up this investigation received and deliberated the E probe committee report in its fortieth (extra-ordinary) meeting held on Friday, 1984. According to the findings and conclusions of this report you are one of the students who are highly implicated.

3. The Committee noted with grave concern that you are depicted as one of the primary clique member in F your class who participated and/or assisted contrary to Institute's rules of examination and good discipline in the commercialized distribution and propagation of the examination papers and/or model answers which leaked. The Committee observed further that, as if that was not enough, you subsequently did not want to tell G the truth to the investigators; during the investigation which ensued you were nonrepentant; you were intransigent if not arrogant and you were obdurate if not thoroughly uncooperative in this investigation. It was H noted also that the wide propagation of the leaked exams caused a lot of problems to the community and entailed enormous financial costs to the Institute. All these behavioural patterns, it was observed by the Committee, are not consistent with good discipline and are contrary to professional ethics and integrity in your I field of training.

1984 TLR p308

MAPIGANO J

4. Because of the above reasons the Executive Committee of the Institute's Council had decided to terminate A your studies at the Institute with immediate effect and also to bar you from attempting any IFM examinations in future as well as nullify whatever results you may have had in this year's April 2-6 examinations, if you happened to sit for these examinations etc. B

This letter was copied to the applicant's employer, among others. His employer reacted by writing to him on 23 May, 1984 rebuking him and informing him that the fact that he had undergone the course of study C would not be recognized.

At this juncture I pause to notice, only to reject, an argument that was advanced by applicant to the effect that the Institute had no legal competence to terminate his studies, nullify his results of the April examinations and bar him from future enrolment and attempting any of its examinations. For one thing, D examinations such as these, are meant to be honestly and honorably set and taken for they are contemplated to be, as the Institute observed, a reliable measurement tool of knowledge and skill of the candidates. For another, it cannot be denied that the Institute stood embarrassed and disgraced by the E leak and its integrity stood tainted. The leak thus bore viewing with seriousness and those who were involved in it should surely expect to be severely dealt with and visited with deterrent or exemplary penalties. I entirely agree with the Institute that under both IFM Act, 1972, in particular section 7 thereof, F and the general rules governing such examinations, it has the discretion to treat the applicant in the manner it did.

The probe committee that was formed by the Executive Committee of the Council of the Institute was given the following terms of reference: (1) to find out whether there was a leakage of the examinations; (2) if so, G to establish and indicate when, how, where and by whom the examinations were leaked, what papers and/or model answers leaked and to what extent; (3) to find out weaknesses, if any, in the examination administration system that might have contributed to the leakage, in particular, to examine the H circumstances of setting, marking, external examining and invigilation of examinations; (4) to make observations on the above points and any others that might be pertinent thereto, draw conclusions thereof and recommend appropriate action to be taken; (5) to determine and regulate its proceedings as it deems fit and to I

A co-opt any other person or persons who in its opinion may facilitate the execution of its tasks.

In discharging its assignment the probe committee examined a host of documents and conducted interviews with 24 people, who included students, examiners and officials of the Institute and NBAA, the B acronym for National Board of Accountants and Auditors. It was standard procedure to send the examinations papers to NBAA for moderation. The applicant was one of the students who was interviewed by the probe committee.

C At the conclusion of the investigations the probe committee stated, in sum, that it profoundly suspected on Chandrasekharan, a moderator with NBAA, and one Mashenene, a co-ordinator with the Institute, to be the source of the leak. It opined that either of the two had surreptitiously given one Angela Mpanduji (who was a candidate) the examination papers and that the said Angela had in turn passed them D to the applicant and two other candidates who, in turn, in the words of the committee, constituted themselves as distribution agents and made them available to other candidates for consideration of cash or kind.

E The first main question that arises in whether the Council had authority to establish the Executive Committee that set up the probe committee, and if the answer be yes, whether the Executive Committee had competence to exercise such powers. By paragraph 10 of his affidavit the applicant contends that the IFM Act, 1972 does not provide for the creation of such a committee and that, therefore, the creation of the F committee by the Council was an illegal exercise of the powers conferred on the Council by the Act. Mr. Marando who appeared for the applicant has submitted that the only body that could have acted against the applicant was the Students' Disciplinary Committee established under rule 37 of the IFM Student Rules G set out in the IFM 1983/84 Prospectus. Against that submission Miss. Mjasiri of the Tanzania Legal Corporation, counsel for the respondent Institute, replied that the Executive Committee had a legal status and that under the IFM Act the Council enjoyed discretion to establish such a committee. With regard to H the IFM Student Rules, it was her argument that those rules did not apply to academic matters.

As indicated, the Institute was established by an Act of Parliament. i.e. Act No.3 of 1972. The objects and functions are to be found in section 4. By section 6(1) the Council is the body vested with the governance I and control of the Institute. Now the Executive Committee was created by the Council in its meeting held on 24 September 1974. It is a smaller body than the full Council, it being composed of only half of the A members of the Council.

Among other things, the Executive Committee was charged with the functions of dealing, in emergency cases, with such matters as are normally considered by Council, in between Council meetings. It was expressly stipulated that the decisions of that Committee are subject to ratification by the full Council. B

In my view section 6(2)(f) of the IFM Act is wide enough and gives the Council power to establish such a Committee and to invest it with such authority. I take the view that this was not an instance of abdication C of power by the Council, but a valid exercise of its statutory discretion. As aforestated, the Council prescribed that all decisions of that Committee would be subject to ratification by the full Council. Essentially, by that proviso the Council retained complete control over all the functions assigned to the Committee and the Council intended to continue to address its own mind to the exercise of the powers D delegated to the committee.

I also take the view that the Executive Committee did not encroach on or usurp the powers of the students' Disciplinary Committee. It is not true that the Students' Disciplinary Committee has any power to deal with academic matters. I have perused the IFM Student Rules and I have come to the conclusion that such E matters as the leakage of examinations fall outside the purview of those Rules. I am satisfied that the jurisdiction of the Students Disciplinary Committee is confined to what may be described as domestic matters such as those pertaining to accommodation, kitchen, drunkenness, nuisance and the misuse of F music instruments.

I pass to the second main question, which is whether the proceedings of the probe committee were conducted in accordance with the rules of natural justice. The applicant has averred, vide paragraphs 11 and 13 of the affidavit, that he was denied natural justice in that (a) he was not informed, throughout, that G he was a subject of suspicion or investigation; and (b) that he was not afforded opportunity of being heard. This has been denied by the Institute.

The parties seem to be acutely aware, and it is trite to remark, that an administrative body exercising functions that impinge directly on legally recognised interests owes it as a duty to act judicially in H accordance with the rules of natural justice, which basically means that adoption of fair procedure, which fundamentally demands freedom from interest and bias on the part of the administrative body and the right to a fair hearing for those who are immediately affected by its decision. And it is common ground that this I court

A has discretion to intervene and award appropriate reliefs where the rules of natural justice have not been observed.

Quite clearly, and again it is common ground, the probe committee was investigating an enormous matter and the authorities must have apprehended that the effect of its findings was bound to have substantial B adverse impact and consequences on the interests of certain individuals. The applicant is certainly one of the people who have been detrimentally affected by the findings of the probe committee. That is patently evident from the severity of the penalties that were eventually handed out to him by the Executive C Committee and by his employer. I hold the view that the applicant, whose rights and legitimate expectations stood to be so adversely affected by the inquiry had the right to have an adequate opportunity of knowing the case he had to meet, of answering it, of putting forward his own case, and of D being fairly and impartially treated. In other words, he had the right, first, of being sufficiently appraised of the particulars of the prejudicial allegations that were to be made or had been made against him, so that he could effectively prepare his answer and collect evidence necessary to rebut the case against him; secondly, subject to the need for withholding details in order to protect other overriding interests, and in E my opinion there was none here, of being accorded sufficient opportunity of controverting or commenting on the materials that had been tendered or were to be tendered against him; thirdly, of presenting his own case; and fourthly, of being given a reasonable and fair deal.

F It matters for nothing that these were proceedings initiated by an Institute of higher learning. The weight of modern authorities is in favour of the view that disciplinary proceedings in higher educational institutions have to be conducted in conformity with natural justice, provided at least the penalty imposed G or likely to be imposed is severe; see R.v Aston University Senate, Ex. p. Roffey and Another [1969] 2 QBD 538, a decision that has been referred to by both sides; Glynn v Keele University, [1971] I WLR 487, a case of summary suspension from residence on the campus for disciplinary offence; and more helpful, H Ceylon University v Fernando [1960] 1 WLR 223, a case of disqualification from degree for alleged cheating in examination.

With due respect, it is, in my considered opinion, not an exaggeration to say that the applicant was deprived of his right. It cannot be seriously denied that there is nothing in the record that shows that he I was appraised of the particulars of the allegations that were to be made or had been made against him. It will be remembered that the probe committee carried out its assignment by scrutinizing several documents and A interviewing scores of people. I have gone through those documents and in regard to the applicant I see nothing damning in them. The record of the proceedings of the committee shows that it met on several occasions to conduct the interviews. About the only interviewee who implicated the applicant was one B Ancilla Kilinda.

1984 TLR p312
MAPIGANO J
This Ancilla Kilinda was also a candidate and, as the idiom goes, the canary who sang. She admitted that she had prior access to the examination papers. She stated that she had purchased the papers from Angela Mpanduji for shs.1,500/=. She disclosed that the papers she acquired were handwritten. She said C she destroyed them immediately after sitting the examinations. She was asked to examine several scripts and, according to the report of the probe committee, she singled out the scripts of the applicant, claiming that they were similar with the handwriting on the examination papers she had purchased from Angela D Mpanduji. That was a serious allegation and it was regarded by the probe committee as high-grade information and in no small way led the committee to infer that the applicant was a party to the scandal. The committee might be right. But what is objectionable is that the substance of that adverse information E was not put to the applicant at all. He had, therefore, no opportunity to deny or admit it. Of course a party cannot deny or admit that of which he is unaware. This is not to say, however, that Ancilla Kilinda was uncandid with the probe committee.
Angela Mpanduji appeared before the probe committee for interview. She did not in the least implicate F anybody, let alone the applicant. In actual fact she was not asked anything about the applicant. The information provided by one or two other candidates was in the last analysis either marginal or what they had picked up second hand and I am unable to see anything probative in it. G
On 5 April, 1984 the applicant was interviewed by the probe committee. I will set out in extenso what transpired:

Q: Can you tell us anything strange or unusual you heard about the exam before the exam was done? H

A: The students worked very hard to prepare themselves for the exams. But I heard no rumours.

Q: Do you have a study group?

A: Yes.

Q: Who are your study group? I

1984 TLR p313
MAPIGANO J

A A: I do not have any specific study group. I usually study on my own.

Q: Who in your class, have you, for example, been studying with?

A: It all depends on the topic. My group changes with the topic.

B Q: Any girls you are used to in your class?

A: I was used to Maira in first and second year and Angela Mpanduji in third year.

Q: Angela was selling exams, did she sell to you also?

C A: No. I never buy exams. I pass on my own effort.

Q: Did you know that Angela was selling exams or she had exams?

A: No.

D Q: One day you were studying in your room with some colleagues, someone came and knocked at the door. You looked him out. You were digesting an exam you had laid hands on.

A: This is 100% lie.

E Q. When Angela got the papers she was looking for someone to assist her with solutions. You assisted her.

A: That is not true.

Q: Is Angela your friend?

A: That is what people think. But she is no more than someone I study with.

F Q: But she is surely more than that to you.

A: Yes, at one stage she introduced me to her father, and I once escorted her to the airport when her sister was passing through from Seychelles.

G This interchange is drawn from pages 54 and 55 of the report of the probe committee. On a careful reading one may probably discern some inconsistencies, even evasiveness, in the answers of the applicant. But, as pointed out supra, there is, from start to end, nothing in that interview which shows that H the identification of the scripts by Ancilla Kilinda was intimated, much less announced, to the applicant.

What's more, it is plain, I think, there is nothing to show that the applicant was informed that he was one of the distribution agents of the leaked examinations, contrary to what is deposed in paragraph 7 of the I counter-affidavit. Equally plain is that there is nothing that shows that the applicant had, during the course of the interview, been made to understand that he was appearing before that committee to answer such a charge. And A certainly there is nothing in his answers that can validly be said to have tangibly and credibly established that he was a party to that illegal enterprise. More likely than not the applicant was one of the candidates who had access to the examinations before the due dates. However, it is well to keep in mind that the B misconduct for which he was punished was what the Acting Director described as "the commercialized distribution and propagation of the leaked examination papers and/or model answers".

1984 TLR p314

It may be successfully asserted that under its terms of reference the probe committee was not expected to C conduct a disciplinary proceeding as such. It is plausibly arguable that it was only asked to investigate but not to give a binding decision. Even if that was the case, it was, in my view, still placed under obligation to observe the rules of natural justice, because it was investigating what was essentially a D serious public scandal, and since it had in its possession the resolutions of the Executive Committee, it was aware throughout that the investigation and its report were part of a process that could terminate into action adverse to the interests of some of the interviewees, as indeed they did Re Pergamon Press Ltd. E [1971] Ch. 388, is a case in point.

In the final event this application is granted. The decision of the executive Committee is hereby quashed and the Council of the IFM is directed to award the applicant a certificate of Advanced Diploma in Accountancy. Costs are to follow the event. F

Application granted.
1984 TLR p314
G
[zRPz]IBRAHIM MESSE v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 314 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

May 12, 1984
CRIMINAL APPEAL 5 OF 1984 H
Flynote
Criminal Law - Causing a child not to attend school regularly until completion of education by making her pregnant - Whether liable - The Primary School (Compulsory Enrolment and Attendance) Rules, 1979 G.N. 129).
Statutory Interpretation - Meaning of "... any person other than a parent ..." and "under any circumstances" causes a I child not to
1984 TLR p315
MAPIGANO J
A attend school, under the Primary School (Compulsory Enrolment and Attendance) Rules 1979.
-Headnote
The appellant had impregnated a school girl thus causing her to drop from school. He was charged with B and convicted of causing a child not to attend school regularly under the Primary School (Compulsory Enrolment and Attendance) Rules 1979. He appealed against the conviction on the ground that the rules in question apply only to parents and guardians of children who have attained a school attending age.
C Held: (i)The expression "any person other than a parent" includes people or persons such as appellant in this case and the phrase "under any circumstances" includes causing a child not to attend school by making a girl pregnant.
Case Information
D Appeal dismissed.
No case referred to:
[zJDz]Judgment

E Sisya, J.: This is an appeal against both conviction and sentence. Regarding the conviction, the appellant alleges in his petition of appeal that the learned trial magistrate erred on both matters of law and of fact. Without beating about the bush, starting with the latter, the evidence before the lower Court F leaves no reasonable doubt as to the appellant's guilt. This appeal on this aspect of the matter is, to say the least, fruitless and/or is without substance. On the evidence adduced I am satisfied, and I so find, that this appellant made one Sofia Hassani (PW2), then a pupil at Chanika Primary School in Handeni District, G pregnant and thereby made her fail to attend school.

On the legal aspect of this appeal the appellant avers in his petition, inter alia that the facts do not disclose any criminal offence that the law under which he was convicted, i.e. the Primary School (compulsory Enrolment and Attendance) Rules, 1979, GN 129 of 1979 applies only to parents and guardians of children H who have attained a school attending age and that the said law is not applicable to him except the law dealing with affiliation. All these arguments are based on a misconception of the law and they have, thus, no leg upon which to stand. For the benefit of the appellant, the provision of the law under which he was I charged and subsequently convicted is section 4(2) of GN 129/79 (and not GN 129/73 as he himself quoted). The relevant portion thereof reads A and I quote:

(2)Any person other than a parent who, under any circumstances, causes a child not to attend school regularly until the completion of primary education shall be guilty of an offence ..... B

The 'any person other than a parent' here includes people or persons such as this appellant and the expression 'under any circumstances' includes causing a child not to attend school by making a girl pregnant. Child is defined in Section 2 of the Primary School (Compulsory Enrolment and Attendance) C (Amendment) Rules, 1982 GN 28 of 1983 as any child who has attained the age of seven but has not attained the age of thirteen and includes any child who is still pursuing primary school education." Sofia Hassani (PW3) was such child as at the time the appellant made her pregnant and she was still pursuing D primary school education.

As I think has sufficiently been demonstrated GN 129/79 is applicable to the appellant and any other person. For the avoidance of doubt the law dealing with affiliation is equally applicable to the appellant. Subject to the law of limitation it is, however, up to Sofia herself to invoke it should she so desire. E

Now, turning to sentence the maximum penalty for the offence with which the appellant stand convicted is a fine of Shs. 3,000/= and six months imprisonment. The learned trial magistrate sentenced the appellant to pay a fine of Shs. 2,500/= or, in default of payment thereof, to go to jail for nine months. He paid the fine. F The appellant is, admittedly, a first offender. In his address before sentence in the Court below he stated that he was aged 48 years; he is married with a total number of fourteen dependents including ten children. The girl whom he made pregnant and curtailed her primary education, Sofia, was aged only eighteen years G - someone fit to be his, i.e. appellant's own daughter. As a married and grown up person one wonders that the appellant lacked to necessitate his going for a school girl. To demonstrate the odium that the society holds for such actions as that of this appellant in this matter the sentence imposed by the lower H Court was well earned by the appellant and I so hold.

Suffice it to say that after perusing the record of proceeding I am satisfied, and I so certify, that this appeal is devoid of merit and the same is forthwith summarily rejected. I
Appeal dismissed.
1984 TLR p317
A
[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v JOHN MANNING 1984 TLR 317 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mustafa JJA, Kisanga JJA and Omar JJA

August 16, 1985
B CRIMINAL APPEAL 62 OF 1984
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Restitution order - Rightful owner of property not established - Whether proper to make any order of restitution.
-Headnote
C The appellant was charged with but acquitted of cattle theft. Meat from some slaughtered cattle was recovered by the police and sold on order of the court. A sum of Shs. 15,140/= was realized from such sale. Together with this sum the court had to make a disposal order of 10 head of cattle. The evidence adduced D did not establish the rightful owner of the cattle and the money. This notwithstanding the High Court ordered that the cattle and money be given to the appellant.
The Court of Appeal considered whether such order was tenable.
E Held: (i) Since the complainant was unable to identify the meat and nobody had come forward to claim such meat the proceeds of sale of such meat should have been forfeited to the Government;
(ii) On the evidence adduced although the prosecution had failed to establish that the complainant F was the rightful owner of the 10 head of cattle owing to the inadequacy of identification, it is equally clear that the appellant had failed to establish that the 10 head of cattle were his property;
(iii) it was unwise to make any order of restitution.
Case Information
G Appeal dismissed.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mustafa, J.A. read the following judgment of the Court: The respondent, with eight others, was charged in H the District Court with cattle theft. He was acquitted, and the Director of Public Prosecutions appealed to the High Court against such acquittal. On the application of the Director of Public Prosecutions the I High Court ordered additional evidence to be taken under the provisions of section 151 and section 322(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. Accordingly one Simon Mangazein testified. The

1984 TLR p318

MAPIGANO J

High Court (Mapigano, J.) heard the appeal and dismissed it. Both the courts below were satisfied that on A the crucial issue of identification the prosecution had failed to satisfy the courts that the animals, some found slaughtered and 10 found alive, were the property of the complainant P.W.2 Rashidi.

The Republic is now appealing to this court from the acquittal, on the main ground that the High Court had B erred in its evaluation of the additional evidence adduced.

We have carefully gone through the additional evidence, and while we do not agree with the first appellate judge that such additional evidence "tends to exacerbate the doubt for it tends to confirm the contention C of the first respondent (i.e. the appellant herein) that he had lawfully purchased the ten live cows", we find the additional evidence vague and inconclusive and does not add anything to the prosecution case in any way. There was evidence on which the courts below could find that the prosecution had failed to D establish its case against the appellant, and the appeal against conviction fails.

However there are two points which call for consideration. Meat from some slaughtered cattle was recovered by the police and sold on order of the court. A sum of Shs.15,140/= was realised from such sale. E The District Court ordered this sum to be returned to the appellant, and such order was confirmed by the High Court. It was in evidence that the appellant had stated that the meat did not belong to him, but possibly to some other person or persons who had used his abattoir for slaughter facilities. The F complainant was unable to identify the meat, and nobody had come forward to claim such meat. In the circumstances it was wrong to have this sum paid to the appellant. We set aside the order to pay the sum of Shs.15,140/= to the appellant, and order that the said sum, if paid to the appellant, be returned by the appellant to the court, and that the sum be forfeited to the Government. G

Similarly the District Court ordered the ten live cattle claimed by the complainant be returned to the appellant. This was confirmed by the High Court. On the evidence adduced, although the prosecution had failed to establish that the complainant was the rightful owner of the 10 head of cattle owing to the H inadequacy of identification, it is equally clear that the appellant had failed to establish that the 10 head of cattle were his property. In the circumstances it was unwise to make any order of restitution. We set aside the order returning the 10 head of cattle to the appellant. I

1984 TLR p319

A The parties could sue civilly for the cattle when the question of ownership could be determined.

In the result, apart from interfering with the order of payment of shs. 15,140/= to the appellant and the order of restitution of the 10 head of cattle to the appellant, the appeal is dismissed.

B Appeal dismissed
1984 TLR p319
C
[zRPz]HAMISI SAID MCHANA v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 319 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Nyalali CJ, Mustafa JJA and Makame JJA

March 26, 1986
D CRIMINAL APPEAL 2 OF 1984
Flynote
Evidence - Dying declaration - Declaration made in answer to questions - None of the questions was leading question - Whether admissible in evidence.
E Evidence - Corroboration - Dying declaration - Declaration made while deceased was in fluctuating capacity to talk - Whether safe to base conviction upon it without corroboration.
Evidence - Corroboration - Corroborative circumstantial evidence - An important gap in the circumstantial evidence - Whether it can corroborate.
-Headnote
F The appellant was charged with and convicted of murder. The trial judge based the conviction on a dying declaration and corroborative circumstantial evidence. On appeal it was argued in favour of the appellant that the dying declaration was made in answer to leading questions and was therefore G inadmissible in evidence. The trial judge's finding of corroborative evidence was also attacked.
Held: (i) The dying declaration was admissible because the questions put to the deceased were not of such H a kind as to be likely to mislead him into making a false statement;
(ii) since the declaration was made while the deceased was in a fluctuating capacity to talk it would be unsafe to base conviction upon it without corroboration;
(iii) in this case there is importance in the circumstantial evidence such that it falls short of the I standard required of corroborative circumstantial evidence.
1984 TLR p320
NYALALI CJ
Case Information
Appeal allowed. A
Case referred to
1. Regina v Mitchel (1890 - 1895) Cox Cr. L. Cases. 507.
F.A. Adamjee, for the appellant B
E. Malecela for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Nyalali, C.J. delivered the following judgment of the Court: The appellant, Hamisi Saidi Mchana, was charged and convicted in the High Court at Dodoma with the offence of murder contrary to section 196 of C the Penal Code, and was sentenced to suffer death by hanging. He was aggrieved by the conviction and sentence, and hence this appeal to this Court. Mr. Adamjee, learned advocate, appeared for the appellant before us, whereas Mrs. Malecela, learned State Attorney, appeared for the Respondent/Republic. D

From the evidence adduced by both sides at the trial, there is a broad area of agreement on primary and secondary facts between the parties. On the 2nd of May, 1982, the appellant and his nephew, namely, one Issa s/o Bakari left Bareko village together on their way home at Mitati village. While thus on their way, E they passed by the home of P.W.6: namely, Salim Bato at Pahi Village in order that the appellant could be paid some money which P.W.6 owed him. Furthermore, there is common ground that the appellant and the said Issa Bakari later left P.W.6's home on their way to Mitati village. The appellant reached safely home F that same day but his nephew Issa s/o Bakari failed to do so. It is undisputed that on the following day of 3rd May, 1981, the said Issa s/o Bakari was discovered seriously injured in a gully near a path leading from Bereko village through Pahi to Mitati village. It is also undisputed that the said Issa s/o Bakari was taken G to Bereko Health Center where he died later at night. The appellant was subsequently arrested and a post mortem examination of the body of the deceased was done by a Dr. Machalo at Bereko Health Center on the 5th of May, 1981.

From the same evidence adduced by both sides at the trial, the primary and secondary facts that are in H dispute between the parties lie within a narrow compass. The prosecution asserts that the appellant left P.W.6's home together with the deceased, and while on their way towards Mitati village the appellant attacked the deceased. The prosecution also asserts that the deceased made a dying declaration just I before he died. It is part of the prosecution

A case that the death of the deceased resulted from the injuries inflicted upon him by the appellant in the course of the attack.

On the other hand, it is the defence case that the deceased left the appellant at P.W.6's home and proceeded on the way home in the company of strangers who passed by. The appellant later followed but B he did not find or see the deceased on the way. It is part of the defence case that the deceased was attacked by a person or persons unknown to the appellant. The defence also contends that the deceased was not in a position to make a dying declaration.

There are a number of points which require consideration and decision in this case. The first and most C crucial point is whether the deceased made a dying declaration. The learned trial judge specifically considered this point and stated:

> There is also the evidence of P.W.7 Ramadhani Mjili and P.W.11 Ramadhani Issa Hamisi about the dying D declaration made by the deceased shortly before he died. The gentlemen assessors believed that evidence. I can see no reason to disagree. The evidence of the dying declaration ties up very well with the rest of the evidence for the prosecution. The deceased told these witnesses how the accused hit him as the deceased was walking in front of E the accused. It supports the evidence of P.W.9 Amina who met them and saw that the accused was walking behind the deceased. The deceased told the witnesses that the accused hit him at the back of the head, and so the F deceased would not know what weapon was used. The deceased knew the accused and they were only the two of them walking together to Mitate. So there could be no possibility of the deceased mistaking the identity of the accused who, according to the evidence, was deceased's uncle. It was at about sunset when P.W.9 Amina met the G accused and the deceased; and the deceased was found lying a short distance away from where P.W.9 Amina had met them. There could be no doubt therefore that the deceased was assaulted by the accused when it was not yet H dark. The deceased could not, under the circumstances, have made a mistake as to the identity of his assailant and no one else was with them at the time. I hold therefore that the deceased did make the dying declaration and that he identified the accused as his assailant.

I Mr. Adamjee, learned advocate for the appellant, has attacked the finding of the learned trial judge in respect of the dying declaration, mainly on two grounds, that is: Firstly, that the deceased was in so serious a condition that he A could not have been capable of making the alleged dying declaration; secondly, that the dying declaration is inadmissible as it was solicited by questions put to the deceased by P.W.6 and P.W.11.

Undoubtedly, the evidence produced by the prosecution shows beyond doubt that when the deceased B was discovered in the gully, he was so seriously injured and disfigured that he could not easily be identified. Furthermore, the same evidence shows that the deceased was incapable of talking from the time he was discovered at the scene up to Bereko Health Center where he was taken at about 6 p.m. However, C the evidence also shows that at about 7.45 p.m. after the deceased had been admitted at Bereko Health Center, he briefly talked to P.W.7. The evidence of P.W.7 and P.W.11 (that is, the Ward Secretary of Bereko) is to the effect that at about 11 p.m. that same day of 3rd May, 1981, the deceased was able to talk D to them at length. There is also the evidence of P.W.5 (Omari Bakari) the elder brother of the deceased who, together with the appellant and P.W.4 (the father of the deceased), visited the deceased at Bereko Health Center at about 1 a.m. during the same night. According to P.W.5, the deceased was able to briefly E say that he had been badly injured, though he could say no more. So the effect of the evidence of P.W.7, P.W.11 and P.W.5 is that the deceased was in a position to talk between 7.45 p.m. and 1 a.m.

The prosecution case is that the deceased did speak at length to P.W.7 and P.W.11 at about 11 p.m. and named the appellant as the person who had assaulted him. The defence submits that as the declaration F was made by the deceased in response to questions put by P.W.7 and P.W.11, it is inadmissible. In support of this submission, learned advocate cited the case of Regina v Mitchel, 1890 to 1895 Cox's Criminal Law Cases at page 507 where Cave, J. stated: G

> In my opinion it was not a dying declaration at all, but an examination, and it is not an examination which is admissible upon this ground, but a declaration. A declaration should be taken down in the exact words which the H person making it uses, in order that it may be possible, from these words, to arrive precisely at what the person making the declaration meant.

When a statement is not the ipsissima verba of the person making it, but is composed of a mixture of questions and answers, there are several objections open to its reception in evidence which it is desirable I should not be open in cases in

1984 TLR p323

NYALALI CJ

A which the person has no opportunity of cross-examination. In the first place the questions may be leading questions, and in the condition of a person making a dying declaration there is always very great danger of leading questions being answered without their force and effect being fully comprehended. In such circumstances the form of B the declaration should be such that it would be possible to see what was the question and what was the answer, so as to discover how much was suggested by the examining magistrate, and how much was the production of the person C making the statement. It appears to me, therefore, that a statement taken down as this was, giving the substance of the questions and answers cannot be said to be a declaration in such a sense as to make it admissible in evidence, and that document cannot be admitted upon that ground.

D The facts in Mitchel's case are quite different from the present one in that in the former case the deceased made her statement in the course of depositions being taken by an examining magistrate and in answer to numerous questions which were put to the deceased. Only the substance of the questions and E answers were recorded by the magistrate. In such a situation, Cave, J. correctly held that there was a danger of the answers given by the deceased of having been obtained by leading questions. In our F present case, the questions put by P.W.7 and P.W.11 to the deceased were certainly not leading questions. P.W.7 asked the deceased only four questions, and these were, according to him:

I asked him what happened ... I asked the deceased what weapon the accused used ... I asked the deceased if there G was any reason for the assault ... I asked the deceased if he had money ... .

The deceased made his declaration in answer to these questions. None of these can be said to be a leading question.

H According to P.W.11 he put five questions to the deceased. These were:

I asked the deceased who had injured him ...I asked the deceased why the accused had injured him so badly ... I asked the deceased if he had any money ... I then asked the deceased if he had any grievances against the accused I ... I asked the deceased why he could not defend himself.

1984 TLR p324

NYALALI CJ

The deceased repeated his declaration in answer to these questions. We agree with Mrs. Malecela that A none of these questions can be said to be a leading question.

We are satisfied that the questions put by P.W.6 and P.W.11 were not of such a kind as to be likely to mislead the deceased into making a false statement. For that reason, the dying declaration in this case is B admissible. We are satisfied that the deceased made the dying declaration. However, in view of the condition under which the deceased made the dying declaration, that is, the fluctuating capacity to talk, we are of the view that it would be unsafe to base a conviction upon the dying declaration without corroboration. We shall therefore look for evidence C to corroborate the dying declaration.

The prosecution case depends entirely on circumstantial evidence. Apart from the dying declaration, the prosecution adduced evidence from, P.W.6, P.W.8 and P.W.9 to the effect that the deceased was seen for D the last time walking in the company of the appellant on the way to Mitate village. Can this evidence be taken to be corroborative of the dying declaration?

There was evidence adduced for the prosecution by way of a sketch plan, showing the place where the E deceased was attacked and subsequently discovered. He was attacked at point "B" on the sketch plan, which is a path leading from Pereko through Puhi village towards Mitale village. The deceased was discovered at point "A", some 10 paces from point "B". There was also evidence that a lot of blood was found at point "B". The evidence of P.W.9, was to the effect that the deceased was discovered at a point F one mile away from the place she had seen him with the appellant the previous day. This is certainly not a short distance as the learned trial judge seems to have thought. There is thus a gap, and an important gap, in the circumstantial evidence. There is the probability that the appellant was not in the company of G the deceased when he reached point "A". There is also the fact that the deceased and the appellant were close relatives who, on the evidence, were in good terms. The absence of motive for the killing of a close relative is another important gap in the circumstantial evidence. So the circumstantial evidence H before us falls short of the standard required of corroborative circumstantial evidence.

Since there is no other evidence to corroborate the dying declaration of the deceased, it is unsafe to uphold the conviction.

In the final analysis, therefore, we allow the appeal, quash the conviction, set aside the sentence and direct I that the appellant be

A released from prison forthwith unless otherwise detained therein for other lawful cause.

Appeal allowed.

1984 TLR p325

B

[zRPz]MUHUMBA KAMNYA v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 325 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Nyalali CJ, Mustafa JJA and Makame JJA

Mrch 26, 1986

C CRIMINAL APPEAL 26 OF 1984

Flynote

Criminal Law - Self-defence - Excessive force used -Unlawful.

D Criminal Practice and Procedure - Arrest - Arrest by people's militia on instruction of village chairman or committee - Whether lawful.

-Headnote

The appellant was convicted of murder and sentenced to death. He killed a militiaman by stabbing him with a knife. The deceased together with three other militiamen were sent by the village chairman to arrest E the appellant because he had not taken part in a village development programme.

One of the issues in this case was whether the militiamen were justified in going for and arresting the appellant. The trial judge held that they were. His holding was based on the provisions of the Villages F and Ujamaa villages Act, 1975 (Act 21 of 1975) and especially the "intendment" of s.12(2) thereof. On this issue the Court of Appeal differed with the learned high court judge.

Held: (i) The village chairman or the village committee or the militiamen had no power of arrest and the G President had not exercised his discretion in granting any judicial, quasi-judicial or administrative powers to the village committee in terms of s. 18 of Act 21 of 1975;

(ii) the power of arrest and the circumstances in which such power can be exercised to deprive a H person of his liberty must be clearly spelt out and cannot be deduced from any so-called "intendment";

(iii) the arrest of the appellant was unlawful;

(iv) the appellant had used excessive force in legitimate self-defence in terms of the provisions I of s. 18(B) (3) of the Penal Code.

1984 TLR p326

MUSTAFA JA

Case Information

Order accordingly. A

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mustafa, J.A. delivered the following judgment of the court: B

The appellant was convicted of murder and sentenced to death. He is appealing.

The prosecution case is as follows. The appellant, as a resident at Tinai Village, had not taken part in cultivating in the village development programme. The village Chairman sent four militiamen, among whom C was the deceased, on the material day, at about 4.00 p.m., to arrest the appellant and to bring him before the Chairman. The four men, all unarmed, went to the house of the appellant to arrest him. The militiamen had no letter from the Chairman, nor had they a warrant of arrest. Apparently the appellant was to be D arrested and brought before the Chairman for not participating in village development activities. Earlier the same day it appeared that the appellant was before the village committee and had refused the demand of the village committee to pay compensation ("udoba") of shs. 50/= and costs for the militiamen of shs. 25/= E ("Kilatu") arising out of his failure to participate in village development, and had left the meeting in a defiant mood.

The four militiamen went to a place where the appellant was repairing a house. When the appellant saw the four militiamen at a distance, he called out to them not to enter his compound. However the deceased F nevertheless went on in order to arrest the appellant. The other three followed. As the deceased neared the appellant, the appellant hit the deceased with stick on the thigh. Despite that the deceased held the appellant. The other three militiamen rushed forward to help the deceased. The appellant managed to free G one of his arms from the clutch of the deceased and drew out a knife from his waist. The deceased thereupon released the appellant, and all the 4 militiamen ran away. They were then inside the cattle boma of the appellant. The militiamen ran towards the exit of the boma, which was a narrow one, chased by the appellant. It appears that the deceased somehow was behind the appellant, and seized or tried to seize the H appellant. As the deceased was in that act the appellant turned and stabbed the deceased in the chest. The deceased then ran a few paces, jumped over the fence of the cattle boma, and fell a short distance away. He died shortly thereafter. According to medical evidence the cause of death was hemorrhage due I to the

A stab wound which penetrated the chest and pierced through the lung and punctured the heart. Considerable force must have been used to have caused such a wound. A sharp instrument like the knife produced in court could have caused it.

B Briefly the above account was testified to by P.W.1, P.W.2, and P.W.3, the militiamen who had accompanied the deceased in the arrest expedition and who were eye witnesses to the stabbing.

The appellant gave a different version of the events. He said that on the material day, in the morning he was sent for, and he went to the village CCM Office. He was asked why he did not participate in working C the village shamba. He alleged he was exempted from such duties because he was suffering from T.B. The CCM Office told the appellant to pay some compensation, and if the appellant did not pay that day, the appellant would be put under custody, and he was in fact kept in custody. At about 4.00 p.m. he was D given permission to go out and eat. While he was repairing his house 4 militiamen, including the deceased, arrived. He heard them say "Umekimbia mvua lakini umande hutaukimbia", and was frightened. He thereupon wanted to run back to the CCM Office. As he did so, a militiaman kicked him and he fell. It E was the deceased who had kicked him. The appellant stood up and as he had a stick, he hit the deceased on the left thigh with it. The deceased held him and the other three also attacked him. He alleged P.W.1 Danial took out a knife to stab the appellant, but the appellant managed to snatch away the knife. The F appellant realised that he himself was carrying a knife in his pocket. He pulled out his knife and the militiamen, on seeing this, scattered. The appellant remained standing waving his knife in a circle, telling the militiamen not to approach him. Three militiamen, i.e. P.W.1 and P.W.2 and P.W.3 were in front of the appellant, and the deceased was somehow standing behind the appellant. As the appellant was waving G with his knife, he suddenly found that he had struck something, and heard that some one has been stabbed. He turned and saw the deceased running away and falling down, badly injured. The appellant then ran to a police station to report.

H The trial judge, and his assessors, considered and assessed the evidence adduced at the trial, and concluded that the prosecution witnesses, especially P.W.1, P.W.2 and P.W.3 had told the truth. In our view that conclusion was justified. We will decide the appeal on that basis.

Accepting the prosecution version of events, certain matters arise for consideration. Were the militiamen I in fact effecting an unlawful and illegal arrest? In this connection the trial judge stated:

1984 TLR p327

MUSTAFA JA

In view of the submissions by learned counsel for the defence it may now be asked whether the militiamen were A justified in going for the accused and in arresting him if necessary. I think they were. First, it will be recalled that the accused had defied the village reconciliation tribunal, in effect the village government in a matter arising from the B accused's absenteeism at shamba work. Under s. 12(1)(d) of Act No. 21 of 1975 (since repealed) village governments were enjoined to encourage village residents in undertaking and participating in communal enterprises. And under sub-sec. (2) thereof village governments had power to do all such acts and things as appeared to them to be C necessary, advantageous or convenient for or in connection with the carrying out of their functions or to be incidental or conducive to their proper discharge. I think, with respect, that giving sub-sec. (2) its true intendment, village governments had thereby been vested with power to summon and secure the appearance of uncooperative villagers D for the purpose of questioning and reconciliation. It is otherwise difficult to see how a village government could function effectively. It might perhaps be argued that this power did not include the power of arrest which is a judicial E power. I note, indeed, that under S. 18 of the Act aforesaid specific provision was made giving discretion to the President, where he considered it necessary or desirable so to do, by order to vest in a village government any power, including any judicial, quasi-judicial or administrative power, but my investigations have not revealed that the F President exercised that discretion in relation to any area. I think, however, that the absence of such an order does not vitiate the mission in the instant case, there being no evidence of an intention to arrest the accused if he had agreed to go and eschewed violence. I am therefore of the view that the village chairman properly sent for the G accused and the militiamen rightly went for him.

We find it difficult to understand this passage. Obviously, according to the evidence at the trial, the H village Chairman or the village committee or the militiamen had no power of arrest, and the President had not exercised his discretion in granting any judicial, quasi-judicial or administrative powers to the village committee in terms of sec. 18 of Act 21 of 1975. The Chairman was not otherwise vested with any powers I of arrest. The power of arrest and the

1984 TLR p329

MUSTAFA JA

A circumstances in which such power can be exercised, to deprive a person of his liberty, must be clearly spelt out, and cannot be deduced from any so-called "intendment". Clearly, therefore, the arrest of the appellant was unlawful. Learned State Attorney for the Republic before us conceded that this was so, as B he was unable to find any legislation vesting in the village Chairman the power to arrest somebody who abstains from village communal work.

Here a show of force by the village authority is evident. Four militiamen were sent to arrest the appellant at the appellant's own home. The appellant had not committed any act which could result in his being C arrested, with or without a warrant. Before the militiamen entered his compound, the appellant had warned them not to approach. They nevertheless did so. The deceased was bent on arresting the appellant. The appellant tried to ward off the deceased by beating the deceased with a stick but the deceased and his D companions were still determined to arrest him. It was only when the appellant pulled out a knife that the militiamen scattered. Even then the deceased tried to arrest the appellant from behind. It was at that stage that the appellant stabbed the deceased. The appellant had acted in self-defence to prevent an illegal E arrest and to preserve his liberty. It was for the prosecution to justify the arrest, and no lawful justification was forthcoming.

However in this case, the appellant knew why the militiamen had come for him. He knew that his presence was needed by the village Chairman and the village committee. So the purpose of the illegal and unlawful F arrest was comparatively a minor matter. The appellant was clearly entitled to resist an unlawful arrest, but was he entitled to use a knife in the circumstances of this case? Was he justified in stabbing the deceased on the chest? The resistance should bear some relationship to the evil to be averted. Each case G has to be decided on its own facts. In our view the appellant was justified in forcibly resisting the unlawful arrest. However, we are of the opinion that the appellant had used excessive force in the circumstances. He could have chased the militiamen away, as he was in the process of doing so when he produced the knife. Even when the deceased was trying to grab him from behind the appellant could have H prevented the arrest, as the appellant was armed and the deceased was not. And the appellant well knew that all the militiamen wanted to do was to compel him, by force if necessary, to go before the village Chairman. That compulsion was of course unlawful, but it was not a matter so grave or of such great I moment as to justify the amount of force the appellant had used in repelling that attempt.

1984 TLR p330

In our view the appellant had used excessive force in legitimate self-defence, in terms of the provisions of A section 18(3) of the Penal Code.

We allow the appeal, quash the conviction of murder and set aside the sentence of death imposed. We substitute therefor a conviction of manslaughter and since the appellant has been in custody since 1983, B we sentence the appellant to 3 years imprisonment.

Order accordingly.

1984 TLR p330

C

[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v SIMON G. MARWA AND ANOTHER 1984 TLR 330 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mustafa JJA, Kisanga JJA and Omar JJA

CRIMINAL APPEAL 46 OF 1984 D

Flynote

Criminal Law - Punishment - Detention ordered under Preventive Detention Act - Whether, punishment within the E meaning of section 21 of the Penal Code.

-Headnote

The two respondents were charged in the District Court with unlawful possession of a pistol and six rounds of ammunition contrary to section 8(1) of the National Security Act No. 3 of 1970. They were F convicted as charged, but the trial magistrate found that the gravity of offence warranted heavier punishment than he was empowered to impose, and so he accordingly committed the respondents to the High Court for appropriate sentence. Meanwhile the respondents appealed to the High Court against their G conviction and it transpired that at the time of such appeal the respondents were in detention under an order made under the provisions of the Preventive Detention Act (Cap. 490). The High Court dismissed the appeal against the conviction but declined to pass sentence on the grounds that the respondents had H already been punished by being detained under the Preventive Detention Act and, therefore, they should not be punished twice for the same offence. In doing so the learned High Court Judge stated that he relied on the provisions of section 21 of Penal Code which provides: I

1984 TLR p331

KISANGA JA

A A person shall not be punished twice, either under the provisions of this Code or under the provisions of any other law for the same offence.

B The Republic appealed against the refusal by the High Court to pass sentence on the respondents.

Held: (i) In order to rely on the provisions of section 21 of the Penal Code, it must be shown that an accused person has been punished under a law which creates a specific offence which can be judicially C ascertained, and prescribes a specific punishment for such an offence;

(ii) the Preventive Detention Act does not create any specific offence or offences. All that it does is to empower the President to detain a person who conducts himself so as to endanger peace and good D order or the defence and security of the State; or to prevent a person acting in a manner prejudicial to such peace and good order or the defence and security of the State;

(iii) so long as it is not possible to ascertain judicially what offence is created or committed under E the Preventive Detention Act, the question of ascertaining judicially the sanction or punishment prescribed under the said Act does not arise; therefore, a detention ordered under the Preventive Detention Act is not a punishment within the meaning of section 21 of the Penal Code.

Case Information

F Appeal allowed.

No cases referred to.

A.J. Saffari for the appellant.

G M.J. Rainthatha for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, J.A.: The two respondents were charged in the District Court with unlawful possession of a H pistol and six rounds of ammunition contrary to section 8(1) of the National Security Act No. 3 of 1970. They were convicted as charged, but the trial magistrate found that the gravity of the offence warranted heavier punishment than he was empowered to impose, and so he accordingly committed the respondents to the High Court for appropriate sentence. Meanwhile the respondents appealed to the High Court I against their conviction and it transpired that at the time of such appeal the respondents were in detention under an order made under the provisions of the Preventive Detention Act (Cap. 490). The High Court dismissed the appeal against A the conviction but declined to pass sentence on the ground that the respondents had already been punished by being detained under the Preventive Detention Act and, therefore, they should not be punished twice for the same offence. In doing so the learned High Court Judge stated that he relied on the B provisions of section 21 of the Penal Code to which a detailed reference will be made later in this judgment. The Republic now appeals against the refusal by the High Court to pass sentence on the respondents. At the hearing of the appeal before us the Republic was represented by Mr. A. J. Saffari, State Attorney, while Mr. M. J. Raithatha appeared for both respondents. C

1984 TLR p332

KISANGA JA

Mr. Saffari addressed us only briefly. The substance of his submission was that punishment in this context is something which follows upon a trial and conviction. It is something that follows judicial process, and it necessarily excludes extra-judicial acts including acts or orders of the Executive. In the D instant case, he contended, there was neither trial nor conviction. There was only an Executive order which was not punishment within the meaning of section 21 of the Penal Code.

Mr. Raithatha addressed us at some length. The thrust of his argument was that section 21 of the Penal E Code should be construed liberally such that detention under the Preventive Detention Act amounts to punishment within the meaning of the section. He cited some cases and sections of the Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code in support of his argument. F

As is already apparent from the preceding paragraphs, the point raised in this appeal is a narrow one. It is whether a detention ordered under the Preventive Detention Act amounts to punishment in terms of section 21 of the Penal Code. That section provides that: G

21. A person shall not be punished twice, either under the provisions of this Code or under the provisions of any other law for the same offence.

We think that in order to rely on the provisions of this section, it must be shown that the person in respect H of whom it is sought to do so has been punished under the law of the country which creates specific offence and prescribes specific sanction or punishment for such offence.

The law thus creating the I offence must set out the specific offence in terms such that when the issue arises, as it does

1984 TLR p333

KISANGA JA

A here, one can ascertain judicially whether it is one and the same offence for which it is being claimed that the person concerned has already been punished. Likewise the law creating the offence must also provide in definite terms the sanction or punishment for the offence such that if and when need arises one B can ascertain judicially whether the person concerned has, in fact, been duly punished in accordance with the law creating the offence.

It is against this background that we have to look at the relevant provisions of the Preventive Detention Act under which it is contended that the respondents had already been punished for being in unlawful C possession of a pistol and six rounds of ammunition. For the present purposes, the relevant provision of the Preventive Detention Act is section 2(1) which provides that:

2-(1) Where -

D (a) it is shown to the satisfaction of the President that any person is conducting himself so as to be dangerous to peace and good order in any part of Tanganyika or is acting in a manner prejudicial to the defence of Tanganyika or the security of the State or

E (b) The President is satisfied that an order under this section is necessary to prevent any person acting in a manner prejudicial to peace and good order in any part of Tanganyika, or to the defence of Tanganyika or the security of the F State, the President may, by order under his hand and the Public Seal direct the detention of the person.

A glance through this sub-section shows that the provision does not create any specific offence or offences. All that it does is to empower the President to detain a person who conducts himself so as to G endanger peace and good order or the defence and security of the State; or to prevent a person acting in a manner prejudicial to such peace and good order or defence and security of the State. It has to be H acknowledged that there are numerous ways in which a person may be considered to conduct himself so as to endanger or to be prejudicial to peace and good order or the defence and security of the State. It is equally true that it is often difficult, if not impossible, in practice to know exactly why a person has been detained. More so because the decision to detain is purely subjective depending on what the President I considers to be conduct which is dangerous or prejudicial to peace and good order or the defence and security of the State. A

1984 TLR p334

KISANGA JA

This point may be illustrated by the facts of the present case. At the hearing of the appeal in the High Court the respondents alleged that they had been detained, and were still in detention, for the same offence. Whereupon the learned judge hearing the appeal investigated the matter, and his findings and B conclusion are summarized in the following lines of his judgment:

As for sentences to be imposed the Court had to investigate the authenticity or otherwise of the accuseds' allegation C that they were also being held under the Preventive Detention Act

- Cap 490 of the laws for the same offence. A letter ref. No. P. 220/180/7 dated 11/7/84 from the Principal Secretary Ministry of Home Affairs addressed to the Registrar in response to the latter's letter No. HCCC/C.170/4/30 of 2/7/84 says inter alia: D

Ni kweli kuwa washitakiwa hawa waliwekwa kizuizini kwa amri ya Rais ya tarehe 10/3/1981 na hadi sasa bado wakochini ya amri hiyo kwa sababu za usalama wa taifa kwa ujumla. E

After saying that the appellants are known to be bandits the letter continues: F kama uonavyo kuwekwa kwao kizuizini ni katika kuwazuia wasiendelee na vitendo vyao vinavyoharibu usalama wa Taifa.

That being the reply from the Ministry of Home Affairs it is crystal clear that the appellants have been detained G because they are believed to be bandits. I have no quarrel with their being detained under the Preventive Detention Act although it could be argued as to whether the Preventive Detention Act, Cap. 490, was meant to cater for offences covered under the Penal Code, Cap. 16 of the Laws! H

However bearing in mind that the accused persons have already been punished for the offence of being in possession of offensive weapons by being detained; it will be contrary to the clear provisions of section 21 of the Penal Code for I this

A Court to impose another sentence over and above the punishment of detention which the accused are still serving.

Upon reading the whole extract, one gets the clear impression that the respondents were detained on B grounds of national security generally; they were known or believed to be bandits and therefore their detention was an attempt to prevent them from continuing with their activities which disturb the security of the nation. Yet the learned High Court judge found that the respondents by being thus detained, had C already been punished for being in unlawful possession of offensive weapons. The position is by no means easy. It seems to us that on the information available it is not clear what exactly the respondents had been detained for. It may very well be that, as the Principal Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs said in his letter referred to by the learned judge, the respondents as persons who were known or believed to be D bandits were detained simply as a measure designed to prevent them from continuing their mischievous activities in the society. If that is so it would seem plain that such detention was purely preventive in the sense that it was intended to prevent the respondents from committing possible offences. As such it E could not properly be regarded as a punishment imposed on the respondents specifically for being in unlawful possession of a pistol and six rounds of ammunition.

So long as it is not possible to ascertain judicially what offence is created or committed under the F Preventive Detention Act, the question of ascertaining judicially the sanction or punishment prescribed under the said Act does not arise.

In these circumstances we agree with the submission by the learned advocate for the Republic that the learned High Court Judge erred in refusing to sentence the respondents on the ground that they had G already been duly punished for the same offence. For the reasons stated above we are firmly of the view that detention ordered under the Preventive Detention Act is not punishment within the meaning of section 21 of the Penal Code. Accordingly we allow the appeal by the Republic, set aside the decision of H the High Court refusing to sentence the respondents, with a direction that the respondents now be brought before the High Court for sentencing. We would add that in deciding on what appropriate sentence to impose, we think that the court would be perfectly entitled to take into account the term which I the respondents have or had served in detention under the Preventive Detention Act.

Appeal allowed.

1984 TLR p336

A

[zRPz]MWIHAMBI LUMAMBO v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 336 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Nyalali CJ, Mustafa JJA and Makame JJA

March 26, 1986

CRIMINAL APPEAL 27 OF 1984 B

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Insanity - When section 168A of the Criminal Procedure Code may be invoked.

-Headnote

The appellant killed his eight month old daughter in the presence of the deceased's mother for no apparent C reason. Then he attempted to commit suicide by hanging himself. He was convicted of murder by the High Court. He appealed arguing that it should have appeared to the trial judge that he may have been insane.

Held: (i) The evidence available did not make it appear to the trial court that the appellant may have been D insane;

(ii) in the circumstances we are not entitled to fault the fact that it did not appear to the trial court that the appellant may have been insane.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed. E

No case referred to.

Mr. Raithatha, for the appellant

A. J. Saffari, for the respondent F

[zJDz]Judgment

Makame, J.A. delivered the following judgment of the court: The appellant Mwihambi Lumambo was a grandfather with a menage of four wives and seventeen children. He got himself involved with P.W.1 G Mseyi Simango, a Std. VI pupil, as a result of which P.W.1 bore him a child, a baby-girl called Seche. Seche was only eight months old when she got killed in presence of her two parents. Following his trial by the High Court sitting at Dodoma (Maina, J.), the child's father, the appellant, was found guilty of murdering H the little girl and was consequently sentenced to suffer death by hanging. He is appealing to this court and is being represented by Mr. Raithatha, learned counsel. On behalf of the respondent Republic Mr. Safari, learned State Attorney, is resisting the appeal. I

1984 TLR p337

KISANGA JA

A In his own Memorandum of Appeal the appellant urged that the killing was in fact accidental and that P.W.1 was influenced into testifying falsely against him. In his supplementary Memorandum Mr. Raithatha urged that the learned trial judge erred in not inquiring into the issue of the appellant's insanity, B and he argued the point before us.

The evidence adduced at the trial showed that the appellant and P.W.1 were very fond of each other and that the appellant clearly loved the deceased. It also showed that the appellant was a placid person of even diposition. Mr. Raithatha urged that in view of that and in the absence of motive the killing was C inexplicable and P.W.1's credibility should have been considered more carefully. The trial court should have delved into the possibility that the appellant was temporarily insane and Mr. Raithatha drew our attention to some portions of the testimony of P.W.2 Moses Libanaga, at the material time the CCM D Branch Secretary of Ndurugumi Village, Mpwapwa District, where the death occurred. P.W.2 said:

> People were pouring water on accused till he resumed consciousness. I asked if he recognized me. He said he did. I E asked what he did but he said that all he remembered was that some people were grabbing the deceased from him and that he threw the deceased under a bed to save the child from death. I told him that the child had died.

And P.W.1 Mseyi said that there was no quarrel between her and the accused. I thought the accused was confused F mentally when he did the act and so I sent him to police Station.

G Only the appellant and P.W.1 were present when the child got killed. We respectfully agree with Mr. Raithatha that the evidence was that the appellant and P.W.1 were on such good terms. It is for the same reason that we, on our part, cannot imagine why P.W.1 should want to testify falsely against her child's father and a man she obviously loved. We are unable to accept the appellant's contention that P.W.1 was H persuaded to lie against him. We note, on the other hand, that P.W.1 was quite fair and she said a lot of good things about the appellant - that he had always been good to her and that he very much loved the child. We are satisfied, as was the learned trial judge, that P.W.1 was a witness of truth.

I According to P.W.1, who was still living in her parent's homestead, the appellant was visiting her that fateful afternoon. He told her he was going into the house she was occupying and when she went there she found that had A locked himself in. He opened for her and followed her into the bedroom where he asked her if she loved him. She told him she did, whereupon the deceased announced that he would kill the child and then commit suicide. P.W.1 asked him why he would want to do that, but appellant merely repeated what he B had said. P.W.1 tried to run away but the appellant caught up with her, knocked her down, slapped her and grabbed the child from her. Then, "The accused held the deceased's arm and one leg and he hit the deceased on a bed leg twice. The deceased cried out only once and then kept quite. I ran away from the house and I raised alarm". C

1984 TLR p338

KISANGA JA

When people went to the house in answer to P.W.1's cries they found that the door had been secured from inside. They broke it open and found the appellant dangling from a rope. The little girl's dead body was under a bed. D

In his evidence in court the appellant gave a significantly different version. He said that when P.W.1 found him in the house she made the fire and then said she was going back to a local dance which was going on in the village and where she had been. He called her to the bed, to talk to her, but instead she E walked past him and wanted to go out. He grabbed the khanga P.W.1 was using to carry the deceased on her back. The khanga gave in, and the child fell off, hitting her head on the leg of the bed. The deceased bled from the nose and died in the appellant's arms. When he found this the appellant became so sad that he decided to end his life. He tied a rope on the beam of the house and hanged himself. He did not know F what else happened until he regained consciousness

As we have said, we find P.W.1's version credible and it was the one accepted by the trial court. Going by it, the appellant announced before hand, despite P.W.1's assurance that she still loved him, that he G would kill the deceased and then kill himself. So he had made the decision. The medical report, that the deceased's skull had sustained two fractures, would seem to support P.W.1's assertion that the appellant hit the deceased's head twice on the head, and tend to disprove the appellant's version of accidental fall. H Bashing a little child's head so violently can only have been intended to cause death or grievous bodily harm.

Mr. Raithatha has canvassed the idea that the question of the appellant's mental condition should have been gone into in view of P.W.2's evidence above quoted. As Mr. Safari rightly pointed out, that I evidence was the only suggestion on record that the appellant

A was insane. However Mr. Safari eventually conceded that the learned trial judge should have referred the appellant to a Mental Hospital.

B The relevant section in Criminal Procedure Code would be Section 168A, because here no evidence was given of the appellant's insanity for it to come under Section 168A(1). Under the said section 168A, the trial court May adjourn the proceedings and order detention in a mental hospital for medical examination, but only if it appears to the court that the person charged may have been insane. The learned trial judge directed his mind on the matter and remarked:

C The accused does not raise the defence of insanity and I found no evidence that he was in any way insane.

So the position here is that it is on record that it did not appear to the judge that the appellant may have D been insane etc. What both learned counsel are urging us, in effect, is to hold that it should have appeared to the learned trial judge that the appellant may have been insane.

With respect, we do not think we have enough material on record that would compel us to hold so. The scanty assertion by P.W.2 was not sufficient evidence to make it appear to the trial court that the appellant may have been insane etc. E This man was recovering from an unsuccessful attempt to kill himself and he might have been suffering a hallucination after his stupor. On the other hand he might have wished to say something to prepare the ground for his future defence. We do not know. What we do know is that we are not entitled, in the F circumstances, to fault the fact that it did not appear to the trial court that the appellant may have been insane. We are also aware that the learned trial court did not put the issue of insanity to the gentlemen assessors. Insanity was not raised by the Defence, and the learned trial judge found no evidence of insanity at all.

G Mr. Raithatha wondered why the appellant should have decided to kill his little girl. We may wonder also but then, "wonders are many, but the greatest of them all is Man".

The conviction of the appellant was in our view sound, on the evidence, and so we dismiss the appeal.

H Appeal dismissed.

1984 TLR p340

A

[zRPz]WILSON NYAMHANGA v REPUBLIC 1984 TLR 340 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Nyalali CJ, Mustafa JJA and Makame JJA

March 26, 1986

CRIMINAL APPEAL 37 OF 1983 B

Flynote

Criminal Law - Murder - Malice aforethought - Stabbing followed by words "you must die today" took place in heat of passion generated by fight and commotion - Whether premeditated killing. C

-Headnote

The appellant, a prisoner, killed an inmate at Isanga Prison. The deceased was fighting with a fellow prisoner. A commotion ensued. During such commotion the appellant stabbed the deceased and uttered words to the effect that the deceased had to die on that day. The trial court found that all the ingredients D of the offence of murder, including malice aforethought, were established and convicted the appellant of murder. On appeal it was argued whether given the fight and the commotion malice aforethought could be said to have been established. E

Held: The stabbing by the appellant took place in the heat of passion generated by the fight and commotion; although at one point of the fight and commotion the appellant told the deceased "Lazima ufe leo", that is, "you must die today", that statement by itself is not evidence of premeditated killing, since F the statement was made in the course of, and during, the fight and commotion and not before.

Case Information
Appeal allowed.
No case referred to.
E. Malecela, for the republic
M. Mlaki, for the appellant
[zJDz]Judgment
Nyalali, C.J. delivered the following judgment of the court.
The appellant, Wilson Nyamhanga Marwa, was charged and convicted in the High Court at Dodoma with the offence of murder contrary to section 196 of the Penal Code, and was sentenced to suffer death by hanging. He was aggrieved by the conviction and sentence, hence this appeal to this Court. Miss Mlaki of the Tanzania

1984 TLR p341

NYALALI CJ

A Legal Corporation appeared for the appellant, whereas Mrs. Malecela, learned State Attorney, appeared for the Respondent/Republic.

From the evidence adduced at the trial from both sides, there is a wide area of agreement between the parties. It is common ground that on the 27th of April, 1980, during the day time, there was a commotion at the Isanga Prison, Dodoma, triggered off by a fight between one Senge Senge and one Ramadhani Iddi. The appellant, who was a remand prisoner, and one of the remand prison leaders became involved in the commotion. The said Senge Senge was a convict serving his sentence of imprisonment at the prison. In the course of the fight and the commotion, the said Senge Senge was stabbed with a knife. He was later rushed to the hospital on the same day where he died. A post mortem examination was performed upon his body the following day, that is 28th April, 1980. The appellant and the said Ramadhani Iddi were taken by the prison warders to the Dodoma Police Station. Among the prisoners who were present when the fight and the commotion occurred were P.W.4, that is, Severin Rashidi and P.W.5, that is, Hashim Selemani.

From the same evidence adduced by both sides at the trial, the area of disagreement appears to lie within a narrow compass. The prosecution asserts that while the deceased was fighting with the said Ramadhani Iddi, the appellant appeared from one part of the prison compound and went to stab the deceased with a knife with a declared intention to finish him off that day as he was a troublesome person in the prison. The prosecution further contends that the deceased died as a result of the wound inflicted upon him by the appellant.

On the other hand, the defence contends that the appellant did not join in the fight and commotion, but intervened to put a stop to the fight between the deceased and the said Ramadhani Iddi. The deceased was annoyed by this intervention and he produced a knife with which he attempted to stab the appellant. The appellant managed to deprive the deceased of the knife by kicking it off from the deceased's hands, as a result of which it flew and landed in a crowd of prisoners nearby. The deceased went to fetch the knife only to emerge later from the crowd injured and bleeding, apparently, after being stabbed by somebody unknown among the crowd.

The first point for consideration and decision in this case is whether the appellant stabbed the deceased. I The learned trial judge considered this point and stated:

1984 TLR p342

NYALALI CJ

It follows from the foregoing, and I have so stated, that I believe as true the evidence of P.W.4 and PW.5 on the A accused's role. Not only were they in a position to testify to the events, they also impressed me as merely anxious to serve the course of justice. I therefore find that the accused arrived at the scene and first stabbed the deceased in the back. Admittedly, the back wound does not feature in the evidence of the doctor or the post mortem report, but the B accused impliedly confirmed its existence when he stated that he saw blood on the deceased's back. I also find that after the stab in the back the accused went on to stab the deceased on the forehead and in the neck. C

The learned trial judge correctly observed, in another part of his judgment, that the prosecution case depended on the credibility of P.W.4 and P.W.5, whom he found to be truthful witnesses. There are, D however, certain discrepancies between the evidence of P.W.4 and P.W.5 which the learned trial judge failed to consider. According to P.W.4 the fight involving the deceased and the said Ramadhani Iddi had ceased when the appellant appeared and went straight to strike Senge Senge in the back. In the struggle E that followed, the appellant further stabbed the deceased on the face, left arm and the neck. P.W.5, however, stated that the fight between the deceased and the said Ramadhani Iddi was still continuing when the appellant appeared and went to stab the deceased in the back. The appellant later followed this F by stabbing the deceased in the head and neck. There is no mention of the stab on the left arm. There are, thus, discrepancies concerning the situation in which the deceased was when he was stabbed by the appellant, and also concerning the parts of the body where the appellant inflicted the injuries.

We are satisfied, however, that these discrepancies can be explained. It is common ground that there G were a lot of convicts and remand prisoners present when the fight and the commotion occurred. In those circumstances of the commotion involving so many prisoners, it is unlikely for a witness to see clearly all the sequence of events without interruption. Added to this, is the fact that P.W.4 and P.W.5 were not H observing the occurrences from the same vantage point. After all, P.W.4 was a convict prison leader in charge of a queue of remand prisoners, whereas P.W.5 was an ordinary convict sitting or standing among his fellow convicts. We are satisfied that these are the reasons for the discrepancies which do not I therefore undermine the credibility of P.W4 and P.W.5.

1984 TLR p343

NYALALI CJ

A The appellant's suggestion that the deceased could have been stabbed by someone else while he retrieved the knife from the crowd is unacceptable, in view of the evidence of P.W.4 and P.W.5. These witnesses had no reason at all to lie against the appellant. After all, it was common ground that the B deceased was a troublesome person and a nuisance to everyone in the prison. The appellant seems to have done an act which was popular to the inmates including

P.W.4 and P.W.5. The learned trial judge was of the same view when he stated in one part of his judgment that:

C I am of the view that if the deceased was so hated, and the witnesses apparently welcomed his death, they could only have spoken the truth when they testified in the deceased's favour. On the other hand, there was no allegation of mutual grudges between the witnesses and the accused. They were convicts, he was a remand, and perhaps the D only time they met was at meal times. They therefore had no cause falsely to testify against the accused, least of all when he had done them an apparent service by eliminating a hated man. Even for these reasons alone I can say E with perfect conviction that the witnesses testified to the truth.

We concur with the learned trial judge and find as he did, that it was the appellant, and no one else, who stabbed the deceased with a knife.

F The next point for consideration and decision in this case is whether the deceased died as a result of the stab wounds inflicted by the appellant. The learned trial judge considered this point and in the light of the evidence found little difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the deceased died as a result of the injuries G inflicted by the appellant. There was medical evidence and the evidence of P.W.4 and P.W.5 to support such conclusion. Nothing has been raised in this case, and we can find no reason to make us differ from the conclusion of the learned trial judge on this point. We also find that the deceased died as a result of H the stab wounds inflicted by the appellant.

The next point for consideration and decision in this case is whether the appellant had malice aforethought I in inflicting the fatal injuries upon the deceased. The learned trial judge considered this point and stated:

1984 TLR p345

NYALALI CJ

There was no provocation properly so called nor can it be said that the accused acted to save Ramadhani's life. He A acted simply to punish the deceased. Further, it is evident that the attack and its accomplishment were specifically intended to cause death. When the accused stabbed in the neck he also declared: 'Lazima ufe leo'. And when he B realised the inefficiency of his crude weapon he exerted his might, forcing the weapon deeper and deeper into the neck, undoubtedly to exact the desired effect. I have considered the views of the second assessor but, most respectfully, I must disagree. A person cannot get away with murder because he fears that his victim, if left alive, C might in future take revenge. To adopt that view would be licensing chaos and death and we would be back to a state of nature. The instant case was a case of irreducible murder. D

In considering the evidence and the finding of the learned trial judge, one must bear in mind the common ground that the stabbing occurred in the course of a fight and a commotion involving the deceased, Ramadhani Iddi and the appellant. There is thus every ground to suggest very strongly, that the stabbing E by the appellant took place in the heat of passion generated by the fight and commotion. Although at one point of the fight and commotion the appellant told the deceased "Lazima ufe leo", that is, "you must die today", that statement by itself is not evidence of premeditated killing, since the statement was made in the course of, and during, the fight and commotion and not before. The appellant could have uttered the F statement as an expression of his raging passion. The position would have been different if the words were said before he joined the fight. We share the doubts entertained by one of the assessors who sat with the learned trial judge, and we find that malice aforethought was not proved in this case. But since it appears G from the evidence that there was no legal justification for the killing of the deceased, the appellant is liable to conviction for the lesser offence of manslaughter. As the appellant was responsible for assisting to maintain law and order in the prison in his capacity as a remand prisoner leader, he deserves a severe H sentence. We shall take into account the fact that the appellant had been in custody in respect of this case since 27th April, 1980.

In the final analysis, therefore, we allow the appeal by quashing the conviction for murder and setting I aside the sentence of death by hanging and instead substituting therefor a conviction for

A manslaughter contrary to section 195 of the Penal Code, and we sentence the appellant to ten (10) years' imprisonment.
Appeal allowed.

1984 TLR p345

B
[zRPz]REPUBLIC v ELIPHAS JACOB 1984 TLR 345 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Maina J

April 21, 1983
C CRIMINAL REVISION 4 OF 1983
Flynote
Transport Licensing Act, 1973 - Charge under s. 10(1)(a) -Charge does not state whether goods carried were for D hire or in connection with accused's business - Whether offence disclosed. -Headnote
The accused was convicted, on his own plea of guilty, of using a motor vehicle to carry goods in E connection with business. The charge was laid under s.10(1)(a) of the Transport Licensing Act, 1973. The facts as stated by the prosecution and which the accused admitted did not indicate whether the goods were for hire or in connection with the accused's business.
F Held: In order to convict a person under s.10(1) of the Transport Licensing Act, 1973 it must be established that the goods were for hire or reward.
Case Information
G Conviction quashed.
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment

Maina, J.: The accused was convicted, on his own plea of guilty, of using a motor vehicle to carry goods H in connection with business. He was conditionally discharged, under S.38 of the Penal Code, for a period of six months.

After the charge was read over to him, the accused stated "It is true". The facts as stated by the prosecution and which the accused admitted were these. On 17.4.82 the accused was driving an Isuzu I tipper and he was stopped by a Police Constable who found that the accused was "carrying goods without TLB licence." There is no indication anywhere in those facts what those goods were and whether they were in connection with the A accused's business, or whether they were for hire. The charge against the accused was laid under Section 10(1)(a) of the Transport Licensing Act, No.1 of 1973 which states that: B

1984 TLR p346

Subject to the provisions of Sub-Section (6) no person shall, except under or in accordance with the terms of a licence -

(a) use a goods vehicle or a public service vehicle for the carriage of goods for hire or reward or for or in connection C with any trade or business carried on by him.

Now, the facts as stated by the prosecutor did not show whether the goods carried by the accused were for "hire or reward" or whether they were "in connection with business carried on by him". The fact that D accused had no licence is not enough to convict. All that the facts showed were that the accused carried goods in the vehicle. That was not enough to convict him under section 10(1) of the Transport Licensing Act, 1973. The facts should have gone further and establish whether the goods were for hire or reward or E whether they were in any way connected with the accused's business. Since this was not disclosed, the facts were not enough to establish the offence charged.

For these reasons, the conviction is quashed and the order of conditional discharge is set aside. F

Conviction quashed.

1984 TLR p346

G

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v ANDREW MASSY 1984 TLR 346 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Maina J

April 25, 1983
CRIMINAL REVISION 5 OF 1983 H
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Pleas - Plea of guilty to a charge - Facts at variance with the offence charged - Whether conviction can stand. I

1984 TLR p346

MAINA J
-Headnote

A The accused was charged with driving a motor vehicle without a valid driving licence contrary to section 19(1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1973. He pleaded guilty to the charge. When the facts were read out they showed that the accused was stopped and asked to produce a driving licence which he did not B produce. The case file was called for revision.

Held: (i) Since the facts were at variance with the offence charged the conviction cannot stand;

C (ii) failure to produce a valid driving licence is a different offence from one of driving without a valid driving licence.

Case Information

Order accordingly.

D No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Maina, J.: The accused Andrew Massy appeared before the District Court at Singida on a charge of driving a motor vehicle on the public road without a valid driving licence. He pleaded "guilty". When the facts were read out, they showed that the accused was stopped driving a motor vehicle and he was asked E to produce a driving licence but he did not produce any licence. The accused admitted those facts, he was convicted of the offence as charged and he was sentenced to five Shs.500/= which he paid.

The charge against the accused was driving a motor vehicle without a valid driving licence which is an F offence under section 19(1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1973. But the facts which the accused admitted were that he failed to produce a driving licence when requested by the Police Officers. That was a different offence under section 77(1) Road Traffic Act. The facts therefore were at variance with the offence G charged. A person may have a valid driving licence but fails to produce it. That is a different offence from one of driving without a valid driving licence.

Since the facts did not establish the offence charged, the conviction cannot stand. Accordingly the H conviction is quashed and the sentence is set aside. The accused is to be retried before another magistrate of competent jurisdiction.

The fine which accused paid should be refunded to him.

I Order accordingly.

1984 TLR p348

A

[zRPz]KANGAULU MUSSA v MPUNGHATI MCHODO 1984 TLR 348 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Lugakingira J

July 13, 1984

CIVIL CASE 8 OF 1983 B

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Attachment order - Objection to attachment order - Objection by a person not mentioned in the warrant of attachment - Allowed.
Civil Practice and Procedure - Attachment order - Dissatisfaction with a warrant of attachment - Whether a person C may bring a fresh suit where he could also have proceeded by way of objection.
-Headnote
The defendant attached the plaintiff's cattle in execution of a court decree. The plaintiff opened a fresh D suit in the High Court instead of proceeding by way of objection in the court which ordered the attachment. It was argued that the attachment was unlawful and a trespass since the plaintiff was not E mentioned in the attachment warrant. It was further argued that it was proper to bring a fresh suit because the plaintiff was not involved in any way in the suit which led to the attachment warrant.
Held:(i) As a matter of practice a person may bring a fresh suit where he could also have proceeded by way of objection;

(ii) the court has discretion to entertain or not to entertain a suit which could be brought by way of F objection depending on the circumstances of each case;

(iii) any person aggrieved by the execution of a decree may object to the court which passed the decree and that covers the plaintiff. G
Case Information
Suit dismissed.
No case referred to. H
G. Alimwike, for the plaintiff.
[zJDz]Judgment
Lugakingira, J.: This was a suit founded on tort, it being alleged by the plaintiff that the defendant unlawfully attached his cattle in execution of a decree passed by the District Court of Dodoma in Criminal I Case No. 122 of 1981, to which he

1984 TLR p349

LUGAKINGIRA J

A (the plaintiff) was not a party. The question posed by this court and argued this morning was whether the plaintiff should not have proceeded by way of objection in the court which ordered the attachment.

B Mr. Alimwike who appeared for the plaintiff argued that the attachment was unlawful and a trespass since the warrant of attachment was directed to one Sasine Mnama, the accused in Cr. Case No. 122 of 1981, and not the plaintiff. He said, therefore, that there was no warrant of attachment as far as the C plaintiff's cattle were concerned and therefore no need to object to the court which issued the warrant. The defendant who appeared in person countered this by saying that the cattle he attached were in fact those of the judgment - debtor, Sasina Mnama, and that they were handed to him by the plaintiff. He was surprised that the plaintiff had since changed his mind on the matter.

D I am aware that a person may bring a fresh suit where he could also have proceeded by way of objection. This is not a statutory rule but it seems to be accepted in practice. That being so, it means that the court is vested with discretion to entertain or not to entertain a suit which could have been brought by E way of objection, depending on the circumstances of each case. The circumstance of this case do not reveal any grounds upon which it would be more to the advantage of the parties nor that justice would be better served for this court to take over a matter in which the District Court has jurisdiction by way of objection. Whether the plaintiff was named in the warrant of attachment or not is beside the point. The F statutory rule is that any person aggrieved by the execution of a decree may object to the court which passed the decree and that covers the plaintiff.

There should also be some order and sanity in the institution of proceedings. Where a matter has started G in one court it is proper for that matter and the resultant effects to be concluded in that court.

If anyone is still aggrieved, there is of course a right of appeal. But for a higher court to take up such a matter directly just because practice permits it, is to import disorder in the administration of justice and I am H personally not prepared, where I can help it, to be a party to such disorder.

In the circumstances, I am not satisfied that Mr. Alimwike has raised sufficient grounds upon which to dispense with the jurisdiction of the Court which ordered the attachment. I also think that in the circumstances of this case, the matter can only be properly and speedily dealt with by the District Court, I and full justice can only be obtained there. I say that full justice can only be obtained there because if the plaintiff were to succeed in this court, and an order were made for the restoration of the A cattle, the defendant would have to go back to the District Court to obtain another warrant of attachment. This Court cannot issue one. If the plaintiff thinks he can succeed, therefore, let him succeed in the District Court which also has the power to bring the matter to a logical conclusion. B

1984 TLR p350

For these reasons, the suit is struck out. The plaintiff is at liberty to proceed by way of an objection in the District Court. I make no order as to costs since this matter was raised by this court.

Suit dismissed. C

1984 TLR p350

D

[zRPz]RUGARABAMU ARCHARD MWOMBEKI v CHARLES KIZIGHA AND THREE OTHERS 1984 TLR 350 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Mtenga J

CIVIL CASE 83 OF 1979 E

Flynote

Torts - Defamation - Damages - Defendants published of the plaintiff false information without lawful justification or excuse -Plaintiff arrested, detained and interrogated - Plaintiff's business dwindled - General public shunned him - Whether general damages awardable. F
Torts - Damages - Assessment of - Assessors of unanimous view that Shs. 470,400/= be awarded - Plaintiff's failure to show how much he was earning after publication of the offending article - Plaintiff's failure to produce books of accounts to prove what he actually earned before publication of the article - Plaintiff had opportunity to mitigate G the damage - Whether assessor's view correct.
-Headnote
The plaintiff claimed general damages in the sum of Shs. 1 million for defamatory information published of H him by the defendants. The assessors were of the unanimous opinion that general damages in the sum of Shs. 470,400/- be awarded. The plaintiff did not show to what extent his business suffered after the publication of the offending article in the Daily News newspaper, nor did he produce his books of accounts to substantiate his claim. I
1984 TLR p351
MTENGA J
A Held: Since the plaintiff has not told the court how much he has been earning in his various businesses before and after the publication of the offending article, assessment of damages cannot be based on his unsubstantiated figures which appear to be exaggerated.
Case Information
B Plaintiff awarded Shs. 200,000/-
Case referred:
1. East African Standard v Gitan [1979] E.A. 678
C Mbuya, for the plaintiffs
Banturaki, for the defendants
[zJDz]Judgment
Mtenga, J.: The plaintiff in this case is a businessman and he is suing the three defendants for damages D for libel. The first defendant is employed by the second defendant. The second defendant is a registered Company incorporated under Cap. 212 of the laws of Tanzania, and he is the proprietor of "The Daily News" which is a National Newspapers. The third defendant is a Limited liability Company incorporated E under Cap. 212 of the Laws of Tanzania and he is the publisher of the second defendant's Newspaper - "The Daily News."
The libel complained of what was contained in an issue of the "Daily News" owned by the second defendant of 13th day of August, 1976 and it was written by one Charles Kizigha the first defendant who F was an employee of the second defendant and it was printed and published by the third defendant and it reads as follows:
.... Bank rejects Charcoal Export application.
By Charles Kizigha.
G The Bank of Tanzania has rejected applications of the Officials of an unregistered firm - Tanzania Charcoal Dealers - who wanted foreign exchange to go to Iraq to negotiate Charcoal trade, it was learnt yesterday.

H The Officials were named as Ndugu Rugarabamu Archard Mwombeki and Ndugu Mohammed.

The documents at the Bank of Tanzania revealed that the two people have been corresponding through the Iraq I Embassy in Dar es Salaam with charcoal dealers in Iraq.

1984 TLR p352

MTENGA J

They are reported to have assured Bank officials that they had a lot of charcoal to export to Iraq, Bank sources said. A

An official from the office of the Registrar of Companies said that "We have just received an application for registering the firm and we are still considering it." The forms were submitted on August, 9, this year B and a receipt number N. 916141 was issued after a payment of Shs. 45/00 as fees was made.

The partners of the Tanzania Charcoal Dealers were Ndugu Tonny Wilson Sindano who stays in Upanga Road at Plot Number 71 and Ndugu Rugarabamu Archard Mwombeki residing in Kinondoni Block Number C 31 house Number 15 D, the forms indicated.

It was further indicated that the company would deal with charcoal and other related products. The offices of the company are at Mosque/Libya Streets on Plot Number 1809/88. D

The Principal Secretary in the Ministry of Trade, Ndugu A.G. Cheyo, said, "I have heard of the Company but the Ministry has not yet been informed officially about its existence nor its nature of business." The innuendo averred by the plaintiff in para 7 and 8 of the plaint was: E

7. (a) That the plaintiff was operating a firm that is not registered contrary to the laws of the country,

(b) That the plaintiff by operating a company that is not registered was committing an offence, F

(c) That the plaintiff by dealing with Iraq Embassy officials showed that his dealings were suspicious and/or illegal,

(d) That the plaintiff managed to go through to the Bank of Tanzania without the knowledge of the Ministry of Trade,

(e) That the plaintiff was hoarding charcoal in the country. G

8. Or in the alternative, the said words meant and were understood to mean:

(a) That the plaintiff was a Criminal,

(b) that the Plaintiff is a bogus unscrupulous and dishonest businessman H

(c) That the plaintiff was a saboteur of our economy by draining the country's foreign exchange for personal use or advantage.

Furthermore, the plaintiff claims that in consequence thereof, he has been seriously injured in his I character, credit and reputation

1984 TLR p353

MTENGA J

A in the way of his business, and he has been brought into public scandal, odium and contempt and he has suffered damage.

On the other hand, the three defendants through the services of their advocate Mr. Bantulaki learned counsel from Tanzania Legal Corporation pleased justification to the article quoted above.

B At the commencement of the trial, issues were agreed as follows:

1. Whether the defendants printed and published or caused to have printed and published the words complained of in para 5 of the Plaint;

C 2. Whether the words complained of did bear or capable of bearing any meaning defamatory of the plaintiff;

3. Whether the words were true or false;

4. Whether the publication was privileged or was a matter of fair comment;

D 5. Whether the publication referred to caused an injury or loss to his business or to his person;

6. To what relief are the parties entitled.

Mr. Rugarabamu (PW.1) in his sworn statement told the court that he is a businessman dealing with E various businesses such as selling charcoal, selling timber, preparing uniforms; clearing and forwarding goods; and preparing chicken feed for sale.

In his business for selling charcoal, he has a firm known as "Tanzania Charcoal Dealers" and his pattern in F this charcoal business is called Tonny W. Sindano. The firm is a registered one under the Companies Ordinance bearing Registration No. 39434 dated the 11 day of August, 1976 - Exhibit P.1. Before he started this charcoal business, he requested the Ministry of Trade to look for outside markets vide his letter G Exhibit p.2 dated the 15th day of May, 1976. The letter Exhibit p.2 was responded by the Ministry of Trade through its, letter Exhibit p.3 dated the 17th day of May, 1976 which was addressed to the Director General of the Government Purchasing Board Republic of Iraq and copied to the plaintiff. Later the Government of H Iraq by way of telex message Exhibit p.4 corresponded with the Plaintiff. The plaintiff then went to the Ministry of Trade with a request to be given an Export Licence but the Ministry of Trade referred him to the Forest Department for this was the department in a position of giving him an Export Licence in goods obtained from the forest. Forest department referred him to TWICO, for TWICO was the sole company I allowed by the Government to export charcoal abroad and if they failed to export charcoal abroad they should have given him a letter authorizing him to do so. TWICO referred the plaintiff to Tanzania A Timber Export Company. Tanzania Timber Export Company admitted before the plaintiff that they have failed to export charcoal but they advised the plaintiff to join them in this business venture or else they were not ready to give him an export licence. The terms of their agreement were that Tanzania Timber B Export Company was going to charge the plaintiff 10% of the charcoal he was going to export and that the charcoal is going to be exported through the name of Tanzania Timber Export Company. He was then advised by Tanzania Timber Export Company to write a letter to Iraq informing them about this agreement C and the plaintiff complied with this advice and he wrote a letter a copy of which was tendered in Court as Exhibit p.5 to the Government of Iraq based in Dar es Salaam. He also sent to Iraq a sample of his charcoal and to prove this he produced Exhibit p.6 which is Air Way Bill NO.094 - 7145 - 9452 of East D African Airways dated the 26th day of June 1976. He did not get a reply from Government of Iraq thus he went again to the office of Tanzania Timber Export Company to inquire about the same where he was told that the Government of Iraq had already entered into a contract to buy charcoal with the Government of E Kenya and he was so informed by the General Manager of Tanzania Timber Export Company who was recently in Nairobi Kenya. He then decided to go and see the officials of Bank of Tanzania with the view of negotiating for foreign currency so that he could go to Iraq to negotiate about the sale of charcoal to Iraq with the officials concerned there. Bank of Tanzania officials advised him to obtain first a letter from F Tanzania Timber Export Company before his request was considered. As he was going to the office of Tanzania Timber Export to obtain the letter as advised by the officials of Bank of Tanzania, he passed through the post office to collect his mails. There he found a letter exhibit p.8 dated the 29th July, 1976 G addressed to the plaintiff by the counsellor of Iraq Embassy here in Dar es Salaam. In the said letter Exhibit p.8 the said Counsellor advised the plaintiff that he should expedite the arrangements of sale of charcoal to his Government Purchasing Board in Iraq. The plaintiff took the letter Exhibit p.8 up to Tanzania Timber H Export Company and showed it to the General Manager of that Company whereby the General Manager gave his a letter Exhibit p.9 which he took to the Bank of Tanzania. The Bank of Tanzania again advised him to go the Ministry of Trade to get a letter of support and he got it and the same was tendered in court I as Exhibit p.11. Later the plaintiff got a copy of a letter Exhibit p.12

1984 TLR p355

MTENGA J

A addressed to the Governor of the Bank of Tanzania not to give any clearance to the plaintiff to go to Iraq to negotiate about the deal of sale of charcoal with the Government Purchasing Board of Iraq for the sole Company allowed to export charcoal from the country is Tanzania Timber Export Company. On receipt B of the copy of the letter exhibit p.12, the plaintiff wrote a letter of protest to the Principal Secretary of the Ministry of Commerce and Industries but unfortunately he failed to produce a copy of that letter and copied that letter to the Governor of the Bank of Tanzania.

C The General Manager of Tanzania Timber Export Company responded to the letter of protest of the plaintiff by writing a letter Exhibit p.13 to the Principal Secretary of the Ministry of Commerce and Industries and copied the same to the Governor of the Bank of Tanzania, the Principal Secretary to the Ministry of Natural Resources and the plaintiff. But before that the Bank of Tanzania refused to give D clearance to the plaintiff to travel to Iraq to negotiate about this deal resulting his letter of protest as stated above. Hereafter the Bank of Tanzania also responded to the plaintiff's letter of protest for on 27th August, 1976 the Director General of the Bank of Tanzania wrote a letter reference No. 14106 dated the 27th E August, 1976 and tendered as Exhibit p.14 to the Principal Secretary, Ministry of Trade advising him to convene a meeting so that the business deal of selling charcoal to Iraq should take effect. As a result of this, a meeting on 13th August, 1976 was held and the plaintiff was summoned to attend this meeting and F indeed he attended it. Other members who attended this meeting were:

1. Mr. J.N. Mushi - The General Manager of Tanzania Timber Export Company;
2. Mr. A.I. Mongi - one of the Managers from Timber Export Company;
3. Mr, E.M. Mzava from the Ministry of Forest and Natural Resources;
4. Mr. B.D.S. Scoorer - an expert of Tanzania Timber Export Company;
5. Mr, E.S. Mbaga who represented the Principal Secretary to the Ministry of Trade.

In the said meeting, it was resolved that one member from Tanzania Timber Export Company and a I representative from the plaintiff's firm should go to Baghdad in Iraq to negotiate about this charcoal business deal. It was also agreed in this meeting that the plaintiff's firm should hand over charcoal to Tanzania Timber Export Company to sell it to Iraq on the A plaintiff's behalf and in return, Tanzania Timber Export Company should charge 10% of the money accrued from the sale. The minutes of the said meeting were tendered in court as exhibit p.15.

1984 TLR p356

MTENGA J

To his surprise, on the 13/8/76 when the plaintiff was going to attend the above stated meeting a friend of B his one Mr. Joel Ndyamu (PW.2) gave him a copy of the offending Daily News which he tendered as exhibit p.16 which is owned by the second defendant and published by the first defendant an employee of the second defendant and printed by the third defendant. C

The plaintiff claims that the story appearing in the said newspaper article was not true for he never requested for a licence from the Bank of Tanzania to sell charcoal; therefore the heading of the article was not true, and that by the 13th day of August, 1976 when this offending article came out, his firm had D already been registered and it was registered on the 11th day of August, 1976 and exhibited in his certificate of registration exhibit p.1. He asserted as a lie that by 13/8/76 his firm was not registered as put in the article exhibit p.16. The plaintiff further claims that the defendants showed the plaintiffs' residential E and business addresses in the article exhibit p.16 so that police officers should arrest them for they were considered by the defendants to be criminal offenders.

The plaintiff further asserted that it is not true that the Ministry of Trade did not know about their charcoal business as put in the article exhibit p.16 by the defendants for from May, 1976 his firm had been F corresponding with the Ministry of Trade and held meetings with the officials of that Ministry as stated above. The plaintiff therefore claims to have been defamed.

As a result of this article exhibit p.16, officials from Anti-Corruption squad on the 23/8/76 went to the office G of the plaintiff along Moscow/Libya Street as advertised in the article exhibit p.16 and arrested the plaintiff and his partner in business. These anti-corruption officials identified themselves as being police officers and that they wanted to interrogate them in connection with the article appearing in the Daily News of 13/8/76 exhibit p.16. The plaintiff was handled by a police officer who identified himself as H Corneus Kafipa and he took him up to his office near Army Headquarters. In his room, Kafipa took out a copy of the Daily News of the 13/8/76 and enquired from the plaintiff to account as to how his firm would get money to bank up its charcoal business and as to whether his firm has other dubious dealings with the I money

1984 TLR p357
MTENGA J
A requested from the Bank of Tanzania. He then gave the plaintiff a sheet of paper to write down his statement. However, the plaintiff refused to write down any statement, whereby Mr. Kafipa threatened to torture him; thereupon, the plaintiff admitted to write down his statement. The plaintiff's partner was B interrogated by another police officer in a separate room. Both of them were released on that very day at 6.30 p.m. after being warned that they should not leave Dar es Salaam City for any time they could be called upon.
Later sometime in September 1976 the plaintiff received a letter Ref. No. 47543 dated 11th September 1976 C from the Government purchasing Board of Iraq exhibit p.17 which states in part and I quote: "We would like to inform that we had to put your offer of 17th of August in abeyance due to high price". The plaintiff claims that he suspected the Iraq Embassy in Dar es Salaam to have sent a copy of the Daily News of D 13/8/76 exhibit p.16 to its Government in Iraq resulting his Charcoal business deal with Iraq Government to be revoked as shown in the letter exhibit p.17. The plaintiff never went to see Tanzania Timber Export Company again for he is already thought by the company as a crook and Tanzania Timber Export Company E never sold charcoal to Iraq as agreed upon for the Company depended upon the plaintiff's firm to get the said Charcoal.
The plaintiff further claims that in the first order Iraq Government wanted to buy 3,000 tons of charcoal from his firm that is to say about 60,000 bags of charcoal each weighing 50 kg. at a price of Shs. 55/02 per F bag could have been sold to Iraq Government had the agreement not been revoked by Iraq Government due to this article appearing in the Daily News exhibit p.16 of 13/8/76. He claims that he rang a person working with Iraq Embassy in Dar es Salaam and he got reminded by that person to read his home papers. The plaintiff further claims that if this business took off, his company could have earned a profit of Shs. G 900,000/= net and this profit was lost due to the article written by the defendants which is defamatory.
Later the plaintiff approached the second defendant to correct errors appearing in the article of 13/8/76 Daily News exhibit p.16 and to offer an apology and the second defendant promised to do so on 16/8/76 H but he never kept his promise. On 21st August, 1976 through the services of their advocate one Mr. Raithatha, the plaintiffs wrote the Daily News second defendant a letter exhibit p.18 asking him to offer an apology and to pay the plaintiff a reasonable sum by way of damages. On 23rd August, 1976 the second I defendant wrote a letter Ref. No. ED/GEN/55 to the plaintiffs through their advocate Exhibit p.19 and part of this letter reads and I quote:
1984 TLR p358
MTENGA J
...while we are making our own investigations on the matter we would like to have from you a sample letter which A could be the basis for discussion on a possible apology.
On receipt of this letter Exhibit p.19, the plaintiff through the services of his other advocate one Mr. Rahim on 22nd December, 1977 wrote the second defendant another letter Exhibit p.20 demanding an apology, B while reminding him of his previous letter Exhibit p.18. On receipt of this letter Exhibit p.20, the second defendant wrote a letter Exhibit p.21 bearing Reference No. BS/AM/119/12/77 dated the 27th December, 1977 to the Chief Corporation Counsel seeking for legal advice on the matter. The plaintiff claims that up to C the time he came to court the defendants have never apologized nor have they given him any reasonable compensation for their defamatory statement appearing in the article of the Daily News of 13th August, 1976 Exhibit p.16. D

The plaintiff further contended that prior to that article Exhibit p.16 the second defendant also published some other articles which were defamatory about charcoal business and he tendered such articles as Exhibits p.22 and p.24.
In conclusion, the plaintiff testified that he is a businessman dealing with other businesses apart from E dealing with the sale of charcoal: he is dealing with the sale of wood; tailoring of uniforms; clearing and forwarding goods; manufacturing chicken feed and animal and he used to get an annual net profit of:

1. Tailoring Shs. 200,000/ up to 300,000/- F
2. Timber Shs. 300,000/- to Shs. 400,000/-
3. Clearing and Forwarding of goods Shs. 600,000/-

He claims to have had a lot of customers prior to the publication of the offensive article Exhibit p.16 but G thereafter, he no longer gets such a great number of customers and when he appears in his favourite bar known as "White Horse Bar'' to drink along Libya Street here in Dar es Salaam his friends and customers ridicule and laugh at him calling him all sorts of names and he has stopped selling charcoal because some H of his customers consider him to be a criminal offender. He asks now this court to award him Shs. 1 million as damages for this defamation plus costs of this suit.
Mr. Joel Ndyamkama (PW.2) testified that he is a friend of the plaintiff and that the is a sales Manager of Colt Motors. Sometime in August, 1976 he bought a copy of the Daily News Exhibit p.16 I
1984 TLR p359
MTENGA J
A and to his surprise he saw an offensive article defaming the plaintiff and he took that copy of the Daily News Exhibit p.16 to the plaintiff and from then on he considered the plaintiff to be a crook who ran a business without registering it, and he looked down upon him. By then the plaintiff had already applied to B the Colt Motors to buy two cars for the purpose of running his charcoal business but when the managing Director of Colt Motors saw the article appearing on Exhibit p.16, he cancelled the application because he considered the plaintiff to be a crook.
C On the other hand, the defendants admitted to have published the article Exhibit p.16 but they pleaded justification and they called two witnesses in their support and these were Mr. Ernest Ambali (DW.1) and Richard Banjamini Mghuhai (DW.2).
During the hearing of this case the court sat with three assessors as provided under section 57(1) of the D Newspaper Act, 1976 but during final submissions it was reported that one of the assessors was dead and this situation left the court with only two assessors.

I directed the two gentlemen assessors that in a libel action, the plaintiff has to prove three things. Firstly E he has to prove whether those words complained of, were defamatory. The test of what is defamatory is whether the words complained of would tend to lower the reputation of the plaintiff in the opinion of right-thinking persons.
On the first issue as to whether the defendants printed and published those words complained of in F paragraph 5 of the plaint; well, the defendants do not deny that and their defence counsel through his submissions readily admitted to have done so. Further still, the plaintiff managed to produce the article in issue Exhibit p.16.

G The second and third issues can be answered together. As rightly contended by Mr. Mbuya, learned counsel for the plaintiff, which contention I wholly agree with, defamation is a false and malicious statement about a man to his discredit. Whether or not a statement is defamatory, the court has to look at the contents of the statement to see as to whether it is true or false and malicious or whether it discredits H the one about whom it relates. Having this in mind, two facts are not true on the Daily News issue Ex. p.16. The heading of the article says:-

> ...Bank rejects Charcoal export application.

This is not all that true for the evidence as stated above clearly shows that the plaintiff requested for travel I clearance to go to Iraq where the prospective customer was and he never applied to an Export
1984 TLR p360
MTENGA J
Licence as the heading of that article Exhibit p.16 wants the public to understand. Surely any right thinking A person on reading the heading of that article on Exhibit p.16 would come to the conclusion that the business deal between the plaintiff and Iraq Government for selling the latter charcoal was finished for without having an Export Licence, the plaintiff could not be in a position to selling charcoal to Iraq B Government; and naturally the officials in Iraq Embassy who are based here in Dar es Salaam and who took part in this deal by negotiating on behalf of their Government were embarrassed.
The next item which I consider to be false is contained in paragraph one of the article in exhibit p.16 and it C reads:

> .... The Bank of Tanzania has rejected application of two officials of an unregistered firm... D

This I think was bad news for Iraq Government together with the officials of Iraq Embassy in Dar es Salaam who naturally believed through this article Exhibit p.16 that they were negotiating with, an unregistered firm and it was as well bad news to right thinking people at large for the public thought that E the plaintiff was a crook who wanted to have business with a foreign Government without having a registered firm. The defendants agreed that they printed and pleaded justification to it. To support their assertion, they brought the Registrar of Companies Mr. Richard Benjamini Mugulue (DW.2) who told the court that the plaintiff's company was registered on 16th August, 1976 three days after the article Exhibit F p.16 complained of was printed and published. This is not at all true for the plaintiff's certificate of registration Exhibit p.1 clearly shows that the plaintiff's company was registered on 11th August, 1976 before the publication of Exhibit p.16. G

Another false statement in the article Exhibit p.16 is contained in the last paragraph of it and it reads:

...The Principal Secretary in the Ministry of Trade, Ndugu A.G. Cheyo, Said, 'I have heard of the company but the H Ministry has not yet been informed officially about its existence nor its nature of business'.

I say that this statement is false because right from the start as I explained above in the evidence of the I plaintiff (PQ.1) the plaintiff has approached the Ministry of Trade to enquire about the

1984 TLR p361

MTENGA J

A possibility of exporting charcoal abroad for sale. As a result of the plaintiff's inquiries, the Ministry of Trade has written a letter Exhibit p.3 to Iraq Government reminding it about its trade delegation of 1973 looking for wood charcoal and the Ministry of Trade has asked the Iraq Government to contact the plaintiff B directly and copied that letter to the plaintiff and indeed, the Ministry of Trade had requested the plaintiff's firm to get into contract with TWICO and TANTIMBER which the plaintiff's firm did. After long correspondence between the plaintiff and Iraq Government the plaintiff sent a sample of his charcoal to C Iraq Government as shown in the Air Way Bill Exhibit p.6 and as a result, of this, the Iraq Government Purchasing Board wrote back to the plaintiff wishing to buy an initial of 3,000 tons of charcoal. It is therefore not true that the Ministry of Trade was not officially aware of the existence of the plaintiff's firm.

D The next issue is whether the words used in the article Exhibit p.16 were defamatory of the plaintiff. To this Mr. Mbuya learned counsel for the plaintiff referred me to the case of East African Standard v Gitan (1970) E.A. 678 where it was held by Spry Ag. J. as he then was that the test of what is defamatory is E whether the words complained of would tend to lower the reputation of the plaintiff in the opinion of right-thinking persons; and one should look at the general impression they are likely to created in the minds of reasonable persons. In the instant case the article Exhibit p.16 has carried an innuendo that there F was an illegal firm in the sense that it was not registered and that this unregistered firm was carrying on business without complying with the requirements of the law causing the Bank of Tanzania to react by refusing to grant it export licence for exporting charcoal abroad. There is evidence on record by the plaintiff (PW.1) and his witness (PW.2) that after publication of this article exhibit p.16 which evidence was G not disputed that the plaintiff (PW.1) and his partner were arrested and interrogated in connection with this charcoal business as exhibited in the article Exhibit p.16. More and above, the plaintiff's application to buy two motor vehicles from Colt Motors for his charcoal business as stated by his friend (PW.2) was also H refused as a result of the publication of this article Exhibit p.16. Later PW.2 went to the plaintiff and enquired from him as to whether what he had read in the article Exhibit p.16 was true and when the plaintiff went to drink in one of the bars he normally used to frequent the "White Horse Bar", he was looked down I upon as a crook by his customers and friends. I agree with Mr. Mbuya's contention that by then the Daily News was the only substantial media in the country with a wide circulation and among the people who read it were the people A of Iraq Embassy in Dar es Salaam when the plaintiff with knowledge of the Ministry of Trade was contacting with Iraq Government trying to sell charcoal in Iraq.

In conclusion therefore, I agree with the unanimous opinion of the two gentlemen assessors that the article B exhibit p.16 was recklessly prepared on incorrect information and the publication of this article appearing in exhibit p.16 has injured the reputation of the plaintiff and it has exposed him to hatred, contempt and it has damaged him in his business profession. The defendants acted in this manner without lawful justification or excuse and the information was false. C

I now come to consider the fifth and sixth issues and these two issues can be consolidated together for they are inter-related.

With that I directed the two gentlemen assessors to consider the following: D

(a) Gravity of the defamation,

(b) Whether the libellous imputation was conveyed to the general mass of readers of the Daily E News,

(c) Regard should be taken of the defendants' refusal to publish an apology.

The two gentlemen assessors were of the unanimous opinion that the plaintiff should be awarded Shs. 470,400/- as general damages. F

It is true that the innuendo appearing on Exhibit p.16 was disparaging to the plaintiff's character and the article imputed the commission of a crime by the plaintiff and that is why he was arrested, and detained for interrogation by the anti-corruption officials for a number of hours. As a result the plaintiff's business has G dwindled as the general public has shunned away from him. For they look down upon him as a crook after reading that article. Even though, I look at this claim with a bit of scepticism for it is likely that the plaintiff might have exaggerated this claim out of feelings of indignation. Indeed the plaintiff's business H contact with Iraq Government had come to an abrupt end due to the publication of this libelous article Exhibit p.16 but also due to high price as complained by the Iraq Government in their letter Exhibit p.17. I also take into account that the Daily News had a wide circulation for it is read not only in the whole I country but also in neighbouring countries. More and above, the second defendant's conduct after

A publication of the libel aggravated the matter. The second defendant did not respond to letter sent to him by the plaintiff's advocates nor did he offer an apology. I agree that in these circumstances the plaintiff is entitled to substantial damages bearing in mind that the plaintiff's means of livelihood has seriously been threatened.

B I am not however, in agreement with the opinion of the gentlemen assessors that the amount of damages be in the region of Shs. 470,400/-. The plaintiff tried to bring in some figures in order to convince the court as to how much he used to earn before the publication of this offending article but he never told C the court as to how much he is now earning in his various businesses after the publication of this article nor did he produce his books of accounts to prove what actually he earned in his various businesses before the publication of this offensive article Exhibit. p.16 and this being the position, the plaintiff might D have exaggerated out of feelings of indignation and the figures of profits of his businesses might not be all that accurate. It should also be borne in mind that the business contract with the Iraq Government was not at all concluded and the plaintiff had all the opportunity to mitigate the damage by selling his charcoal locally.

E It is therefore my view that the interests of justice will be served if the plaintiff is awarded Shs. 200,000/= as general damages plus costs and interests. It is so ordered.

F Order accordingly.

1983
Editorial Board

Chairman
The Hon. Mr. Justice F.L. NYALALI,
Chief Justice, Court of Appeal of Tanzania
Chief Editor
Dr. L.P. SHAIDI, Faculty of Law,
University of Dar es Salaam
Editors
The Hon. Mr. Justice A. RAMADHANI,
Chief Justice, Zanzibar
The Hon. Mr. Justice K.S.K. LUGAKINGIRA
High Court of Tanzania
Mr. M.A. LAKHA Advocate, High Court of Tanzania
Mr. E.L.K. MWIPOPO, Director of Public Prosecutions, Attorney General's Chambers
Mr. R.J. RWEYEMAMU, Corporation Counsel,
Tanzania Legal Corporation
Mr. A.M. MISKIRY, State Attorney, Zanzibar
Assistant Chief Editor
Mr. N.N. NDITI, Lecturer, Faculty of Law
University of Dar es Salaam
SCOPE OF THE SERIES
These Reports cover cases decided in the Court of Appeal of Tanzania and the High Courts of Tanzania and Zanzibar
CITATION
These Reports are cited thus [1983] T.L.R.

Judges of the Court of Appeal in 1983

1.	The Hon. Mr. Justice F.L. Nyalali	Chief Justice
2.	The Hon. Mr. Justice A. Mustafa	Justice of Appeal
3.	The Hon. Mr. Justice L.M. Makame	Justice of Appeal
4.	The Hon. Mr. Justice R.H. Kisanga	Justice of Appeal
5.	The Hon. Mr. Justice Y.M. Mwakasendo	Justice of Appeal

Judges of the High Court of Tanzania in 1983

1.	The Hon. Mr. Justice N.S. Mnzavas	Principal Judge (J. K.)
2.	The Hon. Mr. Justice B.A Samatta	Puisne Judge
3.	The Hon. Mr. Justice L. Mfalila	Puisne Judge
4.	The Hon. Mr. Justice D.P. Mapigano	Puisne Judge
5.	The Hon. Mr. Justice K.S.K. Lugakingira	Puisne Judge
6.	The Hon. Mr. Justice E.W. Katiti	Puisne Judge
7.	The Hon. Mr. Justice B.D Chipeta	Puisne Judge
8.	The Hon. Mr. Justice N.M. Mushi	Puisne Judge
9.	The Hon. Mr. Justice L.J. Maina	Puisne Judge
10.	The Hon. Mr. Justice J.A. Mroso	Puisne Judge
11.	The Hon. Mr. Justice L.J. Chua	Puisne Judge
12.	The Hon. Mr. Justice R.J.A. Mwaikasu	Puisne Judge
13.	The Hon. Mr. Justice F.A. Munyera	Puisne Judge
14.	The Hon. Mr. Justice R.J. Ruhumbika	Puisne Judge
15.	The Hon. Mr. Justice M. Mwakibete	Puisne Judge
16.	The Hon. Mr. Justice R.B. Maganga	Puisne Judge
17.	The Hon. Mr. Justice H.E.D. Sizya	Puisne Judge
18.	The Hon. Mr. Justice Y.S. Rubama	Puisne Judge
19.	The Hon. Mr. Justice C.G. Mtenga	Puisne Judge
20.	The Hon. Mr. Justice H.J. Mkatte	Puisne Judge
21.	The Hon. Mr. Justice A.G. Korosso	Puisne Judge
22.	The Hon. Mr. Justice A. Bahati	Puisne Judge

Judges of the High Court of Zanzibar in 1983

1.	The Hon. Mr. Justice A. Ramadhani	Chief Justice

Cases Reported
1983 TLR p1
A

[zRPz]JOHN M. BYOMBALIRWA v AGENCY MARITIME INTERNATIONALE (TANZANIA) LTD 1983 TLR 1 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

1 December 1983
CIVIL APPEAL 15 OF 1983 B
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Plaint - Failure to disclose a cause of action - Whether necessary for plaintiff to aver compliance with s. 6 of the Sale of Goods Ordinance Cap. 214(T). C Civil Practice and Procedure - Plaint - Particulars in - Special defence open to defendant - Whether plaintiff required to anticipate it - S.6 Sale of Goods Ordinance and O. VII r. 1(e) Civil Procedure Code.
Civil Practice and Procedure - Reply to written statement of defence - Whether court to take D into account when considering whether plaint discloses cause of action - O. VIr. 7 Civil Procedure Code.
Civil Practice and Procedure - Plaint - Failure to disclose a cause of action - Dismissal of suit - Proper action to be taken - O.VII r. 11 (a) Civil Procedure Code. E
-Headnote
The appellant appealed against the Order of the High Court dismissing his claim for failure of the plaint to disclose a cause of action. The plaint had alleged that there was a contract whereby the appellant was to supply to the respondent goods valued at Shs. F 82,237/50; but that the respondent had refused or neglected to take the said goods. The appellant, accordingly, wanted to recover the said sum being the agreed price for the goods or damages for breach of contract.
In the written statement of defence, the respondent raised a preliminary objection that G the claim offended against s. 6 of the Sale of Goods Ordinance and therefore it should be dismissed for the plaint's failure to disclose a cause of action.
Held: (i) The plaintiff is under no obligation to aver in the plaint compliance with any H requirement under s. 6 of the Sale of Goods Ordinance which only provides a special defence which a defendant may rely on if he so wishes;

(ii) the plaintiff is under no obligation to anticipate any special defence which might be available to the defendant; I
1983 TLR p2
A (iii) for purposes of deciding whether or not the plaint discloses a cause of action the plaint and not the reply to the written statement of defence should be looked at, the reply merely serving to show that the plaintiff joins issues with the defendant on the special defence raised in the written statement of defence;
B (iv) under O. VII r.11(a) of the Civil Procedure Code, where the plaint discloses no cause of action the court is to reject it and not dismiss it.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. C

Cases referred to:

1. Narsinh Valji v Dr. D.K. Shukla HC. DSM. Civ App. No.9 of 1955 (unreported).
2. Nazerali Merali t/a Merali & Co. v. S.K. Rajwani t/a United Commercial D Co. HC.DSM. Civ App. No. 24 of 1961

M.J. Raithatha for the appellant,

F.H. Uzanda for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

E Kisanga, J.A., delivered the following considered judgment of the court: This is an appeal from the ruling of the High Court dismissing the appellant's claim on a preliminary objection that the plaint disclosed no cause of action because there was no compliance with the requirements of section 6 of the Sale of Goods Ordinance (Cap. 214). The F plaint had alleged that there was a contract whereby the appellant was to supply to the respondent goods valued at shillings 82,237.50, but that the respondent has refused or neglected to take the said goods. The appellant therefore sued to recover the said sum of shillings 82,237.50 being the agreed price of the said goods or damages for breach of contract. G

In written statement of defence the respondent, among other things, raised the defence that the claim offended against the provisions of section 6 of the Sale of Goods Ordinance and therefore prayed the court to dismiss it for disclosing no cause of action. In reply to the written statement of defence, the appellant sought to show that there had H been compliance with some requirements of section 6 of the Ordinance. However, at the commencement of hearing the suit, the respondent's counsel took a preliminary objection that the plaint disclosed no cause of action for non-compliance with section 6 I of the Ordinance. The objection was upheld and the suit was accordingly dismissed as prayed. In this appeal the appellant was represented by Mr. M.J. Raithatha while the respondent was represented by Mr. A F.H. Uzanda. They were the same advocates representing the parties in the lower court.

The question before us and which was also before the court below is a very narrow one. It is whether in a case involving section 6 of the Sale of Goods Ordinance, it is necessary for the plaintiff to aver in the plaint that there has been compliance with the provisions of B that section. As indicated earlier, the learned trial judge held that it was. The relevant parts of section 6 of the said Ordinance provide:

6.(1) A contract for the sale of any goods of the value of two hundred shillings or upwards shall C not be enforceable by action unless the buyer shall accept part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the contract or in part payment, or unless some note or memorandum in writing of the contract be made and signed by the party to be charged or by his agent in that behalf. D

(3) There is an acceptance of goods within the meaning of this section when the buyer does any act in relation to the goods which recognizes a pre-existing contract of sale whether there be an acceptance in performance of the contract or not. E

Both counsel are agreed that the provisions of this section are only procedural, and we think that is right. But Mr. Uzanda went further and submitted that those provisions are mandatory. He strenuously contended that in a case involving this section, the plaintiff F must plead in the plaint that at least one of the requirements set out in that section has been satisfied. Mr. Raithatha vigorously countered such proposition. He submitted in effect that there was no obligation for the plaintiff to plead in the plaint compliance with the requirements of the section, and that the section only creates a statutory defence G which a defendant may rely on if he so wishes. In this connection he referred us to some decided cases and text books. Of particular interest were two unreported decisions of the High Court in the cases of Nazerali Merali trading as Merali & Co. v S.K. Rajwani trading as United Commercial Co. (DSM. Civ App. No. 24 of 1961) H and Narsinh Valji v Dr. D.K. Shukla (DSM. Civ App. No. 9 of 1955). Both cases were of much assistance to us.

In order to ascertain the validity or otherwise of Mr. Uzanda's argument, it seems desirable first of all to refer to the provisions of Order 7 of the civil Procedure Code I which lay down the particulars that are to be contained in a plaint. Rule 1 (e) of the said Order says that the plaint shall contain, inter alia, the facts constituting the cause of action. The A expression "cause of action" is not defined under the Code, but it may be taken to mean essentially facts which it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove before he can succeed in the suit. Mr. Uzanda's argument necessarily envisages rule 1 (e) as embracing the B requirements under section 6 of the Sale of Goods Ordinance. In other words, according to Mr. Uzanda the requirements under section 6 are facts which constitute cause of action and which therefore must be set out in the plaint. It is in that way that Mr. Uzanda is able to maintain systematically and logically that the plaint discloses no cause C of action because none of the requirements under section 6 constituting essential facts has been averred or pleaded therein.

We have given much thought to Mr. Uzanda's argument, but we have not been persuaded by it. We do not think that the requirements under section 6 amount to facts D constituting cause of action. We think, as argued by Mr. Raithatha, that section 6 only provides a special defence which a defendant may rely on if he so wishes. It should be pointed out however that where a defendant wishes to avail himself of that defence, he has to raise it on the pleadings. The reason for this is clear. It is to avoid taking the other E party by surprise at the trial. It is designed to give the opposite party sufficient notice of the case which he is to meet at the trial. Once we hold that the requirements under section 6 only create a special defence open to a defendant, it logically follows that a plaintiff is under no obligation to aver in the plaint compliance with any such requirement. F Nor does he have to anticipate it. His obligation in relation to it arises only if and when the defendant has raised it. So that should the defendant choose not to raise it at all, for instance, the trial is to proceed; the plaintiff has no duty to refer to it and even the court is G not bound to take judicial notice of it. It is a special defence designed for the benefit of a defendant, but if the defendant does not wish to avail himself of it, the matter is to rest at that.

In the context of the facts of the present case the position amounts to this. The appellant H has alleged a contract between himself and the respondent to buy certain goods. The respondent essentially admits the contract but says that he has a defence, namely, that the said contract does not meet the requirements of section 6 of the Ordinance. But this does not mean that the appellant has no cause of action which exists quite independently of the defence. Here both parties have admitted a valid contract between them. Section I 6 merely says that a contract shall not be enforceable unless it be proved in a certain way. Thus once the respondent raised the statutory defence as he did, it was A for the court to ascertain whether or not the appellant who sought to enforce the contract was prepared to prove it in the manner as required under section 6. If the appellant succeeded to do so he would be entitled to judgment, and only if he failed to do so would judgment be against him. B

It is therefore apparent that the learned judge acted prematurely. He concluded the matter when he ought to have gone on. He was not satisfied that the appellant was not prepared, or had failed, to prove the contract in the manner as required under section 6. Indeed the appellant's reply to the Written Statement of Defence indicates that the C appellant was prepared to prove compliance with some requirements of that section. We think that in this type of cases once the special defence is raised the trial judge should treat it as an issue to be resolved after receiving evidence on it.

A further word need be said about the appellant's reply to the written statement of D defence which, as already stated, indicates that the appellant was prepared to counter the respondent's defence by alleging acceptance of the goods and the existence of a written memorandum of the contract. Mr. Uzanda contended that the appellant, by alleging a written memorandum, was now departing from the plaint which had alleged an E oral contract. He submitted further that this contravened the provisions of Order 6 Rule 7 of the Civil Procedure Code which provide that:

> No pleading shall, except by way of amendment, raise any new ground of claim or contain any F allegation of fact inconsistent with the previous pleadings of the party pleading the same.

He therefore concluded that in considering whether or not the plaint discloses a cause of G action only the plaint should be looked at; the reply must be ignored. We agree that for purposes of deciding whether or not the plaint discloses a cause of action the plaint and not the reply should be looked at. But for reasons we have given earlier on, we are H satisfied that the plaint as filed adequately discloses a cause of action. The reply merely serves to show that the appellant joins issues with the respondent on the special defence raised in the written statement of defence. In that sense it seems that the reply can hardly be said to be a departure from the allegation made in the plaint. I

1983 TLR p6
Before we conclude this matter, it is pertinent to observe that even if Mr. Uzanda's A allegation were well founded that the plaint disclosed no cause of action, the relief he asked for was wrong. He asked for an order dismissing the suit and the court granted him accordingly. This contravened the provisions of Order 7 rule 11(a) of the Civil Procedure Code which say B that where the plaint discloses no cause of action the plaint is to be rejected. Needless to say, the consequences of rejecting a plaint differ from those flowing from dismissing the suit.
In the result the appeal succeeds. We set aside the decision of the High Court dismissing C the suit. The case is remitted back to the High Court with a direction to that court to continue to hear the case in accordance with the law. The appellant is to have his costs.
D Appeal allowed.
1983 TLR p6
E
[zRPz]ATHUMANI KHALFANI v P.M. JONATHAN 1983 TLR 6 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mustafa JJA, Mwakasendo JJA and Makame JJA

CIVIL APPEAL 12 of 1983
Flynote
F Tort - Defamation - Defamatory statement-Meaning of Tort - Defamation - Malice required where communication privileged.
Tort - Defamation - Malice does not exist where defendant honestly and reasonably believes in the truth of the communication.
Tort - Defamation - "Privileged occasion" - Communication to the Chief Justice - Whether G privileged.
-Headnote
The appellant appealed against the decision of the High Court which ordered him to pay damages to the respondent for libel. The libel consisted of a communication to the Chief Justice made by appellant alleging that the respondent was corrupt. The detailed facts of H the case appear in the judgment.
Held: (i) A person making a communication on a privileged occasion is not restricted to the use of such language merely as is reasonably necessary to protect the interest or discharge the duty which is the foundation of his privilege; but on the contrary he will be I protected even though his language should be violent or excessively strong; if having regard to all the A circumstances of the case he might have honestly and on reasonable grounds believed that what he wrote or said was true and necessary for the purpose of his vindication, though in fact it was not so;
1983 TLR p7
MUSTAFA JA

(ii) malice is required where the communication is privileged;

(iii) malice does not exist where a defendant honestly and reasonably believes in B the truth of the communication.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Case referred to: C

1. Adam v Ward, [1917]AC 309

Editorial Note: The High Court decision is reported in [1980] TLR 175.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mustafa J.A.: The respondent successfully sued the appellant Athumani for libel in the D High Court (Lugakingira, J.) and was awarded damages amounting to Shs. 33,000/= inclusive of a sum of shs 20,000/= which represented exemplary damages. From that E decision the appellant is appealing.

The facts very briefly are as follows. The respondent was a judge of the High Court of Tanzania during 1978 and in that capacity in July, 1978 he tried a Civil Case at Dodoma in which the parties were the appellant Athumani and one Mahusein Salum. The F respondent reserved judgment. Something happened in October, 1978, before judgment was read. As a result the appellant Athumani made a complaint to the Permanent Commission of Enquiry and was directed to report to the Chief Justice. Athumani did so, and was told to put the complaint in writing which he did in a letter to the Chief Justice dated 6/11/78. The letter was exhibited in Court as Exhibit P2 and formed the basis of G the libel action. In it Athumani had alleged that the respondent had shown bias in favour of his opponent Salum, that the respondent, while on a visit to the locus in quo had winked at or otherwise made a gesture to Salum, that he had seen Salum with the respondent in the respondent's car and had seen the respondent and Salum together at H two different guest houses. He also referred to information supplied to him by Dodoma Court Chief Clerk, one Mkufya concerning the familiarity between the respondent and Salum and about a transaction involving the payment of money by Salum to the respondent. I Enquiries were apparently conducted by the Chief Justice on these allegations, but A nothing turned on them in so far as this appeal is concerned.

The respondent, after retiring or resigning from the bench, filed the action for defamation which has given rise to this appeal.

The trial judge found that the letter of 6/11/1978 Exhibit P2 was published to the Chief B Justice by Athumani, that it was defamatory of the respondent but that it was published on an occasion of qualified privilege. He found no publication to the Permanent Commission of Enquiry or the Police. However he found that Athumani was C actuated by malice when he published the said letter Exhibit P2, which thus destroyed the privilege. He therefore awarded damages as mentioned earlier against Athumani.

We are satisfied that the trial judge was right in finding that there was publication to the Chief Justice, that the letter was defamatory of the respondent, and that it was published D on a occasion of qualified privilege. Athumani's advocate on appeal before us does not dispute these findings. However the issue on appeal is whether there was malice or evidence of malice which destroyed the privilege. The respondent, though duly served, was absent and unrepresented and we thus do not have the benefit of his arguments. E

The appellant Athumani in evidence stated inter alia:

The most important thing in this case are acts of bribery. When I saw these acts, and signs of them, I decided to complain to the C.J. confidentially. It is easy to see signs of corruption but it F is difficult to prove corruption. But by the grace of God, both the giver and the receiver have confirmed it. What I wrote to the C.J. had only one purpose. It will be recalled that plaintiff said the Arab was brought into his office and he agreed that they talked about bribery. That is the G incident I wrote about in para 6 of my letter to C.J.

Again

....I did not say anything false about him. I had no malice...

Again H

...I asked myself whether it was a simple matter to accuse a judge. The answer was no; it was a grave matter.

Again

...In reporting to the C.J. that Judge Jonathan was corrupt. I wanted justice. Another judge. It is I true I also wanted him arrested and, if possible prosecuted or detained..

1983 TLR p9

MUSTAFA JA

The respondent Jonathan in his evidence stated inter alia: A

...In October, 1978, when I was in my chambers one morning a messenger.....told me someone....wanted to see me on official matters....The person who entered was the plaintiff in the Civil Case I have referred to. The messenger had then left. Mahusein (Plaintiff) then wanted to know the progress of the case. I told him to go home and that he would be called for B judgment. He there and then told me he had received my message from my Clerk. He then asked me whether I had received his message from that Clerk. I was surprised. I told him I had not sent anybody to him nor had I received any message from him. I asked which Clerk C was that? He replied "Mkufya" - who was Chief Clerk of this court. I asked him to call Mkufya so that I could question him in his (plaintiff's) presence. He begged me to drop the matter. He expressed the wish that the matter ends there. I recall he told me he had given Mkufya Shs. D 250/=. I told him to go away and await date of judgment.

When he left, I sent a messenger to call Mkufya...Mkufya denied everything... He then told me that it was Mahusein who had followed him (Mkufya) and asked him to see me on that case. Mkufya said he refused the request. But Mahusein allegedly insisted so in the end Mkufya E gave in. He then received the money from Mahusein. I told him "give me the money then". He replied that he received it and kept in safe custody... I told him to go and bring the money. He agreed and left. F

Shortly after Mkufya left my chambers, I called the D.R. Ndugu Kazimoto. I told him what had transpired. We decided to wait for Mkufya to return. A long time (2 hours) went by. Mkufya never came back to my chambers...Kazimoto then brought Mkufya... He completely denied even that G (receiving and keeping the money)... Kazimoto brought Mahusein in the same day and we all met in my chambers and in Mkufya's presence. Mahusein repeated what he had told me earlier. Mkufya denied everything... I then directed Kazimoto to take appropriate action...Kazimoto transferred Mkufya... H

Kazimoto was not called to give evidence. Mahusein Salum testified and stated that one day Mkufya approached him and told him that the judge (respondent) would expedite I writing the judgment if he gave 2,000/= as a present. He said he did not believe Mkufya and did not give the money. He went to the respondent to verify the story. He asked if A the respondent had sent Mkufya to him for Shs. 2,000/=. He stated in evidence:

The judge was first shocked. Then he recovered and laughed and decided to summon Mkufya. I requested him to leave the matters there, lest the situation becomes serious...He B said we would be informed when the judgment was ready...

Salum seems to have denied giving any money to Mkufya.

Mkufya in his testimony stated inter alia:

I was transferred to Kondoa because Mahusein Salum went to tell judge Jonathan that I had C taken Shs. 2,500/=.

He denied approaching Salum or receiving any money from him or that he had told the D respondent that he had the money. He stated that he had told the appellant Athumani that Salum was used to calling at the respondent's chambers but denied telling Athumani that he was getting bribes on behalf of the respondent.

It seems clear to us that pending the decision in the civil case between appellant E Athumani and Salum there was some transaction involving the giving or receipt of a bribe on the part of Salum and Mkufya allegedly acting as agent for the respondent. That was clear from the respondent's evidence. The appellant Athumani claimed that Mkufya had passed on that information to him. So Athumani was in possession of information which F must have greatly upset him. As Athumani stated in evidence:

The most important thing in this case are acts of bribery...

Was Athumani justified in believing the information supplied to him by Mkufya, and did G he honestly believe that acts of bribery had taken place? After receipt of Mkufya's information Athumani took steps which culminated in his letter to the Chief Justice, Exh. P2.

Did Athumani make the report to the Chief Justice maliciously? The trial judge found that H he did. In his judgment he said inter alia:

Malice has been variously stated as ill-will, spite, improper motives, indifference to truth etc. In I short when a person publishes of another a statement which is false and defamatory and does so for ill motives he is said to publish the statement maliciously... The burden of A proving malice rests on the plaintiff...He can discharge the burden in several ways.. Fortunately or other-wise I do not have to go very far in establishing the defendant's motives...I will do no more than to quote his very words: B

"I reported to the Chief Justice that Judge Jonathan was corrupt. I wanted justice. Another judge. It is true, I also wanted him arrested and if possible prosecuted or detained".

These confessions are self explanatory and the defendant never sought to revise them. C These are confessions of malice. The defendant was not just interested in the fate of his case. He also wanted to wreak vengeance on the plaintiff, in short, to ruin him... and find that the defendant was actuated by vaulting malice in communicating to the Chief Justice.... D

The trial judge also referred to the transfer of Mkufya who he thought was Athumani's trusted consultant and concluded that the said transfer trigged off the complaint to the Chief Justice.

The trial judge disbelieved the evidence of Athumani and his witnesses to the effect that E the respondent and Salum had been seen together in guest houses and found that the allegations of bias contained in the plaint were not proved. He seemed to find further support of malice in these unproved allegations.

With respect we do not think that the trial judge was justified in coming to the conclusion F he did. Athumani clearly believed what Mkufya had told him about a transaction involving bribery. He was obviously upset. As he said, "the most important thing in this case is bribery..." What he did was to take up the matter and he did so with circumspection. He eventually complained to the Chief Justice. In so reporting he had G said he wanted justice. He said he had no malice and did not say anything false about the respondent; that is he told the Chief Justice what he honestly believed to be the truth. He was obviously trying to protect his own interest. He also said, "...I also wanted him arrested and if possible prosecuted and detained". If the respondent was in fact guilty of H corruption, he would naturally be arrested and prosecuted or detained. The trial judge used this sentiment expressed by Athumani as a "confession of malice". We do not think so. In Adam V . Ward [1917] AC 309 a House of Lords decision and a leading case on defamation, Lord Atkinson stated at p. 339: I

The authorities, in my view, clearly establish that a person making a communication on a A privileged occasion is not restricted to the use of such language merely as is reasonably necessary to protect the interest or discharge the duty which is the foundation of his privilege; but on the contrary he will be protected, even though his language should be violent or B excessively strong; if having regard to all the circumstances of the case, he might have honestly and on reasonable grounds believed that what he wrote or said was true and necessary for the purpose of his vindication, though in fact it was not so. C

This passage has been cited with approval in Tanzania and other East African courts.

Did Athumani, when making his complaint to the Chief Justice, honestly believe that his complaint was true? Athumani himself said that he had said nothing false about the D respondent and had no malice towards him.

Was Athumani telling the truth? We will examine the objective conditions obtaining at the material time. There was clear evidence, given by the respondent himself, that a transaction involving bribery or attempted bribery had taken place. That is the gravamen E of Athumani's charge. The other incidents were merely in support of that charge.

We think that Athumani had good reason to believe the information Mkufya had given him, which in the event had proved to be substantially true, in so far as an attempt at F bribery was concerned. If he had reported to the Chief Justice in this honest belief, then he had no malice, even if the information furnished was false.

The trial judge found that the respondent never by himself or through Mkufya solicited or G obtained a bribe from Salum. That may well be so; but the evidence given by the respondent himself established that there was a transaction involving a bribe or attempted bribe, with him as the central figure.

We make no comment on the respondent's conduct when he was faced with the H confessions of bribery made by Salum and Mkufya in his chambers except to say that it seems rather odd. We would have expected at least an immediate and instant confrontation of the parties concerned, including the appellant Athumani, when Salum told him in the privacy of his chambers that he had sent him Shs. 2,500/= obviously as a I bribe. If that had been done we venture to think no suspicions against him could have arisen.

1983 TLR p13

In the circumstances we think that Athumani on reasonable grounds honestly believed A that his complaint to the Chief Justice was true and we do not think that there was sufficient evidence of malice to destroy the qualified privilege under which the publication was made.

We have noted the remarks made by the trial judge concerning the issue of the award of B exemplary or punitive damages. We do not propose to deal with this matter as it is unnecessary in view of the conclusion we have reached in this appeal. We will only say that it is generally inadvisable to embark on an examination and detailed analysis of a controversial issue of this nature without the assistance of counsel on both sides. It may C be that the trial judge has come to the right conclusion on this question, but we will reserve any decision on this matter for a more appropriate occasion.

We allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the High Court and substitute D therefore an order that the claim for damages be dismissed with costs to the appellant Athumani both here and below.

E Appeal allowed.

1983 TLR p13

F

[zRPz]CONSTRUCTION ENGINEERS AND BUILDERS LTD v SUGAR DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION 1983 TLR 13 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Mwakasendo JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

28 November 1983
CIVIL APPEAL 23 OF 1983
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure-Stay of suit-Whether suit may be stayed on application of G defendant for matter to be dealt with by Arbitrator- S.6 Arbitration Ordinance, Cap. 15.
-Headnote
The appellant, Contractor, entered into a contract with the respondent under which the H appellant was to undertake the construction of "Sukari House" for the respondent. The construction was to be completed by 3rd January, 1983, and the respondent was empowered under the contract in certain events to terminate the contract, take I possession of the works and complete the works by employing and paying other people to do so. The contract contained an arbitration clause. A
1983 TLR p14
On 7th June, 1982, the respondent issued a notice to the appellant for "failure to proceed regularly and diligently with the works" and that if the default continued for another 14 days from the date of receipt of the notice the respondent would be at the B option of terminating the appellant's employment as a contractor without further notice.
The employment was terminated by a letter from the respondent to the appellant dated 4th February, 1983. The appellant then filed a suit in the High Court raising among other C issues, the following issues: (i) That the respondent could not terminate the contract in 1983, having stated in his first notice that he would have terminated it after the expiry of the 14 days if there was a continued breach. Not doing so raised a presumption that there was no breach and hence a fresh notice was necessary. (ii) That the respondent, D by waiting for so long after issuing the 1982 notice, had waived his right to terminate the contract and had indeed issued further instructions to the appellant. (iii) That the appellant had complied with the notice of 1982. (iv) That the termination was E unreasonable and vexatious and (v) the termination of the contract was illegal and invalid.
On being served with a copy of the plaint, the respondent immediately made an appearance before the High Court and applied for a stay of the actions in terms of s. 6 of the Arbitration Ordinance. This application was granted. On appeal against the order F of stay, the appellant argued that the learned High Court Judge wrongly exercised his discretion to order a stay because the differences between the parties were not within the scope of the arbitration clause and that the dispute raised questions of law only which were not within the competence of an arbitrator. G
Held: (i)Where proceedings are instituted by one of the parties to a contract containing an arbitration clause and the other party, acting pursuant to the arbitration clause, applies for a stay of proceedings, the court has to decide the precise nature of the dispute and H whether the dispute falls within the terms of the arbitration clause;

(ii) where it is clear that the parties to a contract have agreed to submit all their disputes or differences arising "under" the contract to an arbitrator, the dispute must go to arbitration unless there is good reason to justify the court to override the agreement of I the parties.

1983 TLR p15

Case Information

Appeal dismissed A

Cases referred to:

1. Hounslow, L.B.C.v Twickenham Developments [1970] 3 W.L.R. 538.
2. Re Carlisle; Clegg v Clegg [1910] 1 Ch.495
3. Crowe v Crossley [1912]108 L.T.11 B
4. Barnes v Young [1899] 1 Ch.414
5. Green v Howell [1910]1 Ch.495
6. Willesford v Watson 28 L.T. Rep. 428
7. Metropolitan Tunnel etc. Ltd v London Electric Railway [1926] Ch.371
8. Heyman v Darwins Ltd. [1942] A.C. 356 C

M.A. Lakha for the appellant,

Banturaki for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwakasendo, J.A. delivered the considered judgment of the court: The question that D has to be decided by the Court in this appeal is whether the suit filed in the High Court by the appellants against the respondents should, on the application of the latter, be stayed pursuant to the provisions of section 6 of the Arbitration Ordinance, Cap. 15 of E the Laws of Tanganyika, so that the matter in dispute may be dealt with by an arbitrator appointed in accordance with clause 36(1) of the contract entered into by the parties.

To answer the question posed we start with an examination of the dispute that has arisen between the parties. The appellant, as one can see from the plaint is a Construction or F Building Engineers (hereinafter referred to as "the Contractor"), and the respondent is a parastatal organization (hereinafter referred to as "the Employer"). By an Agreement made between them on 19th September, 1980, the employer employed the contractor to carry out the work of erecting "Sukari House", the work to be completed on 3rd G January, 1983. Clause 25 of the Contract empowered the Employer in certain events to terminate the contract, take possession of the works and complete the works by employing and paying other people to do so. Clause 26 stipulated the circumstances in which the contractor might terminate the contract. The contract also contained an H arbitration clause-clause 36. I

1983 TLR p16

MWAKASENDO JA

According to the Statement of claim in the plaint, the Employer on 7 June, 1982, issued A a notice addressed to the Contractor in terms of Clause 25(1)(b) of the conditions of the contract. The notice, entitled "Notice of Determination by Employer" reads:

In accordance with Clause 25(1)(b) of the Agreement and Schedule of Conditions of the B Building Contract between the Sugar Development Corporation and yourselves, and the Agreement dated 19th September, 1980, we hereby give notice to you that you are in default by reason of: "Your failure to proceed regularly and diligently with the works". C

If this default continues for the ensuing fourteen days from the date of receipt of this notice, the Employer may determine your employment as contractor without serving further notice. D

It is then alleged in the plaint that on 4th February, 1983 the Employer wrote a letter to the Contractor notifying him that he was terminating the contract and taking possession of the works pursuant to the provisions of clause 25 of the Contract. Following this notice the Contractor filed a suit in the High Court raising a number of issues of dispute. E These issues are set out in paragraphs 6 to 10 of the plaint. They read as follows:

6. By notice dated 4th February, 1983, the defendant has purported to terminate the contract F acting under the above conditions and the notice of the 7th June, 1982 annexed here to and marked "B" is copy of the said notice of the fourth February, 1983 of the plaintiff, states that the defendant is not entitled to terminate the contract aforesaid. In February, 1983 acting on the notice of 7th June, 1982 as under condition 25 (1) (b) the defendant was obliged to terminate G the contract within 14 days of the date of the said notice and that if the defendant found any breach by the plaintiff that would entitle the defendant to a termination in February, 1983, a clear fresh notice was necessary and a precondition under the said condition before H termination.

7. Moreover the plaintiff states that the defendant has waived the said notice of the 8th June, 1982 in that after the issues of the said notice and the expiry of the days, the defendant has I acknowledged and accepted the plaintiff as continuing in contract for the said work with the defendant and has issued further instructions to the plaintiff, A has obtained further work from the plaintiff and made various payments to the defendant.

8. Further and in the alternative, the plaintiff states that the plaintiff has complied with the requisitions in the notice of the minutes of the site meetings. B

9. The plaintiff will also contend that the purported termination is unreasonable and vexatious as the defendant unreasonable (sic.) fails to take into account the prevailing conditions in Tanzania. Defendant is actuated by a desire to replace the plaintiff with a contractor of (sic.) the C choice.

10. In the premises the plaintiff contends that the purported termination of the contract by the defendant is illegal and inoperative. D

On being served with a copy of the plaint, the Employer immediately made an appearance before the High Court and applied for the action to be stayed in terms of E section 6 of the Arbitration Ordinance, Cap. 15. Section 6 reads:

6. Where any party to a submission to which this Part applies, or any person claiming under him, commences any legal proceedings against any other party to such legal proceedings F may, at any time after appearance, and before filing a written statement, or taking any other steps in the proceedings, apply to the court to stay the proceedings;and the Court, if satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission, and that the applicant was, at the time when the proceedings were commenced, G and still remains, ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration, may make an order staying the proceedings.

Where proceedings are instituted by one of the parties to a contract containing an H arbitration clause, as was the case here, and the other party, acting pursuant to the arbitration clause, applies to the High Court for a stay of proceedings, the first thing to be decided is the precise nature of the dispute which has arisen and the next question is I whether the dispute is one within the terms of the arbitration clause. In the instant case the matters in dispute are set out in paragraphs 6 to A 10 of the plaint-supra. But to answer the question whether the dispute in the case falls within the arbitration clause, one has to construe the arbitration clause. The arbitration clause - clause 36 contained in the contract between the parties, is a standard form of B clause which is to be found in most building contracts based on the Royal Institute of British Architects (R.I.B.A.) form of contract. It is framed in the widest terms possible and embraces "any dispute or difference between the Employer and the Contractor.... as C to the construction of the contract or as to any matter or thing of whatever nature arising thereunder or in connection therewith... or the rights under clause 25.... then such dispute or difference shall be and is hereby referred to the arbitration and final decision of a person to be agreed between the parties...."

1983 TLR p18

MWAKASENDO JA

Counsel for the parties agree that the arbitration clause in this case covers all the issues in D dispute because on a proper construction of the clause the dispute or difference relates to matters arising "under" or "in connection with" the contract and/or the rights and liabilities of the parties under clause 25. That, we think, is a perfectly correct construction of the arbitration clause - clause 36 of the Conditions. What, however, the E advocates of the parties are not agreed upon is the question whether in the circumstances of this case the learned High Court Judge was right in ordering a stay of proceedings in the exercise of this discretion under section 6 of the Arbitration Ordinance. Mr. Lakha, learned counsel for the Contractor, has submitted that the learned High court Judge acted on a wrong principle in ordering a stay in the present F case. He has contended that in view of the nature of the dispute which, he submits, involves only questions of law, and of the character of the submission, this was a case in which the High Court, if it considered that the arbitrator had jurisdiction, would exercise G its discretion and refuse to stay the proceedings. On the other hand, Mr. Banturaki, learned counsel for the Employer, has countered Mr. Lakha's arguments by submitting that the matters in dispute and difference between the parties arose "under" the contract H and were within the scope of the arbitration clause contained in the contract and were, therefore, fit and proper matters to be referred to and decided by an arbitrator appointed under the arbitration clause. He submitted further that there was no sufficient reason why the dispute should not be so referred and decided.

To decide if Mr. Lakha's submissions are correct and should be upheld, we have to I examine the dispute more closely.

1983 TLR p19

MWAKASENDO JA

The first two matters in dispute raised in paragraph 6 of the plaint relate to the question A of notice. The Contractor in this paragraph is saying that the two notices issued by the Employer, that is, notices dated 7th June, 1982 and 4th February, 1983, were invalid and did not entitle the Employer to terminate the contact. Further, the Contractor has contended that he was entitled to notice specifically pointing out his defaults at least B fourteen clear days before being served with the notice dated 4th February, 1983. He has said that such a notice, which he calls, "a clear fresh notice" was "necessary and precondition under the said condition before termination by the defendant".With respect, there is clearly a misapprehension on the part of the Contractor as to what the effect of a C notice under Clause 25 of the conditions really is. Its effect is not, as the Contractor appears to think, to terminate the contract. The effect of a notice under this type of a building contract was well described by MEGARRY, J. in the case of Hounslow D L.B.C. v Twickenham Developments [1970] 3 W.LR. 538 at p. 363 in these words:

In one sense it is a mere warning, it does not determine the contract, and it gives the E Contractor an opportunity of mending his ways. On the other hand, the notice has a continuing effect, for even if the Contractor puts matters right within fourteen days the building owner may without any further architect's notice give notice determating the Contractor's employment if the contactor "shall at any time thereafter repeat such default (whether previously repeated or F not)". Even so, the notice determines nothing, the notice loads the pistol, but unless something else occurs, the pistol cannot be discharged and the contract remains a foot.

We think it is clear from what we have said on this matter, that the issues raised by the G Contractor in paragraph 6 of the plaint are not, as contended by the Contractor, purely questions of law. No doubt the Contractor's contentions give rise to interesting questions of law, but as it seems to us, these questions cannot be answered as questions of law, H without ascertaining all the surrounding facts, some of which may be technical and others may not. Thus, to answer the two questions raised by the contractor with regard to the validity of the Employer's notices, one has to consider not only the factual foundation for the Employer's notices but also construe the contract. I

1983 TLR p20

MWAKASENDO JA

Mr. Lakha in opposing a stay of proceedings in this case, cited a number of English A reported cases in support of his submissions. We will refer to only two of these cases here. One of the cases cited by Mr. Lakha to which we would like to refer is the case of Re Carlisle; Clegg v Clegg [1910] 1 Ch 495. FARWELL, J. in Crowe v Crossley B (1912) 108 L.T. 11 at p.15 commented on the decision in Re Carlisle as follows:

Both my brothers in this court think that the discretion was properly exercised, and I am unable to say that there is a sufficient reason why the matters should not be referred to arbitration. C The mere fact that there must be questions of law is not sufficient. Certainly Willes, J. in Seligmann v Le Boutilier (L. Rep. 1CP. 681) said so, and North, J. in a case we have been referred of Re Carlisle; Clegg v Clegg (62 L.T. Rep. 821; 44 Ch. Div 200) put it on the ground D which is perfectly intelligible - that there was only one question in the action, and that was a question as to the construction of the deed of partnership, as I think it was there, and there were no facts in dispute. He said it would be idle to go to arbitration when the first and only E thing would be to state a case for the opinion of the court. That is a perfectly intelligible principle which I should be very glad and ready to follow at any moment.

The other case cited by Mr. Lakha is the case of Barnes v Young [1898] 1 Ch. 414. F This was a case of a partnership in which the article provided that a partner might be expelled for breach of certain acts therein specified, and that if any question should arise whether a case had happened to authorize the exercise of this power, such question should be referred to arbitration. The defendants served a notice on the plaintiff to determine the partnership on the ground that he had committed a breach within the G expulsion clause, but gave no details of the particular act complained of. The plaintiff thereupon brought an action to restrain the defendants from acting on this notice; the defendants moved to stay proceedings and refer all matters in dispute to arbitration. The H Court held that the preliminary question whether or not the notice of expulsion was valid was one more suitable for decision by the court than by an arbitrator, and that as there was a suggestion of a fraudulent exercise of the power of expulsion, the court in the exercise of its discretion, ought not to stay proceedings and enforce a reference. The I decision in Barnes v. Young was approved by the Court of Appeal in Green v.

Howel [1910] 1 Ch. 495, another partnership case cited by Mr. Lakha in argument. A

A common feature of the two cases: Re Carlisle and Barnes v Young is that in both cases the only issue in dispute was the construction of partnership deed, there being no facts in dispute. This is certainly not the case with the two matters in dispute as raised by B the Contractor in paragraph 6 of the plaint.

The third matter of dispute between the Contractor and the Employer is the question of waiver - see paragraph 7 of the plaint. In this connection we think it is pertinent to observe that in view of what Megarry J. said in Hounslow's case with regard to the C effect of a notice under condition 25 of the Building contract, the Contractor's contention on the question of waiver appears to be unsound.

The fourth matter of dispute, which is put as an alternative issue to the other three issues, is set out in paragraph 8 of the plaint and concerns a claim by the Contractor that he "complied with the requisitions in the notice of the 7th June, 1982 as is manifest from the D minutes of the site meetings" This question, as we understand it, is largely a matter of disputed fact which will have to be resolved against the general terms of the contract. As the Contractor seems to be asserting in paragraph 8 of the plaint that from 7th June, 1982 he had been carrying out the work of construction "regularly" and "diligently", it E seems to us that in order to decide whether the Contractor's claim is true, one will have to examine the factual basis of this claim and so determine the meaning of the words "regularly" and "diligently". This exercise will, as it seems to us, require evidence to be F called from persons who are familiar with the building trade. MEGARRY, J. in Hounslow's case points to the difficulties that are involved in construing the two words: "regularly" and "diligently". He discusses this matter at p. 571 as follows: G

These are elusive words, on which the dictionaries help little. The word convey a sense of activity, of orderly progress, and of industry and perseverance: but such language provides little help on the question of how much activity, progress and so on is to be expected. They are words used in a standard form of building contract in relation to functions to be discharged by H the architect and in those circumstances it may be that there is evidence that could be given, whether of usage among architects, builders and building owners or otherwise, that could be helpful in construing the words. At present all I can say is I

1983 TLR p22

MWAKASENDO JA

that I remain somewhat uncertain as to the concept enshrined in these words. A

The last issue in dispute is set out in paragraph 9 of the plaint. The Contractor claims in that paragraph that the Employer, in terminating the contract, acted unreasonably and B vexatiously. Whether the Employer is guilty of what he is accused we think, is a question of fact. These then are matters in dispute between the parties. We do not think that after what we have said on these matters, it can now be seriously contended that the dispute C between the parties is one of pure law. That the dispute involves an investigation and determination of the background facts leading to the alleged termination of the contract was, we think, made clear in argument by both counsel. Much as we are attracted by D Lakha's forceful argument, there is no way we can ignore the law which governs the question which we have to decide. The law on the subject-matter of dispute is clear and well established. We will refer here to only a few of the leading cases which, though not binding on us, lay down clear and sound principles on the subject-matter with which we are concerned.

As an answer to Mr Lakha's main argument that the matters in dispute in this case are E not fit and proper to go to arbitration, one is reminded of a famous passage from the judgment of LORD SELBOURNE in the case of Willesford v Watson, 28 L.T. Rep. 428; L. Rep. 8 Ch. App. 473 at 497 which was cited with approval by COZENS F -HARDY, M.R., in Crowe v Crossley (1912) 108 L.T. 11 at 13, as follows:

Then we are told that this is an arbitrary tribunal final and without appeal, and so forth, and that there are not fit questions to go before the arbitrator. But I think that the Legislature and the Act G of Parliament under which the Court is now asked to act, have given the answer to that argument. If parties choose to determine for themselves that they will have a domestic forum instead of resorting to the ordinary courts, then since the Act of Parliament was passed a H prima facie duty is cast upon the courts to act upon such an agreement.

After quoting the above passage COZENS-HARDY, M.R., discussed at p.14 the question before him in these words: I

1983 TLR p23

MWAKASENDO JA

It is said - and said very forcibly by Mr. Clavell Salvell Salter and his junior -that it is apparent A that the questions which have arisen....are really questions of law. And it is said that there cannot be anything more absurd than to refer to a civil engineer difficult questions arising under the law of contract as interpreted and enforced by courts of law in this country. There is B no doubt considerable force in that. But the Arbitration Act 1889 itself seems to me to furnish an answer to that. It is quite clear that Act contemplates that the arbitrator shall deal or may deal with questions of law.

He then went on to discuss the principles which guide the court in the exercise of its C discretion to interfere with the agreement of the parties to submit their differences or disputes arising under a contract to arbitration. He dealt with the matter thus: D

I therefore do not think that it can be enough to say as questions of law of a serious kind will arise here the court ought not in the exercise of its discretion to interfere. This is not a case in E which questions of law can be kept apart from the facts of the case. If, for instance, it had been merely a question of law arising upon the construction of certain words in a lease or a contract of sale, or what not, I can quite conceive that the court might say - as the court has done in one or two cases - that there is only one question of law here, and that it is idle to refer that to arbitration, because the first thing the arbitrator would undoubtedly do would be to refer F that to the court for the decision of the court as a question of law.

It may be noted that in Crowe v Crossley the Court of Appeal granted a stay notwithstanding that the dispute involved difficult questions in the law of contract, which G the arbitrator would be unable to decide, as this was a case in which "it would be as hard for lawyers to understand the machine as for an engineer to understand the law".

In Metropolitan Tunnel etc. Ltd. v London Electric Ry [1926] 371, a contract for H engineering works provided that any disputes arising should be referred to an arbitrator, who was to be an engineer. One of the parties took out a summons for the construction of a clause in the contract. It appeared that evidence would be needed, both as to custom in such matters and as to the meaning of technical terms used, before the clause could be construed. The Court of I

1983 TLR p24

MWAKASENDO JA

Appeal, overruling the judge below, held that the proceedings should be stayed. A

We now turn to consider the case of Heyman v Darwins Ltd. [1942] A.C. 356. That was a decision of the House of Lords in which their Lordships had to answer questions which are similar to those which we are required to answer in the present case. In B Heyman v Darwins Ltd. an arbitration clause in a contract provided that "If any dispute shall arise between the parties hereto in respect of this agreement of any of the provisions herein contained or anything arising hereout the same shall be referred for arbitration in accordance with the provision of the Arbitration Act, 1889". A dispute C having arisen between the parties, the appellants commenced an action against the respondents claiming (a) a declaration that the respondents had "repudiated and/or evinced an intention not to perform" the contact and (b) damages. The respondents who admitted the existence of the contract and denied they had repudiated it, applied to have D the action stayed in order that it might be dealt with under the arbitration clause. CASSELS, J. in chambers held that the issue involved only a question of law and in exercise of his discretion refused to grant a stay. The Court of Appeal allowed the E appeal by the respondents, holding that the arbitration clause applied and that CASSELS, J. had wrongly exercised his discretion. The plaintiffs appealed to the House of Lords. In the House of Lords the plaintiffs argued first that CASSELS, J. in exercising his discretion in favour of the plaintiffs followed no wrong principle and his discretion F should not be interfered with. Secondly, it was contended that the plaintiffs had repudiated the contract and the respondents had accepted this repudiation. Accordingly, the whole contract was at an end and with it the arbitration clause, so that the dispute did not fall within it. The respondents countered by arguing that the contract was never G repudiated by them, and, accordingly, the arbitration clause applied to the dispute. They further argued that CASSELS, J. exercised his discretion wrongly since no difficult questions of law were involved in the interpretation of the agreement or of the correspondence; and that in any case, no sufficient grounds had been shown why the H appellants should not proceed by way of arbitration in accordance with the agreement.

Their Lordships in their considered judgments were unanimous in holding that the dispute fell within the arbitration clause and that the action should be stayed. Since the arguments advanced by the advocates in this case bear some resemblance to those raised by I counsel before the House of Lords, we think it will be useful if we refer to some excerpts of their Lordships' comments on the principal arguments A advanced before them. On the argument that a repudiation of a contract has the effect of ending the contract and with it the arbitration clause, VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C. put what he conceived to be the correct view of the matter as follows: B

> An arbitration clause is a written submission, agreed to by the parties to the contract, and, like other written submissions to arbitration, must be construed according to its language and in the light of the circumstances in which it is made. If the dispute is whether the contract which contains the clause has ever been entered into at all, that issue cannot go to arbitration under C the clause, for the party who denies that he has ever entered into the contract is thereby denying that he has ever joined in the submission. Similarly, if one party to the alleged contract is contending that it is void ab initio (because, for example, the making of such a contract is D illegal), the arbitration clause cannot operate, for on this view the clause itself also is void. But in a situation where the parties are at one in asserting that they entered into a binding contract, but a difference has arisen between them whether there has been a breach by one side or the E other, or whether circumstances have arisen which have discharged one or both parties from further performance, such differences should be regarded as differences which have arisen "in respect of or "with regard to" or "under" the contract, and an arbitration clause which F uses those or similar, expressions should be construed accordingly.

Commenting on the same matter LORD MACMILLAN made the following observations at pages 370-371: G

If it appears that the dispute is whether there has been a binding contract between the parties, such a dispute cannot be covered by an arbitration clause in the challenged contract. If there has never been a contract at all, there has never been as part of it an agreement to arbitrate. H The greater includes the less. Further, a claim to set aside a contract on such grounds as fraud, dures or essential error cannot be the subject-matter of a reference under an arbitration clause in the contract sought to be set aside. Again, an admittedly binding contract containing a general arbitration clause may stipulate that in certain events the contract shall come to an I end. If a question arises whether the contract has for any such reason come to an end I can see no reason why A the arbitrator should not decide that question.

1983 TLR p26

MWAKASENDO JA

LORD MACMILLAN after discussing the question of repudiation and its effect on the B existence of a contract, made the following pertinent observations regarding the true nature and function of an arbitration clause in a contract. He said:

I venture to think that not enough attention has been directed to the true nature and function of C an arbitration clause in a contract. It is quite distinct from the other clauses. The other clauses set out the obligations which the parties undertake towards each other but the arbitration clause does not impose on one of the parties an obligation in favour of the other. It embodies the agreement of both parties that, if any dispute arises with regard to the D obligations which the one party has undertaken to the other, such dispute shall be settled by a tribunal of their own constitution. And there is this very material difference, that whereas in an ordinary contract the obligation of the parties to each other cannot in general be specifically E enforced and breach of them results only in damages, the arbitration clause can be specifically enforced by the machinery of the Arbitration Acts. The appropriate remedy for breach of the agreement to arbitrate is not damages, but is enforcement. Moreover, there is F the further significant difference that the courts in England have a discretionary power of dispensation as regards arbitration clauses which they do not possess as regards the other clauses of contract.

Although the principles of law ably enunciated by VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C. and G LORD MACMILLAN in the above excerpts fully demonstrate the futility of Mr. Lakha's arguments in this court and in the court below, this outline of the decided cases which are relevant to the matter before us, would be incomplete without a reference to the judgment of LORD WRIGHT in Heyman v Darwins Ltd. That master of the H English common law answers the question whether the issues in dispute in that case were fit and proper matters to be referred to arbitration, in these words at page 389:

I need not quote authorities for what has been said so often, that under a general submission I the arbitrator is appointed to decide issues both of fact and of law. In the background, indeed, is the courts, jurisdiction to A set aside an award if it is bad in law on its face, and the opinion of the court on issues of law may be invoked by means of cases stated under the Acts of 1889 and 1934, but, if the submission is general, it will require some substantial reason to induce the court to deny its B due effect to the agreement of the parties to submit the whole dispute, whether it includes both fact and law or is limited to either fact or law. In the present case I can find no sufficient reason. The dispute is of the most ordinary character. C

1983 TLR p27

MWAKASENDO JA

This is as clear a statement of the law on the subject with which we are concerned as anyone is likely to come across. The Employer and the Contractor in this case by their agreement, which follows closely the standard R.I.B.A. form of contract, have chosen to submit their "disputes or differences" as to the construction of the contract or as to any D matter or anything of whatever nature arising thereunder or in connection therewith", to arbitration. On the authorities reviewed above, it seems to us that the operation of the arbitration clause in the contract to which this case relates does not depend on the question whether the dispute that has arisen includes both fact and law or is merely E limited to either fact or law. If it is clear from the submission, as it is in this case, that the parties have agreed to submit all their "disputes or differences arising "under" the contract to an arbitrator, then the dispute must go to arbitration unless there is some good reason to justify the court to override the agreement of the parties. In the present case we can F find no good reason to do so and we are accordingly of the opinion that the learned High Court Judge properly exercised his discretion in ordering a stay of proceedings in this case.

In the result this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. G

Appeal dismissed

1983 TLR p28

A

[zRPz]CALICO TEXTILE INDUSTRIES LTD. v PYARALIESMAIL PREMJI 1983 TLR 28 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

3 November 1983

CIVIL APPEAL 16 OF 1983 B

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Failure to file appeal within prescribed time - Appellant represented by Advocate - Whether appeal to be admitted - R.83 Court of Appeal Rules. C

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Appeal of time - Advocates failure to check the law properly - Whether sufficient ground.

-Headnote

The appellant who was represented by an advocate sought to file his appeal out of time. D The respondent applied to have his Notice of Appeal struck out for failure to institute his appeal within the prescribed period.

Held: Failure of a party's advocate to check the law is not sufficient ground for allowing E an appeal out of time.
Case Information
Application allowed.
No case referred to. F
Patel for the appellant
M.A. Lakha for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Nyalali, C.J. read the following order of the court. This is an application brought by the G Respondent under Rule 82 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules 1979 to have the Notice of Appeal struck out for failure by the appellant to institute his appeal within the period prescribed by Rule 83 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979. The application is supported by affidavit of Mr. Lakha, learned Advocate for Respondent. H
Having heard both sides, it is quite clear that the appeal was filed hopelessly out of time. The reason for the delay advanced by Mr. Patel for the appellant is that he did not check the requirements of the law properly. Surely this cannot be sufficient reason for allowing I Appellant, who is represented by a learned Advocate, to file his appeal so much out of time.
1983 TLR p29
We therefore allow the application and order the notice of appeal be struck out with A costs.
B Application allowed.
1983 TLR p29
C
[zRPz]OMARI YUSUFU v MWAJUMA YUSUFU AND ANOTHER 1983 TLR 29 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mwakasendo JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

28 November 1983
CIVIL APPLICATION 3 OF 1983
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal originating from Primary Court - Whether decision of D the High Court in matters originating from the Primary Court appealable - Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979.
Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal originating from Primary Court - Certification of point of law - Whether Court of Appeal has jurisdiction - Rule 46 (3) Court of Appeal Rules. E
-Headnote
The applicant applied for extension of time to file an application for leave to appeal and for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal. An application to the High Court by the applicant for a certificate that a point of law was involved had been refused. F

Held: (i) Under s.4(2) (c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, it is the High Court alone which has jurisdiction to entertain an application for a certificate that a point of law is involved so that matters originating from the Primary Court can go to the Court of G Appeal;

(ii) rule 46(3) Court of Appeal Rules is ultra vires the Appellate Jurisdiction Act in so far as it envisages a further application for the certificate to the Court of Appeal following a refusal by the High Court to grant the certificate.

Case Information

Application struck out. H

No case referred to.

Rwebangira for the applicant. I

1983 TLR p30

KISANGA JA

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, J.A. read the following order of the court: This is an application for the A extension of time to file an application for leave to appeal and for leave to appeal to this Court.

We have to point out at once that the application is somewhat confused and completely misconceived. The proceedings leading to the application relate to a matter originating B from the Primary Court going to the District Court and then to the High Court. An appeal in such a matter therefore is governed by the provisions of section 4 (2) (c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 which provides:

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (1) C

(a) ...

(b) ...

(c) No appeal shall lie against any decision or order of the High Court in any proceedings D under Head (c) of Part III of the Magistrates' Court Act, 1963, unless the High Court certifies that a point of law is involved in the decision or order.

The record shows that an application under this provision was made to the High Court E for a certificate that a point of law was involved, but the application was refused. Mrs. Rwebangira appearing for the applicant before us stated in effect that she was now asking this Court to grant such a certificate, adding that she was relying for that F application on the same provisions of section 4 (2) (c) quoted above.

On a true understanding of the provisions of section 4(2) (c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, we think that it is the High Court alone which has jurisdiction to entertain an application for a certificate that a point of law is involved. The Court of Appeal has no G concurrent jurisdiction over such an application. It is to be noted that section 4(2) (c) curtails or restricts the broad power conferred by section 4(1) (c). This latter provision confers broad powers on the High Court and the Court of Appeal alike to grant leave to appeal to the court of Appeal in certain matters. But section 4(2) (c) clearly seeks to H restrict that power to the High Court alone. In other words, had section 4 (2) (c) not been enacted, then both the High Court and the Court of Appeal would have jurisdiction to entertain the application for a certificate that a point of law is involved. But the enactment of this provision was clearly intended to confer on the High Court alone the I jurisdiction to entertain such application. To construe section 4 (2) (c) otherwise would clearly make that provision superfluous in A view of section 4 (1) (c) which confers on both the High Court and the Court of Appeal broad powers to grant leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal. It may very well be that where, as here, the High Court refuses to grant a certificate that a point of law is involved, the matter may probably be brought before the Court of Appeal by way of B appeal against the order refusing to grant such application, but we are of the settled view that the matter could not be brought here by way of application or further application.

1983 TLR p31

KISANGA JA

In holding this view we are aware of the provisions of rule 46(3) of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules which appear to suggest that a matter such as this one could be brought C to this Court by way of an application. The said Rules are made under the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979 and rule 46(3) provides that:

(3) Every application for leave to appeal shall be accompanied by a copy of the decision D against which it is desired to appeal and, where application had been made to the High Court for a certificate that a point of law is involved or for leave to appeal and the application has been refused, by a copy of the High Court refusing that application. E

This sub-rule clearly envisages that where the High Court has refused to grant a certificate that a point of law is involved, the aggrieved party can seek redress by way of a further application to the Court of Appeal. But this contravenes the provisions of F section 4 (2) (c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act set out earlier which, as has been shown, confers on the High court alone jurisdiction to entertain such application. Thus to the extent that the sub-rule envisages further application to the Court of Appeal following a refusal by the High Court to grant the certificate, the sub-rule is ultra vires the parent G Act, in which case the latter prevails.

In the result we are satisfied that this application is incompetent and is accordingly struck out. We make no order for costs as the respondent did not appear. H

Application struck out.

1983 TLR p32

A

[zRPz]BI HAWA MOHAMED v ALLY SEFU 1983 TLR 32 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

29 November 1983

CIVIL APPEAL 9 OF 1983 B

Flynote

Family Law - Matrimonial property - Whether domestic services of a house wife amount to contribution in acquisition of matrimonial assets.

Family Law - Matrimonial assets - Family assets - Assets envisaged u/s 114 (1) of the Law C of Marriage Act, 1971 - Matrimonial assets acquired by spouses during marriage by their joint efforts.

-Headnote

The appellant and respondent were wife and husband respectively until the dissolution of D their marriage by a court decree of the Primary Court of Ilala District at Kariakoo, Dar es Salaam in 1980. In subsequent proceedings the Primary Court held that the appellant was not entitled to any share in the matrimonial assets as she was a mere wife and that the house was bought by the husband's money. On appeal to the High Court, E the Primary Court's decision was substantially upheld. This is a second appeal.

Held: (i) Since the welfare of the family is an essential component of the economic activities of a family man or woman it is proper to consider contribution by a spouse to F the welfare of the family as contribution to the acquisition of matrimonial or family assets;

(ii) the "joint efforts" and 'work towards the acquiring of the assets' have to be construed as embracing the domestic "efforts' or "work" of husband and wife;

(iii) where a spouse commits a matrimonial mis-conduct which reduced to G nothing her contribution towards the welfare of the family and consequential acquisition of matrimonial or family assets she or he would not be entitled to a share in the property.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed. H

Cases referred to:

1. Zawadi Abdallah v Ibrahim Iddi [1981] T.L.R. 311
2. Rukia Diwani Konzi v Abdallah Issa Kihenya Matr. Cause No. 6 of 1971. I 1983 TLR p33
3. Bateman v Bateman [1979] FAM 25 A
4. Iddi Kunganya v Ali Mpate [1967] HCD 49
5. Egerton v Brownlow [1853] 4 HL Cas 196
6. Martin v Martin [1976] 3 All ER 625

R.C. Kesaria for the appellant. B

[zJDz]Judgment

Nyalali, C.J., read the following considered judgment of the court: The appellant Bi Hawa Mohamed and Ally Seifu were wife and husband respectively until the dissolution C of their marriage by court decree of the Primary Court of Ilala District, at Kariakoo, Dar es Salaam in 1980. In subsequent proceedings, seeking the division of matrimonial assets, the Primary Court held in effect that Bi Hawa Mohamed was not entitled to any share in the matrimonial assets, as to use the words of one of the assessors, "She was D only a mere wife, and the house was bought by the husband with his own money". The Primary Court went on to accept the offer made by Ally Seifu to pay a sum of shs 2,000/- as a parting gift to her in accordance with his religious tenets. On appeal, the High Court, Kimicha, J. substantially agreed with the views of the trial Primary Court but increased the amount of the parting gift to shs 3,000/=. Bi Hawa Mohamed was further E aggrieved by the decision of the High Court and she obtained legal aid from the Tanganyika Law Society, hence this appeal to this Court. Mr. R.C. Kesaria, learned Advocate, appeared on legal aid for the appellant. The Respondent appeared in person. The High Court certified that a point of law was involved. It can be broadly state as F follows:

Did the High Court and Primary Court err in law in holding the view that domestic services of a housewife do not amount to contributions made by her in the acquisition of matrimonial G assets.

From the proceedings in the High Court and Primary Court the following facts were established on the evidence. The appellant and respondent were married according to H Islamic rites in Mombasa, Kenya, sometime in 1971. The respondent had a house in Mombasa and they used it as the matrimonial home. Furthermore, the respondent was a Seaman and his work involved travelling abroad for many months. While so travelling, he would provide adequate maintenance for the appellant, who remained at Mombasa, to I look after the matrimonial home. On one occasion, he gave her an additional sum of shs. 18,000/= to set up business activities. She however failed to A establish any business and the money cannot be accounted for. In 1974, the respondent purchased a house in Dar es Salaam with his own money. This house is House No. 40 along Swahili/Mhoro Streets and is the subject of this case. In 1975 the spouses moved B from Mombasa to this house in Dar es Salaam and they were using this house as the matrimonial home at the time of their divorce.

The power of the Court to divide matrimonial assets is derived from section 114(1) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 which states: C 114(1) The court shall have power, when granting or subsequent to the grant of a decree of separation or divorce, to order the division between the parties of any assets acquired by them during the marriage by their joint efforts or to order the sale of any such asset and the division D between the parties of the proceeds of sale.

It is apparent from the citation and the wording of section 114 that the assets envisaged thereat must firstly be matrimonial assets, and secondly, they must have been acquired E by them during the marriage by their joint efforts.

This first important point of law for consideration in this case is what constitutes matrimonial assets for purposes of section 114. In our considered view, the term "matrimonial assets" means the same thing as what is otherwise described as 'family F assets'. Under paragraph 1064 of Lord Hailsham's Halsbury's Laws of England 4th Edition, p. 491, it is stated:

The phrase "family assets" has been described as a convenient way of expressing an G important concept; it refers to those things which are acquired by one or other or both of the parties, with the intention that there should be continuing provision for them and their children during their joint lives, and used for the benefit of the family as a whole. The family assets can be divided into two parts (1) those which are of a capital nature, such as the matrimonial H home and the furniture in it (2) those which are of a revenue producing nature such as the earning power of husband and wife.

The next important point of law for consideration and decision in this case is whether the I assets in question - that is House No. 40 situated along Swahili/Mhoro Streets in Dar es Salaam was a matrimonial or family asset A at the time of dissolution of the marriage of the parties. The answer here is easy. On the facts established in the two courts below, that house was used by the parties as their matrimonial home after they moved from Mombasa to Dar es Salaam. It was therefore a matrimonial or family asset. B

The next point of law for consideration and decision is whether this matrimonial or family asset is subject to division between the parties under the provisions of section 114 (1). It is apparent that the Court's power to divide matrimonial or family assets under section 114(1) is invoked only when the following conditions exist: C

(i) When the Court has granted or is granting a decree of divorce or separation; and

(ii) When there are matrimonial or family assets which were acquired by the parties during the marriage; and D

(iii) When the acquisition of such assets was brought about by the joint efforts of the parties.

There is no controversy regarding the existence of conditions (i) and (ii). The real dispute centres on condition (iii) - that is, on whether the matrimonial home was acquired E by the joint efforts of the appellant and respondent.

It is the appellant wife's contention that her efforts in performing her domestic duties had the effect of placing the respondent husband in a financial position to buy the house in F question. As already mentioned, the two courts below rejected this contention on the ground that performance of domestic duties by a housewife does not count in the acquisition of matrimonial or family assets. The fundamental question now is whether this view of the two courts below is erroneous. G

We are aware that there are two schools of thought which currently contend in the High Court on this issue. In the case of Zawadi Abdallah v Ibrahim Iddi, [1981] TLR 311 Mapigano, J. referred to these two schools of thought by stating: H

There are those who maintain that under section 114 the term joint effort is limited to direct contribution by a spouse by way of money, property and work, to the acquisition of the asset in question and that housekeeping and raising the children count for nothing. I

On the other hand, there are those who take the view that household work must be regarded A as part of the joint effort or contribution towards the acquisition of any asset by the husband and that the wife's citing of the husband's marriage vow and the fact that she has been running the home operate to entitle her to a slice in her husband's estate. You may, if you B prefer, describe the two constructions as narrow and broad, respectively. The question which I am called upon to answer in this case is which one of those views is correct. This is an important matter and I confess I have not found it all easy. To my knowledge not much has C been said about it in this country and there is a paucity of judicial pronouncement on the matter. Such few decisions as there are either way and happily I am not bound by any.

Those who champion the broad view see no valid distinction, in principle, between the wife D who takes up employment or carries on business or profession and the one who remains at home and devotes her time running the home. They would construe the terms contribution and joint efforts liberally to include domestic services rendered by the full time "domestic" wife. E

They would advance several reasons to back up their viewpoint. Among the reasons:

(1) That it is the philosophy and spirit of our time and that it is quite in harmony with F realities and changed social and economic circumstances, (2) that the domestic work may be more valuable to family than of a wife who is self-earning; (3) that the husband can hardly conduct his business if his wife does not cook the dinner and mind the children; (4) that in certain instances the wife may have sacrificed her own career on the G altar of matrimonial life and if say after twenty or thirty years of marriage her husband for old man's reasons or no reason whatsoever (as probably was the position in the case before me), sees fit to banish her, the decree of divorce may have the further undesirable and sad effect of practically thrusting her into destitution; and (5) that in yet certain H instances the estate of the husband may have been built up by the industry of the husband and the thrift and prudence of the wife in running the home and that, therefore, it is in conformity with one's sense of justice and fairness that she should share as of right in the fruits of his success. They would find encouragement and comfort in the words of I Scarman,

L.J. which appear in the Medico-Legal Journal, 1966 Vol. 34 at p.19 that: A

It is recognised that a married woman who brought up a family and maintained a home was thereby actually supporting her husband in his bread-winning activities by releasing him from B family duty. Quite plainly if the marriage broke down she must have a claim upon the family funds by reason of that vital contribution to the family life. It was here that law of England (as it then was) went wrong. C

These are, I think, strong and weighty reasons and no doubt that the strict operation of the doctrine of separate property can occasion a great deal of distress to a divorced woman. But we should bear in mind that the whole question is a legal one.

Judge Makame for one has taken stand on the side of the liberal school. Sitting in this D court at this place he felt himself prepared and able to say that the domestic services that a wife renders count. That was in the case of Rukia Diwani Kinzi v Abdalah Issa Kihenya - Matrimonial Cause No. 6 of 1971. His reading of section 114 does not square with that of the magistrate who heard this case. The learned judge thought that E the section has sufficient width to embrace the broad view. Stated the learned judge:

There is a school of thought which says that domestic services a housewife renders do not F count when it comes to acquisition, and therefore the subsequent possible division, of matrimonial assets...

I find this view too narrow and conservative and I must confess my inability to subscribe to it. G Section 114 of the Law of Marriage Act does not really support the school of thought referred to and is, in my view, capable of accommodating a more liberal interpretation.

A little further on Mapigano, J. continued. H

Even in a country like Britain, where salaried married women are quite common, the modern progressive view, with which I wish to associate myself, is that looking after the home and bringing up the children is a valuable contribution. See for I example the recent case of Bateman v Bateman, The law Report 1979 FAM 25. A

But be it noted that in this respect our statutory law compares unfavourably with the English Law. The perimeters or ambits of the English Law are simply and expressly more extensive. B The English case to which the learned judge made reference was an application by the wife for financial provision and adjustment of property in her favour, upon the dissolution of the marriage between her and the respondent. The decision of the court was manifestly predicated upon the provisions of the English Matrimonial Causes Act, 1973, which makes C explicitly provisions to the effect that in adjusting property rights under that Act, the contribution made by each of the parties to the welfare of the family is a relevant consideration to be taken into account. So in my respectful opinion the decision in that case can hardly be helpful or persuasive. D

Mapigano, J. continues:

As shown, in this case the learned magistrate expressed and followed the narrow E interpretation. He argued that since traditionally looking after the household and caring for the children is the occupation and responsibility of wife, just as the feeding and clothing the family is the occupation and responsibility of the husband, then that should not be considered as a F contribution or joint effort. Was he wrong? At the risk of being deemed a conservative, though I would like to believe that I am not, I must say that on the view that I take of the law I feel compelled to pronounce that the decision of the learned magistrate is, in the final analysis, sound. I share his opinion that under section 114 the housework of a wife and G looking after the children are not to be equated with the husband's work for the purpose of evaluating contributions to marital property. I hold as he did that such domestic services are not to be taken into consideration when the court is exercising its powers under the section. I will give my reasons. H

First, I think that the broad view is inextricably linked with other matters. It does bring to the fore other issues which are arguably troublesome in regard to which the statute does not appear to make any clear provisions. Two such issues come to my mind. One, there would be in I many cases the question whether the matter is to be decided with reference to the matrimonial differences which may in fact have made it necessary to consider the matter in A the light of the principle that no one should be allowed to benefit from his own wrong. To put it interrogatively, will a wife be allowed to benefit from a marriage which she has wrecked? Two there would be the relationship between the order under section 144 and the order which th e B court may make with regard to maintenance under section 115.

NYALALI CJ

Secondly, and I regard this to be a stronger point, the question can be asked: Is there really anything in law to give any strong colour to the suggestion that is put forward by the liberal C school? Certainly it was not part of our own law before the enactment of the Law of Marriage Act. See for example Iddi Kungunya v Ali Mpate [1967] HCD 49. And to be sure, there is no provision in the Law of Marriage Act which says so in terms. That throws up a question of D judicial policy. It is this, that where there are no clear rules of law governing matters of such general social importance, matters which directly affect the interests of almost every matrimonial couple and which raise issues that might be the subject of public controversy and on which laymen are as well able to decide as lawyers, can the courts properly proceed on E their view of public policy? (There is the warning uttered by a judge over a century and half ago that public policy is a most unruly horse, you can never know where it will carry you.) Would it not be to encroach on the province of the Legislature? Patel, J. thought so. He observed briskly F in the case of Hamidi Amir Hamid (supra) that if the Legislature had intended that domestic services performed by a wife be regarded a contribution and joint effort it would have said so in language clear and plain. But the liberal school might put forth the line that the law should G be innovative and responsive to societal aspirations. I would embrace that principle. I do understand that judges must develop the law and indeed it is now generally accepted that sometimes they must, and do, legislate. The myth that common law judges merely enunciate H or discover the existing law should now stand discredited. Blackstone was, I think, one of the leading proponents of that theory. However, as the great American judge Holmes once said, and many subscribe to that view point, the judges should do so only interstitially, and with molecular rather than molar motions. In 1969 (in his paper which he read at the University I college Dar es Salaam) Sir

1983 TLR p40

NYALALI CJ

Charles Newbold, then the President of the Court of Appeal for East Africa, put the point in this A way.

"The power of the judges to make law is a power which can be exercised within very circumscribed limits. The power is exercised in two fields. The first is where rights and B duties of a member of the community are determined by legislation; and in that field the circumscribing limits are the doctrines of equity and the indefinable but real customs and needs of the community. Within the field in which rights and duties are specified by legislation a judge's duty is to apply and enforce the legislation and, save C as regards subordinate legislation, he cannot challenge the validity or effectiveness of the legislation".

Further, I think perhaps I should read a short passage from the decision of Parke J in Egerton v Brownlow (1853) 4 HL Cas 196, a passage which has been frequently quoted with approval D by many judges including Sir Charles Newbold:

"It is the province of the statesman, and not the Lawyer, to discuss, and of the Legislature to determine, what is best for the public good and to provide by proper enactments. It is the province of the judge to expound the law only; the written from the E decisions of our predecessors and of our existing courts, from textwriters of acknowledged authority, and upon the principles to be clearly deduced from them by sound reason and just inference; not to speculate upon what is best, in his opinion, for the advantage of the community". F

In my considered opinion, I think that if at all there is any grey area in respect of the matter, the appropriate solution to the problem lies in the intervention of the Legislature and not in judicial Legislation. But is there a grey area? That leads me to my next point and this is where I would put the emphasis.

I apprehend that to follow the broad view would be to give recognition to the concept of G community of property between the husband and the wife -communio bonorum - and perhaps with its logical corollary community of loss and debts. And, specifically, it would run directly counter to section 58 and 60 (1) of the Law of Marriage Act and empty those two provisions of H all meaning and effect. Those sections are some of the striking features of the statute and seem to reflect the notion of separate property.

They say that subject to the provision of section 59 (which relate to matrimonial homes) and to I any agreement the parties may make, any property acquired in the name of the husband or of the wife, presumptively A belongs exclusively to that person. There are material which strongly point to a definite legislative intention that domestic services should not count when the court is dealing with the matter of division of assets under section 114. In this regard attention should be called to the B fact that the Act is based on the work of the Kenya Commission on the Law of Marriage and Divorce which was headed by Spry J.A. and which is comprised in the Commission's report of August, 1968. The Act borrows heavily from the draft bill prepared by the said commission - C Appendix VII to the report. For instance our sections 58, 60 and 114 are, respectively, exactly the same as sections 66, 68 and 123 of the draft bill. Now the view and recommendations of the Spry Commission on the subject now at hand are contained in paragraphs 177-184. It is D patently clear that the Commission rejected the broad view and section 123 of the draft bill must, therefore, be taken to embody or reflect that standpoint. Our Government White Paper No. 1 of 1969 - which preceded the enactment contains nothing which suggests a difference between the ideas of the Spry Commission and those of the authors of the White Paper. The E White Paper has only a few words about the subject. It is the last sentence of paragraph 19 and it merely says that:

"The proposed law should provide expressly that either spouse may own his or her F own separate property which he or she owned before, or acquired after, marriage". I am well aware that the Spry Report cannot be treated as authority in any technical sense. But I find it valuable because it provides the background to our Law and helps to discover the intention of the Legislature. I think I can treat the background as strongly G indicating that our Legislature adopted the ideas and philosophy contained in that report. It should, therefore, be inferred that the purpose for which section 114 was enacted by our Legislature was not all that broad as canvassed by the liberal school. It seems, from a historical perspective, that the section was not designed to help a H married woman who has no property or has failed to acquire any during marriage because of household duties. In other words, it was not written into section 114 that a wife's marital status and duties should per se make her a partner in the husband's I economic enterprises or gains. That in my opinion, is the true construction of the section.

1983 TLR p42

NYALALI CJ

I am not of course saying that is good law. I am not for instance gainsaying the fact that one of A the ills of the breakdown of marriage is the economic hardship that a woman may have to suffer, where, as is common in Tanzania, the woman has not acquired any property, and I think, therefore, that there is much to commend the liberal viewpoint to serious reflection, and B consideration. What I am saying is that the broad view does not comport with the history of the legislation and that the other provisions of the Act would make little sense if that view is adopted. I am saying that if the law is unsatisfactory the proper solution to the problem should C be legislative rather than judicial.

We have, with respect, quoted Mapigano, J. at length because he appears to deal adequately with the arguments in favour of the opposite views of the High Court and D because we are satisfied that the narrow view is wrong and the broad view is correct. We hereafter demonstrate what we mean.

Although it is correct to say that under English Law, the joint efforts or contributions of E spouses is considered directly in relation to the welfare of the family rather than directly in relation to the acquisition of matrimonial or family assets, we do not see any difference between the effect of English Law and our Law on this issue since the welfare of the family is an essential component of the economic activities of a family man or women. So, it is proper to consider contribution by a spouse to the welfare of the family as F contribution to the acquisition of matrimonial or family assets.

With regard to the fear that the broad view might result in a wife being "allowed to benefit from a marriage which she has wrecked" we think, with respect, that it is misguided because what is in issue is the wife's contribution or efforts towards the G acquisition of matrimonial or family assets, and not her contribution towards the breakdown of the marriage. Of course there may be cases where a wife's misbehaviour may amount to failure to contribute towards the welfare of the family and thus failure to H contribute towards the acquisition of matrimonial or family assets; but this has to be decided in accordance with the facts of each individual case.

As to the alleged difficulties of making orders under section 114 along with orders under section 115 of the Law of Marriage Act, we do not think that the provision of these two I sections are contradictory or irreconcilable. It is apparent that the two sections deal with different matters. Section 114 deals with the apportionment of family assets and liabilities in general, whereas section 115 concerns assignment of a A specific liability - that is, the liability to maintain a wife or former wife. Moreover where a former husband is ordered to maintain his former wife after divorce or separation, such an order amounts to a revenue producing asset vested in the wife within the scope of the B second category of family assets as defined under paragraph 1064 of Halsbury's Laws of England cited earlier on, and has to be taken into account in the division of available matrimonial or family assets.

1983 TLR p43

NYALALI CJ

The point made is that the broad approach to the issue presupposed the existence of C common ownership of matrimonial or family assets.

Contrary to the concept of separate ownership recognized under sections 58 and 60 is not correct since the issue of division of matrimonial or family assets arises only when the Court is granting or has granted a decree of separation or divorce but not otherwise. D

As to the point to the effect that the broad view of the law on the issue is not supported by authority existing before the enactment of the Law of Marriage Act, we do not think that it is logical or sensible to take the absence of earlier authority as precluding progress in the law of the Land. E

The argument that the broad view of the law amounts in effect to judicial legislation, is not supportable since the court is not making or introducing a new rule in a blank or grey area of social relations but is interpreting existing statutory provisions - that is - the words "their joint efforts" and "the contributions made by each party in money, property F or work towards the acquiring of the assets" used under section 114.

Undoubtedly, these provisions are not free from ambiguity. In such a situation the court has to be guided by the established rules of construction of statutes. Mapigano, J. used G the report of the Kenya Commission on the Law of Marriage and Divorce which, it is said, was the basis of our Law of Marriage Act, 1971. We think such a report should be used only as a last resort upon failure to make sense of these statutory provisions on application of the normal rules of construction. H

One such normal rule of construction of ambiguous provisions is the MISCHIEF RULE. Under this rule, the court, in looking for the true meaning of ambiguous statutory provisions, is guided by the defect or mischief which the statute was enacted to rectify or cure. On examination of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971, and the law as it existed before I its enactment, one cannot fail to notice that the mischief which the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 sought to cure or rectify was what A may be described as the traditional exploitation and oppression of married women by their husbands.

1983 TLR p44

NYALALI CJ

It is apparent that the Act seeks to liberate married women from such exploitation and oppression by reducing the traditional inequality between them and their husbands in so B far as their respective domestic rights and duties are concerned. Although certain features of traditional inequality still exist under the Act, such as polygamous marriages, these do not detract from the over-all purpose of the Act as an instrument of liberation and equality between the sexes. C

Guided by this objective of the Act, we are satisfied that the "joint efforts" and "work towards the acquiring of the assets" have to be construed as embracing the domestic "efforts" or "work" of husband and wife.

The other point of law for consideration and decision in this case is whether the appellant D (former wife) is entitled to any share in the house in question. On the facts established by the two courts below, it is apparent that the appellant's domestic "efforts" or "work" consisted mainly in looking after the matrimonial home. She neither cooked for nor E washed clothes for her husband nor did she make his bed except on the few occasions when he was not travelling in ships abroad. Moreover the couple had no children for her to take care of. As the respondent (former husband) was frequently away from home while working as a Seamen, it is obvious that the main beneficiary of such "effort" or F "work" was not the respondent but the appellant herself who lived in the house. Of course this does not mean that her domestic "efforts" or "work" was worthless. It is common knowledge that lack of care of the house results in deterioration of such house.

The principles which guide a court in determining the shares of husband and wife in G matrimonial or family assets are spelled out under sub-section 2 of section 114 which states.

(2) In exercising the power conferred by subsection (1), the court shall have regard:

(a) to the custom of the community to which the parties belong, H

(b) to the extent of the contributions made by each party in money, property or work towards the acquiring of the assets. I

1983 TLR p45

NYALALI CJ

(c) to the needs of the infant children, if any, of the marriage, and A subject to those considerations, shall incline towards equality of division.

On the established facts of this case, it would seem that the principles stated in (a) and (b) are the only ones relevant case. The parties are Moslems, and it was established that B as a Moslem (or at any rate according to their own sect of Islam) the respondent is expected to give a parting gift to his former wife according to his abilities. We are satisfied that such religious practice, which was undisputed, can properly be construed C as a "custom of the community to which the parties belong". The High Court found that the appellant was entitled to shs. 3,000/= under this head. The record shows that she received the money in court. We find no reason to interfere with this payment.

With regard to the principle stated under paragraph (b) of sub-section 2 of section 114, D it is evident that the extent of the appellant's contribution is indicated by her "efforts" or "work" in looking after matrimonial home as against the respondent's performance of his own part of domestic obligations towards the appellant. On the established facts the respondent adequately provided for the maintenance and accommodation of the E appellant. As a matter of fact, no complaint is made against him in respect of performance of domestic duties towards his former wife. The question arises whether this diligent performance of his own domestic duties can be taken as disentitling the appellant from claiming a share in matrimonial or family assets. We do not think so. The F correct approach is that husband and wife, in performing their domestic duties are to be treated as working not only for their current needs but also for their future needs. In the present case, the appellant, in looking after the matrimonial home, must be regarded G as working not only for her current needs but also for her future needs and such future has to be provided from the matrimonial or family assets jointly acquired during the marriage in keeping with the extent of her contribution.

On the facts of this case, the appellant was paid a sum of Shs. 18,000/= apparently H when the spouses were still resident in Mombasa. The money was to be used by her to set up some family business. She did not use the money for the purpose it was intended. She apparently squandered it away. What is the significance of these facts?

There are two ways of looking at this situation. Firstly the money can be regarded as an I advance made by the respondent towards the future needs of the appellant. Taking into account the nature of the A appellant's contribution, the advance of shs. 18,000/= at the time was in our considered view sufficient provision for the future needs of the appellant and she is not entitled to claim a further share in the matrimonial or family assets. Secondly, the squandering of B that money by the appellant when weighed against her contribution, can be regarded as a matrimonial misconduct which reduced to nothing her contribution towards the welfare of the family and the consequential acquisition of matrimonial or family assets. As was said in the English case of Martin v Martin [1976] 3 All ER. 629 by CAIRNS, L.J: C

> ...Such conduct must be taken into account because a spouse cannot be allowed to fritter away assets by extravagant living or reckless speculation and then to claim as great a share D of what is left as he would have been entitled to if he had behaved reasonably.

We are satisfied that on this basis also, the appellant is not entitled to claim any share in E the available matrimonial or family assets. So this leaves only the sum of shs. 3,000/= already paid and received in accordance with the religious custom of the parties. In the final analysis therefore, this appeal fails and we hereby dismiss it. Bearing in mind that this is a legal aid case, we see no reason to order the appellant to pay costs. Each party therefore is to bear his or her own costs and we order accordingly. F

Appeal dismissed.

A

[zRPz]IN THE MATTER OF AN INTENDED APPEAL BETWEEN SEKULU CONSTRUCTION CO LTD AND M.B.S. FUBILE AND ANOTHER 1983 TLR 47 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mwakasendo JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

9 November 1983 B
CIVIL APPLICATION 2 OF 1983
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Revision - Notice of Motion to revise or nullify an order of stay of execution - Whether Court of Appeal has jurisdiction - s.3 (1) and 3(2) Appellate C Jurisdiction Act 1979, s.38 Civil Procedure Code Act No. 49 of 1966 rr.2 and 36 Court of Appeal Rules, O.XLII, R.1 Civil Procedure Code.
Civil Practice and Procedure - Powers of the Court of Appeal - Appellate Jurisdiction Act - Whether Court of Appeal has powers of High Court D
Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal to Court of Appeal - Definition of - R.2 Court of Appeal Rules.
-Headnote
By a Notice of Motion, the applicant moved the Court of Appeal to revise or nullify an E order of Stay of Execution made by the High Court following a judgment in which the applicant was the successful plaintiff. A preliminary objection was raised that the application was incompetent since there was no appeal before the Court.
Held: (i) In the absence of an appeal or an intended appeal, the Court of Appeal does F not have jurisdiction to revise an order of the High Court;
(ii) the function of the Court of Appeal is to hear appeals;
(iii) an appeal to the Court of Appeal includes an intended appeal; G
(iv) the Court of Appeal has certain powers of the High Court but these are in the context of the need to determine an appeal only.
Per Curiam: The High Court can be moved to review its own decision only if new and important matter or evidence comes to light in certain circumstances. H
Case Information
Application struck out.
No case referred to. I
1983 TLR p48
MAKAME JA
R.C. Kesaria and Mchora for the applicant. A
T.J.R. Tarimo for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Makame, J.A.: delivered the following ruling of the court: The applicant, SEKULU CONSTRUCTION CO. LTD., has brought a Notice of Motion to move this court to B revise or nullify an order of Stay of Execution made by the learned Judge Kiongozi, following a judgment by Mtenga, J. in which the applicant was the successful plaintiff. The proceedings before the learned Judge Kiongozi related to some money obtained on a garnishee order. In this application the applicant is represented by Mr. Kesaria and C Mr. Mchora, learned Advocates. The respondents' counsel is Mr. Tarimo.

In his Counter-Affidavit Mr. Tarimo took a preliminary point which he pursued in argument before us. He objected to the application being heard, on the ground that this D court has no powers to revise the learned Judge Kiongozi's decision in the absence of an appeal properly lodged in accordance with the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rule, 1979. It is Mr. Tarimo's contention that the powers of this court are derived from section 3 (1) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979, which provides: E

> The Court of Appeal shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from the High court and from subordinate courts with extended jurisdiction.

He also referred us to Rule 36 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules according to F which:

> The Court may, in dealing with any appeal so far as its jurisdiction permits, confirm, reverse, or vary the decision of the High Court, or remit the proceedings to the High Court with such G directions as may be appropriate, or to order a new trial, and to make any necessary incidental or consequential orders, including orders as to costs.

The thrust of Mr. Tarimo's argument is that neither of those provisions, nor Section 95 of H the Civil Procedure Code 1966, which furnishes the High Court with certain inherent powers, confers upon this court power to entertain the proposed application in the absence of an appeal. He says that as this Court is a creature of a statute, it can do no I more than what the creating statute empowers it to do.

He therefore urged this court to hold that the application is incompetent and should A accordingly be struck out.

Mr. Kesaria vigorously countered Mr. Tarimo's arguments. He submitted that we have powers to hear the application. He drew our attention to section 3 (2) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979, which says: B

> For all purposes incidental to the hearing and determination of any appeal in the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred upon it by this Act, the Court of Appeal shall, in addition to any other power, authority and jurisdiction conferred by this Act, have the power, authority and jurisdiction C vested in the court from which the appeal is brought.

Mr. Kesaria argued from this that because under section 38 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966, the court executing the decree, in this case the High Court, has powers to D determine "all questions arising between the parties to the suit... and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree", the learned Judge Kiongozi had powers to deal with the matter and so this court has powers to entertain the application by virtue of section 3 (2) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act. He further says that the E learned Judge Kiongozi could review his own decision under Order XLII Rule 1, so this court can do the same.

Mr. Kesaria also sought to answer Mr. Tarimo's contention that there is no appeal before us: He submitted that there is, because under Rule 2 of the Court of Appeal Rules F "Appeal" includes "an intended appeal" and there is, in the present matter, an intention to appeal, Notice of Intention having been given. The way we have understood the learned arguments, Mr. Kesaria appears to concede that there has to be an appeal, actual or intended. G

Assuming for the sake of argument that Mr. Kesaria is right that the application is properly before us because appeal includes "an intended appeal", the question we ask ourselves is, what manifestation of that intention to appeal is there in the present matter? On the day the learned Judge Kiongozi delivered his Ruling, Mr. Kesaria indicated that H he intended to appeal. He was told by the court to go right ahead and file the necessary papers. Going by the record, he has done nothing of the sort, to date. We suppose one may go further and argue that when Mr. Kesaria verbally indicated his wish to appeal, on 22/8/83, it was the respondent SEKULU, who was asked to pay into I court the alleged decretal amount. In view of certain allegations made subsequently by Mr. Tarimo, the court ordered, A apparently on 8/9/83, that another entity, AMAZON TRADING CO, should deposit the money, and there was no indication of any desire to appeal at that stage and the matter rested there. We have not been told, either, that leave to appeal was sought and obtained under section 4 (1) C of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, in connection with the B learned Judge Kiongozi's ruling.

1983 TLR p50

We respectfully agree with Mr. Kesaria that under section 3 (2) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act this court has certain powers of the High Court but we are also firmly of the view that the situation envisaged therein necessarily presupposes the need to C determine an appeal. There is no such need in the present matter, because there is no such appeal, actual or intended, before us. Article 68 (A) (3) of the Constitution also spells out the function of the court of Appeal to her appeals.

Under Order XLII Rule, I the learned Judged Kiongozi could only be moved to review D his own decision if "new and important matter or evidence" comes to light in certain circumstances. Nothing of the sort is advanced here. We are also of the view that to seek to involve this court by virtue of Section 38 of the Civil Procedure Code would be E wrong because, in our opinion, Section 38 is completely irrelevant for the purpose of the issue before us.

For the foregoing reasons we sustain the objection by Mr. Tarimo. We are satisfied that there is no appeal before us. The application is therefore incompetent and is accordingly F struck out with costs.

Application struck out.

1983 TLR p50

G

[zRPz]JUMA IBRAHIM MTALE v K.G. KARMALI 1983 TLR 50 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

2 November 1983

CIVIL APPEAL 11 OF 1983

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal, Record of - Not containing a copy of the decree - Whether appeal competent - R. 89 (2) Court of Appeal Rules.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal - Record not containing decree - Notice of Motion seeking extension of time to file a supplementary record - Whether notice an answer to objection regarding competency of appeal.

1983 TLR p51

NYALALI CJ

-Headnote

On the day of hearing of the appeal, the respondent raised a preliminary objection that the appeal was incompetent since the record of appeal did not contain a decree as required under r.89 (2) of the Court of Appeal Rules. An adjournment was granted to enable counsel for the appellant to prepare to answer the objection. On the day when hearing was to continue, counsel for the appellant filed a Notice of Motion seeking extension of time to file a supplementary record of appeal.

Held: (i) In the absence of a copy of the decree, the appeal was incompetent;

(ii) a Notice of Motion seeking an extension of time to file a supplementary record of appeal was not the proper way to answer an objection regarding the competency of the appeal.

Case Information

Order accordingly.

Case referred to:

1. Commissioner of Transport v A.G. of Uganda and Another [1959] E.A. 329
2. Haining and others [1971] E.A. 421

S.El - Maamry for the appellant

M.A. Lakha for the respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

Nyalali, C.J. read the following order of the court: When this appeal came on for hearing on 2/11/1983 Mr. Lakha, learned Advocate for the Respondent raised an objection to the effect that the appeal was incompetent as the record of appeal did not contain a decree as required under Rule 89 (2) of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979. As no notice of this preliminary objection had been given as required under Rule 100, we granted an adjournment to enable Mr. El. Maamry, Learned Advocate for the appellant to prepare himself to answer the objection.

When the adjourned hearing came on for continuation today, Mr. El-Maamry had filed a Notice of Motion seeking extension of time to file a supplementary record of appeal. He however conceded that the Notice of Motion is not an answer to the objection raised by Mr. Lakha regarding the competency of the appeal now before this Court. Furthermore, he concedes that unless this Court holds that the absence of the decree in the record of appeal is immaterial, the Court is bound to strike out the appeal leaving the appellant with the option to make A subsequent appropriate applications seeking to bring back to this court a proper appeal in the case.

1983 TLR p52

Mr. Lakha in final submission asks this court to strike out the appeal and dismiss the Notice of Motion.
Having considered the submissions made on both sides, and the authorities cited, B including the case of Commissioner of Transport v A.G. of Uganda & Another [1959] E.A. 329 and Haining & others [1971 E.A. 421, we are satisfied that this appeal is incompetent and is hereby struck out and we further direct that the Notice of Motion now before us be dismissed with costs.
C Order accordingly.
1983 TLR p52
D
[zRPz]OMARI AHMED v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 52 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mwakasendo JJA, Makame JJA, Kisanga JJA

October 20, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 33 OF 1983 E
Flynote
Evidence - Experts - Evidence of expert photographer with occasional experience in examining engines and chassis of suspected numbers - Unsafe to base conviction on uncorroborated testimony of such expert. F
Evidence - Credibility - Trial court's finding as to credibility of witness usually binding on appeal court.
Evidence - Experts - Requirements.
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted of theft of a motor vehicle contrary to section 265 of the G Penal Code. On appeal, the conviction was challenged on the ground that the testimony of the expert who examined the engine and chassis of suspected numbers could not be relied on in this case since the basis of his expertise had not been established. Secondly, H it was argued that the first appellate court had improperly interfered with the trial court's finding as to credibility of witnesses. The court of appeal considered both points.
Held: (i) There must be some evidence connecting an accused with a theft other than the I testimony of an expert who is uncertain;
(ii) the trial court's finding as to credibility of witnesses is usually
1983 TLR p53
MWAKASENDO JA
binding on an appeal court unless there are circumstances on an appeal court on the A record which call for a reassessment of their credibility.

Case Information
Order accordingly.
No case referred to.
M.A. Lakha for the appellant.
E. Uronu for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mwakasendo, J.A. read the following considered judgment of the court: The appellant, Omari Ahmed, was charged together with another person, one Andrew John, on a count of stealing motor vehicle contrary to section 265 of the Penal Code, or in the alternative, with receiving a stolen motor vehicle contrary to section 311 (1) of the Penal Code.
The present case is simple enough. The salient facts may be briefly stated as follows, Hemed Sefu, P.W.1., told the trial District Court that he was a driver of a motor vehicle, Peugeot 504, registration number TZ 45799 which he usually parked at night at a parking lot along Kigoma Street, in Dar es Salaam. He paid Shs 5/- to a nightwatchman to watch over the vehicle during the night. This arrangement was known and apparently approved by Sefu's employer, the owner of the vehicle, one Hemed Abdalla, P.W.3. On the night of 18th July, 1981 the motor vehicle registration number TZ 45799 was stolen. Hemed Abdalla reported the matter to the police. On 30th October, 1981, Hemed Abdalla saw a motor vehicle being driven along a road within the city of Dar es Salaam which he suspected to be his stolen motor vehicle. This vehicle was a Peugeot 504, registration number MZF 104, dark blue in colour. He reported his suspicions to the police who then had the suspected vehicle traced and impounded for further investigations. On closer inspection of the motor vehicle, registration number MZF 104, Hemed Abdalla was convinced that this vehicle was one and the same vehicle as his stolen motor vehicle, registration number TZ 45799. His reasons for this view were his discoveries that the back seat of MZF 104 was similar to the back seat of TZ 45799; that the petrol tank cover of MZF 104 had no spring, which was also true of the petrol tank cover of his stolen motor vehicle; that the end of the exhaust pipe on MZF 104 was welded, which was also the case with the end of the exhaust pipe on his stolen motor vehicle. Hemed Abdalla's suspicions and presumably, those of the Police, were confirmed by a further discovery that the chassis number of MZF 104 appeared to have been rubbed off and superimposed with a new number. Following this discovery the Police investigating officers called in inspector Stanley Elisente, P.W.5, to help in establishing the true chassis number of MZF 104. Stanley in this evidence before the District trial Court told the Court how he went about his task of establishing the true chassis number of MZF 104. He said:

I am working with I.B. Head Office. I have been a police officer for the last 20 years. 15 years with I.B. My work is to check engines and chassis and all other suspected numbers. On 23/3/82 I was called by Police Msimbazi. I went there to investigate chassis and engine numbers of motor vehicle MZF 104 which are in dispute. I was shown it by W.P. Kamade. I made my observations. I took photostat "A". I opened the bonnet where chassis numbers are marked. I took a photograph marked "B". I took a photograph showing original numbers. When I removed dust there were numbers 1082235 which were discovered to be marked which were for MZF 104. I started to investigate by applying powder. I discovered numbers E 23...90. There was a gap which indicated that some other numbers might be in between. Therefore 1082235 were false numbers and numbers 23...90 were the correct number of the vehicle. From the registration card chassis number 2346990, I believe the numbers to be of F the vehicle Peugeot 504, TZ 45799. I have formed the opinion that they were for motor vehicle Peugeot 504, chassis number is 2346990... I hereby tender my report as exhibit I made regarding the disputed number...

In answer to questions put to him by the advocate for Omari Ahmed, Stanley is G recorded as saying.

I have been engaged in photography for 15 years. I painted them myself. I have done it all H alone. My work is to take photographs. I have attended a course and I have no certificate for this case. I have prepared only one copy ...I took a photograph on the left side alone. I did not take a photograph for the numbers on the engine. The numbers are only seen in one point alone. It is written 1082235. I

1983 TLR p55

MWAKASENDO JA

Before we leave this witness, we wish to refer to one more significant passage of his A evidence in cross-examination. It reads:

I was informed what the numbers were missing I could not read the middle numbers. Although I used acid some numbers are not visible. The acid is to show the numbers (to clean B it). I do not know what method was used to rub out the original number. The correct number 23469990 from the registration. This is what I think. It may be another number not 2346990... I am working for the police. I have checked the number and registration card that is why I have discovered. C

There are many other witnesses for the prosecution but we do not think for the purpose of this appeal we need to refer to the evidence of any other witness for the prosecution, except prosecution witness number 10 of whom we say more later. Now then, at the D end of the case for the prosecution the trial District Court found, correctly in our view, that no case had been made out against Andrew John. He was accordingly acquitted.

In his defence Omari Ahmed denied the charge and called two witnesses in support of his case; after which the learned trial Magistrate carefully analyses the evidence E presented before him and reached the considered view that the prosecution had failed to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt and, therefore, acquitted Omari Ahmed of the offence charged. The Republic being aggrieved by this finding appealed to the High Court which after a reappraisal of the evidence on record set aside the acquittal of F Omari Ahmed and substituted therefore a conviction for stealing and a sentence of two years' imprisonment.

Before this court the appellant and the Republic were represented by Messrs Lakha, G learned advocate, and Uronu, learned State Attorney, respectively.

Mr. Lakha has attacked the finding of the first appellate Judge on many grounds, some minor and others substantial. We will consider here only those grounds which relate to the evidence of P.W.5 and P.W. 10, two witnesses on whom the learned High Court H judge appears to have heavily relied in dealing with the first appeal. The learned first appellate judge's approach to the task before him, that is, the re-appraisal of the evidence on record, appears to have been determined by a pre-judgment that the learned trial magistrate dealt with the case in an unfair and uneven-handed manner. He I makes this point in these words:

1983 TLR p56

MWAKASENDO JA

I must point outright that the learned trial Magistrate did not form a balanced view of the A evidence in support of the charge and indeed he misdirected himself by disregarding the evidence for the prosecution.

We will now examine his re-appraisal of the evidence to see if his opinion of the trial B magistrate's finding in the case is borne out by the evidence on record. We begin by considering the evidence of Abdalla Nasoro, P.W. 10. The learned first appellate judge's analysis of this witness's evidence is quite short and reads as follows: C

More and above, there is the evidence of P.W. 10 who asserted that he bought a body of a car from the respondent and it is alleged to be a body of a car which the second accused bought from P.W.6 and P.W.7.. This evidence gives support to the case for the prosecution and I do D not find any reason as to why the learned trial magistrate disregarded it.

With respect, we think the reason why the trial magistrate disregarded the evidence of P.W. 10 is obvious enough and we are surprised that the learned Judge could not see E this from reading the witness's evidence at the trial, particularly his evidence in cross-examination. We think it is plain from reading the record that Abdalla Nasoro was a most unsatisfactory and unreliable witness. This is the witness who admitted in Court to F being told by the Police to tell lies: "I paid him Shs 40,000/= I was told by the Police to say second accused received Shs. 30,000/= I was told to say a lie by Police" P.W. 10 being that kind of witness, we cannot see how any reasonable tribunal could accept him as a witness of truth. We are satisfied that the learned trial magistrate acted properly G in disregarding this particular witness's evidence. We thus agree with Mr. Lakha that the learned High Court Judge erred in taking P.W. 10's evidence in consideration of the appeal against the appellant.

Next, we turn to consider the learned first appellate judge's analysis of the evidence of Stanley Elisente, P.W. 5. The learned first appellate judge quite correctly considered this H witness to be an important one for the prosecution. The prosecution, as it seems clear to us, put forward Stanley Elisente as an expert, who by his experience in the Identification Bureau had acquired special knowledge in photography and apparently, in the identification of disputed chassis and engine numbers of motor vehicles. However, I since his knowledge in photography was not needed in this case, it appears that the only reason he was called to testify for the prosecution was because of his experience in A "checking engine and chassis and all other disputed numbers". We have seen from an earlier outline of Stanley Elisente's evidence that his claim to be an expert on the subject matter before the court is founded on his 15 years' experience with the identification Bureau as a photographer and an occasional examiner of engines' and chassis' B "suspected numbers". It will be recalled that Elisente readily admitted in his evidence that he was told by others what the alleged "rubbed off" or "missing" numbers were. He also readily confessed that what he thought was the "rubbed off" number could be another number and not necessarily number 2346990. The learned trial Magistrate who thought C that Elisente's evidence on this subject matter was no more than a mere guess, appears to have been reassured in this view when he visited the locus in quo and saw with his own eyes that the engine number of MZF 104 which Elisente never bothered to examine was intact. In these circumstances the learned trial Magistrate found no difficulty D in rejecting Elisente's evidence and acquitting the appellant. But as we have already said the learned first appellate judge reached a different conclusion from that of the Magistrate. We will now examine his reasons for doing so. E

1983 TLR p57

MWAKASENDO JA

The learned judge after accepting Elisente as an expert in identifying disputed engine and chassis number of motor vehicles recapitulated Elisente's evidence-in -chief and then said:

It should here be noted that the chassis number of the motor vehicle of the complainant which F was stolen is 23469990 as shown on the registration card Ex. "A". Thus these two figures that's 23 and 90 correspond with the first and last two figures of the chassis numbers of the stolen motor vehicle. This then gives support to the prosecution evidence that the chassis of G the disputed car must be that of the stolen motor vehicle and not that of car MZF 104 as Mr. Lakha the learned counsel for the second accused wanted this court to believe because the chassis numbers of the car MZF 104 which the second accused bought from P.W. 6 and P.W. 7 is number 1082235 thus the first two numbers for this car are 10 and the last two are 35. H The learned trial magistrate disregarded this part of evidence of P.W. 5 stating in his judgment as I tried to demonstrate above in that he himself had gone to view the scene where the disputed motor vehicle was kept and he found out that the engine numbers of the motor I vehicle was not interfered with and thus the engine belongs to car number MZF 104 which is that of the second accused. The A record of the proceedings does not say that the Court ever went to view the "locus in quo" though several requests to this effect were made by the Public prosecutor. B

We would like to make two observations on the above comments of the learned first appellate judge. First, in view of our appreciation of the evidence given by Elisente at the trial we find it hard to accept him as a person with any specialised knowledge in the field C of identification of disputed engine and chassis numbers. Contrary to what the learned first appellate judge says about Elisente's working experience, it is clear to us that Elisente's experience for the last fifteen years was mostly in the field of photography. The witness himself confirmed this to be so when he said. "I have been engaged in D photograph for 15 years". We can see nothing on record to qualify him as an expert in the "identification of disputed engine and chassis numbers of motor vehicles which are alleged to have been stolen". Therefore, it seems clear to us that the learned trial magistrate was right in treating Elisente's evidence as no more than a mere guess. This E view appears to find some support in Elisente's evidence in cross examination when he said "I was informed what numbers were missing I could not read the middle numbers", and again this "This is what I think. It may be another number not 23469990".

Our second observation relates to the court's visit to Ilala to view the motor vehicle F MZF 104. Although the learned first appellate judge doubts the claim by the learned trial Magistrate that the court visited Ilala to see MZF 104 and Msimbazi to view the body of the "disputed vehicle", we think the evidence fully supports the learned trial Magistrate's G claim. His claim is borne out by the evidence of Selemani Abdalah, P.W. 4 who said on cross-examination "I was present at Msimbazi the court moved there". There is also a reference of the court's visit to Ilala and Msimbazi in the evidence of P.W.6 and in the final submission by the advocate for the second accused. Referring to this visit the H advocate is recorded as saying: "The court visited the vehicle and checked the vehicle. The engine numbers were not interfered with". This statement by counsel is echoed by the learned trial magistrate in his judgment thus: "The court visited the vehicle and checked the vehicle, the engine numbers were not interfered with". To conclude this I aspect of the case we have no doubt that the court, that is, the magistrate and the prosecutor, counsel for the accused, the accused, and witnesses, visited the scene where the motor vehicle MZF A 104 was parked for the purpose of seeing the vehicle and examining it. We cannot see anything wrong with that. Indeed, we think the visit was a must in view of the admission by Elisente that he had not examined the engine number of MZF 104. All in all, we are unable to agree with the learned first appellate judge that the learned trial magistrate B erred in not accepting the doubtful evidence of P.W.5 and P.W. 10. We are therefore satisfied that the learned first appellate judge was wrong in convicting the accused on the evidence on record.

For these reasons, we quash the conviction of the appellant by the High Court, and set C aside the sentence imposed on him. He is to be discharged from prison forthwith unless he is incarcerated therein for some other lawful cause. We order accordingly.

D Order accordingly.

E

[zRPz]ASHA MOHAMED v ZAINAB MOHAMED 1983 TLR 59 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mwakasendo JJA, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

October 20, 1983 F

(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 13 OF 1983

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Jurisdiction of Primary Courts in cases involving title or interest to land registered under the Land Registration Ordinance, Cap. 334 - Section 14 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, Cap. 537.

Land Law - Compensation in respect of contribution made to property. G

-Headnote

The appellant sued respondent for half of the value of a house which she had jointly built with respondent's deceased father. The appellant was sister to the deceased, while the H respondent was daughter to the deceased. It was established in evidence that appellant had made financial contributions towards the construction of the house. The house, the subject matter of the dispute, was on land registered under the Land Registration Ordinance Cap. 334.

Two issues were considered by the appellate court: first, whether a primary court has I jurisdiction to entertain suits arising from immovable property on land held under the Land Registration Ordinance, Cap. A 334; and secondly, whether the appellant was entitled to any compensation in respect of the contribution she made to the property.

1983 TLR p60

Held: (i) A Primary Court has no jurisdiction to entertain proceedings relating to B immovable property on a piece of land held on a government lease or right of occupancy;

(ii) a person is entitled to compensation for contribution made to any property.

Case Information

Order accordingly. C

No case referred to.

S. El-Maamry and Lubulila for the appellant. D

[zJDz]Judgment

Makame, J.A. read the following considered judgment of the court: In the Primary Court of Temeke the present appellant Asha Mohamed sued the respondent Zainabu E Rashidi, her niece, for half the value of the house she said she had jointly built with her deceased brother, the respondent's father, and which the respondent wanted to treat as being entirely part of her father's estate. The appellant succeeded in the trial court and the decision was affirmed by the District Court of Temeke on appeal. The present F respondent was still aggrieved so she appealed, further, to the High Court where she eventually succeeded. In the course of his judgment the learned Judge Kiongozi observed:

The issue in this case was not one of a debt of money owing from the appellant to the defendant as the lower courts seem to have thought. The issue before the court was who as G between the parties was the legal heir of the deceased`s property.

Mr. El-Maamry, learned advocate for the present appellant in the High Court obtained a H certificate to come up before us on the basis that the learned Judge Kiongozi misconceived the issue, the real dispute being whether or not the appellant had a share in the house in her own right as a partner. Before us Mr. Lubulira, learned counsel holding I the brief for Mr. El-Maamry, conducted the appeal on behalf of the appellant, while the respondent was unrepresented.

1983 TLR p61

MAKAME JA

Briefly, Mr. Lubulira argued that the learned Judge Kiongozi proceeded on the wrong A basis and made a decision on the wrong issue, the appellant was not claiming a share of the deceased's estate, not in the particular suit giving rise to the present appeal. There was, further, the question as to whether the matter was in any event justiciable in the Primary Court in view of section 14 of the Magistrates' Courts Act. Cap. 537. Now the B said section 14 provides inter alia:

> ...No Primary Court shall have jurisdiction in any proceedings-(A) affecting the title to or any C interest in land registered under the Land Registration Ordinance..., Cap. 334.

The other question was as to whether section 57 of the Magistrates' Courts Act was applicable. The relevant portion of that section is to the effect that no civil proceedings D relating to immovable property on a piece of land held on a Government lease or right of occupancy granted under the Land Ordinance may be held in the Primary Court.

In reply the respondent merely reiterated that she had all along denied the existence of a E partnership in the house, between her deceased father and the appellant.

We propose to start with the question as to what the real issue was. With great respect, we are of the firm view that the learned Judge Kiongozi got it wrong. There had been earlier proceedings on who should inherit what portion of the deceased's estate. The F matter reached right up to the High Court where the learned Chief Justice pronounced all the proceedings below, null and void, and ordered a trial de novo. In the present proceedings there were passing references to the earlier Administration Clause but this was merely by way of providing a background: Inheritence never features as an issue G per se. The matter was contested on the basis of whether the present appellant had made some contribution to the construction of the house in dispute. We must take that as we find it. We agree with Mr. Lubulira, therefore, that the learned Judge Kiongozi did not base himself correctly. H

The other matter was the one regarding jurisdiction. So that the matter may not be tried in the Primary Court the title to or any interest in the land must have been registered under the Land Ordinance. What the respondent apparently produced before the high Court, incidentally at the eleventh hour, was merely an offer conditional upon the offeree I accepting it by paying the necessary fees, in this case Shs. 56/=. The fees had not been paid, therefore the offer had not been A accepted and there had not yet been registration by the time the suit was filed, sometime in November 1978. The respondent has conceded before us that payment was not made until March 1980. There may be proof that the plot had been surveyed B but there had been no registration under the Land Ordinance. It must follow therefore that the Primary Court had powers to try the suit.

1983 TLR p62

MAKAME JA

We now come to the substantive issue: Whether or not the appellant had proved her assertion that she had built the house jointly with the respondent's father. The first two C courts below were satisfied that she had, while, as pointed out, the High Court did not at all consider the issue. The learned Judge Kiongozi remarked:

The respondent may have helped the deceased financially in constructing the house but that D fact does not necessarily support her claim in the lower courts that she is entitled to the inheritance of deceased property". (The emphasis is ours).

Going through the proceedings before the Primary Court, we are satisfied that there was E enough convincing evidence to justify the concurrent finding by the two courts below. The trial Court was clearly influenced by the evidence of Asha Musa, the respondent's aunt and apparently the appellant's half sister, and by the testimony of Zaina Omari, the F respondent's mother's co-wife, both of which supported the appellant's claim that she used to sell things to raise money to help in building the house. We do not think we have any good grounds to upset the concurrent findings of the first two courts. We accordingly allow the appeal, with costs, and affirm the decision that the appellant is entitled to 50% of the house. G

We wish to conclude by anticipating, and dispelling, a possible confusion. This appeal decides the question of partnership only. It does not concern the inheritance of the deceased's estate which consists of 50% of the house and any other inheritable property the deceased may have left. The respondent will have to apply for administration, afresh, H the earlier proceedings having been declared null and void, whereupon the appellant will probably claim a share therein as sister of the deceased. In that event it will be for the trial Court to determine whether or not the appellant would be entitled. No fresh fees I should be paid. We order the offer to be returned to the respondent.

Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p63

A

[zRPz]MAKUNGU KAHINDI v LUHUMBIKA NYANDA 1983 TLR 63 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Chua J

(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 57 OF 1982

Flynote

Family Law - Dissolution of Marriage - Return of dowry from father in law - Whether B husband entitled to claim offspring of animals paid in bridewealth - S. 45 of the Law of Persons.

-Headnote

The appellant had divorced his wife with whom he had lived for four years. There was one issue to the marriage. He claimed for return of dowry, including offspring of the C animals, from the respondent, his father in law. The Primary Court Nyambiti awarded him 6 head of cattle. His appeal to the District Court was dismissed. Hence this appeal.

Held: (i) Under s.45 of the Law of Persons the offspring of the animals paid in bridewealth, whether cattle or goats, are not to be returned. Similarly, if the bridewealth has been paid in money no payment of interest can be claimed;

(ii) where no grounds of divorce were established then under s.52 (B) of the Law of Persons no bridewealth was returnable where there was an issue to the marriage.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Chua, J. The appellant divorced his wife with whom he had lived for four years. There was one issue to the marriage. He claimed for return of dowry from the respondent, his father in law. The Primary Court Nyambiti awarded him 6 head of cattle. His appeal to the District Court was dismissed. Hence this appeal.

From the record of the Primary Court it appears that the appellant had divorced his wife on the grounds of desertion. It is unfortunate that the trial magistrate did not call for the divorce case file to ascertain the cause of the breakdown of the marriage. Nevertheless from what was deposed in court it was evident that the wife had absconded from the matrimonial home and could not be traced at her father's home. When she was finally discovered the appellant decided that he was no longer interested in continuing to live with her. It seemed therefore not factually correct to assert like the learned District Magistrate and Primary Court Magistrate did that the appellant had no reason to divorce his wife.

1983 TLR p64

The appellant stated that he paid 17 head of cattle as dowry but he was now claiming 27 head of cattle because they had multiplied. But the law on this point is clearly laid down under s.45 of the Law of Persons which stipulates:

The offspring of the animals paid in bridewealth whether cattle or goats, are not to be returned. Similarly, if the bridewealth has been paid in money no payment of interest can be claimed.

Next to be considered is whether the Primary Court applied correct principles in assessing the number of cattle to be returned. The Primary Court took this to have been a case where no grounds of divorce existed but as I have stated above there was evidence of desertion which was not contradicted by the respondent. Had it been true that no grounds of divorce were established then under s.52 (B) of the Law of Persons no bridewealth was returnable since there was one issue to the marriage.

Taking into account the fact that the wife was guilty of desertion, that there was one issue to the marriage, that the parties had lived together for 4 years and that the wife has a chance of remarrying the award of 6 head of cattle in my view was fair and reasonable and therefore save as indicated hereinabove the appeal is dismissed. The appellant to be paid six (6) head of cattle consisting of five (5) cows and one (1) bull. The appellant to pay costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

1983 TLR p64
G
[zRPz]REPUBLIC v NDIMI MAGETA 1983 TLR 64 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Korosso J

May 19, 1983 H
CRIMINAL REVISION 5 OF 1983
Flynote
Criminal Law - Impregnating a school girl - Contravention of the National Education Act, I 1978 - Meaning of school girl - Primary School Compulsory Enrolment and Attendance Rules, 1978.
1983 TLR p65
-Headnote
The record had been called to the High Court for the purpose of review of the order A made by the District Court of Magu convicting the accused of the offence of causing the girl not to attend primary education contrary to s.2 (4) of Act No. 25 of 1978 and Government Notice No. 129 of 1979. The main issue for consideration was whether the impregnated girl in the instant case was a girl within the meaning of the aforementioned legislation. B
Held: According to the record of trial court the impregnated school girl is said to be aged 17 and she is therefore beyond the prohibited ages which are between 7 and 13 years; under the circumstances the accused cannot be said to have committed any C offence known to law.
Case Information
Order accordingly.
No case referred to. D
[zJDz]Judgment
Korosso, J.: This record has been called to this court for the purpose of review of the order made by the lower court convicting the accused of the offence of causing a girl not to attend Primary education c/s 2 (4) of Act No. 25/78, Government Notice No. E 129/79. The accused was upon conviction sentenced to a fine of Shs. 1,000/= or 7 months' imprisonment in default.
The facts of the case are briefly as follows. The accused and the girl called Martha d/o Ludalula (P.W.2) both pupils of a certain Primary School became friends some time in F 1978. Their friendship apparently grew stronger and more intimate until they forgot all about their being pupils and resorted to sealing their friendship by sexual intercourse. The girl became impregnated by the accused. The girl having been pregnant was expelled. Her father P.W.1 reported to the police station. The accused was consequently arrested G and charged.
In the first place I would point out that the appellant was charged under a wrong section. Section 4 of the National Education Act No. 25/78 is only an empowering section under which the Minister for National Education may make regulations or rules for the better H carrying out of the National Educational Policy. In the exercise of the powers vested on him under section 4(1) of the National Education Act No. 25/78, the Minister for Education made the Primary School Compulsory Enrolment and Attendance Rules 1979 published by Government Notice 129/79. Under rule 2 of the I aforesaid Rules, the word child is defined as any child who on the effective date has A attained the age of eleven but not attained the age of thirteen. Under Rule 4(2) of the aforesaid rule it is laid down thus:

1983 TLR p66

KOROSSO J

Any person other than a parent who under any circumstances causes a child not to attend B school regularly until the completion of Primary Education shall be guilty of an offence and shall be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding three thousand shillings or to both such fine and imprisonment (sic.) (ed).

It is obvious that the accused should, on the basis of the particulars of the charge, have C been charged under the provisions of Rule 4(2) of the Primary School (Compulsory Enrolment and attendance) Rules 1979.

The order question is whether the said Martha d/o Ludalula (P.W.2) was a girl as D defined under the provisions of Rule 2 of the aforesaid rules. The answer is an emphatic "No". According to the record of the trial court the said Martha d/o Ludalula is said to be aged 17 years. She is, therefore, far above and beyond the prohibited ages which are between 7 years and thirteen years. under the circumstances the accused cannot be said E to have committed any offence known to the law.

The result of this case is, however, very saddening because the Primary Education of the girl Martha d/o Ludalula has been interrupted and shortened. Apart from herself losing the vital education, the National Education policy that every Tanzanian youth should F receive at least a Primary School education is being defeated. This is all chiefly because the word 'girl' has been improperly or unsuitably defined to include only the girls aged between 7 years and 13 years. There is a real need to redefine the word 'girl' under Rule G 2 of the Rules so that it includes girls aged up to 16 years when it is reasonably hoped that by then every girl will under normal circumstances have completed her primary education. Alternatively, the word "girl" should be redefined so that it means any girl who has not completed a primary eduction. The redefinition of the word "girl" will be H brought into harmony with the wording of Rule 4 (1), (2) of the aforesaid rules, 1979 in which the phrase "completion of Primary Education", is deliberately made prominent. Leaving the definition of the word "girl" as it is, would definitely only serve to defeat and frustrate the national education policy popularly and formally referred to as Universal I Primary Education (U.P.E).

1983 TLR p67

With the above digression I conclude by saying that the proceedings were a nullity and A conviction illegal.

I quash the conviction, setting aside a sentence of Shs 1,000/= fine imposed on the accused. The said fine should be restored to the accused.

B Order accordingly.
1983 TLR p67
C
[zRPz]BILIMBASA ZACHARIA v JARVES JOHN 1983 TLR 67 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Bahati J

October 25, 1983
(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 203 OF 1982
Flynote
Customary Law - Haya - Succession - Inheritance of land by female member of the family. D Customary Law - Guardianship - Maintenance of minor by elder children of same family.
-Headnote
The appellant was an elder child of deceased entrusted with maintenance of his young E sister. Before his death, deceased distributed his land among his children, including female members. One of the daughters was a minor, whose guardianship fell on the appellant. Appellant failed to maintain the minor and even sold the land that the minor had inherited from their deceased father. On appeal the appellant argued that the minor F as a female member was not entitled to inherit the land.
Held: (i) No heir can take full possession of a plantation until the death of his wards: G
(ii) a sister may claim maintenance from her full brother whether he inherited property from their father or not.
Case Information
Order accordingly. H
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
Bahati, J.: This is an appeal by Bilimbasa Zacharia who was the defendant in the Primary Court. Jarves John, the respondent in this appeal appeared as next friend on I behalf of Theopista Zacharia who was the plaintiff in the Primary Court. In the Primary Court Theopista Zacharia through her next friend Jarves John sued the A appellant Bilimbasa Zacharia claiming Shs. 4,000/= for a piece of land which she had inherited from her father Zacharia and which Bilimbasa had sold away. According to the evidence adduced, Zacharia now deceased was the father of Bilimbasa and Theopista and also one Paulina the elder sister of Theopista. Because Bilimbasa had quarrelled B with his father Zacharia and because Bilimbasa behaved like a knave or hooligan, guardianship of Theopista who was hardly a year old was entrusted to Paulina. Furthermore the deceased Zacharia apportioned his land to Bilimbasa and his two C sisters Theopista and Paulina. Each one of them inherited a portion of their father's land. Then Bilimbasa sold the piece of land which Theopista had inherited to another person without the consent of either Theopista or Paulina, his two sisters. Moreover Bilimbasa who was supposed to provide the infant Theopista with necessities of life as her guardian D did not do so. This suit was brought to recover Shs. 4,000/= from Bilimbasa who had sold even the portion of land for use by Theopista.
1983 TLR p68
BAHATI J

In the Primary Court it was held that women cannot inherit clan land. The Primary Court Magistrate cited section 20 of the second schedule to the Government Notice No. 436 E of 1993 which states thus:

Women can inherit except for clan land which they may receive in usufruct but may not sell. F However if there is no male of that clan, a woman may inherit such land in full ownership.

The suit was then dismissed.

On appeal to the District Court, the learned District Magistrate referred to s.20 cited above. He however, held Theopista was entitled to inherit because that was the wish of G her father. He also held that the buyer of the shamba which was sold by Bilimbasa ought to have known that the shamba was in dispute and that it was not supposed to be sold. Thus the buyer bought the shamba at his own peril, concluded the learned District Magistrate. He then allowed the appeal of Theopista and ordered the buyer of the H shamba to vacate it forthwith and to claim any expenses incurred together with the purchase price from Bilimbasa. Against this decision Bilimbasa has appealed to this court.

In my evaluation of the evidence I do not think either the Primary Court or the District I Court arrived at a correct conclusion. The District Court brought in a foreign element in the case and that is of bringing in the buyer of the land in dispute. The buyer of this land (whatever his A name is) was not a party to the suit nor was he made a party to the suit in any way. He therefore cannot be penalized unheard. Secondly, the claim in the Primary Court was for Shs.4,000/= because Bilimbasa had sold that piece of land which was for use by the infant Theopista. The claim is not for a shamba worth shs. 4,000/=. Therefore, the relief B which the District Court purported to give was not a relief which had been claimed. For these reasons, the decision of the District Court cannot be left to stand. It is hereby set aside. But that does not mean that Theopista has no relief. I do accept the law cited C above with regard to the right of women to inherit clan land (s.20 of 2nd schedule to G.N. 436 of 1963). But in this case even if Theopista did not inherit the land, certainly she had it for her own use. The appellant Bilimbasa sold this land thereby depriving her of her means of livelihood and this Bilimbasa who was supposed to be her guardian in D law was not providing her with anything for according to Cory and Hartnoll:

No heir can take full possession of a plantation until the death of his wards.

And paragraph 261 of Cory and Hartnoll provides: E

A sister may claim maintenance from her full brother whether he inherited property from their father or not.

In this case both paragraphs cited above are relevant. Bilimbasa being the only heir of his F father's plantation, is not permitted to take full possession of the plantation until the death of his wards namely Theopista and Paulina his sisters, for he is the guardian of these 2 sisters. In this case he not only sold his own land left to him for his use, he even sold the land meant for use by Theopista. It is clear that because Bilimbasa went against paragraph 261 of Cory and Hartnoll, she is entitled to claim maintenance from G Bilimbasa. In this case not only is Bilimbasa not maintaining Theopista, but he has sold even the land which would go towards the maintenance of Theopista. It follows from the above that the claim for Shs. 4,000/= is justifiable and should have been allowed. The claim of Shs 4,000/= from Bilimbasa, therefore, succeeds. The decision of the Primary H Court is reversed but for different reasons from those of the District Court. The decision of the District Court is therefore set aside and judgment is entered for the respondent Bilimbasa in the sum of Shs. 4,000/= with costs as claimed in the plaint. I

Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p70

A

[zRPz]TANZANIA BUILDING CONSTRUCTION CO. v TANZANIA RAILWAYS CORPORATION 1983 TLR 70 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Munyera, J

November 2, 1983 B

CIVIL CASE 11 OF 1983

Flynote

Contract - Fundamental breach - Effect of fundamental breach on exemption clauses.

-Headnote

In a contract of carriage of goods between the plaintiffs and the defendants, the latter C were to carry the former's 400 corrugated iron sheets and 2 bags of roofing nails from Dar es Salaam to Mwanza. The goods were loaded into a railway wagon, fixed with heavy wires and sealed by the employees of the defendants in the presence of an employee of the plaintiffs. The contract was contained in a consignment note and carried D the term "loaded and counted by the sender and not checked by Railways". Only 40 corrugated iron sheets reached the plaintiffs at Mwanza, 360 corrugated iron sheets and the two bags of roofing nails having got lost. The plaintiffs sought compensation to cover the value of the lost goods and incidental expenses. The defendants relied on the E exemption clause to disclaim any liability at all.

Held: (i) It is a settled rule of law that an exclusionary clause aimed at absolving a party from obligations to a fundamental term of the contract would normally not be F enforced;

(ii) that the defendants would carry the goods from Dar es Salaam and deliver them to the plaintiffs in Mwanza was a fundamental term of the contract which they breached and as such they cannot invoke the exemption clause in their favour.

Case Information
Judgment for the plaintiffs. G
No case referred to.
Butambala, for the plaintiff H
Makunja, for the defendant
Editorial Note:
This case seems to have been decided on the doctrine of fundamental breach. See R.F. Mboya v Mewa Singh Mangat [1969] H.C.D. No. I
1983 TLR p71
MUNYERA J
1 citing Karsales (Harrow) Ltd. v Wallis [1956]2 All E.R. 866 at p. 868. A
In England the doctrine of fundamental breach is no longer in application. See Suisse Atlantique Societe D'Armement Maritime S.A. v N.V. Rotterdamsche Kolen Centrale [1967] I.AC. 362 and especially Photo Productions Ltd. v Securicor B Transport Ltd. [1980] 1 All E.R. 556 (H.L).
[zJDz]Judgment
Munyera, J. This suit arose out of a contract of carriage of goods. The plaintiff is a building firm known as Tanzania Building Construction Company based at Mwanza and C PW1 Sylvester Lubala and PW2 Ezekiel Mabula are the sole partners. The defendant is a well known common carrier in the country. The facts of the case are straight-forward. It is the plaintiff's case that last year they secured a contract to build army quarters near Mwanza airport for 602 battalion. In April same year 1982, when D construction reached wall plate stage, Lubala (PW1) was sent to Dar es Salaam to buy corrugated iron sheets for roofing purposes. He went and bought 400 sheets, gauge 28, from GALCO for shs 37365/40 and 2 bags of roofing nails from BHESCO for shs. 2240/30. He took the goods to the defendant yard where they entered into this contract. E The defendant agreed to transport the goods to Mwanza for a consideration of shs. 4650/= which PW1 paid in cash. The agreement was contained in the way bill otherwise known as Consignment Note. Pursuant to the agreement the defendant provided a wagon, CL 62722. According to the plaintiff, all 400 sheets and the 2 bags of nails were F loaded in the wagon which was closed, fixed with heavy wires and sealed by the defendant's employees and in the presence of PW1. Seeing that everything was in order PW1 departed for Mwanza to wait for the wagon. On 17/5/1982 the other partner, Mabula (PW2) was alerted of the wagon's arrival at the defendant's terminal, Mwanza G South Port. He hired a lorry and went to the port. The wagon was opened by the defendant's employee Timothy Mbalilaki (DW1). Only 40 sheets were found in the wagon. The rest (400-40) (360) sheets and the 2 bags of nails were missing. The loss was reported to Police Mwanza but they advised the plaintiff to go to Dar es Salaam. H There the police investigations achieved nothing. The plaintiff demanded compensation for their lost goods. The defendant declined. The plaintiffs sued. They were represented by Mr. Butambala, an Advocate based in Mwanza and the defendants were defended by their lawyer, Mr. Makunja. He argued that the defendants were not liable for the loss I if there was any at all. That it was a term of the contract that they should not check the goods Lubala (PW1) had put A in the wagon. Indirectly this means the defendants did not know whether the goods were loaded and as such they cannot be held liable for the loss of something they did not know of. By agreement four issues were framed.
1983 TLR p72
MUNYERA J

I am now tackling the issues. I start with No. 1: whether the plaintiff had purchased the B goods said to have been lost.

Sylvester Lubala (PW1) narrated how he went to Dar es Salaam and how he bought the goods. He produced invoice No. 7739 dated 24/3/82 (Ex. PIA) stating that the plaintiff firm bought from GALCO, gauge 28 C.I. sheets of various sizes total 400. The price C was paid on receipt No. 5636 dated 30/4/82 (Ex. P1). He also produced a cash sale receipt No. 19633 (Ex.P2) showing he bought 2 bags of roofing nails from BHESCO. The defence did not dispute these documents. I am satisfied that they represent the transactions as recorded thereof and under s. 34C of the Evidence Act I accept them as D evidence of truth without requiring the authors to come to court. I find that the plaintiff had bought the goods. The issue is decided in the affirmative.

Now issue No. 2: Whether the goods were lost in the hands of the defendant. To resolve this issue I must decide whether the goods were in fact loaded in the defendant's E wagon. As I stated earlier the defendant's counsel argued that it was a term of the contract that they should not check the goods the plaintiff had loaded. As such they did not know whether the goods were loaded. He drew the attention of this court to a F rubber stamp endorsement on the top right hand corner of the consignment note which reads (block capitals).

"Loaded and counted by the sender and not checked by Railways".

Lubala (PW1) said he was not aware of the endorsement till it was brought to his G attention at the onset of this suit. He asserted the goods were actually loaded in wagon CL 62722 under supervision and help of the defendant's employees. I am inclined to accept Lubala's evidence. It has been undisputed that the plaintiffs were building army H quarters here in Mwanza. The goods were required to finish the buildings. It would be unreasonable to think that after buying the goods the plaintiff dumped them in the sea, then went to the defendants to pay for a wagon, put nothing in it and come to start a fake case. I do not see what they expect to gain by so doing. The railways man who closed I and sealed the wagon would, as a reasonable person, have been struck to find that he was sealing an empty wagon while the consignment note recorded 400 sheets. From the foregoing A reasons I find that the goods were duly loaded in wagon 62722. Having reached this conclusion I am wondering whether it serves the defendant any purpose to insist that they did not check the goods. The court is satisfied they were loaded. Now there was evidence and the defendant admitted, that when the wagon arrived at Mwanza only 40 B sheets were in it. The wagon arrived with its seals intact. Circumstantially some clever people had opened it, took out the sheets, reclosed it and fixed a new set of seals. This must have been done while the goods were still in transit. They were in the defendant's C care. I decide the second issue in the affirmative. The goods were lost in the defendant's hands.

I skip issue No. 3 for the moment and come to No. 4: whether the defendants are liable for the loss.

The defendant's liability for loss of goods is set forth in section 34 of the TRC Act no. 11/77 and exemptions thereof. None of the exemption (a) to (g) covers this situation. D Likewise the rubber stamp endorsement "not checked by the railways" is of no legal importance. It was designed to absolve the defendant of their obligations. It is settled rule of law that an exclusionary clause aimed at absolving a party from obligations to a fundamental term of the contract would normally not be enforced. In this case it was a E fundamental term of the contract that the defendant would carry the goods from Dar es Salaam and delivery them to the plaintiff at Mwanza. Nothing would displace this obligation. I want to sound an advice to the defendant corporation not to include on this "not checked by the railways" phrase. It has bad effect. It encourages dishonesty among F the corporation's workers. This case is a conspicuous example. I find that the defendants are liable for the loss of the plaintiff's goods. I finish with issue No. 3. whether the defendants are liable for the alleged incidental expenses claimed in para 9 of the plaint.....

Needless to say much, it is a rule that damages are awarded if they arise as direct result G of the breach.

Having held the defendant liable for the loss, I shall now proceed to consider the reliefs claimed. In para 12(a) the claim is for the value of 400 sheets and the 2 bags of nails, total shs. (37365/40 + 2240/30) 39,6057/70. It should be remembered that 40 sheets H were delivered to the plaintiff (PW2). The claim should have been restricted to those not recovered which amounted to (400 - 40) 360 sheets. By simple arithmetic, their value is shs. (37365/40 x 360 over 400) 33,628/85. Combined value of the sheets and the nails is shs. (33628/85 + 2240/30) 35,869/=. In para 12 (b) they claimed I shs. 4650/= freight charges they paid for the goods. This was the consideration by which A the defendants were bound to the contract. If it is refunded then there is no contract to be enforced. I disallow this item. In para 12 (c) they claimed incidental expenses they incurred when PW1 and PW2 went to Dar es Salaam to buy the goods (PW1) and to help Police investigations after the loss (PW2). Obviously the claim in relation to Lubala B (PW1) cannot be allowed. The expenses were not the direct result of the breach. Even if the goods had arrived safely he would still have incurred the expenses and nobody would have refunded him. The expenses in relation to Mabula (PW2) arose C because he was instructed by the Police to go to Dar es Salaam. Had the goods not been lost by the defendant he would not have gone to Dar es Salaam. The expenses were therefore incurred as a direct result of the breach. He produced two air tickets to and from Dar es Salaam shs. 980/= each, total shs. 1,960/=. He also produced hotel D receipts to the value of shs. 2,0010/=. In all the expenses amounted to shs. (1960 + 2010) 3,970/=. In the final event I give judgment for the plaintiff. The defendant to pay the value of the sheets and the nails and the incidental expenses incurred by Mabula (PW2). For the avoidance of doubts the total decree amount is shs (35,8869 + 3,970) E 39,839/=, plus interest at the usual rate of 9% p.a. from the date of judgment to finalisation. The plaintiff to have their costs to be taxed as usual.

1983 TLR p74

F Judgment for the plaintiffs.
1983 TLR p74
G
[zRPz]OCHORA ONGIRA v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 74 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mwaikasu, J

February 17, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 55 OF 1982
Flynote
Criminal Law - Wildlife Conservation Act 1974 - Hunting a larger number of specified H animals than that authorized by licence -Accused licenced to kill one buffalo and one wildebeast -Accused killed an extra wildebeast as substitute for the buffalo -Section 31(b) (ii) of the Wildlife Conservation Act 1974 - Whether lawful.
Criminal Law - Wildlife Conservation Act 1974 - Failure to record animal killed on a game I licence - Section 44(1) (b) (3) of the Wildlife Conservation Act 1974 - Consequences.
1983 TLR p75
MWAIKASU J
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentence - Forfeiture of firearm - Mandatory where used A in the commission of an offence under the Act-Section 78 (1) (b) (2) of the Wildlife Conservation Act 1974.
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted of six offences under the Wildlife Conservation Act 1974. B The appellant was authorised to kill one buffalo and one wildebeast. With an oral permission from a game scout, he killed an extra wildebeast as a substitute for the buffalo. He was charged and convicted on six counts and his firearm was forfeited to the government. He appealed against all orders. C
Held: (i) Under the Wildlife Conservation Act, 1974, no person is empowered to grant an oral permission to kill any game animal; therefore the killing of an extra wildebeast as a substitute for a buffalo on a purported oral permission by a game official was unlawful; D

(ii) a person authorised to kill a game animal must keep a record of animal killed before the animal is removed from the place where it falls or is killed;

(iii)where the offence is committed under the provisions of the Wildlife E Conservation Act 1974 forfeiture of the firearm involved in the commission of the offence is mandatory.
Case Information
Order accordingly.
No case referred to F
W.K. Butambala for the appellant
J.B. Tendwa for the respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwaikasu, J.: The appellant, one Ochora s/o Ongira, stood jointly charged as the first G accused, before the lower court, with four other persons on six counts all under the Wildlife Conservation Act 1974, firsts with the offence of hunting game without a valid Game Licence c/ss 23 and 70 (1)(2) of the Act; second, with the offence of hunting a H larger number of specified animal than that authorised by the licence c/ss 31(b) (ii) and 70 (1)(2) of the Act; third, with the offence of hunting a game animal by using a prohibited weapon c/ss 54(1)(a)(iv), 70(1)(2), 78(1)(2) and 10 of the Act as amended by Act No. 21 of 1978; fourth, with the offence of failing to record animal killed on game I licence c/ss 44 (1)(b)(3)

1983 TLR p76

MWAIKASU J

A and 70(1) of the Act; fifth, with the offence of unlawful possession of Government trophy c/ss 67 (1)(2) and 70(2)(b) of the Act; and sixth, with offence of failing to report the possession of Government trophy c/ss 67(1)(2) and 70(2)(b) of the Act; and sixth, with the offence of failing to report the possession of Government trophy c/ss 65(1)(2)(3)(5) and 70(1)(2) of the Act.

B He together with the other accused persons pleaded not guilty to the charge. He was nevertheless found guilty on all the counts and sentenced accordingly. He now appeals against such conviction and sentence together with the lower court's order of forfeiture. C Mr Butambala advocate appeared for the appellant and the Republic was represented by Mr. Tendwa, a state attorney.

Only one witness was called for the prosecution. He is one Frederick Mwombeki, the officer in charge of Anti-poaching squad for the Lake Zone, with his office at Mwanza. D His testimony was to the effect that on 26th of December 1981, at about 9.00p.m. while on duty at Lukungu Game Post, he saw a m/v Land Rover station wagon, registration No. MZH 136 coming from the bush and entering the main road. On being stopped and searched there were found five persons including the appellant and the driver, and two carcasses of wildbeasts. On enquiry about the lawfulness of the killing E and possession of such animals it turned out that the appellant had a valid Game licence that was to expire on 29/12/81 and had also valid licences for the one rifle and muzzle-loading gun (gobore) he had. However, it turned out that whereas the appellant F had been licenced to kill one buffalo and one wild beast, he in fact violated the terms of his licence by killing one extra wild beast. Consequently there followed such stream of offences charged against all the five accused persons.

However, according to unchallenged evidence of the defence side, of which there was G nothing forthcoming from the appellant as he opted to remain silent, it appears that the hunting was done in the company of a Game scout, and it was the Game scout, who for failure to find a buffalo, authorized the appellant to kill an extra wildbeast, and did in fact, kill one of such animals.

H It is in the light of such evidence before the lower court that counsel for the appellant submitted and to a greater part, counsel for the Republic conceded save for the offence on the 4th count only, that the convictions on 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 5th and 6th counts should be squashed and the sentences together with forfeiture orders should be set aside. In I support of such submission counsel for the appellant had a valide Game licence, the mere fact that he had killed an extra

1983 TLR p77

MWAIKASU J

animal contrary to what had been specified in his Game Licence could not constitute the A offence charged on the 1st count, that of hunting Game animal without a valid licence. This was bad in law, as in the case, as rightly pointed out by the counsel for the Republic the offence committed, if any, would have been contrary to s.31(b)(ii) of the Act. With that I totally agree. So conviction of the appellant on the 1st count cannot stand. B

As regards arguments in respect of the 2nd count, was the argument for the appellant, which was equally supported by counsel for the Republic though on different ground, that since it was in evidence that the killing of the extra animal had been authorized by the C Game Scout for failure to find a buffalo, the appellant could not be said to have contravened the law. And as if to add weight to such argument, counsel for the Republic contended that by way of interpretation of the Act as provided for under s.25(1)(3), taking the Game Scout as a Game officer, who under the Act is a Licensing D Authority, it could be said that the appellant was given a verbal permission after an oral application. Of course it is this court which can provide an authoritative interpretation of the law, and I must say, I respectfully differ from the view held by the two learned counsel. For the law is very clear. Neither does the law permit an oral application for a E licence nor does it empower an game officer, as a licensing authority, to grant a verbal permission to hunt and kill a game animal. Clearly, the interpretation put by the learned counsel for the Republic on s.25(1)(3) of the Wildlife Conservation Act 1974, can hardly, even remotely be approximated to the meaning of the section in question. If I F may quote the relevant subsection, they provide as follows:

25-(1) Game licences may be issued by a licensing officer upon an application made therefor in writing in the prescribed form; (emphasis mine) and upon payment by the applicant of the G prescribed fee.

-(2) No game licence shall be granted to an applicant who fails to satisfy the licensing officer-

(a) that he has attained the apparent age of eighteen year; H

(b) that he is in possession of a valid firearm intended to be used in hunting;

(c) in the case of licence for hunting of a specified animal, that he is a citizen of the United Republic or that he has been ordinarily resident in the United Republic for a period of I

1983 TLR p78

MWAIKASU J

A not less than twelve months immediately proceeding the date of the application;

(d) that he has a reasonable knowledge of the use of a fire-arm for the purpose of game hunting;

B (3) The licensing authority may require an applicant for a game licence to appear before him and answer any question or produce any document relevant to any of the matters referred to in subsections (2) and the fire-arm proposed to be used.

C Thus under subsection (1) above the application for a licence has to be in writing and in a prescribed form. And the licensing officer, who under s.2 of the Act includes a Game Officer, may grant such licence only upon payment by the applicant of the prescribed fee and upon being satisfied that the applicant has satisfied the conditions laid D down under subsection (2) of s.25, quoted above. The audience which a licensing officer may give to an applicant as provided for under subsection (3) of the said section is for the purpose of making an enquiry or interview in order to satisfy himself as to the conditions laid under the said subsection (2). It is not an authority for granting an oral E permission to kill any game animal. In the absence of any express or implied provision under the Act empowering a licensing officer, or Game Officer for that matter, the alleged permission by a Game Scout to kill the extra wildebeast cannot be accepted to waive the F requirements of the law. For no person be he an enforcement officer or not, has the power to break the law, unless expressly so empower by the law itself. So what transpired, and I am entitled to assume it to be true was and must, regrettably be, at the appellant's risk. The appellant was licensed to hunt and kill only one wildbest. He killed two. This was contrary to the terms of his licence and amounted to an offence under G s.31(b)(ii) of the Wildlife Conservation Act 1974. I have therefore no hesitation in sustaining the conviction on this count.

Coming to the offence on the 3rd count, it was argued that whereas the appellant had H two guns a rifle and the muzzle-loading gun (gobore), the prosecution failed to establish which of the two guns was used to kill the animal. In fact, it was in evidence that an empty case of a cartridge, which must have been used in the modern gun - the rifle - was also seen and produced in court as an exhibit; and the "Gobore" which is the subject of I the charge on this count, was found loaded with gun powder, thereby meaning by necessary implication that it was the rifle that had been used to shoot the wildebeast. Under such circumstances, despite the burden of proof placed upon an A accused person under s.70 (1) of the Act, the prosecution had failed to reach even the minimum standard of proof in order to establish a prima facie case, so that the offence on that count, too had not been established. I too, have no reservation on this point. I entirely agree with counsel for the appellant. On this counsel for the Republic also fully B agreed. Accordingly conviction on this count cannot stand. It must be quashed.

Coming to the offence on the 4th count, on this the law is very clear and there is a general consensus that the offence was clearly committed. For it is the requirement of s.44(1)(b) of the Act that the recording of the animal killed had to be done before such C animal had been removed from the place where it fell or was killed. This the appellant failed to do. He therefore clearly committed the offence in question. That the killing was done at night and the appellant had no opportunity to make such entry, cannot be a D mitigating factor in any way. The conviction therefore on this count must be sustained.

As to the 5th count which was very much interrelated with the 2nd count, here too, it was the common stand by the two learned counsel that as submitted in respect of the 2nd count that with the Game Scout's permission to kill the extra wildbeast the appellant E could not be said to have unlawfully killed such animal, ipso facto, could be accused of unlawful possession of government trophy in respect of such extra wildebeast. Such arguments having been rejected in respect of the 2nd count it follows, too, they are not valid in respect of this count. Accordingly the conviction on this count must be sustained. F

As to the offence on the 6th count, it was argued and I think rightly so and also conceded by the counsel for the Republic, that in the light of evidence that the hunting was done in company with a Game scout and that on their way to and from the hunting, G the appellant with his party, reported at the Game Post, where they must have been checked, such reporting the subject of the charge was simply not in issue. I totally agree with such argument. In consequence, the appellant's conviction on this count cannot stand.

The final issue which is equally of great importance to the appellant and the Republic H alike concerns forfeiture orders made by the trial court. It was submitted by counsel for the appellant and conceded to by the counsel for the Republic that in the light of submissions for the appellant, it was only fair and just that such orders should also be set aside. With due respect and much regret, I must say that even if this court had been I sufficiently persuaded by the learned counsel to sustain the appellant's conviction on the 4th count only, it still A could not interfere with the forfeiture orders made by the lower court. This is so in the light of the provision under s.78(1) (b) (2), of the Act. And what does the section say? It provides as follows: B

78 - (1) Where any person is convicted of an offence under this Act, the court shall (emphasis mine) order forfeiture to the government of- (b) any weapon in the possession or under the control of the accused at the time when the offence was committed, whether or not there is any C evidence to show that such weapon was actually employed by the accused in the commission of the offence:

That, I think, clearly goes to dispel any doubt as to the mandatory nature of such D forfeiture order, that has to be, and was rightly, made by the lower court in respect of the weapons found with the appellant consequent upon the commission of the offence of which he was convicted. This court, therefore cannot disturb any of the order of forfeiture made by the lower court. They are mandatory. E

As to sentences, I note that the offence on the 2nd count attracts a minimum sentence of not less than six months of imprisonment but not exceeding three years. The sentence imposed by the lower court is nine months of imprisonment. However, mindful of the fact F that there was an unchallenged evidence that such excess animal killed was authorized by a Game Scout in substitution for one authorized buffalo that had not been found and in terms of the provisions of s. 79(3) of the said Act empowering this court to impose a sentence lower than the minimum prescribed under the Act, if the High Court, for any G special mitigating factor deems fit so to do, I consider that this is a fit case to exercise such power. Accordingly I reduce the sentence imposed on the appellant to one of a fine of shs. 2,000/=; or imprisonment for three months in default thereof.

To summarize, the appeal is allowed in part in respect of offences on the 1st, 3rd and H 6th counts. Sentences imposed on the accused in respect of such counts are accordingly set aside. On the other hand, convictions on the 2nd, 4th and 5th counts are upheld. Sentence on the 2nd count is reduced to a fine of shs 2,000/= or imprisonment for three months in default thereof. Orders for the forfeiture of the various articles produced I before the lower court as exhibits A, B, C, G1, A2 and B2 are to stand.

1983 TLR p81

Although the other accused persons charged as 2nd and 3rd accuseds did not appeal I A take this opportunity to exercise my revisional powers. In this regard I am clearly of the opinion that the 2nd accused who was the driver of the vehicle that had been borrowed by the 1st accused was an innocent party who had been dragged in by virtue of his employment as the driver of the vehicle. He should not have been found guilty of B any of the offences charged. Accordingly, I acquit him of the offences charged on the six counts and should be released forthwith unless lawfully held for any other offence.

In the case of the 3rd accused person, having acquitted the 1st accused on the 1st, 3rd C and 6th counts, he too, cannot stand convicted of such offences. He is acquitted accordingly. As to sentence on 2nd count, this is also reduced to one of a fine of sh. 2000/= or three months' imprisonment in default thereof.

D Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p81

E

[zRPz]EMMANUEL s/o KAHAMA v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 81 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mwaikasu J

June 16, 1983

CRIMINAL APPEAL 6 OF 1983

Flynote

Criminal Law - Obtaining credit by false pretences - Appellant stayed in hotel and enjoyed F services in course of employer's duty - Appellant failed to pay the bills for the services rendered - Whether false pretence - Section 305 (13) of the Penal Code.

-Headnote

The appellant rented a room in a hotel while in the course of employer's duty and was given services by the hotel. The appellant failed to pay the bill when it was presented to G him. He was charged with obtaining credit by false pretences.

Held: (i) To constitute an offence of obtaining credit by false pretences there must be proof of some conduct on the part of the accused person whereby at the time of entering H into an agreement for obtaining credit, he purported to represent, that he was personally, or some other person, able to meet the bills on demand, when he knew such representation was false.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. I

1983 TLR p82

MWAIKASU J

No case referred to. A

Ndolezi for the respondent

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwaikasu, J. The appellant, one Emmanuel Kahama, stood charged before the lower B court with the offence of obtaining credit by false pretences c/s 305 (1) of the Penal Code, the particulars being that, having rented Room No. 416 at the New Mwanza Hotel between the dates of 3rd and 7th April, 1981, he incurred a debt of shs. 7,817/40, by false pretences, in that he failed to pay the aforementioned sum of money which was the total of his unpaid bills, the C property of the New Mwanza Hotel.

He pleaded not guilty to the charge, but upon his trial he was subsequently convicted of the offence charged and sentenced to three years of imprisonment. He was also ordered to pay compensation to the said New Mwanza Hotel in the sum of shs. 7,817/40 being D the total value of his bills remaining unpaid.

He then preferred this appeal against both such conviction, sentence and order of compensation of the lower court on the grounds contained in his memorandum of appeal most material of which may be summarized as follows: E

(i) That he denies to have obtained credit by false pretences;

(ii) that on the material days of the incident he was an employee of the SOGESCA LARNAI ESTERO, as compensation liaison officer; F

(iii) that he did not abscond from the New Mwanza Hotel but left it on his own through normal procedure;

(iv) that the prosecution failed to summon the Receptionist who provided him accommodation as well as the Receptionist who was on duty on the G day of his departure, the 7th of April, 1981;

(v) that the trial magistrate failed to take into account his evidence and that of his witnesses.

He further added, on the day the appeal was first heard that the PW.1 had reason to lie H because he had been threatened to have his salary deducted to cover the amount of such unpaid bills, which deductions were, in fact, also mentioned by the PW.1 in his evidence before the lower court.

This court sought the production of an admission card from the New Mwanza, which in I terms of PW.1's evidence the accused had first to fill the necessary particulars, including the terms of payment, before he was A given a room, but according to the testimony of the additional witness one Binito Jeremiah, an acting Receptionist supervisor, the admission card filled by the appellant on 3rd April, 1981 was found missing.

1983 TLR p83

MWAIKASU J

The Republic, as represented by Mr. Ndolezi learned State Attorney, declined to B support the conviction on the grounds, inter alia:

(i) That the admission card which could show whether, the appellant had C signed it for Company himself was missing; and

(ii) that as long as the prosecution could not challenge the appellant's allegation that he had been in Mwanza Hotel in his official capacity and the bills had to be paid by the company, his employer, the benefit of D doubt must go to the appellant.

Having gone through the record of the lower court together with the appellant's memorandum of appeal and having heard the additional arguments of the appellant together with the arguments and submissions of the learned State Attorney I had no E hesitation in allowing this appeal but reserved my reasons for the same which I now do hereby give.

In the first place, from the face of it, reading its particulars, the charge itself is defective. As it reads, it would appear that the appellant's alleged false pretence in obtaining the F credit was evidenced by his failure to pay the bills for the services rendered to him by the hotel. If that was the case, as it clearly appeared to be, it was misconception. To disclose an offence under s.305(1) of the penal Code the charge must allege some G conduct on the part of the accused person whereby at the time of entering into an agreement for obtaining the credit alleged, he purported to represent that he was personally or some other person able to meet the bills on demand, when he knew that such representation was false. That, according to the PW.1's evidence, in case of the H appellant, ought to have been extracted from the hotel's admission card in which the appellant had to fill all such information.

Had the prosecution succeeded in adducing material evidence to establish the charge, such defect could, however, have been considered curable under section 346 of the I Criminal Procedure

Code, Cap. 20. But as will hereinafter appear, such is not the position in the instant case. A

As to the fact of the case, apparently, save for the aspect of the alleged false, pretence by the appellant, there is no dispute as regards the renting by the appellant at the New Mwanza Hotel between the material days and obtaining the goods and services B amounting to a total value of shs. 7,817/40 as presented in the bills all of which have been admitted by the appellant as genuine, as he did in fact, countersign them. On the other hand such amount has not yet been paid and it is the subject of the charge that stood against the appellant. C

The only issue is whether the appellant did obtain such credit by false pretence. And one obvious fact is that the burden to prove the same lay upon the prosecution and they had to do so beyond any reasonable doubt.

False pretence is defined under section 301 of the Penal Code as meaning: D

Any representation by words, writing or conduct of a matter of fact or of intention, which representation is false and the person making it knows to be false or does not believe it to be true. E

It is clear from such definition that to establish the charge against the appellant it was not enough to simply show that the appellant failed to meet the bills. It was rather, the duty F of the prosecution to establish beyond any reasonable doubt that at the time the appellant entered into an agreement with the hotel for the accommodation by filling in the admission card, he did represent that either himself or some other person, was able to meet the bills for the goods and services rendered, on demand, when, in fact, he knew G that such representation was false or did not believe it to be true.

Yet, according to the record of the proceedings before the lower court no evidence was adduced by the prosecution as to how the appellant did present himself at the time of his admission into the Hotel as regards the manner and person who was going to foot his H bills. In fact, as stated earlier, no admission card that had been filled by the appellant on the day he entered the hotel was ever produced in evidence nor, on being ordered by this court to be produced, was it to be found anywhere: regrettably it was said to be I missing. It is, therefore, impossible, without information obtained from such admission card, to determine how the appellant did represent himself before the Hotel personnel, as to his A means of meeting his hotel bills. Thus in the light of appellant's allegation as adduced in his evidence, which was not substantially challenged by the prosecution, that in this admission card he had indicated that the bills were to be met by SOGESCA LANARI ESTERO, then his employer, as he had been at Mwanza on his official duties it cannot B be said that the appellant ever represented that he would personally meet such hotel bills, when he knew he was financially incapable of doing so.

In fact, considering the evidence of the appellant as corroborated by the DW.1 one C Sweetberth Kashanga Rugarabamu, together with PW. 1's answer when cross examined by the appellant, it became clear that when the appellant had left the hotel arrangements were made for the Hotel to send the bills of expenses incurred by the appellant during his stay at the Hotel on the material days. Such communication was made by telephone on 8th April, 1981. However, the hotel was slow to take action and had not done so by the D time appellant was dismissed from work on 22nd May, 1981, for alleged extravagance in imprest expenditure. It was then until the PW1 felt the pinch of deductions effected on his salary to cover such unpaid bills that on 21st June, 1980, the E PW1 presented a complaint to the PW4 at Mwanza police station, which subsequently led to the charge that stood against the appellant. Clearly that falls short of a false pretence by the appellant.

Let me point out at this juncture that the dates of the record of the lower court are really confusing for whereas the charge 23rd June, 1981 and in their testimony the PW1 and F PW2 referred to the dates in April, 1981, the receipts produced before the lower court in support of the charge and the evidence of the PW3, PW4 (the arresting Police Officer) together with that of three defence witnesses make reference to the dates of April, 1980. Taking the receipts to be representing the correct dates, I would take the G dates of April, in 1980, as the correct one. It follows therefore that the incident in question look place between the 3rd and 7th April, 1980, and not as represented in the charge sheet.

With such state of evidence before the lower court, the appellant ought to have had the H benefit of doubt and entitled to an acquittal.

Perhaps some observation about certain passages of the judgment of the learned trial magistrate will help see where the scales of justice seem to have began to turn against the I appellant, through a misdirection on point of law. Regarding burden of proof.

1983 TLR p86

MWAIKASU J

The passage which conspicuously manifests the thinking of the learned trial magistrate A which must have influenced him in rejecting the defence case reads as follows:-

The accused person, however, tended to show during his defence that he was entitled to board and stay at the hotel and use all food and other facilities at the expense of his B employer (SOGESCA LANARI ESTERO) in his official capacity as compensation liaison officer. But he has failed to prove his allegation by either producing a supporting document or calling any of the responsible officers from his company to come to court and ascertain his arguments. (Emphasis supplied). C

Certainly, from such a statement the learned trial magistrate clearly misdirected himself as to the burden of proof in the case. He did, in effect, shift the burden from the prosecution on to the appellant.

This was wrong. For the charge standing against the appellant was one of obtaining credit by false pretences; though unfortunately this did not make out what such false D pretence had been. It was therefore, as rightly pointed out by Mr. Ndolezi, learned state attorney, the duty of the prosecution to call responsible officials of the appellant's former employer, the said Sogesca Lanari Estero that the appellant had no such entitlements. And this they failed to do. In fact it would not have been surprising were such company E officials to be called for the prosecution, to deny such appellant's allegations for by then the appellant had been dismissed from the company and the company would naturally not accept such financial burden for someone who had been dismissed from their employment.

It is clear, therefore, that in looking at the appellant's defence as he did the learned trial F magistrate misdirected himself in shifting the burden of proof from the prosecution to appellant when in law, it was, in the circumstances, upon the prosecution to prove the case against the appellant beyond all reasonable doubt. G

For the above reasons I allow the appeal and set aside both conviction and sentence of the lower court together with order for compensation.

H Appeal allowed.

1983 TLR p87

A

[zRPz]MATHAYO s/o TIBASALILA v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 87 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Katiti J

October 29, 1982
CRIMINAL APPEAL 86 OF 1982
Flynote
Criminal Law - Being in unlawful possession of "Moshi" - Requirement of proof - Moshi B Manufacture and Distillation Act 1966, and Written Laws (Miscellaneous Amendments) (No. 22) 1981.
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted of being in unlawful possession of "Moshi". An experienced expert established by smell that the substance which was in possession of appellant was C a spirit, commonly know as "moshi".
Held: (i) Moshi can be identified either by sight, smell, taste or appearance, D

(ii) once it is shown that a person is in possession of moshi, the burden shifts on the accused to show that the possession is lawful,
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
No case referred to. E
[zJDz]Judgment
Katiti, J.: As the sun of 31/1/1982 was hurriedly giving place to the evening, PW1 Marco and PW3 Sita Maganga were undisputably on duty at Ngudu Pombe Shop. The F evidence by PW1 and PW3 was to the effect, that as an unusual assembly gathered near the National Housing quarters, and thereby provoked the curiosity of PW1 and PW3, the same witnesses went to the scene, only to see the appellant with a plastic container, which the appellant left behind a certain house, and took to his heels. PW1 G and PW3 seized the said container and anxiously looked for the appellant, whom they finally arrested at the pombe shop, and hence the prosecution on allegations of possession of Moshi unlawfully and the conviction, that the appellant is now challenging.
The factual experiences of PW1 and PW3, up to seizure of the container are obviously H not subject to contention in these proceedings. What is in dispute, and therefore calls for adjudication, is first, whether the appellant was in possession of the container and therefore the contents, and secondly whether, the contents were identified as the prescribed Moshi. The trial magistrate did answer the first question positively, after I rejecting the appellants' alibi, that, he was not at the scene. After considering the appellant's complaint on this aspect, I am A satisfied that not even a slight temptation to suspect the evidence on the same, has been imported in me. PW1 and PW3 knew the appellant before the event, and I cannot see how mistaken identification could have arisen in such broad day light, nor did the B appellant allege malice as a possible motivating factor, driving the said witnesses to tell lies. I believe therefore as did the trial court, that, the appellant had been in possession of the container before its seizure.
1983 TLR p88
KATITI J

The prosecution witnesses PW1 and PW3 did tell the court, that, the contents of the C container were nothing else, but moshi. Of course, of assistance was the appellant, who in his defence unflinchingly agreed, though denying possession that, the contents were Moshi in the following manner:

"I know that, there was pombe ya moshi, when it was opened at the police Station..." D

I certainly do not extract comfort, nor inspiration, from what the appellant said as that, was no substitute, for the burden, that lies on the prosecution to prove, the case beyond reasonable doubt. Thus, the contents must have been proved, or identified as moshi, beyond reasonable doubt. E

Did the prosecution achieve this? Before delving into this, we must first know what moshi under the relevant law, is. The moshi, whose unlicensed possession is criminalised, is no longer a laboratorial per centum by weight of absolute alcohol matter. The law on F this aspect, has emerged from the laboratory, and retreated to practical realities, that match the circumstances prevailing. Now the moshi whose unlicensed possession is criminalised, is any spirits - which by whatever names they are known, is distilled without licence under section 19 of the Moshi Manufacture and Distillation Act 1966, and this G includes spirits commonly known as "moshi, machozi ya simba, gongo and umeme" -see Written Laws (Miscellaneous Amendments) (No.22) Act 1981, amending section 2 of the Moshi Manufacture and Distillation Act 1966.

The prosecution had therefore to prove that, the contents that, the appellant was in H possession of was spirit commonly known as either moshi, machozi ya simba, gongo or umeme. Such a proof could be done by an officer or officers, who by virtue of their experiences, are qualified to identify the liquor, either by sight, smell, or even by taste, or appearance. And it is the wish to the relevant law, that once possession of moshi, or I moshi in its other equivalent names has been established, the burden of proving that such possession was lawful, shifts to the accused - see section 36 of the same applicable A statute.

In this case PW1, did show how big his font of experience in moshi cases was, and did demonstrate how the smell of the same was, apart from other characteristics. I would accordingly buy his experience and accept that the contents were moshi, as above B defined. The appellant was therefore in possession of the same and as there is no evidence that he was licenced, the conviction was in my view inevitable. As the sentence was not excessive, I do not propose to interfere with the same. The appeal is dismissed.

C Appeal dismissed.

D

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Katiti J

October 29 1982
CRIMINAL APPEAL 116 OF 1982
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Incapacity of accused to understand proceeding - Court E ordered detention at President's pleasure under s. 169(1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code, Cap.20 - Procedure not proper - What the trial court should do.
-Headnote
The appellant was charged with desertion of a child, contrary to section 166 of the Penal F Code. During the proceedings the trial magistrate found that the accused did not understand the proceedings. The nature of her incapacity was not established. The trial magistrate sentenced the accused to be detained during the President's pleasure under section 169(1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code. G
The sentence was challenged on appeal.
Held: (i) Where an accused cannot be made to understand the proceedings the procedure to be followed is for the court to make a finding to that effect and then send the accused for medical examination; H

(ii) where an accused has been certified sane but he/she does not understand the proceedings, the court shall proceed to hear the prosecution, and defence, and shall determine whether or not the evidence justifies a conviction; in case accused is I convicted he/she shall be sentenced to be detained during the President's pleasure.
1983 TLR p90
KATITI J
Case Information
Order accordingly. A
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
Katiti, J.: The early March, of 1981, witnessed PW3 Thomas Mushungembe happily B marrying Suzana d/o Charles, herein to be referred to as the appellant. She already had had a child born of her. The 26/3/1981 came, as PW1 Nkananga Shage, was busily engaged in her shamba, a child cry from the wilderness jerked her, and calling upon PW2 for assistance, they both anxiously went into the bush, only to find a child aged C about ten months naked, and abandoned. The child was rushed to the hospital for precautious care.
As the discovery spread like tropical fires, it was subsequently discovered that the appellant was the mother. The appellant did not venture to deny her mother-hood of the D child, but countered the allegations of child desertion in court by presenting a story, that one Easter Charles, had forcefully taken away the child, and that, she (appellant) had reported the affair to the cell leader, who promised to look into the matter. This Easter Charles, if unfictitious, was never called by the prosecution, nor by the defence. E The culmination of the prosecution was the conviction of the appellant, and a sentence of detention, at the President's pleasure. She is now appealing against the conviction, and the resultant sentence or order.

As the trial magistrate was almost reaching his conclusion to convict the appellant, he, for F the first time committed to paper his diagnosis of the appellant. For the appreciation of what he had in mind, I shall hereunder reproduce what he said and I quote:

...So in short, the accused person though not insane but can be grouped among the G simpletons or morons. And for this reason, she cannot be made to understand the proceedings. She has failed right from the beginning to understand the proceedings as adduced by the prosecution, and adduced by her, due to her imbecility. As far as the case is H concerned, there had been strong evidence to justify a conviction, and so I convict the accused as charged.

(sgd) W. Ogola, I

District Magistrate

1983 TLR p91

KATITI J

And hurriedly following on heels, was the trial magistrate's sentence, that was worded in A the manner hereunder, and I quote for ease of reference:

SENTENCE:

The accused is one who cannot understand the proceedings. She is now sentenced under B section 169 (1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20, to be detained during the President's Pleasure.

It is with unmitigated anxiety that I should as of now, change direction from considering C the merits of the appeal generally, to first considering whether the procedure adopted by the trial magistrate to the destination reached was in the circumstances, an appropriate one. The trial magistrate assumed readiness, to apply section 169 (1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20, to order detention of the appellant during the D President's pleasure, after being satisfied, in his own view, by his own untrained diagnosis that the appellant, though not insane, was simpleton, a moron and imbecile. My worry that is here pervading is that, the trial magistrate took the unrestricted liberty to loosely use such words, which though in ordinary language have meanings connoting E degrees of inadequacy of capacity of mind, I know of no legal construction that has been attached to the same. I shall therefore, in this exercise keep as sage a distance as possible, from treating them as helpful in this case.

All the same, the trial magistrate was on the road to applying the provisions of section F 169 (1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20, as it lays down the procedure, where the accused cannot be made to understand the proceedings. For ease of reference, the same sub-section hereunder reads: G

169-(1) If the accused, though not insane, cannot be made to understand the proceedings:

(a) in case tried by a subordinate court, the court shall proceed to hear the evidence, and if at the close of the evidence for the prosecution and if the defence has been called upon, of any H evidence for the defence, the court is of opinion, that the evidence which it has heard would not justify a conviction, it shall acquit and discharge the accused, but if the court is of opinion that the evidence which it has heard would justify a conviction, it shall sentence the accused to I be detained during the President's Pleasure.

1983 TLR p92

KATITI J

I beg to submit that the trial magistrate having observed the appellant, did obvious A develop qualms about the appellant's capacity to understand the proceedings. The magistrate was obviously not sure whether the appellant's mind was at safe distance from insanity, or whether she could not understand, or appeared not to understand because of some other medical or even linguistic problems. B

The trial magistrate in his own observation - a layman's observation - for the same magistrate is not known for medical or psychiatric qualifications ruled out insanity, but labelled the appellant a simpleton, a moron and imbecile and proceeded to apply the C provisions of section 169 (1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code, Cap. 20.1 make no intellectual pretensions about medicine, nor do I know if the words imbecile, simpleton, moron have medical meanings, and I consider it difficult for a layman, which the trial magistrate is, in that branch of learning to tell different forms of insanity and even D distinguish different colours of insanity from sub-normal intelligence or even from imbecility. A person who is deafmute or dumb may easily exhibit signs that a lay-man could easily mistake for those of insanity. Again, a person may suffer temporary insanity, or may even be on the brink of insanity. In view of such medical realities, it was risky for E the trial magistrate to venture his mind blind-folded into the profession that was foreign to him.

But all the same, if the circumstances facing the trial magistrate demanded the application of section 169 (1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code, Cap. 20, the right procedure had F to be followed. And hereunder I shall demonstrate the procedural steps that would have safely led him to the destination desired.

(a) In the first place, logically, the trial subordinate court, unless it is an obvious case of violent insanity, may not appreciate how the accused cannot be made to understand G the proceedings, unless the said proceedings have commenced. Thus where, the court initially suspects that the accused cannot understand the proceedings, the said court must proceed to see whether the said accused cannot be made to understand H the proceedings. For whether or not the accused cannot be made to understand the proceedings, it is in my view, a question of adequacy of communication to and from the accused, to the witnesses and the trial magistrate. This communication could be I through an interpreter or signs, if need be. Whether the communication is through an interpreter, or signs, the said communication must be such that it is A adequate enough to ensure that the accused understands the evidence, that is being adduced against him on one hand, and is able to adequately appreciate and take advantages of the defence rights explained to him on the other. If as a result of this type of communication the accused understands the proceedings, then the trial must B proceed in the normal manner.

1983 TLR p93

KATITI J

(b) Where on the other hand, with the communication available, the accused cannot be made to understand the proceedings, the trial court must make a finding to that effect C - under section 169 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code - i.e, that, the accused cannot be made to understand the proceedings.

(c) Where the accused cannot be made to understand the proceedings and finding to that effect has been made, then on heels, is the question whether or not he is not insane. D The accused should be sent for medical examination for determination, as to his sanity or otherwise.

(d) Where the accused has been certified sane, and as above already shown he/she cannot be made to understand the proceedings the subordinate court shall under E section 169(1) (a) of Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20, - i.e proceed to hear the prosecution and defence if called upon of any evidence, and finally determine whether or not the evidence justify a conviction. In the event the accused is convicted, he/she F has to be sentenced to be detained during the President's pleasure. In the event of acquittal, the said accused has to be discharged.

As I had earlier indicated my worries, the record does not show the above procedural steps were followed. The question of sanity or insanity was summarily, but G unprofessionally dealt with. The record on the other hand, shows that, although the accused pleaded not guilty and defended herself on oath, she never cross-examined anybody throughout the trial. I think in the interest of justice the case be sent back for re-hearing, before a different magistrate of competent jurisdiction, who will take the H procedural steps hereinshown. I do not have to go through the merits, or demerits of the appeal, in view of the above conclusion.

I Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p94

A

[zRPz]LEONARD PIUS AND 2 OTHERS v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 94 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mbeya

Judge Samatta J

October 11,1982

CRIMINAL APPEAL 42 OF 1982 B

Flynote

Criminal Law - Resettlement of Offenders Act - Failure to comply with a resettlement order contrary to section 13 (1) of the Resettlement of Offenders Act 1969- Resettlement order not made by relevant minister - Accused left precincts of settlement centre without authority of officer in charge - Whether this amounted to failure to comply with resettlement order. C

-Headnote

The accused were not settlers in a settlement centre under the Resettlement of Offenders Act 1969. They left the premises of the settlement centre without permission from the officer-in-charge of the centre. They were charged and convicted of failure to comply D with a resettlement order under s.13(1) of the Resettlement of Offenders Act 1969.

Held: In order to constitute an offence of failing to comply with a resettlement order, it E must be established beyond reasonable doubt that the order had been made and was still in force at the material time.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. F

No case referred to.

A. Teemba for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Samatta, J.: The three appellants, Leonard Pius, Iddi Ally and Samwel Kubeja, were G convicted by the District Court of Mbeya district of failing to comply with a resettlement order, contrary to s.13(1) of the Resettlement of Offenders Act,1969, which hereinafter will be referred to as the Act, and each of them was sentenced to a term of six months' H imprisonment. Three years ago I allowed the appeals, quashed the convictions and set aside the sentences. I reserved my reasons for so doing, and now I proceed to give them.

The subsection under which the appellants were charged, namely, s.13(1) of the Act, is I couched in the following language:

1983 TLR p95

SAMATTA J

Any person who, without reasonable excuse, fails to comply with any of the terms of a A resettlement order, shall be guilty of an offence and shall be liable on conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months.

The particulars of the offence in the charge preferred against the appellants were as B follows:

Leonard s/o Pius, Iddi s/o Ally and Samwel s/o Kubeja are jointly and together charged [that] on 21st day of February 1981 at about 10.00 hrs at Songwe Area within the District and Region C of Mbeya, being settlers under Settlement (sic) of Offenders Act, without reasonable excuse did leave such precincts of the Settlement Centre without authority of the officer in-charge of the said Settlement Centre. D

In my view, to prove a charge under s.13(1) of the Act the prosecutor must establish beyond a reasonable doubt, inter alia, both that a resettlement order had been made (by the Minister responsible for home Affairs) in respect of the accused person and that the order was still in force at the material time. In the case now at the Bar neither the E original nor a copy of any such order was produced before the trial court. In view of the fact that the prosecutor failed to lay down any foundation for the introduction of the secondary evidence on the matter, any oral evidence given (on the point) was inadmissible in law. There was, therefore, no evidence in this case upon which the trial F court could legally base a finding that the appellants were persons in respect of whom a resettlement order had been made. According to s.10 of the Act, every resettlement order must specify the following:

(a) the name and address of the person in respect of whom it is made; G

(b) the reason for which the order is made;

(c) the resettlement centre at which such person is to report;

(d) the route by which the settler has to travel to the resettlement centre. H

(e) any other matter which may be prescribed.

It seemed to me to be elementary logic that, unless the resettlement order is produced as an exhibit or its contents are otherwise properly proved, the court will remain ignorant of its terms I and cannot, therefore, hold that the settler concerned failed to comply with any of them. A No criminal offence is committed under s.13(1) of the Act if the non-compliance is that of a term other than that stated in a resettlement order.

The particulars of the offence stated in the charge which was laid at the appellant's door B give the distinct impression that the prosecutor was not sure whether he should charge the appellants under s.13(1) or 14(2) of the Act or under Regulation 17(1) (f) of the Resettlement of Offenders Regulations, 1969. S.14(2) of the Act reads as follows:

Any settler who absents himself from a resettlement centre without the written authority of the C officer-in-charge [of the Resettlement Centre] shall be guilty of an offence (the underscoring is supplied).

It was the case for the Republic that the appellants had escaped from the Songwe D Resettlement Centre. According to The Concise Oxford Dictionary, when used as a verb the word 'absent' means keep oneself away. Applying this meaning, it seemed incontrovertible to me that s.14(2) of the Act does not cover or deal with the act of E escaping from a resettlement centre. What, in my opinion, the subsection deals with is the omission on the part of a settler to return to a resettlement centre. Regulation 17(1)(f) of the Resettlement of Offenders Regulations, 1969, is in the following terms:

Any person who- F

(f) being a settler, leaves the precincts of the resettlement centre without the authority of the officer-in-charge shall be guilty of an offence and shall be liable on conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months.(The emphasis supplied.) G

To prove a charge under this provision it must be established, beyond a sane doubt, and among other things, that a resettlement order was in force against the accused at the material time. Since, as already pointed out, no admissible evidence was laid in the scales against the appellants to prove the existence of resettlement orders, I was of the H settled view that it would have been a waste of time to consider the possibility of this court varying the appellants' convictions to ones of leaving the precincts of a resettlement centre without the authority of the Officer-in-charge of the centre, contrary to Regulation I 17(1)(f).

During the hearing of the appeals the appellants raised the point that, since before they A were convicted by the lower court this court had declared, while determining their applications for orders of habeas corpus, that the restraints imposed on their personal liberties were more than authorised by law, they (the appellants) could not in law be convicted of failing to comply with a resettlement order. This is not an uninteresting B contention, but, in view of what I have endeavoured to state, I do not find it necessary to express any views on it.

For the reasons I have given, I allowed the appeals and ordered that unless they were otherwise lawfully detained in prison, the appellants be released therefrom forthwith. C

Appeal allowed.

1983 TLR p97

D

[zRPz]GRACE LUMENYELA v ELIZABETH RUTAKUPA 1983 TLR 97 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tabora

Judge Chipeta J

May 3, 1983

(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 8 OF 1982. E

Flynote

Family Law-Refund of bridewealth after dissolution of marriage- Whether daughter can claim bridewealth from parents-Bridewealth as property of the parents. F

-Headnote

The parties to this appeal are daughter and mother, the appellant being the daughter of the respondent. The appellant had claimed, and lost, in the lower courts three issues of cow which had been paid to her parents as bridewealth in respect of her marriage. The original cow had subsequently been refunded to the former husband of the appellant G upon the dissolution of their marriage. The issue on appeal is whether the appellant is entitled to claim the bridewealth from her parents.

Held: The appellant had no right over the animals because, by custom, bridewealth is the H property of the parents of the daughter.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to. I

1983 TLR p98

CHIPETA J

[zJDz]Judgment

Chipeta, J.: The parties to this appeal are daughter and mother, the appellant being the A daughter of the respondent.

The undisputed facts of the case which I find rather amusing, are that when the appellant married her husband, the said husband paid to the mother of the appellant one cow as customary bridewealth. That marriage was blessed with five children. Subsequently, the B marriage broke up. Meanwhile, the cow had reproduced several times.

After the break-up of the marriage, the appellant's husband claimed from the respondent his one cow which he had paid as bridewealth. The respondent duly refunded one cow, but remained with three, the issues of the original cow. C

Meanwhile, the appellant, who had custody of the five children of the marriage, went to live independently. She filed a suit against her mother claiming the three cows on the ground that they were her property as they were as a result of her bridewealth. D

As would be expected, the trial Primary Court dismissed the suit, and her appeal to the District Court was also dismissed. This, then, is her second appeal.

The two courts were unanimously of the view that the appellant had no right over the animals because, by custom, bridewealth is the property of the parents of the daughter. E Without further discussion, I fully agree with that reasoning.

If the appellant wants maintenance for her children, she is advised to sue her erstwhile husband for the same. She has no right to claim the bridewealth as her property. That F remains the property of her parents. They can only part with that property and give it or any part of it to the appellant on the basis of a moral and not legal obligation.

For these reasons, this appeal is dismissed with costs.

G Appeal dismissed.

1983 TLR p99

A

[zRPz]FREDRICK SELENGE AND ANOTHER v AGNES MASELE 1983 TLR 99 (HC)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Chipeta J

June 8, 1983

CIVIL APPLICATION 1 OF 19983

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Hearing on Preliminary points - Both parties absent- Suit B dismissed - Advocate for plaintiff appearing before another magistrate - Whether dismissal should be set aside - O.IX r.4 Civil Procedure Code.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Hearing on Preliminary points - Whether suit "called for C hearing" O.IX r.3 Civil Procedure Code.

-Headnote

In suit for the recovery of debt, a day was fixed for hearing preliminary points. When the D case was called out the clerk told the court that both parties were absent. The suit was dismissed for non-appearance of both parties under O.IX r.5.

In the affidavit in support of the application to set aside the dismissal, advocate for the plaintiff swore that he was within the court premises when the case was called but he E was appearing before another magistrate. The application was rejected.

Held: (i) Whenever possible suits should be determined on the merits;

(ii) "hearing" has reference to the hearing of the suit itself and not to the hearing of F preliminary matters and therefore O.IX r.3 was misapplied.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.
Case referred to:
Jehangir Emporium v Teema Garments [1970] H.C.D. n 841
R.M. Patel for the plaintiff
M.H.A. Kwikima for the defendant
[zJDz]Judgment
Chipeta, J.: On the 19th March, 1983, granted the application and set aside both orders of the trial court made on 14th February, 1983 and 10th March, 1983, and ordered that the suit be restored to the file and determined on the merits. I reserved my reasons for doing so, which I now give.
1983 TLR p100
CHIPETA J
The Background to this application is that on 14/2/83, this matter, which was suit for the recovery of a debt, came up before Massawe, Resident Magistrate, for hearing preliminary arguments. When the case was called out, the clerk told the learned trial magistrate that both parties were absent. Accordingly, the learned magistrate dismissed the suit for non-appearance of the parties under O.IX, r.4 of the Civil Procedure Code.
Mr. R.M. Patel, learned advocate, who was representing the plaintiff from the very beginning, then filed an application before the same court for an order to set aside the dismissal order. That application was supported by an affidavit which was to the effect that he had been within the court premises at the time the case was called out, and that at the time the suit was being dismissed, he was appearing before another magistrate (Mr. Luanda, Resident Magistrate) in a criminal matter. That application, however, was refused by Mr. Luanda, hence these proceedings.
During the hearing of these proceedings, Mr. Kwikima for the defendant, said that he had no objection to this application being granted.
To start with, I take the view that wherever possible suits should be determined on the merits. In the instant case, the learned counsel for the applicant had deposed on oath as to the circumstances which had prevailed at the time the suit was dismissed. There was no counter-affidavit to rebutt the facts contained in the learned counsel's affidavit. All things being equal, therefore, the lower court ought to have acted on the basis of those facts deposed to, unless they were, on the face of it, palpably false.
Secondly, I take the view, with respect, that the provisions of Rule 3 of Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code were, in any case, misapplied. As pointed out earlier, the suit was not coming for hearing on that day. The matter was simply for hearing arguments on a preliminary issue. To my mind, the word "hearing" must have reference to the hearing of the suit itself and not the hearing of preliminary matters to the main suit.
I find fortification in this point in the case of Jehangir Emporium v Teema Garments, [1970] H.C.D. n 841. In that case, an interlocutory proceeding involving the question whether a third party should be joined in the suit was fixed for hearing before a Senior Resident Magistrate. On that day, the applicant had another matter before a Judge in chambers. Following the well known practice that the High Court takes precedence over I a lower court, the applicant attended the Judge in chambers. Meanwhile his case was called up in court before the Senior Resident Magistrate. Both parties were absent, and A so the court dismissed the entire suit for non-appearance of both parties. The application then referred the matter to the High Court for review. Commenting on the court's powers of dismissal under Rule 3 of Order 9, the court (Section, J). said: B

1983 TLR p101

Order 9 rule 3 allows a court to dismiss the suit when neither party appears when the suit is called for hearing. This power is discretionary and that is why the legislature found it safe to use the word "may" rather than "shall". In the present situation there were a number of reasons which would have forced a cautious magistrate not to proceed under this order. In the C first place the hearing was not for a suit but for a third party proceedings...The application which was to be heard before the learned Senior Resident Magistrate was not a suit for the purpose of Order 9 rule 3. D

It was for these reasons that I set aside the orders of the court below and ordered that the suit be proceeded with for determination on the merits.

E Appeal allowed.
1983 TLR p101
F
[zRPz]XY (MINOR) v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 101 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tabora
Judge Chipeta J

October 5, 1983
CRIMINAL REVISION 13 OF 1983
Flynote
Criminal Law - Defilement of a girl under age of fourteen - Section 136 (1) of Penal Code - G Defilement committed by a young person - The law applicable - Children and Young Persons Ordinance.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Compensation - Order made against a young person - Whether parent or guardian liable to pay the compensation. H
-Headnote
A young person was charged with and convicted of the offence of defilement of a girl under the age of fourteen years. He was sentenced to suffer eight strokes of the cane and ordered to pay Shs. 2000/= as compensation to the complainant. On appeal the I propriety of the compensation order against the young person himself was considered.
1983 TLR p102
Held: Where there is an order of compensation involving a young person, the order can A be made against the parent or guardian of the young person.

Case Information
Order accordingly.
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
Chipeta, J. The accused was sentenced to undergo eight strokes of the cane on conviction for the offence of defilement of a girl under the age of fourteen years c/s 136(1) of the Penal Code. The learned trial magistrate also ordered the accused to pay shs. 2,000/= as compensation to the complainant.
As the learned magistrate appreciated, the accused was aged 15 years. He was, therefore, a young person within the meaning of that expression in the Children and Young Persons Ordinance. The provisions of that Ordinance, therefore, applied.
Under section 21(1) of the Ordinance, a parent or guardian of a convicted child or young person may be ordered to pay fine, compensation or costs instead of such order being made as against the child or young person.
In my view, it is advisable that such orders should be made against parents or guardians instead of against the accused. I say so because a child or young person invariably does not have the means to raise the money, and so orders made against children or young persons are usually rendered worthless.
On those grounds, the order of the trial court for compensation is hereby varied so at to read that the compensation of shs. 2,000/= shall be paid by the parent or guardian of accused.
It is so ordered.
Order accordingly.
1983 TLR p103
[zRPz]JUMA B. KADALA v LAURENT MNKANDE 1983 TLR 103 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tanga
Judge Sisya J

October 6, 1983
(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 6 OF 1982
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Parties to suit for recovery of land belonging to ujamaa village - Whether individual can sue - R. 15(1) Magistrates' Courts (Civil Procedure in Primary Courts) Rules G.N. 310 of 1964.
Civil Practice and Procedure - Parties to suits - Suit filed by wrong party - Effect of - Magistrates' Courts Act, Cap. 537 s.32(1).
Civil Practice and Procedure - Parties - Joinder of - Land sold - Whether the buyer should be joined as a necessary party defendant - Effect of non-joinder.

Civil Practice and procedure - Pleading -Time when cause of action arose - Whether necessary to plead. D

-Headnote

The appellant brought an action against the respondent in Soni Primary Court to recover a "shamba". The respondent had been granted the land by an ujamaa village (of which the appellant was Chairman), and had subsequently sold it to a third party who was not E made a party to the proceedings. The appellant lost both in the Primary Court and the District Court.

Held: (i) The suit was filed in the name of the wrong person, the proper claimant should have been the Ujamaa Village; F

(ii) the error is merely technical and did not occasion any failure of justice and therefore it is curable under s.32(1) of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1963;

(iii) in a suit for the recovery of land sold to a third party, the buyer should be G joined with the seller as a necessary party defendant; non-joinder will be fatal to the proceedings;

(iv) under r.15 (1) (d) of the Magistrates' Courts (Civil Procedure in Primary courts) Rules, the plaint or application must indicate the time when the facts on which the claim is based arose.

Case Information

Order accordingly. H

W.R. Mramba for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Sisya, J. I must concede this matter has caused me tremendous anxiety. The appellant, I Juma Kadala, brought

1983 TLR p104

SISYA J

an action against the respondent, Laurent Mnkande, in the Soni Primary Court of A Lushoto District. The pleadings are far from being precise. The trial court, however, understood the law suit to be for the recovery of a "shamba". It is perhaps necessary to quote the facts on which the claim is based and I am doing so from the plaint as presented. They read: B

Maelezo ya Madai - Nikiwa Mwenyekiti wa Kijiji cha Mbuzii, nakumbuka kunako miaka ya nyuma, mdaiwa alikaa Mbuzii akiwa ni Mwalimu, na kwamba kama kawaida akapewa nyumba ya kuishi na kisehemu cha kulima. Alikaa hapo na baadaye alipanda kahawa. Wakati C alipohamishwa huku nyuma tukastuka kumuona Omari Kuziwa akijenga sehemu hiyo bila ya idhini ya kijiji na tulipouliza tukajibiwa na huyo Omari Kuziwa kwamba amenunua sehemu hiyo kwa Mwalimu Laurence ndipo tukaamua kuja kumshtaki. D

It was the respondent who, ostensibly, was no longer in actual or physical occupation of the disputed piece of land at the time the plaint or application was presented who was sued. The person who was and, apparently, he still is in actual and/or physical occupation of the disputed piece of land, one Omari Kiziwa, was left out. He was not E made a party to the proceeding.

Not only that, the date or time when the facts on which the claim was based was not mentioned at all. This is true of the plaint as presented as well as the evidence which the appellant adduced at the hearing of the suit in the Court of first instance. We are thus left F in the dark as to when the cause of action arose.

And not only that, it is clear from the outset that it was an Ujamaa Village registered under the name of Mbuzii (or is it Mbuzili?) which was the actual plaintiff in the case. It seems even the trial Primary Court understood it as such because in the opening G sentence of its judgment it had this to say and I quote:

Katika shauri hili mdaiwa Lawrence Mnkande amedaiwa shamba na Kijiji cha Mbuzili alililoliuza. H

This Court was informed by the appellant, Juma Kadala, at the hearing of this appeal that the said Mbuzii village, of which he is currently chairman, is registered under the law, presumably, the Villages and Ujamaa Villages (Registration, Destination and I Administration) Act. No. 21 of 1975, and that its registration number is 140. Under the law Mbuzii village is, therefore, a legal person with power to sue and A to be sued. All this notwithstanding the appellant brought the action (or was he permitted to do so?) in his own personal name.

At the hearing of the appeal it was argued by learned counsel for the respondent, Mr. Mramba, that this appeal should be dismissed because the original suit was filed in the B wrong name, i.e. Juma Kadala.

The institution of proceedings in Primary Courts is governed by the Magistrates' Courts (Civil Procedure in Primary Courts) Rules, 1964, GN 310 of 1964. Rule 15(1) lays C down that a proceeding shall be instituted by an application specifying, inter alia, the name, occupation and place of residence or place of business of the claimant. By reason of this as well as by reason of the fact that the claimant in the case is Mbuzii Ujamaa Village the suit ought to have been brought or filed in the name of the claimant, namely D Mbuzii Ujamaa Village. The reasons behind this are not at all difficult to find. If need be and purely for purposes of demonstration, one of the most obvious ones is that although Juma Kadala is currently the village chairman (and we may all wish him to remain so for as long as he is alive) it is possible he may not be there or he may no longer be chairman E tomorrow. By due process of the law, in case of death, only the administrator of Juma Kadala's estate or his advocate or his duly authorised agent will have locus standi in cases filed in his name such as the present one. And chances are that such a person is most unlikely to be his successor in office of village chairman as well. Another reasons is F that any order and/or decree issued in the case must necessarily be in the name of Juma Kadala. Likewise execution of the same will have to be done in the same name. The difficulty or confusion that may ultimately emerge if the name remains unchanged are too obvious to need a restatement. In the long run it may even be almost impossible to G separate Kadala's personal property and that of the village. As a matter of fact an unscrupulous person can even easily fraudulently covert communal property to his own use thereby.

Admitted, as indeed it must be, that the suit should have been filed in the name of Mbuzii H village the question that I have to consider now is, what effect does this error have to these proceedings? As I think I have sufficiently demonstrated the error here is merely technical and I am satisfied that the mere writing of the name Juma Kadala instead of Mbuzii Ujamaa Village did not occasion any failure I

1983 TLR p106

SISYA J

of justice. The error under query is thus curable under section 32(1) of the Magistrates' A Courts Act, Cap 537, and I so hold.

I now turn to the more difficult aspects of this appeal. First, the time factor in the case. I have, time and again, emphasized the importance of indicating in the plaint or application B the time when the facts on which the claim is based arose. This requirement is provided for in Rule 15(1) of the Civil Procedure in primary court rules, GN 310 of 1964. The basis of this requirement is that it is from the time shown or given that the Court can determine whether or not the suit is time barred. It must be the aim of every C Court of Law to ensure that there is an end to litigation. As aforesaid no time was shown or given in this case as to when the respondent allegedly abused the terms of his occupation of the piece of land in dispute. However, in view of what I propose to do in this instant matter I choose not to say anything more on this point. D

I now turn to the point which has caused me a lot of difficulty in this matter. Without beating about the bush this is the appellant's choice to sue the respondent whom he and all the witnesses who gave evidence on his side knew to be no longer in occupation of the disputed piece of land and leave out one Omari Kiziwa whom the appellant and his E witnesses also knew to be in actual occupation of the said piece of land after he had, ostensibly, bought it from the respondent. This present occupant of the disputed piece of land ought to have been sued jointly with the respondent for recovery of the piece of land in dispute. Failure to do so was fatal to the proceeding because on the facts of the F case, most of which do not appear to be disputed, it is impossible to make any orders in this matter without affecting the rights of Omari Kuziwa who has not had any chance of being heard in this matter at all. Every person must be heard on matters that concern and/or affect his rights. This is a fundamental principle of justice in any democratic G country such as ours and the same must be guarded, particularly by courts of law worth the title, with utmost jealousy.

In the event I direct that this matter will now be remitted back to Soni Primary Court with directions that Omari Kuziwa be joined as a party to the case and the subsequent H trial will proceed in the normal way and according to law.

For the avoidance of doubt it was intimated at the hearing of the appeal that the respondent has since died. It will thus have to be his appointed administrator who will be sued jointly with Omari Kuziwa. The plaint or application to be filed must show that I whoever will be the respondent's successor is being sued as the appointed administrator of the estate of Lawrence Mnkande, now deceased. The name of the A plaintiff will be Mbuzii Ujamaa Village and the date when the cause of action arose must invariably be shown.

1983 TLR p107

In the final result this appeal succeeds to the extent indicated. In all other respects it is dismissed. Each party will, however, bear his own costs. B
Order accordingly.
1983 TLR p107
C
[zRPz]SALUM ATHUMANI v MWAMINI HAMISI 1983 TLR 107 (HC)

Court High Court Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Bahati Ag J

September 23, 1982 D
(PC) MATRIMONIAL CIVIL APPEAL 5 OF 1980
Flynote
Family Law - Divorce - Marriage irreparably broken down - Cruelty - Beating of the wife and E failure to provide proper maintenance.
Family Law - Dowry - Whether refundable under Islamic Law.
-Headnote
This is an appeal by Salum Athumani who was the respondent in the lower court against the judgment and order of the Primary Court at Magole, Kilosa District. In the said F Primary Court the respondent in the present appeal brought a suit against the appellant for divorce because of, inter alia, cruelty. The lower court unanimously found that there was evidence that the marriage had broken down irreparably, and proceeded to grant the divorce. The court was also of the unanimous view that according to Muslim law G which governed the parties no dowry was returnable where the offending party was the husband. The appellant aggrieved by this judgment and especially the order that no dowry would be returned to him appealed to this court. H
Held: Under Muslim law dowry is not returnable after consummation of marriage and the position is even stronger where the husband has been found to be the guilty party.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed. I
1983 TLR p108
BAHATI Ag J
Case referred to: A
Hussein Mbwana v Amiri Chongwe, Digest of Appeals from Local Courts, 1963 Vol. X.
[zJDz]Judgment
Bahati, Ag. J.: This is an appeal by Salum Athumani who was the respondent in the B lower court against the judgment and order of the Primary Court at Magole Kilosa District. In the said Primary Court Mwamini Hamisi hereinafter called the respondent brought a suit against Salum Athumani hereinafter called the appellant claiming to be granted divorce because of, inter alia, cruelty. The respondent told the lower court that C the appellant used to beat her very much and would not maintain her properly. The two had been to the Conciliation Board often and the appellant would not change his ways. The respondent called her father as a witness who said that he was aware of the unsatisfactory way the appellant and the respondent were living. He had witnessed the D respondent running away from her husband due to troubles she experienced with her husband. He also said that the appellant and respondent had been to the Conciliation Board and even to the courts often. At one time the appellant filed a suit against the E respondent for the return of his dowry but the matter was not pursued.

At the close of the respondent's case the appellant said this:

Mimi sitaapa lolote tena sitaeleza lolote natosheka na ushahidi wa mke wangu na wa baba yake.

In English the above is equivalent to this: F

I will not swear to anything nor will I say anything. I am satisfied with the evidence of my wife and her father.

The lower court unanimously found that there was evidence that the marriage had G broken down irreparably and proceeded to grant the divorce. The court was also of the unanimous view that according to Muslim Law which governed the parties no dowry was returnable where the offending party was the husband. The court therefore ordered H that no dowry would be returned.

The appellant aggrieved by this judgment and especially the order that no dowry would be returned to him appealed to this court. His memorandum of appeal is in the form of a letter giving the facts of the case in the lower court and even giving other facts not on I record in the casefile of the lower court. It is not really easy to decipher what the appellant's argument is. In court the appellant argued that he had A originally filed a suit against the respondent in Mvomero Primary Court apparently to recover his dowry. Since the respondent could not repay the dowry or appeal against the decision ordering her to repay the dowry if she wanted to leave the appellant, the respondent had no alternative but to live with the appellant again. When the respondent B filed the present suit, the appellant told the Primary Court Magistrate that his matter had already been decided in Mvomero Primary Court Morogoro District. Since the Magistrate went on to hear the case all the same the appellant went to the District Magistrate Kilosa to complain and the District Magistrate wrote a letter saying that the matter was res judicata and that the Primary Court Magistrate did not follow these C instructions and he proceeded to grant divorce to the respondent without any evidence. It should be borne in mind here that this court is to be guided by the record of the Primary Court. It would appear from the record of the Primary Court that at the outset of the case in answer to the suit the appellant who was then the respondent said that he D disputed the claim of the respondent who was the petitioner in that case. The appellant went on to tell the Primary Court that the matter before the court had been decided at Mvomero Primary Court civil cases No. 26/79 and 22/79. The first case was in respect of a suit by the appellant for the compulsion of his wife to live with him. The second case E was for claim of dowry but the court did not order return of dowry because the marriage was still subsisting. Following this statement by the appellant the Primary Court ordered the appellant to bring a copy of the judgment in each case from Mvomero Primary Court. The record goes on to show that the appellant told the court that he did F not want to bring any copy of judgment from the Mvomero Court. That is when the present case proceeded to hearing. I should pause here and say that if ever there were such suits before filed by the appellant in Mvomero court they would not affect this case. The case to compel cohabitation would be contrary to section 140 of the Law of G Marriage Act and the second case for the return of dowry would be premature because the marriage was still subsisting. The letter referred to by the appellant in his address to the court does not in any way instruct the Primary Court Magistrate at Magole to dismiss H this case. I need not say more than this here with regard to the letter from the District Magistrate Kilosa.

Having said that, what is the complaint of the appellant before this court? I see none. He did not cross-examine the witnesses nor did he adduce any evidence in defence. The Primary Court was I satisfied, and in my view correctly so, that there was evidence that the marriage had A broken down irreparably and it granted the divorce. I am satisfied that there was evidence sufficient to justify the grant of divorce. It would appear however that the real thing the appellant is interested in is the return of his dowry. We shall therefore consider B whether he is entitled to return of his dowry in the circumstances of this case.

According to the Law of Persons as stated in the Government Notice No. 279 of 1963 there is no refund of bridewealth where the guilty party is the husband. But I should hasten to add that this is not the law applicable here. It is mentioned here simply to provide some comparison with the Islamic Law which is applicable in this case. Now, C according to Islamic law dowry is paid to the wife unlike bride-wealth in customary law which is paid to the father or other relatives of the wife. This is clearly stated by Sheikh Ali Hemed El Buhriy in his book Kitabu cha Nikahi under the heading "Mahari". The issue here is whether the appellant is entitled to the dowry he paid in consideration of the D marriage. First of all, it is not clear what the appellant paid. It is permissible under Islamic Law to pay the dowry to the wife and then bride-wealth to the relatives of the wife. In Hussein Mbwana v Amiri Chongwe reported in A Digest of Appeals from Local Courts 1963 Vol.X Spry, J. as he then was, had this to say on the subject of E bride-wealth in Islamic marriages:

In Islamic law the wife is absolutely entitled to the dowry as her own personal property. On the other hand, in African customary law the brideprice goes not to the woman but to members of her family. Islamic law does not recognize bride price, but on the other F hand I am not aware of any provision which expressly forbids it. I see no reason, therefore, why brideprice should not be paid under customary law at the time when an Islamic marriage takes place just as it frequently is on the celebration of an African Christian marriage.

Any question concerning brideprice, however, will be decided under customary law, G since the matter is outside the sphere of Islamic law.

As mentioned above, it is not in evidence nor is it clear what the appellant paid, whether what he paid was dowry to his wife or brideprice to her father. However, according to the proceedings in the Primary Court it would appear that court was considering dowry H and not brideprice. The two assessors and the Magistrate were in agreement that no dowry was refundable in circumstances like in this case. The lower court had accepted what the appellant had stated that he had paid shs. 820/= as dowry to his wife that is I why the court based its decision on Islamic law. I am in agreement with the decision of the lower court on this point. I have come to this conclusion in view of what is A contained in Sheikh Ali Hemedi El Buhriy's Kitabu cha Nikahi. Although in this booklet the learned author does not deal with a similar situation like this one, there are indications to the effect that dowry is not returnable when there has been a consummation of marriage. The learned author talks of dowry in circumstances where the husband has B either not paid it at all or has not paid it in full. Paragraphs 41 and 42 in this booklet mentioned above do indicate that dowry is not returnable after consummation of marriage. The position is even stronger here where the husband has been found to be the guilty party. This appeal is therefore dismissed with costs. C

1983 TLR p111

Appeal dismissed.

1983 TLR p111

D

[zRPz]RAJABU HASSARA v SARAYA RASHID 1983 TLR 111 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Ruhumbika J

May 26, 1983

CIVIL APPEAL 21 OF 1981 E

Flynote

Land Law- Revocation of Right of Occupancy - "Good cause" - Whether notice to show cause necessary.

Land Law - Assessment/valuation of development on land - Compensation - Right to be F heard about the expenses incurred.

-Headnote

This appeal involves the disputed right of occupancy in respect of a plot codified as PLOT NO. 274 EX-DAYA ESTATE in Ilala District in the City of Dar es Salaam. The appellant was offered the right of Occupancy in respect of the said plot in 1968. The G Right of Occupancy was eventually revoked by the President for alleged non-compliance with the conditions stipulated in the Right of Occupancy in question. The crux of the appeal is whether or not there had been "good cause" for the revocation of H the Right of Occupancy, following which the said plot was reallocated to the respondent.

Held: (i) The President in being moved to revoke the Right of Occupancy is not legally required to cause the Land Office to show cause why the right should not be revoked; however, the court I is quite au fait of the fact that it has inherent powers to look into the grounds upon A which the revocation was based, to be able to rule whether or not these grounds constituted "good cause" for the Land Office to move the President to revoke the right;

(ii) non-compliance with the conditions stipulated in the Right of Occupancy B constitutes "good cause" for the right to be revoked;

(iii) the court finds it equitable for the appellant to be heard on the expenses incurred on the land for the purposes of reaching an assessment of the compensation for the development or improvements on the land.

Case Information

Order accordingly. C

Cases referred to:

1. Director of Lands and Mines v Sohan Singh [1952] 1. T.L.R. (R) 631 D
2. Premchand Nathu and Co. Ltd. v Land Officer [1962] E.A. 738.

L.S. Ballonzi for the appellant

M. Marando for the respondent E

[zJDz]Judgment

Ruhumbika, J.: This is an interesting appeal, involving the disputed right of occupancy (or title) in respect of a plot codified as PLOT NO. 274 EX-DAYA ESTATE in Ilala District in the City of Dar es Salaam. F

The crux of the appeal is whether or not there had been "good cause" for the renovation of the Right of Occupancy of the appellant, following which revocation the said plot was re-allocated to the respondent, Saraiya Rashidi, by the District Land Development G Officer, presumably of Ilala District, who testified before the lower Court as PW. 2.

The appellant, Rajabu Hassara, was offered the Right of Occupancy in respect of the plot described supra as far back as 1968, and he was in that respect the first occupier of the land comprising that plot. The Right of Occupancy of this appellant was eventually H revoked by the President, who was moved by the Land Officer to revoke the title for non-compliance with the conditions stipulated in the Right of Occupancy in question. According to the evidence, the District Land Development Officer described the Right of Occupancy granted to the appellant as a "short-term" Right of Occupancy renewable I year after year, and went on to explain that it is one of the conditions stipulated in the right of Occupancy that "the President may revoke the right A for good cause".

The respondent in this appeal, Saraiya Rashidi, had instituted a suit against the appellant, Rajabu Hassara, in the Resident Magistrate's Court at Kisutu, in Civil Case No. 321 of 1977, in respect of the disputed plot. There was a full hearing of the suit, and B the District Land Development Officer was called as a witness to testify for the plaintiff in respect of what went on and what had activated the Land Office to move the President to revoke the Right of Occupancy of the first occupier, that is the appellant before this court. The Lower Court was satisfied that there was "good cause" for the C revocation of the right, and following that finding the lower court decreed for the plaintiff, the respondent before this court.

The lower court decreed that the defendant before that court (who is the appellant Rajabu Hassara) should remove all the materials he had put on the disputed plot, except the foundation, which had been paid for by the plaintiff, i.e. the respondent before this D court, and that such demolition should be carried out within three weeks to enable the plaintiff erect a building onto the plot through a loan procured from the Tanzania Housing Bank, and further that the demolition should be at the expense of the defendant (i.e. the appellant). E

The defendant before the lower court was not satisfied with the decision of that court and decided to appeal to the High Court.

During the hearing of the appeal both the appellant (Rajabu Hassara) and the respondent (Saraiya Rashidi) were represented by learned counsel. Mr. Ballonzi, learned Advocate, F represented the appellant and Mr. Marando, learned Corporation Counsel from the Tanzania Legal corporation, represented the respondent. The appeal was well argued by both counsel. Mr. Ballonzi, for the appellant set out four main grounds of appeal in the memorandum of appeal. G

1. That the learned Principal Resident Magistrate erred in law and on the facts in determining that the appellant's title to the suit premises (sic) had been properly revoked.

2. That the learned Principal Resident Magistrate erred in law and on the facts in H finding that the respondent had a valid Right of Occupancy to the suit premises (sic).

3. That the learned Principal Resident Magistrate erred in law and on facts in finding that the appellant was not entitled to build a house to completion on the suit premises (sic). I

4. The learned Principal Resident Magistrate abdicated his judicial responsibility A by refusing and or neglecting to assess the value of exhausted improvements on the suit premises (sic).

The learned counsel for the appellant conceded during the hearing of the appeal that the B notice of the revocation of the right in respect of the appellant was published in the official Gazette on 26/5/76, and that the plot was eventually re-allocated to the respondent on 29/12/76. The same counsel further conceded that although there was no statutory requirement that the occupier has to be notified of the intention to revoke the C title, it has been held that it was necessary to notify the occupier (in this case the appellant) of the intention to revoke the right (or title), otherwise the revocation would be null and void, relying on the decision in the case of Director of Lands and Mines v Sohan Singh [1952] 1 TLR(R) 631, at p. 635, where the very passage by Abernathy, D J. was approved in the case of Prem Chand Nathu and Co. Ltd. v Land Officer [1962] E.A. 738 at p. 745. The learned counsel went on to argue that if the appellant was given the opportunity to show cause why the right should not be revoked he could have shown to the Land Office that he was constructing the house and that the right E could not have been revoked. Since the appellant was not given that opportunity, then the revocation is null and void, and the Land Office had nothing to re-allocate to the respondent.

Mr Marando for the respondent vehemently argued that the revocation was proper, and F that after the revocation the appellant had no title to the land comprising the disputed plot any more. He submitted that the appellant was allocated the plot under a short-term Right of Occupancy in 1968, but because the appellant failed to comply with the conditions of developing the said land, the Right of Occupancy had to be eventually G revoked. Relying on the evidence of the District Land Development Officer (PW.2) who testified before the lower court, the occupier (i.e. the appellant) was supposed to erect a building of the standard approved by the City Council within one year. But than up to 1976 the appellant had not even submitted the building plans to be approved by the City H Council, nor had he sent such plans to the land Registry for noting of the approval. According to the land Officer, Mr. Marando argued, the house was to be completed for occupation in 1969, but for about 8 years, the appellant had not been able to complete the building, thereby failing to comply with the conditions stipulated in the Right of I Occupancy, which state of affairs constituted "good cause" for revocation. Mr

1983 TLR p115

RUHUMBIKA J

Marando went on to distinguish the two notices involved in the arguments of this appeal. A He agreed that whenever "good cause" arises for the revocation, the occupier is served with the notice of revocation, which is eventually published in the Official Gazette. He then contended that the notice of the revocation was served on the appellant through his postal address, and latter it was published in the Official Gazette as General Notice B No 384 of 1976 published on the 26th March, 1976. The learned counsel for the appellant did not dispute these facts.

Mr. Marando went on to argue that the other notice involved in the argument on the part C of the appellant, which appears to be precedent to the revocation of the right, is not a legal requirement; that is say there is no legal requirement for the President to serve the occupier with notice to show cause as to why the right should not be revoked. The kind of notice that the occupier is served with, is only to inform him of the revocation decision, after such a decision had been reached where there is "good cause" for such a D revocation, and that is when the Land Office would move the President under the law to revoke the right. The learned counsel for the respondent went on to argue that after all the legal formalities were complied with, the Land Office re-allocated the vacant plot to E the respondent through a letter produced as exhibit "D" in the lower court. The respondent proceeded and obtained a Certificate of Title (or Right of Occupancy) on that plot -No. 186205/47 in the name of SARAIYA RASHID. The land Office at Ilala by the time of revocation called in the Valuer from the Ministry of Lands, who made the F valuation of the foundation and put it at the value of Shs. 6,000/=, and the appellant was notified that and asked to go for the compensation. However, it is further contended by the respondent's side that the appellant never paid heed to the revocation order and as such continued to build hurriedly onto the foundation he had laid. This prompted the G respondent to go and complain to the Land Office at Ilala, and the appellant was sent a letter (exhibit "F") to inform him that the said plot no longer belonged to him, but he would not care. On 23/6/1977 a court injunction was served against the appellant through an affixation on the plot, and the appellant, according to Mr. Marando, accepted H to have seen the injunction, despite which fact the appellant continued to build on the plot, the conduct which amounted to trespassing on the land of the respondent. Mr. Marando sought to distinguish the case of the Director of Lands v Sohan Singh cited by the learned counsel for the appellant from the present appeal before this court. He I argued that in that case an extension of time within which to complete the work had been granted, and that extended time had A not elapsed, but the officer of the Crown simply anticipated that the party would not complete the works and revoked the right without having inquired into whether or not the party would complete the building in time. Learned counsel for the respondent went on to argue that was a particular case, and that its particularity was confirmed in the B second case cited by the learned counsel for the appellant that is that case of Prem Chand Nathu and Co. Ltd. v Land Officer, and that if anything what was held was that the giving of notice to show cause was not mandatory upon the Crown, and that their Lordships in the Privy Council stated that Abernathy, J. was correct only in the C circumstances of the case before him, i.e in reference to the need to serve a party with the notice to show cause why the right should not be revoked.

This court agrees with the contention of the learned counsel for the respondent that the D President in being moved to revoke the right of Occupancy of the appellant was not legally required to cause the Land Office to serve the appellant with notice to show cause why the right should not be revoked. However, the court is quite au fait of the fact that the court has inherent powers to look into the grounds upon which the E revocation was based, and to be able to rule whether or not these grounds constituted "good cause" for the Land Office to move the President to revoke the right. In this appeal before court, it has been proved, according to the evidence on record, that the appellant was not able to construct and complete the building within the period of time F which was stipulated in the Right of Occupancy offered to him for the development of the plot in question. This clearly indicates that the appellant failed to comply with the stipulated conditions in the Right of Occupancy, and non-compliance with such conditions constitutes "good cause" for the right to be revoked. There is no record to G show that the appellant had approached the Land Office for the extension of time within which to complete the building, but it appears that as long as he had put up a foundation on the plot, the appellant thought that he could keep the plot at that stage of development indefinitely.

Let it be clearly understood here that the Land Office is responsible for the development H of the surveyed (alienated land) plots of which the Rights of Occupancy are offered to the occupiers, and they have therefore a statutory duty to see that the occupiers have to develop their plots according to the conditions agreed upon by the occupier when the Right of Occupancy is offered to such an occupier who signifies the acceptance of those I conditions by signing

1983 TLR p117
RUHUMBIKA J
on the Right of Occupancy, after having read and understood those conditions. The A court is aware that some of the documents used by the Land Office are still written in English, but nevertheless the appellant could not have been debarred from understanding that he was supposed to complete the building within one year, i,e, in 1969, but up to the time of revoking the right in 1976 there was nothing more on the plot except the B foundation. This fact that there was just the foundation when the right was revoked is also reflected in the submission of the learned counsel for the appellant where he said: "On the admission of the respondent she found a foundation on the disputed plot. Apparently, the Land Office sent a Valuer to value the foundation and arrived at a figure C of shs 6,000/= a figure which was notified to the respondent but not to the appellant.
After having carefully considered the grounds of appeal as set out in the memorandum, and after having analysed all the arguments of both the learned counsel, this court is fully convinced that the Land Office decided to move the President to revoke the appellant's D right for "good case" as contemplated by the land law governing the Right of Occupancy offered to the appellant. There is no injustice caused to the appellant in the revocation, but the appellant should hold himself to blame for whatever loss he might have incurred in the demolition of whatever structure he erected on the foundation after E the revocation order and after an injunction order of the court to stop him from continuing with the construction. This then disposes of the first three grounds of appeal. The decision of this court to make it clear is that the revocation order was proper and made for "good cause", and could not therefore be declared by this court to be null and F void. There is no basis for this court to upset the decision of the lower court or to have the revocation order nullifed.
As for the fourth ground, that is concerning the assessment of the compensation to the appellant which was done by the Valuer, this court accepts the argument for the G appellant that the assessment was rather arbitrary because the appellant was not given the opportunity to show what he had incurred in respect of the foundation erected on the plot. The court finds it equitable for the appellant to be heard on the expenses he incurred regarding that foundation. This court therefore finds that this matter should be left H open for the lower court which heard the suit to go into in detail. The lower court will have to hear the Valuer who did the valuation exercise, hear the appellant and any other evidence that the appellant may have to prove that he spent more than shs. 6,000/= on the foundation. The lower court will then determine the assessment after having I heard all the necessary evidence, or after having had the opportunity to see the A documents by way of receipts, or otherwise, which will prove that the appellant spent more than shs. 6,000/= on the foundation. That will then dispose of the second part of the appeal.
1983 TLR p118

Apart from that order to remit the record to the lower court for proper determination of B the assessment of the shs. 6,000/= compensation disputed by the appellant, the appeal is otherwise dismissed with costs.

C Appeal dismissed.

1983 TLR p118

D

[zRPz]GEORGE MHANDO v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 118 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Maina J

November 8, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 32 OF 1982
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Judgment incomplete - Conviction not entered - S.171, Criminal Procedure Code, Cap 20 - Failure of justice - Whether to order retrial.
-Headnote
The appellant was charged before the District Court at Dodoma with stealing by person E employed in the public service c/s 270 and 265 of the Penal Code. At the end of the trial the learned resident magistrate wrote a summary of the evidence but he did not complete the judgment. He left a whole blank page, apparently intending to complete the F judgment later on. Then he proceeded to sentence the appellant to seven years' imprisonment. The appellant wishes the High Court to overturn the sentence of the learned resident magistrate.
Held: (i) Since section 171 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides that a judgment G must contain points for determination and reasons for the decision and that a conviction must be recorded, failure to comply with those provisions amounts to failure of justice;

(ii) failure to complete a judgment is the same as failure to write a judgment H because in both instances the points for determination and reasons for decision are not known; it is a failure of justice to pronounce a sentence without writing a judgment and without recording a conviction;

(iii)it would not be unfair to order a re-trial in the case where a failure of justice I has been manifested but where the appellant has not served a substantial part of the sentence.

1983 TLR p119

MAINA J

Case Information

Order accordingly. A

Cases referred to:

1. William Msaka v.R. [1968] H.C.D. n. 216
2. R. v Suna [1971] H.C.D. n. 208
3. Mugoma v R. [1967] E.A. 676 B

4. Ilanda Kisonga v.R. [1960] E.A. 780
5. Kangoye Bundala v R. [1959] E.A. 900
6. Willy John v R. [1953] 23 EACA 509

D. Mbezi for the appellant C

V. Lyimo for the republic

[zJDz]Judgment

Maina, J.: The appellant, George Mhando, was charged before the district court at Dodoma with stealing by person employed in the public service contrary to section 270 D and 265 of the Penal Code. At the end of the trial, that is, after the prosecution and defence had adduced evidence, the learned resident magistrate wrote a summary of the evidence but he did not complete the judgment. He left a whole blank page, apparently intending to complete writing the judgment later on. Then he proceeded to sentence the E appellant to seven years' imprisonment.

Mr. Mbezi, learned counsel for the appellant, argued three grounds of appeal. Firstly, he said that the learned resident magistrate grossly erred in sentencing the appellant to imprisonment without first convicting him of any offence. Secondly, the learned counsel F said that the evidence was wholly circumstantial and that it did not justify a conviction. Thirdly, Mr. Mbezi submitted that the sentence was manifestly excessive. In arguing the first ground of appeal, learned counsel for the appellant cited section 171 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code which provides as follows: G

Every judgment under the provisions of section 170 shall, except as otherwise expressly provided by this Code, be written by, or reduced in writing under the direction and superintendence of the presiding judge or magistrate in the language of the court, and shall H contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision and shall be dated and signed by such presiding officer as of the date on which it is pronounced in open court. I

1983 TLR p120

MAINA J

It seems therefore that apart from the judgment being in writing it must also contain the A points for determination and the reasons for the decision. Mr Lyimo, learned Senior State Attorney, conceded that the judgment of the learned resident magistrate was incomplete and that it did not comply with the requirements of section 171(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. I may also add that even section 171(2) of the Criminal B Procedure Code was not complied with because the learned trial magistrate did not record a conviction and so he did not state the provision of the law under which the appellant was convicted. All that the learned resident magistrate wrote in what he purported to be a judgment was a summary of the evidence for the prosecution and the C defence. He did not record a conviction and neither did he state the points for determination or the reasons for the decision as required of him. Mr. Lyimo learned Senior State Attorney did not seek to support the conviction but he submitted that a retrial should be ordered. Mr. Mbezi, learned counsel for the appellant, argued, on the D other hand, that as there was failure of justice, the conviction should be quashed and he further submitted that since the appellant had been in custody for over one year, it will not be in the interest of justice to order a retrial. Mr. Mbezi cited two cases of this court in support of his argument. These are the cases of William Msaka v R. [1968] HCD.n. E 216 and R. v Suna [1971] HCD n. 208.

The conviction in the William Msaka case was quashed because the judgment of the trial court was "a brief summary of the prosecution evidence but was overwhelmingly devoted to the critical analysis of the defence". This occasioned failure of justice. The F case of R. v Suna cited by Mr. Mbezi is more relevant to the case now under consideration. In that case, like in the present one, the learned trial magistrate did not write a judgment at all and he did not record a conviction. The trial court sentenced the appellant to a fine. That is exactly what happened in the present case. In the Suna case G Mnzavas, Ag. J. (as he then was) had this to say:

It is impossible to tell how the trial magistrate came to the conclusion that the accused should be fined. Failure to write a judgment is an incurable irregularity.

With respect, I agree with what my learned brother judge said in that case. Since section H 171 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides that a judgment must contain points for determination and reasons for the decision and that a conviction must be recorded, failure to comply with those provisions amounts to failure of justice. Like in the Suna I case, the learned trial magistrate in this case did not write a complete judgment and it is impossible for this court to know how he arrived at a A conclusion that the appellant should be imprisoned. Failure to complete a judgment is the same as failure to write a judgment because in both instances the point for determination and reasons for the decision are not known. It is failure of justice to pronounce sentence without writing a judgment and without recording a conviction. B

1983 TLR p121

MAINA J

In another case, Mugema v R. [1967] E.A. 676, the trial magistrate did not sign or date the judgment and it was not known whether the judgment was read in the appellant's presence or how he was sentenced. Platt, J. said that the omissions constituted gross irregularity and the court was not prepared to cure them under section 346 of the C Criminal Procedure Code. The conviction was quashed.

It will be seen from the above cases that where a magistrate has not complied with the provisions of section 171 of the Criminal Procedure Code, this court has always quashed the convictions. Failure to comply with the provisions of section 171 of the D Criminal Procedure Code has been held by this court to amount to failure of justice.

Mr. Lyimo, learned Senior State Attorney, conceded that the conviction could not be supported but he urged this court to order a retrial. The learned Senior State Attorney cited some decisions of the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa one of which is Ilanda E Kisongo v R. [1960] E.A 780. In that case, the trial judge did not write a judgment but wrote a short note in which he said that he concurred with the unanimous opinions of the assessors. The learned judge having said that, he proceeded to convict the appellant and F sentenced him to death. The Court of Appeal cited the cases of Kagoye Bundala v.R. [1959] E.A. 900 and Willy John v R. (1953) 23 EACA 509 and held that a defective judgment will not necessarily invalidate a conviction if there is sufficient material on the record to enable the court of appeal to consider and determine the appeal on its G merits. The Court of Appeal found that the summing up of assessors was inadequate on the issue of burden of proof and so the conviction was quashed. A retrial was ordered.

As I have already pointed out earlier in this judgment, where a trial court has failed to comply with section 171 of the Criminal Procedure Code, this court has always quashed H the conviction because such failure to comply with that provision of the law has been held to amount to failure of justice. Where judgment has not been written at all or where it is incomplete, it amounts to the same thing. It is not possible under such circumstances for this court to I know what reasons the trial magistrate had in arriving at a conviction. In this case there A was not even a conviction but the trial magistrate merely summarized the evidence for the prosecution and the defence and then proceeded to sentence the appellant to seven years' imprisonment. There was no decision made and so no reasons were given. That B was a clear non-compliance with section 171 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The learned resident magistrate had in mind a conviction but that should have been recorded together with the reasons as required by the law. Failure to complete the judgment amounted to failure of justice because as Mnzavas, Ag. J. (as he then was) said in the C Suna case cited above, it is impossible to tell how the trial magistrate came to the conclusion that the appellant should be sentenced. In my opinion, failure to complete a judgment has the same effect as failure to write judgment, and it is an incurable irregularity. The purported conviction is quashed and the sentence is set aside. D

I do not find it necessary to consider the second and third grounds of appeal. In the second ground of appeal it was argued that the evidence was wholly circumstantial and that it did not justify a conviction. The third ground of appeal was that the sentence was E manifestly excessive. I have to consider whether a retrial should be ordered. Mr. Mbezi submitted that a retrial will not be fair because the appellant has served a substantial part of the sentence. Let me point out at the outset that the appellant has already served about eighteen months out of the seven years' imprisonment imposed by the district court. That is not a substantial part of the sentence. Now, as Mnzavas, Ag. J. F (as he then was) said in the Suna case, in ordering a retrial all the circumstances must be considered and each case must depend on its own facts. In that case, the appellant was sentenced to a fine which he paid. As I said, no judgment was written by the trial court in the Suna case. When the appeal came up for hearing, a period of about one G year had elapsed. The whereabouts of the appellant in that case were not known. Furthermore, the exhibits, which were pieces of uncut diamonds, had been forfeited to the Government and they were not available to be produced as exhibits in a retrial. H Under those circumstances, the court found that it was a waste of time to order a retrial.

In the present case, the appellant's whereabouts are known as he is serving the sentence in a known prison. The appellant has served only a small portion of the sentence. The exhibits are all documentary and they are still available. Further, the amount involved was I a large sum of money which belonged to the Government, and it was not recovered. Considering all these facts, I consider that a retrial is appropriate in the A interest of justice.

1983 TLR p123
This appeal is allowed. The conviction is quashed and the sentence is set aside. It is ordered that the case be remitted to the District Court at Dodoma for retrial.
B Order accordingly.
1983 TLR p123
C
[zRPz]JEREMIAH KAMAMA v BUGOMOLA MAYANDI 1983 TLR 123 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tabora
Judge Chipeta J

July 6, 1982
CIVIL APPEAL 4 OF 1981
Flynote
Tort - Malicious prosecution - Elements of.
Tort - Malicious prosecution - Allegation that plaintiff had committed a crime - Allegation D made with improper motive - Plaintiff arrested, charged but later released for lack of evidence - Prosecution malicious.
-Headnote
The defendant made an allegation at a public meeting that the plaintiff was responsible E for a spate of arson committed in the village. The defendant further ordered the arrest of the plaintiff as a result of which the plaintiff was handed to the police, and charged but was latter released for lack of evidence. It was established that the allegation was made on account of political rivalry and was false. In the District Court, judgment was given F for the plaintiff who was awarded shillings 5,000/= as damages. Dissatisfied with this decision, the defendant (appellant) appealed to the High Court.
Held: (i) For a suit for malicious prosecution to succeed the plaintiff must prove G simultaneously that:

(a) he was prosecuted;
(b) that the proceedings complained of ended in his favour;
(c) that the defendant instituted the prosecution maliciously;
(d) that there was no reasonable and probable cause for such prosecution; and H
(e) that damage was occasioned to the plaintiff;

(ii) for purposes of malicious prosecution, a person becomes a prosecutor when he takes steps with a view to setting in motion legal processes for the eventual I prosecution of the plaintiff;

(iii) malice exists where the prosecution is actuated by spite or ill-will or indirect A or improper motives.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

Cases referred to: B

1. Brown v Hawkes [1891] 2 Q.B. 718
2. Tumanieli v Aisa Issai [1969] H.C.D. n. 280
3. Hick v Faulkner (1878) 8 Q.B. 167
4. Herniman v Smith [1938] 1 All. E.R.1 C

Chipeta, J: In Shinyanga District Court the respondent, Bugomola Mayandi, - hereinafter referred to as the plaintiff - successfully sued the appellant, Jeremiah Kamama - hereinafter referred to as the defendant - for malicious prosecution and was awarded shs. 5,000/= as damages. Dissatisfied with the decision of the trial court, the D defendant has appealed to this court.

At the trial, the plaintiff and his witness adduced the following evidence: the plaintiff and the defendant are known political rivals in their village of which the defendant is the chairman after defeating the plaintiff at the elections. E

Some time before this suit, there had been a spate of arson in the village. At a public meeting, the defendant accused the plaintiff of being involved in the arson. He did not stop there: he later instructed members of the people's militia to arrest the plaintiff and F hand him over to the police on the allegation that the plaintiff had committed arson.

The plaintiff was then arrested and was charged with the offence of arson. Police investigations, however, completely failed to unearth any evidence to connect the plaintiff with the charge of arson. In the end police had no option but to withdraw from the G prosecution and so the plaintiff was discharged. This was after the plaintiff had been in custody for some 30 days.

It was the plaintiff's evidence that the defendant's report was false, made maliciously and H with spite and ill-will, and that in making the allegation the defendant was motivated by the political rivalry between them.

In his defence, the defendant did not seek to justify the allegation. On the contrary, he completely denied having made the report to police or to the People's militia or to anyone else.

The learned magistrate carefully considered the evidence before him and found as a fact I that the defendant made the allegation at a meeting that the plaintiff had committed arson; that the defendant instructed members of A the people's Militia to arrest the plaintiff and take him to police; that as a result the plaintiff was arrested and charged but was later released for lack of evidence; and that the report was false.

From the evidence and his findings of fact, the learned trial magistrate came to the B conclusion that the false report was made maliciously with a view to victimizing the plaintiff who had been the defendant's political rival. The learned magistrate accordingly found for the plaintiff.

In order that a suit for damages for malicious prosecution should succeed, a plaintiff, in C my view, has to prove the following; (a) that he was prosecuted; (b) that the proceedings complained of ended in his favour; (c) that the defendant instituted or carried out the prosecution maliciously; (d) that there was no reasonable and probable cause for such prosecution; and (e) that the plaintiff suffered damage as a result of such D prosecution.

The first question that arises, therefore, is when is one said to be a "prosecutor" for the purpose of a suit for damages for malicious prosecution? In my opinion, a person becomes a prosecutor in this regard when he takes steps with a view to setting in motion E legal processes for the eventual prosecution of a person whom he alleges has committed a crime. For instance, if A tells the police that B has stolen A's shirt and as a result of that B is arrested and charged with the offence of theft, A will be said to have set in motion B's prosecution. A, therefore, will be said to be a prosecutor in a suit for F damages for malicious prosecution.

The prosecution, however, must have been made or done maliciously. What amounts to "malice" in this regard is not easy to define. In the English case of Brown v Hawkes [1891] 2 Q.B. 718, at page 723, Cave, J. defined malice as some other motive than a G desire to bring to justice a person whom he (the accuser) honestly believes to be guilty. In Halsbury's Laws of England, the term malice is defined as follows: H

> The malice which a plaintiff in an action for damages for malicious prosecution...has to prove is not malice in its legal sense, that is, such as may be assumed from a wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse, but malice in fact - malus animus - indicating that the defendant was actuated I > either by spite or ill-will against the plaintiff, or by indirect or improper motives. A (See vol 25, at page 356 - 3rd Edition).

For my part, I prefer the latter definition, qualified to this extent, that the accuser, in B addition to spite or ill-will or indirect or improper motives, was not actuated by a genuine desire to bring to justice the person he alleges to be guilty of a crime.

Having proved that he was prosecuted maliciously and the proceedings in question ended in his favour, the plaintiff must go on to prove that the defendant or accuser had C no reasonable and probable cause for such prosecution. This is an important element of the action because it is not every prosecution which ends in an accused's favour that exposes an accuser to a suit for damages for malicious prosecution. If that were so, scores of complainants or police informers would be sued. As Georges, C. J. (as he then D was) stated, in case of Tumaniel v Aisa Issai [1969] H.C.D. n. 280

When there is reasonable suspicion that an offence has been committed and good grounds for thinking that a particular person is responsible it is the duty of every citizen to pass on such information... to the police to help them to find the offender. If the police E act on such information and arrest anyone then the person who has given the information should not be liable for damages for defamation unless it is plain that he had no good grounds for suspecting the person named and that he was acting spitefully...Similarly there will be cases where the Police take a person into custody for investigation which F seems quite reasonable and no steps are taken. Again in such a case the accuser should not be charged unless it can be shown that he deliberately made a false report....(Where) a report to the Police (is) intended to lead to the investigation of a crime...there should be no compensation payable in such case unless the report is shown to be false and G prompted by malice.

In that case the learned Chief Justice was referring to suits for defamation, but in my view, the principle applies with equal force to suits for damages for malicious prosecution. What, then, amounts to "reasonable and probable cause"? In the English H case of Hick v Faulkner, (1878) 8 Q.B. 167, Hawkins, J., said at page 171:

I should define reasonable cause to be, an honest belief in the guilt of the accused based upon a full conviction, founded upon reasonable grounds, of the existence of a state of I circumstances, which, assuming them to be true, would reasonably lead any reasonable and cautious man, placed in the position of the accuser, to the conclusion that the A person charged was probably guilty of the crime imputed.

This passage was quoted with approval by the House of Lords in Herniman v Smith, [1938] 1 All E .R. 1, at page 8. I myself cannot improve upon that definition of B "reasonable and probable cause", and so I would respectfully adopt it as my own.

Now, the question whether or not an accuser acted maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause are questions of fact to be decided on the basis of the circumstances C revealed by the evidence in each particular case.

In the instant case, I respectfully agree with the learned trial magistrate's findings of fact that the defendant did accuse the plaintiff of having committed the serious crime of arson and thus put in motion the process of the plaintiff prosecution; that the report was utterly D false; and that the proceedings ended in the plaintiff's favour.

The question, then, is whether the prosecution was malicious. Here, the accusation was, to the defendant's knowledge, false. There was nothing on which a reasonable and cautious man, placed in the position of the defendant, could base suspicion, let alone a E full conviction, that the plaintiff was probably guilty of the offence of arson. Apart from setting in motion the process of the plaintiff's prosecution, the defendant made an accusation in public, and he has failed to justify the accusation. There is also the known fact that the parties are political enemies. In the circumstance, it seems to me, the F inference that the defendant acted through spite, ill-will or peevishness, is a reasonable one.

Was there, then, reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution? Like with malice, it was for the plaintiff to prove lack of reasonable and probable cause. G

It is undoubtedly a difficult task for a party to prove a negative. It is, I think, for that reason that English courts have often held, and I tend to agree, that in general, in proving the absence of reasonable and probable cause, a plaintiff need only give slight evidence of that. (See Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 25, at page 363, 3rd Edition). H

In the instant case, in my view, bearing in mind that the report was, to the defendant's knowledge, false; that there was not an iota of evidence which could have been a cause for suspecting the plaintiff which could have prompted a reasonable and cautious man to think, let alone say, that the plaintiff had committed arson, the inference that there was a I lack to reasonable and probable cause was justified.

1983 TLR p128

Finally, I turn to the question of "damages". Here, I comprehend, means damage to A property, damage to a man's reputation such as where the matter is scandalous, or damage to his person such as where his life, limb or liberty is endangered.

In the case before me, the respondent's liberty was not only endangered but actually lost B for about a month, and the law presumes damage in such a case. To that extent, therefore, the plaintiff had proved damage. The respondent further proved damage to property by establishing by evidence that as a result of his incarceration his crops in his shamba were exposed to waste and were in fact destroyed.

As to the assessment of damages, I can see no reason to interfere with the trial court's C assessment. This was a very serious allegation and the plaintiff, in addition, proved damage to property.

For the foregoing reasons, this appeal must fail. It is accordingly dismissed with costs in this Court and the court below.

D Appeal dismissed.

1983 TLR p128

E

[zRPz]YUSUF MASUDI v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 128 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Tabora
Judge Chipeta J

June 9, 1983

CRIMINAL APPEAL 38 OF 1982 F

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure-Sentence passed by a subordinate court illegal (Minimum Sentences Act, 1972) - Duty of appellate court. G

-Headnote

On 6th January, 1983 the High Court dismissed the appellants' appeal against conviction. On the question of sentence the High Court held that the sentence of four years passed in respect of the appellants was illegal in that it was contrary to the H provisions of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972; the court, however, ordered the appellant to be called upon to show cause why their sentences should not be enhanced. The appellants submitted that to enhance the sentences would be unjust to them for they were not aware that the offences were scheduled under the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972. I

1983 TLR p129

CHIPETA J

Held: Where a sentence passed by a lower court is illegal, a superior court is bound in A law to rectify such a sentence, even if the result of such a course being taken is to cause hardship to the convict.

Case Information

Order accordingly. B

Case referred to:

DPP v Bunyinyiga Kasiri and Another [1978] LRT n.1

Ntabaye for the appellants.

[zJDz]Judgment

Chipeta, J.: On 6th January, 1983, I dismissed the appeal against conviction by Yusuf C Masudi, hereinafter referred to as the first appellant. On the question of sentence, I held that the sentence of four years' imprisonment passed in respect of the 1st appellant, and sentences of fines passed in respect of the original 4th and 5th accused persons, D hereinafter referred to as the second and third appellants, were illegal in that they were contrary to the provisions of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972. I accordingly ordered that the appellants be called upon to show cause why their sentences should not be enhanced. E

Mr. Ntabaye, for the appellants, submitted that to enhance the sentences would be unjust to the appellants who had not been aware that the offences were scheduled under the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972.

For my part, I see no reason to change my view that the sentences were illegal. As for F the undesirable consequences that are likely to flow from the enhancement of the sentences, I only wish to say that where a sentence passed by lower court is illegal a superior court is bound in law to rectify such a sentence, even if the result of such a course being taken is to cause hardship to the convict. G

I am fortified in this by the decision of the Court of appeal for East Africa in the case of D.P.P. v Bunyinyiga Kasiri and Ano., [1978] LRT n. 1. In that case illegal sentences were imposed on the respondents and by the time the Court heard the appeal by the H D.P.P., the respondents had since been released. In allowing the appeal, the Court held that where an appeal court declares a sentence of a lower court illegal, e.g., because it offends the Minimum Sentences act, it had no power to prevent the due process of the law being carried out and must impose the correct sentence even if this leads to undesirable consequences. I

1983 TLR p130

That being so, and in view of my earlier finding, the sentences imposed on each of the A appellants are hereby set aside and substituted therefor is a sentence of five years' imprisonment in respect of each appellant. The fines imposed on each of the 2nd and 3rd appellants, if paid, shall forthwith be refunded to them.

B Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p130
C
[zRPz]SYLIVERY PASCHAL v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 130 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mfalila J

February 20, 1980
CRIMINAL APPEAL 342 OF 1979
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure-Being in unlawful possession of Part I Poison c/s 25(2), D Cap. 416 - Whether medical officer competent to identify drugs.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charge of receiving-Necessity of proof of theft.
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted of two counts in the District Court of Ukerewe District. In E the first count he was charged with and convicted of being in possession of Part I poison contrary to section 25(2) of Cap. 416, and was sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment. In the second count he was charged with receiving stolen property contrary to section 311(1) of the Penal Code, Cap. 16, for which he was sentenced to 3 F years' imprisonment. The present appeal is against sentence and conviction. The circumstances giving rise to the preferring of the charge are fully reproduced in the judgment below.
Held: (i) A conviction for the unlawful possession of Part I Poison cannot be sustained G on the basis of an identification of labels of the drug by a medical officer who is neither qualified as a pharmacist nor empowered to determine the chemical components of the drug;
(ii) before a charge of receiving stolen property can be made, it is necessary for H the prosecution first to prove the theft of the articles in question.
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
No case referred to. I
1983 TLR p131
MFALILA J
F.S. Kinabo for the respondent. A
[zJDz]Judgment
Mfalila, J.: The appellant was convicted of two counts in the District Court at Ukerewe. In count I he was charged with and convicted of being in possession of Part I poison contrary to section 25 (2) of Cap. 416, and was sentenced to 12 months B imprisonment. In count 2 he was charged with receiving stolen property contrary to section 311 (1) of the Penal Code, for which he was sentenced to 3 years' imprisonment.
With regard to count 1 the first obvious error is that the appellant was charged, tried and convicted under a repealed statute. The Pharmacy and Poisons Ordinance Cap. 416 C under which the appellant was charged was repealed by the Pharmaceutical and poisons Act 1978 which came into force on 1st March 1979. This new Act carried higher sentences than those provided under the repealed statute. It was alleged in this count that when the appellant's house was searched, one bottle of Procaine penicillin was found D and according to the District Medical Officer, this is a Part I poison. With respect, the District Medical Officer is no pharmacist, hence he does not have the qualifications to analyse any drug into its chemical components to determine its identity. Indeed the only E way in which he could tell the identity of these drugs was by the labels on the containers. He declared himself unable to determine the identity of drugs in containers without labels. The first question is why should the court have wasted the time of this man to come and only read labels for them. If the prosecutor and the magistrate are F literate, as I presume they are, they could read the labels for themselves. The second question is what guarantee is there that the labels and the contents tallied? Lastly who gave the District Medical Officer the power to determine whether a certain drug is on Part I of the Poison List? Mr. Kinabo who appeared for the Republic supported the G conviction on this count, but for the above reasons I do not share this view. The prosecutors as well as the Courts must make a serious effort to understand the legislation, otherwise they will never succeed in prosecuting offences under this Act. As the charge was not proved I allow the appeal in count 1, quash the conviction and set H aside the sentence of 12 months' imprisonment.

With regard to the charge in count 1 & 2, I don't think there was any evidence showing that any of the items enumerated in this charge had been stolen from anywhere. Before going on to charge with receiving, it was necessary for the prosecution first to prove the I theft of the articles. This was not done, it was only left to be presumed. There is no room for such presumption for offence under section 311. A

Accordingly yet again I allow the appeal in Count 2, quash the conviction and set aside the sentence of 3 years' imprisonment. If he is not otherwise lawfully detained, he should be released from prison forthwith. B

Appeal allowed.

1983 TLR p132

C

[zRPz]ATHANAS MAKUNGWA v DARINI HASSANI 1983 TLR 132 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Bahati J

September 6, 1983
(PC) MATRIMONIAL CIVIL APPEAL 5 OF 1982 D
Flynote

Family Law - Divorce - Irreparable breakdown of Marriage - Petition founded exclusively on petitioner's wrong-doing - Whether divorce decree should be granted (s 107 (1) (a) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971). E Family Law - Divorce petition - Requirement of reference to Conciliation Board - Whether a mere letter suffices as reference - S. 101 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971.

-Headnote

This is an appeal against the judgment of the District Court at Kisutu in which the learned F District Magistrate reversed the judgment of Kinondoni Primary Court and granted divorce to the respondent in this appeal. The Primary Court had dismissed the petition on the ground that there was no reference to the Conciliation Board prior to the filing of the suit. The District Court had found that the marriage between the parties had G irreparably broken down and that exhibit 3 (which was in the form of a letter) in the trial court was a document from the Conciliation Board showing that the matter had been referred to them. The main issues on appeal are whether the marriage had broken down H irreparably and whether the matter was referred to the Conciliation Board prior to the filing of the petition for divorce in the Primary Court.

Held: (i) Where the petition is founded exclusively on the petitioner's own wrong-doing I in the absence of any special reason a divorce decree should not be granted;

1983 TLR p133

BAHATI J

(ii) where there is no certificate within the meaning of s. 101 of the Law of A Marriage Act, 1971 from the Conciliation Board indicating its failure to reconcile the spouses a petition for divorce becomes incomplete.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. B

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Bahati, J.: This is an appeal by Athanas Makungwa, the appellant in this appeal, against C the judgment of the District Court at Kisutu in which the learned District magistrate reversed the judgment of Kinondoni Primary Court and granted divorce to Darini Hassani the respondent in this appeal.

The Primary Court at Kinondoni heard a petition for divorce brought by the respondent D against the appellant. The evidence adduced in support of the petition was that the appellant told the respondent that he was tired of her and that he no longer enjoyed sex life with her and he therefore wanted his dowry back. Then the appellant wrote what is commonly known as "talak" to signify that he had no intention of living with the E respondent. This "talak" was produced in the trial court as exhibit 1. Then the respondent filed this suit.

The appellant on the other hand said in the trial court that he wrote exhibit 1 after the respondent had insisted that she get a "talak" from him or else she would stab him with a F knife which she had. Moreover the respondent used to sleep outside the matrimonial home with other men. Also the respondent's mother had objected to their marriage from the beginning and the respondent used to tell him that their marriage could not go on.

The Primary Court dismissed the petition on the grounds that there was no reference to G the Conciliation Board prior to the filing of the suit. On appeal to the District Court, the District Court found that the marriage between the parties had broken down irreparably and that exhibit 3 in the trial court was a document from the Conciliation Board showing that the matter had been referred to them. H

The main issues on appeal are whether the marriage has broken down irreparably and whether the matter was referred to the Conciliation Board prior to the filing of the petition for divorce in the Primary Court. As to the 1st issue, I have no difficulty in I agreeing with the District Court that this marriage has irreparably broken down. There appears to be no more love left between the parties and even the appellant A has indicated that he wants his dowry back. But from the evidence which has been adduced, no real grounds of divorce have been proved by the respondent. The respondent did not in her evidence prove any matrimonial offence in particular or in general against the appellant. On the contrary, the matrimonial offence which appears to B have been referred to in this case is said to have been committed by the respondent. The appellant in his evidence alleged that the respondent was sleeping out with other men. Also the respondent is alleged to be quarrelsome. All these allegations were not denied by the respondent. It would appear then that the petition is founded exclusively C on the respondent's wrongdoing, the respondent here being the petitioner in the trial court. By virtue of section 107 (1) (a) of the Law of Marriage Act the court is precluded from granting divorce in a situation where the petition is founded exclusively on the (petitioner's) respondent's own wrongdoing. I cannot see any special reason for directing D that divorce decree be granted notwithstanding that the respondent is the only wrongdoer. I therefore hold that the District Court should have refused to grant a decree of divorce in this case.

I will now deal with the second issue. This is whether there was a reference to the E Conciliation Board in terms of section 101 of the Law of Marriage Act prior to the filing of the petition for divorce. Section 101 of the Act provides thus:

> No person shall petition for divorce unless he or she has first referred the matrimonial F difficulty to a Board and the board has certified that it has failed to reconcile the parties.

In this case there was exhibit 3 which is letter from the Secretary of Zone No 6 G Makurumla ward to the Chairman, Conciliation Board requesting the said Chairman to give a letter to the respondent Darini Hassan to enable her to file a divorce suit in Court. This letter goes on to say that the Zonal Conciliation Board is tired of reconciling the parties. The question is whether this letter exhibit 3 is a certificate from a Board in H accordance with the provisions of section 101 of the Law of Marriage Act. I think not. This is because the said letter is of general observation. Either one or both parties used to go to the Board for reconciliation. It is not clear from the letter whether both parties went before the board and the board failed to reconcile them.

Furthermore, the letter is I appealing to another board to issue a letter to the petitioner to take to court. This letter cannot be said to be a certificate of the Board directed to the Primary Court expressing its inability to A reconcile the parties. I therefore differ from the finding of the District Court and hold that this letter (exhibit 3) is not a certificate from the Board within the meaning of s. 101 of the act. I uphold the finding of the trial Court that there was no reference to a Board prior to the filing of the petition for a decree of divorce. The petition therefore was B incompetent and could not be entertained by the court.
1983 TLR p135
For the above reasons as disclosed in dealing with the two issues, I allow this appeal. I do declare that the marriage between the parties still subsists. I make no order as to costs.
C Appeal allowed.
1983 TLR p135
D
[zRPz]BARTAZAR S. MJAGAZI v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 135 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Munyera J

November 15, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 21 OF 1983 E
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Person pretending to be a victim of police activities - Whether proper to charge him with impersonating a police officer.
-Headnote
The appellant, and one Ominde (PW1) and his friend Paulo had been ordered by one F man who declared himself to be a police officer to assemble at a certain place for the purposes of a search. The appellant had promptly obeyed the order to be searched. It was discovered that the person who claimed to be a policeman was in fact not a policeman and that the appellant knew that the man was not a policeman and was G actually helping him to swindle Ominde and his friend Paulo. The appellant was arrested, charged for impersonating a police officer, was convicted and sentenced to 3 years' imprisonment.
Held: The appellant, for pretending to be a victim of police activities, was not properly H charged with impersonating a police officer for he never suggested that he was a policeman nor did he purport to do anything as a police officer.
Case Information
Appeal allowed. I
1983 TLR p136
MUNYERA J
No case referred to. A

[zJDz]Judgment

Munyera, J.: The appellant was charged with personating a police officer. The facts were strange. On 4/7/81 at about 4 p.m. one Ominde John (PW 1) who was student somewhere, was with his friends along Kaluta street of Mwanza town. The appellant B passed by them. Another man appeared there. He declared himself a Police officer and said he was checking the identities of travellers because an Indian had been beaten and they were looking for the culprits. That man ordered Ominde (PW 1), the appellant and C one Paulo Mahemba, to assemble at a certain place for the search. He ordered them to produce any money each had. The appellant was the first to respond to that order. He said he had Shs.6000/= and surrendered an envelope which contained that money. On counting the amount it was found that it was Shs. 6,200/= not 6,000/=. The police D officer rebuked the appellant that he had told lies in saying he had Shs. 6,000/= whereas he had 6,200/=. He then asked Ominde (PW 1) and his friend Paulo how much money each of them had. They said they had no money with them that time. As these proceedings were on, other people came there. It appears they knew about the policeman because as soon as he saw them he ran away. One of those people who E arrived there was PC Faustin (PW 2). He knew the appellant to be a member of a group who swindle people. He arrested him. It was discovered that the person who said he was a policeman was not a policeman. The appellant knew the man was not a policeman and was helping him to swindle Ominde and his friend Paulo. He was charged F accordingly. In his defence he said he was passing and found a group of people including PC Faustin (PW2). Those people ran away, then Faustin turned on him and said he was a member of the group that ran away. The trial magistrate rejected his G defence, convicted and sentenced him to 3 years' imprisonment.

Obviously the appellant was a member of the group which was pretending to be police officers. This was borne out by the fact that he easily surrendered his Shs. 6,200/= to one of that group and made no mention of that money either at the Police Station or in H court. It was a contrivance to impress other people that he was obeying the orders of Government officials so that others do the same and his conspirators swindle the money they purport to seize. The question is whether he was properly charged with personating a police officer, remembering that he never suggested that he was a policeman. He never I did anything by virtue of being a police officer.

He only pretended to be a victim of the police activities. Could he be said he was aiding A and abetting? This was too indirect an act to justify the application of the doctrine. I allow the appeal. I quash the appellant's conviction, set aside the sentence and order his release.

B Appeal allowed.

1983 TLR p137

C

[zRPz]JEREMIAH VENANT v CLEMENTINA ALEXANDER 1983 TLR 137 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Bahati J

October 11, 1983
CIVIL APPEAL 94 OF 1983
Flynote
Customary law-Sale of clan land without witnessing of clan members-Reversion of land to clan members.
Customary law-Redemption of clan land-Limitation period 3 months from date of knowledge of sale-Para 568, Cory & Hartnoll's Customary Law of the Haya Tribe-Rule mandatory.
-Headnote
The appellant had originally brought a suit in the Primary Court to recover clan land from the respondent which land had been sold without the witnessing of clan members. The respondent in a cross-appeal before the District Court of Bukoba disputed the order for redemption of the land because the limitation period of 3 months from the date the appellant knew of the sale had elapsed. In the appeal before the High Court the main point for decision is whether the appellant was time-barred from instituting proceedings to nullify the sale.
Held: (i) Under Haya Customary law a relative who wishes to redeem clan land which has been sold without the witnessing of clan members must institute the necessary proceedings within three months of his knowledge of the sale of the land in question;

(ii) under Haya Customary law a relative who wishes to take action in respect of sold clan land is presumed to have knowledge of any sale of which he is interested and in order to rebut such presumption one would need to show by strong evidence that he was not in the village for a long time.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
1983 TLR p138
BAHATI J
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
Bahati, J.: Jeremiah Venant the appellant in this appeal was the plaintiff in the Primary Court where he brought a suit to recover clan land which the respondent Clementina Alexander had bought from Aulelia Ishamba who was also one of the defendants in the Primary Court together with Clementina Alexander. The appellant led evidence in the Primary Court to show that the land in dispute was clan land and that the respondent had bought it for only 4,000/= and not Shs. 40,000/= as the agreement between Aulelia Ishamba and the respondent shows. The appellant wanted the clan shamba returned to the clan from the respondent because the sale had been made without the witnessing of the clan members and that if any payment was to be made, the respondent should be paid by Aulelia Ishamba who had received the money for the clan land. The Primary Court found that the shamba was worth Shs. 40,000/= and held that the appellant could redeem it at Shs. 40,000/= from the respondent. But the respondent was not to be compensated for the house which she had built in the shamba nor was the respondent allowed to harvest the coffee and bananas in the shamba. This judgment of the Primary E Court made the respondent appeal to the District Court and the appellant also cross-appealed to the District Court. The respondent disputed the order for redemption arguing that the appellant was time-barred since he failed to redeem the land within 3 months after he knew of the sale. The respondent also said in her memorandum of F appeal to the District Court that she was entitled to the compensation of the house in the shamba and that she was entitled to harvest the crops in the shamba. She went on to say that the time within which to redeem the land should have been specified. The appellant argued in his memorandum of appeal to the District Court that the sale of the disputed G land was not for Shs. 40,000/= but only 4,000/=.

The District Court found that the disputed land was clan land. It also held that the time within which to redeem the land should have been specified. It found the house in the clan shamba not an issue in the Primary Court and held that the respondent could bring a H fresh suit claiming compensation. The District Court also held that the respondent was entitled to harvest all the crops in the disputed shamba before redemption. The District Court further found the sale price for the disputed land to be Shs. 40,000/= and not only Shs.4,000/= as claimed by the appellant. In the final analysis, the District Court allowed I the appeal of Clementina Alexander the present respondent. The court ordered that the respondent should remain in the disputed A shamba because the appellant had failed to institute the proceedings to nullify the sale within 3 months of the date on which he first heard of the sale as envisaged by para 568 of Cory and Hartnoll.

Against this decision of the District Court the appellant still disputes the finding of Shs. B 40,000/= as being the sale price for the disputed shamba. He has also argued that since none of the clan members. In support of this argument the appellant referred to Cory and Hartnoll without citing any specific paragraph of Cory and Hartnoll. Finally the appellant argued that the District Court should not have dealt with the question of delay in C redeeming the disputed land, since this was not in issue in the Primary Court and that in any case the appellant was on safari when the sale took place and that he did not delay in instituting proceedings to nullify the sale.

In reply to the grounds of appeal, the respondent argued that exhibit A in the Primary D Court clearly showed the price paid for this shamba.

The main point for decision here is whether the appellant was time-barred from instituting E proceedings to nullify this sale. I agree with the District Court that the disputed land is clan land. I also agree with the finding of the District Court that this disputed land was sold at shs. 40,000/= as the document tendered in the Primary Court shows. According to paragraph 568 of Cory and Hartnoll's Customary Law of the Haya Tribe which F book is an authority on the customary law of the Haya Tribe and which book has codified this customary law, there is a time limit for relatives to declare a sale void. This paragraph which is under the heading "Family Tenure" and sub heading "Kibaja - kioruganda" reads:

The only time limit for the institution of proceedings to nullify a sale is that they must be G instituted within 3 months of the date on which the relatives first heard of the sale.
Then we have paragraph 569 which reads: H

An interested relative, who was absent at the time of the sale, is entitled to take action whenever he returns, provided he does not delay doing so more than 3 months after his return.
Finally there is paragraph 561 which reads: I
1983 TLR p140
MUNYERA J

Should the relative concerned not have been informed that a transaction has taken place they A have the right to invalidate the sale by bringing an action against the vendor, who must then return the purchase price he received, or allow the relatives to do so if he cannot find the money.
The question which may be asked again is whether the appellant was time-barred from B instituting these proceedings to nullify the sale. From the record the only evidence on whether or not the appellant was time-barred is that of the appellant himself who said that the shamba in dispute was purchased in December, 1979 and that the appellant was C absent from the village that is why he was late in instituting these proceedings. On the respondent's side we have her evidence in the primary Court to the effect that she bought the disputed shamba on 8/12/1979 and she paid the sum of shs. 40,000/= for it. D She never heard the appellant dispute this sale until only recently in October 1980 when he filed his suit. According to the court record, these proceedings were instituted in the Primary Court on 10/10/1980. The appellant did not say when he first heard of this sale. It is true from the evidence in the Primary court that this sale was made without E reference to the family. The appellant did not elaborate where he was from 8/12/79 to, say, 10/7/1980 i.e. three months before 10/10/80 when he instituted these proceedings. There is nothing to show in the proceedings that the appellant was away from the village for so long i.e. from or just before 8/12/79 to 10/7/1980. What the appellant has said in F his evidence cannot be taken to be evidence for his absence for so long. As such there is no concrete evidence to show that the appellant never heard of this sale from 8/12/79 to 10/7/1980.
There is a note in Cory and Hartnoll's book after paragraph 569 which reads:

A relative who lives who lives in the same village must take action within 3 months of the sale G since it is assumed that he must have heard of it when it took place.
This note just quoted above goes to show how the relative who wants to take action is H presumed to have knowledge of any sale of which he is interested and in order to rebut such presumption one would need to show by strong evidence that he was not in the village for a long time. There is no such evidence here. Indeed there is evidence from the respondent to the contrary. The evidence of the respondent is to the effect that the I appellant heard of the sale but he did nothing until very late when he decided to file this suit. I agree with the District Court A that the appellant is time-barred from instituting proceedings to nullify the sale of the disputed land. Since the rule in paragraph 568 of Cory and Hartnoll's book is mandatory, it follows that the appellant cannot be allowed to redeem the disputed land.
1983 TLR p141

Consequently, I dismiss this appeal with costs. B
Appeal dismissed.
1983 TLR p141
C
[zRPz]REPUBLIC v MT. 12153 L/CPL. WAGENYI 1983 TLR 141 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mfalila J

October 14, 1983
CRIMINAL REVISION 63 OF 1983 D
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Cancellation of bail conditions for smelling of alcohol - Witness remanded in court custody - Example of unjust use of magisterial powers.
-Headnote
The Senior District Magistrate of Mwanza Court upon entering the court room on 3rd E October, 1983, allegedly perceived the smell of alcohol. He subsequently cleared the court room and directed the public prosecutor to find out the source of the smell of alcohol. It was allegedly found out that the accused and one witness named Lt. Matui had taken liquor the previous day. The magistrate found it intolerable to have the F accused and witness reeking of liquor while they knew they were to appear in court that day. He adjourned the court to 10th October, 1983 and ordered the accused be remanded in custody as a penalty and had his bail condition cancelled. In addition the witness was ordered to be remanded in court custody till 12 noon that day. This case G came before the High Court for revision following the complaint of the accused's surety to the Supervisory Magistrate.
Held: The smell of alcohol per se could not be a ground for cancelling the accused's H bail conditions and subsequently remanding him in custody.
Case Information
Order accordingly.
No case referred to. I
1983 TLR p142
MFALILA J
[zJDz]Judgment
Mfalila, J.: I must say this situation is as unusual as it is sad. This is a perfect example A of unjust use of magisterial powers. A witness was remanded in custody and the accused had his bail cancelled because they were smelling of alcohol. This incident happened on 3/10/83. When the learned Senior District Magistrate Mr. Mutaki entered the court B room that morning, he according to the record, perceived the smell of alcohol. I do not feel sufficiently qualified to make an accurate precis of the proceedings, I will therefore reproduce them verbatim:

3/10/83 C
Coram: E.K. Mutaki SDM
Pros:Insp. William
Accused: Present

P.W.3 Lt. M. Matui, aged 33, Xtian sworn and states: D

Court: Before we proceed, I am feeling smell of liquor in this courtroom and I feel someone either the accused or the witness, the P.P. or the court clerk is smelling liquor. Someone have (sic) took liquor just before he came or late at night. Inspector E William please find out as I cannot conduct a court with drunkards in the courtroom.

Order: All be out of this chamber and the P.P. conduct inquiries outside.
Sgd. E.K. Mutaki SDM F
3/10/1983

P.P. I found out that both Lt. Matui the witness and the accused L/Cpl. Magenyi are smell (sic) liquor. G

Lt. M.F. Matui: I took liquor yesterday at 12 noon.

Accused: I took liquor yesterday at 7 p.m.

Court: I do not accept the explanation from both accused and Lt. M.F. Matui the witness. They must have taken alcohol late at H night while they knew they were to appear to court this time. I do not say they are drunk but they smell liquor a situation which I cannot tolerate.

Order: Hearing adjourned to 10/10/1983. Accused be remanded in custody as a penalty in coming to court with liquor in his brain. Bail condition cancelled till then. I
1983 TLR p143
MFALILA J

The witness Lt. Matui be remanded in court custody till 12 noon and he is warned strongly that A should he repeat this he will be dealt with severely.
Sgd. E.K. Mutaki SDM
3/10/83. B
Following this order the accused's surety complained to the Senior Resident Magistrate in charge and acting in his capacity as Supervisory Magistrate, he accepted the complaint against this order and suspended its operation pending perusal of the record C by this court. He then forwarded the record here for inspection and necessary orders.
I agree with the learned Supervisory Magistrate that the smell of alcohol per se could not be a ground for cancelling the accused's bail. I think the learned Senior District D Magistrate was being too sanctimonious. It would be better and fair if he learned to take into stride such prevalent human weaknesses as alcohol taking. It would have been different if these people had entered the court room in a drunken state but they were not and this is confirmed by the magistrate's own words in the record. It was not therefore E correct to say as he said in his order that he was cancelling the accused's bail and remanding him in custody "as a penalty in coming to court with liquor in his brain". He had no liquor in his brain, he only had a trace of it in his breath, and in human terms this cannot be sinful.

People wielding any sort of power over others should be careful not to bring in private F and personal idiosyncrasies in public decision making, this would inevitably lead to unjust results as it was in this case. With the hope that the learned Senior District Magistrate will refrain from such actions in future, I quash both his orders he made in respect of Lt. Matui and that cancelling bail of the accused. The bail is restored on its existing G conditions.

H Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p144

A

[zRPz]OMOKE OLOO v WEREMA MAGIRA 1983 TLR 144 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Munyera J

October 18, 1982

CIVIL APPEAL 43 OF 1981

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Objections to attachment - Objection suit - Whether only way B open to a claimant of property attached is objection proceedings - Order XXII rr. 57, 58, 59, 60, 61 and 62 Civil Procedure Code.

-Headnote

The appellant sued the respondent for the return of five head of cattle which were seized C at the respondent's instance. The respondent claimed that these were stolen from him by the appellant's son who had already been convicted of stealing a number of head of cattle from the respondent. The appellant brought an objection suit in respect of the D attachment, which was dismissed, the magistrate holding that the only way open to him was to bring objection proceedings under Order XXII rr. 57 and 58.

Held: (i) Order XXII rr. 57,58, 59, 60 and 61 do not provide that the only way open to E a party objecting to an attachment is through the objection proceedings;

(ii) a decision in objection proceedings would not render a subsequent suit on the same dispute res judicata and so a party can decide to bypass objection proceedings and resort to a suit to recover his wrongly seized property. F

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No case referred to. G

[zJDz]Judgment

Munyera, J.: The appellant was the plaintiff before the District Court of Musoma. He sued the respondent for the return of five head of cattle which were seized at the instance of the respondent. The story was that the appellant's son Otieno Amoke was convicted H of stealing a number of the respondent's cattle. On 19/1/1981 the court, on the application of the respondent, seized the suit cattle. It is not clear from the record of the trial court whether the cattle were seized pursuant to orders in the criminal case or in a civil case. Whatever was the case the appellant filed this suit on 3/2/1981, less than a I month after the seizure. The judgment was delivered on 15/8/1981 and the appellant's suit was dismissed. Hence this appeal. A

The trial magistrate found, and he was justified, that the appellant's son had his own home and took care of his own problems. The appellant had no legal responsibility for the latter's dark deeds. However the learned trial magistrate dismissed the suit. The reason turned around a point of law. In dismissing the suit he had this to say: B

> ..The only defect being, as pointed out above that the cause of action was based on the wrong premise. The correct avenue is for the plaintiff to file objection proceedings...save as otherwise stated above, the suit stands dismissed. C

In admitting the appeal for hearing my learned brother Chua minuted:

> Admit to consider whether the Resident Magistrate was correct to hold that the only avenue D available to appellant was objection proceedings.

On my part I have been unable to find any authority in support of the trial magistrate's proposition. I could only find provisions for procedure of investigating claims and objections in O.XXII rules 57, 58, 59, 60 and 61. I need not reproduce them here. E Suffice to say it that they don't provide that the only way open to a party objecting to an attachment is through the objection proceedings. I am fortified by rule 62 which provides: F

> Where a claim or an objection is preferred, the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit if any, the order shall be conclusive.

Nothing could be more express than the above provisions. It means that a decision in G objection proceedings would not render a subsequent suit on the same dispute res judicata. This being so a party can decide to bypass objection proceedings and resort to a suit to recover his wrongly seized property. In my opinion the learned trial H magistrate erred in dismissing the suit on that ground. Since he had found that the appellant's cattle ought not to have been seized he had no other choice except to order the return. I allow the appeal, I set aside the decision of the trial court and give judgment for the appellant. The five head A of cattle to be restored to him. He will also have his costs in both courts.

Appeal allowed.

[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v ELIATOSHA MOSHI AND ANOTHER 1983 TLR 146 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mushi J

May 3, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 96 OF 1982 C
Flynote
Labour Law - Oral contract of service - Failure to prepare oral contract of service - S.35 of the Employment Ordinance, Cap. 366.
Labour Law - Wages - Failure to keep record of wages - S.17 of the Terms and Regulation D of Wages Ordinance, Cap. 300.
Labour Law - Wages - Failure to pay statutory minimum wages to employees - S.12 of the Terms and Regulation of Wages Ordinance, Cap. 300.
Labour Law - Workmen's Compensation - Failure to insure against workmen's E compensation liability - S.25 of the Workmen's Compensation Ordinance, Cap. 263.
-Headnote
The respondents were partners running a fleet of taxis. They had engaged the F complainant one Mwinyasumba Mrema as a driver of the taxi on the agreement that his remuneration per day be equal to 20% of every day's collection. The complainant was subsequently fired on 4th August 1980 having worked since 13th February, 1973. On termination a claim for payment of wages in lieu of leave and other terminal benefits was G preferred through JUWATA, the worker's trade union. The respondents apparently refused to pay the claims. They were subsequently variously charged for failure to prepare an oral contract of service c/s 35 (1) (2) and (3) of Cap. 366: failure to keep a record of wages c/s 17(1) of Cap. 300; failure to pay the statutory minimum wages c/s H 12 of Cap. 300 and failure to insure themselves against workmen's compensation liability c/s 25(1) and (2) of Cap. 263. The trial court acquitted the respondents on grounds that no proof had been provided to show that the complainant was an employee within the meaning of the law to impose liability on the respondents. The D.P.P. I subsequently appealed to the High Court.
1983 TLR p147
MUSHI J
Held: the complainant could not be said to have been a workman and was not in a A contract of service with the respondents but was on an agreement for hire.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
No case referred to. B
H.J. Ndolezi for the appellant.
[zJDz]Judgment

Mushi, J.: The appellant in this appeal is the Director of Public Prosecutions, who in C short is normally referred to as D.P.P. The respondents are Eliatosha Moshi - 1st respondent and Denis Mrema - 2nd respondent. The respondents were charged with four counts all of which arose from labour laws: On the first count, they were charged with the offence of failing to prepare oral contract of service c/s 35 (1) (2) and (3) of D Cap. 366. On the second count, they were charged with the offence of failure to keep record of wages c/s 17 (1) of Cap. 300. On the third count, they were charged with the offence of failure to insure themselves against workmen's compensation liability c/s 25 (1) (2) of Cap. 263. And on the fourth count the respondents were charged with failure E to pay statutory minimum wages to employees c/s of Cap. 300.

After a full trial in the District Court, the respondents were acquitted on all four counts. On the first count, the learned trial magistrate found that the charge was duplex as it F charged more than one offence in one count. In this view, the respondents were embarrassed. On the second count the trial magistrate found that the prosecution did not establish that the complainant was an employee within the meaning of the law to create the liability on them as charged. On the third count, the learned trial magistrate found that G it was not proved that the complainant was a workman as envisaged under section 2 of Cap. 263, and thus the respondents were not under obligations to insure themselves. And on the fourth count, the trial magistrate found that the count was riddled with duplicity which was incurable. The D.P.P., was seriously aggrieved, he says, by the H decision of the trial court and he has appealed to this court, on several grounds in which he alleges that the learned trial magistrate made an error in his findings. Substantively there are two grounds. The first one, the D.P.P. alleges that the trial magistrate was wrong in holding that there was any duplicity - in count one - and I think in count four as I well and that even if there was such a duplicity, it did not occasion miscarriage of Justice. Secondly the trial magistrate erred in A holding that the complainant was not an employee in the second count and similarly a workman in the third count.

This appeal has raised very important and complex issues with immense consequences in so far as the labour laws are concerned. But the manner the prosecution was handled at B the trial and even the unsubstantiated arguments in the appeal, have to a large extent hampered exhaustive and thorough examination of the law. We are bound by the record and I shall try to make use of what facts there are to decide the appeal.

There is a basic ingredient in all four counts in the absence of which none of the counts C can survive. And this is whether the complainant was an employee or a worker of the respondents. If the complainant was not an employee or a worker as was found by the trial magistrate, then the whole prosecution case collapses. This is why I requested the D learned State Attorney to argue ground number five first as it is in this ground which is challenging the finding of the trial court that the complainant was not a worker.

Now, what was the evidence before the court? Succinctly the prosecution case is as put by the complainant in his evidence which I quote: E

PW.1: Mwinyisumba Mrema,

I know the accused persons for they had employed me as from 13/2/1973 to 4/8/1980. They had employed me to drive their taxi Rg. No. TDZ 404. The accused employed me to drive their F taxi and we agreed that they should pay me Shs. 300/= per month. We did not sign any agreement, nevertheless they honoured their contract and they used to pay me shs 300/= per month until July, 1980. I was not signing for receipt of my salary; and as such there were no G wage records. The accused persons terminated me in August, 1980 and I complained to JUWATA for the payment of leave and other terminal benefits.

The respondents denied having employed the complainant but agreed to have given him H a taxi to drive on condition that he deducts Shs. 20/= for each shs. 100/= he earned for the hire of the taxi. Let me quote what the first respondent Eliatosha said:

I am a resident of Mwanza Town. I am a businessman owning a fleet of taxis. I am a partner I with the 2nd accused. Originally we had 6 taxis. In 1980 we had three taxis. All the taxis were being driven by drivers. We had A made a verbal agreement with the drivers to the effect that each driver's remuneration was a percentage of what each collects per day; that is for every Shs. 100/= the driver was to deduct shs 20/=. Each driver was to stay with the taxi at home. There was no other B agreement...sometime in 1974, PW.1 approached me to request to drive one of our taxi for he had been dismissed... We gave him one taxi and explained him that he was being given the taxi on condition that he was paid Shs. 20/= for every Shs. 100/= collected by him. C

The first respondent was supported by the 2nd respondent who categorically denied to have employed the complainant on a monthly wage basis. There was also another defence witness one Kasian Elias. This Kasian told the court that he was one of the D drivers driving the respondent's taxis. He said that he was staying with the taxi and gets Shs. 20/- for each Shs. 100/= he collected from the hire of the taxi. This Kasian told the court that the complainant who was driving one of the respondent's taxis was on similar terms.

The learned trial magistrate carefully examined the evidence before him and after E thorough scrutiny he believed the defence evidence. Thus he came to the conclusion that the complainant was paid on commission basis and that such payment of commission did not amount to a wage or salary as envisaged by law and consequently, he concluded that F the complainant was not a workman within the meaning of section 2 of Cap. 263.

There seems to be unanimity on the correctness of the finding that the complainant's remuneration was on commission basis. The learned State Attorney seems to agree that that could be so. On my part, I am satisfied that the learned trial magistrate was fully G justified on the evidence available to believe the defence evidence and inevitably came to the conclusion that the remuneration was on 20% basis for each Shs. 100/= collected.

The learned State Attorney went further and argued that in whatever manner the H complainant was paid, on commission or otherwise, such payment could not be made unless there was a relationship between the complainant and the respondent and the learned State

Attorney, stated that relationship was none other but a contract of service bringing the case squarely under Section 2 of Cap 263. The section which the learned State Attorney is relying upon reads thus: I

1983 TLR p150

MUSHI J

Workman means any person who has, either before or after the commencement of this A Ordinance, entered into or work under a contract of service of apprenticeship with an employer, whether by way of manual labour, or otherwise, whether the contract is express or implied, is oral or in writing, whether the remuneration is calculated by time or by work done, B and whether by the day, week, month or for any longer period.

The question is whether the agreement between the complainant and respondents amounted to a contract of service with an employer as stated in the section above. Here C is where I stated above that the prosecution starved us and has in a way prevented us from exhaustively and lucidly dealing with important issues raised in this appeal. However from little that I can gather from the evidence; the answer to the above question is clearly in the negative. The agreement between the complainant and the D respondents did not amount to a contract of service between employer and employee. There was certainly an agreement between the complainant and the respondent. What sort of an agreement was it? Was it an agreement for the complainant to render service on one part and the respondents to pay specific amount on the other part? The E complainant told the court that the respondent employed him at an agreed monthly wage.

The trial magistrate found this allegation to be false but found that he was paid commission of Shs. 20/= per each Shs. 100/= earned. How was the work being done? There was evidence which was believed by the court to the effect that the complainant F was given the taxi which he kept at his home. The way I understand this is that the respondents gave the taxi to the complainant to go and use it and whatever income he gets by carrying passengers on hire he should deduct Shs. 20/= for each Shs. 100/=. Put G it in a different way one can say that the complainant was hiring the vehicle from the respondents for use at Shs. 80/= per each Shs. 100/= he gets. How the complainant was to do the work was to be decided by himself. If the complainant did not work and thus earned nothing, he could not go to the respondents and say - look, you fellow I have done my work can I have my wage or salary? To the contrary if the complainant H did not remit anything for a day, the respondents could ask - Look you fellow what is happening? Are you not using the taxi? If you do not want money you had better give it back to me and I shall give it to someone else. The complainant was working independently and was, I think, using the vehicle as if it was his own. Under these I circumstances, the complainant could not be said to have been a workman for the respondents and he was not in contract of service with A the respondents but he was on an agreement for hire and used the taxi of the respondents and sharing the proceeds on 80/20 per cent basis. This is enough to dispose of the whole appeal. However, if, I am wrong on this count I uphold the findings of the learned trial magistrate on 1st, 2nd and 4th counts for generally similar reasons as those B given by him. The appeal is dismissed on all counts.

1983 TLR p151

C Appeal dismissed.
1983 TLR p151
D
[zRPz]DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS v YAHAYA UPANGA AND ANOTHER 1983 TLR 151 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Korosso J

May 19, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 329 OF 1982
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Prolonged adjournments of criminal case - Absence of E complainant/public prosecutor - Discharge of accused under section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Cap. 20.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Power of court to control and regulate own proceedings - Power to grant or refuse adjournment - S. 201 of the Criminal Procedure Code. F
-Headnote
This is an appeal lodged by the Director of Public Prosecutions against the decision of the trial court which acquitted the respondents who had been charged with the offence of stealing by public servant c/ss. 270 and 265 of the Penal Code. The case had over a G period of five months been severally adjourned variously for the absence of the magistrate, the public prosecutor and the witnesses. Ultimately the court dismissed the charge and acquitted the respondents under the provisions of section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code. H
Held: (i) If under any circumstances the court refuses to grant an adjournment then it may dismiss the charge and discharge the accused in which case the prosecution could subsequently recharge the suspect of the same offence based on identical facts: I

(ii) if the court refuses to adjourn the case after an application for adjournment whether or not the case was ready for hearing on
1983 TLR p152
KOROSSO J
the day on which the refusal is made and if the circumstances of the case are exceptional A the court may invoke its inherent power by dismissing the charge and acquitting the accused.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
Cases referred to: B

1. D.P.P. v Kunduchi Sisal Estate, Cr. App. No., 103/1980 (unreported)
2. D.P.P. v Leonard Rugemereza & 7 Others, Cr. App. No. 188/1980 (unreported) C
3. D.P.P. v Martin Nguma & Others, Cr. App. No. 48 & 69 of 1976.

M.M.K. Mtaki for the appellant.

[zJDz]Judgment
Korosso, J.: This an appeal lodged by the director of Public Prosecutions against the D decision of the trial court which acquitted the 1st accused one Yahaya Upanga and the 2nd accused one Zakaria Ngonyani who were charged with the offence of stealing by E person employed in the public service c/ss. 270 and 265 of the Penal Code.
It is convenient that I give a brief history of these proceedings the subject of this appeal. The accused were formally charged before the District court of Mwanza on 27/5/1982. F From then to 24/9/1982, the case had been fixed for hearing on 10/9/1982; 24/9/1982 and on 23/10/82. On 10/9/82 the hearing did not take place because the trial Magistrate was reportedly on safari. The hearing was adjourned to 24/9/82 on which date the witnesses who had attended court on 10/9/82 had been warned to attend court.

On 24/9/1982, the hearing did not take place because the witnesses who had been G bound over to appear did not turn up. The hearing was consequently adjourned to 27/10.1982. On 27/10/1982 the prosecutor is recorded as being absent. The court proceeded to dismiss the charge and acquit the accused under the provisions of section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code. H
Mr. Mtaki, the State Attorney representing the Republic cited the case of D.P.P. v Kunduchi Sisal Estate, Criminal Appeal No. 103/80 decided by the late Sir Philip Biron then the judge of the High Court and that the same case was followed in the case of D.P.P. v Leonard Rugemereza and 7 Others, Criminal Appeal No. 188/80, I decided by Mr. Justice Chua, (unreported). I have had time to read
1983 TLR p153
KOROSSO J
both judgments. Both appeals involved consideration of the provisions of section 198 of A the Criminal Procedure Code under which the subordinate courts had acted, resulting in the discharge of the accused. In allowing the appeal in D.P.P. v Kunduchi Sisal Estate case His Lordship observed, thus, I quote: B

As I think sufficiently demonstrated the person who failed to appear on 12th May, 1980 when the case was set down for hearing was not the complainant. And further still the case was not dismissed on the first day it was set down for hearing. Therefore section 198 of the Criminal C Procedure Code couldn't have been invoked. I must confess that I find it distasteful particularly on criminal matters to determine a case on pure technicality, but as this case was never heard on its merits which is the proper way a case should be disposed of but dismissed on technicality, I have not the slightest compunction in applying the strict letter of D the law and restoring it on a technicality.
Obviously this case is not relevant to the facts in the case the subject of this appeal as the accused were acquitted under the provisions of section 198 of the Criminal Procedure E Code on the absence of the Public Prosecutor who on the authority of the case of D.P.P. v Martin Nguma and Others was held to be the complainant in all cases in which the Republic is being represented by the State Attorney or the Public Prosecutor.

In the course of writing judgment in the case of D.P.P. v. Leonard Rugemereza and 7 F Others, Criminal Appeal No. 188/80, Mr. Justice Chua referred to the celebrated case of D.P.P. v Martin Nguma and Others, Criminal Appeal Nos, 48 and 69/76 decided by the defunct Court of Appeal of Eastern Africa.

In the case of D.P.P. v Martin Nguma referred to previously supra, the meaning of the G word complainant found in section 198 of the C.P.C. was fully dealt with. It was held that where a person complains directly to the magistrate in a criminal matter then that person is a complainant in that particular case. If, however, the same person goes and complains directly to the police and the police take such a complaint to the Court then H the Republic or the Public Prosecutor representing the Republic becomes the complainant and the victim of the wrong complained of becomes a witness for the purpose of proving the alleged wrong. Undoubtedly Mr. Justice Chua had in mind the real meaning of the word complainant as found in section 198 of the C.P.C. when I dealing with the case of D.P.P. v.

1983 TLR p154

KOROSSO J

Leonard Rugemereza referred to above. He made the following observations. I quote: A

...there is no rule of law that requires that the same prosecutor who appears at the time of fixing a hearing date should appear or conduct the hearing; and surely for purposes of B representation the Republic cannot be said to have been absent solely because the person who was anticipated to conduct the case was absent. The presence of prosecutor Mbulu constituted presence by the Republic. C

On the authority of the celebrated case of Martin Nguma and Others referred to above it is now settled that a Public Prosecutor or a State Attorney or the Director of Public Prosecutions for that matter representing the Republic in any criminal proceedings is the D complainant, and further that the presence of the complainant must be physical presence and not constructive presence. The relevant portion of the Eastern Africa Court of Appeal's Judgment reads thus, I quote:

We think that presence must be physical presence and cannot be constructive presence or E non-presence. the advocate for the appellants would construe appearance to mean physical appearance combined with the ability of the complainant there and then to proceed with the conduct and hearing of the case. We are not satisfied that such an extended meaning can be F put on the words appearance.

Coming now to the instant appeal, I find that the facts in this case are clearly distinguishable and distinct from those obtaining in the case of D.P.P. v Leonard G Rugemereza and Others referred to supra in the judgment. In the instant case the subject of this appeal the public Prosecutor then the statutorily recognised complaint was not physically present in court and nobody appeared to explain or plead for his absence. Conversely, in the case of D.P.P. v Leonard Rugemereza and 7 Others, one Public H Prosecutor was physically present in court. Mr. Mtaki, the State Attorney representing the Republic in this appeal submitted before me that the case was a serious one and so the trial Magistrate should not have very lightly dismissed the charge and acquitted the accused. He went on to say that it is possible for one public prosecutor to conduct I prosecution before two Magistrates. He stated that the trial Magistrate should have adjourned the case so as to find out what had actually caused the prosecutor's A absence. He concluded by saying that the trial magistrate should have made an effort to look for the prosecutor.

1983 TLR p155
KOROSSO J
It is common knowledge that at the Mwanza Resident Magistrate's Court there are more Magistrates than one. Invariably the Magistrate in charge of the station prepares a B weekly case list showing cases assigned to each and every Magistrate. These weekly case lists are distributed to the prosecutors. The prosecutor in charge of other prosecutors is responsible for ensuring that there is a sufficient number of prosecutors for assigning to every magistrate. It is also a long established practice for court proceedings C to start at 9.00 a.m. or thereabouts. If the public prosecutor was not physically present in the court at the usual time where was he? If the prosecutor assigned to the trial magistrate had problems why could he not see the trial Magistrate before the court work started? If there were not sufficient number of prosecutors at the station it was the D inescapable duty of the officer in charge of the prosecutors to so inform the trial Magistrate. It is both highly derogatory and ridiculous to expect the trial Magistrate to have gone about chasing and hunting for prosecutors in their offices or in the corridors of the court building. The Magistrate's role is the adjudication of cases and not the E mobilisation of public prosecutors. Court should never allow itself to be placed in a position where it is forced to conduct its court proceedings according to the whims, likes and dislikes of Public Prosecutors. A Public Prosecutor attached to the court is equally an officer of the court, junior to the Magistrate and he must perform his court work F under the superintendence, direction and guidance of the Magistrate and not vice versa.
Referring again to the case of D.P.P v Leonard Rugemereza, Mr. Justice Chua had time to refer to the inherent power of the court on the principle enunciated in the case of G D.P.P.v Martin Nguma and Others. In his judgment Mr. Justice Chua observed thus, I quote:

I agree, however, that a period of over two years is inordinately long to have to prosecute such a case. The remedy, however, is not in acquitting them. The trial Magistrate could have invoked H the inherent power of the court to discharge the accused, but the effect of such an order has been held to have the effect as an order under Section 86 (a) of the C.P.C. in which case the prosecution could bring the same charge the next day. I
1983 TLR p156
KOROSSO J
I fully agree with His Lordship's observation about the court's inherent power that can be A invoked say where after repeated adjournments the court refuses to grant further adjournment. However, I have a feeling that his Lordship has restricted very much the applicability of the court's inherent power. Its applicability is wider than that envisaged in B that judgment. In this respect it is appropriate that I quote the relevant portion of the Court of Appeal's judgment in the case of D.P.P. v Martin Nguma and Others. It reads thus:

The fact that the legislature has empowered the court in terms of section 201 of the C.P.C. to C grant or refuse an adjournment necessarily implies that a court has power and authority to enforce an order, it makes. To hold otherwise would make the power granted to the court meaningless or illusory. A court must within reason have the power to control and regulate its D own proceedings in order to prevent itself from being emasculated or rendered impotent. Some of these regulatory powers derive from a court's inherent power to control its own proceedings which originate from Common law or the very nature of its function not E necessarily from status; such as the power to punish summarily for contempt. We believe that a court can in such circumstances of emergency clothed as it with inherent power to control its own proceedings, dismiss the charge and discharge the accused despite lack of statutory F provisions to that effect. We think that such a discharge and dismissal would be sufficient exercise of the courts inherent power to regulate its own proceedings and that an order of acquittal unless in the most exceptional circumstances is unnecessary and unsuitable for that G purpose. (The underlining is mine). An order of the court in the exercise of its inherent power must be fair and reasonable and in exercising it a court must look at a matter realistically and keep in view and in balance the rights of an accused person and the duty of the prosecution to bring miscreants to justice.

As I see it the quoted passage of Court Appeal's judgment has two sets of rules. The H first rule is that if under any circumstances the court refuses to grant the application for adjournment then it may dismiss the charge and discharge the accused in which case the prosecution could subsequently recharge the suspect of the same offence based on I identical facts. The second rule which I have emphasized by underlining it is the court refuses to adjourn the case after an application A for adjournment whether or not the case was ready for hearing on that day on which the refusal is made and if the circumstances of the case are exceptional the court may invoke its inherent power by dismissing the charge and acquitting the accused. The court emphasises that the invocation of the inherent power should be resorted to when it is B strictly necessary and desirable, and that it should be exercised judicially.

1983 TLR p157

KOROSSO J

The question to ask is whether we have in our courts cases which may suitably qualify as being exceptional circumstances. The answer to my knowledge must be an emphatic C "yes". There are hundreds of cases in many of our courts which are of exceptional circumstances. In many courts in this country there are many cases pending for months and even years in the traffic registries, while the unfortunate accused keep on paying frequent pilgrimage to the court. Some of them may only involve the offence of driving D motor vehicle with defective brakes or some minor accidents occasioning damage to the accused's own motor vehicle. There are cases of simple thefts involving hundreds of shillings as well as offences of pick pocketing. There are offences of being found in possession of stolen property or property suspected of being unlawfully obtained. There E are offences of unlawfully being found within the harbour premises; being found in possession of bangi; being a rogue and vagabond. The suspects of these offences are more often than not destitute persons whom nobody would dare stand surety for. The result being that they are invariably remanded in prison at great government expense. F There should be no justifiable cause for these petty criminal cases to be adjourned for more than three times without the court taking an action by invoking one of these two rules enumerated in the case of D.P.P. v Martin Nguma and Others. Many years since G the inception of post independence legal system in the country the courts have always found themselves in a dilemma in certain very trying and exceptional circumstances mainly for complete absence of an express statutory provision purposely legislated to enable the courts in the country to regulate and effectively control their judicial H proceedings. The courts should henceforth not allow this inexcusable stagnation of the cases filed in court because this is not at all compatible with an administration of justice worthy of a good reputation. The Magistrates, one and all, are urged to carefully review their congested traffic and criminal registries and see if there are cases for which there are exceptional circumstances demanding immediate action by sweeping clean their long I pending cases after prior caution and warning to the prosecutors. This is particularly desirable bearing in mind the A prevailing obvious notorious fact that our prisons today all over the country are appallingly over-crowded; apparently constituting a potential danger to the lives of the inmates who, after all, are an essential part of our reliable human resources so vital for development in the country. B

With the foregone grounds I feel resolutely inclined to uphold the trial magistrate's order for acquittal.

C Appeal dismissed.

D

[zRPz]KICHELE MRANGE v REPULIC 1983 TLR 158 (HC)

Court HighCourt of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mwaikasu J

March 2, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 261 OF 1982
Flynote
Evidence - Identification of the accused - When identification parade may not be necessary. E
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Order for compensation under the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972 - When trial court overlooks making of such order High Court may rectify.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Power of High Court to alter finding of lower court - Ss. F 319 and 329 of Criminal Procedure Code, Cap. 20.
-Headnote

The appellant who was appealing against conviction and sentence based his appeal on the ground that the circumstances when the offence is alleged to have been committed G were such that he could not have been properly identified and there was no identification parade to confirm the same. The appellant was one of nine accused persons who were subsequently convicted and sentenced for robbery with violence c/ss. 285 and 286 of the Penal Code, Cap. 16. H

Held: (i) There was evidence that the complainants were not taken by great surprise when the appellants invaded their house for robbery and there was ample opportunity to identify them such that an identification parade could be dispensed with;

(ii) where the trial court overlooks the requirement to order compensation under I the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972 it still has power to order such compensation at any other later stage either on application of the A owner of the property or on its own motion provided it is done in the presence of the person against whom it is made;

(iii) the appellate court has no power to alter the finding of the trial court to involve the convicting of an accused for an offence with which he was not charged for he B would be denied an opportunity to put forward a defence.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

Case referred to: C

Sakila v Republic [1967] E.A. 403

S. Kidela for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwaikasu, J.: This appeal centres on the issue of identification of the accused persons D one of whom was the appellant, as the proper persons who invaded the complaint's home at night, broke into and robbed him of his various properties which were the subject of the charge. E

The appellant, one Kichele s/o Mrange was one of the nine accused persons who stood charged before the lower court with the offence of robbery with violence c/ss.285 and 286 of the Penal Code Cap.16. The appellant was listed as the third accused. They all pleaded not guilty to the charge. However, subsequently the appellant was convicted of F the offence charged alongside with few others. He was sentenced to seven years of imprisonment. Unfortunately the trial magistrate made no order for compensation as required under the Minimum Sentences Act 1972. This however can easily be rectified by this court as empowered under the said Act. G

This appeal is therefore against such conviction and sentence. As stated earlier, the appellant's grounds of appeal are in the main to the effect that the circumstances when the offence is alleged to have been committed were such that he could not have been properly identified, and there was no identification parade to confirm the same. H

A brief account of what took place on the day of the incident will perhaps, enable us appreciate the circumstances under which this offence is alleged to have been committed. The P.W.1, one

Martin Lumanilo is the husband of the P.W.5, one Eliza d/o Petro. On the 25th of August 1980, at about 1.00 a.m. while the P.W.1 and P.W.5 I were asleep in their dwelling house, they heard a big bang on the door of their house. It was done with a heavy stone. This awoke them up. The second A bang broke the door and the thieves got the opportunity to enter it. The P.W.1 had by then put on a head lamp and lit the intruders well. The P.W.15 could then identify clearly the 3rd, 6th and 7th accused, the 3rd being the appellant. The accused too had their B own torches. The 6th accused is said to have been holding a gun. Then a fierce dialogue began. The burglars demanded, after firing a shot on the wall, that the P.W.1 should lie down but he refused. This enraged them and it was ordered that he be shot. This was fulfilled by shooting the P.W.1 in the stomach near the waist, after which he fell down. C Believing that the P.W.1 was dead, they began collecting every valuable item from the house all of which amounted to a total value of Shs. 56,100/=; the property of the said Martin Lumanilo, and made away with it. Later the P.W.1 was helped by his neighbours who had responded to the victim's alarm, and received medical treatment at Bugando hospital, and recovered.

1983 TLR p160

MWAIKASU J

Such then were the circumstances surrounding the commission of the offence and the D identification of the appellant.

The learned counsel for the Republic has submitted and I think quite rightly so that the appellant was, though not known to the complainants before, clearly identified as one of the robbers who broke into their house and stole the goods as narrated in the charge E sheet, because at the time the appellant and the other identified co-accused broke into the complainants' house and carried out the robbery there was enough light which enabled the victims to identify them clearly. He therefore supported the lower court's conviction.

I have no reason to differ from such view as I am fully satisfied that there was ample F evidence by the P.W.1 and P.W.5 to implicate the culprits in the offence in question. As testified by the P.W.1 the two witnesses were not taken by great surprise, rather they had steady minds as they got up and prepared themselves to face the trespassers by G having light on. They did, in fact even have some time of arguing with the culprits as the P.W.1 resisted their demand for him to lie down which then cost him a bullet in the stomach.

With such evidence, I cannot but uphold the finding of the lower court as to the guilt of the appellant and dismiss this appeal. The sentence imposed is the minimum prescribed H by law under the Minimum Sentences Act 1972, and there is no reason to disturb it.

Having thus disposed of the appeal, two more questions attracted my attention. One concerns compensation and the other, the offence as charged before the lower court. As I stated earlier, the trial magistrate did not make any order for compensation by the accused, including the appellant for the complainants' lost property. This he was duty A bound to do under the Minimum Sentences Act 1972. Having overlooked such requirement on the day he delivered his judgment he still had the power at any other later stage either on the application of the owner of the property concerned or on its own motion, to order such compensation; provided that such order shall be made in the B presence of the person against whom it is made. That is the provision under s. 7(1) (2) (3) of the said Minimum Sentences Act. 1972. As the appellant did not appear and the other convicted accused have not appealed I exercise my revisional powers in respect of such other accused persons and order that they be summoned before the trial court to C hear about such order for compensation which is hereby required to make.

1983 TLR p161

MWAIKASU J

The final point concerns the offence itself. The accused were charged with and convicted of the offence of robbery with violence only. Yet the evidence established that the D accused broke into the complainants' dwelling house at 1 a.m and thereafter in the same house robbed them of their properties as stated in the charge. This then aroused my attention and I had to ask myself the question. "Was this not a case for burglary as well, c/s 294(1) of the Penal Code?'.

Burglary, as provided for under the above section is, among other things "the breaking E and entering, at night any building... used as a human dwelling with intent to commit a felony therein."

Here the complainants' dwelling house was broken into and entered at night. The accompanying intent behind such burglary was to rob the complainants, and this was F done. So the robbery was committed in such setting, that is the burglary, as the felony for which the accused had intended when they broke into such building. Robbery, is in fact an aggravated theft. Thus, in such circumstances, the accused should have been charged with and convicted of the offences of burglary c/s 294 (1) of the Penal Code, G on the 1st count, and robbery with violence c/ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code, on the 2nd count, and sentenced accordingly.

However, in considering whether this was fit cause to exercise the powers of this court as provided for under s.319 (1) (a) (ii) and s. 329 (1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure H Code, Cap. 20, so as to alter the finding the lower court and convict the three accused-appellant (3rd accused), 6th and 7th accused, of such offence of burglary, I have come to a settled view that, since the three accused were not charged with such offence before the lower court this court cannot properly exercise such power as provided for under the I aforementioned sections. This, I think was well considered and settled by this court in A the case of Sakila v Republic [1967] E.A. 403.

In that case the appellant had been charged with and convicted for the offence of defilement of a girl under the age of twelve years c/s 136(1) of the Penal Code, yet in the B course of the trial, the learned trial magistrate found as a fact that the girl was between the age of twelve and thirteen years, so that no offence had been committed. On appeal it was urged by the Republic that the High Court, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, could under the provision of s. 319(1) (a) (ii) of the Criminal Procedure C Code, alter the finding to one of guilty of rape c/s 131 of the Penal Code. Platt, J. as he then was, rejected such a proposition in the following terms:

The purpose of a charge is to inform an accused what it is that he is alleged to have done which contravenes the law. If the prosecution fails to prove that charge, although it might D successfully prove another charge the accused is entitled to be acquitted... In my view it would be unjust to read the words "alter the finding" as being wide enough to enable the court on appeal to alter the finding from guilty of defilement to guilty of rape, since that would involve E convicting the accused of an offence with which he was not charged, and therefore had no opportunity to put forward a defence....

Although it could be argued that the case before his Lordship was one of attempt to F convict a person who had been acquitted of one offence, of another offence for which there had been no provision for an alternative verdict, yet the principle remains that in that case as in the instant case, they had not previously been charged with the other offence of which he could possibly be convicted.

I am the more fortified in such view upon reading the A.I.R Commentaries on "the Code G of Criminal procedure' (1898) of India Vol. 11, at p. 2825 by Chitaleyd Appu Rao, (6th Edn.), where the learned authors, while considering a provision of s. 423(i) (b) of 1898 Indian Criminal Procedure Code, very similar to ours under consideration, put a H very pertinent question thus:

But can an appellate court alter the finding in such a way that the altered offence was neither charged in the trial court nor was one for which the accused could have been convicted under I the provisions of ss. 237 and 238 (which sections provided for alternative verdicts)?

1983 TLR p163

To such question the answer was the general trend of opinion is that it cannot do so. A

I am satisfied, therefore, that because no charge had been preferred against the three accused in respect of the offence of burglary at any stage in the course of the trial this court does not have the power to alter the finding of the lower court as to find the B accused guilty of the burglary offence. It is, however, hoped that, in future this observation will be noted by all concerned with the institution of criminal charges and the adjudication of cases thereof.

This appeal, therefore is dismissed in its entirety, and it is hereby so ordered. C

Appeal dismissed.

1983 TLR p163

D

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v THOMAS s/o MUHAJA 1983 TLR 163 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Mfalila J

November 25, 1983

CRIMINAL REVISION 38 OF 1982

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Compounding of offences under section 17 (a), E Business Licensing Act, 1972 and sections 4 and 5 of the Hotel Levy Act, 1972 - Procedure to be followed.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Internal Revenue Officer compounding offences without following laid down regulations, i.e. admission of the payer in writing - Order unlawful. F
-Headnote
The accused was a businessman at Muleba in Kagera Region. His alleged offences in respect of non-payment of business licence fees under the Business Licensing Act, 1972 and the Hotel Levy Act of the same year were compounded by the Internal Revenue G Officer. The District Court of Muleba District had ordered the accused to pay the fees together with a fine as applied by the Internal Revenue Officer. Upon the accused's failure to make the payment, the District Court referred the issue to the High Court for confirmation of the order or otherwise against the accused, before the District Court H could execute its own order.
Held: (i) both under the Hotel Levy Act, 1972 and the Business Licensing Act 1972, the Commissioner (of Income Tax) is empowered to compound offences committed I under the Regulations, but both Acts give one important condition, namely that the power to compound the offences shall only be exercised where the person admits in writing that A he has committed the offence;
1983 TLR p164
MFALILA J

(ii) where there is no written admission by the accused or where the liability is disputed, the Commissioner of Income Tax would have no power to compound the offences, he could only take the liable person to court. B
Case Information
Order accordingly.
No case referred to. C
[zJDz]Judgment
Mfalila, J.: It would appear that the accused in this case Thomas Muhaja is a businessman at Muleba in Kagera Region. It is not clear in what kind of business the accused is engaged, but it appears that hotel business is one of these. On 15.8.90 the D Internal Revenue Officer at Muleba made the following communication to the District Court:

I, S. Kimasha, Internal Revenue Officer at Muleba District, Kagera Region, do hereby apply for E a Court Order to payment of Business Licence fees with fine assessable (sic.) to a total amount Shs. 2,256/25 and Hotel Levy shs. 5,785/= by one Thomas Muhaja of Muleba district Minor Settlement.

Under section 17(a) of Act No. 25/72 and section (sic.) 4 and 5 of Hotel Levy Act 1972 the F trader was compounded of the offences under section 20 and 12 of the Acts respectively by the Regional Finance Officer Bukoba on 16/5/80 and 15/5/1989 respectively.

He had promised to cover the same but in vain. I pray your honourable court to summon the G trader and order the same to be paid.
The District Court duly issued the summons as prayed, it is not clear under which H sections of either of the two enactments. The accused duly appeared and upon being questioned he told the district court that he was not prepared to pay the fine imposed by the Regional Finance officer because he did not agree with the amount and he asked for time to enable him to see the Finance Officer about this problem. When he next I appeared in court he announced that he and the Regional Finance Officer did not come to any amicable agreement and he indicated that in the circumstances he would pay the fine imposed by A the authorities, but he asked to be allowed to pay the amount by instalments in view of his other financial commitments. The court allowed him to do this in three monthly instalments. But by May, 1981 the accused still had not paid a single instalment, the B district court on its own referred the issue to this court and that the High Court should confirm or otherwise its order against the accused, before that court executes its own order.

1983 TLR p165
MFALILA J
Neither of these two enactments provides for this type of procedure as was adopted by C both the Internal Revenue Officer and the district court at Muleba. Indeed it can be said that the Internal Revenue Officer found himself with this problem because he did not follow the procedure laid down for compounding offences both under the Business Licensing Act and the Hotel Levy Act.
Both under the Hotel Levy Act and the Business Licensing Act the commissioner is empowered to compound offences committed under the Regulations, but both Acts give D one important condition namely that the power to compound the offence shall only be exercised where the person admits in writing that he has committed the offence. In this particular case not only is there no written admission by the accused, but he in fact disputed his liability. In these circumstances the commissioner had no power to E compound the offences. The accused could only be taken to Court.
When this matter was referred here by the District Court of Muleba it was decided to exercise revisional jurisdiction under the provisions of sections 20 (3) of the Business F Licensing Act and 12 (3) of the Hotel Levy Act under which the accused could have successfully appealed against the Commissioner's order.
As the Commissioner purported to compound the offences under those two Act without complying with conditions laid down in those Acts, his orders were unlawful and the G accused was under no obligations to comply with them.
For these reasons the fines imposed by the Commissioner are set aside. The Commissioner can proceed against the accused under other provisions of the Act and the Regulations made thereunder. H
Order accordingly.
1983 TLR p166
A
[zRPz]LAURENCE MPINGA v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 166 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mtwara
Judge Samatta J

June 15, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 16 OF 1980
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Appeal against a conviction based on an unequivocal B plea of guilty - Such appeal cannot be sustained - Magistrates Courts Act, 1963, section 16(2) (a) - Appeal against sentence may stand.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Conviction on plea of guilty - Circumstance on which C appeal may stand.
-Headnote
The appellant in this case was convicted on his "own plea of guilty", of robbery contrary to s. 285 of the Penal Code, Cap. 16. He was alleged to have robbed a school girl, aged 15, of shs. 20/=. He was convicted and sentenced under s.5(b) of the Minimum D Sentences Act, 1972 to seven years' imprisonment. This is a second appeal after his first appeal from the Primary Court to the District Court was dismissed.
Held: (i) An appeal against a conviction based on an unequivocal plea of guilty generally E cannot be sustained, although an appeal against sentence may stand;

(ii) an accused person who has been convicted by any court of an offence "on his own plea of guilty" may appeal against the conviction to a higher court on any of the following grounds: F

1. that, even taking into consideration the admitted facts, his plea was imperfect, ambiguous or unfinished and, for that reason, the lower court erred in law in treating it as a plea of guilty;
2. that he pleaded guilty as a result of mistake or misapprehension;
3. that the charge laid at his door disclosed no offence known to law; and G
4. that upon the admitted facts he could not in law have been convicted of the offence charged.

Case Information
Order accordingly. H
Cases referred to:

1. R. v London Quarter Sessions [1957] 3 All E.R. 28
2. Regina v Waziri s/o Musa, 2 T.L.R. (R) 30. I

1983 TLR p167
SAMATTA J
M. Sengwaji for the respondent. A
[zJDz]Judgment
Samatta, J.: This appeal reminds me of the question which Lord Goddard, C.J., posed in R.v. London Quarter Sessions [1957] 3 All E.R. 28 at p. 31: "How can a person who pleads guilty deliberately be aggrieved by a conviction?." B
The appellant in the case now before me, Laurence Mpinga, was convicted, upon "his own plea of guilty", of robbery, contrary to s. 285 of the Penal Code, by the Primary Court of Chikundi.

He was alleged to have robbed a school-girl, aged 15, of Shs. 20/=. When the charge was read over and explained to him his plea was: C

It is true I robbed her shs 20/= by using violence.

This was entered by the court as a plea of guilty to the charge. In accordance with the procedure outlined by Mahon, J. (as he then was) in Regina v Waziri s/o Musa, D 2 T.L.R. (R) 30, at p.31, the facts of the case were then outlined by the complainant, Fatu Hashimu. These revealed that the appellant had pounced upon the young girl and dragged her for some distance before taking away, by force, her currency note of twenty shillings. When the appellant was asked to say whether or not the given outline of facts E was correct he answered as follows:

What the complainant has said is nothing but the truth. F

Upon the strength of his plea and this reply the court convicted the appellant as charged, i.e. of robbery, and it then proceeded to sentence him, under s.5(b) of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972 to a term of seven years' imprisonment. The appellant appealed against the (whole) decision to the District Court of Masasi district, without any success. G He still says that he should not have been convicted; hence the present appeal. In his petition of appeal the appellant asserts that the complainant (i.e. the young girl) is his close relative and that he has been her guardian since she was aged two. According to the appellant, the young girl was a truant and he took away the shs. 20/= from her with a H view of correcting her behaviour and forcing her to go back to school.

Section 16 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1963, provides for appeals from Primary Courts to District Courts but subsection (2) (a) thereof lays down that: I

No appeal shall be allowed in any case of an accused person convicted on his own plea of A guilty, except against sentence or an order for the payment of compensation.

If the appellant had in fact and in law pleaded guilty to the charge of robbery, then he B could not be heard in the District Court to complain against his conviction. I say in fact and in law because, as I apprehend the law, an accused person who has been convicted by any court of an offence "on his own plea of guilty" may in certain circumstances appeal against the conviction to a higher court. Such an accused person may challenge C the conviction on any of the following grounds:

1. that, even taking into consideration the admitted facts, his plea was imperfect, ambiguous or unfinished and, for that reason, the lower court erred in law in treating it D as a plea of guilty;
2. that he pleaded guilty as a result of mistake or misapprehension;
3. that the charge laid at his door disclosed no offence known to law; and, E
4. that upon the admitted facts he could not in law have been convicted of the offence charged.

Although he does not expressly say so, the appellant in the instant case suggests that he F pleaded guilty to the charge of robbery as a result of mistake or misapprehension on his part. It is a correct proposition of law, of course, the validity of which it is neither possible nor safe to dispute, that there cannot be an offence of robbery unless theft has taken place, and that for theft to be proved it must be demonstrated or unequivocally G admitted that there was a fraudulent taking or conversion - a tortious taking or conversion being insufficient. It is also a correct proposition of law, I think, to say that the defence of bona fide claim of right, provided for in s.9 of the Penal Code, applies to the offence of robbery, too. It is not necessary, to establish a bona fide claim of right in H the case of robbery, for the accused to satisfy the court that he had the honest belief that he had the right to take the property in the way in which he did. If, as the appellant now asserts, he used force against Fatu with the intention of correcting her behaviour and not for the purpose of stealing, neither lawyer nor a layman would, I think, describe I that conduct as amounting to stealing. But is that what happened? I think not. I cannot see how, if the appellant's assertion were true, he, as sane person and an adult, A could possibly have spoken to the court under a misapprehension as to the nature and gravity of the accusation preferred against him. In my settled view, the appellant pleaded, and intended to plead, guilty to the charge. What, I ask, was the difficulty in pointing out to the Primary Court, a tribunal whose atmosphere is, comparatively speaking, fairly B informal and simple, that he did not intend to steal the shs. 20/=? I get no answer. The appeal against conviction is plainly a shot in the dark; it is probably a product of an advice from a barefoot "lawyer", whom the appellant must have met in prison. In my view the District Court erred in law in entertaining the appellant's appeal against C conviction. That appeal was incompetent in law, and should, therefore, have been struck out.

The appeal against sentence is competent in law, and I proceed, therefore, to consider it. D Mr. Sengwaji, counsel for the Republic, having drawn my attention to two facts: (1) that the appellant is a first offender, and (2) that the money which was obtained in the course of the perpetration of the robbery did not exceed one hundred shillings, urged me to say that the Primary Court could, and should, have held that this was a proper case in E which to invoke the merciful provisions of s. 6 of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972, and should have proceeded to deal with the appellant as if the Act had not been enacted. With respect, I am inclined to think that there is some merit in the argument. Bearing in mind, among other things, that the appellant had pleaded guilty, I think this is a F case where justice ought to have been tempered with mercy. This is what I propose now to do. Taking into consideration all the competing factors, I think a sentence of four years' imprisonment would have adequately reflected the society's revulsion against the appellant's antisocial conduct. The sentence of seven years' imprisonment is reduced accordingly. G

I have sufficiently demonstrated, I hope, why the purported appeal against conviction must be, and is, struck out, and why the appeal against sentences is allowed to the extent herein indicated.

H Order accordingly.

[zRPz]ERNEST JOSEPH NYATANDO v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 170 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mnzavas JK

July 27, 1984
CRIMINAL APPEAL 101 OF 1981 B
Flynote
Evidence - Witness cannot be prosecuted on the basis of incriminating evidence he gives (s. 141 Evidence Act 1967).
Criminal Law - Punishments - A person detained under the Preventive Detention Act, 1962, C Cap. 490 - Whether already punished by virtue of s.21 Penal Code, Cap. 16.
-Headnote
The appellant was convicted of stealing by public servant and being in unlawful possession of offensive weapons c/s 265 and 270 of the Penal Code and c/s 8 (1) of the National Security Act, 1970. After conviction the trial court was of the opinion that a D greater punishment should be inflicted for the offences than the court had power to inflict and it accordingly committed the appellant to the High Court for sentence. Dissatisfied by the finding and order of the lower court the appellant appealed to the high Court. E
Held: (i) Where a witness incriminates himself when giving evidence for the prosecution he becomes immune by virtue of s. 141 of the Evidence Act, 1967 from being prosecuted on the basis of the evidence he gives;
(ii) By virtue of section 21 of the Penal Code, it is unlawful for any court to F punish the appellant twice for the same offence; therefore a person being punished by being detained under the Preventive Detention Act (Cap. 490), cannot be punished a second time by a court of law in respect of the same offence. G
Case Information
Order accordingly.
No case referred to:
Ballonzi for the appellant. H
Chiza for the respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mnzavas, J.K.: In Kisutu RM's Court Criminal Case No. 868/1979 the Appellant, Ernest Joseph Nyatando, was convicted of stealing by Public Servant and being in I unlawful possession of offensive weapons c/s 265 and 270 of the Penal Code
1983 TLR p171
MNZAVAS JK
and c/s 8(1) National Security Act, 1970. After conviction the trial court was, taking into A account the nature of the offences, of the opinion that a greater punishment should be inflicted for the offences than the court had power to inflict and it accordingly invoked its powers under section 5A of the Criminal Procedure Code and committed the appellant to this Court for sentence. B

Dissatisfied by the finding and order of the lower court the appellant has appealed to this Court. Arguing against the finding and order of the lower Court Mr. Ballonzi learned counsel for the appellant, submitted that the trial court erred in believing the evidence in support of the prosecution case, which evidence, it was argued, was full of C contradictions. It was the learned counsel's submission that the lower court erred in not accepting appellant's defence which, it was argued, was cogent and without contradictions.

It was also the defence argument that the decision to prosecute the appellant was contrary to the provisions of section 141 of the Evidence Act, 1967. It was submitted D that the appellant having been a witness for the prosecution was under section 141 of the Evidence Act immune from prosecution in connection with the same case.

Finally Mr. Ballonzi argued that the appellant is detained under the Preventive Detention E Act - Cap 490 of the laws for the same offences and that as such it would, it was argued, be illegal for the Court to punish him again for the same offence. In support of this argument the Court was referred to section 21 of the Penal Code.

In rebuttal Mr. Chiza, learned state attorney, argued that the decision of the lower F court was based on the credibility of the witnesses and the trial court was in a better position to assess the credibility of the witnesses than this court.

As for the argument that Biron, J. had no power to order that the appellant (who had given evidence for the prosecution) be charged with the same offences the learned G state attorney was of the view that the learned Judge had such power. In support of his argument the Court was referred to section 322 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The learned state attorney however concurred with the defence argument that under the provisions of section 21 of the Penal Code, the appellant cannot be punished again for H the same offence bearing in mind that he has already been punished by being put in detention. I would first like to deal with the argument that my learned brother Biron J, had no power to order that the appellant be charged with the same offence in which he had given evidence as a prosecution witness. I

1983 TLR p172

MNZAVAS JK

The answer to this question is found under section 141 of the Evidence Act, 1967 which A says:

> A witness shall not be excused from answering any question as to any matter relevant to the matter in issue in any suit or in any civil or criminal proceeding, upon the ground that the B answer to question will incriminate... such witness... Provided that no such answer, which a witness shall be compelled to give, shall subject him to any arrest or prosecution, or be proved against him in any subsequent criminal proceeding except a prosecution for giving false evidence by such answer. C

It is amply clear from the decision of Biron J, that the appellant had incriminated himself when giving evidence for the prosecution. Having incriminated himself when giving evidence I tend to agree with the learned defence counsel's argument that the appellant D was, under the provision of section 141 of the Evidence Act quoted above, immune from prosecution. But as I have no power to undo the decision of Biron, J. I leave the matter at that.

Coming to the question of conviction by the lower court it is my view that apart from the E provisions of section 141 of the Evidence Act, there was ample evidence in support of the lower court's finding of guilty.

As for the question of sentence it is not all in dispute that the appellant, Ernest Joseph Nyatando, is in detention (under the Preventive Detention Act) for the same offences. F

Section 21 of the Penal Code says:

A person shall not be punished twice, either under the provisions of this Code or under the G provisions of any other law for the same offence.

That being the statutory law I agree with the defence argument that it will be unlawful for this Court to punish the appellant twice for the same offence. Apparently, and as I have H already mentioned above, the learned state attorney concedes that it would be contrary to the law for this Court to impose another sentence on the accused for the same offence.

I am, under the provisions of s.21 of the Penal Code, unable to impose any other sentence on the appellant. I

Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p173

A

[zRPz]MWITA MAGORE v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 173 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Munyera, J

October 28, 1983

CRIMINAL APPEAL 139 OF 1983

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charge of robbery c/s 285 of Penal Code, Cap 16 - B Whether causing grievous harm is cognate minor offence to robbery, and can therefore be substituted for robbery.

Criminal Law - Meaning of minor cognate offence - One that forms part of a series of lesser offences necessary to complete major offence. C

-Headnote

The appellant was charged with robbery following an allegation that he assaulted one Joseph Nchagwa (PW) with a panga and made away with shs. 12,000/= and an ignition D key found in the complainant's pockets. The learned trial magistrate found that the violence perpetrated upon the complainant was not for the purpose of stealing, and acquitted the appellant of robbery and convicted him of causing grievous harm c/s 225 of the Penal Code, Cap. 16. The question before the appeal was whether conviction of E causing grievous harm could be substituted for robbery.

Held: (i) Conviction of causing grievous harm cannot be substituted for robbery for the simple reason that causing grievous harm is not a cognate minor offence to robbery; F

(ii) a cognate minor offence is the one that forms part of a series of lesser offences which must be committed in order to complete the major one. Thus in order to commit robbery one must commit two minor offences, assault and stealing;

(iii) when a person is tried for robbery, assault and stealing are necessarily the G subject of the trial and it shall not be unlawful to substitute conviction of either of them for robbery;

(iv) causing grievous harm is not a cognate minor offence to robbery and must be specifically charged, to substitute grievous harm for robbery is bad in law. H

Case Information

Order accordingly.

No case referred to. I

1983 TLR p174

MUNYERA J

[zJDz]Judgment

Munyera, J.: The appellant was the second accused before Tarime District Court. He A was charged jointly with another (1st accused) for robbery. It was stated that on 27/10/82 the complainant, one Joseph Nchagwa (PW1); was returning to his village Kwitinyo, from a cattle auction. He was driving his Toyota Pick -up MZF 124. He B passed by his shamba. He saw a herd of cattle grazing in the shamba. He parked his vehicle somewhere. He approached the herdsmen who happened to be the appellant and his co-accused. He protested to them that their cattle were destroying his crops. The two men, armed with pangas, rushed at him. The first accused, with the aid of the C appellant cut the complainant with a panga on his back. The latter fell down. The appellant put his hand in the complainant's pockets and made away with Shs. 12,000/= cash and the ignition key. A passer-by, Mchuma Mwita (PW 3) helped the injured complainant. Finally the appellant (and his co-accused) was arrested and charged. In his D defence he (like his co-accused) denied that he assaulted and robbed the complainant. The learned trial magistrate found that the violence perpetrated on the complainant was not for the purpose of stealing. He acquitted both of them of robbery but convicted them of causing grievous harm c/s 225. He sentenced the appellant to 2 years' imprisonment, E and released his co-accused on a 3 year probation. Both of them were ordered to pay compensation of Shs. 500/= each to the complainant. Hence this appeal.

There was ample evidence to establish that it was the appellant (and his co-accused) F who injured the complainant. The question is whether conviction of causing grievous harm could be substituted for robbery. Without beating about the bush I would say such a substitution is not possible for the simple reason that causing grievous harm is not a cognate minor offence to robbery. A cognate minor offence is the one that forms part of G a series of lesser offences which must be committed in order to complete the major one. Thus in order to commit robbery one must commit two minor offences, assault and stealing. So when a person is tried for robbery assault and stealing are necessarily the subject of the trial and it shall not be unlawful to substitute conviction of either of them H for robbery. But one does not have to cause grievous harm in order to commit robbery. It is not a cognate minor offence to robbery and must be specifically charged. In this case it was not included in the charge and was not the subject of the trial. The appellant was unaware of it and its substitution was bad in law. I set aside the conviction of I grievous harm and substitute therefore the one of assault c/s 240. I set aside the sentence of 2 A years and substitute therefore the one of 9 months' imprisonment.

1983 TLR p175
The appeal against sentence succeeds to the above extent.
B Order accordingly.
1983 TLR p175
C
[zRPz]MERALI HIRJI AND SONS v GENERAL TYRE (E.A.) LTD 1983 TLR 175 (HC)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

April 27, 1984
CIVIL APPEAL 24 OF 1983
Flynote
Contract - Formation - Agreement made verbally - Arrangement lasted for five years - D Whether valid contract.
Contract - Agency - Agent incurs expenses to run the business - Nature of agency.
Contract - Agreement carries no terms - Duty of the Court.
Contract - Agency - Contract carries no terms - Termination - Whether court to imply E reasonable notice of termination.
-Headnote
The appellant company was appointed the sole dealer in selling and distributing the respondent company's tyres and tubes in Rugwe and Kyela districts. The appellant used F to buy the goods from the respondent at a 15% discount and transport them to his premises. The appellant dealt in the respondent's goods only. Five years later the respondent unilaterally terminated the five-year-old commercial relationship without notice and without assigning any reason for doing so. G
The whole arrangement was made verbally. The High Court held that the arrangement was one of agency, that the respondent was not obliged to give any notice for terminating the agency and therefore that there had been no breach. On appeal it was argued in favour of the appellant that given the nature of the relationship between the H parties and the appellant's commercial dealings the court should have imported reasonable terms into the contract and held that a reasonable notice was necessary to terminate the relationship.
Held: (i) There was a valid contract between the parties proved by their conduct over I the years:

(ii) the contract was one of agency; A

(iii) given the nature of the relationship in this case the appellant was not a commission agent, as such was entitled to a reasonable notice of termination of the contract;

(iv) since the contract did not provide for terms the court had a duty to imply reasonable terms; B

(v) the respondent was legally obliged to give notice;

(vi) given the circumstances of the case six months' notice is reasonable and justified.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. C

Cases referred to:

1. Martin-Baker Aircraft Co.Ltd. and Another v Canadian Flight Equipment, Ltd. [1955] 2 All E.R. 722.

2. Motion v Michaud (7) (1892) S.T.L.R. 253 D

M.A. Lakha, for the appellant.

R.J. Rweyemamu, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Makame, J.A. read the following considered judgment of the court: Sometime in 1975 E the appellant company was appointed the sole dealer in selling and distributing the respondent company's tyres and tubes in the Rungwe and Kyela Districts after one C.V. Patel had ceased to function as such. The appellant would purchase the said goods on F cash at a 15% discount, and collect them himself from the respondent company's premises in Mbeya Township. His assertion that he was to sell the tyres and tubes of only the respondent company, and that he was the only one permitted to do so in the two district, was not controverted in evidence. G

By a letter dated 15th August, 1980, the respondent company unilaterally terminated the five-year old commercial relationship, without any prior notice and, apparently, without providing any reason for doing so. The appellant felt that the respondent company's H action was high-handed and unreasonable, that the said action had caused him loss of profit, and that gave him a right to damages. The appellant accordingly sued in the High Court for Shs. 150,000/= damages, contending that could cover a reasonable notice, for six months, at the rate of shs. 25,000/= per month. Mr. Lakha, learned advocate, appeared for the appellant in this appeal before us, as he did also in the court below. At I the original hearing the respondent company was represented by Mr. Rweyemamu, learned counsel from the Tanzania Legal A corporation, who appeared also before us.

It was common ground that the communication giving rise to the alleged relationship between the parties was merely verbal. It was the appellant's case that, that notwithstanding, what was thereby formed was a valid contract proved by the conduct B of the parties over the year. Admittedly no specific provision was made for circumstances which would entitle either party to terminate the contract or for the necessary length of notice in the event. In such a case, Mr. Lakha maintained, the court had to import reasonable terms: in the instant case he reckoned that six months' notice C would have been reasonable.

Mr. Rweyemamu for the respondent company argued that the arrangement was ad hoc, that no contract was in fact entered into, and so there was no obligation to issue the alleged or any notice.

Mr. Msaky, the only witness for the respondent company, told the trial court that his D company did not normally give notice to their dealers when the company wanted to terminate a dealership; there were simply no rules.

The learned Jaji Kiongozi who tried the suit was satisfied that "there was some understanding between the parties regarding selling of tyres of the defendant in Mbeya E (sic) and Kyela Districts" and went on, further, to hold that there was an irresistible inference that the appellant was the respondent company's agent in Tukuyu (sic). We respectfully agree that the appellant was the respondent company's agent as alleged, and we did not permit Mr. Rweyemamu to endeavour to persuade us otherwise, because F there was no cross-appeal on the issue.

Having found that the appellant was the respondent company's agent the learned Jaji Kiongozi was nonetheless of the view that the respondent company was not obliged to G give any notice terminating the agency, and therefore there had been no breach. The learned Jaji Kiongozi referred to some authorities, chiefly the case of Martin-Baker Aircraft Co. Ltd And Another v Canadian Flight Equipment Ltd [1955] 2 all E.R. 722. He was of the view that because there was allegedly no Master and Servant H relationship in the present case, and, as unlike in Martin Baker's case, there was herein not "the highest degree of mutual trust and confidence between the parties", there was no need for a notice. The learned Jaji Kiongozi referred to two other authorities, Birtley's and Bellshill's cases, and said that the decision in Bellshill's case overruled those in I Birtley and Martin-Baker. With great respect, we have grave doubt as to the relevance of Bellshill's case, and it is clearly incorrect to assert that Bellshill had A over-ruled Martin-Baker. Martin-Baker is not mentioned even in passing in Bellshill's case.

We have had to look at Martin-Baker's case closely to get the kernel from the husks. We do not read the case the way the learned Jaji Kiongozi appears to have done. The B rival contentions in Martin-Baker were different from those in the present case. In Martin-Baker a great deal of discussion was spent on whether the relationship was permanent. i.e. terminable only by mutual consent, or whether it could be terminated by party on reasonable notice to the other. That is where reference was made to high C degree of mutual trust or a relationship akin to Master and Servant, the argument emerging therefrom being that, if there was some such relationship, involving a high degree of mutual trust etc, it would be unreasonable to hold that the relationship is permanent; continuing to be binding despite the breach of trust etc. Such a relationship D would be terminable by either party. Our present problem is different: It is not whether it would be permanent or terminable by one of the parties but rather, whether is determinable at will and without notice at all, or whether it can only be terminated with E reasonable notice and, if it is the latter, what is reasonable notice. The slant is thus different and it is when one appreciates that, that one really understands Mr. Lakha's complaint that the case law used was misapplied.

The facts in the present case are also different from Motion v Michaud (7) 1892 S.T.L.R. 253, which concerned an independent merchant who undertook to sell the F defendant's brandies, like he had been selling other people's wines and champagne, on a commission basis. He got the consignments of brandy without paying for them and was getting his cut after the sales. He was only involved the office expenses.

In the present case the appellant was expending his own cash to buy the goods, he G collected them himself from Mbeya, transported them to his shop, and the evidence was that he had an outfit for selling the respondent's goods. He was not a commission agent who had virtually no risk and who did not have to tie up his capital. What he got was a H discount on the cash payment, not a commission for only whatever he sold. One has to look at the particular facts and circumstances of each case. In the present case the appellant had geared himself to selling only the respondent company's tyres and tubes and to selling them alone, without competitors. All of a sudden he would get no more I supplies, was no more a dealer for the respondent company and, obviously, if he was inclined to secure another tyre and tube agency, it would take him time and effort, and possibly some A resources, to cultivate one. It is quite true that, as McNair, J. said in Martin - Baker, it is not the function of the court to make a reasonable contract between the parties but, as the learned judge also observed, and with him we respectfully agree, it is the duty of the court to imply reasonable terms. It is our considered view that in the present case the B respondent was legally obliged to give notice and that, on the evidence, the learned Jaji Kiongozi should have so held. Mr. Rweyemamu for the respondent, eventually conceded as much, but he urged that one-month notice would have been reasonable and enough. In our view the six months' notice the appellant asked for is reasonable and C justified in the circumstances. We accordingly allow the appeal to that extent, with costs, here and in the court below.

1983 TLR p179

Regarding the quantum of damages, we are at a disadvantage. We would naturally need D data for this, and what Mr. lakha furnished us with cannot take us far enough. He has included in the record before us the respondent's sales documents for only August 1980, the last month the parties transacted business with each other immediately before the termination. We are aware that at the High Court a lot more documents were produced E and we trust that the present omission by Mr. Lakha was merely fortuitous and not by design. The trend of sales between the parties over the whole tract of time the parties did business together would tell the story better when it comes to assessing the damages. For that reason we remit that aspect of the suit back to the learned Jaji Kiongozi for F assessing the quantum of damages and awarding the same accordingly.

G Appeal allowed

1983 TLR p179

H

[zRPz]MAKUNGIRE MTANI v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 179 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

May 8, 1984
CRIMINAL APPEAL 16 OF 1983
Flynote
Evidence - Circumstantial - Mysterious disappearance of deceased from company of appellant - Silence of appellant - Blood stains of deceased's group found on appellant's I cloth - Incriminating circumstances on a murder charge.
1983 TLR p180
KISANGA JA
-Headnote
The appellant and one other person (Mzungu Bituro) were jointly charged with the A murder of the deceased in this case. Mzungu, however, died in remand before the hearing started, and so the trial proceeded in respect of the appellant alone. The appellant was convicted as charged and sentenced to death.
The appellant's advocate contends among other things that the prosecution evidence was B highly circumstantial to support a conviction and that the learned trial judge misdirected himself as to the burden of proof.
Held: (i) In the circumstances of the present case there was more than considerable C suspicion against the appellant, for he refused to give an explanation of how the deceased mysteriously disappeared from his compound;

(ii) we think that the evidence of the appellant's clothes bearing blood stains of D the same blood group as the deceased but different from his own was an incriminating circumstance which was properly taken into account in establishing the appellant's guilt.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed. E
Case referred to:
Kimweri v R. [1968] E.A. 252
R.W.G. Rugarabamu for the Appellant. F
[zJDz]Judgment
Kisanga, J.A., read the following considered judgment of the court: The appellant and one other person (Mzungu Bituro) were jointly charged with the murder of the deceased in this case. Mzungu, however, died in remand before the hearing started, and so the trial G proceeded in respect of the appellant alone. The appellant was convicted as charged and sentenced to death, but he is now appealing.
The appellant and his co-accused together with the deceased worked in a slaughter house where they skinned the carcasses and took the meat to the butchery. They also H lived in one house, the deceased being the one who secured the premises and then invited his colleagues to live with him there. In the evenings they used to go out together for drinks, leaving home around 6 p.m and returning at about 8 p.m. They drank the illicit liquor popularly known as "Moshi". Sometime during their staying and working together I some misunderstanding arose whereby the deceased threatened to expel the appellant and Mzungu from the house, followed by a refusal by these two to leave A the premises with a counter threat to "teach the deceased a lesson". However, Sadiki Iddi (P.W.2) who also lived in the same house intervened by asking the deceased to take it easy, so to speak, and allow the appellant and Mzungu to continue to live there. This appears to have settled the matter, and life appeared to be normal again. B

1983 TLR p181

KISANGA JA

However, only about three days later the appellant and Mzungu together with the deceased left home together at about 6 p.m., as usual, but returned at 8.p.m without the deceased. When P.W.2 inquired as to the whereabouts of the deceased, the appellant C and Mzungu were rude and evasive. They retorted by asking the witness in what capacity he was asking them that question. And when the witness told them that he asked that question because the deceased was their host, they simply kept quiet, went into their room, closed the door and went to sleep. When the deceased's absence at D work was noticed, the appellant and Mzungu were asked about his whereabouts but they said nothing, in fact P.W.2 thought that the appellant and Mzungu were unusually quiet that day. The deceased was found dead some three days following the evening when he went out in company of the appellant and Mzungu. His body was found lying in E a potato field with injuries on the head and legs. The appellant did not come to the scene but Mzungu did, and when he was asked why he had not reported the absence of the deceased, his fellow tenant, he took to his heels. When later the appellant was arrested at the market place he was desperate, and when he was asked he replied that F he was so desperate because he had expected to be arrested at any time. On the day the appellant and Mzungu went out last with the deceased these two wore clothes which were later found to have stains of human blood belonging to the same group as that of the deceased (AB), but different from that of their own which is "O" for the appellant G and "A" for Mzungu. At the trial the appellant chose to keep quiet in his defence, and the learned trial judge, after due review of the evidence before him, found the case proved and accordingly convicted him.

Before us the appellant was represented by Mr.R.W.G. Rugarabamu who had also H conducted the defence in the high Court. The learned counsel filed and argued for grounds of appeal. The first ground states that "The prosecution evidence was highly circumstantial to support a conviction". Enlarging upon this, counsel submitted in effect that the evidence adduced before the court was such as did cast considerable suspicion I only, but not sufficient to support a conviction. In support of this view he cited the case of Kimweri v R. [1968] A E.A. 252. We have given due consideration to the submission by the learned counsel but we are not persuaded by it. We think that in the present case there was more than considerable suspicion against the appellant. The deceased was last seen alive in the B company of the appellant and his co-accused, now deceased. The appellant refused to give any explanation of how the deceased mysteriously disappeared from his company. If the appellant had nothing to do with the death of the deceased, one would certainly expect him to say at what point he parted company with the deceased that night after C having set out from home together. But to keep quiet in those circumstances was most strange. Mr. Rugarabamu suggested that the appellant's silence that night might be explained on the basis that appellant was drunk when he returned home that night. We cannot accept such view. There was no evidence of drunkenness. The only evidence on D this issue was to the effect that the trio used to go out together to drink and that they drank "Moshi". But this alone is not sufficient from which to conclude that on this particular night the appellant, in fact, drank "Moshi" and that in fact he returned home drunk. He may have had no drink at all or, if he had some, he may not have been drunk. E Assuming that the appellant had a drink that night, if he had enough senses to be able to find his way back home, it is inconceivable that he would not be in enough senses to say how he parted company with the deceased. We think that there is nothing on the evidence to support the view that the appellant was drunk that night. F

1983 TLR p182

KISANGA JA

Mr. Rugarabamu further contended that the appellant's silence, when he was asked at his work place about the deceased's disappearance, could be explained on the basis that the appellant was perplexed. With due respect to the learned counsel, this is G incomprehensible. If he was perplexed but innocent, this was all the more reason for him to disclose how he parted company with the deceased so that appropriate steps could be taken to trace the deceased and thus solve the mystery surrounding his disappearance which was the source of the perplexity. We think that on both these occasions one H would certainly expect the appellant to give an explanation how he parted company with the deceased after he had set out from home with him that evening. It is most odd, however, that he did not.

Then there is the evidence that at the time of his arrest the appellant was desperate and I that, when asked, he replied that he was so desperate because he had expected to be arrested. According to Mr. Rugarabamu, the appellant expected to be arrested because his colleague, A Mzungu, had been arrested. If the appellant was innocent, why should he think that Mzungu's arrest would automatically lead to his own arrest? One would expect him to be ready to explain his innocence to the police and thus clear himself, but it is most strange that in those circumstances Mzungu's arrest should make him desperate and B cause him to anticipate arrest. Such conduct cannot be said to be consistent with his innocence.

Then there was the evidence that the clothes worn by the appellant on the material night had stains of blood belonging to the same group as that of the deceased but different C from that of his own. Dealing with this aspect of the evidence, the learned trial judge in the course of his judgment stated.

The conclusion thus reached was that the T-shirt worn by the accused at the relevant D time not only had blood stains, but they were human blood of group AB i.e. the deceased's group. The accused was thus effectively linked to the killing of the deceased until he offered an explanation as to how he came to be stained with the deceased's blood.

This was the subject of a vigorous attack by Mr. Rugarabamu who contended that it E amounted to shifting the burden of proof to the defence. Counsel's argument was that the evidence merely showed that the stains found on the appellant's clothes were of the same blood group as that of the deceased, but it was not conclusive that those blood stains, in fact, came from the deceased. Such blood stains, counsel went on, may have come from F some person other than the deceased but of the same blood group as the deceased. We can find no merit in this argument. We think that the evidence of the appellant's clothes bearing blood stains of the same blood group as the deceased but different from G his own was an incriminating circumstance which the trial judge properly took into account in considering the appellant's guilt. The reasoning of the learned trial judge was that considering the other circumstances, such as, the mysterious disappearance of the deceased from the appellant's company, the appellant's complete silence when asked H about it on different occasions and his being desperate and anticipating arrest over it, led to the conclusion that the blood stains in question were those of the deceased. In other words, in these circumstances that was the only reasonable conclusion to arrive at unless the appellant gave some explanation to the contrary. We cannot say that the learned I judge was wrong. We think that he properly directed himself on the matter. A

In his second ground of appeal Mr. Rugarabamu criticised the trial judge for finding that the deceased sustained extensive injuries from which he must have bled. Counsel took the view that there was no evidence that the deceased sustained any lacerated wounds B from which he could have bled. This was in an attempt to fortify his earlier submission that the blood stains found on the appellant's clothes came not from the deceased but from someone else of the same blood group as the deceased. We think that this C submission is equally devoid of merit. There was evidence that the deceased sustained head injuries including fractures of the skull leading to blood oozing from inside the cranial cavity. He also sustained injuries on the legs. We think that the learned trial judge was perfectly entitled to find that such injuries as sustained by the deceased must have D led to bleeding externally thus making it possible for the appellant to get stained by such blood.

In the third ground counsel complained that the trial judge erred in shifting the burden of proof to the appellant when he remarked in his judgment that the appellant did not E attempt to explain the incriminating blood stains on his T-shirt. We have already said something about the burden of proof when dealing with the first ground of appeal, and now there remains very little to be said. When evidence has been adduced which, as in this case, implicates the appellant in the offence charged, then if the appellant is innocent, F one would certainly expect him to give some explanation, for the obvious reason that it would be in his best interest to do so. It is not unusual for an innocent person to keep quiet when allegations are being or have been made against him showing or seeking to show that he is the offender. So that in such circumstances where the appellant would be G expected to give some explanation but he does not, we think that the court may properly comment on such silence, as it did in this case. But this, in our view, does not amount to shifting the burden of proof to the defence. All that the court said was that it was strange that the appellant should have kept quiet in such circumstances. We H therefore think that the complaint against the trial judge on this point is not well founded.

The last ground of appeal is a general one alleging that the conviction was against the weight of evidence. Having regard to what we have said in connection with the earlier grounds, our reaction to this ground should be apparent. Although the case was based I entirely on circumstantial evidence, we are satisfied that the appellant's guilt was proved to the requisite standard. The incriminating pieces of A circumstantial evidence, such as we have briefly referred to in the preceding paragraphs, lead to the only reasonable conclusion that the appellant took part in committing the offence charged. In the result we uphold the conviction and accordingly dismiss the appeal. B

Appeal dismissed.

C

[zRPz]JOSEPH s/o KAMILIANGO & 5 OTHERS v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 186 (CA)

Court Court of Appeal of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Nyalali CJ, Makame JJA and Kisanga JJA

May 8, 1984

CRIMINAL APPEAL 47 OF 1982

Flynote

Evidence - Circumstantial - Mere knowledge by the accused about the background and D circumstances of the death and subsequent discovery of the body of the deceased - Whether sufficient circumstantial evidence to support conviction.

Criminal Law - Provocation - Defence of provocation by witchcraft - Firm belief that the E deceased was practising witchcraft - Killing calculated with cool minds and in full possession of their faculties.

-Headnote

The appellants were jointly charged in the High Court at Bukoba on information for the F offence of murder contrary to section 196 of the Penal Code. They were charged together with one Joseph Kamiliango who died before this appeal could be heard and his appeal is thus abated by operation of law. The grounds of appeal are based on the defence of provocation and the insufficiency of circumstantial evidence to support the conviction. G

Held: (i) The mere knowledge about the background and circumstances of the death of the deceased, coupled with the discovery of the dead body of the deceased did not constitute sufficient circumstantial evidence to support a conviction of murder; H

(ii) since the appellants did not act suddenly and as their conduct clearly showed that they had calculated their move with cool minds and in full possession of their faculties, the defence of provocation by witchcraft cannot be availed to them. I

1983 TLR p186

NYALALI CJ

Case Information

Order accordingly. A

No case referred to.

S.R. Kahangwa for the appellants.

M.M.K. Mtaki for the respondent. B

[zJDz]Judgment

Nyalali, C.J., read the following considered judgment of the court: The appellants in this case, namely, Deogratias s/o Katabazi, Yolanda d/o Adolf, Kambalula d/o Adolf, Rozalia d/o Adolf and Steria d/o Adolf were jointly charged in the High Court at C Bukoba on information for the offence of murder contrary to section 196 of the Penal Code; and they appeared as the third, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth accused persons, respectively. They were charged together with one Joseph Kamiliango, who was the first accused at the trial, and Msafiri Abdallah, who was the second accused. The said D Msafiri Abdallah was acquitted at the trial but the said Joseph Kamiliango was convicted together with the appellants as charged. The convicts were all aggrieved by the convictions and hence this appeal to this court. Unfortunately, the first accused, that is E Joseph Kamiliago died before this appeal could be heard and his appeal is thus abated by operation of law. Initially the information filed in the High Court included two other persons, that is, Kafukulu Rwameluka and Rubazibwa Bacheluka, in respect of whom a Nolle Prosequi was entered by the Director of Public Prosecution before the F commencement of the trial. They appeared as the fourth and fifth accused persons, respectively.

The remaining appellants, that is, the third, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth accused persons were represented in this appeal by Mr. Kahangwa, learned advocate; whereas the Republic was represented by Mr. Mtaki, learned State Attorney. G

It is common ground that one Martina Adolf, who was the elder sister of accused Nos. 6,7,8 and 9, was killed during the night of the 24th/25th December, 1978, in Kazilantemwa village, Ikuza Island of Lake Victoria, within Muleba district. All the H remaining appellants and the deceased were residents of that village. It is undisputed that some time in December 1978 before the death of the deceased, accused Nos. 6,7,8 and 9 travelled to Kagunza Village on the mainland and visited the first accused, that is, Joseph Kamiliango who has died before the commencement of this appeal. The said I Joseph Kamiliango was a traditional medicineman and the four sisters travelled back with him to Ikuza Island. They were accompanied by one Msafiri Abdallah, who was the second accused at the trial, and A who was acquitted by the High Court. Furthermore, it is undisputed that the dead body of Martina Adolf was discovered by a search party of villagers after she had been reported missing by her husband. The discovery was made on the 26th December, 1978, near the homestead and in the banana grove of the third and seventh accused who B were husband and wife, respectively. In consequence of this discovery and as a result of interrogations of the third accused by the villagers, all the accused persons were apprehended by the villagers that same day. The dead body had a cut wound on the back of the head. Her left breast, vagina and two fingers of her left hand were cut off C and missing. As a result of interrogations, the first accused, whose appeal has abated, led a group of village militia and others to the home of one Alois Fabrian, where the first and second accused had been staying. There the missing breast, vagina and one finger were recovered. It is further undisputed that the police were informed and they came to D collect the accused persons and the dead body to help the police in their investigations. Subsequently, the remains of the deceased were viewed by Dr. Twahibu Musoke (P.W.5) on the shores of Lake Victoria on the 30th December, 1978. Accused No.1, whose appeal has abated, together with accused No. 6,7,8 and 9 were taken E before the Justice of the Peace P.W.4) to whom they made extrajudicial statements concerning the death of the said Martina Adolf.

1983 TLR p187

NYALALI CJ

It is the prosecution's argument that accused Nos. 6,7,8 and 9 believed that the deceased was a witch who had killed, by witchcraft, many members of their family. They F also believed that she had bewitched their father who was seriously ill at the time when they decided to pay the first accused a visit. To prevent the deceased from wiping out the entire family, the four sisters, who appeared in this appeal, sought the assistance of G the first accused, who agreed to kill the deceased on payment of a fee of shs 800/= out of which shs. 100/= were paid in advance and the balance was to be paid upon accomplishment of the undertaking. It is part of the prosecution's case that pursuant to this agreement, the first accused killed the deceased and removed the parts of the body which were found missing. H

The defence of accused Nos. 3,6,7 8 and 9 consisted in a denial of the prosecution case.

The first point for consideration and decision in this case is whether the accused persons, who are the appellants in this case, participated in killing the deceased. The learned trial judge considered I the four sisters together as their defence and the evidence led by the prosecution against A them is the same for each of them. We propose to adopt the same approach by dealing with the third accused first and concluding with the four sisters of the deceased as a group.

In convicting the third accused the learned trial judge stated: B

> The evidential position then with regard to the 3rd accused is this. He mentioned the 1st accused as the participant in the killing and even knew where he could be traced, the 1st accused has been proved to have indeed taken part in the killing. Both the 1st accused the C proved killer and the deceased were at the home of the 3rd accused drinking pombe during the evening when the deceased was killed, her body was found in the shamba belonging to the 3rd accused. Since one of the killers was a member of the drinking party at the house of the 3rd accused, then the killing must have taken place in or near the house and the body D taken into the shamba. That killing in or near his house that evening by one of his guests against his own sister in law could not have been carried out without the knowledge of the 3rd accused. The reasons he gave at the scene for the killing of the deceased, tallied with the E reasons given later in the extra-judicial statements by the sisters. This proved that the 3rd accused was an insider and party to this killing which took place in or near his house.

Mr. Kahangwa has strongly attacked the finding and views of the learned trial judge by F submitting in effect that mere knowledge by the third accused about the background and circumstances of the death of the deceased, are not sufficient circumstantial evidence to support the conviction of the third accused. We respectfully agree with the submissions made by the learned advocate. Those circumstances can be given an G innocent explanation. Firstly, the third accused could have acquired his detailed knowledge of the relevant facts by virtue of his being a member of the family which believed that the deceased was bewitching them. Secondly, the deceased could have been killed without the participation of the third accused near the homestead after she H had left the drinking party on her way back home. For these reasons we are satisfied that the conviction of the third accused cannot be sustained and we are bound to interfere with it.

But first, we must deal with the case of the four sisters. Each of them made an extra-judicial statement to the justice of the peace I (P.W.4) which amounts to a confession to the effect that they hired the first accused to A kill the deceased to prevent her from eliminating the whole family by witchcraft. They paid an advance of shs. 100/= to the first accused and the balance of shs. 700/= was to be paid after the deceased had been killed. The extra-judicial statement made by the first accused also amounted to a confession by him which confirmed what the four sisters B stated in their own confessions. Further confirmation of the confession made by each of the sisters and the first accused was given by P.W.7, Jacob Iliharugo, who lived in the same village as the first accused. He testified about seeing the four sisters paying the first accused a visit some time in C December, 1978.

Mr. Kahangwa, learned advocate for the appellants, has submitted that the four sisters acted under provocation arising out of their firm belief that the deceased was practising witchcraft and was determined to finish them off. But as Mr. Kahangwa conceded, it is D quite clear on the evidence that the four sisters did not act suddenly but they deliberated upon their move at a meeting held to consider their position. They then travelled across the lake from their island village to the mainland where they negotiated with the first accused. The conduct of these four sisters clearly shows that they had E calculated their move with cool minds and in full possession of their faculties. The defence of provocation by witchcraft is thus not available to this "gang of four". They were a party to the killing of the deceased by hiring the killer.

The same evidence also supports the finding of malice aforethought on their part. For F these reasons concerning the case against accused Nos. 6,7,8 and 9 and the reasons concerning the third accused, we hereby dismiss in their entirely the appeals of Yolanda Adolf, Kambalula Adolf, Rozaria Adolf and Steria Adolf who are accused Nos. 6,7,8 G and 9, respectively; but we allow the appeal of Deogratius Katabazi, that is, the third accused, by quashing his conviction, setting aside his sentence and directing that he be released from prison forthwith unless detained therein for some other lawful cause.

H Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p190

A

[zRPz]BENEDICT AJETU v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 190 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mtwara

Judge Samatta J

June 15, 1983

CRIMINAL APPEAL 41 OF 1981

Flynote

Criminal Law - Fraudulent false accounting c/s 317 (c) of Penal Code - Discrepancy B between stores ledger and physical goods in store - Whether sufficient to convict.

-Headnote

Following the discovery of discrepancies between the stores-ledger and the physical C goods by the Regional Stock Verifier the appellant was charged with eleven counts of fraudulent false accounting, each contrary to s.317(c) of the Penal Code, and with eleven counts of stealing by public servant, each contrary to ss. 265 and 270 of the same Code. At the end of the trial he was convicted on all the counts and was sentenced to a D substantive sentence of three years' imprisonment. The whole of the decision of the trial court is appealed against.

Held: In the absence of evidence demonstrating, to the satisfaction of the law, that the E appellant had converted the goods to his own use, it was unsafe to hold that the omissions to enter the details of the purchase in the store-ledger were a product of design and the intent behind them was to defraud.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. F

No case referred to.

S.M.M. Sengwaji for the respondent. G

[zJDz]Judgment

Samatta, J.: Mkomaindo Government Hospital is a well known institution in Mtwara Region. It is a district hospital for Masasi district. In 1980 the appellant, Benedicto Ajetu, was working there. He was a nursing officer. In addition to his normal nursing H duties he used to work as a store-clerk. In this capacity he was responsible for buying, inter alia, food items for consumption by the admitted patients in the hospital. He used to maintain a store-ledger in which he was required to enter the details of the purchases he made. It was common ground that between March 27, 1980, and July 6, of the same I year he bought and took delivery of items as detailed herein below:

1983 TLR p191

SAMATTA J

DATE	ITEM	AMOUNT	A	VALUE IN SHS
1/3/80	Pigeon peas	3 bags		1,650
28/3/80	Cured Fish	2,200		3,520
1/4/80	Maize Flour	4 bags		972
	Pigeon peas	1 bags		550
25/4/80	Rice	60 kg	B	321
	Cooking oil	18 tins		648
6/5/80	Sugar	150 kg		1,050
	Salt	400 kg		600
17/6/80	Cured Fish	8,000		12,800
18/6/80	Chinese Cabbage	300 kg	C	1,200
	Tomatoes	185 kg		740
	Potato Vegetable (Matembele)	300 kg		2,340
	Oranges	200 kg		800
21/6/80	Bananas	281 kg	D	1,124
23/6/80	Oranges	286 kg		1,144
	Tomatoes	176 kg		707
	Bananas	278 kg		1,148
	Sweet Potatoes	288 kg		576
5/7/80	Chinese cabbage	430 kg	E	1,360
	Tomatoes	290 kg		1,160
	Potato vegetable (Mriba)	360 kg		2,160
	Oranges	307 kg	F	1,288

When, in August 1980, the appellant's store was checked by a Mr. Iddi Ngwale, a Regional Stock Verifier, none of the above items was found in it. On September 30,1980, the appellant was taken before the District Court of Masasi district where he was charged with eleven counts of fraudulent false accounting, each contrary to s. 317 G (c) of Penal Code, and with eleven counts of stealing by a person employed in public service, each contrary to s. 265 and 270 of the same code. The appellant pleaded not guilty and the case had to go to trial. In the end he was convicted on all the counts and was sentenced to a substantive sentence of three years' imprisonment. H

At the trial three witnesses gave evidence for the prosecution. These were: Dr. Venance Mhando, the doctor-in-charge of the hospital, Insp. Kisilla and Mr. Ngwale. The appellant, who called no witness, defended himself on oath. Dr. Mhando's testimony was, strangely, fairly short, at least according to the record of the case. He asserted, I among other things, that "between June and July, 1980"

1983 TLR p192

SAMATTA J

(sic) he discovered that the amounts of fruits which the appellant was purchasing were A unusually big. Assisted by a senior nursing officer, he checked the appellant's store. What did the pair discover? The doctor's answer was: "We discovered that [the] accused did not enter any fruit in the store-ledger and other food were (sic) not also shown in the store-ledger." B

The doctor informed the hounds of justice about his discovery.

The appellant admitted to having received in his store all the items which formed the subject matter of the charge laid at his door. He made no effort to argue that he did not enter in the store-ledger the details concerning many of the items. He appeared to C explain away the omission by asserting that, apart from being a very busy officer, he was not specially trained for the store work. By necessary implication the appellant was claiming that the food items had been legitimately consumed at the hospital.

When the appeal was placed before my brother Mushi for admission or otherwise he D directed, while admitting it, that the District Court take additional evidence and certify the same to this court. The direction was made under the provisions of s.322(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. In the course of the direction the learned judge said: E

It is not disputed, according to the record, that the alleged goods were received by the appellant. It is, also according to the record, not disputed that most of the items were not F entered in the Rations Ledger. Having regard to the nature of the goods, they could not have stored to be shown to the Stock Verifier, as they were mainly perishables, even if they had been entered in the Rations Ledger. The goods were for every-day consumption by the patients as they were vegetables and fruits. G

Having made these observations the learned judge went on to pose this question: "Is there evidence that those goods were not in fact used by the patients at Mkomaindo Hospital during the period in question?"

If I may respectfully say so, this was and still is an important question, on the answer to H which principally hinges the result of the appeal. The additional evidence was taken by the District Court on October 20, 1981, in the presence of both the public prosecutor and the appellant. It was given by one witness only: Dr. Venance Mhando. Unfortunately I the witness shed no further light on the case. The witness tried to fill the lacuna in the prosecution case, pointed out by MUSHI, J., by A saying:

1983 TLR p193

SAMATTA J

> I received so many complaints from the patients that they were not receiving vegetables and fruits. During that time I was receiving bills showing that accused was buying vegetables and B fruits. I was receiving bills which showed that we were buying many vegetables and fruits. I was surprised because I was paying much money.

Was it established beyond reasonable doubt that the food in question had not been C supplied to the hospital kitchen (so that finally it could reach the patients)? As already pointed out, this was the deciding question in this case. As is well known, in a criminal trial in this country an accused person bears no burden to satisfy the court of his innocence. The burden lies on the prosecution to establish his guilt. In the case now at D the bar, therefore, the appellant bore no burden to satisfy the learned trial magistrate that the goods in question reached the kitchen of the hospital (or the wards). What was the difficulty in adducing evidence from one of the hospital's cooks to the effect- if that was E the true position - that the appellant had not made available to the kitchen the goods (or at least some of them) mentioned in the charge? What was the difficulty in calling those members of staff who were responsible at the relevant time for serving meals to the patients to come and give supporting evidence on this crucial point? With respect, I think F neither the sophistry of a Roman jurist nor the labour of Sisyphus can possibly provide satisfactory answers to these questions. As will have been already noted, Dr. Mhando, in the additional evidence, made some reference to the complaints which he received from patients on the non-serving of vegetables and fruits at the hospital. Since none of G the alleged complainants gave evidence in this case, in so far as that piece of evidence was given to establish the truthfulness of the complaints (from the patients), it was inadmissible in evidence for, plainly, it was hearsay: see s.62(1) of the Evidence Act, 1967.

It may be true, as was asserted by Dr. Mhando, that during the period in question the H appellant had bought far more food than at any other time before. But this fact could not, by itself, be very useful in establishing the assertion that the food had not been (legitimately) consumed at the hospital. It was necessary, to make the piece of evidence I carry some weight, to lead evidence on the number of patients admitted at the hospital at the relevant time and also to give the numbers in respect of other periods used for comparison and contrast. A Unhappily, this was not done. It cannot seriously be said that this evidence was not available or could not be made available. In my settled view the lower court could - and should - have invoked the maximum omnia praesumuntur contra spoliatorem in this B case.

The prosecution did prove, and the appellant did not dispute, the fact that when the store was checked by Mr. Ngwale, the stock verifier, none of the purchased goods was found in it. I own I find it difficult to understand, in the absence of (proper) proof that the C amount of goods bought far exceeded the hospital's requirements at the material time, why anyone should have expected to find some of the goods in the store. The goods were bought to be consumed by patients. Taking into account, as was observed by Mushi, J., that most of the goods were perishables, I cannot understand - and it is not D for not beating my brain - why the fact that the food was not found in the store at the time Mr. Ngwale checked it could legitimately be taken as being only consistent with the food having been stolen.

I must now say a word or two on the counts for fraudulent false accounting. In the absence of evidence demonstrating, to the satisfaction of the law, that the appellant had E converted the goods to his own use, it was unsafe to hold that the omissions to enter the details of the purchases in the store ledger were a product of design and the intent behind them was to defraud. If I may respectfully say so, I think Mr. Sengwaji, counsel for the Republic, was perfectly entitled to decline, as he did, to support the learned trial F magistrate's findings on the eleven counts too.

There is not much room, I think, for debate over the fact that there was a fairly strong suspicion against the appellant in this case, but, as the learned authors of Field's Law of G Evidence (10th ed., Vol.1) very rightly observe, at p.266, "law reports are full of access based on the wisdom and experience of eminent jurists that suspicion, however strong, cannot take the place of proof." If the alleged offences in the instant case were in fact perpetrated, they were not, as, I hope, I have sufficiently demonstrated, proved beyond rational controversy. H

For the reasons I have endeavoured to give, I allow the appeal, quash the conviction and set aside the sentence imposed thereon. The order for compensation is, naturally, also set aside. As the appellant is now a free man, having finished serving the sentence I have I set aside, I make no order for his release from custody.

Appeal allowed.

1983 TLR p195

A

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v STEPHEN MWEJI & LUGANGIZA NDARO 1983 TLR 195 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Katiti J

9 June, 1984

CRIMINAL REVISION 39 OF 1983

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charge - Defective - Joinder of parties in one count - B Whether occasioned failure of justice.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Defective charge - Failure to point out the relationship between principal and agent - Whether curable - Section 3(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1971.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentences - Illegal where it is less than what is C prescribed by statute - Section 3(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act and section 4(a) and para 9 of the first schedule to the Minimum Sentences Act 1972.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentence - Order of forfeiture of property - Whether legal. D -Headnote

The two accuseds were jointly convicted of corruption under section 3(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1972. The two accuseds, who were principal and agent, gave an inducement to a public officer so that he could do them a favour of deviating E from the normal procedures. The charge did not charge them under separate sequential numbers. Further, the charge did not state the relationship of agent and principal that existed between them. At the end of the trial, the trial court imposed a sentence less than that prescribed by statute and ordered forfeiture of the money that was involved in the corrupt transaction. On revision: F

Held: (i) Where more than one accuseds are jointly charged their names and addresses should be contained in the charge sheet separately and sequentially numbered; G

(ii) failure to point out an agent/principal relationship renders the charge defective under section 3(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1971 but such defect is not fatal if the omission does not prejudice the accuseds to the extent of miscarriage of justice;

(iii) where a minimum sentence is prescribed by statute the court has no discretion to impose a lesser sentence; H

(iv) where a trial magistrate orders forfeiture of property, he must show legal authority for his actions.

Case Information

Order accordingly. I

1983 TLR p196

KATITI J

Cases referred to: A

1. Mwita v Republic [1971] HCD no. 304

[zJDz]Judgment

Katiti, J.: Before Ukerewe District Court were Magobe Maila & Munyaga Mapesa B and Stephen s/o Mweji & Lugangiza Ndaro, accused and charged with two counts of corrupt transactions c/s 3(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act No. 16 of 1971. The end of the trial witnessed the 2nd accused being sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment on each count after conviction, with an order that the sentences run concurrently.

On scrutiny of the file, several aspects that demand correctional comment have emerged. C The first aspect that needs comment is the charge itself. Although the charge shows that Magobe Maila Munyaga Mapesa was the accused person, it is only the particulars of the offences charged that reveal that Stephen Mweji Lugangiza Ndaro was another D accused person. It is clear therefore that both accuseds were each facing the same charges of corrupt transactions c/s 3(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act No. 16 of 1971, but not put or placed in the charge sheet in the consecutive and sequential manner. The procedure as adopted is a wrong one, for it is the procedure and requirement of the E law that, where more than one accuseds are jointly charged, their names and addresses should be contained in the charge in clear form. And where and when such persons join in the commission of an offence, all or any of them may be jointly charged with it, or even such accused persons may be charged separately, but where they are F jointly charged, they must be numbered consecutively and sequentially.

The other aspect that demands or demanded a corrective touch, is the fact that the charges falling under section 3(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act of 1971 as they G do, omitted to aver the principal and agent's business or affairs relationship. It is the law that where the charge falls under section 3 of the Corruption Act 1971 such charge should point out the relationship, that the person charged corruptly gave the money or advantage or consideration to the agent or the agent received the same for doing or forbearing to do anything in relation to the agent's principal's affairs of business. The case H of Mwita v Republic [1971] H.C.D. No. 304 is an authority in this direction. The Magistrate therefore is reminded that he should always check the charge to see whether the ingredients of such charge are incorporated in the same charge.

The question now is whether this omission prejudiced the accuseds to the extent of I miscarriage of justice. I have a mind to answer this question in the negative. I have the following reasons. It is clear that the A accuseds knew that they were corruptly giving money to P.W.1, a person employed in public service. They clearly knew that this money was meant to be an inducement to P.W.1, to deviate from known normal procedure, to allow them to pass through a short-cut. It does therefore appear to me that all along the accuseds had no mistaken B ideas as to what they were doing, and I am therefore satisfied that they were telling P.W.1 through corruption to perform his duty contrary to established office norms. I therefore hold the view that the omission of averment of principal-agent relationship in the particulars of the offence, did not prejudice the accuseds, as the accuseds knew that C the business or affairs that they were urging P.W.1 to perform with infidelity as a result of corruption was actually Government Business, the government being the Principal of P.W.1. I therefore fail to see how they could feel prejudiced.
1983 TLR p197
KATITI J
The other aspect that attracted our attention is the sentence that the trial magistrate D imposed upon the 2nd accused person. The 1st Accused died before the trial ended. As I earlier pointed out, the 2nd accused was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment on each count, for offences that fall under section 3(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act No.16 of 1971. With due respect, I think the trial magistrate went contrary to the law, E for under section 4 (a) and para 9 of the first Schedule to the Minimum Sentences Act 1972, the offence of taking part in a corrupt transaction contrary to section 3 of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1971, attracts the statutory minimum sentence for the F same offences, of three years' imprisonment. Under the Minimum Sentences Act, under no circumstances should an accused person convicted under section 3 and 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, be awarded an imprisonment sentence of less than three years. It is therefore clear that the sentence of 12 months' imprisonment that the trial G magistrate imposed is an illegal one. I therefore set aside this illegal sentence, and impose three years' imprisonment. It is therefore ordered that the legal process be initiated to have the accused serve the sentence imposed according to law.
And finally there is an aspect of forfeiture. The trial magistrate ordered that Shs. 100/=, H that was involved in the two offences be forfeited to the Republic. It is a requirement of case law in this country, that where a trial magistrate orders forfeiture of property, he must show the legal authority under which he is acting. In this case the magistrate did not I show under what statute he was ordering the forfeiture of 100/=. I shall therefore try and see what law the magistrate was applying, if any. I have gone through the Minimum Sentences Act 1972, A and I am satisfied that though the same statute provides for compensation, it makes no mention of forfeiture. Coming to the Prevention of Corruption Act No. 16 of 1971, section 3(3) of the same Act seems to be relevant. It provides that where a person convicted is an agent, the court may, in addition to sentence, order him to pay his principal the amount or value of an advantage received by him, and whether such B convicted person is an agent or not, the court may order that the amount, or value of advantage received by him, or any part thereof be forfeited. But it is not provided that the money, or consideration, or property corruptly given, but not corruptly received by a C person convicted of an offence under section 3 be forfeited. In this case the person convicted did not corruptly receive the amount in question. It is therefore clear that the forfeiture order that was made by the trial magistrate in this case had no basis in law. The D above is said not without an impeccable moral impression that refunding corruption money to the corrupter is like giving back the murder weapons to the murderer. I should have imagined that it would be consistent with the obvious severity of the Prevention of Corruption Act. 1971, to order forfeiture of any money, advantage or consideration E involved in a corrupt transaction, without regard as to whether the person convicted is the receiver or not. All the same, the forfeiture order is hereby set aside.
1983 TLR p198

Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p198

F

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v DEONATUS & MKUNGU s/o BWIRE 1983 TLR 198 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Katiti J

June 9, 1984 G

CRIMINAL REVISION 42 OF 1982

Flynote

Criminal Law - Minimum Sentences Act, 1972 - Whether serving sentence in respect of previous conviction can be a special circumstance for non-application of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972. H

-Headnote

The accused Deonatus & Mkungu s/o Bwire was charged with stealing by servant before Ukerewe District Court. At the end of the trial the accused was found guilty, I convicted and sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment. The accused did not appeal, but the record was called for revision for some unsatisfactory aspects of the charge and the sentence A imposed.

1983 TLR p199

KATITI J

Held: (i) where the accused is already serving a sentence in respect of a previous conviction to take the same as a special circumstance for non-application of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972 would be contrary to logic, law and principles of B sentencing;

(ii) it is the law that where a person is convicted of a scheduled offence (under the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972, section 5) and the trial court is satisfied that such convicted person, within seven years preceding the date when he committed such offence, had been convicted of like or scheduled offence, the trial court shall sentence C him to imprisonment for a term of not less than five years.

Case Information

Order accordingly.

No case referred to. D

[zJDz]Judgment

Katiti, J.: Before Ukerewe District Court was Deonatus & Mkungu s/o Bwire charged under section 271 and 265 with stealing by servant. At the end of the trial, the same E accused was found guilty, convicted as charged, and sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment. Following on its heels was a compensation order, that the accused should pay Shs. 1,093/40 as compensation to the Government. The accused has not appealed.

This record has been called for revision because it has revealed two unsatisfactory F aspects: First the charge itself, and second, the sentence imposed. I shall first deal with the charge. Having looked into the evidence, I am satisfied that it is very clear, that the accused person was employed as a Court Clerk, attached to Kabigo District Court in Ukerewe District, Mwanza Region. It is equally clear, that the amount Shs. 1,093/40, G was both the property of the Government, and come into his possession by virtue of his employment as a Government Servant. He was therefore a person employed in Government Department i.e. the Judiciary, and he should have been charged under Section 270 and 265 of the Penal Code, with stealing by person employed in Public H Service. Although charging the accused under 271 and 265 of the Penal Code was obviously an error, it does not seem to me, that the accused was prejudiced thereby. For I am sure there was no mistake in the accused's mind, as to his employment in Government Service i.e. the Judiciary. I shall therefore I amend the conviction to read under ss. 270 and 265 of the Penal Code, rather than A under section 271 and 265 of the Penal Code.

Second aspect is the sentence that was imposed upon him. In his own mitigation the accused had the following to say and I quote:

"I am a convict in prison for a term of eight years, I pray for the leniency of the Court." B

The trial magistrate in sentencing the accused had the following to say in his preamble to sentence, and I quote:

The accused is a first offender. I have taken into consideration as a special circumstance, that C the accused is a convict in which he is serving a minimum sentence of eight years in jail. In this case I admit that the court can take a special circumstance and impose other sentence than the Minimum Sentence Act No. 1 of 1972. In this case I sentence the accused to twelve (12) months' imprisonment. D

With due respect to the trial magistrate, I must say that his preamble to and finally the sentence are full of errors both of fact and law. Firstly, on the accused's own admission E that he had previously been convicted of an offence and was serving a sentence under the Minimum Sentences Act, assuming when he committed this offence, he had previously been convicted, how the magistrate could treat him as a first offender boggles my mind. Secondly taking the accused's previous conviction, - i.e. the sentence he is F serving as special circumstance, for non-application of the Minimum Sentences Act, is contrary to logic, law and principles of sentencing. For under normal circumstances, even where the Minimum Sentences Act is not applicable, the fact that the accused has been previously convicted, may justify heavier sentences, as such previous conviction (s) G more often than not, demonstrate such accused person as a habitual criminal.

All the same, it is the law that where a person is convicted of a scheduled offence (under the Minimum Sentences Act 1972 section 5) and the trial court is satisfied that such convicted person, within seven years preceding the date when he committed such H offence, had been convicted of a like or scheduled offence, the trial court shall sentence him to imprisonment for a term of not less that five years. I am however, reluctant to lean against these provisions. For the record we have does not reveal that the accused had, I seven years preceding the date the same accused committed this offence, been convicted of similar, like or scheduled offence. The unceasing fear here is that the two cases may have overlapped each other at the investigatory stage, but A the conviction reached in one case during the pendency of the current one. For different reason therefore, I find it unsafe to apply the provisions of section 5(a) of the Minimum Sentence Act 1972.

But this is not to say that this is a case or material to which the Minimum Sentence Act B 1972 does not apply. Even if for technical but obvious impediment, the accused was a first offender, so long as the amount stolen exceeded one hundred shillings, and belonged to a specified authority - the Government - at least the provisions of section 4 of the C Minimum Sentences Act 1972, are inevitably attracted for application. That means the twelve months' imprisonment sentence was still illegal. I shall proceed therefore to set aside the 12 months' imprisonment sentence which is obviously illegal and impose 3 (three) years' imprisonment, under the provisions of section 4 of the Minimum Sentences Act 1972. D E Order accordingly.

F

[zRPz]AMOS JONATHAN v J.S. MASUKA AND OTHERS 1983 TLR 201 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Munyera J

December 21, 1979
CIVIL CASE 8 OF 1974
Flynote
Tort - Defamation - Libel - Allegation of defrauding the employer -Publication of defamatory G matter - Accusing plaintiff of having committed a criminal offence - Whether defence of justification available - Standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt.
Tort - Defamation - Defence of qualified privilege- When such defence available. H
-Headnote
On 14/5/1974 the plaintiff filed a libel suit claiming damages to the amount of shs. 30,000/=. The basis of the plaintiff's case was that the defendants had defamed his character by calling him a thief. The facts which were based on an allegation that the plaintiff had defrauded his employer, one of the defendants, were admitted. The only I question was whether the defendants had any defence.
1983 TLR p202
MUNYERA J
Held: (i) In order to be availed of the defence of justification the defendants have to A prove that their accusation was true and the standard of proof is beyond reasonable doubt;

(ii) qualified privilege covers the publication of defamatory matter by a person who has a legal, social and moral duty to publish and the recipient has a legal, social and B moral duty to receive the publication.
Case Information
Order accordingly.
No cases referred to. C
[zJDz]Judgment
Munyera, J.: This is a libel suit. The plaintiff was employed by the defunct Nyanza Industrial Company, a subsidiary of the former Mwanza Regional Co-operative union. D He worked as a clerk at a Nassa ginnery. The 1st defendant was an Administrative Manager, the 2nd and 3rd defendants were artisans at the same place. The 4th defendant was the employer of all three defendants as well as the plaintiff. In addition to their jobs, the 2nd and 3rd defendants were Chairman and Secretary respectively of the E Workers' Committee there. The plaintiff's duties included recording the names of casual workers in the master roll and preparing payments for them. On 9/8/73 the Ginnery Manager wrote a letter (EXD) to the plaintiff telling him that it had become known that he (plaintiff) was defrauding the Company by including false names in the F master roll and receiving their payments. He told him to offer an explanation by 10/8/73. On 14/8/73 the 1st defendant, the Administrative Manager, wrote to the plaintiff (EX.A) informing him that he had been dismissed with immediate effect because of his dishonesty and swindling of the Company. The plaintiff took the matter up with the workers G committee (2nd and 3rd defendants were Chairman and Secretary respectively). The committee investigated the complaint, made its deliberations and communicated the outcome to the plaintiff in a letter dated 6/9/73 (EX.B). The letter informed the plaintiff that it supported the management's action of dismissing him and that the committee was H not there to defend thieves. Later the plaintiff's affair was referred to the Conciliation Board which ruled that the plaintiff was wrongly dismissed and should be reinstated without loss of his career. The management refused saying they had no longer any faith in him. They however agreed to terminate his service with benefits instead of dismissal and I that was the end of the matter so far as the Company was concerned. On 14/5/74 the plaintiff filed this suit claiming damages to the amount of shs. 30,000/=. The basis of plaintiff's A case is that the Administrative Manager (1st defendant), the 2nd and 3rd defendants defamed his character by calling him a thief. The 4th defendant was joined in its capacity as the employer of the first three defendants and bore vicarious liability for their vicarious actions. Both parties were represented by Counsel. B

1983 TLR p203

MUNYERA J

This case turns around legal issues. Most of the facts have been admitted. It is agreed that there was publication and that the publication contained defamatory matter in that it accused the plaintiff of having committed a criminal offence. The question is whether the defendants have any defence. The Counsel for the plaintiff submitted that the only C defence that could be available to them is that of justification. In order to avail of that defence the defendants have not so proved and the court should find for the plaintiff. In the defendant's written statement of defence (para 6) it has been averred that the defendants made the publication bona fide without malice and on qualified privileged D occasion. Now to begin with, I would agree with the Counsel for plaintiff that the defence of justification will not help the defendants. They have not proved beyond reasonable doubts that the plaintiff committed the criminal offence they alleged in their letters (EX.A&B). But this is not the end of the matter. As argued in para 6 of the E written statement of defence and by the Defence Counsel, the defence of qualified privilege is available to the defendants.

Qualified privilege covers the publications of defamatory matter by a person who has a F legal, social or moral obligations to publish and the recipient has legal, social and moral duty to receive the publication. In this case the position runs like this: the 1st defendant was an Administrative Manager whose responsibility was to take care of the discipline of the workers of his organisation. He had powers to dismiss unbecoming workers, to G inform the latter why he dismissed him. The letter (EX.A) was copied to the ginnery Manager at the headquarters, various branch managers of the company, the personnel section and the accounts section all of whom had a duty to know of the situation. The publications never went beyond those people. The 2nd and 3rd defendants were H members of the Worker's Committee duly established under the Security of Employment Act. No. 62 of 1964. The plaintiff referred his complaint to the said committee which was legally bound to investigate the matter and make its decisions known to all concerned. The letter (EX.B) stated that it supported the action of the management (1st I defendant) and the publication never went beyond the people concerned with the plaintiff's affairs. Therefore the defendants were doing their legal duty and had no malice A towards the plaintiff.

1983 TLR p204

To find that what the defendants did amounted to defamation would create a far-reaching and a very dangerous precedent. No longer will an employer warn his employees for unbecoming conduct lest the grounds for dismissal would be taken as defamatory. B
I would dismiss this suit in its entirety with costs to the defendants.
C Order accordingly.
1983 TLR p204

[zRPz]STEPHANO s/o RWEYENDERA v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 204 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mushi J

February 29, 1984 D
CRIMINAL APPEAL 154 OF 1983
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Compensation order in criminal trial - Accused to be given opportunity to be heard and/or contest award of compensation. E Criminal Practice and Procedure - Compensation order - Large and contentious figure - Wiser to pursue in a civil court.
-Headnote
The appellant was charged on different counts of burglary, stealing and malicious F damage to property. He was acquitted on counts of burglary and stealing, and convicted on the count of malicious damage to property and was sentenced to a fine of Shs. 3,000/= or twelve months' imprisonment in default. The appellant was further ordered to pay Shs. 23,750/= to the complainant as compensation for the damaged property. The G appellant is appealing against conviction and sentence as well as the compensation order.
Held: (i) Where a criminal court decides to award compensation under section 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the propriety of the cost or value of the property in H question becomes an issue; thus, before a compensation order is made, the accused must be given an opportunity to admit the amount of compensation intended to be awarded or contest it;

(ii) where the amount due for compensation appears to be reasonably large and I contentious, it is wiser to allow the affected person to pursue it in a civil court.
1983 TLR p205
MUSHI J
Case Information
Order accordingly. A
Cases referred to:

1. John s/o Juma v. R, Cr. App. No. 699 of 1969 H.C. Mwanza (unreported)
2. R.v Mwita s/o Muhoni [1969] H.C.D. n.47. B
3. William Frank Haining & 2 Others v R. [1972] H.C.D. n. 53.

S. Kidela, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mushi, J.: The appellant in this matter is Stephano Rweyendera. The appellant was C charged with three counts. On the first count he was charged with burglary c/s 294(1) of the Penal Code. On the second count he was charged with stealing c/s 265 of the Penal Code and on the third count he was charged with malicious damage to property c/s 326(1) of the Penal Code. He was acquitted on the counts of burglary and theft but he D was convicted on the third count of malicious damage to property and was sentenced to a fine of Shs. 3,000/= or twelve months' imprisonment in default. The appellant was further ordered to pay Shs. 23,750/= to the complainant as compensation for the damaged property. The appellant is appealing against conviction and sentence as well as E against the compensation order.

The appeal against conviction has no merits at all. The evidence of PW 3. - Peter Kamgisha, PW.4 - George Nicolaus and PW.5 - Theobald Kishani were that of eye witnesses who clearly saw the appellant destroy the articles as stated in the charge sheet. F The event was done openly and in a very dramatic way. Many people were attracted to watch the event particularly those tenants who were living in that building, and it included the three witnesses mentioned above. One of the witnesses is a brother-in-law of the appellant who was living in that house and it is most unlikely that he would tell lies G against the appellant. The evidence left no doubts at all that the appellant committed the offence as charged and conviction cannot be challenged. The appeal against conviction is hereby dismissed.

Regarding the sentence, the appellant in his petition has stated that and I quote: H

That under the circumstances, the sentence imposed by the trial court was manifestly excessive and should be reconsidered by your Honourable court. I

1983 TLR p206

MUSHI J

The appellant was sentenced to Shs. 3,000/= fine or twelve months' imprisonment in A default. The fine was paid. The maximum sentence provided by law for an offence under section 326(1) of Penal Code is seven years. What punishment to give to a convicted person is a matter within the discretion of the trial magistrate and this court will not B interfere except where it appears that in assessing the sentence the trial magistrate has acted on some wrong principle or has imposed a sentence which is manifestly excessive or inadequate. In this appeal, the appellant has claimed that the sentence of Shs. 3,000/= fine is manifestly excessive. Is there any justification on this point? In sentencing the C appellant the learned trial magistrate had this to say:

Sentence: Accused is a first offender to this offence of malicious damage to property. Accused had alleged to have a sick person who is to date still admitted in hospital. Accused as I had D seen he maliciously damaged PW.2's properties. Accused knew the outcome of his actions. Accused though he is the first offender deserves severe punishment. Accused is hereby sentenced to a fine of Shs. 3,000/= or twelve months imprisonment in default. E

It is a good practice to give reasons why a particular sentence is imposed but whether reasons are given or not, it is necessary for the trial magistrate to seek information on the accused character, antecedents and other relevant considerations before assessing F punishment. However each case must generally be viewed in its own context. It seems to me that in this case the trial magistrate over-looked one important mitigating factor which was available in favour of the appellant and that was that the appellant was forced by circumstances into committing the offence. The appellant committed the offence while he G was under serious provocation. While provocation is not a defence, it is very clear that had the appellant not been seriously provoked by the complainant - P.W.2 - Renatus, he would not have committed this offence. The evidence clearly established that PW2. was on that relevant night found sleeping in the bedroom of PW.1, who was H appellant's wife, where the appellant would have spent the night. P.W.1. Melasiana and P.W.2- Fortunatus were fully aware that the appellant was in town and would in all probabilities spend the night in the matrimonial home. P.W.2.- Fortunatus, however with impunity went to sleep in the bedroom of P.W.1. It was proved that PW.2 had actually I moved and was staying in there. The explanation that PW.2 had only gone there temporarily to guard the premises at the request of PW.1 does not seem to hold much water as there A was some other person who could have guarded the place without anybody raising eyebrows e.g. PW.5- Theobald. The notion that the complainant - PW.2 had taken over the appellant's wife, even though the wife was not present, would in all probability provoke any reasonable person and the appellant was no exception. The appellant B definitely acted whilst under serious provocation as he would not otherwise have done anything. While therefore that provocation is not a defence, it is however a mitigating factor and in this case it was very important. For example in the case of John s/o Juma v.R. (Criminal Appeal No. 696 of 1969, Mwanza High Court) and R.v Mwita s/s C Muhoni [1969] HCD 47 are but a few cases in which provocation has been taken as a mitigating factor. Had the learned trial magistrate taken this factor into consideration it is doubtful whether he would have found it necessary to impose a severe sentence as he stated. Taking into account the circumstances of this case and particularly the factor D which I have just described above, a sentence of Shs. 1,000/= fine would serve the purpose. The sentence of Shs, 3,000/= fine is accordingly reduced to that of shs. 1,000/=. As the fine has already been paid, the balance of shs 2,00/= should be refunded to the appellant. E

I now turn to the appeal against the compensation order. The appellant in his memorandum of appeal in ground No. 4 states and I quote:

That the nature of the alleged damaged properties was not conclusively proved as was F required. One should have expected PW.2 to produce receipts to prove the costs of these properties. Under the circumstances, the trial magistrate had no sufficient material evidence before him upon which to base his conclusion that the properties damaged were worth shs. 23,750/=. G

The order made by the court was worded in the following terms and I quote:

Order: Accused should compensate the damaged goods properties totalling shs. 23,750/=

H

Our courts are empowered to award compensation in appropriate cases as provided under section 176 of Criminal Procedure Code. However, under the said section compensation can only be awarded if: I
1983 TLR p208
MUSHI J
The person has suffered material loss or personal injury in consequence of offence A committed; and substantial compensation is in the opinion of the court, recoverable by the person by civil suit.
If the two conditions exist and the court is inclined to exercise its discretion to award B compensation, then after careful consideration the court may order payment of such amount as it seems fair and reasonable. The requirement that the amount must be fair and reasonable entails vigorous judicial assessment of the amount. And naturally it will C involve the accused and the victim as in a civil suit. The exercise may be simple where the figure is admitted or where damage is of readily ascertainable or is of comparatively small value. In this case the court awarded Shs. 23,750/=. It is not clear as to how the learned trial magistrate arrived at this figure. According to the charge sheet, the amount D of damaged property was valued at Shs. 26,200/=. During the trial PW.2 - Fortunatus Rwechungura, whose property was damaged, gave evidence and stated the value of various articles. According to PW.2 his four shirts were worth Shs. 4,000/=, a jacket was worth Shs. 1,800/=, four trousers were worth Shs. 2,000/=; one Oxax E watch was worth Shs. 2,500/=; twelve medical books were worth Shs. 12,000/= and a stethoscope was worth Shs. 2,000/=. According to these figures the total is Shs. 24,300/=. During the trial, the appellant did not cross-examine the witness on the value of the items as was asserted by the witness. This is quite normal and the appellant cannot F be blamed for not having asked such questions. This is so because the main preoccupation of a criminal trial is to establish the guilt or innocence of the accused. The principal aim of criminal law is to punish the wrongdoer. Compensation does not follow as a matter of course in a criminal trial and thus an accused does not bother himself with G the cost or value of the property involved in such a trial. Where however, the court decides to exercise its discretion and award compensation under section 1976 of Criminal Procedure Code, then the propriety of the cost or value of the property in question becomes an issue and thus before a compensation order is made, the accused H must be given an opportunity to admit the amount of compensation intended to be awarded or contest it. To make an order without first calling upon the accused to say something will amount to condemning someone unheard which undoubtedly is against the principles of natural Justice. In the case of William Frank Haining and 2 Others v. R. I [1972] HCD 53, the Court of Appeal while considering payment of compensation under section 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code said and I quote: A
1983 TLR p209
MUSHI J
An order under section (176) would usually be made in the application of the prosecutor but if not a court may clearly act on its own accordingly but in doing so it is performing a judicial act B which would materially affect both the party to receive the compensation and the convicted person who has to pay the compensation. It is essential here that these persons, and more especially the convicted person, be given an opportunity of being heard. The convicted person C should be called upon to show cause why an order should not be made. To do otherwise would be a breach of natural justice and would amount to a person being condemned without having a hearing.

In the appeal before me not only that the appellant was not called upon to show cause as D to why the compensation order should not be made, but also the amount of compensation was not readily ascertainable. The figures as given by PW.2 were not supported by documents or some credible evidence. Four shirts were said to cost Shs. 4,000/= which is Shs. 1,000/= per shirt but no receipts were produced. Similarly for all E other items. Where the amount due for compensation would appear to be reasonably large and contentious, it would be wiser to leave the affected person to pursue it in a Civil Court. For the reasons I have given the compensation order offended the principles of natural justice and cannot be allowed to stand. The appeal against the compensation F order is allowed and the said order is accordingly set aside. It is for the affected party to seek remedy otherwise.

G Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p210

A

[zRPz]ALLY FUNDI v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 210 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mtwara

Judge Samatta J

June 13, 1983

CRIMINAL APPEAL 110 OF 1981

Flynote

Evidence - Confession - Admissibility of confession made to a police officer before B enactment of s. 4 of Evidence (Amendment) Act. 1980; and lamination imposed by s. 31 of Evidence Act, 1962.

-Headnote

This is a consolidated appeal of Ally Fundi and Hassani Hokororo against conviction C and sentence for the offence of attempted robbery, a decision of the District Court of Mtwara. In arriving at the decision the learned magistrate heavily relied on the confession he found Hassani Hokororo to have made to the police team. D

Held: (i) The only way in which a confession can be taken into account is as evidence; under section 33 (1) of the Evidence Act, 1967 the confession by the accused person can only be used to lend assurance to other evidence against his coaccused, evidence which falls short by a very narrow margin of the standard of proof necessary for a E conviction;

(ii) a mere opportunity to commit an offence cannot be the basis for convicting an accused; suspicion, however grave it may be, cannot be a substitute for proof in a court of justice.

Case Information

Order accordingly. F

Cases referred to:

1. Kenyarithi s/o Mwangi v Regina (1956) 23 E.A.C.A. 422.
2. R. v Tomu s/o Ngulombe (1943) 10 E.A.C.A. 54
3. Gopa d/o Gidamebanya & 5 Others v Regina (1953) 20 E.A.C.A.318. G
4. Karaya Njonji & Others v Regina (1953) 20 E.A.C.A. 324
5. Rex v Wadingombe bin M. Kwanda alias Anton & Two Others (1941) 8 E.A.C.A. 33
6. Mussa Luinda v R. [1960] E.A. 470 H

[zJDz]Judgment

Samatta, J.: Mr. Murtaza Karatela is a businessman. He resides at Mahuta. On July 9, 1979, he left the village for Mtwara. He was accompanied by two men, Mr. Mohamed Bakari and Mr. Rashidi Ntegula. The trio travelled in a landrover. It was being driven by I Mr. Karatela, who was sending Shs. 20,000/= to the bank in Mtwara town. On reaching very near a village called Ngorongoro the trio A heard four gunshots. Suspecting that some robbers had waylaid them, Mr. Karatela pressed the accelerator further. They succeeded to reach Mtwara without being harmed or robbed. There Mr. Karatela reported the unusual incident to the police. Led by Inspector Kussaka, a team of policemen left for Ngorongoro. Before reaching its B destination the team met four men. It was at Mdui village. The men were going in the direction of Mtwara. Suspecting them of being the persons they were looking for, the guardians of the law arrested them. During interrogation which followed, one of the C arrestees, Hassan Hokororo, told Inspector Kussaka, in the presence of the other policemen, that he (Hassan Hokororo) and his fellow arrestees were the persons who had shot at Mr. Karatela's motor vehicle. According to the police inspector, Hassan Hokororo led the police team to a bush, near Ngorongoro village, where he said they D had hidden the firearm. There a rifle was found, buried in the ground. In the same area were found four spent cartridges. Later the cartridges, together with the rifle, were submitted to a ballistics expert for examination. The expert's report revealed that two of the cartridges had been discharged from the rifle. Basically this is the evidence which E was laid before the District Court of Mtwara district by the prosecution against the four arrested persons: Hassan Hokororo, Alli Fundi, Hamisi Abdarahamani and Athumani Bwatama. The last accused died after the case for the prosecution had been closed and before the first defence case had opened. F

1983 TLR p211

SAMATTA J

Hassan Hokororo's defence was, briefly, this: on the material day, at about 7.30 a.m., he went to his radio repair workshop. About one and a half hours later some policemen came to the area. They searched Athumani Bwatama's house. They said they recovered some bullets from it. On searching his workshop they found a radio which they G suspected to be stolen property. His explanation that the radio belonged to one of his customers proved to be of no avail. He was arrested and charged with attempted robbery. Ally Fundi's story was that on the night of July 8, 1979, his father-in-law died at the Ligula hospital. On the following day he left for a place known as Mbawale to H report the sad event. He did not reach that place; he was arrested by the police, who suspected him of having participated in an attempted robbery at Ngorongoro. Hamisi Abdarahamani asserted that on the material day he had left his home (at about 7.00 a.m.) for Maili-kumi village to buy some cassava. While he was at the village's I bus stand four policemen came there and arrested him on a charge of attempted A robbery.

1983 TLR p212

SAMATTA J

The learned trial magistrate reviewed the evidence before him at some length. In the upshot he came to the conclusion that the guilt of the three accused persons had been B demonstrated beyond reasonable doubt. He accepted as a fact that Hassani Hokororo had confessed that he and his co-accused had attempted to shoot at Mr. Kartela's vehicle. He also believed the policemen's evidence that accused showed them a rifle hidden in a bush on the outskirts of Ngorongoro village. Upon the evidence the learned C magistrate saw no reasonable conclusion other than that the accused persons' (common) intention was to rob Mr. Karatela and his companions. He accordingly convicted them as charged. In arriving at that decision the learned magistrate heavily relied, even in the case of Ally Fundi and Hamisi Abdarahamani, on the confession he found Hassani Hokororo to have made to the police team. D

Hassan Hokororo and Ally Fundi are aggrieved by the learned magistrate's decision; hence the present consolidated appeals. Hamisi Abdarahamni has elected to prefer no appeal.

This case is not without some difficulty. Inspector Kussaka gave his testimony on June 9, E 1980, that is to say, before s. 27 of the Evidence Act, 1967, was amended by s. 4 of the Evidence (Amendment) Act, 1980. Although it was enacted on May 21, 1980, the latter Act did not come into force until December 1 of that year, see Govt. notice No. 172/80. Before the amendment, save as provided for in s.31 of the Evidence Act, no F confession made to a police officer could be proved against a person accused of an offence. The testimony of Inspector Kussaka touching upon the alleged confession could be admissible, if at all, only under s.31 of the Evidence Act. By the section it is enacted that: G

> When any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence in the custody of a police officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as related distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, H is relevant (the emphasis is mine).

Save as for the addition of the words "provided that", this section is in pari materia with its predecessor, s. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, which was the subject of I discussion in several cases. In Kenyarithi s/o Mwangi (1956) 23 E.A.C.A. 422 a case originating from the Supreme Court of Kenya, the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa A held that the section operated as provision to section 24,25 and 26 of the same Act, i.e, the Indian Evidence Act. It seems to me that there is no reason for taking a different view with regard to s.31 of the Evidence Act, 1967, when read in relation to s. 27, 28 and 29 of the same legislation before the Evidence (Amendment) Act, 1980, came into B force. If what I have just expressed is correct, it follows that the confession allegedly made by Hassani Hokororo could, subject to the limitation imposed by s.31 of the Evidence Act, be admitted in evidence. What is that limitation? The answer would appear to be, that it is not the whole of the statement made by the accused in C consequence of which the fact is discovered which is admissible; it is only so much of the statement which distinctly relates to the fact discovered. In other words the information and the fact alleged to have been discovered should be connected with each other as D cause and effect. Any portion of the information which does not satisfy this test should be shut out of the case. It should be pointed out, for the avoidance of doubt, I think, that the word "discovered" is used in the section to mean physically discovered and not mentally discovered. The rationale behind the section is that if a fact is actually E discovered in consequence of information given, some guarantee is afforded thereby that the information was true, and accordingly can be safely allowed to be given in evidence: see R. v Tomu s/o Nuglombe (1943) 10 E.A.C.A. 54. Applying the test I have described in this judgment, it must be correct to say that the portion of Hassani Hokororo's statement that he and his co-accused shot at Mr. Karatela's motor vehicle F was not admissible in evidence since it did not lead to the discovery of the firearm. It is the other portion, that is, the one to the effect that he had hidden a firearm at some place which led to such a discovery.

1983 TLR p213

SAMATTA J

I can see no reason on the record of the case why Inspector Kussaka should have G manufactured evidence against the appellant. It is not without significance that the inspector's evidence dovetails with that given by one of the policemen who accompanied the inspector, Det. Constable Richard (PW7). Like the learned trial magistrate, I am satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the appellant Hassani Hokororo did tell the H inspector that he and his co-accused had hidden the firearm was somewhere and that he did lead the police team to the spot where the firearm was discovered buried in the ground. According to the ballistics expert's opinion, which the learned magistrate accepted - and in my view rightly accepted - two of the spent cartridges had been I discharged from the firearm. Taking all this evidence into consideration, and bearing in mind that the attempted attack on the A occupants of Mr. Karatela's vehicle took place only some hours before the hounds of justice discovered the firearm, the conclusion that the appellant Hassani Hokororo must have been a party to the attempted robbery is, in my judgment, ineluctable. It is not B possible, in my view, to entertain any reasonable doubt on that point.

I turn now to the appeal against conviction lodged by the other appellant, namely, Ally Fundi. In arriving at the opinion that this appellant was also guilty of the attempted robbery the learned trial magistrate brought s.33 (1) of the Evidence Act, 167, into play. C Certain rules regarding the application of this section are, I think, now fairly well-settled. The only way in which a confession can be taken into account is as evidence: see Rex v Wadingombe bin Mkwanda alias Anton and two Others (1941) 8 E.A.C.A. 33. Under the section the confession by accused person can only be used to D lend assurance to other evidence against his co-accused, evidence which falls short by a very narrow margin of the standard of proof necessary for a conviction. It cannot be used as the basis of the prosecution case: see Gopa s/o Gidamebanya and 5 others v E Regional (1953) 20 E.A.C.A. 318; Karaya Njonji and Others v R. (1953) 20 E.A.C.A. 324. The justification for the principle underlying the section is that the fact of full-self-implication by an accused person serves as some sort of guarantee for the truth of the accusation, contained in the confession, against the other or other's: see Mussa F Luinda v R. [1960] E.A. 470. But I will, I hope, be excused for stating the obvious, namely, that the section can be brought into play only if the accused's statement amounts to a confession. Hassani Hokororo's statement to the effect that he and his co-accused (which term includes Ally Fundi) had hidden the firearm somewhere cannot by any G stretch of imagination be described as a confession. It follows naturally as day follows night that the appellant's (Hokororo's) statement could not in law be taken into consideration against Ally Fundi or the other accused person, Hamisi Abdarahmani, for that matter. It is true that the two accused persons were found in the company of H Hassani Hokororo only a few hours after the evil event. But, as has been stated many times before by this court, a mere opportunity to commit an offence cannot be the basis for convicting an accused person. If the law were otherwise, no one in this country would have been safe. There was a grave suspicion that the two accused persons were I parties to the attempted robbery, but suspicion, however grave it may be, cannot be a substitute for proof in a court of justice. For the reasons I have given, I allow Ally Fundi's appeal, quash the conviction A and set aside the sentence imposed thereon. Unless his personal liberty is otherwise lawfully assailed, he should be set at liberty forthwith. Exercising my revisional jurisdiction, I quash Hamisi Abdarahamani's conviction and set aside the sentence imposed thereon. He should be released from custody forthwith unless he is otherwise B lawfully detained.

I turn now to Hassan Hokororo's appeal against sentence. The learned trial magistrate, in sentencing the appellant, held that the minimum sentence prescribed by law for the offence of attempted robbery is seven years' imprisonment. With unfeigned respect, I C disagree. The correct proposition is that the minimum sentence is three years' imprisonment: see s. 4(a) of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972, which should be read together with the twelfth paragraph of the First Schedule to the said Act. Seven years' imprisonment is the minimum sentence for robbery and not for attempted robbery. D Taking into consideration that the use of firearms in the perpetration of robberies is on the alarming increase in the country and that it was by sheer luck that none of those who were in Mr. Karatela's vehicle was physically harmed, I think a sentence of five years' imprisonment would have met the justice of the case. The sentence of seven years' E imprisonment is reduced accordingly. Save as to this reduction, the appeal lodged by Hassani Hokororo is dismissed.

F Order accordingly.

G

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v ABDALLAH SELEMANI 1983 TLR 215 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

August 12, 1983
CRIMINAL REVISION 21 OF 1983
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentences - Power of confirmation of sentence H -Whether it can be exercised in relation to sentences illegally imposed.
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentences - Enhancement of sentence - S.329 of the I Criminal Procedure Code. Cap. 20 - Order of enhancement not to prejudice accused.
1983 TLR p216
LUGAKINGIRA J
Criminal Law - Minimum Sentences Act - Whether offence against unregistered Ujamaa A Village could be brought within the Minimum Sentences Act. 1972.
-Headnote
The accused pleaded guilty to a charge of stealing by servant and was on conviction B sentenced to six years' imprisonment. He stole Shs. 43,921/05 the property of an Ujamaa village of which he was an accountant. The record was forwarded to the High Court for confirmation of sentence. The matter also attracted revision which was accordingly directed. C
Held: (i) Where there is no indication whether an Ujamaa village was registered, offence against the same cannot fall within the ambit of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972:

(ii) the court's power of confirmation of sentences can only be exercised in D relation to sentences legally passed; an illegality cannot be confirmed;

(iii) enhancement of sentence should not be made to the prejudice of the accused person, for example, where he cannot be given an opportunity to be heard.

Case Information
Order accordingly. E
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
Lugakingira, J.: The accused pleaded guilty to a charge of stealing by servant and was F on conviction sentenced to six (6) years imprisonment. He stole Shs. 43,921/05 the property of an ujamaa village of which he was an accountant. After sentencing, the trial Senior District Magistrate forwarded the record here for confirmation of sentence. I G thought the matter attracted revision and directed accordingly.
Under s.7(1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code the maximum sentence which may be imposed by a subordinate court is imprisonment for five years, unless otherwise stated. However, where a court convicts a person for a scheduled offence, it may, if such H sentence is authorised by law, pass a sentence of imprisonment for such offence for a term not exceeding eight years. In the instant case there was no indication in the facts adduced or in the sentencing remarks whether the ujamaa village was registered so as to I bring the offence within the ambit of the Minimum Sentences Act. It is only on the file cover that I see the entry "Under the Minimum Sentences

1983 TLR p217
Act No. 1/72", but that alone does not assure me of the status of the village. It seems to A me, therefore, that the trial magistrate's powers in this case were limited to five years.
I feel, quite perfectly, that the sentence imposed in this case was merited even if in excess of the trial magistrate's power of sentencing. The question is whether it can be B confirmed. It appears to me, rather regrettably, that the answer must be in the negative. I think I am correct in saying that this court's power of confirmation can only be exercised in relation to sentences legally passed. An illegality can not be confirmed. I have also turned to the provisions of s. 329(1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code and considered C whether, in the alternative, the sentence may be sustained by way of enhancement. But this provision has to be read with subsection (2) which stipulates that no order may be made to the prejudice of an accused person unless he has had an opportunity of being heard. Enhancement is certainly to the prejudice of an accused and in this case it has not D been possible to give the accused the opportunity to be heard. All in all, I cannot find my way to sustain the sentence.
For these reasons I will, albeit reluctantly, reduce the sentence to five (5) years' imprisonment. It is so ordered. E
Order accordingly.
1983 TLR p217
F
[zRPz]SARAH MALOGO v WILLIAM VAHAYE 1983 TLR 217 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

August 14., 1982
(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 57 OF 1981 G
Flynote
Family Law-Affiliation - Paternity and custody of a child - Whether for paternity to be effective it must be announced at time of birth and not merely during pregnancy.
Family Law - Legitimation - Whether legitimation of child must necessarily be before it was H weaned.
-Headnote
The respondent sued in the Primary Court for paternity and custody of a female child born to the appellant on 8th June, 1976. He was successful. The appellant's first appeal I to the District Court was dismissed and she further appealed.
1983 TLR p218
LUGAKINGIRA J

Held: (i) Giving the law its true intentions, once a woman declares a particular man to be A responsible for her pregnancy, she cannot afterwards be heard to represent otherwise;

(ii) where the intransigence of the mother makes the putative father unable to legitimate a child before it was weaned, the father should be allowed to legitimate the B child even after it has been weaned.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

Case referred to:

Halifa v Hadija [1971] HCD n.1 C

G. Alimwike for the appellant.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The respondent sued in the Primary Court for paternity and custody of D a female child born to the appellant on 8th June, 1976. He was successful. The appellant's first appeal to the District Court was dismissed and she further appealed.

There was evidence which was accepted by both courts below that when the appellant E became pregnant she announced this fact to the respondent, and even to her relatives, naming the respondent as the person responsible. And even after the birth of the child word was sent to the respondent who sent gifts which were accepted, and subsequently the appellant declared that the child was not his. That was the cause of these F proceedings.

Mr. Alimwike who appeared for the appellant in this court submitted that for the announcement for a father to be effective it must be after the birth of the child and not merely during pregnancy. I am unable to agree, and I do not think that the Declaration of Customary Law G.N. 276/63, seeks to draw such tenuous distinction. I am of the view G that, giving the law its true intention, once a woman declares a particular man to be responsible for her pregnancy, she cannot afterwards be heard to represent otherwise. On similar facts in Halifa v Hadija [1971] HCD n.1, it was similarly held that where a H putative father publicly makes customary payments in respect of a pregnant fiancee, the mother cannot afterwards deny paternity. And as we have seen the present case was not founded on a mere announcement during pregnancy. The birth of the child was also reported to the respondent; he sent gifts which were accepted, and it is no less important I to add, even the child was on a number of occasions handed over to the respondent's mother to look after. On all these facts, the lower courts were entitled to find, as they did, that the respondent was A the child's father.

Another point raised by Mr. Alimwike was about legitimation. He argued that, assuming the respondent was the father, he ought to have legitimized the child before it was weaned. That indeed is the law where the father does not elect to marry the mother. B However, there was overwhelming evidence in this case that on three occasions the respondent sought to legitimize the child by payment of the customary "ndima" but on all those occasions his efforts were frustrated by the appellant's brother. She was either C demanding this or that or saying that the payment should await the appellant's brother. We do not know where this brother, one Mussa, is and there is no indication that he has ever turned up. The respondent can therefore not be blamed for the prevailing stalemate. It follows, in my judgment, that since the stalemate was occasioned by the intransigence on the appellant's side, it operated to excuse the respondent from the apparently strict D provisions of para. 181B of G.N. 279/63. I am of the opinion that he can legitimize his child even now. He can do so by the payment of shs. 100/= provided for in the said paragraph or two cows as previously indicated by the appellant's parents.

The appeal thus fails and is dismissed with costs. In view of the appellant's bad faith and E craftiness, to which even the learned trial magistrate referred, I direct that the appellant shall forthwith and peacefully hand over the child to the respondent, if she has not already done so.

F Appeal dismissed.

1983 TLR p219

G

[zRPz]BERABERA UJAMAA VILLAGE v ABUBAKARI BURA 1983 TLR 219 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Lugakingira J

August 6, 1982

(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 10 OF 1982 H

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Suit against Ujamaa Village - Village leaders sued- Whether proper.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Ujamaa village - Liability of village for acts of its agents. I

1983 TLR p220

LUGAKINGIRA J

-Headnote

The appellant, an Ujamaa Village, through its leaders, destroyed respondent's growing A crops on his shamba. They were ordered to compensate the respondent for the damage. They appealed against the order on the ground that the amount of compensation awarded against them was excessive. B

Held: (i) It is a fundamental human right that no man shall be deprived of his property without adequate compensation;

(ii) an ujamaa village is liable for actions of its officers.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed. C

Cases referred to:

1. Bukenyera v Malayarubusi [1969] HCD n. 190
2. Bakari v Kalumuna [1970] HCD n. 229 D

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: In November 1978 the appellant's government formally resolved and took over the respondent's shamba within Berabera village. Its agents promptly destroyed the growing crops in the shamba, including cassava, castor-oil plants, E bananas, etc. The respondent valued his loss at Shs. 4,500/= and commenced action in the Primary Court at Bareko to recover the same. This was in Civil Case No. 95/78. He was successful and the court awarded him the sum claimed together with costs.

The action had been instituted against one Mohamed Hasare and one Labay Juma, the F chairman and secretary respectively of the appellant. When the matter came to the attention of the District Court of Kondoa the District Magistrate there decided to revise the proceeding. He did so in Civil Revision No. 2/79 and quashed the proceeding. He stated that the appellant was incorporated under Act No. 21/75 and therefore capable G of suing and being sued in its name. He accordingly advised the respondent to proceed against the appellant rather than its individual officers. The respondent heeded the advice and commenced fresh action in the same primary court claiming the same relief. He was again successful. The appellant unsuccessfully appealed to the District Court and further appealed. H

I am satisfied after a careful study of the record that the appellant through its agents committed the trespass and waste complained of. Even in the memorandum of appeal before this court, the appellant does not seek to contest these facts. It only argues that the respondent exaggerated the degree of his loss. I think that this is an afterthought, I seeing as I do that it is the first time this issue is being raised. Besides, in arriving at its decision, the trial court visited the shamba in A question and made on the spot observations. I have no reason to differ with the court which had that privilege. I therefore reject the appellant's argument. Further, in case the question of jurisdiction should be of interest to the appellant, I would state that I do not subscribe to the view that the tort of trespass has no cognizance in customary law and B therefore not maintainable in primary courts. Trespass is as old as man. Long before the colonisers came trespasses on the person and property were being committed in the villages of the same nature as are being committed today. I have yet to be told that aggrieved parties had no remedy in the pre-colonial days. Indeed the decisions of this C court have never questioned the jurisdiction of primary courts in matters arising out of trespass. Bukenyera v Malayarubusi [1969] HCD n.190 and Bakari v Kalumuna [1970] HCD n. 229 are two examples in this regard. I hold, therefore, that the present D proceeding was properly commenced in Primary Court.

It is not desirable to remind the appellant generally, and its enthusiastic officers in particular, that a person's lawful property cannot be seized or destroyed without lawful cause. Village governments were instituted to stimulate rural development; they were not E instituted to destroy. To that end, village governments were given the duty and power to ensure that every able-bodied resident was allotted a piece of land for his subsistence and economic activities. It may perhaps be of assistance if I referred to the express provisions of the law. G.N. 168/75, para 5(2) provides as follows: F

(2) subject to availability of arable land, the Village Council shall (my emphasis) allot a piece of farmland to every kaya in the village according to need and ability to develop it. The Village Council shall have power to determine the structural pattern of farms in the village and the use G thereof.

The law is clear; every Village Council is obliged to allot a piece of farmland to every kaya. That is a mandatory requirement. It is, therefore, ironical, and contrary to the spirit H of the law, for the Village Council to deprive a kaya of farmland, and developed farmland at that. The respondent already had a piece of farmland, it was situated within the village, it was fully developed according to the accepted evidence. It was then unlawful for the appellant to take it from him in the manner it purported to do. There is I also a corollary to the above. A corresponding duty is cast upon every resident to obtain a piece of land in the village. This is set out in para 7(2) of the Directions A aforesaid which provides as follows:

(2) Every resident of a village shall have the duty to obtain, and shall be entitled to be allotted, a piece of land in the village on which he shall carry on economic activities, whether on an B individual basis or in association with other resident.

That too is quite clear. Not only is a resident obliged to obtain a piece of land but he is also entitled to one. Happily, the respondent already had such piece of land and had C economically worked it. He was therefore not a burden to the appellant and had fulfilled the obligations imposed upon him by the law. But ironically again the appellant took that land away. No reason whatsoever was given by the appellant for this action. I can well D surmise that it was an act of envy and covetousness. But that is not the attitude expected of a village government. The appellant's action was therefore an infringement upon the respondent's right and an unfortunate assault upon the law of this country. To dramatise its ill-intentions the appellant even failed to give alternative land to the respondent. Nothing more could demonstrate the appellant's ignorance of the objectives E for which it was set up.

Finally, it is a fundamental human right that no man shall be deprived of his property without adequate compensation. That right is inalienable and is recognised by every F civilised society including our own. Some societies insist not merely on adequate compensation but adequate and prompt compensation. In theoretical terms the right to compensation may be traced to the concept of ownership. Mwalimu's words on this subject have considerable force and are worth quoting at length: G

From where does a man derive the right to possess something, and to refuse the whole world this right of ownership? This right originates from only one factor; the fact that man is nobody's property. He owns himself, his health, his intellect, and his ability cannot be someone else's property.. H

When I use my energy and talent to clear a piece of ground for my use it is clear that I am trying to transform this basic gift from God so that it can satisfy a human need.. this I land is not mine, but efforts made by me in clearing the land enable me to lay claim of ownership over the cleared piece of ground.. by clearing that ground I have actually added to its value.. whoever then takes this piece of A ground must pay me for adding value to it through clearing it by my own labour. (Freedom and Unity, (1967), pp. 53-54).

1983 TLR p223
Leaving alone the philosophical considerations, it is trite law that every man is entitled to B his lawful property. Whoever takes or destroys it in circumstances amounting to trespass must make good the injury caused thereby. The gentlemen assessors who sat with the learned trial magistrate were of the same view. They even found that the prompt destruction of the crops was deliberately done to avoid payment of compensation. They C continued:

...serikali ya kijiji haikuwa na mapatano yoyote na mdai; aliona anaonelewa kuharibiwa chakula chake bila ya sababu yoyote. Anapatia riziki yake kwa mimea hiyo; hivyo katika shauri D hili mdai ameonyesha ushindi. Serikali ya kijiji cha Berabera wamlipe fidia aliyodai..

I agree; and for all that I have said, I dismiss the appeal with costs. E
Appeal dismissed.
1983 TLR p223
F
[zRPz]MARIAM ALLY PONDA v KHERRY KISSINGER HASSAN 1983 TLR 223 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

October 25, 1983
(PC) MATRIMONIAL APPEAL 1 of 1983 G
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Assessors - Trial commenced with two assessors, then trial adjourned - On resumption only one assessor present - During summing and judgment there were two assessors - Whether irregularity curable. H
-Headnote
At the commencement of the proceedings two assessors sat with the magistrate. The suit was adjourned and when it resumed there was only one assessor. In the final stage of the proceedings, that is summing up and judgment, there were two assessors again. The records did not show whether the assessor who appeared in the final stage was the same I one as the one who was present at the commencement of the proceedings. The impropriety of the procedure was challenged on A appeal.
1983 TLR p224
LUGAKINGIRA J

Held: (i) An assessor who has absented himself for part of the trial cannot afterwards be permitted to participate in the determination of the proceedings; B

(ii) where an assessor is present at the commencement of any proceeding and is subsequently unable to continue to perform his functions as an assessor, the magistrate may continue to hear and determine the proceeding with the remaining assessor;

(iii)assessors in the primary court have equivalent and complementary powers to C those of the magistrate.

Case Information

Order accordingly.

Case referred to: D

1. Samwel v Marcel [1967] HCD n. 333
2. Rajabali v Curtis [1968] HCD n. 120
3. Desai v Varsama [1957] E.A. 351
4. Ndatuya v Kisukari [1975] L.R.T. no. 66 E

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The appellant successfully petitioned for divorce in the Urban Primary Court, Dodoma, but the decree was overturned by the District Court on appeal by the respondent. She therefore appealed here.

Unfortunately, I cannot go into the merits of the appeal. There was an irregularity in the F proceedings of the trial court which I think went to the root of the entire trial. The trial magistrate, whose name I cannot decipher and whose hand-writing generally can be read by few, sat with two unnamed assessors at the commencement of the trial. The G appellant and her witnesses gave evidence in the presence of these assessors and the trial was adjourned for hearing the defence. At the resumed hearing, some three days later, the trial magistrate recorded "Washauri wapo", again without naming them. The truth is that there was a single assessor and the respondent and his witnesses gave H evidence. The proceeding was then adjourned for summing up and judgment. However, at the summing up and judgment there were two assessors whose names, again, do not appear and these gave their opinions. In other words, one of the assessors - we do not know who - gave his opinion in the case although he never heard the defence. The I respondent raised the matter in his appeal to the District Court, but the learned appellate magistrate gave it no consideration, let alone a mention. In fact he stated that "there (was) not much substance to abstract A from (the) memorandum of appeal".

I think the irregularity was incurable. Section 8(3) of the Magistrates Courts Act, 1963 provides that where an assessor is present at the commencement of any proceeding and is subsquently for any reason unable to continue to perform his functions as an assessor, B the magistrate may continue to hear and determine the proceeding with the remaining assessor or assessors. This, in my view, implies that an assessor who has absented himself for part of the trial cannot afterwards be permitted to participate in the determination of the proceeding. Indeed it is against elementary rules of natural justice C that a man should sit in judgment over a matter he is not seized with. It is also dangerous to permit such a situation considering that decisions in primary courts proceed on the majority basis. The intruding assessor might be the most articulate and could carry the day. In such an event there would be a miscarriage of justice. D

I turn to s.32(2) of the Act aforesaid to reassure myself of the position. It provides, inter alia, that no decision or order of a primary court or a District Court shall be reversed or altered on appeal or revision on account of any error, omission or irregularity in the E proceedings before or during hearing, unless such error, omission or irregularity has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. I believe, however, that this provision is not intended to cure irregularities such as the one we are considering. I think that the provision is aimed at technical errors, omissions and irregularities which do not go to the jurisdiction of the court. Absence of jurisdiction means absence of a lawful trial and I apprehend that F the court destroys its jurisdiction the moment it is unlawfully constituted.

In the case of Samwel v Marcel [1967] HCD n.33 Mustafa, J., (as he then was) declined to consider the issue of jurisdiction, although apparent on the record, because G neither party had raised it. That case is clearly distinguishable from the case before me because, in the instant case, the respondent raised the issue at the first available opportunity. Even though, in Rajabali v Curtis [1968] HCD n. 120 it was held that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent of parties. And although in that case this H court went to uphold the divorce granted by a primary court it was because the court was merely "doubtful" whether the primary court had jurisdiction and it was also for "practical" reasons which do not obtain in the instant case. Jurisdiction is thus a fundamental issue the absence of which cannot be cured by the application of s.32(2). In this connection I think it is I sufficient to quote from Desai v Varsama [1967] E.A. 351 where the late Hamlyn, J., A said, at p. 354:

> I cannot agree that this section bears in anyway on the question of lack of jurisdiction in the B primary Court. If there was no jurisdiction, then the whole of the proceedings were a nullity and the appellant cannot pray in aid this provision of the law. Lack of jurisdiction goes far beyond any "error', omission or irregularity', nor can it be regarded as mere technicality. There is in law nothing to be reversed or altered and there is a complete absence of any material from which C an appeal can be heard.

I am satisfied that the trial court lost its jurisdiction the moment it became unlawfully constituted. This was not a technical error or irregularity for, in law, there was no lawful D tribunal. I am not saying, however, that its decision was necessarily bad. Perhaps I am more inclined to its decision than that of the District Court which even overstepped its powers by ordering the parties to reunite. I am saying that there was no decision in law E and, therefore, no material upon which to determine the appeal on merits.

A word is also necessary on the decision of the trial magistrate not to name the assessors. This is perhaps a curable error but it is still significant. First, on the administrative side, I do not know how the assessors could claim and be paid F allowances without appearing to have attended. Secondly, and more pertinently, assessors in the primary court are not mere advisers as elsewhere. Their powers in a trial and the powers of the magistrate are almost equivalent and certainly complementary. It is then not out of courtesy or compliment that their identities appear on the record; it is because of the responsibility they share in the court's decision. Further, an appellate G court would always desire to satisfy itself that the proceedings below were conducted with due regard to law and procedure. That makes it desirable, if not necessary, for the record to leave no opportunity for possible uncertainty. There have been instances indeed when, in primary courts, assessors have been changed in the most irregular way. H The result of this is vitiated proceedings. But such a situation would never be evident in the absence of the assessors' names. Is it not interesting, for instance, that in the instant case the magistrate recorded "Washauri wapo" when in fact there was only one? I find it I difficult to believe that there was any problem with grammar, but I will be excused for saying that this was an instance of patched up work. I would not wish to believe that this has been the trend. It may finally be A mentioned that the appellate court may at times wish to seek clarification on the views expressed by the assessors. This would particularly arise where a point of customary law is involved, and it did arise in Ndatuya v Kisukari [1975] LRT n.66. There would be no easy way of realising this if the assessors' names are withheld. It would be a risk to B count on the memory of the trial magistrate, assuming, of course, that the magistrate himself can be located. All in all, therefore, the assessors' names must appear on the record.

For the reasons I have endeavoured to give, I quash the proceedings and set aside the judgments and orders of the lower courts. The appellant is at liberty to file a fresh C petition at no further cost if it be in the primary court. I make no order as to the cost of this appeal.

D

[zRPz]RAMADHANI OMARI v FATUMA MAHUMBI 1983 TLR 227 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

September 8, 1983
(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 3 OF 1983 E
Flynote
Family Law-Divorce - Custody and maintenance of children - Whether party entitled to maintenance for a burden wilfully incurred. F
-Headnote
The parties had been married in 1972 and cohabited until 1974 when the respondent deserted the appellant taking along with her one child of their marriage. Two more children were begotten with the appellant during the period of separation. In 1982 the respondent petitioned for divorce which was granted on proof of the longevity of the G separation. The custody of the two elder children was given to the appellant. The youngest was left to the respondent and the appellant was ordered to pay maintenance for it. The respondent subsequently instituted proceedings claiming compensation of Shs.4,000/= for having maintained those children. The respondent lost in the trial court, H but succeeded in a subsequent appeal to the District Court. From that decision the appellant brought this appeal.

Held: A woman cannot claim or receive compensation for maintaining a child she has I wilfully removed or kept from the father's custody.

1983 TLR p228

LUGAKINGIRA J

Case Information

Appeal allowed. A

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J. The parties herein married in 1972 and cohabited until 1974 when the B respondent left the appellant. They then had one child which the respondent took along. In the course of the separation she adulterously begot two more children which were acknowledged to be the appellant's. In 1982 she petitioned for divorce. It was granted due to the longevity of the separation but the trial court held that the respondent C was guilty of desertion. In granting divorce the court also granted custody of the two elder children to the appellant. The youngest was left to the respondent and the appellant was ordered to provide maintenance for it. D

Soon after the conclusion of the divorce suit, and it seems consequent upon the respondent being deprived of the custody of the two elder children, the respondent commenced the present proceedings claiming compensation of Shs. 4,000/= for having maintained those children. The trial court dismissed the claim, observing that she was the guilty party in the E break up of the marriage. She appealed to the District Court. That court took a different view and did so it the following terms:

takribani, matunzo wakati familia iko kukeni ni juu ya mume bila kujali ni nani F mkosa(ji) au mtu aliyesababisha utengano huo.

The court then went on to observe that the obligation to maintain children rested on both G parents and, therefore, awarded the respondent Shs.2,000/=, half the amount she had claimed. From that decision the appellant brought this appeal.

I should perhaps first say a word in passing on the respective duties of parents with regard to the maintenance of their children. It seems to me that in normal circumstances H the duty to maintain infant children is the duty of the father alone. I believe that this is the correct interpretation to be put on subsection (1) of s. 129 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971. For that duty to shift to the mother, wholly or in part, it seems that the conditions set out in subsection (2) must arise, namely, the father must be dead or his I whereabouts must be unknown or he must be, and to the extent that he is, unable to provide maintenance. I take that view having regard to the fact that the provisions of subsection (2) are expressed to be subject to the provisions of A subsection (1). It is therefore suggested that except where the provisions of subsection (2) can be brought into play, there would be no legal justification for apportioning liability.

The question in the instant case is whether on the facts and circumstances as found by B the trial court the respondent was entitled to any compensation. The authorities and the statutes appear silent on the matter. I think, therefore, that equity or common sense should be able to provide the answer. It does not occur to me that customary law lacks a concept the equivalent of volenti non fit injuria or la kujitakia halina majuto. There are strong reasons to hold that such a concept is recognised and, by way of C illustration, I need go not further than refer to para 74, G.N. No. 279 of 1963, which bars maintenance to a divorced woman where the divorce is brought about by her own guilt. The principle behind this is that a party should not be rewarded for his own wrong. D It similarly follows, in my view, that a woman cannot claim or receive compensation for maintaining a child she has wilfully removed or kept from the father's custody, and I therefore differ with the learned appellate magistrate in his statement quoted above. To put it differently and shortly, a woman should not claim or receive compensation for a E burden wilfully incurred. It was on that principle that the Primary Court reached its decision, although citing irrelevant provisions. Since the respondent was a wilful deserter, and took or kept the children in those circumstances, that decision was manifestly sound.
I will accordingly allow this appeal, as I do, and set aside the award of the District F Court. Since I do not know the respondent's means, there will be no order as to costs.
Appeal allowed.

A
[zRPz]J. MKUKI AND ANOTHER v MBARA M. HATIBU 1983 TLR 230 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

June 4, 1984
CIVIL APPEAL 1 OF 1981
Flynote
Tort-Interference with contractual relation - Violation of economic interests without B justification.
Contract - Interference with economic interests of a licensee - A third party interfering with licensee's legal contractural right - Actionable. C
-Headnote
The respondent using a friend's licence engaged in lumbering in the appellants' village forest. The appellants stopped him and confiscated 4 saws and 40 pieces of timber. The respondent successfully sued the appellants in tort in a Resident Magistrate's Court. D The trial magistrate without identifying the tort allegedly committed by the appellants found the claim fully established. On appeal the appellants complained against the decision of the resident magistrate arguing that they acted lawfully in interfering with the acts of the respondent. E

Held: (i) (Obiter) Assuming the acts of the appellant were unlawful: (a) the removal and taking of the timber which were never recovered amounted to trespass and conversion; (b) the confiscation of the saws amounted to trespass to chattels, but since there was a F prayer for their restoration the respondent's action was also founded in detinue; (c) stopping of respondent from further lumbering amounted to a tort of interference with contractual relations;

(ii) the respondent's action was based on an alleged interference with a supposed contract, and the other apparent wrongs (trespass, conversion and detinue) G were manifestations of it and were inseparable as such they cannot found a separate cause or causes of action;

(iii) the acts of the appellants cannot be unlawful unless the respondent was exercising a legal right;

(iv) the activity of the respondent in cutting and removing timber from the forest H at Minyughe was unlawful because he had no licence; thus the appellants' act of stopping him was a lawful act;

(v) the respondent's cause was not actionable on the ground that ex dolo malo non oritur actio.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. I

1983 TLR p231

Cases referred to: A

1. D.C. Thompson & Co. Ltd. v Deaking [1952]2 All E.R. 361.
2. Croffer Hand Woven Harris Tweed Co. Ltd. v Veitch [1942]1 All E.R. 142.
3. Rogers v Rajendra Dutt (1860) 13 Moo. P.C. 209.
4. Muhuri v Kiritu [1969]E.A. 232. B

1983 TLR p231

LUGAKINGIRA J

A. Mukri for the appellants

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: This old case arose from a rancorous incident in a forest at Minyughe in Singida district. For some time residents of Minyughe village had become aware of C what they considered as illegal lumbering in what they also regarded as a village forest. On 20.9.79 the village government met and discussed the issue and resolved to put an end to this activity. On 23.9.79 a group of villagers, led by the first appellant, the village manager, proceeded to the forest and there found the respondent's employees busy D felling trees and sawing them into timber. In a bitter encounter the villagers ordered the workers to stop and even confiscated four of their saws. The workers went away and reported the incident to the respondent. It was claimed that they left behind 290 pieces of sawn timber. Sometime later it is not clear when - the respondent went for the timber E but allegedly found 250 pieces only. There was an apparent loss of 40 pieces and the respondent's case was that they were taken by the appellants.

On 1.10.79 the village government met again and summoned the respondent. On his F arrival he was required to pay village dues for the timber in order to redeem the saws. (In fact the appellants said there were 390 and not 290 pieces of timber). The respondent refused and commenced action in the Resident Magistrate's court of Singida claiming special damages amounting to Shs. 13,530/= (his apparent investment), the return of saws and costs of the suit. In a lengthy analysis suffused with Latin phrases the G trial Resident Magistrate found the claim fully established and entered judgment for the respondent. The appellants were dissatisfied and brought this appeal through learned counsel Mr. A.Q.A.R. Mukri of WASHIRIKA. The appeal finally proceeded to hearing after countless adjournments but the respondent did not appear although duly H served.
I desire first to ascertain the legal basis of this claim. I assume this burden in view, especially, of the unprofessional nature of the pleadings and even of the prosecution of the case. Undoubtedly, the claim was founded in tort but one cannot proceed, as the trial Magistrate did, without identifying the tort or torts relevant to the facts. In precise I term a tort is the unlawful invasion or denial of a legal interest. It therefore involves a wrong-doing on A the one part and a grievance on the other. From the evidence of this case I surmise that three matters were the subject of complaint. First, the appellants stopped the respondent's employees, in effect the respondent himself, from further lumbering; secondly, they were alleged to have removed and taken away 40 pieces of timber which B were never recovered; thirdly, they confiscated four saws. I think the law is settled and clear as regards the second and third acts. The removal and taking of the timber which were never recovered amounted to trespass and conversion. The confiscation of the saws similarly amounted to trespass to chattels, and since there was a prayer for their C restoration we can say that the respondent's action was also founded in detinue. For the avoidance of doubts, these statements proceed on the assumption that the appellant's acts were unlawful.

The act of preventing further lumbering presents some difficulty. This, again on the D assumption that it was unlawful, amounted to a denial of an interest in the sense that the respondent was denied the right to fell and remove timber. This denial of an interest did not as such involve physical interference with the respondent's person, land or property. In short there was no direct injury. It is perhaps one of those situations which under the E English common law was classed as trespass on the case or, simply, case, but I do not have to go into that for the law has sufficiently developed to dispense with the uncertainty of a mouldy doctrine. In the instant case the respondent claimed to have had a valid licence issued by the department of natural resources under the Forests Ordinance, Cap. F 389. It seems to me, therefore, that the proper way to look at the matter is to regard the appellants' act as an interference with a contract. The contract arises this way: that in consideration of the fees paid to the Government the licensee was entitled to fell and remove a certain quantity of timber. I will come to the specifics of this formulation at the appropriate stage later. It suffices to observe here that the law recognises the tort of G interference with contractual relations and this rests on the principle that the violation of economic interests without justification is tortious.

Interference with a contract may take various forms, e.g. by persuading or inducing or H procuring one of the parties to the contract to break it. A similar situation may be occasioned, and it would be actionable interference, if a third party does an act which, if done by the contractor, would amount to a breach of the contract. In the case before me if the licensing authority had without justification done what the appellants did or had in similar circumstances revoked the licence, that would have amounted to a breach of I contract giving rise to a cause of action. On that footing it becomes actionable for a third party similarly to interfere with the use of the A same licence. Similar propositions are to be found in a number of English decisions but I need only refer to one. In D.C. Thompson & Co. Ltd. v Deakin [1952]2 All E.R. 261, JENKINS, L.J. said, at p. 378 (quoting the relevant parts only): B

> Again, so far from persuading or inducing or procuring one of the parties to the contract to break it, the third party may commit an actionable interference with the contract ... if ... he does an act which, if done by one of the parties to it, would have been a breach .... Further, I apprehend that an actionable interference would, undoubtedly, be committed if a third party ... C placed physical restraint on one of the parties to the contract, so as to prevent him from carrying it out.

In the instant case, therefore, the position as I see it is that the respondent's action was D based on an alleged interference with a supposed contract. The other apparent wrongs, that is, trespass, conversion and detinue, arising directly as they do from the alleged interference, were manifestations of it and are inseparable. They cannot therefore found a separate cause or causes of action. E

The foregoing, however, is one side of the coin. As stated earlier, a tort is the unlawful invasion or denial of a legal interest. In other words, a cause of action will not arise unless the action complained of is unlawful in the sense that it interferes with a right recognised by law. In this case the act of the appellants cannot be unlawful unless the F respondent was exercising a legal right; for if he was lumbering unlawfully the act of the appellants in stopping him cannot be unlawful and any injury suffered cannot be a legal injury. In the words of Viscount Simon, L.C. in Croffer Hand Woven Harris TweedCo. Ltd. v Veitch [1942] 1 All E.R. 142, 148, G

> ... it is clear that if A is damaged by the action of B, A nevertheless has no remedy against B if B's act is lawful in itself and is carried out without employing unlawful means. In such a case, A has to endure damnum absque injuria. H

In an earlier case, Rogers v Rajendra Dutt (1860) 13 Moo. P.C. 209, it was similarly said:

> It is essential to an action in tort that the act complained of should under the circumstances be I legally wrongful as regards the party complaining; that is, it must prejudicially affect him in some legal right; merely that it will, A however directly, do a man harm in his interests, is not enough. With these principles in mind I will now turn to consider the position in this appeal. B

LUGAKINGIRA J

One of the issues framed by the learned trial magistrate was "Whether the plaintiff was authorised to carry out business-lumberjacking". In effect he was addressing himself to the legality of the respondent's activities. He answered the question in the affirmative and C did so on the following evidence. At the trial the respondent produced a licence (Exh. P1) which was not in his name but in the name of one Jumanne Issa. He claimed that the licence was jointly owned, saying that he and Jumanne Issa "worked together". He then called a forestry officer, one G.E. Lyimo, who also stated: "On the said (licence) we D wrote the name of Jumanne Issa and there was no reason to write the name of Mbara for both work together". Jumanne Issa was not called to testify. The trial magistrate considered the alleged arrangement and said:

I am not in doubt that the plaintiff had a licence to carry out lumberjacking. The said licence E was owned jointly but it was issued in Jumanne Issa's name. I do not find anything illegal in this. If by insisting that the licence carried by Mbara was not his for it was written in Jumanne Issa's name, (sic) the defendants had strictly to prove this. They could have looked for and called the said Jumanne Issa to give evidence to that effect. Whoever alleges has the duty to F prove.

These remarks and the evidence of the forestry officer are, to put it mildly, rather startling. I will demonstrate this beginning with the licence issue. G

I should perhaps start by mentioning that Mr. Mukri merely drew my attention to the fact that the licence was in Jumanne Issa's name, an obvious fact, without elaborating. I was therefore not adequately assisted on this subject. For my part, I must confess my H ignorance of how a licence issued to a particular person can avail itself to diverse persons on the allegation of working together. I think, with respect, that would defeat the whole purpose of licensing, and licences would be liable to abuse, for there can be no limit to the number of persons who, when it suits the occasion, may claim to be working together. I think I am correct in saying that if a hundred persons are desirous of I executing a common enterprise for which the law requires the acquisition of a licence and a licence is duly issued in the name of one of them, not being a corporate or partnership A name, the licensee is the person named therein but not the other ninety-nine. This is not to say, and I should not be understood as saying, that the licensee cannot take on a partner or partners even after acquiring the licence in his own name. He certainly can; and the legality of the partnership and its competence to operate on the strength of the B licence would not be vitiated thereby. What I am saying is that the partnership cannot operate without the licensee remaining a partner and manager of the business nor would it be open to any of his partners independently to set up his own business on the strength of the licence. For want of a local authority I will refer to the Kenya case of Muhuri v C Kiriu [1969] E.A. 232 which I find instructive. In that case one Godfrey Muhuri obtained in his name a road licence under the Kenya Transport Licensing Act, Cap. 404. He then purchased a motor bus with monies contributed by a number of other persons. Each person was to receive a share in Muhuri's name. It was accepted that D this resulted in a partnership managed by Muhuri. Subsequently a dispute arose among the partners and some of them brought an action against Muhuri and others seeking a dissolution of the partnership with the taking of an account. It was contended by Muhuri and others as a preliminary issue that as the licence was in Muhuri's name alone the partnership was illegal. The High Court of Kenya held that Muhuri carried on business E in his name subject to the equities in favour of all partners and the partnership was lawful. This decision was upheld by the Court of Appeal which went on to observe. (at pp. 234-5):

... Godfrey Muhuri was, with the agreement of the partners, to manage the transport business F .... As manager he would operate the transport business on behalf of the partnership. In effect he would be the person responsible for conveying the passengers under the licence .... The position might well be different if Godfrey Muhuri in fact had not been managing the G transport business.

In the instant case the respondent was in fact carrying on business in which the licensee, Jumanne Issa, had no interest at all, although he alleged that they worked together. It is H abundantly clear from the plaint and from his evidence that he had set up his own independent business. To that end he described himself as "a licensed businessman" and never even bothered to call Jumanne Issa to testify. But, in my view, he was like the hypothetical ninety-nine and could not lawfully carry on his own business on the strength of the licence issued to Jumanne Issa. It was equally unlawful for the latter, if he did so, I to pass on the licence to the respondent. Indeed one of the conditions annexed to Exh. Pl and appearing at the back A thereof is that it is not transferrable.

In sum, the respondent had no licence authorising him to cut and remove timber from the forest at Minyughe. His activity was thus unlawful and the appellants' act of stopping him was a lawful act. It follows that the appellants' act was not actionable or (if Latin be B more to the affection of the trial magistrate) ex dolo malo non oritur actio.

The remark of the trial magistrate on the issue of evidence can be dealt with briefly. As observed by Mr. Mukri it is apparent that he misdirected himself on the burden of proof. C Undoubtedly, whoever alleges has the duty to prove. In this case the appellants alleged that the respondent had no licence and it is this contention which the law required them to prove. I think, with respect, that this burden was discharged the moment a licence was produced which was not in the respondent's name. The burden then shifted to the respondent to prove that the licence was in fact his. As just demonstrated it D wasn't his in fact. Perhaps the learned magistrate would not have fallen into the error he did had he not taken at its face value the evidence of the forestry officer

I believe that the foregoing is sufficient to dispose of the appeal but there is another ground to which I should refer. Assuming, as the trial magistrate did, that the respondent E was duly licensed, the question arises whether he had not utilised the licence fully. Mr. Mukri argued this point and came up with calculations to show that the respondent's loss was incapable of demonstration. Unfortunately, I cannot take advantage of learned counsel's able calculations because he appeared not to differentiate timber from logs. F He therefore spoke of the respondent's having felled 290 logs whereas these were sawn timber. I desire to approach the matter differently. The licence in fact authorised the felling of 100 mninga trees only. It was upon the respondent to show that he had not felled that number of trees when he was interrupted. However, the respondent, whose G 22 workers had been in and out of the forest for the previous one month, passed over this subject in silence. The workers might already have felled more than that number, perhaps also less, we do not know. In this connection it is not irrelevant to observe that whereas the appellants asserted that there were 390 pieces of timber in the forest the respondent put the figure at 290. The trial magistrate does not appear to have H appreciated the significance of this discrepancy. He thought the appellants were unwise, because a higher figure tended to aggravate their liability; and also untruthful, because the respondent, supposedly, could not understate his loss. I am unfortunate in seeing the I issue differently. In my view, since it was against the appellants' interests to assert a higher figure, they might well have been truthful. On the other hand, it was in the respondent's interests to assert a lower figure taking into consideration the number of A trees allowed under the licence. Be that as it may, whether the timber were 290 or 390, there was no evidence that the respondent had not felled 100 trees and thus made full use of the licence. There was therefore no evidence that he suffered any legal injury by reason of the appellants' interference. The trial magistrate nearly hit at the idea, but it B slipped through his fingers, when he said: "Because it has not been argued as to the quantity of the pieces of timber the plaintiff was destined to make it will be difficult to assess the real loss the plaintiff suffered". Had he substituted trees for pieces of timber and realised that the former were a fixed quantity, he should still have found it difficult to C assess the respondent's alleged loss.

Before concluding I wish to make an observation on the pleadings. It is noted that the second appellant was stated as "Kijiji cha Ujamaa Minyughe". That was undoubtedly vague and improper for I conceive of a village as a collection of hundreds of residents. D If it were the respondent's intention to sue a group of villagers, as the plaint initially indicated, he could have done so by a representative suit after obtaining the trial court's permission. However, that would still have been improper since his quarrel was not with the villagers as such but with the village government which had ordered the acts complained of and even summoned him to a meeting. He should therefore have sued the E Village Council which was a body corporate under Act No. 21 of 1975 with power to sue and be sued. In view of the outcome of the appeal, however, I do not have to decide the effect of the irregularity.

Mr. Mukri raised other interesting points but I consider it unnecessary to discuss them. F It suffices to reiterate that the respondent had no cause of action since he was engaged in unlawful lumbering. Alternatively and without prejudice, there was no evidence of his alleged loss. I therefore allow the appeal with costs after setting aside the judgment and decree of the court below. G

H Appeal allowed.

1983 TLR p238

A

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v NJANI HASSAN 1983 TLR 238 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

December 15, 1981
CRIMINAL REVISION 4 OF 1981 B
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Corporal punishment - Where prevented from being executed- Power to revise sentence - Sections 15(1) and 16 Corporal Punishment Ordinance, Cap. 17.
-Headnote
After sentencing an emaciated juvenile aged thirteen years to a total of 18 strokes in two C different cases, the Primary Court magistrate forwarded the case file to a District Court for confirmation of sentence. The District Court, influenced by a medical report that the accused was of tender age and very weak reduced the sentence to 4 strokes. Before execution of the sentence medical evidence showed that the accused was D anaemic, had a swollen spleen and that he was too weak to resist even the omnibus 4 strokes sentence. The District magistrate thinking that he had no power to interfere in the order made by himself forwarded the record to the High Court for appropriate revisional order. E
Held: Where a corporal sentence cannot be inflicted under section 15(1) of the Corporal Punishment Ordinance, Cap. 17, under section 16 the court that passed sentence may in its discretion either remit such sentence or sentence the offender to imprisonment.
Case Information
Order accordingly. F
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
Lugakingira, J.: In Criminal Case No. 40/81 before the Primary Court at Paranga the G accused, a juvenile, was sentenced to an aggregate of nine (9) strokes in two counts. Before the same court in Criminal Case No. 42/81, the same accused, on the same day, was sentenced to a total of nine (9) strokes in two other counts. It meant that he was to H undergo corporal punishment of 18 strokes in the two cases. The trial magistrate was quick to forward the record to the District Court, Kondoa, for confirmation of sentence. The District Magistrate, after examining the first medical report, which stated the accused was between 12 and 13 years and emaciated, and after seeing the accused, I whom he adjudged "really a child of tender age and physically weak", revised the sentence and substituted an omnibus sentence of four

1983 TLR p239
LUGAKINGIRA J
(4) strokes for both cases. A
Before the new sentence was carried out, however, the accused underwent another check up at Kondoa Government Hospital. The doctor reported and said that the accused was anaemic and had an abnormally large spleen. He certified that he was unfit to undergo even the four strokes except after treatment which could take three to four B months. Faced with this report and certificate, the District Magistrate forwarded the record here for the appropriate revisional order as he was of the view that he was precluded from interfering in the order made by himself.
After examining the case and the law respecting this matter, I have reached a view different from that of the learned District Magistrate. I think that ss. 15 and 16 of the C Corporal Punishment Ordinance, Cap. 17 are relevant. Section 16 states in part:

15.-(1) No sentence of corporal punishment shall be inflicted until a medical officer ... has, after examination of the offender, certified that he is physically fit to undergo the sentence D imposed upon him....

And section 16 states in part:

16. In any case in which under section 15 a sentence of corporal punishment is wholly or E partially prevented from being executed, the offender shall be kept in custody until the court which passed the sentence can revise it; and the said court may in its discretion either remit such sentence or sentence the offender ... to imprisonment .... F
In this case, the doctor has certified that the accused is physically unfit to undergo the four strokes. That certificate falls under section 15 and, in effect, wholly prevents the sentence from being carried out. In that case, under section 16, the sentence falls for G revision by the court which passed it. The four strokes were ordered by the District Court. It follows that the District Court has power to revise that order. Considering the facts and circumstances of this case, the District Court could remit the sentence and discharge the accused. It is advised to proceed accordingly.
H Order accordingly.
1983 TLR p240
A
[zRPz]ZACHARIA MILALO v ONESMO MBOMA 1983 TLR 240 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

November 26, 1984
(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 1 OF 1983 B
Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Prayer for relief - Petition of appeal contains no prayer for any relief - Effect.

-Headnote

The appellant occasioned loss to a village shop. Before a Primary Court he admitted, C and agreed to refund, the loss. Later on he complained by unsigned letters to a District Court. He was advised to file an application for leave to appeal out of time. The resident magistrate who heard the application dismissed it on the ground that the delay was occasioned by the applicant's sluggishness and was without reasonable cause. The D magistrate noted in passing that the trial court had no jurisdiction in the matter as he was unable to see elements of customary law. The applicant appealed to the High Court against the magistrate's ruling but neither the petition of appeal nor counsel's submission contained any prayer for any relief. E

Held: Unless an appellant specifies the relief desired the court cannot proceed to hear the appeal for want of purpose; (cf. r. 15(1)(e) Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules, G.N. No. 310 of 1964 and 0.7 r. 1(g) and 7 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966 where requirement to specify relief claimed is mandatory). F

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

Cases referred to:

1. Selemani Hoti v Iddi Omari [1967] HCD n. 282 G
2. Yohana Mijuni v Isaya Bakobi [1969] HCD n. 23
3. Mtatiro Mwita v Mwita Marianya [1968] HCD n. 82
4. Rex v Ndembera Mwandawala [1947] 14 EACA 85
5. Peter Merishoki v Barnabas Kiriri [1969] HCD no. 286

D.C. Mbezi, for the appellant. H

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The respondent Onesmo Mboma, in his capacity as Ward Secretary of Chipanga Ward in Dodoma District, sued the appellant Zacharia Mlalo in the Primary I Court at Chipanga for occasioning loss of Shs. 4200/= to a village shop through negligence. The appellant was the manager of the shop and the money comprised of A proceeds of sales for which he had exclusive custody. He admitted the claim. Nevertheless, evidence was adduced and in the end he was adjudged liable and ordered to refund the money and costs of the suit. That was on 16 April, 1981.

On 12 May, 1981 the appellant wrote to the District Court, Dodoma an unsigned letter B in which he purported to set out what transpired at the trial, but without indicating his intentions or motives. The District Magistrate before whom the letter was placed was rather perplexed and endorsed on it: "Akija au kama yupo anione". In the event the Magistrate never saw the appellant. Instead, on 12 November, 1981, the appellant C wrote a reminder following the attachment of his cattle nearly three months earlier on 19 August 1981. The reminder was similarly a fulminating and distorted narration of what transpired at the trial, but on this occasion he also invited the District Court to call for the trial record "kwa haki zaidi".

It was otherwise not an appeal as such. It came to the attention of another Magistrate D who minuted that the writer be advised to apply for leave to appeal out of time. It seems that the appellant was duly advised for he filed an affidavit on 5 May, 1982, but without attaching the grounds of his intended appeal. Nevertheless, the application was heard and eventually dismissed on 17 March, 1983. The learned Resident Magistrate who E heard the same ruled that the delay was occasioned by the appellant's sluggishness and was without reasonable cause. He also observed in passing that the trial court had no jurisdiction in the matter as he was unable to see elements of customary law. From this ruling the appellant appealed here through learned counsel Mr. D.C. Mbezi. F

Before this Court Mr. Mbezi took up two points. He argued, in the first instance, that the Resident Magistrate erred in holding that the appellant was responsible for the delay. He maintained that whenever the appellant called he could not find the magistrate who had wanted to see him. That was indeed the story which the appellant had narrated to G the Resident Magistrate. Secondly Mr. Mbezi submitted that after the Resident Magistrate had observed that the trial court acted without jurisdiction he should have declared the proceeding a nullity. Significantly, however neither the petition of appeal filed by Mr. Mbezi nor his submissions before me contain any prayer for any relief. H There was even no prayer for costs, but that does not bother me. I therefore do not know what this Court is called upon to do: whether to direct the District Court to hear and determine the intended appeal or whether to quash the proceeding for the alleged nullity.

The above matter has exercised my mind somewhat. It could also be novel. I have I therefore decided to turn to the relevant provisions of the law in an endeavour to discover some guidance. I think I am correct in saying that the A appeal is governed by the provisions of the Primary Courts Civil Appeals Rules, G.N. No. 312 of 1964, the proceeding having originated in a Primary Court. Under r. 4(1) thereof it is provided that every petition of appeal shall set out precisely the grounds of objection to the decision or order appealed against. B

This rule is not dissimilar to 0.39, r.1(2) of the Civil Procedure Code. Surprisingly, however, neither of these rules require the petition to embody a prayer for the relief or reliefs desired. Would that mean that such a prayer is unnecessary or undesirable? I find it difficult to say so. I think that even in the absence of express provisions to that C effect it would be idle to suppose that such a prayer is not implied, otherwise the appeal would be without purpose. In this connection one may usefully turn to the position obtaining in the institution of suits. Under r.15(1)(e) of the Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules, G.N. No. 310 of 1964, the plaintiff is required to specify the relief D claimed and this requirement is mandatory. Again this is similar to 0.7, r.1(g) of the Civil Procedure Code which is restated in amplified form as r.7, and again the requirement is mandatory. I therefore imagine that where the plaintiff fails to specify the relief claimed as required by these rules the court cannot proceed to hear the suit unless the plaint is E amended. By analogy, it seems to me that even an appellant has to specify the relief desired. It is of course permissible for the appellant (as with the plaintiff) to pray for alternative reliefs even if they are inconsistent, so long as they are not also embarrassing. Mulla says that a pleading is embarrassing if it is so drawn that it is not clear what case F the opposite party has to meet at the trial. The same is undoubtedly true in an appeal. The respondent would be embarrassed if it is not clear what case he has to meet. Assuming in the instant appeal that the appellant seeks to be permitted to prosecute his appeal in the District Court or, in the alternative, to have the proceeding quashed, I think G that that is embarrassing to the respondent. It is the more embarrassing since there was no prayer of any kind, let alone in the alternative, so as to enable the respondent to prepare his case. It is on these grounds that I think a proper petition of appeal should specify the relief desired. I was minded to dismiss this appeal on this ground of want of purpose but in view of Mr. Mbezi's curiosity, perhaps also my own, I will proceed and H look into the arguments canvassed before me.

Starting with the issue of delay, I find it difficult to appreciate Mr. Mbezi's contention. It is I think evident from the summary of events that the appellant was indeed sluggish. He chose as his modus operandi the pleasure of writing polemical letters, one of which he I never even signed and both of which had no purpose. It was as if he was recording his experience, but, even this, without recording it accurately. It is equally difficulty to A believe, and the Resident Magistrate could not believe, that the appellant was calling at the Court but getting no assistance. If he was intent on seeing a particular Magistrate, that again was his fault. The business of the Court is not the preserve of any particular Magistrate, at least at that preliminary stage. And which particular Magistrate was he B intent on seeing when he had not met one before? In considering this, I cannot fault the finding of the learned Resident Magistrate that the appellant's allegation was untrue. In all probability, it seems that after writing his first and unsigned letter the appellant decided to call it a day. Perhaps if it were not for the attachment of his cattle, a very sensitive C issue in this area, we would have heard no more from him. I am thus satisfied that the delay was wholly of his own making and that it was without reasonable cause. If it is necessary to state any rule on the matter I would say that the right of appeal must be seen to have been exercised before the appellate Court can bear or share responsibility D in the delay. This right is not exercised by merely lodging letters of accusations with that Court. I would go further and say that in exercising its discretion to grant or not to grant leave to appeal out of time the appellate court is also entitled to have regard to the prospects of the intended appeal. In the instant case, it is virtually impossible to see the E prospects of the intended appeal. He said, to use his own words, "Sina ubishi na ushahidi. Nitalipa tu upungufu huo Shs. 4,200/=". In view of this, the application was in fact a waste of time. I am satisfied on the whole that it was properly dismissed.

The issue of jurisdiction is equally interesting. Mr. Mbezi argued that the Primary Court F had no jurisdiction first because the suit was founded in tort-conversion as he viewed it - and secondly because the value of the subject matter exceeded Shs. 1,000/=. I see no substance in these arguments. I propose to dispose of them together; meanwhile, I think there is need for some general observations on the civil jurisdiction of Primary Courts. Suppose a villager employs another villager in the management of the former's G property or business and the latter subsequently fails to account for it either through negligence or conversion: I have yet to hear that a Primary Court would have no jurisdiction in the matter. There are decided cases, indeed, involving alleged negligence H or conversion where persons have been sued in Primary Courts without this Court expressing disapproval. See for instance Selemani Hoti v Iddi Omari [1967] HCD n. 282 and Yohana Mujuni v Isaya Bakobi [1969] HCD n. 23. It seems to me that it is these exotic terms "negligence", "conversion", "trespass", etc., with their tinge of I learnedness, that encourage some of us to misapprehend the jurisdiction of Primary Courts, as if civil wrongs were unheard of and were unjustifiable until the advent of English law A and the English language. The notion is erroneous and this requires no demonstration. These wrongs existed in our communities and were justiciable according to customary law. It is therefore incorrect to say that a Primary Court has no jurisdiction in a civil matter merely because some foreign nomenclature can be applied to it. In so far as I B know, there are three situations in which a Primary Court would not have or would be deprived of jurisdiction. These are where the law applicable is neither customary law nor islamic law; where jurisdiction is expressly taken away by statute; and where the dispute is of such legal and technical complexity as to be considered beyond the competence of C such court. In all other respects a Primary Court has and may exercise jurisdiction.

We can now look at the position in the instant case. Starting from below we find that the case was not complex at all. It was commenced and concluded at one sitting, the only evidence involved being that of the respondent and the appellant. The issue involved D was not a dispute either, for the appellant promptly admitted the claim. One therefore marvels at his courage in his present rancour and refraction. In substance, therefore, the suit was within the competence of the Primary Court. We next find that this was not a suit which by statute was removed from the jurisdiction of that court. Mr. Mbezi's E reference to pecuniary jurisdiction was irrelevant if customary law was in fact applicable. The Magistrates' Courts Acts, 1963 and 1984 prescribe a pecuniary jurisdiction only in suits for the recovery of civil debts due to the Republic or local authorities and suits for the recovery of similar debts arising out of contract. There is no pecuniary limitation in F all other suits which a Primary Court has jurisdiction to try. The instant case was not for the recovery of a civil debt due to the Republic or a local authority nor was it founded in contract. Therefore, if customary law was applicable, it was within the jurisdiction of the Primary Court regardless of the value of the subject matter.

It is clear from the foregoing that the most important question on this case is whether, in G fact, customary law was applicable. I hasten to say that it was. First of all, I do not think that it made any difference that the money lost was that of a village shop as distinct from that of an individual villager. In fact it was the money of an unknown number of individual villagers in the absence of evidence that the shop had a corporate H personality. When these villagers set up the shop and appointed the appellant its master they could not have contemplated that their relations would be governed by some foreign jurisprudence and there is no evidence to suggest so. In the absence of such evidence the dealings of villagers have to be construed as governed by their customs: I Mtatiro Mwita v Mwita Marianya [1968] HDC n. 82. The informality that seems to have attended the appellant's appointment argues loudly for that construction in A the instant case. Secondly, and probably more significantly, the assessors in this case did in fact state what amounted to a legal rule. They said that the appellant was liable for the loss "Kwa sababu yeye ndiye alikuwa meneja wa duka ... ndiye alikuwa mkubwa". In other words, they found him strictly liable by virtue of his position. They B could indeed have held that he had personally converted the money for he had exclusive custody of it and the cupboard in which he alleged to have locked was not found broken. Nevertheless, the opinion of the assessors show that strict liability is unknown in customary law. These assessors were ordinary villagers without pretensions C to a scholarly background but having as their source the customs of their society. The soundness of their view is also beyond question. Admittedly, the rule they expressed had not been established in evidence; but by virtue of the provisions of s. 37(a), Act NO. 2 of 1984, which re-enacts s. 32(3)(a) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1963, this D Court is enjoined not to refuse to recognise any rule of customary law on the ground that it has not been established in evidence, but may accept any statement thereof which appears to be worthy of belief which is contained in the record of proceedings in or before any lower court which has exercised jurisdiction in the case. E

1983 TLR p245
There have been decisions, notably Rex v Ndembera Mwandawale (1947) 14 EACA 85 and Peter Merishoki v Barnabas Kiriri [1969] HCD n. 286 in which the view was expressed that customary law ought to be established in evidence. In view of the provisions just cited these decisions and similar ones are to that extent not the law of this F country. I believe the foregoing sufficiently demonstrates that customary law was applicable in this case, hence that the Primary Court had jurisdiction.
G Appeal dismissed.
1983 TLR p245
H
[zRPz]JUMA MISANYA AND ANOTHER v LISTA NDURUMAI 1983 TLR 245 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge D'Souza Ag J

September 7, 1984
CIVIL APPEAL 22 OF 1983
Flynote

Family Law - Damages - Whether special damages and mesne profits may be claimed for I an adulterous association.

1983 TLR p246

D'SOUZA Ag J

-Headnote

The respondent successfully sued the first appellant in a Primary Court for adulterous A association with his wife. The appellant paid shs.1,000/= and promised to stop the relationship. But the relationship continued and the appellant married the second appellant (respondent's wife) according to Islamic rites. The respondent filed another B action and claimed Shs. 5,000/= for adultery, Shs. 5,000/= as special damages, costs of the suit and mesne profits of Shs. 1,000/= per month for adultery from the date of filing the suit till divorce was granted between the respondent and the second appellant. In an ex-parte judgment the District Court entered judgment for the respondent as prayed. The appellants' application to set aside the ex-parte judgment was refused, and they C appealed against the ruling. One of the grounds of appeal argued in favour of the appellants was on the merits of the District Court's judgment allowing all the reliefs as prayed.

Held: (i) Damages for adultery are awarded on the principle that they are to be by way D of compensation for the husband's loss and injury, and not by way of punishment of the adulterer for his misconduct;

(ii) where special damages are claimed they must be proved in evidence. In this case no special damages were proved;

(iii) "mesne profits" are not a head of damages allowed in adultery cases. E

Case Information

Order accordingly.

No case referred to. F

D.C. Mbezi, for the appellants.

[zJDz]Judgment

D'Souza, Ag. J.: This is an appeal arising from Dodoma District Court Civil Case No. G 58 of 1982. The appellants Juma Misanya and Moleni Masululu were the first and second defendants respectively in that case. The respondent Lister Ndurumai was the plaintiff. In the plaint the respondent alleged that he is a teacher resident at Handali Primary School, Dodoma and that the 1st appellant is a Rural Medical Aid and the 2nd H appellant is a Ward Attendant at Chiboli Dispensary, Dodoma. The respondent and the 2nd appellant were husband and wife and the 1st appellant started 'poaching' and on 9.6.82 were caught in flagrante delicto. The 1st appellant paid compensation of Shs. 1,000/= and undertook to stop his association with the respondent's wife. However, I instead of desisting the 1st appellant went through a ceremony of marriage with the 2nd appellant under Islamic rites and continued to live with and commit adultery with 2nd appellant. In paragraph 8 A of the plaint the respondent claimed Shs. 5,000/= for "pain of mind, credit and reputation". In paragraph 10 he put the value of the claim at Shs. 10,000/=. Finally at the end, the plaint is as follows:

1983 TLR p247

D'SOUZA Ag J

Therefore, the plaintiff prays the Honourable Court to enter judgment and decree in his favour B as follows:

(a) Shs. 5,000/= for adultery

(b) Shs. 5,000/= for special damage

(c) Costs of the suit C

(d) Mesne profits of Shs. 1,000/= every month for adultery from the date of filing this suit till divorce is granted between the plaintiff and 2nd defendant.

(e) Any other relief as the honourable court will think fit to make. D

On 20.1.83 both parties appeared before the Senior Resident Magistrate at Dodoma. The two appellants stated that they had been served with plaint only the previous day and required time to file their defence to the plaint. They were granted until 10.2.83 to E do so. On 10.2.83 both parties appeared before the court. The appellants stated that they had not filed their written statement of defence because they had failed to understand the plaint. They were given time until 23.2.83. The case was fixed for mention on 24.2.83. On that date the appellants failed to turn up in court or to file a F defence and the court ordered that the matter proceed ex-parte. On 19.5.83 the court entered judgment for the plaintiff as prayed on the basis of an affidavit filed by him and which affidavit was an almost verbatim repetition of the facts alleged in the plaint.

On 23.9.83 the District Court Dodoma, presided over by one of the resident magistrates, ruled on the appellants' application to have the ex-parte judgment set aside. G The court rejected the application because the court was not satisfied that the applicants had been prevented by illness from attending court. The court noted the absence of any medical evidence on the issue.

The appellants then appealed to this court. Mr. Mbezi, counsel for the appellants H attacked the ruling of the District Court refusing to set aside the ex-parte judgment and he also questioned the merits of the judgment itself. The respondent was served to appear for the hearing of this appeal but failed to turn up, and the matter proceeded in his absence.

Mr. Mbezi's main ground for challenging the ruling of the District Court was that the I court ought to have accepted the affidavits of the applicants/appellants as the same were unchallenged. The record does not show that the A respondent was told of his right to file a counter affidavit. It is not possible therefore to assume that the mere non-challenge of the affidavits amounted to admission of its contents. This is particularly so because the respondent was not represented by counsel.

However, this court is of the opinion that whether an affidavit is challenged or not it is still B the duty of the court to weigh all the circumstances of the case, including the law on the matter, and to decide whether to allow the application.

Although the court which passed the ex-parte judgment did not say so expressly it is C clear from the record that the court entered the ex-parte judgment because of the failure of the defendants to present a written statement of defence under 0.8, r.14 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Where ex-parte judgment is entered for non-appearance under order 9, r.13, the same provides for application to be made to set aside the ex-parte D judgment. However no similar provision exists for setting aside judgments entered for default of filing a written statement of defence. The chamber application filed in the District Court does not state under what provision it is made. Under Order 40, r. 4(1)(b) the aggrieved party may appeal to the High Court against an order under r. 14 of E Order 8 pronouncing judgment against a party. For this reason this court finds that the application before the District Court was misconceived. Section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be invoked to assist because the defendants were given a specific right of appeal.

The ex-parte judgment was passed on 23.9.83. The appeal to this court was filed on F 23rd November, 1983 well before the time allowed for appeals from decisions of the District Court made in its original civil jurisdiction. I am also of the opinion that the fact that the appellant pursued a wrong remedy - i.e. applying to the District Court to set aside the judgment - did not deprive him or them of their right to appeal against the G decision of the lower court entering judgment in default of filing a written statement of defence and against the decision on its merits.

Mr. Mbezi argued that the District Court acted erroneously in entering judgment in default of filing a written statement of defence. The record shows that the appellants were granted two extensions for filing their defence but appear to have dragged their H feet. Their allegations of illness was not supported by medical evidence and as both of them worked in a hospital this was rather strange.

It is on the merits of the District Court's judgment that Mr. Mbezi for the appellants stands on better grounds. The plaint included a claim for special damages in the sum of I Shs. 5,000/= and another head rather amusingly termed "mesne profits" of Shs. 1,000/= per month from date of filing the suit to such time as divorce is granted. These were in addition to the general A damages of Shs. 5,000/= claimed. All these were allowed by the court as prayed. By 27th October, 1983, when the decree holder filed application for execution, because of the running damages termed "mesne profits", the decretal amount, excluding costs had reached Shs. 22,000/=. By not filing divorce proceedings or by delaying the same, B presumably the decree holder could eventually execute for an enormous amount of money out of all proportion to the wrong suffered by him.

Damages for adultery are awarded on the principle that they are to be by way of compensation for the husband's loss and injury, and not by way of punishment of the adulterer for his misconduct. In assessing these damages both the material loss and C moral loss are taken into account. On the material side the husband could prove for example the cost of keeping a nanny to look after children left behind by the wife. The injury to the husband's feelings and family pride and loss of companionship must be taken into account on the moral side. The material loss, termed special damages, must D be proved in evidence. The other, or general damages are assessed by the court considering all the circumstances of the case.

In this case there was no evidence at all to prove special damages. The "mesne profits" were also unjustified in law and were not a head of damage allowed in adultery cases. If E anything they were punitive.
The court accordingly allows this appeal to the extent of setting aside the award of Shs. 5,000/= special damages, and Shs. 1,000/= per month running damages. F
The award of Shs. 5,000/= general damages, which appears reasonable in the circumstances, is left undisturbed. Each party is to bear his own costs in this appeal as the appeal was only partly allowed.
G Order accordingly.
1983 TLR p250
A
[zRPz]BIBI KISOKO MEDARD v MINISTER FOR LANDS, HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT AND ANOTHER 1983 TLR 250 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Arusha
Judge Mwakibete J

MISC. CIVIL APPLICATION 10 OF 1982 B
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Functus officio - When a tribunal becomes functus officio.
-Headnote
The Minister for Lands, Housing and Urban Development heard an appeal from the C Customary Land Tribunal and decided in favour of the applicant. He later discovered that he had not heard the witnesses of the second respondent before giving his decision. He decided to rehear the appeal and now decided in favour of the second respondent. The applicant filed an application challenging the Minister's decision to rehear the case. D
Held: (i) In matters of judicial proceedings once a decision has been reached and made known to the parties, the adjudicating tribunal thereby becomes functus officio;
(ii) the Minister, having reached a decision and made it known to the parties E became functus officio and could not sit in judgment of his own decision.
Case Information
Application allowed.
No case referred to. F
F.B. Mahatane for the applicant.
M.P. Mtingele for the first respondent.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mwakibete, J.: This application concerns a case under Customary Leasehold G (Enfranchisement) Act 1968. A party who had lost before the Customary Land Tribunal had appealed to the Minister for Lands and Urban Development, and the Hon. Minister had given his decision in that appeal on 27/1/1981, in favour of the applicant - Bibi Kisoko Medard.

Following that decision the 2nd respondent (Prosper S. Mahedi) lodged a complaint to H the same Minister to the effect that there was a failure of justice in that his (2nd respondent's) witnesses had not been heard.

The Minister was satisfied that the 2nd respondent's witnesses had indeed not been I heard in the matter - when he decided to rehear the appeal. The rehearing naturally resulted in a 2nd decision on the same appeal. And the 2nd decision happened to be inconsistent with the previous one of A 21/1/1981. The 2nd decision is dated 30/12/1981.

It is this decision, of the Hon. Minister, to rehear the appeal and ultimately reverse his first decision, which is the subject of challenge in these proceedings by way of certiorari.

The case of the applicant is basically one that once the Minister had made known his first B decision to parties, he was functus officio in the matter - that is that he would be incompetent in law to rehear the appeal for whatever reason because he had already discharged his duty as an appellate tribunal in the matter; that if the 2nd respondent was aggrieved by the 1st decision on the grounds that the principles of natural justice had not C been observed, it was open to him to challenge the same in the High Court, by way of certiorari, under the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance (Cap 453) - Vide s. 2 with a view to quash the alleged offending decision.

Mr. Mtingele, learned state Attorney for the 1st respondent, conceded that the proper D course in law was as propounded by Mr. Mahatane learned counsel for the applicant - that the 2nd respondent ought to have invoked the provisions of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance to move the High Court to cure the alleged injustice! He however observed that since the Minister was satisfied that justice was not done in E his first decision and that since what the Minister did in his 2nd decision was to correct the injustice occasioned by his first decision he could not be faulted for having so acted - after all his function in his appellate jurisdiction was to see that justice was done to the parties. So when it had become apparent that justice was not done in the 1st decision F which happened to be his own decision, he was entitled to revise the same as he did. In any event, he went on, the Tribunal was not bound by strict rules of procedure as required in the ordinary courts of law.

The 2nd respondent fully associated himself with the observations of the learned State Attorney. And like Mr. Mtingele he, too, asked this court to dismiss the application with G costs.

I agree with Mr. Mahatane that in matters of judicial proceedings once a decision has been reached and made known to the parties, the adjudicating tribunal thereby becomes 'functus officio'. So was the Hon. Minister 'functus officio' in the matter of appeal H between the applicant and the 2nd respondent, after his decision of 27/1/81.

It may, as suggested, have become apparent to the Hon. Minister that justice was not done in his first decision, yet that is no basis in law to rehear and reverse his own decision. There is no such authority under the Customary Leasehold (Enfranchisement) I Act 1968 or under the regulations made under the Act. And according to the law of the land only 2nd appellate tribunal, if provided, or, in the circumstances of this case, a High A Court, may reverse a decision of another tribunal of limited jurisdiction. There is no room under the law for any tribunal, be it appellate or otherwise, to sit in judgment of its own decision. Matters of 'review' as provided under the Civil Procedure Code are B irrelevant because the Civil Procedure Code is inapplicable to litigations under the Customary Leasehold (Enfranchisement) Act 1968.

1983 TLR p252
If the Hon. Minister was satisfied that the first decision was lacking in some respects, all he could do was to advise the aggrieved party to seek redress in the High Court under the law as above. There was no legal short cut! C
From the foregoing it is clear that the proceedings before the Hon. Minister that culminated in the 2nd decision of 31/12/81 were null and void. As such the 2nd decision was of no effect and is hereby quashed. Which means that the Minister's decision of 27/1/1981 is still valid and it is so declared. D
Application allowed.
1983 TLR p252
E
[zRPz]CHAPAKAZI BUILDING CONTRACTOR v PAROKIA YA KIWANJA CHA NDEGE
1983 TLR 252 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

January 22, 1986
CIVIL CASE 20 OF 1982 F
Flynote
Contract- Building contract - Payment of an agreed sum for the total work provided for in the contract - Instalment payments in percentage of the total to be made on reaching specified G stages and after certification by an architect named in the contract - Whether contract entire or not entire - Whether consideration to be given in a lumpsum or in specified price to be made up of separate payments for each separate part of the building or works.
Contract - Building contract - Frustration - Failure of the contractor to secure building H materials- Whether contract frustrated.
Contract - Damages - Lumpsum contract mutually rescinded -Whether damages on quantum meruit may be awarded.
Contract - Building contract - Use of better materials and at a higher price than as I stipulated in a contract - Whether contractor may recover the difference in price.
1983 TLR p253
LAGAKINGIRA J
-Headnote

The parties entered into a building contract. According to the terms of the contract the A plaintiff was to be given consideration for the total work, but on reaching specified stages of the work and on certification by an architect he could be paid instalments which were to be calculated as percentages of the total payment. Under the contract the plaintiff contractor was obliged to secure building materials and was to complete the B work by a specified date. The plaintiff had difficulties in securing the building materials and some months before the specified date of completion of the work the parties were mutually agreed that the work could not be completed on or before the contract date. The contract was thus mutually rescinded. Both the parties secured services of experts C to evaluate the work at the stage reached. While the plaintiff's expert opined that the contractor was underpaid, the expert of the defendant was of the view that the plaintiff was overpaid. The plaintiff sought damages on a quantum meruit basis and argued that the contract was frustrated and was impossible of performance for reasons beyond his control. D

Held: (i) This contract was a contract entire, or a lumpsum contract; although the contract provided for payment in instalments, these were not the price for each separate stage, rather they were percentages of the entire price; E

(ii) the contract was not frustrated because the plaintiff was aware of the notorious shortage of building materials in this country;

(iii) in a lumpsum contract a party who has failed completely to perform his part cannot recover payment for the work he has done because his right to payment does not F arise until he has carried out his part of the bargain;

(iv) where, in a lumpsum contract, payment is to be made by instalments, a party can only recover those instalments but not the cost of the work actually done, unless there is evidence of a fresh agreement entitling him to recover on a quantum meruit; G

(v) the plaintiff is not entitled to recover on a quantum meruit basis;

(vi) in a lumpsum contract, the rise in prices and the use of superior materials do not entitle a party to the difference in price.

Case Information

Order accordingly. H

Cases referred to:

1. Davis Contractors Ltd. v Fareham U.D.C. [1956] A.C. 696.
2. Appleby v Myers (1867) L.R. 2 C.P. 651.
3. Metropolitan Water Board v Dick, Kerr & Co. Ltd. [1918] A.C. 119. I

1983 TLR p254

LAGAKINGIRA J

4. Sumpter v Hedges [1898] 1 Q.B. 673. A
5. Otis Elevator Co. Ltd. v Bhajan Singh & Ors. [1967] E.A. 78.
6. Forman & Co. Proprietary v The Liddlesdale [1900] A.C. 190.
7. Gomes v Singh [1964] E.A. 756.
8. Wisbech R.D.C. v Ward [1927] All E.R. Rep. 486.
9. Jamal Ramji Co. Ltd. v Lint Marketing Board [1962] E.A. 752. B

10. Sri Laba Prasad Singh v Maharaja Srish Chandra Nanli [1949] 76 I.A. 244.

11. K.M.P.R. v The Official Assignee of Madras (1923) Mad. 17.

G. Alimwike, for the defendant. C

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: This was an action for various disbursements following the rescission of a contract. It was rather involved.

The plaintiff is a building construction firm under the sole proprietorship of Mr. Gislar D Macarius Kihaule and the defendant is a Catholic Church body, both based in Dodoma. By a written agreement dated 24 September, 1981 the defendant engaged the plaintiff to construct a church building on Plot No. DO/1445/7 at Area 'C' in the Municipality of Dodoma. In so far as this dispute is concerned the material parts of the agreement are E contained in Clauses 1 to 5 and state as follows:

1. That the contractor shall build the church on the plot and in accordance with the specifications and the terms and conditions hereto.

2. That the contractor shall provide all the material and labour for the building and do the F actual building.

3. That the contractor shall commence said building work on the 25th September, 1981 and complete the building work by he 25th July, 1982 the date on which the contractor shall hand over the completed church. G

4. That in carrying on the building work the contractor shall be guided by the Architect Mr. Malangaho in so far as the design of the buildings and materials to be used is concerned.

5. (a)That for the total work to be carried out by the said contractor in the said building he H shall be paid shillings one million and one hundred thousand only (Shs.1,100,000/=).

(b)That the aforesaid payment shall be paid to the contractor when he has built the church to reach the levels hereunder mentioned to the satisfaction of the Architect herein before named to be expressed by him in writing. I

1983 TLR p255

LAGAKINGIRA J

Then follows a table of twelve levels or stages and the sums payable at each stage A expressed in percentages of the entire price. The stages material to this case are (i) and (ii) and state:

(i) Advance payment 15% 150,000/=

(ii) Foundation level 10% 100,000/= B

There is also Clause 6 which provides for retention money of 50,000/= payable "at the expiration of that period the church is found to be in good condition". Clause 7 provides that the agreement is to be interpreted in accordance with the laws of Tanzania with such C terms and warranties ordinarily applicable to building contracts.

Construction began rather unsteadily. This was attributed to the defendant's inability to provide approved building plans in time, but it was particularly due to the plaintiff's difficulties in finding building materials. The plaintiff was initially provided with draft D building plans.

The approved plans were not made available until 6 November, by which time the plaintiff was already digging the foundation. The approved plans also indicated amendments to the draft. Whereas the draft plans included 8 additional columns there was also provision for a beam all round the foundation. By degrees the plaintiff proceeded with construction according to the approved plans. But on 26 E March, 1982 some expert of the defendant's - not Mr. Malangahe - inspected the works and directed the addition of two more columns. These were valued at 20,000/= and paid for separately.

Meanwhile, however, the works had been progressing slowly. As early as 19 February F the defendant had written to the plaintiff (Ex. D1) expressing dissatisfaction, in fact inviting the plaintiff to appear and show cause why the contract should not be terminated. The plaintiff replied on 20 April (Ex. P6) pleading difficulties in procuring building materials and raising the issue of the rise in prices. It stated that it would be impossible G to complete the works on the agreed date. This prompted a meeting of the parties on 25 May. At this meeting it was agreed that the plaintiff would have building materials on the site by 30 June. There was no change in the date of completion. In fact at the time of the meeting building activity had completely ceased and never resumed. The H foundation was still incomplete.

The plaintiff was unable to bring building materials as agreed. On 5 July the defendant wrote a letter (Ex. P7) suspending the contract. In the same month it awarded the contract to Messrs. Central Engineering Works. This prompted the plaintiff to engage a civil engineer, Mr. Mathias Malinga, to evaluate the existing works. Mr. Malinga's I evaluation was 316,785/=, exclusive of the value of the unused materials at the site. On 6 September the parties A met. At the conclusion of the meeting a document (Ex. P10) was drawn up and signed by the both parties rescinding the contract. The document also stated that the plaintiff would take half the bricks at the site.

By that time the plaintiff had been paid as stipulated in stages (i) and (ii), that is, a total of B 250,000/=, and had been paid 20,000/= for the two additional columns, making in all 270,000/=. Having regard to Mr. Malinga's valuation, the plaintiff considered itself to have been underpaid by 46,785/=. The plaintiff also valued the unused materials at the C site at 58,220/=. It therefore brought this action claiming in all 105,005/= on a quantum meruit.

The defendant similarly valued the existing works. The plaintiff had substantially laid the hard core (i.e. stones) in the floor but was yet to lay the concrete floor slab, the final stage in the making of a foundation. According to Mr. Malangahe the existing works D were worth 210,000/=, which suggested an overpayment of 40,000/= on stages (i) and (ii). Further, the plaintiff had not completed the two additional columns for which it was paid 20,000/= Mr. Malangahe estimated the completed work to be worth 10,000/= which also suggested an over payment of 10,000/=. The defendant, therefore, E counter-claimed 50,000/= as money had and received after denying the plaintiff's claim.

The plaintiff was unrepresented while the defendants were represented by Mr. Geoffrey Alimwike. The following issues, which I have taken the liberty to restructure, were agreed upon: F

1. Whether the plaintiff's failure to complete the works by the agreed date was for reasons beyond its control.
2. Whether the amendments to the building plans entailed extra work.
3. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to further payment on a quantum meruit. G
4. Whether any building materials were left at the site.
5. Whether the plaintiff was overpaid.
6. Reliefs. H

The first issue raises impossibility of performance or frustration. The plaintiff relied on the defendant's delay in making approved plans available and on its own difficulties in obtaining building materials, and even seemed to blame the defendant in both aspects. I think the blame should be settled first. First of all, I do not see what harm was I occasioned by the absence of approved plans. In fact, the plaintiff went ahead with digging the foundation and making bricks before getting the approved plans. There was A therefore a lot that could have been done without approved plans. Regarding difficulties in obtaining building materials and the implied blame for lack of assistance, it seems that the plaintiff did not appreciate the terms of the agreement. According to Clause 2, the obligation to find all the materials was the plaintiff's. Any difficulty in the B matter did not have the effect of altering that clause.

Turning to impossibility of performance we find that the law does not take cognizance of matters that are within the parties' control. (Although Tanzanian law was specifically declared applicable to the contract, I have found no authority for apprehension that it could be different from English law on the subject. I will therefore feel free to refer to C English law and decisions where necessary.) In building contracts it is not hardship or inconvenience or material loss which calls the principle of frustration into play: Davis Contractors Ltd. v Fareham U.D.C. [1956] A.C. 696. That was a case where the plaintiffs pleaded bad weather and unforeseen shortage of labour resulting in delay in D performance with a consequential rise in costs. The House of Lords held unanimously that the contract had not been frustrated so as to entitle the plaintiffs to claim their extra costs on a quantum meruit. What would give rise to frustration is, for instance, the destruction of the works by fire: Appleby v Myers (1867) L.R. 2 C.P. 651, or E government prohibition of, or restrictions on, building operations: Metropolitan Water Board v Dick, Kerr & Co., Ltd. [1918] A.C. 119. In other words, what is relied on as causing frustration must be of a nature which the parties could not by any diligence have foreseen and provided for in their contract. In the case before me, the plaintiff was F aware of the shortage of building materials in the country, that being a notorious fact. It was therefore a factor which a prudent contractor could have provided for in the contract. I hold that the contract was not frustrated.

It should indeed be mentioned that the termination of this contract did not proceed on G any notion of frustration. What transpires is that both parties were apparently convinced of the plaintiff's inability to carry out the works and decided to rescind the contract. Admittedly, the dealings and communications of the parties, having been mostly unprofessional, do not admit of easy interpretation. When Ex. P7 of 7 July is looked at, H it is both a suspension and a termination of the contract. In the first paragraph it says " umesimamishwa kazi ya ujenzi", which would mean a suspension, but in the third paragraph it informs Mr. Kihaule that he would be called to a meeting "ili muweze kuafikiana kuhusu gharama za ujenzi uliofanyika mpaka sasa", which would imply a I termination of the contract. The latter position tends to be strengthened by the appointment of another contractor immediately afterwards. But then came the meeting of 6 September when ex. A P10 was drawn up. The first paragraph states:

Leo tarehe 6-9-1982 makubaliano kati ya Ndugu Chapakazi na Parokia ya Kiwanja cha Ndege ni kwamba Nd. Chapakazi si mjenzi wa Kanisa iliyotajwa hapo juu (my emphasis), kama B ilivyotajwa kwenye mkataba uliowekwa sahihi tarehe 24 Septemba, 1981.

This would mean that the contract was on that date rescinded. But the second C paragraph goes on to state:

Imekubaliwa kuwa kabla ya kufuta huo (my emphasis), Ndugu Chapakazi atachukua nusu ya matofali ya 'Block' yaliyopo kwenye Kanisa linalojengwa.

This would mean that rescission of the contract was in abeyance and contingent upon the D plaintiff's taking half the bricks. It is common ground, however, that the parties' contractual relations ceased with the signing of Ex. P10. I therefore take the view that the contract was bilaterally rescinded on 6 September, and in circumstances that E amounted to a dissolution impliciter. All in all, I am satisfied that the issue of frustration did not arise.

In connection with the second issue, the plaintiff complained that the amendments to the building plans entailed extra work. This is tied up with the complaint that apart from the F rise in prices, the plaintiff had to use the more expensive 25 mm. high tensile bars in lieu of the 20mm bars stipulated in the plans. The latter were not available.

As stated earlier, the draft plans made provision for 18 columns only but the approved plans made provision for a further 8 columns. There was also provision for a beam G skirting the foundation. Two more columns were added in March. It is settled that where a contractor has done work outside the contract he can recover for such extras although he had not completed the contract work: 3 HALSBURY'S LAWS, 3rd edn., para. 825. I will begin with the 8 columns. Did they entail extra work? The answer is to H be found in the evidence of Mr. Malangahe who said:

These did not entail any additional work. The reason is that there was a modification of the original columns to a smaller size. As result, therefore, the same amount of concrete and I bars which were used in the 26 columns were the same as would have been consumed in the original 18. A

Mr. Malangahe illustrated this by reference to the plans - good to the eye but not easy to decipher - and Mr. Kihaule did not challenge the contention. I am satisfied that the 8 B columns did not entail extra work. On the other hand, it was conceded that the further two columns were duly paid for. The only extra works, therefore, appears to be the beam in the foundation. Ideally and according to practice, this should have been the subject of a separate agreement as was the case with the two extra columns. There was no such agreement. The matter will therefore fall for a consideration generally under the C issue of quantum meruit.

The question of prices and the use of superior materials will best be considered after settling the nature of this contract. I will therefore pass on to the third issue.

The third issue raises a matter of considerable importance. Accepting that the existing D works as valued by the plaintiff were worth 316,785/= the question is whether the plaintiff can recover 46,875/= on a quantum meruit. To resolve this one has to turn to the nature of the contract. It is now opportune to state that there are two types of building contracts: contracts entire and contracts not entire. In Halsbury's Law (op.cit.), E para. 822, four varieties of contracts entire are listed, the first two of which are relevant, namely,

(1) a contract to construct the whole building or works in consideration of the payment of a fixed sum of money ... often called lumpsum contract's (and) F

(2) a contract to construct the building or works in consideration of a specified price made up of separate payments for each separate part of the building or works. G

Contracts not entire are those where there is no obligation on the contractor to construct the whole of a particular work.

It was common ground that the plaintiff was engaged to construct the whole of a H particular work.

It was common ground that the plaintiff was engaged to construct the whole church building at a fixed price of 1,100,000/=. That amounted to a contract entire. The question is whether it fell under category (1) or (2) above. This turns on the construction of Clause 5 (b) of the agreement which makes provision for payment in instalments. It is again stated in Halsbury's Law, para. 824, that "In most building and engineering I contracts, provision is made for the payment of instalments during the progress of the work. It depends on the construction of the particular contract whether A or not the effect of such a provision is to prevent the contract being entire." Although the present contract provided for payment in instalments, it will now be recalled that the instalments were not the price for each separate stage; rather, they were percentages of B the entire price. Stage (i), for instance, was an advance payment before any construction commenced. The actual price for each separate stage could indeed be higher or lower than the instalments stipulated. I am therefore of the view that this contract was a contract entire, or a lump sum contract, which falls under category (1).

Whether or not a plaintiff can recover on a quantum meruit in a lump sum contract has C long been settled. Generally speaking a party who has failed completely to perform his part cannot recover payment for the work he has done, for his right to payment does not arise until he has carried out his part of the bargain. An exception to this rule is that D where, as in the instant case, payment is to be made by instalments, he can only recover those instalments but not the cost of the work actually done, unless there is evidence of a fresh agreement entitling him to recover on a quantum meruit. In Sumpter v Hedges [1898] 1 Q.B. 673, the plaintiff, a builder, contracted to build two houses and stables on the defendant's land for a lump sum. When the buildings were still E in an unfinished stage the plaintiff informed the defendant that he had no money and was not going on with the work any more. The plaintiff sued to recover payment for the work done partly on a quantum meruit. Smith, L.J. said: F

The law is that, where there is a contract to do work for a lump sum, until the work is completed the price of it cannot be recovered. It is suggested however that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for the work he did on a quantum meruit. But in order that that may be so, G there must be evidence of a fresh contract to pay for the work already done.

What amounts to a fresh contract to pay for the work already done may be inferred from the conduct of the defendant, but not every conduct would sustain such an H inference. Addressing himself to this aspect in the same case, Collins, L.J. said:

There are cases in which, though the plaintiff has abandoned the performance of a contract, it is possible for him to raise the inference of a new contract to pay for the work on a quantum I meruit from the defendant's having taken the benefit of that work, but, in order that that may be done, the circumstances must be such as to give an option to the defendant A to take or not to take the benefit of the work done. It is only where the circumstances are such as to give that option that there is any evidence on which to ground the inference of a new contract .... The mere fact that a defendant is in possession of what he cannot help keeping, B or even has done work on it, affords no ground for such an inference. He is not bound to keep unfinished a building which in an incomplete stage would be a nuisance on his land.

Admittedly, the above case was one where the plaintiff abandoned the work. In the C instant case the plaintiff was willing to continue with the work, its obstacles notwithstanding, but contract was mutually rescinded. I have no doubt, however, that the principles laid down in the above case apply with equal force to the case before me. The agreement was to pay the plaintiff in instalments upon reaching certain stages of the D works, a normal practice even in lump sum contracts. There was no agreement to pay for the work done based on the plaintiff's costs. To imply such a term would be inconsistent with the express terms of the contract and I am precluded from doing so. The fact that the contract was mutually rescinded raised no inference of a new agreement on payment either. If it were the intention of the parties to enter into such an agreement E they could have done so in ex. P10. Further, such an agreement cannot be inferred from the fact that the defendant took the benefit of the work done. The defendant had no option to take or not to take the benefit of that work. It could not keep unfinished a F church which in an incomplete stage would have been a very unchristian nuisance. The proviso to s. 70 of the Contract Ordinance, Cap. 433, is also relevant in this regard. I have therefore reached the conclusion that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover on a quantum meruit, but could possibly be entitled to recover the instalments in stages (i) and (ii) which have already been paid. G

The foregoing actually disposes of the question of the rise in prices and the use of superior materials, but something more could be said. First of all, Mr. Kihaule's evidence on prices was most unsatisfactory. He tendered documents which he said were for "illustration" only except for ex. 15 in relation to 200 bags of cement purchased H on 11 November. But there was no evidence that the price of this cement was higher than the price prevailing at the signing of the agreement. Be that as it may, the case of Davis Contractors cited above is also authority for the proposition that a builder who undertakes to perform a lump sum contract undertakes the commercial risk that delay would increase his costs. Where it is intended to guard against this, the normal practice I is to insert an adjustment clause in the contract to accommodate any fluctuation in prices: cf. Otis Elevator Co. A Ltd. v Bhajan Singh & Ors. [1967] E.A. 78. There was no adjustment clause in the instant case and it is not open to the Court to add anything by way of an implied contract. The same is true of the plaintiff's use of the 25mm high tensile bars in B substitution for the 20mm bars stipulated in the building plans. First of all, Mr. Kihaule did not know their price and said: "I cannot tell what the price of the 25mm bars was in 1982". Most significant is that the use of these superior bars was not agreed upon. Clause 4 of the agreement required the plaintiff to be guided by Mr. Malangahe in, inter alia, the materials to be used. Mr. Kihaule went ahead and made use of the 25mm bars C without reference to Mr. Malangahe. In Forman & Co. Proprietary v The Liddlesdale [1900] A.C. 190, it was held that where, in an entire contract, the contractor without authority from the employer constructs the works of better materials than those stipulated in the contract, he can only recover the contract price without any D increase in price for the superior materials used. In short, the rise in prices and the use of superior materials are irrelevant in a contract of this kind.

In the fourth issue we are required to decide whether any building materials were left at the site so as to entitle the plaintiff to payment of 58,220/=. Once again, the evidence E was uncertain as to the type and quantity of materials left at the site. The quantities alleged by Mr. Kihaule were greater than those admitted by Mr. Smittar Singh of Central Engineering Works. Mr. Singh admitted finding about 400 to 500 concrete blocks, about half a lorry-load of stones, a store, one bag of cement, scattered sand, F one lorry-load of 1/4" aggregate, and scattered pieces of timber which he termed "takataka". He said that if any more materials were left by the plaintiff, they might have been stolen before he took over. Mr. Kihaule interjected to say: "Oh yes' there were a lot of thefts. I suffered a lot too". It was then in evidence that there was no watchman at the site from the end of May to the middle of July when the second contractor took G over. If thefts could occur when the plaintiff was still at the site, it must have been a free for all during that interim. On a balance of probabilities, therefore, I accept the quantities and state of the materials as admitted by Mr. Singh.

Without going into the value of the admitted materials, the important question is whether, H in principle, the defendant is liable to pay for the same. Some building contracts contain a vesting clause giving over to the employer materials brought at the site but not fixed in the work. In the absence of such a clause it is implied that such materials remain the property of the contractor. There was no such clause in this case and that raises a I prima facie inference that the materials left at the site remained vested in the plaintiff. The position, however, is radically altered by the terms of Ex. P.10. This A document mentioned bricks only, half of which the plaintiff was to take and did take. The omission to mention other materials was not accidental. In Mr. Kihaule's words:

> Ex. P10 talks of bricks only because I was then of the view that I could donate the rest of the B materials gratuitously to the Church, believing I was dealing with Christians.

It is evident, therefore, that the plaintiff elected to give up its rights over the other materials. But it is not correct to say, as Mr. Kihaule did, that the election was C gratuitous. I think it was supported by consideration.

In this case, time was of the essence of the contract. The plaintiff was by Clause 3 required to complete and hand over the church by 25 July. This date was never varied. (Although the defendant awarded the contract to another contractor apparently before D that date, I think it was entitled to do so as by no miracle could the plaintiff have fulfilled the condition.) When time is of the essence of the contract, performance must be completed upon the precise date specified, otherwise an action lies for breach. In this case, therefore, the defendant could have repudiated the contract and sued the plaintiff for damages. It did not take that course. That, in my view, constituted sufficient E consideration for the materials left by the plaintiff. As stated in Chitty on Contracts (General Principles), 24th Edn., para. 179.

> The parties to a contract may agree to rescind it at a time when each has outstanding rights F under the contract against the other. In such a case each party generally provides consideration for the other's promise to release him by giving up his own rights under the contract. G

There was hence consideration in this case. I therefore find the defendant not liable to make payment for the materials left at the site.

It follows from the foregoing that the whole of the plaintiff's claim must fail.

I come to the fifth issue, that is, whether the plaintiff was overpaid and whether the H defendant is entitled to recover the overpayment. The defendant alleged overpayment of 50,000/= on the uncompleted foundation and the uncompleted two extra columns. Assuming that the defendant's valuation was the correct one, there appears to be a case of overpayment. The issue is whether the overpayment is recoverable. Generally, any I money paid in pursuance of an abortive contract can be recovered by an action for money had and received. But that is generally speaking; A otherwise one has to turn to the class of the contract and the terms thereof. In building contracts there is invariably a clause for payment upon certification by the employer's architect. In the instant case, Clause 5(b) stipulated that payments would be made upon certification by Mr. Malangahe. It was agreed on both sides that Mr. Malangahe B certified the payments although I was not shown written certificates. The question, therefore, is whether the defendant was bound by Mr. Malangahe's certificates and this turns on the latter's appointment and the extent of his authority. C

In Gomes v Singh [1964] E.A. 756 it was held that the appellant's architect had limited authority because (1) he was appointed without reference to the contractor; (2) he was appointed when the building was substantially complete and the date of completion had almost arrived; and (3) he was not appointed under the terms of the contract, there being D no provision therein for such appointment. That case is evidently distinguishable from the present one. In this case Mr. Malangahe's appointment was from the beginning part and parcel of the contract. Clause 5(b) also provided that payment would be made upon "certification of the Architect hereinbefore named". This stipulation was not E qualified by another clause. In the circumstances, I find that the appointment of Mr. Malangahe was not a super-added protection to the defendant, but he was clothed with full and unqualified authority to make decisions binding on the defendant. In this view I am further strengthened by the fact that when, on 2 September, Mr. Kihaule met the defendant's representatives to discuss his valuation of the works, they refused to discuss F the matter because Mr. Malangahe happened to be absent. I am therefore of the view that the defendant was bound by its architect's certificates. If there was any error or negligence on the part of the architect, it is the architect, rather than the plaintiff, that is liable to the defendant for any overpayment. It was held in Wisbech R.D.C. v Ward G [1927] All E.R. Rep. 486, that when an architect issues interim certificates, as Mr. Malangahe did, he is not an arbitrator or quasi-arbitrator but an agent and would be liable for any negligence in granting the certificates.

The matter may also be viewed from the point of view of equity. Section 72 of the H Contract Ordinance provides for the repayment of sums paid under a mistake as to a matter of fact. This provision is in pari materia with s. 72 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 hither-to applicable in this country. The latter provision was considered by the High Court of Uganda in Jamal Ramji & Co. Ltd. v Lint Marketing Board [1962] I E.A. 752 which stated, citing the Privy Council in Sri Shiba Prasad Singh v Maharaja Srish Chandra Nanli (1949), 761.A. 244, that it was not to be implied (from the section) that every sum paid under a mistake is A receivable no matter what the circumstances may be. There may be in a particular case circumstances which may disentitle a claimant by estoppel or otherwise. Similarly in K.M.P.R. v The Official Assignee of Madras 1923 Mad. 17, it was observed that the Indian provision has to be qualified by the doctrine of equity in order to render it intelligible. B

On the strength of these authorities, I consider the application of our s. 72 to be subject to equity and I am again of the opinion that the plaintiff is not liable to repay the overpayment. First, the defendant is estopped from denying Mr. Malangahe's authority with whom the plaintiff dealt in good faith. Secondly, this was not a case of total failure C of consideration and there was neither allegation nor suspicion that the entire money was not utilised in the contract works. In the words of Goff and Jones in The Law of Restitution (1966) at p. 25

... it is now established that money paid under a contract later brought to an end is D recoverable, provided that the consideration for the payment has wholly failed.

For the reasons I have endeavoured to state, I find that neither the claim nor the E counter-claim has been established. I dismiss both. The parties will bear their costs.

Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p265

F

[zRPz]MWANAHAMISI ABDALLAH & HAMISI v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 265 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Lugakingira J

January 29, 1986 G

CRIMINAL APPEAL 49 OF 1983

Flynote

Criminal Law - Township Rules - Whether applies to Minor Settlements.

Criminal Law - Unnatural offence - Ingredients of the offence. H

Criminal Law - Attempt to commit an unnatural offence - Offence not committed where appellant had not started to undress himself.

-Headnote

The appellant, a male, was by dress, bearing and word representing himself at Manyoni I as a female and was arrested when he so represented himself to a police decoy. When examined at Manyoni District Hospital he was found with a wide and tender anus and there was dry semen around the place, A suggesting that he was a homosexual. He was subsequently charged with wearing clothes of a female contrary to Rule 80(22) of the Township Rules and with committing an unnatural offence contrary to section 154 (3) of the Penal Code. In the alternative to the latter count he was charged with attempting to commit an unnatural offence contrary B to section 155 of the Penal Code. He was convicted as charged in the first count and sentenced to three months' imprisonment. He was also convicted in the alternative second count and sentenced to three years' imprisonment. He then appealed. C

1983 TLR p266

LAGAKINGIRA J

Held: (i) Manyoni has never been declared a Township, therefore the appellant was wrongly charged and convicted under Township rules.

(ii) Obiter: even if the appellant had been properly charged under the Township Rules, the sentence of three months' imprisonment was illegal since the maximum penalty D for the offence is fine not exceeding forty shillings or imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month;

(iii) a person is guilty of committing an unnatural offence if he permits a male person to have carnal knowledge of him against the order of nature; in the instant case there was no such evidence;

(iv) a mere acceptance of a proposal for love making against the order of nature E without any further act directed at the fulfilment of the offence is not sufficient to constitute an attempt.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. F

No cases referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The appellant, a male, was by dress, bearing and word representing G himself at Manyoni as a female and was arrested when he so represented himself to a police decoy. When examined at Manyoni District Hospital he was found with a wide and tender anus and there was dry semen around the place, suggesting that he was in the homosexual habit. He was therefore charged with wearing clothes of a female contrary to rule 80(22) of the Township Rules and with committing an unnatural offence contrary H to s. 154(3) of the Penal Code. In the alternative to the latter count (but very badly framed), he was charged with attempting to commit an unnatural offence contrary to s. 155 of the Penal Code.

He was convicted as charged in the first count and sentenced to three months' I imprisonment. He was also convicted in the alternative second count and sentenced to three years' imprisonment. The sentences were ordered to run concurrently. He then appealed.

1983 TLR p267

LAGAKINGIRA J

As just stated, the first count fell under the Township Rules. So far as I know, however, A Manyoni has never been declared a township. The appellant was therefore wrongly charged and convicted under those rules. It may also be observed for interest that Manyoni was declared a minor settlement vide G.N. No. 115 of 1937, but I was unable to find any minor settlements rules that made provision for this subject. In 1962 B Manyoni fell under the jurisdiction of the Manyoni District Council by virtue of s. 167 of the Local Government Ordinance, Cap. 333, but I was again unable to establish that the Council was in the habit of making bye-laws or that it ever legislated on the matter. It follows, in my view, that the appellant was convicted of an offence that did not exist in C Manyoni as such. I can only say, without deciding, that probably the appellant could have been charged under s. 176(6) of the Penal Code. His conduct was certainly indecent. With that said, however, I cannot find my way to sustain the conviction on the first count.

Further, even if the appellant had been properly charged under the Township Rules, the D sentence of three months' imprisonment was illegal. Under Rule 86, the maximum penalty for the offence is fine not exceeding 40/= or imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month. It is evident, therefore, that the appellant got a raw deal.

In the second count, I could find no evidence to sustain a conviction either under s. E 154(3) or s. 155. In the former, a person is guilty of committing an unnatural offence if he permits a male person to have carnal knowledge of him against the order of nature. Although there was evidence, especially the presence of semen, suggesting a homosexual act, there was no evidence that the appellant had permitted it. I therefore cannot fault F the trial magistrate for ignoring the charge as it related to s. 154(3). As regards s. 155, all that is on record is that the appellant accepted a proposal for love making with Cpl. Wine. At that juncture Cpl. Wine identified himself and arrested the appellant. That, in my view, was not sufficient to constitute an attempt. In attempts there should be an act G directed at the fulfilment of the offence. In this case, for instance, it woud have made a whole difference had the appellant undressed himself. But merely to accept a proposal without doing anything to bring it about cannot be said to be an attempt to commit an unnatural offence. The conviction in the second count was therefore equally bad. H

In the result, I allow the appeal and quash the convictions and sentences on both counts. Unfortunately, it appears that the appellant has completed the sentences, but he should otherwise be released from custody in so far as these offences are concerned.

I Appeal allowed.

1983 TLR p268

A

[zRPz]JANUARY MAYALA v MAZIGE MKANGALA 1983 TLR 268 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Katiti J

September 15, 1984

CIVIL APPEAL 75 OF 1983

Flynote

Contract - Customary law - Whether unavoidable accidents can give rise to civil liability. B

-Headnote

The respondent, under a written agreement, hired his hand-saw to the appellant for Shs. 150/= for a month. During the currency of the agreement the hand-saw got lost when a C canoe in which the appellant was travelling was capsized and everything including himself were thrown into the lake. The respondent filed a suit in a Primary Court claiming restitution of the hand-saw or its value of Shs. 2,400/=. The Primary Court dismissed the action, but the District Court, on appeal, ordered the appellant to compensate the D respondent Shs. 1,200/=, part of the value of the hand-saw. The appellant appealed against the compensation order.

Held: Unless it is a question of strict civil liability which has not been established under customary law, civil liability must be based on proven actionable faulty deviation from an E expected and accepted standard of conduct by the defendant and not on acts of God over which man has no governance.

Case Information

Appeal allowed. F

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Katiti, J.: Mazige Mkangala, the respondent herein filed an action in Ilangala Primary Court, against January Mayala the appellant herein, claiming a restitution of a hand-saw, G or Shs. 2,400/= the value thereof, that he had by written agreement between him and the appellant on hire for Shs. 150/= for one month, given to the appellant, who claimedly failed to give back the same, after the said agreed upon period. This action was unanimously dismissed with costs by the trial Court, although the appeal was partly H successful, and the District Court, while sympathising with the appellant, ordered that the appellant compensate the respondent Shs. 1,200/= part of the value of the hand-saw - hence this appeal challenging the award.

This case does cover a compass that is both narrow, with facts not seriously contested. I It cannot be denied, that the appellant did on hire and agreement take the respondent's hand-saw, for use as from 17/9/1980, but A returnable on or by 20/10/1980. It is also very true that the said hand-saw was never returned on this stipulated day, or beyond. The appellant was straightforward in his defence supported by witnesses in saying, that while he was on his errands for work, in a canoe in which the hand-saw and other work-implements had been loaded, on Lake B Victoria, the lake suddenly got violent and lost temper, their canoe unfortunately capsized, and everything including him, were thrown into the lake. And that, while he was fortunate to come out alive, he could not recover the property that included the hand-saw. C

Was the appellant liable? On the evidence, as I see it, that the hand-saw was lost in the manner narrated by the appellant cannot be challenged. Again on this evidence, negligence cannot be imputed on the appellant to attract attachment of a suitable civil wrong. Again on the evidence, no evidence exhibiting that under the customary law of the area, if any, the circumstances of the case, did give rise to an actionable wrong, was D adduced, nor did the respondent place limitation on the use and place of the said hand-saw, so that the breach of which could attract civil liability. In my view the whole episode was an accident and an act of God over which the appellant had no control; no power, no discretion, and no amount of cautious human care, could change the said course of event. Unless it is a question of strict liability which has not, been established E under Customary Law. It is my view that civil liability must be based on proven actionable faulty deviation from an expected, and accepted standard of conduct by the defendant and not on acts of God, over which man has no governance. Such being the F case, I am of the view that unavoidable accidents - acts of God - should not give rise to civil liability against the victims thereof. In this case we cannot say the appellant provoked the lake tempers, and we should not punish the appellant, because the consequences of these tempers were to throw him into the lake waters and thus lose a hand-saw. While I do sympathise with the respondent for the loss of the hand-saw, I G find the cause of action unestablished. The appeal is therefore allowed with costs, and the judgment of the District Court reversed, and the judgment of the Primary Court reinstated. H

I Appeal allowed.

1983 TLR p270

A

[zRPz]ASHA SOUD SALIM v TANZANIA HOUSING BANK 1983 TLR 270 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Zanzibar
Judge Augustino Ramadhani CJ

April 9, 1984
MISC. CIVIL APPLICATION 7 OF 1978 B
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Jurisdiction - Declaratory order - Whether the High Court of Zanzibar has power to grant declaratory decrees.
Constitutional Law - Validity of a proclamation of the Zanzibar Revolutionary Council - C Whether a Revolutionary Council proclamation has a force of law.
Contract - Void contract - Payment of interest a term of the contract, rendered unlawful D being contrary to law - Whether contract enforceable.
Contract - Public policy - Charging of interest prohibited by the government - Whether charging of interest in such circumstances is against public policy.
Contract - Frustration - Failure of a party to perform a contract because of government action.
Statutory Interpretation - Mischief rule. E
-Headnote
In 1959 the mother of the applicant borrowed Shs. 45,000/= from the First Permanent Building Society, a predecessor of the respondent (Tanzania Housing Bank), for building a house which she then mortgaged. The loan was repayable in twenty years, and the F interest chargeable was 81/2% per annum. The borrower made regular payments of Shs 398/= a month to the lender until and including December, 1963, when she stopped. In January, 1964 the Zanzibar Revolutionary Council issued a proclamation prohibiting charging of interest on moneys borrowed.
In January 1967 the borrower died and the applicant was appointed an administratrix of G the estates of her deceased mother. The applicant filed an application in the High Court praying for a declaratory order that she be allowed to redeem the mortgage house after paying the respondent the outstanding amount, i.e. principal sum plus interest thereon (the latter up to 1964 only) summing up to Shs. 41,356/46. H

Since 1964 the respondent had been insisting by correspondence that the borrower had to continue paying the monthly instalments which included interest. And, since 1964 the government had put the borrower in such a situation that she could not continue paying the instalments.

The learned High Court judge considered various issues including whether the High I Court of Zanzibar has power to give declaratory orders and whether the contract was void being contrary to law or against public policy. He A also considered interpretation of the proclamation of the Zanzibar Revolutionary Council with regard to payment of interest.

1983 TLR p271

RAMADHANI CJ

Held: (i) On the basis of ss, 4 and 129 of the Civil Procedure decree and in the absence of express or implied bar the High Court has jurisdiction to grant declaratory orders, it B being within the inherent power of the court;

(ii) by virtue of the revolution the Revolutionary Council had acquired inherent power to promulgate law; proclamations by the Council had, therefore, a force of law;

(iii) the proclamation prohibiting payment of interest made payment of interest C unlawful and the contract between the parties became void under s. 56 (2) of the Contract Decree (Cap. 149);

(iv) at the time of the revolution it was in the good and in the interest of the Zanzibari society that interest charged on loans should be abolished;

(v) as a matter of public policy the applicant should not be found at fault for not D paying interest after the same was prohibited by the government;

(vi) by virtue of Decree No. 5 of 1978, which provided for payment of interest, payment of interest in Zanzibar is no longer unlawful or contrary to public policy; E

(vii) the acquisition of the house by the government operated as a frustration of the contract;

(viii) the proclamation prohibiting lending of money with interest was not intended to prohibit lending of money; it merely prohibited charging of interest on money borrowed. F

Case Information

Application granted.

Cases referred to.

1. Ramji Dewji v Ali bin Hassan [1958] E.A. 297 G
2. Egerton v Brownlow [1853] 4 HL Cas 196
3. Re Beard [1908] 1 Ch. 383
4. Re Jacob Morris (deceased) [1943] N.S.W.S.R. 352
5. Metropolitan Water Board v Dick, Kerr & Co. [1918] A.C. 119

S. El Maamry for the applicant. H

S. Msuya for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment
Ramadhani, C.J.: Though I have heard this application in Kiswahili I have decided to write my judgment in English because I feel there are quite a few quotations in English I which I would rather leave
1983 TLR p272
RAMADHANI CJ
in that language. Moreover the application itself was in English. A
The Applicant, Asha, is a daughter of one Zuwena Hemed (deceased) who in this judgment I would refer to as the Borrower. The respondent is the Tanzania Housing Bank (THB) which has taken over the activities, assets and liabilities of the First Permanent Building Society. In this judgment I will refer to the latter as the Society. B Thus I will use the Respondent for THB and the Society for the other, for purposes of clarity in the judgment.
In 1959 the Borrower was given by the Society a loan of Shs. 45,000/= for constructing C a house. The loan was repayable in twenty years at an interest rate of 81/2 per cent per annum. The Borrower was paying Shs. 398/= per month. She built a house on Plot No. 11 at Migombani, Zanzibar. The loan was secured by mortgaging the house.
The Borrower paid as agreed up to and including the month of December, 1963. She never paid a single cent thereafter. Correspondence ensued between the Society and D the Borrower regarding payment. Eventually the Borrower passed away on 18th January, 1967. The applicant was granted by this very court letters of administration in the Probate Cause No. 8 of 1968. The Applicant also exchanged a couple of letters with the Society on the issue of the loan and repayment.
The Applicant prays for a declaratory order that she be allowed to pay the Respondent E the outstanding amount i.e. the principal borrowed and interest thereon as up to 1964. This amount has been given as Shs. 41,356/46. The Applicant contends that by the proclamation issued by the Revolutionary Council in January, 1964 charging of interest F on moneys borrowed was prohibited. It was ordered for all loans that only the principal amounts be repaid without interest. It is further contended that the proclamation applied to this mortgage No. ZM 32.
For the avoidance of doubt let me state that this court has the power to grant declaratory orders prayed for. This was so decided by Law Ag. C.J. in the case of Ramji Dewji v G Ali bin Hassan [1958] E.A. 297. He based his decision on section 4 and 102 of the Civil Procedure Decree Cap. 4. Now these are ss. 4 and 129 of Cap. 8 respectively. Admittedly the Honourable Judge referred to art. 24, of the Zanzibar Order-in-Council, 1924 too. I am also aware that this Order-in-Council, as the others, has been H abrogated by the existing Laws Decree, 1964 (Presidential Decree No. 1 of 1964). However, I am of the most considered opinion that Order-in-Council was not the basis of his decision.
Section 4 of the Civil Procedure Decree gives the courts jurisdiction to try all civil cases except those suits in which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred. The I Honourable Judge observed that the Decree is thus not exhaustive as to what suits may be entertained. He then referred to s. 102 (now s. 129) which saves the inherent power of the court "to A make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the court".
1983 TLR p273
RAMADHANI CJ

As there was no law either expressly or impliedly barring the courts in Zanzibar to make declaratory judgments and in reading the two sections mentioned above, His Lordship B felt that the law as obtained in England was relevant. He thus resorted to the reception clause as provided by art. 24 of the Order-in-Council. Whether using the English received law or not, on the basis of the two sections of the Civil Procedure Decree and in the absence of express or implied bar, this court has jurisdiction to deal with such C applications as the present one for it is within the inherent power of the High Court.

Coming back to the suit the respondent objects to the applications. He claims to be repaid the principal and interest thereon up to and including 31st December, 1981 which sum comes up to Shs. 186, 834/50. He contends that heretofore the Applicant, as well as the Borrower, had never used the proclamation as the excuse for non-payment. D Instead both of them had continuously promised to repay the loan with interest and had advanced other excuses for their failure. That part, the Respondent submitted that the proclamation by the Revolutionary Council and relied upon by the Applicant has not the force of law. E

A number of letters have been produced by the Respondent which had been written by the Borrower, the Society, the Applicant and even the Respondent himself. These letters throw light on the issues involved.

The Borrower had complained to the Agenda of the Society in Zanzibar that the house was occupied by the servants of the Revolutionary Government and that no rents were F paid. The agent informed the Society of these complaints by the letters dated 20th March, 1964 and 20th November, 1964. The Society conducted its investigation and found out that the house was occupied by servants of the Ministry of Home Affairs and that a rent of Shs. 500/= was paid monthly to the Borrower by the Ministry of Housing G (of Mainland). This fact was disclosed by the Society in its letter to the Borrower of 17th October, 1966. The Borrower replied to it on 6th December, 1967 stating "I don't remember saying or informing you that I have not been receiving rent. Your agent Mr. T.E.T. Karimjee ... wanted me to sign a letter authorising you to take the rent from the H Ministry of Housing on my behalf ... I pointed out to Mr. Karimjee that it would cause me great financial strain ...". The Borrower then went ahead to enumerate her commitments: She had to provide for the maintenance of her son in England, the house needed repairs and redecoration, she had to pay 25% of the rent as taxes to the I Municipal Council and that she had lost her son and husband within a space of six months. She asked to allowed to repay by instalment of shs.250/= per month. A

Let me add that in its letter the Society had threatened that "I have now instructed my advocate to take legal action against you for recovery of the full amount of the company's debt". This letter was signed personally by L.B. Van Der Watt, the Manager for Tanzania. B

As I have already narrated the Borrower unfortunately died on the 18th January, 1967. It is not known what response there was to her request. The threat, on the other hand, was never executed. However, the Society wrote to the Applicant on 27th April, 1967, although this letter was not produced in Court by the Respondent. Anyway, the C Applicant responded to that letter on 9th May, 1967. She was pleading for extension of time so that she could sort out her mother's affairs. May be I should let her plea for herself: "So please give us some more time, and I agree to pay from January, 1967".

The Society responded to this letter on the 9th June, 1967 but again the letter was not D produced. However, the Applicant wrote on 15th June, 1967 reiterating that "I have already promised you to pay all the arrears, and I confirm again that I shall pay the arrears". She pleaded again for time, "It is therefore impossible for me to resume paying within 14 days ...". No other correspondence was produced after these. E

It would appear to me from the foregoing that in the two letters of the Respondent which were not produced in court the threat of legal action was repeated and in the second letter a time limit of 14 days was prescribed to augment the threat.

A number of reasons for nonpayment emerge from these letters. First, the Borrower F claimed that she was getting no rents from the occupants of the house who happened to be in the service of the Revolutionary government. She later denied this. Secondly the Borrower pleaded financial difficulties as the impediment and sought the permission of the society to pay Shs. 250/= per month instead. After the death of the Borrower, the G Applicant too advanced two excuses. First, she was awaiting letters of administration to manage her mother's estate. Then, secondly, she alleged a time factor and begged for some elbow room before she was to pay. However, in the course of this application a fifth and a new cause has been submitted: the proclamation by the Revolutionary Council. Now which is the actual reason? H

It is evident to me that this house was occupied by government servants even before the Revolution. The letter of one Raymond who was a tenant in this house in October, 1967 says: I

"This house from the Colonial times, was graded as a `B' grade quarter and it was allotted to me from the Police Housing Pool ....

1983 TLR p275

RAMADHANI CJ

It was Government rented quarter and I paid as my precessors had done, a fixed monthly rent A of Shs. 108/35".

This Mr. Benedict Raymond occupied this house as from the 28th February, 1964. He wrote the above quoted letter to the Society asking for a reduction of rents. Presumably B he was seeking a reduction from the rent of Shs. 500/=. That had been paid for by the Mainland Ministry of Housing. For reasons not disclosed in the letter both the said Ministry of Housing and the Ministry of Home Affairs relinquished the responsibility of paying rent for this house. It became the duty of the occupant himself to pay the rents C hence Mr. Raymond's plea for the reduction of rents payable.

Anyway, to stop digressing, it is manifestly clear that a rent of Shs. 108/35 that had been payable is extremely meagre in relation to the monthly payment of Shs. 398/= that the Borrower had been paying to the Society. She was not getting as rents even a third of D what she was paying to the Society. Yet the Borrower managed to make her monthly payments promptly and without fail up to and including the month of December, 1963! As I have indicated earlier, the Borrower stopped paying after the Revolution.

It would seem to me then, from the above facts and on balance of probabilities, that the E Borrower stopped payment not because she was receiving no rents and neither because of financial difficulties. She stopped for another reason altogether. This other reason would seem to me to be the proclamation by the Revolutionary Council. Unfortunately the Borrower herself is not available to state why she did not gather up F courage and categorically mention the proclamation as her reason. On the part of the Applicant, on the other hand, she did not take any steps towards making any payment despite her promises and the fact that letters of administration were granted to her on the 6th February, 1969.

Even on the part of the Respondent he has been hesitant to take any legal action though G it would appear he thrice threatened so to do. Under the mortgage agreement the Respondent has the right to foreclosure. However, he has not exercised that right. Even this application has not been done by him. Mr. Msuya, the Corporation Secretary of the Respondent, told the court that eventually they would have come to Court. H

I will deal with the mortgage agreements later on but at this juncture it is not out of place, and I do not think that I am wrong, to take into consideration this conduct of the respondent. After all subsequent conduct of a party is relevant under s. 8 of the Evidence Decree, Cap. 5. From this conduct I come to the deduction that the I Respondent also acknowledges the proclamation. I will return to this later. But what actually was this proclamation of the Revolutionary Council? A

Mr. Ussi Khamis Haji, the then Deputy Attorney General produced Exhibit "A". This is a specially printed piece of paper. At the top and running right across the paper in capitals and heavy print is the following heading: "BARAZA LA MAPINDUZI - ZANZIBAR". Under the heading and to the right has been printed "Nam ...". The B blanks have been filled in by figures "31" in type. Then there is the following sentence: "Kipande cha mazungumzo ya mkutano wa tarehe .....19...". In these blanks the date "19 January, 64" has been typed. All the above except those filled in the blanks have been printed. The excerpt of the deliberations has been typed on the piece of paper as follows: C

"Kodi ya Viwanja vya Nyumba. Ukopeshaji wa Riba na Vitu vya Rehani. Kodi ya viwanja vya nyumba ikomeshwe. Pia ukopeshaji wa riba na vitu vyote vya rehani virudishiwe wenyewe bila ya malipo au deni lolote lile". D

At the bottom and in the right hand corner of the exhibit has been printed "Mwandishi wa KM (BLM)". On top of these words are dots and somebody has signed on these dots. E

After that proclamation all pawn shops were closed down. There was no more charging of interest in money lending. It was at this time that payment of such loans as this came to a standstill. The Society had about 29 loans similar to this one and apparently for all of these no repayment was done. I will deal with this at length elsewhere. F

It is abundantly clear to me that the Society acknowledged this proclamation. This is so from a memorandum which has been produced in court by the Respondent himself. Mr. L.B. Van der Watt, the Manager of the Society in Tanzania, wrote a memorandum which I feel I can only do it justice by quoting it fully: "Note for Mortgage File No. G ZM.32 4th November, 1964 "Saw Mr. Maggidi, Principal Secretary, Ministry of Housing and informed him of the agreement with the Government whereby the Government preference shareholding in First Permanent (E.A.) Ltd. would be converted to a deferred loan to be identified with the Zanzibar mortgage asset. He was asked whether he could in these new circumstances arrange for the rent for Mrs. El-Harthia's H house to be paid to us for credit of our mortgage account, as any such payment would reduce the Government loss:

"He said that until the formal agreement between the Government and C.D.C. is signed it would be very difficult for him to arrange this because he would have to inform the Minister of I State for Union Affairs, who in turn would refer to the Zanzibar Government.

1983 TLR p277

RAMADHANI CJ

I therefore agreed to leave the matter in abeyance until the agreements are signed when a A formal approach will be made to the Ministry of Housing".

Apart from the above quoted memo in the course of entertaining this application Mr. Msuya sent a letter to this court reference SAM/mm of 27th October, 1980. The letter B was in Kiswahili. However, the relevant part of it and translated into English is as follows:

".. there are 29 mortgages (rehani) whose payment ceased since 1964. Talks have often times been held between the Ministers of Finance for the Mainland and the Islands as well as C bank officials with the view of finding a solution for these loans especially on their repayment with interest and the restarting of issuing loans to the people of Tanzania Islands.

I beg to inform the court that the talks among the above mentioned offices are continuing and D a solution will be arrived at.

Hence we beseech your court to adjourn the case until a solution is obtained for all the 29 loans".

It is manifestly clear to me that the Respondent not only knew of the proclamation but E treated it as legally enforceable hence his determination to seek a political solution rather than judicial despite his threats of going to court. Even when the Respondent was finally dragged into litigation by the Applicant he resisted by way of seeking adjournments in anticipation of a political solution. F

Paradoxically the Zanzibar Attorney-General Chambers was well aware that that proclamation has been held to be law. This is evidenced by the letter the A-G wrote to the Principal Secretary of the Revolutionary Council Ref. L.D. 613 of 27th June, 1979. This letter was produced and received as Exhibit "C". It was written in Kiswahili so I G better quote it as such lest I distort it:

"... ingawa iliamuliwa na Baraza la Mapinduzi tarehe 3-2-1964 kukataza riba na uwekaji wa rehani, hakuna sheria iliyotungwa maalum kukataza mambo hayo. Yalibakia ni maamuzi ya

H Kiserikali (policy decision) ambayo yamekuwa yakifuatwa kiutekelezaji hadi havi sasa. Matokeo yake ni kuwa kiutekelezaji na kihali halisi imechukulika na kueleweka kuwa Tanzania Visiwani hapana mikopo ya riba na pia kuweka rehani (mortgage) kwa mujibu wa Sheria. Hivyo ndivyo benki I

1983 TLR p278

RAMADHANI CJ

ikiwemo na Benki ya Nyumba (THB) wanavyoelewa kama ilivyokwisha elezwa" (emphasis A provided).

The learned A-G went on that as the Government has now decided that loans be administered under the usual conditions, which include charging of interest, the policy stand has been altered and: B

"Ilivyokuwa hapakuwa na sheria iliyokataza riba basi ni suala la uamuzi kiserikali ambao umetolewa. Hapana sheria ya kurekebisha au kubadili. Labda tu kwa vile ilieleweka hivyo nje, ili kuwapa taarifa na kuondoa mashaka tunaweza kutoa tangazo katika gazeti la Serikali C Benki ya Nyumba na benki zinginezo zinaruhusiwa kufanya shughuli zao Tanzania Visiwani kwa masharti ya kawaida".

This is how the proclamation by the R.C. was understood and taken to be both within D the Isle and without (the Mainland). Thus how it was understood by the Society, the Borrower, the Applicant, the Respondent and the Hon. A-G of Zanzibar. But What actually is the legal status of the proclamation? How does this court view it? E

In this application the Respondent, as represented by Mr. Msuya, contends that the proclamation has no legal effect whatsoever. The court sought the assistance of the A-G on this matter. As already said he was represented by Mr. Ussi Khamisi Haji. With all due respect to him, I hesitate to say that he had assisted the court in clarifying the stand F of the A-G Chambers on the issue. He merely quoted Decree No. 5 of 1978 that the Revolutionary Government has allowed loans payable with interest and that the Respondent has been allowed to operate such loans. His biggest contribution has been the production of copies of the letters which I have already referred to above and the excerpt already quoted (Exhibit "A"). G

This court takes judicial notice of the fact that Zanzibar became independent of the British on 10th December, 1963. On the 12th January, 1964 the peoples of Zanzibar overthrew the yoke of the Sultan. The whole system of law making and the publication H of government notices was thrown overboard. So what was the new system?

On 30th January, 1964 "The Legislative Powers Law, 1964" was promulgated. This provided, inter alia,

"2. The power to make law for the government of the People's Republic Zanzibar is hereby I vested in the President of the Republic

1983 TLR p279

RAMADHANI CJ

acting by and with the advice and consent of the Revolutionary Council". A

That piece of legislation was then signed by all the thirty members of the Revolutionary Council led by the Late Mzee Karume. B

Two things stand out clearly from this law. First, the law was promulgated on the 30th January while the revolution was on the 12th January. The question then is where were the legislative powers vested during the nineteen or so days? Second, this law did not constitute the Revolutionary Council. The Council had been there. The law was promulgated by the Council. The preamble of the legislation makes this fact glaringly C obvious:

"IN EXERCISE of its Supreme Authority in the People's Republic of Zanzibar, the Revolutionary Council in conjunction with the Cabinet of Ministers hereby makes the following laws." D

It is abundantly clear to me that the Revolutionary Council and the Cabinet begot this law.

Hence the question I had posed earlier, where were the legislative powers vested precedent to this law, I feel it is answered. The legislative powers were vested in the E Revolutionary Council. It was because of that that "the Legislative Power Law" was promulgated. In fact by promulgating this law, the Council formally declared the powers they inherently had by virtue of the revolution. The success of the revolution vested these powers in the Council. A revolution owes its legitimacy to its success. For the F sake of formalizing and casting it in the legal form that law was promulgated and henceforth all were promulgated as decrees and assented to by the President.

As already mentioned this particular proclamation in issue was given on the 19th January that is before the Legislative Powers Law. The question then is what status does it G have?

As I have already demonstrated that the Council inherently had legislative powers even before the Legislative Powers Law then I have no doubts at all in my mind that this particular proclamation has the force of law. It is legally not wanting solely because it H has not been articulated in the language of a draftsman or that it has not been christened a decree or law. Hence I find that the proclamation of the 19th January, 1964, the excerpt of which has been produced in court as Exhibit A, is law.

Section 56 of the Contract Decree (Cap 149) provides: I

1983 TLR p280

RAMADHANI CJ

"(1) An agreement to do an act impossible in itself is void. (2) A contract to do an act which, A after the contract is made becomes impossible or, by reason of some event which the promisor could not prevent, unlawful, becomes void when the act becomes impossible orunlawful". B

In case of the very remote possibility that I might have erred, though I am convinced that I have not, in holding as I do that the proclamation is law, then let me approach the issue from another angle. Decree No. 5 of 1964. 'The Constitutional Government and the C Rule of Law Decree' provides that "... the principal judicial power is exercised on behalf of the Revolutionary Council by the Courts, which shall be free to decide issues before them solely in accordance with law and public policy". If I am wrong in finding that the proclamation is law then what is 'public policy'?

I have failed within the scanty collection I have to obtain any authority on the issue of D public policy in Zanzibar or elsewhere in East Africa. I have then to resort to assistance from English and Commonwealth cases.

In the case of Egerton v Brownlow (1853) 4 H.L. Cas. at p. 196 public policy has been defined as: E

"that principle of the law which holds that no subject can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public, or against the public good, which may be termed, as it sometimes has been, the policy of the law, or public policy in relation to the administration of the law". F

In the other case of Re Beard [1908] 1 Ch. 383 at p. 342 it has been said that:

"The truth of the matter seems to be that public policy is a variable thing. It must fluctuate with G the circumstances of the time".

This pronouncement was followed in the Australian case of Re Jacob Morris (deceased) [1943] N.S.W.S.R. 352. It was propounded that: H

"The phrase `public policy' appears to mean the ideas which for the time being prevail in a community as to the conditions necessary to ensure its welfare; so that anything is treated as I against public policy if it is generally regarded as injurious to the public interest ...".

1983 TLR p281

RAMADHANI CJ

Thus I can safely come to the conclusion that 'public policy' is determined by the A circumstances of a given society at a particular historic juncture of the development of that society. Thus at the time of the revolution it was in the good and in the interest of the Zanzibari society that interest charged on loans should be abolished. But there is a second facet to public policy in this case. At the present moment, no body should be B found at fault for not doing that which was prohibited, by the powers that were. Therefore, the contention by the Respondent that the Applicant is to pay not only the principal amount and the interest there-on as stipulated in the contract but also for all the period up to the time of this application is contrary to public policy. C

The only problem in holding that payment of interest was against public policy is when it ceased being so. When was the payment of interest not against public policy? Or is it still contrary to public policy to this day? I would certainly not answer the second question in the affirmative. It is definitely not contrary to public policy now. But when D did it stop being so?

Upon a careful inspection of all the decrees passed since the proclamation there is none talking about charging or payment of interest on loan except Decree No. 5 of 1978 which was referred to this Court by Mr. Ussi. This is 'The Government Loans, Stocks, E Grants and Guarantees, Decree, 1978: The decree specifically provides for the payment of interest half-yearly in paragraph (f) of section 5. It is also mentioned in divers other sections. I could safely deduce that on the day this decree came into force payment of interest ceased to be contrary to public policy. No date has been provided F for the coming into force of this decree. However, under section 6 of the Interpretation Decree, Cap. 1 this date is deemed to be the date the decree was promulgated in the 'gazette'. This was 19th August, 1978 as Notice No. 146 of 1978 in the 'Gazette' No. 5151 of 1978.

There is yet a third aspect to this issue. I asked Mr. Msuya about frustration and he said G that since the house which is the subject matter of the contract exists, there cannot be frustration of the contract. However, there are two points which bring up the issue of frustration. It would seem to me in the first place that there was a period when this house was occupied by government servants without any payment of rent to anybody. H Mr. Raymond in his letter, which I have already referred to, wrote that he had been in the house from 28th February, 1964. The Society in their letter of 17th October, 1966 said that from the information they had received the Borrower had been receiving rents to the tune of Shs. 500/= per month from July, 1965. No evidence was given to the I court as regards rent for the period between the date Mr. Raymond occupied the house and July, 1965, approximately sixteen months. For this period it A does not seem to me that the Borrower had any control over this house. I have this feeling from the fact that on 22nd June, 1966 the Commissioner of Police (Zanzibar) wrote to the Borrower demanding that the house be renovated. This was virtually a whole year since rents started being paid by the Ministry of Housing (July 1965). Yet B the Society's Agent wrote to the Society on 14th July 1966 giving information of the demand and adding that:

"Neither the Borrower nor we are in a position to go and inspect the house to see the state of C repairs ...".

Now if during this period when rents were being paid, both the Borrower and the Society's Agent had no access to the house, then one can safely conclude that D inaccessibility was even more thorough at the time when no rents were paid. Hence the Borrower did not have any control over the house and she was infact a stranger to it.

My mind is pretty much cognisant of the fact that, and I am in complete agreement with Mr. Msuya that, payment of rents was not a condition precedent to the repayment of the loan. However, I have mentioned the payment of rents to show that for almost sixteen E months the Borrower had absolutely nothing to do with the house. The Society was aware of this. Thus though physically the house was present and existing I would hesitate to say that it was so constructively. The house was taken away from the Borrower without his consent.

But was the continual existence of the house (physical, constructive or otherwise) the F basis of the contract? I would answer that question in the affirmative. In the first place by its very essence this mortgage was the transfer of the legal estate in the house to the Society for purpose of securing the repayment of the loan and interest thereon. Hence I G am of the well considered opinion that the 'existence' of the house was the basis of the agreement. In the second place the mortgage agreement provided in clause (2) of article 3:

"That the Borrower will during the continuance of this security keep all buildings or other H improvements now or for the time being comprised in the Mortgage Property or Subject to this security in good and substantial repair and "for the purpose of ascertaining whether the said building or other improvements are for the time being in good and substantial repair the I Society may from time to time survey the same or cause the same to be surveyed ...".

1983 TLR p283

RAMADHANI CJ

This testifies to the need of maintaining the existence of the house. However, a mortgage A consists of two things: a personal contract for payment of a debt and a disposition or charge of an estate. Now the continuation of the property refers to the latter. Hence the frustration described above will thus not refer to the personal contract for the payment of the debt. B

But what is the debt to be paid? Is it the principal amount alone or the principal amount plus interest? I do not have any authority but it is my most considered opinion that the debt surviving the frustration is the principal sum only. The effect of frustration is to discharge the parties from further performance of the contract. The principal amount is C the sum that the Borrower has actually received from the Society. The payment of interest is to the Society as the continuance of the house is to the Borrower.

However, this simple state of affairs is complicated by the fact that as from July 1965 the Borrower started receiving rents for the house. Instead of dealing with this aspect let me D first return to the second ground of frustration.

This house is very close to the official residence of the Honourable Mzee Aboud Jumbe. It was thus taken over by the Revolutionary Government in 1972 when Mzee Jumbe E became the Chairman of the Revolutionary Council and the President of Zanzibar. The Ministry of Lands, Construction and Houses valued the house at Shs.72,850/50. This was the amount of compensation that was awarded to the Applicant. The maximum amount that the Respondent could claim, I feel is this amount of compensation awarded. The acquisition of this house by the government operated as a frustration of the contract. F (Metropolitan Water Board v Dick, Kerr & Co. [1918] A.C. 119).

"I have been informed that the owner of the above plot Mrs Zuwena Hemed died on 18th January, 1967. In view of this all cheques issued by the defunct Ministry of Housing in her G favour since January, 1967 are all stale. I shall be grateful, therefore, if you will let me know the present arrangements for the payment of the house rent". H

It does not seem that there was any response to that letter and the matter was left in abeyance.

There is a final aspect to the whole of this issue of this house. As I have already commented this issue has been brought to court by the Applicant who already has the money in her possession. The reason advanced by the Applicant is that she wants this I matter to be settled once and for all so that her mother's soul would rest in peace wherever it might be. One A would have expected, that the Respondent would have taken the initiative. The answer of Mr. Msuya, as I have already said, was that the Respondent would have come to court eventually. Admittedly the period of limitation of a suit by a mortgage for foreclosure has not run out. Under Item 136 of the Schedule to the Limitation Decree B Cap. 12 this period is sixty years from the time when the money secured by the mortgage becomes due. Nevertheless the Respondent and the Society before him could have invoked the provisions of the mortgage agreement:

1983 TLR p284

RAMADHANI CJ

Clause (6) of article 4 of the agreement provides as a follows: "No power (whether statutory or C otherwise) of leasing or agreeing to lease or accepting surrenders of leases shall be exercisable by the Borrower without the consent in writing or the Society".

This house, as evidenced by what has already been said in this judgment, has been D leased even before the Revolution of 1964. No evidence has been adduced showing that there was any written consent of the Society. In fact no such consent was ever given. The Society and the Respondent after him condoned this breach. E

Clause (7) of the same article 4 gave the Society power of sale and power of appointing a receiver. Then clause (8)(a) goes on to provide thus:

"During the continuance of this security the Society may without any further consent from or F notice to the Borrower do all or any of the following acts or things:

(i) Enter into possession of the Mortgaged Property or any part or parts thereof;

(ii) Exercise the said power of appointing a receiver; G

(iii) Exercise the said power of sale;

(iv) Let or demise the Mortgaged Property or any part or parts thereof for such tenancy or term of years at such rent and generally upon such terms as the Society in its absolute discretion shall think fit and any tenancy or lease created H in exercise of this power may be made in the name of the Borrower and the Borrower hereby appoints the Society or its nominee to be the attorney of the Borrower to sign or otherwise execute any document for the purpose of creating any such tenancy or demise". I

1983 TLR p285

RAMADHANI CJ

However, there is a proviso that these powers could only be exercised if one of three A situations existed. Two of those situations are relevant here and I quote them in full:

"(i) Default shall have been made by the Borrower for one calendar month in the payment of some instalment fine of other money payable here, under or of the moneys owing hereunder B in accordance with a notice given to him as aforesaid or under the rules of the Society, or

(ii) There shall have been a breach by the Borrower of some covenant contained in this mortgage ... on the part of the Borrower to be performed and observed other than and besides the covenants for the repayment of the said principal sum and interest hereinbefore contained". C

It is evident to me that the Society could have chosen to invoke the provisions of the agreement and particularly exercise the powers under clause 8 after such breaches as renting the house without the written permission of the Society. Anyway may be it is beyond my province to probe into this failure. But this failure is significant and has to be taken note of. D

I have dwelt at some length on the other aspects of this issue as an alternative, should I have erred in holding that the proclamation of 19th January, 1964 has the force of law. Now I have to come back to it again. What is the amount of money owing under that proclamation? E
The Applicant has said that she is liable to pay Shs. 41,356/46. It has never been explained to me how that figure has been arrived at. The Applicant could not do that. The prayer for the declaratory order is contained in an affidavit drawn and sworn before Mr. Said H. El Maamry, Advocate, Notary Public and Commissioner for Oaths. As F advocates are not allowed to appear before this court, he did not. All that has been said is that "the balance of the principle amount together with interest as in 1964 amounting to Shs. 41,356/46". The Respondent on the other hand did not put up any figure to that effect
But what does the proclamation actually provide? It says:"... Pia ukopeshwaji wa riba G na vitu vyote vya rehani virudishiwe wenyewe bila ya malipo au deni lolote lile".
By construing the proclamation literally it would mean that all who borrowed by pledging property were to be given back their properties and they were freed from the obligation to repay what they had borrowed. In this case the Borrower was to retain the house H and was not to repay the Society even the principal amount. After very full deliberation, and under a very heavy and solemn sense of responsibility of justice I cannot accept that that interpretation is what the Revolutionary Council had in mind. Then what did they I intend? The intention was to prohibit the lending of money with interest. The intention was not to prohibit completely the lending of money. Nor was the intention to ban pledging of property to A secure loans. So in construing this proclamation I have to use the mischief rule. The payment of interest was the evil that was combatted. So the Respondent be paid the balance of the unpaid principal amount as it was on the date of this proclamation. Costs to be born by the Respondent. B
1983 TLR p286
Application granted.
1983 TLR p286
C
[zRPz]HOKA MBOFU v PASTORY MWIJAGE 1983 TLR 286 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mushi J

November 30, 1983
CIVIL APPEAL 94 OF 1983 D
Flynote
Family Law - Concubinage - Concubinage for 16 years - Whether s. 160 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 applicable where there is no allegation of presumption of marriage.
Customary Law - Concubinage - Division of property upon termination of concubinage - E Rule 93 and 94 of the Customary Law (Declaration) Order G.N. No. 279 of 1963.

-Headnote

The appellant was appealing against the decision of the District Court of Magu which reversed the Nyaluhande Primary Court decision which awarded the appellant Shs. F 5,900/= being her share of property acquired during her concubinage for 16 years with the Respondent. The District court purported to reverse the decision of the Primary Court on account that there could be no division of property between the parties if their presumed marriage had not been dissolved. The parties had not alleged presumption of marriage, hence this appeal. G

Held: (i) Where there is no allegation of presumption of marriage, section 160 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 cannot be invoked merely on account of concubinage association;

(ii) rule 93 of the Customary Law (Declaration) Order, G.N. No. 279/1963 is applicable in the division of property acquired during concubinage association. H

Case Information

Order accordingly. I

No case referred to.

1983 TLR p287

MUSHI J

[zJDz]Judgment

Mushi, J.: The appellant, Hoka Mbofu, filed a suit in the Primary Court claiming half of A property earned or acquired during the period of 16 years in which she lived with the respondent. The Primary Court awarded the appellant Shs. 5,900/= as her share. The respondent, Pastory Mwijage, appealed to the District Court. The learned Appeal Magistrate scrutinized the evidence and found that since the parties lived together in B concubinage for 16 years, the provision of section 160 of Marriage Act No. 1971 applied and that on the application of that provision the parties were presumed husband and wife. The learned magistrate went to conclude that as there had been no divorce, the Primary Court could not divide the property acquired during that period. The court C quashed the proceedings and declared that the parties were husband and wife and it was upon an aggrieved party to file a suit for separation or divorce. The appellant was dissatisfied with that decision and she has appealed to this court.

Before this court, the appellant stated that she did not agree with the court's decision that D she was a wife of the respondent since she was never married to him and thus she cannot file any divorce. The respondent agreed that they did not perform any ceremony of marriage although they lived together for 16 years or so.

It is an accepted fact that the parties in this case were not married by any known law of E Tanzania. There was no customary, Civil or religious marriage. The parties only lived in concubinage. If the association is to be given the status of constituting marriage this can only be done by invoking section 160 (1) of the Law of Marriage Act No. 5 of the 1971 which reads: F

"Where it is proved that a man and a woman have lived together for two years or upwards, in such circumstances as to have acquired the reputation of being husband and wife, there shall be a rebuttable resumption that they were fully married". G

Since there were allegations that the parties had lived together for about 16 years, the learned appeal magistrate felt that the case was fully covered by section 160(1) of the Marriage Act quoted above. But was it necessary to invoke the Marriage Act provisions? I am of the settled view that it was not necessary to apply the above H provision. Right from the institution of the claim, the appellant has not asserted that she was ever married by the respondent. She has maintained that her association with the respondent was purely that of concubinage. But she says that during the concubinage association, she and the respondent acquired some property/money, and that since I respondent has decided to terminate that association, the appellant has no objection except that she should get what they acquired A together. In her evidence in the original court and her statement before this court, she has not based her claim on her association having acquired the status of a wife. Similarly the respondent's evidence in the Primary Court did not assert that the appellant was his wife. The respondent merely stated how it came about that the appellant came B to stay with him. In fact from careful scrutiny of the respondent's statement, it would appear that although the parties were living under one roof, they were each leading an independent life. For example the appellant lived with the children of her brother against the respondent's wish and also according to the respondent the appellant had a different C plot which she cultivated separately with the help of the children of her brother. In this regard, even if section 160(1) of the Act was to be invoked, it would have been necessary to look more into the lives of the parties rather than the mere fact that they lived under one roof. The respondent has not claimed that the appellant is his wife, in D which case the appellant's claim could not be entertained unless there was divorce or separation. The whole claim has been made outside the Marriage Act and without requiring its assistance in order to be legally blessed. The claim is maintainable under customary law because there is no mention of section 160(1) of the Marriage Act in the E whole trial. Rule 93 and 94 of Local Customary Law (Declaration) order of Government Notice Number 279 of 1963 are applicable in this case. Rule 93 authorises the property acquired during concubinage association to be divided between the parties if they decide to part company and section 94 sets out the manner in which the property shall be divided. F

For the above reasons, this appeal is allowed. The district court decision is set aside and the Primary Court decision is restored. As regards the amount awarded, there seems to be sufficient evidence to support the claim and the amount is reasonable and the same remains undisturbed. G

Each party to bear her/his costs in this court.

This judgment to be certified to the original court for reading to the parties.

H Order accordingly.

[zRPz]GAI IPENZULE v SUMI MAGOYE 1983 TLR 289 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mwalusanya J

May 25, 1985
CIVIL APPEAL 101 OF 1982 B
Flynote
Family Law - Claim of damages for adultery - S. 74(1) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971.
Family Law - Compensation for adultery - Quantum of damages - Custom of the community to which the parties belong - S 74(2) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971. C Evidence - Proof of adultery - Whether direct evidence is only admissible evidence.
-Headnote
The appellant was successfully sued at Nyambiti Primary Court by the respondent in a suit for a claim of damages for adultery. The respondent was awarded ten head of cattle D as damages. The appellant's appeal to the District Court of Kwimba was unsuccessful, hence this appeal.
Held: (i) It is not the law that direct evidence of persons caught in flagrante delicto is the only admissible evidence to prove adultery. Very rarely adultery is proved by direct E evidence; the common practice is that adultery is proved by circumstantial evidence;

(ii) section 74(2) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 provides that in assessing damages for adultery, the court shall have regard to any relevant custom of the community to which the parties belong. F
Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
No case referred to. G
[zJDz]Judgment
Mwalusanya, J.: The appellant Gai d/o Ipensule was successfully sued at Nyambiti Primary Court by the respondent Sumi d/o Magoye in a suit for a claim of damages for adultery. The respondent was awarded ten head of cattle as damages. The appellant's appeal to the District Court of Kwimba did not bear fruit and hence this current appeal. H
The appellant in her memo of appeal has vigorously protested against the decision of the trial court arguing that it was against the weight of evidence. She said that there was no direct evidence of adultery adduced except hearsay evidence. She further boldly asserts I that even the hearsay evidence from the respondent's husband was admitted to prove the plaintiff's case. In short appellant contends that the decision of the trial court was based A on nebulous inferences if not speculation.
1983 TLR p290
MUSHI J
Admittedly the way the suit was proved at the trial was novel and unusual but by no means despicable. What happened was that the respondent's husband Mafayo s/o Shimiji was caught in adultery with the appellant. That was when the adulterers were at B Salawi village for a visit. The appellant's husband Kaswahili s/o Lutoja sent them to the ten cell leader of Salawi village for redress. The respondent's husband admitted adultery and was condemned to pay ten heads of cattle which he agreed to pay. C

When the respondent's husband returned home at Chanela village, his wife got wind of the embarrassing news. She also went to claim damages at the ten cell leader from the appellant. Appellant admitted adultery but prayed for the appearance of respondent's husband at the sitting. The matter was referred to court. At the trial appellant admitted D adultery but again questioned whether it was proper to be condemned in the absence of the respondent's husband in court. The trial court held that it was quite proper to proceed even if respondent's husband was absent.

Like the first appellate court I am unable to accede to the argument of the appellant E about absence of direct evidence. Whether adultery has been proved is purely a question of fact. It is not the law as suggested by the appellant that direct evidence of persons caught in flagrante delicto is the only admissible evidence to prove adultery. Very rarely is adultery proved by direct evidence; the common practice is that adultery is F proved by circumstantial evidence. However in this particular case, appellant herself admitted adultery. Now what more else would you need? In law nothing more was required to prove the case for the plaintiff. There was no need to have the respondent's husband called when the appellant admitted the act of adultery. There can be no doubt therefore that this appeal is devoid of merit. G

As regards quantum of damages I was initially of the view that ten head of cattle was too much and rather on the high side. I thought it offended s. 74(1) of the Law of Marriage Act No. 5 of 1971 which prohibits the award of punitive or exemplary damages. But s. H 74(2) of the same law states that in assessing damages for adultery, the court shall have regard to any relevant custom of the community to which the parties belong. In this case both parties are Sukuma by tribe. The trial court which sat with Sukuma assessors appears to be of the view that ten heads of cattle is the appropriate quantum of damages I for adultery in this part of the country. Even respondent's husband was condemned to pay the same amount by the ten cell leader of Salawi village. So the figure arrived at appears to be appropriate and in harmony with Sukuma customary law. A

Be that as it may, I dismiss this appeal with costs.

B Appeal dismissed.

C

[zRPz]CELESTINA PAULO v MOHAMED HUSSEIN 1983 TLR 291 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Bukoba
Judge Mushi J

September 5, 1985
CIVIL APPEAL 223 OF 1982
Flynote

Probate and Administration - Religion - Whether the difference of religion can affect an ascertained will in appointing an administrator of an estate.

Probate and Administration - Clan linkage - Whether the difference in clan linkage can prevent a person from administering the property of a deceased person of another clan.

-Headnote

The appellant appealed against the decision of the District Court of Bukoba which reversed the decision of the Primary Court which appointed the appellant the administrator of the estate of Sawia d/o Balegu on the basis of oral evidence and a written will. The District Court had reversed the Primary Court's decision purportedly because the appellant was of different religion and clan from that of the deceased.

Held: (i) Where there is an ascertained will the same must be respected in letter and spirit notwithstanding the difference of religion between the deceased and the appointed administrator;

(ii) where personal property is bequeathed the person bequeathing the property has an absolute right to choose an administrator of her own choice and the clan has no right to interfere with the same.

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mushi, J.: This is an appeal by Bi Selestina Paulo. The appellant filed an application in the Primary Court seeking to be appointed an administrator of the estate of the late Sawia d/o Balegu.

1983 TLR p292

MUSHI J

There is no dispute as to the beneficiary of the estate. The beneficiary is Zainabu d/o A Mohamed Hussein. In the Primary Court evidence was adduced which included oral testimony from the close friends of the deceased as well as documentary evidence in the form of a letter which the deceased had written to the appellant. The respondent, B Mohamed Hussein, did not object to anything other than claiming that he should be the administrator of the estate because he was the father of the beneficiary, Zainabu, who was at that time eight years old. The respondent did not claim that he was appointed by the deceased to be the administrator of the estate of the deceased but he thought he was entitled. The Primary Court considered the evidence and found it conclusively C established that the deceased herself appointed the appellant the administrator of the estate and accordingly confirmed the appointment of the appellant as the administrator of the estate of Sawia d/o Balegu. The respondent was ordered to account for the money D he had received and hand the same to the appellant. The respondent appealed to the District Court which reversed the Primary Court decision and appointed the respondent the administrator of the estate of the deceased Sawia d/o Balegu against the will of the deceased. The appellant was dissatisfied by the District Court decision and hence this appeal. E

The appellate magistrate was grossly wrong in his decision. For reasons known to himself he took into account completely strange matters to defeat the will of the deceased - Sawia d/o Balegu. It is a known fact that an ascertained will of the deceased must be respected in both letter and spirit. The learned district magistrate did not say that the deceased had not made the will appointing the appellant an administrator of the F estate, but tried to find uncalled-for grounds which according to him would make it impossible for the appellant to be an administrator of the estate. First he invoked religion. He said that the deceased could not appoint the appellant as administrator of her estate because the appellant was of different religion and that her estate must be G administered according to Islamic law. Secondly the appeal magistrate brought in clan. He said that the appellant was of a different clan and thus she could not be an administrator of the property of the deceased. Finally the appeal magistrate said that the beneficiary was the daughter of the respondent. According to the appellate magistrate, H because of the above reasons, the respondent was the proper person to be the administrator of the deceased estate. This was a regrettable decision.

I said earlier that it is an established principle that the will of the deceased must be respected in letter and spirit. There was no dispute that the deceased in her free will and I fully aware of what she was doing she decided to appoint the appellant the administrator of her estate and she did so fully knowing that she was moslem and the appellant was of another religion. A The property which she bequeathed was her personal property and had nothing to do with her clan. She had the right to choose her beneficiary and she also had absolute right to choose the administrator of her own choice. She was aware also that the beneficiary was the daughter of the respondent but she did not wish the respondent to be the B administrator for reasons known to her. Why should the appellate magistrate purport to tell the deceased what she should have done against her clearly expressed wish? The Primary Court decision was very sound and reasonable. This appeal must be allowed. The District Court decision is set aside. The Primary Court decision is restored. The appellant is to get costs in this court and costs below. C

Appeal allowed.

D

[zRPz]MARIAM TUMBO v HAROLD TUMBO 1983 TLR 293 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

January 19, 1983 E
MATRIMONIAL CAUSE 1 OF 1982
Flynote

Family Law - Petition for Divorce - Requirement of reference to Marriage Conciliatory Board prior to petition - S. 101 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971. F
Family Law - Divorce - Evidence of breakdown of marriage - Cruelty - Constructive desertion - Adultery - S. 107 of the law of Marriage Act, 1971.
Family Law - Custody of children - Welfare of infant children - Independent opinions of children- Age of children to be taken into account. G Family Law - Division of matrimonial assets - Meaning of work towards the acquisition of assets- Whether housekeeping is contribution to acquisition of matrimonial assets. H
-Headnote
The parties to this proceeding were married under Christian rites in 1958 and have seven issues of the marriage. The petitioner sought dissolution of marriage alleging adultery, cruelty and desertion. She also prayed for custody of the youngest five children and for the division of assets. The respondent has cross-petitioned for divorce, alleging cruelty I and desertion. He also prayed for custody of the youngest three children.
1983 TLR p294
LUGAKINGIRA J
Held: (i) Under paragraph (f) of the proviso to s. 101 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 A the court may dispense with reference to the Marriage Conciliatory Board where it is satisfied that there are extraordinary circumstances which make reference impracticable;

(ii) it is one thing to tolerate a spouse's misconduct, it is another to put up with B the consequences thereof; in contemplation of this the legislature enacted s. 85 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 that evidence of misconduct by a husband or a wife shall not be inadmissible in any matrimonial proceeding on the ground that the misconduct was condoned by the aggrieved spouse; C

(iii) when reprehensible conduct or departure from the normal standards of conjugal kindness causes injury to health or an apprehension of it, it is cruelty if a reasonable person, after taking due account of the temperament and all the other particular circumstances, would consider that the conduct complained of is such that this spouse should not be called on to tolerate it; D

(iv) it is settled that where one spouse behaves in such a manner that the other is virtually compelled to leave, the former may in law be the deserter; it is imperative for there to be conduct which amounts to dismissal from the consortium; E

(v) in matters of custody the welfare of the infant is of paramount consideration, but where the infant is of an age to express an independent opinion, the court is obliged to have regard to his or her wishes;

(vi) in accordance with s. 114(2)(b) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971, the F court is required in exercising its power of division of assets to have regard to the extent of contributions made by each party in money, property or work towards the acquiring of the assets; housekeeping is a conjugal obligation and cannot be equated to work which refers to the physical participation in the production of the asset itself.
Case Information

Order accordingly. G

Cases referred to:

1. Khan v Khan [1973] LRT n. 57.
2. Russell v Russell [1897] A.C. 395 (H.L.).
3. Gollins v Gollins [1963] 2 All E.R. 966. H
4. Buchler v Buchler [1947] 1 All E.R. 319.
5. Marwa v Akeyo [1977] L.R.T. n. 39.

D.C. Mbezi for the respondent. I

Editorial Note: See the Court of Appeal decision in Bi Hawa Mohamed

1983 TLR p295

LUGAKINGIRA J

v Ally Sefu (in this volume), that since the welfare of the family is an essential component A of the economic activities of a family man or woman it is proper to consider contribution by a spouse to the welfare of the family as contribution to the acquisition of matrimonial for family assets.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The parties to this proceeding went through a Christian ceremony of B marriage at Itigi in November, 1958 and cohabited at various places, including Musoma and Singida. There are seven issues to the marriage, the last having been born in 1970. On account of the events set out below the marriage broke down in 1981 and the wife returned to her parents. She then petitioned for dissolution of the marriage alleging C adultery, cruelty and desertion. She also prayed for custody of the youngest five children and for the division of assets. In reply to the petition, the husband denied the charges levelled against him. He then cross-petitioned for divorce, similarly alleging cruelty and desertion. He prayed for custody of the youngest three children. In this D judgment I will refer to the husband as respondent. I was satisfied that there was no collusion in bringing the proceeding.

It can be said with a degree of certainty that the trials that beset this union surfaced in 1977, but the roots can be traced back to 1970. In that year, after the birth of the last child, the petitioner was taken victim of unpredictable menstrual visitations. This E development cast a shadow in the marital relationship for it meant that the petitioner could no longer render as before her conjugal obligations. The medical evidence tendered before me indicates that the petitioner's state assumed malignant proportions in the second half of 1977. She was then referred to Bugando Hospital at Mwanza. The F parties were at that time stationed at Musoma, the petitioner being a teacher and the respondent a security officer. Unfortunately, I was not appraised as to the degree of the petitioner's recovery, but I sincerely hope that she is now relieved of what must have been an irritating experience. G

However, while the experience lasted, and early in 1977, the respondent decided it was time he had another "wife". I will refer to this one as the second woman. The respondent announced his intentions to the petitioner. The latter protested strongly but her protests met with increased determination. The respondent vowed that he would go H ahead with his intentions even if it meant his death. He told her that she could go away if she was not disposed to the idea. In any case, he taunted her, he could not take advice from a "mvaa mlembe", i.e. one perpetually with a tampon pad. The second woman was also a teacher and stationed at Bunda. The respondent went ahead and paid bride-price to her parents in March, 1977. He then "married" her but she remained I at Bunda.

1983 TLR p296

LUGAKINGIRA J

Later that year they had a child. In September, 1978, the respondent was transferred to A Singida. He moved to his new station with the petitioner and the second woman, both of whom he installed in the same house. The second woman delivered another child in November, 1978. She was pregnant at the time of the petitioner's departure in July, 1981. B

Life took a more dramatic turn when the parties moved to Singida. The respondent became increasingly attached to the second woman and increasingly alienated from the petitioner and her children. Hence, whenever it was the second woman's turn to host him, he would overshoot his stay. When it was the petitioner's turn, he would still remain C in that woman's room until very late, then come and drop in the petitioner's bed and straight go to sleep. Early in the morning he would retire to the second woman's room, there to while away the remaining moments of dawn. The petitioner further claimed that the respondent took to beating her and her children on baseless and endless complaints D by the second woman. He would sometimes do so right in the presence of that woman. And whenever he did so, he would tell the petitioner that he was over with her and threaten to kill her if she would not leave. The petitioner told me that she complained to various persons and places, including the Area Commissioner, the Regional Police Commander, the respondent's father, the respondent's office, the E Primary Court and the District Court, but got no assistance. The tragedy of it all was that she got a beating whenever the respondent learned that she had complained against him. On one such occasion, he broke her nose. On 9 July, 1981, the petitioner proceeded to Tabora for an interview. In her absence, the respondent discovered that F their second child, a daughter, was pregnant. He also discovered that their fourth child, another daughter, was fraternising with a guard at the Regional Commissioner's residence. She was cooking food and taking it to this guard from provisions in the respondent's house. The respondent picked up the telephone and rang the petitioner at G Tabora to inform her of these discoveries. There was an argument for he believed, and so told the petitioner, that she already knew of these developments but had kept him in the dark. It was therefore with trepidation that the petitioner returned to Singida on 24 July.

It was common ground that there was no quarrel when she arrived. After dinner the H petitioner retired to bed. Not much later the respondent came into her room, looked into the wardrobe and left. He returned shortly, hung up a trousers in the wardrobe and left again. He returned yet again and on this occasion he asked the petitioner where his bullets were. The respondent possessed a pistol. The petitioner did not know where I they were and told him so. The respondent got out, entered his vehicle and drove off. The petitioner sensed danger. She told the Court that when she recalled the many times the respondent had threatened to kill her, his A fulmination at the tragedy and misconduct of their daughters, and for which he held her responsible, and now that he was looking for bullets, she believed that her life was in imminent danger. She fled and spent the night in the hedge. When the respondent returned he discovered that not the petitioner only, but their fourth, sixth and seventh B children had also vanished. He had already expelled the second child who had become pregnant. He reported the disappearances to the police that same night. Next morning the petitioner turned up at the house of the Regional Planning Officer. She requested him to call the Regional Commissioner, the Regional Development Director and the Regional C Police Commander in order that they might intercede with the respondent for her. The latter two were found, but efforts to get the respondent initially proved fruitless. In the interim they advised the petitioner to return to her parents at Itigi until the respondent had been found and talked to.

1983 TLR p297

LUGAKINGIRA J

She left for Itigi. I gathered from the respondent that he was subsequently found. When D told of the position he said all he wanted were his children. It is not clear where the children were found, but they were duly returned to the respondent on 26 July. The petitioner remains at Itigi todate. In August she was joined by the fourth and fifth children. The sixth and seventh joined her in November. Early last year the third child E followed suit. Meanwhile, the petitioner received no word of the promised intercession. She therefore twice wrote to the respondent to consent to her being posted elsewhere but got no reply. She remains unemployed todate. The respondent even refused to procure school transfer certificates for the fourth to seventh children. But somehow they F managed to continue with their education. The petitioner visited and wrote to various offices seeking assistance in her problems. She was invariably advised to take her "shauri" to court. She filed her petition on 19 August, 1982. She was unrepresented. The respondent was represented by Mr. D.c. Mbezi. G

As already stated, the respondent denied the petitioner's charges, except that of adultery where he pleaded condonation. In turn he alleged that the petitioner had turned the children into delinquents. The second child had become pregnant and the fourth later became so. The third had become a truant, a thief and a bhang smoker. He also H accused the petitioner of seeking assistance in witchcraft. He produced certain articles in that connection to which I shall later refer. The petitioner in turn denied these charges.

A number of issues were framed at the start of the trial centering on the matters already I stated or alluded to. Evidence was also led on the issue of reference to the Marriage Conciliatory Board. Since the respondent's side expressed doubts on that aspect, I propose to begin with that issue. A

On 26 July, 1982 the petition saw the chairman of the Itigi Church Conciliatory Board to whom she narrated her problems. On 1 August, the chairman called a meeting of the Board but a quorum was not reached. He convened another meeting on 5 August and B on this occasion there was a quorum. The Board heard the petitioner and after weighing a number of difficulties, in particular that of summoning the respondent, they advised her to take the matter to the Singida Board. On 6 August, the petitioner proceeded to Singida and saw the Board Chairman there. He listened to her but in turn C advised that the matter be dealt with at Itigi where the marriage was solemnised. She returned to Itigi and on 8 August the Itigi Board met again. It seems that a sort of apprehension attached to the respondent's office. The Board literally recoiled at the thought of summoning a security officer. In the words of the petitioner, "They tried to D discuss how to summon the respondent. They thought if the respondent were to appear, there would be no guarantee for my security. They therefore decided to dispense with the respondent and gave me a letter to the court". In deciding as they did it seems also that the Board was influenced by the apparent gravity of the matrimonial difficulty presented to them. They did not see the prospect of reconciliation. It further appears E that this apparent scare was not confined to the Board alone. The petitioner alleged that even the District Court of Manyoni declined to entertain her petition claiming that the respondent could not be sued in the region he worked! F

The question arises whether the steps taken by the petitioner amounted to reference to the Board. It could be discerned from Mr. Mbezi's cross-examination that he doubted whether these steps amounted to a reference. But that was all I mean: doubts only. I did not otherwise have the advantage of learning his reasons. There were no arguments G at the end of the trial. I have no doubt, however, that the question is an important one, and in so far as I am aware, it is perhaps the first time that it has presented itself. Nevertheless, I wish cautiously to refrain from offering or suggesting any answer here, seeing that it is not necessary to do so. I think that the facts stated, the various steps taken by the petitioner, the difficulties and frustrations she met, the performance and H admitted competence of the Board in fact Boards - bring the case within the ambit of para. (f) of the proviso to s. 101 of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 (hereinafter referred to as "the Marriage Act"). Under that paragraph the court may dispense with reference to the Board where it is satisfied that there are extraordinary circumstances which make I reference impracticable.

1983 TLR p299

LUGAKINGIRA J

The case of Khan v Khan 1973 LRT no. 57 is authority for the view that prior leave of A the court is not mandatory before the court can exercise its discretion under para. (f). In this case the Board was duly invited to deal with the matrimonial difficulty. Twice the Board met and twice it found itself without muscle, both as regards the presumed stature of the respondent and the complexity of the difficulty, to attempt any reconciliation. It B then remitted the difficulty to the court per Exh. P6. I do not believe that it is in a better position today. It would thus be a futile exercise to require the petitioner to return to the same Board. In that sense I regard reference as being impracticable. In the case cited above, Onyiuke, J. held that the term "impracticable" in para. (f) is not to be limited to C physical impracticability. He then went to say:

> The discretion conferred on the court by paragraph (f) of Section 101 should ... only be sparingly exercised and then only in circumstances where it is clear beyond any reasonable D doubt that a reference to the board is not a practical proposition. This may be due to the fact that the circumstances of the case are such that no expectation can be entertained that the Board will be able to achieve any useful results and that any reference to it will be so much waste of time and effort. It is impossible to predicate all the circumstances which will make a E reference to the Board impracticable. Were it not so, the legislature would have given an exhaustive list of exceptions.

With respect, I agree. I only desire to observe that the learned judge seems to have put F the standard too high by proposing that the court, before exercising its discretion, should be satisfied beyond any reasonable doubt that a reference to the Board is not a practical proposition. I see no justification, and certainly it cannot be found in s. 101, for the departure from a balance of probabilities. Now, as I have demonstrated, further G reference to the Board in this case would be futile, a waste of time and effort. It is in that sense impracticable. I therefore hold that the petition was competent. We can now proceed to consider the charges.

The petitioner alleged adultery. This centers on the respondent's acquisition of and H cohabitation with the second woman. There was indeed adultery, the parties' being a Christian marriage which is presumed to be monogamous. The respondent did not deny this fact: he only pleaded condonation. I have no hesitation in finding that there was condonation. The petitioner might have initially felt slighted, humiliated and offended when the respondent took on the second woman. But in the end she became reconciled I to it, and tolerated it, taking no step to register her protest. And for four years, from 1977 to 1981, she voluntarily submitted to the A respondent's embraces thereby registering her forgiveness. She cannot now be heard to complain. I can perhaps sense the cultural dilemma which might have beset the petitioner. In the African society, polygamy is neither a secret nor an outrage. Neither statute nor foreign propaganda has succeeded in engendering a change of attitude. B There are therefore countless "wives" who are in effect concubines. Nevertheless, no woman to a monogamous marriage, even in a polygamous society, should feel constrained to tolerate an adulterous association if it does not commend itself to her conscience. The petitioner is a woman with some education; she evidently knows her C rights. She had a home and she had the means to subsist on her own. That was the more reason for her not to assume a defeatist attitude. I think, therefore, that it was borne of her considered decision to tolerate her husband's adultery. That was condonation. Indeed I was shown pictures in which the petitioner had herself and her D children happily photographed with the second woman's children. She also permitted herself to live with the second woman under the same roof. The presumption, so strong to rebut, is that she had accepted the second woman as a member of the family. However, it is one thing to tolerate a spouse's misconduct, it is another to put up with the E consequences thereof. It must have been in contemplation of this that the legislature enacted in s. 85 of the Marriage Act that evidence of misconduct by a husband or a wife shall not be inadmissible in any matrimonial proceeding on the ground that the misconduct was condoned by the aggrieved spouse. I will therefore have occasion to refer again to the adultery at a later stage in the judgment. F

Both parties alleged cruelty. Cruelty is conduct having the effect of producing actual or apprehended injury to physical or mental health: Russell v Russell [1897] A.C. 395 (HL). The petitioner in the instant case alleged both physical and mental cruelty. The G respondent alleged the latter. At this juncture I will consider the petitioner's allegation. It was seriously impressed upon me that the respondent was in the habit of assaulting the petitioner and the petitioner's children, and even of threatening the life of the former. She reported her plight to a number of persons. Unfortunately, she did not call one to corroborate the claim. The respondent, quite naturally, denied the allegation. After H anxious consideration, I do not think he was serious. Having seen and heard the petitioner, I have no doubt that she was a witness of truth. I believe and find that from time to time the respondent beat up the petitioner, breaking her nose on one occasion, and that he even threatened her life. The respondent showed me a 1981 photograph of I the petitioner and claimed that she looked healthy. I do not know whether the photograph purports to reflect that view for I do not know whether the petitioner looked worse - and how? - A when unhealthy. In any case, to find cruelty, the court will not wait to see injuries on the petitioner's person nor will it wait to see the petitioner in hospital. In the words of Lord Pearce in Gollins v Gollins [1963] 2 All E.R. 966, at p. 992.

> It is impossible to give a comprehensive definition of cruelty, but when reprehensible conduct B or departure from the normal standards of conjugal kindness causes injury to health or an apprehension of it, it is, I think, cruelty if a reasonable person, after taking due account of the temperament and all the other particular circumstances, would consider that the conduct C complained of is such that this spouse should not be called on to tolerate

I adopt that view. It is also said in Bromley's Family Law(3rd Edn.), at p. 95, and I again agree, that D

> ... there is no need for the injury to be actually suffered: a reasonable apprehension that injury will result if the conduct is persisted in will suffice, for the court will not wait for the petitioner to be actually injured before affording him relief. E

I have already said that the petitioner impressed me as a witness of truth. In fact no reason was suggested for her to concoct a lie. I believe that she was a victim of cruelty. Further, no reason was suggested why, after 23 years of married life, this woman should F suddenly abandon the comfort of her bed and spend the night elsewhere - in the "hedge" as alleged by her. No reason was suggested why three children, one of them then aged seventeen, should flee the security of their father's house to spend two days at the place or places unknown. I believe the petitioner that on the night of 24 July, 1982 G the respondent enquired for bullets in a manner and circumstances that gave rise to reasonable apprehension of injury.

I would go further on this issue. Since August, 1981, the petitioner, a teacher by profession, has remained unemployed. I was made to understand that a married woman H cannot be posted at a place other than her husband's station. There is in fact a letter (Exh. P2) from the Regional Development Director telling the petitioner that "Uhamisho wa aina yoyote unaohusu mke wa mtu ni budi kibali cha mumewe mhusika kipatikane kwanza". The petitioner stated, and I believe her, that twice she wrote to the respondent to consent to her transfer but there was no reply. As a result, the petitioner was reduced I to a "Yallah maskini", as she put it. As pointed out before, the respondent was happy at the petitioner's departure and had A made no effort to induce her back. This attitude, then, can hardly be described as apt or sympathetic. To reduce a spouse to a virtual beggar is certainly an act of cruelty.

1983 TLR p302
LUGAKINGIRA J
Finally, the petitioner alleged desertion. Her case was that her departure was B necessitated by the respondent's misconduct. She was therefore charging him with what is called constructive desertion. The respondent, on the other hand, accused the petitioner of being the deserter. It is settled that where one spouse behaves in such a manner that the other is virtually compelled to leave, the former may in law be the C deserter. It is imperative for there to be conduct which amounts to dismissal from the consortium. It was therefore said by Lord Greene, M.R. In Buchler v Buchler [1947] 1 All E.R. 319, at p. 320, that:

Incompatibility of temperament and unhappiness in the matrimonial relationship which is not D caused by cruelty are not themselves grounds for divorce, nor by themselves do they entitle the spouse affected to leave the matrimonial home and then to claim that the other spouse, even if he or she is alone to blame for the ill-success of the marriage, has been guilty of the grave matrimonial offence of desertion. E

Again at p. 325:

... constructive desertion requires both factum and animus, and an indication by the husband F to the wife that she may leave him if she likes (animus) is not enough unless the conduct is such as to amount to an expulsion (factum) ... Mere wish to expel, even if it exists, without acts equivalent to expulsion is, in my opinion, insufficient to constitute constructive desertion. G

In the above case the House of Lords denied the wife a decree of divorce on the ground of constructive desertion although the husband's conduct had no doubt caused the wife intense unhappiness and was such that no decent man would have been guilty of it. The H husband had cultivated "a very close and remarkable association" with a man in his service to the extent of losing interest in the wife's company and conversation. It was held that that conduct did not justify the wife in treating it as dismissal from the consortium and in leaving the matrimonial home. The wife was held the deserter and the husband was granted the decree. I
I think that our case stands on different ground. The petitioner's
1983 TLR p303
LUGAKINGIRA J
departure from the matrimonial home was not prompted merely by incompatibility of A temperament and unhappiness in the marital relationship. I have already found, and I need not repeat the facts, that she was the victim of persistent physical and mental cruelty. The conduct of the respondent, in my view, amounted to dismissal of the petitioner from the consortium. On the other hand, his persistent invitation to the B petitioner to leave, his apparent pleasure at her departure, and his failure to induce her to return, are evidence of an intention to bring cohabitation to an end. There was therefore the factum as well as the animus. I am satisfied that the respondent was in constructive desertion and I reject his counter-charge. I am aware, though, that under C our law desertion is not a ground for divorce unless it has persisted for at least three years prior to the presentation of the petition. In this case only one year had elapsed. Nevertheless, I believe that it was not irrelevant to make finding on this issue. Since the enactment of the Marriage Act our law has radically departed from the English Law which insists on proof of a matrimonial offence before divorce can be granted. English D decisions have therefore to be read with analytical care. In this country, proof of what is called a matrimonial offence (adultery, cruelty, desertion, etc.) would not by itself entitle a spouse to a decree of divorce, a fortiori failure to prove such offence would not by itself disentitle a spouse to the decree. What is relevant is whether the marriage has E broken down and in considering this aspect the court is enjoined to have regard, not merely to specific offences, if any but to all relevant evidence regarding the conduct and circumstances of the parties. While, therefore, desertion which has not persisted for three years may not be a ground for divorce, that only operates to exclude it as an F actionable ground per se; it does not operate as a bar to considering the circumstances of the parties as a result of it. I will therefore be entitled to reflect on these circumstances, if it shall be necessary to do so.

There are then the issues presented in the cross-petition. They were two: desertion and G cruelty. I have just disposed of desertion in favour of the petitioner. As regards cruelty, the respondent's charges were two-fold: that the petitioner spoiled the children and rendered them unamendable to his authority and that the petitioner was in the habit of consulting witchdoctors. He alleged that these phenomena occasioned him great physical and mental strain as well as a reasonable apprehension of injury. I can dispose H of the first allegation briefly. It revolves on the pregnancies of the second and fourth children; it also revolves on the third child's criminal propensities. I agree that that was a sad development and I am naturally sympathetic. However, the duty to bring up children in a decent manner is the duty of both parents. It must be in a rare and special I circumstances that this obligation may fall on the shoulder of one parent. No evidence of such rare and special circumstances was brought to my A attention. There was on the other hand, no evidence of particular dereliction on the petitioner's part which could be said to have contributed to the children's delinquency. I was told that the petitioner used to withhold from the respondent's knowledge acts of B hooliganism by the children. I was also told that the respondent's attempts to discipline them would meet with frustration as the petitioner would stand up in defence of the children. I think, with respect, that these complaints are in fact evidence that the respondent knew of his children's ways. They also testify to the motherly instinct which is natural to women the world over. It is perhaps fitting to add that this instinct is an C essential one to temper the rough edges of men. And in litigation, as in science, these revelations cannot be the basis of a judgment. The development of a person's character is by no means a simple phenomenon. Many factors, both within and without our perception, go to mould a particular personality. Psychologists tell us that accumulated D home experiences, inherited potential and environmental experience, all combine to make a person what he is. It is therefore unsafe and unscientific, on the evidence such as I have, to attempt any judgment. I decline to find that the petitioner bears responsibility for the children's delinquency. It remains to consider the issue of witchcraft. E

It was testified by the respondent that ever since they were at Musoma the petitioner used to consult witches. She continued to do so even at Singida, his protests notwithstanding. He then said that when the petitioner departed in July, 1981 he went into her room and found objects tied in the petitioner's handkerchief which he believed to F be instruments of witchcraft. He tendered these as Exh. D.11. It is an astonishing collection. I will endeavour to describe these objects. They consist of: (a) five cowry shells, some wrapped in medical plaster and one in pieces of paper that bear messages in the Arabic script; (b) two powdery preparations, one brown and the other grey, from G unknown matter; (c) a piece of integument which by its scaly nature could be that of a snake or similar creature; and (d), more repugnant than all, is a thing, dried up and dark, which defies all description and to which is tied a root or twig. I have no doubt that these are instruments of witchcraft - what else can they be? The petitioner denied seeking assistance in witchcraft, and denied any knowledge of Exh. D11. She suggested H that these articles were acquired by the respondent and his second woman in order to slander her.

I have given long and anxious consideration to the petitioner's denial as well as her suggestion but, on a balance of probabilities, I am inclined to accept the respondent's I charge. And these are my reasons: First, I was not impressed with the petitioner's demeanour when the ownership of Exh. D11 was put to her. She suddenly changed, and looked troubled, her voice A sinking low. Secondly, she conceded that the respondent had protested to her about witchcraft ever since 1978. Thirdly, on one occasion the respondent found their fifth child with an amulet around his waist. He believed it was the petitioner's work and told her so. I, too, cannot imagine a stranger being so "generous" to the child. I think the B respondent's belief was justified. Fourthly, there is nothing to suggest that the discovery of these things had any connection with this litigation. The respondent informed the court that on discovering the articles he went to report to his father and the petitioner's father, but did not find the latter. I discovered from Exh. P3, the petitioner's 13 page C memorandum to the President's Office, that this was on 13 August, 1981, eighteen days after her departure. The petition, as earlier stated, was filed on 19 August, 1982. Finally, I see no reason in the world for the respondent to expend energy, and perhaps money, to acquire these abominable things. I am unable to accept the suggestion of slander. I think the respondent had no cause to slander the petitioner after she had D departed and given him the happiness he longed for. He also could not risk slandering her when they have seven children, some of whom he apparently loves. I am for these reasons persuaded to the view, and find, that the instruments of witchcraft belonged to the petitioner. E The respondent said, and I quote, "Discovering these `medicines', I was greatly disturbed and thrown into a state of worry. I am still worried and apprehensive. Seeing these things, I cannot again take her for my wife. She might kill me. I can't risk again". Of course there was no evidence that the "medicines" were intended for the respondent. F They might have been the petitioner's own "medicines" for that matter. There was also what one might call acquiescence. The respondent, aware of the petitioner's addiction to witchcraft since their Musoma days, seems to have done no more than remonstrate. Prima facie, therefore, one might be inclined to doubt whether the respondent felt the G cruelty. I am not so inclined. I think the foregoing is only one side of the coin. It might well be that the petitioner's witchcraft activities were not intended for the respondent. Yet, in a society riddled with superstition, and ours lays no claim to exception, neither witches nor their clients would make comfortable bedfellows. In considering this, one H cannot deny that the petitioner's mind on the question of acquiescence, it would be dangerous to generalise. If a spouse continues to cohabit with the other although the latter has been guilty of cruelty, it is a question of fact whether to infer forgiveness. Each case would depend on its peculiar nature, not least the nature of the cruelty. I believe I that witchcraft, such a cause of strife and misery among a greater part of our population, is not something one can elect to ignore. One can only hope and pray that it has ceased. The sudden discovery A that it has not, in particular, the sudden discovery of grotesque objects like Exh. D11 herein, would in a superstitious mind give rise to an intensified and reasonable apprehension of injury. On this score I accept the respondent's charge of cruelty. B

We are now in a position to conclude this part of the proceeding. On the petitioner's side I have found established cruelty, adultery and desertion, the latter two not being actionable per se. On the respondent's side, I have found cruelty established. Regarding the implications of the respondent's cruelty, I would respectfully adopt the words of Katiti, Ag. J. (as he then was) in Marwa v Akeyo [1977] LRT n. 39 where he said: C

> I would without demur say that in the face of these circumstances (i.e. a lot of beatings, assaults and chases from the matrimonial home) accompanied by (the wife's) loud fears of death ... it is difficulty to avoid a conclusion that (the marriage has irreparably foundered. D

On the other hand, the adultery was condoned, it is true, but it remains inescapable that the marriage in the instant case foundered mainly due to the presence of the second E woman. She remains with the respondent todate. She was the principal, though not the initial, cause of the respondent's alienation from the petitioner and she was the principal cause of his truculent disposition towards the petitioner. As Lord Greene, M.R. again said in Buchler v Buchler (above), at p. 323, "For a woman to feel that her husband has lost interest in her company and conversation is a misfortune which calls for sympathy F and pity". I have more than sympathy and pity for the petitioner. More seriously, I think, the continued presence of the second woman renders resumption of cohabitation an impractical proposition. The same goes for the desertion. That too is on the facts of this case not actionable. But the conduct and circumstances of the parties subsequent G thereto are relevant factors. When I saw the parties I was left in no doubt about their determination to remain estranged. The fears of, mistrust and even loathing for each other have progressively grown intense. In all consideration, I find that this marriage has suffered a mortal blow. It is evident, however, that the petitioner's case is the weightier H of the two. I will therefore allow the petition, after rejecting the cross-petition, and grant a decree of divorce to the wife. The marriage is accordingly dissolved.

The petitioner also prayed for custody of the youngest five children; the respondent prayed for custody of the last three. Custody may only be ordered in respect of a child I who has not attained the age of 18 years. In this case, the third child was born in 1962 and the fourth in 1964.

1983 TLR p307

LUGAKINGIRA J

These have already attained 18 years and do not come in for consideration. The fifth, A sixth and seventh were born in 1967, 1968 and 1970 respectively. They are therefore still "infants" within the meaning of the law. However, they are not the sort of infants whose views one can safely ignore. The fifth child completed Standard VII last year, the sixth is in Standard VII this year and the seventh in Standard VI. In matters of custody B the welfare of the infant is of paramount consideration, but where the infant is of an age to express an independent opinion, the court is obliged to have regard to his or her wishes. The last three children have already attained an age and a level of education at which they can express independent opinions. There is another matter which is equally relevant. It is the circumstances in which the three children joined the petitioner and the C circumstances in which they continue to stay with her. The respondent alleged that the petitioner enticed them away. The petitioner denied this and claimed that they fled from respondent's terror. It was indeed admitted by the petitioner that she used to meet the children after her departure. The possibility of her putting in a word cannot be entirely D ruled out. It is significant, however, that late last year the fifth child went to Singida to enquire for his examination results and, after paying a courtesy call on the respondent, he returned to the petitioner at Itigi. He remains with the petitioner. This incident suggests strongly that the children are not being unduly influenced to be where they are. There is E an element of choice. For these reasons I consider their views very relevant. Unfortunately, I was not privileged to see and hear these children. I therefore do not know what their wishes are. It would therefore be improper on my part to order custody one way or the other and I desist from doing so. F

Finally, there was the issue of matrimonial assets. The petitioner claimed that they acquired with the respondent two radio cassettes, one radiogram, one refrigerator, built a house at Chamwino and cultivated a maize shamba. Although she did not say so, I believe that she desired the Court to divide up these or their value proportionately. Turning to her contribution the petitioner claimed that from 1961 to July, 1978 she used G to remit the whole of her salary to the respondent. She also claimed to have put some work in the house and the shamba.

According to the respondent, however, there is only one radio cassette and a music system. The radio gram and the fridge were damaged long ago. For nearly all these he produced documents evidencing their acquisition - H some on hire purchase agreements. For the Chamwino house he obtained a loan from the Tanzania Housing Bank. I was shown the agreement and the statement of account therefor. The loan is being repaid by deductions from his salary. Regarding the maize shamba the respondent stated, and the petitioner agreed, that a tractor and labourers I were hired at all stages for which he paid the expenses. He denied participation by the petitioner and said she only A visited the shamba to break maize cobs for her consumption. I will also observe that no evidence was adduced as to the number of times the shamba was cultivated, the quantity of maize realised or the amount of money it fetched. The petitioner merely said that the respondent knew. The respondent also denied receiving the petitioner's salary at B any time. From 1962 to 1963 he was at the Dar es Salaam Technical College taking course. The petitioner conceded that she remitted to him no salary then. Between 1964 and 1978 the parties found themselves at Dar es Salaam, Mbeya, Tukuyu, Chunya, C Mwanza, Musoma and Singida. The petitioner admitted that in the course of those years and transfers she opened her own bank accounts not less than four times. She claimed that she was banking moneys realised from handcrafts but that does not commend itself to my acceptance. On a balance of probabilities, I find the allegation of work and salary D remittance not established. In the end I find no evidence of joint acquisition of the assets aforementioned.

There is a school of thought, and I think a judgment of this court, which advances the idea that in considering the issue of joint acquisition or ownership of property, regard should be had to the fact that the wife is the housekeeper and that this releases the E husband to engage in production. The proposition might be attractive but I cannot and do not believe that that is the law. In accordance with s. 114(2)(b) of the Marriage Act, the Court is required in exercising its power of division of assets to have regard "to the extent of the contributions made by each party in money, property or work towards the F acquiring of the assets", I would require considerable persuasion to come to the view that "work" refers to or includes the fulfilment of what are purely conjugal obligations. Housekeeping is a conjugal obligation. I think, with respect, that "work" refers to physical participation in the production of the asset itself. As stated already, I was not G satisfied that the petitioner contributed any work worth mentioning. It may be possible, however, for spouses to enter into an agreement for the joint ownership of property otherwise separately acquired. Section 58 of the Marriage Act is relevant in this regard. But in the absence of such an agreement the fact of the marriage would not operate to H change the ownership of any property to which either the husband or the wife may be entitled. The petitioner did not seek to rely on any agreement or even a custom of some sort. There otherwise appears to be no basis in the statute for the housekeeping idea.

The rule is a verbis legis non est recedendum, i.e. thou shall not vary the words of a I statute. I am unable to find, on the state of the law today, that the petitioner is entitled to sharein the assets named by her. I accordingly A reject her prayer.

1983 TLR p309
The petitioner expressly declined any costs and, in the circumstances of this case, I would not have granted any.
B Order accordingly.
1983 TLR p309
C
[zRPz]RAMADHANI SAID v MOHAMED KILU 1983 TLR 309 (CA)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

July 29, 1983
CIVIL APPEAL 38 OF 1982 D
Flynote
Family Law - Marriage - Meaning of - Marriage - Failure to give notice of intended marriage - Whether it affects validity of marriage - S. 41 of Law of Marriage Act, 1971.
Family Law - Marriage - Validity of subsequent marriage by a woman when an earlier one still subsists - Polyandry not permitted - Section. 15(3) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971. E
-Headnote
The Appellant who was the original defendant in the lower court appealed against the decision of the District Court which found him guilty of adultery with his own wife who had married the respondent while her marriage with the appellant had not been legally F dissolved. The basic question before the High Court was on the validity of the two unions.
Held: (i) Failure to give notice of the intended marriage, absence of "shangwe za harusi" G or any procedural irregularity in the ceremony are not matters which would affect the validity of such a marriage if in all other respects it complies with the express requirements of the Act;
(ii) no woman who is still married, while that marriage subsists can contract another marriage; (see s. 15(3) and s. 152(1) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971); it is an offence for a married woman to be a party to a ceremony of marriage whereby she H purports to marry another man.
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
No case referred to. I
1983 TLR p310
LUGAKINGIRA J
[zJDz]Judgment
Lugakingira, J.: In December 1978 the appellant contracted a customary marriage A with one Mwanaidi Mwiru and cohabited with her at her parent's home on payment of two head of cattle.

In May 1980 he left on a business safari to a place called Endasak. In his absence, his in-laws were overwhelmed by greed. On 9.7.80 they wedded B Mwanaidi to the respondent according to Islamic rites and received three head of cattle. But this latter union did not endure. In or about October 1980 Mwanaidi returned to her parents and there are indications that the respondent was refunded his cattle.

In November 1980 the appellant returned home and learnt of what had been happening C to Mwanaidi. He did not wish to litigate; instead, he proceeded to Mwanaidi's home, collected her and took her to his own home. In April 1982 the respondent sued the appellant in adultery claiming seven head of cattle. The Primary Court dismissed the suit. It held that there were two valid marriages but that the appellant's marriage being earlier, D took precedence. The respondent appealed to the District Court and this court has a different view. It observed that Mwanaidi's marriage to the appellant had not been accompanied with "shangwe za harusi" whereas her marriage to the respondent was announced for 21 days and became public knowledge. In the view of that court it is the E second marriage which was thus valid. It therefore found adultery established and allowed the respondent's appeal. The appellant appealed here. The basic question before this court is, hence, which of the two unions was a valid marriage.

It all goes back to the definition of a marriage. According to s. 9(1) of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 (hereinafter called the Act) a marriage means the voluntary union of F a man and a woman intended to last for their joint lives. In this country, where the parties belong to a community or to communities which follow customary law, a valid marriage may be contracted according to the rites of customary law. Failure to give notice of the intended marriage, absence of "shangwe za harusi" or any procedural G irregularity in the ceremony are not matters which would affect the validity of such a marriage if in all other respects it complies with the express requirements of the Act. In this case, the appellant and Mwanaidi voluntarily contracted a marriage in customary form. That was testified to not only by the appellant and corroborated by two other H witnesses, one of whom was the "mshenga", it was also confirmed by Mwanaidi who was called by the trial court. She then added that her subsequent union with the respondent was forced on her by her parents. On this evidence, I am of the view that the appellant's marriage was valid notwithstanding absence of notice or "shangwe za harusi".

On the other hand, our law does not permit polyandry but punishes it. Section 15(3) of I the Act provides that no woman who is married shall, while that marriage subsists, contract another marriage and under s. 152 (1) A thereof it is an offence for a married woman to be a party to a ceremony of marriage whereby she purports to marry another man. In other words, in reference to the instant case, as long as Mwanaidi was still validly married to the appellant she could not contract a valid marriage with the respondent. Neither the notice nor the "shangwe", not B even the certificate issued, could render valid that union with the respondent. Besides, Mwanaidi was forced into it. There was therefore no marriage with the respondent but he had risked being sued in adultery.

This is sufficient to show that the Primary Court had reached the correct decision although it did not direct itself correctly on the status of the two unions. I consider it C unnecessary to go into the other features of the case. The appeal is allowed with costs.

D Appeal allowed.

1983 TLR p311

E

[zRPz]CHIGOLI GOMAHINGO v WILSON MCHANE 1983 TLR 311 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

May 27, 1983
CIVIL APPEAL 47 OF 1982
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Bride price - Claim for refund - Pleading and procedure - F Rules of the Civil Procedure Code.
Family Law - Bride price - Refund of - Whether equitable where the claimant is a wrong doer.
-Headnote
The appellant was appealing against the decision of the District Court of Dodoma which G enhanced the refundable bride price to 10 cattle and 9 goats while the Primary Court of Mvumi had ordered a refund of 7 cattle and 5 goats. It was on evidence that the Respondent's own wrong-doing led to the breakdown of marriage which he petitioned to dissolve in a proceeding which also joined the father-in-law (present appellant) for H purposes of seeking refund of pride price.
Held: (i) A petition for divorce is a matrimonial proceeding but a claim for refund is not; in the case of the former the jurisdiction, pleading and procedure are governed by the I provisions of Part VI of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 while the latter is a normal suit in which the jurisdiction, pleading and procedure are governed by the relevant rules relating A to civil suits;

1983 TLR p312

LUGAKINGIRA J

(ii) where a party claiming refund of bride price is the sole cause of the break-down of marriage he cannot be entitled to recover even a portion of the bride price for it is inequitable that he should gain from his own wrong doing. B
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
No case referred to. C
[zJDz]Judgment
Lugakingira, J.: The respondent was married to the appellant's daughter in 1974. For reasons we shall see later he drove his wife away in or about 1978. Then in 1979 he petitioned for divorce in the Primary Court at Mvumi and included in the petition a D prayer for the refund of bride price amounting to 17 head of cattle and 12 goats. He joined his father-in-law (the appellant) in that action. The trial court granted the divorce and having found that the respondent was the guilty party, it ordered the refund of seven head of cattle and five goats only. That was on 27/2/80. E

On the same day, the record shows more rather interesting entries. The appellant is on record telling the court: Nitamlipa mdai ng'ombe wake 7 na mbuzi 5 hapo 1/3/80 ingawaje binti yangu hakuwa na kosa lolote lakini huo ni uamuzi wa mahakama naridhika". It seems they touched him because shortly before the court had vested F custody of the respondent's infant child in its mother and the respondent had been ordered to furnish its maintenance. He therefore replied "Sitaki kabisa hao ng'ombe 7 mbuzi 5 wake. Mdaiwa No. 2 ale tu mie nasamehe". But seven days later he changed his mind and appealed to the District Court contending that the refund ordered G had been too small! According to him, too, the wife was the guilty party. The learned resident magistrate who heard the appeal agreed with the respondent in every respect and increased the refundable bride price to 10 head of cattle and 9 goats. That prompted the present appeal.

I desire first to say a word on the question of procedure. As pointed out above the H respondent joined in one action a prayer for divorce and a claim for refund of bride price. He was also careful to join his father-in-law in the suit. Perhaps that was a clever way of going about the matter but it occurs to me that it was improper. A petition for divorce is a matrimonial proceeding but a claim for refund of bride price is not. In the I case of the former the jurisdiction, pleading and procedure are governed by the provisions of part VI of the Law of Marriage Act, 1971 while the latter is a normal suit in which the jurisdiction, pleading and procedure are A governed by the relevant rules relating to civil suits. I am aware that in Primary Courts even matrimonial proceedings may be instituted, tried and disposed of in the same manner as any civil proceeding instituted in such court and the provisions of the civil procedure rules made under Cap. 537 would apply. That I think is the import of B Section 93 of the Marriage Act, but the provision goes on to state such rules apply mutatis mutandis, that is with the necessary changes having regard to the special requirements of a matrimonial proceeding. It is thus necessary to refer a matrimonial difficulty to a Reconciliation Board before petitioning in court but it is not necessary to do so for the claim of bride price. The evidence necessary to establish a case for C divorce would also not necessarily establish a claim for bride price. There is therefore need to keep the two issues apart, and to dispose of divorce separately and first, as previously and constantly directed by this court. That said, however, I am satisfied that the irregularity occasioned no failure of justice in this case for there was no dispute as to D the amount of bride price paid and there was in fact evidence upon which the trial court could consider and determine the issue of refund.

Coming to the appeal, the appellant contends that the appellate magistrate erred in E enhancing the refund as he did so without considering that the marriage subsisted for six years and was blessed with two issues (one of which died). That however is not correct. The appellate magistrate did consider the two factors and even held the duration of the marriage to have been "very short". Nevertheless, he did misdirect himself in another and very important aspect. He stated that "it is not disputed that the F respondent's (in this appeal the appellant's) daughter was actually the cause of the breakdown of the marriage" and this, unfortunately, is the complete opposite of what is on record. According to the evidence, the respondent's case was that his wife was in the habit of insulting him; that she had eaten two eggs; and that a chicken had G disappeared and she had possibly eaten that too. Well, I should probably say that it is all amusing. But apart from that I think these allegations or any of them, even if proven, would not move a court of law to interfere in the sanctity of a marriage. Divorce is a serious matter; its consequences go beyond the subjective convenience of the immediate parties. It is therefore a hallowed rule that neither incompatibility of temperament nor H the trifles of human aberration would justify its being decreed. It is comforting that in this case the trial court did not in fact grant divorce on the respondent's allegations - which in any case he did not prove. It did so on account of his own intolerable guilt which was demonstrated in the following admissions: He admitted that the wife had ceased insulting I him prior to the filing of the petition; he admitted that he had boycotted her food, preferring that of his other wife; he admitted A that he had chased her from the shamba in an endeavour to prevent her form getting any food; he finally admitted that he had driven her from the matrimonial home as he did not wish to risk any trouble in future. He was only anxious to be refunded his animals. When then, the appellate magistrate stated that the wife was the guilty party, he could B only have had a different record in mind.

I agree with the trial court that the respondent was the guilty party and the sole cause of the breakdown of the marriage. I think that in those circumstances he was not entitled to C recover even a portion of the bride price. It is inequitable that a party should gain from his own wrong. The respondent must have appreciated this too as demonstrated by his earlier decision to forego the refund.

As we have also seen, the appellant agreed to make the refund in protest for he thought D he could not challenge the decision of the trial court. The justice of this case thus demands that the appellant be relieved of all liability.

The appeal is accordingly allowed with costs. The lower courts' orders for refund are set aside.

E Appeal allowed.

F

[zRPz]ABDALLA HAMID MOHAMED v JASNENA ZALUDOVA 1983 TLR 314 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Zanzibar

Judge Msumi J

September 8, 1982
MATRIMONIAL CAUSE 12 OF 1982
Flynote
Family Law - Domicile of parties to marriage - Private International Law - Section 15(c) of G Civil Procedure Decree, Cap. 8 - Parties subject to jurisdiction of the court of the country of their domicile.
Family Law - Conversion to Islam - Second marriage ceremony under Islamic Law - Whether parties subject to Islamic law in matrimonial proceedings. H
-Headnote
The petitioner is a citizen of Tanzania while the respondent is a citizen of Czechoslovakia. They had contracted a civil marriage in Prague, Czechoslovakia in 1974. The parties subsequently came to live in Zanzibar and while there they underwent I a second marriage ceremony which was preceded by the conversion of the Czech woman to Islam. The petitioner then married a second woman under Islamic Law. The respondent ran away to Czechoslovakia and intimated that she would never resume A cohabitation with the petitioner unless he divorced his second wife. The petitioner contends that the respondent has been guilty of desertion since 1979.
1983 TLR p315
MSUMI J
Held: (i) Parties in a matrimonial suit are subject to the jurisdiction of the court of the B country of their domicile; section 15(c) of the Civil Procedure Decree, Cap. 8 gives jurisdiction in civil matters to a court in whose territory the cause of action arose;

(ii) in common law a second marriage ceremony after the parties have validly married is of no legal importance; C

(iii) conversion to Islam followed by a second marriage ceremony in Islamic law has the effect of formalising the religious and marital status of the parties. The husband then is allowed to marry up to four wives provided that he can maintain them sufficiently and impartially;

(iv) by leaving her husband and refusing to return after being asked to do so, D according to Islamic law, the respondent is labelled as an insolent or disobedient wife, which disobedience is good ground for divorce.
Case Information
Order accordingly.
Case referred to: E

1. Dedhor v Janmohamed [1946] 8 ZLR 52
2. Thynne v Thynne [1955] 3 All ER 129
3. Skinner v Skinner [1897] 25 IA 34
4. Rattansey v Rattansey [1960] E.A. 81 F
5. Khambatta v Khambatta (1935) 59 Bomb. 278

6. Ayoob v Ayoob [1968] E.A. 72

[zJDz]Judgment

Msumi, J.: The petitioner is a citizen of Tanzania while the respondent is a citizen of G Czechoslovakia. On 19th September 1974 they contracted a civil marriage at Prague, Czechoslovakia. Few months after the marriage they came to Tanzania and lived in Dar es Salaam and shortly afterwards they shifted to Zanzibar. While in Dar es Salaam the respondent changed her Christian religion and became a moslem. Her conversion into H Islam was solemnised by a BAKWATA Sheikh one Abdallah Chaurembo; and consequent to it the respondent assumed a new name of Salama. Soon after the respondent's conversion into Islam, the parties went through a second marriage ceremony in accordance with Islamic Law.

While the parties were still living together here, the petitioner decided to get married to I another wife. On hearing this, respondent decided to leave for her home country where she is still living. In some of her letters to the A petitioner the respondent has informed him that she was not going to resume cohabitation wit him unless he divorces his second wife and then join her in Czechoslovakia. Hence in his petition, the petitioner contends that the respondent has been guilty of desertion since 1979 and thus requests the court to grant him a decree of divorce. B

1983 TLR p316

MSUMI J

On 24/4/82 this court made a short ruling upholding the petition. Detailed judgment was reserved to a later date. Thus in this judgment I will endeavour to illuminate the reasons for upholding this petition.

The suit proceeded ex parte after efforts to serve the respondent in Czechoslovakia has C proved to be fruitless. In any case, there is ample evidence showing that in fact the respondent was not interested in defending this suit. However, I am satisfied that this suit was not filed in collusion. Despite the fact that the respondent made no defence, still this court is bound to consider the petitioner's case in detail and decide whether it is supportable by law and the available evidence. D

It is evident that the respondent is a citizen of Czechoslovakia and that the parties first acquired their marital status through a civil marriage performed at Prague,Czechoslovakia. It is also undisputable that at the time when this suit was filed in this court the respondent had already left the country for about three years. In these E circumstances, the immediate legal question is whether this court has jurisdiction to entertain this suit. Put it in another form, the issue here is whether the respondent falls within the jurisdiction of this court.

It is an internationally-recognised principle of law that a woman acquires the domicile of F her husband on marriage. In this case, the petitioner is domiciled in Zanzibar, it therefore follows that the respondent is also domiciled here. Generally, parties in a matrimonial suit are subject to the jurisdiction of the court of the country of their domicile. On this basis, therefore, it was proper for this suit to be filed here. Furthermore, I am of the opinion that the fact that the matrimonial home of these parties G is still in Zanzibar adds more weight to the propriety of this court assuming jurisdiction over this suit.

Apart from the above mentioned general principles of Private International Law there is a local statute which deals with the question of jurisdiction in civil suits which have H foreign elements like the present one. Section 15(c) of the Civil Procedure Decree Cap. 8 give jurisdiction in civil matters to court in whose territory the cause of action arose. In the case of Dedhor v Janmohamed (1946) 8 ZLR 52 the parties were husband and wife married in Zanzibar under Islamic Law. Soon after their marriage they went to live I in Tanganyika which was the domicile of the husband. Later on the wife left the husband in Tanganyika and came to live in Zanzibar. She then filed a suit in this court for maintenance alleging that due to A her husband's acts of cruelty, she was forced to leave the matrimonial home. This court, while being presided over by my learned brother Chief Justice Robinson held that since the cause of action viz the alleged acts of cruelty by the husband, occurred in Tanganyika, according to S. 15(c) of Civil Procedure Decree this court lacked B jurisdiction to entertain the suit. In the present case the petitioner's prayer for divorce is based on the allegation that the respondent has deserted him. The alleged desertion consists of the respondent's act of leaving the matrimonial home in Zanzibar and her refusal to return. This means that the cause of action arose in Zanzibar. By virtue of C section 15(c) of Civil Procedure Decree as rightly interpreted in the case of Dedhor v Janmohamed this court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

The legal effect of a contract of marriage is to bestow upon the parties the status of husband and wife. It is noted that in this case after the parties had contracted a civil D marriage they later on purported to contract another marriage in accordance with Islamic ceremony and rites. From the petitioner's testimony it is evident that the aim of that second ceremony was to convert their civil marriage into Islamic one. The question then is whether this intention is legally sustainable.

In common law the general view is that a second marriage ceremony after the parties E have validly married is of no legal importance. The main argument advanced in favour of this view is that since the parties have already acquired the marital status, which is the purpose of a marriage contract, any subsequent ceremony purporting to do what has already been accomplished is legally redundant. In the case of Thynne v Thynne F [1955] 3 All ER 129 the parties after secretly but validly being married subsequently went through another marriage ceremony. After long cohabitation the wife petitioned for divorce and in her petition she referred to the second marriage ceremony. The court granted a decree of divorce on the understanding that it was dissolving the marriage G celebrated on the day shown in the petition. However, when the court discovered the true fact, it amended the divorce decree to indicate that the dissolved marriage was the one contracted before the second ceremony.

But in the present case the parties here did more than just go through another ceremony H of marriage. Before undergoing the second ceremony the wife willingly changed her religion and became a moslem. A religious ceremony was conducted by one Sheikh Abdallah Chaurembo and subsequently she assumed an Islamic maiden name of Salama. It appears that the ceremonies of conversion and the Islamic marriage rites were done simultaneously. These ceremonies were aimed at formalising the religious and marital I status of the parties.

1983 TLR p318

MSUMI J

So far it would appear that at common law the question whether a change of religion by A a spouse after marriage has any legal effect to their marriage is still an open issue. Thus in the case of Skinner v Skinner (1897) 25 IA 34 Lord Watson said:

Whether a change of religion made honestly after marriage with the assent of both spouses, B without any intent to commit a fraud upon the law, will have the effect of altering rights incidental to the marriage such as that of divorce, is a question of importance and may be nicety.

However, in East Africa some decisive pronouncements had been made by the courts C on this question. In the case of Rattansey v Rattansey [1960] E.A. 81, the petitioner a member of Khoja Ithna-asheri community married the respondent who was a Christian D by a civil ceremony under the Marriage Ordinance. The respondent soon became a convert to Islam and was admitted to the Ithn-asheri community. On the same day the petitioner and the respondent went through a ceremony of marriage according to Muslim law. Subsequently the petitioner having divorced the respondent by renouncement of E talak according to Islamic law applied to the court for a declaration that the divorce pronounced by talak be recognised by the law. One of the grounds of objection raised against the petition was that when the parties went through the purported marriage under Islamic law, they were already husband and wife; and so the second ceremony did not confer on them any additional marital status. Since their marital status was that acquired F through civil marriage, the same could not be dissolved by Islamic law procedure in a form of issuing a talak. This argument was dismissed and the court was of the view that the respondent's conversion to Islam had the effect of subjecting the parties rights and obligations incidental to their marital status to Islamic law. In his judgment Spry Ag. J as G he then was, quoted with approval the observations of Blackwell, J in the case of Khambatta v Khambatta [1935] - 59 Bomb. 278 at page 296 where his lordship said:

It has been argued for the appellant that the status imposed by operation of law upon persons H who marry in Christian form cannot be altered by the voluntary act of the parties. But, if a change of domicile, which is a voluntary act, may result in a change of status by reason of the application of a different system of law, it is difficult to see why a change of religion, the domicile remaining unchanged, may not also result in a change of status, if the law to be I applied is then different by reason of the difference of religion.

1983 TLR p319

MSUMI J

In his judgment Spry Ag. J went to the extent of saying that a marriage contracted A according to one system of law could be dissolved according to another system of law:

"There is no principle of law that a marriage must be dissolved under the same system as that under which it was contracted".

It is highly tempting to hold that the learned judge's view as expressed in Rattansey v B Rattansey was in conflict with what he said in the case of Ayoob v Ayoob [1968] E.A. 72. Fortunately the honourable judge himself foresaw this danger. In short he distinguished the two cases mainly on the ground that the decision in Rattansey case was influenced by the existence of local statutes in Tanganyika by then. Zanzibar is de facto C an Islamic state. Over 90 percent of the population profess Islamic religion. This means that the personal matter of the majority of Zanzibaris are governed by rules of Islamic law. Generally it can be said that all Moslems in Zanzibar are subject to Islamic law in matters related to their personal status. This view is supported by section 11 C, (a)(b)(c) of Decree 6 of 1975 which says: D

11C. The jurisdiction of Kadhi's court shall be limited to:

a. matters relating to personal status, marriage, divorce, guardianship and subject to the E provisions of any other law for the time being in force, the custody of children in cases in which the parties are Muslims of the Ibathi sect or the Shafei sect.

b. matters relating to wakfs, religious or charitable trusts inter vivos and inheritance where the claim in respect of any such matter does not exceed five thousand shillings, F in cases in which the parties are Muslims of the Ibathi sect or the Shafei sect;

c. claims for maintenance, where such claims is for a lump gifts inter vivos and inheritance where the claim in respect of any such matter does not exceed five thousand shillings, in cases in which the parties are Muslims of the Ibathi sect or the Shafei sect; G

The law applicable in Kadhi's courts is Islamic law and once a person is a moslem he automatically falls under the jurisdiction of these courts. Of course, depending on the H circumstances of the case, a case like the present one, which would otherwise be tried by Kadhi's court can be opened in the High Court. However, generally all cases involving personal matters and in which the parties are moslems, are to be tried by Kadhis' courts in accordance with Islamic law.

From the above lengthy discussion, this court is of the view that the marriage of the I petitioner and the respondent though contracted as a civil marriage is subject to Islamic law. One of the salient features of Islamic Marriage is that A it allows plurality of wives. A moslem husband is allowed to marry up to four wives provided that he can maintain them sufficiently and impartially. Hence when the petitioner married the second wife, he was doing nothing more than exercising his legal B option. It was culpable, to say the least, for the respondent to treat it as a ground for leaving the matrimonial home. By leaving her husband and refusing to return after being asked to do so, according to Islamic law, the respondent is labelled as an insolent or disobedient wife who according to Islamic law is known as "Nashiza". A wife's disobedience is a good ground for divorce. C

All in all, I am satisfied with the petitioner's case. The evidence adduced in support of the suit is weighty. Hence as ordered earlier the marriage between the petitioner and the respondent is hereby dissolved.

D Order accordingly.

E

[zRPz]HASUMATI CHHAGANLAL v BASHIRHUSSEIN GULAMALI & ANOTHER 1983 TLR 320 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Zanzibar
Judge Ramadhani CJ

August 7, 1980
MISC. CIVIL APPLICATION 1 OF 1980
Flynote
Family - Marriage between Indian citizen and Zanzibari - Applicable law - 'Lex domicili' of F Zanzibar.
Family Law - Age of Majority - Whether it affects capacity to marry on religion/religious rites of party - Section 2 Age of Majority Decree, Cap. 53. G
-Headnote
The Applicant is a citizen of India and the mother of the 2nd Respondent (Padmaben Chhaganlal). Padmaben, aged 14 had fallen in love with a Zanzibar man, and had agreed to convert to Islam and went ahead to contract an Islamic marriage without the knowledge and consent of her parents. The mother petitioned to High Court for the H annulment of the marriage, as well as the annulment of the conversion to Islam. Furthermore, she petitioned the Court to punish her daughter's alleged husband under the Spinsters Protection Decree, No. 5 of 1970.
Held: (i) In a marriage contracted in Zanzibar between an Indian citizen and a Zanzibari, I the applicable law is that of Zanzibar, the 'lex domicili',
1983 TLR p321
RAMADHANI CJ

(ii) although according to the Age of Majority Decree, Cap. 53 the age of A majority in Zanzibar is 18 years it does not affect capacity to marry or religion or religious rites of the person who has reached the age of discretion;

(iii) in determining the age of discretion a court should consider whether the B young person under consideration had full capacity to understand what he/she was doing, in the present case the girl had such capacity and hence the marriage and conversion to Islam were valid;

(iv) since the girl had legally undergone a conversion from Hinduism to Islam, her Hindu father could not under Islamic law become her walii, a role which was legally exercised by the Kadhi. C
Case Information
Order accordingly.
Cases referred to:

1. Re An Application by Barbara Simpson Howison [1959] E.A. 568. D

2. Agar-Ellis v Lascelles [1883] 24 Ch. D. 317.

3. Mbwana v D.C. Pemba Z.L.R. 20.

4. Soud v Jokha 5 Z.L.R. 16.

5. Salima Alawi v Seyyid Saleh Alawi Civ App. 21 of 1953 HC Zanzibar (unreported).

[zJDz]Judgment

Ramadhani, C.J.: The Petitioner, Mrs. Hasumati Chhaganlal, has moved this court for three things. First, the dissolution of the marriage between her daughter called Padmaben and a young man called Bashirhusein Gulamali which was solemnised by the Hon. Chief Kadhi. Secondly, she and her husband should be given custody of their minor daughter. Lastly, legal action should be undertaken against Bashirhusein Gulamali under Decree No. 5 of 1970. The Petitioner also wanted to know whether the cell leader, one Bibi Mgeni Said, was given custody of their daughter by the court for the night of 1st July, 1980 until the morning of 2nd July, 1980 as she claimed.

The facts of the matter are simple and generally undisputed. The petitioner is a citizen of India holding passport No. K994913. She is the mother of Padmaben. In this judgment I will refer to Padmaben as the daughter. The daughter is also a citizen of India and is included in her mother's passport. The daughter is aged fourteen years and some seven months. She was born on 23rd October, 1965.

The daughter made acquaintance with Bashirhusein whom I shall refer to as the Respondent. They decided to marry. On Friday 27th June, 1980 these two came to the Chief Kadhi seeking marriage. They told the Chief Kadhi that the daughter, who until then was a Hindu, was willing to convert to Islamic faith. The Chief Kadhi took the necessary steps to convert her, renaming her Fatma and married them immediately.

The couple left the court for home. On their way they met the father of the daughter who took hold of her and went home with her.

On Monday 30th June, 1980 the Respondent returned to the Chief Kadhi to collect the marriage certificates. He complained about what happened and the Chief Kadhi gave the Respondent a letter to the cell leader of the daughter. The letter was summoning the cell leader, Bi Mgeni Said, to come to the court the following day, 1st July, 1980.

The Chief Kadhi gave a letter to the cell leader for the Chairman of CCM branch of Muembe Tanga. This letter had two aims. First, it was to summon the Petitioner and her husband to come to court. Second, it was authorising the cell leader to have custody of the daughter over the night and to come to court with her the following morning. On 2nd July, 1980, the Petitioner came to court. She was informed by the Chief Kadhi that the daughter had converted to Islam and had married the Respondent. The Petitioner and her husband objected. The cell leader who had been given custody of the daughter surrendered her to the court and the daughter accompanied the Respondent to their marital home.

First and foremost I have to look into the legality of this marriage. To do this I have to satisfy myself of the legality of the conversion.

The Petitioner has given three allegations. First, that the daughter is a minor hence cannot decide on herself on these matters. Second, that neither herself nor her husband were informed on this issue. Thirdly, that the daughter is a citizen of India. F

I should deal with the question of citizenship first. I am satisfied that the daughter is a citizen of India and she is included in the passport of her mother, the applicant, bearing No. K994913. The question is what is the applicable law especially on these issues as marriage. This is question of conflict of laws. G

According to Dicey's Conflicts of Law (6th edn) at page 758 a marriage is valid when.

"(1) each of the parties has, according to the law of his or her respective domicile, the capacity to marry the other; and H

(2) any of the following conditions as to the form of celebration is complied with:

(i) if the marriage is celebrated in accordance with the local form" (I have quoted only the parts relevant to the case before me). I

1983 TLR p323

RAMADHANI CJ

Similar views have been aired by Schitthoff in The English Conflict of Laws, 3rd ed. A at page 316. He has said that according to the principles of English law the validity of a marriage depends on two conditions:

(a) (if) the incidents pertaining to the form of the marriage satisfy the 'lex celebrations' and, further, if B

(b) the incidents pertaining to the essentials of the marriage satisfy the 'lex domicili'.

The expositions of these two learned authorities have been followed with approval in a C case decided here in East Africa by the Supreme Court of Kenya in 1959 in Re An Application by Barbara Simpson Howison [1959] E.A. 568.

I should state from the start that the High Court of Zanzibar is not bound by the decisions of the Supreme Court of Kenya. Nevertheless I have decided to follow this decision on two grounds. First, this is the only case I have been able to find which is D similar to the case I am dealing with. Second, the decisions of the Supreme Court are of high persuasive authority especially as they were taken at a time when we had a similar court structure which incorporated the Court of Appeal of Eastern Africa and ultimately the Privy Council. E

I am satisfied, therefore, that according to the decision of that case and the exposition of the two learned writers I have referred to, the applicable law in this case is that of Zanzibar and not that of India even though the Applicant and the daughter are both citizens of India. I think I do not have to elaborate on the fact that the laws of Zanzibar F include Mohammedan law on these matters of marriage.

At the time of converting to Islam the daughter was fourteen years and seven months old. The question needing my determination is whether she had the capacity to decide on herself the issue of conversion from one religious faith to another. G

The relevant law in Zanzibar is the Age of Majority Decree Cap. 53. The age of majority is eighteen years. Section 2 provides that that age shall not affect:

(a) the capacity of any person to act in the following matters, namely: marriage, dower, H divorce, and adoption;

(b) the religion or religious rites and usages of any class of persons in Zanzibar.

I do not think that the provisions I have quoted permit a minor to change his religious I belief without the consent of his parents. I understand these provisions to permit one already of a particular faith to perform what are required A by that faith regardless of the age. Thus for example, a Mohammedan child can fast during the month of Ramadhan even if he is under eighteen. Likewise a Mohammedan female can contract a marriage though she be under eighteen provided she is mature. However, the law recognises such a thing as age of discretion at which one could decide B for oneself on such matters as religion and marriage.

1983 TLR p324

RAMADHANI CJ

As I have said the only case I have been able to find which is on all fours with the present case is Re An Application by Barbara Simpson Howison. In that case the C Applicant, Mrs Howison, was a British citizen domiciled in Scotland. Her daughter, called Diane, went to Nairobi, Kenya, where she embraced the Islamic faith on 31st March, 1959 and married a Mohammedan youth called Saifuddin Taherali Patwa. Diane who had been a Christian was eighteen-and-a-half at the time. Mrs. Howison moved the Supreme Court of Kenya for an order that a writ of habeas corpus should D issue directed to Patwa to have the body of her daughter, Diane, brought before the court. Mrs Howison argued that Diane was a minor under twenty-one.

After reviewing various authorities the Supreme Court of Kenya, judgment being delivered by Rudd, J., decided that Diane had attained the age of discretion in law. The E Court said that the age of discretion was eighteen years. That decision was made in view of the fact that the age of majority for Kenya was twenty-one. This was the same as under the laws of the United Kingdom which recognise the age of discretion to be eighteen.

In Zanzibar the age of majority is eighteen and not twenty-one. The question is what F could be taken to be the age of discretion in the Isle. I have not been able to find any case that has been decided by this court or by any court in places where the age of majority is eighteen.

The decision in Re Howison's Application followed that of Agar-Ellies v Lascelles G (1883), 24 Ch. D. 317 where Brett, M.R. said that the age of discretion for boys was fourteen and for girls was sixteen. As I have already said according to the English law the age of majority is twenty-one.

For lack of any authority regarding this issue I think the main consideration in fixing the H age of discretion is the determination whether the daughter had capacity to fully understand what she was doing.

According to the facts of this case the daughter after making up her mind to marry the respondent approached her parents. But before that she had already told the respondent that the question of marriage between them was impossible due to the difference in their religions. She had also refused to convert to Islam when she was I asked to do so by the

1983 TLR p325
RAMADHANI CJ
respondent. She decided to embrace Islamic faith after quite some time had elapsed. A
It is quite possible that she had decided to do so because she was pregnant with a child of the respondent and that she feared that her parents would disown her. But both her parents have assured her and before me that they would take her back if she denounced B the respondent. The daughter has refused. Her parents made it clear to her that if she did not denounce the respondent and return to them they will disown her. She replied without any hesitation that she did not want to return to them and that it is alright if she is no longer their daughter and that she had already found another mother (the mother of the respondent). C
I am satisfied therefore that she did not embrace Islamic faith out of fear of any eventuality. I am satisfied that she converted while comprehending the full import and the nature of her action. I am satisfied, therefore, that she has attained the age of discretion. Hence her change of faith is valid and cannot be annulled on the claim that she is a minor. D
Now, I have to look into the validity of this marriage. As I have already said the marriage was solemnised in Zanzibar. In this case by the Mohammedan Law of Marriage.
The Applicant contends that she did not give her consent to this marriage as the parent of the daughter. E Rudd, J. in the Re Howison's Application at page 573 said:

"Now, it is also accepted by all authorities that the consent to a marriage, by a parent or a guardian, is part of the form of the marriage and is governed by the requirements of the lex loci celebrationis". F

Thus this question of consent is also governed by the Mohammedan Law. The Marriage and Divorce (Muslim) Registration Decree, Cap. 91 does not mention the issue of consent. However, Section 9(2) requires the Registrar of Marriages to register a G marriage after being satisfied that it was validly contracted under the Mohammedan Law. So the issue of consent has to be determined under that law. Section 22(c) has authorised forms to be devised for the implementation of the Decree. The form titled H "Registration of Marriage" made under the provisions of this decree has a place written "The signature of the parent or guardian". Thus the consent of the parent or guardian is recognised by the Decree.
The Mohammedan Law in respect of consent varies according to the schools. In this case it is appropriate that I follow the Shafei School. This court had previously decided I that a judge should follow his school in deciding cases and not that of the parties. (Mbwana v D.C. Pemba 5
1983 TLR p326
RAMADHANI CJ
Z.LR. 20 at 24 and also Soud v Jokha 5 Z.L.R. 16). However, that stand has been A overruled by the Court of Appeal of Eastern Africa in Salim Alawi v Seyyid Saleh Alawi Civil Appeal No. 21 of 1953 from the High Court of Zanzibar in Civil appeal No. 11 of 1952. It is the school of law of the parties that is to be followed. In the present case, however, it is fortunate that both the parties and the Chief Kadhi are Shafei. B

According to the Shafei school the consent of the parent (walii) is mandatory. Minhaj-et-Talbin as translated into English by Van Den Berg and Howard at page 284 (Book 33, Chapter 1) provides: "A woman cannot give herself in marriage, even though C her guardian should authorise her to do so".

In this case it is not disputed that the Applicant and her husband did not give their consent to this marriage. In fact they were completely uninformed until six days after the marriage when they were summoned and told by the Chief Kadhi. The marriage was D performed on Friday and they were summoned the following Tuesday.

The only question is whether this could nullify the marriage. But before I answer that question I must ask myself a preliminary question. Who is the 'Walii' of a woman? (Who is the person who can legally give a woman in marriage?) Minhaj, at the same page I E have already quoted, provides that:

"Nor can she give in marriage another woman, even as agent of the latter's guardian; nor effect a marriage as agent for the husband". F

Thus in this case the Applicant as the mother of the daughter cannot claim to be the "Walii" (a person qualified to give her daughter in marriage). After having made that determination it was perfectly in order to refuse the application forthright. However, I feel I should pursue this question of Walii and consent a little further. G

The proper Walii of a woman is her father. In this case the father did not petition. However, as he had endorsed the application of his wife as containing the truth and also as he gave his explanation before me, even though after I had summoned him, I feel it proper to determine this issue of Walii and consent in respect of him also. H

The father did not give his consent. But after being satisfied, as I am, that the daughter is now properly and legally a Moslem can it then be said that the father who is a Hindu is the Walii of the daughter? A non-Moslem cannot be a Walii of a Moslem. Therefore I the father could never have been the Walii of the daughter. Hence his consent was not necessary to validate the marriage.

1983 TLR p327

RAMADHANI CJ

According to the Mohammedan Law when there is no natural Walii the Kadhi on the A behalf of the State is the Walii (Minhaj at page 286). In this case the Chief Kadhi was properly the Walii.

The Applicant has also said that the daughter was three months' pregnant at the time of the marriage. She contends that under Mohammedan Law a pregnant woman cannot B contract a marriage. Such a marriage is void.

I have failed to obtain any authority in support of such contention. What I have been able to find out is that a woman cannot be married during the period of iddat. This comes about either when a woman is divorced or is a widow. One of the reasons for C iddat is that a woman would not be married while she is pregnant with another man's child. In this case the daughter was not in iddat.

For the reasons I have given I refuse to nullify the marriage.

I should add that during the proceeding of this case; the daughter, in front of all, told her D parents that she is not prepared to part with the respondent and return home. Thus even if I could legally nullify the marriage or if I have erred in refusing to nullify it, to declare it null and void is futile. I will not have the power of stopping the daughter from going to the respondent.

Rudd J. said at page 572 of Re Howison's Application that: E

> It may fairly be assumed that if we were to release her from any alleged custody and control of the respondent she would immediately return to him of her own free will and consent unless F prevented from so doing by some form of constraint. But in view of the nature of these proceedings, and of the remedy that is sought, we have no power to order her to leave the respondent or to return to the applicant, nor have we the power in these proceedings to make an order against her which would have the effect of putting her in terrorem as regards this G court and its order in these proceedings.

The learned judge went further to say that: H

> In these circumstances, and having regard to the fact that she had undoubtedly attained the age of discretion in law, and having regard to the nature of these proceedings, we cannot see any legal justification for an order that, as far as we can judge, could only be made effective by I subjecting her to some form of physical restraint.

1983 TLR p328

RAMADHANI CJ

I concur with their lordships entirely. Briefly I would like to discuss two other things A which were contained in the application.

First, there is the question of the Spinsters Protection Decree, No. 5 of 1970. I am satisfied that the daughter was pregnant when she married. I am also satisfied that the Chief Kadhi was not aware of this. I am confident that if he had known he would not B have performed this marriage. I have no reason whatsoever to doubt his sincerity.

Under this Decree when such thing occurs both the man and the spinster are guilty and are to be sent to the Education Centre for five years. C

This Decree has not been strictly adhered to. Under the Decree in Section 6 a Special Committee is created with the responsibility of receiving reports, conducting investigations and directing the Police to prosecute. But in practice the Committee after investigations advises the persons convened to marry. If they agree then special contract D forms are filled-in and the persons get married. That then is the end of the matter. However, if the advice of the Committee goes unheeded then the issue is sent to the Police and eventually to the court. This was the explanation given to me in court by LT. Col. Anthony Musa, the Chairman of the Committee, and Ali Zamu the secretary. Thus even if this case had gone to the Committee the parties would have been advised to E marry just the same.

It is not improper to take this occasion to make my observations that this Decree is unsatisfactory. I feel that even the Committee is aware of this and that is why it is not following the Decree to the letter:- If both the man and the spinster are sent to the F Education Centre for five years the one actually punished is the infant. In the first place the child will be born in the Centre. Secondly, it will be brought-up in the Centre. Thirdly, even if it should be brought-up outside the Centre by some relatives it will be denied the motherly love and care which is very crucial for any child in its first five years. G Not only that but the aim of the legislation is to protect spinsters and hence its title (Spinsters Protection Decree). But when the spinsters are punished as accomplices the purpose of the legislation is defeated. The spirit of the legislation is good but I suggest that the Attorney General and the Government should review the law. H

The Applicant also wanted to know whether the cell leader, Bi Mgeni Said, was given custody of the daughter by the Chief Kadhi for the night of 1st July until the morning of 2nd July. I am satisfied that the cell-leader was given that authority by a letter from the Chief Kadhi. I should like to comment that the Chief Kadhi erred in giving such authority. I hope that this will never recur. I

1983 TLR p329

Finally, I should add that when I received this petition I also received a letter from the A Consulate-General of India in Zanzibar. Though he did not indicate that fear, I feel I am duty bound to dispel any fear that a trend has started in the Kadhi's Courts of converting young women and offering them in marriage without consulting their parents. I am completely satisfied from these proceedings that there is no such trend and this incident B is not a beginning of such a trend. This is but a case of two youths who decided to do what they have done. This could happen any where as it did in Kenya in 1959 in the case I have already quoted.

As I am satisfied that the daughter has attained the age of discretion and that the marriage is valid under the laws of Zanzibar, I refuse the plea to annul the marriage and C to order the daughter to return to the Applicant.

However, as this case is convened with Decree No. 5 of 1970 I order Bashir-husein and Fatma to go to the Secretary of the Special Committee to fill in the contract of marriage forms.

D Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p329

E

[zRPz]BHOKE CHACHA v DANIEL MISENYA 1983 TLR 329 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mushi J

July 24, 1984
CIVIL APPEAL 3 OF 1983
Flynote

Tort - Malicious prosecution - Whether acquittal establishes falsity and malice of original F prosecution.

Torts - Damages - Whether evidence showing malicious prosecution enough to dispense with the need to prove damages.

-Headnote

The respondent had reported to the police that the appellant had created disturbance. G Upon that report the appellant was prosecuted, convicted and sentenced to four months' imprisonment. On appeal he was acquitted. The appellant filed a suit in the District Court for malicious prosecution. The trial magistrate dismissed the suit with costs to the respondent. He then appealed to the High Court. H

Held: (i) The fact that the appellant was subsequently acquitted does not establish that the original complaint was false and malicious;

(ii) it was for the appellant to prove that the respondent's report was malicious and that it was made without any reasonable or probable cause; I

(iii) proof of malicious prosecution is not enough to show that damage

1983 TLR p330

MUSHI J

had been suffered; for general damages the appellant would have to show that he A suffered mental or physical injury or some other injury to his fame or dignity as a result of the imprisonment.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed. B

No case referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mushi, J.: The appellant, Bhoke Chacha, unsuccessfully sued the respondent, Daniel Misenya, on a claim which was couched in the following terms: C

"That the defendant falsely reported to police that plaintiff created disturbance in the public meeting and the plaintiff was arrested charged and convicted on that offence, plaintiff was sentenced to four months jail, plaintiff, appealed against conviction and sentence to the D District Court and his appeal was allowed in criminal case No. 30/78.

Therefore: Plaintiff claims 6,000/= from defendant being general compensation for the days which plaintiff stayed in jail or suffered and for the loss of his crop which were spoiled by wild E animals (pigs) and birds when plaintiff was serving sentence in prison".

The plaint, as it is, is not precise and clear as it should be. However, being as it is a product of a lay hand one has to read it and try to find out exactly what the plaintiff is up F to. From the plaint, it would appear that in substance the plaint is that the defendant made a false report to the police that he had created disturbance. As a result, of this false report, he was maliciously prosecuted. From the plaint, the appellant is claiming both general and special damages although he has not shown it in different heads. The G learned trial magistrate heard the evidence and after careful consideration of law and facts he came to the conclusion and I quote:

"I am not persuaded that the plaintiff has established malice and lack of reasonable or probable cause so as to sustain a suit for malicious prosecution". H

And the suit was dismissed with costs to the respondent. The appellant was dissatisfied with the decision and he has appealed to this court. He has written a long memorandum almost stating all what was stated at the trial but without raising specific points I challenging the decision of the trial court. I should immediately here state that the decision of the district court cannot be faulted and the appeal will be dismissed. A

1983 TLR p331

MUSHI J

There is no dispute at all that the appellant was prosecuted and convicted and sentenced to four months' imprisonment. It is also a fact that the appellant was acquitted on appeal. It was also admitted that the respondent was the one who complained to the police against the appellant. As it was stated by the trial magistrate, even with all these B facts accepted, that by itself did not prove the appellant's claim. This is the correct legal position. The fact that the appellant was subsequently acquitted does not establish that the original complaint by the respondent was false and malicious. No amount of tearful or eloquent complaints will change this position. It is for the appellant to prove that the C respondent's report was malicious and it was made without any reasonable or probable cause. This can only be done by adducing evidence which will lead the court to make a finding whether the respondent acted maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause. There was no evidence at all on which the trial magistrate could have come to that conclusion. D

Even if there had been some evidence to satisfy the court that the respondent was malicious and acted without reasonable and probable cause, the appellant would still be required to establish that he suffered some injury for which he was entitled to some amount of damages. This he did not do. For the appellant to be entitled to general E damages, he would have to prove that he suffered mental or physical pain as a result of being sent to prison. The mere fact that the appellant was imprisoned, did not by itself justify grant of damages. Or at least the appellant should have adduced evidence to show that as a result of being imprisoned, his dignity or fame has suffered in the estimation of fellow citizens and that his standing in the society has suffered to his F detriment as a whole. There was nothing of this kind in the evidence. As for the allegations that some crop was eaten by pigs and birds there was no evidence to prove the allegations. It was upon the appellant to adduce evidence to prove the allegation and to prove exactly how much crop was worth. The appellant cannot expect the court to G grant what he has requested without proving to the satisfaction of the law that he is entitled to it. The suit was rightly dismissed and the appeal is without any merits and it is dismissed. The respondent is entitled to his costs in this court and the trial court. H

Appeal dismissed.

1983 TLR p332

A

[zRPz]NYABAGAYA MTANI v NYAKANYI KABERA 1983 TLR 332 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Munyera J

September 27, 1984
CIVIL APPEAL 158 OF 1982
Flynote
Tort - Slander - Allegation of witchcraft - Jurisdiction of Primary Court. B Tort - Slander - Publication - No publication where defamatory words uttered before respondent only.
-Headnote
The appellant had called the respondent a witch and the latter being aggrieved convened C and complained before a meeting of elders. In order to clear herself she went to a witch finder who certified that she was clean. Thereafter she sued the appellant for two cows as damages and expenses she incurred in travelling to the witch finder. The trial D court awarded damages and expenses as prayed. The appellant appealed to the District Court which set aside the damages but affirmed the expenses. She appealed further to the High Court.
Held: (i) The Primary Court had jurisdiction to try the case since an imputation of E witchcraft is a known customary law tort of defamation;

(ii) since the defamatory words were uttered before only the respondent there was no publication; the repetition of the words to the elders was done by the respondent which did not amount to publication by the appellant. F
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
No case referred to.
[zJDz]Judgment
Munyera, J: The respondent was the plaintiff before Mugango Primary Court. She G sued the appellant for damages for slander. She stated that on 23/11/81 at about 9 a.m. the appellant passed by her (respondent's) house. It appears she (appellant) was drunk. She addressed respondent as a witch, that she (respondent) had caused the death of H their child. At that time nobody else was present except these two women. The respondent felt bitter about the appellant's remarks. At 11 a.m. same day she convened a meeting of elders and complained to them. In order to clear herself she offered to go to Ukara Island to contact a witch finder. She raised Shs. 3,080/= to enable her go. I There she said the witch finder certified her clean. She returned and filed this suit claiming damages 2 cows and reimbursement of her Shs. 3,080/= she spent in going to Ukara. She won the suit. The trial court A ordered the appellant to pay the two cows and Shs. 3,080/= plus costs. She appealed to the District Court and won part of the appeal. The District Court set aside the award in relation to the two cows but confirmed that in relation to Shs. 3,080/=. She appealed further to this court. B
1983 TLR p333
There are two main arguments in this appeal. First (para 4) that the Primary Court had no jurisdiction over witchcraft cases. Secondly (para 3) that the appellant did not force the respondent to go to Ukara Island nor did she accompany her. Therefore she was not liable to the costs the respondent alleged she incurred. I start with the question of C jurisdiction. It should be remembered that the suit concerned defamation (slander). I do not agree that Primary Court had no jurisdiction. Witchcraft is something known to local people from time immemorial. If somebody imputed witchcraft to another whom people knew was not a witch the imputer would be told to compensate the latter. This is a D customary law tort of defamation. The Primary Court had jurisdiction. The appellant's argument in that respect fails. I now go to the merits of the case. Going by the respondent's own evidence the remarks by the appellant that she was a witch were uttered when they were only two and nobody else heard them. She on her own initiative E called a meeting and repeated what the appellant had told her. This did not amount to publication by the appellant. On this ground the appeal succeeds, I allow it, set aside the award of Shs. 3,080/= and dismiss the respondent's suit in its entirety. The appellant did not appear so no costs.

F Appeal allowed.

1983 TLR p333

G

[zRPz]ALI SUNGITA v SUMWA MDIU AND OTHERS 1983 TLR 333 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

July 28, 1983
CIVIL APPEAL 35 OF 1983 H
Flynote
Civil Practice and Procedure - Failure or refusal by the defendant to answer to the claim - Primary Courts Rules 1964.
Torts - Slander - Jurisdiction of Primary Court - Nyaturu customary law. I
1983 TLR p334
LUGAKINGIRA J
-Headnote
The appellant had successfully sued the four respondents in the Primary Court for A slander and was awarded Shs. 4,000/=. The respondents appealed to the District Court which reversed the Primary Court's decision. The appellant then appealed to the High Court.
Held: (i) Where in the Primary Court, the defendant being present, unreasonably fails or B refuses to answer to the claim, the court would be entitled to allow the plaintiff to prove his claim and thereafter pass judgment according to law;

(ii) in the absence of a Nyaturu customary law on slander the Primary Court had no jurisdiction. C
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
Cases referred to:

1. B.H. Lakhani & Anor v P.H. Lakhani [1978] L.R.T. n. 26. D
2. Abdallah v Singu [1972] H.C.D. n. 12.
3. Nkulu v Mkungile [1972] H.C.D. n. 70.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The appellant sued the four respondents in the Primary Court for E defamation. He was successful and was awarded damages of Shs. 4,000/= as claimed. The respondents appealed to the District Court and the appellate District Magistrate reversed the trial Court's decision on what appear to be allusions to privilege. That F prompted the present appeal. In view of the decision I intend to take, I do not consider it proper or desirable to go into the details of the case. I will only remark that no one would have sat back and stomached the kind of accusations levelled against the appellant. He had every reason to sue. In this judgment I am preoccupied by two matters: the conduct of the case by the trial magistrate and whether the Primary Court G had jurisdiction in the subject matter.

On 3.7.81 the trial magistrate read over the claim to the defendants/respondents and required their answers thereto. That seems to have been in accordance with Rule 44 of the Civil Procedure in Primary Courts Rules, 1964 read with Rules 18(1) and 20. H

The first and fourth defendants denied the claim, but the second and third defendants, perhaps in malice or by visitation of God, remained silent. Something unusual then followed. The trial magistrate thereupon remanded the second and third defendants stating "... Wanawekwa mahabusu mpaka kesho tarehe 4.7.81 labda wataweza I kujibu ili shauri lipangiwe tarehe ya kuendelea" Indeed when the two defendants were released the following day, they had no more appetite for their previous game, A hence they promptly admitted the claim.

I had heard of such aberrations before and had encouraged myself to believe that they were misinformed slurs, but here was a case in point. This apparent abuse of power was most unfortunate and most reprehensible. It seems, indeed, that there is no B provision in the Rules which meets this kind of situation - a provision as to what a Primary Court would do where the defendant, being present in court, refuses or fails to answer to the claim. The provisions there are are devoted to appearances and consequences of non-appearance. There is nothing equivalent to 0.8, r. 14(1) of the C Civil Procedure Code, 1966 where, if the defendant fails to present a written statement of defence, the court may proceed and pronounce judgment against him. Still, the apparent vacuum in the Primary Court Rules would not justify the high handedness such as was resorted to in the instant case for, even where there are no express provisions to go by, a court of law cannot constitute itself an instrument of judicial violence. Let us D hope we will hear no more of this.

What then is the position? A little more sober reflection should have suggested the answer to the learned trial magistrate. A situation like this may be approached on the principle that a plaintiff's claim will not be defeated merely because the defendant elects E to be dumb, nor will his remedy be postponed until it pleases the defendant to open his mouth. It follows that the court has inherent power to proceed and dispose of the case.

I am of the opinion that where, in the Primary Court, the defendant, being present, unreasonably fails or refuses to answer the claim, the court, unless it considers it F desirable to adjourn the hearing to another date, would be entitled to permit the plaintiff to prove his claim and then pass judgment according to law. A judgment obtained this way would not in my view be ex parte for it is as if the defendant, being present, had not evidence to contest the claim. This situation may be compared to the position under 0.8. G r. 14(1) where, if the defendant fails to present a written statement of defence and, being refused an adjournment, takes no further part in the case, the proceeding does not thereby become ex parte: B.H. Lakhani & Anor v P.H. Lakhani [1978] LRT n. 26.

The second matter presents no difficulty. The jurisdiction of Primary Courts in matters H of a civil nature inter alia arises where the law applicable is customary law. At issue in the instant case was the tort of defamation in the nature of a slander. The parties are members of the Nyaturu community. There is nothing in the evidence or in the opinion of the single assessor which indicates any Nyaturu customary law on the subject. I have I also been unable to find some other source where this law could be derived. On the contrary, previous decisions of this court in cases A originating from the same or similar community point to the same difficulty: Abdallah v Singu [1972] HCD n. 12 and Nkulu v Mkungile [1972)] HCD n. 70. I am therefore of the view that in the absence of a Nyaturu law on this subject, the Primary Court had B no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. That alone suffices to nullify the proceedings but there was something more. As just pointed out the trial magistrate received the opinion of one assessor although he sat with two assessors throughout. The record shows that it was an oversight, and that the second assessor was absent, for there are to be found these entries:

1983 TLR p336

> "MAONI YA WASHAURI" C > Mshauri wa Mwanzo".

But immediately after the words of the first assessor comes the judgment and there is no D reference to the second assessor.

The omission, by whatever cause, was fatal and rendered invalid the proceedings as a whole. In the Primary Court every decision has to be taken after receiving the opinion of every assessor.

For the totality of these reasons, these proceedings must be and are hereby quashed in E their entirety. The appellant is advised, if so minded, to proceed against the respondents in the Resident Magistrate's Court. Incidentally, I seem to recall a similar case involving the same parties before the Resident Magistrate's Court, Singida. Opportunity should then be taken to ascertain the position.

F Appeal allowed.

1983 TLR p336

G

[zRPz]ISSA ATHUMANI MDUYAH v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 336 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

October 18, 1984
CRIMINAL APPEAL 53 OF 1983 H
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Charges - Whether soliciting and receiving a bride can be charged as distinct offences.
-Headnote
The appellant was charged with and convicted of three counts of corrupt transaction by I agent. The first count alleged that on 13.8.82 the appellant
1983 TLR p337
LUGAKINGIRA J
corruptly solicited Shs. 500.00 from one person as an inducement to forbear from A instituting criminal proceedings against that person for making pombe business in unlicensed premises. In the second count he was alleged on the same occasion to have received Shs. 200.00 from the same person, in the same connection; and the third count accused him of further receiving in the same connection Shs. 100.00 from the same person. On appeal: B
Held: (i) It is improper to charge the accused both with soliciting and receiving as distinct offences, when they arise from the same facts;

(ii) where the facts disclose both soliciting and receiving, the proper charge would be that of receiving only; C

(iii) where the prosecution in some instances is not certain whether receiving as such can be established, the proper practice is to charge both soliciting and receiving as alternative offences leaving the court to enter a conviction on whatever of the two offences is proved; D

(iv) where there is an allegation of corrupt transaction by agent, the charge should mention the fact that the accused was acting in relation to his principal's affairs, the omission of which is serious as the relationship is an ingredient of the offence.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed. E
Case referred to:

1. Amir Nathoo v R. [1970] H.C.D. n. 51

[zJDz]Judgment
Lugakingira, J.: The appellant was a ward secretary at Chamwino in Dodoma. He is F presently in prison following conviction of three counts of corrupt transaction by agent. I do not at this stage have to comment specifically on the manner the charges were framed, it being sufficient to state the substance thereof. In the first count it was alleged that on 13.8.82 the appellant corruptly solicited Shs. 500.00 from Sofia Sanga as an G inducement to forbear from taking criminal proceedings against her for running a pombe business in unlicensed premises. The second count alleged that on the same occasion he corruptly received Shs. 200.00 from the same person in the same connection; and the third count alleged that on the following day he corruptly received a further Shs. 100.00 H from the same person, again in the same connection. Following conviction he was sentenced to three years' imprisonment on each count, the sentences running concurrently. He then appealed in a lengthy memorandum containing a great deal of nonsense and added more nonsense at the hearing of the appeal. I

The facts of the case were simple. On the morning of 13.8.82 the appellant and two militiamen set out in search of illegal pombe dealers. A

After going here and there they arrived at the home of Sofia Sanga and found her selling a kangara brew. The appellant demanded to know why she was selling pombe at unauthorised hours and without a permit. Sofia begged for forgiveness. He ordered her to carry her liquor and follow him "to the station". She complied. After walking a B distance he told her to give him Shs. 500.00 and go free. She had no money. He told her to raise it from friends. They were then near the house of Scolastica Lungwa (PW3), a friend of Sofia. Sofia entered the house accompanied by Bertha Katande (PW2) who had also heard the solicitation. Sofia related her plight and PW3 gave her C Shs. 200.00. They came out and found the appellant waiting. Then he, Sofia and PW 3 entered an old abandoned house, leaving the appellant's companions outside, and there the appellant was given the money. He received it grumbling, saying that he would settle for at least Shs. 300.00. Sofia begged for time to find Shs. 100.00. He told her to take D it to him at his office. Next morning Sofia called at the Police Station and related her story. She was given a currency note for Shs. 100.00 whose numbers were noted and three policemen in plain clothes accompanied her. When they arrived at the appellant's office Sofia entered and gave him the note. As she left, the three policemen and the E CCM branch chairman who had arrived there entered the appellant's office and confronted him for receiving a bribe. He denied it and said that Sofia had paid a debt. He was still holding the note which he then dropped. It was picked up and he was taken away and charged accordingly.

The appellant's defence, like his memorandum of appeal, was a lengthy story, mostly of F irrelevancies. I will extract the relevant parts only. He related that indeed on 13.8.82 he was engaged in looking for illegal pombe sellers. He eventually arrived at Sofia's home and found her selling Kangara. He demanded to know why she was selling pombe before authorised hours and without a permit. She told him she was about to G take her pombe to the pombe shop. He then ordered her to do so and left. Next day Sofia called at his office but when she saw that he was with one Juma Hassani she went out. He decided to follow her to know what her problem was, but when he reached the door he was confronted by three men and the branch chairman. One of the men then H tried to push his hand into the appellant's pocket but failed. He was told he had received a bribe but denied it. He was then shown a note on the floor and forced at gunpoint to say "I have received it". He was pressed further and said Sofia was paying a debt. He was then arrested and charged. Before this Court he stated that he had nothing to add to his memorandum but had a message for me. He informed me that the whole affair I was conspiracy between Sofia and senior police officers for whom

1983 TLR p339
LUGAKINGIRA J
she brewed pombe. He also instructed me, literally so, to study the evidence. A
I have duly studied the evidence and I would say at once that the convictions were merited. The learned trial magistrate believed Sofia and Bertha on the soliciting. I similarly do not see why these women should have lied. The appellant and his witnesses B were therefore rightly adjudged liars. The trial magistrate again believed Sofia and Scolastica on the receipt of Shs. 200.00. I again find no reason to differ. The same applies on the receipt of Shs. 100.00. There was absolutely no reason for the various prosecution witnesses to testify falsely and the appellant suggested no reason at the trial. The aspect of conspiracy which the appellant raised merely for my information deserves C no consideration.
There are only two matters of practice and procedure which call for comment. First of all, as already noted, the appellant was charged with both soliciting and receiving as distinct offences. I think that this was improper. Whereas soliciting and receiving are D indeed separate offences, I think it is superfluous to charge both distinctly when they arise from the same facts. I believe that where the facts disclose both soliciting and receiving the proper charge would be that of receiving only. There may be instances where the prosecution is not certain whether receiving as such can be established. In such a case it would be proper to charge both soliciting and receiving but as alternative E rather than independent offences.
Secondly, it is noted that the charges invariably alleged corrupt transaction "with agent" and made no mention of the fact that the appellant was acting in relation to his principal's F affairs. The charges should of course have alleged corrupt transaction "by agent". Nevertheless, I think too that this grammatical error was harmless as there was no doubt that the appellant was the agent. On the other hand, the omission to state the relationship of principal and agent was a serious one, that relationship being an ingredient of the offences. I have pondered over the effect of this but I again think that the G omission gave rise to no injustice. The appellant was well aware of the nature of the charges and was not embarrassed in his defence. In the first place the charges otherwise mentioned that he did what was alleged of him as "Katibu Kata" and, secondly, in his own defence, he stated that he was carrying out the orders of the Divisional Secretary. H He therefore knew, and the charges implied, that he was acting as an official of the Government. I am therefore satisfied that the omission occasioned no failure of justice and in this view I am strengthened by the decision in Amir Nathoo v R. [1970] HCD n. 51 where the same question arose under the repealed Cap. 400. I
1983 TLR p340
In the end, I set aside the conviction and sentence in count one which was superfluous, A but I sustain the convictions and sentences in counts two and three. To that extent the appeal stands dismissed.
B Appeal dismissed.
1983 TLR p340

[zRPz]CHRISTIAN MBUNDA v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 340 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mtwara
Judge Msumi J

March 27, 1985
CRIMINAL APPEAL 49 OF 1982 C
Flynote
Criminal Law - Theft - Ingredients of the offence.
Criminal Law - Stealing by servant - Whether covers situation where the thing stolen is not the property of accused's employer. D Criminal Law - Stealing by agent - Whether cognate to the offence of stealing by servant to make the former minor to the latter.
-Headnote
Appellant was charged with stealing by servant contrary to sections 271 and 265 of the E Penal Code. The trial magistrate cleared him of the offence but went on to convict him for what he thought to be a minor offence of stealing by agent contrary to section 273(b) and 265.
Appellant being an employee of his village council as cashier was entrusted with Shs. 10,000/= loaned by the council from the National Milling Corporation for the purpose of F buying crops. In response to the prosecution's allegation that the appellant neither used the money for buying crops nor could account for it, he said that he used the money in various village projects as ordered by the village authority.
Held: (i) It is an elementary rule of law that in order to convict an accused of theft the G prosecution must prove the existence of actus reus which is specifically termed as asportation and mens rea or animus furandi;

(ii) in this case there was asportation but the appellant had no guilty mind or animus furandi when he used the money for the purpose other than buying millet from the village; H

(iii) it is not necessary for one charged with stealing by servant contrary to section 271 of the Penal Code that the property stolen should belong to the accused's employer, but the section covers a situation where, though the stolen property does not belong to the employer, it came into possession of the employee or the accused on I account of his employer;
1983 TLR p341
MSUMI J

(iv) the offence of stealing by agent is neither minor nor cognate to stealing by A servant, as proof of the latter does not necessarily notify the accused of the essential elements of the former;
Case Information
Appeal allowed.
Cases referred to: B

1. Robert Ndecho and Anor. v R. [1951] 18 E.A.C.A. 171.
2. R. v Home [1944] 11 E.A.C.A. 107.
3. R. v Muhoja [1942] E.A.C.A. 70.
4. Ali Mohamed Hasan Mpanda v R. [1963] E.A. 296. C

[zJDz]Judgment

Msumi J.: Appellant was charged with stealing by servant contrary to sections 271 and 265 of the Penal Code. At the end of the day the learned trial Resident Magistrate acquitted him but he entered a substituted conviction of stealing by agent contrary to D sections 273(b) and 265, presumably acting under the provisions of section 181 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Any way, after being so convicted appellant was sentenced to imprisonment for a good term of seven years. In this appeal appellant is challenging both the conviction and sentence. The learned Senior State Attorney who appeared for E the Republic joined hands with the learned defence counsel from Tanzania Legal Corporation in being of the view that the conviction was faulty hence not supportable.

It is in evidence that appellant was employed by his village council as a cashier. In this capacity he used to receive money from the National Milling Corporation and other crop F authorities on behalf of the village for the purpose of buying sundry crops from the peasants. It is not in dispute that among the money received by him from N.M.C. at the material time was Shs. 10,000/= which was for the purpose of buying millet. It is the strong contention of the prosecution that appellant neither used the money for buying millet nor did he otherwise account for the same. G

To this allegation, appellant's explanation has been, throughout, that he used it in various village projects after he was ordered to do so by the village authority. Appellant maintained that the village leadership sanctioned the use of this money in the alleged projects by authorising the relevant payment vouchers. For this reason, there had been H a protracted adjournment of the case in order to enable either the police or the village council to make available to the court these payment vouchers. But none of them was available and the police and the village authority held each other responsible for it. The learned trial magistrate thus unilaterally ordered the appellant to proceed with his defence I without these vital documents.

1983 TLR p342

MSUMI J

The sole ground in support of this appeal is the trial magistrate's finding of guilt A notwithstanding the fact that the prosecution denied the court the availability of the alleged various documents according to which the village leadership authorised the appellant to pay out the money for various village projects. With respect, the force B behind this argument is beyond resistance. It cannot be refuted that as far as N.M.C. was concerned, the recipient of this money was the village council. Since it was not practicable for all the members of the council to keep the money jointly, they engaged the appellant for that purpose. But still the council retained overall control of how the C money was to be used. As between the appellant and the council it was quite legitimate for the latter to direct the former on how the money should have been used. Appellant's sole responsibility was to ensure that so long as the money remained in his hand it was safe. Admittedly appellant knew or ought to have reasonably known that the money was for buying crops from the peasants. D

However, this fact is not derogatory to the village council's cover-all control of the said money. After all the N.M.C. communicated with the village authority, and not with the appellant, in all general matters pertaining to the buying of crops.

In his judgment the learned trial magistrate seemed to believe the appellant that the E money was used in village projects at the instigation of the village council. For this, the trial magistrate was of the opinion that appellant was taken for a ride by the village council. If that is the case then how did it happen that the court convicted him of the theft of the said money? It is obvious that appellant did not have the requisite animus F furandi when he released the money for the said village projects. I don't think that the learned trial magistrate needs to be reminded of the elementary rule of law that in order to convict an accused of theft the prosecution must prove the existence of actus reus which is specifically termed as asportation and mens rea or animus furandi. In the G instant case there was undoubtedly asportation but definitely appellant had not the requisite guilty mind or animus furandi when he used the money for the purpose other than buying millet form the village.

As pointed earlier, the learned trial magistrate cleared the appellant of the charge of stealing by servant and in the alternative he convicted him of stealing by agent. The H reason which he gave for this is found at the end of his judgment when he said:

.... However, I would like to point out at this juncture that the charge is defective in the sense that the accused is not an employee of the N.M.C. so he should have been properly charged I with stealing by agent c/s 273(b) of the Penal Code and not stealing by servant.

1983 TLR p343

MSUMI J

With respect, the learned trial magistrate's reasoning is not supported by the clear A wording of section 271 of the Penal Code. For easy reference, I am producing the same fully:

271. If the offender is a clerk or servant and the thing stolen is the property of his employer, or B came into the possession of the offender on account of his employer, he is liable to imprisonment for ten years.

As the charge sheet shows, in this case appellant was employed by Magazini Ujamaa village as an accountant. The N.M.C. advanced the Shs. 10,000/= to the said village for C the purpose of buying crops. Hence when appellant got the said money, he did so on account of the village - his employer. The prosecution was therefore perfectly right to charge him under section 271. It is not true, as the learned trial magistrate appears to think, that section 271 comes into play only where the property belongs to the accused's D employer. It also covers a situation where, though the stolen property does not belong to the employer, it came into possession of the employee or the accused on account of his employer.

But even if the learned trial magistrate's reasoning was sound, still the purported alternative conviction is not supportable. Though he did not put it in clear terms, it is E obvious that the learned trial magistrate depended on section 181 of the Penal Code to support his decision. Commenting on the similar provision of the Criminal Procedure Code of Kenya, the Court of

Appeal for Eastern Africa, in Robert Necho and Anor v R. (1951) 18 E.A.C.A. 171 at p. 174 said: F

In order to make the position abundantly clear we restate again that ... where an accused is charged with an offence, he may be convicted of minor offence, although not charged with it, if G that minor offence is of a cognate character, that is to say of the same genus and species.

See also R.v Home (1944) 11 E.A.C.A. 107 and R v Muhoja (1942) E.A.C.A. 70. In this case it cannot be rationally argued that the offence of stealing by agent is cognate to stealing by servant. Both offences belong to the genus and species of the offences of H theft. But I am doubtful if stealing by agent is minor to stealing by servant. Whether or not an offence is minor to the charged one is a question of law. The test in determining it was clearly stated by this court in Ali Mohamed Hassan Mpanda v Rep. [1963] E.A. at 296 when Spry, J. said: I

1983 TLR p344

... first whether the circumstances embodied in the major charge necessarily and according to A the definition of the offence imputed by that charge constitute the minor offence also, and secondly whether the charged major offence gives the accused notice of all circumstances going to constitute the minor offence intended to be substituted. B

Thus in this case for the appellant to be convicted under section 273(b) the prosecution must prove, inter alia, that he came into possession of the alleged stolen property as an C agent of either real owner or special owner. But this requirement is not part of the essential constituents of the offence under section 271. Thus a proof of the offence under section 271 does not necessarily notify the accused of the essential elements of the offence under section 273(b). For this reason the purported substituted conviction in this case is not sustainable. D

After hearing this appeal, I quashed the conviction and set aside the sentence; and ordered for the immediate release of the accused.

The said order was made for the reasons contained in this judgment.

E Appeal allowed.

1983 TLR p344

F

[zRPz]E.M.H. CHACHA T/A MWANZA MECHANICAL ENGINEERING v KATIBU WA WILAYA MAGU AND CHAMA CHA MAPINDUZI MAGU 1983 TLR 344 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Lawena DR - Taxing Master

June 13, 1985

CIVIL CASE 50 OF 1983 G

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Costs - Taxation of - Costs incidental to suit - Whether include damages and interest.

-Headnote

The petitioner presented a bill of costs amounting to Shs.39,269/50 for taxation after he H had successfully sued the respondents jointly. Among the items in the bill was a claim for damages incurred due to stoppage of a cheque drawn by the respondents in favour of the petitioner and a prayer for interest at the court's rate. I

Held: (i) Costs claimed in a case must be costs incidental to the suit; loss and damage incurred does not fall within this category and neither does interest. A

Case Information

Order accordingly.

No cases referred to. B

[zJDz]Judgment

Lawena, D.R. (Taxing Master): This is a taxation of the successful petitioner's bill of costs. The bill of costs was filed by the plaintiff Mr. E.M. Chacha for and on behalf of Mwanza Mechanical Engineering. During the hearing of this bill of costs the defendant was not present though he was served with the notice. C

There are 8 items in the bill of costs which make a total of Shs. 39,269.50. The judgment-creditor prayed that the bill of costs be taxed as presented. He claimed that after the judgment had been passed in his favour, he approached the defendants on several occasions so that they could pay him his money. D

Concerning item 1 which were court fees the plaintiff had to pay in opening the suit, I had nothing against it as it was the right of the plaintiff. I will thus tax the same as presented. E

Under item 3 the plaintiff stated that the amount was for transport charges to and from Court on 9 various occasions at the rate of Shs. 500/= per trip. He stated that he used to travel from Mwanza South to this court and after the case he returned to his office. I have deeply considered the amount claimed and no one can doubt that it is excessive. Even if one could hire a taxi to and from the court the amount per trip could not reach F the amount claimed by the plaintiff. I have perused the record and I admit that the plaintiff made the 9 trips as indicated in the bill of costs. The plaintiff has not presented any receipts to support his claim. In any case I would think that Shs. 100/= to and from the court would be a reasonable amount as a transport charge. I thus take off Shs. G 3,600/= from item No. 3 and allow Shs. 900/= which I think is reasonable.

In the same manner in item 6 the plaintiff claims Shs. 5,600/= as transport charges to and from Magu and accommodation expenses in response to the defendant's letter. Again as I stated above the plaintiff never presented any receipts to support his claims. The only H supporting document the plaintiff has filed is a photocopy which indicates that he was called by the defendants for the settlement of the debt. However the plaintiff has failed to prove for how long he stayed at Magu. Thus this court has not been provided with some evidence to allow the costs. Thus the whole amount is taxed off. I

In item No. 7 the plaintiff is claiming for loss and/or damages incurred due to the stoppage of the cheque. It has always been held that costs claimed in a case A must be costs incidental to the suit. The loss and or damage incurred does not fall under that head and cannot be entertained in this taxation of bill of costs. This argument would also apply in item No. 8 where the plaintiff prays for interest at court rates. I thus tax off items No. 7 and No. 8 as they are not costs incidental to this suit. B

Having so held as above this bill of costs is taxed at Shs. 2,926/=.

Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p346

C

[zRPz]JULIUS PETRO v COSMAS RAPHAEL 1983 TLR 346 (CA)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Bukoba

Judge Mwalusanya J

October 17, 1985 D

(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 81 OF 1983

Flynote

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal from Primary Court - Whether Civil Procedure Code Act No. 49 of 1966 applies - R. 2 Civil Procedure (Appeal in Proceedings originating from E Primary Courts) Rules G.N. 312 of 1964.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal from Primary Court - Appearance by "public writer" F - Whether "agent" - R. 2 G.N. 312 of 1964.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Appeal from Primary Court - Appearance by "public writer" as "Recognized agent" - Whether proper - S. 33 Magistrates' Courts Act No. 1 of 1984 and O. III r. 2 C.P.C.

Civil Practice and Procedure - Recognized agent - Appearance by - Agent appears for G remuneration - Whether recognized agent ss. 41(1) and 70 Advocates' Ordinance Cap. 341 and O. III r. 2 C.P.C.

Evidence - Child born 7 months after father's death - Father cohabited with mother - Whether child legitimate.

Inheritance - Wills - Testator indicated wanted car to be sold - Order for sale - Some H beneficiaries don't want sale - Whether order for sale can be rescinded.

-Headnote

The appellant had instituted a suit against the administrator of the estate of his deceased father in the Primary Court. In the Primary Court and subsequently on appeal to the I District Court he appeared by a "Public writer", whom he had appointed as his attorney relying on the fact that the Civil Procedure Code allowed an appearance by a "Recognized" Agent. A Subsequently on a further appeal to the High Court the public writer sought to appear on behalf of the Appellant. Also, he argued that his half-brother who was born 7 months after their father's death was illegitimate and therefore not entitled to a share in the deceased's estate. B

1983 TLR p347

MWALISAMYA J

Held: (i) The word "relative" as used under section 33 of the Magistrates' Courts Act should be restricted to near relatives; likewise, "members of the household" should be interpreted ejusdem generis to mean related members of the household; the definition of the word "relative" would not be extended to include a person who works for gain under C the title of "public writer" or "recognised agent" but is not whatsoever related by blood to any of his clients;

(ii) section 33 of the Magistrates' Courts Act governs appearances on behalf of the parties at the Primary Courts and District Courts (when hearing Appeals) only but D not the High Court; appearances in the High Court have to be made either by the parties themselves or their advocates only and not "agents",

(iii) the Civil Procedure Code Act No. 498 of 1966 does not apply to the High Court when hearing appeals originating from Primary Courts. It applies to the High Court, Resident Magistrates' Court and District Courts when they exercise original civil E jurisdiction and also applies when the High Court hears appeals originating from the District Court or Resident Magistrates' Court;

(iv) appearance by a recognised agent who works for gain by dint of agency is expressly prohibited by s. 41(1) of the Advocate's Ordinance; also, section 70 of the F Advocate's Ordinance implies that representation on behalf of the parties is not prohibited altogether but permitted in certain circumstances only; these are given under s. 33 of the Magistrates' Courts Act and in respect of the Civil Procedure Code, where a "genuine" recognized agent represents a party in a suit; and not a professional agent who G makes his living by representing clients in court;

(v) where a child is born during wedlock or during 280 days after the death of the husband, there is a rebuttable presumption that such child is legitimate;

(vi) the testator's desire as expressed in the will has to be complied with. H

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No cases referred to. I

1983 TLR p348

MWALISAMYA J

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwalusanya, J.: Perhaps in this appeal for the sake of convenience I will start with the A issue of representation of parties in our courts. That is, apart from an advocate by whom is a party allowed or permitted to be represented in court - at the trial and on appeal? There appears to be a misapprehension on the matter or is it a deliberate B flouting of the law? This is because one Leopold s/o Rwizandekwa a known public writer in Bukoba wrote a letter addressed to a judge seeking adjournment on behalf of the appellant in this appeal. He said he would represent the appellant at the hearing of the appeal as he did at the District Court 'as a recognised agent'. When I questioned C him a few days later he told me that that is how he makes a living. In short he masquerades as an advocate for a number of poor peasants whom he milks for all their worth under the veneer of 'recognised agent' of the said litigants.

In the case of Felician Evarister v Bi Dominitina Kaijage: (MZA) (PC) Civil Appeal D No. 98/1982 (unreported) I had occasion, though briefly, to deprecate the practice of 'public writers' or 'recognised agents' whatever the nomenclature, who represent parties in court for gain and I described it as a 'sordid' practice. I wish to reiterate that view and dispel any wrong impressions that these characters may be harbouring. E

At the District Court the public writer presented an affidavit duly stamped and attested before a magistrate to the effect that the appellant Julius s/o Petro by virtue of Rule 2 of the Civil Procedure (Appeals in Proceedings Originating from Primary Courts) Rules G.N. 312/1964 had appointed Leopold s/o Rwizandekwe as his 'recognised agent' for F the purpose of representing him on appeal at the District Court and other High Courts. And so the man purported to represent the appellant at the district Court and High Court not because he was a relative of the appellant but because he was a 'recognised agent' for the same.

Now Rule 2 of G.N. 312/1964 defines what the word 'agent' means. It says that agent G means an advocate or any person who according to s. 29 of the Magistrates Court Act Cap. 537 is permitted to appear and act for any party in a suit.

And s. 29 of the M.C.A. Cap. 537 states as follows: H

(1) No advocate or public prosecutor as such may appear or act for any party in a Primary Court.

(2) Subject to the provisions of subsection (1) and (3) of this section and to any rules of court relating to the representation of parties, a Primary Court may I permit any relative or any member of the household of any party to any proceeding of a civil nature, upon the request of such party, to appear and act for such party. A

(3) In any proceeding in a Primary Court to which a body corporate rate is a party (including proceedings of a criminal nature) a person in the employment of the body corporate and duly authorised in that behalf, other than an advocate, may appear and act on behalf of that party. B

I think it is clear so far that any one purporting to appear on behalf of a party either at the Primary Court or at the District Court (When hearing of appeals), must cite s. 29 of the MCA Cap. 537 as his authority for the same. Neither does Rule 2 of G.N. 312/64 C nor s. 29(2) of the MCA Cap. 537 use the phrase 'recognised agent' which indeed is an innovation of the public writer. Under s. 29(2) of MCA Cap. 537 a party can only be represented by 'any relative or any member of his or her household'. As to what is 'relative' it is not defined but I would settle for the definition given by the Concise D Oxford Dictionary 5th Ed. (1975) that a relative is a kinsman or kinswoman to whom one is related by blood or marriage. At least there should be closeness of blood relationship. On the principle of ejusdem generis rule of interpretation the word 'relative' should be restricted to near relatives not distant relatives, so that we do not venture very E far from related members of the household contained on the second part of that phrase.

And in any case by any stretch of imagination the definition of the word 'relative', though nebulous, would not be extended to include a person who works for gain under the title of 'public writer' or 'recognised agent' but is not whatsoever related by blood to any of F his clients.

Under the new Magistrates' Court Act No. 2 of 1984 the provisions of s. 29 of the former MCA Cap. 537 are now contained in identical form in section 33. So what I have just tried to expound above applies with equal force to the new Act. G

It needs repeating for the sake of emphasis that s. 29 of MCA Cap. 537 (s. 33 of the new Act) governs appearances on behalf of the parties at the Primary Courts and District Courts (When hearing Appeals) only but not the High Court. So the public writer was wrong to think that the same section applies for appearances on behalf of parties at the High Court. H

For the High Court appearances on behalf of the parties for appeals originating from the Primary Courts, the governing section is s. 30(1)(a) of MCA Cap. 537 (for the new Act it is s.34(1)(a)). The section in question reads; I

1983 TLR p350

MWALISAMYA J

(1) Save where an appeal is summarily rejected by the High Court, a court to which an A appeal lies under this Part shall cause notice of the time and place at which the appeal will be heard to be given.

(a) to the parties or their advocates'. B

That is the only section applicable in case of the High Court. As it can be seen for any one with eyes to see, the section talks of parties and advocates only. It is only through courtesy that sometimes relatives or agents of the parties are allowed to appear at the High Court on behalf of the parties. No one can claim that it is a right. C

Elsewhere the public writer has argued that he thought the Civil Procedure Code Act No. 49 of 1966 was applicable to the High Court when hearing appeals originating from Primary Courts. If it was applicable then he said he thought he could appear on behalf of the parties, so long as he holds their power of attorney, under Order 3 Rule 2 of the D Civil Procedure Code which reads:

'(2) The recognized agents of parties by whom such appearances, applications and acts may be made or done are:

(a) persons holding powers - of - attorney, authorizing them to make and do such E appearance, applications and acts on behalf of such parties'.

Now I am starting to solve the jigsaw puzzle as I can now imagine where the public F writer derived the title of 'recognised agent' which he is indiscriminately using. It is from the above quoted section.

For one thing let it be made clear that the Civil Procedure Code Act No. 49 of 1966 does not apply to the High Court when hearing appeals originating from Primary Courts. The Act No. 49 of 1966 applies to the High Court, R.M.'s Court and District Court G when they exercise original civil jurisdiction and also applies when the High Court hears appeals originating from the District Court or R.M.'s Court. So the public writer is wrong to assume that the Civil Procedure Code is of universal application by the High Court. H

Even where the Civil Procedure Code is applicable it is doubtful if Order 3 Rule 2 would cover persons like the public writer who makes his living or makes it a profession to appear in court on behalf of the parties. That is why Order 3 Rule 1 state that: I

Any appearance by a party in court, may be made by his recognised agent, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force. A

It is submitted that appearance by a recognised agent who works for gain by dint of that agency is expressly prohibited by s. 41(1) of the Advocates Ordinance Cap. 341 which reads: B

'No unqualified person shall act as an advocate or agent for suitors or defend any action, suit or other proceeding in the name of any other person, in any court of civil or criminal jurisdiction or act as an advocate in any cause or matter, civil or criminal'. C

And those who violate such provision are liable for prosecution under s. 41(2) of the Advocates Ordinance.

In the same breath s. 70 of the Advocates Ordinance cannot come to the rescue of public writers either, for the reasons to be given hereunder. That section reads: D

'Nothing in this Ordinance shall prejudice or affect:

(a) the provisions of any other law empowering any person not being an advocate, to conduct, defend or otherwise act in relation to any proceedings'. E

My understanding of this section (if you assign some meaning to the preceding section of s. 41) is that representation on behalf of the parties is not prohibited altogether but permitted in certain circumstances only and these are firstly as given under s. 29 of M.C.A. Cap. 537 (now s. 33 of the New Act); and secondly in respect of Civil F Procedure Code where a 'genuine' recognised agent represents a party in a suit and I use the word 'genuine' advisedly as I exclude a professional agent who makes his living by representing clients in court. It is these professional agents that s 41(1) of the Advocates Ordinance had in mind. The long arm of the law should not spare them G under the subsequent sub-section.

It is for the reasons stated that I denied audience to the 'recognised agent' to appear before me. No doubt these public writers provide useful 'secretarial services' to clients and for that I have no quarrel. They should be confined to desk work. They should H leave alone the legal profession, as it is a science for which they have not been trained. Lord Denning that eminent English jurist states in his book, The Road to Justice (1955) p.24:

'The law is a science which requires long study and experience before a man attains I proficiency in it; and the ordinary citizen cannot properly put his arguments before the judge except with the assistance of a trained lawyer'. A

And that is not the only admonition we have on the subject. We read in Boswell, Life of Johnson Vol. 5 pp. 28-29; also quoted in Sconavala on 'Advocacy' 2nd Ed. at p. 921 that: B

'As it rarely happens that a man is fit to plead his own cause, lawyers are a class of the community, who by study and experience, have acquired the art and power of arranging evidence and of applying to the points at issue that the law has to settle. A lawyer is to do for C his client all his client might fairly do for himself, if he could. If by superiority of attention, of knowledge, of skill and a better method of communication, he has advantage to which he is entitled'. D

It is therefore wrong to regard the legal profession as for dishonest people as that English novelist Jonathan Swift had once in light mood commented:

'Lawyers are a society of men ... bred up from their youth in the art of proving by words, E multiplied for the purpose ... and a jargon of their own that no other mortal can understand that white is black and black is white according as they are paid'.

It is only hoped that those engaged in the crusade to soil the legal profession in one way F or the other will desist.

Fortunately in the appeal at hand the appellant was personally served with notice of date of hearing. He failed to appear and the appeal was heard in his absence. Concerning the merits of this appeal the appellant is crossing swords with the administrator of the G deceased's estate the respondent Cosmas Raphael, that he distributed the deceased's estate rather haphazardly. The deceased was the father of the appellant and appellant is the principal heir. However I note that most of the points raised are devoid of merit as they were adequately disposed of by either the trial court or the District Court. H

Perhaps the only point of significance is whether the courts below were right to hold that the child Kashangaki was legitimate and therefore entitled to a share of inheritance form the estate of their deceased father. The appellant concedes that Kashangaki's mother was married to the deceased and were cohabiting together. But he says that I Kashangaki was born seven months after his father's death and so he cannot be legitimate - he is 'mwana wa bisisi'. Well I cannot agree. According to para 140 of A Cory & Hartnoll on Haya Customary Law 'Children born in wedlock belong under all circumstances to their father and are his heirs'. And s. 175 of the Customary Law Declaration GN. 279/63 is to the same effect. However under the rules of evidence, the period of wedlock includes a period of 280 days after the death of the husband. So B the position is such that where a child is born during wedlock or during 280 days after death of the husband, there is a rebuttable presumption that such child is legitimate. In this case no evidence was adduced in rebuttal. So obviously the child Kashangaki is legitimate and is entitled to a share of inheritance. C

I note from the court record that both courts below ordered that appellant be given the keys of the motor-car and garage and that he could look after the shamba of his brother John Peter if he wanted to. The complaints in respect of those matters are therefore unfounded and are accordingly dismissed. About a room that had been used by Rose, D appellant says it has not been handed over to him. But this is a completely new matter that had not been raised in both courts below, and so it cannot be a subject-matter of adjudication at this late stage.

Both courts below ordered that the motor-car be sold and the proceeds be distributed among the heirs as directed by the will. In the memo of appeal the appellant complains E as to why the motor-car has to be sold. But that is in accordance with the 'WILL'. If he and his full brothers want to retain the motor-car then let the matter revert to the family council for change of decision to see if the female heir members and Kashangaki can be compensated with some money by those who want to retain the vehicle. F Otherwise the order of sale will stand.

That disposes of all the main points of appeal raised. In substance the appeal has failed. I accordingly dismiss it with costs.

G Appeal dismissed.

1983 TLR p354

A

[zRPz]BUNZARI MPIGUZI v LUMWECHA MASHILI 1983 TLR 354 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Katiti J

October 14, 1985

(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 207 OF 1982

Flynote

Land Law - Land allocation - Village Council allocated land - Whether Council has such B power - S. 195 Local Government (District Authorities) Act 1982.

Constitutional Law - Village Council reallocates land - Destruction of crops belonging to former user - Whether user entitled to compensation from the Council - Fourth C Constitutional Amendment 1984.

-Headnote

The village Council of Kijuka village allocated land which was already occupied and used by the respondent to one Maduka s/o Mahushi. The latter destroyed crops which D had been planted by the former and planted his own crops on the land. The respondent sued the appellant in his capacity as chairman of the village council for compensation for the destruction of his crop.

Held: (i) The new allocatee was entitled to uproot the crops he thought were not useful E to him; it was the Village Council which caused the destruction of the respondent's crops;

(ii) section 24 of the Fourth Constitutional Amendment Act 1984 unequivocally provides that nobody should be deprived of his property contrary to law and without F compensation commensurate to the value of such property if such deprivation is necessary.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No cases referred to. G

[zJDz]Judgment

Katiti, J.: Lumwecha Mashili, hence to be referred to as the respondent, filed an action in Kasenyi Primary Court Sengerema, against Bunzari Mpiguze, hence the appellant, in his capacity as the chairman of Kijuka village, claiming Shs. 1,000/= the alleged value of H the crops, that were allegedly destroyed, as a result of the re-allocation of the same land he had hitherto been cultivating to one Maduka s/o Mahushi, who uprooted the same and planted his own crops. The Primary Court gave verdict against the respondent, arguing that after all, the appellant was not personally involved in the I uprooting of the said crops. The respondent, dissatisfied, appealed to the District Court which held that since it was the village authority which did allocate the land knowing fully well A that the same land had been under use by the respondent, it must be held liable for compensation for crops damaged as a result thereof. The District Court upheld the respondent's claim and hence this appeal.

1983 TLR p355

KATITI J

In the direction for disposal of this appeal, I shall first go by the undisputed and the B unchallenged. In the year 1980, DW.3 Maduka s/o Mahushi approached the village Council of Kijuka village for allocation of land for use and continued agricultural purposes. The Village Council dutifully obliged, and allocated a piece of land to DW.3. Maduka s/o Mahushi who began clearing and cultivating the same. The respondent had C hitherto been using the same said piece of land. The respondent, upon discovering what DW.3 Maduka s/o Mahushi was doing, became angry alleging that his crops had been uprooted and destroyed by the donee of the same land, and so sought Shs. 1,000/= as compensation for the same from the Village Council that allocated the same. D Having studied the record, it does appear that while the foundation of the claim is clear cut, the defence does seem to admit to having allocated the same land to DW.3 although claiming at the same time that DW.3 was not allowed to uproot the respondent's crops. And yet in the memo of appeal, the appellant comes up with a surprise, averring that the land allocated was empty land. To avoid narrowing my view E of the case, and with the uncontrovertible fact that the same said piece of land was allocated to DW.3, I shall allow myself to entertain five broad issues namely:

(1) Whether the piece of land had hitherto been under use by the respondent. F

(2) Whether the same piece of land had been planted with crops.

(3) Whether upon allocation of the same to DW.3, such crops were uprooted, or otherwise destroyed and,

(4) Whether the Village Government is liable to pay the compensation claimed. G

(5) If issue (4) is positive what reliefs is the respondent entitled to, if at all? I shall deal with the above issues seriatim. The first issue does on the record qualify for a positive and affirmative answer without qualification, for apart from the H generality of the evidence by the respondent, the appellant, whether unwittingly or because of desire to tell the truth, does admit that not only had the respondent hitherto and before been using the said shamba, but also that the said shamba had been planted with potatoes and cassava at the time of the I allocation of the same to DW.3, in as few words as follows:

1983 TLR p356

KATITI J

"Maduka Mahushi aling'oa viazi na mihogo yako kwa nguvu zake tu bila kibali changu A wala Kamati ya Ugawaji".

From the above, I would prefer not to beat about the bush in the direction of answering issue No. 1 and No. 2, for it does unequivocally appear that when the re-allocation of this piece of shamba to DW. 3 by the Village Council was done, the appellant and B associates well knew that the respondent had been using this land and had by then and currently planted potatoes and cassava. It does appear to me from the above that the affirmative answers in so far as issues (1) and (2) are concerned are as natural as are day and night. The appellant cannot be now heard to say that the land was empty. C

Whether the potatoes and cassava crops were destroyed does quickly then arise. The answer is not difficult to come by. I shall not go by the evidence of the respondent personally, which in any case is that the same crops were destroyed, for that apart, D P.W.2 Lubinza s/o Kiyeji ardently and succinctly says and I quote:

"Maduka Mahushi aling'oa mihogo ya mdai na akapanda mihogo yake". E

It could and may easily be observed that this excerpt from the evidence of PW. 2, does not in any way differ from what the appellant said in the excerpt I have above associated with him. From the above I find myself treading on a road and I consider it very safe to conclude that indeed the respondent's crops were uprooted and destroyed by DW.3, F the donee or allocatee of the same land or shamba. The third issue does therefore qualify for an affirmative answer, which is hereby accordingly accorded.

The respondent charges the Village/Chairman with liability to compensate him Shs. 1,000/= for the crop destruction - and hence the issue whether the Village Government, whose Chairman is now its representative, is liable to pay such compensation. In G attempts to solve this, I feel obliged to make concessions about the legal reality that obtained then and is now obtaining. Under the Villages and Ujamaa Villages (Reg. Desg. and adm.) Act No. 21 of 1975, in particular under the provisions of section 12 of H the said Act, the Village Council in allocating land was exercising its legal executive powers within the perimeters and boundaries of its Village. So that it is an undisputable legal position that land allocation to Villagers in this case fell within the bounds of such executive powers. As of now although the Villages and Ujamaa Villagers (Registration, I Designation and Administration) Act 1975 under which the Village allocated the land has been repealed by section 195 of the Local

1983 TLR p357

KATITI J

Government (District Authorities) Act No. 1982, the provisions of Section 12 of the A Villages and Ujamaa Villages (Registration, designation and administration) Act 1975, have been re-enacted with little and in-consequential variations under section 142 of the Local Government

(District Authorities) Act 1982 - retaining and maintaining the supreme executive powers of the Village Council. B

Now to return to the relevant point, when the Village Council of Kijuka Village was allocating the land to Maduka s/o Mahushi, it was exercising powers legally conferred upon it by law. That may be fine. But the Village Council allocated land that was already in use by the respondent, who as it has above been shown, had already invested his sweat therein. And of course, Maduka s/o Mahushi, DW.3 having been allocated land C for agricultural purposes, it was not for him to begin constituting a commission of inquiry to establish who the owner of the land so allocated could be. He was I think entitled to presume that the Village Council knew better that the land in question had incumbent claimant or not. And once he was in occupation the said Maduka Mahushi D DW.3 was entitled to make use of the land so allocated in the fashion and manner consistent with land use. He was entitled to up-root crops he thought were not useful to him and this he did. From the above I would confidently conclude, that causatively it was the Village Council that led to the destruction of the respondent's crops. E

Was the respondent to be compensated and by whom is the fourth issue. This question I dare say is only rhetorically posed, for our jurisprudence does tenderly nurse the concept that "all men have a right to receive" a just return for their labours "or a just F compensation for labour rendered". See the Union Constitution of Tanzania - Act 43/1975 then, - See also the case of Laiton Kingala v Musa Bariti [1975] L.R.T. No. 40. And I think it is not irrelevant to add, that now vide the provision of Section 24 of the Fourth Constitutional Amendment Act 1984, it is articulated with emphasis and G unequivocally that nobody should be deprived of his property contrary to law and without payment of compensation commensurate to the value of such property if such deprivation is necessary. Although the Fourth Constitutional amendment Act 1984, is a H recent arrival, the concept contained therein, is as above shown not as recent an arrival as the Fourth Constitutional Amendment. The Village Council, it is my conclusion, having deprived the respondent of his shamba, and since admittedly the respondent had invested his sweat and labour therein, the Village Council that causatively occasioned the destruction of crops, has to compensate the respondent. As the quantum of compensation has not been contested the same amount is allowed. I

1983 TLR p3587

The appeal is dismissed with costs. A

Appeal dismissed.

1983 TLR p358

B

[zRPz]MBARAKA WILLIAM v ADAMU KISSUTE AND ANOTHER 1983 TLR 358 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza

Judge Mushi J

July 27, 1984 C

CIVIL APPEAL 42 OF 1981

Flynote

Torts - Malicious prosecution - Honest belief - Effect of.

Torts - Damages - Assessment - Grounds for interference by appellate court. D

-Headnote

The appellant was successfully sued for malicious prosecution by the two respondents. The case arose out of a report by the appellant to the police that the respondents had threatened to kill him which is an offence under section 89(2) of the Penal Code. As a E result of this report the respondents were arrested and charged but were set free. In a suit for malicious prosecution the respondents were awarded Shs. 10,000/=. On appeal to the High Court,

Held: (i) In a case of malicious prosecution the most important consideration to be made F is whether there was an honest belief in the words or report which formed the basis for the malicious prosecution;

(ii) in order for an appellate court to interfere with an award of damages by a lower court it must be shown that the trial magistrate acted on wrong principles or that G the amount was too excessive in the circumstances.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

No case referred to. H

[zJDz]Judgment

Mushi, J.: The appellant, Mbaraka William was successfully sued for malicious prosecution by the two respondents, Adamu Kissute who shall be referred to as first respondent and Dickson Okulu who shall be referred to as second respondent. The I appellant was ordered to pay Shs. 5,000/= to each of the respondent as general damages. The appellant was not satisfied with the decision and he has appealed to this A court. In the District Court, the respondents had claimed that the appellant had falsely and maliciously reported to the Police Musoma that the respondents together had threatened to kill him which is an offence punishable under Section 89(2) of the Penal Code. They B further claimed that as result of the false report, the police arrested and charged the respondents in Musoma Urban Primary Court in Criminal Case No. 130/79 but the respondents were acquitted. The respondents claimed that by reason of the appellant's act, they were seriously and gravely injured in their reputation, credit and character and have suffered pain of body and mind and have been brought to public scandal, odium C and contempt. As a result, the respondents claimed Shs. 19,000/= as general damages. The trial magistrate found that the report which was made to the police by the appellant was without reasonable and probable cause. The respondents were awarded a total of Shs. 10,000/= as general damages. D

The appellant's memorandum of appeal contain six grounds but apart from ground number six which refers to the amount of damages, I consider grounds number three and five to adequately cover the points or points in dispute. I reproduce here grounds No. 3 and 5 which read: E

"Ground No. 3 - That the applicant's complaint or report to the Police was made honestly and in a good faith and without any malice. Therefore learned Magistrate erred in finding that the F report of the applicant to the Police was defamatory of the respondents and that the occasion was not privileged and that the report was motivated by some indirect and malicious intent. G

"Ground No. 5 - That the respondents were arrested put in the Police lock-up, and later charged by the Police before the Musoma Urban Court while they were executing their normal duties to detect crimes as testified by one of the plaintiffs/respondents witness one Lazaro Milobo (PW 2)". H

It is not in dispute that the appellant made a report to the police to the effect that the respondents were threatening to kill the appellant.

It is also not disputed that the police after receiving the report, arrested the respondents and charged them with the offence of Abusive language and brawling and threatening I violence.

1983 TLR p360

MUSHI J

It is also not disputed that the respondents were acquitted after a full trial. A

The law on this issue is as stated on page 219 and 218 of Gatley on Libel and Slander sixth edition. On page 219 it states:

"It is a settled rule or principle of law that where an individual gives information or makes a B statement to an officer of the law, whose duty is to detect and prosecute criminals, to the effect that someone has committed a crime, such information or statement has the protection of privilege. This is so in the best interests of society, and the repression of crime could not C otherwise be enforced".

And on page 218 it says:

"When it comes to the knowledge of anyone that a crime has been committed, a duty is laid on D that person, as a citizen of the country, to state to the authorities what he knows respecting the commission of the crime, and if he states only what he knows and honestly believes, (emphasis is mine) he cannot be subjected to an action of damages merely because it turns out that the person as to whom he has given information is, after all, not guilty of the crime" E

In this case the most important point for consideration is whether the appellant honestly believed that the respondents were planning and uttering threats to kill him. An answer to this can only be ascertained from the evidence and the circumstances surrounding the F whole case. Now under what circumstances did the appellant report the matter of the alleged threats to kill to the police? The appellant's statement as to how he came to report the matter is contained in his short evidence in which he said and I quote: G

"I remember on 22/2/79 at about 2.00 a.m. the plaintiff came to my house, he made arrangements with one Mgine who opened the door. He said Mgine had earlier informed me that the plaintiffs were intending to kill me because I had instituted a case against them where H I was claiming a large sum of money. By this the partnership business was found running into problems and there was a case pending in court. They talked with the said Mgine for quite long but their plan was foiled when they heard people coming to the mosque. The following day I got the whole story from the said Mgine. The following day I reported the matter I to the police and the plaintiffs were arrested and charged".

1983 TLR p361

MUSHI J

According to P.W. 1 - Lazaro who was the police officer to whom the appellant A reported, the report was made on 22/2/79 and the respondents were arrested and charged on 23/2/79. From the time lapse, it appears that the police did not conduct its own investigations into the allegations. The police must have taken the appellant's word and trusted that it was true and prosecuted the respondents. The police were entitled to B act on the word of the appellant as they would have no cause to think that the report was false and actuated by malice against the respondents. This was particularly so because the alleged threat was made to the appellant himself.

From the evidence, the appellant claimed that the respondents went to the premises C where he lived and had intended to harm him had it not been for the people who were going to mosque for prayers. According to the appellant the respondents had made arrangements with one Mama Mgine and that it was this Mama Mgine who informed the appellant about the whole plan. This is to say that this information that the respondents D had uttered threats that they would kill the appellant, was not from the appellant's own knowledge. From the evidence Mgine was the source of the information. She was the one who talked and with whom the respondents had planned to kill the appellant. Her E evidence was most important. The appellant could not expect his evidence to have any base without the evidence of Mgine who, according to him was the source of the information. Failure to call this woman as a witness, clearly shows that what the appellant was saying was mere fabrication just to get the respondents into unnecessary F trouble. It is on the evidence of Mgine that the court could decide whether the appellant honestly believed the truth of what he was told and whether his honest belief was founded on some sort of reasonable basis. For if the appellant's belief is so groundless, the court may come to the conclusion that the appellant did not honestly believe the G statement to be true. In this case the appellant has to show that he honestly believed both what he told the police and by reporting to the police what in all probability appear to be mere fabrication, he was actuated by nothing else except malice against the respondents. The appellant had no reasonable or probable cause for making the report. H As the appellant himself stated, he had filed a suit against the respondents concerning some partnership property. They were not on good terms. It is quite possible that the appellant did not wish the respondents to continue running the partnership business. It can not therefore be said that the learned trial magistrate was wrong in finding that the I appellant's complaint to the police was baseless and that it was maliciously made. The respondents were entitled to damages. As to the complaint that the amount of Shs. A 15,000/= awarded to both respondents is excessive, the appellant has not shown that the learned trial magistrate acted on wrong principles or indeed the amount is too excessive taking into account the whole claim. I would dismiss the appeal with costs to the respondents.

1983 TLR p362

B Appeal dismissed.

1983 TLR p362

C

[zRPz]MATIKU BWANA v MATIKU KWIKUBYA AND ANOTHER 1983 TLR 362 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Mushi J

July 16, 1984
CIVIL APPEAL 16 OF 1982 D
Flynote
Torts - Physical injury - Fracture - Assessment of damages -Grounds for interference by an appellate court.
-Headnote
The appellant had suffered a simple fracture of the ulna of his left hand as a result of an E assault by the respondent. He successfully instituted civil proceedings and was awarded Shs. 2,000/= as general damages. He appealed to the High Court on the ground that the amount was inadequate.
Held: (i) An appellate court will normally not interfere with a trial court's assessment of F damages unless it is shown that the trial court acted on wrong principles such as not taking relevant facts into account or taking irrelevant facts into account resulting in an unjust decision.
Case Information
Appeal dismissed. G
Case referred to:

1. Mantage and Another v Mwita [1971] H.C.D. n. 110.

[zJDz]Judgment
Mushi, J.: The appellant, Matiku Bwana, successfully instituted proceedings in the H District Court for damages against the respondents, Matiku Kwikubya 1st respondent, and Mubaraka Essore - 2nd respondent and was awarded Shs. 2,000/= as damages. The appellant had asked for Shs. 8,000/=. He is appealing against the award of Shs. 2,000/= on the grounds it appears, that it is inadequate. I
Reading the memorandum of appeal carefully I find grounds No. 1
1983 TLR p363
MUSHI J
and 8 to cover the issues raised and for convenience I reproduce grounds No. 1 and 8 A here:

"1. That the learned trial magistrate erred in assessing the compensation to be awarded to the appellant.

2. That award of compensation of Shs. 2,000/= by the lower court is a little amount in B regard to the permanent incapacity of the appellant's broken hand which he can no longer use in his daily cultivation on which he depends".

The claim arose from an assault on the appellant which resulted in a simple fracture of C the ulna of the left hand. The appellant also suffered some other pains as he says he was also struck with a stick on the back. The appellant therefore filed a suit against the respondents for general damages for permanent incapacity of the left hand; injuries in the chest; pain and loss of blood. For all of them he claimed Shs. 8,000/=. I will dispose of D ground No. 8 which alleges permanent incapacity of the appellants hand. There is no evidence at all to support the allegation that the appellant suffered permanent incapacity and that the hand can no longer be used in shamba work. The appellant in his evidence did not at all state that he could never use his hand again. He simply said that he could E not perform heavy duties. Apart from the general allegation that he could not perform heavy duties, there was no other evidence medical or otherwise from which such inference could have been inferred. Medical evidence could only be gathered from the criminal record in which the respondents had been charged and convicted. The P.F. 3 F shows that the appellant suffered a simple fracture and that he was put on a P.O.P. for eight weeks. In the absence of any other evidence to the contrary, it is only fair to assume the appellant's hand has properly healed. Ground No. 8 therefore fails in its entirety as there was no evidence on record to support it. G

I now turn to the ground No. 1 that the learned trial magistrate erred in assessing the amount of damages. This allegation must be viewed against the background on the part of the appellant that he was under wrong impression that he should be seen to have suffered permanent incapacity a fact which I have already dealt with. The assessment H must be based on a simple fracture which the appellant suffered. The question is whether on the facts of this case, it can be said that the award of Shs. 2,000/= is manifestly inadequate or that the award was based on wrong principles.

This court will not normally interfere with the trial court's assessment of damages unless it I is shown that the trial court acted on wrong principles such as not taking relevant facts into account or took irrelevant facts into account resulting into reaching an unjust decision. Or if the court acted according to the A principles taking into account all the relevant factors, all in all the award is manifestly inadequate. The appellant has not shown in any way that the trial magistrate acted on wrong principles nor is there any evidence that the award is manifestly inadequate. There is nothing on the record either which shows the existence of any facts which B establish the breach of the two principles above.

It is the law that damages must be awarded to adequately cover loss directly arising from the act complained of and reasonably foreseeable. In this case, the facts were simple. The appellant was assaulted during which he sustained a simple fracture of the left hand C which healed after 8 weeks. There is no evidence that the appellant suffered any special damage or loss as a result of sustaining the fracture, other than the fact that the appellant suffered pain and suffering as a result of fractured arm.

The appellant stated that since the fracture of the arm he has been receiving treatment at the hospital as an out patient. There was no documentary evidence to support this D allegation and even if there was, still a further question would be asked as to whether the treatment was directly related to the injuries caused by the act of the respondents. The trial magistrate was therefore restricted in his assessment of damages to the sufferings E and pain resulting from the fractured hand. In his considered view taking all factors into consideration Shs. 2,000/= would adequately compensate the appellant. I found no ground to fault him. In the case of Mantage and Chacha v Mwita, [1971] H.C.D. 110, the appellants were ordered to pay Shs. 3,500/= as general damages for assault F resulting in fracture of the arm of the respondent. On appeal it was found that the respondent's hand had fully healed although the alignment was affected. It was also not established that the respondent could not make use of his hand permanently. Neither did other blows leave any permanent defects on the body. The High Court under the circumstances found that the amount of Shs. 3,500/= as general damages was excessive G and reduced it to Shs. 1,600/=. While each case must be taken on its facts and circumstances the facts of the above quoted case and the one on appeal are not different. The respondent had been prosecuted and sentenced to eight months each and ordered compensation of Shs. 200/= each which make total compensation to Shs. H 2,400/=. It is on record that the parties in this appeal are related. From what I have stated above, I am not satisfied that the trial magistrate erred in assessing the amount of damages. The award was reasonable in the circumstances. The appeal is dismissed. Each party to bear his costs of this appeal.

I Appeal dismissed.

1983 TLR p365

A

[zRPz]ERIZEUS RUTAKUBWA v JASON ANGERO 1983 TLR 365 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Bukoba

Judge Mwalusanya J

September 28, 1985

(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 183 OF 1983

Flynote

Limitation - Redemption of land held under customary law - Sale made 10 years before B institution of suit - Whether time barred - Customary Law (Limitation of Proceedings) Rules G.N. 311 of 1964 and s. 50 Law of Limitation Act.

-Headnote

The respondent had filed a suit for redemption of clan land against the appellant in the C Primary Court. It was ruled that he was time barred as the sale by his uncle had been concluded in 1970 while he brought his action in 1980. The Primary Court proceeded on the assumption that the limitation period for the redemption of land held under customary law was three months. On appeal to the District Court, however, the D respondent was held not to have been time barred since the limitation period was 12 years.

Held: (i) The customary law period of limitation for redeeming clan shambas is 12 years as given by Customary Law (Limitation of Proceedings) Rules as applied by the Law of E Limitation Act 1971;

(ii) (obiter): Policy considerations cannot be used to override clear provisions of the law. It is for the legislature to amend the law if it is found wanting. The courts have to administer the law as they find it. F

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

Cases referred to:

1. Luttataza Biteya v Haji Abdu Selemani [1975] L.R.T. n. 43. G
2. Felician Evarist v Domitina Kaijage & Anor., Mwanza (PC) Civ App. No. 98/1982 (unreported).
3. Adolph Lwegoshola v Domician Mulashani & Anor., Mwanza (P.C.) Civ App. No. 124 of 1982 (unreported).
4. Evarister v Apolinary Eustad [1968] H.C.D. n. 412. H
5. Mzee s/o Madirisha v Rwamturaki Mulagina; Mwanza (PC) Civ Appl. NO. 96 of 1970 (unreported).
6. Fulgence Seif v Raphael Rwabwera [1978] L.R.T. n. 46.
7. Stephania Byabato v Francia Lwehabura & Anor. [1974] L.R.T. n. 25. I

1983 TLR p366

MWALUSANYA J

8. Abel Rwebogora v Raphael Mukaja [1970] H.C.D. n. 100. A

J. Rweyemamu for appellant.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwalusanya, J.: The respondent Jason s/o Angero lost in the suit he filed at Nshamba B Primary Court which was an action for redemption of clan land. However on appeal to the Muleba District Court he was successful and he was allowed to redeem the clan land on payment of the purchase price of Shs. 2,500/=. It is against that finding that appellant Erizeus Rutakubwa has appealed to this court and advocate Mr. Rweyemamu assisted him. C

It is common ground that the appellant Erizeus Rutakubwa bought the clan land in dispute on 29/9/1970 form the respondent's uncle Brasio s/o Kashongole who is now dead. When the sale took place the respondent was away in Karagwe District preaching the Word of God. The respondent returned home in June 1979. It is said D that as soon as he heard of the sale he referred the matter to the Arbitration Tribunal on 10/6/1980 where he was successful. The Tribunal allowed him to redeem the land on payment of the purchase price of Shs. 2.500/= and an additional sum of Shs. 2,500/=.

There was also a dispute at the trial concerning the exact amount of purchase price that E had been paid. Respondent produced at the trial the relevant sale agreement (Exhibit A) showing

Shs. 2,500/= as the purchase price. However the purchaser (appellant) produced another sale agreement (Exhibit C) where it is indicated that the purchase price was Shs. 15,000/=. F
The Primary Court held that the respondent could not redeem the clan land as he was time - barred. It held that the limitation period as per para 568 of Cory and Hartnoll on Haya Customary Law was three months since the intending redeemer knew of the sale. And since the respondent knew of the sale when he returned home in June 1979, when G he complained to the Arbitration Tribunal on 10/6/1980 he was late by nine months. The case of Luttataza Biteya v Haji Abdul Selemani: [1975] L.R.T. n. 43 was cited by the Primary Court as authority for the proposition that the limitation period is three months.
The District Court held that the suit for the redemption of clan land was not time - barred H as the limitation period is 12 years as per Customary Law (Limitation of Proceedings) Rules G.N. 311 of 1964 as saved by the Law of Limitation Act No. 10 of 1971. As regards the two sale agreements the District Court held that Exhibit C. for Shs. 15,000/= was a forgery as it appeared tampered with. So Exhibit A for Shs. 2,500/= was I accepted as the genuine purchase price.
1983 TLR p367
MWALUSANYA J
The respondent has argued that even if we take the limitation period to be three months, A he was not late as he promptly complained to the Arbitration Tribunal on 10/6/80 as soon as he heard of the sale. However the court record clearly shows that respondent testified that he knew of the sale as soon as he got hold of the will and the attached sale agreement when his uncle Brasio died in June 1979. So by his own admission B respondent knew of the sale in June 1979; and so he cannot be heard to say that he heard of the sale just before he complained to the Arbitration Tribunal in June 1980. Definitely if we take the three months period as the correct limitation period, the respondent was clearly time-barred.
Now which is the correct limitation period for redemption of clan land? Recently in two C cases that is in Mwanza (PC) Civil Appeal No. 98/1982 of Felician Evarista v Domitina Kaijage and Anor (unreported) and Mwanza (PC) Civil Appeal No. 124 of 1982 of Adolph Lwegoshola v Domician Mulashani and Anor (unreported), I had occasion to comment on the raging controversy over the limitation period for redemption D of clan land. However in those two cases I had not the advantage of argument of learned counsel as was the case in this appeal where Mr. Rweyemamu greatly assisted this court by his incisive argument. Foremost counsel assured me that the Tanzania Court of Appeal has yet to resolve the controversy. E
Mr. Rweyemamu and the other protagonists for a three month limitation period generally advance two main reasons for their case. Firstly it is on policy considerations. It is argued that a 12 year limitation period would be catastrophic. They say it would bring economic stagnation for buyers of clan land as the buyers for some 12 years would sit F back without developing the land for fear of it being redeemed. And it is argued that some unscrupulous clever relatives of vendors would sit back for some 12 years to see development on the purchased land and then proceed to redeem it as clan land. And it is said that in such cases claims of compensation for incomplete improvements would be G for colossal sums indeed and very difficult to resolve as there would be very extensive developments. Perhaps the best adherent to this theory Mfalila J.

put the matter with admirable clarity in Luttataza Biteya v Haji Abdul Sulemani: [1975] L.R.T. n. 43 when he said: H

'To give security of tenure to buyers of clan shambas and facilitate the development of agricultural land, redemptions will only be allowed if applications to redeem are lodged within three months of the sale. After this period, knowledge of the sale will readily be imputed to the intending redeemer, thereby effectively protecting I buyers of clan shambas from possible fraudulent speculative clan members'. A

However my short answer to this point is that however laudable those sentiments are, I am of the settled view that policy considerations cannot be used to override clear provisions of the law. It is for the legislature to amend the law if it is found wanting. As B ministers of justice we are enjoined to administer the law as we find it. From the discussion below I think the law on this subject is substantially clear.

Yet the protagonists for a three month limitation period have another point in their C armoury. It is argued that the 12 years limitation period was laid down by the court in Everister v Apolinary Eustad [1968] H.C.D. n. 412 (Mustafa J. as he then was) under a false premise of the law. It is said that after all that case dealt with a claim of mortgaged land and not sale of land. Then the protagonists attempt what they consider to be the correct interpretation of Item 6 of Customary Law (Limitation of D Proceedings) Rule G.N. 311 of 1964 which reads:

'Proceedings to recover possession of land or money secure on mortgaged land is 12 years' E

It is argued that the para should be read as referring to a suit to recover possession of land and money both which have been secured on mortgaged land. In other words they say that the paragraph is for suits to recover possession of land which is secured on mortgaged land and for suits for recovery of money secured on mortgaged land. In the F case of Mzee s/o Madirisha v Rwamturaki Mulgina: Mwanza (PC) Civil Appeal No. 95 of 1970 (unreported) but cited in Fulgence Seif v Raphael Rwabwera [1978] L.R.T. n. 46, Mfalila J. stated:

'I am satisfied that while the right to recover mortgaged land the mortgagor is limited to 12 G years; the right to redeem land from strangers by clan members other than the original mortgagor or seller is still subject to the customary law limitation period of three months from the time the clan member became aware of the alienation'. H

However like Mustafa J. in Everister's case (supra) and Kisanga J. (as he then was) in Stephania Byabato v Francia Lwehabura & Anor: [1974] L.R.T. n. 25 I read or interpret Item 6 of G.N. 311 of 1964 differently. In my judgment the paragraph I envisaged two kinds of actions. Firstly as a suit for the recovery of possession of land and secondly suits for the recovery of money secured on mortgaged land. That would A appear to be the plain or natural meaning of that paragraph on its proper construction. If that is not the correct construction it would be a strange omission indeed to have omitted prescription for limitation period for claims of land when it is known that land disputes are quite prevalent under every customary law community in our country. And unlike the B Haya Customary Law which prior to 1964 had limitation periods for claims for land, other communities had none until the advent of the 1964 rules. It is absurd I think to suggest that the makers of the 1964 rules had intended to exclude claims for the possession of land from the limitation period prescription. C

It follows therefore that the customary law period of limitation for redeeming clan shambas is 12 years as given by Customary Law (Limitation of Proceedings) Rules G.N. 311 of 1964 as reapplied by s. 50 of the Law of Limitation Act, 1971. And Bramble J. in Abel Rwebogora v Raphael Mukaja: [1970] H.C.D. n. 100 holds the same view. D So the District Court correctly decided that the suit was not time - barred.
As regards the correct purchase price again I agree with the District Court that it is Shs. 2,500/= as shown in the sale agreement Exhibit A. The other sale agreement Exhibit C E was obviously tempered with to read Shs. 15,000/= instead of the original price of Shs. 2,500/=. Moreover, it bore no signatures of witnesses nor that of the buyer. Obviously it was not genuine and it was rightly rejected. So the respondent is allowed to redeem the clan land within three months from today on payment of the purchase price F of Shs.2500/= The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.
G Appeal dismissed.
1983 TLR p370
A
[zRPz]YEROMINO ATHANASE v MUKAMULANI BENEDICTO 1983 TLR 370 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Bukoba
Judge Mwalusanya J

September 28, 1985
(PC) CIVIL APPEAL 162 OF 1982 B
Flynote
Land Law - Clan land - Redemption of - Sale - Whether sale concluded.
Limitation - Redemption of land held under customary law - Sale purported to have been made 5 years prior to action - Whether time barred - Customary Law (Limitation of C Proceedings) Rules G.N. 311 of 1964 and s. 50 Law of Limitation Act No. 10 of 1971.
-Headnote
The appellant alleged that he had bought clan land from one Laurent Mutore Bulaya (deceased), who was the respondent's brother. The respondent successfully sued the D appellant in the Primary Court. She proceeded on the argument that there was no sale, and even if there was one, she should be entitled to redeem the land. The appellant argued that there was sale and that she was time barred for an action for redemption since the limitation period for such suits was 3 months. The District Court agreed with the Primary Court's finding that there was no sale. E

Held: (i) There was no sale;

(ii) even if there was sale, the respondent was not time barred in her action for redemption, the limitation period being 12 years.

(iii) (obiter) Policy considerations should not be used to override clear provisions F of the law; it is for the legislature to amend the law if it is found wanting. The courts have to administer the law as they find it.

Per curiam: the decisions courts deliver are not laws but expositions of the law.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed. G

Cases referred to:

1. Luttataza Biteya v Haji Abdu Sulemani [1975] L.R.T. n. 43.
2. Evarister Martin v Apolinary Eustaad [1968] H.C.D. n. 412. H
3. Mzee s/o Madirisha v Rwamturaki Malagina, Mwanza (PC) Civ Appeal No. 95 of 1970.
4. Fulgence Seif v Raphael Rwabwera [1978] L.R.T. n. 46.
5. Stephania Byabato v Francia Lwehabura & Anor. [1974] L.R.T. 25. I

1983 TLR p371

MWALUSANYA J

6. Abel Rwebogora v Raphael Mukaja [1970] H.C.D. n. 100. A
7. Bi Vierdina Kyabuje v Gregory Kyabuje [1968] H.C.D. n. 499.
8. Swift v Tyson (1842) 16 Pet. 1.

J. Rweyemamu for appellant. B

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwalusanya, J.: This is a dispute over clan land as to whether it had been sold to a stranger the appellant Yeronimo s/o Athanase or not; and if it had been sold whether the respondent Mukaulani d/o Benedicto who is clan member had the right to redeem it or not. The shamba in dispute is worth about Shs. 2,000/=. The Bukondo Primary Court C in a unanimous opinion decided that the respondent's deceased brother Laurent Mutore Bulaya had not sold the disputed piece of land to appellant as claimed and that the sale agreement dated 5/8/1970 purporting to effect the sale was a forgery. The District Court agreed that evidence of sale of the shamba was indeed wanting and so the D appeal was dismissed. With the help of learned counsel Mr. Rweyemamu the appellant has appealed to this court challenging the decision of the two courts below.

After a thorough review of the evidence on record, I am unable to resist the force of the E concurrent finding of the two courts below that there was no sale of that clan land. Firstly, no near relative was informed of the sale including the respondent. Although Richard claimed at the District Court that he was a clan member of the Muheta clan yet even if we were to so concede, he cannot be a near relative despite the wide definition given in para 557 of Cory and Hartnoll as he himself conceded that he could not F vouchsafe that he was a descendant of a common paternal ancestor in the male line. Secondly, as the trial court observed, the sale agreement Exhibit A appears tampered with, the signature of the deceased appears retraced.

Thirdly, there was a contradiction between the appellant's testimony and that of his key witness Richard concerning the G amount of purchase price paid. Richard said Shs. 1,000/= only was paid while the appellant insisted that he paid Shs. 6,150/=. Fourthly if it is true that the appellant bought the land in question on 5/8/1970 why then did he not occupy it instead he waited till the death of the alleged vendor Laurent in 1977. Fifthly, after sale according to para 935 of Cory and Hartnoll on Haya Customary Law, boundaries are to be marked. But H in this case when the Primary Court visited the disputed piece of shamba on 12/6/1981 they could not see any boundary marks and the appellant failed to show the same despite the gallant efforts he made. Indeed the evidence in favour of the respondent was overwhelming. No I reasonable tribunal could have resisted the conclusion that there was no sale. A

At the District Court additional evidence was adduced apparently in last ditch efforts to establish that there was a sale. The appellant produced a new sale agreement Exhibit B which purported to show that Laurent sold the disputed piece of shamba to appellant in B 1975 for Shs. 1,000/=. He also produced a specimen signature of Laurent as Exhibit C from a document of 1960 for comparison with the disputed signatures in Exhibit A and B. The District Court ignored this new document of sale as useless and I cannot say it was wrong. The change in strategy by the appellant was indeed mean and redolent of a lost battle if not the whole war. C

Assuming I am wrong such that there was a sale indeed, is respondent entitled to redeem the clan shamba? Counsel for the appellant Mr. Rweyemamu submitted that the respondent could not redeem the clan land as she was time-barred. He said that as per D para 568 of Cory and Hartnoll a redemption claim has to be filed within three months after hearing of the sale. He said that as the sale was in 1975 as per Exhibit B and as this case was filed in 1980 then the action was out of time for some five years. It was counsel's submission that the respondent must have known of the sale in 1975 or soon E thereafter as she was there in the village.

However according to the respondent she knew of the sale for the first time at the funeral of her deceased brother Laurent in 1977 when the appellant disclosed the alleged sale documents. The matter was immediately referred to the Arbitration Tribunal which F appeared to decide in favour of the appellant and so the matter eventually ended in court.

On the evidence on record I find that there is no basis for the contention by the appellants' counsel Mr. Rweyemamu that the respondent knew of the sale in 1975. No evidence whatsoever was led to establish that the respondent knew of the sale earlier G than the time of the funeral. After all the appellant had not entered and occupied the shamba in question and so it cannot be said that she must have been alerted by the appearance of a trespasser to their clan land. So in my judgment the respondent was not time-barred. She took action within three months after she knew of the sale by referring the matter to the Arbitration Tribunal. H

Counsel for appellant took occasion to submit that the period of limitation for redemption of clan land was three months and not 12 years as some authorities tend to suggest. He gave two reasons for his stand. First, that if the 12 years limitation period was adopted it would cause stagnation of economic development as buyers would not I develop and invest in the land they bought during the 12 years for fear of it being redeemed. And he also said that speculative relatives of vendors would wait till the land A is developed then come up with a redemption claim. And so he said that, that could not be good law at all. In fact counsel was echoing the sentiments of Mfalila J. in Luttataza Biteya v Haji Abdu Sulemani: [1975] L.R.T. no. 43 where he expressed the view that: B

1983 TLR p373

MWALUSANYA J

'To give security of tenure to buyers of clan shambas and facilitate the development of agricultural land, redemptions will only be allowed if applications to redeem are lodged within three months of the sale. After this period, knowledge of the sale will readily be imputed to the intending redeemer, thereby effectively protecting buyers of clan shambas from possible C fraudulent speculative clan members'.

However my short answer to this point is that however laudable those sentiments are, I am unpersuaded that such policy considerations should be used to override clear D provisions of the law. It is for the legislature to amend the law if it is found wanting. As ministers of justice we are enjoined to administer the law as we find it. And it is my considered view that the law on the subject is substantially clean and needs no exotic interpolation. E

Yet the protagonists for the three month limitation period have another string to their bow. They argue that the decision of Evarister Martin v Apolinary Eustad [1968] H.C.D. n. 412 by Mustafa J. (as he then was) does not stand for the proposition that the limitation period for redemption of clan land is 12 years as, they submit, any observation to that effect was merely obiter dicta in that case involved the recovery of mortgaged F land and not redemption or recovery of land per se. They concede that for the recovery of mortgaged land the limitation period is 12 years. The protagonists attempt at what they consider the correct interpretation of Item 6 of Customary Law (Limitations of Proceedings) Rules G.N. 311 of 1964 which reads: G

'Proceedings to recover possession of land or money secure on mortgaged land is 12 years'.

It is argued that the para should be read as referring to a suit to recover possession of H land or money both which have been secured on mortgaged land. In other words the paragraph it is argued concerns two matters: first a suit to recover possession of land secured on mortgaged land and secondly a suit to recover possession of money secured on mortgaged land. In the case of Mzee Madirisha v Rwamturaki Malagina; Mwanza I (PC) Civil Appeal No. 95 of 1970 (unreported) but cited in Fulgence

1983 TLR p374

MWALUSANYA J

Seif v Raphael Rwabwera: [1978] L.R.T. n. 46 Mfalila J. had this to say: A

'I am satisfied that while the right to recover mortgaged land the mortgagor is limited to 12 years: the right to redeem land from strangers by clan members other than the original B mortgagor or sellers is still subject to the customary law limitation period of three months from the time the clan member became aware of the alienation'.

However like Mustafa J. in Everister case (supra) and Kisanga J. (as he then was) in C Stephania Byabato v Francia Lwehabura & Another: [1974] L.R.T. n. 25 I read or interpret Item 6 of G.N. 311/1964 differently. In my judgment I take it that the paragraph envisaged two kinds of actions: firstly a suit to recover possession of land and D secondly a suit to recover possession of money secured on mortgaged land. That would appear to be the plain and natural meaning of that para on its plain construction. If the rules envisaged limitation period for mortgaged land only as claimed, then it would have been a strange omission indeed because land disputes are quite prevalent in our varied customary law communities and no limitation period has been laid down by those E communities except perhaps the Haya Customary law. It is absurd therefore to assign a negative intention to the law makers of 1964 rules that the alleged lacuna in the law was deliberate. In the event the 1964 rules must be taken to have abrogated any earlier law on the subject and thus the 12 year period is the correct limitation period for F redemption of clan land. And Bramble, J. in Abel Rwebogora v Raphael Mukaja: [1970] H.C.D. n. 100 holds the same view.

Counsel for appellant Mr. Rweyemamu further submitted that, as Hamlyn J. pointed out in Bi. Verdiana Kyabuje v Gregory Kyabuje: [1968] H.C.D. n. 499 it is wrong for the G courts to change the law from the three month limitation period for redemption of clan land to a 12 year limitation period. While I associate myself with the views expressed by counsel and the late Judge Hamlyn, however I am unable to concur that the courts have changed the limitation period as contended. It is a truism that the 1964 limitation rules H have been laid down by the legislature under section 65 the Magistrates' Court Act Cap. 537 and later reapplied by the legislature again vide s. 50 of the Law of Limitation Act No. 10 of 1971. The courts are just interpreting the law and it can again be said that the duty and province of the courts is to say what the law is. On my part I heed and I appreciate what that English writer Francis Bacon once said in his Essays of Judicature that:

1983 TLR p375

'In the ordinary use of language it will hardly be contended that the decisions of courts A constitute laws. They are, at most, only evidence of what the laws are and are not of themselves laws. They are often re-examined, reversed and qualified by the courts themselves, whenever they are found to be either defective or ill - founded or otherwise incorrect'. B

With those observations I entirely agree. I hope that adequately disposes of Mr. Rweyemamu's point as regards the role of the courts.

In the event the appeal is dismissed with costs. C

Appeal dismissed.

1983 TLR p375

D

[zRPz]THE REPUBLIC EX-PARTE PETER SHIRIMA v KAMATI YA ULINZI NA USALAMA, WILAYA YA SINGIDA,THE AREA COMMISSIONER AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL 1983 TLR 375 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Lugakingira J

December 3, 1981 E
MISCELLANEOUS CRIMINAL CAUSE 18 OF 1981
Flynote
Prerogative writs - Certiorari and Prohibition - Applicant charged with selling goods at a F price higher than the maximum price - Goods confiscated by police - Charges withdrawn - Goods returned to Police and sold - Appeal against order returning goods to Police - Subsequent withdrawal of trading licence and expulsion order on the orders of the Area G Commissioner and Defence Committee - Whether action by Area Commissioner and Defence Committee "judicial".
Prerogative Writs - Certiorari and Prohibition - Withdrawal of licence and order of expulsion H - Certiorari and Prohibition granted against the Officer Commanding District to restrain him from carrying our order of expulsion - Application for further orders against the Area Commissioner and the Defence Committee - Whether latter application competent.
Prerogative writs - Certiorari and Mandamus - Practice and procedure - Application for - I Whether leave necessary.
1983 TLR p376
LUGAKINGIRA J
-Headnote
The applicant had been arrested and charged with selling goods at prices in excess of the A maximum prices set under the Regulation of Prices Act. Some goods were confiscated from his shop and produced as exhibits in the proceedings. Subsequently, the charges were withdrawn and in consequence, the trial magistrate ordered the goods to be restored to the Police. The applicant appealed against this order, but before it was B heard, the Officer Commanding District (OCD) informed him that the goods were to be sold by the police, his trading licence had been revoked and he had to leave Singida town within a specific period.
The applicant then applied for orders of certiorari and prohibition to quash the orders C of the OCD and to restrain him from carrying out the order of expulsion. This application was granted. He later learnt that the OCD was acting on the orders of the Area Commissioner and the District Defence Committee (Kamati ya Ulinzi na Usalama). He then applied for leave to apply for the orders of certiorari and prohibition against the Area Commissioner and the District Defence Committee. D
Held: (i) The practice of seeking leave to apply for prerogative orders has become part of our procedural law by reason of long user;
(ii) the existence of the right to appeal and even the existence of an appeal itself, E is not necessarily a bar to the issuance of prerogative order; the matter is one of judicial discretion to be exercised by the court in the light of the circumstances of each particular case;

(iii) where an appeal has proved ineffective and the requisite grounds exist, the aggrieved party may seek for, and the court would be entitled to grant, relief by way of F prerogative orders;

(iv) (obiter) the applicant should have joined the respondents in the second application with the respondent in the first application once they became known to him by an amendment of the first application;

(v) (obiter) s. 2(2) of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance Cap. 453 requires the court to apply only the substance of English Common Law the G Doctrines of Equity and the Statutes of General Application in force on the 22nd July 1920;

Per Curiam: it is a cause of anxiety that one has to have recourse to obscure rules H which were abandoned in country of origin more than forty years ago; there is urgent need to pay attention to s. 349(2) of the Criminal Procedure Code (S. 291(2) of the Criminal Procedure Act).

Case Information

Application rejected. I

Cases referred to:

1983 TLR p377

LUGAKINGIRA J

1. Mohamed v Regional C.I.D. Officer Mbeya; Misc. Crim. Cause No. 29 of A 1978 (Mbeya Registry) (unreported).
2. Mwakilasa v The Principal Secretary (Treasury): Misc. Crim. Cause No. 14 of 1978 (Mbeya Registry) (unreported).
3. Makule v The R.P.C., Kilimanjaro: Misc. Civ Appl. No. 87 of 1979 (Arusha Registry) (Unreported). B
4. Lakarau v Town Director Arusha: Misc. Civ Appl. No. 56 of 1979 (Arusha Registry).
5. D.M.T. Ltd. v The Transport Licensing Authority [1959] E.A. 403.
6. Re: Fazal Kassam (Mills) Ltd. [1960] E.A. 1002. C
7. Re: Hirji Transport Service [1961] E.A. 88.
8. Shah Vershi & Co. Ltd. v The Transport Licensing Board [1971] E.A. 289.
9. Re: A.G.'s Application [1958] E.A. 482.

D. Mbezi for the applicants. D

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: This was an ex parte application for leave to apply for orders of certiorari and prohibition.

The applicant, Peter Shirima, owned and ran a shop in Singida township. On 15th E August, 1981 the police entered the shop and seized a quantity of shop goods. On 25th August the applicant was charged before the District Court of Singida with the offences of selling goods in excess of the maximum prices contrary to sections 20 and 26 of the Regulation of Prices Act, 1973 and hoarding contrary to what were cited as sections F 194 A(c)(i)(ii) and 4 of the Penal Code. I will say nothing about those provisions for their nonexistence or irrelevance is self-evident. The trial commenced on 17th September when some evidence was adduced by the prosecution and the goods were tendered as exhibits. At the resumed hearing on 18th September the charges were G withdrawn under s. 86(a) of the Criminal Procedure Code. Thereupon the trial magistrate made an order restoring the goods to the police. The applicant appealed against that order in Criminal Appeal No. 100 of 1981 which is due for hearing before this court.

Meanwhile, on 25th September, the applicant was summoned to the police station by H the OCD and told that the goods would be sold. They were duly sold on the next day. The applicant was also informed that his trading licence, which had also been seized, had been cancelled. He was then ordered to dispose of the remaining goods in his shop and to leave Singida town not later than 2nd October, 1981. I

In consequence of these orders and actions the applicant applied to this court in Miscellaneous Criminal Cause No. 14 of 1981 for orders of certiorari A and prohibition to quash the orders of the OCD and to restrain him from carrying out the order of expulsion. The application was heard by my brother Maina, J. on 19th October, after leave had been applied for and granted, and orders were made and issued as prayed.

1983 TLR p378

LUGAKINGIRA J

But while the hearing was going on the applicant gathered that the OCD had apparently B acted on orders of the Area Commissioner and the Kamati ya Ulinzi na Usalama, Singida District. He therefore brought the present application for leave to apply for the same orders against the Area Commissioner and the Kamati ya Ulinzi na Usalama. At the hearing of this application I requested Mr. Mbezi, learned counsel for the C applicant, to enlighten me on the following:

(a) Whether it was a legal requirement to seek prior leave to apply for prerogative orders;

(b) Whether the court had jurisdiction to grant such leave considering D

(i) that part of the subject matter appeared to be the subject of Criminal Appeal No. 100 of 1981; and

(ii) that similar orders on the same complaints had already been granted in Miscellaneous Criminal Cause No. 14 of 1981. E

I would now point out that the orders of the court in Miscellaneous Criminal Cause No. 14 of 1981 were duly served on one Akilimali, A.S.P., of Singida Police on 9th F November, 1981.

Regarding (a) Mr. Mbezi conceded that the procedure was not entirely clear. He informed the court, however, that it has been the practice in these matters to adopt the procedure applicable in habeas corpus proceedings. Regarding (b)(i) he said that the G subject of Criminal Appeal No. 100 of 1981 was different: It was there intended to determine the legality of the trial magistrate's order of restoring the goods to the police whereas certiorari was being sought, inter alia, to quash the decision to sell the said goods. And regarding (b)(ii) he submitted that the court had jurisdiction as the H respondents were different. I must confess that I could not on my part find easy answers to these questions. And Mr. Mbezi, on his part, was unable to refer me to any authorities.

I shall now consider these matters beginning with (a) Subsection (1) of s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code, provides that the High Court may in the exercise of its I criminal jurisdiction issue any writ which maybe issued by the High Court of Judicature in England. Subsection
1983 TLR p379
LUGAKINGIRA J
(2) further provides that the High Court may from time to time make rules to regulate the A procedure in cases under the said section. For reasons I cannot think of, no such rules have ever been made. However, there is authority for saying, as Mr. Mbezi did, that the practice of this court has always recognised prior leave as prerequisite in the making of applications for prerogative orders. We should therefore look at some B decisions as regards the court's practice.
In the case of Mohamed v Regional C.I.D. Officer, Mbeya: Miscellaneous Criminal Cause No. 29 of 1978 (Mbeya Registry), a question was raised in a preliminary objection and it was whether an application for mandamus could be entertained in the absence of prior leave. Mwakibete, J. stated, inter alia: C

"The urgency of the matter - the subject of this application - cannot be overemphasized. There is an allegation - albeit impliedly - of flagrant misuse of authority to the suffering of the applicant. Surely the circumstances demand that the application is heard with dispatch on its D merits ....

It is a case properly crying for dispensation of the alleged leave. Thus by virtue of this court's inherent powers I hereby order that the leave to file the application be dispensed with". E

It is implicit in the above that the learned judge acknowledged the desirability of an application for prior leave but he was prepared to dispense with it on the exigencies of the case before him. The judge had been referred to Mwakilasa v The Principal F Secretary (Treasury): Miscellaneous Criminal Cause No. 14 of 1978 (Mbeya Registry), in which it appears to have been specifically held that prior leave was a necessity. Unfortunately, I could not trace that ruling here and I could not have attempted to do so without risking delay. But the issue arose again in Lakarau v Town Director Arusha: Miscellaneous Civil Application No. 56 of 1979 (Arusha Registry), G where an application for mandamus had similarly been brought without prior leave. It was there stated by Maganga, J., and I quote,

"... it still appears to me that the application as filed is incompetent for the reason that no leave H to file the application had been granted. The procedure for Orders of mandamus and other writs as stated at page 70 of Halsbury's Laws of England (3rd Ed. Vol. 11) make it mandatory for leave to apply to be obtained before an application for any of the writs is made. I
1983 TLR p380
LUGAKINGIRA J
It is stated therein that: "No application can be made unless leave therefor has been A granted ... ."
Because leave had not been obtained in that application, and for a number of other B reasons stated in the ruling, the learned judge dismissed the application.

A different view was taken by Mroso, J. in Makule v The R.P.C., Kilimanjaro; Miscellaneous Civil Application No. 87 of 1979 (Arusha Registry). He was then considering an ex parte application for leave to apply for mandamus and ruled that leave to apply was not part of the law of this country, citing D.M.T. Ltd. v The C Transport Licensing Authority [1959] E.A. 403 and section 2(2) of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance, Cap. 453. He therefore dismissed or struck out the application. I have had the advantage of reading carefully the citations by Mroso, J., and I think, with respect, that none of them is devoted to the question of leave as such. In so D far as I can gather they are concerned generally with the law applicable.
Admittedly, one cannot but agree with Mroso, J. as to that law. The quotation by Maganga, J. from Halsbury's Laws in the Lakarau case takes source directly from 0.59, r. 3(1) of the Rules of the Supreme Court in England which were made under s. 120 of E the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) act, 1938, and which replace the Crown Office Rules, 1906. As pointed out by Mroso, J. these 1938 rules have no application in this country having regard to the reception date which is 22nd July, 1920. I would therefore respectfully agree that the law applicable is to be found in the Crown F Office Rules, 1906. Unlike the learned judge, however, I have not been privileged to see these rules, but I believe he was correct in saying that they do not require an application for prior leave. Nevertheless, I cannot for bear to express my anxiety that, to-date, one has to have recourse to obscure rules which were abandoned by their G country of origin more than forty years ago. I think there is urgent need to pay attention to subsection (2) of s. 349 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
Having said that, however, I still would not go to the extent of saying that absence of a statutory requirement implies that an application for leave, whenever brought, must H necessarily be rejected. I say so because, firstly, it is clear from s. 2(2), Cap. 453 that what this court is expected to apply is the substance only of the English Common Law, the doctrines of equity and the statutes of general application in force on the 22nd July, 1920. It has therefore never been suggested that an application for leave would I contravene the Crown Office Rules, 1906 and I believe that what the law does not forbid, it permits. Indeed if there is any disadvantage in such a procedure, it accrues to the applicant himself. Secondly, A reverting again to the issue of practice, it is evident that prior leave has been the accepted procedure before this court for as long as I am unable to ascertain. Thus, apart from the unreported cases already referred to, in Re Fazal Kassam (Mills) Ltd., [1960] E.A. 1002, which was an application for the writs of certiorari and B mandamus, leave had been applied for and granted. And Re Hirji Transport Service [1961] E.A. 88 was a ruling on an application for leave and it was granted. It is therefore clear to me that the efficacy of this procedure has never before been questioned or doubted.

I am thus of the respectful view that by reason of long user, coupled with approval, the C practice of seeking leave has come to be part of our procedural law. The application now before me is therefore very relevant.

The second question consists of two parts both on the issue of jurisdiction. The first part is whether the court has jurisdiction to entertain the intended application for orders in view of the appeal pending before this court. The appeal seeks to test the validity of the D trial magistrate's order by which he restored the shop goods to the police. As pointed out the order was made upon the charge being withdrawn under s. 86(a) of the Criminal Procedure Code. I am not here called upon to go into that order for it may receive attention in the appeal itself. Nevertheless, I can look into the intention of that appeal. E Undoubtedly, it is intended to secure the reversal of the magistrate's order and, logically, the restoration of the goods, or their value, to the applicant. The purpose of the intended application for certiorari, on the other hand, is to quash the decision to sell the goods and no more. And it is relevant to emphasize the fact that the goods have in fact already F been sold. The fundamental question to which I desire to address my mind is whether where there is a right of appeal, and it has been exercised, the aggrieved party can resile from the procedure he has adopted and have recourse to prerogative orders.
The question has been the subject of discussion before. In Shah Vershi & Co. Ltd. v G The Transport Licensing Board [1971] E.A. 289, a Kenyan case, it was held by Chanan Singh, J., at p. 294 that:

Ordinarily, the High Court will decline to interfere until the aggrieved party has exhausted his H statutory remedy .... But this is a rule of policy, convenience, and discretion, rather than a rule of law. In other words, the existence of a right of appeal is a factor to be taken into account: it does not bar the remedy (of certiorari), especially where the alternative is not speedy, effective, I and adequate ...

1983 TLR p382
LUGAKINGIRA J
He went on: A

"... I am of the view that neither the existence of a right of appeal nor the filing of an appeal deprives the company of its right to ask for certiorari". B

In that case an appeal had been lodged with the appropriate body several months before the above decision but had never been listed for hearing. Similar appeals had been lodged by the same applicant over two years earlier and these too had never been listed for hearing. It was in those circumstances that the above decision was reached. In the C earlier case of Re A.G.'s Application [1958] E.A. 482, it was said by Cram, Ag. J., at p. 485:

"It is well-settled law that, where there is express legislation as to appeal, the prerogative, D while not repealed (for that is difficult to conceive) cannot ordinarily be invoked unless and until the local substantive provisions have been fully exploited and found wanting in remedy. The ancient remedy of prerogative is from time to time superseded. In a sense it become obsolete". E

He went on, at p. 486:

"I am unable to see how the appellant can now be permitted to abandon the procedure he has followed, recede from the statutory procedure hitherto followed and ignore procedure for relief F provided by a statute and be permitted to invoke the non-statutory jurisdiction provided by the prerogative".

The above two decisions express the same thing, though with a shift of emphasis, that a G statutory remedy takes priority over but does not exclude a prerogative relief. One can therefore suggest with a degree of certainty that in Kenya an application for prerogative orders may lie even where there is a right of appeal, and the existence of one, depending on the circumstances of the case, for instance, the failure of the appeal to provide a speedy, effective solution, or at all. H

The position in this country does not appear different. In Re Fazal Kassam (Mill) Ltd. (already referred to), one of the objections raised was that the applicants were precluded from seeking relief by way of mandamus since they had a right of appeal to the Minister against the respondent's refusal to issue them with a coffee exporter's I licence. It was stated by Sir Ralph Windham, C.J., at p. 1005, that:

1983 TLR p383

LUGAKINGIRA J

"... it is not the law that the court will always refuse mandamus when the applicant could have A appealed. The matter is one of discretion, to be carefully and judicially exercised, the position being simply that as stated in Halsbury's Law of England (3rd Ed.) Vol. 11 at p. 107:

`The court will, as a general rule, and in the exercise of its discretion, refuse an order of B mandamus, when there is an alternative specific remedy at law which is not less convenient, beneficial and effective.'

The preliminary objection was overruled because of the circumstances of the case which C included the fact that on previous occasions the applicants' appeals to the Minister had on each occasion been rejected without reasons being given. While that part of Sir Ralph Windham, C.J.'s decision was directed at mandamus only the same position appears true for certiorari. In the same edition of Halsbury's Law it is stated at p. 130 D that "There is no rule to certiorari, as there is with mandamus, that it will lie only where there is no E other equally effective remedy; and provided the requisite grounds exist, certiorari will lie although a right of appeal has been conferred by statute".

I think, with respect, that is a sound summary of the law. I would therefore say, from the totality of these authorities, that the existence of the right of appeal and even the F existence of an appeal itself, is not necessarily a bar to the issue of prerogative orders. The matter is one of judicial discretion to be exercised by the court in the light of the circumstances of each particular case. Where an appeal has proved ineffective, and the requisite grounds exist, the aggrieved party may seek and the court would be entitled to G grant, relief by way of prerogative orders. The simple question we are therefore left with is whether such grounds exist in the intended application. I am of the unfortunate view that they do not.

In the first instance, the applicant's appeal was only recently filed. There is therefore no H question of delay nor is there any question of that procedure being exhausted.

Secondly, the appeal is potentially, if all goes well, more effective. It could result in the goods, or their value, being restored to the applicant; but certiorari can only result in quashing the decision to sell them and no more. Thirdly, and more seriously, the goods have already been sold. I

LUGAKINGIRA J
There is therefore no decision which can be arrested by certiorari. The same is true of A the trading licence. It has already been cancelled. Certiorari cannot issue to grant a new licence. In short, there are no grounds for the applicant to resile from the appeal already filed by him and seek remedy by way of certiorari and, I apprehend the court is B not expected to engage in a futile exercise. I have therefore come to the sad conclusion that the intended application for certiorari is superfluous and this court cannot exercise its discretion to entertain it.
The second leg of the second question is whether the court has jurisdiction to entertain the intended application in view of its orders in Miscellaneous Criminal Cause No. 14 of C 1981. Mr. Mbezi said the court had jurisdiction since in the intended application the respondents are different. He referred me to no authority and I could find none. I would venture to suggest, however, that the principle to be followed in this regard is the same as where there is a right of appeal. There must exist grounds upon which a second D application can be brought and this in my view, cannot merely be the existence of other respondents. It has, I think, to be demonstrated that the earlier application has proved ineffective. The applicant's affidavit does not so state although there could be genuine apprehensions that the first application would not deliver the goods. Presumably, the E better course would have been to amend the first application and join the present respondents who, apparently, became known at the hearing of that application. But to require the court to exercise the same powers in parallel applications is not only an exercise in confusion but something I cannot read in law or precedent.
There is yet another aspect to be considered. As far as I am aware certiorari, as with F prohibition, may issue where an inferior tribunal has wrongly assumed jurisdiction or has exceeded jurisdiction in the discharge of judicial functions. It was not suggested, even remotely, that the Area Commissioner or the Kamati ya Ulinzi na Usalama acted G as such tribunals or that they did so without or in excess of jurisdiction.
This is not to say that they acted correctly. But indeed the decisions complained of do not bear any judicial character. They appear to be purely administrative. It is stated in Halsbury's Law (above, at pp. 134-135, that H

"Certiorari will issue to quash the determinations of any body of persons having legal authority to determine questions affecting the right of subjects and having the duty to act judicially. Certiorari lies only in respect of judicial, as distinguished from administrative acts". I

As just stated the Area Commissioner and the Kamati ya Ulinzi na Usalama appear A to have acted, if true, in a purely administrative capacity and the applicant's affidavit does not allege to the contrary. The intended application thus fails to disclose a prima facie case for the intervention of this court. As stated by Biron, Ag. J., as he then was, in Re Hirji Transport Service, cited earlier, there has to be a prima facie case before leave B can be granted. There being no prima facie case and bearing in mind the other conclusion I have reached earlier, I am satisfied that this application must fail.
C Leave refused.

1983 TLR p385
D
[zRPz]JAYANTILAL P. RAJAN v CITY COUNCIL OF DAR ES SALAAM 1983 TLR 385 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam
Judge Mnzavas JK

August 3, 1985
CIVIL CASE 40 OF 1982 E
Flynote
Land Law - Allocation of land - Land allocated and then complaint by another that it was directly in front of his house - Whether Ministry of Lands has power to order plot to be divided between the two by way of rectification of Land Register - S.99 Land Registration F Ordinance, Cap. 334.
Land Law - Public land - Allocation to another person - Whether prescriptive title can be acquired against the Government - S. 3(1) Land Ordinance Cap. 113. G
-Headnote
The plaintiff had been granted a right of occupancy on a plot of land at Sea View, Dar es Salaam in 1979. His neighbour complained to the Principal Secretary, Ministry of Lands, Housing and Urban Development that the plaintiff had been offered land which was in front of his house. The plaintiff was stopped from developing the land pending H investigations. After investigations, the Ministry ruled that the allocation of the plot to the plaintiff was in order and consequently, the order stopping him from developing it was lifted. The plaintiff and his neighbour were subsequently ordered by the Director of Land Development Services to submit their certificates of occupancy so that a Deed of I variations could be prepared to split the plot between the two. In consequence, the defendant ordered the plaintiff to stop developing the land and started re-surveying it with a view to splitting A it up. The plaintiff filed a suit against the defendant seeking a declaration that he was the rightful owner of the said plot.
1983 TLR p386
MNZAVAS J
Held: (i) No person can acquire a prescriptive right over land against the Government; B
(ii) there was no error or omission in the land register; nor mistake or any sufficient cause to justify rectification of the land register under section 99 (1)(f) of the Land Registration Ordinance Cap. 334.
Case Information
Judgment for the plaintiff. C
Case referred to:
1. Re: Chowood's Registered Land [1933] Ch. 574.
M. Raithatha for the plaintiff D

Ihema for the defendant.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, J.K.: The plaintiff Jayantilal P. Rajan was granted right of occupancy on Plot Nos. 2361/4 and 2432/4, Sea View, Dar es Salaam in 1979 as per letter of offer dated E 9/6/79 - Exhibit P 1. In 1981 plaintiff's neighbour one, Narendra Patel complained to the Principal Secretary, Ministry of Lands Housing and Urban Development that the plaintiff had been offered land which is in front of his (complainant's) house. F

As a result of this complaint by Mr. Patel the Principal Secretary wrote to the City Director (Exhibit P.7) ordering him to stop the plaintiff from developing the land pending investigations. The plaintiff was accordingly stopped from developing the land pending investigations regarding Patel's complaint. Investigations were made and concluded and the Principal Secretary wrote to Mr. Rajan (Letter No. L.D. 91419/26 of 29/7/81 - G exhibit P8 saying inter alia ..." I have now understood your case and I am satisfied that you followed all the set procedures and you acquired the parcel of land in accordance with the regulations set by the law pertaining to land.

I wish therefore to confirm that you have a clear right over Plot No. 2361/4, CT. No. H 186056/33, and you can continue with your development plans over this plot. I would like to end by thanking you for your co-operation in this matter".

Despite this letter (Exhibit P8) in March, 1982 the Director of Land Development Services wrote a letter - (Exhibit P14) to both the plaintiff and Mr. Patel asking them to I submit to the land office their certificates of right of occupancy so that a Deed of Variations of rights of Occupancy A could be prepared. The City Council, the defendant, stopped the plaintiff from developing the land and started re-surveying the land with a view to split it up.

This prompted the plaintiff to come to Court and is now seeking that he be declared the rightful owner or the disputed plot. The plaintiff also asks the Court to restrain the B defendant, the City Council, from dividing the plot.

The defendant argued that despite the grant of right of occupancy over the disputed plot granted to the plaintiff the matter was reviewed by the Ministry and that it was finally ordered that the plot be divided so that the plaintiff gets the parcel of land behind his C house and Patel gets the other parcel of land behind his house. In support of the defendant's case five witnesses gave evidence. Husson Mwamakula, (DW1), the local cell leader told the court how he tried to resolve the dispute between the parties over the land. According to his testimony both the cell-meeting and a ward meeting (which later D also heard the dispute) resolved that the area be divided between Patel and Rajan. Mr. Patel, (DW2) the complainant told the court that the disputed piece of land is behind his house. He said that after Mr. Rajan, the plaintiff, had acquired right of occupancy over the disputed land he (Patel) complained to the Ministry Lands and that after E investigations the Ministry ordered that the land be divided so that he, Patel, gets the parcel of land immediately behind his house and the plaintiff remains with the land behind his house. Mr. Patel and Mr. Rajan are apparently close neighbours and their houses are adjacent each other. F

Granvil Mayao (DW3), a City planner, told the court how the disputed plot was granted to the plaintiff and how later the Ministry found that there was a mis-allocation of the plot to the plaintiff and decided to rectify the error by dividing the parcel of land between the parties. Mr. Mustapha Nyang'anyi who was, at the material time, Minister of Lands G Housing and Urban Development - (DW4) testified to the Court how he dealt with the dispute between Rajan and Patel and how he inspected the disputed piece of land accompanied by his Principal Secretary and his Director of Land Development Services.

According to his evidence they discovered that it was an a error by the City Council to H grant the whole plot to Rajan. Thereupon, according to his testimony, the Ministry recommended that the error be rectified as Mr. Rajan had applied for grant of right of occupancy of the plot behind his house only.

The Court also heard evidence from the Acting Director for Lands, (DW5), who told I the court that the disputed land was granted to the plaintiff but that after complaints by Patel the Ministry decided that the disputed plot be A divided between Patel and Rajan.

In his submission Mr. Ihema, learned counsel for the defendant argued that the Ministry had power to order that the disputed plot be divided between the parties by way of rectification of the Land Register as provided under section 99 of the Land Registration B Ordinance, Cap. 334.

It was submitted that the Ministry took the decision to divide the disputed land between the parties because it was argued, Mr. Patel had a prescriptive right over the piece of land behind his house. In support of this argument the learned counsel referred the court C to the decision in Re-Chowood's Registered Land (1933) Ch. 574.

It was argued that the existence of a title per se is not a ground for not effecting rectification under section 99 of the Land Registration Ordinance where there are grounds calling for such action. In the present case the learned counsel argued that the D decision to divide the plot came after the Minister had made exhaustive investigations and became satisfied that the ends of justice demanded such action.

In the alternative Mr. Ihema argued that the defendant, the City Council, merely complied with the decision of the Government and that as such, it was submitted, the suit E against the City Council was misconceived. The learned counsel asked the Court to dismiss the suit as incompetent.

In rebuttal Mr. Raithatha, learned counsel for the plaintiff argued that before the plaintiff acquired title over the land, the disputed land was public land. In support of this F argument the Court was referred to sections 3 and 4 of the Land Ordinance, Cap. 113. It was submitted that no person can acquire prescriptive rights over land against the Government. It was argued that the President had power to grant the land to Rajan the plaintiff.

As for the case quoted by the learned defence counsel it was Mr. Raithatha's argument G that the case dealt with Land Law in England which it was submitted was different from our land law. It was Raithatha's submission that at the time the Government granted the disputed plot the land was public land and that the President had power to grant the land to the plaintiff. H
It was argued that after the grant was made to the plaintiff Mrs Patel complained to the land officer in 1980 and that after investigation the Principal Secretary wrote a letter (P9) to her to the effect that she had no right over the land. It was argued that there was no mistake regarding the extent or the location of the disputed land before it was allocated I to the plaintiff.
1983 TLR p389
MNZAVAS J
As for the provisions of section 99(1)(f) it was argued that the section concerns mistakes A in the register and that it does not apply on the facts of this case.
There has never been a dispute that the disputed plot was lawfully granted to the plaintiff who in confirmation of the grant was eventually issued with a certificate of title N. 186056/33. That the plaintiff is the legal owner of the disputed plot is also evident from B no lesser a person than the Principal Secretary to the Ministry of Land, Housing and Urban Development - Exhibit P.8. And what is more there is the letter by the defendant himself - (exhibit P.11) addressed to the plaintiff telling him to proceed with development C of the land as he was the rightful owner of the land. Exhibits P. 12, P. 13 and P. 16 are also to the same effect.
When the City planner, (DW3), was cross-examined regarding Exhibit P.11 he said inter alia:

.... Yes at that stage I was of the view that the Ministry had reached a conclusive decision that D the plot was legally allocated to Rajan.

On being cross-examined as to whether the City Council, the defendant, knew the extent and location of the disputed plot before it was granted to the plaintiff the City planner, (DW3), replied .... "Yes, the City authorities knew where the disputed plot was E situated". The evidence of the Director for Lands, DW 5, also supports the plaintiff's case that the plaintiff is the lawful owner of the disputed plot.
In his minute - m6 (in exhibit D6) the Minister, (DW4), categorically told his Principal Secretary that the plaintiff was the owner of the plot. This was apparently after Patel F had complained to the Ministry regarding the plot. In the minute, (M6), the Minister emphasized that the Party at District and Regional levels, the City Council and the Prime Minister's office had dealt with the matter and that all of them were satisfied that the disputed plot belonged to Rajan, the plaintiff. This was in April, 1981. G
That the same Principal Secretary and the same Minister should make an about-turn and say exactly the opposite of what they had said four months earlier is, to say the least, beyond my comprehension. In F.27 (exhibit D.6) the Director for Land Development Services told the City Director that a mistake had been made by the Ministry of Lands in H granting the disputed piece of land to the plaintiff, Mr. Rajan, and that the Minister had ordered that the mistake be corrected under section 99 of the Land Registration Ordinance, Cap. 334, so that the disputed piece of land be allocated to Mr. Patel.

Indeed, and as I have already mentioned above, Mr. Ihema, learned counsel for the I defendant argued that the Ministry had power under section

1983 TLR p390

MNZAVAS J

99 to make a rectification to the effect that the land granted to the plaintiff be divided so A that Mr. Patel gets the plot behind his house.

The argument by Mr. Ihema for the defendant is interesting but, with respect to the learned counsel, not legally convincing. There is no dispute that before the land in dispute was allocated to the plaintiff, the land belonged to the Government. In other B words the land was public land under section 3(1) of the Land Ordinance, Cap. 113. And as the learned defence counsel will no doubt agree on reflection no person under our law can acquire a prescriptive right over land against the Government. That this is law is amply brought out by section 4 of the Land Ordinance, Cap. 113 of the laws. C

That being the position the argument by the defence that Mr. Patel had a prescriptive right over the land against the Government has no leg to stand on.

As for the argument that the Ministry of Lands had power to make rectification of the title under section 99(f) of Cap. 334. D

The section says:

Subject to any express provisions of this Ordinance, the land register may be rectified pursuant to an order of the High Court or by the Registrar, subject to an appeal to the High Court in any of the following cases". E

(a) .....

(b) .....

(c) ..... F

(d) .....

(e) .....

(f) in any other case, where by reason of any error or omission in the land register or by reason of any memorial made under a mistake or for other sufficient cause it may be deemed G just to rectify the land register.

The evidence does not show that there was an error or omission in the land register; nor does the evidence show that there was a mistake or any sufficient cause to justify H rectification of the land register so that Mr. Patel gets part of the disputed piece of land.

On the contrary, and as I have already stated above, both the city planner, (DW3), and the Director for Lands, (DW4), told the Court that the defendant knew the extent and location of the disputed plot before he allocated it to the plaintiff. He cannot therefore I be heard to say that the land register should be rectified under section 99(1)(f) of Cap. 334.

1983 TLR p391

As for the English decision quoted by the learned defence Counsel, I have had the A opportunity to read the case and I agree with the learned counsel for the plaintiff that the decision has no relevance on the facts of the present case.

As for Mr. Ihema's argument that the defendant merely complied with the order of the Ministry of Lands and that the plaintiff had sued the wrong person, this argument is B brought up for the first time. It is not part of the pleadings. On the contrary the defendant argues in his written statement of defence that in entering the premises he was complying with his supervisor's lawful order. On the evidence the defendant was properly sued. C

Having heard all the evidence I am satisfied that the plaintiff is the lawful owner of the disputed property -Plot No. 2361/4 and 2432/4 at Sea View, Dar es Salaam. The evidence amply shows that the plaintiff was lawfully granted right of occupancy over the land as per letter of offer dated 9/6/79 - Exhibit P1. D

Judgment is accordingly entered in favour of the plaintiff with costs which are to be taxed.

E Judgment for the plaintiff

1983 TLR p391

F

[zRPz]JUTHALAL VELJI LTD v THE THB ESTATE COMPANY LTD 1983 TLR 391 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dar Es Salaam

Judge Maina J

December 14, 1984

CIVIL CASE 230 OF 1983 G

Flynote

Landlord and Tenant - Tenancy agreement for fixed term with option to review by notice three months before date of expiry - Option taken by notice one month and three days before expiry - Whether landlord bound by the agreement. H

Landlord and Tenant - Tenancy agreement - Negotiations on terms prior to signing -Signed agreement not contain terms agreed before signing - Whether agreement can be interpreted to include the terms orally agreed.

Evidence - Tenancy agreement - Disposition - Agreement in writing - Oral agreement prior I to signing written agreement but not in corporated in the written agreement - Whether extrinsic oral evidence admissible to vary A terms of written agreement - S.101 Evidence Act No. 6 of 1967.

1983 TLR p392

MAINA J

Estoppel - Tenancy agreement - Lease for three years with option to renew for further term of two years on three months notice before date of expiry - Tenant desirous of longer term B during negotiations - Landlord assures tenant that no problem if covenants are observed - Tenant improves property - Whether landlord estopped from refusing to renew lease.

Rent Restriction Act - Maximum annual rent - Exemption order of Minister for Lands - C Whether Minister for Lands has powers to exempt - Rent Restriction Act Cap. 479 s 2(1).

Rent Restriction Act - Exemption Order in respect of particular premises only - Whether order discriminatory.
Rent Restriction Act - Exemption Order - Whether Minister should consult tenant before D making order - Rent Restriction Act Cap. 479 s.2(1).
-Headnote
The plaintiff leased a godown belonging to the defendant for a term of 3 years renewable for a further term of 2 years at a monthly rent of Shs. 13,860/=. It was expressly agreed E that in case the plaintiff opted to renew he should give notice to the defendant three months before the expiry of the first term. Relying on the agreement, the plaintiff carried out developments on the property involving substantial sums of money. The plaintiff failed to give the notice within the stipulated time and on opting to renew the lease, the F defendant refused. Instead the defendant offered the plaintiff a new lease on a rental of Shs. 65,000/= per month. The defendant had secured orders exempting him from the provisions of the Rent Restriction Act relative to restriction of right of possession and from the Minister for Justice relating to restriction on the amount of rent that may be G charged. The latter order was duly approved by the National Assembly as required by law. The plaintiff challenged the Orders as bad in law and the rent as excessive.
Held: (i) The discussion on the option to renew having been made prior to the signing of H the agreement and their not having been incorporated in the agreement which was presented for signing, the defendant was not estopped from denying his assurances;

(ii) the defendant had a right to refuse to renew the lease since the notice was not present within the time stipulated in the agreement;

(iii) the order by the Minister for lands relating to exemption from I restriction of right of possession was bad in law because he did not have powers to issue A such orders;

(iv) the order by the Minister for Justice exempting the defendant from the provisions relating to restriction on the amount of rent that may be charged was neither discriminatory nor in breach of natural justice as there is ro requirement that the order should be general nor the tenant should be consulted. B
Case Information
Suit dismissed.
Cases referred to: C

1. Century Automobiles Ltd. v Hutchings Biemer Ltd. [1965] E.A.304.
2. R. v Electricity Commissioners [1924] 1 K.B. 171.
3. Board of Education v Rice [1911] A.C. 179.
4. Bates v Lord Hailsham [1972] 1 WLR 1373. D

R.C. Kesaria for the plaintiff.
T.L. Mkude and S. Mjasiri (Tanzania Legal Corporation), for the defendant. E

[zJDz]Judgment

Maina, J.: The plaintiff Juthalal Velji Limited, has filed this suit against the defendant, the THB Estate Company Limited, asking for the following reliefs: (a) a declaration that Government Notices No.113 of 17/11/82 and No.23 of 28/2/83 are bad in law, (b) a declaration that the defendant's demand for monthly rental of shs. 65,500/= for the suit F premises is contrary to the principles of natural justice and equity, and is arbitrary, (c) an order that the defendant be restrained from demanding higher rent than that fixed by the rent tribunal or from taking further proceedings for recovery of rent more than Shs. 13,937/= per month. G

Briefly, the evidence is as follows: The plaintiff is a holding company incorporated in Tanzania and it deals with the manufacture of travel bags, school bags and suitcases and other travel products. The defendant is a subsidiary Company of the Tanzania Housing Bank and it is engaged in estate development, construction, letting of warehouses and H also sells residential houses. Among its properties are four identical godowns situated at Mikocheni area in Dar es Salaam. These godowns are numbered 1, 2, 3 and 4. The suit premises are godown No. 1. Negotiations to let the suit premises to the plaintiff were held in 1976 and attended by PW. 1 Kumblakode Kutty and PW. 2 Girish Chande on I behalf of the plaintiff Company, and the defendant was represented by the then General A Manager of the Tanzania Housing Bank one Mr. Yona.

It was agreed that the rent for the godown would be Shs. 15,500/= per month for a period of three years. That rent was, however, later fixed by the Rent Tribunal in application Nos. 78-83 of 1979, Exhibit P7, at Shs. 13,860/= per month effective from 1/1/80. B

As already stated, negotiations to let the suit premises to the plaintiff started in 1976. It was agreed that the lease would be for a period of three years renewable for a further period of two years provided three months' notice was given. On 28/9/79, before the C lease was signed, the plaintiff wrote a letter, Exhibit D4, to the defendant requesting that the terms of the lease should be altered to provide for a lease of six years instead of three years. The letter also requested approval to use the premises for storage or for light industry and confirmed that electrical installations would be such that they could be removed at any time without any damage to the property and that "the whole installation D can be removed at any time". The plaintiff also undertook that the office to be constructed at the suit premises "would be of timber modules and hence removable". That offer was studied by the defendant and DW3 Peter Tarimo was instructed to reply rejecting the offer for a six years' lease but approved the construction of temporary E offices and of electrical installations of temporary offices and of electrical installation of temporary nature. The letter dated 15/10/76, exhibit P2, which was also annexure A to the plaint is very specific that the lease would be for three years but could be renewed for further periods of three years provided three months' notice was given and if there has been no breach of the covenants, thereafter, the lease was sent to the plaintiff for F signature and it was duly signed by PW3 Girish Chande and another director of the plaintiff Company on 9/5/77. Clause 4(c) of the lease, Exhibit P1, shows that the lease was for a period of three years from 1/9/76, but could be renewed for a further period G of two years provided there was no breach of the covenants and provided further that the tenant gave three months' notice in writing before the expiry of the three years of the intention to renew the lease for two years.

By letter dated 27.7.1979, Exh. P6, the plaintiff gave notice of intention to renew the H lease. That letter, as can be seen, was written one month and three days before the lease expired. The lease commenced on 1.9.1976 and was to expire on 31.8.1979. The General Manager of the defendant Company, DW.1 Mohamed Khalfan, in his letter dated 31.7.1979, exhibit D.1, refused to renew the lease as the notice was not given I within the period prescribed in the lease. The defendant company offered the plaintiff a fresh lease of two years instead. This was rejected by the plaintiff. The defendant then asked for vacant possession of the suit premises and A filed a Civil Case No. 82 of 1980 in this court. By an order dated 16 June 1983 this court ordered that the suit for vacant possession should be filed in the court of resident magistrate and transferred the case to the resident magistrate's court. The suit is still pending in that court. The plaintiff alleges that sum of Shs. 1.6 million was spent to B improve the godown as it was believed that the lease would be for a longer period, and exhibit P.3 was produced showing the details of the expenses incurred by the plaintiff to improve the suit premises. PW1 Kumblakode Kutty said that his company would not have spent so much money for improvement of the godown if the lease was for a period of five years only. C DW.1 Mohamed Khalfan, the General Manager of the defendant company, then approached the Ministry of Lands and Urban Development on what to do about the situation as the plaintiff was refusing to vacate the premises. Government Notice No. 113 dated 17.9.1982 was then published in the official Gazette by which the Minister for D Lands exempted the defendant company from all provisions of the Rent Restriction Act relating to restriction of right of possession of the suit premises. Another Government Notice No. 23 dated 28.2.1983 was later published in the Gazette and signed by the Minister for Justice giving exemption to the defendant company from all the E provisions of the Rent Restriction Act relating to restriction on the amount of rent that may be charged or collected by the defendant from any tenant occupying the suit premises. The exemption order was duly approved by the National Assembly as required under section 1 (2) of the Rent Restriction Act, Cap. 479. The plaintiff had not F been consulted before the exemption order was published. After the publication of the exemption order, GN. 23 of 28/2/1983, the defendant appointed Martin Heymann and Company Limited, a firm of surveyors, and the Managing Director of the firm, DW.2 Ian Grant, who is a chartered valuation surveyor who carried out the valuation of G the suit premises. He visited the site in June, 1983 and saw the identical godowns. The plaintiff was occupying godown No. 1 and the witness made valuation of godown No. 3. He estimated the costs of constructing a godown similar to the one in existence and, in his opinion, the cost would be Shs. 5,570,000/= as at the time of the valuation, H that is June, 1983. He calculated the annual rent at 14% of that cost and came up with a figure of Shs. 65,000/= per month. His report was tendered as exhibit
1983 TLR p395
MAINA J

D.3. The plaintiff company was notified to pay the new rent of Shs. 65,500/= by the defendant's letter of 29 June, 1983 (Exhibit P.4) but resisted as it was considered too high. I
The plaintiff wrote a letter to the Ministry of Justice on 23 July, 1983
1983 TLR p396
MAINA J
protesting about the rent and requested that the rent could be increased to a reasonable A level which the plaintiff was willing to pay, but pointed out that the increase which was five times the existing rent was unjust and oppressive. The letter was tendered as exhibit P5 but there was no reply from the Ministry of Justice. B

The first issue in this case is whether the defendant is estopped from increasing the rent. Mr. Kesaria learned counsel for the plaintiff submitted that in view of the defendant's letter exhibit P.2 dated 15/10/1976, the defendant had given assurance that the lease could be renewed every three years by merely giving notice. He submitted further that C the plaintiff relied on the assurance given and spent substantial sums of money to improve the premises because it was believed that the tenancy would be for a long period. The plaintiff's proposal that the lease should be for six years was rejected by the defendant. Exhibit P2 reads as follows:

1. Lease term D

As for the term of the lease you suggest a term of six years rather than 3. Please note that by clause 4(b) the lease can be extended for a further period of 3 years if there has not been a breach of covenant and if the lessee so desires by merely giving three months' notice in E writing. Since this process is possible, the Bank does not foresee any difficulty on your part in having to give a written notice every 3 years.

That passage was taken by the plaintiff to mean an assurance that the lease would be for a longer period than three years. Mr. Kesaria submitted that the defendant is estopped from F increasing the rent and from denying that the lease was for a long period. He cited Century Automobiles Ltd. v Huntchings Biemer Ltd. [1965] E.A. 304. In that case the tenancy was for month to month but could be determined by either party by giving three months' notice. Subsequent to the making of that agreement, the landlord gave an assurance that the tenant G was secured for three years. The Court of Appeal held that the doctrine of equitable estoppel applied and headnote (ii) at page 304 reads "the remarks made by the managing director of the respondent company amounted to sufficiently clear and unequivocal that the H appellant company could regard itself as secure for three years, except in the event of a supermarket project materializing at an earlier date and the assurance was intended to be acted upon".
In that case, the assurance that the tenant was secure for three years was made I subsequent to the making of the tenancy agreement. So the tenant incurred the expenses to improve the premises after the assurance was given A subsequent to the making of the tenancy agreement. In the present case, the alleged assurance that there would be no difficulty in renewing the tenancy agreement every three years was given before the signing of the lease. Exhibit P2 was written nine months before the lease was signed. With respect, I agree with Mr. Mkude, learned counsel for B the defendant, that the correspondence and discussions between the parties before the lease was signed, were offers and counter offers and whatever the parties agreed upon was reduced in writing in the form of the lease, exhibit P1 which the parties signed in May, 1977. The doctrine of estoppel does not apply on the facts of this case. The C parties are bound by what they signed in the lease.
1983 TLR p397
MAINA J

Let me also point out that clause 4(c) of the lease is clear and unequivocal on the duration of the lease. No evidence can be introduced to vary, add to or contradict the terms of the lease. Section 101 of the Evidence Act 1967 is relevant. I do not see how D the evidence of Mr. Yona the then General Manager of the Tanzania Housing Bank who negotiated the lease would be relevant. Mr. Kesaria said that the defendant would have called Mr. Yona as a witness, but in my view, that was unnecessary. Whatever was discussed before the lease was signed, was later put in writing and the lease has been produced in court. If there had been a subsequent agreement after the signing of E the lease, as was the case in the Century case, that evidence would be relevant to consider whether estoppel applied. But in this case, there is no suggestion that such an agreement took place.

The terms of the lease are contained in clause 4 (c) of Exhibit P1 and it is provided that F the lease would be for a period of three years. The lease could be renewed once only for a further period of two years provided there was no breach of covenant and provided that notice was given in writing three months before expiry of the lease. It is beyond dispute that the lease expired on 30/9/1979. Under the terms of the lease G agreement, the written notice would have been given at least three months before the lease expired. But the plaintiff gave notice to renew the lease by its letter dated 27/7/1979. That was clearly a breach of the terms of the agreement. The defendant was, in my opinion, right in refusing to renew the lease. H

The defendant did not throw out the plaintiff but offered a fresh lease with new terms and conditions, but the plaintiff company did not accept the offer. The original lease, exhibit P1, was for a specific period of three years and since the plaintiff did not comply with the condition agreed, by giving three months' notice of intention to renew, that lease I expired without being renewed. I repeat that the plaintiff was at fault in not giving notice within the period stipulated in the lease. The defendant was entitled to do what it did by A terminating the lease. Since I have found that the defendants' letter, exhibit P2, was written before the lease was signed the doctrine of estoppel does not apply, the defendant company was at liberty to offer a fresh lease with fresh terms and conditions.

The maximum annual rent provided in the Rent Restriction Act cannot apply where the B premises have been exempted under section 1(2)(b) of the Act. In this case the premises were exempted by the Minister from the provisions of the Act relating to restriction of the rent which may be charged. Whether the exemption order was bad in C law is a matter which I shall discuss when I consider the fourth issue. So, Mr. Kesaria's argument that the annual rent could not be increased to more than fourteen per centum of the cost of construction has no basis in view of the Minister's order. As regards the valuation report, exhibit D.3, it was prepared by an expert, DW.2 Ian Grant, who inspected the premises. The improvements made by the plaintiff were excluded D from the assessment of the market value of the premises. No evidence was produced to challenge the finding in the report. It was not necessary for the plaintiff to be informed or to be present during the inspection of the premises made by DW.2. I accept exhibit D.3 as evidence on the market value of the premises. E

For the reasons given, the answer to the first issue must be in the negative. The defendant is not estopped from increasing the monthly rental.

As regards the second issue I have only to say that for the purpose of increase of rent F the plaintiff is not a protected tenant. The plaintiff breached the covenant in the lease agreement on notice to be given. For the purpose of vacant possession, it is for the district court to decide whether the plaintiff is a protected tenant, as the suit for vacant possession is pending at the district court.

I do not consider it necessary to discuss the third issue which was framed as follows: Is G Government Notice No. 113 of 17/11/1982 valid? It is not necessary to consider that issue because as Mr. Mkude conceded in his submission to the court, that order was invalid. The Minister for Lands has no power under the law to give the exemption to the landlord. Under section 2(1) of the Rent Restriction Act, Cap. 479 the term H "Minister" is defined to mean the Minister responsible for legal affairs. The Minister for Lands had no powers to make the exemption under section 1(2) of the Rent Restriction Act. I therefore answer the third issue in the negative.

I now turn to consider the fourth issue which is this: Is Government Notice No. 23 of I 28.2.1983 bad in law as pleaded in paragraph 12 of the plaint? The order which was made under section 1(2)(b) of the Rent Restriction A Act, reads as follows:

> The premises known as TECCO Godowns situated at plots Nos. 1, 2, 3 in Mikocheni Industrial area Dar es Salaam in respect of which the THB Estates Company Limited, a public B corporation established under the Companies Ordinance, is the landlord, are hereby exempted from all such provisions of the Rent Restriction Act, 1962 relating to restriction on the amount of rent that may be charged or collected by the THB Estates Company Limited as the landlord from any tenant occupying any part of the premises. C

Section 1(2)(b) of the Rent Restriction Act 1962 as amended by act No. 57 of 1966 provides that the Act shall apply to all dwelling houses and commercial premises other than "any premises or class of premises in Tanganyika which the Minister may, with the approval of the National Assembly signified by resolution, by order published in the D Gazette, exempt from all or any of the provisions of this Act". The order, Government Notice No. 23 of 1983, which exempted the suit premises owned by the defendant company from the provisions relating to restriction on the amount of rent to be paid was E approved by the resolution passed in the National Assembly on the 27th January, 1983.

It was submitted on behalf of the plaintiff company that GN 23 of 1983 was unfair, unjust and discriminatory. Mr. Kesaria said that the plaintiff company was not given an opportunity of a hearing before the order was made and that the plaintiff was condemned unheard. Learned counsel also submitted that the defendant company has F other properties and the order was only made in relation to the premises occupied by the plaintiff and so the Order was discriminatory. Mr. Mkude, on the other hand, submitted that there are no provisions of the Rent Restriction Act requiring the Minister to consult G the tenants before the exemption order was made.

There can be no doubt, in my opinion, that the Minister for Justice had power under section 1(2)(b) of the Rent Restriction Act to exempt any landlord from the provisions in the Act relating to the rents that may be charged in any premises. Mr. Kesaria submitted H that the order was discriminatory because the defendant company has other properties which were not subject to the exemption order. I do not think that the Minister had to include all the properties owned by the defendant company in the exemption order. There are, as DW. 3 Peter Tarimo, the Technical Manager of the defendant Company said, other properties owned by the defendant in other areas of the I country which were also exempted. One of them is Hifadhi House in Dar es Salaam. I have also noted that apart from the suit A premises, there were other premises owned by other landlords which were also exempted and the exemption orders were published as Govt. Notices Nos. 24, 25, 26 and 27 all dated 28/2/1983. So it is, in my view not correct to say that the order in respect of the suit premises was discriminatory. B

It was also said that the exemption order was unfair and unjust in that the plaintiff was not given a hearing before the order was made. The order was in a form of delegated legislation. Parliament invested the powers in the Minister to make such an order. Mr. Kesaria said that the plaintiff as tenants of suit premises should have been consulted C before the order was made. He said that a notice should have been given so that persons who would be affected could make representations. Learned Counsel cited, as an example, the publication by the Dar es Salaam City Council of the Council's intention to make by-laws on rates known as development levy. That argument can, in my view, D be disposed of by pointing out that under section 81 of the Local Government (Urban Authorities) Act No. 8 of 1982, there is specific mention that a local authority must publish in the Gazette the by-laws it intends to make and invite representations and objections from the people who would be affected. Similarly, section 16 of the local E Government Finances Act, No. 9 of 1982 provides that the local authority must publish notice on rates it intends to make within fifteen days after passing resolution for making the rate, and the rate shall not be valid unless notice of it is duly given in the manner prescribed. There is, however no express provision in the Rent Restriction Act which F requires the Minister to consult the people to be affected or to publish a notice before an exemption order is made under section 1(2)(b) of the Act. It is wrong to base the argument on the publication of rates made by the City Council on the facts of this case.

In support of his argument that the plaintiff as tenant of the suit premises had to be G consulted before the Minister made the exemption order, Mr. Kesaria cited several cases. One of them is the case of R. v Electricity Commissioners [1924] 1KB 171. In that case, the Electricity Act provided that the Commissioners had to do certain things and specifically provided for holding of inquiries and to consult people to be affected by H the Commissioners' decisions. It was held by the Court of Appeal that the scheme formulated by the Commissioners was ultra vires because the Act did not permit the Commissioners to set up two electricity authorities. In the present case, the Rent Restriction Act does not require the Minister to consult the tenant or other people to be affected by an order made under section 1(2)(b). Similarly in the case of Board of I Education v Rice [1911] 1 A.C. 179 cited by Mr. Kesaria there were provisions in the Education Act requiring the education board to hold public inquiry in A order to find out if a local education authority has fulfilled its duty. Failure to hold such inquiry amounts to non-compliance with the provisions of the Education Act. But as I have already pointed out there is nothing in the Rent Restriction Act requiring the Minister to consult the people who would be affected by his order. B

Mr. Mkude, learned counsel for the defendant submitted that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to be consulted before the order was made. He said that as there is no requirement for consultation in the Act, delegated legislation could be made without consulting the people to be affected. He cited Bates v Lord Hailsham [1972] 1 WLR 1373. In that case the Lord Chancellor and his committee had consulted the Law C Society as required by the Solicitors Act before making an order on solicitors' remuneration. However, some solicitors wanted more time for consultation before the order was made. The Court of Appeal refused to grant more time for consultation. Meggary, J. said at p. 1378: D

> Let me accept that in the sphere of the so called quasi-judicial, the rules of natural justice run, and that in the administrative or executive duty, there is a general duty of fairness. Nevertheless, these considerations do not seem to me to affect the process of legislation, E whether primary or delegated. Many of those affected by delegated legislation, and affected very substantially, are never consulted in the process of enacting that legislation; and yet they have no remedy. Of course, the informal consultation of representative bodies by the F legislative authority is common place, but although a few statutes have specifically provided for a general process of publishing draft delegated legislation and considering objections, I do not know of any implied right to be consulted or make objections, or any principle upon which the courts may enjoin the legislative process at the suit of those who contend that insufficient time for consultation and consideration has been given. G

The learned judge went on to say:

> If the procedure laid down by Parliament is fairly and substantially followed, I cannot see that H the Committee need do more; and I see nothing in the evidence to suggest that the Committee has not fully and fairly complied with the statutory requirements.
>
> The above is the correct principle to be applied in this case. Parliament I has given powers to the Minister for Justice to exempt certain premises from the A provisions the procedure to be followed. The order must be approved by the National Assembly. The Minister, in making the delegated legislation, did exactly what was required of him. The order was debated and approved by the National Assembly. There can never be an implied right to be consulted in the making of delegated B legislation. If Parliament intended that persons to be affected by the Minister's order should be consulted first, it would have provided so in the Rent Restriction Act. The order was debated and approved by the National Assembly as required by the Act and that was in full compliance with the statutory requirements. I am satisfied that C Government Notice No. 23 of 28.2.1983 was properly made and it was not bad in law as pleaded. I therefore answer the fourth issue in the negative.

1983 TLR p402
For these reasons this suit is dismissed with costs.
D Suit dismissed.
1983 TLR p402
E
[zRPz]SELEMANI TILWILIZAYO v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 402 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

August 21, 1984
CRIMINAL APPEAL 31 OF 1983 F
Flynote
Criminal Law - Theft - Proceeds of stolen government cheque deposited in a bank account - Whether withdrawal of cash from the bank account amounts to stealing government money.
Commercial Law - Banker-customer relationship - One of debtor-creditor. G
-Headnote
By using a fictitious name of the payee the appellant was able to steal government cheques, deposit them in a bank account opened in the name of the fictitious payee, and H withdraw cash from the bank. The trial court convicted him on eleven counts of stealing government money. On appeal it was considered whether the money withdrawn from the bank belonged to the government so as to constitute stealing government money.
Held: (i) Bank customers, including the government do not own the money which is I deposited in the bank;
1983 TLR p403
LAGAKINGIRA J
(ii) the stolen government cheques deposited in the National Bank of A Commerce, Kuu Street Branch, Dodoma, became the bank's and not the government's money; thus a conviction of stealing government money cannot be sustained;

(iii) the evidence available shows that there was theft of the government cheques by the appellant;

(iv) on the analogy that a cheque can be imported into a charge by virtue of its being money within the meaning of that term in the Penal Code the appellant was properly convicted as charged on the proven counts of theft.

Case Information

Appeal dismissed.

Cases referred to:

1. Rwebangira v R. [1975] LRT no. 26.
2. Joachimson v Swiss Bank Corporation [1921] All E.R. Rep. 92.
3. Foley v Hill [1848] 2 H.L. Cas. 28.
4. Menzour Ahmed v R. [1957] E.A. 386.
5. R. v Keena 11 Cox CC. 13.
6. Katengele v R. [1969] E.A. 603.

D.C. Mbezi for the appellant.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The appellant Selemani Tilwilizayo was charged in the District Court of Dodoma on twelve counts of forgery, twelve of uttering, twelve of stealing by public servant, one of attempting to obtain money by false pretences and one of conspiracy to steal in which he was jointly charged with one Marygrace Ntomola. He was acquitted on all the forgery and uttering counts as well as on the attempting and conspiracy counts. He was then convicted on eleven of the stealing counts, i.e.; counts 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34 and 35. The twelfth count of stealing i.e., count 36, completely escaped the attention of the trial Resident Magistrate who made no mention of it anywhere in his judgment. Following conviction the appellant was sentenced to concurrent terms of five years' imprisonment on each of the eleven counts. He then appealed against convictions and sentences through learned counsel Mr. Mbezi who also represented him at the trial.

It is necessary to give a brief background of the case. The appellant and the second accused Ntomola were accounts assistants at the Prime Minister's Office, Dodoma. It seems that between 1977 and 1979 food reliefs were being transported by private transporters from depots of the National Milling Corporation to various villages in Dodoma Region. The transporters were being paid by the Prime Minister's Office on presentation of relevant documents. Payment vouchers and cheques were being prepared on the strength of these documents. One such transporter was a person named Omari Saidi of Kondoa who had ceased to be a transporter in this connection, twelve cheques were prepared in his name on the strength of documents purportedly submitted by him and these cheques were banked in an account purportedly opened by him at the NBC Kuu Street Branch, Dodoma. In fact Omari Said (PW9) never submitted those documents and my examination of them reveals that the possibly true transporters' names are deleted and the name of Omari Saidi is substituted. Further, although PW9 had an account at the C Kuu Street Branch, the cheques were not banked in that account. They were banked in the account of a person who assumed the name Omari Saidi and who was advised to add another name to distinguish himself from PW 9. He added the name Mohamedi. The trial magistrate was therefore correct in saying that the holder of the account and in D whose name the cheques were prepared was fictitious. It was then discovered that the appellant was the person who had opened that account. It was also discovered that the cheques had been dispatched through P.O. Box 793, Dodoma which was being rented by Omari Saidi Mohamedi and that that person was the appellant. The appellant E was arrested and charged on these grounds. But because of very poor investigations it was assumed, indeed testified, that the cheques and the supporting documents were otherwise genuine. The appellant was therefore charged with forging the cheques only in so far as he was said to have signed them as payee. He was then said to have produced F them at the bank and to have stolen the proceeds thereof, which proceeds were said to be government property.

The appeal has given me a great deal of difficulty. The difficulty stems from the fact that the trial magistrate wrote his judgment as if he were away from the evidence; it also stems from the fact that very important documents were either not tendered or, if they G were, they could not be found when the appeal came up for hearing. It is necessary to set out fully the sorrowful state of affairs. I could not find the following: (1) Exh. P1(B), a letter said to have been written by the appellant to the second accused bearing the address P.O. Box No. 793, Dodoma. (2) Exh. P2(A), a cheque No. 608753 in H connection with count 37 of attempting. (3) Exh. P2(B), a cheque No. 608784 in connection with the same count. (4) Exh. P3(E), a cheque No. 602533 (or 602933) in connection with count 29. (5) Exh. P3(H), a cheque No. 604109 in connection with count 33. (6) Exh. P3(1), a cheque No. 603712 in connection with count 32. (7) Exh. P3(J) a cheque No. 604970 in connection with count 34. (8) Exh. P3(K), a cheque I No. 605708 in connection with count 35.

(9) Exh. P3(L), a cheque No. 605854 in connection with count 36. (10) Exh. P4 which A on record is described as "a transport income voucher bank statement an envelope Box 793 to Omari Saidi which the accused 2 brought to me". (11) Exh. 7(A)-(I), being nine copies of bank pay-in slips. (12) Exh. P10, Three of four Vote Receipts and Payments Cash Books which were returned to the Prime Minister's Office in the course B of the trial but apparently never restored to the trial court. (13) Exh. P12, a Postal Rental Card which I gather from the list of exhibits drawn up by the trial magistrate himself was "collected" (perhaps by the Postal authorities) on 23.4.79; but I cannot understand this since it was tendered on 10.9.82. (14) Exh. P13, the Post Office Directory for 1980/81. There is the cover of the directory only, the body having C disappeared. (15) Exh. P14, being payment voucher Nos. 165 (or 168)/11 and 165/89 which, however, appear to have been previously tendered as part of Exh. P4. (16) Exh. P15, an audit report. (17) Two unmarked cheques for the defence Nos. 604520 and 154315. But I do not know how it was possible to tender these since the record shows, D and Mr. Mbezi confirmed, that all efforts to trace them at the bank and at the Prime Minister's Office yielded no fruits. I am certain that this was poor recording of the evidence, a feature typical throughout the record. (18) The final submissions of Mr. Mbezi at the trial which I gather from the judgment were made in writing. There were E then documents which were not tendered at all and cannot be seen. These are: (1) A letter or chit said to have been written by the appellant introducing one Bakari Iddi (PW3) to collect Exhs. P2(A) and P2(B). In fact that letter or chit does not appear to have been brought to the court at all. (2) The bank form which the appellant and his F referee (PW2) signed when the appellant opened the bank account. It was brought to the court and identified by PW2 and that was the end of the matter. (3) The bank specimen signature card which the appellant signed when opening the account. It was brought to the court and identified by a bank official (PW8) and that was the end of the G matter. To make the position worse the trial magistrate did not in his judgment refer to any document, except Exhs. P4, P13, P14 and P15 which he merely mentioned in passing and almost by accident. I therefore find it difficult to say that he addressed his mind to any of the exhibits. That is the unfavorable situation in which I am called upon to determine the appeal. H

How and where do I start? I find it convenient to start from the end of the story - at the bank - going up to the beginning. I will therefore first determine whether if there was money stolen from the bank, it was government money. I am of the unfortunate view that it was not. If we assume, first, that Omari Saidi was a true person and that he was I entitled to the money in the twelve cheques, then, in that case, if any money was stolen it was A that of Omari Saidi. It became Omari Saidi's the moment it was collected from the bank and could no longer be said to be government property. We have seen, however, that Omari Saidi was fictitious. Now, if any money was stolen, whose was it? It was undoubtedly the banker's money. Bank customers, the government included, do not B own the money which is deposited in the bank. I am indebted to Mr. Mbezi who referred me to Rwebangira v R. [1975] LRT n. 26 in which I expressed a similar view in the past. There are indeed other and older authorities to the same effect, notably, Joachimson v Swiss Bank Corporation [1921] All E.R. Rep. 92 and Foley v Hill C (1848), 2 H.L. Cas. 28. In the latter case, the leading case on this subject, Lord Cottenham, L.C. said:

> Money, when paid into a bank, ceases altogether to be the money of the principal; it is then the money of the banker who is bound to return an equivalent by paying a similar sum to that D deposited with him when he is asked for it.

These English decisions are cited with strong reliance in H.P. Sheldon's The Practice and Law of Banking (9th Ed., at p. 201) which appears to be an important work in this E field. The author himself similarly says:

> The banker when he receives money from a customer does not hold the money in a fiduciary F capacity. To say that money is 'deposited' with a banker is likely to cause misapprehension. What really happens is that the money is not deposited with, but lent to, the banker, and all that the banker engages to do is to discharge the debt by paying over an equal amount when called upon.

In this connection, I have also had recourse to s. 258(2) of the Penal Code and to the G definition of "special owner" therein but I can find nothing in that definition which takes away from the view I am expressing. By the said definition a person may become a special owner of anything capable of being stolen if inter alia he has a proprietary interest in the thing but, in my respectful view, a bank customer does not have a H proprietary interest in the money paid into a bank for the simple reason that the moment it is received by the banker the customer cannot point to any money as his property. He is only a creditor to the banker and it would be extraordinary for a creditor to say that any money held by his debtor, wherever it may be, is his property. It may of course be I inquired whether a customer does not suffer injury if, as in the instant case, his account is debited on forged or stolen cheques. Admittedly, he suffers, but the injury is A merely tortious. The issue, as I apprehend it, would then be whether the banker, as is the instant case, was negligent in permitting a false account to be opened and in permitting false cheques to be banked. For these matters one has to turn to legislation dealing with cheques and bills of exchange generally but his is outside the scope of this judgment. I believe the foregoing sufficiently demonstrates that if there was theft of B money in this case it was not government money.

It is not necessary but it may be desirable to know whether in fact any money was stolen. This is one of the areas where the bungling of the evidence and the ineptitude of C the trial magistrate occasioned me considerable pain. There were 43 (I saw only 41) personal cheques (Exh. P8) of Omari Saidi Mohamed - the appellant's in fact - which show that a large amount of money was withdrawn from the bank. It is also irresistible to find that this money was withdrawn from the account into which the stolen cheques were banked for, apparently, there was only one account in the name of Omari Saidi D Mohamedi. However, we do not know for certain that that account was credited with the money in those cheques only. There was a bank statement in Exh. P4 which, as already stated, cannot be seen. But the trial magistrate who saw it - if he did, really - E makes no mention of that document and makes no mention of the withdrawals effected through Exh. P8. In his view, there was theft merely because Omari Said was fictitious. The problem I am posing is neither academic nor a mere technicality. According to Mr. Mbezi who saw the statement, and there is no way to support the contrary, it showed a credit balance. It is therefore difficult to say that the money withdrawn was necessarily F the money represented in the stolen cheques and no other. For all we know the money in those cheques might still be standing in Omari Saidi Mohamedi's account. In order for there to be theft of cash as charged, cash has to be collected. In Menzour Ahmed v R. [1957] E.A. 386. The appellant, an advocate, had received on behalf of G his client two cheques of Shs. 3,000/= and 5,000/=. He endorsed the cheque for Shs. 3,000/= and passed it on to a garage company to reduce his indebtedness with them. He paid the cheque for Shs. 5,000= into his own bank account. He did not account for any money to his client. He was charged before a resident magistrate's court on two H counts of stealing by agent the cash represented in the cheques and was convicted on both counts. On appeal to the Supreme Court of Kenya the conviction on one count was quashed. On further appeal on the remaining count the Court of Appeal said (at p. 388): I

1983 TLR p408

LAGAKINGIRA J

In our opinion the evidence could not support a conviction for stealing the proceeds of the A cheque .... Although the appellant received credit for the amount of the cheque, he did not convert it into money by cashing it and no money, as distinct from the cheque itself, ever came into his possession. There must be an actual receipt of money before there can be a conversion of it. B

The Court cited R.v Keena, 11 Cox C.C. 13 for authority. In the instant case, therefore, in the absence of evidence that the money withdrawn was necessarily the proceeds of the stolen cheques, it is difficult to sustain the convictions for stealing those C proceeds. And, if I should repeat myself, I would still say that if the money withdrawn was the proceeds of those cheques, it was all the same not government money but the banker's, and the proper charges would be those of obtaining money by false pretences. It is not available at this stage to alter the charges but that could only have been done at the trial. D

I am satisfied, however, that there was theft of the cheques themselves and I have been deliberately implying so. The question is whether, if there is evidence, the convictions can be sustained on that ground. I have no doubt they can and my authority for saying E so is once again Menzour Ahmed (above) as well as Katengele v R. [1969] E.A. 603. The ratio decidendi of these cases is that the definition of "money" can be imported into a charge so as to make reference to a sum of money therein to embrace a cheque for that sum if by doing so there would be no prejudice to the accused. I am certain that no prejudice would arise in this case for the trilogies of forging the cheques, uttering them F and stealing the proceeds thereof must have imported into the appellant's mind the theft of the cheques as well. What I have therefore to determine is whether the cheques came into his possession. I will preface this by observing that the question is made slightly difficult by the omission of the prosecution to tender the bank documents which the G appellant was said to have signed when opening the account. It will therefore be necessary to rely on circumstantial evidence. This is not to say, however, that there is any doubt about the fact of the appellant's opening of the account. There was in this connection the evidence of PW8 which the trial magistrate believed and it was H corroborated by PW2. I cannot agree with Mr. Mbezi in his submission that PW2 was a person to be doubted in the absence of evidence that when he acted as referee for the appellant he also knew that the appellant was engaging in fraud. Indeed, their meeting at the bank seems to have been accidental.

The absence of the bank documents notwithstanding it is still possible to find that the I cheque came into the appellant's possession. There was

1983 TLR p409

LAGAKINGIRA J

other evidence from which it was possible to infer that he signed the cheques as payee. A Although the trial magistrate acquitted the appellant of forgeries, which, incidentally, was attacked by learned counsel for the Republic Mr. Senguji, the acquittal does not preclude this Court from evaluating the evidence and drawing its own inferences. There was hence evidence from PW8 that on 22.11.79 the appellant presented at the bank his B personal cheque (part of Exh. P8) to collect Shs. 25,000/=. I have marked this cheque as Exh. P8 (41) at the back. The cheque had been endorsed for payment to one Joseph Mtembuzi but it seems that when Mtembuzi presented it the bankers refused to give him the money and said that the owner himself had to come because the amount C was too big. The owner then came and it was the appellant. In the event even the appellant was not paid the money for, in the meantime, a telephone call had come from the Prime Minister's Office instructing the bank to dishonour the appellant's cheques. There are four identical signatures of the owner on Exh. P8(41). Since that owner was the appellant, I find irresistibly that the signatures were written by him. There are then D before me six of the twelve stolen cheques and the payee's signatures thereon are absolutely identical to the signatures on Exh. P8(41). I am entitled to make that comparison by virtue of the provisions of s. 75(1) of the Evidence Act, 1967 and in doing so I do not require the assistance of an expert. In the words of Ratanlal and E Thakore (The Law of Evidence, 14th ed., p. 171), commenting on the equivalent s. 73 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872:

> The Court may compare the disputed signature, writing or seal of a person with signatures, F writings or seals which have been admitted or proved to the satisfaction of the Court to have been made or written by that person. A Court may rely upon its own comparison of the signature, writing, or seal, unaided by expert evidence. G

The signatures on the six cheques are simple and short and the same in all respects. They are in turn identical in every respect to the owner's signatures on Exh. P8(41). I am satisfied that the appellant signed the six cheques and therefore that they came into his possession. H

Further, there was the renting and operation of P.O. Box No. 793, Dodoma. It came from PW 12 (he should actually have been PW 11, there being no PW 10) that Box was being rented by the appellant in the name of Omari Saidi Mohamedi since 1979 or late 1978. PW12 tendered the 1980/81 Post Office Directory and pointed to the name of Omari Saidi Mohamed at page 254. As stated earlier, I have only seen the cover of I the directory (Exh. P13), but the trial magistrate who saw it stated that the name appeared there. We then have six Post Office green cards (Exhs. A P6 A - F) on which registered articles were collected through P.O. Box No. 793, Dodoma. These are in the name of Omari Saidi and they bear signatures similar to those on Exh. P8(41). Finally, there is the appellant's undisputed THB Savings Account Book (Exh. P9) and this gives the appellant's address as P.O. Box 793, Dodoma. I am B satisfied that the appellant was the renter of the Box. Now, the payment vouchers available to me, except one, show that the cheques were being dispatched to Omari Saidi through P.O. Box No. 793, Dodoma. I am again satisfied from this that the cheques were being sent to the appellant and that he received them. C

As already seen, however, the cheques were forgeries and the appellant had no claim of right to any of them. On the analogy that a cheque can be imported into a charge by virtue of its being money within the meaning of that term under the Penal Code, I am of the view that the appellant was properly convicted as charged on the counts of theft, but D I confine these remarks to those instances where I was able to see and examine the cheques. I did not see the cheques in counts 29, 32, 33, 34, 35 and 36 and on those counts the appellant is acquitted. I saw the cheques in counts 25 (Exh. P3A), 26(Exh. P3B), 27 (Exh. P3C), 28 (Exh. P3D), 30 (Exh. P3F) and 31 (Exh. P3G). On those E counts the appeal is dismissed and the sentences are confirmed.

Appeal dismissed.
1983 TLR p410
F
[zRPz]EDWIN SIMON MAMUYA v ADAM JONAS MBALA 1983 TLR 410 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

November 3, 1983
CIVIL CASE 19 OF 1983 G
Flynote
Contract - Written contract - Variation of terms must be in writing. H Contract - Variation - Consideration - Agreement which varies terms of an existing contract must be supported by consideration.
Contract - Waiver - Waiver of contractual rights - Need not be supported by consideration. I Contract - Mesne profits - Assessment of - Rent Restriction Act, 1962.
1983 TLR p411
LAGAKINGIRA J
-Headnote
The plaintiff bought a house from the defendant. According to the agreement, which was A in writing, the defendant was to deliver the house to the plaintiff at the end of September, 1982. Despite the fact that the plaintiff paid the purchase price in full before the agreed date of delivery of the house the defendant did not perform his part of the contract until on the 20th August, 1983 after the former had filed a suit in court praying B for an order of specific performance, and mesne profits at the rate of Shs. 5,000= per month from October 1982 to the date of judgment and costs of the suit. The defendant argued in court that there was a collateral, oral, agreement between the parties varying the terms of the agreements, permitting him to remain in the premises up to February. He further argued that from February 1983 he had sought to deliver possession of the C house but that the plaintiff had refused or neglected to take up the same. The Court considered the defence of variation of contractual terms by a collateral agreement and the principle to be followed in assessing mesne profits. D
Held: (i) Where a contract is in writing, its terms can only be varied in writing;
(ii) the agreement which varies the terms of an existing contract must be supported by consideration; E

(iii) a mere forbearance or concession afforded by one party to the other for the latter's convenience and at his request does not constitute a variation, but operates as a waiver which need not be supported by consideration;

(iv) Mesne profits or damages are recoverable in addition to specific F performance when a party delays to perform his part of the contract without reasonable cause;

(v) the delay of the defendant to deliver possession of the house from February 1983 until August 1983 was wilful and without justification;

(vi) in assessing mesne profits the court may be guided by the provisions of G section 4(1)(c) and 4(2)(a) of the Rent Restriction Act, 1962 and circumstances surrounding, or relating to, the suit premises.

Case Informaiton

Judgment for the plaintiff. H

Cases referred to:

1. Pira & Others v Mawji [1930] 1 TLR (R) 457.
2. Robertson v Minister of Pensions [1949] 1KB 227.
3. Combe v Combe [1951] 1 All E.R. 767
4. Alidina v Globe Mercantile Corporation Ltd. [1968] E.A. 114. I
5. Jones v Gardiner [1902] 1 Ch. 191.

1983 TLR p412

LAGAKINGIRA J

6. Shah. v Abdulla [1964] E.A. 742. A
7. Diamond v Campbell-Jones & Others [1960] 1 All E.R. 583.

G. Alimwike: Amicus curiae.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: By an agreement in writing dated 7th June, 1982 and in consideration B of the sum of Shs. 300,000/= the defendant agreed to sell and the plaintiff agreed to purchase a residential house on Plot No. 209A, Block "X", Hazina area, in the municipality of Dodoma. It was a term of the agreement that the purchase price was to C be paid in instalments, the final instalment to be made in September 1982, and the defendant was to hand over the house at the end of that month. The plaintiff duly paid the purchase price, the final payment being made on 1st September, 1982. However, the defendant never delivered up the house. The plaintiff therefore commenced this action on 9th June, 1983 praying for an order of specific performance, mesne profits at D the rate of Shs. 5,000/= per month from October 1982 to the date of judgment and costs of the suit.

In his written statement of defence the defendant admitted the averments regarding the existence of the agreement and the mode and fact of payments. His defence was E two-fold, namely, that there was a collateral agreement whereby the plaintiff permitted him to remain in the house up to February 1983, and that he had since sought to deliver possession of the house but the plaintiff had neglected or refused to take up the same. It follows from the foregoing that the basic issues are whether there was a variation of the F terms as regards the time of performance and whether there was a tender of performance which was refused. On 20th August, 1983, while judgment was reserved, the defendant handed over the house to the plaintiff. Both parties were unrepresented.

It is common practice to vary the terms of a contract by a subsequent agreement. This G may be done either orally or in writing save that where the contract is in writing or where the law requires it to be in writing, any variation there to must similarly be in writing.

In the instant case the agreement of 7th June 1982 did not have to be in writing: see Pira H & Ors. v Mawji (1930), 1 TLR (R) 457. But since it was, its terms could only be varied in writing. Let us now see the position.

The defendant averred in para. 1 of the written statement of defence that there was an oral agreement extending the time for surrendering the house to February 1983. But his evidence in court suggested that there was a written agreement. He testified that on 24th I August his mother with whom he was staying in the suit premises died. When the plaintiff turned up to make the final payment he asked the plaintiff for permission to continue in A occupation and wind up the funeral rites. The plaintiff allegedly agreed. However, in October or November the plaintiff went to claim the house and told the defendant that if he required a further extension they had to see their lawyer, Mr. Alimwike. They therefore went to Mr. Alimwike and after discussion the plaintiff took out a piece of B paper ("kikaratasi") on which they wrote and agreed that the defendant would hand over the house in February 1983. Thereafter, the defendant never saw the plaintiff until he was served with the summons in this case. On the other hand, the plaintiff denied giving any extension. The court therefore called Mr. Alimwike for an independent version. He C confirmed that the parties turned up in his chambers and argued for some time. He finally intervened and told them they could vary the terms of the contract. At this juncture the plaintiff asked the defendant to state when he would hand over the house. The defendant replied, "February". Mr. Alimwike then saw the parties write something, D but he did not involve himself in that and did not know what they wrote.

I find from the foregoing that there was no written agreement to vary the contract. I say so because such an agreement could not be constituted by a mere "kikaratasi", as the defendant put it. It had to be formal and witnessed like the contract, Exhibit P5. The defendant did not even have a copy of the "kikaratasi", so his evidence on the matter E was purely oral and inadmissible. I will also add, although it is not necessary to do so, that even if there was a written agreement it could not have operated to vary the contract since, on the defendant's evidence, it was exclusively to the defendant's advantage. The F plaintiff had nothing to gain; hence there was complete absence of consideration. It is stated in Chitty on Contract 24th Ed., para. 1378:

> The agreement which varies the terms of an existing contract must be supported by consideration. In many cases, consideration can be found in the mutual abandonment of G existing rights or the reciprocal conferment of new benefits by each party on the other .... But an agreement which is made exclusively for the benefit of only one party, or an agreement which, although capable of benefiting both parties, is actually made for the benefit of one alone, will not be effective to vary the contract, since no consideration is present. H

That indeed, is what appears to have been the position here. From all considerations, therefore, the defendant's reliance on the existence of an agreement varying the terms of I the original contract is bound to fail and fails.
1983 TLR p414
LAGAKINGIRA J
That, however, does not conclude the issue. There can be no doubt that the plaintiff, A even if reluctantly, did accede to the defendant's request to remain in the house till February. I reach that view having regard to the independent testimony of Mr. Alimwike. There was thus a forbearance or a concession on the part of the plaintiff, and although that did not amount to a variation one is entitled to say that the plaintiff had by B his word and conduct waived his rights under the contract. In such circumstances equity intervenes to hold a person to his word. The same para. 1378 in Chitty hence goes on to state:

A mere forbearance or concession afforded by one party to the other for the latter's C convenience and at this request does not constitute a variation, but operates as a waiver. Such a forbearance or concession need not be supported by consideration, and can be made orally even when the contract is one which is required to be evidenced in writing. D

In Robertson v Minister of Pensions [1949] 1 KB 227 Denning, J. (as he then was) similarly said:

.... If a man gives a promise or assurance which he intends to be binding on him and to be E acted on by the person to whom it was given, then, once it is acted on he is bound by it.

In Combe v Combe [1951] 1 All E.R. 767 Denning, L.J. (as he then was) again said, at p. 770: F

The principle, as I understand it is that where one party has, by his words or conduct, made to the other a promise or assurance which was intended to affect the legal relations between G them and to be acted on accordingly, then, once the other party has taken him at his word and acted on it, the one who gave the promise or assurance cannot afterwards be allowed to revert to the previous legal relations as if no such promise or assurance had been made by him, but he must accept their legal relations subject to the qualification which he himself had so H introduced, even though it is not supported in point of law by any consideration, but only by his word.

I am satisfied that the plaintiff agreed to postpone delivery of possession to February. The defendant, although without furnishing consideration, took the plaintiff at his word I and so continued to occupy
1983 TLR p415
LAGAKINGIRA J
the house. On the authorities cited, which I respectfully adopt, the plaintiff cannot be A allowed to resile from his concession and to insist on his rights as stipulated in the contract. I think what is important now is to determine the date in February on which the handover was to be done. The written statement of defence speaks of "February 1983". In evidence the defendant said, "in February 1983". Mr. Alimwike spoke of B "February". In considering these expressions, and doing my best to give them meaning, I think the intention of the parties was that delivery takes place on 1st February, 1983.

I now come to the second issue. Did the defendant offer to hand over the house? Once again I find the evidence elusive. In para. 2 of the written statement of defence the C defendant asserted that he had since February, 1983 "been all along for the plaintiff to go and take possession of the premises". In evidence he also stated: "I did not see the plaintiff ... until I was served with the summons in this case". On the other hand, the plaintiff stated that when delivery was due he went to see Mr. Alimwike but the D defendant could not be found. In the end he decided to bring this suit. Mr. Alimwike confirmed that the plaintiff met him and complained that the defendant had not handed over the house. Subsequently, Mr. Alimwike met the defendant and communicated the complaint but the defendant replied that the plaintiff had not turned up to take possession E of the house!

Once parties bind themselves in contract for lawful consideration they are obliged to perform their respective promises. But a party would be absolved from liability if he offered to perform his part of the agreement and the other party wilfully refused the offer. F Nevertheless, for there to be an offer in law it must inter alia be unconditional, it must be communicated, and it must be made in such circumstances as to leave no doubt that the party offering to perform is presently able and willing to do so: See generally s. 38 of the Law of Contract Ordinance, Cap. 433 and Alidina v Globe Mercantile Corporation Ltd. [1968] E.A. 114. I think what calls for consideration in the instant G case is whether there was an offer at all, for if there was none, the other matters do not rise. I have just stated, and I think demonstrated, that the evidence is elusive. It does not indicate how the defendant offered to hand over the house. In his own words, he was "waiting for the plaintiff to go and take possession of the premises". In other words, H at no time did he, himself, take any step to hand over the house or manifest any intention of doing so but left it to the plaintiff to take the initiative. Admittedly, the contract did not stipulate the manner in which the handing over was to be done. Nevertheless, the Court can discern the intentions of the parties from their conduct and I the surrounding circumstances. First, we have seen that in their negotiations and wrangles the parties sought the assistance of Mr. Alimwike. One would then expect A that the offer to hand over the house would be made through Mr. Alimwike. Secondly, from October the defendant had been in occupation of the house free from any liability for rent. In these circumstances it is patently unreasonable to expect the plaintiff to go on his bended knee pleading for the house. Interestingly, the plaintiff did in B fact plead with the defendant but the latter threatened him with assault if he ventured at the premises! The parties are physically unmatched. The defendant is athletic and seemingly equal to his threat. I am satisfied that there was no offer to hand over the house. Indeed, the defendant could not at any time have been able and willing to fulfil C such an offer for when this Court visited the premises on 10th August, 1983 it found the defendant's family very much there. In the final analysis, I find that the defendant breached the contract for which an order for specific performance is the remedy.

The plaintiff also prayed for damages in the form of mesne profits from October 1982 to D the date of judgment. Generally speaking, mesne profits or damages are recoverable, in addition to specific performance, when a party delays to perform his part of the contract without reasonable cause.

In Jones v Gardiner [1902] 1 Ch. 191, 195, Byrne, J. said: E

Jacques v Miller (1907), 6 Ch. D. 153) is a distinct authority for giving damages against a vendor, in addition to specific performance, in respect of delay caused by wilful refusal to carry F out a contract, and for the measure to be applied in ascertaining the damages, namely, such damages as may reasonably be said to have naturally arisen from the delay, or which may reasonably be supposed to have ben in the contemplation of the parties as likely to arise from the partial breach of contract. G

See also the Kenya case of Shah v Abdulla [1964] E.A. 742 where it was held that there is no impediment in the fact that a conveyance has been completed to an action by a purchaser for damages for delay. On the measure of such damages it is again stated in Chitty para. 1588: H

If the vendor or lessor delays in completion (not because of a defect in title), the normal measure of damages is the value of the use of the land for the period of the delay, viz. usually its rental value. I

There is justification in the instant case for awarding damages. The delay was wilful. However, in view of what I have said about waiver, I am of the view A that damages can only be awarded from 1st February. In view, also, of the fact that the plaintiff took possession of the house from 20th August, the damages cannot be recovered beyond 19th August. I will now go into the assessment.

1983 TLR p417

LAGAKINGIRA J

The plaintiff claimed Shs. 5,000/= per month, saying that even this was concessionary. B He claimed that the house was built as a lodging comprising twelve rooms. He said that if he were in possession he could have rented each room at Shs. 70/= per day and thus make Shs. 25,200/= per month from the entire house. It was out of kindness, he said, that he was claiming Shs. 5,000/= only per month. I visited the house. It is not built as a C lodging; it is a single family dwelling. It has six bedrooms, which include a self contained master bedroom, and the remaining rooms comprise of three unmistakable sitting rooms, a store, a kitchen, a bathroom and a W.C. Its design and facilities are such that even if it were rented out it could conveniently be rented to a single family D unless it were significantly modified. I can see no basis for the plaintiff to think otherwise. Nevertheless, it is settled that a purchaser may claim the loss of profit he intended to make from a particular use of land, e.g. by converting a building into flats and offices, if the vendor had actual or imputed knowledge of special circumstances showing E that the purchaser intended to use the land that way: Diamond v Campbell - Jones & Ors. [1960] 1 All E.R. 583. In the instant case the agreement between the parties is silent about use. But in para. 9 of the plaint the plaintiff stated that he purchased the suit premises for his own use. While testifying; he also conceded that he had no evidence to F show that the house was intended to be a lodging. On the other hand, the letter offering the defendant a right of occupancy over the plot of land, exhibit Cl, and which was in the plaintiff's possession from the date of the agreement, stipulates the use as "Residential: Use Group A, Use Class (a) as defined in the Town and Country Planning (Use Class). G Regulations 1960. "Regulation 2 of these regulations defines "Use Group A, Use Class (a)" as:

Individual dwelling houses designed for use as dwelling by single families together with such H outbuildings as are normally used there with, but not including dwelling houses designed for occupation by more than one family ....

From all available evidence, therefore, the defendant knew that the house would be used as a single family dwelling and there is no evidence that the plaintiff indicated that he I intended to use the house differently.
1983 TLR p418
LAGAKINGIRA J
Damages which a party may receive are such as may be supposed to have been in the A contemplation of both parties at the time of contracting. It follows, in my judgment, that the plaintiff can only receive damages for being denied the use of a single family dwelling.
The difficulty which arises is that the house is new and has never been rented. We B therefore do no know its rental value. I took it upon myself to determine this having regard to the following facts and circumstances. The defendant stated that he constructed the house at a cost of Shs. 380,000/= but sold it for less to liquidate some pressing liabilities. He is also paying an annual ground rent of Shs. 200/=. He did not C pay a premium for the right of occupancy and it appears that local rates are yet to be assessed and imposed. In accordance with the provisions of s. 4(1) (c) of the Rent Restriction Act, 1962, as amended, the standard rent would therefore be the total of an amount equal to fourteen percentum of the cost of construction and the ground rent. This, I think, comes to Shs. 53,228/= p.a. or Shs. 4,435/66 p.m. It is interesting that his D figure is not very far from the Shs. 5,000/= claimed by the plaintiff. Certain factors have then to be considered. When I visited the premises I found that they were wanting in some respects, although undoubtedly attractive. Electrical wiring was already done E but power was not yet connected. A portion of the rear section had no ceiling board. The roofing required final touches. The cesspit was unfinished. There was water. The fronting road was yet to be made up. The neighbourhood, Hazina Area, is also not so fashionable. Against these factors one has also to consider the following. The house is in fact habitable as demonstrated by the presence of the defendant's family therein. Besides, there is an acute shortage of housing in town and this has to be matched with F the prevailing inflationary tendencies. Considering all these factors and having in mind the provisions of s. 4(2)(a) of the Act aforesaid, I would for the purpose of this judgment fix the rent at Shs. 3,000/= per month. As stated earlier, the plaintiff can be paid mesne G profits from 1st February to 19th August, 1983. It works out to Shs. 19,900/=.
In conclusion, therefore, this suit succeeds and there will be an order for specific performance despite the informal handover. The plaintiff is also awarded mesne profits H of Shs. 19,900/= together with costs of the suit. It is to be hoped that it will not require further litigation for the purpose of transferring the title over the land.
I Judgment for the plaintiff.

1983 TLR p419
A
[zRPz]GWASA BUNZINYA v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 419 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Katiti J

October, 1983
CRIMINAL APPEAL 21 OF 1983 B
Flynote
Criminal Law - Forcible entry - Elements of - S.85 Penal Code.
-Headnote
The accused Gwasa Bunzinya was originally tried, convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of 500/= or six months' imprisonment by the Shanga Primary Court in Ngara District following a charge and prosecution for forcible entry to complainant's land contrary to s. C 85 of the Penal Code. The court also imposed orders for compensation to the tune of 1,500/= to be paid by the accused to the complainant.
The accused had conceded entering the complainant's land but had argued that the property in question had been abandoned and was bona vacantia. No evidence was led by the prosecution to prove that the accused used any force or violence to enter the D land.
The District Court dismissed the accused's appeal but set aside the order for compensation. The accused was still not satisfied hence this appeal.
Held: (i) Section 85 of the Penal Code was not intended to take care of every trespass E to land but only those primarily concerned with the preservation of public tranquillity in matters pertaining to land and accompanying or concomitant processes of changes of ownerships or possessions; F

(ii) in order for s. 85 of the Penal Code to operate the following elements must be established beyond reasonable doubt:

(1) the accused/appellant must have entered the said lands or tenements in question;

(2) the said accused/appellant must have applied violence and the said violence G must have been for purposes of taking possession of the said lands or tenements;

(3) unless the said lands, or tenements, are in the custody of the accused's servants or bailiff, it is immaterial whether the said accused/appellant is entitled to enter H the lands or not;

(iii) in this case it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the accused entered the shamba in a violent manner in order to take possession of the said shamba.
Case Information
Appeal allowed. I
1983 TLR p420
KATITI J

No cases referred to. A

[zJDz]Judgment

Katiti, J.: This is an appeal whose compass coverage is a narrow one. The undisputed facts are as follows. PW.2 Baseka s/o Bunzinya had had occasion to entrust all his lands or tenements to the Complainant Zubel s/o Rukele PW. 1, before he went on a B long errand for the treatment of his child. The accused/appellant, a brother of PW.2, entered the said Shambas that had been entrusted to the Complainant, and began plucking and consuming the fruits thereof, and hence the complaint by the complainant PW.1. The appellant's defence was that, he entered the shamba because it had been C abandoned by his brother, and that nobody was in control, and further conceded that his brother PW2, could have his shamba back.

Shanga Primary Court found the appellant guilty as charged and imposed a fine of Shs. 500/=, or Six months imprisonment, following the same with an order that the same D appellant compensate the complainant to the tune of Shs. 1,500/=. The appellant's appeal to the District Court was partly dismissed, as while the conviction and fine imposed were upheld, the compensation order was set aside for lack of foundation on which it could stand.

The appellant has appealed again. The prosecution and defence cases juxtaposed, one E discerns no serious conflict between them, in general terms. As a matter of fact, nowhere did the appellant deny entering the Shambas/tenements in question, he only qualified his such entry that, the same property hitherto belonging to his brother had been abandoned, and was bona vacantia. I think, I dare say, it was the apparent simplicity F with which the appellant seemed to agree with the prosecutions general evidence that drove both the Primary and District Courts, to easily enter conviction, and/or uphold the same. I think the two lower courts had a problem of short-sightedness, in easily thinking the case had been proved beyond reasonable doubt. While indeed trespass to G land, which the appellant's conduct, inter alia was, is a wrong, it is not the intention of the Section to take care of every, and any trespass to land. The Section is afraid of treading on slippery grounds. Section 85 which is worded carefully, reads. H

> Any person who, in order to take possession thereof, enters on any land or tenements in a violent manner, whether such violence consists in actual force applied to any other person, or in threats, or in breaking open any house or in collecting an unusual number of people, is I guilty of the offence termed "forcible entry".

1983 TLR p421

KATITI J

It is immaterial whether, he is entitled to enter on the land or not, provided that a person A who enters upon lands, or tenements of his own, but which are in custody of his servant, or bailiff, does not commit the offence of forcible entry.

Having read and reasonably digested the above Section, it seems to me, that before conviction under it is successfully achieved, the following elements must be established B beyond reasonable doubt. They are:

(1) The accused/appellant must have entered land/s, or, tenements in question, and

(2) The same said accused/appellant must have applied violence and whether such C violence consists in actual force applied to any or other person, or in threats or in breaking open any house or in collecting an unusual number of people, the same such violence must be for purposes of taking possession of the same said lands or tenements. D

(3) Unless the said lands, or tenements, are in the custody of the accused's servants or bailiff, it is immaterial whether the said accused/appellant is entitled to enter the lands or not.

This section, it may be discerned is not so much concerned with the unlawful E consumption, if any, of fruits, produce or products of the said lands or tenements involved, as that may be taken care of by another section, it is primarily concerned with the preservation of public tranquillity in matters pertaining to land and accompanying or concomitant processes of changes of ownerships, or possessions. In other words, it is a F law and order section, decrying applications of violence, disturbances of tranquility in land entries. If with respect, we apply the above elements to the instant case we shall not fail to note that, while we have concession that, the appellant did enter, there is hardly evidence showing whether the appellant applied violence in entering the same said Shamba. All we have from the complainant, at best an eye witness, is this: G

Namshitaki Gwasa Bunzinya kwa kuniingilia katika Shamba nililoachiwa na baba yangu mdogo Baseka Bunzinya. H

With considerable and far reaching efforts, I have failed in the name of Justice, to read application of violence or even threats thereof, by the appellant in entering and taking possession of the questioned Shambas from the evidence adduced. The Swahili word I "Kuingilia" that the complainant chose to use in describing the appellant's conduct does not in my view, carry or bear the violence content contemplated by the provisions above A reproduced. It carries the mildness that the Section is not worried about. Even going by the complainant's own amplification that - hata Katibu Kata alifika waliona walivyokata ndizi", I fail to read the same to mean that the appellant entered the said B Shamba in a violent manner, in order to take possession of the same shamba. I find myself finally succumbing to my conviction, that the case was not proved beyond reasonable doubt against the appellant. The appeal is therefore allowed, conviction quashed and sentence set aside. It is hereby directed that the fine imposed, be refunded, if paid.

C Appeal allowed

D

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v TILUSUBYA MWISHAKI AND 2 OTHERS 1983 TLR 422 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Mwanza
Judge Katiti J

August 10, 1984
CRIMINAL REVISION 55 OF 1983
Flynote

Criminal Law - Abusive language - Use of abusive language in such a manner as is likely to cause a breach of the peace - S. 89(1)(a) of the Penal Code Cap. 16 of the Laws. E Criminal Practice and Procedure - Compensation - Whether proof of the use of abusive language under s.89(1)(a) of the Penal code is sufficient for the court to impose compensation under s. 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20 without proof of F material loss or personal injury.
-Headnote
The accused Tilusubya Mwishaki was charged jointly with Musegena Mwishaki and Salima Mwishaki for using abusive and obscene language against the complainant. The G District Court of Ukerewe convicted the three accused and sentenced the 1st accused who was a juvenile to six strokes of corporal punishment and a fine of 100/=, and the 2nd and 3rd accused were sentenced to one month imprisonment and a compensation of 150/= each to the complainant or distress in default. No appeals were preferred hence this revision. H
Held: (i) The obscene insults inflicted upon the complainant seriously defamed, character assassinated and morally wounded the complainant and subjected her to excruciating mental anguish;

(ii) under s. 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code the compensation awardable I by a criminal court is confined to circumstances where the victim has suffered either material loss or personal injury and that substantial A compensation is recoverable by the victim of the offence in a civil suit;
1983 TLR p423
KATITI J

(iii) under this qualification, an award of compensation cannot be made in the absence of proof of value of the material loss otherwise the victim of the offence may be over - or under compensated.

(iv) in this case there was no material loss or any evidence of physical loss or any B evidence of physical injury to the complainant to justify the application of s. 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code.
Case Information
Order accordingly.
No case referred to. C
[zJDz]Judgment
Katiti, J.: Tilusubya s/o Mwishaki, Musegena d/o Mwishaki, Salima d/o Mwishaki standing in the order of 1st, 2nd and 3rd accused, were before Ukerewe District Court charged for allegedly jointly and together, insultingly and obscenely telling the D complainant as follows:

Malaya, Unalala na mtoto wako, unavaa magunia, unatembea uchi; allegedly in such a E manner as was like to cause a breach of peace. The trial culminated into the conviction of the accused, and the sentencing of 1st accused a juvenile, to six strokes of corporal punishment; and fine of Shs. 100/= or one month's imprisonment in respect of the 2nd and 3rd accused. The 2nd and 3rd accused were further ordered most probably under section 176 of Criminal F Procedure Code Cap. 20 to pay compensation of Shs. 150/= each or distress in default. No appeal has been preferred by any of the accused persons.

When the case came before my learned brother Judge, the said Judge ordered revision G observing, as follows:

To review the order of compensation purportedly made under section 176 of the Criminal procedure Code. There does not seem to be any material loss, or personal injury suffered by H the complainant here in consequence of the offence committed.

Signd.

J.5/8/1983 I

1983 TLR p424

KATITI J

In my understanding of the charge and evidence the obviously obscene insults allegedly A inflicted upon the complainant meant, and I have no doubts they did, that she was having sexual intercourse with her children, that she was going nude, naked, and that she was moving about in wretched and wrecked clothing. I have no doubt she was seriously defamed, character assassinated, morally wounded, and I cannot vouch that she B escaped excruciating mental anguish. A breach of peace was imminent. I shall therefore allow myself to surmise that it is for this reason that the trial magistrate ordered payment C of compensation by the accused. It is unfortunate that the trial magistrate made no mention of the legal authority under which he was ordering payment of compensation, but like my learned Brother Judges, I shall again allow myself in the absence of the contrary, the confident unrestricted liberty to presume that the trial magistrate was acting under the provisions of Section 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20, in awarding the said compensation. D

The question that is posed for consideration is whether the victim of abusive language under circumstances contemplated by Section 89 (a) of the Penal Code Cap. 16 is liable for reparations under the provisions of Section 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20. It seems to me that Section 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code does with some clarity state circumstances under which compensation may be ordered. The E precedent for ordering compensation under that section seems to be as follows:

(a) That the victim of the crime must have suffered either material loss, or personal F injury, in consequence of the offence committed and charged, and

(b) That substantial compensation is in the opinion of the court recoverable by the victim of the offence in a civil suit. G

I shall untimorously venture to say that under the Section at hand, the compensation awardable is confined within the above articulated limitations, and that is the victim of the crime may be compensated by a Criminal court where in consequence of the offence the H victim has suffered either material loss, or personal injury and that, substantial compensation is recoverable in a civil suit. These words, or phrases of limitation are not without difficulty of interpretation. In cases of offences which cause material loss, the difficulty may not be obvious, for the value of property involved for instance in offences such as theft, malicious damage to property, arson or obtaining money by false I pretences, or such quantified losses which are the natural results of wrongs committed, may form the basis of assessment of the quantum of the compensation ordered, or to be ordered by the court. A Under this qualification it would appear that an award of compensation cannot be made in the absence of proof of value of the material loss, otherwise, either, the crime victim is under - compensated and therefore prejudiced thereby, or he/she is over compensated, punitively prejudicing the accused. B

1983 TLR p425

KATITI J

My worry is acute, when it comes to aspects of compensation for personal injury, where even in Civil litigation, damages in respect of the same, are notoriously difficult to assess, and impossible to standardise. But no competent authority has however come up against the awarding of compensation in such cases. Such cases include assaults, causing C grievous bodily harm, unlawful wounding etc. But it should be observed that in these cases, bodily harm is a common denominator, and the prerequisite for conviction, in as much they bear an element of personal injury, a qualification inter alia for the application of section 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code. But, I might add to pre-empt self D deception, that also in other offences such as rape, indecent assault, where the victim may indeed suffer harm, but where such harm is not essential for the offence to be consummated, compensation has more often than not been ordered, or awarded. What appears to be a common denominator in the above two situations, is not personal injury, but generally a physical violation of a person's sovereignty, but differences lying in E variations in severity of illegal acts complained of. The above only shows the courts liberal attitude or stand, in applying section 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20.

In this case, there was no material loss, or at least it was not established. Further I have F not laid my hands, with all the anxiety, on any evidence that shows, that the complainant suffered physical bodily injury. While I am prepared to concede, that, the insults were obviously defamatory, it would be speculative of me to go where the complainant took no initiative to show the same. The complainant told the court below that, the words were unpleasant to her, but I would hastily opine, that the sheer G unpleasantness of a defamatory statement, and perhaps the annoyance accompanying the same, cannot amount to personal injury in the context of Section 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20. Even if the same amounted to personal injury, and I am sure it did not, the court should in my view shudder to avoid compensation in circumstances H such as these. I should imagine, this because first, the trial court is starved of evidence as to the extent of injury - the extent to which the "substantial" amount of compensation awardable, is pegged or tagged for lack of medical report. I experience no surprise, or inhibitions on this aspect, because, the charged section, is not so much concerned with I the extent of injury to the complainant, if any, as it is with the consequences of the conduct A complained of, to law and order, and public tranquillity. Secondly, in the circumstances of this case, defences that would in Civil litigation reduce damages, are not relevant, nor readily available to the accused, nor within reach of the court, to supply material to the same said court, for making its mind, whether or not in its opinion, substantial B compensation in the circumstances of the case, would be awardable in a Civil Suit. I hope I am not going too far afield to demonstrate my fears, if I envisage a situation, which to all intents and purposes would be applicable here, where a statement complained of is proved beyond reasonable doubt, to have transgressed the charged C section, and hence criminal liability, but is at the same time a true, and fair comment, and therefore a defence in civil defamation proceedings. For the above reasons, I do not think, the circumstances of this case, did justify the application of Section 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code Cap. 20, because of lack of proof of personal injury, and D absence of material upon which to base the decision whether substantial compensation as contemplated by the Section is in the circumstances of the case awardable. Further to apply section 176 of the Criminal Procedure Code in the circumstances of this case would condemn the accused unheard on certain defences that in Criminal proceedings E may not be relevant, but are admissible defences in civil litigation. The compensation order is hereby set aside.

Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p426

F

[zRPz]ELIAS MBALAGA v REPUBLIC 1983 TLR 426 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma

Judge Lugakingira J

June 18, 1982 G

CRIMINAL APPEAL 33 OF 1981

Flynote

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Jurisdiction - Whether a Primary Court can resume H jurisdiction for purposes of trial of an accused who elected and has not rescinded his plea to have the case transferred to a District Court - S.41(2)(b) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1963.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Whether s. 32(2) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1963 I can apply to cure a jurisdiction error.

1983 TLR p427

LUGAKINGIRA J

The appellant Elias Mbalaga was originally charged and convicted of cattle theft before a A Primary Court in Mpwapwa District whereafter he was sentenced by the Primary Court to five years imprisonment. At the beginning of the trial, before the appellant had entered any pleas regarding the charge against him, he requested the court to transfer the case to the District Court because he intended to engage a counsel. Though the court B acceded to his plea it later entertained the case again requiring the appellant to enter his plea, which he did, and the court then proceeded to hear the case without taking into account appellant's plea to have the case transferred. During the trial the appellant declined to cross-examine prosecution witnesses and to defend himself. He however C reminded the court of his request. The court found the appellant guilty of the offence of cattle theft and sentenced him to five years of imprisonment. The appellant's appeal to the District Court failed as the court was of the view that by entering his plea of not guilty when the charge was read to him for the second time the appellant had impliedly D submitted to the jurisdiction of the Primary Court. The appellant was dissatisfied and appealed to the High Court.

Held: (i) The provisions of s. 41(2)(b) of the Magistrate's Courts Act 1963 are mandatory and this is signified by the use of the term "shall"; E

(ii) the ingredients of s. 41(2)(b) are that the accused must elect to have the case transferred and such option has to be exercised before entering his plea, and the offence charged has to be one that is punishable by imprisonment for more than twelve months;

(iii) the effect of satisfaction of these ingredients is to remove from the Primary F Court the jurisdiction to try case;

(iv) even belatedly, the court can still transfer the case after the accused has entered his plea if it is clear that the accused has not abandoned his initial wish to have the case transferred;

(v) the errors, omissions and irregularities which s. 32(2) is intended to cure are G those that flow from the exercise of lawful jurisdiction;

(vi) where jurisdiction of the court has been taken away there is no trial as such, and therefore s. 32(2) can not apply as there is nothing to cure;

(vii) this appeal ought to succeed on the ground of want of jurisdiction. H

Case Information

Appeal allowed.

Cases referred to:

1. Andrea Kimbulu v R. [1968] H.C.D. no. 512. I
2. Hassan v R. [1970] H.C.D. no. 146.

1983 TLR p428

LUGAKINGIRA J

3. Salum Issa v R. [1970] H.C.D. 222. A

D. Mbezi for the appellant

V. Lyimo for the Republic.

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The appellant Elias Mbalaga was charged in the Primary Court at B Mpwapwa with cattle theft and, on conviction, was sentenced to five years' imprisonment. This is the second appeal.

The crucial issue in the appeal is one of procedure. When the charge was read over to C the appellant on December 15, 1979 he offered no plea but stated that he wished his case to be transferred to the District Court as he intended to engage counsel. The trial magistrate promptly acceded to the request and made an order transferring the case to the District Court. He then remanded the appellant in custody pending his trial. But for D unknown reasons, the case was mentioned in the Primary Court on January 2, 1980 when the charge was again read over to the appellant. On this occasion the appellant entered a plea of innocence. The case was mentioned again in the same court on five more occasions including March 5 when a hearing date was fixed for March 21. On this latter date we find an entry: E

Mlalamikaji: Mashahidi wamefika.

Naomba shauri lisikilizwe.

AMRI: Shauri litasikilizwa. F

The trial duly commenced. The complainant called five witnesses, including himself, and closed his case. The appellant throughout declined to cross-examine any of the witnesses. He was then called upon to defend himself but he again declined and reminded the trial magistrate of his request to transfer the case. The magistrate G adjourned the hearing to April 2 for summing up to the assessors. He did sum up on that date and conviction followed as earlier stated.

In his appeal to the District Court the appellant pointed out inter alia that his request for the transfer of the case had been refused. The appellate magistrate held that since the H appellant pleaded to the charge when it was read over for the second time, and never renewed his request for transfer, he had impliedly submitted to the jurisdiction of the trial court. He held further that there was in any case evidence to support the charge and the irregularity, if any, had not occasioned a failure of justice. He therefore upheld the I conviction and dismissed the first appeal.

Before this court the appellant was represented by learned counsel

1983 TLR p429

LUGAKINGIRA J

Mr. Mbezi. He advanced very pertinent arguments, including: A

(a) that the refusal or failure to transfer the case and to enable the appellant to be defended occasioned a failure of justice.

(b) that there was in any case no charge before the trial court following the order B of December 15 transferring the case; and

(c) but without prejudice, that the evidence was insufficient to support the charge.

Mr. Lyimo for the Republic, but with discernible uncertainty, replied that since no counsel had already been engaged, the irregularity occasioned no failure of C justice. He also submitted that the appellant contributed to the irregularity and his misfortune by his failure to renew his request for the transfer. He was finally of the view that there was sufficient evidence to support the conviction. In this judgment, I desire to dwell on Mr. Mbezi's first argument. D

After going through the record of the trial court I have come to the sad view that the said record is incomplete. There is also a misrepresentation of facts or a misconstruction of the appellant's wishes. I get all this from the unusual notes, headed "Maelezo ya E Hakimu", which the trial magistrate made on April 2, just before writing the "Mwongozo" for the assessors. He wrote, inter alia:

Tarehe 2/1/80 kabla ya mahakama hii haijahamisha shauri Mahakama ya Wilaya mshitakiwa aliamua kutoweka wakili tena na akasomewa shitaka lake mara ya pili akalijibu na kukana F kosa kuonyesha ishara ya kukubali mahakama hii na Hakimu wasikilize shauri hili (my emphasis) .... Tarehe 21/3/80 baada ya mashahidi wote toka Dodoma kufika, mshitakiwa G akaamua kusudi kumkataa Hakimu ili shauri siku hiyo lisisikilizwe na kuwafanya mashahidi warudi na kupokea malipo ya posho kutoka Serikalini bure. Hakimu akaamua kusikiliza shauri hili maana hakuona sababu yoyote ....

As the title to these notes, "Maelezo ya Hakimu" clearly indicates, the trial magistrate H wrote them to explain away what he had come to realise was a serious irregularity in the procedure adopted. First of all, nowhere in the proceedings of January 2 is the appellant on record "deciding" to dispense with the services of an advocate. The trial magistrate thought it fit to infer that "decision" merely because the appellant entered his plea without I open protest. The words I have emphasized above are clear evidence of the magistrate's state of mind. Even then, he did not draw A the inference at the time of taking the plea but three months later when he was faced with the problem of concluding the hearing. The notes were therefore a self-cleansing exercise. Further, if there were grounds for inference, the learned magistrate should have realised that it was a wrong inference for on March 21, according to the notes, the B appellant still objected to being tried by him or by his court. Unfortunately, this objection too does not appear in the record of that date. I am satisfied that the appellant throughout wished his case transferred but the trial magistrate refused the transfer. I am therefore unable to agree that the appellant contributed to the irregularity. C

We may now look at the position in law.

Section 41(2)(b) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1963 provides as follows:

> (2) A Primary Court - D
>
> (a) .....;
>
> (b) if the accused person so elects, shall transfer to the District Court of the district for which it is established any proceeding of a criminal nature in which the accused is charged with an E offence punishable in the Primary Court by imprisonment for more than twelve months or, in the case of an adult, by corporal punishment.
>
> An election under this section shall be exercised before the accused pleads to the charge. F

These provisions are in my view mandatory and this is signified by use of the term "shall". Once an accused elects to have his case transferred and exercises that option before entering his plea and the offence charged is one punishable by imprisonment for more G than twelve months, the Primary Court has no discretion but to transfer the case. There are no other considerations. These requirements were present in this case. The appellant elected for the transfer; he did so before entering his plea; the offence of cattle H theft is punishable by imprisonment of not less than five years even in the Primary Court. The trial court was therefore bound to transfer the case as requested. Even at the belated stage after the appellant had entered the plea, the trial court could still have transferred the case for, as I have demonstrated, the appellant had not abandoned his initial wish. It was urged on me that by reason of section 32(2) of the Act above, the I decision of the Primary Court could not be interfered with if there was in fact no failure of justice. It was said that there would be no such failure of justice if the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction. This A argument, seemingly, finds support in the decision of this court in Andrea Kimbulu v R. [1968] HCD n. 312. There were irregularities in that case including a refusal by the trial primary court to transfer the same. It was held by Seaton, J., as he then was, that the irregularities of procedure might not have been fatal to the convictions had the evidence B clearly indicated that the accused was guilty of the offences charged. There was no such evidence and the convictions were quashed. It is significant, however, that in the later case of Hassan v R. [1970] - HCD n. 146 the same judge observed that his remarks in the Andrea Kimbulu case were obiter in as much as in that case the C evidence was insufficient. He referred to this other decision in Salum Issa v R. (PC) Criminal Appeal NO. 698 of 1969 (MZ) (see[1970] HCD n. 222) where, having found it impossible to satisfy himself that there was no failure of justice, he held the proceedings a nullity and quashed Salum Issa's conviction. For similar reasons he held that the D proceedings in Hassan's case were irregular and quashed the conviction stating: "The Primary Court has no jurisdiction to try against the accused's wish". With respect, I share this latter view. As already stated the provisions of section 41(2)(b) are mandatory. And that in my view, goes to jurisdiction. I am of the respectful opinion that once the ingredients for a transfer are satisfied the effect is to remove from the Primary E Court the jurisdiction to try the case. The court cannot cling to the case and oblige the accused to be tried against his wish. Such procedure, being contrary to law, would amount to no trial at all; it would be a complete nullity. The question then is whether section 32(2) was intended to cure such a situation, to confer jurisdiction where F jurisdiction had been taken away. I think not. I think that the errors, omissions and irregularities referred to in the provision are errors, omissions and irregularities that may arise in the exercise of lawful jurisdiction. It is one thing to commit an error in doing that which is sanctioned, and there section 32(2) would apply; it is quite another to do that G which is prohibited. Where jurisdiction is taken away, there is no trial as such, and therefore nothing to cure, for, as it is said, quod contra legam fit, pro infecto habetur. The question of sufficiency of evidence is then irrelevant, for there is no evidence in law. I would add that if evidence were all that mattered, there could be no limit to the number and scope of illegal trials that Primary Courts could undertake and hide under the H umbrella of section 32(2). I am therefore of the settled view that this appeal ought to succeed on the ground of want of jurisdiction. On the other hand, if I were compelled to answer the issue, I would say that the evidence was insufficient. The prosecution case I throughout pointed to the possible defence of innocent receipt and this was never disproved. The appellant's guilt had therefore not been proved beyond reasonable A doubt. Having reached these conclusions it is no longer necessary to consider Mr. Mbezi's second argument.

I allow the appeal, quash the conviction and set the sentence aside as well as the order for compensation. In view of what I have said about the lacuna in the evidence it would not be in the interest of justice to order a retrial. I direct the appellant's immediate B release from custody.

Order accordingly.
1983 TLR p432
C
[zRPz]REPUBLIC v HASSAN JUMANNE 1983 TLR 432 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

July 5, 1983
CRIMINAL REVISION 2 OF 1983 D
Flynote
Evidence - Confession -Involuntary confession made to a Police Officer under threat of being beaten this being only evidence - Whether trial court acted properly to base a E conviction on it.
Evidence - Admission - Admissibility of evidence under s. 34 B of Evidence Act - Whether signature of a deponent alone is sufficient for a written statement of a witness who is abroad to be put in evidence. F
-Headnote
This revision arose from trial and subsequent conviction of the accused of housebreaking and stealing by the District Court of Singida. The only evidence against the accused upon which the trial court based its conviction was a confession made by the accused to G a police sergeant during interrogation. The accused alleged that he was beaten severely and was threatened with further beating during interrogation unless he surrendered the stolen money. P.W.2 gave evidence supporting this allegation.
The trial court also admitted under s. 34B(2)(b) of the Evidence Act a written statement H signed by its author who was said to be in Uganda; the only factor guiding the admission of the said statement being the signature purporting to have been made by the author of the written statement.
Held: (i) A confession made involuntarily to a police officer cannot alone be the basis of I a conviction;
1983 TLR p433
LUGAKINGIRA J
(ii) the provisions of s. 34(B)2 of the Evidence Act are cumulative, therefore to A admit a statement in evidence under s. 34 (B) (2) (b) all the conditions set forth from paragraphs (a) to (f) must be satisfied;
(iii) in this case only the first two provisions, that is (a) and (b) were satisfied hence the statement was inadmissible.
Case Information
Conviction quashed B
No cases referred to.

[zJDz]Judgment
Lugakingira, J.: I admitted this case to revision upon realising that the accused's C conviction was not based on legal evidence. The accused was convicted of house-breaking and stealing, the evidence against him being a confession he made to police sergeants during interrogation as well as the police statement of one of the sergeants which was admitted at the trial. D
The accused said he was beaten hard during the interrogation. This was earlier deposed to by PW. 2 who said "The policeman told the accused that if he does not give the money he will be beaten. There and then the accused entered in his room and came out with Shs. 780/=". It is evident, therefore, that the confession was involuntary and could E not be acted upon. On the other hand, the trial magistrate purported to admit the statement of a sergeant who was said to be in Uganda under s. 34B (2)(b) of the Evidence Act. He thought that the signature of the deponent was sufficient for the statement to be put in evidence. With respect, he was wrong in taking that view. F
The provisions of s. 34 (B) (2) are cumulative and all the paragraphs (a) to (f) have to be satisfied. Hence, to admit the statement, it must be reasonably impracticable to call the deponent; the statement must have been signed by him; it must contain a declaration on liability for perjury; a copy must have been previously served on the accused; the G accused must have failed to serve a notice of objection within ten days; and, where the deponent cannot read, it must be accompanied by a declaration of the person who read it to the effect that it was so read. In this case the first two requirements only were satisfied. The statement was then inadmissible. H
It is thus clear that the accused's convictions had no legal basis, there being no other evidence to connect him with the offence. I therefore quash the convictions and set aside the sentences and order the accused's release from custody.
I Conviction quashed.
1983 TLR p434
A
[zRPz]REPUBLIC v NICAS LULENGA 1983 TLR 434 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

July 2, 1983
CRIMINAL CASE 12 OF 1982
Flynote
Criminal Practice and Procedure - Arrests - Accused arrested by surprise - Whether B entitled to resist arrest.
-Headnote
The accused Nicas Lulenga was charged with unlawful wounding of a Policeman one D/SM Paulo Ngeleja Kadonya on 11/7/81 with an arrow during an attempt by the C Police to arrest him. The Police had received complaint that the accused had threatened to shoot one villager called Kanyamala with an arrow. Following a report that the accused was a dangerous character, the Police sent a contingent of six Policemen armed with various weapons to arrest the accused. The Police approached the accused's D house secretly and surrounded it apparently to surprise him. The accused being unaware of the nature and character of those purporting to arrest him chose to resist the forceful attempt to arrest him in self defence. In the encounter he shot one arrow at D/SM Kadonya who was hit in his buttocks but he himself got wounded by gunshot during his E attempt to run away from the invaders. He was arrested and charged for unlawful wounding D/SM Kudonya in his attempt to resist arrest.

Held: (i) In determining whether the arrest was lawful, the court does not also have to be satisfied that the accused was guilty of an offence;

(ii) where there is evidence that the police were acting as law enforcement F officers, the Court is entitled to assume that they were acting lawfully;

(iii) similarly, the accused need not know that the arrest is lawful; all he has to know is the intention to arrest him; G

(iv) in the absence of any independent witnesses to corroborate the claim by the prosecution that the accused was warned to surrender before any force was used, it cannot be stated with certainty that guns were or were not fired into the accused's house with or without warning; hence the accused must be given the benefit of doubt that he might have acted in self defence; H

(v) in law every person is entitled to defend himself and his property against unwarranted attack so long as he uses no more than reasonable force;

(vi) since the accused used an arrow to answer the might of a gun, it can not be I said that he exceeded himself in doing what he did.

1983 TLR p435

LUGAKINGIRA J

Case Information

Accused not guilty. A

Case referred to:

1. R.v Bentley [1850] 4 Cox 406.

C. Alimwike for the accused. B

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: In this case the accused Nicas Lulenga was charged with unlawful wounding with intent to resist his arrest c/s 222(1) of the Penal Code. It was alleged that on 11/7/81, at Winza village in Mpwapwa District, the accused shot one D/SM C Paulo Ngeleja Kadonya with an arrow while the latter was endeavouring to arrest him for the offence of threatening violence. There was evidence that the Police at Mpwapwa had received a complaint that the accused had threatened to shoot one Kanyamala with an arrow. On 11/7/81 D/SM D Paulo (PW.1) set out with a group of five other askaris, as well as Kanyamala, to arrest the accused. They arrived at the accused's village around midday and surrounded the accused's tembe house, except the front. They were variously armed, having been prewarned that the accused was dangerous. They had also received information on arrival at the village that the accused was at home. E

According to PW.1 and P.C. Jumanne Mtunyungu (PW.3), they then identified themselves and ordered the accused to surrender along with his weapons. There was no response. PW.1 ordered one P.C. Boniface Ndinde to fire tear gas into the house. He did so. Shortly, a woman ran out of the house. Seeing this, PW.1 rushed to the front. As he did so he saw the accused emerge armed with a bow and arrow. He ordered him F to lay down his arms and surrender but the accused did not. Instead, he let fly his arrow and as PW.1 instinctively turned to avoid it, it landed in his left buttock and stuck there. Meanwhile the accused ran away and PW.1 fired his pistol in the air. G

Other askaris gave chase firing their guns but without success. He was pursued with a Land-Rover and finally shot in the right thigh about one kilometre away, according to PW.2, or 21/4 miles away, according to /Gideon Salehe (PW.3). He was put in the vehicle and taken to the village dispensary. Meanwhile, a villager, Ndogwe Mwalambalo (PW.4) had succeeded in removing the arrow from PW.1's buttock. He H was also taken to the dispensary. From the dispensary the accused and PW.1 were taken to Mpwapwa Hospital. PW.1 was hospitalised for five days.

The accused was subsequently charged with this offence.

The accused gave evidence on oath and called two witnesses. He said on that day he I was at home with his wife listening to the radio, his wife busy cooking. Suddenly, shots rang out through the window and bullets hit the right A wall. His wife collapsed in terror and scrambled for cover under the bed. Just then a second shot rang out, again directed into the house. The accused said he then scrambled to his feet and rushed to the door to see what was afoot. The door was ajar. Just at the door he came face to face with a man, about four paces away, pointing a gun B at him. The accused ducked to take cover behind the door but before he could successfully do so, he was shot in the thigh. Instinctively he turned back, collected his bow and arrow, took aim at that man, who was then advancing into the house, and released the arrow. He saw it land on the man's buttock, for the man had suddenly C turned and saw the arrow shaft shake there with the impact. He then ran off limping but collapsed about sixteen paces from his house and was there handcuffed and taken away. As stated above, the accused called two witnesses. They were his brother-in-law who is serving a prison sentence and his elder sister. For reason I will shortly state, I do not D have to review the evidence of his brother-in-law (DW.1). His elder sister Maria Lulenga (DW2.), testified that her house is about fifty paces from the accused's. On that day she was at home and saw a group of about five armed strangers. They went up to the accused's house and immediately opened fire into the house. Then some of the E strangers went to stand at the front. (The accused's house had one door only). In that instant the accused came out and shot an arrow which hit one stranger in the buttock. He then ran away. She said she was also frightened and ran away with her children. Later she went over to the accused's house and saw blood on the inside of the door as F well as the floor. There was no-one around. I have declined to review the evidence of DW.1 because he claimed to have been with DW.2 when all this happened, but DW.2 said she was alone with her children, adding that she could not lie. DW.1 was thus a false witness. He saw nothing of the incident. In short, the defence was self-defence.

I told the lady and gentlemen assessors who sat with me that their task was to decide G whether the accused's act amounted to unlawful wounding and whether he did what he did with intent to resist a lawful arrest. I directed them on the issue of self-defence and told them that it was not for the accused to prove that defence but for the prosecution to H disprove it. In the end, I told them, the accused was entitled to the benefit of the doubt. The assessors were almost unanimous except on the question of the stage at which the accused was shot in the leg. The first assessor, Mr. Raphael Matonya, was convinced that the accused's leg was shot in the bush following the chase. The second assessor, Mama Fatu Gwao, said she could not be definite on that point: it could have I been in the bush or it could have been at the accused's house. She said that generally the prosecution case left doubts. The third assessor, Mr. Gaitani A Malecela, was definite that the accused's leg was shot at his house. However, all the assessors, in particular the first and the second, were convinced that this was a surprise attack. They were convinced that the askaris did not identify themselves or call upon the accused to surrender and were convinced that there was a firing of guns into the accused's house before the accused came out to wound PW.1. It was a show of B so-called power, they observed. They therefore found that the accused acted in self-defence. The third assessor was not so unequivocal. He said the accused must have been frightened at seeing strangers, perhaps thereby implying that the accused was taken by surprise. He nevertheless thought that the accused should not have wounded C PW.1 but should have surrendered. I benefited tremendously from the combined views of the assessors. The divergencies here and there to me indicate one thing, namely that the totality of the evidence left doubt in the assessors' minds.

There is no doubt, and it was admitted, that PW.1 was wounded. A double-ear arrow, D which was exhibited at the trial, was lobbed by the accused into PW.1's buttock. There was a great deal of bleeding as evidenced by the trousers of PW.1 which were similarly exhibited. It is said in the 40th Edition of Archbold para 2659, that "wound" includes incised wounds, punctured wounds, contused wounds, and gunshot wounds, E the relevant factor being the breaking of the continuity of the skin. That paragraph discusses section 18 of the English Offences Against the Person Act, 1861 which is not dissimilar to our section 222(1). There was such a breaking of the skin in this case and I am satisfied that there was wounding within the meaning of section 222(1) of the Penal Code. I reserve for the moment consideration of whether the wounding was also F unlawful as it is necessary first to determine whether the attempted arrest was itself lawful.

As stated at the beginning, the Police had received a complaint from one Kanyamala that the accused had threatened him with violence. A police case file was opened and the G askaris went off to arrest the accused. For reasons I do not know the prosecution were not keen to summon Kanyamala to testify and he was never summoned. This led learned counsel for the defence Mr. Alimwike to remark that there was no ground upon which to believe that a complaint was ever made. It also led the first assessor to remark H that Kanyamala reported the accused out of malice. I sympathise with these sentiments but I am of a different view. First, I believe without hesitation that the complaint was made. I do not see how six askaris, led by a sergeant -major, could out of the blue decide to go and arrest a total stranger in a journey that took them about three hours by Land-Rover. It would of course have been beneficial had Kanyamala I been called to confirm making a complaint but I think, as a matter of law, his evidence was not essential. I am entitled to believe the witnesses A where they deserve to be believed. I believe PW.1 and PW.2 that a report was made. On the other hand, the first assessor's predicament raises an interesting point. I think I am correct in saying that he also wanted to be satisfied that the accused was guilty of B threatening violence. By implication, it means that the accused had also to know that the arrest was lawful. I believe that the state of the law is different and I said so in my summing-up. I think, with respect, that in determining whether the arrest was lawful the court does not also have to be satisfied that the accused was guilty of some offence. To go that far would require the court to conduct a trial before the trial or a trial within the C trial. That cannot be the intention of the statute. In my opinion, where there is evidence that the police were acting as law enforcement officers, the court is entitled to assume that they were acting lawfully. In the same way, it does not occur to me that the accused has to know that the arrest is lawful. Perhaps all he has to know is the intention to arrest D him. In the words of Talfound, J. in R. v Bentley (1850), 4 Cox 406, at 408, with which I agree:

> ... to support a charge of resisting a lawful apprehension, it is enough that the prisoner is lawfully apprehended, and it is his determination to resist it. If the apprehension is in point of E fact lawful, we are not permitted to consider the question, whether or not he believed it to be so, because that would lead to infinite niceties of discrimination .... He is not to erect a tribunal in his own mind to decide whether he was legally arrested or not. F

I have found that the police pursued the accused upon a criminal complaint. They were duty bound to follow up that complaint. I am thus satisfied that the intended arrest was lawful.

We now come to the question whether the wounding was unlawful. In this connection it G is I think desirable first to ascertain the stage at which the accused was shot in the leg. The prosecution claimed that this took place in the bush after a chase; the accused said it was right at his house. I do not believe the accused and I join the first assessor in finding H that it took place in the bush. I find so even after taking into account the unreliable character of the two witnesses PW.2 and PW.3 who testified on this issue. I will elaborate. PW.2 was a police officer who was among the arresting team. It was demonstrated at the trial that he was capable of manufacturing evidence when it pleased him to do so. In his police statement exhibit D.1, he claimed that the accused prepared I himself for resistance and took up his bow and arrow just as the arresting team were approaching. Yet he agreed in evidence that it was impossible to see inside the A accused's house from outside because the inside was dark. He even conceded that he could not be certain that the accused could see outside from inside the house. Secondly, he again stated in exhibit D1 that he witnessed the accused shoot the arrow. In evidence he stated that he was at the rear of the house and only heard PW.1 cry out that he had B been shot with an arrow. Thirdly, he stated in exhibit D1 that the firing of tear gas into the accused's house came after the accused had shot the arrow. In evidence he said the release of tear gas came before the shooting of the arrow. Fourthly, he claimed in exhibit D1 to have witnessed the shooting of the accused in the bush. In evidence he C stated that he only heard a gun shot and found the accused already apprehended. Finally, he claimed in exhibit D1 that from the dispensary they passed at the accused's D house and there found that the accused's mother had completely shifted from the village. There was indeed some woman seen by the arresting team some distance from the accused's house just as they approached, and she was said to be the accused's mother. But how this witness knew that the woman had suddenly shifted from the village beats my imagination. It would be dangerous to believe much of such a willing and unintelligent liar and I do not propose to do so. There was then PW3, a civilian and resident of the E accused's village. He was washing at a water point somewhere at the village when he heard gun shots. He was seized with fear and took cover at a baobab tree. Moments later, he looked up and saw a crowd of askaris and villagers chasing the accused. He decided to join in the chase. He claimed that he was so fast that he soon overtook everybody including the police Land-Rover which had also joined the chase. It became F a race between him and the accused, the rest of the crowd falling far behind. Eventually the Land-Rover came around and he indicated to the occupants the direction taken by the accused. He said an askari in the Land-Rover then ordered the accused to stop but the latter accelerated his run. Thereupon the askari aimed his gun through the G window and shot the accused in the leg. He collapsed on the spot just thirty five paces from where the (PW3) was.

The witness thus claimed to have been the only civilian who witnessed that shooting. The askari who did the shooting somehow failed to come and testify. As can be seen, H and so I observed, PW.3 was given to exaggeration and not a little self-glorification. He appeared immensely to enjoy his role in the witness box even to the extent of making himself a nuisance. He would dispute uttering words he had just uttered and generally showed a want of maturity. He was a youth of about 22 years of age. Mr. Alimwike I characterised him as a hooligan. I cannot be certain of that but he definitely attracted not much confidence from the court. In the end, I can accept A the theme of his evidence only because there was corroboration.

There was evidence from PW.4, another villager, that when he heard gunshots he looked out of his house and saw people chasing the accused. He followed. In doing so, B he came upon PW.1 who had an arrow sticking out of his buttock, the rest of the crowd having gone ahead of him. He told PW.1 to stop and removed the arrow. He told the court that the arrow was poisoned and was amazed to learn that PW1 survived. He opened his mouth in disbelief upon seeing him in court. I accept the evidence of this C witness that the accused was chased beyond the environs of his house. I therefore reject the accused's claim that he collapsed just sixteen paces from his house. But the claim of the accused is useful in one way: it means he could not run any distance after the shot in the leg. The court saw the scar on the thigh and it did not speak of a minor D injury. Indeed the accused stated that he passed out after collapsing. It is then clear that he could not have run anywhere after being shot. But he ran. It is for these reasons that I hold the view that he was not shot at his house.

However, there were events at the accused's house of which I have not lost sight. The accused testified that bullets were fired into his house, without warning and by people he E could not see. It was indeed in the evidence of PW1 and PW2 that they approached the accused's house surreptitiously from the rear. To that end, they left their vehicle a good distance away and skirted around the village, avoiding to be seen by villagers. They did not associate any villager in this operation. Undoubtedly, therefore, they were F anxious to take the accused by surprise. Perhaps that was necessary, having regard to the accused's reportedly dangerous character. The crucial issue is what happened after they had arrived there. The accused said he was greeted with gunshots into his house. This was corroborated by DW.2. Her house was mere fifty paces or so from the accused's and she said she saw them arrive and immediately open fire into the G accused's house. She did to testify on any warning or call to surrender as claimed by PW1 and PW 2. Of course these witnesses also claimed that tear gas only was fired into the accused's house. There is a doubt. I am not at ease in my conscience. I am bound to give the accused the benefit of that doubt. The prosecution case would have H stood on firmer ground if there had been independent witnesses - but they were deliberately avoided - instead of relying on PW2, whom I have already discredited, or PW1, who was not a disinterested witness. I cannot state with certainty that guns were or were not fired into the accused's house, and with or without warning; I am thus bound I to give the accused the benefit of the doubt and say that his story could possibly be true. A

In law every person is entitled to defend himself and his property against unwarranted attack so long as he uses no more than reasonable force. In my judgment, even where a lawful arrest is to be executed, if it is executed in a manner and with such force that is not justified by the occasion, the prisoner would be entitled to answer force with force. In B the instant case, I am unable to say that the police officer did not conduct themselves excessively and want only at the accused's house. After giving the accused the benefit of the doubt, and even though he was not wounded at his house, I agree with the assessors C that he might have acted in self-defence. And since he used an arrow to answer the might of a gun, it cannot be said that he exceeded himself in doing what he did. It has thus not been established that the wounding of PW.1 was unlawful.

For these reasons, I find the accused not guilty and acquit him accordingly. He should be set at liberty unless further lawfully held. D

Accused not guilty.

1983 TLR p441

E

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v MICHAEL CHIBING'ATI 1983 TLR 441 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Lugakingira J

November 21, 1983

CRIMINAL CASE 452 OF 1982 F

Flynote

Criminal Law - Provocation - Effect of intoxication.

Criminal Law - Intoxication - Whether drunkenness may occasion a mistaken belief that a person is entitled to exercise the right of self defence. G

-Headnote

At or about 8 p.m. on 18th September 1981 the accused Michael Chibing'ati returned to his home at Veyula village, in Dodoma Urban District drunk. He found his mother Merina and his three brothers in the house of one of his brother's. The mother had gone H there to summon the three to her hut to eat. The accused somehow conceived this gathering as one aimed at criticizing him. His mother assured him that there was nothing of the sort and that she was there to invite his brothers to eat. The accused was unsatisfied. He pursued his mother to her hut where he pounced on her in an attempt to I throttle her. The other brothers came to their mother's help. They wrenched him from his mother and one (the deceased) slapped him as he A was led away to his hut. The accused rushed to his hut, came out with a bill-hook (hengo) and cut the right arm of one brother (Jackson) and the neck of another (Yonas) who fell and died instantly. He threw down the weapon and went into hiding. Later he re-emerged at the mortuary to see the body of his dead brother where he was arrested B and charged with murder.

1983 TLR p442

LUGAKINGIRA J

The accused gave an unsworn statement and pleaded intoxication but also alluded to self defence. The defence of provocation was not raised but the trial Judge explained to the assessors circumstances under which it could be available. C

Held: (i) In the instant case there was undisputed evidence that the accused was violently wrenched from his mother and slapped but these were not wrongful acts since the accused was engaged in a criminal and murderous act of throttling his mother, in which case provocation could not arise; D

(ii) in the instant case the accused claimed to have got drunk after drinking Kangara brewed out of honey from 1 p.m. until night and there was sufficient corroborative evidence which enabled the court to find without hesitation that the accused was drunk at the time though he was not insane in the legal sense; E

(iii) considering his degree of intoxication, the accused had reasonable ground to believe that his brothers were about to attack him and or his family, a belief which entitled him to rely on the defence of self-defence based on mistake of fact;

(iv) (obiter) information on place of crime should, particularly where the offence F is committed in rural or peri-urban area, give such particulars, for instance the village as would obviate uncertainty;

(v) (obiter) opinion evidence given by an unqualified person as to the cause of death is bound to be seriously doubted and even rejected unless it is corroborated by other evidence. G

Case Information

Accused guilty of manslaughter.

Cases referred to:

1. R. v Katani Kabwika [1945] 12 E.A.C.A. 182. H
2. R. v Richard Hiyari [1971] H.C.D. 458.
3. R. v Nyode Wopera [1948] 15 E.A.C.A. 145.
4. Leosoni Matheo v R. [1961] E.A. 364.
5. R. v Gamlen IF and F 90 [England].
6. R. v Loibori Tekindikoki [1949] 16 E.A.C.A. 86. I
7. R. v Billa Lohoyo [1947] 15 E.A.C.A. 137.

1983 TLR p443

LUGAKINGIRA J

V. Lyimo for the prosecution.

G. Alimwike (for D.C. Mbezi) for the accused. A

[zJDz]Judgment

Lugakingira, J.: The accused, Michael Chibing'ati was charged with murder c/s 196 of the Penal Code, it being alleged that on 18th September, 1981, in Dodoma region, he B murdered one Yonas Chibing'ati. The accused and the deceased were brothers, resident at Veyula village in Dodoma urban district. They had two other brothers, Jackson and Rogan, and all of them resided in the same homestead along with their mother Marina and the accused's wife Edna.

The facts of the case were simple, there being no dispute about the death of Yonas or C the fact that he was killed by the accused. It is the circumstances of the homicide that are of major interest in this case. Merina used to cook for the deceased and Rogan who were still bachelors and for Jackson whose wife was away at the material time. On the evening of 18th September, 1981 Marina cooked as usual and around 8 p.m. she D proceeded to Jackson's house to invite him, Rogan and the deceased to eat. The accused had been out in the village and arrived home just before or as Merina was in the course of inviting the above three. Somehow it got into the accused's head that something was some backbiting was going on. He therefore remarked: "Kwa nini mnaniteta?" (according to Merina) or "Kwa nini mmejazana ndani mnaniteta?" E (according Jackson). His mother replied that no one was backbiting him but she was inviting his brothers to eat. Having said so, Merina returned to her house.

It seems that the accused's fear was not assuaged. When Merina headed to her house, he followed her. Shortly, she was heard crying out for help. Rogan rushed to the scene F and found the accused to have thrown her on the bed and was throttling her. He intervened, tore off the accused from her and pulled or pushed him outside. Jackson and the deceased arrived at that juncture. They assisted Rogan to force the accused back to his house. The deceased was nevertheless very incensed by the accused's disgraceful G conduct. While the accused was being led to his house - a matter of ten paces from Merina's house - the deceased aimed two slaps at the accused. But the deceased was a blind man, hence only one slap found the right target and the second landed on Rogan's shoulder. Meanwhile, the accused rushed into his house. Jackson sensed that there H might be further trouble and advanced towards the accused's door with a view to shutting him inside. He had not reached the door when the accused came out with a bill-hook (hengo) and cut him on the right arm. As Jackson retreated the accused swung another blow and cut the deceased on the right side of the neck. The deceased fell and I died almost instantly. Meanwhile the accused dropped the weapon at the scene and ran off to hide. He returned later in the night after the police had arrived and taken the A body away. Next day he was handed over to the police and subsequently charged with this offence.

The accused gave an unsworn statement and pleaded intoxication. He said that he drank a honey brew at one Shauri's from 1 p.m. until night and got drunk. He claimed B not to have known what was happening after that. He therefore vaguely recalled having returned home, entering his house and to feeling like vomiting. He then thought he got out for fresh air and proceeded to his mother's house to see her as she had not been feeling well and he had not seen her for the whole day. But while in his mother's house, C his brothers rushed in and started attacking him. He then remembered rushing back to his house for safety but before he could shut his door he saw his brothers advancing. He feared that if they entered there would be trouble and his children would be harmed. Almost instinctively he picked up his bill-hook and rushed out to meet his brothers there. D The next thing he knew he had cut the deceased. He does not seem to have been aware that he also cut Jackson. The rest of the story was about his hiding, re-emergence and arrest which is not essential at this stage.

It is clear from the foregoing that Yonas Chibing'ati is dead. It is equally clear that he E was killed by the accused. The postmortem report which was tendered by the prosecuting counsel in the absence of the medical witness gave cause of death as a rupture of the medulla at the cervical vertebrae from a deep wound on the right side of the neck. This agrees with the evidence of Rogan and Edna who witnessed the cutting; it F also agrees with the version of the accused although he does not himself seem to know where the blow landed. I therefore accept the cause of death as stated in the postmortem report.

I directed the gentlemen assessors who sat with me that the evidence as a whole pointed G to three defences: provocation, intoxication and/or self defence under a mistake of fact. The assessors were satisfied that the accused had consumed alcohol, but they were not satisfied that he was so drunk as to be incapable of forming the intention to kill or cause grievous harm. They were of the view that the killing was intentional. They did not deal with the issue of self-defence, perhaps because the concept of a mistake of fact H did not perfectly register in their minds. I will now turn to consider the defences suggested above.

Provocation was not put forward by the defence, no doubt for obvious reasons, but I felt bound to leave it to the assessors. It is defined as wrongful act or insult of such a nature which, when offered to an ordinary person, is likely to deprive him of the power I of self-control and to induce him to commit an assault of the kind which the person charged committed.

1983 TLR p445

LUGAKINGIRA J

But according to the provision of the third paragraph of s. 202 of the Penal Code, a A lawful act is not provocation to any person for an assault. Provocation must therefore be legal. It must proceed from a wrongful act or insult and must be such as would deprive an ordinary person the power of self-control and induce him to commit an assault of the kind the person charged committed. In the instant case there was undisputed evidence B that the accused was violently wrenched from his mother and slapped as he was being led away and I am prepared to find, generally, that he could not have been kindly treated by his infuriated brothers. Assuming for a moment that these actions were wrongful, were they of the kind that were likely to deprive an ordinary person in the accused's C community the power of self-control and to induce him to commit the kind of assault as was committed by the accused? I do not think so. These were minor incidents, so minor that even the accused himself could not state how he was attacked. In R. v Katani Kabwika [1945], 12 EACA 102, the deceased unlawfully slapped the appellant's face D twice, whereupon the appellant stabbed the deceased in the back with a knife with great force from which the deceased died. The appellant was convicted of murder and appealed. The appeal was dismissed in the absence of evidence that the two slaps the appellant received could deprive an ordinary person of the power of self-control and E induce him to commit the assault the appellant did. I am bound by that decision; it is also commonsensical. I am therefore of the view that the handling and slapping the accused received at the hands of his brothers could not induce an ordinary person of the accused's community to commit the kind of assault that the accused committed. More pertinently, I do not actually find that the assault on the accused was wrongful. He was F engaged in a criminal and murderous act of throttling his mother and this, in my view, justified the intervention of his brothers to save the poor woman. Theirs was therefore a lawful act and this could not give rise to legal provocation. All in all, I hold that provocation does not avail itself to the accused. G

Coming to intoxication, it has to be stated generally that this does not constitute a defence to any criminal charge. In a murder charge, intoxication would serve as a defence in three circumstances, namely, where the person charged did not at the time of H the act or omission complained of know what he was doing and the state of intoxication was caused without his consent by the malicious or negligent act of another person; where such person is by reason of intoxication insane, temporarily or otherwise; or where it cannot be established that such person had the capacity to form the intention I to kill or cause grievous harm. In the words of Onyiuke, J. In R. v Richard Hiyari [1971] HCD n. 458:

1983 TLR p446

LUGAKINGIRA J

Intoxication takes various forms. It may lead to total incapacity amounting to temporary A insanity or it may create a condition which induces extraordinary violence and in this connection it may become relevant in determining whether a person in such a condition is capable of forming a specific intention .... B

In the instant case the accused stated that he drank "kangara" brewed out of honey from 1 p.m. until night, i.e. about 8 p.m. He claimed to have got drunk. There was also evidence from Rogan that he smelled pombe on the accused when he was grappling with him. There was similarly evidence from the accused's wife Edna that when the accused C arrived, he first entered his house, went to lie on his bed and vomited. She said that he appeared drunk. Jackson was not in a position to determine the accused's state, for he was himself confessedly drunk. It was finally agreed by all the family witnesses that the actions of the accused on that evening were extraordinary. Never before had he D behaved in like manner. In considering these factors I have no hesitation in finding that the accused was drunk at the time. I do so even though in his extra-judicial statement he made no mention of alcohol. Nevertheless, I do not find that he had become insane in the legal sense, and I do not have to dwell on this aspect, but I think that it is doubtful E that he had formed the intention to kill his blind brother or cause him grievous harm. It was held in R. v Nyode Wopera (1948), 15 EACA 145 that while under s. 14 of the Penal Code intoxication is to be taken into account in deciding whether the person charged had formed a murderous intention, it is not the only fact which should be F considered. In that case, therefore, the Court of Appeal considered also the absence of any previous quarrel between the deceased and the appellant, the aimless way in which the stabbing of the deceased was done, the lack of any provocation, the fact that a single wound who inflicted on a part of the body not usually regarded as vulnerable and the G general conduct of the appellant, including his curious fit of snorting and grunting immediately after he had inflicted the injury. After considering these factors and the appellant's consumption of alcohol the Court quashed the conviction for murder and substituted a conviction for manslaughter. H

The facts of the case before us do not show any previous ill-will between the deceased and the accused. In fact such ill-will was denied by the witnesses. It is also apparent that the entire incident - from the time the accused started attacking his mother to the time he cut the deceased - did not last long. It was a rapid succession of events which does not appear to me to have lasted more than three to four minutes. There was I therefore no time for meditation. Further, the accused inflicted a single wound and does not himself seem to know where it was inflicted. He also did A not realise the fatality of his action for it shocked him to learn that he had killed his brother. He therefore told the justice of the peace: "... nikaambiwa kuwa nimeua, moyo wangu ukasituka, nikakimbia ...". He even dropped his weapon at the scene and later surrendered himself that same night. And according to Inspector Tryphon B Mwaya the accused was actually found and arrested at the hospital mortuary where he had presumably gone to see his brother's body. The onus is on the prosecution to prove beyond reasonable doubt an intention to kill or cause grievous harm. I think that in the light of the factors, that burden was not discharged. It seems to me, and I find, that the C accused killed out of drunkenness without an intention to do so and cannot be guilty of murder.

1983 TLR p447

LUGAKINGIRA J

The foregoing is sufficient to dispose of the case but I think that self-defence is a matter which also deserves consideration. Both in the extra-judicial statement and in his statement in court the accused alluded to self-defence or defence of his family. He D believed that he was about to be a victim of an attack by his brothers inside his house. It may be asked whether he had reasonable grounds for believing so. It will now be recalled that Jackson advanced towards the accused's door with the intention of shutting it from outside. The deceased and Rogan were at Jackson's heels. There was no E evidence that the accused knew that the intention of his brothers was to shut the door and the circumstances, I think, militated against such imagination. Only seconds before his brothers had been chastising him and according to Rogan the deceased was expressing the desire to punish him more even as the accused entered his house. In F those circumstances and in view of the alcoholic impairment, I think the accused genuinely and reasonably believed, albeit mistakenly, that his brothers were advancing to attack him. In Leosoni Matheo v R. [1962] E.A. 264 the Court of Appeal was considering provocation in relation to mistake of fact and held that an accused acting under a reasonable mistake of fact, when that mistake, if true, would lead to the G application of s. 201 of the Penal Code, is entitled to rely on that mistake. It is also stated in Archbold 40th Ed. para. 144 g. (vi), citing R. v Gamlen IF & F. 90, that drunkenness and consequent delusions may in some circumstances assist to make out a defence of self defence based on a mistake of fact. I have just stated that the accused H had reasonable grounds for his belief. I will now state that if his belief were in fact true, if his brothers had entered his house and attacked him, that would have invited the application of section 18 of the Penal Code even though it was the accused's own initial conduct that had ignited their fury. He is therefore entitled to rely on the mistake, in I which case, again, the homicide cannot be murder but manslaughter.

1983 TLR p448

LUGAKINGIRA J

Before concluding this judgment I think it is necessary to comment on two matters. I A have noted, in the first instance, that the information filed in this court gave the place of crime merely as Dodoma Region. That is vague, Dodoma region being a vast territorial area. The mention of it cannot in any mind indicate with any clearness the place where the offence was committed. It is noted that the specimen forms set out in the Second B Schedule to the Criminal Procedure Code require no more than stating the region and it may well be that it is these forms which were relied on. But as observed by the Court of Appeal in K. v Loibori Tekindikoki [1949], 16 EACA 86, it is doubtful if the specimen forms themselves comply sufficiently with the requirements of the provisions of ss. 135 C and 138 (f) of the Code. The Court stated that it can hardly be said that a reference to what may be a vast territorial area can indicate to the accused, with reasonable clearness, the place at which it is alleged he committed the offence. I think, therefore, that the information should, particularly where the offence is committed in a rural or peri-urban area, give such particulars, for instance the village, as would obviate D uncertainty. In this case such particulars were in fact available and contained in the police charge sheet filed in the committing court. One cannot then explain the brevity of the information filed in this court except, probably, on cosmetic grounds. I am nevertheless satisfied that the omission in this case did not embarrass the accused, there E being no dispute about the facts.

Secondly, it was also noted that the person who conducted the postmortem at Dodoma Government Hospital, one Maria Galatto, is designated a medical assistant. Counsel for the Republic Mr. Lyimo was not in a position to confirm that she was not such a medical F assistant. However, the position is far from clear, for it seems that there have been inconsistencies in stating the status of Maria Galatto. In Criminal Sessions Case No. 38/83, the plea in which I took on 7th of this month, the same person is there designated as a medical officer. One prefers that she is in fact a medical officer for the opinion given G by an unqualified person as to the cause of death is bound to be seriously doubted and even rejected unless it is corroborated by other evidence. In this regard, I should perhaps set out the unequivocal warning sounded by the Court of Appeal in R. v Billa Luhoyo [1947], 14 EACA 137 where an unqualified hospital assistant was involved. The Court said: H

> We note that in this case, as in some other cases which have come before this Court from Tanganyika, opinion evidence as to the cause of death was taken from a person who was not a qualified medical officer. We appreciate the conditions and circumstances which bring it I about that it is often the case that no better evidence can be > obtained than that of a hospital assistant with some medical knowledge, but we think it right to A utter the warning that where in a case there is other evidence not tending to corroborate the cause of death testified to by such a witness, this court would not accept an opinion given by an unqualified hospital assistant, as that of a medical expert witness as establishing cause of death. B

Fortunately, I do not have to tax myself beyond this as there was other evidence, including the accused's own statements, which leave no doubt that the deceased died following a cut wound on the neck. I can only remark that if Maria Galatto was in fact a medical assistant, that is definitely curious since the Dodoma Government Hospital could C not in 1981 have been wanting in Medical officers.

To revert to the substance of the case, I have held that the accused could not have formed the intention to kill or cause grievous harm. I have also held that the circumstances of the killing permitted the defence of self-defence based on a mistake of D fact. It follows that the accused is not guilty of murder and he is acquitted of that offence. However, I find him guilty of manslaughter c/s 195 of the Penal Code and convict him of that offence. Sentence: On the facts of the case, it being established that accused permitted himself to be a slave of alcohol, but considering also his youth and his E apparent remorse at what happened, I sentence him to go to prison for three (3) years.

F Order accordingly.

1983 TLR p449

G

[zRPz]REPUBLIC v IDD HAMISI 1983 TLR 449 (HC)

Court High Court of Tanzania - Dodoma
Judge Maina J

April 25, 1983
CRIMINAL REVISION 6 OF 1983
Flynote
Road Traffic Act - Definition of motor vehicle - Whether a bicycle is a motor vehicle or trailer H for purposes of offences under s. 39 1(a) of the Road Traffic Act, No. 30 of 1973.
Road Traffic Act - Bicycles - Whether riding a defective bicycle is an offence known to law.
-Headnote
The accused Iddi Hamisi was charged and convicted on his own plea of riding a I defective pedal bicycle on a road contrary to sections 39(1)(a),

1983 TLR p450

MAINA J

100 and 113(1) of the Road Traffic Act, 1973. The accused was riding a pedal bicycle A without hand brakes. He was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of shillings 100/=. The case came for revision at the High Court.

Held: (i) S. 39(1)(a) of the Road Traffic Act, 1973 prohibits the driving of defective B motor vehicles or trailers on public roads;

(ii) s. 2 of the Act defines a motor vehicle as a self-propelled vehicle intended or adopted for use on roads and includes an engineering plant;

(iii) a bicycle is neither a self-propelled vehicle to be categorised as a motor C vehicle nor is it a vehicle designed to be drawn or propelled by a motor vehicle to be called a trailer, therefore, s. 39(1)(a) of the Road Traffic Act which prohibits the driving of defective motor vehicles on public roads does not apply to bicycles;

(iv) the accused should have been charged under rule 32 of the Road Traffic D Rules and not under section 39(1)(a) of the Road Traffic Act.

Case Information
Order accordingly.
No case referred to. E

[zJDz]Judgment

Maina, J.: Iddi Hamisi, the accused in this case, was convicted on his own plea of guilty on a charge of "riding a pedal bicycle with mechanical defects". He was sentenced to fine Shs. 100/= which he paid. F

The accused was charged under section 39(1)(a) of the Road Traffic Act, No. 30 of 1973 which provides that no motor vehicle or trailer shall be driven on the public road unless all parts and its equipment including its chassis engine, gear system, brake system body work, tyres, lights are in good repair and in efficient working condition. The G bicycle which the accused was riding "had no hand brake". The issue here is whether by riding a bicycle which had no handbrake the accused had committed an offence under section 39(1)(a) of the Road Traffic Act. As I have tried to show above, that section clearly provides that it shall be an offence when a person drives a motor vehicle or trailer H with mechanical defects. A motor vehicle is defined by section 2 of the Act to mean any self-propelled vehicle intended or adapted for use on the roads and includes an engineering plant. Surely a bicycle is not a self-propelled vehicle. Section 2 of the Act defines a bicycle as any vehicle which has at least two wheels which is propelled by I means of pedals or hand cranks solely by the muscular energy of the person riding it. Clearly therefore a bicycle is not a motor vehicle. It is also not a trailer because by its definition A in the Act a trailer is "any vehicle designed to be drawn or propelled by a motor vehicle". From the foregoing it will be clear that a bicycle is neither a motor vehicle nor a trailer. Therefore section 39(1)(a) of the Road Traffic Act which provides that no motor vehicle or trailer shall be driven on a public road with defects does not apply to bicycles. B

The remaining question now is whether by riding a pedal bicycle without brakes the accused has committed any offence known to law. I have read the Road Traffic Act very carefully but I have not seen any provision in the Act about riding a bicycle with defects. However, the Traffic Rules made under the Traffic Ordinance provide in rule C 32 that "Every bicycle or tricycle shall be fitted with at least one effective brake". The Traffic Ordinance, Cap. 168, was repealed by section 117(1) of the Road Traffic Act, but section 117(2)(a) of the Act provides that notwithstanding the provisions of Sub-Section (1), all subsidiary legislation made under the Traffic Ordinance and in force immediately before the commencement of the Road Traffic Act, shall continue to be in D force until revoked. The rules made under the Traffic Ordinance and which have not been revoked are therefore in force. Rule 32 of the Traffic Rules which were made under the Traffic Ordinance has not been revoked. The accused should have been charged under that rule and not under Section 39(1)(a) of the road Traffic Act. E

The accused's conviction is altered to riding a bicycle without brakes contrary to rule 32 of the Traffic Rules. The sentence remains as it appears to be reasonable.

F Order accordingly.