The respondent was acquitted by the District Court of the offence of cattle theft. The appellant, owner of the cattle, aggrieved by the decision of the District Court appealed to the High Court.

Held: (i) This was not a private prosecution, rather a public prosecution conducted C by the Director of Public Prosecutions, as such the complainant has no right of appeal - Section 378(1) Criminal Procedure Act No. 9 of 1985;

D (ii) where the criminal case originates from the Primary Courts under section 20(1)(a) of the Magistrates' Courts Act No. 2 of 1984 the complainant or the Director of Public Prosecutions may appeal to the District Court and to the High Court against an acquittal in a public prosecution.

Appeal misconceived. E

Mwalusanya, J.: The respondent Peter s/o Mtumba was acquitted by the Singida District Court for the offence of cattle theft c/ss 265 and 268 of the Penal Code Cap. 16. It was alleged at the trial that the respondent who is a Ward Secretary of the F Ward of Issuna had on 18/8/89 stolen a cow belonging to the complainant one Mr. Fanuel s/o Msengi who is now the appellant. Aggrieved by the decision of the District Court in acquitting the respondent, the complainant has now appealed to this court. G

This was a public prosecution conducted by the Director of Public Prosecutions (D.P.P.). It was not a private prosecution. That being the case the complainant has no right of appeal to this court. According to section 43 of the Magistrate's Court Act No. 2/1984 appeal from District Courts to the High Court have to be done in accordance H with the procedure stipulated in the Criminal Procedure Act No. 9/1985. Now according to section 378(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act No. 9/1985 only the D.P.P. may appeal against an acquittal to the High Court in respect of public prosecution. The complainant is not personally allowed to appeal in a public I prosecution - what he can do is to ask the D.P.P. to appeal on his behalf. So the A appeal in this case was misconceived.

The position is different in respect of criminal cases originating from the Primary Courts. Under section 20(1)(a) of the Magistrates' Court Act No. 2/1984, the complainant or the D.P.P. may appeal to the District Court and to the High Court against an acquittal B in a public prosecution. However that is not the position in respect of criminal cases originating from the District Courts.

After reading the evidence on record I am of the view that the appellant may have a remedy by filing a civil suit against either the respondent or Copl. Michael (P.W.3) or C both, whom he alleges he entrusted the missing cow at a public auction. And he may call Amos s/o Misai as his witness whom he alleges was present when either the respondent or Copl. Michael was handed over the cow in question. He is at liberty to seek a redress in a civil court.

Be that as it may, this appeal is misconceived and incompetent. The appellant has no D right of appeal in law. The appeal is dismissed and struck off the register.

E Appeal dismissed.

(ii) a charge of criminal trespass cannot succeed where the matter involves land in dispute whose ownership has not been finally determined by a civil suit in a court of law;

D (iii) a Criminal Court is not the proper forum for determining the rights of those claiming ownership of land. Only a Civil Court via a civil suit can determine matters of land ownership.

Mwalusanya, J.: The appellant Sylivery s/o Nkangaa was the complainant at E Singida District Court where the respondent Raphael s/o Albertho was the accused charged of criminal trespass contrary to section 299(1) of the Penal Code Cap. 16. The accused (respondent) was acquitted of the offence he was charged with. Now the F complainant is appealing to this court against the acquittal.

This appeal is obviously misconceived. According to section 43(1)of the Magistrate's Court Act No. 2/84, appeals from the District Courts to the High Court have to be concluded in accordance with the virtue of section 378(1) of the Criminal Procedure G Act, in public prosecutions, only the Director of Public Prosecutions (D.P.P.) can appeal against a acquittal by the District Court. This was a public prosecution and therefore the complainant has no right of appeal. Therefore this appeal is misconceived and incompetent.

Even if the appeal was properly filed, still the appeal had to fail on merits. This was a H charge of criminal trespass. This court on numerous occasions has held that the charge of criminal trespass cannot succeed where the matter involves land in dispute whose ownership has not been finally determined by a civil suit in a court of law. In this case both the complainant and the respondent claim ownership of the land in dispute. The I respondent claims that it is his clan land, while the complainant/appellant claims that he was lawfully allocated by A the village land allocating committee. That being the case, the charge of criminal trespass is not maintainable as the ownership of the land in dispute has not been resolved by a court of law in a civil suit. The rationale behind that doctrine is that under section 9 of B the Penal Code Cap. 16 the alleged trespasser is protected because he has an honest (bona fide) claim to the land in dispute, even though the claim may be mistaken. The honest claim of right can only be destroyed after a court of law in a civil suit determines who is the owner of the land in dispute. The learned Resident Magistrate was quite C alright in acquitting the respondent. However the learned Resident Magistrate was wrong to declare the respondent as the lawful owner of the land in dispute. A criminal court is not the proper forum for determining the rights of those claiming ownership of land. Only a civil court via a civil suit can determine matters of land ownership. D Therefore using my powers of revision, I will quash that part of the decision of the Resident Magistrate which declares the respondent as the owner of the land in dispute. The parties are at liberty to file a civil suit which will determine once and for all, who is the owner of the land in dispute.

In the event I hold that this appeal is misconceived and incompetent and therefore it is E dismissed. The order by the District Court declaring the respondent as the owner of the land in dispute is hereby quashed. The parties are at liberty to file a civil suit which will determine as to who is the lawful owner of the land in dispute.

Rubama, J.: Gosbert Edward Rweyemamu is suing Tanzania Wood Industry Corporation for wrongful termination of employment. He had been employed on two years contract and positioned at the time of his termination as General Manager of E Tabora Msitu Products Company Ltd. In the Written Statement of defence, Tanzania Wood Industry Corporation raise a preliminary objection that this court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit as is provided by s. 28(1) of the Security of Employment Act Cap. 574. This raised objection was argued by Mrs. Mulebya, learned advocate F for the defendant. Mr. Mrugaruga, A Labour Officer appearing for the plaintiff replied.

Mrs. Mulebya submitted that by virtue of s.28(1) of the Security of Employment Act 1964, this court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. She quoted several cases that G had dealt with this question of ousting of jurisdiction: Kitundu Sisal Estate v Shingo and Others [1976] E.A. 557, a case decided by the Eastern Africa Court of Appeal; James Sankey v M/S Caltex Oil [1973] LRT n. 46 (Biron, J.); Walter Jager v Cordula Ltd. t/a Tanganyika Tourist Hotels and Oyster Bay Hotel [1972] H H.C.D. 133 (Onyiuke, J.). In reply Mr. Mrugaruga referred the court to the Security Employment (Amendment) Act, 1969 and some cases decided under it: Walter Jager v Corbula Ltd. t/a Tanganyika Tourist Hotels and Oyster Bay Hotel (supra) and David Kamugisha v Bukop Ltd. Civil case No. 49/90 (Mwanza Registry) I (unreported, Sekule, J) Mr.

Mrugaruga submitted that the trial court is not expected to dismiss the plaint as called A upon by Mrs. Mulebya but stay the suit leaving either party seek the labour officer's opinion on whether or not the plaintiff as in this case is in a managerial position. Mr. Mrugaruga went on to submit that the labour officer's opinion was obtained in the case B under consideration. I hasten to point out on this last submission that there is no record in the case file that supports the submission.

I have gone through all the cases referred to the court except for the case of David Kamugisha v Bukop Ltd. (supra). I could not lay my hands on this case C notwithstanding my efforts. On these decided cases, the prayer by Mrs. Mulebya cannot be granted. I dismiss the preliminary objection for want of merit.

Unlike as was the case in James Sankey v M/S Caltex Oil (supra) it is not that easy in the present case to determine the question of the jurisdiction of this court to hear and D determine the case before getting the labour officer's opinion of whether the plaintiff was employed in the management of the defendant's business or not. Then the learned trial judge imposed the mandatory sentence of death in respect of the second conviction. [zJDz]Judgment

Mapigano, Ag. J.A., Nyalali, C.J. and Ramadhani, J.A.: This is a case of double murder. A man called Patrick Tyenyi and his wife Jenorever were brutally hacked to death in the night of 14th/15th September, 1985, in the Musoma Township. G Jenorever was found dead in a pool of blood inside the couple's house at Nyakato, while the dead body of Patrick was discovered a kilometre away. It is evident that H the couple was killed by bandits who raided their house in that night and that Patrick was killed by the bandits after being taken forcibly from the house or when he was giving chase. It is also evident that the injuries the couple sustained on the heads were inflicted by a sharp weapon.

The bandits made away with clothes, a blanket, a mosquito net and a gun which belonged to Patrick's employer and which was in his possession on account of his I employment.

NYALALI CJ, RAMADHANI JA, MAPIGANO AG.JA

The appellant Mwita Wambura was charged with the murders of the couple on two A counts and tried by the High Court sitting at Musoma. Although the prosecution produced no eye witness to the incident the learned trial judge, Sekule, J., in a careful judgment, was of the opinion that there were three principal pieces of credible evidence B that established the following facts: (a) that the raiders were prosecuting a common design i.e. robbery; (b) that their common design extended to everything which in fact occurred in the course of the raid; (c) that the murders were committed in the course of the raid; and (d) that the appellant was a party to the raid and the murders. C

The first piece of evidence pertained to the appellant's possession of the articles that were stolen from the couple's house a few hours after the raid. There was credible evidence that the appellant accompanied by two other men who evaded arrest brought D the stolen articles to the house of PW.2 Nyamtondo in the night of the raid. Some of the articles were blood-stained. There was also credible evidence that the trio came to that place carrying two pangas, also blood-stained, and a knife.

In effect the appellant failed to explain to the Court how he acquired possession of the E stolen goods. Under our criminal law the unexplained possession by an accused person of the fruits of a crime recently after it has been committed is presumptive evidence against the accused not only on the charge of theft or receiving with guilty knowledge, but of any aggravated crime like murder as well, when there is reason for concluding F that such aggravated and minor crimes were committed in the same transaction. And the force of this presumption is greatly strengthened if the property consists of a number of miscellaneous articles.

The second piece of evidence was the appellant's possession of the blood-stained G weapons, weapons which were eminently capable of inflicting wounds of the kind that the deceased couple sustained.
The third piece of evidence was the conduct of the appellant when he was confronted by the neighbours of PW.2 in the following morning. It was in evidence that upon H realizing that he was about to be apprehended he promptly fetched the stolen gun from the house of PW.2, gathered the other stolen articles and then took to his heels, threatening to shoot his pursuers with the gun.
Accordingly, the learned judge convicted the appellant on both courts. The judge was I fully aware that under our law he was obliged to pass a sentence of death, which is mandatory, on only one count.
NYALALI CJ, RAMADHANI JA, MAPIGANO AG.JA
So he pronounced the sentence in the following terms: A

Mwita Wambura, I have found you guilty and convicted you of two counts of murder ... I hereby sentence you to suffer death by hanging until you die in respect of the murder of Jenorever w/o Patrick Tyonyi. You are so sentenced. B

It is to be observed that the murder of Jenorever was the subject matter of the second count.
The appellant has appealed to us against the decision of the trial judge. On his behalf Mr. Rugarabamu, learned advocate, filed two grounds. However at the start of C hearing Mr. Rugarabamu announced that he was dropping one of the grounds, and this did not come to us as a surprise, given the abundance and quality of the materials on record.
The ground that remains to be considered is that "if the conviction on Court No. 1 D was sound there was no plausible reason why the learned judge chose to sentence the appellant to suffer death on Court No. 2". In his short address Mr. Rugarabamu has made two points in that regard. The first point is that the trial judge erred when he passed sentence on the second count. In his submission the judge should have passed E the sentence on the first court instead. In answer to a question from the bench Mr. Rugarabamu has readily conceded that there is no benefit that will ensure to the appellant if we sustain this point.
The second point is a sequel to the first and it is that the judge's choice to hand down F the sentence on the second count is indicative of a state of misgiving in the judge's mind about the guilt of the appellant on the first count.
We agree with Mr. Mussa, learned Senior State Attorney who resisted the appeal, and hold that there is no substance in the two points raised by Mr. Rugarabamu. We G knew that in most cases where more than one count of murder have been charged, and convictions entered on two or more counts, the practice has been to impose the death sentence in respect of the first of such convictions. It seems to us, however, that that is simply a matter of form or wont. There is no rule which makes it obligatory on the H Court to hand out the sentence in respect of the first conviction, and it is not our desire to create one. In our view the choice of which count to pass the sentence on is a matter which is better left to the discretion of the trial judge.

Reading the trial judgment it is clear to us that the judge was left in no reasonable I doubt as to the guilt of the appellant on both counts. This is how he concluded the judgment: A

The accused and the other persons, each one of them therefore is responsible for deaths of the deceased persons under the doctrine of common intention ... Like the gentlemen assessors, I am satisfied that the case against the accused person has been proved B beyond reasonable doubt. I would and do hereby find the accused guilty of murder on both counts and I convict him accordingly.

That was an explicit finding and we have been unable to accept the proposition that C the terms of the sentence derogated from it and implied that the judge was somewhat uncertain about the validity of the conviction on the first count. In any event in our assessment we entertain no doubt whatever that the judge reached the right decision. Certainly the proven incriminating facts excluded all reasonable likelihood of the D appellant's innocence on both counts.

Ramadhani, J.A., Nyalali, C.J. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: It has never been in dispute both in the High Court of Tanzania at Musoma (Masanche, J.) and before us that the deceased, Sokoture s/o Chacha, died because of tetanus and that the appellant, Mwita Nyamkanga, had on 14/4/86 inflicted a grievous cut wound on the deceased D by means of a panga. Equally it is settled that the deceased met his untimely death on 25/4/86, that is, some eleven days after the wounding.

The point of serious contention, which has brought the appellant to this Court, as it was allegiantly canvassed for him by Mr. Rugarabamu, learned advocate, was whether E tetanus was brought about by the wound inflicted by the appellant or that death was hastened by that wound.

The post-mortem report (Exh. P.1) merely said that the cause of death was "respiratory F failure caused by tetanus". Mr. Rugarabamu said that the report did not give the cause of tetanus and the doctor who performed the examination was not called to testify. The learned Counsel referred us to two medical treatise: A Text-book of Bacteriology by Fair brother and Tylor at page 367 and "Lecture Notes on Pathology" by Thomson and G Cotton at page 30. Both of these authorities state that the incubation period for tetanus is a minimum of eight days. Mr. Rugarabamu pointed out that the eleven days which elapsed between the wounding by the appellant and the death of the deceased is within the span of time of incubation if tetanus had resulted from that wound. However, H he argued that the two extracts he had produced do not say what is the maximum incubation period nor do they indicate after how many days from the time of injury or when symptoms have appeared is death likely to result. So, Mr. Rugarabamu submitted that there is no evidence that the wound inflicted by the appellant caused that I tetanus or that that wound hastened the death of the deceased in any way. A

For the respondent/Republic was Mr. Malamsha, learned State Attorney, who conceded the omission pointed out by Mr. Rugarabamu but made a fervent prayer that we exercise our powers under Section 4 (2) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 B and do what the High Court could have done, that is call the author of the post-mortem report to testify or order the High Court to hear him on that point.

Mr. Rugarabamu objected to that prayer but conceded that this Court could do that C suo moto. Alternatively, Mr. Rugarabamu agreed that the appellant could be found guilty of causing grievous harm c/s 225 of the Penal Code.

We agree with Mr. Rugarabamu that we cannot say beyond reasonable doubt that the wound by the appellant caused tetanus. There is evidence that the deceased had fever D before the attack by the appellant. We do not know what caused that fever.

We toyed with the idea of taking additional evidence but decided against it. We are a shade unsure of its usefulness. We do not know whether the medical officer who performed the examination could, if recalled, be able to know when the deceased E showed the symptoms of tetanus and give his opinion as to whether that tetanus could or could not have been caused by the wound inflicted by the appellant. This is taking into account that it is six years now since the examination was done. We are also aware of the fact that the appellant has been under the gloom of uncertain fate for the same F length of time. We feel that we should not prolong his ordeal. So we quash the conviction of murder and set aside the sentence of death. We find him, instead, to be guilty of causing grievous harm c/s 225 of the Penal Code and sentence him to imprisonment for a term of six years. G

We have one small but vital remark to make. The information contained the following particulars of offence:

Mwita s/o Nyamhanga on or about the 25th day of April, 1986 at Nyarwana Village, in the H District of Tarime in Mara Region murdered one Sekoture s/o Chacha.

Now, 25/4/1986 was the date the deceased died but that was not the date when the appellant inflicted the injury on the deceased. That was 14/4/1986, as already said. It I has been established long time age by R. v Lujo s/o Mgombe (1946) 13 EACA 156 that the date of the A charge is that of the unlawful act and not that of the death. We wish to remind those responsible for filing information about this requirement.

The appellant was charged with and convicted of murder and sentenced to suffer E death by hanging. He appealed against both conviction and sentence. There were two pieces of evidence which among others, grounded his conviction. The first piece was contents of a memorandum by which the appellant was said to have admitted under F section 192(3) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. The contents of the memorandum were not read and explained to the appellant. The second piece of evidence was spent cartridges of the appellant's sub-machine gun which were found 3 to 4 paces away from the dead body. The appellant argued that there was a struggle between him and the G deceased for control of the gun in the process of which two bullets accidently got discharged and hit the deceased.

Nyalali, C.J., Ramadhani, J.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: The appellant, No. MT C 7479 Set. Benjamin Holela, was charged and convicted in the High Court at Tabora for the offence of murder c/s 196 of the Penal Code and sentenced to the mandatory sentence of death by hanging. The proceedings were a retrial consequent upon an earlier order by this Court declaring the earlier proceedings a nullity and directing a trial de D novo. The appellant is aggrieved by the decision of the High Court in convicting and sentencing him. Hence this appeal to the Court. Mr. Magongo, learned advocate, represented the appellant before us, whereas Mr. Kaduri, learned Senior State Attorney, appeared for the respondent/Republic. Only one ground of appeal was E submitted by Mr. Magongo for the appellant. The appellant however, had earlier submitted three grounds of appeal from jail.

Only one issue is in dispute in this case, and that is whether the appellant shot the deceased with his sub-machine gun or whether the bullets which fatally hit the F deceased were discharged accidently from the gun.

It is undisputed between the parties in this case that on the 9th August 1984, one Paulo s/o Mbigusula got fatally shot with two bullets in Migato Village, Bariadi District. At the material time, the appellant was a soldier in the Tanzania People's Defence Forces, G more popularly known by its acronym as T.P.D.F., and was in charge of militia trainig of villagers in a compaign against rempant banditry in the area. On the material day, the appellant, accompanied by another soldier, namely, Private Zacharia Kasubi intercepted a group of people whom he suspected of banditry. Among this group was the H deceased, together with the second prosecution witness, namely Makingo s/o Sabila, and the third prosecution witness, namely, Mazahabu s/o Selesi, hereinafter described simply as PW.2 and PW.3. After intercepting them the appellant ordered them to return I to Migato Village shops. Sometimes later, the deceased and two of his companions, took to their heels. The appellant gave chase to the deceased, at first on foot, and later on bicycle. A

Furthermore, it is not in dispute that the appellant discharged several shots in the air as warning shots before the deceased stopped, turned round and walked back towards the appellant, with his arms raised. Soon thereafter, the deceased got shot in the chest and his left leg. He died on the spot. Subsequently, the appellant sent a written message to B his District Chief Militia Officer and to the Police Officer In-Charge of Police Station, Bariadi, in which he made a report concerning the incident. A Police Officer, that is the first prosecution witness, namely, No. B 6419 Corporal Amatus, hereinafter described simply as PW.1 visited the village, met the appellant and visited the scene of the C incident.

With regard to the only issue in this case, it was the prosecution case at the trial that the appellant shot the deceased dead, after the deceased had surrounded and was walking back towards the appellant with his hands up. The defence case at the trial on the D other hand asserts that as the deceased thus approached the appellant, the deceased suddenly jumped upon the appellant, kicked him and seized the appellant's sub-machine gun. In the struggle that ensued for control of the gun, two bullets accidently got discharged and hit the deceased. E

The material evidence on this issue consists of the matters admitted under Section 192 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 together with the testimony of PW.1, PW.2 and PW.3; as well as the two spent cartridges found at the scene of the incident, and the message sent by the appellant and which was tendered at the trial as exhibit P.2. F

Let us start with the matters admitted in the preliminary hearing under Section 192 of the Criminal Procedure Act. Under sub-section (3) it is provided:

G At the conclusion of a preliminary hearing held under this section, the Court shall prepare a memorandum of the matters agreed and the memorandum shall be read over and explained to the accused in a language that he understands, signed by the accused and his advocate and by the public prosecutor, and then filed. (emphasis supplied) H

It is obvious from those provisions that the contents of the memorandum have to be read and explained to the accused, and that duty is mandatory. The record of the trial proceedings however does not indicate compliance with this duty. We take it that there I was non-compliance.

Under sub-section (4) it is provided that: A

Any fact or document admitted or agreed (whether such fact is mentioned in the summary of evidence or not) in a memorandum filed under this section shall be deemed to have been duly proved ... B

The question that arised here is whether the above emphasized provisions apply where there has been a non-compliance as is the situation here. We are settled in our minds that the above emphasized provisions do not apply where it has been a failure to read C and explain the contents of the memorandum to the accused.

The necessity to read and explain the memorandum to the accused is highlighted by the provisions of rules 4 and 6 of the Accelerated Trial and Disposal of cases Rules, 1988 made under section 192 (6) and published under Government Notice No. 192 of 1 D July 1988. Under Rule 4 it is provided:

The person prosecuting shall in every trial under those rules, prepare, as clearly as possible, the facts of the case which shall be read to the accused and explained in a E language he can understand.

Under rule (6) it is provided:

F When the facts of the case are read and explained to the accused, the Court shall ask him to state which of those facts he admits and the trial magistrate or judge shall record the same.

It is apparent that a statement by counsel or advocate for the accused to the effect G that the matters raised are admitted is not sufficient under the law. It is the accused himself who must indicate what matters he or she admits. In cases where the matters comprise documents, the contents of the documents must be read and explained to the accused, in the event of a sketch plan or such like documents, the sketch plan must H be explained and shown to the accused to ensure that he or she is in a position to give an informed response.

The second piece of evidence consists of the testimony of PW.1 who testified to the I effect that when he met the appellant, the latter admitted killing someone suspected of being a bandit. This testimony was challenged under cross-examination by Mr. Mbussa, learned advocate A for the appellant at the trial. The Defence suggested that the appellant had told PW.1 that the deceased died by bad luck. Under those circumstances, and bearing in mind the defence story, the testimony of PW.1 on this point has to be treated with caution.

The third piece of evidence for the prosecution is the testimony of PW.2 and PW.3 B who claim to have seen the appellant shoot the deceased as the latter surrendered. PW.2 claims to have been 60 paces from the incident and to have seen the appellant shoot the deceased from a distance of about 20 - 30 paces. PW.3 on the other hand claims to have been about 200 paces from the incident and to have seen the appellant C shoot the deceased from a distance of 7 paces. We think the testimony of PW.2 and PW.3 has to be treated with caution, since it is inexplicable how PW.2 and PW.3 came to be so separated from each other at the time they claim to have observed the incident, in the light of the evidence which suggests that PW.2 and PW.3 stayed together when D the deceased and two of his companions bolted from the custody of the appellant.

The fourth piece of evidence for the prosecution on this point is exhibit P.2. That message reads inter alia:

E "... Majambazi manne tuliyakamata jana tarehe 09 August 84 saa 1530 HRS (.) wawili (2) kati yao walikimbia (CNA) mmoja tulimfukuza umbali wa kl. mbili na nusu (.) na tulimpiga risasi na kufa (.) mmoja alitoweka kabisa (.) walibaki wawili nao walijaribu kutoroka na walinzi usiku walifaulu ... Aliyekufa ni Paulo Mpigisule ..." F

In our view the contents of this message are ambiguous in a material particular. According to the message, the appellant and some other person or persons shot the deceased. On the face of it, it contradicts the other evidence adduced by the G prosecution which suggests that the appellant alone shot the deceased. It is therefore unsafe to rely on exhibit P.2 without corroboration by independent evidence. Since we have found that the testimony of PW.2 and PW.3 requires to be treated with caution, it H cannot be used to corroborate exhibit P.2.

The fifth piece of evidence comprises the spent cartridges found at the scene of the deceased. This has been a hot point of contention by the appellant, not only in his evidence at the trial, but also when we allowed the appellant in person to supplement the I submissions made by counsel on his behalf. We allowed him to do so under Rule 3 (2) of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules 1979, on the basis that he A was being represented on a deck brief and not by counsel of his own choice. The appellant used the opportunity very well. He argued that had he shot the deceased in the manner stated by PW.2 and PW.3, the two spent cartridges would have been found far away from the spot where they were found by PW.1, since cartridges from a B sub-machine gun of the type in question tend to fall some 3 or 4 paces backwards from the position of firing the gun. The fact that the two spent cartridges were found by PW.1 to be 3 to 4 paces from the body of the deceased in consistent with the appellant's C story.

We think the appellant has succeeded to raise a reasonable doubt concerning the shooting evidence. It was for the prosecution to show beyond reasonable doubt that the relative positions of the deceased and the two spent cartridges were consistent with the deceased being shot by the appellant in the manner described by PW.2 and PW.3 - D that is, deceased being shot at from the distances stated by PW.2 and PW.3. This the prosecution apparently failed to do.

Finally, we end with the single ground of appeal contained in the memorandum of E appeal filed by counsel for the appellant. We do not think that the failure by the prosecution to call Private Zacharia to testify justifies any adverse inference being drawn against the prosecution in the circumstances of this case, where there is no suggestion by the evidence that Private Zacharia was in a better position than PW.2 and PW.3 F regarding the shooting incident.

In the final analysis therefore, we are satisfied, like the two gentlemen assessors who assisted the trial judge, that the prosecution did not prove its case beyond reasonable doubt. We consequently allow the appeal, quash the conviction, set aside the G sentence and direct the immediate release of the appellant from jail unless detained therein for other lawful course.

H Appeal allowed.

[zJDz]Judgment

Makame, J.A.: This is an application for extension of time within which to institute an appeal, brought by Cosmas Construction Company Limited represented by Mr. Maira, learned advocate. It is being resisted by Dr. Lamwai, learned counsel, on behalf of the I respondent Company, Arrow Garments Limited.

MAKAME JA
The applicant was one of three respondents in the High Court in Misc. Civil Cause 54 A of 1989 in which the respondent alleged that it had been defrauded of a plot of land by one of its directors, one Kunda Isai Mwasha, the second respondent, who in turn sold it to the present applicant, then the third respondent. In the High Court the present B respondent petitioned for rectification of the Land Register under section 99(b) of the Land Registration Ordinance, Cap. 334, so that the memorial entered in favour of the present applicant is struck out.
The second respondent in the High Court, Kunda Isai Mwasha, evidently central in the C whole situation, made some effort to resist the Petition but eventually he left matters mid-air. According to the record, the applicant simply did not bother. Going by an endorsement on the summons, returnable on 15th July 1989, the applicant refused to accept service and thereafter, throughout the proceedings, never appeared. Proof D against the applicant was therefore ex-parte and the hearing closed on 25th June 1991. By then, or thereafter, the learned trial judge, Masanche J. was stationed out of Dar es Salaam and he composed the judgment at Musoma on 1st August 1991. It was delivered in Dar es Salaam by Kaijaga, Ag. SDR, on 17th October 1991. According to E the Coram for that day Dr. Lamwai was there, for the applicant, and Mrs. Sinda or Pinda was present "for the 4th Respondents", (Sic). This does not make sense at all, for there was never a fourth respondent at any stage and so the record fails to contradict the applicant's contention that the judgment was delivered in his absence. F
Dr. Lamwai has submitted before me that the High Court had no obligation to notify the applicant of the date when judgment was going to be delivered. With respect, that view cannot be correct. A party who fails to enter an appearance disables himself from participating when the proceedings are consequently ex-parte, but that is the farthest G extent he suffers. Although the matter is therefore considered without any input by him he is entitled to know the final outcome. He has to be told when the judgment is delivered so that he may, if he wishes, attend to take it as certain consequences may follow. H
In the present matter the applicant was not present and there is no proof that he was served with a copy of the Notice of Judgment dated 7th October 1991.
On the other hand, and quite seriously, the applicant has held back information he I should have supplied if he really wanted to have time extended. Just as he did not quite come out and say in so many words that the proceedings were ex-parte - he said, instead, he was A unfortunately absent - he does not say when he eventually got to know that the judgment had been delivered. Both Mr. Subash Patel's affidavit and Mr. Maira before me were conveniently silent on this vital aspect of the matter. Judgment was delivered on 17th October 1991. The Affidavit in support of the motion was not sworn until 17th March B 1992. How can one know how long the applicant kept quiet after knowing the outcome? How can I agree that the applicant could not have instituted an appeal because he 'could not have complied with Rules 76, 77 and 83' - the Rules which impose time - scales? Mr. Maira is an experienced lawyer and it is difficult to see how C he could have expected his client to have time extended without disclosing when he got to know of the existence of the judgment. It is not possible to gauge the extent of the delay.

I am unable to hold that sufficient cause for the delay has been established and so I dismiss the application, with costs. D

Augustino Tegamaisho appeared with power of Attorney on behalf of the first respondent
Ramadhani and Omar, JJ.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: It was not in dispute that E the first respondent, Asteria Mulwani, sold some clan land to the second respondent, Thobias Tegamaisho, who though a member of the larger family does not belong to the same clan or Ihiga as they call it in Bukoba. It was also not contested that the first respondent being a woman could not in Bahaya customary law dispose of clan land. F A woman has the right of possessing and utilizing clan land for the duration of her life. The appellant was aggrieved by that sale by the first respondent who is his paternal aunt. The appellant filed a suit in the Primary Court of Kamachumu and sought to nullify that G sale and restore the land to the clan.

The trial court nullified the sale and ordered that "shamba lirudi mikononi mwa mdai". That is: the land to revert into the hands of the plaintiff (now the appellant). The respondents were aggrieved and each appealed separately. Thus there were Civil Appeal No. 52/86 and Civil Appeal No. 53/86 before the District Court of Muleba. H The two were, and properly so, consolidated by the Senior District Magistrate. However, at the end of the day the learned Magistrate issued under his hand two separate and contradicting judgments.

The appellant appealed to the High Court where all parties agreed that there was a I gross irregularity. So, Mwalusanya, J.

nullified both judgments of the District Court. The learned judge had this to say: A

> In view of the fact that the decision of the District Court has been set aside, I therefore order that the decision of the trial court is restored and so it prevails. The land in dispute B reverts to the clan. The 1st respondent should hold it in usufruct i.e. for her life time...

That order of the learned judge that the first respondent should have life-time use of the land aggrieved the appellant and hence this appeal. There is only one ground of C appeal on a point of law and that is that the learned judge, after he had declared the two judgments of the District Court null and void, erred in rectifying the judgments of the Primary Court as if there was an appeal before him instead of ordering a re-hearing of the appeal by the District Court. D

The appellant was represented by Mr. Rweyemamu, learned advocate, who said that the learned judge should have stopped at the point of declaring that the judgment of the Primary Court was restored. He argued that it was wrong for the learned judge to E have gone on to rectify the judgment of the Primary Court. The only course open to the judge, Mr. Rweyemamu submitted, was to permit an aggrieved party to go back to the District Court on appeal. He cited Kasusura and the Attorney General v Kabuye [1982]T.L.R. 338 as authority for the proposition that if a judgment is fatally defective F then there is really no judgment and the only course is the unusual one of setting it aside and ordering a retrial. Mr. Rweyemamu argued further that the High Court could not even step into the shoes of the District Court and do what that court could have done. The learned counsel distinguished the present appeal from Morali and Others v R. G [1971] H.C.D. No. 145. He argued that in Morali there was a judgment but here was no judgment.

On behalf of the first respondent was Mr. Augustino Tegamaisho with powers of attorney to act for her. He contended that the High Court was right in doing what it did H by virtue of section 29(c) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 (No. 2 of 1984).

The second respondent appeared in person and said that he had nothing to submit as he is no longer an interested party because he has already relinquished the piece of land in issue and that he has been refunded the purchase price he had paid for the plot since I 20/11/1987.

RAMADHANI JJA, OMAR JJA, MAPIGANO Ag, JA

Part III of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 deals with appeals from the Primary A Courts. Powers of the High Court on such appeals are provided in section 29 and what is of particular significance here is paragraph (c) thereof which Mr. Tegamaisho referred us to. That provides as follows:

B 29. In the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction under this Part, The High Court shall have the power -

(a) ...

C (c) make any other decision or order which might have been made by the court of first instance.

Thus in dealing with appeals emanating from the Primary Courts the High Court has the power to make any other decision or order which the Primary Court could have made. D This is crucially important. The decision or order that Mwalusanya, J. made is the one which could have been made by the Primary Court. In fact that order was one which the Primary Court should have made. The prayer, as was properly pointed out by Mr. Tegamaisho, was that the land be returned to the clan. But the Primary Court gave it E to the appellant who at no time had control over it. Besides it is the Bahaya customary law that the first respondent is entitled to use the clan land for her lifetime. Now that is what Mwalusanya, J. ordered.

Mr. Rweyemamu submitted that the High Court could not do what it did since there F was no judgment of the District Court. With respect we do not think so. He referred us to our judgment in Kasusura and the A.G. v Kabuye. But that case is distinguishable from the present one. The circumstances are totaly different as the following passage at p. 339 illustrates:

G We have seriously considered whether we could assess the evidence of the witnesses from the typed record. We however are of the view that it is not possible to do so. We do not have the opportunity of seeing and hearing the witnesses. The trial judge should have evaluated the evidence of each of the witnesses, assessed their credibility and made a H finding on the contested facts in issue. He did not do so. In some cases an appeal court can be in as good a position as a trial court in evaluating the evidence of witnesses, but this is not one of those instances. We have therefore no relevant material before us to I base any finding. (emphasis provided).

RAMADHANI JJA, OMAR JJA, MAPIGANO Ag, JA

The situation in this appeal was that Mwalusanya, J. had at his disposal all that we A complained not to be available to us in the Kasusura's appeal. The Primary Court of Kamachumu, which tried the case, made them available. Thus though Mwalusanya, J. nullified both judgments of the District Court, he still had relevant material before him on which to base the order he gave. Besides, what were nullified were the judgments while the proceedings before the B District Court were left intact. Mr. Rweyemamu tried to distinguish the present appeal from that of Merali to which we drew his attention. In Merali the East African Court of Appeal set aside the order for a re-trial given by the High Court of Tanzania and then considered the three options it C had. Two of those options are relevant here and these are: to order a re-hearing of the appeal or to deal with the appeal on its merits. The Court of Appeal decided to do the latter citing section 3(2) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Ordinance (Cap. 451) which gave D it power to step into the shoes of the High Court from which the appeal proceeded. This was what in effect Mwalusanya, J. did under section 29(c) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 though he did not say so. In fact section 29(c) gives the High Court more powers than these of this Court under section 4(2) of the Appellate Jurisdiction E Act, 1979 (in pari materia with section 3(2) of Cap. 451 cited in Merali's case). The Court of Appeal can only do what the court from which the appeal comes could have done. But the High Court can do what the original court i.e. the Primary Court, and not the District Court, could have done. F

This appeal must then fail. The order of Mwalusanya, J. that:

> The land in dispute reverts to the clan. The 1st respondent should hold it in usufruct i.e. for her life time. If the 1st respondent does not take possession of the same, then the clan G council should sit and decide to allocate it to the deserving heir in the clan.

is upheld. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Rugarabamu, for the appellant. F

Omar and Ramadhani, JJ.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: This action relates to the loss of a grinding machine which was the property of the Masurura Ujamaa Village situate in Musoma District, the proceedings of a Baraza la Jadi in respect of the G machine and the upshots of those proceedings.

The chronology is a follows. The machine was stolen on December 12, 1986, during the night and it was never recovered. Several informations were subsequently laid to the secretary of the village, the third respondent Simon Warioba, which implicated six H youths, the appellant included. On July 31, 1987, the appellant was apprehended by members of the local Sungusungu group and brought before a meeting of the Baraza la Jadi. The said meeting was chaired by the first respondent Kirima Maso, the secretary was the third respondent, and the fourth and fifth respondents, i.e. Mwita Rubirya and I Mwita Makori, attended the meeting as members of the Baraza. In course of the meeting the Baraza found that the appellant was actually A a party to the theft of the machine. The Baraza resolved that the appellant should make compensation in the sum of Shs. 60,000/=. He paid the amount of November 7, 1987, and it is quite likely that he did so after his cattle had been seized by Sungusungu to enforce the resolution of the Baraza. In January, 1988, the appellant instituted a suit in B the High Court at Mwanza against the respondents. The suit was one for damages for slander and assault, in respect of which he claimed a sum of Shs. 200,000/= and Shs. 100,000/=, respectively, and for a refund of the Shs. 60,000/= he had paid to the Village Government. On July 26, 1988, the High Court dismissed the suit with costs. C

In support of his claims the appellant told the High Court (Munyera, J.) that he had denied that he was involved in the theft of the machine; that false and malicious statements were spoken of him at the meeting of the Baraza by the respondents imputing D theft; that he was subjected to the thorough drubbing of 100 strokes; and that thereafter the respondents directed that he should pay the compensation. He called no witness. The respondents denied each and every allegation. They stated that the appellant had admitted before the meeting of the Baraza that he had taken part in the E theft of the machine when that charge was put to him by the third respondent, and that the payment of the compensation was made by him in the context of that admission.

The learned judge was not satisfied that the appellant was unlawfully compelled to pay the compensation. Otherwise, he said, the appellant had ample time between the day F of the sitting of the Baraza on July 31, 1987, and the day he paid the compensation on November 7, 1987, to contest the payment before higher authorities, which he did not.

The judge found that there was in fact publication of defamatory allegations respecting G the appellant in the meeting of the Baraza. But the judge was of the opinion that those statements were privileged and sincere. This is what he stated in his judgment:

H It is the law that any publication imputing the commission of a criminal offence is a defamation actionable per se. In this case there was such publication and the plaintiff was branded a thief. But it was agreed as well that the village's grinding machine was stolen. The machine was owned communally and every villager had an interest in it, the eight I defendants inclusive. They were justified in trying to find the thief so the

A defamatory utterances against the plaintiff were made in a privileged occasion, they were not promoted by personal spite of any defendant. For that reason defamation is not proved.

In relation to the assault the judge also found that the appellant's evidence had come B short. He wondered how the appellant could not produce even a single witness from the village to support his case, if his allegations were really true. He found it hard to believe that the appellant would be able to walk from the meeting after he had received such a heavy thrashing. He adverted to the medical chit annexed to the plaint and observed C that the materials contained in that document did not tally with the thorough flogging described by the appellant.

So as we have said earlier the judge dismissed the suit in its entirety and awarded the costs to the respondents. Aggrieved by the decision, the appellant lodged this appeal D to us. We are surprised that it took the sub-registry almost three years to prepare the High Court proceedings. The appellant is represented by Mr. Rugarabamu, while the respondents appear in person.

We have heard and followed the arguments of both sides. With regard to the slander, E we are unable to fault the trial judge's finding that the slanderous statements were sincere and privileged to the extent that they were published to those people of Masurura who attended the Baraza meeting. Appellant's Counsel has pressed upon us the submission that there were people from another village, Lyamisanga, at that F meeting, which is true. But if it is probable that the appellant admitted that he had stolen the grinding machine, we think that the plea of justification was available to the respondents in that respect, and we are of the opinion that there was probably such admission.

With regard to the sound flogging and the forced compensation, the problem was that G it was only the word of the appellant against the words of the respondents, and we are disposed to share the misgivings expressed by the trial judge. Just why the appellant could not produce even one witness to support his allegations, is not easy to H understand. With respect to Mr. Rugarabamu, there was no misdirection on the standard of proof on the part of the judge. What we understand the judge to have held is that in the circumstances of this case the evidence of the appellant alone was not sufficiently proponderant to estabish the allegations. We are not, therefore, persuaded I by the argument that the judge was wrong to hold that there was neither a flogging nor a forced compensation. A

We are clearly of the view, however, that the Baraza la Jadi a Sungusungu organ, went beyond its powers when it compelled the appellant to make the compensation. The powers vested in Sungusungu are limited. Under Section 3(1) of the Peoples B Militia Laws (Miscellaneous Amendments) Act 1989, they enjoy the same powers of arrest for breaches of any provision of written law and search as those enjoyed by police constables. Once they arrest a suspect their duty is to take him to the police for any action the police may deem proper to take. The sooner this is impressed upon C their minds the better for the administration of justice. It seems to us, therefore, that the money paid as compensation was refundable to the appellant.
It follows from what we have stated this appeal should be dismissed in all respects, save that the sum of Shs. 60,000/= is to be refunded to the appellant. It is ordered D accordingly. It is also ordered that the appellant shall pay to the respondents only 75% of the costs, here and below.
E Order accordingly.

Ramadhani and Omar, JJ.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: The respondent, Anicet E Mugabe, sued two people: the appellant, Zuberi Augustino, and another person who was the second defendant, Daudi Missana, who was found not at fault and so did not have a reason to appeal.

The respondent owns a Toyota mini bus with registration number TZ 84061. He F wanted to sell it so he asked the appellant to look up for prospective buyers. The bus was entrusted to the appellant who drove it from Nyegezi to Amini Mungu Garage in Mwanza town where it was agreed that it would be kept. That was on 2/12/1988. Two days later, on 4/12/88, the respondent was told that the bus had broken down at G Kisesa. It was not denied that the engine of the bus was blown off and the respondent towed the vehicle to Mabula Garage where it is to date.

The High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza (Munyera, J.) found the appellant at fault and awarded the respondents Shs. 500,000/= he had prayed for as repair costs, another H Shs. 500,000/= for the non-use of the bus and Shs. 1,000,000/= to off set the devaluation of the shilling.

The appellant was represented by Mr. Magongo, learned advocate, and he had six grounds of appeal which in the course of hearing he abandoned all but two. In the first I ground the complaint is that special damages have been granted by the learned judge which were not specifically proved and indeed the award for the non-use had not even been A specifically pleaded. Then the other ground is that the devaluation at the rate of 200% granted by the learned judge is manifestly excessive.

The respondent was not represented and in effect did not make any submissions in reply to the two grounds of appeal. B

It is trite law, and we need not cite any authority, that special damages must be specifically pleaded and proved. Cost of repair was pleaded but not proved. The respondent merely stated it to be Shs. 500,000/=. However, the learned trial judge was satisfied that the engine of the bus was completely blown off and is in fact beyond C repair. It is a notorious fact that prices are rising in astronomic proportions and that the amount pleaded cannot even buy a reconditioned engine. So though repair costs have not been specifically proved we allow the amount pleaded. Then as already said, non-use was not all pleaded. However, it was not disputed that the appellant was D using the bus for passenger trips between Mwanza town and Kisesa and the engine was damaged in that process. He definately got some advantage which he should not be left to benefit from his wrongful acts. We agree with Mr. Magongo that the respondent intended to sell the bus. But that could not proclude him from putting it into use. E Besides, he wanted to sell the bus so as to realise money with which to buy a tractor which he believed would be more profitable. Those plans have yet to materialise. So it is our well considered opinion that the respondent is entitled to some relief and we would sustain the award of Shs. 500,000/= under the prayer of "any other relief this Court F may deem just and fit to grant". We so grant.

The award for devaluation has exercised our minds greatly. We hold it as a fact needing no proof that the value of our shilling has been going down very fast. However, we agree with Mr. Magongo that the rate of 200% is very high. We think a 50% rate is G reasonable in the circumstances of this case. Thus we allow shs. 250,000/= for the devaluation.

In the end result we grant a total of Shs. 1,250,000/= with an interest of 10% from the date the vehicle was damaged, that is 4/12/1988, to the date of payment. H

The appeal is dismissed except to the extent allowed above. The appellant is to pay 75% of the costs both here and below.

The complainant had his 37 fishnets stolen. Two of them were found in the possession of the appellant who subsequently was charged with and convicted of the offence of receiving stolen property. He was sentenced accordingly and ordered to pay shs. 257,000/= to the complainant as compensation. After unsuccessfully appealing to the D District Court the appellant appealed to the High Court. A number of grounds were argued in the High Court. First, that the record in the Primary Court did not show that the magistrate consulted assessors before preparing the judgment as required by rule 3 E of G.N. No. 2 of 1988. Second, that the compensation order was improper.

Held: (i) Failure to show on record that Rule has been complied with would not necessarily be fatal if, on a careful perusal of the record, it is plain that there had been F consultation;

(ii) there was a substantial compliance by the trial court with Rule 3 of G.N. 2 of 1988;

Chipeta, J.: In Kome Primary Court, the appellant, Maswena Adiga, was charged A with and convicted of the offence of receiving stolen property contrary to s. 311(1) of the Penal Code and was sentenced to pay a fine of Shs. 5,000/= or six months imprisonment in default. He was further ordered to pay Shs. 257,000/= to the complainant as compensation. He unsuccessfully appealed to the District Court of B Sengerema. This, then, is his second appeal.

The prosecution's evidence, as given by the complainant and his three witnesses, was to the following effect: at the material time the complainant had 37 fishnets and had three employees, namely, Filberti Mayaka, Ndalahwa Kipipi, and Juma Bugatu (all of C whom testified), who were trapping fish on behalf of the complainant. All the 37 fishnets had special identity marks written on the bouys, and ropes. The bouys were marked MAKI LTD and three dots - ... The ropes were marked with red and green colours, while the bouys were painted green. D

On 24/8/89, the three employees went fishing, and at about 9.00 a.m. they left the fishnets at the lakeshore. When they went to the spot next morning, they found all the fishnets missing. They looked for the missing nets for several months. It was not until on 19th May, 1990 that they found two of the 37 fishnets at Ntama village in possession E of the appellant. The two fishnets were produced at the trial as Exhibit 'A'. The appellant claimed that those two fishnets were his own property. The two fishnets were found to have identity marks of the complainant.

In his defence, the appellant simply said that the two fishnets seized by the F complainant and his employees were his own property. He said that his fishnets had letter 'M'. But when asked to examine the fishnets in court and point out letter 'M', there was no such letter 'M'. Besides, the appellant did not even attempt to say from where he obtained the two fishnets. G

On that evidence, the trial court found as a fact that the two fishnets were among the 37 fishnets of the complainant which had been stolen, and it is in fact, inferred that the appellant was a guilty receiver.

During the hearing of this appeal, Mr. Rugarabamu, learned counsel for the appellant, H had the following submissions to make. In the first place he submitted that the trial was illegal because the learned Primary Court Magistrate did not sum up the case to the assessors nor did he seek their opinions. In any case, he submitted, the record does not show that he consulted the assessors before I

preparing the judgment as required by rule 3 of G.N.No.2 of 1988. A Secondly, and in the alternative, Mr. Rugarabamu sumitted that the evidence of identification of the two nets was inconclusive in that the witnesses did not say what marks were on the nets. On this point, he relied on the case of Republic v Adam Iddi and Another [1976] LRT n.18 B
Thirdly, learned counsel submitted that the nets were not produced in court as exhibits, and so they could not make the gravamen of the trial. Here the learned counsel referred the court to the case of Dharamshi v Republic [1977] LRT n.52.
Fourthly, learned counsel submitted that it was not satisfactorily proved that 37 nets C were stolen and so the order of compensation was improper.
Finally, learned counsel submitted that since the appellant used servants to do the job, it has not been shown that the appellant knew that the nets were stolen property, and D so he cannot be held liable because there is no vicarious liability in criminal law.
Mr. Magoma, learned senior state attorney, submitted that the learned trial magistrate throughout involved the assessors up to the time of assessment of the sentence. So it is clear that he observed rule 3 of G.N. No.2 of 1988. That being so, the trial was not a E nullity.
On the question of identification of the two nets, Mr. Magoma submitted that evidence of identification was watertight as the four witnesses gave identical descriptions of the nets. On the question of the assenting members of the court, and the dissenting F members will give a brief statement specifying findings of fact and the law, his decision on the issue and the reasons for it. (See Rule 4(1) and (2) of the Rules.)
As was conceded by both learned counsel, the Rules do not specify how the consultation is to be done. In my view, this must necessarily be done in private, and I G think that it would be desirable if the record did show that Rule 3 has been complied with. However, I do not think that failure to show on the record that Rule 3 has been complied with would necessarily be fatal if, on a careful perusal of the record, it is plain that there had been consultation. To hold otherwise would be to cling to the letter and H thus miss the substance of the matter. As the Latin Maxi-M goes, Qui Haeret in Litera Haeret in cortice (He who clings to the letter clings to the dry and barren shell and misses the truth and substance of the matter).
In the present case, the trial court's record reveals that the trial magistrate involved the I assessors at every stage of the trial right up to the sentencing process and the order of compensation. Throughout, the A language of the court shows that there was a consensus among all members of the court. Even the judgment reveals that. In my considered view, therefore, there was a substantial compliance by the trial court of Rule 3 of G.N. No. 2 of 1988. To hold to the contrary would be to go contrary to the letter and spirit of the provisions of B s.37(2) of the Magistrate's Courts Act. 1984, which I need not reproduce here.
CHIPETA J
I now turn to the question of guilty knowledge. It is certainly the law that in order to prove a charge under s.311(1) of the Penal Code, it must be established that the accused received or retained the property in question, and that he received or C retained the same with guilty knowledge in the sense that he knew or had reason to believe that the same had been stolen or otherwise feloniously obtained or disposed of. (See Republic v Adamu Iddi and Another (supra).) D

In the instant case, the appellant had insisted that the two nets were his own property, and this was in the face of everwhelming evidence of identification of the fishnets. Some of the identifying marks were so clear that no owner of the fishnets could possibly have mistaken them. A fortiori, some of the identifying marks had been interfered with on E some of the buoys. In those circumstances, I am of the view that the trial court's inference of guilty knowledge on the part of the appellant was fully justified. The appellant's conviction, therefore, was inevitable on the evidence on record.

Finally, I turn to the question of compensation. I am prepared to accept the F complainant's evidence that in all 37 fishnets were stolen. His evidence was that he bought the same from shops, and he gave their total value to be Shs. 257,000/=. Unhappily, he lead no further evidence as to how he arrived at that figure. He did not even say how old they were. Be that as it may the crucial question is whether the G order of compensation was justified. In my view, it was not. The charge against the appellant was receiving stolen property and not theft. What was proved was that he received two fishnets if the charge preferred and proved had been that of stealing. The order of compensation in this case amounted to speculation to the effect that the H appellant had received all the 37 stolen fishnets, which is absurd.

In the final analysis, this appeal fails as against the conviction and sentence. However, the order of compensation is hereby set aside. I

Mkatte, for the appellant

Kisanga, Makame and Omar, JJ.A.: The appellant Selemani Sembiko and two C others were jointly charged in the District Court with obtaining a motor vehicle by false pretences from Messrs Cooper Motors Corporation Limited, hereinafter to be referred to simply as the Corporation. The three of them were also charged jointly on a related D count of making a false document, and the appellant alone was charged on yet a further related count of uttering a false document. After a full trial they were all acquitted on all the counts with an order, however, that the motor vehicle in question be restored to the Corporation. The appellant's appeal to the High Court against the said order was E unsuccessful, hence this second appeal.

The background to the case was briefly as follows: The appellant is a managing director of a firm known as Steadfast Tanzania Limited duly registered and operating in Tanzania. Some time in 1988 he approached the Corporation for the purchase of a F new Land Rover for his firm. He was given a quotation of US$ 33,145.00 for it, and it would appeal that the Corporation insisted on the payment being effected in foreign currency. Whereupon the appellant approached one Damas Nilah, a business G associate and co-accused at the trial, for help. This latter in turn approached a European friend of his called Danied Snadon who was operating a company called East African Sailing Safari duly registered with the Registrar of Business names with its place of business at the Yatch Club in Dar es Salaam. Between these three, an agreement was H reached whereby the owner of the East African Sailing Safari issued a cheque in foreign currency for the purchase of the motor vehicle and the appellant undertook to re-imburse him in local currency while Damas Nilah guaranteed the re-imbursement.

Upon the appellant presenting the cheque to the Corporation, it was made clear to him I that the motor vehicle would be released to him only after the cheque was cleared and the proceeds thereof received by the A Land Rover Factory in England. After about one month the appellant was called by the Corporation to be informed that a telex message was received from the Land Rover Factory England stating that the money on the cheque was duly received, and that the Corporation could now proceed to process delivery of the motor vehicle to the B purchaser. This was yet followed by a letter by the Corporation by which the appellant was further assured that the cheques had been honoured and payment of it had been duly effected. In reliance of these assurances the appellant proceeded to re-imburse C the drawer of the cheque to the tune of Tsh. 4,000,000.00 being the equivalent in foreign currency of the purchase price of the motor vehicle. In the meantime the Corporation duly processed delivery of the motor vehicle in favour of the appellant's firm, the Steadfast Tanzania Limited.

KISANGA JJA, MAKAME JJA, OMAR JJA

Some time after delivering the motor vehicle, however, the Corporation claimed that D the Land Rover Factory in England sent information that the very cheque which earlier on was said to have been cleared and the proceeds thereof received in England had been dishonoured by an Australian bank with which the drawer once operated an account but had since closed it. Such revelation was followed by criminal proceedings E which, as stated before, ended up with the acquittal of the accused persons and the order now under review.

The basis for the concurrent decisions of both courts below to restore the motor F vehicle to the Corporation was that the Corporation had received no consideration for the motor vehicle, and that the appellant's remedy, if any, was to sue the East African Sailing Safari. Mr. Mkatte, learned advocate who represented the appellant both in this Court and in the High Court, however, submitted in effect that the Corporation was at G all material times the holder of the cheque in due course for value, and that as such it was the Corporation, not the appellant, which was to seek relief by suing the drawer of the cheque.

This matter is not free from difficulty. Admittedly the argument of both courts below H that the Corporation had received no consideration for the motor vehicle would have much force if there was nothing more to it. But that argument obviously overlooked or played down some important consideration, namely, that it was the Corporation itself which was the author of its own misfortune. The Corporation had made it clear to the I appellant that the motor vehicle would not be released until the foreign cheque was cleared and the proceeds thereof were received by the LandRover Factory in A England. The appellant was agreeable to that and waited patiently for about one month after which the Corporation gave him repeated assurances that all was well, that the cheque had been honoured and that payment of it had been effected. It was on the strength of such repeated assurances that the motor vehicle was released or delivered B to him. In other words the Corporation had assured him that it had duly received consideration for its motor vehicle, otherwise it would certainly not have parted with it.

The appellant for his part, acting on the Corporation's repeated assurances, went ahead and re-imbursed the drawer of the foreign cheque in local currency in the amount C equivalent to what the Corporation made him believe that it had duly received as the price of the motor vehicle. That was clearly consideration for the motor vehicle on the part of the appellant. Then the question is: In these circumstances what further was required of the appellant to make his claim over the motor vehicle a valid one? Surely D once he was assured that the cheque was valid and had been duly honoured, it would be idle to expect him to turn to the drawer of the cheque for any questions regarding the cheque.

Once the Corporation had repeatedly assured the appellant that all was all right and E that it had duly received the proceeds of the cheque, it seems plain to us that the Corporation cannot validly be heard to come back to the appellant and allege that it has not received consideration for the motor vehicle, contrary to its own earlier assurances which were as clear and unambiguous as they could possibly be. Had the Corporation F not given those assurances, the transaction would not have been concluded. If as now claimed by the Corporation the drawer of the cheque had closed his account, the Corporation which was having the cheque ought to have brought this to the notice of the appellant who would then take up the matter with the drawer of the cheque in order G to prevent anyone being defrauded. But the Corporation was negligent. It did not care to establish or ascertain the true status of the cheque, i.e. whether it was drawn on an account that had since been closed,even though the Corporation had up to about one month to do this. Not only that. The Corporation went on to feed the appellant with H wrong information about the status of the cheque saying that it was valid and had duly been honoured, thereby inducing the appellant to part with his Tshs. 4,000,000.00 believing that he was reimbursing the drawer of the cheque for foreign currency in respect of the purchase price for the motor vehicle. All along it was the Corporation, I not the appellant, which was to blame; in our view the Corporation must bear the A consequences that flow from there.

We are firmly of the view that the restoration order was wrongly made in as much as it purported to benefit the Corporation which was all along to blame. If the Corporation received no consideration for its motor vehicle from the appellant, this was because of B the Corporation's own misleading assurances that it had duly received such consideration. Had it not given such misleading assurances, appropriate steps would have been taken to ensure that the Corporation duly received consideration for its motor vehicle. On the other hand the appellant, acting on the Corporation misleading C assurance or information gave consideration for the motor vehicle by reimbursing the drawer of the cheque for the foreign currency which the Corporation made him believe that it had received from the said cheque as being the price of the motor vehicle. In D our view, the appellant had done all that was required of him to make his firm's claim over the motor vehicle valid.

In the result the appeal succeeds. We accordingly reverse the order in question, and direct that the motor vehicle in question shall remain in the name of the registered owner, The Steadfast Tanzania Limited. E

Kisanga, Makame and Omar, JJ.A.: The appellant was charged with and convicted of murder contrary to section 196 of the Penal Code and sentenced to death by the High Court (Kazimoto, J.) sitting at Songea. He is now appealing against both F conviction and sentence.

Briefly, the facts of the case were as follows: The appellant is the son of the deceased woman. The two had been in some misunderstanding apparently arising from the appellant's belief that the deceased had, by witchcraft, caused the disappearance and G subsequent death of his child. The case for the prosecution was that acting on such suspicions the appellant set out to the home of the deceased on the material night and, on finding her, struck her with a stick on the head. Later the deceased died in hospital H following the head injury thus inflicted.

In his defence at the trial the appellant, denied assaulting the deceased and put up an alibi.

In convicting the appellant, the trial judge relied on two pieces of evidence: One is that which he treated as a confession made by the appellant to his village chairman or I chairperson

Cotride Msangu

KISANGA JJA, MAKAME JJA, OMAR JJA

(P.W.1). The other pieces is a cautioned statement alleged to have been made by the A appellant to a police officer who at the time of the trial was reported dead, and in which the trial judge also took the view that the appellant had confessed to the offence charged.

Mr. Mbuya learned advocate who argued the appeal before us submitted that the B alleged cautioned statement of the appellant was wrongly admitted in evidence. Indeed the defence had objected to its admissibility at the trial, but the objection was overruled and the court proceeded to admit it under section 34 of the Evidence Act which may be invoked where it is sought to put in evidence the statement of a witness who died before he could testify orally. But the cautioned statement in this case is attributable to the C appellant who is both alive and available. It is not a cautioned statement of the police officer who allegedly recorded it from the appellant and who is now reported dead. As such, Mr. Mbuya contended, the provisions of section 34 of the Evidence Act could D not be prayed in aid here.

Mr. Senguji, learned State Attorney for the respondent Republic at first took the view that the cautioned statement was rightly admitted in evidence, but upon reflection he conceded that it was not. We are in entire agreement with counsel for both sides. We E are satisfied that for the reasons set out hereinbefore section 34 of the Evidence Act was inapplicable to the facts and circumstances of this case, and consequently the learned trial judge wrongly admitted the alleged cautioned statement of the appellant in evidence. F

That leaves the alleged confession to P.W.1 as the only evidence implicating the appellant with the offence charged. P.W.1 testified that she was the village chairman or chairperson of her village. At about 10 O'Clock in the night the appellant called on her and stated that he had a big problem, namely, that he had assaulted his mother and G that he was now asking P.W.1 to go to the victim and plead for forgiveness for him. Whereupon P.W.1 advised the appellant to remain at her house for the night, as it was already late, and promised to take up the matter the following morning. On the H following morning she handed over the appellant to the police for appropriate action.

As stated before, the appellant in his defence at the trial vehemently denied assaulting his mother and equally denied to have told P.W.1 what he is alleged to have said to her. However, the trial court believed P.W.1 and rejected the appellant's denial and we I could find no fault with that. The assault on the deceased was clearly unlawful. A
KISANGA JJA, MAKAME JJA, OMAR JJA
The question which arises is whether what the appellant said to P.W.1 amounted to a confession to the offence of murder. A confession within the context of criminal law is one which admits in terms the offence charged. It is one which admits all the essential B elements or ingredients of the offence. An admission of one or only some of the ingredients of the offence is not sufficient. In the instant case all that the appellant said to P.W.1 was that he had assaulted his mother. Admittedly assault, or to be more precise, an unlawful assault is an essential ingredient of the offence of murder with which the C appellant was charged. But it is by no means the only one. There are other essential ingredients such as the intention on the part of the prisoner to kill or cause grievous bodily harm, and the fact that the victim in question is in fact dead. Thus the mere admission by the appellant that he had assaulted his mother could not really be taken D to amount to a confession to the offence of murder with all its essential ingredients, especially as at the time the appellant was making the admission the victim was still alive and receiving treatment at the hospital.
On the other had it is plain from the evidence that following the appellant's assault on E the deceased the deceased was taken to hospital for treatment where she died about six days later, and there is no evidence of any intervening act of assault by anyone else. The post-mortem examination report shows that the deceased had sustained a compressed fructure of the skull which caused brain injury and intracranial bleeding leading to the F death. The only conclusion to be drawn is that the deceased died from injuries following the assault, inflicted on her by the appellant.
But we could find no clear evidence of malice aforethought on the part of the appellant. It is not clear what intention the appellant had when he assaulted the deceased. It is G not clear whether he wanted to kill her or cause her grievous bodily harm or whether he simply wanted to punish her out of anger for thinking that she was the cause of his child's disappearance and its subsequent death. Nor is there any evidence as to what weapon, if any was used in assaulting the deceased, nor the extent of the depressed H fructure of the skull. In the circumstances we feel inclined to give the benefit of doubt to the appellant. Consequently we find the charge of murder not proved beyond reasonable doubt. However for the reasons already stated we find the appellant guilty of the lesser offence of manslaughter and convict him accordingly. I
As regards sentence, we must state at once that this was a bad case of manslaughter A bordering on murder itself. This fact must be reflected in the punishment to be awarded. The appellant is accordingly sentenced to ten (10) years' imprisonment. The appellant's appeal is therefore allowed to this limited extent.
B Appeal allowed in part.

Kisanga, Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: When this appeal was due hearing, Mr. M. Raithatha, learned counsel for the respondent, filed a notice of motion raising a C preliminary objection that the appeal is time barred.

The background to the matter is quite short. Mr. Uzanda, learned advocate for the appellant, had written to the Registrar, High Court, for the supply of a typed copy of D proceedings for the purposes of preparing the record of appeal in this case, and the same was duly supplied on 11.11.91. He noticed, however that the record was incomplete and therefore he addressed another letter to the Registrar requesting to be supplied with the missing part or parts. The Registrar wrote back on 13.12.91 saying E that what he had supplied was the complete set and that there was no part missing. This was followed by requests to the Registrar for a certificate under rule 83(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules which certificate was eventually supplied to the learned counsel on 8.1.92. The relevant part of the certificate reads: F

This is to certify that a period from 3rd January, 1991 when M/S. Donaldson and Wood and Co. Advocates for the Appellant applied for copies of certified proceedings to 13th December, 1991 when the same were supplied to the Appellant's Advocate is to be G excluded as such days were required for the preparation and delivery of the proceedings to the said Advocate.

Relying on this certificate, Mr. Uzanda filed the appeal on 17.1.92. H

Mr. Raithatha's contention as we understand it is to the effect that the Registrar's certificate is misleading because it talks of supplying a copy of proceedings to counsel for the appellant on 13.12.91 when in fact those proceedings were supplied on 11.11.91. Emphasizing that no proceedings were in fact supplied on 13.12.91, I he contended that the limitation period ought to run from 11.11.91 when the A proceedings were in fact supplied and not from 13.12.91 as the Registrar's certificate purports to say, because no proceedings were supplied on that day. Thus, Mr. Raithatha went on, the appellant ought to have filed the appeal within 60 days of his receipt of the copy of proceedings on 11.11.91, which gave him up to 12.1.92. The B appellant, however filed the appeal only on 17.1.92, which made him out of time by 5 days.

Resisting the objection, Mr. Uzanda argued that the appeal was in time because it was within the time limit set out in the Registrar's certificate. He submitted further that the C Registrar was empowered by the Court of Appeal Rules to issue the certificate and that it was not competent to question or go behind such certificate.

We have to point out at once that the Registrar's certificate is not, and cannot be, beyond question. It is true that the Registrar has power to issue the certificate under D the proviso to rule 83(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules. But we are quite clear in our minds that if there are gounds for thinking that the certificate is incorrect or otherwise improper, that would justify interfering with it. However, we are satisfied that there are E no ground for interfering with the certificate in this case.

As stated earlier, when Mr. Uzanda received the copy of proceedings on 11.11.91 and noticed that some part was missing, he wrote to the Registrar to request for the missing part, but the Registrar replied on 13.12.91 saying that what he had supplied was the F complete set, and that there was no part missing. A glance through the record of appeal confirms Mr. Uzanda's claim that the proceedings sent to him were incomplete even though the Registrar's assurance is to the contrary. For example, Mr. Uzanda had asked to be supplied with the first part of the proceedings which, both counsel who G also represented the parties at the trial are agreed, related to the giving of the ex-parte judgment, but that part of the proceedings is not reflected on the record of appeal. Mr. Raithatha argued that in any case the ex-parte judgment was not essential for the preparation of the record of appeal. For, the ex-parte judgment was set aside, and H the suit proceeded to hearing leading to this judgment now being appealed against. So that, counsel argued, the non-inclusion of it in the proceedings by the Registrar could not constitute a valid ground for Mr. Uzanda writing to request for the supply of it and I thereby prevent the limitation period from starting to run against him.

KISANGA JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

We have carefully considered this submission but we could not acceed to it. Mr. A Uzanda had the conduct of the case. As such he was entitled to require to be supplied with the material which he considered necessary for the preparation of the record of appeal. Perhaps one can say with some justification that the ex-parte judgment was not necessary for the preparation of the record of appeal after one has studied the B proceedings closely and after deciding what grounds of appeal one was going to raise. But it is less certain whether one could do so only after the initial perusal of the proceedings. Mr. Uzanda wrote to request for the missing part of the proceedings on 13.11.91, that is, only about a day or two after receiving the set of proceedings. It is C obvious that he wrote the request only after the initial and quick perusal of the proceedings. It could be doubted whether at that stage he could say with certainty that the ex-parte judgment would not be necessary for the preparation on the record of appeal. In this respect it is pertinent to note Mr. Uzanda's remarks at the hearing of D this objection that even after receiving the Registrar's reply that the set of proceedings sent to him was complete, when in fact it was not, he was still of the view that he needed the missing part but thought that it was pointless to persist on his request because it was then evident that it would yield no results. Consequently he decided not to write E further on that aspect of the matter and instead proceeded to prepare the record on the incomplete set of proceedings.

We are therefore satisfied that Mr. Uzanda had reason to write to the Registrar to ask for the missing part of the proceedings, and the question now is: What effect, if any, F did this have on the limitation period? Mr. Raithatha takes the view that since the Registrar replied saying that the set of proceedings sent was complete, then the period of limitation started to run as from 11.11.91 i.e. the very day the said proceedings were sent. For, counsel went on, the Registrar did not send anything on 13.12.91 when he G wrote to say that the set of proceedings was complete. In this connection Mr. Raithatha pointed at the Registrar's certificate as being erroneous for citing 13.12.91 as the day when the proceedings were supplied to counsel for the appellant because, he stressed, H nothing was sent on that day. Although this argument has some force, we are of the view that it cannot succeed. We think that where, as in this case, a party on reasonable grounds writes to the Registrar asking for missing part or parts of the proceedings, the period of limitation does not begin to run against such party until he receives either the I part of proceedings asked for or an assurances that the proceedings sent to him were complete and there is nothing further to be supplied. The question A whether the missing part was necessary for the preparation of the record of appeal is no doubt relevant but the decision of the Court on that issue must depend on the facts and circumstances of each case.

As has been shown, Mr. Uzanda in this case did not receive the missing part of the B proceedings which he had asked for. Rather he received the assurance, which was obviously erroneous, that the set of proceedings sent to him was complete and that there was nothing further to be communicated to him. That assurance was sent to him on 13.12.91. In our view that was the date on which the period of limitation began to run C against him. Under rule 83(1) of the Court of Appeal Rules he was required to lodge the appeal within 60 days from that date. He was well within that period when he did lodge the appeal on 17.1.92.

Admittedly the Registrar's certificate is misleading for referring to 13.12.91 as the D date on which the copy of proceedings was sent to the appellants advocate. For, as Mr. Raithatha rightly pointed out, no proceedings were sent on that day. We think, however, that this was a mere slip of the pen, and that the Registrar must have meant to refer to that date as being the date on which he informed the appellant's counsel that the set of E proceedings sent to him earlier on was complete. At any rate, we are quite satisfied that the error was harmless and did not affect the validity of the certificate, and that Mr. Uzanda was perfectly entitled to rely on it, as he did, in lodging the appeal. F

In the result the preliminary objection fails and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

G Appeal dismissed.

In an appeal against conviction and sentence the judge found that the subordinate trial court erred in not informing the appellants of their right to free legal aid paid for by the state and that the subordinate trial court had no power to sentence the appellants to a E term of imprisonment of a period exceeding eight years. The judge also found that the offence of armed robbery exists in the Penal Code. F

Mwalusanya, J.:

I. Introduction D

The two appellants Thomas s/o Mjengi and Ramadhani s/o Mussa whose appeals have been consolidated were charged and convicted of robbery with violence c/s 285 and 286 of the Penal Code Cap. 16. They were each sentenced to the prescribed minimum sentence of 30 years imprisonment and ten(sic) strokes of corporal punishment. They E are now appealing against conviction and sentence. Under s.3 of the Legal Aid (Criminal Proceedings) Act No. 21/1969 I granted legal aid to the two appellants so that an advocate paid for by the government could argue their appeals. One Mr. F Mbezi was assigned to prosecute the appeal on behalf of the appellants.

Counsel for the appellants Mr. Mbezi in his amended memorandum of appeal, raised three matters of constitutional importance and which are of public interests. The matters involve the interpretation of our Constitution with regard to the basic freedoms and G rights. The Senior State Attorney, Dodoma who is the representative of the Attorney General was duly served with the amended memorandum of appeal and was quite aware of the constitutional matters raised - and so s. 17A(2) of the cap. 360 as amended by Act No. 27/1991 was duly complied with. H

The three constitutional matters raised are:

First that the trial was a nullity because the indigent appellants were denied their right to free legal aid payable by the state nor were they informed of their right to engage counsel at their own expense; secondly that the mandatory Minimum Sentence of 30 I years imprisonment is an inhuman and degrading punishment and so unconstitutional; Thirdly that corporal punishment is an inhuman and degrading A punishment and so unconstitutional. Besides those three constitutional matters, counsel Mr. Mbezi has also stated that the conviction was against the weight of evidence; and that the appellants were convicted of armed robbery an offence which is non-existence in the Penal Code and in any case they were convicted with an offence they had not B been charged with.

II. The Right to Legal Representation

On this point counsel for the appellants Mr. Mbezi based his argument on my recent C decision in the case of Khamisi Hamis Manywele v R. Dodoma H.C. Crim. Appeal No. 39/1990 (unreported), which I understand has gone to the Tanzania Court of Appeal, on appeal by the D.P.P. Therefore I will not spend much time discussing the genesis of the right to legal representation, as most of the points canvassed were D thoroughly documented in the Manywele case (supra).

Suffice here to briefly state what that right is all about. The right to legal representation stands on two legs: The constitutional right and the statutory right. E

The constitutional right to legal representation stands on two legs - first under Art. 13(6)(a) of our Constitution which provides for the right to be heard. There are three persuasive authorities which interpret the phrase 'fair hearing' in their Constitutions to include the right to legal representation paid for by the State for an indigent person F whose constitutional rights are at stake. First we have the case of Powell v Alabama (1932) 287 U.S. 45 decided by the U.S.A. Supreme Court. Then from Zimbabwe the Supreme Court there in the case of Dube & another v The State: Supreme Court Judgment No.2 12/1988. That case is defended by Hon. Mr. Justice A.R. Gubbay of G the Zimbabwe Supreme Court in his paper of 'Third Commonwealth Africa Judician Conference' in Lusaka, Zambia April 1990, Titled 'Judicial Review in the enjoyment of Human Rights' published in the Commonwealth Law Bulletin Vol. 16 No.3 of July 1990 from pp. 992 - 1001. The third persuasive authority is the decision of the H Supreme Court of the Republic of Ireland in the case of The State (Healy) v Donoghue (1976) IR.325. That decision is defended by the Hon. Mr. Justice John Kenny of the Supreme Court of the Republic of Ireland in his article 'A Bill of Rights' published in the Northern Ireland Legal Quarterly (1979) Vol.10 No.3 at p. 195. I

MWALUSANY J

The second leg on which the constitutional right rests is on the right to personal A freedom under Art. (15(2) of our Constitution. That Article stipulates that no one shall be deprived of his personal liberty except by procedure established by law. In India in the case of Maneka Gandhi v Union of India (1978) 2 S.C.R. 248, interpreting a B similar provision, it was held by the Supreme Court there, that no procedure can be regarded as reasonable, fair and just which does not afford legal representation to an accused person who is placed in jeopardy of his life or personal liberty in a criminal proceedings. The above decision was in principle adopted by the Tanzania Court of C Appeal in the case, of D.P.P. v Daudi Pete: Crim. Appeal No. 28/1990 (unreported). The right to legal representation for the poor, includes the right to be informed of that right by the trial court, so decided the supreme Court of India in the Maneka Gandhi case (supra). The Hon. Mr. Justice Bhagwati, the former C.J. of India defends the D above case, in his article 'Human Rights as evolved by the jurisprudence of the Supreme Court of India published in the Commonwealth Law Bulletin Vol. 13 No. 1 of January 1987 at pp.230 - 245.

In fact the right to legal representation for the poor is recognized all over the world. It E is contained in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948), the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (1976), Art. 7(1) of the African Charter of Human and People's Rights (1981), and Art. 6(3) (1) of the European Convention on Human Rights (1950). Therefore the right to legal representation is accepted by the F community of nations as a birthright for every human being.

That is why I hold that the Statutory right to legal representation is contained in s. 310 of the C.P.A. No. 9/1985 as interpreted in the light of international human rights stands and norms as above adumburated. In short s. 310 of the C.P.A. should be interpreted to G mean that those who can afford to pay have a right to legal representation; and those who cannot afford to pay (i.e. who are poor) have an equal right to free legal aid paid for by the state, as provided in the Legal Aid (Criminal Proceedings) Act No. 21/1969. H that right includes the right to be informed of that right by the trial court. Perhaps it important to emphasize that, the above construction of s.310 of the C.P.A. is inevitable in the light of international human rights standards and norms. As Mr. Justice A.R. Gubbay of Zimbabwe Supreme Court states at p. 999 (in his article cited above): I

MWALUSANY J

A In giving meaning to legislation on human rights expressed in general or even vague terms, where uncertain or incomplete, there is ample scope for a Judge to look to international developments and drawn upon them in seeking a solution. International human rights instruments and precedents ..... provide invaluable information and guidance. A judicial decision has greater legitimacy and will command more respect if it B accords with international norms that have been accepted by many countries, than if it is based upon the parochial experience or foibles of a particular Judge or Court.

That is one way of reaching at the conclusion that there exists a statutory right to legal C representation for the poor i.e. by way of seeking guidance from international human rights instruments.

The other way of establishing the statutory right to legal representation is the generous and purposive construction of S.310 of the C.P.A interpreted in the light of Act No. D 21/1969. Those provisions were enacted to inculcate in our heads that justice should not only be done, but should be seen to be done. It will be recalled that before the 1969 legislation, the right to legal representation for poor accused persons was restricted to capital offences (murder, treason and manslaughter). However after the 1969 Act, E the right to legal representation for poor accused persons was extended to cover non-capital offences like theft, causing grievous harm, robbery e.t.c. which are triable by the District Courts and R.M.'s Courts.

Counsel for the appellants Mr. Mbezi has exclaimed at the existing anomaly. He said F for offences like incest or written threats to murder, punishable with a maximum of not more 5 years and 7 years imprisonment respectively, the offenders are provided free legal aid by the State simply because the offences are triable by the High Court. However offenders charged with offences like armed robbery, punishable with a G minimum of 30 years imprisonment, are not provided with free legal aid, simply because the offender is charged in a subordinate court. That is unfortunate. It is submitted that the correct interpretation of the decision of the Tanzania Court of Appeal in the case of Laurent s/o Joseph v R. [1981] T.L.R. 351, is that in either case whether the H offence is trible by the High Court or subordinate court, the trial is a nullity if the indigent accused person was not provided with counsel, at least for all serious offences.

That a certifying authority under s.3 of the Legal Aid (Crim. Proceedings) Act No. I 21/1969 has a discretion to refuse or grant legal aid to a poor accused person, is a myth. The E.A.C.A. in the case of Mohamed A s/o Salim v R: [1958] E.A. 202 which originated from Tanganyika, said at p. 203:

> That in such a case (the certifying authority) should give the matter anxious consideration before deciding to refuse a certificate for legal aid on the ground of sufficiency of means; B that a reasonably liberal interpretation ought to be placed on the section and that in case of doubt the discretion should be exercised in the prisoners' favour.

I wish only to point out that s.3 of the Poor Prisons Defence Ordinance Cap.21 which C the above case was interpreting is in pari materia with our s. 3 of Act No. 21/1969. In fact Prof. James Read in his tours de force article 'The Advantage of Counsel' in the 'East African Law Journal' Vol. VIII NO. 4 (1971) concludes at p.294 that the certifying authority has no option but to grant legal aid if the accused is poor. He says: D

> Although the decision in the Gales Hired v The King: [1944] A.C. 149 turned in part upon the mandatory nature of the legislative provision for legal aid in Somaliland, it has been E regarded as establishing a general principle - see for example, the remarks of E.A.C.A. in Samson v R. [1958] E.A.681 at p. 682 at p. 683 where they said: 'We do not think that anything turns upon the fact that appellants were entitled as of right to have an advocate assigned'. See also the judgment of Bennet J. of High Court of Uganda in Yusufu s/o F Gita v R. [1958] E.A. 211 at p. 213: 'Every accused has the undoubted right to be defended by counsel.

It is astonishing to learn that since 1969 the members of the Judiciary and the Bar G have with a calculated conspiracy of silence, buried their heads in the sand like ostriches, pretending that they are unaware of the above authorities of the E.A.C.A. Without shame they have glorified the right of these who can afford to be defended by H counsel, while quite obvious to the similar right of poor persons tried by subordinate courts. Such an anomalous practice can be seen in such cases as: D.P.P. v Rugaimkamu [1982] TLR 139; Alimasi Kalumbeta v R: [1982] T.L.R. 329; Joshwa s/o Nkonoki v R. [1978] L.R.T. n. 24, Mugema v R: [1967] E.A. 676. The I poor accused persons triable by the subordinate courts and Economic Crimes Courts have been completely forgotten. The judiciary and members of the Bar are in the dock for having left the poor accused persons in the A cold for far too long since 1969.

Counsel for the Republic Mr. Kifunda was candid enough to concede that a poor accused person has a statutory right to be provided with free legal aid and to be informed of that right by the trial court. He said that that right stems from the B purposeful construction of s.310 of the C.P.A. as read in the light of s. 3 of the Act No. 21/1969. He said for all serious offences triable by the subordinate courts, poor accused persons have the right to free legal aid paid for by the state. He conceded that the trial in this case was a nullity, and said that he would pray for a retrial. C

However Mr. Kifunda would not go as far as stating that a poor accused person has a constitutional right to free legal aid. He said that so long as an accused person has failed to perform his duties to society by committing a crime, then he forfeits his rights to free legal aid as per Act 29(1) of our Constitution. It is the same point that prompted D Mr. Kifunda to appeal to the Tanzania Court of Appeal in the Manywele case (supra). The short answer to that argument is that it is faulty in that it presupposes that the poor accused person has already been found guilty. And I wonder if it makes any great difference if the right to free legal aid for poor accused persons is founded on a E statutory provision or a constitutional provision.

In the event I held that the trial was a nullity because these poor appellants were denied of their statutory and constitutional right to free legal aid, and were not informed of that F right by the trial court.

III. Mandatory Minimum Sentence of 30 years imprisonment whether an inhuman and degrading punishment G

Under Act.13(6)(e) of our Constitution, it is provided that, for the purposes of ensuring equality before the law, the state shall make provisions to the effect that no person shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment.

The test as to whether a mandatory minimum sentence is inhuman and degrading is H the disproportionate test which is now universally recognised. Punishment which is so excessive, arbitrary, unusual or disproportionate to the offence as to shock the public conscience, that is the conscience of a reasonable man is prohibited. The provision encompasses a cardinal principle of human justice, namely that punishment should be I proportional to the offence for which it is enacted. The said provision draws its meaning from the evolving standards A of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society. The disproportionate test was first propounded in the U.S.A. by the Supreme Court in the case of Weems v United States (1910) 217 U.S. 349 which was discussing the eighth Amendment of the U.S. B constitution. The matter was revisited in Tropp v Dulles (1958) 356 U.S. 86, L. Ed. 630 and later in the case of Furman v Georgia: (1972) 408 U.S. 238 and the case of Hart v Ceiner: (1973) 433 F. 2d. 136.

The above mentioned test was adopted by the supreme Court of Papua New Guinea C in Reference by the Marobe Provincial Government (1958) L.R.C. (Const.) 642. In there a bench of five judges sat to decide if the Summary Offences Act which provided for mandatory minimum sentences of 10 years and other mandatory minimum fine sentences were constitutional and not an inhuman and degrading punishment. Among D the five judges, three (Bredmeyer, Kaputin and McDermott JJJ.) agreed that the disproportionate test was the proper test in the circumstances. However the other two judges (Kidu C.J. and Kapi D.C.J.) did not agree that the disproportionate test ought to be invoked.

Two of the three judges who invoked the disproportionate test (i.e. Bredmeyer and E Kaputin JJ.) held that:

1. That the minimum penalties here, although high were not so excessive as to offend Act. 36 of the Constitution. They said that although the sentences were very severe, F they were not so disproportionate as to be regarded as excessive and unconscionable. They said the sentences reflected a legitimate need for strongly deterrent penalties, providing an index of contemporary community standards.

G 2. The minimum penalties do not infringe the constitution because the harshness of those penalties is tempered by s.138 of the District Court Act which allows for imposing lesser sentences if special reasons are shown as regards character, antecedents, age, health or mental condition of the accused or trivial nature of the H offence or to the extenuating circumstances under which the offence was committed.

On the other hand the third judge Mc Dermott J. invoking the disproportionate test I found that the minimum sentences prescribed offended the constitution because each of them imposed a penalty which would be A wholly disproportionate to the offence in readily imaginable situations, as the impugned legislation treated all offences in each category as equally reprehensible up to an arbitrarily set level of punishment, preventing the court considering any of the usual factors relevant in sentencing individuals. B

More recently the Zimbabwe Supreme Court invoked the disproportionate test in the case of The State v Arab [1990] 1. Z.L.R. 253. It concerned the precious Stones Trade Act, 1978 which prescribed minimum sentences for those found dealing in precious stones illegally. The appellant was convicted of dealing in emeralds and was C sentenced to three years imprisonment, being the minimum sentence. The court found no special reasons which could make it pass a sentence lesser than the minimum. The Supreme Court held that the power of the trial court to consider and if appropriated find special reasons allowed for a sentence which was not necessarily disproportionate. D So the provision was held not to be unconstitutional. A disproportionate test had earlier been invoked by the Zimbabwe Supreme Court in Ncube, Tshuma and Ndhlovu v The State [1988] 2 S.A.L.R. 702(ZS) a case which concerned the constitutionality of the punishment of whipping. E

In Botswana, the Court of Appeal in the case of the State v Petrus [1985] L.R.C. (Const.) 699 agreed that the disproportionate test was the appropriate test to find out if any punishment prescribed by legislation was constitutional or not i.e. it was not cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment. F

The above discussion vindicates my earlier statement that the disproportionate test is universally recognised and accepted. I adopt it for use in Tanzania. It will be seen from the above discussion that the disproportionate test focuses on two factors which may render the punishment unconstitutional: First if the minimum sentence is arbitrarily G fixed. Secondly if the sentence is inherently excessive or unconscionable.

On the first point I am satisfied that the Minimum Sentences Act No. 1/1972 as amended by Act No. 10/1989 has fixed the minimum sentences arbitrarily. What the H challenged legislation here effectively does is treat all offences as equally reprehensible up to an arbitrarily set level of punishment. Thus all offences of armed robbery have a minimum sentence of 30 years, while simple robbery has a minimum of 15 years, attempted armed robbery a minimum level of punishment is simply not called for. This I crudely applied across - the board, approach denies to the person being punished any consideration of the following factors: degree of participation, the age of the A offender, the offender's previous good record, the remorse and prevalence of the offence e.t.c. If the courts in Tanzania were allowed to pass a lesser sentence if special reasons are adduced, then that would have been alright and the legislation would have been constitutional as shown by the two cases cited above (Morobe case) from B Papua New Guinea and the Arab case from Zanzibar. In order for the Act No. 1/1972 to be Constitutional, s.6(1) of the Act should be amended such that special reasons should be allowed to be adduced for every convict and not only to those convicted on property not exceeding T.Shs. 100/=!!! Moreover the Minimum Sentences Act in C applying minimum terms of imprisonment carte-blanche preclude considerations being given to (a) probation (b) conditional discharge (c) suspended sentences (d) entering into recognizances etc. That much it has rendered the impugned legislation to be arbitrary and disproportionate. D

On the second point, I am of the considered view that the minimum sentence of 30 years imprisonment is disproportionate because it is excessive or unconscionable even for the offence of armed robbery. A punishment is 'excessive' if it makes no measurable contribution to acceptable goals of punishment and hence is nothing more than the E purpose and needless imposition of pain and suffering. Brian Slattery in his book A Handbook on Sentencing in Tanzania (1972) E.A. Literature Bureau says at p. 27:

F Punishment for criminal offences is generally viewed as serving one or more of three main purposes: (a) deterrence, both of the criminal himself (special deterrence) and also of society at large (general deterrence), (b) the rehabilitation of the criminal; and (c) G restraint - the isolation of the hardened or dangerous criminal from society. These objectives are seen as constituting the ultimate justification for sentence imposed by a court in place of the more traditional view which simply holds that evil men deserve to be punished, which notion is sometimes called retribution or the notion of justice. H

The government takes rehabilitation as of top priority as shown in s.61 of the Prisons Act No. 34/1967 - wherein emphasis is laid on training of prisoners so that when the prisoner comes out he becomes a good citizen usefully self employed. Now the 30 I years imprisonment is self-defeating because that period is the life-expectancy of a Tanzanian, on the average, and so the rehabilitation policy is not in place. It A appears the government on enacting those severe sentences had in mind only retribution and restraint of the offenders. But it should be remembered that restraint of offenders is reserved for recidivists only (hardened and dangerous criminals). And retribution as a sentencing policy is old fashioned and uncivilised as is espouses sadism? It will be B seen therefore that the punishment of 30 years minimum sentence, goes beyond legitimate penal objectives and does not bear a rational relationship to the accomplishment of penological goals which are of sufficient importance to justify its severity. The 30 years imprisonment is indeed purposeless and needless imposition of C pain and suffering, as the legislative purpose could be served by a less severe punishment.

Therefore to suggest that our Parliament had seriously addressed itself to the whole issue of sentencing is a premise which is obviously suspect. This is because it is both D simplistic and unrealistic to suggest that an increase in the severity of punishment by itself will have any significant impact on existing patterns of crime.

Where moral values are central to a problem such as crime, the legal system struggles E to achieve even incidental significance. The working of the criminal justice system can have little, if any, impact on complex sociological phenomena. Any discussion of crime and punishment inevitably overlooks, the heart of the dilemma. Really, what we have is a major problem involving education and policing. F

A sociological phenomenon cannot be effectively influenced by judicial band-aiding. Imposing harsh sentences indiscriminately is nothing other than Kangaroo justice. It just does not work and stands little chance of effectively influencing current crime rate. So G we cannot look for the courts alone, otherwise that would be a fundamental misunderstanding of the role of the courts. All that the justice seem can reasonably do at the present time is to maintain a predictable and reasonable response to the increasing crime rate, in terms of what most Tanzanians really and truly might be the H consequences of detection on conviction (moderate prison sentences). Any major change can only be effected at the political level, when, if ever, our legislators are encouraged to get serious about what has become a problem of grave national importance. It is my finding therefore that the minimum sentence of 30 years is I unconstitutional because it is inhuman. It is inhuman because it is disproportionate and excessive - as it makes no measurable contribution to A acceptable goals of punishment; and goes beyond legitimate penal objectives. It bares no rational relationship to the accomplishment of pennological goals. As White J. said in the case of Furman v Georgia (supra) at p. 391 this punishment is with only marginal contributions to any discernible social or public purpose. A penalty with such B negligible returns to the State would be patently excessive and unusual and cruel punishment violative of the Eighth Amendment.

Therefore I don't agree with the State Attorney Mr. Kifunda that the sentence of 30 years imprisonment is proportionate to the offence of armed robbery. I subscribed to C the view canvassed by the defence counsel Mr. Mbezi that the sentence of 30 years is too severe to deserve to be termed inhuman and cruel. Mr. Mbezi also contended that under Art. 15(2) of our Constitution, Parliament is empowered to take away the personal freedom of an individual only by using law which is fair, reasonable and not D arbitrary. He said that the law on criminal procedure and evidence should be fair and reasonable; and that the law on sentencing should also be fair and reasonable. That he said is the full import of the case of D.P.P. v Daudi Pete Crim. Appeal No. 28 of E 1990 (CAT) which had cited the Indian case of Maneka Gandhi v Union of India (1978) 2 SCR 248. So he said that since a sentence of 30 years imprisonment is patently excessive, then it offends the doctrine expounded in the Daudi Pete case. At this stage, all I can say is that there is merit in the argument brought forth by the defence counsel. F

IV. Corporal Punishment - is it a torture or inhuman and degrading punishment?

Corporal punishment is one of the punishments permissible under s. 28 of the Penal G Code Cap. 16 and where imposed, it is to be inflicted in accordance with the Corporal Punishment ordinance Cap. 17 and the Corporal Punishment Order (G.N. 74/1930 and G.N. No. 76/1941) made thereunder. The independent government of Tanganyika H made corporal punishment mandatory for certain offences under the Minimum Sentences Act No. 29/1963. The Bill was greeted with enthusiasm by parliamentarians some of whom went even further than the government proposals suggesting more torture as part of punishing offenders - see L.P. Shaidi in his "Explaining Crime and Social I Control in Tanzania Mainland: An Historical Socio-economic Perspective", A Ph.D. Thesis submitted to the University of Dar es Salaam in 1985, at pp. 323-331 where the author quotes A the Parliamentary Debate.

In 1972 mandatory corporal punishment was abolished by the Minimum sentences Act No. 1/1972 only to be brought back in 1989 by Act No. 10/1989. Once again the honourable members of Parliament shocked the nation by applauding the B re-introduction of corporal punishment. One member even suggested that such punishment should be administered in public (market place) and that women offenders should not be exempted - see the Daily News of 25/4/1989.

Defending the Bill against an objection of a lone parliamentarian on the ground that C corporal punishment might be contrary to the Bill of Rights, the Minister for Justice and Attorney General argued that bandits and robbers were breaching the rights of other citizens and therefore it was in the interest of the community at large that corporal punishment was being re-introduced. The Minister proffered his legal opinion that the D Constitutional validity of the proposed law would be covered under the derogation clause Art. 30 of the Constitution - see Radio Tanzania Report of the Parliamentary proceedings, excerpts broadcast live on 24/4/1989.

It appears to me that basically two different situations can render punishment to be E cruel, inhuman and degrading. First a punishment which is not inherently inhuman or degrading may become so by the mode of execution. Secondly that certain types of punishment are inherently or by their nature cruel, inhuman or degrading e.g. infliction of acute pain and suffering. I shall discuss these two situations seriation. F

As stated above the mode of executing of the punishment can render that punishment to be cruel and degrading. That was the decision of the full bench of five judges of the Court of Appeal of Botswana in the case of The State v Petrus & Anor: (1985) L.R.C. (Const.) 699. That court led by Maisels P. held that the manner of punishment G which was administered by repeated and delayed instalments of corporal punishment was ultra vires the constitution. The legislation there had provided that the convicted person should be given four strokes each quarter in the first and last years of his term H of imprisonment, and the prescribed penalties of imprisonment with corporal punishment were mandatory sentences. In the course of its decision, the Court of Appeal drew support from decisions of the European Court of Human Rights, the U.S. Supreme Court and to a strong dissenting opinion of the Privy Council in Riley & others I v A.G. of Jamaica (1982) 3 All ER 469. In fact Hon. Mr. Justice Aguda said at A p.p. 727 - 728:

> I am entirely in agreement with the submission of Mr. Hodes for the appellants that corporal punishment administered by instalments when tacked onto a term of B imprisonment, cannot but bring about aggravated torture upon the human being made subject to that sort of punishment. To describe such a type of punishment as degrading is perhaps the very least that can be said of it.

In fact that was the view of the State Attorney Mr.Kifunda in this case. Commenting C on the manner or mode of executing punishment as one of the causes of cruel punishment Mr. Justice Blackman of the U.S. Supreme Court in the case of Jackson & others v Bishop (1968) 404 F. 2d 571 said at pp. 579 - 580: D

There can be no argument that excessive whipping or an inappropriate manner of whipping or too great frequency of whipping or the use of studded or over long straps, all constitute cruel and unusual punishment. Corporal punishment generates hate toward E the keepers who punish and toward the system which permits it. It is degrading to the punisher and to the punished alike. This record cries out with testimony to this effect from the expert penologists, from the inmates and from their keepers. F

Now Tanzania like Botswana has a legislation which sanctions corporal punishment by instalments. The Minimum sentences Act No. 1/1972 as amended by Act No. 10/1989 introduced corporal punishment by instalments. The Corporal punishment Ord. Cap. G 17 is amended in s.12 whereof corporal punishment shall be inflicted in the instalments, each consisting of six strokes, the first instalment at the commencement of the term of imprisonment and the other immediately before the person in question is finally released. That is a horrible situation. H

It is noteworthy that postponed whipping or whipping by instalments was deemed as cruel as long ago as 1880 in apartheid South Africa. In the case of Queen v Nortje (1880) 1 EDC 231 the Eastern District Court of South Africa held that corporal punishment by instalments (part of the lashes to be inflicted at one end the reminder at I the expiration of the sentence) was illegal. The case of

MWALUSANY J

Queen v Hans Windvogel and Anor [1881] 2 E.D.C. 98 is to the same effect. That A court fond it highly objectionable to sentence persons to lashes to be inflicted at the expiration of a sentence of hard labour. It is my finding therefore that corporal punishment in this case, is unconstitutional because it is cruel, inhuman and degrading as it is inflicted by instalments. B

The second situation I earlier alluded to, is as to whether corporal punishment is inherently and by its very nature is cruel, inhuman and degrading. The leading case in this regard is the decision of the European Court of Human Rights which was cited with approval both by the Zimbabwe Supreme Court and the Botswana Court of Appeal. C It is the case of Tyrer v U.K. (1978) 2 E.H.R.R.1, where a 15 year old boy was sentenced by a juvenile court in the Isle of Man to three strokes of the birch on conviction of assault. The Court found that, while the punishment in the instant case did not constitute torture, or inhuman punishment, it did amount to degrading punishment D and therefore was in violation of Act 3 of the European Convention which is identical to our Act. 13 (16)(e) of our constitution. The substantive paragraph in the judgment deserves to be quoted in extenso, they said at p. 11:

E The very nature of judicial corporal punishment is that it involves one human being inflicting physical violence on another human being. Furthermore, it is institutionalised violence, that is in the present case violence permitted by the law, ordered by the judicial authorities of the State and carried out by the police authorities of the state. Thus, F although the applicant did not suffer any severe or long-lasting physical effects, his punishment whereby he was treated as an object in the power of the authorities - Constituted an assault on precisely that which it is one of the main purposes of Act. 3 to G protect, namely a person's dignity and physical integrity. Neither can it be excluded that the punishment may have had adverse psychological effects. The institutionalised character of this violence is further compounded by the whole aura of official procedure attending the punishment and by the fact that those inflicting it were total strangers to the offender. H

The aura of official procedure attaining corporal punishment that the European Court refers to with apparent disgust is even mere disgusting in Tanzania under the Corporal punishment order which provides: I

MWALUSANY J

A 2. A sentence of corporal punishment shall be inflicted upon adults upon the bare buttocks with a light rattan cane which is free from knots. Such cane shall be not less than half an inch and not more than five-eights of an inch in diameter and shall not exceed Forth-two inches in length.

B 4. During the infliction of a sentence of corporal punishment the person undergoing punishment shall be so secured that he cannot, by reason of the movement of his body, cause the strokes to fall upon any other part of his body then upon which they C are to be inflicted in accordance with this Order.

If as in this case, one has to use a value judgment, it seems to me that the corporal punishment incapably falls within the definition of inhuman and degrading punishment. D

In the case decided by the Supreme Court of Zimbabwe Ncube, Tshuma & Ndhlovu v The state (1988) L.R.C. (Const.) 442 after reviewing the position in Zimbabwe, South Africa, U.K., Canada, Australia and The United States Mr. Justice Gubbay concluded that: E

Fortunately on the few occasions where the issue of whether whipping is Constitutionally defensible has been judicially considered, it appears to have resulted in little difference of opinion, whether imposed upon an adult person or a juvenile offender the punishment F in the main has been branded as both cruel and degrading.

Mr. Justice Gubbay described the penalty of whipping as:

G ... not only inherently brutal and cruel. It is relentless in its severity and contrary to the traditional humanity practised by almost the whole of the civilised world, being incompatible with the evolving standards of decency. H

The approach to constitutional interpretation adopted by the Zimbabwe Supreme Court and Botswana Court of Appeal has been in Bangalore, India in February 1988. The Bangalore Principles which that meeting adopted, recognised and affirmed the relevance and importance of: I

MWALUSANY J

A ... a growing tendency for national courts to have regard to these international norms for the purpose of deciding cases where the domestic law - whether constitutional, statute or common law - is uncertain or incomplete.

That view was reiterated by the Commonwealth Judges in the Harare declaration of B Human Rights (Harare principles - Judicial Colloquium in Harare, Zimbabwe 19-22nd April 1989) and also in the Banjul Affirmation (Judicial Colloquium in Banjul, The Gambia 7th to 9th November, 1990).

It is gratifying to note that the Nyalali Commission (1992) (The Presidential C Commission on whether Tanzania should adopt a one-party or multi-party system) in its Report, Book Three at p. 10. holds the view that corporal punishment is inherently cruel, inhuman and degrading and contrary to Art. 13(6)(3) of our Constitution. Such a considered view from eminent Tanzanians should weigh highly on this court. There D can be no doubt that corporal punishment is against the dignity of man as stipulated in Art. 9(1)(a) of our Constitution which is part of the Fundamental Objectives and Directive Principles of State Policy. The Zimbabwe Supreme Court in the Ncube case (supra) on the same theme said: E

The raison d'etre underlying section 15(1) is nothing less than the dignity of man. It is a provision that embodies broad and idealistic notions of dignity, humanity and decency, against which penal measures should be evaluated. It guarantees that the power of the F State to punish is exercised within the limits of civilised standards. Punishments which are incompatible with the evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of maturing society or which involve the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain, are repugnant. Thus a penalty that was permissible at one time in own nation's history is G not necessarily permissible today. What might not have been regarded as inhuman or degrading decades ago may be revolting to the new sensitivities which emerge as civilisation advances. H

Those decisions on the unconstitutionality of corporal punishment are examples of the prudent application of international human rights norms to domestic human rights law. They identify with evolving standards of decency and humanity. Tanzania cannot be left behind in that boat. I

Therefore when the Attorney - General suggests above that corporal punishment is A constitutional because it is saved by the derogation clause in Act. 30(2)(b) of our Constitution, it beats my comprehension. Act. 30(2)(b) states that a legislation which infringes the constitution is valid if it is wholly for ensuring the interests of defence, public B safety, and public order. However as pointed out by the Tanzania Court of Appeal in the case of the D.P.P. v Daudi Pete Criminal Appeal No. 28 of 1990, any derogation clause must meet the proportionality test or reasonableness test. It should be given a restricted but purposive construction, so that the basic rights of the citizens are not C marginalised nor completely emasculated by the derogation clause. For the derogation clause to apply to a given situation it must be shown that it is required by a compelling social need and that it is so framed as not to limit the right in question more than is necessary to achieve a legitimate objective. For example in the Daudi Pete case D (supra) it was found that the legislation denying accused persons bail was too broad as to take away the basic right to freedom to all and sundry. Equally here the derogation clause cannot be interpreted so broadly so as to cover every cruel, inhuman and degrading punishment. A derogation clause should not be interpreted as entitling the E government to impose vague or arbitrary limitations on basic human rights; but that limitation should be reasonable and only be invoked when there exists adequate safeguards and effective remedies against abuse. In other words a derogation provision has to be construed narrowly. I do not conceive it to be the duty of this court to construe any of the provisions of the Constitution as to defeat the obvious ends the F Constitution was designed to serve. As the Tanzania Court of Appeal observed in the case of A.G. v Lesinoi s/o Ndeinai & Others: [1980] T.L.R. 214. 'A Constitutional provision should not be construed so as to defeat its evident purpose, but rather so as G to give it effective operation'. I may point out that Prof. Issa G. Shivji is of the same view that the derogation clause does not save corporal punishment from being unconstitutional see his paper 'State Coercion and Freedom in Tanzania' a Monograph by the Institute of Southern African Studies, National University of Lesotho (1989) at P.22. H

In conclusion I hold that corporal punishment not only is it inherently inhuman and degrading, and so unconstitutional; but in addition international statements of human rights indicate that such type of punishment has become simply unacceptable in a civilized and democratic society. The weight of international opinion is against corporal I punishment. It is up to us to remain an island on ourselves.

V. Miscellaneous Matters A

Under this head, I will have to consider as to whether the offence of armed robbery exists, secondly as to whether the trial court had power to impose the sentence that was awarded and finally review the evidence on record. B

On the first plaint Mr. Mbezi argued that the offence of armed robbery is not contained in the Penal Code Cap. 16. He said that the trial magistrate was wrong to sentence the two appellants for an offence which they were not charged with nor convicted of. In fact that is the same view that was canvassed before Mushi J. in the case of Ibrahim C Hassani & another v R. Tanga High Court Criminal Appeal No. 92 & 107/1990 that argument found favour with Mr. Justice Mushi who quashed the sentences. I understand the D.P.P. is appealing to the Tanzania Court of Appeal. However my considered view is that the offence of armed robbery is there in the Penal Code in sections 285 and D 286. This comes about if the court invokes a generous and purposeful construction on the Penal Code and the Minimum Sentences Act. Armed robbery is committed under sections 285 and 286 where the offender is armed with any dangerous or offensive weapon or instrument. that is what Parliament intended to curb. Therefore Mr. E Mbezi's argument fails.

The next point is as to whether the trial magistrate had power to impose a 30 year prison sentence. It will be recalled that under section 170 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Act. No. 9/1995 a subordinate court may not pass a sentence of imprisonment F exceeding eight years for any offence falling under the Minimum Sentences Act No. 1/1972. However section 170 (4) of the criminal Procedure Act states:

G The provisions of subsection (1) shall be without prejudice to the provisions of any written law authorizing a subordinate court to impose in relation to any offence specified in such written law, a sentence in excess of the sentences provided for in that subsection. H

That provision was a subject of interpretation by Msumi J. in Abdarahman Abdallah Magosso v R. Dar es Salaam (High Court) Criminal Appeal No. 36/1990. In the judgment delivered on 19/9/1991 Msumi J. held that since the provisions in the Penal Code did not confer on the subordinate courts extended power of sentencing, then it I was illegal for the subordinate courts to pass a sentence of over eight years for scheduled offences. I agree with that view. What the trial A magistrate should have done was to commit the accused to the High Court for sentencing. The trial magistrate had no power to impose the 30 year prison sentence.

It behoves me to review the evidence on record, in case I am wrong on the above B thesis about the constitutionality of the trial. The case involves the identification of the culprits at the scene of the crime. There was a torch at the scene of the crime. The culprits are village-mates and so the faces were quite familiar. The bandits spent a considerable long time demanding to be shown the money. The husband and wife C purported to have had identified the culprits. The appellants offered an alibi. The trial magistrate warned himself of the danger of convicting the culprits on evidence of identification which is not water-tight. In my considered view the convictions were proper. The case was proved beyond any reasonable doubt. D

VI. Conclusion

The trial is a nullity because the appellants who are indigent were denied of their statutory and constitutional right to legal representation paid for by the State. The trial E was also a nullity because the appellants were not informed of their right to have legal representation. As regards sentence, the trial magistrate had no power to pass a sentence over eight years imprisonment. In any case the mandatory minimum sentence of 30 years imprisonment under the Minimum Sentences Act. No. 1/1972 as F amended by Act No. 10/1989 is unconstitutional and void because it is an inhuman and degrading punishment. The mandatory minimum sentence of 12 strokes of corporal punishment (not 10 strokes as the trial magistrate imposed) is also unconstitutional and void as it is an inhuman and degrading punishment, prohibited by Art. 13(6)(3) of our G Constitution.

Should I order a retrial? The appellants have been in prison now 2 1/2 years. I think this is a fit case where I have to leave it to the D.P.P. to decide whether appellants should be retried or not. Thus I leave it to the D.P.P. to decide. H

Consequently the appeal is allowed. The convictions are quashed and sentences are set aside. The appellants should be released forthwith, unless held for any other offence.

I Order accordingly.

In the District Court of Ilala was Mussa Alobogast Mtalemwa charged together with two other persons. Mtalemwa, the appellant was convicted of robbery while the rest were set free. He appealed to the High Court which quashed the conviction on robbery E and substituted it with one of receiving stolen property c/s. 311 (1) of the Penal Code, Cap 16. Still dissatisfied with this conviction he appealed to the Court of Appeal. However there was no cross - appeal by the Republic against the judgment of the High Court.
When hearing the appeal, the Court of Appeal invited counsel for the appellant to F address the Court on whether the Court had jurisdiction to quash the decision of the High Court and restore that of the District Court without there being a cross-appeal by the Republic. Counsel for the appellant contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to reinstate the judgment of the District Court and that the Court has no revisional G jurisdiction.
Held: (i) The Court of Appeal lacks revisional jurisdiction;
(ii) when a party appeals to this Court, the Court is not just limited to either upholding the appeal and granting the reliefs prayed for or to dismissing the appeal H and leave intact the decision appealed from;
(iii) if a party appeals against conviction, then, instead of dismissing the appeal or of allowing it and acquitting him, this Court could find him guilty of an offence more I serious than the one with which he was charged and acquitted by the lower Court and

Ramadhani, Kisanga and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: The appellant, Mussa Alobogast C Mtalemwa, was charged together with two other persons. One of them was acquitted as there was no case to answer. The other was acquitted of the charge of receiving stolen property. The appellant, on the other hand, was convicted of robbery.

The District Court of Ilala was satisfied that on 3rd July, 198 (at about 8.15 p.m.) D PW.1 was driving a saloon car, TZA 159, belonging to PW.2, along Bagamoyo Road. The appellant and another person stopped him for a lift to Keko. The appellant sat on the front seat and suddenly he pointed a pistol at PW.1 ordering the car to be driven to the National Stadium where PW.1 was ditched out and beaten to unconsciousness. E When PW.1 regained his senses he reported the matter to the Kilwa Road Police Station where he was taken to the Oysterbay Police Station. On 5th July as PW.1 was in a Police car going through the Morocco Road he spotted out what he was convinced to have been his stolen car but then it had AAJH 5238 as its registration number. The F driver of that car refused to stop. So the Police Van gave chase and the driver came to a halt when, according to PW.4, a pistol was leveled at him. The appellant was that driver and PW.1 identified him as one of the two robbers.

In his defence the appellant alleged that the vehicle was given to him by the second G accused person to process pre-registration formalities of evaluation and custom fees as it had been imported from Zambia. As already said that story was rejected by the trial Court.

On appeal to the High of Tanzania (Mkwawa, Ag. J., as he then was) quashed the H conviction of robbery and substituted it with one of receiving stolen property contrary to section 311 (1) of the Penal Code. The learned Judge had two reasons for doing so. One, he said "when the only evidence against an accused is the finding of recently stolen property in his possession, an accused is entitled to an acquittal if he gives an explanation which may reasonably be true". Two, the learned Judge reiterated that "it I is unsafe to support a conviction on the bare assertions of witnesses that they had recognized the A accused". He went on to cite the case of Ludovick s/o Kashaku v. R [1967] HCD 194 where reasons for identification, such as the sound of voices or distinctive clothing, were required to be given. The Judge then reduced the punishment from fifteen to eight years imprisonment. B

The appellant had a memorandum of appeal containing four grounds of appeal. However, his learned advocate, Mr. Maira, decided to abandon the second ground, argued the first and the third grounds together, and concluded with the fourth ground. The respondent/Republic was represented by Miss Munisi, learned State Attorney. C

For reasons which will be obvious in a moment, we do not deem it necessary to make a resume of the submissions for an against the appeal. When we were deliberating on the appeal so as to write a judgment, we were in no doubt about the guilt of the D appellant. What exercised our minds was whether the appellant was not after all guilty of robbery as the District Court had found him to have been.

That thought, in its turn, brought to the surface two preliminary points. The first was that we had not been addressed on whether or not the appellant is guilty of robbery. E Second, we wondered whether we could quash the decision of the High Court and restore that of the District Court without there being a cross-appeal by the Republic.

To clear up those two points we decided to re-open the matter and invite both Counsel to address us after we had given them a sufficient notice. F

Mr. Maira was resolute that this Court could only uphold the judgment of the High Court or quash it and acquit the appellant and that the Court does not have jurisdiction to reinstate the judgment of the District Court. He had two reasons for saying so: First, G he said, this Court could only act where there is before it a writ of error and that it was not for the Court to search for errors. Here, the learned Counsel submitted, the writ of error before us challenged the conviction against receiving stolen property and that there was no writ of error challenging the acquittal of the appellant of the charge of H robbery which is what the High Court had done. As his second reason Mr. Maira pointed out that this Court lacks revisional jurisdiction and so it could not invoke those powers to reinstate the judgment of the District Court.

As to whether or not there is sufficient evidence on record to sustain a conviction for I robbery, Mr. Maira submitted that there are grave doubts on the correctness of the identification of the appellant by PW.1. The A learned Counsel contended that what PW.1 identified was the vehicle when he came across it on Morocco Road and not that the appellant was the robber.

Miss Munisi, on the other hand, said that it was open to this Court to ascertain the B propriety or otherwise of the quashing of the conviction of robbery by the High Court without there being a cross-appeal. She referred us to section 14 (2), of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 (hereinafter referred to as the Act) and she also cited the decision of the East African Court of Appeal in Merali and Others v R. [1971] H.C.D. No. 145. C

As for the conviction of robbery, Miss Munisi submitted that the identification of the appellant by PW.1 was not challenged in cross-examination. Then she added that the invocation of the doctrine of recent possession was proper as the appellant was caught driving the vehicle just three days after the robbery. Miss Munisi concluded that the D conduct of the appellant at the time of arrest was inconsistent with the presumption of innocence.

Admittedly we lack revisional jurisdiction, so, can we act where there is no cross appeal?

This question was considered by this Court in Godfrey James Ihuya and 3 Others E v R. [1980] T.L.R. 197. This Court dismissed the appeals of the appellants and upheld the convictions of manslaughter against all four of them. The matter then which was debated was whether this Court could enhance the punishment given to them without there being a cross appeal by the Republic. It was held that this Court had such F powers. Reliance was put on Rule 36 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979, which reads:

> The Court may, in dealing with any appeal, so far as its jurisdiction permits, confirm, G reverse or vary the decision of the High Court, or remit the proceedings to the High Court with such directions as may be appropriate, or to order a new trial, and to make any necessary incidental or consequential orders, including orders as to costs.

It was held that the word "vary" in this Rule means that "the Court has power to H increase or decrease the sentence when either the prisoner or the Republic appeals".
The word "vary" is subjected to "so far as its [Court's] jurisdiction permits". The question is whether jurisdiction permits,. So here we go further to say that when a I party appeals to this Court
RAMADHANI JJA, KISANGA JJA, MNZAVAS JJA
then we are not just limited either to uphold the appeal and grant the reliefs prayed for A or to dismiss the appeal and leave intact the decision appealed from. The party who appeals lays himself bare and gives the Court the power it would not have had if he had not appealed. Thus there is a third alternative. This is where the Court says: 'Yes, the lower Court has indeed erred but not in the way the appellant contends that injustice B has been done to him but rather that the appellant ought to have been found guilty of a more serious offence or that he deserved a stiffer sentence than the one that was administered to him'. Thus if a party appeals against conviction then instead of dismissing the appeal or of allowing it and acquitting him, this Court could find him C guilty of a more serious offence of which he was charged but acquitted by the lower Court and consequently enhance the sentence. Likewise, if the appeal is against sentence only, then, in appropriate case, this Court could enhance it instead of reducing it as was pleaded by the appellant or leaving it intact. D
Mr. Maira talked about a writ of error. First of all a writ of error was the mode of appealing used in criminal proceedings in England but that was abolished by section 29 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. So that is not the requirement even in England E now. Be it as it may, in Tanzania appeals to this Court are governed by the Act and the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979 made under it. A party to a criminal proceedings in the High Court or in a subordinate Court with extended jurisdiction who has a right of appeal under the Act has first to file a Notice of Appeal under Rule 61. In such F Notice of Appeal the aggrieved party indicates whether the appeal is against conviction or sentence or both. Now the notice of appeal has the effect of delimiting our powers to what is appealed against. It would be outside our powers to look into conviction when the notice of appeal was on sentence only. The appellant then has to concisely G enumerate his grievances in a memorandum of appeal (Rule 65). This is what, we suppose, Mr. Maira calls a writ of error. Without the leave of the Court, the appellant would not be heard on any matter not contained in the memorandum of appeal (Rule 74 (a)). It seems to us utterly inconceivable that whereas we can allow an appellant to H go outside his memorandum, we cannot ourselves do so. Now once we have done that and have come to the opinion that the lower Court had erred we then can step into the shoes of the lower Court and make the necessary corrections under section 4 (2) of the Act as Miss Munisi submitted and as was done by our predecessor in Merali's case. I
In fact this Court again did that in Abdurabi Ally Yusufu & Ally Yusufu Abdurabi v. A R. Criminal Appeal No. 59 of 1988 (unreported). that was an appeal of a former Member of Parliament for Songea against his conviction of unlawful possession of Government trophies.

This Court found him guilty of the more serious offence of dealing in Government trophies of which he had been charged in the alternative but was B acquitted by the learned trial judge. There was no cross-appeal and in fact the appellant was neither represented nor was personally present at the hearing of the appeal as he had indicated his desire not to be present.

We have found it pertinent to dwell on this point for a considerable length for the sake C of dispelling any doubt as to the powers of this Court in the absence of a cross-appeal.

Now to get back to the substance of the appeal, we agree with Miss Munisi that there is watertight evidence with which to convict the appellant of robbery. The doctrine of D recent possession coupled with the inexplicable criminal conduct immediately prior to his arrest corroborates the identification by PW.1 though that was not necessary.

We therefore quash the conviction of receiving stolen property and substitute it was E one of robbery c/s 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. The sentence of eight years passed on him is hereby enhanced to the minimum sentence of thirty years provided by the amendment of Act No. 10 of 1989.

Makame, Kisanga and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: When these two References, concerning the same parties, came up for hearing, it was agreed, all round that they should be E consolidated for hearing. They arise out of the same transaction and share a common background of five different applications to single judges of this Court. It was clearly desirable to deal with two References together. Mr. Mbuya, learned advocate, represented the applicant, Transport Equipment Ltd., while Mr. Maira and Mr. F Marando learned Counsel, advocated for the respondent, D.P. Valambhia. Both Mr. Maira and Mr. Marando addressed the Court on behalf of the respondent.
Civil Reference No. 7 of 1991 came to us as a result of Omar, J.A. refusing to consolidate for hearing two applications before him: Civil Application No. 13 of 1991 G by the present respondent, which sought to prevent the present applicant from appealing against the decision of Rubama, J. in the main suit, High Court Civil Case No. 210 of 1989, for failure to take essential steps in instituting an appeal; and Civil Application No. 29 of 1991 in which the present applicant applied for extension of time for serving the H Respondent with a copy of the Notice of Appeal. The application for consolidation was by Mr. Mbuya and, as afore said, it was refused. In the event Omar, J.A. did not have to go into the merits of the two applications.
The argument in favour of consolidation was that the two applications were essentially I two sides of the same coin, as it were.

That is to say if, for example the single judge decided that the present applicant had A indeed failed to take essential steps and so strike off the Notice he could not then turn round in the other application and permit the present applicant to comply with all the formalities. And vice versa.
Against consolidation it was submitted that for administrative reasons one of the B applications was not listed for that particular day, in the first place, and that one application could be determined without affecting the course of the other.
Basically the same arguments were repeated, if with elucidation, before us. C
We are grateful for the inputs by learned Counsel. The destination of these exercises must be to do justice, and in a conclusive and meaningful manner. We think with respect to refuse to consolidate will be to fragment the process and delay the outcome. We are D satisfied that to consolidate would be the better course in the circumstances, and we so order. The two applications shall therefore go to a single judge who shall hear them together as consolidated, and determined them. We respectfully urge an early hearing as the outcome there from will have a close bearing on other aspects of the dispute between the parties. E
The second Reference we dealt with was No. 10 of 1991 as already indicated. The application before a single judge, Mapigano, Ag. J.A. was Civil Application No. 15 of 1991. Following certain decisions by Rubama, J. in the High Court, there was an application for a grant of stay of the execution of the decree. For reasons Mapigano, F Ag. J.4, lucidly explained, there was ordered only a partial stay. He granted a stay in respect of only the general damages pending determination of the intended appeal but declined to grant a stay in respect of the 40% of the contract sum.

Mr. Mbuya urged before us that if they went on appeal they would challenge even the G award of 45% of the contract sum. Mr. Marando, for the respondent, opposed the application and submitted that there was no valid ground for faulting Mapigano, Ag. J.A.'s decision. He further submitted that one of the factors to be taken into account was the substance of the intended appeal and suggested that there was none here. H

We have given anxious thought to the matter. We think, with respect, that a consideration of the general damages cannot exclude a reflection on the award refused to be stayed. The two may well have a bearing one on the other and if, as in this case, I the award of general damages was ordered to be stayed we think it would have been neater to stay the other part of the award. It is not in receivable that the applicant A would raise arguments on the part of the award stayed which would impinge on the portion not stayed.

We therefore allow the Reference and accordingly order the whole decree stayed pending determination of the appeal depending, of course, on the outcome of the hearing of the consolidated Applications 13 and 29 of 1991 before a single judge. B Despite the proliferation of applications, as observed, we very much hope that at the end of the tunnel a truly just and conclusive and of this chequered conflict will have been achieved.

C Order accordingly.

Kisanga, Makame and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: This is a reference arising from the ruling of a single Judge of this Court granting an application to strike out a notice of appeal for failure to take essential steps in the proceedings, and at the same time refusing a counter D application for extension of time to take such essential steps.

It was common ground that the Principal Secretary Ministry of Defence and National Service, failed to serve on Mr. D.P. Valambhia a copy of his notice of appeal and a copy of his application to the Registrar, High Court, for copy of proceedings in E respect of an intended appeal against the ruling of the High Court requiring him to comply with a garnishee order of that Court within three weeks.

It was claimed on behalf of the Principal Secretary that one Mr. Mtangi of the F Attorney-General's Chambers had been duly instructed to serve copies of the said documents on the opposite party but he failed to do so. However, the said Mr. Mtangi was not made to file an affidavit to confirm that he was duly instructed to serve the documents on the opposite party and if so why he did not comply therewith. In G refusing the counter-application for extension of time the learned single judge took the view that no sufficient reason had been disclosed in terms of rule l8 of the Court of Appeal Rules because the information so far adduced through the affidavits did not rule out the possibility that the said instructions might not have been given to Mr. Mtangi in H due time. We, too share that view, and if there was nothing also we would have so difficulty in dismissing this reference.

But Mr. Mrema, the Director of Civil and International Law Department in the Attorney-General's Chambers who appeared for the Principal Secretary Ministry of Defence and National Services, had urged us also to allow the reference on the I ground that the intended appeal raises an important point of law. The said point of law, he went on, A concerned the interpretation of rule 2A of Order 21 of the Government Proceedings (Procedure) Rules 1968 (G.N. 376 of 1968) whether in terms of that rule the garnishee order made by the High Court came within the ambit of section 15 of the Government Proceedings Act, 1967 which prescribes the mode of satisfying or executing Court B orders against the Government or Government offices.

It is noted that this point was the subject of considerable submissions by counsel in the High Court and the learned High Court judge in his ruling dealt with it at length, although C the single judge of this Court in his ruling did not allude to it at all. Before us Mr. Mrema submitted, in effect, that the High Court put a wrong interpretation on rule 2A of order 21 of the Government Proceedings (Procedure) Rules 1968 (G.N. 376 of 1968), and thereby came to the erroneous conclusion that the decree could properly be D executed by issuing a garnishee order when it could not. Mr. Mrema strongly felt that this Court should declare what the law is on the matter. On the other hand Mr. Marando, the learned advocate appearing for Mr. Valambhia, ardently maintained that the alleged point of law did not in fact arise because the garnishee order in question E did not come within the ambit of Section 15 of the Government Proceedings Act 1967. Upon a glance through the record, and having regard to the submissions by counsel for both sides, we think that the matter is arguable; a point of law is involved and the decision on it may go one way or the other. The question which falls for consideration F now is whether the said point constitutes "sufficient reason" in terms of rule 8 of the Court of Appeal Rules to warrant the exercise of discretion in favour of the Principal Secretary Ministry of Defence and National Service to extend the time for him to serve copies of the said documents on the opposite part. G

The same question arose in the case of The Commissioner of Transport v The Attorney-General of Uganda and Another [1959] E.A. 329 involving somewhat similar facts. There the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa refused to extend the time and in the course of doing so it said, inter alia: H

> As to the argument that a point of law of fundamental importance was at issue, it is to be noted that this contention was not supported by the respondent. We were not impressed by the argument and thought that there would be little difficulty in testing the matter in I other proceedings. We saw no reason

A to hold that the importance of the point at issue was such as to constitute sufficient reason for extension of time under r. 9 of the Appeal Rules.

In other words the Court refused to extend time because the point of law at issue was B not of sufficient importance to justify the extension. The corollary of that is that in some cases a point of law may be of sufficient importance to warrant extension of time, while in others it may not.

The point of law at issue in that case was whether contracts of a certain type required C registration as a floating charge under the law and, as shown above, the Court held that the point was not of sufficient importance to warrant extension; it taking the view that the matter could be tested in other proceedings. In other words the Court was saying that the opinion of the lower Court on the question whether that type of contracts required D registration as a floating charge was not of sufficient importance to warrant extension of time and the decision embodying that opinion should remain on record.

In the case before us, however, the point at issue, in effect is the illegality or otherwise E of the garnishee order as a means of executing the Court order against the Government. For, should it turn out that the garnishee order is within the ambit of Section 1 of the Government Proceedings Act, 1967 as urged by counsel for the Principal Secretary Ministry of Defence and National Service, then the order is illegal and hence a nullity. F We think that where, as here, the point of law at issue is the illegality or otherwise of the decision being challenged, that is of sufficient importance to constitute "sufficient reason" within the meaning of rule 8 of the Rules for extending time. To hold otherwise would amount to permitting a decision, which in law might not exist, to stand. In the context G of the present case this would amount to allowing the garnishee order to remain on record and to be enforced even though it might very well turn out that order is, in fact a nullity and does not exist in law. That would not be in keeping with the role of this Court whose primary duty it is to uphold the rule of law. H

It should be noted that the position in this case is distinguishable from that in the case of The Commissioner of Transport v The Attorney-General of Uganda and Another earlier cited. There the point at issue was not the illegality of the type of contracts in question; it was simply the correctness or otherwise of the opinion whether or not that I type of contracts required registration as a floating charge. Indeed the refusal by the Court to extend time amounted to A allowing the decision being challenged to remain on record and to be enforced. That was perfectly in order, for, the decision was itself valid in law, while the issue whether or not the opinion expressed therein is erroneous should, in the Court's own discretion, await decision in other proceedings. Such is not the position in the present case where B the point at issue is the illegality of the decision being challenged. In our view when the point at issue is one alleging illegality of the decision being challenged, the Court has a duty, even if it means extending the time for the purpose, to ascertain the point and, if the alleged illegality be established, to take appropriate measures to put the matter C and the record right.

There were certain weaknesses and failures on the part of the Principal Secretary Ministry of Defence and National Service, and some members of the Attorney-General's Chambers in their handling of this matter. However, we think that D the importance of the point of law at issue outweighs our consideration and such failures and weaknesses. In the result, the reference is allowed. The notice of appeal is restored and The Principal Secretary Ministry of Defence and National Service is to serve the opposite party with copies of the documents in question within four days of his receipt E of this ruling. We make no order as to costs.

Ramadhani, J.A.: The applicant, Tahfif Mini Super Market, unsuccessfully applied D for a temporary injunction before Rubama, J. He has filed a notice of appeal against that refusal but meanwhile he has this notice of motion praying for a temporary injunction.
A couple of days before this application was to be heard. Mr. Mkatte, the learned E counsel for the respondent, B.P. Tanzania Ltd., with the ability of a Chinese acrobat, made a preemptive move and sought to strike out the notice of appeal of the applicant. In his notice of motion Mr. Mkatte argued that the applicant has neither obtained nor applied for leave to appeal to this Court.
I must say the move by Mr. Mkatte was unprocedural. It would have been proper if F he had given notice of a preliminary objection under Rule 100. Admittedly that rule talks of "preliminary objection to any appeal". However Rule 2(1) defines "appeal" to include "intended appeal" as Mr. Mwajasho, the learned advocate for the applicant, did not G object, and I consolidated the two notices of motion. So the first application I have to address myself to is that by Mr. Mkatte; prayer for striking out the notice of appeal.

The issue here is whether or not leave to appeal is required. This in turn poses the question of what was the ruling of Rubama, J. refusing to grant a temporary injunctions H an order or a decree. If it was the latter, that is a decree, then that is covered by Section 5(1)(a) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1969 and no leave to appeal is required. But if the ruling was an order then it falls under Section 5 (1)(c) and leave to appeal is required.

Mr. Mkatte submitted that the ruling of Rubama, J. as an order. He relied on the I interpretations of decree and order as provided buy

section 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966 and the ruling of Mnzavas, J.A. in A Godes Ltd. v Nimrod E. Mroso Civil Application No. 5 of 1990 (unreported). On the other hand Mr. Mwajasho contended that ruling of Rubama, J. was a preliminary decree. The learned advocate argued that what determines whether a ruling is an order or a decree is the substance not the form. B

Section 3 of the C.P.C. defines a decree thus:

> ... the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the C matters. In controversy in the suit and may be either preliminary or final ... but shall not include -
> (a) an adjudication from which an appeal lies as an appeal from an order." D

Then an explanation follows thus:

> E A decree is preliminary when further proceedings have to be taken before the suit can be completely disposed of. It is final when such adjudication completely disposes of the suit. It may be partly preliminary and partly final.

Then "order" is defined in negative terms: F

> ... the formal expression of any decision of a civil court which is not a decree.

The issue for determination here is whether or not the ruling of Rubama, J. G conclusively determined the rights of the parties with regard to any of the matters in controversy in the dispute either preliminarily or finally.

To be in a position to make that determination I have to find out what were the matters in controversy. H

The applicant is the plaintiff before the High Court. Under a Reseller Licence Agreement the applicant possessed the University Service Station and ran the Petrol Station as well as a Mini Super Market. The respondent demanded in writing, giving 29 days, that the premises be handed back to him alleging certain breaches. So the applicant filed a suit I praying for two substantial orders:

> A (a) A declaratory order be issued to the effect that there is no subsisting breach of the Reseller Licence Agreement to warrant termination.

(b) The Reseller Licence Agreement should subsist until there is a current or a subsisting breach. B

This is why the applicant applied for a temporary injunction be maintain the status quo; keeping the premises.

The respondent, on the other hand, filed his written statement of defence and prayed for, inter alia, C

(ii) that the plaintiff immediately hands over the B.P. University Service Station."

Thus possession of the suit premises is one of the matters in controversy as was D properly contended by Mr. Mwajasho. Now, possession had been with the applicant under the Reseller Licence Agreement. The effect of the ruling of Rubama, J. was to give back possession to the respondent. Can that be said to conclusively determine the E rights of the parties with respect of the issue of possession.

The conclusive determination of the rights of the parties is from the point of view of the court formally expressing the adjudication. That is according to the definition of decree in Section 3. Now, can Rubama, J. be said to have had that plaint of view? F

Rubama, J. said this:

Mr. Mwajasho ... and Mr. Mkatte ... elaborated on their positions. they were extensive G detailed and of extreme usefulness to the court. I do not, however, intend to go into them;. they greatly go into the merits of the main suit whose determination would have to wait the finalization of the pleadings and naturally the hearing of the case. To go deep into the H advanced conflicting submissions would buy and large amount to prejudging the case. Yet I have to make a ruling on the application. In the light of the material before me, I find myself unable to grant the application by the applicant." (emphasis mine). I

RAMADHANI JA

The learned judge decided not to grant the application and therefore rendered A possession of the suit premises to the respondent "in the light of material before" him. I ask, what material? The learned judge has given the answer. It consisted of the submissions of the learned advocates which were "extensive, detailed... greatly go into the merits of the main suit". the learned judge was wary not to go deep into that B material lest he prejudged the case. Yet that was the material "of extreme usefulness to the court" which made him refuse to grant the application and in effect allowed the respondent's prayer "that the plaintiff immediately hands over" the suit premises. Thus from the material before him, which according to the learned judge determines the C case, he could not avoid to hand back possession to the respondent even before the complete disposal of the suit.

In my opinion, the ruling by Rubama, J. is a preliminary decree. Therefore no leave to appeal is required.

No, I turn to whether or not injunction is to be granted. D

As correctly argued by Mr. Mwajasho the dispute, if any, is over payment for petrol supplied. But the suit premises were also used as Mini Super Market which has nothing to do with the payments for petrol. Then, even for the usage of the premises as a Petrol Station, untold hardship is brought to bear on the innocent public particularly in view E of the fact that there are no alternative services rendered within the vicinity. Above all, as submitted buy Mr. Mwajasho, the parties continued doing business from the date the suit was filed in the High Court (7/5/91) to the date the respondent locked up the premises (11/7/92). Business worth shs.1,087,075/80 was transacted on 26/3/92 F according to Annexture B to the affidavit sworn by the operator of the applicant which was not denied by the respondent.

For the above reasons I am of the opinion that injunction should be granted and that the premises should immediately be restored to the applicant. I so order. G

The application for injunction pending appeal is allowed with costs.

Bahati, J.: This is an application by the DPP for the restoration of the appeal in this case which was withdrawn by Mr. Mwengela a State Attorney, on 14/10/91. The application is supported by an affidavit of Mr. Teemba, a Principal State Attorney in the Attorney General's Chambers. H
The affidavit avers that Mr. Teemba's duties as a Principal State Attorney include assigning duties to State Attorneys in the DPP's Department. It goes on to aver that on 14/10/91 Mr. Teemba instructed Mr. Abdul Mwengela a State Attorney to go to Court and attend an appeal No. 123/90 filed by the DPP against Damas Cosmas Nilahi. Mr. I Teemba never gave Mr. Mwengela the instructions or authority to go and withdraw the appeal from court on that day. Mr. A Teemba learnt subsequently from the Commissioner of Customs that the appeal had been withdrawn from the Court. On 7/11/91 Mr. Teemba and the DPP summoned Mr. Mwengela who admitted having acted contrary to Mr. Teemba's instructions. Mr. B Mwengela admitted having withdrawn the appeal on his own authority and withhelding that fact later. Mr. Mwengela under normal circumstances ought to have reported back to the DPP or to Mr. Teemba what had transpired in court. The appeal according to Mr. Teemba has overwhelming chances of success and is of great public interest. He concluded that justice will only be met (done) to both parties if the appeal is restored. C

In chambers, Mr. Malaba, learned State Attorney reiterated what is contained in the affidavit of Mr. Teemba. He said that Mr. Teemba gave Mr. Mwengela instructions to proceed with the appeal and not to withdraw it. He submitted that by applying to D withdraw the appeal Mr. Mwengela was acting contrary to the express instructions he had been given and that it was wrong for him to purport to act for the DPP. He referred the Court to section 377 of the Criminal Procedure Act which defines the DPP to include any officer subordinate to the DPP ..... in accordance with his general or E special instructions. He stated that if a State Attorney has special instructions of the DPP in relation to a particular matter, he will be acting contrary to the DPP's authority if he does not comply with the DPP's instructions. He submitted that Mr. Mwengela admitted to have noted contrary to the instructions of the DPP and that after the F withdrawal of the appeal, he withheld information to that effect from the DPP.
In reply, Dr. Lamwai, learned counsel for the respondent, submitted that the main issue was to what extent is a State Attorney presumed to be able to bind the DPP in what he does in court. He conceded that Mr. Mwengela was a junior State Attorney and he G raised 2 fundamental questions namely: (1) Under what law can the High Court revise its order entered on application of one of the parties to the proceedings. The other question was not mentioned by Dr. Lamwai who only dealt at length with the only question H raised. He submitted that there is no law which empowers this court to restore an appeal which has been withdrawn. He referred to the Criminal Procedure Act and commented that it talks of restoration of a dismissed appeal and not a withdrawn appeal. He also submitted that the Court cannot use its inherent powers and that even I the chamber summons does not seek inherent powers. He said further that inherent powers are used to stop an abuse of process of court which A was not the case here. He also submitted that an order granted on application for withdrawal of an appeal is a final order and that the court was functus officio and unable to reverse its decision.

Dr. Lamwai next argued the substance of the application on the basis of the affidavit. B He said that Mr. Teemba in his affidavit was conceding that Mr. Mwengela was duly instructed to conduct the appeal which meant that he could either argue the appeal or withdraw it. He submitted that it cannot be said that Mr. Mwengela did not conduct the appeal on behalf of the D.P.P. He said that in the absence of specific instructions to C the contrary the Court should conclude that a State Attorney has power to proceed with an appeal or terminate it. He said that section 377 of the CPA was irrelevant because it was only a definition section. He submitted that there cannot be any dispute that Mr. D Mwengela had general or special instructions to appear in the appeal and that the DPP was therefore in court, and the DPP decided to withdraw the appeal. He argued that matters of instructions in the DPP's office are internal arrangement and that the Court cannot act on such internal arrangements as if they were law. E
With regard to paragraph 7 of the affidavit, Dr. Lamwai submitted that there was no evidence that Mr. Mwengela acted contrary to instructions as nothing was produced to show what the instructions were. He said that only Mr. Mwengela could solve this riddle F by swearing or an affidavit stating the nature of instructions and admitting going contrary to such instructions. He said further that to hold otherwise would be putting Mr. Mwengela on trial without being heard. He prayed that paragraphs 7,8 and 9 be disregarded.
With regard to the question of overwhelming chances of success, Dr. Lamwai said G that Mr. Teemba wanted to convince the Court to open a Pandora's box in that he wants the Court to hold that when one State Attorney find that there is no evidence and the other finds evidence, then the case should be reopen. He submitted further that the H application amounted to putting the respondent in double jeopardy because he was acquitted in 1990 and the appeal was withdrawn in 1991 and it was now in July 1992. He referred to the record of the court which shows that on 25/9/91 an adjournment was sought by the DPP to consider withdrawal of the appeal. He concluded that there was I no shoddy deal in this matter and that more suspicion could not help in the administration of justice.
BAHATI J
In reply to the above, Mr. Malaba submitted that there was no law requiring every A application to be supported by the law under which it is made and that the Court had inherent powers to deal with any legal matter in issue for the interests of justice.

With regard to the issue of "functus officio", Mr. Mallaba submitted that this applied only where a matter had been heard on merits. With regards to the affidavit, he said B that the affidavit is presumed to contain the truth until the contrary is proved by a counter affidavit or in cross-examination. Dr. Lamwai intervened by stating that the respondent filed a counter-affidavit. Indeed such counter affidavit is there. C

On the question of section 377 of the CPA Mr. Malaba reiterated that once a State Attorney fails to comply with specific instructions of the DPP then he cannot be said to be acting for the DPP and that once the DPP has directed a State Attorney to issue instructions on his behalf then those instructions are of the DPP. He concluded that if D a State Attorney decided to go contrary to specific instructions then there is no DPP in court.

On the issue of 25/9/91, he said that it was Mr. Mwengela who appeared on that day and he never briefed the DPP of his intention to withdraw the appeal. E

The issues to be determined in this application are interesting and may be unprecedented. Here is the DPP who has withdrawn the appeal through his State Attorney asking that the order for withdrawal be revised and the appeal restored because the State Attorney in question did not have instructions from him to withdraw F the appeal. In paragraph 4 of his affidavit, Mr. Teemba Principal State Attorney is saying, "I never gave him the instruction or authority to go and withdraw the appeal from court on that day." Does a State Attorney require instructions or authority to withdraw an appeal (or a case for that matter) in order for his withdrawal to be effective in law G when acted upon by the Court by making the appeal withdrawn? Mind you, Mr. Teemba is not saying, "I gave him instructions not to withdraw the appeal." From paragraph 4 of the affidavit it is clear that there were no instructions to withdraw the appeal or not to withdraw the appeal. From the reading of paragraph 3 of the I affidavit, it is also clear that the only instructions there were to Mr. Mwengela from Mr. Teemba were to go to court and attend an appeal No. 123/90 which is the case in question; there were therefore no specific instructions not to withdraw the appeal. Therefore, with respect to Mr. Mallaba, learned State Attorney, his submission to the effect that Mr. Teemba instructed Mr. Mwengela not to withdraw the appeal is not supported by anything in the affidavit. The A instructions were to go to Court and attend an appeal (the appeal No.1 23/90. Whereas in paragraph 4 of the affidavit Mr. Teemba avers that he never gave Mr. Mwengela instructions or authority to go and withdraw the appeal from the court on that day, it is B also correct to say that Mr. Teemba never gave instructions not to withdraw the appeal to Mr. Mwengela. On the basis of the above, it cannot be said, as Mr. Malaba has submitted, that Mr. Mwengela was acting contrary to express instructions which he has been given and hence not representing the DPP. The fact that Mr. Mwengela did not C report to the DPP that he had withdrawn the appeal cannot alter anything, because, as submitted by Dr. Lamwai, that would be internal arrangements in the DPP's office. I have no hesitation in holding that the DPP was duly represented in the appeal and that the DPP withdrew the appeal. I also agree with Dr. Lamwai that it would be wrong for D this court to hold that Mr. Mwengela admitted to have acted contrary to instructions of Mr. Teemba without giving Mr. Mwengela the right to be heard because such a finding would be prejudicial to him. Paragraphs 7 and 8 of the affidavit of Mr. Teemba are charging Mr. Mwengela with a serious infraction of regulations and as such these E paragraphs are controversial. This court can only act on them if Mr. Mwengela himself confirmed the truth of these paragraphs. Indeed if these paragraphs are true then he would have expected either an admission in writing or an affidavit from Mr. Mwengela himself. Short of that I am not prepared to accept them at their face value. This court F has the duty to scrutinize what is in the affidavit or any evidence and it cannot take for granted or presume that an affidavit is true even if there is nothing to challenge it in writing.

There is the point raised by Dr. Lamwai concerning the power of the court to revise an G order entered in circumstances such as the present. Dr. Lamwai has argued that the court is functus officio in such a situation. Mr. Mallaba on the other hand has argued that the court has inherent powers to entertain any matter when the interests of justice so require and that the court become functus officio only when a matter has been determined on merits. H

After diligent search for a case in point, I have come upon a Ugandan case of Scrisito Luyombya v Uganda [1965] EA 618. This case concerned a notice of abandonment of an appeal given under section 328 A(3) of the Uganda Criminal Procedure Code. The appellant made an application for leave to withdraw the notice of abandonment I although there were no provisions in the Criminal Procedure Code to that effect. The Chief Justice dismissed the application as A incompetent on the ground that the appeal was already deemed to have been dismissed by operation of law under S.328A (3) and the Court was functus officio. On appeal to the Court of Appeal for the East Africa it was held that:

B (i) the appellate courts in Uganda have an inherent jurisdiction to allow an abandoned appeal to be restored, if it can be shown that the notice of abandonment was given by mistake or fraud such as to involve a possible failure of justice in the event of the appeal not being restored; C

(ii) an application to withdraw notice of abandonment is not necessarily an abuse of legal process, because there may be cases in which, although functus officio, an appellate D tribunal will use its inherent jurisdiction to declare such notice a nullity, and allow the appeal to be restored.

The matter was remitted to the High Court to hear the application on its merits. E

Since the above case is from Uganda, it is only of persuasive authority although it is a Court of Appeal decision. However, I entirely agree with the decision arrived at which can be applied even in the case before me. Going by the above cited case, I hold that although this court is functus officio, it has inherent jurisdiction to declare the F withdrawal a nullity and to restore the appeal. I cannot see why the position in Tanzania should be different from that in Uganda on this issue.

I will therefore examine now whether there is any justification for declaring the application for withdrawal or the withdrawal itself a nullity in this case. G

One thing is clear in this case, and it is that the withdrawal of the appeal by the State Attorney Mr. Mwengela was not expected by the DPP nor was it wanted or desired by the DPP. the withdrawal was certainly not by mistake. Was it fraudulent? There is no H evidence that it was fraudulent. I have already ruled above that the controversial parts of the affidavit which purport to charge Mr. Mwengela with an infraction of the regulations cannot be accepted without more because that would amount to condemning Mr. Mwengela without giving him a hearing. Therefore we go to the next and possible the I last question in this matter which is whether

Mr. Mwengela had power to withdraw the appeal from the court. My answer to this A question is in the affirmative because Mr. Mwengela as State Attorney duly representing the DPP had power to do what was within his power when he appeared in the Court. The withdrawal of the appeal was a matter within his powers. That the DPP did not like B the step taken buy Mr. Mwengela cannot mean that Mr. Mwengela had no such power.
It follows therefore that the withdrawal was in order and the appeal is deemed to have been duly dismissed. It could only be revised if there was a genuine mistake or fraud which is not the case here. C
I agree with Dr. Lamwai that this application should be dismissed. I dismiss it accordingly.
D Appeal dismissed.

The appellant was convicted of the offence of murder by the High Court and sentenced G to suffer death. It was alleged that the appellant had given medicine to the deceased. The trial court found that the appellant had in fact given medicine to the deceased. It was in evidence that the medicine given to the deceased, if taken in large quantities, could lead to death. It was argued on appeal that there was no evidence to establish the quantity of the medicine given to the deceased and therefore that the prosecution had H failed to discharge that burden.
Held: (i) The duty of the prosecution consisted in showing that the medicinal or toxic I substance taken by the deceased was the cause of the death. In order to discharge that burden it was essential for

Makame and Kisanga, JJ.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: A woman called Constansia Matembo died at her home in Tingi Village, Mbinga District, on the 13th of July, 1989 at dawn. The appellant Vincent Sowo Mapunda was later brought before D the High Court charged with the murder of the woman. In a judgment dated June 19, 1991 Kazimoto, J. found the appellant guilty of the offence and convicted him accordingly and then sentenced him to suffer death by hanging. The appellant has come to us with a four-ground memorandum, in a bid to have the conviction quashed. He is E represented by Mr. Kameja, learned advocate, while the respondent Republic is represented by Miss Munisi, learned State Attorney.

The starting point in this case is the death of one Raymond Mapunda who was the F brother of the appellant and the husband of the deceased Constansia. Raymond predeceased Constansia, having died back in 1986. It was the prosecution's allegation that the appellant had, subsequent to the death of Raymond, made proposals to Constansia to "inherit" her and that his proposals drew a negative. This allegation was G based on the evidence of P.W.1 Sikolastika Mapunda and P.W.2 Salvius Mapunda who are, respectively, the daughter and the son of the deceased Raymond and Constansia, that the deceased Constansia had narrated to them such a story a few days before she died. If their evidence is to be believed, the appellant had also warned H Constansia that evil would befall her if she refused to become his wife. At the trial the appellant denied the truth of that story, and it seems to us that these allegations of proposals, rebuff and threats were not given much consideration by the trial judge. I

MAKAME JJA, KISANGA JJA, MAPIGANO Ag.JA

Constansia fell sick in 1989 and the objective symptom of her illness was the swelling A of the body. The treatment she received at Tingi dispensary did not cure the illness and, understandably, her condition became a matter of great concern to P.W.1 and P.W.2. Again according to these two witnesses, Constansia had narrated to them that the appellant had told her matter-of-factly that she would not recover her health and she B would indeed die because she had cultivated at a place where he had buried his medicine called "Kipalapala". It was admitted by the appellant at the trial that he had admonished Constansia in those terms. It was the appellant's contention that C Constansia had broken a heathen taboo by cultivating at a forbidden place.

There can be no doubt that eventually P.W.1 and P.W.2 came to suspect or believe that Constansia had been bewitched by the appellant, and it would appear that these feelings peaked when they were endorsed by a fortune-teller whom P.W.2 had D consulted. So on 10/7/89 a meeting was held to deliberate on the plight of Constansia, and P.W.1, P.W.2, Constansia as well as the appellant, attended the meeting. It was common ground that at that meeting the appellant owned up to the admonition. P.W.1 and P.W.2 then decided to take the matter to the Chairman of the Village, P.W.3 E Vincent Kawonga.

P.W.3 convened a meeting at his office on 12/7/89 to discuss the matter. At that meeting, which Constansia did not attend, the appellant again owned up to the admonition. He however assured P.W.3 that he had an antidote for Constansia's F affliction and promised to restore her to health within a period of three days. The meeting ended on that note and the appellant as well as P.W.1 and P.W.3 walked away to return to the home of Constansia.

It was not in dispute that the appellant set out from the office at a fast pace, taking a G different route, a short one. It was admitted by the appellant that when he reached the home of Constansia he proceeded to furnish some medicines to her. It was further admitted by him that when P.W.1 and P.W.2 came back to the place he had already left. Bearing in mind that it was just a matter of twenty minutes' ordinary walk from the H office, it must be accepted as a fact that the medicines were furnished to Constansia within a very brief space of time.

Constansia disclosed to P.W.1 and P.W.2 that the appellant had given her one medicine to take internally, and that she had done so; and another medicine to bathe with. The I two witnesses upbraided her for having swallowed the medicine in their absence.

MAKAME JJA, KISANGA JJA, MAPIGANO Ag.JA

In the hours that followed, Constansia's condition changed for the worse, and the A appellant was not to be seen around. In his testimony he stated that he was somewhere drinking. Around 5 a.m. on the morrow Constansia passed away. On suspicion of foul play the matter was reported to the police and the appellant was taken into custody on 14/7/89. On suspicion that the appellant had given poison to Constansia the police B seized three kinds of medicine from him, two of them in powder form and the third being herbal leaves.

The appellant denied to have given Constansia any medicine to take internally. He stated that what he gave her was the herbal leaves for external use. C

The guarded autopsy opinion, as stated in exhibit P1, was that Constansia possibly died of "poisoning with local medicine". Specimen of the liver and lung tissues as well as stomach contents of the deceased were taken and dispatched to the Government Chemist along with the medicines that were seized from 2nd appellant, for further D investigation. The report of the Chemist, exhibit P2, reads that all the medicines as well as the liver tissue contained organo sulphur and alkaloids; that organo sulphur is frequently used to prepare pesticides and is harmful if consumed in large quantity; and E that alkaloids are poisons and harmful if swallowed in large quantity.

As mentioned above, there was no dispute that the appellant supplied medicine to the deceased, and we find, as did the trial judge, that it was one of those seized by the police and later analysed by the Chemist. Those medicines contained poisonous F properties and in answer to ground 3 of the appeal, we are also prepared to go along with the finding of the trial judge that the appellant was aware of their toxic properties.

The finding of the trial judge was also that the appellant did actually give medicine to the deceased for internal use and that the substance was swallowed by her. The evidence G relied on by the learned judge was the dying declaration, i.e. what the deceased had allegedly related to P.W.1 and P.W.2 when the two witnesses returned from the office of P.W.3. This finding is the subject-matter of ground 2 of the appeal. H

Mr. Kameja, who ably argued the appeal and incisively said about all that could be said on behalf of the appellant, submitted that the trial judge should have felt unsafe to come to that finding in view of the fact that there was only one's word against the other's. Miss Munisi came round to agree with Mr. Kameja, and properly so, as we consider I that P.W.1 and P.W.2 were evidently witnesses whose evidence should have been approached with circumspection, for the chances A are that they had twisted or embellished the words of the deceased.

However, if one is to take the trial judge's view of the matter, the question that would then arise is whether the judge was right when he went on to find that the death of the B deceased was caused by poison. Ground 1 of the appeal is directed against that finding.

As shown already, it is plain that the autopsy opinion was just prima facie and the only other material piece of evidence relating to this point was the Chemist's report exhibit P2. The point taken by Mr. Kameja is that exhibit P2 did not subscribe much to the C uncrystallized autopsy opinion and that the prosecution evidence was thus inconclusive of the precise cause of death.

That is a tenable point and we respectfully think that the trial judge would have come to a different conclusion if he had looked at exhibit P2 critically. The reason is simple. D The charge against the appellant was that he had killed the deceased by causing her to swallow poison, and the appellant denied the truth of that charge. The duty of the prosecution consisted, therefore, in showing that the medicinal or toxic substance so taken by the deceased was the cause of death. And we entirely agree with Mr. E Kameja that in order to discharge that burden it was essential for the prosecution to adduce evidence to establish two things, namely (a) the quantities and strength of the substances that were found in the dead body; and (b) the known minimum doses of those substances that are necessary to kill. For as Taylors Principles and Practice of F Medical Jurisprudence, Vol.II, 11th edition, elucidates at page 203, a poison in a small dose may be a medicine, just as a medicine like aspirin i.e. in a large toxic dose, a poison.

There is no such evidence in this case. What we have here is merely that organo G sulphur and alkaloids were detected in the materials submitted to the Chemist for analysis and that such substances are capable of acting injuriously on the body if taken in large doses, and we consider that this is where the greatest weakness in the prosecution case lay.

In view of the findings we have made above, it becomes unnecessary for us to deal H with ground 4 of the appeal which has reference to the question of malice aforethought, and we sustain the wherefore-contention set out in ground 5, which is conceded by Miss Munisi, that there was no sufficient evidence on which the High Court could properly have based a conviction for the offence charged or for any other lesser I offence.

We accordingly allow the appeal and set aside the conviction and the sentence, and A we order that the appellant be set at liberty forthwith if he is not otherwise lawfully detained.
B Appeal allowed.

Shayo for Jonathan, for respondent

Mrosso, J.: The respondent, Fatuma Abdallah, was the successful party in a suit she had filed in the Court of the Resident Magistrate at Moshi against the appellant Farah B Mohamed. The suit was in respect of Plot No. 15, situate at Sanya Chini, in an area commonly known as Somali Minor Settlement, in Hai District. The respondent, then plaintiff, had alleged that the plot belonged to her and that the appellant, then defendant, had trespassed onto it and in doing so, caused the respondent to suffer a loss of a C finger millet crop from which she would have earned shillings 352,000/=. She sought a declaration that the appellant was a trespasser, damages in the sum of shillings 200,000/=, an eviction order against the appellant and costs.

The trial court found that the plot belonged to her and, therefore, the appellant was a D trespasser. It is not, however, clear from the decree if an eviction order was granted as prayed. The prayer for damages was refused, and there has not been any cross-appeal on that. The appellant was dissatisfied with the judgment and decree of the trial court E and has appealed to this court. Mr. Zaffer Ali, learned advocate who prosecuted the defence for the appellant in the trial court, has filed eight grounds of appeal to this court and, with the leave of the court, has filed Written arguments. The respondent who was duly served did not appear at the hearing of the appeal. She wrote a letter seeking F adjournment but for the reasons given in a ruling, the application for adjournment of the hearing was refused.

Before I deal with the grounds of appeal, let me attempt a summary of the facts, as I understand them. One Abdallah Farah obtained an offer of a Right of Occupancy G over the suit land on 1st July, 1954, for a term of 99 years. The land commonly known as Plot No.15, measured 23.5 acres. Apparently Abdallah Farah did not live on the plot nor was there clear evidence if he developed it except by building a house on it. Subsequently he died in a year which was given in the evidence by the appellant as H 1957. Even so, up to the time the suit came for trial, he remained the registered owner of the plot, according to the evidence of one Tadeo Simon Mwakilema (D.W.3), who was an Assistant Land Registry Officer.

After Abdallah Farah's death a close relative, allegedly an aunt, one Gurman Mohamed, I took possessions of the plot. Some witnesses said she inherited it. She does not appear to have applied for any letters of administration nor appointed administrator of the estate of Abdallah A Farah.

According to the respondent's case, Gurman Mohamed sold the suit plot to one Awadh Abdi and when Awadh Abdi died his wife Hadija Awadh (P.W.3) applied for and was granted letters of administration in respect of the estate of her deceased husband. By a B written agreement, a copy of which was tendered in evidence despite objection, the suit land was sold by Hadija to the respondent and one Oreson Shuma jointly, that was in 1979. In the following year Shuma surrendered his half share to the respondent who became the sole owner until in 1985 when the appellant allegedly trespassed onto it. C

The appellant had a different story to tell. His case was that after both Adballah Farah and his aunt Gurman Mohamed died he got the plot in 1971 "through relationship", to use his own words, whatever exactly that meant. The plot has been in his possession D ever since. He also had Abdallah Farah's title deed in his possession and he tendered a certified copy of it in evidence. He was paying the land rent in the name of Abdallah Farah. He therefore denied the respondent's complaint that he was a trespasser on that plot.

The appellant contended that Awadh Mohamed (sic) (Abdi?) bought only a house on E the disputed plot and not the plot itself. The copy of Sale Agreement had been tendered as exhibit P.2 and it specifically mentioned the plot and not a house on the plot.

The appellant did not claim ownership of the suit plot. To quote his words, he said of the suit plot: F

> I do not possess the land. It is not my property. I'm an agent.

He did not disclose whose agent he was. He appeared to say, however, that he was G hoping he would eventually own it - "I'm paying the rent so that I would possess the Farah's plot; It being no body's". The appellant in fact owned an adjacent plot -No.14.

From the appellant's own words, he had no ownership claims over the suit plot. He said he had possession of it only as an agent (of a principal who was never disclosed). H This assertion is so vague as to be meaningless and unhelpful to himself and to the court. The court cannot be expected to give serious consideration to it. One could only say, as indeed the appellant said himself, that since he had Abdallah Farah's title documents, he paid the land rent with hope that some day he might somehow acquire ownership of I the plot.

MROSSO J

On the other hand, the respondent's story finds some support from appellant's own A witness Mohamed Ahmed (D.W.3 (sic). He should have been numbered as D.W.4). This witness confirmed that Awadh Abdi had possession of the plot after the death of Gurman Mohamed. He also confirmed that Hadija Awadh transacted over the plot B and the witness signed a document evidencing Hadija's transaction over the plot. He must have been referring to Exh. P.2 which, when given to him in court, he read and said the contents were correct. Exhibit P.2 purported to be a sale agreement regarding the plot whereby the respondent and Orison Shuma were supposed to have bought it. C

It seems plain to me that the appellant's contention that Awadh Abdi had bought only a house on the plot and not the plot itself is untenable on the evidence and for the obvious reason that a house is part of the land on which it stands and it could not be sold D separately from the land quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit. The fact that the appellant had Abdallah Farah's title documents in his possession did not give him any title over the suit plot because he never applied for nor was he granted any title or interest over it. But did the respondent herself have any proprietary rights over the disputed plot? E

It may be convenient to start with Gurman Mohamed. It was suggested by the respondent that she inherited the suit plot from Abdallah Farah. Assuming that was true, and there was hardly any evidence to sustain that assumption, it cannot seriously be argued that she obtained any legal title to the plot. A right of occupancy, or even an F offer of a right of occupancy for that matter, is not inherited like cattle in a boma. Even if it were, there was not a shred of evidence that any procedure under Somali custom for inheriting the property of a deceased Somali was followed to vest the plot in Gurman G Mohamed. At best she was only a kind of caretaker for the plot.

If Gurman Mohamed had no legal title to the plot, she could not pass any to Awadh Abdi, who allegedly bought it from her. The same thing would be said of Hadija Awadh, the wife of Awadh Abdi, who after the demise of Awadh Abdi, sold the plot to the H respondent and one Orison Shuma, whether or not there was a properly executed sale agreement.

But even if it were assumed that Gurman Mohamed had a legal title to the plot, did she effectively pass it on to Awadh Abdi?

During the trial of the suit in the lower court a photostat copy of a document I evidencing sale of plot number 15 by Gurman

Mohamed to Amed Abdi (who I take is the same person as Awadh Abdi) was A tendered in evidence as exhibit P.2. There was some controversy on whether it was adequately stamped. I do not find it necessary to go into that. A more important question is whether the document was admissible as evidence. Mr. Zaffer Ali objected to its admission but he was overruled. B

There is no doubt Ex. P.2 was secondary evidence in terms of section 65(b) of the evidence Act, 1967. The respondent said the original of the document had either been stolen or was lost or misplaced by her children. The trial magistrate appears to have accepted that explanation. While one might say the magistrate was perhaps lenient C yet, it did not, I think, amount to a misdirection or error. It was therefore admitted presumably under section 67(l)(c) that is to say, the provision that secondary evidence is admissible:

> when the original has been destroyed or lost, ... D

Mr. Zaffer Alli objected to the admissibility of that document on another ground. Since the respondent was relying on that document (and others to be discussed later), it should have been annexed to the plaint, which was not done. Mr. Jonathan for the E respondent argued, inter alia, that the appellant had not been taken by surprise and that the respondent had filed the plaint in person and was ignorant of the technical requirement under Order 7 rule 14 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. The trial magistrate also agreed with Mr. Jonathan. F

Under Rule 18(l) of the same Order 7 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966 the court is empowered to grant leave to a plaintiff to tender in evidence a document which ought to have been filed together with the plaint but was not. It has not been argued that the trial magistrate exercised his discretion under Rule 18(l) wrongly. G

Of even greater importance is the question whether Exh. P.2 passed any title over the plot to Awadh Abdi. If that document purported to transfer the ownership of the plot, then, under section 8(1) (a) of the Registration of Documents Ordinance, Cap.117, its registration was compulsory. In the provision cited it is stated: H

> S.8(l). The registration of the following documents if executed or made after the commencement of this Ordinance is compulsory - I

A (a) Non-testamentary documents, including decrees of any court or awards, which purport to or operate to create, confer, declare, limit, assign, transfer or extinguish any right, title or interest whether vested or contingent, to, in, over land, ... B

There was no suggestion that document had been registered under Cap. 117. That being the position the document was invalid and ineffectual. Section 9 of Cap. .... says:

C 9. No document of which the registration is compulsory shall be effectual to pass any land or any interest therein or render such land liable as security for the payment of money, or be received as evidence of any dealing affecting such land unless and until it has been registered. D

Similarly, under Section 41(2) of the Land Registration Ordinance, Cap.334 a disposition of land which has not been registered under the ordinance is ineffectual to transfer any title or right over it.

The purported transfer of the land by way of sale had another serious disability. No E consent of the President or the Commissioner for Lands or other public officer to whom the powers of the President may have been delegated, was obtained and therefore, the transfer was ineffective and unenforceable.

An offer of a Right of Occupancy which is usually given in respect of unsurveyed plots F is as good as a right of occupancy. Under regulation 3(l) of the Land Regulations, 1948 a disposition of a Right of Occupancy is inoperative, even if in writing, unless it is approved by the President (which term includes officers to whom the President has delegated his powers to consent) - see Fazal Kassam (Mills) Ltd. v Lawrenson and G Matzen(1957) E.A. 101 (C.A.).

As will be recalled, the plot purportedly passed from Awadh Abdi to the respondent and another when Hadija Awadh, the wife of Awadh, who had been granted by the High Court Letters of Administration in respect of the estate of her late husband, sold H it. An uncertified copy of a supposed sale agreement was tendered in evidence as Exhibit P.1, again notwithstanding objection by Mr. Zaffer Ali, who was overruled by the trial magistrate.

What I have said in connection with the sale of the plot by Gurman Mohamed and Exhibit P.2 substantially applies to the sale of the plot by Hadija Awadh to the I respondent. There was no valid transfer of any title to the respondent for the same reasons as already explained A above. The document, Exh.P.1, which did not meet the requirements of section 65 of the Evidence Act, 1967 was not secondary evidence and should not have been admitted into evidence. It was not in any case registered under section ... of the Registration of documents Ordinance, Cap.117 and Concept of the President for the B transfer under Regulation 3 of the 1948 Land Regulations, was not obtained. So, no title or right over the plot was ever transferred to the respondent. It follows, she had no enforceable claim over Plot No. 15 in dispute. Her claims ought to have been dismissed. The title over the plot has not, to date, changed hands. C

For the above reasons this appeal is allowed with costs to be taxed both in this court and in the court below.

D Appeal allowed.

The respondent and her brother, one Khamisi, inherited a house when their sister died childless. The respondent and Khamisi decided to create a wakf and dedicate the house to a mosque. There was an authentic document to that effect. When Khamisi died the G appellant, administrator of Khamisi's estate, wanted to include Khamisi's portion of the house in dispute in Khamisi's estate but the respondent resisted arguing that a wakf had been created over the house. It was argued that although there was an authentic document evidencing creation of wakf no valid wakf had been created. H
Held: Since there was no evidence that Khamisi was paying rent to the mosque the property had not been conclusively dedicated as wakf. I

Makame, Omar and Mfalila, JJ.A.: The parties are Brother and Sister. When their sister, Mwanabasi Shaha, died childless her properties were inherited by her siblings. B The present appellant got two houses and four cows, - while the respondent and a brother called Khamisi inherited a house. This property is House No. 20, Sukuma Street, Dar es Salaam, the object of a dispute which has now come to this Court on third appeal: After Khamisi's death the present appellant, the administrator of C Khamisi's estate, wanted to include Khamisi's portion of the house in dispute in Khamisi's estate, but the respondent resisted this, asserting that she and her brother, the deceased Khamisi, had created wakf over the property and dedicated it to the Rufiji Mosque in the City of Dar es Salaam. The Primary Court agreed with the respondent D that the house was wakf property but on appeal to the District Court, Ilala, (Kayombo, SDM) reversed the Primary Court decision, so in turn Mtumwa appealed to the High Court where Kazimoto, J. re-instated the decision of the Primary Court, holding that there was a valid wakf. That decision is now appealed from by Ibrahim, advocated E for by Mr. Semzaba, learned Counsel, while Mr. Mwajasho, learned advocate, appeared for the respondent Mtumwa.

We think that all along there was no serious dispute about the authenticity of Exh. B, the document purporting to create the wakf. We think also that the intention of Khamisi F and Mtumwa to create a wakf and dedicate the house to the mosque comes out clearly and is not at all in doubt. The issue however was whether a valid wakf had been created.

There was evidence by Mtumwa that after the house had been declared to be wakf in G favour of the mosque she was paying rent to the mosque for the portion she was occupying and also passing on to the mosque the rent being paid by tenants. The learned high Court judge was right that Mtumwa's assertion on this had not been disproved but, with respect, she was only one of the intending wafiks. There was no H similar evidence regarding Khamisi. There was, that is, no evidence that he was paying rent to the mosque so it must be assumed that he continued to live in the house rent - free; and that, quite rightly, bothered the learned Senior District Magistrate. Mr. Semzaba submitted that it meant that the property had not been conclusively dedicated as wakf. Mr. Mwajasho's references to Mulla's Principles of Mohamedan Law were I quite apt with regard to transfer of physical possession and title. His submissions however left unanswered A the important issue of non-payment of rent by Khamisi, which rendered the purported wakf not absolute.

This appeal must succeed, however regrettable it may sound. We accordingly allow the appeal and make no order as to costs.

We note that Mtumwa is entitled to a portion of the house in her own right, having B inherited the same from Mwanabasi, and that she is also entitled to a portion of the deceased's Hamisi part of the house. According to the evidence on record Mtumwa and Ibrahim are Khamisi's heirs.

Katiti, J.: Witnessing the prosecution of Jonas Nkize, the appellant, for the offence of stealing c/s 265 of the Penal Code Cap. 16, or in alternative, obtaining goods by false pretences c/s 302 of the Penal Code Cap. 16 of the Law, was Kigoma District H Court, which ultimately found the appellant guilty, of the alternative count - obtaining goods by false pretences c/s 302 of the Penal Code Cap. 16 of the Laws, and accordingly convicted him. The appellant was sentenced to five years imprisonment, a sentence which was followed by the statutory compensation order, that the said I appellant, shall compensate the Kigoma R.T.C., the value of 100 cartons found stolen. A

The appellant aggrieved, has appealed to this Court, contending that he was unfairly convicted, as he himself was never involved, in the charged crime. The learned State Attorney Mr. Boaz, declined to support conviction, submitting, as he did, that there B was no evidence sufficient enough to sustain conviction. The evidence shall need to be scrutinized, and revisited. The genetic starting point here, is that by the way of two Kigoma RTC Internal Stock Transfer Vouchers, (ISTV) numbered, No. 7617 of 29/9/1988, and No. 624 of 17/10/1988, Exhibits P1 and P2 respectively, one C hundred, and three hundred cartons of match boxes, (Kibo brand), respectively, were taken from the RTC store, or godown, then manned by the 2nd accused. The former ISTV consignment, was purportedly issued for MANYOVU RTC retail shop, and the latter, for MWANDIGA RTC Retail shop. And it remains an undeniable fact, on the D evidence by PW.1 Aron Kimerei, the then Kigoma RTC general Manager and PW.2 B 857 DST Issa, and rightly found by the trial Magistrate, that not a single carton of match boxes, reached their assigned destinations, i.e. Manyovu RTC Retail shop, nor MWANDIGA RTC retail shop, although they were taken out of the godown. On the E allegations, that Exhibits P1 and P2, the Internal Stock Transfer Vouchers, (ISTV), had been issued by the 1st accused Boniface Mhehe, the Marketing Manager, and that the same cartons were taken out of the Kibirizi godown, whose keeper was Hem Shuba, the two were charged, as first and second accuseds respectively. And, because F (ISTV) No. 7617, had in the line "COLLECTED by", J. NKIZES, inserted therein, the person by this name, was arrested and charged as the third accused, and is the appellant charged as above. It is pertinent, to point out here, that the handwriting Expert report Exh. PV reads: G

Hivyo ninayo maoni kwamba sahihi hiyo inayobishaniwa iliyopo penye kielezo "A 4" "Sehemu ya "Collected by " na alama "S" siyo sahihi yake halisi" H

However, it was the 2nd accused who implicated the appellant, in his sworn defence, and called DW.4 Athuman Makongoro, DW.5 Issa Ndiyunviye, DW.6 Ally Dogo, to support the 2nd accused's evidence against the appellant, the prosecution evidence having failed to touch the appellant, and at the stage he implicated the appellant, the I second accused had this to say, and I quote:

KATIT J

A The ISTV was written by Masaba, I took it and went to Kibirizi, then when I was coming down, I saw the third accused, and the driver of motor vehicle 3187 (Rombo Safari) having parked their motor vehicle under a tree. I opened the go-down, and the two brought their motor vehicle. The third accused gave me the ISTV, and a piece of paper. I asked the B third accused as to which country was he taking the goods to. But I knew the standing instructions, that anybody who comes with papers ISTV was not allowed to be queried.... After loading their motor vehicle, they drove off. The porters who loaded the motor C vehicle are present with the RTC, they can testify, if they are needed. It was the first ISTV, coming to the 2nd ISTV which had two hundred cartons of match boxes.

Such evidence, as apparently confirmed by the evidence of DW.4, DW.5, DW.6, D influenced the trial Magistrate to acquit, the first and second accused persons, but to convict the appellant, of obtaining goods by false pretences c/s 302 of the Penal Code Cap. 16. In approaching to convict, the trial Magistrate, did appreciate, that the evidence implicating the appellant came from the defence. He appreciated too, how convictions emanating therefrom, are unsafe, but nevertheless proceeded to convict E arguing, "I think the magistrate has to look at the overall evidence, rather than depend on the prosecution, if justice is to be done." (The under-lining is mine).

With due respect, to the trial Magistrate, the underlined above imputed to his pen, is F inaccurate in law and grossly, if I may add. While, the trial Magistrate, has to look at the whole evidence, in answering the issue of guilt, such evidence must be there first, - including evidence against the accused, adduced by the prosecution, which is supposed to prove the case beyond reasonable doubt. It is question of burden of proof, and G upon whom it lies. The day shall never come, not in my life time, when such highly priced principles, of criminal prosecution, will be as simplifically thrown into the such dirty dust bin of convenience. That, the general rule in criminal prosecution, the onus H of proving the charge against the accused, beyond reasonable doubt lies on the prosecution, is part of our law, and forgetting or ignoring it is unforgivable, and is a peril not worth taking. Was it not in the case of Woolmington v DPP [1935] 25 Cr. App. R. 72, when Lord Sankey L.C. then said: I

A ... if at any period of trial, it was permissible for the judge to rule that the prosecution had established its case, and that the onus was shifted on the prisoner to prove that he was not guilty, and that unless he discharged that onus, the prosecution was entitled to succeed, it would be unabling the judge in such a case to say, that the jury must in law, B find the prisoner guilty, and so make the judge decide the case, and not the jury, which is not the common law. It would be an entirely different case, from those exceptional instances, of special verdicts, where a judge asks the jury to find certain facts, and directs them that on such facts, the prosecution is entitled to succeed. Indeed, a consideration of C such special verdicts show, that it is not till the end of the evidence, that a verdict can properly be found, and that at the end of the evidence it is not for the prisoner to establish his innocence, but for the prosecution to establish his guilt. Just as there is evidence, on D behalf of the prosecution, so there may be evidence on behalf of the prisoner, which cause a doubt as to his guilt. In either case, he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. But while the prosecution must prove the guilt of the prisoner, there is no such burden laid on the prisoner to prove his innocence, and it is sufficient for him to raise a doubt, as to his E guilt; he is not bound to satisfy the jury of his innocence ... Throughout the web of the English criminal law, one golden thread, is always to be seen, that it is the duty of the prosecution to prove the prisoner's guilt ... No matter what the charge, or where the trial, the principle that the prosecution must prove the guilt of the prisoner is part of the F common law of English, and no attempt to whittle it down can be entertained.

And in the case of Mancini v DPP [1941] 3 All E.R. [1941] 3 All ER 272 Viscount Simon LC, added: G

.... I would formulate the following propositions: Woolmington's case, is concerned with explaining, and reinforcing the rule, that the prosecution must prove the charge it makes, beyond reasonable doubt, and consequently, that if, on the material before the jury, H there is a reasonable doubt, the prisoner should have the benefit of it. The rule is general application, in all charges, under the criminal law. The only exceptions arise, as explained in Woolmington's case, in the defence of insanity, and in offences where onus of proof is I specially dealt with by statute.

KATIT J

And back here, we have cases, like Moshi d/o Rajabu v Republic [1967] H.C.D. A No. 384, that, the burden of proving the charge against the accused is on the prosecution so that the trial Magistrate, to say he cannot depend on the prosecution evidence, is to read the upside down the authorities - and if it is by design, then it is strange and unjudicial behaviour. B

Again, in the same vein of caring about the law, if the trial magistrate had exercised a little care, to acquaint himself with the provisions of section 230 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985, he would have discovered that the trial Court is enjoined to direct its minds to the evidence adduced by the prosecution when it has closed its case, and C if it appears to the Court that, "the case is not made out against the accused person, sufficiently to require him to make a defence, either, in relation to the offence, with which he is charged, or in relation to any other offence of which under provisions of section 312 - 321 - he is liable to be convicted, and shall dismiss the charge, and acquit the D accused person. Thus, the subordinate trial Court is enjoined at the closure of the prosecution case, to see whether the crime charged, or such offence as is convictable, in the alternative, under Sections 312 - 321 of the CPA 1985, has been established, E and if it has not, the court has to acquit the accused. Thus the trial Magistrate's observation that is not necessary to depend on the prosecution case, is inadmissible and extravagant. In fact, if the trial Magistrate had looked upon the provisions, and I note the said provisions are not even referred to, in the proceedings, he would have noted, F that, by the closure of the prosecutions case, there had not been, an iota of evidence implicating the appellant - and the provisions of Section 230 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985, would have carried the day triumphantly. That is, if upon the administration of Section 230 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985, the offence as charged, or as G alternatively convictable under Sections 312 - 321, of the CPA 1985, is not made out, or established, it is mandatory for the trial Court, to dismiss the charge, and acquit the accused person. Of course the trial magistrate, did not acquit the accused in this case.

When all is said and done above, we must concede, that the evidence by the second H accused, and his defence witnesses - DW.4, DW.5, DW.6 implicated the appellant, as having in September 1988 loaded a hundred cartons at RTC godown, carried and left with the same. This evidence, is not useless in law, I must concede. While it is a fundamental rule of evidence, that statements made by co-accused, statements made I in the course of, and in pursuance of a joint criminal enterprise, which the accused was a party excepted, are not evidence A against the co-accused, unless such co-accused, has expressly, or by implication adopted the same as his own, such statements assume a different dimension, when given sworn in the course of a trial in the presence of an accused. That, is, where in joint trial, an accused goes into a witness box, and gives testimony, such evidence he has given, B becomes evidence for all purposes, including being evidence against his co-accused. See R. v Rudd, [1948], 32 Cr. App. R 138.

How such evidence should be approached, and utilised is well settled. In the case of R. v Pratter [1960] 44 Cr. App. R. 83, as qualified, in R. v Reck (1982) 74 Cr. App. C R. 221, it was held that where the co-accused's evidence implicating the co-accuseds, is tainted by improper motive, as having a purpose of its own to serve, it should be received with caution, and accomplice warning may be give, if there is basis, for suggesting that said co-accused, was participant in the crime, or was in any-way D involved in the crime the subject matter, of the trial. That is, co-accused evidence is suspect for many reasons i.e. holier that thou mentality, expectation of elemency, or mercy, etc.
In this case, with a lot of respect, though the evidence by DW.2, and the witnesses E called by him, is indeed implicating the appellant, the said evidence, is also raising questions, that are post-trial difficult to answer. First, although the offences charged, were allegedly committed on the 29/9/1988, the said witnesses gave damning evidence on 28/4/1990, over a year later, why they were not available as prosecution F witnesses, is surprising, and why, the 2nd accused had not disclosed their whereabouts, is a piece of curiosity, a gordian knot. Second, the ISTV No. 7617 Exhibit P1, that the 2nd accused handled first, at the Kibirizi godown, was for transferring hundred G cartons of Kibo Match boxes, from such godown, to Manyovu RTC Retail shop, but according to the 2nd accused, "Asked the third accused, as to which country he was taking the goods to. But I knew the standing instructions, that anybody who comes with ISTV, was not to be queried." But with respect to the 2nd accused, if the ISTV Exhibit H P.1, he was given, was to transfer match boxes from Kibirizi to Manyovu, as it does in equivocally speak by itself, and endorsed, passed by the 2nd accused himself, and the carrier, obviously doing it, on behalf of the said RTC, I cannot see how the question, which country the carrier was taking the goods, arises? I cannot see how, the 2nd I accused, could have received instructions, not to query under the circumstances!
Third, the 2nd accused said in court, in Examination - In-Chief, and I am sure he had A encouraged his witnesses to say so, that, the used motor vehicle was No. TB 3187, Rombo Safari, but in the ISTV Exhibit P.1, the name of carrier is shown as TB 3178, after an unsuccessful erasure of another 3178. If according the 2nd accused, it was B motor vehicle TB 3187, that carried the charged goods, as he testified in evidence in chief, then why did he, if he did, insert

TB 3178 in the ISTV Exhibit P.1, and where is the ISTV, if any, that was used by motor vehicle 3187? From the above, it is my view, that the innocence that the 2nd accused boldly put on his face, is questionable, as the C legal guilt of the appellant becomes even more doubtful. The 2nd accused, may have been improperly motivated, if not an accomplice, and his evidence is very suspect, and we have no corroboration on the same. In the event, the appeal is allowed, conviction quashed, and sentence set aside. The appellant to be released forthwith, unless he is otherwise legally held. D

Katiti, J.: Indicted and prosecuted, before Shinyanga District Court was Elias s/o Joakim, herein to be called the appellant, facing two counts - House breaking c/s 294 (1) of the Penal Code - and Stealing c/s 265 of the Penal Code Cap. 16. At the end G of the day, the appellant, was found guilty and convicted, as charged and sentenced to two years imprisonment on first count, and five years imprisonment on 2nd count, without ordering the same to run, either, concurrently, or consecutively. However, the H Public Prosecutor, before the above sentence, told the court, that the Appellant had previous convictions - store breaking and stealing c/s 296 (1) of the Penal Code Cap. 16 - Criminal Case No. 94/89, and the appellant in mitigation prayed as follows: I

KATITI J

A I pray for leniency. I pray that, my other sentence I am currently serving, be considered in sentencing me. This is all.

The trial and sentencing magistrate, directed as follows: B

It is further ordered, that as a 2nd offender, and because he was sentenced to six years imprisonment, in the previous conviction, these sentences shall be served consecutively, the resultant effect, being he shall serve a total of seven (7) years imprisonment. C

The appellant aggrieved, has appealed against conviction, contending that the quality and quantity of the evidence, at hand, did not prove the charge preferred beyond reasonable doubt. While the sufficiency and quality of evidence is to be tested, too, to D be visited is the aspect of sentence, that was meted out, or should have been meted out, to the appellant.

The facts of the case, significantly speak for themselves thus. On the morning of 18/7/1989, PW.1 Justina d/o Mazinge, left for work after locking her house. When E she came back at 5 p.m., same day, she was welcomed back by the doors, that were open and ajar. Her count of her properties, disclosed that properties including glasses, plates, spoons, electric iron, handbag, etc. valued at shs 23,885/=, had been stolen therefrom.

The obvious question was, and now, is who broke into this house, and stole. The F Prosecutor, produced PW.2 Zacharia s/o Maganga and PW.4 Kelvin s/o Lumbeli, both aged twelve and seven years of age, respectively, and who after a successful voire dire test, gave evidence on oath. PW.3 Zacharia s/o Maganga, narrating how he saw the G appellant entering the complainants house, at about 2 p.m. has this to say:

The accused that day, came and called Kelvin, who he sent for cigarettes. He gave him money. Kelvin went for cigarettes. When he left, I saw the accused enter Justina's house H by the door leading to the annex rooms. He went and kept for long. About 1/2 an hour, later on, I saw him come out carrying sack full of things, on his shoulders. He came to the place I was, put his luggage down and told me, that, I should tell Kelvin, to keep cigarettes I he had sent for, as he was in hurry, and he could collect them, after he sent his luggage. He wanted to

KATITI J

A take his luggage and go. I told him, see Kelvin was coming from afar.

It is not timely and opportune at this juncture, to hear from PW.4 Kelvin s/o Lumbeli, who picks therefrom, and tells us thus:

B Sometime last week, I remember I saw Elias pass with an empty sack. He went to the direction of the machine. He later came again, and stopped where we had been playing. He stopped there, and asked me to go for cigarettes. When I came back, I found him with a sack, which now was no longer empty, but full of things. When he saw me from a C distance, he put it on the ground, and came running for the cigarettes before he went back for his luggage and he hurriedly vanished away with it.

With this and such evidence, was the defence that, the appellant was at 2 p.m. with D DW.3 Mama Dina, who had invited him for food. However DW.3 while conceding, the appellant went to her, she denied she had invited him for food, and added that he only stayed there, for two minutes. The appellant also added, he had been attending E meeting at the oil mill, which DW.4 Yusufu Leonard the oil mill chief clerk discounted, saying that, the appellant had been sacked as an employee long before 18/7/1989, and could not therefore attend any meeting, and that in any case, there was no such meeting, on that day at all. F

With such evidence, the trial court found PW.2 and PW.4 credible, establishing that it was the appellant, who broke into the complainants dwelling house, and stole, and hence the conviction. The appellant is complainingly attacking the trial Magistrate, for relying on the evidence of children of tender years - PW.2 and PW.4 to convict him. G The appellant seeks, that the evidence by PW.2 Zacharia s/o Maganga and PW.4 Kelvin s/o Lumbeli, be discounted because of their tender ages.

With a lot of respect, what we wish is not always the right thing, or even legal - wishes are not horse rides. The course of action, that has to be taken, as and when a child of H tender years (child of, or, below the apparent age of fourteen years, - see Section 127 (5) of the Evidence Act) has to give evidence, is not just wished, but dictated by Section 127 (2) of the Evidence Act 1967. That is, under the above subsection, a child of tender years may be sworn, if he understands the nature of oath, or may give evidence I unsworn, if he has sufficient intelligence, and understands the duty of telling the truth, so that it A should in my view follow that, competency in so far as the child of tender years, is concerned, is not a matter of age, but of understanding. And to crown it all, the appellant is worth learning, that the trial Court, may even competently rely on the testimony by a child of tender years, when such child of tender years, has given such B testimony on the side of the prosecution, to convict the accused person, if it is fully satisfied, that the child is telling nothing but the truth, and has warned itself, of the danger of acting on such evidence, in the absence of corroboration. And where a child of tender years, gives evidence sworn after a successful voire dire test, and that he C understands the nature of oath, his evidence so given, is as good as that of an adult, and it is treated that way, and such evidence may only require corroboration, if it is accomplice evidence, or is such evidence which as a matter of practice or requirement of law, corroboration is necessary. D

In this case, PW.2 Zacharia Maganga and PW.4 Kelvin s/ Lumbeli, gave evidence sworn, after a successful voire dire test, that, they knew the nature of oath, and each ones evidence, is as good as that of any adult. If, Justina d/o Mazinge left her house locked, and she came back and found broken into, and goods stolen, and if PW.2 E saw the appellant entering and later coming out with a sack full of things, a sack that was also seen by PW.4, with the appellant's alibi that he had been at the meeting, and or that he had been invited by Mama Dina all denied, and smashed by the appellant's witnesses, the conclusion reached by the trial Magistrate, that it was the appellant who F broke into the house, and stole, is as sound as granite, and gives no room for successful attack. In the final analysis, the convictions on both counts, are upheld.

The last point, to be dealt with in this case, is the aspect of sentence. The trial court, G imposed two years imprisonment, on first count, and five years imprisonment on 2nd count - no more, no less. But there followed another order, that the sentence of six years imprisonment, the appellant was serving upon previous conviction, run consecutively with the above sentence, according to the trial court. "the resultant H effect being, he shall serve a total of seven years imprisonment." May I say, with attendant due respect, that the above is provokingly attracting comments - first - on the legality of sentence on first count - two - the trial magistrate failure to show whether such sentences shall run concurrently or consecutively with the sentence on second count, and - three - the propriety of ordering sentences based on separate indictments I and trials, to run consecutively, and - 4 - the arithmetical or additional accuracy. I shall hereunder deal A with each, of the above aspects.

The legality, or illegality, of sentence on the first count cannot pass without corrective comment. It is trite law, under the Minimum Sentences Act. 1972, section 5 that where the value of property obtained during the commission of the scheduled offence, (1st B schedule), exceeds five thousand shillings, the minimum sentence imposable, is five years imprisonment. In this case, the appellant stole property worth Shs. 23,885/=. Similarly, where the accused has a previously been convicted of scheduled offence, in the proceeding five years as the appellant had been, (store - breaking and stealing Cr. C Case No. 94/89) and is subsequently convicted of another scheduled offence, the minimum sentence imposable, is five years imprisonment. It would seem to me, that the appellant was legally and sentence wise, cornered, with neither front, nor rear, through which to escape, the Minimum sentence of five years imprisonment.

The illegal D sentence of two years imprisonment is therefore set aside, and five years imprisonment imposed, instead.

Again, the trial Magistrate had left the sentences, on counts (1) and (2) hanging, may be in the parlance, of Section 36 of the Penal Code Cap. 16 "the same to be executed E after the expiration of the former sentence, unless the Court directs, that, it shall be executed concurrently, with the former sentence, or any part thereof, they were to be presumed run consecutively - See Ali Mohamed v R. [1968] HCD No. 63. But the judicial approach has been that, where in an indictment consisting of several, or many counts, the trial court convicts the accused on such several or many counts, it has to F impose and assign each count, that attracted conviction, a separate sentence, and shall indicate therein, whether the sentences are to run concurrently, or consecutively, and not leave them hanging. As it was pertinently observed by the Court of Appeal in the case G of Hussein T. Kabeka and Others [1980] T.L.R. 267 - "A sentencing Court will never go wrong, if on deciding to pass concurrent terms of imprisonment, on an offender, it inflicts sentence on each offence and then directs the sentence so passed to run concurrently, and no more." H

When to decide whether a concurrent, or consecutive sentence, should be imposed is in my view not a gordian know it is not with respect, an inextricable difficulty. The judicial view and approach, on when concurrent sentences, should be ordered, is abundantly and oversupplied in the case law. Citing a few examples, will be as graphic, as will I suffice in my view. In the case of Musa s/o Bakari

v R. [1968] H.C.D. No. 239, it was held that, it was universal practice, in the A absence of good reason to the contrary, to order the sentence for related offences, of house breaking and stealing, to run concurrently, or where the charged counts, attracting convictions, arose out of single transaction, or are part and parcel of the same transaction, or are part and parcel of single plan of campaign concurrent sentences B will be ordered - see Jayantilar Laiji Kara Shah v R. [1968] H.C.D. No. 328, Ray Raphael Lameck v R. [1967] H.C.D. 190 27 and Joseph A. Kashamakula v R. [1970] H.C.D. No. 201, Just to mention a few. Thus, it is the judicial approach, that where in an indictment, consisting several or many counts, that have attracted C convictions, the sentence imposed and assigned to each count, shall be ordered to run concurrently, if such charged offences are related, arose but of single transaction, or are part and parcel of a single plan. That is, without rule, or order, to the contrary, a good working rule is that consecutive sentences, should not be passed for offences arising D out of the same transaction, as the sum total sentence resulting therefrom, may often prove to be too great considering the circumstances of the case. - See R. v Kaktercum [1972] 56 Cr. App. R. 298. In this case, house - breaking and stealing, are so related, and interconnected operationally, that the sentences should have been ordered to run E concurrently. For obvious reasons therefore, I hereby confirm the sentence on 2nd count, and further order, that the sentences on the two counts, shall run concurrently.

And finally, I verily confess, that I would at this juncture have rested in peace, if it F were not for the trial Magistrate order, that the previous sentence of six years earned, in a different trial, run consecutively, with the present sentence, which is five years imprison, but computing it have the "effect of being, he shall serve a total of seven G (7) years imprisonment". I come, to this aspect, not because the order was made, and it had to be made in view of the appellants prayers for judicial intervention, otherwise the command by the provisions of section 36 of the Penal Code take its course, but more, I come in because, if as the trial Magistrate ordered, the sentences imposed in H different trials, should indeed be served, consecutively, in the parlance of section 36 of the Penal Code - each sentence to be executed after the expiration of the former sentence they add up to eleven years imprisonment. As I understand, consecutive sentences are accumulative, one sentence being served after the other, - they add up I arithmetically. If this be so and I am convicted it is, six years imprisonment earned in the previous trial, and five years imprisonment earned in this case, served consecutively can only A add-up to eleven years imprisonment, and not seven years imprisonment, as the trial Magistrate erroneously added up. With the correction, the appellant shall serve the two sentence consecutively - eleven years imprisonment. The appeal is dismissed, convictions and sentences upheld. B

Appeal dismissed.

Katiti, J: Charged and indicted, before Tabora District court, with the offence of D stealing by public servant, c/s 270 and 265 of the Penal Code, was Josephat s/o Somisha alias Maziku, herein to be called the appellant, whose plea of not guilty thereto, introduced the case to full trial. At the end of the trial, the appellant, found himself on the wrong side of the law - was convicted as charged, and finally sentenced to five years E imprisonment. And on heels, to such sentence, was the usual statutory compensation order, that, the said appellant shall compensate, his employer TARECU, the value of the unrecovered typewriter, and louver glasses.

The appellant aggrieved, is appealing against conviction, contending in the main, - 1 - F that he denied and still denies committing the charged offence, - 2 - that he was arrested and tortured by the infamous Sungusungu, and that any confession before whom, being inadmissible in law, the trial Magistrate seriously erred in law, avoiding being guided by G the provision of section 27 of the Evidence act 1967 hereafter to be called the Act to convict him, and - 3 - that the confession before D/Cpl. Benjamin was inadmissible, and that consequently and finally, as a result and left without such inadmissible evidence, the prosections case, is yawningly, wanting, and lacking. The appellant therefore demands H his liberty now.

I can and I am assuring the appellant, that liberty will be his, subject to his innocence remaining undisplayed by guilt. The facts that contributed to the appellant being where he is, are as follows. The appellant was at the material time, employed as a watchman by Tabora Region Co-operative Union, and then, assigned his duties at the Tabora I Branch. It is defying challenge that, on the 1/5/90, it was discovered that, eighteen louver glasses had been extracted from the windows, A and the typewriter stolen, all valued at Shillings 67,200/=.

Obviously and invariably the question was, - who was the culprit. It is fashionable, these days of our time to resort, to the obviously officious Sungusungu for assistance, and B as a result, seventeen louvre glasses were recovered, three from PW 3 Wilbert R. Msisi, four from PW 2 Wilberd Mzawa, some from one Pendeza, and some were from yet another person, who did not give evidence. It is a finding of fact, that seventeen louvre glasses Exh. P.1, were recovered though the typewriter is still without a trace, C to date. It is too, a good unchallengeable finding of fact, that PW.2 Wilberd Mzawa, PW 3 Wilbert Msisi and PW.4 Joseph John Manji, claimed to have bought the same from one Ramadhan, whose definition, whereabouts, or other aliases, are one record unknown. However through Sungusungu's interrogation, witnessed by PW 4 Musa D Ramadhan, a sungusungu enthusiast, the appellant confessed to them, to have stolen the louvre glasses, but not the typewriter. And PW.6 S. 7909 D/Cpl. Benjamin, tendering a cautioned statement as Exh. P.2 testimonially told the court that the appellant confessed, in his cautioned statement, to have stolen the louvre glasses. The appellant in his E defence, still protested his innocence, denying that charge, disowning all, that the prosecution said. The trial Magistrate found the evidence establishing the offence beyond reasonable doubt, and convicted.
Mr. Boas, the learned State Attorney, appearing for the Republic supported the F conviction. the case as I see it, stands, or falls, on the only one issue of admissibility of confessions, allegedly made by the appellant, first to sungusungu, and subsequently to PW. 6 C. 9709 D/Cpl. Benjamin, consecutively, to whom, the appellant confessed, to have stolen the louvre glasses. I notice, the evidence was not digested and dissected, G by the trial court, bearing in mind the provisions of section 27 of the Act, on the admissibility of confessions. In fact, the appellant, is attacking the trial court, for its failure to pay attention, to the provisions of section 27 of the Act, alleging as usual than not, than in many cases of this kind, that, the sungusungu extracted the confession H from him, by and with violence.
The evidence digested, to the most desirable extent, it will and has to be discovered, that in this case, somewhere between the theft, the appellants confession, and the recovery of the louvre glasses, is one Ramadhan, who as above said, sold the said I louvre glasses. As this Ramadhan, is neither an accused, nor a prosecution witness, but for A the appellants confession, we would for sure, have never known, how the louvre glasses left their places of fixture. But it is also in my view true, that the appellant confessed to Sungusungu on 5/5/1990, as witnessed by PW 4 Musa Ramadhan, to have on the 1/5/1990, stolen the said glasses, and in a cautioned statement to PW 6 D/Cpl. B Benjamin, on 10/5/1990 to have stolen the same.

The appellant, as above aforementioned challenges, that the confession by him to sungusungu, was inadmissible, as he was tortured by them, to extract the same from C him. This being the appellant's contention, it doesn't seem to me, that it was a misconception. For first, while it is trite law, that the condition precedent for the admissibility of the confession, is its voluntariness, the said confession is not automatically inadmissible, simply because it resulted from threats, or promise; it is D inadmissible, only if the inducement or threat, was of such a nature as was likely to cause an untrue admission of guilt, see section 29 of the Act: Second, it is a view I humbly hold, again, that a confession is not just rejectable, because threats have been made. Not at all in my view. This is because, it is for the prosecution to prove E voluntariness of the confession, and once a threat has been shown to have been made, the Court may presume, that it induced the confession, until the prosecution proves, that there was no causal connection, - see Smith (1959) 2 QB 35. [1959] 2 ALL. E.R. 193. So that where you have threats, and a confession far apart, without causal F connection, and no chance of such threats inducing confession, such confession should be taken to be free of inducement voluntary, and admissible. In this case, the appellant confessed before Sungusungu. Although Sungusungu are known for torturing suspects, it is perhaps not permissible to vouch, that they torture every suspect nor is G it justifiable, to raise such conduct into a rebuttable presumption; that they should be presumed to have tortured the suspect, till the contrary is proved. In any case, if one is, or was tortured, the court cannot read the same on the face, the victim has to tell his experience. In this case, through out the prosecutions and the defence case, at no H time did the appellant, either, personally in his defence, or through cross examination, if witnesses show he was tortured at all. It is curious, and easily smelling afterthought, that the same should be raised by him, in his memo of appeal, and I am not inclined in any way to take him seriously. I

KATITI J

But too, the appellant confessed, before D/Cpl. Benjamin on the 10/5/1990, in the A cautioned statement, inter alia, thus:

Mwezi wa April, 1900 siku ambayo siikumbuki niliamua kuiba (Rovers) kutoka kwenye nyumba ofisi za hapo TARECU Branch. Sikumbuki idadi ya vioo nilivyoiba. Sababu B zilizonifanya niibe rouvers hizo ni baada ya kuuguliwa na mke wangu Janeth d/o William ... Nilipoona hakuna uwezekano wa kuapata fedha za kumuuguza mke wangu, niliona njia nyepesi ni kuchukua louvers hizo nikauze ili nipate fedha za kumpatia matibabu mke wangu. Rouvers hizo nilizichukua kwenye majira ya saa 20.00 za mchana. Nakumbuka C siku hiyo ilikuwa siku ya sikukuu, kama sikukosea nadhani ilikuwa May Mosi, Nilizichukua nilimpelekea Ndugu James, ambaye alikuwa anakunywa kahawa Mtaa wa Usagara. D

In my view, so much and extent of the above statement, from the cautioned statement Exh. P.2, shows how the appellant thought, concieved the plan to steal, and how he executed and consulated the same. In his own defence, the appellant denied E knowledge of what PW.6 D/Cpl. Benjamin said, and tendered. But in his memo of appeal, the same appellant castigates the trial Magistrate, alleging, that the evidence of PW.6, was relied upon without regard, as to his credibility. First to put the cart behind the horse, the excerpt above, taken from the tendered cautioned statement Exh. P.2, F constitutes a confession, it was made before the Police Officer, of the rank of Corporal, and as before and now, as inducements are not alleged, not even by the appellant, to have been committed by him, (PW.6), the admissibility of the said confession, meets no legal hurdle at all, on its way into the judicial records, and it was rightly admitted G under section 27 of the Act. And if PW.6, recorded correctly and right, what the appellant said, and acknowledged it by his signature, and only equivocally impugns it now, I don't see how, doubts about PW. 6 credibility came about. He recorded what he was told by the appellant, after the administration of the caution. H

It falls and remains to be concluded, that the appellant twice, and at intervals confessed, to have stolen the louvre glasses, to Sungusungu and on the 5/5/1990 repeated the same, to PW 6. As I did find the first confession was on evidence not induced by threats, as the second confession, was also voluntary. But if I may add, though not I duty bound, and for sake of argument, that even if, the first confession, had been induced, and therefore rendered inadmissible, the second A confession would only be inadmissible, if the threats, or undue influence, under which the first confession was made, was still persistent, when the second confession was made. In other words, even if the first confession were inadmissible for reason of torture - B involuntariness, the second cautioned confession would be admissible, as by the time was made, the effect of the original torture, had been dissipated. Thus it is a principle of evidence, that where the first confession is by reason, if threat, involuntarily made, and is therefore inadmissible, a subsequent voluntary confession by the same maker, is C admissible, if the effect of the original torture, or threat, has before such subsequent confession, been dissipated and no longer the motive force behind such subsequent confession - see R. v D.K. Williams (1968)52 Cr. App. R. 439.

In this case, even if Sungusungu, were to demonstrate their torturing true colours, D and rendered the first confession inadmissible, which on evidence they did not any way, and the confession was admissible, the second voluntary confession would be admissible, as on 10/5/1990, when the second confession was made, five days later, such torture even if perpetrated, on 5/10/1990 would not still be influential events. E But, to all intents and purposes, I believe, the evidence vindicating, no torture/ undue influence, has been shown to have been exercised, and the belated complaint by the appellant, is only a product of afterthought, some kind of wisdom after the event, that hardly has any retrospective efficacious effect. And same and sound as the appellant F was, and is, with the opportunity any way, he could not have confessed giving the details of theft, unless he actually stole. I like the trial court, I am satisfied beyond reasonable doubt, that the appellant committed the charged offence. He was rightly convicted, and as the sentence is only the statutory minimum for the offence, interference with the G same, is not legally attractable. The appeal is therefore, totally dismissed.

H Appeal dismissed.

An application for leave to appeal was filed two days after time. The delay was explained. It was said that the documents for the application were filed well within C time but that the receipt for the fees was issued two days out of time. The learned judge of the High Court ruled that the date of filing the application is the date of the payment of the fees and not that of the receipt of the relevant documents in the registry. Akaro, for the applicant.
Ramadhani, J.A.: Here I have consolidate two applications. In Civil Application No. 3 of 1992 the applicant, John Chuwa, is seeking leave to appeal while in Civil Application No. 4 of 192 he is praying for a stay of execution of the same decision in Civil G Appeal No. 2 of 1984 (H.C.). Both parties did not object to the consolidation.
The judgment complained of was delivered by Mushi, J. on 13/6/1990. The notice of appeal was filed in time on 25/6/1990 which was within time. However, the receipt for the fees was issued on 29/6/1990 which date was out by two days. According to the H learned judge, the date of filing the application is the date of the payment of the fees and not that of the receipt of the relevant documents in the registry. Mr. Akaro, learned advocate for the applicant, conceded that before me and I cannot fault the learned I judge there.
RAMADHANI JA
In this application Mr. Akaro sought to explain that discrepancy. He filed two A affidavits: one by the applicant and the other by one Emmanuel Kanju, who was a court clerk at the material time. It is stated that the papers were submitted at the registry on 25/6/1990 and were properly stamped by Mr. Kanju . However, as the cashier was B absent then the fees were left with Mr. Kanju who undertook to pass them on to the cashier. That was done and hence the receipt dated 29/6/1990.

Mr. Akaro answered me that he did not find it necessary to produce these affidavits before Msumi, J. because he was satisfied that the date of filing the documents was C that which appeared on the registry stamp which was within the statutory limit.

Let me pose here and make an observation that there is a contentious point here of whether or not it is proper to admit this new evidence which was not produced before Msumi, J. However, I have chosen not to decide that point but to assail the additional D evidence itself. One of the reasons for avoiding making that decision is that the parties did not address me on that point.

The respondent, Anthony Ciza, appeared in person. He pointed out that the affidavit of Mr. Kanju does not show when the fees were passed on to the cashier. Then, the E respondent argued, that if Mr. Akaro or the applicant were really serious they would have made a follow-up on the payment of the fees to the cashier the next day i.e. 26/6/1990 and that they would not have waited until 29/6/1990 and that they would not have waited until 29/6/1990 when the receipt was given to them by Mr. Kanju. F

These are two very strong points which demolish the effect of the affidavit of Mr. Kanju. In addition the failure to file an affidavit by the cashier is even more devastating. This Court decided in Kighoma Ali Malima v Abas Yusufu Mwingamno Ci v Application G No. 5 of 1987 (unreported) that an affidavit of a person so material, as the cashier in this case, has to be filed.

So with the shortcomings detailed above the production of the new evidence, whether rightly or wrongly, does not cure the defect which confronted Msumi, J. And for that very reason, like Msumi, J., I have to dismiss this application with costs. H

The respondent submitted that if the application for leave to appeal fails then the prayer for a stay of execution must fail too. I think there cannot be a more logical proposition than that. So too the prayer for a stay of execution is dismissed with costs.

I Appeal dismissed.

In an action for damages for negligence arising from professional negligence of a doctor in attending the plaintiff, causing the amputation of her arm, the trial judge found that C the defendant was negligent.

Held: (i) If a person is admitted as a patient by a hospital, and is, in medical treatment occasioned injury through the negligence of some member of staff, it is unnecessary D for him to pick upon any identifiable particular employee for suing purposes. The said hospital is vicariously liable;

(ii) where the doctor, consultant, etc. are selected and employed by the patient himself, the question of vicarious liability by the hospital does not arise, and such E liability does not attach to the hospital;

(iii) where in a hospital, the doctor engaged, has seen him and the patient, established the doctor and patient relationship, by accepting him/her for treatment purposes, the said doctor has a duty of care, and has to exercise the same with skill F attendant to modern medicine and surgery, under permitting circumstances. Such general duty is not subject to dissection into a number of component parts, to which different duty of care apply, or combination of both, i.e. that the investigation and, or G treatment of the plaintiff was in accordance with current standards of medical practice, or, that, the plaintiff's injuries were not caused by any negligence on behalf of the defendants.

Judgment for plaintiff. H

[zJDz]Judgment

Katiti, J.: One Alphaxad Mirobo, the next friend of Theodeolina Alpha, a minor then aged six years, filed this action on her behalf in this Court, against the Medical Officer In Charge of Nkinga Hospital, claiming Shs.5,000,000/=, as damages with interests, and I costs of the suit, and such further reliefs as may be commensurate to the occasion, for the loss of the left fore-arm, that was amputated, A claimedly and allegedly, because of faulty and negligent treatment of the same, by the defendant. The plaintiff did not give evidence.

With the defendant demurring that, it was the plaintiff's father, her next friend, that was B negligent, in not sending back the child, to hospital, I plainly drew the issues, as follows:

(1) Whether Nkinga hospital was negligent in the medical treatment of Theodelina Alpha, as to lead to limb amputation. C

(2) What reliefs, if any, are the parties entitled to?

What happened, to the culmination of the suit, is yearning indeed. The facts, as they themselves understandably and audibly speak, are straight-forward, and D uncomplicated, and they are as follows. P.W.1 Alphaxad Mirobo, a Primary School teacher, as at the material time, is the father of Theodelina Alphaxad, who at the material time, was and still is a minor, but then aged six years. Both were residents of Nguyiti village, in Igunga District, Tabora Region. And Nkinga Hospital well known in this E area, is a private Mission Hospital, being run by the Pentecost Church of Tanzania, situated in Igunga District, Tabora Region. At the material time, a certain Dr. Martin was in charge of the same hospital, only to be succeeded by D.W.1 Dr. Lars - GOHAN LIND GREEN as from 6th July, 1991. And it is defying controversy, that this Hospital

F among others, had then employed P.W.2 Dr. Kirungu a surgeon, PW.3 Mrs. Juliana Lusinga then a student nurse, and P.W.4 Andrew Athanazi, then a male nurse among other, to mention only a few. Thus, that P.W.2 Dr. Kirunga a Surgeon, P.W.3 Mrs. Juliana then a student nurse, were the employees, of Nkinga Hospital, is as true as the G birth of Christ - and hence the contractual employer and employees relationship between them - i.e. Nkinga Hospital, and the said employees, respectively.

Undefiably, and there is no controversy, on the 21/1/1991, the minor Theodelina H Alphaxad, was on her playing errands, with her agemates, when she fell and hurt her arm. The dispensary Sungwizi, to which she was rushed by her father, referred her case management to Nkinga Hospital. And that, on the very 21/1/1991, she was received by Nkinga Hospital, is conceded by no less, an authoritative person, than Dr. Kirunga, I who concedes his failure to attend her, on that very day for reasons, - (1) that it was an X-ray day, which I humbly think the minor wanted immediately, in the first place, and, - (2) A - that the minor had eaten, and six hours had not elapsed, as administering anaesthesia at that time, or before the lapse of that period, would have attracted vomiting, with attendant negative consequences, upon the respiration system. And of course as advised, P.W.1, did take the child home, not-withstanding, the condition she was in. B

The minor, plaintiff, it is defying challenge, was sent again to the very Hospital, on the 22/1/1991, when the X-ray Exhibit "A", revealed the fractures of both the ULNA and RADIUS - the two forearm bones, the said Minor was anaesthetized, and a P.O.P. C installed, or a plaster casted, against the affected area, by no less a Surgeon than Dr. Kirunga, who according to P.W.1, discharged them despite her feeling of pains, with instruction to go home and report back, after a week. It is again too true, to be dismissed, that on 25/1/1991, the minor while suffering from pain generating tears, D was sent back to the very Hospital, but she was not treated on this day, and on the 26/1/1991, upon the P.O.P. being removed, the hand was found to have blackened, the circulation of blood in the affected area negative, and as it could not be improved, and consequently, the arm, was amputed on the 7/2/1991. And because of the above E undefied facts, the plaintiff is avering that the Hospital, "was negligent in their actions, which were not in accordance with good medical practice, during the whole course of treatment" i.e. delay of treatment, and manner of treatment.

While the plaintiff avers, and apportioned negligence to the hospital in their mode of F treatment, defendant Hospital demurred, and tried to throw the suit ball, back into the yard of the plaintiff D.W.1 Lars - Gohan Hind Green, the medical officer in charge of the very Hospital since 6th July 1991 may as a person, be forgiven sympathetically, as absent as he had been, he can only theorise, about generally accepted medical G Standards, generally exercisable, and not testify as to the standards, that were actually applied, in the management of this case. But, it is very true that D.W.2, Dr. Kirunga was the one who handled, the minor's case. While Dr. Kirunga, concedes to have not treated the minor on the 21.1.1991, when he saw her, and concedes not to have H treated the minor on the 25.1.1991, - till 26.1.1991, the discoloration of skin, and circulation of blood impediment, had set in, and hence the amputation, that was consumated. She was cared for, on 26.1.1991, despite her arrival on 25.1.1991, upon it being observed as shown, by Outpatient Card Exhibit "P.B" that: I

KATITI J

A That fingers now is black, like gangrenous process probably due to fracture complications, or P.O.P. compressed the blood supply - remove the P.O.P.

In para (7) and (8) of the Written Statement of Defence, it is being averred, that, the B real mistake was that, she did not "return immediately to Hospital, when getting pain, swelling, and miscolouration of hard and arm. And that, information was given by the attending Surgeon Dr. Sabri Kirunga, at the first attendance on the 22.1.1991, of possible complication after applying, the P.O.P. and, absolute need to come back C immediately in case of any complications". Indeed D.W.2 Dr. Subri Kirunga testified this:

"I told the father before the patient, is anaesthetized that after the operation, if the patient shows any swelling, or pains, she has to be brought back immediately." D

Indeed, it is a fact as conceded by the defence, that the minor in the very afternoon of the very, 22.1.1992, was already complaining of pains, and D.W.2 Dr. Kirunga reacted, as follows to the same:

E I looked at the arm, and did not note any swelling. I was hesitant to make any adjustment. But when the child complained of pains, I called for instrument to cut the P.O.P., I cut the P.O.P. to release, the thumb, where the pains were being left for two inches. I asked the F child, if she still felt pains, and upon getting a negative answer, I left them to go.

Crowning it all, the case is that, while the plaintiff claims that the totality, or the accumulative effect of the spectrum of treatment, assumed a negligent culmination, and G hence the detested amputation, defendants washing their hands off the episode maintained, that the plaintiff's father was to blame, in not bringing the child back to hospital upon the complication, that had been communicated to them, setting in.

Whether the hospital was negligent, is the question that wants an answer. The plaintiff H claims damages, against the hospital, saying that even Hospitals, attract liability, where there has been professional negligence, in the treatment of the patient. Whether, or not, a hospital is liable for the professional negligence of its staff, is well established, and in the case of: Cassidy v Ministry of Health I

[1951] 2 K.B. 343, and at page 359, Lord Justice Denning's view, on the same is as A follows:

"If a man goes to a doctor because he is ill, no one doubts that the doctor, must exercise reasonable care and skill, in his treatment, of him, and is so, whether the doctor is paid B for his service, or not. But if the doctor is unable to treat the man himself, and send him to hospital, are not the hospital authorities then, under a duty of care of their treatment of him? I think they are. Clearly if he is a paying patient, paying them directly for their treatment of him, they must take reasonable care of him, and why should it make any C difference, if he does not pay them directly, but only indirectly through the rates which he pays to the local authority, or Insurance contributions, which he makes in order to make the treatment? I see no difference at all. Even if he is so poor that he can pay nothing, D and the hospital treats him out of charity, still the hospital, are under a duty to take reasonable care of him, just as the doctor is, who treats him without asking a fee.

E In my opinion, authorities, Government boards, or other corporations, are in law under the self-same duty, as the humblest doctor, whenever they accept a patient for treatment, they must use reasonable care, and skill to cure him of his ailment. The hospitals cannot of course do it themselves, they have no ears to listen, through the stethoscope, and no F hands to hold the Surgeon's knife. They must do it, by the staff which they employ; and if their staff are negligent in giving the treatment, they are just as liable, for that negligence, as is anyone else, who employs others, to do his duties for him. What possible difference in law, I ask, can there be between hospital authorities, who accept a patient for G treatment, and sailing, of shipping authorities, who accept passengers for carriage? None whatever. Once they undertake the task they come under a duty to use care, in the doing of it, and that is so, whether they do it, for reward or not. ..." H

Another similar persuasive lesson, on the matter could be gathered from the case of Roe v Ministry of Health [1954] 2 W.L.R. 915, Lord Denning, was, as was usual, professional and expertly at it again. He held thus: I

KATITI J

A The Hospital authorities, are responsible for the whole of their staff, not only for nurses and doctors, but also for the anaethetists and the Surgeon. It does not matter, whether they are permanent, or temporary, resident or visiting, wholetime, or part time. The Hospital authorities are responsible for all of them. The reason, is because even if they B are not servants, they are agents of the hospital to give treatment. The only exception is the case of consultants, or anaethetists selected, and employed by the patient himself.....

I am, from the above excerpts given to think that Cassidy's, and Roe cases above, C support the good and objective propositions, - One - (1) - that if a person is admitted as a patient by a hospital, and is, in medical treatment occasioned injury through the negligence of some member of staff, it is unnecessary for him to pick upon any identifiable particular employee for suing purposes, the said Hospital is vicariously D liable - two - (2) - the law seems to apply the principle of responde - at Superior, in the case of a hospital, just as it does, in the case, of master and servant, in any other sphere of activity; professional, industrial or otherwise. and three - (3) -, where the doctor, E consultants etc. are selected and employed by the patient himself, the question of vicarious liability by the hospital does not arise, and such liability does not attach to the hospital, that did not employ them.

Thus, we may as well say, authoritatively, that hospitals are responsible for all those, F in whose charge the patients are, or patient is. In other words, where in a hospital, the doctor engaged, has between him and the patient, established the doctor and patient relationship, by accepting him/her, for treatment purposes, the said doctor has a duty of care, and has to exercise the same, with skill attendant to modern medicine and G surgery, under permitting circumstances. Such general duty, I better add, is not subject to dissection into a number of a component parts, to which different duty of care, apply, or combination of both, i.e. that the investigation and or treatment of the plaintiff was in accordance with current standards of medical practice, or that, the plaintiffs injuries H were not caused by any negligence on behalf of the defendants. In this case, the defendants are adopting, both approaches.

Dutifully digging into the evidence, as adduced will give nothing, but the truth on the matter, whether there was negligence on the part of the hospital. It is a finding of fact I that the minor was referred to the defendant hospital on 21.1.1991 with a hurt hand, and it is conceded A by Dr. Kirunga, that the minor was not treated on this day. But Exhibit "P.A.", shows, what I assume was symptomatic diagnosis:- "dislocation of left arm - Like Green stick fracture - X-ray, kesho" dated 21.1.1990. It is therefore ....., and perhaps good sense as well, that where the doctor is himself under a duty of care, he has to apply such B care, throughout, right from time, he has received the patient, knowing as we should, that the body, does not function, as a stop-watch, - operate as and when the doctor wants.

The reasons that Dr. Kirunga gave, for not treating the minor on 21.1.1991, was that it was an X-ray day, and that the said minor had eaten. Such, in my humble mind being C the reason for sending the patient back home, after receiving her, is flabbergasting and unacceptable, for if it was an X-ray day, then X-ray examination was the most needed, at that material time, to determine the extent of the harm, and if I have to surmise, I D cannot imagine, that there were no emergency facilities, either. The reason for not treating the minor on 21.1.1991, is given by Dr. Kirunga, thus:

> On 21.1.1991 it would be impossible, as it was X-ray day, and second the child had eaten, and normally six hours had to elapse after eating, before anaesthesia can be E administered, to avoid committing respiring vomit resulting in ugly consequences.

With respect, if X-ray had not been taken, the extent of harm was unknown, and as F such, the anaesthesia administration, could not be contemplated, in the first place. I thought, in my humble unprofessional view, that it was the X-ray examination, which would have led to the conclusion, whether or not anaesthesia, should be administered. But it was an X-ray day, and why the minor was not X-rayed, we need revelation by G divine power. Further, the said learned doctor, does not seem to have tried even a small inquiry, to find out as to how many more hours, had to pass, for the child to qualify for the anaesthesia administration, as admitting the child to await the lapse of such hours, would have made a lot of difference, than sending her to home village altogether. And H to expect proper management of such hurt condition, whose extent was not even known to a doctor was to expect too much. With a lot of difference, but with respect, this way and manner of dealing with a patient, hardly accords with the exercise of reasonable skill I and care, in the treatment of the patient. For, certainly sending a known patient back home, in villages where facilities are known to be wanting, means late diagnosis, A primary treatment delayed, as of course in the meantime, no therapy has been given. The consequences of the same, can be extremely serious, as irreversible changes can take place, in the body, or affected area, which actually in my view, took place. The B hand deterioration process, had no stop watch system i.e. stop when the child is sent home, or otherwise unattended, but resume the process, when the doctor is around, -but the purpose of going to hospital, is to have the same arrested immediately.

If it may be recapitulated, further and I think, it should be, the minor was dressed in, C P.O.P. on 22.1.1991, after the X-ray examination necessitated such a course of action, and it was not long after, that the child felt pains - after such P.O.P. installation, - and this is conceded by Dr. Kirunga thus:

D On the 22.1.1991, when the plaintiff came claiming the child was having pains, I cut part of the P.O.P. After that the child said, she was not feeling pains any more.

This first shows, that immediately, the P.O.P. was already demonstrating itself as ....., E and the plaintiff dutifully reported, as earlier warned. While I may concede, that the learned doctor did, the needful at that time, I must submit, that what he did was cosmetic, in the circumstances. for, in my modest view, such was the danger signal, and reasonable skill and care, would have demanded circumspection, by monitoring the F progress, instead of discharging her, to the village. But the learned doctor knew the potential dangers attendant to P.O.P., for in that direction, Dr. Kirunga said:

The P.O.P., is know for impairing blood circulation. G

I am heartily thankful to him, for this disclosure. If I get the doctor right, he means that the P.O.P. may become tight, causing increasing severe pains, loss of sensation, impairing blood circulation, leading to gangrene and hence loss of limb, or a functionally useless limb, - an actuality that the minor experienced, and suffered. But with even H greater respect to Dr. Kirunga, if the pains signal, were already setting in, on the very day, and were rightly reported to him, I would have imagined, that the very Surgeon, who should have professionally anticipated such complications, should have made certain that, not only the cast, or P.O.P. is adequately adjusted, but too, the patient is I carefully monitored, so that, if such warning signs persist, the P.O.P. is split. And it beats my imagination, why the minor, was without A prejudice, not attended on her arrival on 25.1.1991, the doctor only to be rudely awakened, to the fact, that the fingers were getting black on 26.1.1991. In my humble view, failure to take adequate precautions, or act promptly, when the signs of trouble appeared, and to let the patient to go hence, without thorough observations and to B leave him unattended on the 25.1.1991, when she reported, is indefensible, and hardly can it be said, that reasonable standard of care, and skill were applied.

The defendants averments that, it was for the plaintiff's father P.W.1 to take, the minor immediately it felt pains, to hospital, has above been answered successfully in my C view, that as pains set in almost immediately after the P.O.P. was installed, the report, was accordingly made to Dr. Kirunga. It was for Dr. Kirunga, to monitor the same, considering the potentialities of the harm - but he did not, with respect. But if I may go further, may I peep, into what kind of information the doctor ought to give to his D patient, and whether the information he gave to the minor's father P.W.1 was commensurate with the occasion, and the harm being experienced. In the case of: Sidaway v Board of Governors of Bethlem Royal Hospital, and Maudsley Hospital 4[1985] A.C. 871, [1985)]1 All. E.R. 643 H.L., it was held that, it was settled E English Law, that when a doctor decides, what he ought, or ought not, to tell his patient, about the risks of the proposed procedure, the lawfulness of what he does, will be principally judged by tests founded, on the evidence of appropriate contemporary standards of professional care. That is the doctor, will be found to have been in F breach of his duty of care, to his patient, if he did not make enough disclosures, and the patient satisfied the court, that, he has suffered harm, as a consequence of the non-disclosure. And coming to think of our mother-land, I would in trepidation, fear, to imagine, and worse refuse to hear, that, our circumstances would demand less G modern and contemporary standards of professional care; in the information, being given to the patient, as to his diagnosed ailment. In Sida-way case, (supra), Lord Temele Man, in annunciating the type, and nature of information, to the patient, by his doctor, said thus: H

At the end of the day, the doctor, bearing in mind the best interest of the patient, and bearing in mind the patient rights, to information which will enable the patient to make, a balanced judgment, must decide what information should be couched. The Court will I award damages, against the doctor,

KATITI J

A if the Court is satisfied, that the doctor blundered, and that the patient was deprived of information which was necessary for purposes, I have outlined above.

I would draw an educative lesson from the above, that when the doctor and patient B relationship exists, and the doctor decides to give his patient information about his/her ailment, such information must be such as to enable the said patient to make a balanced judgment, in respect of his/her ailments, or signs pertaining to the same, and such information, must, circumstances permitting, be consistent with contemporary standards, of professional medical care. C

In this case, without prejudice to the fact, that the minor did any way report about the pains setting in, on that very day, and therefore, Dr. Kirunga should have been on alert, the doctor knowing the child's problem only told P.W.1, that if the minor felt pains, he should be sent to Hospital immediately. With respect, Dr. Kirunga did not divulge D enough to P.W.1, and the minor, about the potential dangers involved, including possible amputation of the affected arm. From the above, the patient having not been attended, or otherwise, even after symptomatic diagnosis on 21.1.1991, when she should have been and hence delayed treatment, on the 22.1.1991 with P.O.P. E straight occasioning pains showing it had not professionally been installed, and, the cast or P.O.P. being just cut in part instead of monitoring her, considering the dangers known to D.W.1 Dr. Kirunga, her not being attended on 25.1.1991, when she returned in treating pain, only to be attended on 26.1.1991, when the gangerous process was F already setting in, and the non-disclosure of the real dangers potential to the harm, suffered by the minor, before being discharged to their village, show that by any stretch of imagination of the same, no reasonable care and skill, founded on the appropriate contemporary standards of professional care, were applied to this patient. I hold and G find in my view, that, the hospital was negligent in the treatment of the patient, and it is so guilty, and I so find.

The general damages sought are, Shs. 5,000,000/=, interest at 7%, from filing of the suit etc. for loss of the limb. The plaintiff did not even elaborate on how such figure was H reached. But I can hardly blame him, as this is a difficult area, scaring even old hands in this business. But as it was pointed out in the case of Admiralty Commissioners v SS Susquehanna [1926] A.C. 665, and approved in West v Shepheld [1964] A.C. 326, damages for tort, or even breach of contract, are such damages, which so far as I money can compensate, will give the injured party, reparation for the wrongful act. After all, as it was pointed out, in West v Shepheld [1964] A.C. 326 money A cannot renew the physical frame of the limb etc., that, has been battered, and all the court, can do is to award sums which must be regarded, as given reasonable compensation. In this case, in my view, considering the current money value, I hereby award Shs. 1,200,000/=. That I think meets the justice of the case, and such amount B is so awarded, with costs and prayed interests.

Ramadhani, J.A.: The applicant, Shembilu Shefaya, was sued by the respondent, Omari Ally, in Dochi Primary Court and won the case. So Omari appealed H successfully to the District Court of Lushoto. Then Shembilu, the applicant, appealed to the High Court but without success. He now wants to appeal to this Court.
The judgment of Mr. Shungu, Principal Resident Magistrate (Extended Jurisdiction) was read over to the applicant in Lushoto District Court on 13/12/1989. However, the 14 I days in which he was to file his notice of appeal elapsed without his doing so. A

The applicant then filed an application in the High Court for extension of time to file a notice of appeal. that application was dismissed by Mushi, J. because "ill health without elaboration cannot amount to a good reason for extending time to file notice of appeal ... after a delay of about five months." B
The applicant has come to this Court with the same prayer for extending time to file a notice of appeal. His affidavit in support of this application does not provide the elaboration which was wanting before Mushi, J. Even at the hearing he merely insisted that the disease he had was not one for hospital treatment and that the local doctors C could not be available to bear witness to that fact. Now, that, as properly points out by the respondent in his counter-affidavit, could be alleged by any body with impunity. For court work we need something more than excuses.
Then the applicant merely attacked Mushi, J. that the period which elapsed between D the decision and the filing of the application was not five months but fifty days. But fifty days is neither a short period nor excusable.
No sufficient reason has been given for the delay and as such I cannot see any reason E for enlarging time. The application is dismissed with costs.

Mfalila, J.A.: This matter concerns two applications which were consolidated by order of this Court dated 3rd July, 1992. These are application Nos. 13 and 29 of 1991. In F Application No. 13 of 1991, the applicant is D.P. Valambhia and Transport Equipment Limited are the respondents, while in Application No. 29 of 1991, the roles are reversed, Transport Equipment Ltd. are the applicants and D.P. Valambhia is the respondent. At this stage, a brief historical background would be in order. In Dar es G Salaam High Court Civil Case No. 240 of 1989, M/S Transport Equipment Limited, sued D.P. Valambia whom they had Commissioned to collect on their behalf, certain monies due to them from the Government of Tanzania. This Commission was worth $ 150,000, but they alleged that D.P. Valambia had made fraudulent attempts to have H paid to his personal account abroad a sum of money far in excess of his entitlement. D.P. Valambia denied the allegation and counter-claimed on the basis that he was entitled to 45% of the contract sum due to Transport Equipment Limited. On the I hearing date, the plaintiffs did not appear, the suit was therefore dismissed and the judge entered judgment in favour of the respondent on his counter-claim. That was on A 12th February 1991. On 14th February 1991, the plaintiffs Transport Equipment Ltd., filed with the Registrar of the High Court a notice of appeal, that they intended to appeal to this court against the whole of the Ruling and Judgment of the High Court. This B notice for one reason or another was never served on D.P. Valambia the prospective respondent in the intended appeal until two months later on 19th April 1991 when D.P. Valambia filed a notice of motion, instituting Civil Application No. 13 of 1991 in which he prayed to move a judge of this Court for an order that the notice of appeal filed by C the respondents Transport Equipment Limited be struck out on the ground that some essential step in the proceedings had not been taken and/or has not been taken within the prescribed time, and for an order that the costs of and incidental to this application may be paid by the said respondents. This application was supported by two affidavits D deposed to by the applicant D.P. Valambia and one Hamisi Dihoni a clerk in the Chambers of Maira & Co. Advocates, the applicant's Counsel. The respondent Transport Equipment through their Counsel E.H. Mbuya, opposed this application and filed two counter affidavits. Counter affidavit I was deposed to by Miss Cecilia Joyce E Sichalwe, A Secretary in Mr. Mbuya's office, while counter affidavit II was deposed to by Mr. Evarist Mbuya himself.

Before this application was disposed of, Transport Equipment Limited filed a notice of motion to move the Court for an order that the time for serving the respondent with a F copy of the notice of appeal be extended up to the date the respondent received the said notice of appeal and for an order that costs of and incidental to this application abide the result of the said appeal. This was registered as Civil Application No. 29 of 1991. When Civil Application No. 13/91 came up for hearing before Omar, J.A., G Mr. Mbuya applied orally to have that application consolidated with his client's application No. 29/91. After hearing the arguments, Omar, J.A. dismissed the application holding that "Lumping the said applications together would not meet the ends of justice because each application has its own separate object to pursue." Mr. H Mbuya was dissatisfied with this refusal to consolidate and he took it on reference before the Court. The Court consisting of Makame, Kisanga and Ramadhani, JJA, allowed the reference stating at page 2 of the typed Ruling:

I We think with respect to refuse to consolidate would be to

A fragment the process and delay the outcome. We are satisfied that to consolidate would be the better course in the circumstances and we so order.

This Order led to these consolidated proceedings before me involving Civil Applications Nos. 13 and 29 of 1991. B

For my part, in dealing with the present applications, I did not lose sight of the decision of this Court in Civil Appeal No. 34/88 where the problem facing the Court and the way counsel for the appellant sought to go about it are similar to those facing me in the present applications. In that appeal, Arusha International Conference Centre v. C Damas Augustine Ndemasi Kavishe, the question arose as to whether a notice of motion to save an appeal could properly be taken out in answer to another notice of motion which had sought to have that appeal struck out as being incompetent. This to me appears to be what Transport Equipment Limited were trying to do in their notice D of motion in Civil Application No. 29 of 1991, namely to save their notice of appeal from being struck out as prayed for in Civil Application No. 13/91. In that appeal, the Arusha International Conference Centre was appealing against the decision of the High Court granting an injunction against it, restraining it from evicting the respondent from E a residential house. When the matter came up for hearing, Counsel for the respondent orally took a preliminary objection that an essential step had not been taken in that the appellant had failed to extract the decree being appealed against and make it part of F the record of the intended appeal. However the Court refused to entertain this oral applications being against the rules, but he was allowed to file the necessary notice of motion in which he sought to have the appeal struck out as being incompetent. At the resumed hearing, Counsel for the appellant filed a notice of motion seeking extension G of time to file the memorandum and record of appeal and leave to file a supplementary record of appeal. Faced with this situation, the Court (Kisanga, J.A) stated:

H It thus became apparent that the situation was getting confused because a notice of motion to save an appeal could not properly be taken out in answer to another notice of motion which had sought to have the appeal struck out as incompetent. It was accordingly directed that the first motion raising the preliminary objection be heard first and depending I on the outcome thereof the subsequent motion seeking an extension

A of time to file the memorandum and record of appeal and leave to file supplementary record of appeal could then be heard.

After hearing the first motion to strike out the appeal, the Court held that failure to B extract a decree and to include it in the record of appeal in terms of Rule 89(2) of the Court of Appeal Rules was fatal making the appeal incompetent and was accordingly struck out. Regarding the other application by Counsel for the appellant for the extension of time to lodge the memorandum and record of appeal as well as to file a C supplementary record of appeal the Court held:

In the light of this ruling, (i.e. that the appeal is incompetent and was therefore struck out) it would now be pointless to entertain the application for extension of time. The D application for extension of time to file the memorandum and record of appeal presupposes that there is already a notice of appeal in existence. But the notice of appeal which brought into being the appeal which has just been struck out, disappeared with the striking out of the appeal. So that there is now a clean plate as it were with nothing on it. E If the appellant wishes to lodge a proper appeal he will have to start afresh by applying for an extension of time to give notice of his intention to appeal. But this Court has no jurisdiction to grant such extension. That jurisdiction is vested in the High Court under F section 11(1) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act.

In my view, this is what Omar, J.A. had in mind when he refused to consolidate Civil Application No. 13/91 with Application No. 19/91 which seeks to save the notice of G appeal from being struck out as prayed in Civil Application No. 13/91. But even with these two applications having been consolidated, I intend to deal with them on the lines adopted in Civil Appeal No. 34/88 quoted above. I will therefore start with Civil Application No. 13/91.

As indicated earlier, the applicant in this application is seeking an order that the notice H of appeal filed by the respondent be struck out, because some essential step in the proceedings has not been taken and/or has not been taken within the prescribed time as required by Rule 77 (1) of the Court of Appeal Rules 1979 which provides as follows: I

MFALILA JA

A 77 - (1) An intended appellant shall, before, or within seven days, after lodging a notice of appeal, serve copies of it on all parties who seem to him to be directly affected by the appeal; but the Court may, on an exparte application, direct that service need not be effected on any person who took no part in the proceedings in the High Court. B

At the hearing of this application, Mr. Marando who appeared for the applicant, submitted that there were two essential steps which were not taken. First, he said, the respondents did not serve the applicant with the notice of appeal as required by Rule 77 C (1) quoted above. Secondly, he said that the respondents did not send to the applicant a copy of their letter applying for certified copies of the record, thus disqualified themselves from the benefits of the exception in Rule 83 (2) regarding the computation of time. In the circumstances, he said, the respondents should have filed D the memorandum of appeal by 19/4/91 i.e. within 60 days of their filing the notice of appeal.

Before proceeding further with this application, I think I should deal first with the question regarding its validity. This application was undoubtedly brought under the provisions of Rule 82 which provides as follows: E

82. A person on whom a notice of appeal has been served, may at any time, either before or after the institution of the appeal, apply to the Court to strike out the notice or the appeal, F as the case may be on the ground that no appeal lies or that some essential stop in the proceedings has not been taken or has not been taken within the prescribed time. (The emphasis is supplied).

In the present case, the application to strike out the notice of appeal was filed before G the applicant was served with the notice of appeal, thus making him unqualified to mount this application under the above quoted rule. In this connection Mr. Marando submitted, rightly in my view, in the light of the observations by the defunct East African Court of H Appeal in Osongo and another v Republic [1970] EA 170, that since at the time he was orally addressing the Court on the notice of motion, he had already been served with the notice of appeal, this application is valid under Rule 82. In the Osongo case, it was contended for the respondent that the application I was incompetent because it was filed before the application to the High Court. The A Court held at page 171 B:

We think that a motion is an oral application and therefore that it is made at the time when the applicant addresses the Court or judge, not when the notice of motion is filed. This B is borne out by the wording of the prescribed form of the notice of motion.

Indeed the word used in the Rule is "apply" not "file". Since therefore in this C application the applicant was served with the notice of appeal on 25/4/91, he was already served with the notice at the time he was addressing me on 30/7/92, and that therefore it comes within the provisions of Rule 82 and is accordingly valid.

Reverting now to the first of the steps which were not taken, Mr. Marando said that D he was served with the notice of appeal dated 14th February 1991 on 25/4/91. This Notice was lodged with the High Court on 19th February, 1991. Under Rule 77 (1) it should have been served within seven days from 19th February, 1991, i.e. by 27th February, 1991.

The respondents have conceded throughout that the notice of appeal which they E lodged with the High Court on 19th February, 1991, was not served on the applicant within seven days and that it was served two months later on 25/4/91. But Mr. Mbuya submitted on behalf of the respondents that there are sufficient grounds not to strike out the notice of appeal and for extending the time within which to serve it. He said that F the notice of appeal was not served on the applicant due to a mix up in his office. Mr. Mbuya then proceeded to explain this mix up. He said that on 14/2/91, he drafted the notice of appeal and indicated that copies were to be served on the applicant through his two advocates. On 18/2/92, he drafted a letter to the Registrar, requesting for G certified copies of proceedings and indicated that copies of the letter were to be sent to the applicant's advocates. This letter was referenced EHC/501/TeL/HCC 210/89 dated 18/2/91. The relevant envelopes were typed, but the mix-up occurred when it H came to putting the contents in them. Instead of putting in each envelope a copy of the notice and a copy of the letter, his secretary put in one envelope two copies of notices and in the other two copies of the letter. As it turned out, the envelope addressed to Marando & Co. contained the two copies of the notices. This envelope remained in I Mr. Mbuya's office undelivered until April. The other envelope addressed to Maira &

Co., had the two copies of the letter, but this according to Mr. Mbuya, was handed A by him personally to a clerk in the chambers of Maira & Co. for delivery to his employers. The clerk is Hamisi Dihoni. All this information is contained in affidavits I and II deposed to by Miss Sichalwe and Mr. Mbuya himself. But in his affidavit, Hamisi Dihoni stated that he was handed an envelope by a secretary in Mr. Mbuya's office B on 25/4/91 for delivery to Maira & Co and that this envelope contained a notice of appeal dated 14th February, 1991, and a letter reference No. EHC/301/TEL/HCC 210/89 dated 18th February, 1991, and that he delivered these documents to Mr. Maira of Maira & Co. Advocates. C

I will start with the non delivery of the notice of appeal. Rule 77(1) was not complied with due to mistake by Counsel. The question is whether this is sufficient reason. Mr. Marando submitted that the notice of appeal was not served on the applicant because of negligence and inaction on the part of his learned colleague, counsel nor the D respondents, and that this negligence and inadvertence cannot excuse the non-appliance with Rule 77 (1). This Court has held on a number of occasions that lapses of a minor nature on counsel's part, may be excused, but where counsel's conduct amounts to negligence or inaction leading to non-appliance with a mandatory statutory E requirement, this Court will not be easily moved to condone the conduct. In this case, by Mr. Mbuya's own admissions, he seems to be guilty of negligence and inaction at two levels. Having prepared the notice of appeal and the letter applying for copies of proceedings timeously, it is really inexcusable that the documents were wrongly F placed in the envelopes and then left the envelope addressed to Mr. Marando lying in his office for over two months! Yet he knew or he is supposed to know the mandatory provisions of Rule 77 (1). Quite clearly, by this kind of conduct, counsel for the respondents was doing very little to protect the interests of his clients. In Civil Appeal G No. 9/84, Mrs. Grace Frank Ngowi v Dr. Frank Israel Ngowi, this Court rejected the contention by counsel for the applicant that he had not served the notice of appeal on the respondents because he had relied on the undertaking by a registry officer to serve the notice on the respondent which he failed to do and also that he had H inadvertently failed to despatch a copy of the application and a copy of the record to the respondent. The appeal was struck out.

Regarding the copy of the letter applying for copy of proceedings two copies were put in an envelope addressed to Mr. Maira, which never reached him in February or by I the time they filed the notices of motion for an order to strike out the notice of appeal. This A requirement is governed by Rule 83.

83 - (1) Subject to the provisions of Rule 122, an appeal shall be instituted by lodging in the appropriate registry, within sixty days of the date when the notice of appeal was lodged - B

(a) a memorandum of appeal, in quintuplicate;

(b) the record of appeal in quintuplicate;

(c) the prescribed fee; and

C (d) security for the costs of the appeal;

save that where an application for a copy of the proceedings to the High Court has been made within thirty days of the date of the decision against which it is desired to appeal, there shall, in computing the time within which the appeal is to be instituted be D excluded such time as may be certified by the Registrar of the High Court as having been required for the preparation and delivery of that copy to the appellant.

E (2) An appellant shall not be entitled to rely on the exception to sub-rule (1) unless his application for the copy was in writing and a copy of it was sent to the respondent.

Mr. Mbuya stated in his affidavit and at the hearing that he personally handed the F envelope containing the copy of the letter to Mr. Maira's clerk one Hamisi Dihoni for delivery to his employers, and that when he saw the contents of paragraph 3 of Dihoni's affidavit, he confronted him and Dihoni informed him that the particulars in his affidavit which are handwritten had not been inserted by him and that he also recalled the fact G of his handing over to him the envelope containing the copy of the letter ref. No. EHC/501/TEL/CC 210/89/91 dated 18/2/91. This was all the depositions stated about the respondents' compliance with Rule 83 (1), namely that a copy of the letter applying for a copy of proceedings was sent to the respondent. But as Mr. Mbuya H undoubtedly knows, all this is hearsay. He should have filed an affidavit by Hamisi Dihoni confirming their alleged conversation. In a parallel case, Civil Application No.5/87 Kigoma Ali Malima v Abbas Yusuf Mwingamo, the applicant applied to have the appeal filed by the respondent struck out in terms of Rule 82 on the ground I that although the respondent had filed the memorandum and record of appeal in time, he failed to serve the documents on the applicant. In his reply, A counsel for the respondent filed an application also by way of motion for an order that he be granted an extension of time to serve a copy of the memorandum and record of appeal on the applicant. In support of his application for extension of time, counsel stated that on 27/11/86 he had handed the documents to a messenger in his office B one Iddi Selemani Sengumba with instructions to deliver it to counsel for the applicant. He was thus surprised to learn through applicant's application to strike out the appeal that apparently the memorandum and record of appeal had not been served on applicant's counsel. C

This Court held that in the absence of an affidavit by Sengumba that he had tried and failed to serve applicant's counsel, that was no reason let alone sufficient reason before the Court for the failure by respondent to serve the applicant with the memorandum and record of appeal in terms of Rule 77 of the Rules. Hence the application for extension D of time was refused and the appeal was struck out. This is exactly what Mr. Mbuya should have done in this case, namely file an affidavit by Hamisi Dihoni. However, Mr. Mbuya explained his failure to file Dihoni's affidavit, saying that under pressure from his employers, that is Maira and Company Advocates, Hamisi Dihoni was most unwilling E to make an affidavit to contradict what he stated in paragraph 3 of his affidavit. Apparently there was some correspondence on this aspect of the matter between Mr. Mbuya's Chambers and these of Maira & Company which ended with Maira & Co. F vehemently denying the allegation and added that they could not be involved in conduct which was illegal. This letter is annexure R6. But at the hearing of these applications, Mr. Maira submitted that at an earlier hearing, they had brought Hamisi Dihoni along so that Mr. Mbuya could cross-examine him on his affidavit if he so wished, but that Mr. Mbuya had not taken up the offer. Even subsequently, Mr. Maira added, Mr. Mbuya G never thought it necessary to have Hamisi summoned for cross examination on his affidavit.

Mr. Mbuya also tried to prove that the letter of 18/2/91 was sent to counsel for the applicant by pointing out that the letter referred to in paragraph 3 of Dihonis' affidavit, H was not the one he sent on 25/4/91, but the one which was sent in February and that therefore the fact that the applicant referred to this letter, is proof that it reached him in February by the hand of hamisi as he claims. Mr. Maira answered this quite simply by pointing out that was the letter which they received with the notice of appeal on I 25/4/91 and that it was none of their business that it was not the letter Mr. Mbuya had intended to send to A them.

Quite clearly Mr. Mbuya must take all the blame. He knew and he knows the importance of complying with Rule 83 (2) to enable him enjoy the protection under the exception clause in sub-rule (1), yet he made no attempt to keep a record of the fact B that he had handed the letter to Maira's clerk. As Mr. Marando correctly stated, Mr. Mbuya could have achieved this by one of two ways. He could have used a despatch book or made Hamisi acknowledge his receipt of the envelope. This would have been enough proof that the copy of the letter was sent to the applicant was required by C Rule 83 (1) and that therefore he is covered by the exception in that sub-rule. At the lowest Mr. Mbuya could have mitigated the effects of Dihonis affidavit by cross-examining him. The Registrar of the High Court must therefore have issued the certificate under a mistaken belief that the respondent was entitled to it. As matters D stand then, the respondent is not covered by the exception in sub-rule (1) because although he applied for the copy of the proceedings in writing within thirty days, he did not send the copy of the letter to the applicant. Since on my finding the respondents failed to take an essential step in the proceedings, in that they did not, through E negligence and/or inaction serve a copy of the notice of appeal on the applicant as required by of Rule 77 (1), this notice of appeal must be and is hereby struck out. Since also on my finding, the respondents did not send to the applicant a copy of their letter in which they applied for a copy of the proceedings, as required by Rule 83 (2) they are F not covered by the exception in sub-rule (1) and that therefore the Registrar issued them with a certificate under sub-rule (1) while labouring under a mistake of fact. Consequently the period available to the respondents in which to institute the appeal, was sixty days. G
With these findings, it is not strictly necessary for me to consider and determine Civil Application No. 29/91 in which the applicants are seeking an extension of time to serve the respondent with the notice of appeal, namely up to the date the respondent received it. I say it is not strictly necessary because in the reference which ordered H consolidation, the Court appears to have accepted the argument in favour of consolidation to the effect that "the two applications were essentially two sides of the same coin, that if for example, the single judge decided that the present applicant had indeed failed to take essential steps and so strike out the notice, he could not then turn I round in the other application and permit the present applicant to comply with all the formalities and vise versa." Nevertheless with A this in full view, I intend to deal with application No. 29/91 on its merits.

As indicated earlier on in this Ruling, this application was launched by the applicants essentially to save their notice of appeal dated 14/2/91 from being struck out. The basic B position of this court in such matters was clearly set out in Civil Appeal No. 34/88 set out earlier. The power to extend the various periods in the Rules is provided in Rule 8 and this court had the occasion in Civil Application No. 27/87 Dar es Salaam City Council v Jayantlal Pragubhai Rajan to make general comments on the exercise C of the powers under that Rule. The court stated at page 4 of the typed judgment:

It is now well established that under this rule this court has wide powers to extend the time for the doing of any act in terms of the rule, provided that sufficient reason is D shown. However the problem often arises as to what amounts to sufficient reason.

The court then proceeded to state what amounts to sufficient reason and stated at E page 12:

What is discernible from the applicants' affidavit and the submissions by counsel was that the delay was actually due to lack of diligence. A good instance of this is afforded by the F claim that the applicant, having access to the Order of the Chief Justice at the Court of Appeal registry on 23/6/86 did not bring the application because the information was unofficial. Quite clearly that was no evidence of diligence in pursuing the matter. Time and G again the court has stressed the need to comply with the court rules the purpose of which is to provide a timetable for the conduct of litigation. The court's discretion under Rule 8 to extend the time fixed for doing an act is one to be exercised judicially. No doubt the decision whether or not to exercise the discretion in favour of the applicant will depend H on the facts and circumstances of each individual case, but one of the important consideration influencing that decision is whether the application was brought promptly. The inordinate delay in the instant case is clearly a factor which operates against the I exercise of the discretion in favour of the applicant, the absence of any or

MFALILA JA

A valid explanation for the inordinate delay and complete lack of diligence are yet other factors operating in the same directions.

In present application, the failure to serve the notice of appeal was not only due to B negligence and inaction on the part of counsel for the applicants, but the application itself for the extension of time was brought as a saving measure, it was filed in response to another application seeking to strike out the very notice of appeal the applicants were frantically seeking to save from the axe. This application is therefore only a reaction, C one cannot in these circumstances say that the application was promptly brought on sound reasons. There is another difficulty facing this application. Even if this application to extend the time in which to serve the notice of application on the respondent were to be granted, the applicants will still be faced with the problem of instituting the appeal D under Rule 83(1), in that the 60 day period seems to have run out. There is no application seeking to extend the 60 day period in which to institute the appeal by lodging in the registry, a memorandum of appeal, the record of appeal, the prescribed fee and security for the costs of the appeal. Those documents appear to have been E filed on 3rd June 1992 more than a year after the due date.

Mr. Mbuya advanced two other reasons for this court to exercise its discretion under Rule 8 and order extension of time. He said that the intended appeal if allowed to take off, has overwhelming chances of success because of the exceptional circumstances F present in the case. He elaborated on this saying that the learned judge's order refusing an adjournment and his award of the judgment on the counter claims were against the rules of natural justice.

With regard to the claim that the intended appeal has overwhelming chances of G success, the record shows that the suit was dismissed and judgment entered on the counterclaim in default.

The story narrated at the hearing of this application, is typical of what appears to be Mr. Mbuya's style of doing things. He left the whole thing up to the very last moment, unfortunately his client failed to arrive in Dar es Salaam, hence Mr. H Mbuya could not file a defence as ordered by the court. With a little more diligence and application, Mr. Mbuya could have managed to file the defence to the counterclaim by the appointed day. This is so particularly when the amount at stake is considered. I However, likelihood of the intended appeal succeeding, is not in itself sufficient to make this court exercise its discretion in favour of the applicant. Rules of court were created to A act as vehicles to enable this court to dispense justice between parties, and the court's task in this direction is made easier if the rules are complies with. The general rule therefore is that this court will lean towards strict compliance with the rules, only to depart from this general rule in cases where it is clear that strict application would not B be in the interests of justice. In such cases, discretionary powers provided in rules such as Rule 8 would be brought into play. As this court remarked in Civil Application No. 20/87 quoted earlier, the purpose of the court rules is to provide a timetable for the conduct of litigation. In this application, this timetable states that by the time the C applicants filed this application, they were deemed under rule 84 to have withdrawn their notice of appeal. Very good reasons other than negligence and inaction must be firmly established before this timetable can be disturbed. There are neither good reasons nor exceptional circumstances in this case to warrant the disturbance of the timetable D by which litigants are supposed to conduct their affairs.

For the totality of all these reasons, this application to extend the time within which to serve the notice of appeal fails and it is dismissed with an order for costs in favour of D.P. Valambhia the applicant in Civil Application No. 13/91 and respondent in Civil E Application No. 29/91.

The appellant sued the respondents in the High Court for defamation and wrongful A termination of employment. The basis of his suit for defamation was that a defamatory statement relating to him was published to persons not having corresponding interest and duty to receive the publication. The defamatory statement was contained in a probe B team report which instead of being published to the general council of JUWATA which had ordered the probe was published to Kamati ya Usimamizi ya Baraza Kuu (KUBK) and the board of directors of the Workers Development Corporation (WDC) of which he was general manager. And the basis for his complaint against wrongful C termination was that he was not given an opportunity to be heard by the body which terminated his employment. KUBK did give him an opportunity to be heard and in the end recommended that the appellants employment be terminated and the board of directors of W.D.C. terminated his services without giving him an opportunity to be heard. The trial court found the complaints to be baseless on the following grounds: D (a) that the respondents were availed the defence of qualified privilege; and (b) that the appellant was afforded an opportunity to be heard by KUBK. On appeal to the Court of Appeal.

Held: (i) Where a person raises the defence of qualified privilege on the ground that E he had a duty to make the offending statement it must further be shown that the statement was made in good faith and that the person to whom it was made had a corresponding interest and duty to receive it; F

(ii) the report containing defamatory statements was ordered by the general council of the first respondent and was expressly required to be submitted to that body. Publication of the report to members of KUBK when they were not supposed to receive it was wrong;

G (iii) it was necessary to afford the appellant the opportunity to be heard by the body which ultimately decided his fate i.e. the board of directors, because there can be no guarantee that given that opportunity his defence before the board of directors would necessarily be the same as his defence before the probe team.

Makame, Omar and Kisanga, JJ.A.: The appellant sued the first respondent, JUMUIYA YA WAFANYAKAZI TANZANIA (JUWATA), for defamation, and in I the same plaint he also sued the second respondent, the Workers Development

MAKAME JJA, OMAR JJA, KISANGA JJA

Corporation (W.D.C) for wrongful termination of his employment. The second A respondent in a counter-claim sued for unrefunded loans which the appellant had obtained from the said respondent with or without authorization. The High Court in which the action was brought dismissed both the claim and the counter-claim and made an order for costs against the appellant. The appellant is now appealing, but the B second respondent has not appealed against the dismissal of its counter-claim.

The facts of the case may be stated briefly as follows: The appellant was employed by the W.D.C. as its general manager. As part of his duties, the appellant prepared and C submitted a report of the W.D.C. and its subsidiary companies at the annual meeting of the general council of JUWATA: it is the general council of JUWATA, consisting of two to three hundred members, which supervises the affairs of the W.D.C. As the appellant was trying to present his report before the general council, members of the council felt D that the report involved certain inadequacies or unsatisfactory matters which made it necessary to appoint a probe team of seven members to examine the report and submit their findings to the general council at its next meeting. After the report of the probe team was prepared it was presented to the Secretary-General of JUWATA who, E however, submitted it, not to the general council as had been directed, but to the Kamati ya Usimamizi ya Baraza Kuu (KUBK) consisting of 20 to 30 members, and also to the Board of Directors of the W.D.C.

Upon receiving the probe report, the KUBK required the appellant to appear before F it to defend himself against allegations made against him in the report and he did so. In addition to the appellant's defence the KUBK also received from the board of directors of the W.D.C. their comments on the probe report. After that the KUBK proceeded to appoint a select committee to scrutinize further the probe report in the light of the G appellant's defence and the comments by the board of directors of the W.D.C., and then report back to the KUBK. The select committee accordingly submitted its report and after discussing and adopting it the KUBK recommended the termination of the appellant's employment; acting on that recommendation, the board of directors of the H W.D.C. accordingly terminated the appellant's employment.

The appellant's claim for defamation was essentially based on the publication of the probe report to the bodies of persons other than that which had ordered or directed such probe. And the basis for his complaint against wrongful termination was that he I was given no opportunity to be heard by the body which terminated his employment. A

The trial judge dismissed the appellant's claim for defamation on the ground that the first respondent had the defence of qualified privilege. He dismissed the claim for wrongful termination on the ground that such termination was justified in the light of the B appellant's proved or admitted misconducts.

At the hearing of this appeal the appellant was represented by Mr. Lukwaro while Mr. Muccadam appeared for the respondents. Mr. Lukwaro filed a total of eight grounds of appeal challenging the dismissal of his client's suit by the High Court and the failure by C that Court to award him costs after dismissing the counter-claim by the second respondent.

The learned judge found that the report by the probe team did contain statements which were defamatory of the appellant. When dealing with that issue he said inter alia: D

> There is no doubt that some of the publication is defamatory. Matters like adultery imputations and fraud allegations are certainly defamatory.

We are satisfied that this finding was quite justified. There was ample evidence to E support it. However, he misdirected himself by saying that the probe team submitted its report to the general council of JUWATA. For, there was abundant evidence of the appellant and the defence witness, one Mr. Mashashi, that the report by the probe F team was submitted to the KUBK, not to the general council of JUWATA.

As stated earlier, the learned judge found that the first respondent had the defence of qualified privilege available to it. This was so because, in his view, "there was a public G duty to investigate into the activities of the W.D.C. and its general manager". He took the view that once there was that duty then in the absence of any malice, and indeed the appellant conceded the absence of any malice on the part of members of the probe team, the occasion was one of qualified privilege. H

It was established by the evidence that the probe team was appointed by the general council of JUWATA to probe into the affairs of the W.D.C. including those of the appellant as its general manager, and report its findings back to the general council of JUWATA. As already pointed out, however, the report of the probe team was I submitted not to the appointing authority, the general council of JUWATA, but to the KUBK. It is quite apparent that the general council A of JUWATA and the KUBK are two different bodies. The former has two to three hundred members while the latter comprises 20 to 30 members only. The two bodies also differ in their functions. The general council of JUWATA supervises the affairs of the W.D.C. while the KUBK is under the general council and deals with matters of B day-to-day administration.

Where a person raises the defence of qualified privilege on the ground that he had a duty to make the offending statement it must further be shown that the statement was made in good faith and that the person to whom it was made had a corresponding C interest and duty to receive it. Admittedly in the instant case the probe team made the defamatory statements in the performance of the duty imposed on it by the general council of JUWATA, and it was common ground that these statements were made without malice. But the question is: What corresponding interest and duty did the D KUBK have to receive the report? The report was ordered by the general council and was expressly required to be submitted to that body. The circumstances leading to the KUBK receiving the report are not at all apparent. The KUBK was not shown to be the disciplining authority of the appellant, and certainly it was not the authority vested E with the power of appointing or terminating the services of the appellant; on the evidence such powers were vested in the board of directors of the W.D.C. It seems plain, therefore, that the probe report was wrongly published to members of the KUBK when they were not supposed to receive it i.e. when they had no corresponding F interest and duty to receive it, and to that extent the defence of qualified privilege cannot succeed.

As regards the issue of terminating the appellant's employment, there was clear evidence that this was done by the board of directors of W.D.C. The appellant G concedes that this was the proper authority to exercise that power, but his complaint is that he was afforded no opportunity to be heard by that body before the latter terminated him. In dismissing the appellant's claim the trial judge took the view that the appellant's termination was justified in the light of the appellant's proved or admitted H misconducts, such as the loaning of money to himself without authority. With due respect to the learned judge, however, this did not do away with the need to afford the appellant the opportunity to be heard. For one thing, all along the appellant was protesting his innocence against the allegations which were made against him. His I admission of some of the allegations were invariably accompanied by explanations designed to absolve him. In those circumstances if the disciplining authority was A minded to impose a sanction on him, as indeed it did, it was right and proper, in accordance with the principle of natural justice, to hear him before condemning him. Indeed, even if his admissions of the allegations before the probe team were seemingly unequivocal, we think that it was still necessary to afford him the opportunity to put B up his defence before the board of directors although it would necessarily be the same as his defence before the probe team.

Mr. Muccadam, learned counsel for the respondents, contended before us and also in C the High Court that the appellant was duly afforded the opportunity to be heard when he was called upon to defend himself before the KUBK. With due respect to the learned counsel, however, this argument cannot be sustained. First, the KUBK was not the authority which imposed the sanction being complained against. The sanction was D imposed by the board of directors of the W.D.C.; the appellant's appearance therefore ought properly to have been before that body. What is more, and this seems to be even more serious, the evidence shows that the substance of the appellant's defence was not placed before the board of directors. The Deputy Secretary-General of JUWATA, E Mr. Elias Mashashi stated in his evidence for the defence that the report of the KUBK (Ex. D1) was not submitted to the board of directors of the W.D.C. This means that the board of directors terminated the appellant's employment purely on the strength of a bare recommendation by the KUBK, and that was totally wrong. F

We are satisfied that the learned trial judge wrongly dismissed the appellant's claims for defamation and for wrongful termination of his employment.

The second respondent's counter-claim was dismissed but nothing further was said about. The general rule in civil cases is that costs follow the event. That is to say the G successful party is entitled to recover his costs unless there are grounds for ordering otherwise. In this case the appellant was the successful party, as far as the counter-claim was concerned, and according to the general rule he was entitled to recover his costs. H The trial judge gave no reason, and we could find none, for departing from the general rule. On that account we find that the appellant was wrongly denied his costs following the dismissal of the counter-claim against him.

In the result we allow the appeal. The decision of the High Court is set aside, and instead thereof we enter judgment for the I appellant as prayed in the plaint. We award shillings 200,000/= damages for the A defamation and shillings 50,000/= for the wrongful termination of employment. The appellant shall have his costs both in this court and in the Court below, the latter to include costs in respect of the dismissed counter-claim.

Mkude, J.: An interesting point of law arises in this appeal: Is the plea of autrefois acquit available to an accused person whose previous trial has been declared null and C void? The question as framed may be an oversimplification but that is the essence of the point calling for decision in this case. The appellant, Ally Hassan Mpapata, was charged with unlawful possession of Government trophies c/s 67 (l) of the Wildlife Conservation Act, 1974 read with section 59 and paragraph 16 (d) of the Economic and D Organized Crime Control Act, 1984 in the district court of Kilosa. The charge alleged that on 2/7/89, at Msowero Village in Kilosa district he was found in possession of 449 elephant tusks valued at Shs.28,540,000/= the property of the Government. This is an economic offence for which the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions E (hereinafter the DPP) is necessary before a trial in respect of it can be commenced. This is in accordance with the provisions of section 26 (l) of the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act. Subsection (2) of the same section empowers the DPP by notice published in the Gazette to delegate some of his powers in this regard to State F Attorney by specifying economic offenses which require his personal consent and those that can be consented to by State Attorneys. By Government Notices N. 191 of 1984 the DPP reserved to his own consent the prosecution of offences specified in part I of the schedule to the Notice and delegated to State Attorney-in-charge of the zone or G region in which the economic offence took place the power to consent to the prosecution of offences specified in Part II of the Schedule. Offences under the Wildlife Conservation Act fall under Part II of the Schedule and hence fall under the delegated power. The problem arose in this case because the State Attorney who purported to H consent to the prosecution of the offence was not a State Attorney-in-charge as required by the Government Notice.

This point escaped the attention of the trial court and so the trial proceeded and at the conclusion of the trial the accused was acquitted for insufficiency of evidence. The I DPP appealed against the acquittal. In the High Court (before Lugakingira J.) arguments on the merits of the appeal were preceded by two preliminary objection. The first A objection question the competence of the appeal itself. The court held that the appeal was competent and overruled the preliminary objection. The second objection challenged the regularity of the proceedings in that the prosecution commenced on the consent of a person not competent to give such consent. The court held that the B proceedings were a nullity and issued a declaration to that effect. The court then went on to consider the evidence adduced at the trial and came to the conclusion that the learned trial magistrate was justified in acquitting the accused and dismissed the appeal by the DPP. C

The DPP then prepared a fresh charge against the appellant and two others, annexed to it his consent for the prosecution as well as his certificate conferring jurisdiction upon a district court to an economic crime case and filed it in the District Court of Kilosa. The charge and particulars of offence alleged the same offence and was word for word D similar to the charge in the previous trial declared to be a nullity by Lugakingira J. While the case was still pending at the Kilosa District Court the appellant filed an application for bail in the High Court, and when the file was pleased before Lugakingira J. for hearing he declined to hear it and gave his reasons as follows: E

Court: The arrest and re-arraignment of the applicant rises either from a misunderstanding or a disregard of the judgment in which I upheld his acquittal. I cannot embark upon hearing this application without appearing to be a judge in my own cause. F The matter should be placed before another judge.

The authorities obliged and placed the matter before Kyando, J. who proceeded to hear the application and ordered that the matter should be handled by the trial court since G it has been given jurisdiction to try the case under the certificate issued by the DPP. Before leaving the matter Kyando J. made the following observations:

H Thirdly it does certainly not appear to me that Lugakingira J. only nullified the first proceedings in this case. As shown above already he considered also the evidence in the case and was satisfied that even if he were to hold that the proceedings were valid he would still have upheld the acquittal on the evidence - which was weak and could not I sustain a conviction.

MKUDE J

A On all these above points, it is clear that to all intents and purposes, the appeal by the Director of Public Prosecutions in the first proceedings was dismissed on its merits. The reinstitution of the case therefore amounts to an abuse of the process of the courts. However, as is clear, I am here dealing with a bail application. The matter whether the B applicant has already been acquitted in the case is to be properly dealt with by the district court which is trying him. He may deem it necessary to plead autrefois acquit before that court. (emphasis supplied.) C

Armed with the observations of two judges of this court, Mr. Rutabingwa, learned advocate, appeared before the District Court at Kilosa and pleaded autrefois acquit. The learned Resident Magistrate who presided was not impressed by this plea; he rejected it and said: D

I totally concur with Mr. Kamba that the appeal was not heard on merit. The defence of autrefois acquit does not arise in this case. The fact that Hon. Lugakingira J. did not order for retrial of the case did not mean that the Prosecution could not recharge the accused. E

It is the opinion of this court that the acquittal as entered by Hon. Lugakingira J. was if the proceedings were valid but they were not VALID AND HAD NULLIFIED them at the beginning of his judgment. F

The application for defence of autrefois acquit for 1st accused is dismissed. The case is to proceed as scheduled.

The appeal before me now is against this last order of dismissal. Mr. Matupa, learned G State Attorney who appeared for the Respondent/Republic, raised the question whether the order rejecting the plea of autrefois acquit is appealable. He argued that if the plea is accepted by the court and upheld then it is final and appealable immediately but if it is rejected then it is merely interlocutory and therefore not immediately appealable. This H is an interesting point very much like that covering the submission of no case to answer but I find it unnecessary to decide in this appeal and so I refrain from expressing any opinion on it, if only to learn a lesson or two from the observations of my two learned others.

Mr. Rutabingwa faithfully referred to and relied on the observations of Lugakingira J. I both in his judgment and in the note he wrote declining to hear the bail application, as well as the observation of A Kyando J. reproduced above in which he regarded the action of the DPP in filing fresh charges against the appellant and his two friends as an abuse of the process of the courts. While I have every sympathy for his arguments I am unable to accept them. One cannot eat one's cake and have it. Once Lugakingira J. disagreed with Mr. Matupa, B learned State Attorney, on the power of Miss Korosso to consent to the prosecution of the appellant, and declared the trial null and void then, ipso facto, there was no "acquittal" for his lordship to uphold. This is so because the purported acquittal is a necessary part of the very trial that has been declared a nullity. It could not, and, like C those by Kyando J. in the ruling on the application for bail, were not at all necessary for determination of the appeal.
For the above reasons this appeal fails and I dismiss it.
D Appeal dismissed.

Mkude, J.: Keneth Soul Kizito is a young man aged fifteen in 1990 when he was arrested an charged with robbery c/s 285 of the Penal Code. He was found guilty as D charged and sentenced to fifteen years imprisonment on 10/4/91 by the District Court of Ilala at Kisutu. The court also found the accused guilty of assault causing actual bodily E harm and sentenced him to six months imprisonment. The court purported to act under section 300 (1) of the criminal Procedure Act in entering a conviction of assault causing actual bodily harm as there was evidence that the accused stabbed P.W.2 with a knife while committing the robbery and stealing Shs.700/= from the witness.

As the stabbing of P.W.2 was done in order to retain the sum of Shs.700/= the F accused had stolen one offence only was committed and not two. The offence of robbery of which the accused was convicted consisted in stealing the money and the use of violence on the victim in furtherance of the theft. It was therefore wrong for the trial court to invoke the provisions of section 300 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Act. That section provides as follows: G 300-(1) when a person is charged with an offence consisting of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence and such combination is proved but the remaining particulars are not proved he may be convicted of H the minor offence although he was not charged with it. (emphasis supplied).

It is clear from these provisions that the offence of assault causing actual bodily harm could stand alone only if the evidence was not sufficient to establish the offence of I robbery, as for example, where the offence of theft was not proved. But in the present case there was evidence to A prove both the theft and the assault in furtherance of the theft. The combination of these two constitutes the offence of robbery. For these reasons I quash the conviction of assault causing actual bodily harm and set aside the sentence of six months imprisonment. B

The offence of robbery was proved and the conviction is well founded. However, since the accused was below sixteen years when he was convicted the learned District Magistrate erred when he imposed a sentence of fifteen years imprisonment under the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972. The applicable law is the children and Young C Persons Ordinance. In the result the sentence of fifteen years imprisonment is hereby set aside. The accused/appellant is to be sent back to the District Court of Ilala at Kisutu for sentence is accordance with the Children and Young Persons Ordinance. It is so ordered. D

Nchalla, J.: The accused one Pallangyo s/o Kaanandumi had been charged before C Monduli District Court with a traffic offence in respect of reckless driving a motor vehicle on a public road c/ss 42(l)(c) and 63(l)(b) of the Road Traffic Act No. 30/1973. The charge facing the accused was filed in the trial subordinate court on 5/8/91, and D on the same day the said charge was read over and explained to the accused who pleaded not guilty to it. On that day the Public Prosecutor informed the court that the investigation of the case was complete, and applied for a hearing date. The presiding magistrate Mr. A.A. Ngowi, learned Senior District Magistrate, fixed the case for hearing on 22/8/91, and accordingly adjourned the case. E

The record, however, shows that the case was called up for hearing on 16/8/91 instead of the 22/8/91 to which it had earlier been fixed. No reason was recorded for this abrupt change of the date of hearing.

Be that as it may, on 16/8/91 the Public Prosecutor reported to the court thus: F

> I have no police file as the case is not shown in the case list.

It seems to me that the Public Prosecutor's submission on 16/8/91 was genuine and G was well founded as, indeed, the case was not scheduled for hearing on that date, and the Republic was not expected to have summoned its witnesses to appear to testify before the court on that date, which was not a hearing date for the case. Naturally, the H Public Prosecutor did not have the police file with him on that day in respect of the case.

Mr. Ngowi, learned Senior District Magistrate, adjourned the case for hearing on 6/9/91, but did not make any order revoking his previous order which he had made to the effect that the case be heard on 22/8/91. This means that there were now two I subsisting but conflicting orders as to the date the case was supposed to come up for hearing. There was the order that the case be heard on 22/8/91, and the A second order that the same case be heard on 6/9/91. This was a confusion for which the presiding District Magistrate (Mr. Ngowi) was squarely to blame.

The case was not called up for hearing on 22/8/91, but was called up on 6/9/91 in consonance with the second order of the court as follows: B

> P.P.: I have no police file.

Then the court made the following order which has given rise to these revisional C proceedings:

> Court: The case is for hearing. No application for witness summons made to court. The witnesses are resident of Monduli. There are no good reasons as to why should the D prosecution not to proceed with the case as per section 223 C.P.A.
> In this respect, the accused has no case to answer and as such he is hereby acquitted under Section 230 Criminal Procedure Act. E
> Right of Appeal explained.
> Sgd. Ngowi, A.A. SDM. F

From the above synopsis of the proceedings in this case, it is an elementary part of criminal procedure for one to realize that the order of the presiding District Magistrate G in acquitting the accused under section 230 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 was basically premature, hence quite wrong and invalid. What the presiding magistrate did in this case was quite prejudicial, and therefore quite injudicious. The provisions of section H 230 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 cannot be invoked in a situation where there has been no hearing of the case at all. The case before the trial court had not commenced hearing at all; no any evidence had been adduced from either side. Under those circumstances, the trial court could not act under section 230 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 in dismissing the charge and acquitting the accused. The I provisions of section

230 C.P.A., are quite simple, clear, and straightforward; they require no legal A qualification to interpret and understand them. They are those:

230. If at the close of the evidence in support of the charge, it appears to the court that a B case is not made out against the accused person sufficiently to require him to make a defence either in relation to the offence with which he is charged or in relation to any other offence of which under the provisions of sections 312 - 321 inclusive of this Act, he is liable to be convicted, the court shall dismiss the charge and acquit the accused C person. (underlining mine).

It is evident from the underlined part of the above quoted section that before a subordinate court can invoke the provisions of that section in dismissing a charge and acquitting the accused, it must first hear evidence from the prosecution side, and at D the close of that evidence, the court shall make a ruling supported by legal reasons to the effect that the evidence in question has established no case sufficiently to require the accused person to enter his defence.

So, the presiding Senior District Magistrate in this case wrongly applied the E provisions of section 230 C.P.A. that was a serious misdirection which is an error of law which involved a miscarriage of justice on the prosecution side. Consequently, the dismissal of the charge and the acquittal of the accused are wrong and invalid, the same F are hereby quashed and set aside. It is further ordered that the case before the subordinate court be heard de novo before another magistrate of competent jurisdiction, preferably a resident magistrate. The accused be arrested forthwith and be produced before the trial subordinate court at Monduli District Court to answer the G charges for which he was wrongly acquitted. The record of the trial court be remitted back to it together with this ruling/order for it to comply with that order expeditiously.

H Order accordingly.

Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: What is before me is an application for leave to appeal to this Court against the order of the High Court at Arusha, Munuo, J. in respect of costs. A similar application to the High Court was refused by Nchalla, J. in his Ruling dated G 18/10/91, a copy of which is attached.

On behalf the respondents Mr. Ngalo, advocate, has raised a preliminary objection and asked that the application be dismissed with costs. His objection is based on two assertions, to wit, that the application is time - barred and that it does not conform to H Rule 46(3). Of necessity I have to consider and determine the merits of this objection at once.

Mr. Ngalo has said the obvious, that the application was filed long after the period prescribed by Rule 43(b) had elapsed. The application was filed on 16/12/91, i.e. roughly two months after the delivery of the Ruling by Nchalla, J. Under Rule 43(b) I such application should be made within 14 days of the High Court's refusal. A Counsel for the applicant, Mr. Zaffer Ali, has argued that in computing this period of 14 days the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the Ruling of the High Court must be excluded. He has pointed out, correctly, that he applied in writing for the copy of the B ruling with maximum despatch, though he admitted that he did not send a copy of that letter to the respondents. But there is no denying that he filed the application soon after he had obtained the copy of the Ruling.

Mr. Ngalo's arguments are that Rule 43(b) does not provide for such exclusion of C time, and that in any case the failure to send a copy of the letter applying for the Ruling to the respondents should deprive the applicant of the advantage of such exclusion. Mr. Ngalo would have us apply Rule 83(2) mutatis mutandis.

Mr. Ngalo has next contended that the application is not accompanied by a copy of D the order of the High Court's refusal. In his opinion such a copy is required by Rule 46(3), in addition to the copy of the Ruling. To this contention Mr. Zaffer Ali has replied that the copy of the Ruling is sufficient for the purposes of this application. E

I have been unable to accept Mr. Ngalo's submission that the appellant is not entitled to the exclusion of the time that was requisite to obtain the Ruling. True Rule 43(b) does not make any provision to that effect. But I hold that the applicant can fall back on the provision of the basic limitation statue i.e. the Law of Limitation Act, 1971, section F 19(2). that should make a great deal of sense and meet the instincts of justice. Otherwise how can an applicant be expected to come to this Court before he has obtained a copy of the order of the High Court refusing leave? For if he comes without the copy of the order he will not have complied with Rule 46(3) and his application G would be adjudged incompetent.

There is no Rule that is relevant to the present matter which stipulates that an application for a copy of the order of the High Court must be sent to the respondent. And in my considered opinion it is not desirable to extend the rigorous provisions of Rule 83(2) H to applications for leave.

There seem to be some misconception about Rule 46(3) on the parts of both counsel. That provision is in the following terms:

I (3) Every application for leave to appeal shall be accompanied by a copy of the decision against which it is desired to appeal

1992 TLR p277

A and where application has been made to the High Court for leave to appeal by a copy of the order of the High Court.

As far as I understand the Ruling of the High Court that is appended to this application is precisely the kind of order envisaged by that Rule. It is relevant to observe that in many legal contexts these words "order" and "ruling" carry the same meaning and are B mutually interchangeable. Nchalla, J. could, if he had preferred, perfectly used the word "order" instead of the word "ruling" as a heading for his decision. Indeed, a ruling is often enough a decision that pertains to interlocutory matters, such as the instant objection. C

In the upshot the objection is overruled.

Application dismissed. B

Mmila, RM (Ext. J.): On September, 8, 1992 I heard the submissions of both sides in this case which centered on whether or not I, the Regional Magistrate with extended jurisdiction should disqualify myself from presiding in this case on allegations made by C the accused person which are as well supported by his counsels, that he has feelings which destine him to the conclusion that he has no confidence in me.

The defence's submission stemmed from a letter Ref. No. S.S.H/03/108/92 dated D August 28, 1992 written by the accused person addressed to me personally but forwarded to me by his defence counsels vide their letter Ref. No. Y.A.M/Z/92/15 of September, 1, 1992. Both these letters were to the effect that I should disqualify myself from hearing this case. To be precise, the learned defence counsels Ordered me to E disqualify myself before September 4, 1992. Quite a strange order, is it not! The learned state counsel strongly resisted the application.

The first point taken up by the defence is that the circumstances under which the accused person was granted bail in 1991, especially the conditions which were imposed clearly show that the case has been deliberately dragged into political latitude which F is, they argued, unfair. They argued further that the conditions which were imposed were principally intended to isolate the accused person from participating in politics. They impressed that he being a long time politician, and having once been the Chief Minister G of Zanzibar until he was expelled by the ruling party, the accused person is entitled to benefit from political changes which have swept the whole world and this country in particular. They contended that after all these conditions were not even suggested by the prosecution side. They argued that to the mind of a reasonable man, this situation H clearly shows that the presiding magistrate with extended jurisdiction is biased.

Counter - submitting on the point, the state counsel challenged that the conditions which were imposed by the court when the accused person was released on bail do not at I all portray that there was any bias. Mr. Mtembei submitted that since the case facing the accused person concerns matters of national security, condition (d) for example was A rightly imposed. He also argued that it was not absolutely correct to say that those conditions were imposed by the court single handedly because some of those conditions were suggested by the defence side. Similarly, Mr. Mtembei submitted that it is a known fact that those conditions were imposed by the court before the political changes cited B by the defence were in sight, and that since those conditions have never been amended, it cannot be said they were imposed intently to isolate the accused person from participating in politics, therefore it is an unfounded ground that by imposing those conditions the presiding magistrate is, to the view of fairminded persons, biased. C

It is true, as was observed by Lord Justice Denning, M.R., in Janes v National Coal Board [1957] 2 Q.B.55 at pg. 67 that:

D There is one thing to which everyone in this Country is entitled, that is fair trial at which he can put his case properly before the judge ... No cause is lost until the judge has found it so, and he cannot find it without a fair trial, nor can we affirm it.

There is no dispute that we also subscribe to this great proposition. Equally great is E the proposition that:

The honesty and intergrity of a judge cannot be questioned, but his decision may be impugned for error either of law or fact F see Breams Legal Maxims 9th Ed, by W.J. Byrne, Sweet & Maxwell Ltd pg. 61, Of course, there are exceptions. So that an order to withdraw from presiding in a case may be made, there must be sound reasons to the effect that it is expedient to the ends of G justice that is should be made.

Whether or not the presiding magistrate should disqualify himself from hearing a case on the ground of bias requires an objective appraisal of the materials before the Court, and to say that a party has a subjective (albeit firm) apprehension of bias is not of itself H sufficient to warrant, or require, the disqualification of the magistrate. The test to be applied, by objective standards, is whether there is material before the Court to support a conclusion of actual bias on the part of the magistrate or a reasonable apprehension either by parties, or exaction by plain, sober, simple, and stable men and women of I the society that he might not bring an impartial and unprejudiced mind to the resolution of the issues in the case. In other words, there A must be keen grounds that reasonable suspicion exists, or rather there must be serious justification for the alleged mistrust.

It must be remembered however, that the duty of the magistrate to disqualify himself B for proper reasons is matched by an equal duty not to disqualify himself save for proper reasons, and parties right not to be encouraged to believe that, by an application for the disqualification of a magistrate, they can have their case heard by a magistrate though to be more likely to decide a case in their favour.

The question I have to pose therefore is that; to the views of fairminded persons, can C it be said that those conditions were imposed with intents to isolate the accused person from political participations. Are there any grounds to show that reasonable suspicion exists?

The accused person was granted bail in 1991 when the United Republic of Tanzania D was still a single party state. Equally true is the fact that those conditions were not suggested by the prosecution side, but as properly submitted by Mr. Mtembei, most of those conditions were suggested by the defence counsels. To be particular, the court added only one condition out of those which were suggested, that is condition (d). E The Court had the discretion to impose any other conditions as it deemed fit, a fact which has been admitted. In that the said conditions were imposed before the cited political changes, and in as much as they remain unamended, it is quite absurd for the F accused person to complain that their imposition was a measure taken by the court single handedly to make sure that he was politically isolated, hence that the trial magistrate with extended jurisdiction is biased. The suspicion is thus unreasonable.

As to why there had to be condition (d), the accused person, as well as his counsels G are expected to know. As was submitted by Mr. Mtembei, the accused person is faced with a charge bearing on national security matters, which is no secret that it is a sensitive issue. Who knows what the accused had in mind by having those secret documents, should it be proved that he had them? If at all the court is duty bound to see that it balances the facts (materials) before it in all respects, who will therefore accept the H contention that condition (d) was in the circumstances unreasonable? Is it justifiable therefore to argue that the presiding magistrate has dragged the case into political latitudes? I sincerely find that there is no material whatsoever to convince me that I fairminded men and women of the society would have said those conditions are capable of attracting them to think that there has been or there is bias on the part of the A presiding magistrate. This ground is thus spineless as it has failed to stand on the available facts.

The defence's second ground was that their client was embraced when an accusing finger was pointed at him, and that the presiding magistrate was of the impression that B the accused person was in breach of the conditions of bail even without being heard. They added that after the prosecution had cited the occasion which was reported in the Daily News of August 20, 1992, the presiding magistrate pointed out that he also saw such news in the Express news paper, after which the statement that the accused C person was provoking the court was echoed. They alleged therefore that by holding that the accused person was breaching bail conditions before hearing him, the presiding magistrate was wrong, hence that the accused person's feelings that he has no confidence in the presiding magistrate holds water. D

Mr. Mtembei did not say whether or not a finger was pointed at the accused person by the presiding magistrate. However, he said that it was a serious lie that the defence were not heard, challenging that the remark came after all of them were heard, and that he was not sure if the complaint was intended to suggest that the accused person was to E speak on his own, which he said would have been unprocedural.

The general observation is that the allegations of the defence side and the accused person in particular have been wantonly exaggerated for purposes best known to them. To start with, I do not remember to have pointed a finger at the accused person. F Even, had it been so, one would have expected them to make an instant protestation so that the matter could have found its way into the record. They did not do so. Again, they stressed that it was the most serious act the presiding magistrate did which was G responsible to erode the accused person's confidence in the said magistrate. If at all it was true and thus serious, why did they not file affidavits to that effect? Is it proper in their good minds to bring such serious allegations in a form of letters? I hastily observe that the so called serious act has been presented below the standard expected of H them. One would have expected them to have filed affidavits to show that the alleged act was actually committed and thus serious.

However, even if I were to admit that a finger was actually pointed to the accused person, which I have said I do not remember, I dare say that it would not have been fatal. It is clear that the reports contained in the Daily News of August 20, 1992 as I well as the Express indicated that the accused person was in breach of conditions of bail. Those A conditions were ordered by the court, and the court has the right to see that the orders it makes are strictly followed. At the time the court imposed those conditions, it did not venture a joke, the court meant a serious business. Since the court has inherent power to see that its decisions are observed and strictly followed, it has an equal right to B intervene whenever breaches are evident. Were it not so, the existence of courts themselves would have been questionable.

The most awkward part of these allegations is their contention that the remark was issued without giving chance to the defence to be heard. That is a huge lie! As C correctly submitted by Mr. Mtembei, the remark was made after both sides were heard, the record can tell. The remark referred to was versed as follows:

D Court: I am warning that pending the ruling which I will have to deliver, the accused person must abide to the conditions which were laid down. The act of contravening them is a sign of disrespect to the Court orders, indeed, an act of provocation to the Court. E

Then came the order to the effect that ruling was to be delivered on September 4, 1992. With all due respect, I candidly revolt to the submission by the defence that the remark was issued before they were heard. Seriously, basing on what I have quoted above, their submission on the point was a deliberate huge lie. Perhaps the question is; what F did they intend to achieve by such distinguished lie. Is it not to create the non - existent bias on the part of the presiding magistrate? Is it what is expected from officials of the court of their calibre? Advocates, as officials of the Court, have a prima facie duty to G help the court reach justiful decisions on the footing of the law, a task which can only be accomplished if they believe, and undertake to see that truth is the yardstick. Not otherwise.

There are a number of other untruthful allegations which the defence counsels swallowed H from the accused person without proper evaluations. There were high - lighted by Mr. Mtembei in the course of his counter - reply.

In the first place, Mr. Mtembei argued that the accused person's allegation in his letter that the court forced the Nairobi based lawyers to withdraw from defending him was a lie, adding I that they did so on their own volition. The defence side did not respond to this A allegation.

I entirely agree with Mr. Mtembei that the Nairobi based lawyers withdrew from the case on their own volition. In essence, and as the record will support, those lawyers made several futile attempts to deliberately mislead the court by forcing it into B discussing its own decisions, something they know or, they ought to have known, was unprocedural and/or ipso facto illegal. Where on earth did they hear such a practice in respect of decisions of the kind? Not even in Kenya. Their conduct was a clear example of disrespect to decisions of the court. This is because they knew, and were canningly C adamant to appreciate that, if they felt dissatisfied with the decisions this court had delivered, their only open forum was to proceed, by way of appeal, to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania. Impatience could have been responsible to make them blind to the laid down procedures. So that when one of them was stopped from dragging the D court into what would otherwise have been grave misdirection, he became suddenly vexed and decided to withdraw. The court had no other option but to endorse the withdrawal. His colleague followed suit the next day. Under such circumstances, where is the hand of the court on the stop they took? Is the defence really justified to think E that they were actually forced out by the court? It would be quite misleading were we to agree to the feelings of the defence on the point. Let us agree that a spade will always remain a spade.

Similarly, Mr. Mtembei submitted that the accused person lied when he said in his F letter that soon after Nowrojee had dropped out, he had no other counsel to defend him and was refused time to look for another lawyer, Mr. Mtembei submitted that on the day Nowrejee dropped out, Mr. Jaffar was still in the employment of the accused person, and that he was not in court for reasons which were never disclosed. He G insisted that since Mr. Jaffar was the one who had particularly suggested the hearing dates to which Mr. Mtembei himself consented, it could not be said that the case proceeded without allowing the accused to be represented. Again, there was no response from the defence on this point. H

Once again, I agree with Mr. Mtembei that the position was as he submitted. After Nowrejee had dropped out, Mr. Jaffar was still in the employment of the accused person. His failure to appear in Court on that day was not backed by any reasons. Since he was the person who had suggested the hearing date, and it being true that I justice delayed is justice denied, the case had to proceed. Far from the fact that the accused untruthful when he said he had no counsel by that day, A he was also untruthful when he said that he asked to be granted time so that he could engage another lawyer and that his request was turned down. The truth is that such a request was raised on the day that followed and he was granted time. It appears that the B accused person, with due respect, is fond of fabrications. Let truth prevail.

Further, Mr. Mtembei, submitted that the accused person lied when he wrote in his letter that he was favoured in that he was given seven weeks by the court in which to prepare his reply to the submission which was made by the defence counsels. Mr. C Mtembei submitted that he had asked for two weeks time in which to prepare his reply but that the defence counsels asked the court to extend the time further on the ground that they had to attend other matters in other courts there in between. Again, the defence did not respond to this point. D

As submitted by Mr. Mtembei, the question of favouritism here is another such connection. The truth is to be sought from the Court record. The relevant part is as follows:

E Mr. Mtembei: I pray for the time in which to prepare myself to respond to their arguments quite clearly. I have to conduct a research. Two weeks time will do.

Mr. Mchora: We agree that the arguments we have raised are quite serious and we feel F that it will not be proper for him to rush to reply. We also agree that delaying the rights is not proper. We have been given responsibilities of other matters for example in Dar es Salaam. The two weeks' time he has requested will take us to 1.7.1992. I, personally will be on 2.7.1992 in the High Court at Mtwara and so is G my colleague. On 13.7.1992 I will be in the High Court at Tanga together with this colleague of mine. That will be up to 24.7.1992. We pray that more time will be required. H We propose 5.8.1992 when we shall proceed on the day to day basis.

Mr. Mtembei: No objection. I

Order: Hearing on 5 - 11.8.1992.

MMILA RM (Ext. J)

Having attended to what exactly transpired on that day, I resolutely endorse the A submission by Mr. Mtembei that once again, the accused person was untruthful when he alleged that he was favouredly granted seven weeks in which to prepare himself. The accused person know, or ought to have known that the hearing of the case was fixed on 5.8.1992 on the request of his own lawyers, not because the court intended to give B more time to Mr. Mtembei so that he could thoroughly prepare himself as complained. After all, the ceaseless extortion of the court has always been to do justice. It would not have been considered as something wrong even where for example, the Court would have granted him such time. It appears that, by such numerous connections, the C accused person is all set to mud sling the courts' good image into peoples eyes. No fairminded persons are expected to say, on those allegations, that the presiding magistrate was in any way biased.

To follow suit is their allegation that the presiding magistrate has formed sort of D friendship with the state counsel. Their allegations are based on the erroneous belief that the state counsel was supplied with proceedings by the presiding magistrate. Mr. Mtembei told the court that he applied for the proceedings to the Registrar and that he was supplied the said proceedings. He also revisited the administrative practice earlier E on explained in the Court as to how a party may secure the proceedings.

With respect, this complaint is similarly baseless in that what Mr. Mtembei told the court is the truth. The presiding magistrate had no hand in supplying the said proceedings to F the state counsel as all such matters are in the hands of the Registrar. It is equally true that I thoroughly explained this in one of the many rulings I have so far written, but that once again, the defence is illegally questioning my decision on the point. I observed the other time that the accused person himself has on several occasions secured G proceedings of this case at various stages. He knows better than I do how he obtained them. In that I was not the one who supplied them to him, most probably he was supplied them by the Registrar. Then why not the prosecution side? How does the questions of friendship between the presiding magistrate and the state counsel arise? H Is the defence trying to imply that it is justice to supply the proceedings of this case to them, but that it is injustice when supplied to the state counsel? What is the supposed rationale for their allegation on the point? It is on this basis that I find it quite ridiculous to be told that because the state counsel was supplied with proceedings, then the I presiding magistrate has established sort of friendship between him and the state counsel. It is time all of us know that it costs A nothing to tell truth, Reality must always be faced courageously.

Further, in his submission, Mr. Mtembei told this court that to him, the various applications which were lodged and determined right from the time when the case was B transferred to the presiding magistrate to date are indicative that the accused persons' feelings were pre-hatched. He said that on September, 4, 1991 one of the accused's counsels Mr. Jaffar wanted to know if the presiding magistrate had any right to hear this case, a remark which was followed by an unsuccessful application to the effect that C such magistrate had no jurisdiction to hear and determine this case. Mr. Mtembei added that their appeal to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania failed on technicalities.

Mr. Mtembei submitted similarly that the defence filed another application before Dahoma, J., in which they asked for the trial magistrate to be disqualified, the D application was refused. He added that this was followed by another such application which was lodge in the High Court in Mainland Tanzania. Again, the application was refused.

Mr. Mtembei submitted that on the basis of the trend of those applications he was E quite sure that the arguments currently raised by the defence are baseless, only that their interest has always been to make sure that the case does not proceed to hearing, most probably because the accused person has no reasonable defence to offer. Mr. Mtembei asked for the application to be dismissed. F

Judging from what has been taking place right from when this case was transferred to the presiding Regional Magistrate with extended jurisdiction, one cannot avoid a thrust support to Mr. Mtembei's submission that the accused person's feelings were prehatched so that the case may keep on dragging in court. I may add that may be G the accused person intends that this particular magistrate should not preside, which will connote that the accused person is after a magistrate of his own choice. This cannot be accepted. Otherwise, how does one explain the fact that the accused person, with the aid of his counsels, keeps on raising the same matters which had been adjudicated H upon? Or rather how does one explain those applications which were based on connected facts such that which was heard and determined by his Lordship justice Dahoma as well as that one which was filed in the High Court at Dar es Salaam? I What about the various falsified allegations which have been discussed above? It is on this basis that I agree with Mr.

Mtembei that the intention of the accused person has always been to frustrate the A progress of the case camouflaging this intention on such false allegations. The reasons for doing so are best known to the accused person himself.

I must make two observations here. The first one is that by dictating a deadline that the presiding magistrate should beseech to quietly divest himself of this case before the B 4th September, 1992, the learned defence counsels gave an order to the presiding magistrate to disqualify himself. Had they the right to make such an order? Surely, they had no such right. That was a disrespect of the highest order to the presiding magistrate C and courts of justice in general. Literally, they meant they did not even want to receive the ruling the presiding magistrate was expected to deliver on 4th September, 1992. In fact, that was not the conduct expected from the court officials of their class.

Secondly, the learned defence counsels expressed unambigous support to the D accused person's allegations levelled against the presiding magistrate. However, as amply demonstrated above these allegations have turned out to be false. The question is; why did the defence counsels support the allegations without conducting any inquiry as to their truth? They could have easily ascertained most of these allegations by E examining the proceedings, for which the Registrar could have been contacted by them. In that they did not so ascertain the truthfulness of those allegations, their act of supporting them places them in the same footing with the accused person that they also unjustifiably made misrepresentations which depict hatred and preconceived and F malicious attacks on the presiding magistrate. That is why they even ventured to say that the words "This is yet another application ..." appearing in one of my rulings mean I am supporting the prosecution side. Do those words really connote taking a side? Justifiably, these words mean there have been several other applications, and this is G just one of them. That is why, in my observation, their action has been a more attempt by them all to soil and/or tarnish my name and unjustifiably poison public opinion, which is indeed not to the broad interests of the fairminded men and women of the society. H

It is on this basis that I dismissed this application on September, 8, 1992.

I Application dismissed.

Judgment
Kisanga and Mfalila, JJ.A. and Mapigano Ag. J.A.: The record in the matter before us shows that the respondent has petitioned for, and was duly granted, probate by the High Court (Chua, J.) in respect of the estate of her father, the late Adolf D. G Ghikas. Subsequently the appellant who is also the child of the deceased, applied for a revocation of the grant to the respondent, but the High Court (Mroso, J.) refused the application.
It is from that refusal that this appeal is preferred. Before us the appellant is represented by Mr. C.M. Ngalo, learned advocate, while Mr. C.J. Maruma, learned advocate is H for the respondent.
When the appeal was called on for hearing counsel for both sides informed us that they were applying for a consent order to provide for, inter alia, a variation of the Grant of Letters of Administration issued to the respondent so as to include the appellant I as a joint grantee of Letters of Administration in respect of the estate in question. A

It was at once apparent that there was a serious problem in the matter. While the learned counsel are asking us to vary the Grant of Letters of Administration issued to the respondent, the record makes it quite plain that what was issued to the respondent B was not a Grant of Letters of Administration; it was a Grant of Probate duly issued in pursuance of the respondent's application for the same. It is therefore impossible to make the consent order as proposed by counsel for the simple reason that we cannot vary a Grant of Letters of Administration which was never issued in the first instance. C

But the matter does not end there. There is the further question of the validity of the said Grant of Probate issued to the respondent. Section 24(1) of Probate and Administration Ordinance (Cap.445) provides that: D 24-(1) Probate may be granted only to an executor appointed by the will.

And rule 33 of the Probate Rules requires, inter alia, that: E

(a) the last will of the deceased and all codicils thereto shall accompany the petition for grant of probate.

The reading of both provisions makes it abundantly clear that the petition for, and grant of, probate presuppose the existence of a will. In the instant case, however, the F purported position for probe by respondent was not accompanied by any will, and going through the entire record there is no mention whatsoever of any will left by the deceased. Indeed the very fact that counsel are asking for consent order, to vary the grant of Letters of Administration so as to make the appellant a joint grantee of G Letters of Administration clearly suggests that no will of the deceased exists or has been traced.

In the circumstances, therefore, it seems plain to us that the petition for probate by the respondent was grossly misconceived and the purported grant of the same was simply H null and void. When those matters were pointed out to the learned counsel for the parties, they readily conceded.

In the result we set aside the purported grant of probate as being null and void, and as this is entirely a family matter we make no order for costs.

I Order accordingly.

Jonathan, for the defendant F

Maruma, for the plaintiff

[zJDz]Judgment

Mushi, J.: This is a ruling with regard to a preliminary legal point raised by Mr. Jonathan learned counsel for the defendant to the effect that the plaint does not G disclose a cause of action and thus it should be struck out with costs to the respondent.

Earlier on the learned counsel had successfully moved this court to rule in his favour upholding two preliminary legal points. On 13/7/1990 this court ruled and ordered, I quote:

H It is hereby ordered that the plaintiff file an amended plaint listing all the plaintiffs or alternatively omitting the word "others" from the plaint. The tort of malicious prosecution should also be pleaded in the plaint. I

MUSHI J

An amended plaint was accordingly filed by the learned counsel Mr. Maruma for the A plaintiff. The learned counsel for the defendant under paragraph No. 15 of the written statement of offence to the amended plaint stated and I quote:

B The defendant at the hearing will urge and pray that the suit be struck out with costs.

This is what the learned counsel did when the case was called up for hearing. In short the learned counsel stated that the plaintiff had not fully complied with the directions of the Court in the earlier ruling. The learned counsel stated that the court directed that C the tort of malicious prosecution should be specifically pleaded in the plaint but this has not been done. The learned counsel said that the fact that relief for malicious prosecution is claimed in the relief, that fact does not amount to pleading the tort of malicious D prosecution as a cause of action. Mr. Maruma, learned counsel for the plaintiff, did not directly state that he had infact fully complied with the directions of the court. The learned counsel stated, and I quote from his arguments:

E There have been efforts to comply with the Court Order of 13/7/1990. The paragraphs containing the cause of action are contained in paragraphs 4,8,9 & 11 of the amended plaint.

F - Paragraph 4 states that the complaint by the defendant was false.

- Paragraph 8 - it is contended that had no reasonable or probable cause.

The two paragraphs read together do connote that such complaint must have been G actuated by malice.

Paras 9 & 11:

Complaint led to the arrest of the plaintiff and seizure of the bus resulting to losses and injury to his person. The pleadings clearly indicate clear cause of action. It is not H necessary to use the actual words - malicious prosecution.

Lastly the learned counsel said that courts have discretion to allow the amendment in order that the plaint may disclose a cause of action and her implored the court and I said:

MUSHI J

A If however it is found that it is necessary to use the specific words - malicious prosecution in the plaint, I will readily comply with the direction.

First I respectfully agree with the learned counsel for the defendant that the plaintiff has B not complied with the direction on the court in the earlier order with regard to none disclosure of a cause of action. The paragraphs in the amended plaint which the learned counsel for the plaintiff said can be construed to amount to pleading malicious prosecution have the same contents as in the plaint. Nothing has charged. The only C noticeable change is the inclusion of the clause malicious prosecution in the relief paragraph - 15 (e). Relief is not a cause of action. Relief must stem from cause of action. The problem which is being complained of is not the necessity or not of using the specific words malicious prosecution as stated by the learned counsel but whether the D wrong which is the subject of the pleadings has been distinctly pointed out. In other words what would be the answer to this question:

E what is the wrong which is being complained of in these pleadings?

The answer to this question will constitute the cause of action. It could be wrongful confinement, breach of contract, defamation, and so forth. All I can read from the plaint is a set of facts which, though, read together may or may not amount to a specific F tort. It is not for the defendant to figure out from the plaint the possible wrong complained of. It is for the plaintiff to make it absolutely clear in the plaint what the cause of action is so as to enable the defendant to file a proper defence. I am satisfied therefore that the plaint does not disclose a cause of action. G

The question is what should this court do. There are two options which are open to the court. The first are in to strike out the plaint as prayed by the counsel for the defendant. The other option is to order an amendment to the plaint to disclose a cause of action if possible as prayed by the counsel for the plaintiff. The second option has already H been extended to the plaintiff in a earlier ruling dealing with the same legal problem. The counsel for the plaintiff did not comply with the direction of the court and no reasons have been given for such inaction. Similarly there are no reasons for the court to exercise its discretion further in favour of the plaintiff for the same point for the second I time. It is my considered opinion that in the absence of exceptional circumstances, any further exercise of discretion in A favour of the plaintiffs to amend the plaint so as to disclose a cause of action will not be a judicial discretion. The only option left, therefore is to strike our the plaint. The plaint is accordingly struck out for not disclosing a cause of action. The defendant will have his costs. B

Plaint struck out.

MOSHI J
Matata, for Applicants A
Magoma for respondents
Moshi, J.: This is an application for leave to apply for Orders of Certiorari and Prohibition preferred by the learned advocate for the applicants, Mr. Matata, under B the provisions of sections 17, 17A and 18 of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance Cap. 360, as amended by Act No. 55 of 1968, and Act No. 27 of 1991. It is supported by the affidavit sworn by one Lansa Alfan Salum for, and on behalf of, and with the authority of, all the other 116 applicants, C and it is resisted by a counter-affidavit sworn by William C. Magoma, learned Senior State Attorney, for, and on behalf of, the Attorney General.

The short background to the matter is as follows. The applicants are tenants in premises in which the second respondent is the landlord under tenancy agreements which D stipulate, among other terms and conditions, the rents payable. On January 24th 1992, the first respondent, Minister for Lands, Housing and Urban Development, made an Order under section 2(1)(b) of the Rent Restriction Act 1984, published under GN No. 41 of 1992, which exempted the second respondent, National Housing Corporation, E among other parastatals specified therein, from all the provisions of the Rend Restriction Act relating to the restriction on the amount of rent that may be charged or collected by the second respondent from any tenant occupying any part of their premises. The Order also exempted the second respondent from the provisions of sections 12, 16, 17, 26 F and 37 of the Rent Restriction Act which operate to confer upon a tenant a statutory tenancy upon the determination of his contractual tenancy. This Order was made with the approval of the National Assembly signified by the Resolution passed at Dodoma on the Twenty third day of January 1992. G

Consequent upon, and on the authority of the first respondent's Order, the second respondent then increased rents at exorbitant rates ranging from 843.56% to 14,330.64% among the applicants effective September 1st 1992. The percentage of the increased rent has now been reduced to, and it stands at, 800%. H

Mr. Matata's grounds of contention are threefold: First, that the rent increases are unreasonably exorbitant, were unilaterally made, are disproportionate among the applicants, and are discriminatory in that they favour the specified parastatals against other parastatals and private landlords, and thus offend Article 13 (1) and (2) of the I Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania, as well as the terms and conditions of the tenancy agreements, and the principles of A natural justice. The case of Madhwa and Others v City Council of Nairobi [1968] E.A. 406, was cited and relied upon. Secondly, that the Minister's Order casts the jurisdiction of the Regional Housing Tribunal and that the caster clause offends Article 13 (3) of the Constitution, and, Thirdly, that the Minister's Order was ultra-vires the B enabling provision of the relevant law, in that, section 2 (1)(b) of the Rent Restriction Act empowers the Minister of exempt from all or any of the provisions of the Rent Restriction Act, premises or class of premises, and not a class of landlords. Leave is then being sought to contest the Minister's Order and the second respondent's C increases of rent on these grounds in the intended application. The learned advocate prayed for the issue of an interim prohibitory order to restrain the second respondent from charging the new rents, and from evicting the applicants until the intended application, in the event that leave is granted, is finalized, on account of that the D Minister's Order confers on the second respondent powers to charge any rent and to evict tenants without recourse to Regional Housing Tribunals or to Courts of law for that matter. A passage from Halsbury's Laws of England Volume 11, page 72, paragraph 130, was cited and relied upon. E

Mr. Magoma is resisting the application on three grounds. First, that the application is defective in that Lausa Alfan Salum has no locus standi and that her affidavit is defective in that it does not give her particulars. But there is an instrument attached to the affidavit as annexure A executed by the rest of the applicants authorizing Lausa to F appear and act for, and on behalf of, them. Mr. Magoma has stated that Annexure A was not served on him, and I am certain that had he seen it, he would have realized that his contention that Lausa has no locus standi is totally devoid of merit. I have had sight of Lausa's affidavit. I have examined its form and contents. With respect, it does G occur to me, on proper reflection, that the affidavit is devoid of the defect complained of or of any other defect for that matter. It portrays all that a defective affidavit does not. I am satisfied, and hereby find, that Lausa has locus standi, and that her affidavit is not defective. H

Secondly, Mr. Magoma has submitted that the first respondent - the Minister was wrongly joined in these proceedings and that the second respondent would have been the only respondent. With even greater respect. I find this argument unsustainable. As rightly pointed out by Mr. Matata, the effect of the minister's order was to confer I upon the second respondent an unrestricted power to determine rents by removing tenants' right of statutory tenancy, and casting the A jurisdiction of regional housing tribunals. In other words, in raising the rents, the second respondent was clearly acting upon, and exercising, the power conferred upon them by the minister through his order. Viewed that way, therefore, it is impossible to divorce the action of the Minister from that of the second respondent. What they did, in my view, B was so intermingled and interdependent that one could hardly proceed against one of them without at the same time proceeding against the other. I am satisfied, and hereby find, that the first respondent, the Minister, is properly joined in these proceedings. C

And Mr. Magoma's third point of contention is that this application is devoid of merit on account of that the Minister's Order was not ultra-vires the enabling provision of the Rent Restriction Act, and that it was not in violation of any Articles of the Constitution. Well, quite obviously, in my view, this court cannot properly be called upon to D adjudicate on these matters, one way or the other, at this stage of the proceedings. Those are matters touching upon the merits or otherwise of the intended application. All that the court has to decide at this juncture is whether or not a prima facie case has been made out for the intended application. E

Broadly speaking, prerogative orders of certiorari and Prohibition may be issued in certain cases, either to quash a decision made in the course of performing a public duty or to prohibit the performance of a public duty, where the injured party has a right to have anything done, and has no other specific means of, either having the decision F quashed or the performance of the duty prohibited, when the obligation arises out of the official status of the party or public body complained against. Quite clearly, the applicants have an interest in the matter they are applying for. The first respondent, and the second respondent, are a public official, and a public body, respectively, who had G an imperative legal duty of public nature which they had to perform in their official capacity. In my considered view, any of their actions or decisions is challengeable, firstly, if it is tainted with illegality, that is, the power exercised is ultra vires and contrary H to the law. Secondly, if it is tainted with irrationality, that is, the action or decision is unreasonable in that it is so outrageous in its defiance of logic or of accepted moral standards that no sensible person who had rightly applied his mind to the matter to be acted upon or to be decided could have thus acted or decided. And thirdly if the action I or decision is tainted with procedural impropriety, that is, failure to observe basic rules of natural justice or failure to act with procedural fairness towards the person who will A be affected by the action or decision.

In this matter, I have given due consideration to both learned counsels' submissions, and I have perused the affidavit as well as the counter-affidavit. I am satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out for the intended application. Invariably, though, in an B application of this nature, the grant of leave to apply for an order of certiorari or prohibition or both operates as a stay of the proceedings in question until the determination of the intended application or until the court otherwise orders. There is much good sense in this and, besides, I am buttressed in this by what is stated at page C 72, paragraph 130, Volume 11, 3rd Edition, of Halsbury's Laws of England.
In the event, I allow the application, and hereby grant leave to apply for Orders of Certiorari and Mandamus. An interim Prohibitory order to issue restraining the second D respondent from charging and collecting the new rents from the applicants, and from evicting the applicants from the promises on account of their failure to pay the new rents, until the intended application is determined.
E Order accordingly.

Omar, Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: In this appeal the appellant was charged with and convicted of murder c/s 196 of the Penal Code and sentenced to death. Dissatisfied with the finding and the sentence of the High Court, (Moshi, J.,), he is appealing to this Court. D Arguing the appeal on behalf of the appellant Mr. Kahangwa, learned defence Counsel submitted that the appellant killed the deceased because of provocation offered to him by the deceased.

In the alternative, but without prejudice to the defence of provocation, it was Mr. E Kahangwa's submission that because one of the assessors was of the opinion that conditions for proper identification of the appellant as the person who fatally attacked the deceased with a panga on the material night were lacking the trial Court should have resolved the doubt in favour of the appellant and find him not guilty. F

The Court was invited to allow the appeal and acquit the appellant. In rebuttal Mr. Muna, learned State Attorney, supported the conviction. The learned Counsel submitted that PW.1, daughter of the deceased, had identified the appellant through light of a torch, one Silvester, shone in the room. Mr. Muna was also of the view that even if G the question of identification of the appellant was resolved in his favour his confession to the justice of the peace implicated him with the murder of the deceased. It was the learned State Attorney's submission that the trial Court was right in coming to the conclusion that appellant's confession to the justice of the peace was free and H voluntary. Mr. Muna argued that on the evidence tendered in the lower Court the defence of provocation was not available to the appellant.

In this case the evidence that tended to connect the appellant with the death of the deceased is the testimony of Kweji Katwale, I (PW.1), who testified that she saw the appellant through a torch light as he was A mercilessly cutting the deceased with a panga.

One of the assessors did not however believe that the witness, (PW.1), could have properly identified the appellant as the killer notwithstanding the aid of a torch; given that it was a dark night.

The other evidence which tended to implicate the appellant with the death of the B deceased was appellant's extra-judicial statement which apparently amounted to a confession. He however in his defence in Court repudiated part of the statement which was most incriminating.

This was his statement that he had visited deceased's house at about 1 a.m. and attacked the deceased, deceased's wife and one of his children with C a panga.

The learned trial judge examined the confession in great detail and on the basis of the decision in Tuwamoi v Uganda [1967] E.A. 91 came to the conclusion that appellant's confession - exhibit P.3, was given freely and voluntarily; and that it could not but be true. With respect to the learned trial judge we have no quarrel with the D finding that appellant's confession could not have been anything but true given the enmity between the deceased and the appellant based on belief of witchcraft and bearing in mind that at the material time the appellant was facing a charge of threats to murder in E a Primary Court where the deceased was the complainant.

Our only concern is whether appellant's confession read as a whole afforded him a defence of provocation.

We hereby quote in extenso his confession to the justice of the peace: F

From our scrutiny of this confession its gist is that the appellant lost his temper and E was provoked when he received a Court summons about the case between him and the deceased after Sungusungu had reconciled them and after he was made to cough up a total of Shs. 30,000/= and the deceased had said that the quarrel between them had ended. F

He was pained to see that his family had nothing to eat as he had paid all the money he had in order to end the quarrel between him and the deceased but the deceased had, it would appear, taken him for a ride.

Apparently neither in his judgment nor in his summing up to the gentlemen assessors G did the learned trial judge mention the possibility that the appellant may have been provoked by deceased's behaviour. Had he taken this possibility into account he would no doubt have put to the assessors the question whether deceased's behaviour could H have provoked an ordinary person of the community to which the appellant belonged.

As it was held in the case of Chacha s/o Wambura v R. [1953] 20 EACA 339. "The question of provocation is ordinarily one of fact and it is only in the clearest cases that it should be withdrawn from consideration on that basis. All elements of provocation I should be considered together in assessing their effect."

The Eastern Africa Court of Appeal had also this to say in Festo Shirabu Musungu v. A R. [1955] 22 EACA 454 - "Facts relied on as provocation do not have to be 'strictly proved'. It is only necessary that there should be such evidence as to raise reasonable probability that they exist. If this is the effect of the evidence, the onus lying upon the prosecution is not discharged and murder is not proved." B

The question as to whether the appellant went to deceased's house and attacked him immediately after he came to know of the Court summons was not gone into by the trial Court and we are therefore unable to say whether or not the killing was done in the C heat of passion caused by sudden provocation.

We are also not in a position to say what would have been the opinion of the assessors on the question of provocation if the facts had been put to them.

This omission does, in our considered opinion, raise doubt as to whether an ordinary D person of the community to which the appellant lived would not have been provoked by deceased's outlandish behaviour. The doubt is resolved in favour of the appellant and we accordingly find him not guilty of murder but guilty of the lesser offence of manslaughter c/s 195 of the Penal Code. E

The conviction for murder is quashed and the sentence of death is hereby set aside.

Taking into account that the appellant has been in remand since 1989 and his not very young age we feel that a sentence of 5 years imprisonment commencing from the day F he was convicted - (11/3/92) will meet the justice of the case. The appellant is so sentenced.

The appellants were charged and convicted of murder in the High Court of Tanzania. C The conviction largely depended on the evidence of PW.1 who testified that he saw the appellants beating the deceased with a sizable stick. On appeal to the Court of Appeal the advocate for the appellants challenged the convictions on the grounds of poor identification; failure by the trial judge to address the assessors, in his summing up, on D the question whether or not the appellants acted jointly in attacking the deceased and that the second appellant could not be said to have aided and abetted the commission of the offence.

Held: (i) PW.1 was not only a reliable witness but also a witness of truth and his evidence clearly showed that the first appellant had a hand in the murder of the E deceased;

(ii) the testimony of PW.1 did not incriminate the second appellant.

Appeal dismissed. F

Omar, Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: A charge of murder c/s 196 of the Penal Code was laid at the doors of the appellants - Christian Kake and Rwekaza Bernard. The Republic alleged that on or about the 23rd day of July 1988, at Kangabusharo G village within the district of Bukoba, Kagera Region, the appellants jointly and together murdered one Gervas Lukaito.

The appellants pleaded not guilty to the charge but after a full trial the High Court, (Chipeta, J.) was satisfied that the charge of murder had been proved against both appellants beyond reasonable doubt. They were accordingly convicted and the H mandatory sentence of death was imposed.

Dissatisfied with the finding and sentence of the High Court the appellants have appealed to this Court. Arguing the appeal Mr. Rugarabamu, learned defence Counsel I vigorously attacked the evidence of Salvatory Tibenda, (PW.1), who testified in the Court of first instance that he saw the appellants as they were belaboring the deceased with A a sizeable stick. It was the learned Counsel's submission that there were doubts as to whether the witness could have properly identified the appellants as the people who fatally attacked the deceased on the fateful day. In support of his argument the learned Counsel referred us to the opinion of the three assessors (who sat with the learned B judge) which was to the effect that PW.1 could not have properly identified the appellants as the people who fatally attacked the deceased.

Secondly the learned defence Counsel submitted that the learned trial judge failed to address the gentlemen assessors in his summing up on the question as to whether or C not the appellants acted jointly in attacking the deceased. This crucial issue was also, it was submitted, not dealt with by the trial judge in his judgment.

Finally Mr. Rugarabamu submitted that on the evidence of PW.1 the second appellant could not be said to have aided and abetted the commission of the offence. In D support of his argument the decision of this Court in Damiano Petro and Jackson Abraham v R. [1980] TLR 260 was quoted.

The learned defence Counsel asked the Court to allow the appeal and acquit the appellants. E

The Republic on the other hand supported the conviction of both appellants. Mr. Magoma, learned Senior State Attorney, who represented the Republic, was of the view that the gentlemen asessors' opinion that the appellants were not adequately identified was unsupportable in view of PW.1's testimony. It was submitted that from F the evidence of PW.1 he was standing only about seven paces from where the deceased was being assaulted and that as such he could not have failed to identify deceased's assailants in broad day light. The learned Senior state Attorney submitted that PW.1 was a stranger to the appellants and that there was no suggestion, leave G alone evidence, that he had reason to tell lies against them.

As for the argument that the second appellant did not participate in attacking the deceased Mr. Magoma submitted that the evidence by PW.1 showed that the 2nd appellant held the deceased while the 1st appellant was belaboring him with a stick. H It was the learned Senior State Attorney's argument that the facts in Damiano's case (supra) were easily distinguishable from the facts in this case. The learned State Attorney argued that in Damiano's case the second appellant was merely present at the scene of crime while the 1st appellant was attacking the deceased. In the present case I it was argued that the second appellant aided and abetted the assault of the deceased by holding him while the 1st appellant attacked him. The A learned Senior State Attorney asked the Court to find that the appellants were properly convicted of the offence of murder and that the appeal should be dismissed in its entirely.

After having read the evidence tendered in the High Court it is clear that the case for B the prosecution stood or fell on the testimony of Salvatory Tibenda, PW.1. The witness said in his evidence, inter alia:

> When we got to the hill I saw these two accused persons assaulting a certain young man C using thick sticks - about the size of my arm. It was the first accused who was using the stick. The second accused was holding the young man and was pulling him. There were other people who just stood watching. I asked them why they were assaulting him. The first accused said that the young man had stolen a radio. I told them that it was better for D them to take him to police rather than assaulting him. But they continued to assault the man so I and Faustin took our bicycles and left the scene.
> E I saw the first accused hit the man on the forehead.

The witness also told the Court that it was his first time to see the two appellants and that he heard one old man who was at the scene calling the appellants by their names saying - "Christian and Rwekaza stop assaulting a person you know". According to F PW.1's testimony it was he who reported to the police the assault of the deceased by the appellants mentioning their names as Christian and Rwekaza.

From the evidence of B. 7971 SGT. James, (PW.4), on 2/6/88 he was investigating a G case in which Gervas Lukaito, the deceased, was the complainant. He complained that the first appellant, Christian Kake, had maliciously damaged his bicycle. On being interrogated Christian Kake admitted damaging deceased bicycle and that he did so because he had seen the deceased making amorous advances to his wife. They were H reconciled and the first appellant promised to repair the bicycle whose damage was estimated at Shs. 5,000/=. According to the evidence of Sergeant James he had known the 1st appellant before the bicycle incident when he (1st appellant) had a case with his father.

In assessing the evidence of PW.1 the learned trial judge said, inter alia: I

OMAR JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

A Where the evidence of visual identification is that of a single witness such evidence must be very narrowly examined and usually the Court will look for some corroborative evidence, be it direct or circumstantial, particularly where the circumstances did not favour a correct identification.

B In the present case, the first point to consider is the credibility of PW.1 ... I was impressed by his simplicity of manner and the straight forward manner in which he answered questions. ... I saw nothing in his demeanour to suggest that he had been tutored or was embellishing his story. This witness was a stranger to the accused persons and so he had no reason to frame any of the accused persons. C

The learned judge then concluded that he was satisfied that PW.1 had ample opportunity to identify the two accused persons as the people who fatally attacked the deceased. D

We would first like to deal with the evidence that tended to implicate the first appellant with the death of the deceased. As already stated above the prosecution case wholly depended on the testimony of PW.1 In his assessment of PW.1's evidence the trial judge was, (unlike the three assessors who sat with him), satisfied that PW.1 was a E credible witness. Mr. Rugarabamu, learned defence Counsel, will no doubt agree with us on reflection that the learned judge was in a better position to assess the credibility of the witness that this Court which merely reads the transcript of the record. He saw and heard the witness as he testified; an advantage which we do not have. F

Dealing with the question of credibility of witnesses the Eastern Africa Court of Appeal had this to say in R. v Gokaldas Kanji Karia & Another, [1949] EACA 116:

G Where a case is essentially one of fact, in the absence of any indication that the trial judge has failed to take some material point or circumstance into account it is impossible and improper for a Court of Appeal to say that he has come to an erroneous conclusion as to the respective credibility he attached to the evidence of the Crown witnesses and that H given by the accused.

In his evidence the witness told the Court that he was standing about seven paces from where the deceased was being assaulted and that he saw the first appellant assaulting I the deceased on the forehead. Apparently PW.1's testimony that the 1st appellant hit the deceased on the A forehead tallies with the medical report - exhibit P.1, which was to the effect that the deceased had suffered fracture of the skull on the frontal bone. Cause of death was given as intracranial and extracranial hemorrhage secondary to head injury.

This clearly demonstrated that PW.1 told the truth when he said that he saw the first B appellant attacking the deceased on the forehead with a stick. From the evidence of the doctor exhibit P.1, it was clear that it was the assault of the deceased on the forehead with a stick that caused deceased's death.

That being the position we are satisfied that the learned trial judge was right in C convicting the first appellant, Christian Kake, with the offence of murder as charged. His appeal is accordingly dismissed.

As for the second appellant, Rwekaza Bernard, the most that PW.1 said about him in D connection with the assault of the deceased on the material day was that he held and pulled the deceased. Nowhere in his evidence did the witness say positively, (as he did in respect of the first appellant) that the second appellant assaulted the deceased with any weapon. Apparently both in his judgment and in his summing up to the gentlemen E assessors the learned trial judge did not deal with the crucial question as to whether the doctrine of common intention applied so as to make the second appellant also answerable in the killing of the deceased. In a somewhat similar situation two accused (E and L) and others set upon the deceased, L held him and others beat him. E F caught hold of him, twisted his neck, dislocating it. Deceased died as a result.

The Eastern Africa Court of Appeal held that "L could only be convicted of murder if it was established not only that he was holding the deceased while accused E was twisting his neck, but that he was identified with E's purpose". See R. v Enok Achila and G Another (1941) 8 EACA 84.

If the above decision is anything to go by the most that could be said about the second appellant is that he held the deceased while the 1st appellant dealt him the merciless fatal blow. To find the 2nd appellant guilty of murder it has to be proved that he was H identified with first appellant's brutal purpose - That of causing deceased's death or causing him grievous bodily harm. After a lot of deliberation and reflection it is our considered opinion that to say the second appellant was guilty of murder because he held the deceased while the 1st appellant fatally attacked him would be too broad a I statement of the law.

Although second appellant's defence, like that of his co-accused, was a A cock-and-bull story of what happened on the material day; and it must be conceded that he obviously has a talent for fiction; an accused ought not to be convicted on the weakness of his defence but on the strength of the prosecution case.

We are satisfied in our own minds that on the evidence it would be dangerous to B support the conviction of the 2nd appellant. The conviction for murder is accordingly quashed and the sentence of death is hereby set aside. The second appellant Rwekaza Bernard is to be released from custody forthwith unless he is otherwise lawfully held. C

Makame, J.A.: This application arises from a sorry situation which is not so much bizarre, but rather eerie: The deceased, a person called Joseph Philip Braganza set in C motion rival efforts in court to have his dead body buried in Tanga or in Dar es Salaam. His widow, the respondent, wanted the burial to be here in Dar es Salaam, which she says is her intended new home with her four children, while his siblings, represented by the two applicants, wanted the interment to be in Tanga, his home-town. Mrs. Flora D Braganza applied to the Resident Magistrate's Court at Kisutu for an interim limited grant of Letters of Administration in respect of the estate of her deceased husband and one of the purposes of such a move was said to be to enable her "to make decisions in respect of the disposal of the body of the deceased". The application was brought E under a Certificate of Urgency and the present respondent was represented by Mr. Mbuya, learned counsel, whereas Mr. Lyimo learned advocate, represented the deceased's siblings and their mother. Rugazia, learned Senior Resident Magistrate, declined to entertain the application for want of jurisdiction. Thereafter the present F respondent made a similar application before Mkude, J. of the High Court, who on 30th September, 1992, that is some nineteen days after the death of the deceased, granted her prayer. The learned judge appointed her administratrix pendente lite, and authorized her "to arrange for and determine the place of burial of her deceased G husband."

On 1st October, 1992 a Notice of Motion and a Notice of Appeal were filed on behalf of the present applicants who asked for a Stay of Execution of the Orders of Mkude, J. pending the hearing. The matter was brought under a Certificate of Urgency and on H the following day, in the afternoon the matter was placed before me and I was asked to hear the application, which was ex parte, at extremely short notice. Mr. Lyimo, learned Counsel represented the applicants. At the hearing I was informed that the deceased's widow had arranged to have the body buried in Dar es Salaam at 4 o'clock the same I afternoon, and that put me in an awkward position.

MAKAME JA

I was clear that I was not going to grant the prayer, rolled out of the blanket Prayer A No. 3, that I should order that the burial should be in Tanga. As I said in my brief Ruling the same day, such an order would have gone well beyond the province of a Stay of Execution and would have been outside the jurisdiction of a single judge of the Court of Appeal, because it would have amounted to upsetting Mkude J.'s decision, which B only the Court of Appeal can do. What I found difficult was to consider a Stay of Execution, properly called, without having the advantage of hearing the other side and taking a closer look at the documents filed, because of the very peculiar nature of the situation. I chose what I felt was the least evil, to order only temporary Stay until I C could get a response from the other party. I accordingly ordered a temporary stay and asked that the widow should be served for the following Wednesday, 7th October, 1992. She showed up and was represented by the same advocate who had assisted her in the courts below. The applicants continued with the service of their same lawyer, D Mr. Lyimo.

At the full hearing of the appeal Mr. Mbuya first raised a preliminary objection that there was no proper Notice of Motion filed and that the court was not properly seized of the matter, among other objections. Mr. Lyimo accordingly responded. We agreed, and E proceeded by consent, to hear the substantive application for stay, because of the peculiar urgency of the matter, so as to save time. I indicated then that if at the end of the day I agreed with Mr. Mbuya, that would be the end of the matter. If on the other hand, I did not, I would then already have material on record on which to dispose of F the substantive matter.

It is indeed the law that this Court would not grant a Stay of Execution not applied for in the High Court in the first place unless there is already a valid Notice of Appeal filed. We have said so many times before. The question now is whether Mr. Mbuya has G succeeded in establishing his contentions. In my view, Mr. Lyimo's documents might have been signed by him and it would appear to be true that "Maxie Chambers" are in fact his outfit. But I am satisfied that the Rules have not been complied with. Section 44 of the Advocates Ordinance requires strict compliance and this is lacking in the H present instance. So the application is in effect irregular.
If I were wrong in this, and it was open for me to consider the substantive matter, this is what I would say: From the submissions by Counsel there is no claim that there is a commonly accepted usage among the Goan sub-community in Tanzania as to who I should decide where someone should be buried. In the present matter no party can therefore A be said to have a better claim. It seems to me that the centre which holds the Goan sub-community in Tanzania is the Roman Catholic Church, which does not appeal to ordain in such a matter. I would therefore find no compelling reason for ordering a Stay B of Execution till the intended appeal, the more so as the applicants have indicated that they would not contest the grant for the administration of the deceased estate by Mrs. Braganza, per se. Then there is the other consideration that it is revolting that a dead body should remain unburied for so long, in Dar es Salaam or elsewhere in Tanzania, where dead bodies tend to spoil fast, even in mortuary facilities when electric power C is so erratic and unreliable. Public policy would require decently timely interment. I would therefore refuse to order a Stay, in the circumstances.

I hasten to add, for the avoidance of doubt, that I do not use the term D 'sub-community', with reference to Goans, in any derisive sense. I employ it only in the context of 'Community' meaning the wider Tanzanian Community, so smaller groups being lesser than the 'community'.
Because of the foregoing reasons I refuse to grant any further Stay of Execution. Mrs. E Flora Braganza may therefore proceed as allowed by Judge Mkude of the High Court.
Application refused.

Korosso, J.: This is an appeal lodged by the Appellant challenging the decision of A the lower Court. The appellant was one of 7 Plaintiffs who unsuccessfully sued the Respondent for malicious prosecution. The appellant and Co-Plaintiffs claimed as compensation the sum of Shs.88,400/= for board and lodging, the sum of Shs.29,200/= B for bus fare and the sum of Shs.10,000/= for hiring transport. The learned trial Magistrate dismissed the suit with costs.

In my view the suit was frivolous.

According to the evidence of one Ramadhan s/o Omari (PW.9), the village Secretary, the Appellant and his Co-Plaintiffs were arrested by the village authority because they C failed to respond to the alarm as quickly as they ought to have done as villagers. They arrived at the scene after a lapse of 6 hours. Consequently, the Appellant and Co-Plaintiffs became the suspects of the theft of 463 heads of cattle, the property of the Respondent. According to PW.9 it was the Ward Secretary who reported the matter D to police. It was the Ward Secretary who went to the village in company of the police.

It is selfevident that the Respondent was completely with the initial arrest, detention and the decision whether or not to formally charge the Appellant before a court of law. E

Before I bring the judgment to a close, I intend to observe fairly briefly about the difficulty in providing a case based on malicious prosecution by one individual citizen against the other citizen. Prosecution being one of the essentials of the tort of 'malicious prosecution', no plaintiff can ever satisfy this essential because most prosecutions F before District and High Courts are conducted by Public Prosecutors and State Attorneys. It is a different matter if the complainant conducts a private prosecution.

It is, however, different in Primary Courts where prosecutions are so conducted by G private citizens against other citizens. Where it turns out that the complainant made a report without reasonable or probable cause and if malice can be proved either expressly or impliedly, the safest course to take by the plaintiff would be to rely on false imprisonment and incidental expenses incurred in his defence of the charge from the H very outset to the time the prosecution ends in his favour.

In the course of my dealing with this appeal based on the tort of malicious prosecution, I found myself debating within myself long and seriously on whether or not the Government can be held vicariously liable for malicious prosecution just as much as it I can be held vicariously liable for certain negligent acts of its employees. This is an A extremely sensitive as well as controversial area. But it is not that impossible to impute malice especially in murder and manslaughter cases where there is profuse evidence that certain suspects are held in custodial confinement for over three or more years when there is little or mere suspicious evidence against the suspects. B

One wonders why these unnecessary incidents of custodial confinement should continue to be of frequent occurrence in our law courts particularly the High Courts when it is common knowledge that we have fairly experienced, learned lawyers manning the C Chambers in all High Court Centres. One still wonders why steps are not being taken by these learned lawyers to enter 'Nolle prosequi' in favour of suspects as soon as it comes to their attention that a certain case is a hopeless hope. Articles 13 (6) of the Constitution is couched in eloquent language touching on individual rights before D Courts of law. Most unfortunately these rights are indifferently being trampled down as if they were useless chaff without the least excuse or apology to the victims of the 'Administrative Organ of the Government'.

I have fresh in my mind a recent Tabora Criminal Sessions No. 99/89 RVS Maganga E - case which ended with an application for a 'Nolle Prosequi' on 2/9/92 after the suspect had been in custody since April, 1988. When I discharged the suspect, it might have rang in his mind that he was very lucky while what I did was to sadly declare the end of his unnecessary torture and continued loss of personal liberty for a period of F about 4 years. This was a case in which there was not even strong suspicion against the suspect. Conversely, there was the statement of one witness who mentioned the Accused as having gone over to their house, awakened them and then informed then of the misfortune that had befallen the deceased and his wife on the night. This was a G case which a law undergraduate at the University of Dar es Salaam, conducting a mock trial in Nkrumah Hall, would have hastily ruled that there was no case to answer and then acquit the Accused, perhaps with a sigh of sympathy. In a case of this kind and in many other pathetic cases, courts of law are the unfortunate scapegoats. As was in H this case of Maganga, it was the District Court that first signed the warrant committing the suspect to prison. The court ordered his occasional remand in prison until on 2/9/92 when I signed a discharge to restore to him his once lost liberty. I

Another serious, adverse effect of keeping such hopeless cases until sessions take A place is that they deny other suspects the right to be heard at such sessions because their places are being taken up by these selfevidently hopeless cases.

Time may one day come in not a distant tomorrow when these humble citizens of this B free land will screw up their courage and then provoke the wisdom of the Judges by calling upon them to adjudicate between them and the Government on suits based on malicious prosecutions by law enforcing officers.

With the above observations, I come back to the issue before me and I resolve it by dismissing the appeal. C

Appeal dismissed.

Customary Law - Bahaya Customary Law - Whether the redeemer of clan shamba always becomes its owner.

This was a case over a disputed shamba filed in the Primary Court of Nshamba in G Muleba District on 5/6/1986. The parties found their way to Muleba District Court, the High Court and finally the Court of Appeal. The history of the disputed shamba is substantially narrated in the judgment. The issues contested in the Court of Appeal are whether a person who redeems a mortgaged clan shamba becomes the owner of the H shamba; whether there was adverse possession by the respondent and whether or not the disputed shamba belonged to the respondent.

Held: (i) The fact that the respondent redeemed the shamba and the fact that he had I been in continuous possession of the same since 1966 did not make him its owner;

Ramadhani, Omar and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: This is another protracted litigation over inheritance of a shamba between an uncle, the respondent, and his four nephews, the appellants. The dispute was filed in the Primary Court of Nshamba in Muleba District C on 5/6/1986. The parties found their way to the Muleba District Court, the High Court at Mwanza and now in this Court.

It is appropriate to give a concise account of the facts leading up to this litigation. There was a man by the name of Matondane who had six sons and upon his death his land D was distributed among them. Four of these are known to have died by the time this dispute arose. The fifth brother, Celestin Kikugusi, has been presumed dead as nothing has been heard of him since he went to Uganda in 1932. So only one of the six sons is E alive and this is the present respondent, Thomas Matondane. Two of the deceased brothers, Rwakakile and Francis, are survived by two sons each. These four survivors are the present appellants. The other three brothers; Nshuli, Celestin and Karaba, died childless. The plots of land belonging to two of them, Nshuli and Celestin, have been F inherited by the respondent. In 1982 when Karaba died the clan council decided to divide his shamba among the appellants.

This decision aggrieved the respondent who regarded himself to be the sole heir as the remaining brother. But more particularly he founded his claim upon a will of Karaba. It G was also in evidence that he had twice redeemed the shamba in dispute for Shs.130/= and Shs.70/= during the lifetime of Karaba. Again it was not in dispute that he has been in a continuous possession of the same since 1966 when Karaba emigrated to Kome Island to the time the dispute arose. H

The reasoning of the clan council in coming to the decision they did was plain and simple. They felt that since the respondent already had the plots of the two brothers who had died childless, then this plot in dispute belonging to the third childless brother, should go to the sons of the other two dead brothers. But the respondent was not I moved by that philanthropy. He plucked off the trees planted to mark the boundaries of the plot of each and did not abandon the A shamba. That sent the appellants to the Primary Court.

It was decided that both parties were entitled to inherit the shamba and that the respondent should have a larger share because, not only was he a principal heir, he B had redeemed the shamba and had soon to its upkeep. It was ordered that the matter should go back to the clan council for a proper distribution. The respondent was dissatisfied with that and appealed.

The District Court upheld the decision of the Primary Court and added that as the C respondent had not been given a hearing at the clan council he should be allowed to participate in its deliberations. That again did not appease the respondent and he went to the High Court.

Mwalusanya, J. found that the shamba belonged to the respondent. The learned judge D concurred with the findings of the two lower courts that the will produced by the respondent was but a sham. It violated the requirements of a will as prescribed by G.N. 436 of 20/9/1963. As Karaba was undisputedly illiterate his will had to be attested to by two clan members and two non-clan persons. This was not done. However, the E court found that the property in the shamba vested on the respondent because he had redeemed it. That finding was come upon on the authority of paragraph 574 of Cory and Hartnoll. The learned judge decided that the shamba belonged to the respondent since 1/12/1966. From that finding Mwalusanya, J. went on to declare the suit by the F appellants to have been time barred under the provisions of item 6 of the schedule to the Customary Law (Limitation of Proceedings) Rules, G.N. 311/1964 since 12 years had elapsed.

The appellants are contesting that judgment on three points of law which were argued G before us by Mr. Rweyemamu, learned advocate.

First, Mr. Rweyemamu said that a person who redeems a mortgaged shamba does not always become the owner of that shamba. He propounded that there are two types of mortgages in Haya customary law. One type gives rise to the ownership by the H redeemer of the morgaged property but the other does not. He argued that the two mortgages in this case were of the second type and therefore the shamba remained to be the property of Karaba until his death in 1982.

As his second point, and arising from the first, Mr. Rweyemamu contended that the I possession of the respondent became adverse from 1982 and so, he continued, when the suit was filed in 1986 the A limitation period had not expired. Lastly, Mr. Rweyemamu submitted that as the shamba did not belong to the respondent and as Karaba died intestate then the clan council was the proper authority to dispute it.

RAMADHANI JJA, OMAR JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

The respondent was represented by one of his four sons, Alfred Thomas, who had a B power of attorney. In all fairness he could not come to grips with the points of law raised. He merely repeated points of fact.

We agree with Mr. Rweyemamu that there are two types of mortgages in Haya customary law. That paragraph 574 which Mwalusanya, J. relied upon from Cory C and Hartnoll provides as follows:

> If the plantation has been pledged on the condition that it will become the property of the creditor failing the repayment of the debt within an agreed time, a relative has the right D to redeem it, even after the time has expired, as an invalid sale; in which case it follows that the plantation becomes the property of the man who redeems it. E

There are two conditions here. First, there must be a time stipulated for the repayment of the loan. Second, upon failure to repay, it must be stipulated that the property becomes that of the creditor. If the two conditions are missing then the plantation falls under the provisions of paragraphs 572 and 573 which say: F

> 572. A plantation under family tenure may be pledged, but any relative may at any time, even in the absence of the owner, redeem it. G
> 573. If a relative does so, the payment of the money does not give him possession of the plantation. The redemption money is due to him as a common debt by the owner. H

To us the rationale is very clear. Under paragraph 574 the relative who redeems the plantation steps into the shoes of the creditor. If the creditor could become the owner of the shamba then the relative could be so too. But under the second type of mortgage where the creditor can never become the owner of the I plantation but is merely entitled to his debt, then a relative who redeems cannot have A a title but a debt.

In the present case the two mortgage deeds, that of 26/9/1966 Exh.D5 and that of 1/12/1966 - Exh.D.6, do not have the two conditions stipulated under paragraph 574. Exhibit D.5 says:

> B Mimi Karabe naweka rehani migomba yangu kwa Venant sehemu ya migomba kwa shilingi mia moja thelathini (130/=). Nitakapopata pesa nitamrudishia aondoke.

Then Exhibit D.6 is couched in these terms: C

> Mimi Karaba naweka rehani sehemu ya migomba kwa Laurent Rutotoza akate ndizi za kula na ndizi kali. Amenipa Shs.70/= (sabini) siku yeyote nikipata nimrudishie zake tu na aondoke kwenye shamba langu. D

It is evident from the two deeds that none of them contain the two terms which would entitle one who redeems to be the owner of the pledged plantation as provided by paragraph 574. It is most unfortunate that none of the lower courts, not even the High E Court, bothered to have the deeds translated from Kihaya.

The learned judge cited Martin s/o Bikonyoro v Celestin s/o Kaikola [1968] H.C.D. n. 87 by Cross, J. and Gabriel s/o Nzizula v Rooza d/o Muyungi [1968] H.C.D. n. 126 by Mustafa, J. (as he then was). Those decisions are sound because the facts fell F squarely on paragraph 574.

Thus the respondent did not become the owner of the shamba in dispute because he had redeemed it twice as evidenced by Exh.D.5 and 6. The shamba remained that of Karaba and upon his death reverted to family tenure to be inherited. For the sake of G completeness the shamba did not even become of the respondent because he has been in continuous possession from 1966 when Karaba left for Kome Island. Paragraph 511 of Cory and Hartnoll provides:

H Actual occupation of land confers no title, no matter how long it has been occupied.

It follows from the above exposition, and as properly submitted by Mr. Rweyemamu, I that there was no question, of limitation. The occupation by the respondent became adverse to the interests of the A family when Karaba died in 1982 and the suit was filed in 1986.

It is also evident from the above holding that the respondent cannot and is not entitled to any extra claim on the shamba because of having redeemed it or of long possession. B For redemption he is entitled to a refund of the moneys he had paid and for possession and therefore the upkeep of the shamba, he enjoyed the proceeds from the same as was properly held by the clan council.

We come now to the crucial matter for determination. As Karaba died childless and intestate who as between the parties has a better claim of inheritance? C

Cory and Hartnoll give three grades of heirs. Paragraph 2 of Cory and Hartnoll say:

Three grades of heirs proper are recognised:

A. THE MUSIKA - primary heir D
B. THE MAINUKA - secondary heir
C. THE KYAGATI - minor heirs

Paragraph 3 provides who are the MUSIKA. What is relevant to the present case reads as follows: E

... The Musika of a man who leaves no descendants in direct line is one of his brothers ...

So, here the respondent is definitely the Musika of Karaba. F

Was the clan council wrong to come to the decision they did? We cannot answer that in the affirmative. There is a NOTE to paragraph 3 which is very eloquent and operates as equity to soften the vigours of law. The NOTE goes: G

Unless a man has sons his immovable property is inherited by one of his relatives who is chosen by family council. Therefore, if he has brothers, the oldest need not necessarily inherit. For example: If there is a brother who has none or only a small plantation he H may be chosen to inherit. If the plantation is capable of providing two families with livelihood it may be divided between the two relatives.

I On this chosen relative's death the plantation is inherited by his heirs in the usual way.

RAMADHANI JJA, OMAR JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

In the present case the respondent already has his own plot out of the six into which A the shamba of the old Matondane was divided. He also has the two parts which had belonged to his two deceased childless brothers. Thus he has three parts out of six which he will pass on to his four sons. On the other hand the four appellants, who are B the heirs of the other two brothers of the respondent, have only a plot for each pair. So as between the respondent, and the appellants the latter have smaller plantations than the former and this NOTE to paragraph 3 was meant for them. No wonder the clan council decided the way it did.

In fact that principle of equity transcends the Haya customary law. For example, in C the division of land paragraph 75 provides that "the Musika shall inherit enough land to provide him and his family with a livelihood. The interests of the other heirs are a very secondary consideration". However, there is a NOTE again ameliorating the hardships which could be caused: D

> In practice distribution is affected by many different circumstances, for instance in the case of one of the lesser heirs having a large family, he may be granted a larger share than is really his just due; ... E

We are of the firm opinion that the clan council was justified in arriving at the decision they did and did not contravene the Haya customary law and its equity.

But was the respondent condemned unheard? That was the concurrent finding of the F High Court and the District Court. As such, and as this is a third appeal, we cannot make a factual finding though that fact could be argued one way or the other. Be it as it may, we take it as proved that the respondent was absent from the clan council of 17/10/1982. What is the effect of that? G

We can say two things here. One both the Primary Court and the District Court gave orders that this matter be returned to the clan council. The District Court was explicit "that appellant [the respondent now] be given an opportunity to defend himself". But on both occasions the respondent did not favour that and decided to appeal. In fact in H his ground five of appeal to the High Court he said in relevant parts:

> ... ilibainika jinsi wanaukoo walivyojipotosha kutoa mgao wa shamba la marehemu bila kunishirikisha ... mahakama za chini I

A zisingeagiza tena kifanyike kikao kingine cha ukoo wakati hawapo wengine tofauti na hao ...

So the respondent wanted the matter to be settled by the courts where he has been given a hearing. This is what we intend to do.

The second matter is that we are also of the opinion that it is a futile exercise to return B this dispute to the clan council to let them observe that cardinal principle of natural justice. As the respondent has been given a hearing in four different forums and as the decision of the clan council is equitable following the Haya law, we adopt it as our own. The shamba of Karaba to be inherited by the appellants. We order that the clan C council in conjunction with the Primary

Court Magistrate of Nshamba to petition the shamba as between the first and the second appellants on the one hand, and the third and the fourth appellants on the other.

It is in evidence, as already said, that the respondent had redeemed the shamba by D paying Shs.200/=. It has been claimed that he was refunded Shs.100/=. But that was at the clan council. If we take it as settled that the respondent was not at that Council, then it follows that he could not have been repaid. So we order that he be paid his Shs.200/=. Everyone of the appellants to pay Shs.50/=. E

Appeal allowed.

Because of the dispute the appellant applied for attachment of the respondent's A property to serve as security. Consequently the respondents truck was attached for 538 days. In the High Court the respondent won the case. On the attached truck the Court awarded the respondents Shs. 35,866,666/= for non user.

On appeal the Court of Appeal considered, inter alia, whether the award for B non-user of the truck was justified.

Held: (i) There were, in our view, good reasons calling for the appellant to apply for attachment of respondents property pending judgment; C

(ii) had the plaintiff/appellant properly and carefully weighed his case before filing the suit against the respondent the chances are that he would not have gone to Court and the respondent would have been saved from all the bother of having his truck attached and having to defend the case; D

(iii) the award of Shs. 35,866,666/= for non user of the truck was not only far too exorbitant but also missuported by evidence.

Rugarabamu and Mkatte, for the appellant.

Rweyemamu, for the respondent

Omar, Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: In this case the respondent company, F Gruppo Sogesca Lanari Esterio s,p,a. (to which we will hereinafter, for the sake of brevity, be referring to as the respondent) entered into a contract with a company registered in London by the name of Tecofi Ltd whereby the later company was to supply the respondent fuel. The terms of the contract are contained in a letter of intent - exhibit D.2. G

It would appear that Tecofi Ltd was to buy the fuel to be supplied to the respondent from another company, B.P. Africa, based in London which company was to ship the fuel to the appellant company at Dar es Salaam for onward transmission to their depot in Mwanza which was to deliver the fuel to the respondent. H

The arrangement for payment for fuel sold and delivered was that B.P. Africa wuld invoice Tecofi Limited for fuel supplied to the appellant company and Tecofi Limited would likewise invoice the respondent who would effect payment directly to Tecofi Limited. Sometime in October there arose a dispute between the appellant company I (B.P. Tanzania Limited) and the respondent company whereby the former company alleged that the latter company had failed to pay for fuel A sold and delivered to it despite repeated demands. The value of the fuel delivered was said to be in the tune of Shs.9,562,725/=. Eventually the appellant company filed a suit in the High Court against the respondent company on 25/10/89 claiming the amount. B

After the respondent company had filed a W.S.D. and later an amended W.S.D. and the appellant company had filed amended reply to the amended W.S.D. containing a counter claim the appellant company reduced the claim of Shs.9,562,725/= to one of Shs.3,758,952/15. C

The following issues were agreed upon:

1. Whether the supply of fuel by the plaintiff/appellant to the defendant/respondent was governed by any contractual relationship between them or just motivated by contractual D relationship between Tecofi Ltd and B.P. Africa Ltd of London.

2. Whether Tecofi Ltd did buy and consign fuel to the defendant through the plaintiff, and E if so, how/much and in which measurements.

3. Whether the defendant/respondent did exhaust stock as consigned through the plaintiff/appellant, and if not, what is the balance due to the defendant/respondent. F

4. Whether the defendant/respondent did overdraw fuel from the plaintiff/appellant exceeding his stock at the time claimed by the plaintiff/appellant, and if so, how much.

G 5. Whether the plaintiff/appellant had any justification to seek for the attachment of the defendant's truck, and if not, what damages is the defendant/respondent entitled to.

H 6. Relief - (Here it may have meant to what reliefs are the parties entitled to).

After hearing evidence from both sides the High Court, (Moshi, J.), was satisfied that the respondent company had neither overdrawn gas oil nor petrol from his stock with I the appellant company. On the contrary the learned trial judge hold that the defendant/respondent had still 518,287 litres of gas oil and 54,4411 litres of petrol in A his stock held by the plaintiff/appellant and ordered that the plaintiff/appellant delivers this fuel or its money equivalent to the defendant/respondent. The Court also ordered that the plaintiff/appellant pays coss.

As for the attachement of defendant's/respondent's truck it was the learned judge's B opinion that there was no sufficient cause to make the plaintiff company apprehensive that the defendant company was disposing its working tools so as to leave the jursidiction of the Court to the detriment of plaintiff's interest. For this reason it was the trial Court's conclusion that there was no need for the plaintiff company to apply for C attachment of defendant's truck pending hearing of the suit.

The Court therefore concluded that the defendant company was entitled to be compensated by the plaintiff company for non-user of his truck for the whole period it remained attached. D

It agreed with the defendant/respondent that the truck used to fetch Shs.100,000/= per day according to Ministry of Works scale. As the attachment of the truck lasted for 538 days (From 8/11/89 to 30/4/91 when attachment was raised) the Court found that the amount due for the defendant for non-user of the truck was Shs.100,000 x 538 days E which came to 53,800,000/=. The trial Court however took into account that there were Sundays, public holidays, days when the truck went for maintenance etc. when the truck would not be in use. The Court therefore deducted one third from the amount of F Shs.53,800,000/= which came to Shs.17,933,333/= and awarded the defendant/respondent Shs.35,866,666/= for non-user of the truck.

The Court then proceeded and dismissed plaintiff's case with costs.

Dissatisfied with the whole judgment of the lower Court the plaintiff has appealed to G this Court.

Mr. Rugarabamu and Mr. Mkatte, learned Counsel, appeared for the appellant company. In his submission Mr. Rugarabamu argued that the learned judge's finding that supply of oil to the respondent was in metric tons only was erroneous. H

It was the learned Counsel's submission that DW.1 agreed in his evidence that he received from the appellant 6,321,417 litres of gas oil. In support of his argument the Court was referred to page 37 of the proceedings. It was also argued that the respondent conceded in his defence in the High Court that he had received 203389 I litres of petrol; and that in all the appellant had supplied a total of 559,589 litres of petrol to the respondent without payment. In support of his A argument the Court was referred to the evidence of PW.1 at page 31.

OMAR JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

The Court was also referred to exhibit P.4 which was said to be a summary of oil the respondent had withdrawn.
It was the learned Counsel for the appellant's argument that some of the fuel was B supplied to the respondent in cubic metres and some in metric tons.
As for the award of damages to the respondent for non-user of his truck as a result of the attachment of the truck pending determination of the suit, the learned Counsel C submitted that the appellant was entitled to file an application for attachment of the truck as there was evidence that the respondent was disposing his property; some of which had left the country. In support of his submission the Court was referred to page 21A of the proceedings.
It was also argued that later the appellant and the respondent agreed before the judge D that the respondent offers only two trucks as security. The Court was referred to the same page - 21A.
At a later date the respondent applied to the Court seeking variation of the terms of security, the application was granted and only one truck was offered as security. E
As for the argument that the truck earned Shs.100,000/= per day Mr. Rugarabamu argued that there was no officer from the Ministry of Works who testified that the truck earned such amount per day. The Court was asked to allow the appeal with costs.
In rebuttal Mr. Rweyemamu for the respondent argued that exhibit D.1 was a letter of F intent and not a contract. He argued that 5900 metric tons of gas oil was bought in eight separate contracts. To fortify his argument the evidence of DW.1 at page 37 of the proceedings was referred to us. Mr. Rweyemamu submitted that the letter of intent exhibit D.2 and the invoices in respect of the gas oil supplied showed that the fuel was G all the time supplied in metric tons.
It was the learned Counsel's argument that B.P. African was not called to testify that some of the fuel was supplied in cubic metres nor, it was argued, one, Muro. Mr. H Rweyemamu submitted that the appellant had problems in safe-keeping their documents and that this occasioned the confusion in their evidence regarding the manner the fuel was supplied. Mr. Rweyemamu further argued that had the appellant, communicated with his principal in London the confusion as to whether or not some of the fuel was I delivered in cubic metres would have been resolved. In support of his argument
OMAR JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA
the provisions of section 166 of the Law of Contract Act were quotted: A Section 166 of the Law of Contract says:

> It is the duty of an agent, in cases of difficulty, to use all reasonable diligence in B communicating with his principal, and in seeking to obtain his instructions.

The Court was also told that the respondent always purchased fuel from the appellant whenever their stock was exhausted. To fortify his argument the Court was referred to C the evidence of Mamforo Lema, (PW.3) on page 34.

It was the defence case that the appellant refused to produce bills of lading because if they did it would have prejudiced their case.
In this case the claim by the plaintiff/appellant stood or fell on the evidence of PW.1, D PW.2, PW.3 and PW.4.
From the testimony of DW.1 the respondent used to get his supply of fuel from the appellant as supplied to them by Tecofi Limited through B.P. Africa Limited. The Letter of Intent v exhibit D.2 between the defendant/respondent and Tecofi Limited clearly E stipulated that fuel would be supplied to the defendant/respondent in metric tons.
From the evidence the appellant claimed that between the month of June 1986 and October 1988 the respondent had drawn 6321417 litres of gas oil and that from July F 1988 to July 1989 had drawn 205,589 litres of petrol. This, according to the appellant company amounted to an overdraw of 5,509 litres worth a total sum of Shs. 3,758,952.15 the subject matter of the suit filed in the High Court.
The respondent company did not dispute receipt of 6321417 litre of gas oil from the G appellant company but countered that it was supposed to receive 5,900 metric tons of gas oil and 200 metric tons of petrol from Tecofi Limited through the appellant company. Each metric ton was, according to the respondent, equal to 1159 litres. This H formula was the one agreed between the appellant and Tecofi Limited and, according to the respondent, it is an international formula. According to DW.1's evidence the fuel was supplied to the respondent through the appellant in eight separate contracts as shown in the invoices - exhibit D.1. Apparently even PW.1 conceded in his evidence I that the invoices showed that the fuel was supplied in metric tons.
OMAR JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA
It was argued by the respondent that using the agreed conversion formula the 5900 A metric tons of gas oil came to 6,839,704 litres of gas oil and the 200 metric tons of petrol came to 231,800 litres. These were the litres of fuel the respondent was to receive from the appellant company. The defendant/respondent argued that having received 6,321,417 litres of gas oil from the plaintiff/appellant as per exhibit P.1 there B remained 518,287 litres of gas oil the respondent had to collect from the appellant. It was argued that using the same conversion formula the respondent had under collected 26,944 litres of petrol. This gave rise to the counter-claim by the respondent in his amended W.S.D. The respondent denied having taken fuel on loan from the appellant. C According to his defence he used to buy fuel by cash whenever his supply from Tecofi Limited had exhausted. In support of his argument that he used to pay cash for fuel the respondent produced cash payment receipt - exhibit D.3. D
Mr. Rugarabamu learned Counsel for the plaintiff/appellant on the other hand argued that the purchase and consignment of the fuel was supplied in both metric tons and cubic meters.
Our observation in this case and especially taking into account the Letter of Intent between Tecofi Limited and the defendant/respondent - exhibit D.2, it is clear that the E purchase and consignment of fuel to the respondent by Tecofi Limited was to be in metric tons. That was the agreement. With respect to Mr. Rugarabamu learned Counsel for the appellant, there was no cogent primary evidence to counter the argument by Mr. Rweyemamu, learned Counsel for respondent, that the fuel was supplied in metric F tons as stipulated in the Letter of Intent.

It is also evident from the invoices from Tecofi Limited - Exhibit D.1 that all the consignments were in metric tons.
Bearing in mind that there was no dispute that the respondent received from the G appellant 6,321,417 litres of gas oil and 205,589 litres of petrol this amount is to be deducted from 5900 metric tons of gas oil and 200 metric tons of petrol the appellant received from Tecofi Limited for the respondent.
Using the conversation formula supplied by Tecofi Limited 5900 metric tons of gas oil H comes to 6,839,704 litres of gas oil (One metric ton being 1159.27 litres)and the 200 metric tons come to 231800 (approximately) litres of petrol.
If the amount of 6,321,417 litres of gas oil and 205,589 litres of petrol already received by the respondent is deducted from the amount held by the appellant as shown above, I it follows, as night follows day, that the appellant still has 518,287 litres of gas oil and 54,411 litres of A petrol belonging to the respondent.

As for the argument that the respondent used to take fuel on credit when his stock had exhausted this is countered by no lesser a person than the appellant company's own stocks and sales accountant - PW.3. B

He said on page 34 of the proceedings inter alia:

The defendant bought on cash basis and cash sale was raised. They had paid cheque No. F. 113115 ... they requested us to deduct the 8,000 litres earlier purchased from us. C We issued them B.P. cheque No. 39317 of 22.2.89 - amount Shs. 420,876.80.

On page 35 on cross-examination by Mr. Rweyemamu he said inter alia: D

As on 10/5/89 there were 76,507 litres of motor gasoline and 813051 litres of gas oil due to the defendant company. We concede we had defendant's stock of motor gasoline during the same period when the defendant company was supposed to have withdrawn E the same ... When the defendant company did not have stock with us they used to buy products from us by cash.

That being the evidence from plaintiff's accountant and taking into account that we F have, we hope amply demonstrated above, we are fully satisfied that the preponderance of probabilities weighed heavily against the plaintiff/appellant.
We see no good reason to differ with the learned judge's finding that the applellant G still owes the respondent a total of 518,287 litres of gas oil and 54,411 litres of petrol or their money value.
As for the award of damages for the attachment of respondent's truck we, with respect to the learned trial judge, do not agree with his reasoning that the appellant had no reasonable cause to apply for attachment of respondent's property pending H determination of the suit. If Mr. Rugarabamu's submission before Munyera, J. (as he then was), is anything to go by the respondent was in the process of disposing his property. A trailer TZ 1274 with a cement mixer on it and one caterpillar earth mover had already crossed the border to Kenya. There were in our view good reasons calling I for the appellant to apply for attachment of respondent's property pending judgment. May be it is also not irrelevant to mention that later the A parties recorded a consent agreement that only two of respondent's trucks should be attached.

OMAR JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MNZAVAS JJA
Finally the respondent applied for variation of order of attachment and the Court ordered that only one vehicle should be attached. The second truck was released to him. B
As for the argument that the truck earned Shs. 100,000/= per day there was only the bare word of the respondent that this was in accordance with the Ministry of Works scale. It would have shed more light if an officer from the Ministry of Works was called as a witness in connection with the claim of Shs. 100,000/= per day which was not a C small amount.
However we agree that had the plaintiff/appellant properly and carefully weighed his case before filing the suit against the respondent the chances are that he would not have gone to Court and the respondent would have been saved from all the bother of D having his truck attached and having to defend the case.
We have no doubt in our minds that the award of Shs.35,866,666/= for non-user of the truck was not only far too exorbitant but also unsupported by evidence. The award of Shs.35,866,666/= is accordingly hereby set aside. E
After a lot of deliberation and reflection we are of the opinion that if the respondent had decided to pay cash as security, instead of his truck being attached, he would have been required to pay not less than Shs.3,758,952/15 the amount the appellant was claiming. The amount of 3,758,952/15 paid as security would fetch an interest of 30% per year F in a fixed deposit. This will mean that the respondent would be entitled to about Shs. 1,691,527/= interest for the 538 days his money remained in Court.
We are of the considered opinion that justice will be served if the respondent is paid Shs.1,691,527/= for non-user of his truck. It is so ordered. G
Order accordingly.

Evidence - Confession - Repudiated Confession - Repudiation during defence stage - C What court to do.

The appellants were convicted of murder and sentenced to suffer death by hanging. They appealed against both conviction and sentence attacking the evidence on the D basis of which they were convicted. The appellants were said to have made confessions which they later repudiated. Some of the confessions were made to the village chairman.
Held: (i) A village chairman is a person in authority under section 27(3) of the E Evidence Act and so a confession made to him is involuntary if the Court believes that it was induced by any threat, promise or other prejudice. There is not a thread of doubt that the confessions to the village chairman were not induced by threat, promise or other prejudice; F

(ii) As the confessions were repudiated then there was a need for ascertaining their reliability and/or seek corroboration but the learned trial judge did not even warn himself of that requirement;

(iii) on the evidence, the repudiated confessions cannot be anything but true and a G conviction can be grounded on them - Tuwamoi v Uganda [1967] E.A. 84;

(iv) in case of illiterate witnesses, it is not fair or desirable to tie them down too closely to estimates of time. On a careful review of the whole of the evidence the discrepancies relied upon by the defence were apparent rather than real. H

Ramadhani, Omar and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: The appellants, Shihobe Seni and Jisinza A Samwel, were convicted of the murder of Kasanga Kabadi at Nsana Village in Kahama District, Shinyanga Region. The killing was on 19/4/1987. They have been aggrieved by that decision of Korosso, J. and the punishment of death passed on them and so have come with this appeal before us. B
The deceased disappeared as from 19/4/1987 and on 23/4/1987 his wife reported that to appellant 2, their ten cell leaders, who, in the company of the deceased's son, contacted the village Chairman, Mabala Dali (PW.1). A search was mounted involving villagemates among whom were the appellants; PW.1; the commandor of Sungusungu, C Robert Nonga (PW.1) and one Lusuka Salama (PW.4). After three days the putrid corpse was located some two miles away at Mulidobo Village in Urambo District, Tabora Region.
PWs 1, 2 and 4 ascribed the discovery to the confessions of the appellants who then D led the villagers to that location. Indeed the appellants are also said to have confessed to D/Sg. David (PW.3) to the fact of killing and that of being ushers to the search party. These statements were produced as Exh. P.1 and P.2.

The appellants, however, at the trial repudiated the statements as well as the E confessions to PWs. 1 and 2. They denied having taken the searchers to the dead body. In fact they claimed that there were two search parties and that the one which stumbled on the corpse did so because of birds which flocked over the spot and a dog of the deceased's son which was attracted by the foul smell. F

Mr. Matata, learned Counsel, represented both appellants while Mr. Boaz, learned State Attorney appeared for the respondent/Republic. Mr. Matata had four grounds of appeal which were: first, that the verbal confessions to PWs. 1 and 2 were involuntary and should not have been relied on; second, that the discovery of the dead body was G a result of the combing of the area by the villagers and not because of the action of the appellants; third, that the confessions to PW.3 were also not voluntary; and lastly, that the repudiated confessions required corroboration which was wanting.

As for the first ground Mr. Matata said that the confessions to PWs. 1 and 2 were H extracted by torture. He lamented that though the learned trial judge acknowledge the notoriety of the Sungusungu on the question of torture, yet accepted them hook, line and sinker. The learned advoate pointed out that PW.1 testified that the confessions were given at 2 a.m. He submitted that this fact was pregnant with significance. However, I Mr. Boaz countered that by saying that it did not mean that the interrogation was conducted throughout the night. A

All we can say is that the evidence of PW.1 is not clear on whether the interrogation was continuous or not. In any case PW.2 said that it was adjourned to the next morning when the appellants let the cat out of the bag. Be it as it may, PWs. 1 and 2 were B resolute that torture was not administered and they were not controverted. Tortue was only alleged by the appellants in their defence.

Then Mr. Matata argued that those confessions were not admissable for another reason. C He pointed out that PW.2 was a member of the Sungusungu and as such under the provisions of section 3 (1) of People's Militia Laws (Miscellaneous Amendments Act, 1989 No. 9 of 1989) he was equated to a Police Constable. then, Mr. Matata added, under section 27 (1) of the Evidence Act, 1967 a confession voluntarily made to a D police officer is admissable. However, he cautioned, a police officer is defined in section 3 of the Evidence Act to be a member of the Police Force of or above the rank of Corporal. The learned Counsel then submitted that PW.2 was not a Police Officer under the Evidence Act and hence a confession made to him, even if voluntarily, could E not be proved against the appellants under section 27. We agree with Mr. Matata in this contention. However, Mr. Boaz replied that the confession was made to the village assembly and not to PW.2.

That is not clear from the record. PW.2 kept referring to "we" throughout and also F admitted that the members of Sungusungu were around in their attire. There is no evidence that there was a village assembly. There were just villagers who had responded to the alarm and were participating in the search of their colleague. In any case if there is reasonable doubt then it is resolved in favour of the appellants. G

Mr. Matata also argued that PW.1 as the village Chairman was a person in authority and so under section 27 (3) of the Evidence Act a confession made to him is involuntary if the Court believes that it was induced by any threat, promise or other prejudice. In this case, he argued, they were induced by threats and tortures. Mr. Boaz submitted H that a village Chairman is not a person in authority under section 27. He referred us to Masasila Mtoba v R [1982] T.L.R. 131.

Again we agree with Mr. Matata that PW.2, as the village Chairman, was a person in authority. In Mtoba's case the High Court of Tanzania (Katiti, J.) held that a Ward I Secretary was not such a person in authority. But as properly pointed out by Mr. Matata in the case of A Mayaya Ngolela v R Cr. App. 130 of 1990 (CAT) (unreported) we held that a village Secretary was such a person in authority. So PW.1, the village Chairman, was even more so. However, there is not a shred of doubt that the confessions were not induced by threat, promise or other prejudice. Therefore we cannot fault the learned trial judge B for not holding them involuntary.

In the second ground Mr. Matata contended that the corpse was found because of the perseverance of the searchers and not the work of the appellants. He said that PW.1 C had deposed that the dead body was come upon on 25/4/87 whereas PW.2 said that the confessions were obtained on 28/4/87. He submitted then that the body could not have been found because of the confession. He beefed up this submission by pointing out that appellant 2 in his defence was very emphatic that the interrogations were after D the discovery. In any case, Mr. Matata argued, if the appellants had volunteered to take the villagers to the corpse then there was no need of there being two search parties.

Mr. Boaz, on the other hand remarked that PWs. 1, 2 and 4 were mere peasants who would ordinarily not be in a position to refer to dates with precision and so the E discrepancy was to be expected.

It is true that there is discrepancy with respect to dates. We, however, agree with Mr. Boaz that the witnesses should not be taken literally on their dates. Indeed PW.2 himself proved this. He said: "I got the report of his death on 24/4/87 ... We set about looking F for the deceased, but in vain. On the following day we again went about searching for the body of the deceased. That was on 27/4/87". If PW.2 got the information on 24/4/ then the next day must have been 25/4 and never 27/4. It is unfair to take such a person literally on his dates. The case of Mohamed Shah s/o Lal Shah v R. [1939] 6 EACA G 97 has relevance here. The Court held that "in case of African and Asiatic witnesses it is not fair or desirable to tie them down too closely to estimates of time ... on a careful review of the whole of the evidence the discrepancies relied upon by the defence were apparent rather than real". H

We do not subscribe to the blanket and racist generalization of "African and Asiatic". We agree with the preposition but would correct it and refer to illiterate people of whatever race. Thus PWs. 1 and 2 being illiterate peasants the discrepancies relied upon by Mr. Matata were apparent rather than real. I

We again agree with Mr. Boaz that what was vital was the information by all the three A witnesses that the search took three days and that it was after the confessions that the appellants took the villagers to their discovery. This was not controverted.

Admittedly, the question of Mr. Matata that if the appellants had volunteered to act as B guides, then there was no need to have two search parties, is very valid. However, the existence of two groups was the story of the appellants only. It must be pointed out, though, that they were not contradicted on that just as they had not also cross-examined PWs. 1, 2 nd 4 on that point. However, there are their confessions to PW.1 and PW.3. C We shall discuss their reliability later on.

Mr. Matata then attacked the confessions to PW.3 to have been involuntary. He contended that the record does not show that the defence was given an opportunity to object to the production of Exhs.P .1 and 2. Here again Mr. Boaz is right. PW.3 gave D his evidence, offered to tender the statements as exhibits and the learned trial judge recorded "Admitted and market Exh. P. ....". That was the time for objection and from the record it is abundantly clear that the defence did not raise a finger.

However, the observation of Mr. Matata that once the statements were repudiated, E albeit during the defence stage, the learned trial judge should have suo moto checked on the voluntariness, is valid and we shall deal with it in due course.

The last ground was that as the confessions were repudiated then there was a need for F ascertaining their reliability and/or seek corroboration but the learned trial judge did not even warn himself of that requirement. Mr. Boaz conceded that but added that as this is a first appeal then we could step into the shoes of the learned trial judge. That is so.

Could the confession have been false? We fail to answer that in the affirmative. The G details are such that they could not have been concocted. Mr. Matata cautioned that the sort of details were obtainable even from the villagers and that they were not privy to the appellants alone. Let us have a look at them.

Appellant 1 stated that the deceased was a local medicineman to whom he had sent H his wife to be treated for infertility but then the deceased befriended the wife. One day, appellant 1 continued, he found them in flagranto delicto. That was the genesis of appellant 1's hatred against the deceased. So on 18/4/87 appellant 1 disclosed the plot I to kill the deceased to appellant 2 and his father. Appellant 2 gave a very similar account. That information cannot be the property of every Tom, Dick and Harry. Then both appellants talked of the use of a A "gobore". That was supported by PW.4 who heard an explosion that very day from the direction of the paddy plot of the deceased.

We are of the firm opinion and we entertain no flicker of doubt in our minds that the confusions cannot be anything but true and under the authority of Tuwamoi v. B Uganda [1967] EA 84 a conviction can be grounded on them. We so find.

For the avoidance of doubt we must say that their reliability is in addition to our conviction that the confessions were voluntarily given. Appellant 2 had this to say in cross examination "The members of the 'Wasalama' assaulted us by means of sticks. C I was injured all over the body. I cannot show the injuries on my body because it was 1987 ... I didn't complain to PW.3 because I was confused and also because I knew I would be acquitted in the long run (sic) ..." This explanation is unintelligable and it only confirms that the confessions were voluntary but as an afterthought they sought to D repudiate them.

In fact to be fair to the learned trial judge, he had this to say "I don't believe, however, that the accuseds were subjected to physical torture or else one of the accuseds or all of them would have told the Court how each of them was hurt, injured or in any way E harmed". That in our opinion was an appropriate observation.

We have one comment before we finish. The defence Counsel at the trial, one Mr. Ruta, did not impress us to have been diligent enough in the execution of his duties. He very superficially cross-examined PW.1, one of the crucial witnesses. But worse still, he let F other key witnesses like PW.2 and 3 go unsearched. For those two and also for PW.4 the record shows simply "XXD Mr. Ruta: NIL", We feel duty bound to remark that advocates on dock briefs would see the importance to the Courts of the benefits of their G full assistance. We therefore dismiss the appeals in their entirety.

Appeal dismissed.

The appellant filed a suit for a claim of damages for malicious prosecution at the Singida District Court. The Court applied English Common Law. He lost the suit and appealed C to the High Court. The appellate Court considered, inter alia, whether the District Court had jurisdiction to entertain the case and the proper law to apply.

Held: (i) Under section 63(1) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, No. 2 of 1984 for D customary law torts of malicious prosecution, defamation, destruction of crops by cattle, negligence etc. both the District Courts and Primary Courts have concurrent jurisdiction;

(a) Whether among the Wanyaturu there are rules of customary law regarding malicious prosecution which are established and accepted;

(b) Whether from the nature of the wrong of malicious prosecution, it was apparent to the F parties that they would not be governed by customary law of the Wanyaturu;

(iii) in the case at hand the trial magistrate did injustice to the parties by not making an inquiry as to whether customary law was applicable in the circumstances. He just assumed that English common law was applicable; G

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwalusanya, J.: This was a suit for a claim of damages for malicious prosecution filed at Singida District Court by the appellant Charles s/o Lala against the respondent Abdallah s/o Mangi. He claimed Shs.200,000/= as damages and he lost the suit and I hence this appeal to this court.

MWALUSANYA J

The practice to the suit are both Wanyaturu by tribe, of Singida District. The learned A trial magistrate assured that the English common law of malicious prosecution was applicable without conducting any inquiry if that law was applicable. According to s.9 (l) of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance Cap. 453: B

Customary law shall be applicable to and courts shall exercise jurisdiction in accordance therewith in matters of a civil nature, between members of a community in which rules of customary law relevant to the matter are established and accepted - except in any case C where it is apparent, from the nature of any relevant act or transaction, manner of life or business, that the matter is or was to be regulated otherwise than by customary law.

In the case at hand it was common ground that parties belonged to the same D customary law community of the Wanyaturu. So what remained for the trial registrar to enquire were two matters:

1. First whether among the Wanyaturu there are rules of customary law regarding E malicious persecution which are established and accepted.

2. Secondly, whether from the nature of the wrong of malicious prosecution, it was apparent to the parties that they would not be governed by customary law of the Wanyaturu. F

Failure to make an inquiry on these two matters was fatal. This is because if these two matters are not, then the court (including the District Court) is obliged to apply customary law as s.9 (l) of Cap. 453 directs. G

Under s. 63 (l) of the Magistrate's Court Act No. 2 of the 1984 for customary law torts of malicious prosecution, defamation, destruction of crops by cattle, negligence etc. both the Primary Courts and District Courts have concurrent jurisdiction. It is only civil suits under customary law involving marriage, guardianship or inheritence and immovable H property, that the Primary Court has been given exclusive jurisdiction - see s.63(l) of the M.C.A. No. 2 of 1984. Section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code No. 49 of 1966 requires all suits to be instituted "in the court of the lowest grade competent to try it" but s. 63 (2) of the MCA provides that s. 13 shall not be read to require any proceedings I of a civil nature to be commenced in a Primary Court. So far a customary law tort of say malicious A prosecution where both the Primary Court and District Court have concurrent jurisdiction, it is quite proper for the District Court to hear such a suit. And that is what is envisaged by s. 7 (3) of the Magistrate's Court Act No. 2 of 1984 and see the decision of Georges C.P. in the case of Kulthum Ally Kara v Yassin Osman B [1969] E.A. 34 (T) and the decision of Seaton J. in the case of Francis s/o Mwijage v Boniface s/o Kabalemeza [1968] H.C.D. n. 341. I have made that extensive exposition only to array any fears that the trial magistrate might harbour that he has no jurisdiction to hear a suit involving a customary law tort. In fact he is obliged to use C the customary law where it is applicable as indicted in s.9 (l) of Cap. 453; and the Tanzania Court of Appeal has emphasized that point with all the command at disposal in the case of Maagwi s/o Kimito v Gibano s/o Werema: Mwanza Civil Appeal No. 20 of 1984 (unreported). D

In the case at hand the trial magistrate did injustice to the parties by not making an inquiry as to whether customary law was applicable to the circumstances or not. He just assumed that English common law was applicable. The trial magistrate should note that English common law is not always applicable, but as s. 2 (2) of Cap. 453 provides, it E is only applicable "in so far as the circumstances of Tanganyika and its inhabitants permit and subject to such qualifications as local circumstances may render necessary. Thus where customary law is applicable the English common law should not be invoked as the inhabitants do not permit it. F

There is a vast difference between the ingredients of the tort of malicious prosecution under English common law the ingredients are:

G (a) That the criminal proceedings have been terminated in the plaintiffs favour;

(b) That the defendant acted without reasonable and probable cause;

(c) That the defendant acted maliciously ie. with improper motive; H

(d) That the plaintiff has suffered some damages.

These ingredients were expounded by the House of Lords in the case of Herniman v Smith [1938] A.C. 305.

In contrast, in almost all our customary laws, ingredient (c) and (d) above are not I essential ingredients. Under most customary laws it is enough if the criminal proceedings terminated in the plaintiff's favour and the A defendant noted without reasonable and probable cause. The difference comes about because under customary law, the foremost consideration in tortious liability is to reconcile the litigants so as to maintain the equilibrium between the two parties and their clans - see T.O. Elias in his book. The Nature of African Customary Law pp. 130 B - 131. Therefore proof of malice is not necessary and proof of damage is not necessary. The position under English common law is different because under that system of law the object of tortious liability is to compensate the victim for the harm suffered. Thus substantial compensation is paid if damage is proved including vindictive damages. C Under English law judges are not concerned with what goes on between the parties after the verdict. That is why they insist that malice should be proved and damages be proved. Our own traditional African system of delivering justice was a vestibule system D of justice concerned more with the end result of doing justice both to the individual and the community, which is a system of common-sense justice.

I recently had occasion to hear an appeal involving the tort of malicious prosecution under Nyaturu customary law. The case is Marcel Kisiu v Timoth s/o Msuta E Dodoma (PC) Civil Appeal No. 23/1991, judgment delivered on 30/7/1995. The case shows that there are rules of customary law for malicious prosecution under the Wanyaturu, and that the ingredients of that tort are less stringent than the English common law and that the aim is reconciliation with payment of a token compensation F called Mbio Goya Mghongo.

Of course I am aware of the decisions of this court which have decided to engraft the ingredients of the tort of malicious prosecution under English common law into our customary law. See for example El-Kindy J. in the case of Waisirikare v Baraki G [1971] HCD n. 112. And in cases like Festo v Mwakabana [1971] HCD n. 417 and Moris Sasawata v Mattias Malieko [1980] TLR. 158, the District Courts merely assumed that English common law of malicious prosecution was applicable without holding an inquiry as to its applicability. The High Court did not question such an H irregularity. Therefore those decisions are of doubtful authority.

Be that as it may, in the case at hand, both under English common law and under Wanyaturu customary law, the appellant had failed to prove his case on a balance of probabilities. The respondent had every reasonable and probable cause for reporting I the appellant to the Police as a suspect who had stolen his cattle. There was the evidence of the village Chairman Abel s/o Buko (DW.2) who testified that one Juma A was found with the stolen cow of the respondent. When questioned Juma stated that he had bought the same from the appellant. That is why respondent reported the matter to the Ward Secretary and the police. The appellant did not disclose any malice or improper motive on the part of the respondent in reporting the matter to the proper B authorities. All that respondent wanted is a proper investigation by the appropriate authorities.

In the event this appeal fails. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

C Order accordingly.

Civil Case No. 30/1991 pending determination of an intended appeal to this Court by A the applicant.

In support of the application Mr. Ballonzi, learned counsel for the applicant, argued that the learned judge who ordered execution in Misc. Civil Case No. 38/1991 erred. It was submitted that the High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain an application for B execution in a matter which had already been decided by the district court. In support of his argument the court was referred to s.38 and 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. It was his argument that the pending appeal has reasonable chances of a success.

In rebuttal Mr. Marandu, learned counsel for the respondent argued that an application C to this Court seeking stay of execution can only be entertained when there is an existing appeal before this Court against the decision against which stay of execution is sought.

It was Mr. Marandu's submission that the applicant has not served the respondent with notice of intention to appeal to this Court, if the applicant has in fact given notice of D intention to appeal to this Court.

In reply Mr. Ballonzi argued that the applicant has already lodged a notice of appeal against the decision of the High Court. The learned counsel continued - "We have no E objection to serve the advocate (meaning Mr. Marandu, advocate for the respondent) with notice of appeal. We served the party himself with notice."

The question of notice of appeal featured in respondent's counter affidavit in which the respondent said he was not aware of any notice of appeal by the applicant. The counter F affidavit was apparently not replied to by the applicant.

Rule 76(l) of the Court of Appeal Rules is clear and unambiguous. It says:

G Any person who desires to appeal to the Court shall lodge a written notice in duplicate with the Registrar of the High Court.

The applicant has not proved to this Court that he has filed notice of appeal as provided under Rule 76(1) quoted above. He did not even bother to reply applicant's counter affidavit in which a question was posed as to whether notice of appeal against the H decision of the High Court had been filed by the applicant.

Faced with this question Mr. Ballonzi merely told the Court - "We have already lodged a notice of appeal against the decision of the High Court." I

There is no indication in the record to support Mr. Ballonzi's argument that the A applicant has in fact filed a notice of appeal against the decision of the High Court before lodging his application to this Court seeking for stay of execution. Nor is there evidence to show that the mandatory provisions under Rule 77 which requires the applicant to serve the respondent with copy of notice of appeal have been complied B with.

Rule 9(2)(b) of the Court of Appeal Rules quoted by Mr. Ballonzi only allows this Court to use its discretionary powers and stay execution "where a notice of appeal has been lodged."

As there is no evidence to show that the applicant has lodged notice of appeal against C the decision of the High Court I agree with Mr. Marandu, learned counsel for the respondent, that the application seeking stay of execution is incompetent and it is accordingly struck out.

D Application incompetent.

Trial a nullity. A

Mdamo/Marando, for the appellant

Mkude, J.: This is a second appeal. The appellant Mohamed Saidi Amiri had sued the respondent, Said Ngapwela, in the Primary Court of Temeke in Temeke District. The B suit was dismissed by the Primary Court and so the appellant appealed to the District Court of Temeke where the appeal was also dismissed. He is now appealing to this court. The case involves rival claims to a piece of land. C

Mr. Marando, learned counsel for the appellant cited the Magistrates' Courts (Primary Courts) Judgment of Court) Rules, 1987 contained in GN 2/88 and submitted that the presiding magistrate in the Primary Court had summed up to the assessors and the said assessors did not sign the judgment of the court as required by rule 4(1) of the said D Rules. He submitted therefore that the trial was a nullity and urged the court to order a new trial.

These two points were raised on appeal to the District Court of Temeke but the learned District Magistrate who heard the appeal dismissed them. As regards the point relating to summing up, this is how the first appellate court dealt with it: E

Having made a sober sorting through the contents of the so called summing up to assessors which the trial Magistrate titled them "Hukumu" which means judgment, I have F come to the view that the portion is not really summing up to asessessors but it is actually the judgment itself because it contains the summary of the evidence of both sides of the case, the issues of the case and the reasoning of the magistrate. In that form I take the same to be the judgment of the court because the gist in it is what the court has found G in the case.

I have examined the original record of proceedings in the Primary Court and found that what the presiding magistrate titled Hukumu comes immediately after the last defence witness, one Zaina Mlola. The order of the court appear in immediately before H Hukumu reads:

Amri: Shauri hadi tarehe 21/12/90 kwa kwenda kukagua sehemu ya tukio gharama zitagharamiwa na wote wawili. I

MKUDE J

It is true that the said "Hukumu" contains the summary of the evidence of both sides A of the case, the issues of the case and the reasoning of the magistrate but it cannot be said that the magistrate had intended this to be the judgment of the court. Reading through it one gets the impression quite clearly that it was intended to be a summing up to the assessors. He starts with a summary of the facts and the case for the plaintiff, B then the case for the defendant, after which he frames the issues for determination. Then the next paragraph reads:

C Kwa hiyo waheshimiwa Wazee wa Baraza tuangalie matukio yaliyothibitishwa na kukanushwa tukianzia na tukio la kwanza kuwa (l) Je Kiwanja anachodai mdai ni halali kukidai? Kwa kweli ushahidi uliotolewa na mdai ni kuwa Kiwanja hicho aliuziwa 1985 ... D

This shows that he was addressing the assessors after hearing the evidence of both sides and visiting the land in dispute. In fact this point is put beyond doubt in the last two sentences in which he says:

E Kwa hiyo waheshimiwa wazee wa baraza nafikiri matukio mmeyaelewa jinsi yalivyothibitishwa na kukanushwa. Kwa hiyo ni juu yenu kunipa maoni yenu kama mdai amethibitisha dai lake. F

After this follows "Maoni ya Washauri" under which there is the opinion of the first assessor, Rashidi Abdara Lamani followed by the opinion of the second assessor, Salum. Below the opinion of each assessor there is the signature of the assessor concerned. Then follows the following: G

Hakimu: Kutokana na matukio jinsi yalivyothibitishwa na kukanushwa naungana na washauri wangu kuwa mdai ameshindwa kumleta shahidi aliyemuuzia kuja kuthibitisha H kuwa kweli mali aliyouza ni halali kwake na vile vile hata mashahidi walioshuhudia mauziano hayo pia ameshindwa kuwaleta ....

Mahakama: Kwa kauli moja mahakama inaamua kuwa mdai ameshindwa kuthibitisha I dai lake mdaiwa ameshinda. Mdai amepoteza gharama za shauri.

MKUDE J

Below this there is only the signature of the magistrate. Thus the assessors have their A signatures appearing only once each, below their respective opinions.

Nowhere in the record of proceedings can you find the two signatures and that of the magistrate together.

In dealing with the question whether the two assessors had jointly signed the judgment B of the court or not the learned District Magistrate who sat on appeal said:

With reference to the lower court's records, I should not, at this juncture, hesitate to dismiss the appellant's second ground of appeal that the trial court assessors did not C sign the judgment, as the records show clearly that there are signatures of the two assessors namely Rashid and Salum, which they had signed after their respective opinions. D

In my considered view those signatures are enough to serve the purpose intended by the rules cited by the learned, Advocate for the appellant.

With due respect to the learned District Magistrate, those signatures are not enough E for the purpose intended by the rules. Rule 3 provides as follows:

3 (1) Where in any proceedings the court has heard all the evidence or matters pertaining to the issue to be determined by the court, the magistrate shall proceed to consult with F the assessors present, with the view of reaching a decision of the court.

G (2) If all the members of the court agree on one decision, the magistrate shall proceed to record the decision or judgment of the court which shall be signed by all the members.

(3) For the avoidance of doubt a magistrate shall not, in lieu of or in addition to, the consultations referred to in sub rule (1) of this Rule, be entitled to sum up to the other H members of the court. (Emphasis supplied)

These are mandatory provisions intended to emphasize the role of assessors in Primary Courts as members of the court and not just simple assessors assisting the court. The I magistrate has to consult the assessors and if there is a unanimous decision his duty is to reduce the decision to A writing and call upon the assessors to sign it with him so that it then becomes the decision or judgment of the court. Where there is a dissent then the majority must sign the majority judgment, which becomes the judgment of the court, and the magistrate must record the dissent and have it signed by the dissenting member. In the present B case as all the members of the court had agreed on dismissing the suit then they ought to have signed one decision jointly.

In the final result I agree with Mr. Marando, learned counsel for the appellant, that the C trial magistrate erred when he purported to sum up to the assessors in what he called "Hukumu" and also erred when he failed to record the unanimous decision of the court and call upon the assessors to sign it with him, for these reasons I declare the trial a nullity and order that the case be tried de novo before another magistrate sitting with D different assessors. Costs will abide the outcome of the said new trial.

Appeal allowed in part. B

Mr. Mpoki for the appellant

Mwalusanya, J: The appellant Andrea s/o Chilewa lost in the suit he filed at the Dodoma Urban Primary Court in which he claimed a refund of brideprice of 9 head C of cattle and shs.3,000/= from the respondent Keni s/o Masaka. The trial court held that the appellant had paid 6 head of cattle and shs. 3,000/= only as brideprice on the ground that the appellant was the guilty party responsible for the break down of the marriage. Appellant made his first appeal to Dodoma District Court and he again lost D and hence this second appeal. Appellant was represented at the hearing of the appeal by an advocate Mr. Mpoki.

The first point taken by the appellant's counsel Mr. Mpoki was that the first appellate court misdirect itself on not considering the likelihood of bias by the same magistrate E trying the case which he had earlier on tried and determined against the appellant. What happened was that in the divorce suit, the trial magistrate had granted divorce and then proceeded to order in the same case file that appellant was not entitled to a refund of F brideprice because he was the guilty party responsible for the breakdown of marriage. On appeal the learned District Magistrate quashed that part of the proceedings which denied the appellant the right to refund of brideprice on the ground that the question of refund of brideprice has to be adjudicated in a separate suit and not in the divorce suit. G And so a retrial was ordered for the question of refund of brideprice.

In my judgment I find that the question of bias could not arise because the irregularity that was committed in the first place was simply because the trial magistrate had combined two suits in one - the divorce suit and the suit for the refund of brideprice. H All what the learned District Magistrate had ordered was that they should be two separate suits. There was nothing wrong for the trial magistrate and his assessors to give the same views that they had given in the first suit. In fact the trial court would have been guilty of inconsistency if they had come to a different conclusion in the second suit for I the same set of facts. On my part I view them as principled adjudicators who do not decide a case according to the whims of the hour. A

Now what amount of brideprice had been paid by the appellant? The appellant had two witnesses namely Zubeti s/o Ismail (PW.2), and Charles s/o Chilewa (PW.3) who supported him that he had paid 9 heads of cattle and cash shs. 3,000/=. On the other B hand respondent had two witnesses to support him namely the ten cell leader Paulo s/o Chipagala (DW.2) and the appellant's ex-wife Mwajuma d/o Masaka (DW.3). Those said appellant had paid only six heads of cattle and cash shs. 3,000/=. It will be seen that the matter depended on the assessment of the credibility of the witnesses. As the C trial court had the opportunity to assess the demeanour of the witnesses in the witness-box, it will be wrong for this court to disturb the finding of the trial court. Like the District Court I find that only six heads of cattle and cash shs. 3,000/= had been paid as brideprice. D

The final question is, is the appellant entitled to a refund of the whole or any part of the brideprice? Counsel for the appellant Mr. Mpoki has submitted that both courts below were wrong to think that the sole consideration for ordering a refund or not, was the question as to who was the guilty party responsible for the break-down of marriage. E He said that the question of whether to order a refund or not was discretionary, among other matters to consider are the presence of children in the marriage and the duration of the marriage. On my part I find that Mr. Mpoki is right and the case of Murange s/o Mahende v Maricha s/o Malosi [1981] T.L.R. 295 supports him. F

Under para 52A and B of the Declaration of Customary Law (Law of Persons) G.N. 279/1963, if there are any children to the marriage and the marriage has subsited for a long time, no brideprice is refundable. Then comes para 54 which provides: G

> It is the court's discretion to vary the provisions contained in para 52A and B and to assess the amount of brideprice which should be returned, and the degree of guilt is the determining factor. H

In the case at hand, there were no children to the marriage, and the marriage lasted for a very short period, about three years only. That being the case, even though the appellant was the guilty party responsible for the break down of marriage, at least the appellant I should have got a partial refund of brideprice. Both courts below did not exercise their discretion judicially. In the circumstances of this case at least the A appellant should have been refunded two heads of cattle only. I so hold.

In the event, the appeal is partly allowed. I order that the appellant be refunded two head of cattle only. Each party to bear its own costs. B

Order accordingly.

Murder reduced to manslaughter. A

Shayo, for the appellant

Mfalila, Makame and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: The appellant Salum Abdallah Kihonyile B was charged with and convicted of murder. Upon being so convicted, he was sentenced to death. This appeal before us is against that conviction and sentence.

According to the version given by the prosecution at the trial, the killing of the deceased Hassan Maranda, followed an incident in which the appellant had cut the muscles of the C hind legs of a Masais cow. This was on 14/11/88. The detailed story was told by one of the Masai herdboys Njai Kisongela (P.W.4). At the time he was giving evidence, this boy was estimated to be about 12 years old. The learned trial judge allowed him to give evidence but not on oath because he found that the boy did not understand the nature D of an oath. This boy told the trial court that on the day in question he and his colleagues were herding cattle when the appellant approached their herd and cut the hind legs of one of the cows. The said cow was immobilized. The boy ran home to tell his parents and other adult Masai, that the appellant whom he knew had immobilized one of the E cows by cutting the muscles of its hind legs. On hearing this, the elders asked the boy Njai Kisongela to lead them to the scene where the cow had been cut and was lying. The boy took them there and on seeing the striken animal, one of these adults, namely F the deceased asked him to take him to the man who had done this to one of their cows. Despite being advised by his colleagues that he should not do that until it was established whether or not the culprit was just a thief, the deceased insisted on meeting the man immediately. The boy Njai led him to the appellant's hut where they found the G appellant lying down outside. According to this boy, when the appellant saw them he started shaking in fear. The deceased asked the appellant to accompany them to the place where the cow which he had cut was lying. The appellant responded by saying that he did not cut any cow, but he added that he would ask his colleague who was H inside the hut to see whether it was he who had cut the cow. He ran inside, the deceased tried to stop him without success. When the appellant came out, he was armed with a spear and threatened to teach the two a severe lesson. The two then started running with the appellant in hot persuit of the deceased. When after some I distance (65 metres according to the estimated distance), the deceased tripped and fell, the appellant stabbed him with a spear at the back. The blade went so deep that only the handle A came out, the steel blade remained in the body until it was removed during the post mortem examination. After stabbing the deceased, the appellant turned on the boy Njai, but he abandoned the chase when he saw people coming.

At the trial, the appellant denied cutting the cow as alleged, but admitted spearing the B decased to death, saying that he did so after being provoked by the deceased and his colleagues. According to his version, the background to the killing of the deceased was as follows: Prior to this incident, the Masai cattle had been a menace to farms in the area, and consequently he decided of late to guard his shamba. On the day in C question at about 5 p.m. he saw a group of cattle moving towards his shamba. He went out of the hut to go and chase away the cattle from his shamba. As he was doing this, he saw four Masais emerge from the grass where the cattle had originally come from. The D Masai started driving the cattle back to his shamba. They confronted him and asked him why he was driving their cattle away from the grass. When he asked the Masai where the grass was, they started assaulting him. The deceased in particular took out his hunting knife and a stick. He advanced on him and attempted to cut him with it. In the course of this confrontation, the deceased cut him on the forehead. At this stage, the E appellant ran into his hut, followed by the deceased. He collected his spear and confronted the deceased. While they were in this position, the appellant said, he stabbed the deceased with the spear. After being stabbed the deceased retreated, but another F Masai followed him. Fortunately he managed to get out of the hut and ran very fast to the local cell leader for safety.

After being addressed and directed by the learned trial judge, all the three assessors were of the opinion that throughout this incident, the appellant was acting in self-defence G against a group of Masai who had attacked him. In the circumstances, they advised that he should be acquitted.

However, the learned trial judge differed and held that both the defences of provocation and self defence were not available to the appellant. The learned judge had very high H regard for the boy Njai (P.W.4) as a witness who he said, told nothing but the truth, and that on the version as told by P.W.4, there was no room for provocation or self defence. He rejected as lies the appellant's version of the confrontation between him and the Masai during which he was stabbed on his forehead. He gave a number of I reasons. First, the learned judge said that if the appellant and the deceased were facing each other as described by the appellant, it would not have been possible A to stab the deceased on the part of the body shown in the report. Secondly, he said that the deceased's knife was found in its sheath thereby eliminating the possibility that the deceased used or attempted to use it on the appellant. Thirdly, he said that the injury on the appellant's forehead was so superficial that it could only have been self inflicted to B match the story he prepared.

At the hearing of this appeal, Mr. Shayo learned counsel who advocated for the appellant, stressed the availability to the appellant of the twin defences of provocation C and self defence. He argued that the fact that everybody agrees that at the time the appellant was shaking with fear, indicates the existence of an intimidating atmosphere and that since on the evidence there was a fight, the appellant must have been acting in self-defence.

On our part, we think with respect that the learned judge's great trust on the D credibility of the boy witness (P.W.4), blinded him to other equally relevant and important considerations. Take the question of the appellant cutting the legs of one of the cows in the Masai herd. The appellant denied doing anything of the sort, but we are satisfied that his denial cannot be true. The boy P.W.4 saw him do it and the afflicted E cow was physically seen and later slaughtered. But this incident should not have been so lightly dismissed by the learned judge. It was a pointer or indicator that all was not well between the "Waswahili" agriculturists and their pastoral Masai neighbours. It cannot be F possible that a man in his right senses, as we think the appellant is, could just get up and start cutting the limbs of his neighbour's animals. There must be something or some occurence which provoked him to act that way. In this case we are told, and this was not seriously challenged, that Masai cattle were a menace to the cultivated and planted G farms in the area. On the day in question, the appellant must have seen these cows arriving to invade his shamba and reacted accordingly. So this was the first provocation. Then he was confronted by the deceased whose approach was far from friendly. This is borne out by the fact that the deceased insisted on meeting the man who had cut the H legs of their cow despite being advised to the contrary, to wait until the position was thoroughly established. On arrival at the appellant's hut, and on seeing them, the appellant was visibly trembling with fear. What then made him tremble in fear? It must have been the menacing approach by the deceased, indicating that he was armed and I ready to use his weapon. We think this explains the need felt by the appellant to go into his hut to similarly arm himself for a possible A confrontation. In this kind of atmosphere, saturated with aggressiveness on both sides, where one party ends up dead and the other with an injury described by D. Sgt. Saidi Rashidi (P.W.3) as one which must have been occasioned by a sharp weapon, we do not think it was correct and safe to dismiss it as self inflicted to match the prepared B story. At one time during the confrontation, the appellant could have acted in self defence but this cannot apply to the final stabbing with a spear because we are satisfied from the position and nature of the injury that the appellant speared the deceased from the back while pursuing him. He was not then defending himself against anything. The C deceased was no longer aggressive. But having in mind all the background incidents, the continuous almost deliberate trespassing of their farms by the Masai cattle, the aggressive approach by the Masai and the subsequent attack on the appellant which resulted in his being injured on the forehead, convince us that at the time the appellant D speared the deceased, he was still affected by this provocation which is sufficient to reduce the offence to the lesser one of manslaughter. The gentlemen assessors at the trial, were of the opinion that the appellant acted in self defence, but for the reasons we E have given, this defence was not available to the appellant at the time he speared the deceased in hot pursuit. But as indicated he was still under the influence of provocation.

For those reasons we set aside the conviction for murder and the sentence of death. Instead we substitute a conviction for manslaughter and taking all the relevant factors F into account, we sentence the appellant to 10 years imprisonment effective from the 25th April, 1989 the date he was convicted and sentenced in the High Court.

G Order accordingly.

Mfalila, Makame and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: The appellant Joseph Hugo Liganga was H convicted of murder and sentenced to death by the High Court sitting at Morogoro (Lugakingira, J.). The High Court found the allegation that he had with malice aforethought caused the death of his sister-in-law Konsolata Likupila proved beyond reasonable doubt. He lodged this appeal against both conviction and sentence. I

MAKAME JJA, RAMADHANI JJA, MFALILA JJA

The only eye witness to the killing who gave evidence at the trial was the appellant A himself. The only other person who was in the room at the time, the young girl Salima Selemani could not be found to give evidence. On 12/8/88 at 11 p.m. Nikodemu Liganga (P.W.1) received particularly bad news of the death of the wife of his younger brother. This witness told the trial court that at that hour he was visited by the late B Rashid Katepa who was accompanied by the appellant and the young girl Salima. They informed him of the killing of his sister-in-law Konsolata. On receipt of this information, he proceeded to the scene where he found a particularly gruesome sight. In Konsolata's C room, he found a lot of blood splattered everywhere. They saw the deceased lying on the bed, she had a cut wound on the throat extending from below the left ear to below the right ear. She had another wound on the head which appeared to have been inflicted by a heavy instrument like a hammer. The gruesome sight was also witnessed by a neighbour Iddi Mbonde (P.W.2) who arrived at the scene in response to an alarm as D well as the village chairman Selemani Rajabu (P.W.3) who arrived at the scene after being sent for. The appellant was arrested, tied with ropes and placed in the custody of the chairman who also took under his possession the suspected murder weapons namely, the axe and the panga. When later police arrived at the scene, he handed to E them both the appellant and the murder weapons.

At his trial, the appellant did not dispute the allegation that he killed his sister in law Konsolata. He freely admitted killing the deceased to the point of describing in detail F how he had killed the unfortunate woman. Both from his evidence in court, and his extra judicial statement, it can be gathered that he claimed that he killed the deceased either in self defence or on grave provocation or both. He explained that on the day in question, he could not eat his dinner properly because of a bad stomach. But later in the night G about 9 p.m. when the two women, the deceased and Salima had gone to sleep, he felt hungry and looked for food in the house. He found none as the whole amount had been consumed. He therefore decided to do the cooking, but the rice was kept in the deceased's room. He went into the deceased's room to take the rice. As he prepared H to take the rice from under the deceased's bed, the deceased who had been asleep woke up and ordered him to stop. The appellant said he ignored her and continued to take the rice. But as he was doing so, he suddenly heard an axe strike the wall behind him. This he said irritated him, and so he picked up the axe and struck back at her head. I After striking this blow, the axe slipped from his grip and fell to the floor. But at hand was a panga which he had taken with him into the A deceased's room. He picked this panga and gave her another blow with it. However in his extra judicial statement, the appellant suggested that the deceased only threatened him with the axe if he continued to ignore her order to stop taking the rice. As she said B this while pointing the axe at him, he snatched it and struck her with it. When he lost grip and it fell on the floor, he produced a panga which was nearby and slashed her throat with it.

On this evidence the learned trial judge directed the assessors on two defence: Self defence and provocation. Although the assessors did not say so in so many words, C perhaps on account of the manner in which they were directed, they seem to have rejected these defences and advised that the appellant was guilty of murder. The learned trial judge accepted this advice and in his judgment gave detailed reasons why the two defences were not available to the appellant and convicted him. D

In this appeal, the appellant raised only one issue namely that "the learned trial judge erred in law and evidence in not giving the necessary weight to several incidences prior to the death of the deceased such as accusations of sexual demands, caning of the appellant by the deceased and the refusal by the deceased to allow appellant take E some rice for cooking on the material date triggering the appellant to kill the deceased. Such incidents if properly considered would have reduced the conviction to a lesser offence of manslaughter."

Reading through the judgment of the trial court, it becomes abundantly clear that the F learned judge treated the two defences of self defence and provocation in great detail. In our view it is not easy to fault the learned judge's reasoning. When he went in to collect the rice from the deceased's room, the appellant armed himself with a panga. G Indeed the learned judge thought it more likely than not that the appellant was also armed with the axe for he could not see how the axe got into the deceased's room, given the manner in which it was ordinarily kept in his room. If he was going merely to collect rice for cooking, why arm himself so heavily? The appellant explained that it was H his habit to walk about with his panga wherever he went "even in the toilet". We ask ourselves, why? of course we do not know what kind of toilet facilities he had. But would this necessitate his walking into his sister-in-law's room at night armed with the panga? The learned trial judge rejected this and found that the appellant went into the I deceased's room with criminal intentions. We agree. The version which the appellant gave in his evidence at the trial would give rise to a defence of self defence and A provocation. But since the deceased was no longer armed at the time the appellant bashed her head, we agree with the learned judge that there was nothing against which the appellant was defending himself. He was in his own words just revenging. As to provocation, we agree with the trial court that merely to tell the appellant to desist from B taking the rice and even throwing the axe, would not have deprived the appellant the power of self control particularly when he himself says that he had in the past ignored the deceased's previous irritations because he had to act responsibly as the male head of the household. The act of pointing an axe at the appellant as explained in the extra C judicial statement could not amount to provocation capable of creating the kind of reaction the appellant unleashed on the deceased. This is the only explanation why the appellant chose to go into the deceased's room armed to the teeth. The manner and D brutality with which he killed the deceased is proof that the appellant on that particular day, had decided to provide or execute the last solution to his long standing problems with the deceased. He bashed the deceased's head and in his own words finished the business by cutting her throat from end to end. Such a killing cannot be anything but murder. E

For those reasons we are satisfied that this appeal has no merit and we dismiss it in its entirety.

F Appeal dismissed.

[zJDz]Judgment

Katiti, J.: On the 29/1/1990, one Katiba Umege the complainant, was expecting a consignment of beer from Arusha, by use of Scania lorry TZ 51559. When it finally D arrived, the count of crates of beer revealed that two crates of beer, worth Shs. 13,000/= had been consumed to finish, the empty bottles bearing witness to the said same consumption. Guarding the said beer crates from Arusha was Lubaga Senga, the E appellant herein. This Lubaga Senga, admitted to have drank some of the same to quench his thirst, and to have charitably dished some to some passengers.

The appellant was therefore charged, under section 269 (c) of the Penal Code Cap. 16. He pleaded unequivocally guilty, and hence the conviction on his own plea of guilty. He F was sentenced to five years imprisonment, subject to confirmation. The appellant is now appealing against sentence, contending that the sentence was excessive.
The learned Senior State Attorney Mr. Kaduri, appearing for the Republic, did concede G that considering the circumstances of this case, the sentence of five years imprisonment, was on the high side. It has to be recalled, that the offence carries, the maximum sentence of ten years imprisonment, and that if five years imprisonment is imposed the hue and cry against the same, would expectedly be less. But every H sentencing process cannot and should not, unless a statutory minimum sentence is being administered avoid individualization of the offence, and the circumstances of the offender, otherwise the whole exercise, becomes mechanical. In this case, the appellant admitted guilt, a factor speaking mitigatingly in favour of him. He was a first offender, a I factor eloquently praying for lenience in favour of the appellant, and to still add, the appellant contritely begging pardon, and promising to pay, could not have left mercy without a A smile. The appellant said in mitigation:

> I only pray for pardon, some people fooled me in dishing out the beer. I promise to pay back the value of the beer, I stole i.e. Shs. 13,000/=. I will raise it. B

If the sense of mercy, can still stand smile - less, as a statue of granite, in the face of such a plea, I do not know, under what circumstances, would mercy be moved in favour of the pleader. I am of the considered view, that the appellant was in the C circumstances entitled to more lenient treatment, than he was accorded. In the circumstances, I am allowing his appeal, and making such order as will result in his immediate release, unless, he is otherwise legaly held. D

When the applicant wanted to file the appeal according to the laid down procedure it was discovered that time for so filing had ended. Judgment

Mroso, J.: The applicant was the losing party in an appeal from the Primary Court of C Maji ya Chai to the District Court of Arusha. She filed (PC) Civil Appeal No. 47 of 1985 to this court. But in doing so she contravened the procedure stipulated in section 25(3) of the Magistrates Courts Act, 1984 by filing the petition of appeal directly in the High Court instead of filing it in the District Court of Arusha. Because of that this D court was moved by Mr. Umbulla, learned advocate for the respondent, to strike out the appeal which was not properly before it. Following that order, the applicant through her advocate, Mr. Musei, wishes to file the appeal afresh, in the correct procedure. But E since the time for appeal has long run out, she has filed this application for leave to appeal out of time. In the Chamber Application Mr. Musei has cited Section 25(l)(b) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 and Section 4(l) of the Law of Limitation Act. The application is supported by the affidavit of the applicant. F

The main reasons given in the applicant's affidavit for the enlargement of time are that she is an illiterate woman who was ignorant of the provisions of section 25(3) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 and that the High Court registry staff did not inform her at the time she presented her petition of appeal that it ought to have been presented in G the District Court from the judgment of which the appeal was preferred.

During the hearing of the application Mr. Musei elaborated that even lawyers had been overlooking the requirements of section 25(3) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 H and, therefore, that this court should show special consideration for a lay and illiterate person like the applicant. Mr. Musei further submitted that the applicants appeal to this Court which was struck out for not being properly before the court had in fact been filed in time and that the applicant's intended appeal is meritorious. I

Mr. Umbulla for the respondent vehemently resisted the application and asked the A court to dismiss it. He submitted that there have not been shown special and adequate grounds for the delay in filing the appeal and that ignorance of the law is not an excuse. In support of that submission, he cited the case of Rozendo Ayres Ribeiro v Olivia Daritta Siqueira E. Fachao and Lilia Ozlinda Pia Daritta Siqueira [1934] Vol. I B EACA 1 where it was held that if an appeal is not filed in time, special circumstances have to be shown for extension of time to appeal. Examples of special circumstances were given as where there has been any misleading through any conduct of the other party or where some mistake had been made in the office itself, and the party was C misled by an officer of the Court or where some sudden accident which could not have been foreseen accounted for the delay. But a mere misunderstanding of the provisions of appeal rules will not amount to special circumstances. D

Mr. Umbulla also cited a Ruling of this Court in Miscellaneous Civil Application No. 97 of 1992 Martin Paul v Gerald Valery: unreported, in which it was held that filing an appeal in the wrong court is not a sufficient ground for extension of time to appeal. It was further argued by Mr. Umbulla citing the Court of Appeal of Tanzania Miscellaneous E Civil Application No. 20 of 1988 - Maulidi Hussein v Abdallah Juma as authority, that mistake of counsel or applicant or even prospects of the intended appeal succeeding is not a sufficient ground for granting leave to appeal out of time.

In response to the arguments and the authorities cited by Mr. Umbulla, Mr. Musei said F that those authorities were not relevant to the application under consideration. He said the applicant who was not represented by counsel when she filed her appeal, had in fact acted with due diligence in filing it in time, albeit in the wrong court. G

An appeal to the High Court from the decision or order of the District Court in proceedings originating from the Primary Court has to be filed within 30 days of such decision or order, according to section 25(l) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984. There is a proviso however, that the High Court may extend the time for filing such appeal. Even H so, there must be sufficient reason to make the High Court exercise its discretion to extend the time, for the High Court in exercising its discretion it must act judicially. To act judicially implies acting for good or sufficient reason.

The applicant who admittedly is a lay person, and it is claimed she is illiterate, acted in I time in preparing her petition of appeal to the High Court against a decision of the District Court of Arusha sitting as a first A appellate Court. The question is whether her ignorance of the procedure as contained in section 25(3) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 can amount to sufficient reason to give her enlarged time to refile the appeal, this time in the correct court. B

I have had the advantage of reading through the cases which were cited to me by Mr. Umbulla.

In the Ribeiro v Siqueira case Counsel for the applicant for extension of time under Rule 8 of the Eastern Africa Court of Appeal Rules, 1925 had claimed that a misinterpretation C of the judgment of the Supreme Court of Kenya had been the cause for failure to appeal in time against that judgment. The Court of Appeal said in that connection:

D Now before the applicant can succeed he must show that there have been special grounds for his delay in presenting his appeal, and here we would observe. That it is settled law that a mistake made by him or by his counsel as to the effect of the judgment could not per se constitute a good ground for granting his application. E

Citing the case of in Re Coles and Ravenshear [1907] 1 KB 8 where Farewell, L.J. said:

F A mere slip or blunder on the part of the litigant's legal adviser cannot, in my view, entitle him to anything at all the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa refused to grant leave.

In CAT Civil Application No. 20 of 1988 - Maulidi Hussein v Abdallah Juma case G (unreported), it was held that negligence or want of diligence by counsel for a party is not a sufficient reason for granting leave to appeal out of time. A similar view was held in CAT Civil Application No. 13 of 1987 - Institute of Finance Management v Simon Manyaki (also unreported). However, in both the Simon Manyaki case and in the case H of Shah Hemras Bharmal and Brothers v Santosh Kumari w/o J.N. Bhola [1961] E.A. 679 a significant departure appears to have been made from the Ribeiro v Sequeira case in that mistakes of legal advisers, within limits, may amount to sufficient reason for extending time to appeal. In the Simon Manyaki case Kisanga, J.A. said: I

MROSO J

A The decision in each case must depend on the facts and circumstances of the individual case ... The point to stress here is that counsel's mistake may amount to sufficient reason only where the mistake involves a minor or slight lapse, but not where it involves a lapse of a fundamental nature.

That was also the view which was expressed by the Court of Appeal of Tanzania in the B case of Kighoma Alli Malima v Abas Yusufu Mwingamno, Civil Application No. 5 of 1987 (also unreported). The Ruling of this court in the Martin Paul v Gerald Vallery was based solely on the EACA decision in Ribeiro v Siqueira case. C

Apart from the Ribeira v Siqueira and Martin Paul v General Vallery cases which said that mistakes by applicants (as distinct from those made by their counsel) cannot be considered (whatever they may be?) as providing sufficient reason for extending time for appeal, the other cases to which I have referred centred on mistakes or negligence or D lack of diligence on the part of counsel for parties. I think where a mistake relates to a procedure as set out by law but otherwise there is no negligence or want of diligence, a distinction should be drawn between a lawyer and a lay person.

A lawyer is trained on how and where to look for the law. It is easy for a court to E reject his plea that he did not realise that a certain legal procedure for filing an appeal existed. But a lay person who has been acting with due diligence may easily be misled by a wrong practice. For example, it is a fact that until I put a stop to it and issued firm directions, it had been the practice in this court for a long time for appeals in proceedings F originating from the Primary Court to be filed directly in the High Court, in complete oblivion of the provisions of section 2 5(3) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984. There are scores of decisions of this court in appeals which were filed in contravention of section 25(3) referred to, and which remain "valid" because no one as yet has appealed G to the Court of Appeal to have them overturned on that ground. For my part, therefore, I shall be inclined to accept as a sufficient reason a plea by a lay person that he be allowed to file out of time in the appropriate court an appeal which has been struck out or is voluntarily withdrawn from the High Court, because it had been wrongly filed there, but H timeously.

The last point I have to consider in this application is whether I should allow it, Mr. Musei said the intended appeal stands a good chance of success. Mr. Umbulla disputes that I argument and said that in fact it stands no such chance.

MROSO J

In the case of Mugo and Another v Wanjiru and Another [1970] E.A. 481, leave to A appeal out of time was sought on the ground that proceedings in the Supreme Court of Kenya were conducted in breach of the principles of natural justice, suggesting thereby that the intended appeal had a high likelihood of succeeding. The Court said: B

> I would agree to this extent, that I do not think the fact that an appeal appears likely to succeed can of itself amount to a "sufficient reason". Normally, I think, the sufficient reason must relate to the inability to take the particular step in time, but I am not prepared to say that C no other consideration may be invoked.

The court granted the extension of time sought because there had been a distinct possibility that the proceedings in the Supreme Court had been conducted in breach of D principles of natural justice, in that the parties had not been given opportunity to be heard.

In the application before me, although, it is stated in the applicant's affidavit that the appeal was "meritorious" no copy of the judgment against which the appeal is intended E was annexed to the application. So, this court has no means to verify the claim that the appeal is or is not "meritorious".

Mr. Umbulla for the respondent, however, has submitted that the respondent has been on the disputed land since 1980, after buying it. The applicant was aware of that fact and did F not take any steps to challenge the respondent's occupation until four years later, in 1984. For those reasons Mr. Umbulla prayed that the application be dismissed with costs.

As I have already said I am not in a position to know the merits of the intended appeal G but since I have found for the reasons discussed earlier that the applicant has shown sufficient cause, leave is hereby granted to the applicant to file the intended appeal out of time. The period is extended to 14th December, 1992.

The appellant, with others, were charged with and convicted of the offence of burglary and stealing. On first appeal the others were acquitted. Aggrieved, the appellant C appealed further to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania. The main argument put forward on appeal was that the first appellate court accepted the evidence of P.W.4 which required close scrutiny before it could be acted upon to uphold the conviction of the appellant. The D evidence of P.W.4 was used as corroborative evidence to that of accomplices to found the conviction of the appellant.

Mbwezeleni, for the appellant.
[zJDz]Judgment
Kisanga, J.A., Nyalali, C.J. and Ramadhani J.A.: The appellant and three others were jointly charged in the Regional Magistrate's Court Zanzibar with the offences of burglary and stealing contrary to sections 267(1)(a), and 248(1) respectively of the G Penal Decree. Two of them were acquitted but the appellant and one other were convicted on both counts and were each sentenced to 4 years' imprisonment on each count; the sentences to run concurrently. On first appeal the High Court (Hamid, C.J.) H upheld the conviction and sentence of the appellant but allowed the appeal of his co-appellant. The appellant is now appealing further to this Court.
The facts of the case may be summarized very briefly as follows: The complainant's house was broken into at night and a video and a radio were stolen from there. Only a few days I later the video was traced into the hands of one Haji Daudi Suleiman who was made a co-accused at the trial; the radio was never traced. Haji's explanation was A that the video was deposited with him by the appellant to secure a loan of Shs. 20,000/= he gave to the appellant. His defence was duly supported by the evidence of Nuru Abdulla Khamis, his wife who testified for the prosecution as P.W.4. The appellant denied sending anything to Haji, his co-accused, as claimed by Haji himself and his B wife. As intimated before both courts below disbelieved the appellant's story and found him guilty of the burglary of the complainant's house and of stealing from there the video in question.

In this appeal the appellant was represented by the learned advocate Mr. H.A.S. C Mbwezeleni who raised two grounds of appeal, namely, that the video in question was not identified adequately and that the appellant's conviction was based on accomplice evidence which was not sufficiently corroborated.

We have to state at once that there is merit in both grounds of complaint. The D complainant (P.W.1) identified the video merely by pointing at it in the court room and saying that it was his and that his wife also identified it. His wife (P.W.2) slightly improved on this by stating that she identified the video because when it was stolen the thief or E thieves left behind its cover and wires or cable. No attempt was made, however, to show whether the cover which was left behind fitted this particular video. Mr. Mbwezeleni submitted that the evidence of identification so far adduced was not sufficient to distinguish the video in question from any other video. F

Indeed the investigation officer (P.W.5) testified that he recovered from the house of the accused Haji video No. 8100233, but this does not establish that this is the very video which was stolen from the complainant's house. The difficulty would have been removed if the complainant and/or his wife were able to say that their video bore this number, but G they did not. As things stand now, however, we agree with Mr. Mbwezeleni that the evidence of the investigating officer (P.W.5) as to the number found on the video seized by him is of little or no value in relation to this case. We also agree that on the evidence H before the court the video in question was not adequately identified as the one which was stolen from the burgled house of P.W.1 and P.W.2.

On the issue of corroboration, the learned Chief Justice properly directed himself by saying that the evidence of Haji Daudi Suleiman, an accomplice, required corroboration I when Haji said that the video in question was deposited with him by the appellant as a security for a loan. Mr. Mbwezeleni submitted, rightly in our view, that the learned A Chief Justice, however, erred in finding that Haji's evidence was duly corroborated. The Chief Justice found that the evidence of Haji was duly corroborated by that of his own wife Nuru (P.W.4). He took the view that although P.W.4 was the wife of the B accomplice Haji, he was satisfied that there was nothing wrong with her evidence, it was all right and that he was entitled to accept and act on it. With due respect, however, the learned Chief Justice erred here. Upon her own evidence, P.W.4 is the one who received the video when it was brought to their house in the absence of her husband. She kept it C and then handed it to her husband when the latter returned home. On this score alone P.W.4 is clearly a person with an interest of her own to serve. For, in the event her husband and the appellant are acquitted, she would obviously be the next suspect. As such it would be in her interest to try to shift the blame on others to save her own skin. D

In addition, P.W.4 is the wife of Haji, the accomplice. Given such relationship she could be tempted to give false testimony in favour of her husband and against the appellant. Her evidence, therefore, would require close scrutiny before it could be accepted and be acted upon.

The learned Chief Justice did not do this, he appears to have accepted her E evidence on its face value.

The view we take is that for the reasons we have stated above, P.W.4 was a witness whose evidence needed corroboration before it could be accepted and acted upon. Such evidence which requires corroboration could not itself corroborate accomplice evidence; F and that was another ground for saying that the appellant's conviction was unsupportable.

In the result we allow the appeal, quash the conviction and set aside the sentence with an order that the appellant be released from prison forthwith unless he is otherwise lawfully held. G

The record shows that during the continuance of the trial the court ordered that the video in question be handed to the complainant, Muhamed Mbarak Salum (P.W.1) and his wife Zakia Saleh Ajmy (P.W.2) for safe keeping. Since the appellant has laid no claim over the video, it is directed that the complainant and his wife shall continue to keep and have H the video so long as nobody turns up and establishes before a court of law that he has a better claim over the video than the complainant and his wife have.

I Appeal allowed.

Nyalali, C.J., Kisanga and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: Saumu Mohamed Kassim, hereinafter called, the appellant, instituted a suit in the High Court of Zanzibar at Vuga against G Mohamed Haji Dau, hereinafter called the respondent, for a declaration that house No. T situated at Kidongochekundu in Mjini District within the region of Mjini Magharibi, Zanzibar, is jointly owned by both the Appellant and Respondent, and for an order that, that house be sold by public auction and the proceeds thereof be divided between the H parties according to their respective entitlement; or in the alternative, for an order that the Respondent pay the appellant the sum of shillings 500,000/= being half the value of the house in question. The High Court, Dahoma, J. dismissed the suit in its entirety and ordered each party to bear his or her costs. The Appellant was aggrieved by I that decision, hence this appeal to this Court. At the hearing of this appeal before us, A each party appeared and argued the case in person.

From the proceedings both in this Court and the court below, it is apparent that much of the primary facts in this case are not in dispute between the parties. It is common ground that the Appellant and the Respondent were married as husband and wife early in the B 1970s, and their marriage was blessed with two children that is, Mohamoud Mohamed Haji Dau (a son) and Asha Mohamed Haji Dau (a daughter). During the subsistence of their marriage, they jointly built the house now in dispute at Kidongochekundu, and agreed to own and enjoy it jointly, and they also agreed on other terms concerning its C use and disposition while they continued to be married or to be alive and also in the case of death of either or both. It is also common ground that subsequently the marriage between the parties come to an end, and that currently, the Respondent is living in the house at Kidongochekundu together with one child of the marriage, while the Appellant D is living in another house at Kikwajuni, Zanzibar. It is common ground that the Appellant got this other house at Kikwajuni from the Respondent during the subsistence of their marriage.

With regard to matters that are in dispute between the parties, it is the appellant's case E that ever since the termination of the marriage of the parties, the Respondent has denied the appellant of her right to enjoy or benefit from the house at Kidongochekundu contrary to the terms of their contract, and that under those circumstances she is discharged from the contract concerning the house, and consequently she is entitled to have her share in F the house paid to her in monetary terms.

The Respondent on the other hand contends that the Appellant is no longer entitled to claim a share in the house at Kidongochekundu for two reasons. First, it is the G Respondent's contention that the house in which the Appellant currently lives at Kikwajuni was given to her by the Respondent as compensation for her share in the house at Kidongochekundu. This is of course denied by the Appellant who contends to have got that house by buying it from the Respondent. Secondly the Respondent H contends apparently in the alternative, that the Appellant is fully compensated for her share in the Kidongochekundu house through the use of that house enjoyed by her children living there with the Respondent.

The first issue for consideration and decision in this case is whether the Appellant was given the house at Kikwajuni by the Respondent as compensation for her share in I Kidongochekundu
NYALALI CJ, KISANGA JJA, RAMADHANI JJA
house or whether she bought it from the Respondent. The Appellant produced a A registered Sale Deed at the trial, and she showed it to us on appeal. The Respondent confirmed this by showing us his own photostat copy of the same Sale Deed made on the 20th March, 1984. The Deed clearly states to the effect that the Respondent had agreed to sell the house situated at Kikwajuni to the Appellant for a sum of shillings fourteen B thousand only. How can anyone in his or her right mind, let alone this Court, construe the Sale Deed to be anything else. We are satisfied that the house at Kikwajuni has been sold by the Respondent to the Appellant and that it is a blatant lie to assert otherwise. C

The second issue for consideration and decision in this case is whether the Appellant is sufficiently compensated for her share in the Kidongochekundu house through the use and enjoyment of that house by the children of her marriage to the Respondent. We do not think that this contention is tenable. This is because the Appellant's share in that house D is distinct and separate from the children's right to use and enjoy the house in question. This is so because the childrens' right arises from their father's (that is, the respondent's) obligation to provide accommodation for them, whereas the appellant's right in that house arises from the joint ownership of the house in accordance with the contract made E between the parties when they jointly built that house. We thus find that the Appellant's share in the house is not compensated for by the use and enjoyment of the house by the children.

The third issue for consideration and decision in the case is whether the Appellant is F entitled to be treated as discharged from the contract as a result of the Respondent's conduct. Obviously, since the Respondent no longer recognised the Appellant's share in the house in question, he is no longer minded to continue to honour the contract. Under G section 39 of the Contract Decree of Zanzibar, Cap. 149 the Appellant is entitled to terminate that contract. Section 39 states:

> 39. When a party to a contract has refused to perform, or disabled himself from performing, H his promise in its entirety, the promisee may put an end to the contract, unless he has signified, by words or conduct, his acquiescence in its continuance.

The fourth and last issue for consideration and decision in this case is whether the I Appellant is entitled to be paid or otherwise
NYALALI CJ, KISANGA JJA, RAMADHANI JJA
compensated for her share in the Kidongochekundu house, and if so how much. A Clearly, the termination of the contract between the parties removes the basis upon which the house in question is jointly owned by the parties and consequently each party is entitled to recover his or her own share. What then is the extent of the Appellant's share in the house? The Appellant annexed to her plaint a document made and signed by the B parties embodying the contract between them. However, this document was not registered as required by sections 4(1) of the Registration of Documents Decree Cap. 99 of the Laws of Zanzibar and it cannot therefore be relied upon to create a right or interest in immovable property. Fortunately for the Appellant joint ownership of the house is C admitted by the Respondent. We are of the considered opinion that where a right in immovable property is indisputably established between the parties, as is the case here, a document which is otherwise inadmissible to prove the existence of such a right may be looked at by the Court for purposes of clarification of the established right. An D analogous, though not a similar situation was dealt with in the case of Ali Bin Khatibu v Khamis Bin Omar 7 Z.L.R. 113 where it was held that the court could look at an unregistered document relating to a transfer of land not as evidence of title to land but as E evidence that the transferee had entered into the disputed land under colour of a claim adverse to ownership of the transferer.

An examination of the document annexed to the plaint of the Appellant leads one to the conclusion that the parties made equal contributions to the building of the house. This is F apparent from the opening sentence of the document which reads:

Mimi Mohamed Haji Dau, nathibitisha kwamba, kuhusu mada ya hapo juu imejengwa kwa mashirikiano na bibi Saumu Mohamed Kassim kwa gharaza zote (We have underlined the G relevant portion).

In the light of this evidence we are satisfied and find as a fact that each party is entitled to half share of the house at Kidongochekundu. H

The Appellant prays for an order for the sale of the house by public auction. She puts the current value of the house at shillings 1,000,000/=. It is in that light that she claims in the alternative to be compensated by the Respondent paying her a sum of 500,000/= for her share. I

On the basis of the facts established in this case, there can be no doubt that the trial A High Court erred in dismissing the Appellant's claim. We therefore allow the appeal with costs, and order that the Respondent pays the Appellant the sum of shs. 500,000/= or half the value of the house to be assessed or determined by the Government Valuer B within a period of three months from today, and in default, the house to be sold by public auction and the proceeds thereof be divided equally between the parties.

Judgment

Masanche, J.: This is an appeal by one Haji Athuman Issa, who is represented by Mr. Katabalwa, the learned advocate, against an award of Bill of costs to one Rweitama I Mutatu. The respondent was awarded what appears to be an omnibus figure of Shs. A 100,450/=. The respondent had asked to be awarded a figure of shs.131,450/= plus shs. 7,120/= as costs.

1992 TLR p373

It is common knowledge that the applicants had wrongly filed a case, against the respondents, in the High Court. Counsel, Mr. Katabalwa, and Mr. Rweyemamu, appeared before the High Court. In the end, the case got dismissed and the present B applicant was condemned in costs.

The Bill of costs had been filed by the respondent himself, and not an advocate, which has surprised me. Anyhow, it appears Mr. Rweyemamu had or has abandoned the respondent. C

But then, can the respondent come back and claim costs for the appearance of his advocate? This he cannot do, especially where the record does not show whether the respondent appeared or not.

Can, again, the respondent apply to be paid costs for anything that might have happened after the conclusion of the case, which we are told was on 16/10/89? I agree with Mr. D Katabalwa that the respondent cannot so claim.

Admittedly, the application for the Bill of Costs was entertained by the taxing master in the absence of the applicants. But, even then, the taxing master was bound, to my mind, E to consider the reply of the respondent, which was in the file. A person who prosecutes a case alone, in the absence of the other party on the other side, does not have an easy ride to the case. He has, still, to prove the case on a balance of probability. The court does not have to take everything that is thrown in: My brother Bahati, J, has F remarked in the case of Felix M. Shirima v Mohamed Farahani and another, (Civil Case No. 23 of 1981 of High Court Dar es Salaam Registry unreported) that:

There must be proof of the case on the standard required by law, which is on the balance of G probabilities even where a case proceeds ex parte.

Respondent, in this case, while acting ex parte, only threw in figures on the table of the taxing master, and the taxing master endorsed them. He slashed some shs.30,000/= H only.

The law about taxation is this: That judges will in most cases not interfere with questions of quantum, because these are regarded as matters with which the taxing master is particularly fitted to deal with. But, and that is a big 'but', the court could interefere if the I taxing master clearly acted unjudicially. (See the case of Haidan Bin Mohamed Elmandry and others v Khadija Binti Ali Bin Salen [1956] 23 A E.A.C.A. 313).

MASANCHE J

The Bill of costs shows that shs. 40,000/= was paid out for Advocates fees. That, to my mind was on the high side. The case ended up ex parte. Not much research went into the hearing. The law provides as follows: B

1. That briefing should be based on the amount of work involved; in preparing for hearing, the difficulties and importance of the case, and the amount of money involved; C

2. Time occupied in the hearing and the amount of research required to examine the issues, is also considered (see the cases of George Mbugus and Another v A.S. Maskini [1980] T.L.R., at page 53 Premchant v Quarry Services [1972] E.A. 1962; and D Haidari's case quoted Supra).

I slash shilling 20,000/= from item No. 1. I award Shs.20,000/= only, on that item.

The items on disbursements have caused me concern. E

It is true that the respondent has inflated some of them, I, again, doubt of the authenticity of many of the food receipts. They all seem to be in the handwriting of the respondent himself. I have also been unable to verify on the lodging receipts. They also seem to be in the handwriting of the respondent himself. F

There are also costs which were incurred well after the case had been finalised. I agree with Mr. Katabalwa that those costs should not be the concern of the applicant. They are therefore struck out. On the whole, on disbursements, I would award Shs.20,000/=. This should also include travel. G

The Bill of costs is taxed at Shs. 40,000/=

H Order accordingly.

Held: It seems that neither the trial magistrate nor the appellate magistrate is aware of the Magistrates Courts (Primary Courts) (Judgment of Court) Rules, Government Notice No. 2 of 1988. I would particularly draw their attention to Rule 3 thereof which puts an end to the practice of summing up to the assessors. The assessors are to be consulted for their opinions after the conclusion of the evidence without preliminaries.

Lugakingira, J.: The appellant brought action in the Primary Court at Zanaki for compensation of 16,000/= alleging that the respondent's cattle had destroyed her shamba of millet and potatoes. The claim was unsuccessful, the court holding that the evidence did not establish the identity of the offending animals. It reached that view after observing that neither the respondent nor his ten cell leader was taken to the shamba to confirm the destruction and to satisfy themselves on the identity of the cattle. Additionally, the court criticized the evidence of the field officer in his estimate of the damage occasioned and said the evidence was vague. There was an appeal to the District Court of Musoma which was dismissed on the same grounds, hence this second appeal.

There might be justification in the lower courts' criticism of the field officer's evidence but the rest of their remarks were outrageous having regard to the facts of the case. Apart from the appellant, there was evidence from PW2 Jeremiah Mwandika, the village chairman, and PW3 Mussa Kello, a neighbour of the parties'.

LUGAKINGIRA J

All three knew the respondent's cattle; all three saw the destruction; all three drove the cattle to the respondent's home. They called out the respondent but at first he ignored them. Finally he came out. As the appellant made to explain their mission he assaulted her so badly that she had to receive medical treatment. She informed me at the hearing of the appeal that she sustained a permanent incapacity as a result of the beating and that she was pursuing that matter separately following the respondent's conviction for the assault. The respondent admitted the conviction. It is astonishing, to say the least, that it is this very man whom the lower courts expected the appellant to take to the shamba and blamed her for not doing so. It is equally amusing that the two courts would have preferred evidence from a ten cell leader but not the village chairman. Furthermore, neither the respondent nor the two courts below had any word of where the respondent sent the cattle delivered at his premises. Of course the respondent denied that any cattle D were ever delivered at his home and in fact denied over seeing the appellant, PW2 or PW3 on the material day. His "evidence" was nothing but arrogance at its worst, and it is amusing how he carried the lower courts with him.

The decision of the primary court was also not free from contradictions. Take the advice E of the first assessor, Nyambiriti Wikama, for instance. He started off by saying:

> Kwa maoni yangu na kufuatana na ushahidi uliotolewa upande wa madai unaonyesha F kuwa ng'ombe wa mdaiwa walikula shamba la mdai ...,

but ended up saying:

> G ... sioni kama kweli mifugo ya mdaiwa ndiyo ilifanya uharibifu huo.

This problem could partly be accounted for by the summing up factor which found itself in this case. It seems that neither the trial magistrate (J.M. Waigama) nor the appellate H magistrate (N.M. Kaserero) is aware of the Magistrate's Courts (Primary Courts) Judgment of Court) Rules, Government Notice No.2 of 1988. I would particularly draw their attention to Rule 3 thereof which puts an end to the practice of summing up to the assessors. The assessors are to be consulted for their opinions after the conclusion of I the evidence without any preliminaries. If I were convinced that the summing up in this case was solely or substantially responsible for the decision A reached, I would have felt compelled to quash the proceedings on the ground that the indulgence occasioned a failure of justice. I feel, however, that with or without the summing up, the trial court was under the spell of the respondent as shown by its prejudiced remarks following its visit to the shamba. I do not know how they did not B expect to find bush almost four months after the destruction complained of.

The field officer's evidence was certainly vague. It did not particularise how he reached the figure of 16,000/=. But this did not absolve at the trial court from forming its own C opinion and making a reward it considered reasonable. It would be futile to refer this matter back to that court as the position on the ground must have changed even more drastically and also since the court cannot have got over its prejudices in the case. I will take the risk of adjudicating in the matter and reduce the claim by 6,000/= as an D adjustment for the field officer's vagueness.

The appeal is accordingly allowed and the decisions of the lower courts are set aside. Judgment is entered for the appellant in the sum of 10,000/= with costs here and below. E

Mapigano, Ag. J.A., Makame and Kisanga, JJ.A.: The Director of Public D Prosecutions was dissatisfied with the acquittal of the appellant John Ngindi made by the district court of Moshi on a charge of breaking into a building and committing theft therein contrary to section 296(1) of the Penal Code. On appeal to the High Court at Arusha the finding of the district court was reversed and the appellant was convicted of the offence E and consequently sent to prison for a 5 - year term. The appellant came to us on appeal against the judgment of the High Court and we heard it at Arusha in September, 1992. We then announced that the appeal would be allowed and the conviction quashed, F and we set aside the sentence and ordered the immediate discharge of the appellant from custody. We promised to give our reasons for the decision at a later date.

The evidence established that at the material time P.W.6 James Michael Shao operated a public-house in the Moshi Municipality and had several barhands in his employment such G as the appellant, P.W.1 Stephen Joseph Kandi and P.W.4 Jasper Athumani. On 25/5/89 at night when the day's business was coming to an end the appellant handed over the bar proceeds to P.W.1 and the latter locked the money into a cash-box and put the cash-box in a store inside the building and then left the premises with the key for the H cash-box. It was admitted that one set of the keys for the store and the building was in the custody of the appellant, and that it was the duty of the appellant to keep the drinks that remained over back into the store and to lock up the store and I the building before he knocked off. It was further admitted by the appellant that he left A some of the unsold drinks at the counter, which we consider curious.

Came the following morning, and some of the drinks the appellant had left at the counter were missing. Likewise the money in the cash-box, and according to P.W.5 Paul, the B cash-box had been tampered with.
The appellant was a prime suspect but none of the stolen items was traced into his possession. P.W.4, a cook, testified very briefly that he had slept outside the public-house inside a motor vehicle and that he did not see any person coming to the C building after the closure of the business. We are of the view that P.W.4 should also have been a principal suspect in the crime. The point is that his evidence did not disclose why he stayed the night at the building, and we are surprised that he was not closely examined on that point.
The High Court found that there was no breaking anywhere in the building and that the D circumstances tied the appellant to the offence irresistibly. We have been unable to sustain these findings.
There was independent evidence from P.W.4 on which the court could properly find that there was a breaking of the store in which the cash-box was kept. In any case we think it E was essential for the Court to consider the fact that the appellant did not have exclusive access to the stolen items, which is almost always a material and critical factor in this type of cases. As indicated already, it was common ground that another set of keys to the building and the store was in the custody of another person. Accordingly, while we agree F that the grave suspicions that the appellant was the culprit or a party to the crime were not altogether unfounded, we consider that the evidence as a whole left a vestige of doubt as to his complicity.
It is for these reasons that we came to the conclusion that the conviction should be G quashed.

The offence was committed before the Written Laws (Miscellaneous Amendments) Act, D 1989, Act No. 10 of 1989, came into operation. At the time of the commission of the offence the minimum sentence for the offence was 7 years' imprisonment as it used to be provided in the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972. Appeal against conviction dismissed, sentence substituted. H

Mapigano, Ag. J.A., Mnzavas and Mfalila, JJ.A.: On 14/9/89 in the district court of Ilala at Kivukoni the appellant Christopher Mwakabura was sentenced to suffer imprisonment for 32 years and 6 strokes, consequent to his conviction for robbery with violence contrary to sections 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. The trial magistrate found I that the appellant and another person had actually stolen a motor vehicle belonging to the Ministry of Home Affairs on A 19/5/88 and that the vehicle was taken at pistolpoint from the driver. And the magistrate proceeded to punish him in terms of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972, as amended by the Written Laws (Miscellaneous Amendments) Act, 1989, to which we will refer hereafter as "Act No. 10 of 1989". B

The appellant went to the High Court on appeal challenging the validity of the conviction and propriety of the sentence. The appeal went before Bahati, J. who upheld the conviction upon being satisfied that there was enough evidence to support it. With regard to the sentence, the judge had this to say: C

> The appellant was sentenced to 32 years' imprisonment. I am unable to see where the learned magistrate got the extra 2 years in view of the fact that the district court has got power to impose a sentence of only 30 years for such offence with or without corporal D punishment. I therefore find the sentence of 32 years to be illegal as it contravenes section 5 (bb) of the Minimum Sentences Act as amended by Act No. 10 of 1989 in that the minimum term of imprisonment for armed robbery is 30 years. The maximum is of course E life imprisonment, but then section 170 of the Criminal Procedure Act does not give the district court power to pass a sentence above 30 years. I will reduce the sentence to 30 years imprisonment.

It is evident that Bahati, J. decided the matter on the basis that Act No. 10 of 1989 is F applicable to the offences specified in that Act, regardless of whether such offences were committed before or after the Act came into operation, and as we shall have occasion to see later herein, the learned judge has firmly held to that view.

The appellant has brought a second appeal to us urging five grounds. However there is G only one ground among them that bears consideration and that is the fifth. The rest pertain to concurrent factual findings of the courts below and are thus misconceived as under the law we are, on such second appeal, obliged to confined ourselves to matters of law. H

The burden of the fifth ground is a technical one. Rephrased, it is this: The District Court had no power to award a jail sentence in excess of 8 years. That court went into error when it invoked the jurisdiction vested in it by Act No. 10 of 1989, since the offence was committed before that Act came into force. The authorities for that contention are I section 49 of the Interpretation of Laws and

General Clauses Act, 1972, Article 13 (6) (c) of the Constitution of the United A Republic, and the decision of this Court in Mashaka Shabani v R., Criminal Appeal No. 85 of 1990 (unreported).

It is true the offence was committed before Act No. 10 of 1989 came into operation. It is also true that at the time of the commission of the offence the minimum sentence for the offence was 7 years' imprisonment, vide section 5 (b) of the Minimum Sentences Act, B 1972, and that the power of a subordinate court in relation thereto was limited to an award of a term of 8 years, vide section 170 (1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.

Act No. 10 of 1989 came into operation on 26/5/89. among other things that Act C amended section 5 of the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972, as well as the First Schedule to that Act. It added a new paragraph to section 5, i.e. (bb), by which the minimum punishment for armed robbery was raised to the long stretch of 30 years; and deleted paragraph 4 of the First Schedule which related to robbery. D

We turn to the authorities that the appellant has cited to us. We have noticed that Mashaka Shabani v R. was similar to the present case in all material particulars. The first appeal in that case also went before Bahati, J. who in his judgment considered the applicability of Act No. 10 of 1989 to armed robbery committed before the E commencement of that Act, in the context of Article 13 (6) (c) of the Constitution. That Constitutional provision reads:

For the purposes of ensuring equality before the law, the state shall make provisions: F

> No person shall be punished for any act which before its commission was not defined as such offence, and no penalty imposed for any criminal offence shall be Heavier than the penalty in force at the time the offence was committed. G

The view taken by Bahati, J. was that the sentence of imprisonment for 30 years handed out by the trial court in that case was not offensive to the above provision, inasmuch as long before Act

No. 10 of 1989 was enacted a competent court could pass a maximum H sentence of life imprisonment for the offence. The judge went on to observe:

What has changed now after the enactment of Act No. 10 of 1989 is not the sentence which could be passed by a competent court for armed robbery, but that the subordinate court has I

MAPIGANO Ag.JA, MAKAME JJA, KISANGA JJA

been given power to pass sentence of 30 years for armed robbery. A

And he regarded that change as of no consequence.

When the matter came to this Court on a second appeal we differed with Bahati, J. and held: (a) that Act No. 10 of 1989 has substantially changed the punishment for armed B robbery, since the minimum has been raised drastically, and "the situation is not that a court may at its discretion impose a sentence of 30 years' imprisonment but that a court must impose a minimum of 30 years" and (b) that there was nothing in the provisions of Act No. 10 of 1989 which indicates that the appellant was not liable to the penalty C prescribed at the time he committed the offence. We accepted the submission that the terms of section 49 of the Interpretation of Laws and General Clauses Act, 1972, debarred a court from applying Act No. 10 of 1989 to offences which were committed D before that Act came into force. The end-result was that we substituted the sentence with one of 8 years.

Section 49 of the Interpretation of Laws and General Clauses Act provides: E

Where an act constitutes an offence, and the penalty for such offence is amended between the time of the commission of such offence and the conviction therefore, the offender shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be liable to the penalty prescribed at the time of the commission of such offence. F

It is plain that this section is couched in qualified terms: the prohibition of retroaction of penalities is conditional to a contrary intention being absent. In relation to this provision we have paid due attention to section 4 of the Minimum Sentences Act, which reads: G

Where any person is, after the date on which this Act comes into operation, convicted by a court of a scheduled offence, whether such offence was committed before or after such H date, the court shall sentence such person to a term of imprisonment which shall not be less than ...

Then the section goes on to lay down the minimum penalties of imprisonment for the scheduled offences. I

MAPIGANO Ag.JA, MAKAME JJA, KISANGA JJA

This section strikes us as probably the most singular feature of the Act. It is hardly A deniable, however, that the section stipulates the sort of "contrary intention" envisaged by section 49 of the Interpretation of Laws and General Clauses Act, and has, therefore, the effect of making the minimum penalty prescribed by any future enactment amending the B Minimum Sentences Act apply retrospectively to any of the offences specified in the three Schedules thereto, regard being had to the rule restated in section 17 of the Interpretation of Laws and General Clauses Act that an amending Act should be construed as one with the amended Act.

Just the same, we are of the considered and firm view that section 4 above does not C make Act No. 10 of 1989 operate retrospectively in relation to robbery. The reason is to be found in Act No. 10 of 1989 itself. As we have already pointed out, this Act amended the First Schedule by deleting the offence of robbery. We think that this deletion provides a distinct basis for attributing to the legilature an intention to display D the provisions of section 4 to the offence, given the meaning attaching to the term "scheduled offence" by section 3 of the Minimum Sentence Act, namely "an offence specified in any of the schedules to the act". The interesting if odd aspect of all this is that robbery is now set apart from the other offences within the ambit of the Act, in the E sense that it is the only unscheduled offence and wherefore the only one that escapes the grim grasp of section 4.
We held, therefore, that the appellant was, under section 49 of the Interpretation of Laws F and General Clauses Act, not liable to the penalty prescribed by Act No. 10 of 1989. With that it becomes unnecessary for us to advert to Article 13 (6) (c) of the Constitution, and this precludes the more serious exercise of looking into the constitutionality of section 4 of the Minimum Sentences Act and our jurisdiction to do so. G
Accordingly, we dismiss the appeal against the conviction and we substitute a sentence of seven years' imprisonment which is to run from the date of the trial judgment.
H Appeal dismissed.

(ii) extension of time through the letters of the appellant to the respondent did not constitute waiver and as such did not alter the terms of the agreement; F

(iii) the contract was inoperative because the disposition lacked consent of the Commissioner for Lands. The agreement was, therefore, unenforceable.

Among the terms of agreement was the one concerning the sale price of Shs.550,000/= to be paid by the respondent. be paid after a period of two months, that is on 9/9/86, this was not paid, till 1991, A even after repeated letters of demand and the filing of the suit in the High Court. The High Court (Rubama, J.) did not rescind the contract as argued by the appellant because it was considered that the letters of demand by the appellant altered the terms of agreement by extending the time for payment of the balance of 150,000/=. In one B letter dated 17/6/87 the respondent was given a period of 10 days in which to pay this balance. In a subsequent letter the respondent was given four more days from the date of this other letter in which to pay. Then there was the last letter by the appellant's advocate to the respondent dated 11/2/88 informing him that the agreement had been C rescinded and the down payment of Shs. 400,000/= was ready for collection by the respondent.

At the end of the trial in the High Court the defendant was ordered to pay Shs. 150,000/= and he did pay to the Court on 26/3/92. The trial judge forgot to award D general damages, which the Court felt it should be paid. All in all what we consider crucial in this matter is the consent by Commissioner for Lands to the transfer of this building to the respondent. This requirement is contained in Land regulations of 1948, regulation 3 (1). It is also in Clause 7 of the sale agreement which states that lack of E consent to the disposition Clause 2 (b) vitiates the agreement which stipulates the two months for payment of the remainder of the Sale Price, also has been contravened. Nor do we think that the extension of time through the letters of the appellant to the respondent in anyway alters the terms of agreement. Extension of time was merely to F facilitate payment. The conduct of the respondent in this deal with the appellant leaves much to be desired. The respondent himself admitted in this Court thus "I was not replying to her letters (of demand) nor did I engage any advocate because I had done no wrong (in connection with this contract)". G

We have reached the following decision. (a) The contract was in-operative because the disposition lacked consent of the Commissioner for Lands. The agreement was therefore unenforceable. The breaking of Clause 2 (b) of the Sale Agreement also is a factor which justifies rescission of the agreement. H

We therefore allow the appeal with costs. We also make the following orders. (a) general damages at the bank rate of 30% on 150,000/= for six years i.e. 1986 to 1992 amounting to Shs.270,000/= to be paid to the appellant. Costs of improvements to the house effected by the respondent to be paid to the respondent by the appellant. High I Court to appoint a Valuer agreeable to both parties who would assess costs of improvements of the house in dispute and to do so any A time between 15/1/93 and 15/2/93. (b) Respondent to give vacant possession of the premises to the appellant within the period of three months from 15th February, 1993. (c) The Appellant to return 400,000/= to the respondent within one month from the date of judgment. (d) Shs. 150,000/= received by the High Court to be returned to the B respondent.

Appeal allowed.

Mr. D.P. Valambhia won a case in the High Court which was filed by M/s Transport Equipment Ltd. (TEL). In awarding relief to Mr. Valambhia the High Court made certain orders against the Government of Tanzania (The Ministry of Defence and D National Service) which was creditor to TEL. The High Court ordered the Principal Secretary Ministry of Defence and National Service to comply with a garnishee order which, inter alia, required the Government to pay the sum of approximately US $ 39,823,543.25 to Mr. Valambhia's overseas bank account and that such payment E was to be effected within three weeks of the order.

The appellant sought to challenge the order of the High Court on the grounds, among others, that no opportunity was afforded to the Government to be heard and that there was some illegality involved in respect of the order. F

At the hearing of the appeal, counsel for the respondent took a preliminary objection to the appeal based on non-compliance with rules 76, 77 and 83 of the Court of Appeal Rules. Counsel contended that the appeal was time-barred. It was argued that the Rules were not complied with in that a copy of the letter to the Registrar applying for the G proceedings was not served on the respondent. It was further pointed out that a notice of motion by the appellant before a single Judge of the Court of Appeal did not specify the relief sought, i.e, extension of time within which to serve the respondents with a copy of the letter to the Registrar. A number of other aspects were considered including H whether or not the Government has to pay court fees and security for costs in respect of civil matters before the court of Appeal and if so whether there was sufficient reason to extend time to allow the Government pay court fees and security for costs. Held: (i) There must be a time limit within which the appellant is to serve the A respondent with a copy of the letter to the Registrar. We think that the period of 30 days within which the appellant is required under rule 83(1) to apply to the Registrar for a copy of the proceedings should be construed to be co-extensive with the period within which the appellant has to send a copy of that letter to the respondent; B

(ii) a notice of motion and the accompanying affidavit are in the very nature of things complementary to each other, and it would be wrong and indeed unrealistic to look at them in isolation. The proper thing to do is to look at both of them and if on the basis C of that it is clear what relief is being sought then the Court should proceed to consider and determine the matter, regard being had to the objection, if any, raised by the opposite party;

(iii) an oral address can take care of the inadequacy in the notice of motion by referring specifically to the relief being sought; D

(iv) the appellant's application for extension of time to serve the respondent with a copy of the letter to the Registrar applying for a copy of the proceedings was both before the single judge and also before the full court upon the reference from the decision of the single judge; E

(v) the silence in the Court of Appeal Rules on whether or not Government has to pay court fees in respect of civil matters before the Court of Appeal can only be construed to mean that the framers of the Rules intended that the Government should pay court fees in civil cases. Likewise the Government is obliged to pay security for F costs there being no express or implied exemption;

(vi) since the long established practice that the Government does not pay court fees is not sanctioned in law it can never acquire legal legitimacy however long it might be;

G (vii) where the point of law at issue is the illegality or otherwise of the decision being challenged, that is a point of law of sufficient importance to constitute a sufficient reason within rule 8 of the Court of Appeal Rules to overlook non-compliance with the requirements of the Rules and to enlarge the time for such compliance. The same applies here. H

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, Omar and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: In Dar es Salaam High Court Civil Case A No. 210 of 1989 the plaintiff, Messrs. Transport Equipment Ltd. (TEL) filed a suit against the defendant Mr. D.P. Valambhia. In answer to the plaint Mr. Valambhia filed a written statement of defence in which he denied the claim and, in addition, raised a counter-claim against TEL. TEL did not file a reply to the written statement of defence, B nor a written statement of defence to the counter-claim. Furthermore, on the date fixed for hearing, the plaintiff's side could not adduce evidence in support of its case either. Whereupon the High Court (Rubama, J.) upon application by Mr. Valambhia's Counsel, gave judgment for Mr. Valambhia, dismissing the plaintiff's claim and C allowing the defendant's counter-claim. In allowing Mr. Valambhia's counter-claim against TEL, the learned judge also ordered the Government of Tanzania to pay to Mr. Valambhia and his family, certain monies owing from the Government of Tanzania to TEL. The monies to be thus paid to Mr. Valambhia were part of the proceeds of a D contract between the said Government of Tanzania and TEL. The Government was further ordered to pay these monies to Mr. Valambhia's designated overseas bank account.

Upon application by Mr. Valambhia for execution of the judgment, the High Court E (Msumi, J.) granted a garnishee order requiring, inter alia, the Government of Tanzania to pay the sum of approximately US Dollars 39,823,543.25 to Mr. Valambhia's overseas bank account. Upon further application by Mr. Valambhia the High Court F (Rubama, J.) ordered the Principal Secretary, Ministry of Defence and National Service to comply with the garnishee order within three weeks. That is to say, the High Court ordered the Principal Secretary to comply with the garnishee order which, inter alia, required the Government to pay the sum of approximately US Dollars 39,823,543.25 G to Mr. Valambia's overseas bank account, and that he should effect such payment within three weeks of the order. It is from that order that this appeal now arises.

At the hearing of the appeal the appellant, the Principal Secretary, Ministry of Defence and National Service, was represented by Mr. F. Mrema, Director, Civil and H International Department in the Attorney-General's Chambers assisted by Mr. S. Salula, State Attorney. Mr. H. Maira and Mr. M. Marando, learned advocates, appeared for the respondent, Mr. Valambhia.

Counsel for the respondent took a preliminary objection to the appeal which objection I is based on non-compliance with rules

76, 77 and 83 of the Court of Appeal Rules. Mr. Maira submitted in effect that the A appeal was time barred in that it was not instituted within 60 days of the date of the notice of appeal as required by rule 83 (1) of the Rules. In order to appreciate fully this submission by Counsel, it is necessary to give a brief account of the background to this matter. B

The ruling being appealed from was delivered on 10.5.91. The notice of appeal was given in time on 17.5.91, and the letter to the Registrar applying for a copy of the proceedings was also sent in time on 11.5.91. However, copies of the said notice of appeal and of that said letter to the Registrar were not sent to the respondent, and after C the prescribed time for serving these documents on him had expired, the respondent applied to a single judge of this Court to strike out the appellant's notice of appeal on the grounds of failure to serve copies of these two documents on him.

In a counter-application, however, the appellant asked for extension of time in order D to serve the said documents on the respondent. The single judge allowed the application to strike out the notice of appeal, and rejected the counter-application for extension of time. Upon a reference from the decision of the single judge, however, the notice of appeal was restored and the appellant was granted extension of time during which to E serve the documents on the respondent, which he did.

According to Mr. Maira, the appellant so far, has only sought and obtained extension of time to serve on the respondent a copy of the notice of appeal. No extension of time has F been obtained or sought by the appellant to serve the respondent with a copy of the letter to the Registrar applying for a copy of the proceedings. In these circumstances therefore, Counsel contended that although the Registrar did issue a certificate in terms of rule 83 (1) of the Rules, that certificate was issued in error, and the appellant was not entitled to rely on the proviso thereto to exclude the time which was necessary for the G preparation and supply of a copy of the proceedings to him. If the Registrar's certificate is excluded, Counsel went on, the institution of the appeal is long time barred because it was not instituted within 60 days of the date of the notice of appeal, and the appellant H has not taken the necessary steps to avail himself of the protection under the proviso to rule 83 (1).

Mr. Mrema's reply to this submission was twofold. First, he submitted that there was no fixed period within which he was bound to serve the respondent with a copy of the letter I to the Registrar. Contrasting this position with that under rule 77 of the rules whereby the appellant is required to serve the respondent with a copy of the notice of appeal A within seven days of the date of the notice of appeal, the learned Counsel submitted that there is no comparable rule requiring the appellant to serve a copy of the letter to the Registrar on the respondent within specified time. In his view, the time to serve the B respondent with this document was open and he could serve it on him at any time.

In the alternative Mr. Mrema contended that if there was any fixed time for such service, then he did apply for extension of such time and that his application, though rejected by the single judge of this Court, was granted by the full Court upon a reference from the C decision of the single judge.

In response to the first limb of Mr. Mrema's submission, Mr. Maira submitted that upon construction of rule 83 (2) of the Rules, a copy of the letter to the Registrar applying for copy of proceedings must be served on the respondent within 30 days of the date of D the decision being appealed from. The relevant part of Rule 83 of the Court of Appeal Rules provides that:

> 83 - (1) subject to the provisions of Rule 122, an appeal shall be instituted by lodging in E the appropriate registry, within sixty days of the date when the notice of appeal was lodged -
> (a) a memorandum of appeal, in quintuplicate;
>
> (b) the record of appeal, in quintuplicate;
>
> F (c) the prescribed fee; and
>
> (d) security for the costs of the appeal,
>
> save that where an application for a copy of the proceedings in the High Court has been made within thirty days of the date of the decision against which it is desired to appeal, G there shall, in computing the time within which the appeal is to be instituted be excluded such time as may be certified by the Registrar of the High Court as having been required for the preparation and delivery of that copy to the appellant.
> H (2) An appellant shall not be entitled to rely on the exception to sub-rule (1) unless his application for the copy was in writing and a copy of it was sent to the respondent.

We think that Mr. Mrema's view is untenable when he says that there is no specified I period within which to serve the respondent with a copy of the letter to the Registrar. To uphold this submission would make it A difficult or impossible to determine when a respondent to an intended appeal can seek remedy against the appellant for non-compliance with this requirement. Indeed it might render this requirement meaningless in so far as the respondent is concerned. For instance, where the respondent seeks to have the notice of appeal struck out for B failure by the appellant to institute the appeal within 60 days of the date of the notice of appeal, the appellant can always get away with it by saying that he has not received a copy of the proceedings from the Registrar even though the letter to the Registrar applying for such proceedings has not been sent to the respondent, and he could go C on relying on such a defence indefinitely. In our view, that cannot have been the aim of the proviso to rule 83 (1). There must be a time limit within which the appellant is to serve the respondent with a copy of the letter to the Registrar. We think that the period of 30 days within which the appellant is required under rule 83 (1) to apply to the D Registrar for a copy of the proceedings should be construed to be co-extensive with the period within which the appellant has to send a copy of that letter to the respondent. That serves to ascertain the period after which the respondent to an intended appeal can apply to have the notice of appeal struck out for failure to institute the appeal. What is, E he can do so after 60 days of the notice of appeal, and the appellant can raise the defence that he has not yet received such proceedings, only if he had sent to the respondent a copy of his letter to the Registrar applying for those proceedings, and that a copy of that letter was so sent within 30 days of the date of the decision being F appealed from.

Having said that, it is necessary to point out here, however, that Mr. Maira cannot be right when he submitted that the Registrar issued to the present appellant the certificate under rule 83 (1) in error because the appellant had not served the respondent with a G copy of the letter to the Registrar. It is undisputed that the appellant's application to the Registrar was made within 30 days of the date of the decision being appealed from as required by rule 83 (1). Therefore, the Registrar was perfectly entitled to issue the H certificate as he did, and we could find nothing wrong with that. The issue whether or not the appellant can rely on the certificate, as he was trying to do in this case, is quite a different matter. As amply demonstrated above that issue depends on whether a copy of the appellant's letter to the Registrar applying for a copy of the I proceedings was sent to the respondent within 30 days of the date of the decision A being appealed from.

In answer to Mr. Mrema's alternative submission that the application for extension of time to serve the document in question on the respondent was before the single judge and that it was part of the subject matter of the reference from the single judge to the B full Court, Mr. Maira strongly contended that such application was neither before the single judge nor before the full Court.

The record shows that the matter was brought before the single judge in Civil Application No. 18 of 1991 by a notice of motion the relevant part of which reads: C

NOTICE OF MOTION

(Under Rule 8 and 77 (i) of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules 1979) D

TAKE NOTICE that on the ..... day of ..... 1991 at 9.00 o'clock in the morning or soon thereafter as he can be heard the Applicant will move the court for an order that an Extension of time be granted to enable the intended Appellant serve copies of the Notice E of Appeal on the Respondent.

This Application will be supported by the Affidavit of Felix C. Mrema sworn on the 28th day of May, 1991.

In the accompanying affidavit of Mr. Mrema it is disclosed in paragraphs 5 and 6 that F the appellant's Counsel had instructed his junior staff to serve copies of the notice of appeal and of the application for a copy of proceedings in this matter on the respondent through his advocates, but that such instructions were never carried out. And in G paragraph 9 the deponent says:

9. THAT I pray in the interest of Justice that this appliction for an Extension of time to serve the Respondents with a copy of the Notice of Appeal and a copy of the Application for a H certified Copy of the order, Ruling and Proceedings in the High Court Civil Case No. 210 of 1989 be granted.

Mr. Maira contended that there was no application for extension of time to serve the respondent with a copy of the letter to the Registrar because the notice of motion I makes no reference to such application; it refers only to the application for extension of time to serve the respondent with a A copy of the notice of appeal. Conceding that Mr. Mrema's affidavit makes it plain that the appellant was applying for extension of time to serve a copy of the said letter on the respondent, learned Counsel strongly maintained that that was immaterial. In his view, the relief sought must be set out in the notice of motion, while the affidavit merely B provides the evidence in support of the application. Thus, he concluded, since the application for extension of time to serve copy of the letter to the Registrar on the respondent was not set out or averred in the notice of motion, such application was not before the single judge in Civil Application No. 18 of 1991, and therefore any C reference from the decision of the single judge to the full Court in this application cannot have involved that issue.

KISANGA JJA, OMAR JJA, MNZAVAS JJA

We agree with Mr. Maira that a notice of motion should make reference to the relief which it is proposed to ask the Court to grant. Mr. Mrema's notice of motion in Civil D Application No. 18 of 1991 complied with this requirement only as regards the application for extension of time to serve the respondent with a copy of the notice of appeal. It does so by citing rules 8 and 77 (1) of the Rules and by mentioning specifically the relief which it is proposed to apply for. Admittedly, however, this was E not quite the case as regards the copy of the letter to the Registrar. The notice of motion cites rule 8 which relates to extension of time but without indicating the purpose for which extension of time would be sought. The question now is whether this omission was fatal. Mr. Maira strenuously contended that it was fatal notwithstanding that the F accompanying affidavit made it clear that the appellant was seeking that relief. Mr. Maira, however did not refer us to any authority for this proposition. We think that in a situation like this one it would not be right to look at either the notice of motion or the accompanying affidavit in isolation. A notice of motion and the accompanying affidavit G are in the very nature of things complementary to each other, and it would be wrong and indeed unrealistic to look at them in isolation. The proper thing to do is to look at both of them and if on the basis of that it is clear what relief is being sought then the Court should proceed to consider and determine the matter, regard being had to the H objection, if any, raised by the opposite party.

With that approach in mind then it was open to the single judge in the present case to do either of the two things: He might have required the appellant to amend the notice of I motion so as to include reference to the proposed relief, i.e. extension of time to serve the respondent with a copy of the letter to the Registrar, and thereby bring it in A line with the contents of paragraphs 5, 6 and 9 of the accompanying affidavit alluded to earlier. We should add that if the respondent's Counsel had noticed this inconsistency between the notice of motion and the accompanying affidavit, he had a duty as an officer B of the Court to point it out so that the Court might require the appellant to effect the desired amendment.

Altenatively the judge could consider the notice of motion and the accompanying affidavit, in the light of any opposition by the other party, and proceed to determine the application. We think that this is exactly what the learned single judge did, and we held C that view for the following reasons:- First, upon reading through the notice of motion together with paragraphs 5, 6 and 9 of thje accompanying affidavit above cited, one can be left in no doubt whatsoever that the appellant was seeking extension of time to serve the respondent with not only a copy of the notice of appeal but also with a copy of the D letter to the Registrar applying for a copy of proceedings. For, the notice of motion cites rule 8 of the Rules, which deals with extension of time fixed for the doing of various things under the Rules, and the affidavit specifically requests for extension of time to serve on the respondent a copy of the letter to the Registrar. The two documents read E together make it abundantly clear what relief the appellant was seeking.
Secondly, in granting the respondent's application to strike out the appellant's notice of appeal, the learned single judge specifically referred to the appellant's application for extension of time to serve on the respondent a copy of the letter to the Registrar. The F relevant part of the Ruling of the learned single judge reads:

> Mr. Valambhia seeks to have the notice of appeal lodged by Mr. Kejo struck out on the ground that Mr. Kejo has failed to take some essential steps in the proceedings i.e. that G he has not served a copy of the notice of appeal and a copy of the letter applying for a copy of the record of the proceedings in the High Court on him. And in Civil application No. 18 of 1991, filed on 29/5/91, Mr. Kejo, through, the Attorney General, admits that he has so H failed. But Mr. Mrema, a Principal State Attorney in the Attorney General's Chambers, contends on his behalf that the failure is excusable and applies, under Rule 8 of the Court of Appeal Rules, 1979, for extension of time to effect the service, which application is I strongly opposed by Mr. Valambhia.

Mr. Mrema added that in his oral address before the single judge he also made it A clear that he was seeking extension of time to serve the respondent with a copy of the letter to the Registrar, and this is been out by the learned single judge when in the above extract taken from his Ruling he said:

B But Mr. Mrema, a Principal State Attorney in the Attorney General's Chambers contends on his behalf that the failure is excusable and applies, under rule 8 of the Court of Appeal Rules, 1979 for extension of time to effect the service, which application is strongly opposed by Mr. Valambhia. C

In the case of Osongo and Another v R. [1972] E.A. 170 a notice of motion was filed in the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa for extension of time to file notice of appeal. Before this was heard, an application for the same relief was made in the High Court but D was dismissed. Like in our own set up today both the High Court and the then Court of Appeal had concurrent jurisdiction over the matter but the applicant must go to the High Court first. When the motion came up for hearing in the Court of Appeal the question was whether the application was incompetent because it had been filed there E before the application to the High Court. The Court held:

We think that a motion is an oral application and therefore that it is made at the time when the applicant addresses the Court or judge, not when the notice of motion is filed. F

That decision can be taken to support the view that Mr. Mrema's oral address took care of the inadequacy that was in his notice of motion by referring specifically to the relief being sought. Otherwise the decision is equally consistent with the broader view G we have taken that both the notice of motion and the accompanying affidavit have to be taken together in considering and determining the application.

In the light of all this therefore, we can find no merit in Mr. Maira's contention that the appellant's application for extension of time to serve the respondent with a copy of the H letter to the Registrar was never before the single judge. The pleadings and the Ruling thereon make it plain that that appliction was before the single judge who specifically considered it but rejected it.

Equally devoid of merit is Mr. Maira's assertion that likewise the matter was never I before the full Court which considered the reference from the single judge. Indeed in urging that point Mr. Maira had strongly A maintained that although the full Court granted the extension of time to serve the respondent with a copy of the letter to the Registrar, there was no request for such relief and that the full Court simply went out of its way to grant a relief that was never asked B for. The learned Counsel claimed that what was done here was akin to what was done by the High Court and strongly criticized by this Court in the case of The Attorney General v W. K. Butambala Criminal Appeal No. 37 of 1991 (Unreported).

There can hardly be any substance in Mr. Maira's allegations. The following extract C which is taken from the Ruling of the full Court upon reference from the single judge would serve to put the matter beyond all doubt:

This is a reference arising from the ruling of a single judge of this Court granting an D application to strike out a notice of appeal for failure to take essential steps in the proceedings, and at the same time refusing a counter application for extension of time to take such essential steps.

It was common ground that the Principal Secretary Ministry of Defence and National E service, failed to serve on Mr. D. P. Valambhia a copy of his notice of appeal and a copy of his appliction to the Registrar, High Court, for copy of proceedings in respect of an intended appeal against the ruling of the High Court requiring him to comply with a F garnishee order of that Court within three weeks.

And after considering the merits of the application the Court allowed the reference in the following terms:

G In the result the reference is allowed. The notice of appeal is restored, and the Principal Secretary Ministry of Defence and National Service is to serve the opposite party with copies of the documents in question within four days of his receipt of this ruling. H

It seems clear from these quotations that the full Court upon a reference from the single judge dealt with, inter alia, the appellant's application for extension of time to serve the respondent with a copy of the letter to the Registrar and, overturning the single judge, I duly granted it. Mr. Maira's claim that this Court, upon a reference from the single judge granted the appellant an extension of time gratuitously was A gravely misconceived and wholly unjustified. For, to say the least, Mr. Mrema having been aggrieved by the decision of the single judge, one would naturally expect him on reference to ask the full Court to reverse the refusal of his application by the single judge and to proceed to grant him extension of time to serve on the respondent not only a B copy of the notice of appeal but also a copy of the letter to the Registrar. In other words, knowing that he was specifically being charged with failure to serve the two documents on the respondent, it is inconceivable that he would have asked the full Court for extension of time to serve on the respondent only one document and not both of C them. His request for extension of time was in respect of both documents, and the full Court granted the request accordingly.

To sum up on this point, therefore, we are satisfied that the appellant's application for extension of time to serve the respondent with a copy of the letter to the Registrar D applying for a copy of the proceedings was both before the single judge and also before the full Court upon the reference from the decision of the single judge.

The other ground of the preliminary objection, also based on rule 83 (1), turned on non-payment of Court fees and security for costs of the appeal by the appellant. It E was conceded that none of these payments had been made, and so Mr. Maira charged that there was no excuse or justification for such non-payment. He stated that the Government was exempted from paying Court fees in specific situations. For instance, under rule 10 of the Court Fees Rules 1964 G.Ns. 308 and 411 the Government is F exempted from paying Court fees in Civil and Criminal matters in the lower Courts, while under rule 112 (b) of the Court of Appeal Rules the Government is expressly exempted from paying Court fees in respect of any criminal application or criminal appeal in the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal Rules, however, are silent on the G payment of Court fees by the Government in civil matters. Mr. Maira strongly submitted that the necessary conclusion to be drawn is that the Government is not exempted from paying court fees or security for costs in civil matters in the Court of Appeal. And since H the Government has not made these payments, and has not applied for extension of time to do so, then the appeal is in terms of rule 84 (a) deemed to be withdrawn.

As stated earlier, it was conceded for the appellant that no payment of fees or security for costs had been made. Mr. Mrema conceded further that he was unable to cite any I legal provision which exempted the Government from such payments. We should add that we too have not A succeeded to find one so far. But Mr. Mrema contended that there has been established in this country a long tradition now whereby the Government has not been required to pay court fees or security for costs in such matters in the Court of Appeal. This, he said, B was in keeping with the practice in some Commonwealth jurisdictions including England, whereby the Government is exempted from such payments. He concluded by saying in effect that if there was non-compliance by the Government here, this necessarily resulted from the long practice of not requiring the Government to make C such payment. In the circumstances, he went on, it would be unjust to penalize the Government on this occasion for following an established practice which for a long time has never been questioned.

As noted before, rule 10 of the Court Fees Rules 1964 G. Ns. 308 and 411 exempts D the Government from paying court fees in both criminal and civil matters in the lower courts, while under rule 112 (b) of the Court of Appeal Rules the Government is expressly exempted from paying court fees in criminal applications and criminal appeals, but nothing is said about payment of fees in civil matters. We are unable to construe E such silence to mean exemption from payment of fees in civil matters. Since the framers of the Rules obviously had in mind the issue of exemption, and indeed expressly granted exemption in criminal matters, than if they were so minded they would have equally granted exemption in civil matters. We are inclined to agree with Mr. Maira that such F silence can only be construed to mean that the framers of the rules intended that the Government should pay court fees in civil cases. Likewise the Government is obliged to pay security for costs as we could find no basis for express or implied exemption.

It is true that this view is not in harmony with the total exemption which the G Government enjoys in the lower Courts, but for reasons given above we could not construe rule 112 (b) of the Court of Appeal Rules to come to any different conclusion. If the omission to grant total exemption was really not intended, then it is suggested that the appropriate authority might consider amending rule 112 (b) of the Court of Appeal H Rules to harmonize the position with that of total exemption accorded to the Government in the lower Courts.

We have given due consideration to Mr. Mrema's submission that to threw out the appeal on this ground would amount to penalizing the Government on this occasion for I having followed a practice which for a long time has never been questioned. It could very well be that A the Registry staff concerned either consciously or through inadvertence failed to require the Government to pay court fees and security for costs in the past. It may also be that this practice has gone on for a long time. But a practice which is not sanctioned in law can never acquire legal legitimacy however long it might be. Indeed if there was B nothing else to this matter we would have been inclined to uphold the preliminary objection on this ground, but there are other matters to be considered along-side this omission. We shall come back to this point later on but meantime we prepare to deal with the respondent's last ground of objection. C

This ground was argued on behalf of the respondent by the learned advocate, Mr. Marando. He pointed out that grounds 5 to 8 of the memorandum of appeal relate to appeal against the judgment in the main suit i.e. Civil Case No. 210 of 1989. He contended that to that extent this appeal is incompetent because the appellant has not D given any notice of appeal in respect thereof and has not sent any copy of such notice to the respondent as required by rules 76 and 77, respectively, of the Rules. Pressing the point further, he charged that the appellant has not even bothered to seek extension of time to take these steps. On these grounds Counsel submitted that the appeal as E contained in grounds 5 to 8 relating to the main suit should be struck out as being incompetent.

Our own view of the matter is that the order of 10.5.91 which is the subject matter of this appeal is so closely interwoven with the judgment in the main suit that it would be F unrealistic to consider the propriety or otherwise of the said order in isolation. In other words one cannot effectively question the order without reference to the judgment in the main suit from which that order springs. In practical terms the said order is an amplification of the relief granted to Mr. Valambhia in the main suit. It is, if you wish, a G culmination of the relief granted in the main suit. So that a notice of appeal against the order of 10.5.91 by necessary implication means that the decision in the main suit, in so far as it extends to the order, is also being challenged. Therefore, in our view it was not strictly necessary to give a separate notice in respect of the main suit. H

As intimated earlier, we now revert to the matters which have to be considered along-side the omission by the Government to pay court fees and security for costs in this intended appeal. Glancing through the memorandum of appeal and upon hearing Mr. Mrema in answer to this preliminary objection, it becomes evident that the main I grievance of the appellant is that he was not given the opportunity to be heard against the garnishee order. He was condemned unheard. A That, Mr. Mrema submitted, offended against the principle of natural justice.

Mr. Mrema submitted further that had the appellant been afforded the opportunity of being heard, he or his Counsel would have raised the issue of the illegality of the B proceedings leading to the granting of the garnishee order in that they violated the provisions of the Government Proceedings Act 1967 which lays down the procedure of bringing suits against the Government. Under the same Act he would have challenged the legality of the garnishee order as a method of executing court decrees against the C Government. He would also have questioned the validity of the order of 10.5.91 requiring the appellant to comply with the garnishee order within three weeks which compliance would be in violation of Exchange Control Regulations.

While avoiding the risk of going into the merits of the case, we think that the points D raised are sufficiently weighty. They are such that if proved they go to the root of the matter. For instance, they allege illegality of the order or orders of the Court. That is obviously a point of law. In Civil Reference No. 9 of 1991 involving the same parties as in this case, we took the view that where the point of law at issue is the illegality or E otherwise of the decision being challenged, that is a point of law of sufficient importance to constitute sufficient reason within rule 8 of the Court of Appeal Rules to overlook non-compliance with the requirements of the Rules and to enlarge the time for such compliance. The same applies here. So that although we would have upheld the F preliminary objection on the grounds of failure by the Government to pay court fees and security for costs in this appeal, there ought to be afforded opportunity for the Court to ascertain on the issues raised and, if the allegations are established, take appropriate measures. G

In the result the preliminary objection is overruled. It is further directed that the Government is to pay the Requisite Court fees and security for costs within 7 days of the receipt of this Ruling by the parties. Although the general rule is that in civil cases he who wins has his costs, we think that in the unusual circumstances of this case each H party is to bear his own costs. It is ordered accordingly.

I Ordered accordingly.

[zJDz]Judgment

Omar and Ramadhani, JJ. A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: This is an appeal from the judgment of the High Court at Tabora (Chipeta, J.) delivered on January 29, 1988, by which the appellants were jointly severally adjudged H liable to return 305 head of cattle and 2 goats to the respondent Dima Nhorongo, or pay him their pecuniary equivalent, and to meet the costs of the suit. In this judgment I will, where I deem suitable, retain the personal names or descriptions of the parties that they bear in the record of the High Court. The appellants are represented I by Professor Fimbo, learned advocate, of the University of Dar es Salaam's Legal Aid Committee, while the respondent is, like he was in the High Court, represented by Mr. Ntabaye, learned advocate. A

The plaint was drawn by Mr. Ntabaye and presented on January 1, 1985. The key paragraphs were 3, 5 and 7. In paragraph 3 the plaintiff, now the respondent, stated that in December, 1982 a group of people known as Sungusungu invaded his homestead at Udongo Village, Sikonge Ward in Tabora District and drove as was his B 316 head of cattle and 2 goats, after torturing him, and that the animals were soon enough distributed to the defendants. In paragraph 5 he stated that the defendants had no colour of right over the animals. And in paragraph 7 he stated that none of the animals in question had been returned to him despite several demands. The C principal relief claimed by the plaintiff was the return of the animals.

In their joint amended Written Statement, drawn by the Tanzania Legal Corporation and presented on May 15, 1985, the defendants denied, vide paragraph 2, that a group of Sungusungu invaded the homestead of the plaintiff D and drove away any animal. They claimed that at a certain meeting held at Ipolo the plaintiff made a free and voluntary confession that he had stolen various numbers of cattle from seven of the eleven defendants and also poisoned 3 head of cattle and 2 goats belonging to the first defendant Imeri Maleva resulting into their deaths. E They also claimed, vide paragraph 3, that he voluntarily offered to return the stolen animals to their respective owners or compensate them in kind, and that he signed both the confession and the offer. They further claimed, vide paragraph 4, that pursuant to the said confession and offer the plaintiff willingly rendered 171 head of cattle F and 2 goats to the eight defendants. Wherefore the defendants prayed for the dismissed of the suit and for costs.

As I said a moment ago, the Written Statement was drawn and filed by the Tanzania Legal Corporation. Mr. Lukwaro, learned counsel of that Corporation, appeared on behalf of the defendants in the High Court. G

It later came to the knowledge of the High Court that the 9th defendant Simon Falasila had actually passed away before the institution of the suit and the learned judge struck out the suit as it related to him, and I think that was a H thoroughly proper thing to do. According to the Written Statement, the plaintiff had admitted to have stolen 16 cows from Simon Falasila and had returned the cattle to the deceased. I

A Four issues were drawn and recorded, namely:

1. Whether the number of cattle collected from the plaintiff was 316 or 171.
2. Whether the cattle were given voluntarily by the plaintiff or not.

B 3. Whether the plaintiff admitted the alleged thefts and offered to return allegedly stolen cattle.

4. What remedy or remedies are the parties entitled to.

C In this judgment the trial judge found that 305 head of cattle and 2 goats were collected from the plaintiff. He stated that he accepted the testimony of PW.2 Jisandu Dima and son of the plaintiff.

According to the account of P.W.2, the animals were collected by some Sungusungu vigilantes on four occasions. D On the first occasion, when the plaintiff was absent, having travelled to Igunga, 9 heads of cattle were taken away. On the second, third and fourth occasions 280 head of cattle plus 2 goats, 16 heads of cattle, and 11 head of cattle were, respectively, collected by Sungusungu.

E The defendants, as pointed out, admitted receiving some of the animals, as follows: first defendant Imeri Maleva - 3 head of cattle and 2 goats; fourth defendant Sayi Kadala - 9 head of cattle, fifth defendant Andrea Mgagani - 79 head of cattle; sixth defendant Matwiga Gaga - 8 head of cattle; seventh defendant Shija Auganga - 25 head of F cattle, eighth defendant Yunge Ndaki - 9 head of cattle; and eleventh defendant Kasanga Tumbo - 18 head of cattle. There was evidence that the tenth defendant Dasu Madigija, who died during the pendent of the suit, had received 16 head of cattle.

G For my part I am quite satisfied that the judge was entitled to rely on P.W.2. Only that he made an obvious arithmetical slip as to the total number of cattle collected by Sungusungu. The figures 9,280, 16 and 11 certainly add up to 316 and not 305. I would uphold the decision of the High Court on this point save as just indicated.

H As there was a large measure of untimely between the second and third issues, they admitted of being taken together and, the judge did precisely that. They were the bones of serious contention and a good deal of the arguments in the High Court and in this Court was directed to them.

I The plaintiff denied that he voluntarily and willingly offered to surrender the animals. He admitted making a confession that he had stolen cattle from the eight defendants, but claimed that he did so after experiencing extreme torture at the hands of Sungusungu and in order to save his life, and that the said A confession was absolutely false.

OMAR JJA, RAMADHANI JJA AND MAPIGANO Ag JA

His narration of the torture was a lurid one: He was abased and tortured for two days consecutively. On the first day he was forced to take off his clothes in full view of the crowd. Next he was hustled away to a place called B Kiwanda (i.e. factory) where he was physically tortured and forced to admit that he had stolen cattle. So Kiwanda bears a perverted meaning. He gave in and made a false confession. On the following day he was first roughed up and later shot on the head with an arrow. If this be true and if in fact he had already made a C confession, that assault was wanton and cruel, even sadistic. He fell down and lost consciousness. Later he returned to his senses, and at that point his torturers had him eat human excrement, and that indeed was the most horrid aspect of his account. On being released he took his grievances to the police and thence to the hospital for treatment. It was clear from his evidence, however, that none of the defendants was a party to the actual torture. D

He denied that he had stolen any animal, pointing out that he has never been prosecuted for such an offence.

It was common ground that criminal proceedings were subsequently instituted in the district court against the first E defendant and four other persons, that is, Kidari, Kawawa, Fumiki and Makerege. The proceedings were, however, discontinued by or at the bidding or someone on high.

Almost without exception the defendants as well as their witnesses DW.6 Richard Noah Ng'ombeyapi, DW.9 F Sakwa Dotto and DW.10 Zololo Gambeshi, denounced the plaintiff as a notorious rustler. One, the eighth defendant Yunge Ndaki, who happened to be the elder brother of the plaintiff, told the Court that the plaintiff began rustling since when he was living at Igunga, that the plaintiff was originally called Noneka Ndaki, that Dima G Nhorongo is a nickname that was derived from such obnoxious enterprise, and that the plaintiff's moving to Ipole from Igunga was actually a flight from justice. There could be hardly any doubt that the relationship between the two brothers was rancorous. H

Their evidence showed that the plaintiff had been boycotted by his villagemates. The eleventh defendant, a fairly well-educated man with a sad political past, judging from his own testimony, was asked by the judge whether he approved ostracising a suspected rustler. He replied that he would not, but qualified his answer with the caustic I remark that "but it is the ends that justify the means",

OMAR JJA, RAMADHANI JJA AND MAPIGANO Ag JA

A and with that he wound up his testimony. As Professor Fimbo reminded us, that unscrupulous philosophical principle is said to have been openly espoused by Machiavel, a Medieval statesman and another.

B The first defendant who was described as a Sungusungu commander accused the plaintiff of having poisoned his 3 head of cattle and 2 goats. He did not see the plaintiff doing so. That is what he had just picked up second or third or fourth hand.

The third defendant, a member of Sungusungu, and his older brother the eleventh defendant, accused the plaintiff C of having stolen 18 branded head of cattle which belonged to the eleventh defendant. The two defendants alleged that the cattle were stolen on various occasions since 1973, the year the plaintiff came to settle at Udongo from Igunga. They alleged that reports about the thefts were made to the authorities but that nothing material came of those reports.

D The fourth defendant accused the plaintiff of theft of his 9 branded head of cattle, the incident taking place seven years back, i.e. in 1979. He said that he coursed the trail made by the animals, which trail led to the homestead of the plaintiff. He claimed that he reported to the police about the incident and that nothing was done by police.

E The fifth defendant, also a member of Sungusungu, accused the plaintiff of having robbed his branded 79 head of cattle on June 14, 1979, at about 10 a.m. His allegation was that the robbery took place in the pasturage and that his cattle-hand was shot with firearm and killed. He also alleged that he reported the incident to the police, F and that he subsequently traced some of the stolen animals: 9 head at the homestead of one Abdallah at Urambo; 1 head at the homestead of one Petero at Urambo; and 17 head at the homestead of one Karatasi at Ulyankulu. If G his evidence was true, the said Abdallah, Petero and Karatasi revealed to him that they had stolen the cattle at the instance of the plaintiff. He admitted that the plaintiff was not arrested in that connection, claiming that the police had intimated that they were "afraid of the Government to arrest him". This explanation was echoed and H underscored by the eleventh defendant who portrayed the plaintiff as "a leader of rustlers, a feared and very subtle man, with friends in high places".

The sixth defendant charged the plaintiff with having stolen his 8 head of cattle, branded, seven years back, i.e. in 1979. Like the others he had also made a report to police about that incident.

I The seventh defendant, also a Sungusungu, called that he lost 50 head of cattle and 35 goats in 1972 when he was residing at Unjili village in Igunga. He said the cattle were branded. A

The eighth defendant stated that his 10 branded head of cattle were stolen six years back, i.e. 1980, and that he reported the incident to the police mentioning the plaintiff and DW. 10 Zololo Gambeshi as suspects, and that the police did nothing. As we shall see presently, the evidence of DW. 10 was supportive. B

The defence case showed, by and large, that at two meetings held at Ipole and Udongo and attended by the top leadership in the locality, the plaintiff was interrogated and that as a result of those interrogations he admitted having stolen the animals from the eight defendants. It is not quite clear who chaired the two meetings. C

The defence case also showed that the plaintiff offered to return the stolen animals to the defendants or to recompense them and that no oppression whatever was brought to bear on him. It further showed that the third defendant (on behalf of his brother the eleventh defendant) as well as the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh defendants, D received the cattle at the Ipole meeting, and that the eighth defendant received his at the Udongo meeting a few days later. It should be observed that the 171 head of cattle referred to in paragraphs 2 and 4 of the Written Statement did not include the 9 head that went to the eighth defendant. E

Furthermore, the defence case showed that all the cattle returned to these defendants, with the exception of the fifth defendant, still bore the respective brands of the defendants. As for the fifth defendants, he claimed that 16 head out of 79 he received were still bearing his brand. F

But there was conflict in the defence case as to who collected the animals from the homestead of the plaintiff. One hand some witnesses said that the animals were bought to the meetings by the plaintiff himself. On the other second defendant, who was the secretary of Sungusungu and whom the judge believe, stated that the animals G were collected by Jeshi la Sungusungu.

The evidence of Dw.9 and DW.10 touched on what took place at the Udongo meeting. The two witnesses joined the chorus of some of the defendants in claiming that the plaintiff did willingly and voluntarily confess to having stolen Yunge's cattle and that the plaintiff willingly and voluntarily offered to return the animals. More importantly, H the two witnesses testified as to their criminal dealings with the plaintiff and their accounts in that respect made quite curious reading.

DW.9's evidence relating to his dealing with the plaintiff may be summarized as follows: The plaintiff once I dispatched him and

A one Gulucha, who did not give evidence, to steal 1 head of cattle which belonged to one Gidoja, who also did not give evidence. The plaintiff had sold him a magical medicine for Shs. 3,000/=, asserting that the medicine could benefit him in two way, namely, to bear him wealth and to protect him against arrest. He went and stolen the B animal and then drove it to a cattle market at Sikonge. The medicine did not work, for he was apprehended by the owner of the animal. He was, however, pardoned and he went to the plaintiff to demand his money who refused the demand. Under cross-examination DW.9 faltered and divulged that he had been "taught", and it may C be noted that all this stuff had not been put to the plaintiff while he was testifying.

I turn to DW. 10. According to his story, some time in 1980 the plaintiff sent him off along with one change, the son of the plaintiff, and two other men who were strangers to him, to steal cattle from Yunge the eighth defendant. D The plaintiff had provided them with a medicine or charm which allegedly caused people to go to sleep, for which he paid a sum of Shs. 500/=. The four went and stole 10 head form Yunge and drove them to an auction-market with a view to selling the same. At dawn, on their way to the market, he chickened and fled. He claimed that E those were the very cattle that were returned to Yunge at the Udongo Meeting, implying that his partners in the theft had sent the cattle to the plaintiff.

Subsequent to his flight. Again, DW.10's allegation against the plaintiff was not put to the plaintiff when he was in the box.

F The judge accepted the evidence of P.W.2 that first 9 head of cattle were taken away by Sungusungu while the plaintiff was away and before the two meetings were held. He pointed out that the evidence of PW.2 on that point was corroborated by that of the sixth defendant. He then expressed the view that piece of evidence "cast a dark G shadow on the defendants' wholesale claim that the plaintiff voluntarily handed over the cattle to the defendants after he had voluntarily confessed steeling cattle".

The judge found that the plaintiff was actually assaulted and wounded. He reached that finding after reviewing only H the plaintiff's case. Professor Fimbo has taken issue with approach, but I leave that for later.

Next the judge went on to review the defence case and to analyse the same. He then came to the following I findings: (1) that the plaintiff's account was substantially true; (2) that most of defendant's denials and allegations were total lies or fabrications; (3) that the plaintiff was brutalized and humiliated; (4) that the plaintiff's confessions were not voluntarily made; and (5) that the plaintiff did not voluntarily give up possession of A the animals. These were his answers to the second and third issues, and he concluded by saying that "the animals were wrongly taken, wrongfully parted with, and wrongfully retained and such of the defendants as retained the animals or any of them and all those who were instrumental to the taking and retention of the same, are guilty of B the tort of conversion".

The judge was not in the least impressed by DW.9 and DW.10. He said, in effect, that the two witnesses had simply recited in Court what had been manufactured and fed to them. C

It was Professor Fimbo's suggestion that the tort of conversion was not part of the plaintiff's pleadings. but I think that this proposition is not well founded, notwithstanding Mr Ntabaye's contention in the High Court that the plaintiff was resting his case on "unjust enrichment". D

I entirely agree with Professor Fimbo that it was essential that the plaint should allege a conversion by the defendants. It should, however, be kept in mind that in principle no particular form of words is requisite in alleging conversion, provided the fact of conversion is sufficiently stated, and I underline the words "sufficiently stated". E The allegation may take the form of either direct averments of a conversion or statements of fact from which a conversion may be legally inferred, and I also underline the words "legally inferred". Accordingly, a mere misdescription of a claim by the plaintiff or his advocate is immaterial. The substance of the pleadings must be read F as a whole and kept in view.

As already mentioned, the kernel of the plaint lay in paragraphs 3,5 and 7. Reduced to their element those paragraphs alleged that the defendants willfully and wrongfully took his cattle by force or duress, or detained them willfully and wrongfully, and that he made demands on the defendants, for their return, who refused to do so. In G my opinion the allegation of conversion was legally implied by those averments.

The next and related point taken by Professor Fimbo was that no issue was drawn in relation to conversion. I have H also been unable to accept this argument. As shown, the defendants met the plaint by claiming in their Written Statement that they received the animals from the plaintiff himself, that no force or inducement whatever was applied to the plaintiff, that the cattle were their property, and that the number given them was loss than the number I

OMAR JJA, RAMADHANI JJA AND MAPIGANO Ag JA
A alleged in the plaint. The plaintiff's allegation of demand and refusal was not traversed and could not, therefore be an issue.
In my opinion issues recorded corresponded with the pleadings and essentially embraced the whole dispute in the suit, though another judge might have phrased them differently.
B With regard to the fourth issues, the judge, as mentioned at the outset, entered judgment for the plaintiff against the defendants for the return of 305 head of cattle and 2 goats, failing that, to pay the pecuniary value thereof, jointly and severally. But as I have already pointed out, if the judge believe PW.2, and if he was right in adjudging C the defendants joint-tortfeasers, a point I will recur to later, then the order should have been a return of 316 head and 2 goats.
I pause to consider the position of the tenth defendant Dasu Madigija, who is listed in the memorandum of appeal D as ninth defendant. Dasu Madigija died after the institution of the suit but before the hearing was concluded. This comes on page 98 of the record. He had, before he died, written a letter to the High Court, saying that he was too old to follow the Court proceedings and appointing the second defendant as his agent, which is permissible under E rules 1 and 2 of Order 3 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966.
In my firm view, the second defendant's authority lapsed as soon as the principal died. The plaintiff should have been advised to apply for the deceased's legal representative to be made a party in place of the deceased, if he F wanted to maintain the claim against the deceased, in terms of rule 4 of order 22. This being my view, I would hold that the continuation of the suit against the tenth defendant subsequent to his death was misconceived, and I would strike out those proceedings.
G I turn to the grounds put forward in the joint memorandum of appeal. I have noticed that some of the grounds of appeal are not far removed from one another, and that several are directed against the judge's findings as to the circumstances under which the plaintiff came to part with the animals and as to the legality or otherwise of the defendants appropriation of the animals.
H As aforementioned, the judge went along with the evidence of the plaintiff and held that the animals were willfully and wrongfully appropriated by the defendants, most of the animals after the plaintiff had been subjected to torture and a false confession extorted form him; and that the tort which the defendants committed in respect thereof was I conversion, though he did not particularize what sort of conversion.

OMAR JJA, RAMADHANI JJA AND MAPIGANO Ag JA
As observed earlier, Professor Fimbo's complaint is that the finding of the judge in regard to the question of torture A was made before the judge had evaluated the evidence of the defendants. Learned counsel has asked this Court to appraise the evidence pertaining to that point and make its own finding, citing the case of Martha Michael Wejja v The Hon. A.G. and three others [1982] T.L.R. 35 at 43. I will dispose of this matter right away. I think B that this is a fair and valid criticism. the evidence of the plaintiff should first have been pitted and balanced against that of the defendants before making a finding on that point. I have accepted counsel's invitation to appraise the evidence on that matter and make my own finding, an exercise which this Court is after all legally C obliged to carry out.

Professor Fimbo's second submission was that the judge failed to scrutinize the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff. He pointed out what he considered to be material discrepancies and disparities in that evidences. D

The third point taken by Professor Fimbo was that the judge erred in dismissing the evidence of the defendants and their witnesses in a summary and blanket manner. It was his contention that the evidence in question established, E on balance, that plaintiff was not tortured, that his confession was not obtained by oppression, and that he willingly offered to return or refund the animals. It was also his contention that the evidence of D.W.9 and D.W.10 in particular established that the plaintiff had stolen and poisoned the animals of the defendants. F

Learned council accordingly contended that the judge erred in law in failing to hold that the defence of retaking animals had been successfully pleaded. If in fact the plaintiff had committed such thefts the defendants were legally entitled to retake the animals, and there was no need for them to go to the bother and expense of litigation to G remove them.

Professor Fimbo made reference to the unsavoury remark made by the eleventh defendant that "it is the ends that justify the means". He pointed out correctly, as demonstrated supra, that the remark was made in reply to a question put by the judge whether the defendant approved ostracizing a suspected rustler- and had no reference to H torture. Counsel has urged this Court to find that the decision of the judge upon the issue of torture may well have been coloured by that remark. I will also dispose of this matter straightaway.

I would dismiss counsel's apprehension as baseless. I have I

OMAR JJA, RAMADHANI JJA AND MAPIGANO Ag JA

A noticed that the judge made reference to the remark only one in his judgment, and that is when he was recapitulating Mr. Ntabaye's final submissions. What's more, there is nothing in the judgment of the learned judge which shows, or tends to show, that the remark in question had any influence upon his mind.

B I will now proceed to decide Professor Fimbo's other points. What I deduce from the defence case is that the plaintiff committed several cattle thefts in a space of eight years, i.e. between 1972 and 1979, and what he had kept the stolen animals at his homestead. Like Mr Ntabayo I ask myself: Is it not against the human grain? And I C wonder whether even the Mafia does operate in such a daring manner. It is hard to believe.

It was also said that several reports were made to the police against the plaintiff but that no meaningful steps were ever taken by them. It is hard to believe that allegation. As pointed out, the plaintiff was depicted as a feared and D fearless character. The judge did not buy that story. The same with me.

It might very well be that the plaintiff had the ill-fame of being a rustler in that area, but there was, in the last analysis, nothing probative in the evidence of the defendants themselves that he had stolen their cattle. Probably it E was in anticipation of such finding that D.W. 9 and D.W.10 were brought forward.

The two witnesses, as mentioned above alleged that they were once induced by the plaintiff to commit cattle thefts. F I notice, however, that the allegations were not put to the plaintiff whilst he was in the box. As a rule the offence should have done so in order to give him the opportunity of deny or admitting the allegations, or of making any other explanation. Secondly, and more telling, was the disclosure of D.W.9 that he had been "taught". Thirdly, G there was the fact the plaintiff was a forsaken man and that the two witnesses were brought to court to give evidence against that backdrop. Robust common sense warns that it would have taken a witness of exceptional boldness to give objective evidence in an open court under such circumstances. I incline to the view that the H evidence of the two witnesses was a farrago of fanciful figments and shaved truths in the most part. I would therefore, hold that judge was justified to dismiss the accusations of theft that were levelled against the plaintiff.

With regard to the question of torture I am also of the view that the judge was entitled to find as he did. It is not I quite true that he summarily rejected the evidence given and led by the defendants. And it seems to me that the conflicts and disparities to which Professor Fimbo alluded, if they were conflicts and disparities at all, were not material, and a court would be naive A if it were to expect the evidence to bear no such discrepancies.

Professor Fimbo would have this Court regard D.W.6., D.W.7 and D.W.8 as independent and credible witnesses. D.W.6 Richard Noah Ng'ombeyapi and D.W.7 Fabiano Mazanguli were, respectively, the chairman of Udongo B and Ipole, while D.W.8 Mrisho Karyube was the ward secretary of Chabutwa of which Ipole and Udongo were parts. These three witnesses denied that plaintiff was subjected to torture. I think, however, that there is some sustenance in Mr Ntabaye's submission that these witnesses being the top leaders in the locality and having C attended one or both meetings had apparent interests of their own to serve.

I find that the plaintiff was actually tortured. No self-respecting court would, in my view, have accepted a confusion obtained by such extreme violence. D

It would not be out of place at this juncture to say a few words about Sungusungu. It was pointed out by Professor Fimbo, with palpable diffidence, citing the people's Militia Laws (Misc. Amendments) Act, 1987 (No. 9/89), but without elaborating, that Sungusungu is an institution of law and order. That is correct. In the scheme E of that Act as read together with the Peoples Militia (Powers of Arrest) Act, 1975 (No.25/75), and the Peoples Militia (Compensation for Death or Injuries)) Act, 1973 (No.27/73), a traditional security group like Sungusungu has been accorded a formal legal status. Effective from June 12, 1989, such a group is a peoples militia and enjoys F the powers rights and benefits conferred on such militia by those legislation. All this is in accordance with the policy of deploying the general public to supplement the established forces in the arduous task of crime control.

There are, however, three observations which may be made about that legal status. The first, which is of G subordinate importance, is that previous to Act No. 9/89 there was no written law governing such security groups although their existence in certain places was well known. The second is that the statutory provisions cited above put members of such groups at par with police constables in relation to powers of arrest and dealing with criminal suspects. The third observation is that the law does not give, and had never given, licence to such groups to H dehumanize people or procure confessions by torture.

I am not one to deny that in certain areas where such groups have been established they have done laudable work in the detection I

A of crimes, apprehension of criminal elements and preserving and enforcing public order generally. The instant case, however, serves to illustrate all too well the possible and gross exesses that such groups may be tempted to indulge in when they operate outside the normal legal framework. It was imperative for the relevant organs of the B state, therefore, to ensure that these groups operate according to law.

The next point for determination is what kind of conversion was committed by the defendants and whether the trial C judge was right in holding that all the appellants committed the tort. Professor Fimbo submitted that conversion by taking was not pleaded against the defendants. Mr Ntabaye conceded that point, but he was quick to add that for the purpose of the plaint it was not necessary to do so, and I am disposed to accept that view-point.

D But it is plain that even the judge did not specify the kind of conversion that was committed. Professor Fimbo assigned some blame to the advocated who appeared in the High Court for rendering insufficient assistance to the judge, I think with some justification. In actual fact the arguments formulated for this Court by the advocates were E not so fully or carefully formulated for the High Court. And it was clear to me that some of the arguments in this Court had involved considerable research and industry.

Any asportation of goods out of the possession of anyone else, for the use of the defendant or a third person, in exclusion or in defiance of the owner's right, amounts to conversion by taking. In relation to all the defendants, F except the first and second, I share Professor Fimbo's view that there was no trace of evidence that they participated in the taking of the animals. By the plaintiff's own account, the animals were taken by a squad of Sungusungu composed of Kidari and persons other than the defendants.

G In relation to the first and second defendants Professor Fimbo has not quarrelled with the formulation of the judge which comes on page 132 of the record, to wit:

> Where a man voluntarily and actively takes part in promoting an unlawful seizure of another's property for the benefit of a H third party, such person is liable in tort as the third party, even if in the end such person should receive no material gain.

The judge was there dealing with Mr Lukwaro's submission that there was no cause of action against the second I defendant. He concluded by finding that there was one. However, as Professor Fimbo has correctly pointed out, the judge just stopped there: he did not proceed to pronounce on whether he A considered the second defendant, let alone the first defendant, to have been a party to the taking, and it thus remains for this Court to decide the matter.

After consideration and evaluation of the evidence I have come to the conclusion that there was no cogent B evidence that in taking the animals Kidari and his group were directed or instigated or in any manner induced by the first and second defendants.
I then go to consider conversion by detention. Detention connotes possession. Now, on the pleadings and facts proved the second defendant was not in possession of any of the converted animals. If so, he could not be said to C have committed the wrong. Consequently, in relation to him the appeal should wholly succeed, and I would allow it with costs here and below.
As regards the other appellants there were, as mentioned, admissions that they were given some of the animals that were seized, as follows; first defendant - 3 head of cattle and 2 goats; third defendant - 18 head of cattle which D he received on behalf of and kept for his brother the eleventh defendant; sixth defendant - 8 head of cattle, seventh defendant - 25 head of cattle, and eighth defendant - 9 head of cattle. E
Mr Lukwaro did submit in the High Court that there was no causes of action against the eleventh defendant, on the ground that none of the cattle was found with him. The Judge rejected that submission and in any view properly so. At law a person can be charged with conversion of goods if he had an actual or constructive possession of F them at the time of the alleged conversion. On the facts proved the third and eleventh defendants were joint possession of the 18 head of cattle, the farmer's possession being actual and the letter's constructive.
We were pressed with the contention that the judge erred in failing to consider the issue of identity of the animals G the plaintiff claimed. Professor Fimbo laid great stress on the requirement that in such an action the property claimed must be specified and he relied on three authorities, in particular the old English case of Abington v Lipscomb [1841] 1 QB 776 at page 1330. He sought to draw a parallel between that case and the instant case. H
It seems to be an established rule that in an action of Trevor, the demand must be sufficiently definite and complete, and should not embrace more property than the owner is entitled to recover. It seems to be accepted, however, I that while the plaint must describe the property alleged to be converted with reasonable certainty, in

A order to appraise the defendant and the court of the property claimed, all that is required is that the property should be described which has much reasonable precision as the nature of the case will permit, and ordinarily a general description should suffice.
B In my opinion the plaintiff's description of the subject matters was in the circumstances quite sufficient and there appears to have been no misapprehension by the defendants throughout as to what the plaintiff was actually claiming. Abington's case does not stand in the way at all. There the defendant's father died seized of certain customary freeholds on which heriots were payable to the plaintiff, as lord of the manor, upon the death of the C tenant. (Heriot is an incident to freehold tenure in England. I is the right of the lord of the manor to the best living beasts of the tenant of the manor dying seised of an estate inheritance and recoverable by seizure or distress. It has a marked tincture of feudalism.) The plaintiff was entitled to 5 such beasts, but overbearing as he apparently was, D he marked 7 claiming all as heriots, and left them in the possession of the defendant who was the owner up to the marking. The plaintiff afterwards demanded the 7 and the excessive demand was met by a flat refusal to give them up. The plaintiff then brought action of Trevor for the beasts.

E Against that action the defendant made a preliminary objection and moved to quash the action, contending that in the circumstances his refusal did not avail the plaintiff a causes of action.

F Denman, C J sustained the objection and nonsuited the plaintiff. His reasons: (a) the demand had reference to a seizure actually made of 7 beasts, when the plaintiff had only a right to seize 5; (b) even supposing that the demand and refusal amounted to a conversion of 5, still it was left uncertain which 5 he lawfully seized, because if he was entitled to the best beasts he should have formed a judgment and exercised the legal option as to which was G the best.

As I see it Abington's case did not lay down any absolute rule that a demand that is too large is by itself always fatal. It seems to me that each individual case should be decided on its own set of facts. And there are, in my H opinion, two points of material distinction between that case and the present one.

There was from the very beginning no dispute whatever that the plaintiff in Abington's case was entitled to only 5 beasts and not the number he claimed in his action. There was a dispute in this case to the number of cattle which I the plaintiff could recover from the defendants. More importantly, the problem in Abington's case was that it was by no means certain which 5 among the 7 the plaintiff had chosen as the best. As the learned Chief Justice observed, there was no refusal of 5 but only a refusal of 7, for A the defendant had no means of giving 5, because, and more to the point, he had no legal right to select 5, and being unable to do so he was not bound to give up the 7. Obviously there was no question of making such choice in the instant case. B

In conclusion upon this point I would hold that conversion by detention was proven against the first, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth and eleventh defendants in respect of the animals they said they received at the two meetings.

Finally I recur, as promised, to the order of the judge requiring the judgment-debtors to meet the award jointly and C severally, which meant that the judgment could be executed in full against any one of them. The order has been assailed by the appellants, vide the last ground in their memorandum, as unwarranted.

There is substance in that criticism. In my judgment it cannot be said with confidence, on the materials on record, D that the defendants were joint tortfeasors. All that happened, in my view, was a more concurrence of distinct acts of retention. In fairness to counsel for the respondent I ought to mention that he readily conceded that he defendants were independent tortfeasors. I would allow this ground. That means, in my judgment, the defendants, E namely, the first, third (or eleventh), fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth defendants are liable separately to the extent of the number of animals each individuals retained, or their pecuniary value. F

There was a short discussions as to whether the assessment of the pecuniary value should have reference to the date of conversion or the date of judgment. I have been unable to find any helpful decision on that subject in this country. In England the authorities that are available to me are not unanimous; the weight of authority, though, is in G favour of the view that the value should be assessed at the date of conversion.

On my part I prefer the view to which Salmond on Torts seems to incline, namely, that if the property increases in value after the date of conversion and if the increase is not due to the act of the defendant but would have occurred H in my case, even had no conversion been committed, as when goods taken or detained have risen in value by reason of the fluctuation of the market, the plaintiff should recover it as special damages resulting from the conversion, in addition to the original value of the property, provided that the plaintiff does not bide his time after conversion so as to make his I

A demand when the market price is highest. But as always, such damages must be explicitly claimed on the pleadings and strictly proved.

In the present case it is undeniable that the Tanzania shilling has undergone several devaluation's and there has B been a sharp mark-up in the price of almost every marketable item since the time of conversion of the animals. The plaintiff's sticking-point, however is that there was no pleading in that respect, let alone any proof. Accordingly, the pecuniary value of the animals should, in my opinion, be based on their market price at the time of conversion.

C We were informed from the bar that the decree has been executed by the plaintiff in part and some of the defendants' animals attached as follows first defendant Imeri Maleve - 12 head of cattle plus 2 goats: third defendants Andrea Tumbo and his brother the eleventh defendant Kasanga Tumbo - 13 head of cattle: the fifth D defendant Andrea Mgagani - 59 head of cattle; the sixth defendant Matwiga Gaga - 16 head of cattle; the seventh defendant Shija Uganga - 10 head of cattle; and the eighth defendant Yunge Ndaki - 61 head of cattle.

E If that is the case, then, in my opinion, the plaintiff should return 9 head to the first defendant, 8 head to the sixth defendant, and 52 head to the eighth defendant, failing this, to pay the three defendants the pecuniary equivalent thereof at the date of seizure. The fourth, fifth and seventh defendants are liable to pay the plaintiff 9 head, 20 head, and 15 head, respectively, or the pecuniary equivalent thereof at the date of conversion.

F In the ultimate event I would uphold the judgment of the High Court, save as indicated above, and dismiss the appeal. I would make no order as to costs since the appellants have come to this Court in forma pauperis.

Appeal dismissed.

Chipeta, J.: The appellant, Masumbuko Athuman, was charged before Kigoma District Court with the offence of causing death by dangerous driving contrary to sections 40(I) and 63 (a) of the Road Traffic Act. 1973. He was convicted as charged and was sentenced to two years imprisonment. He was further disqualified from driving for a G period of three years. He now appeals.
The evidence on record reveals that just before the accident, the deceased, who was a child, had been playing with one Almasi Juma (P.W.I) aged 14 years, some ten paces from Kigoma - Kasulu road. The deceased threw an orange peel at P.W.I, and when the latter tried to retaliate, the deceased ran away to go across the road, and as he H did so, a lorry which was being driven by the appellant knocked him. He died shortly afterwards from the injuries he received as a result of the accident.
The appellant stopped the motor vehicle a short distance (78 feet) from the point of impact and ran away for fear I of mob justice.
CHIPETA, J

A There were two eye-witnesses: P.WI is the only one who said that the appellant was "driving at a high speed". P.W.2 never talked about the speed of the motor vehicle.
In his defence the appellant said that he saw the deceased from a distance of 12 to 15 paces.
B On the evidence on record, and as rightly pointed out by Mr Bilaro, learned state attorney, the speed at which the appellant was driving cannot be said to have been established. A court cannot convict a person of dangerous or careless driving when the finding of dangerous or careless driving is based solely on opinion evidence about his C speed where such opinion is arrived at on quite insufficient data. (See Daya v Republic, [1964] E.A 529).
In the present case, P.W.I simply said that the appellant was "driving at a high speed". That cannot suffice to prove the fact of speed.
D Was there, then, any other evidence to prove dangerous driving on the part of the appellant? As I understand the law, a conviction for careless or dangerous driving must be base on a finding of fact that the driver charged with the offence was guilty of some act or omission which was negligent and which was a departure from the E standard of driving expected of a reasonable prudent driver. The duty of drivers is to keep a reasonable look out for obstructions or traffic ahead in time to avoid a collision. But, as Law, J pointed out in the case of R. v Wallace, [1958] E.A 582, at page 585:
F The duty is keep a reasonable look-out, and not to have to anticipate unreasonable or dangerous behaviour on the part of other drivers.
G To put it differently, the offence of dangerous driving is not an absolute office but involves a finding of fault on the part of the driver. In other words, the test to be used is the objective test (See Mkwenye v Republic. [1973] LRT n. 50; and Khalif v Republic, [1973] E.A. 364). In the words of Onyiuke, J in the case of Pyarali v Republic [1971] E.A. 169, at page 171:
H .. if the manner of actual driving produces a situation, which viewed objectively, that is to say, which a reasonable man would consider dangerous then that driving is dangerous ...
I To put it in another way, when a driver who is in control of his vehicle, does an act which any reasonable person would say is a dangerous piece of driving or a dangerous manoeuvre, then that driving is dangerous. A
So, the mere fact that an accident has happened does not necessarily mean that a particular driver has driven dangerously. For instance, if a driver, through no fault of his own, is faced with a sudden emergency and, is taking B evasive action to avert an accident, collides with another vehicle or knocks down a pedestrian, such a driver cannot be said to be guilty of dangerous driving.
In the present case, the prosecution alleged that what constituted dangerous driving was that the appellant "drove recklessly faster on the said road". But, as pointed earlier, the evidence as to speed was no more than opinion C evidence based on insufficient data. From the evidence, it appears to me that the deceased tried to cross the road when the appellant's motor vehicle was already very near, and so the appellant was faced with a sudden D emergency through no fault of his own.

For these reasons, I respectfully agree with Mr Bilaro, learned state attorney that the appellant ought to have been given the benefit of the doubt. The appeal accordingly succeeds. The appellant's conviction is hereby quashed E and the sentence and order of disqualification are set aside. The appellant shall be released from custody forthwith unless otherwise lawfully held.

A This was an application for the issue of direction in the nature of habeas corpus made on behalf of the 5 applicants who were detained under the provisions of the Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree No. 3 of 1964. The applicants were detained so that they would not disrupt peace and security. It was argued for the applicants B that detaining a person on grounds of security could only be ordered under the Preventive Detention Act. No. 60 of 1962 as amended by Act, No. 2 of 1985 by the President of the United Republic of Tanzania because peace and security are matters reserved for the Union.
C Held: (i) Since the list of Union matters in the constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania, 1977, does not include preventive detention power or preventive detention per se as a Union matter it means the President of D Zanzibar is empowered to order preventive detention in relation to non-Union matters pertaining to Zanzibar.

(ii) the position of the Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree No. 30, 1964 in the light of Articles 65(4) and 64(3) of the Union Constitution is that that legislation is inconsistent with the Union Constitution in so far as matters E of defence and security are concerned and therefore it stands null and void to that extent alone;

(iii) since preventive detention on matters not related to defence and security is a non-Union matter only legislation passed by the Union Parliament legislating for Zanzibar on that subject would be inconsistent with F Articles 106(3) and 64(2) of the Union Constitution, 1977

as well as Article 7(1) of the Zanzibar Constitution, 1984, hence the extension to Zanzibar of the Union Preventive Detention Act No. 60 of 1962, as amended by Act No. 2 of 1985 is valid to the extent it relates to Union matters of defence and security only whereas the non-Union G aspect of it relating to Zanzibar is exercisable by the President of Zanzibar under the relevant Zanzibar legislation;

(iv) the mere fact that the Union Preventive Detention Act confers powers on the Union President and extends its applicability to Zanzibar as well as mainland Tanzania does not preclude the President of Zanzibar from H exercising similar powers on non-Union matters relating to Zanzibar;

(v) since the detention of the applicants was grounded on security matters which are Union matters it should have been carried out under the orders of the President of the United Republic of Tanzania pursuant to the I Preventive Detention Act. No. 60 of 1962 as amended by Act No. 2 of 1985;

[zJDz]Judgment

Hamid CJ: This is a chamber application for the issue of directions in the nature of habeas corpus as provided for under section 361(b) of the Criminal Procedure Decree, Cap. 14, the Laws of Zanzibar, Revised Edition. The C application in this case which is supported by an affidavit has been filed in this court by J.L.P. Lipiki Esq., advocate, on behalf of five applicants namely, Shaban Khamis Mloo, Ali Haji Pandu, Soud Yussuf Mgeni, Mchano Khamis Ali and Juma Othman Juma whom it is alleged that between 23rd and 30th of June, 1990 have been D detained either without warrant and without being shown any detention order or without being informed the reasons for their detention. The applicants through their advocate, Mr Lipiki, have asked this Court to order Summons to E be issued to the Commissioner for the Institutions for the Rehabilitation of Offenders (Prisons) and the Attorney-General to be called upon to show cause why a writ of habeas corpus should not issue directed to them to have the bodies of the applicants be produced before this court and to show cause why they should not be forthwith released. F

In support of his application, Mr Lipiki, the Counsel for the applicants has advanced the following arguments:

(i)That the applicants were detained under the provisions of section 2 of the Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree, No. 3 of G 1964 which is no longer operative on matters relating to security of Zanzibar which is part of the United Republic of Tanzania.

(ii)On the Union day, that is on 26th day of April, 11964, the Zanzibar Revolutionary Government surrendered some of its H affairs to what is now known as the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania and therefore those matters surrendered to the Union Government ceased to operate in Zanzibar and that the laws promulgated or adopted by the Parliament of the United Republic of Tanzania took their place. The affairs I

HAMID CJ

A surrendered by the Revolutionary Government are listed in the First Schedule to the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania, 1977, which includes matters of defence and security.

B (iii)That the reason given in the order for the detention of the applicants which was signed by the President of Zanzibar and Chairman of the Revolutionary Council, is that the detention was intended to prevent the applicants from endangering C peace and security of Zanzibar by their acts of inciting the citizens of Zanzibar to disrupt the general elections of 1990.

(iv)That matters of Defence and Security are Union matters (in accordance with 1977 Union Constitution) and are governed D by the National Defence Act, No. 3 of 1970 respectively both of which have expressly stated that they shall apply to Tanzania Zanzibar as well as mainland Tanzania rendering the Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree inapplicable.

E (v)That the detention of the applicants is illegal because the order for their detention was issued under the defunct Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree, No. 3 of 1964 instead of the operative Preventive Detention Act, No. 60 of 1962 as amended F by the Preventive Detention (Amendment) Act, No. 2 of 1985 of the Union Government.

(vi)That the detention of the applicants is illegal because the purported detention order was not directed and signed by the G President of the United Republic of Tanzania or by any of the persons named in section 37(3) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania.

(viii)The detention of the applicants is illegal because the applicants were not informed in writing the grounds on which they H were being detained nor have their detention been gazetted as required under the provisions of the Preventive Detention Act, 1962 as amended by Act No. 2 of 1985.

I In countering the arguments advance by Mr. Lipiki on behalf of the applicants, Mr Mtembei an Attorney of the State appearing on behalf of both respondents argued that the detention of all applicants is legal on the following grounds: A

(i)That the applicants are detained vide a valid detention order signed by the President of Zanzibar and Chairman of the Revolutionary Council acting under the powers conferred upon him under section 2 of the Preventive Detention Decree, No. B 3 of 1964 which is still in force because it has neither been repealed by the Preventive Detention Act of the Union nor by any other law.

(ii)That the reason behind the detention of the applicants is the maintenance of peace and good order of Zanzibar which is C non-Union matter and therefore falls within the powers of the President of Zanzibar; and

(iii)That the provisions of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania 1977, do not oust the powers of the President D of Zanzibar of detaining persons under the Preventive Detention legislation of Zanzibar on non-Union matters.

The arguments brought forward by Mr. Lipiki on behalf of the applicants can be summarized as follows: E

That the detention of the applicants is illegal because the detention order was issued under a defunct F Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree, no. 3 of 1964 which is no longer operative on matters relating to Security of Zanzibar since Security matters are among Union matters listed in the First Schedule to the 1977 Constitution of United Republic; and finally the proper procedure for detaining persons under the Preventive G Detention Act (No. 60 of 1962 as amended by Act. No. 2 of 1985) was not followed as a result of which render the detention to be illegal.

It has been brought to the notice of this Court that two piece of legislation exist in Tanzania dealing with H preventive detention namely Preventive Detention Decree, No. 3 of 1964 of Zanzibar and Preventive Detention Act, No. 60 of 1962 amended by the Preventive Detention (Amendment) Act, No. 2 of 1985. While the Counsel for the applicants contends that the detention of the I

HAMID CJ

A applicants having been carried out under the Zanzibar Preventive Detention Legislation is illegal on the grounds that the Zanzibar Preventive Detention legislation is defunct and that such detention should have properly been carried out under the orders of President of the United Republic pursuant to the procedure laid down under the B valid Union Preventive Detention Act, No. 60 of 1962, Mr. Mtembei, appearing on behalf of the Respondents contends that the applicants have been detained under the orders of President of Zanzibar acting under powers conferred upon him under section 2 of the Preventive Detention, No. 3 of 1964 and that the provisions of the C Constitution of the United Republic in no way oust the Powers of the President of Zanzibar of detaining persons under the Preventive Detention legislation of Zanzibar on non-Union matters. Therefore the arguments put forward (by both parties) call upon this Court to examine the following issues:

D (i) Whether the effect of extending the application of the (mainland) Preventive Detention Cat, No. 60 of 1962 (so as to make it applicable throughout the United Republic of Tanzania and upon such legislation conferring powers of preventive detention to the Union President) is to legally preclude the President of Zanzibar from exercising similar E powers in relation to non-Union matters pertaining to Zanzibar under the powers conferred upon him by the by the Zanzibar legislature.

F (ii) Whether the detention of applicants is not valid merely because it has been carried out under the 1964 Zanzibar legislation instead of the Preventive Detention Act, No. 60 of 1962 of the union as amended by Act No. 2 of 1985.

G Since the main arguments in this application are centered around the validity of the law empowering the President of Zanzibar to order preventive detention, and whereas it is a notable fact that all legislation find their validity from the Constitution, a quick postmortem of the 1977 Constitution of the United Republic and the 1984 H Constitution of Zanzibar is likely to present us with a possible solution to the problem at hand.

It has been emphasized by the Union Constitution in Articles 64(2) and 106(30 that legislative powers in respect of I all non-Union matters for Zanzibar are exclusively vested in the Zanzibar legislature. The two Articles are reproduced in their original Swahili version as follows:

Article 64(2): A

Mamlaka yote ya kutunga Sheria katika Tanzania Zanzibar juu ya mambo yote yasiyo Mambo ya Muungano yatakua mikononi mwa Baraza la Wawakilishi.

Article 106(3): B

Madaraka yote ya kutunga Sheria katika Zanzibar juu ya mambo yote yasiyo Mambo ya Muungano yatakua mikononi mwa Baraza la Wawakilishi la Zanzibar.

It is worth also to note Article 64(1) which states: C

Mamlaka yote ya kutunga sheria juu ya mambo yote ya Muungano na pia juu ya mambo mengine yote yahusuyo Tanzania Bara, yatakua mikononi mwa Bunge.

Translated in English this Article would read that: D

Legislative powers in respect of all Union matters and all matters relating to Mainland Tanzania shall vest in the Union Parliament.

We might as well be wise to further look into Article 64(3) which reads: E

Article 64(3)

Endapo sheria yoyote iliyotungwa na Baraza la Wawakilishi inahusu jambo lolote katika Tanzania Zanzibar ambalo liko F chini ya mamlaka ya Bunge, Sheria hiyo itakua batili na itatenguka na pia endapo sheria yoyote iliyotungwa na Bunge inahusu jambo lolote ambalo liko chini ya mamlaka ya Baraza la Wawakilishi, sheria hiyo itakua batili na itatenguka. G

Put in English it would read that :

Any law enacted by the Zanzibar legislature in relation to Union matters which are reserved for the Union Parliament shall be null and void, so also any enacted by the Union Parliament on non-Union matters reserved for the Zanzibar legislature H shall likewise be of on effect.

Having gone through the above articles of the Union Constitution it is then upon us to see what is the position of the I Union Preventive

HAMID CJ

A Detention Act in relation to the Union Constitution and then see what is the position of the Zanzibar's Preventive Detention Decree, No. 3 of 1964 vis-à-vis the same Constitution. In this view it is worth to go through Article 64(5) of the Union Constitution which states:

B Articles 64(5):

Bila ya kuathiri kutumika kwa katiba ya Zanzibar kwa mujibu wa Katiba hii kuhusu mambo yote ya Tanzania Zanzibar C yasiyo mambo ya Muungano, Katiba hii itakuwa na nguvu ya Sheria katika Jamhuri nzima ya Muungano na endapo Sheria nyingine yoyote itakiuka masharti yaliyomo katika Katiba hii, Katiba ndio itakuwa na nguvu, na Sheria hiyo nyingine, kwa kiasi inayokiuka Katiba, itakua batili.

D Put in English this provision would read that:

Without prejudice to the application of Zanzibar Constitution in relation to non-Union matters pertaining to Zanzibar, this E Constitution shall have the force of law throughout the United Republic and if any other law is inconsistent with this Constitution, this Constitution shall prevail and the other law shall to the extent of the inconsistency be void.

F The question before us now is are the two Preventive Detention legislation prevailing in the two parties to the Union or any one of these legislation inconsistent with the Constitution? If so how could they or any of them be viewed in terms of the provisions of Article 64(5) of the Union Constitution" In other words could any of them be G void in toto or to what extent could they or any of them be held to be valid?

There is no doubt that prior to the Union between Zanzibar and Tanganyika Zanzibar had its own Preventive Detention Decree, No. 3 of 1964.

H Section 2 of the said Preventive Detention Decree, No. 3 of 1964 stipulates:

Section 2. Where:

I (a) the President of Zanzibar is satisfied that any person is conducting himself so as to be dangerous to peace and good order in any part of Zanzibar or is acting in a manner prejudicial to the defence of Zanzibar or the Security of the A Republic; or

(b) the President is satisfied that an order under this section is necessary to prevent any person acting in a manner prejudicialy to peace and good order in any part of Zanzibar, or to the defence of Zanzibar or the security of the B Republic, the President may, by order under his hand direct the detention of that person. C

Section 1(2) - This act shall apply throughout the United Republic.

Section 2(1) stipulates:

Section 2(1): Where: D

(a) it is shown to the satisfaction of the President that any person is conducting himself so as to be dangerous to peace and good order in any part of the United Republic or is acting in a manner prejudicial to the defence of the United E Republic or the security of the State; or

(b) the President is satisfied that an order under this section is necessary to prevent any person acting in a manner prejudicial to peace and good order in any part of the United Republic, or to defence of the United Republic or F security of the State, the President may by order under his hand and the Public Seal, direct the detention of that person.

The two sections quoted are similar save for the fact that section 2 of Preventive Decree No. 3 of 1964 viewed as G it presently stands, empowers the President of Zanzibar to exercise preventive detention in Zanzibar when he is satisfied that a person conducts himself in such a way that he is likely to endanger peace and good order of Zanzibar, or behaving in a manner prejudicial to the defence of Zanzibar or the security of the Republic (Zanzibar), H while section 2 of the Union Preventive Detention Act. No. 60 of 1962 empowers the Union President to exercise similar powers for the purposes of maintenance of peace and good order in any part of the United Republic and also for the purpose of preventing any person from acting in a manner prejudicial to the defence of I the United Republic

A or security of the State. It will be seen therefore, that whereas the President of Zanzibar under section 2 of the Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree, 1964, can exercise preventive detention in relation to those persons who are in Zanzibar and whose behaviour is likely to compel the application of the said provisions. Section 2 of the B Union President to exercise similar powers throughout the United Republic.

Influenced by the notion that both Preventive Detention legislation are related to matters of defence and security, C which matters Zanzibar has surrendered to the Union Government after the April 26, 1964 Union of Zanzibar and Tanganyika to form the United Republic of Tanzania coupled with the amendment of the 1962 Preventive Detention Action of the mainland Tanzania by Act. No. 2 of 1985 making it also applicable to Zanzibar as well as D mainland Tanzania, the Counsel for the applicants, Mr. Lipiki contends that the Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree is not applicable firstly because it relates to matters of defence and security which are Union matters and secondly because Act. No. 2 of 1985 extends the application of Preventive Detention Act. No. 60 of 1962 to E Zanzibar and since the Zanzibar legislation is an earlier one and was later followed by the 1985 legislation on the same matter, according to a legal maxim "leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant" which means later laws abrogate prior contrary laws, then the Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree, 1964 by implication is repealed by the Preventive Detention Act of the Union. In support of is contention Mr. Lipiki also cited the case of F Smith v Benabo [1937] 1 K.B.518 which states that it is a well settled rule of construction that if a later statute again describes an offence created by a previous one and imposes a different punishment, or varies the procedure, the earlier one is repealed by later statute.

G This Court agree with Mr. Lipiki, the counsel for applicants that the Preventive Detention Decree, No. 3 of 1964 of Zanzibar comprises matters relating to defence and security which at the same time the Parliament of the United Republic passed the Preventive Detention (Amendment) Act, No. 2 of 1985 extending the application of H the mainland Preventive Detention Act. No. 60 of 1962 to Zanzibar as well as mainland. The immediate question that comes up is that with the extension of the application of the Union Preventive Detention Act. to Zanzibar without specifically providing for the repeal of the Zanzibar Preventive Detention legislation, and with the act of I conferring power, by the Union Preventive Detention Act, to the President of the Unite Republic, does this state of affairs necessarily preclude the President of Zanzibar from exercising similar powers conferred A by a legislation passed by the Zanzibar legislature on non-Union matters?

It is the view of this Court that by precluding the President of Zanzibar from exercising the preventive detention power under section 2 of the Preventive Detention Decree of Zanzibar on the grounds that such powers are B exercisable only by the President of the Unite Republic of Tanzania under the Union Preventive Detention Act would be tantamount to suggesting that Preventive Detection is a Union matter simply because as was contended by Mr. Lipiki, counsel of the applicants, defence and security are matters which are governed by the National C Security Act, No. 3 of 1970 and National Defence Act, No. 24 of 1966 both of which are Union legislation. I am of the strong view that it is erroneous to hold that both Preventive Detention legislation are solely related to matters pertaining to defence as security and that preventive detention is governed only by the National Security Act. (No. D 3 of 1970) and the National Defence Act (No. 24 of 1966) because an Indian case of H. Das v District Magistrate, Cuttak (1969) A.I.R.43, S.C. does to some extent provide a view contrary to the one put forward by the learned counsel for appellants. The facts of that case in so far as they are relevant to the present application E appear in the judgment of the Supreme Court given by Shah, J. at S.C. 43 where it is stated:

On December 15, 1967, the District Magistrate, Cuttak, served an order made in exercise of power under s.81(I)(a)(ii) of the F Preventive Detention Act (4 of 1950) directing the appellant to be detained on grounds that the appellant was acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order by committing breach of public peace, indulging in illicit business in G opium, Ganja, Bhang, Country liquor, rioutous conduct, criminal intimidation and assault either by himself or through his relations, agents and associates as set out in the order. On December 19, 1967, the appellant filed a petition in the High Court of Orissa challenging the validity of the order of detention on the grounds, inter alia, that the order and the grounds in H support thereof served upon the appellant were written in English language which the appellant did not understand.

It is to be noted that the main grounds advanced by the appellant to I

HAMID CJ

A challenge the detention related not to the reasons that led to his detention but rather related to lack of knowledge of the reasons for his detention since the order was in the English language which the appellant did not understand. The relevance of this case in the present matter is that it endeavours to show that there is a wider range of activities B that can prompt the exercise of the powers of preventive detention than mere matters related to defence and security. It means therefore it is not correct to hold that preventive detention power is a Union matter which is exercisable only by the Union President, because as has been shown above, the exercise of such power may be C promoted by incidents or activities related to defence and security as well as matters outside the scope of defence and security which may include non-Union matters.

It is true as contended by the learned counsel for the applications that the Preventive Detention Decree, No. 3 of 1964 of Zanzibar was passed prior to the Union of Tanzania which event marked the surrender of certain D governmental functions by the Zanzibar Government to the Union Government. However the matters surrendered in accordance with the First Schedule to the Constitution are:

E (i) The Constitution and the Government of the United Republic;
(ii) External Affairs:
(iii) Defence;
F (iv) Police;
(v) Emergency Powers:
(vi) Citizenship;
(vii) Immigration;
(viii) External trade and borrowing;
G (ix) the Public Service of the United Republic;
(x) Income Tax, Corporation tax, Customs and exercise duties;
(xi) Harbours, Civil aviation and Posts and Telegraphs;
(xii) Currency, coinage and legal tender (including paper money, banks including savings banks) and banking; foreign H exchange and exchange control;
(xiii) Industrial licensing, statistics;
(xiv) Higher education;
I (xv) Mineral oil resources including petroleum, its hydrocarbons and natural gas;
(xvi) National Examination Board;

(xvii) Research; A
(xviii) Meteorology;
(xix) Statistics;
(xx) Court of Appeal of the United Republic of Tanzania.

Nowhere in this list of the Union matters is mentioned "peace and good order", "preventive detention" or B "detention power" as among the Union matters. Therefore to hold that preventive detention power is a Union matters, is to endevour to over stretch the list of the Union matters, hence there is no valid legal basis for such a holding. This court therefore dissociates itself from such a view, particularly when the word "power" in so far as C the Union matters are concerned has been used only in relation to the proclamation of emergency and such power has been bestowed on the President of the United Republic.

These arguments influence this Court to move away from the view held by the counsel for the applicants when he D asked this Court to hold that the Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree has ceased to be of any effect firstly because it relates to matters of defence and security which are Union matters and secondly because by implication that legislation has been repealed by the Union Preventive Detention (Amendment) Act, No. 2 of 1985. With E regard to the relationship between the preventive detention and matters related to defence and security it has been made quite clear that preventive detention may also be ordered in cases other than those related to defence and security and which may not necessarily involve the application of the National Defence or and national Security F Acts at all. Indeed preventive detention may be carried out to prevent breaches of the peace and maintenance of good Government which is the main concern of every head of the executive, and this Court is of the view that it was never the intention of the Union Parliament to deprive the President of Zanzibar of the powers 'to clean his G house' on matters of non-Union application relating to Zanzibar. It would be ridiculous therefore to deprive the President of Zanzibar of the powers to take preventive measures towards those who disturb the peace in Zanzibar in relation to purely non-Union matters. I cannot and I am not prepared to hold that the Zanzibar H President should fold his arms and do nothing when peace is likely to be disturbed until such time the Union Presidential approval is obtained for detaining a person even on non-Union matters relating to Zanzibar. I

A Given the unique nature of the Union between Zanzibar and Tanganyika, the draftsmen of both the Zanzibar Constitution, 1984 as well as the Union Constitution, 1977, did realize the possibility having either two inconsistent B legislation on the same matter or a legislation which is partly either inconsistent with another legislation with either of the two Constitutions. It is with this view that Article 64(5) of the Union Constitution, 1977 provides:

Without prejudice to the application of Zanzibar Constitution in relation to non-Union matters pertaining to Zanzibar, this C Constitution shall have the force of law throughout the United Republic and if any other law is inconsistent with this Constitution, this Constitution shall prevail and the other law shall to the extent of the inconsistency be void.

D Article 4 of the Zanzibar Constitution, 1984, carries a similar provision which states:

This Constitution is the Constitution of Zanzibar and shall have the force of law throughout Zanzibar and subject to Article E 80, if any other law is inconsistent with this. Constitution, this Constitution shall prevail and the other law shall to the extent of the inconsistency be void.

F Having seen that preventive detention may be prompted by matters relating to defence and security as well as matters outside the purview of defence and security, what then are the positions of the Preventive Detention Decree, No. 3 of 1964 of Zanzibar and the Union Preventive Detention Act, No. 60 of 1962 taking into account Articles 64(5) and 4 of the Union and Zanzibar Constitutions respectively. In encompassing Union matters, surely G the Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree, No. 3 of 1964 is inconsistent with the Union Constitution in accordance with Article 64(5). It is important to note that Article 64(3) of the Union Constitution stipulates that H any law enacted by the Zanzibar legislature in relation to the Union matters which are reserved for the Union Parliament shall be null and void, so also any law enacted by the Union Parliament on non-Union matters reserved for the Zanzibar legislature shall likewise be of no effect. The First Schedule to the Union Constitution, 1977, I provides us with the list of the Union matters. It means therefore, all matters which are not included in that list, are non-Union matters. And since that list does not include preventive detention power or preventive detention per se as a Union matter, it means the President of Zanzibar is A empowered to order preventive detention in relation to non-Union matters pertaining to Zanzibar and therefore the position of the Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree. No. 3 of 1964 in the light of Articles 65(4) and 64(3) of the Union Constitution is that, that legislation is inconsistent with the Union Constitution in so far as matters of B defence and security are concerned and it therefore stands null and void to that extent alone. The Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree, No. 3 of 1964 remain a good law in all other non-Union matters relating to Zanzibar. It means therefore the President of Zanzibar is precluded from detaining any person under the Zanzibar Preventive C Detention Decree on the grounds of defence and security, but he may detain any person under that law on the grounds other than those of defence and security. This is so because the Parliament of the United Republic has no power to legislate for Zanzibar on non-Union matters and that only the Zanzibar legislature can legislate for D Zanzibar on non-Union matters as it has been emphasized in Articles 106(3) and 64(2) of the Union Constitution, 1977, and reiterated in Article 78(1) of the Zanzibar Constitution, 1984, all of which stipulate: E

> Legislative powers in respect of all non-Union matters for Zanzibar shall exclusively rest in the Zanzibar legislature.

Since preventive detention on matters not related to defence and security is non-Union matter any legislation F passed by the Union Parliament legislating for Zanzibar on that subject would be inconsistent with Articles 106(3) and 64(2) of the Union Constitution 1977 as well as Article 78(I) of the Zanzibar Constitution, 1984, hence the extension to Zanzibar of the Union Preventive Detention Act, No. 60 of 1962, as amended by Act No. 2 of 1985, G is valid to the extent it relates to the Union matters of defence and security only whereas the non-Union aspect of it relating to Zanzibar is exercisable by the President of Zanzibar under the relevant Zanzibar legislation. H

In the final analysis all this means in mattes related to internal affairs of Zanzibar not only that the President of Zanzibar is empowered to detain a person on the grounds other than those of defence and security but it is also the view of this court that only the President of Zanzibar is empowered to detain a person in Zanzibar in relation to I non-Union matters pertaining to Zanzibar

A pursuant to the Preventive Detention Decree, No. 3 of 1964 of Zanzibar, while the Union President under the powers conferred upon him under the Union Preventive Detention Act, No. 60 of 1962 as amended by Act. No. 2 of 1985, may detain any person for the maintenance of peace and good order in relation to non-Union matters B pertaining to mainland Tanzania as well as detaining any person throughout Tanzania (Zanzibar included) for the purpose of maintaining and preserving defence and security of United Republic. It is for this reason that I am inclined to hold the more fact that the Union Preventive Detention Act confers powers to the Union President and C extends its applicability to Zanzibar as well as mainland Tanzania does not oust the President of Zanzibar from exercising similar powers on non-Union matters relating to Zanzibar.

Having come to the conclusion that the President of Zanzibar can exercise powers of preventive detention on D non-Union matters in relation to Zanzibar only and that the Zanzibar Preventive Detention Decree No. 3 of 1964 is valid in so far as it relates to non-Union matters, could it be proper to hold that the detention of the applicant is legal under the law? This question could only get a proper answer if we examine the detention order as signed by E the then President of Zanzibar Idris Abdulwakil which is reproduced in full below:

Under the circumstances, there is no doubt that the detentions of the applicants in this case has been ordered on security grounds, and it being a matter reserved for the Union should have been left for the President of the United G Republic to make such orders. Mwalusanya, J.: The two applicants viz. Rajabu s/o Kidimwa Ng'eni and Stephano s/o Singita are seeking leave G to appeal out of time to this court. The applicants was resisted in person by the respondent Iddi s/o Adam.
The delay was slight, just about a week or so. If that was the only factor to consider, I would have allowed the application. However in matters of this kind, the most important matter to consider is the prospects of success of the intended appeal.
H In the case at hand, I find that the intended appeal has absolutely no chances of success. It is clear from the evidence on record that the applicants decided to take the law in their own hands in order to punish an alleged thief - the father of the respondent. The father of the respondent was adjudged a cattle thief by a traditional court I 'Baraza la Jadi' and thereafter the cattle of the respondent were attached to compensate the one whose cattle were allegedly stolen.
The trial court hold that the seizure was illegal and ordered the refund and some consequential damages. A
I am satisfied that the trial court was correct. Under our Constitution only a court of law can adjudge somebody to be a thief and award a compensation order. The traditional court (Baraza la Jadi) has no such jurisdiction. Therefore the attachment of the respondent's cattle was illegal. The trial court was right to make redress on the B wrong done by the Baraza la Jadi.
Since the intended appeal had no chance of success, this application must fail. It will be a waste of time to allow it. In the event, the application is dismissed with costs. C

And they were both subsequently found guilty as charged and the appellant was convicted accordingly. Conviction was not entered G against his co-accused. And the matter was forwarded to this Court for sentencing.

The brief background of the case is that at about 19 hrs. on the 1st of November 1986, six bandits armed with bows and arrows, pangas iron bars and guns invaded the home of PW1 Samwel Waganda. And went into the H cow shed and drove out 21 heads of cattle. They did that after threatening Deogratias Kingi - PW2, PW1's herdsman. They also took PW2 with him. They abandoned him much later in the course of their journey in a forest. He was in bad shape as he claims to have been severely beaten. He was rescued by the search party. I PW2 claims to have identified the appellant and the other accused at the trial in the group of the bandits.

Thereafter PW1 reported the matter to a Baraza la Jadi and it is alleged the appellant and the other person were called before the Baraza and admitted to have participated in the A robbery and theft. They were then ordered to compensate the complainant - PW2 and 20 heads of cattle were later seized from them. However these heads of cattle were later returned to the appellant and his colleague according to PW2 the direction of the village Chairman. B

PW1 then later instituted Civil Case No. 83 of 1989 in the Kiagata Primary Court in respect of this matter. It would appear the case did not make any headway, and as a result he ultimately reported this incident to the police and on the 12th of June 1990, a criminal case which is the subject matter of this case was instituted in Court. C

The appellant denied at the trial as he does in his petition of appeal to have been partly to the commission of this offence.

The Republic was represented by Mr. Mapunda learned State Attorney. I have had opportunity to peruse and consider the evidence on record and Counsels' submission and I am inclined to agree with Mapunda learned State D Attorney that the crucial issue for determination in this case, was the question of identification of the appellant as having been a party to the commission of the offence.

The trial court was satisfied with the evidence of identification of the appellant. E

I have on my part carefully revisited this evidence, and I must say with respect, it was in my view far from being satisfactory. And it could not in my opinion be safely relied upon to found conviction.

The sequence of events with regard to how the matter was handled by PW1, eloquently speak in my view that the F alleged identification of the appellant and his colleague was found doubtful even to the people who wanted such evidence to be relied and acted upon.

The incident happened in 1986, and it took the complaint PW1, four years to report it to the Police and institution G of the criminal proceedings that are the subject matter of this appeal.

If PW2 had made that kind of positive and certain identification of the appellant in the group of bandits as he claimed in his testimony, he should have mentioned him and his colleague at the first opportunity, thus facilitating H their immediate arrest. But this never happened. And according to the evidence on record, after the incident, nothing happened until on the 26th of June 1987 when the appellant was first taken to a "Baraza la Jadi" where he denied the accusation. I

If the identification of the appellant, had been positive and certain

A could PW1 had dilly dallied in taking steps that would have led to the immediate arrest of the appellant and would he have taken that long to report and to seek the assistance of the Police in this matter.

I do not think so, particularly considering the fact that the bandit made away with all his stock.

B And the fact that he did not take the requisite and timely action leading to the immediate arrest of the bandits who are alleged to have been identified, is an indication in my view that the purported identification was uncertain, and unreliable.

C I am thus satisfied in my mind and as already observed the identification of the appellant as having been one of the perpetrators of this crime was unreliable and it would be most unsafe to uphold the conviction entered on that type of evidence. I thus agree with Mapunda learned State Attorney that the conviction in this case cannot be sustained.

D The appeal therefore succeeds and it is hereby allowed. The appellant is to be released forthwith unless otherwise lawfully held. The appellant's co-accused was convicted in his absence. I have noticed from the record of the trial Court that it dealt with this accused in accordance with provisions of section 226 of the Criminal E Procedure Act 1985.

I have however on a close scrutiny of the record of the trial Court noticed that this accused never made even a single appearance in Court from the start of the trial or from the time the charge was instituted in Court. He did not F therefore have even a single opportunity to plead to the charge that was leveled against him jointly with the appellant. It is only the appellant who pleaded to the change.

The Public Prosecutor is recorded to have made the following submission to the Court:

G P. Prosecutor:The case is for hearing. I tender a new charge sheet to join the present accused with another who is not in Court. New charge sheet read over and explained to the accused whopleads:

Accused:It is not true.

H UNPGN.

P. Prosecutor:Second accused is at large and all efforts to trace him have proved futile to date. I pray to proceed under I section 226 of the CPA as I have witnesses who have come from far. I pray for leave to prosecute the case.

1991 TLR p43

SEKULE J

Court:Prayer granted. A

And the joint trial started. Perhaps it may be convenient to set here the relevant parts of the provisions of section 226(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act:

226(1) If at the time or place to which the hearing or further hearing shall be adjourned, the accused person shall not B appear before the Court which shall have made the order of adjournment, it shall be lawful for such Court to proceed with the hearing or further hearing as if the accused were present.... C

I have considered this matter, and with respect, I am inclined to the view that this was wrong invocation of the provisions of section 226 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. D

To my mind, those provisions can only be invoked in a situation whereby an accused person has had opportunity or occasion to appear in Court after arraignment and had the charge read to him and his plea taken and thereafter a hearing date set for his case. And then if he thereafter absconds and he does not appear in Court at the set E hearing day, the provisions of section 226 of the said Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 could be invoked.

This is the logical meaning, one could give to the words the hearing appearing in the first line in the provisions of section 226(1) before the words further hearing as even in the ordinary discharge of Court business in criminal F cases, as case is not set for hearing before an accused person has had occasion to appear in Court after arrest. To interprete these provisions as the trial Court did in this case, would mean to open the possibility of trying in absentia people who are not even aware of the charges leveled against them, or/and people who are not of the G jurisdiction of courts of this country and have never been made aware of the charges confronting them as they have never been arraigned and have never made even a single appearance in Court. I am inclined to the view that this was not the intention of the provisions of section 226 of the Criminal Procedure Act. H

To my mind and as far as I can recollect, trials in absentia outside the scope of the provisions of section 226 of the Criminal Procedure Court are not permitted. As already said, since the appellant's co-accused had not made even a single appearance in Court and pleaded I

A to the charge, the provisions of section 226(1) in this case should not have been invoked.

And as efforts to track him down had proved futile and since the Public Prosecution wanted to proceed with the case, the proper cause that was open to him was to withdraw the charge against this particular accused and let the B case against the appellant alone to continue.

The trial against Nyamhanga Machage was therefore in my view illegal. It was null and void. As his case was C otherwise linked to the case of the appellant in this appeal and in the light of what I have observed with regard to the case of the appellant, I decline to make an order for retrial in respect of this fugitive accused and leave it to the prosecution to decide which course to take in the event he is subsequently arrested. As no formal conviction was D entered against this accused I will end here, otherwise using the powers of revision of this Court I would for the reasons set out above, have quashed such conviction.

The appeal of the appellant is allowed and the conviction is hereby quashed.

E The appellant is to be released forthwith unless otherwise lawfully held.

[zJDz]Judgment

Ramadhani, Makame and Omar, JJ.A.: The appellant, Mr. A. S. Sajan, was the plaintiff in a suit which was H heard in the absence of the respondent, then the defendant, the Co-operative and Rural Development Bank. As the suit was dismissed by MAINA, J., and being aggrieved by that, the plaintiff now appeals to us. I

RAMADHANI, MAKAME AND OMAR, JJA

A The appellant on or about 4th August, 1984 entered into a contract with the respondent whereby he was to buy a milling machine from the latter. Payments were made in three installments, the last one being on the 3rd August, 1985 which brought the total to some Shs. 92,036/=. On the 6th March, 1987 the respondent refunded the whole B amount of money to the appellant on the grounds of non-availability of machine due to the failure to obtain foreign exchange with which to buy them. At the time the respondent pulled out of the contract the price of the milling machines had appreciated to Shs. 367,914/25. The appellant sued for the difference between the contract price C and the market price, that is Shs. 275,905/25, as damages.

As already said, the learned trial judge nonsuited the appellant because he found there was impossibility of D performance and that there was no proof that the respondent was merely unwilling to perform.

Before us the appellant appeared in person while the respondent was represented by Mr. Kalunga, learned Counsel.

The appellant told us that he had failed to secure an advocate and that he was going to prosecute the appeal in E person. He started by seeking our leave to produce two letters which he said were very important. Because of unfamiliarity with court procedures, he submitted, he did not produce them at the High Court. Mr. Kalunga objected to that on grounds that the appellant had ample time to do so in a hearing which was ex-parte.

F We decided to permit the appellant to produce the two letters and we now give our reasons. Rule 34 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979 provides:

34 - (1) On any appeal from a decision of the High Court acting in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, the Court may-

(b) in its discretion, for efficient reason, take additional evidence....

H The Court of Appeal for East Africa said in Karmali Tarmohamed v Lakhani & Coy [1958] E.A. 567 at 574. Except on grounds of fraud or surprise the general rule is that an appellate court will not admit fresh evidence, I unless it was not available to the party seeking to use it at the trial, or that reasonable diligence would not have made it so available.

RAMADHANI, MAKAME AND OMAR, JJA

These two letters which the appellant is seeking to tender were in his possession at the time of hearing the suit and A in all other aspects they do not pass the foregoing test. However, on perusing the High Court file we have noted that the letter of 24/10/1984, particularly, had been mentioned and its contents had been given in the evidence of the appellant. Could it be said, then, that these letters are "fresh evidence" or "additional evidence"? We feel we B could not say so. Rather they were documentary evidence of what had been given orally. In fact the learned judge was supposed to assist the unrepresented plaintiff by asking him to produce the letters. So we did what ought to have been done. C

The appellant argued in the main appeal that the respondent had to perform the contract and not to refund the purchase money advanced. Mr. Kalunga, on the other hand, submitted that the purchase money has been refunded and that the appellant could not have his cake and eat it at the same time. The learned Counsel referred D us to Sec. 55 of the Sale of Goods Ordinance (Cap. 214) which provides for the recovery of money paid upon the failure of a consideration. He also cited Benjamin's Sale of Goods P. 673 paragraph 1341. Mr. Kalunga said that the learned judge was right as the respondent did not have any machines to supply to the appellant. E Counsel argued that the availability of foreign exchange with which to buy the machine was condition of the contract.

There is no evidence to show that the contract was on the condition of the availability of foreign exchange. On the contrary, the appellant was made to believe that everything as well. The letter of 20th October, 1984 written by F the Regional Manager of the respondent to the appellant said:

> While we are arranging to transport the same grainmill to you we inform you that the price of the items have gone as G follows...

The appellant paid the difference which amounted to Shs. 2,036/= whereupon the Regional Manager wrote to the General Manager copied to the appellant on 28th October, 1984. He said: H

> Please consign his grainmill and hullet at your earliest.

The language used shows that the machines were readily available. So we find that there was no evidence to I support the view that the contract was conditional. Hence we find that there was a breach of

A contract. The consequences of a breach is not merely the refund of the money paid but damages. Section 55 of the Sale of Goods Ordinance, cited to us by Mr. Kalunga, provides:

> Nothing in this Ordinance shall affect the right of the buyer or the seller to recover interest or special damages in any case B where by law interest or special damages may be recoverable, or to recover money paid when the consideration for the payment of it has failed.

C That section does not make the recovery of money paid the only remedy. Again paragraph 1341 of Benjamin's sale of goods provides:

> Where, after the buyer has paid the price (or part of it) to the seller, the seller fails to deliver the goods.... hemay either sue D for damages, or for the restitution of the money paid to the seller.

Admittedly the appellant has been given back his money. The Written Statement of Defence in paragraph 8 alleges E that the appellant had requested the refund. A letter marked "A" was attached support of the allegation. That was a letter of 24th December, 1986 written by the appellant to the respondent. The appellant said, inter alia:

F Since initial payment was made over two years ago by July, 1985 full payment has been made, in the absence of supply of machines, you ought to pay the interest at the current Bank's rate, I propose to charge the rate from August, 1985, please let me know your comments.

G The appellant concluded "I therefore sincerely hope you would finalize this matter either to supply the machines or otherwise".

H There is nothing which supports the allegation that the appellant simply demanded a refund of his money. If anything he was demanding payment of interest for the period his money had been with the respondents. Thus the refund of the money was infact the manifestation of the breach of the contract by the respondents. The receipt by I the appellant of the money refunded did not operate as a bar to a claim for damages because the refund would have been ordered in any case.

The cardinal principle in awarding damages is 'restitutio in integrum', that is, the law will endeavour, so far as A money can do it, to place the injured person in the same situation as if the contract had been performed (The Cooper Motor Corp. Ltd v Moshi/Arusha Occupational Health Services Civil Appeal No. 1 of 1990 (unreported) citing Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd Ed. Vol. II p. 233 Paragraph 400). B
In the instant case if the contract had been performed the appellant would have had the machine. So 'restitutio in integrum' dictates that the appellant be paid such sum of money as to purchase the milling machines. The C appellant gave the price of such machine at the time of filing the suit as being Shs. 367,941/25. That was not controverted. Damages then are that amount less the refund, that is, Shs. 275,905/25. Costs here and below are also to be paid by the respondent. D

F Bahati, J.: This is an appeal by H.L. Mwasandondo against the judgment of the Housing Appeals Tribunal which quashed and set aside the judgment of the Regional Housing Tribunal.

The facts are that the appellant Mwasandondo applied before the Dar es Salaam Regional Housing Tribunal for G vacant possession of his house No. 20 Block 40 Kinondoni Area of Dar es Salaam City. The house was being occupied by four tenants. The tenants resisted the claim for vacant possession on the grounds that no reasonably equivalent alternative accommodation had been offered by the applicant landlord. Two tenants vacated the suit H premises voluntarily and only the two respondents Mwanaisha Abdallah and Jane Mbaga were left to resist the application. The Regional Housing Tribunal granted the application for vacant possession.

On appeal to the Housing Appeals Tribunal the decision of the Regional Housing Tribunal was reversed on the I grounds that no alternative accommodation which is reasonably equivalent to the suit premises had been offered. The Housing Appeals Tribunal argued that even the distance from the alternative accommodation to the tenants' place of work and to the city centre was A factor to be taken into account in deciding whether such accommodation was reasonably equivalent to the suit premises.

In his memorandum of appeal, the appellant has set out 6 grounds of appeal. Mr. Mwakasangula, learned counsel B for the appellant, argued that the appellant had offered alternative accommodation of the same standard as the suit premises and where the appellant himself was living. But the respondents refused to accept the accommodation on flimsy grounds namely that the house was too far from the City Centre. He argued that this should not be allowed.

On ground No. 2, Mr Mwakasangula argued that the Tribunal erred in law and fact in narrowing down the C interpretation of "alternative accommodation" to correspond to a place near where one works. He submitted that it would be impossible for landlords under such circumstances to find alternative accommodation. D

On ground No. 5, Mr. Mwakasangula submitted that the judgment of Tribunal went further, to state that because the appellant did not need the suit premises of this accommodation, the order for vacant possession was uncalled for. He argued that this point was not one of the issues. E

Finally Mr. Mwakasangula submitted that the Tribunal erred in not referring the matters to the Regional Housing Tribunal for adjudication. He argued that since the Housing Appeals Tribunal had held that some issues had not been answered, the proper cause was to remit the matter to the Regional Housing Tribunal for resolution of the F issues not answered.

In reply, Dr. Lamwai learned counsel for the respondents submitted that the appeal had no merits. He referred to section 25(l)(e)(i) and (ii) of the Rent Restriction Act in order to emphasize the requirement of providing G accommodation reasonably equivalent to the one at hand. He referred to the cases of Warren v Austen [1947] 2 All E.R.185 and Civil Case No. 29/89 - Parmar and another v Paul Maro and Civil Appeal No. 7 of 1989 - Dilip Parmar v Mohamed Sood which held that even amenities of the alternative accommodation matter and that H suitability of the alternative accommodation is important.

He argued further that the appellant failed to call evidence to prove that the alternative accommodation was reasonably equivalent. Therefore the Housing Appeal Tribunal was right in holding that the appellant failed to I discharge his duty under section 25 of the Act, he submitted. He elaborated further that whereas the suit premises

A were in Kinondoni within reach of the bus station, the alternative accommodation was at Ukonga five miles to the nearest bus station. He said that the alternative accommodation was far from being reasonably equivalent to the suit premises in view of the distance which the respondents would have to cover. He submitted further that the B appellant kept giving different reasons as to why he wanted the suit premises which showed that he was a liar.

As for ground No. 6, Dr. Lamwai submitted that the Housing Appeals Tribunal had the power under section 12(l)(r) of the Rent Restriction Act to vary or rescind any orders made by the Regional Housing Tribunal and that C there was no requirement for a retrial because the Housing Appeals Tribunal was convinced that the application in the Regional Housing Tribunal was not bona fide.

In a rejoinder to the above, Mr. Mwakasangula submitted that the appellant had supplied alternative D accommodation which was suitable in that he himself was living there and that he could not be expected to provide better accommodation. As for the distances, he submitted that the decisions of the Court of Appeal did not deal with the issues of distance and transport.

E With regard to the submission that the appellant had contradicted himself, Mr. Mwakasangula conceded that there was such contradiction. Finally he said that since the "reasonably equivalent" element had not been dealt with by the Regional Housing Tribunal, the case ought to have been remitted to the Regional Housing Tribunal for decision.

F I will commence with the last point raised by Mr. Mwakasangula about remitting the case back to the Regional Housing Tribunal so that the element of "reasonably equivalent" may be decided. I do not think, with respect to learned counsel, that is what section 12 of the Rent Restriction Act requires. Even in ordinary civil cases there is G no requirement for an appellate court to remit a matter to the lower court just because some points were not adjudicated upon by the lower court. The appellate court can certainly delay with the matter. In this appeal, the appellant adduced no evidence to establish that the alternative accommodation was reasonably equivalent to the H suit premises. He cannot be heard to complain about this deficiency and to ask that he be given an opportunity to lead evidence to that effect. Further more, section 12(i)(r) of the Rent Restriction Act empowers the Housing Appeals Tribunal to vary or rescind any order made under the provisions of this section i.e. section 12. That I means that if a Regional Housing Tribunal has made any order, the Housing Appeals Tribunal can vary it or rescind it.

BAHATI J

The main thing in this appeal is whether the alternative accommodation which the appellant was offering to the A respondents was reasonably equivalent to the suit premises where they are staying. But before I deal with that point I will examine the reasons on the part of the appellant for requiring the suit premises. As conceded to by Mr. Mwakasungula, the appellant gave contradictory reasons for wishing to have the suit premises. But what B transpired as the truth was that the appellant wanted to exchange accommodation with the respondents so that he might occupy the suit premises and leave the respondents to occupy his current residence at Ukonga. The Housing Appeals Tribunal found that the appellant did not require the suit premises for his occupation as a residence. C Section 25(1)(e)(ii) states inter alia thus:

> in case of a dwelling house, it is reasonably required as a residence for himself... D

But the appellant already has a residence for himself. In such a situation can it be said that the suit premises are reasonably required as a residence for the appellant or occupation as a residence for himself or for his wife or children? I do not think so, and in any case there is no evidence to that effect. Therefore, even on the first limb of E paragraph (e)(i) this appeal crumbles.

As for alternative accommodation reasonably equivalent, I also agree with the learned Chairman of the Housing Appeals Tribunal that no evidence was adduced to show that the alternative accommodation being offered was F reasonably equivalent to the suit premises. Indeed the evidence establishes the opposite because the alternative accommodation is far off from the city centre and requires one to walk 5 miles to the nearest bus station. Such accommodation cannot be said to be reasonably equivalent to the suit premises. It was held in P.S. Parmer and G another v Paulo E. Maro - Civil Appeal No. 29 of 1989 (C.A.T. unreported) that here the suit premises were begin used for both residential and commercial purposes, alternative accommodation which cannot be used both for residential and commercial purposes cannot be reasonably equivalent to the suit premises. Going by the H reasoning in the just cited case, I have no difficulty in concluding that the alternative accommodation in this appeal which is as described above cannot be said to be reasonably equivalent to the suit premises because the respondents would be put to great inconvenience as to their access to the places of work, I

A more so for the second respond who would be put into further problems of walking for 5 kilometers to the nearest bus stop.
It follows, therefore, that not one out of the two requirements of paragraph (e) of section 25 (l) has been satisfied. B The appeal cannot succeed and it is dismissed with costs.

Ramadhani, Omar and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: On 27/7/86 Hawa d/o Issa (P.W.1), carrying on her back a young D daughter, Mariam d/o Richard, the second deceased, was in the company of Bakari s/o Mrimi, the first deceased, going from Njoro Village to Matui village. On the way they came across Tongeni Naata, the appellant, who was proceeding in the same direction to the Boma of Sokoine. After a brief chat the four set out together in a file with E P.W.l being at the front, the first deceased in the middle and the appellant in the rear. They went like that from about 1.00 p.m. to 5.00 when suddenly P.W.1 heard the first deceased complaining. As P.W.l turned around she saw the first deceased speared in the back. F

The appellant chased P.W.l who was about five paces in front of where the first deceased had fallen down. The appellant struck P.Wl with the bush knife (sime) which he had and as she was falling down, the appellant grabbed the second deceased off the back of P.W.l and slashed - off the left breast of P.W.1 who then fell down G unconscious. She regained consciousness the following day early in the morning when she was found by some Masais going to fetch water from the river. P.W.l explained to them her ordeal and gave them a description of the appellant. She was taken to hospital where on 5/8/86 she identified the appellant from among a group of eight H Masai youths who were paraded past her bed one after another.

The appellant was accordingly convicted of both murders and was sentenced to suffer death. He now appeals to us.

The appellant was advocated for by Miss Bigeye, learned counsel, who had three grounds of appeal. First it was I argued that the identification parade was irregular and defective. Second, the

A visual identification by P.W.l was said to have been not watertight and lastly that the appellant was not given and opportunity to object to any of the assessors.

As for the first ground Miss Begeye cited the case of Mwango Manaa v R. (1936) 3 E.A.C.A. 29 which laid out the procedure for the conduct of a proper identification parade.

B She argued that though that was a Kenyan case it had been followed with approval by the courts in Tanzania. The learned counsel pointed out three irregularities in the conduct of the parade. First, she recited what the appellant had said namely that he was first shown to P.W.l and then he was marched together with other seven C youths. Second, P.W.l said that she was told by A.S.P. Kilio Ramadhani Dege (P.W.4), who conducted the parade, to point out the person who had killed her daughter and cut out her breast. Miss Bigeyo said that the D address should not have been in that way. She said that P.W.l should have been told that among the eight youths she was going to see her assailant might or might not be presented and them P.W.l should have been left to see if there was a person she recognised. The third irregularity that was pointed out by Miss Bigeye was that the eight E youths were not all looking alike as P.W.4 admitted that some of them did not have their hair plaited. The effect of these irregularities, Miss Bigeyo submitted was to vitiate the proceedings.

As for the second grounds challenging the visual identification of the appellant by P.W.l, Miss Bigeyo said that F though P.W.1 had been with the Masai youth who attacked her for about 4 hours, she never really had a good look at him since they were walking in a file with herself being at the forefront and the youth at the rear. Then, miss Bigeye added, that at the time of the incident things happened so fast that P.W.1 did not have an opportunity to G look at the youth closely to be able to identify him later.

In the last ground of appeal Miss Bigeye submitted that it is not a rule of law that an accused person is given an opportunity to object to a assessor yet it is a rule of practice. The appellant at the trial was not given such an H opportunity and, Miss Bigeye submitted, that was fatal.

On behalf of the Republic/Respondent was Mono, Senior State Attorney. As for the first ground of appeal Mr. Mono submitted that the parade was properly conducted. He said that the only serious allegation was that P.W.l I had seen the appellant before the parade was conducted. However, he argued, that was what the appellant alleged. On the other had P.W.4 had given a concise account of what he did and that, Mr. Mono explained, was what actually happened. He further said that the identification A parade procedure is provided for in the Police General Orders (P.G.O). No. 231. Paragraph (q) thereof requires the officer conducting the parade to explain to the witnesses the purpose of the parade within the hearing of those on parade and then to invite the witness to point out by touching any persons he identifies. Mr. Mono B argued that in explaining the purpose of the parade the officer will have to go over what had happened to P.W.1 and that is exactly what Miss Bigeye complained against. Mr. Mono submitted then that no irregularity was done by P.W.4 in addressing P.W.1 in the way he had done. C

As for the visual identification of the appellant by P.W.1, Mr. Mono submitted that P.W.1 had all the reasons to remember the face of the appellant. Mr. Mono argued that the appellant had a chat with P.W.1 and the first deceased before they started their trip together and that the attack was in broad day light. Finally, Mr. Mono said D the parade itself was done only ten days after the incident when memory was still very fresh.

Mr. Mono conceded that it was a rule of practice to give an opportunity to an accused person to object to an assessor but argued that its omission was not fatal as it had not been shown that the omission occasioned any E injustice to the appellant.

We agree with Mr. Mono that the only serious allegation with respect to the identification parade was that of P.W.1 having had the sight of the appellant just before the parade. As for the other allegations they were not of F substance. We agree that here we have two versions of what happened: P.W.4 did not say that the appellant was shown to P.W.1 before the parade. Of course we are aware of the possibility that he would hardly have said so even if that had been the case. On the other hand, the appellant said that was what had been done. P.W. 4 was G not cross-examined on that just as the appellant too was not controverted. However the learned trial judge believed P.W.4 and we find no good reason to differ with her. But also, as we shall point out later, the identification parade was not the sole basis for the conviction. H

As for the other two points we agree that the requirements of P.G.O. No. 231 (q) would of necessity demand the conducting officer to say moreless what he had told P.W.1.

Secondly the persons on parade were required to look alike but not to be uniform as to their hair style. I

RAMADHANI, OMAR AND MNZAVAS JJA

A We again agree with Mr. Mono and the learned trial judge that P.W.1 had a very good view of the appellant to be able to identify him. After all the appellant was apprehended because of the description P.W.1 gave to the people who rescued her the following morning. Then her identification was corroborated by Monica Sokoine B (P.W.2) who saw the appellant at their boma that fateful evening and that he was the only stranger there on that day.

The appellant had raised the defence of alibi. Mr. Mono withdrew, and properly so, his objection to that defence C since the appellant had given notice of it as required by section 194 of the C.P.A. The appellant claimed that he had been busy the whole of the fateful day building his boma at Matui and that he never left for any where. But the appellant did not bring any evidence to support his claim. This deliberate lie goes to support his identification by P.W.1 as submitted by Mr. Mono.

D As for the last ground of appeal it was held in Ndiragu Nyagu v R. [1959] E.A.75 that it is a sound practice which has been followed and should be followed to given an opportunity to an accused to object to any assessor. That was followed by this Court in the appeal of Samwel Ndonya v R. Criminal Appeal No. 76/1988 E (unreported). However, we added that the result of such omission cannot be the same in each case.

In that appeal we held that the omission did not prejudice the defence and that the error was curable under Rule 108 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, 1979. Our reasons were that though the appellant was represented F at the trial the court was not reminded of the practice. Then there were no allegations of misconduct or impropriety of any assessor. That is the situation in this appeal. The only difference is that here the omission has been made a ground of appeal while in Samwel Ndonya v R. it was not and that it was merely an afterthought. G But in our well considered opinion merely making the omission a ground of appeal without showing how the appellant was prejudiced at the trial will not vitiate the proceedings.

Before we conclude we wish to comment on sentencing in a case like this where an accused person is convicted of H two counts of murder. The learned trial judge merely said: "The accused is sentenced to death by hanging".

In Agnes Doris Liundi v R. [1980] T.L.R. 47 at 50 this Court said that in such a case:

I Sentence of death should only have been passed on one count, the convictions on the other two counts being allowed to remain in the record. We accordingly amend the sentence to refer A to the conviction on the first count only.

1991 TLR p59

So the sentence should properly have read:

The accused is sentenced on the first count to suffer death by hanging. The conviction on the second count to remain on B record.

Apart from that the appeal is devoid of any merit and is dismissed in its entirety. C

Appeal dismissed.

[zJDz]Judgment

Masanche, J.: This is an appeal originating from a conviction on a charge of defilement of a girl under the age of B 14 years contrary to section 136(l) of the Penal Code. Surprisingly, however, of one reads the entire proceedings, one gets the impression that the magistrate preceded on assumption that the charge was one of rape contrary to sections 130 and 131 of the Penal Code, or in the alternative, the learned resident magistrate does not know that the offence of defilement is different from the offence of rape.

C So, that trial was a confused exercise, and certainly is the upshot I cannot support the conviction. What was the case?

The appellant Ally Athumani, on 17/7/89, at 7.00 p.m. approached the complainant, a young girl of apparent age D of 14 years (actually age was not ascertained) and requested her to accompany him to a secluded place for sexual intercourse. They walked to a lodging called Ngambo Lodge, but there they could not get a room for the exercise. They then moved to the house of the appellant. There, in the house of the appellant, they had sexual E intercourse. The appellant said they had sexual intercourse for half an hour while the girl said it took one hour. After the sexual intercourse, the appellant escorted her home. It was after she had arrived home that some elders noticed that the complainant had had sexual intercourse with a man.

F Appellant, in his testimony, did not deny having sexual intercourse with the complaint. His defence, according to him, is that that was his girl friend for a long time, and that was not the first time that they had gone out for sexual intercourse.

As I pointed out earlier on, the trial actually proceeded as if the charge laid at the door of the appellant was one of G rape. I say so because all the way the learned magistrate talked of consent, penetration, etc. And, indeed at times he even used the word rape.

Rape is defined in section 130 of the penal code. The section roads:

H 130 Any person who has unlawful carnal knowledge of a woman or girl, without her consent, or with her consent, if the consent is obtained by force or by means of threats or intimidation of any kind, or by fear of bodily harm, or by means of I false, representations as to the nature of the act, or in the case of a married woman, by personating her husband, is guilty of the felony termed "rape".

Defilement is defined in section 136(1) of the Penal Code. It reads: A 36,(l) Any person who carnally knows any girl under the age of fourteen years is guilty of a felony, and is viable imprisonment for life, with or without corporal punishment.

The above are definitions of rape and defilement - the two being entirely two different offence; and indeed each B one of them has its own ingredients. For example for the offence of rape, there must be proved the following:

1. That there be carnal knowledge of a woman or girl (no age given); C
2. That the man forced such a woman to have the sexual intercourse. In other words, that there was no consent at all;

3. Or if there was consent at all, then the consent must have been obtained by tricky means or by threats or D intimidation or fear of bodily harm; or a misrepresentation of the actual act, or by posing as her husband.

Defilement, on the other hand has the following ingredients: E

1. There must be carnal knowledge.
2. The girl should be under the age of 14 years.

It will therefore be noted that while in rape, consent or lack of it must be proved to make it rape or not in F defilement it is immaterial whether the girl consented or not. And secondly, in defilement there must be proof of age.

In the case before us here, there was no proof of age at all. And it appears that this anomaly was seen by my brother Kyando, J. when he was perusing the file for admission, for he minuted: G

SDR(HC)

Admit to consider.

1. Whether the complainant was of 14 years of age or below; H
2. The legality of the sentence imposed, i.e. whether the trial magistrate had powers to impose a sentence of 10 years imprisonment.

The learned state attorney who appeared for the Republic in this appeal also seemed to have fallen into the same I pit as that of the

A learned resident magistrate. He also argued as if the offence was that of rape and went all out to consider whether there was consent or not whether there was corroboration of the complainant's testimony or not. In the end he settled down to arguing that the offence of defilement was proved.

B As I said, the offence of defilement had not been proved.

I allow the appeal in its totality. The conviction is quashed and the sentence is set aside. The appellant should be set free unless he is there again for some other matter.

C Appeal allowed.

Kyando, J.: This is an application for bail-pending trial. The applicants, Freitag Walter, huber Waldermar, C Maurice Boutinon and Fritz Koch, who are indicated in the charge sheet to be all Europeans, face a Criminal charge in the District Court of Ilala, at Kisutu. The charge contains two counts of indecent assault. The first count alleges that the applicants, on or about the 1st of April, 1991, at 4.00 hours, at Mikocheni 'B', in Dar es Salam, D did unlawfully and indecently assault one Mariam Benson "by stripping her naked and facilitating their male dog to have sexual intercourse to the said Mariam Benson". The second count alleges assault by the applicants by photographing the scene alleged in the first count.

When they were brought before the Court below all the applicants pleaded by denying the truth of the allegations E contained in the charge. Then they applied to be released on bail pending trial. The application was refused. In his ruling refusing bail dated 11.4.91 the learned Magistrate who heard the application stated:

As I said two days ago, this offence is quite unusual. The DSM public has not forgotten it. That is why there are increased F security measures; that is why the accused had to be brought through my private entrance this afternoon. For their own safety, I remand them in custody. G

Following the above ruling they have now filed this application in this Court. they are all represented by Mr. Bwahama, learned advocate. Mr. Teemba, Principal State Attorney, appeared on behalf of the Director for public prosecutions at the hearing of the application in this Court. H

Soon after the application was filed here and soon after papers relating to it were served on the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP), he (the DPP) filed a certificate -under s.148(4) of the Criminal procedure Act, 1985 (CPA), as amended. The Certificate States: I no police officer or court shall, after a person is arrested and while he is awaiting trial or appeal, admit that person to bail if A the Director of Public Prosecutions certifies in writing that it is likely that the safety or interests of the Republic would thereby be prejudiced.

There is also section 148(4A) which provides: B

148 - (4A) A certificate issued by the Director of Public Prosecution under this section shall take effect from the date it is filed in court or notified to the officer in charge of a police station, and shall remain in effect until the proceedings concerned are C concluded or the Director of Public Prosecutions withdraws it.

At the hearing of the applicant's application before me Mr. Teemba objected to bail, relying on the DPP's D certificate and the provisions of the law reproduced above. Mr. Bwahama countered by challenging the validity of the provisions in s. 148(4) CPA. He contended that these provisions are invalid vis à vis the constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania. He said they have been so held and struck down in the now celebrated case of E Daudi s/o Pete v R., (HC) Misc. Criminal Cause No. 80 of 1989 (Mwanza Registry) (unreported). He prayed that I follow that case in this application and declare s. 148(4) CPA null and void for being in conflict with the constitution and disregard the Certificate filed by the DPP. F

Mr. Teemba replied by stating that whether a piece of legislation is in conflict with the constitution or not is a matter for parliament; he said it is Parliament which has the power to declare a statute null and void and not the Courts. He submitted therefore that I had no power to pronounce on the validity or otherwise of the provisions of S. 148(4) CPA. As to the case of Daudi s/o Pete v R. (Supra) he pointed out that the Republic has appealed G against the decision in that case and the matter is now in the Court of Appeal, the highest and final court in Tanzania, awaiting judgment.

I think with utmost respect, Mr. Teemba is mistaken in the view he holds, i.e. that this Court has no power to H declare a statute null and void and that it is only Parliament which has such power. For in all countries with written constitutions, as is the case with Tanzania, the constitution is supreme. It is the supreme or fundamental law of the land. If therefore any other legislation is inconsistent with the constitution, that other legislation is, to the I

KYANDO J

A extent of the inconsistency, void. The responsibility for declaring such legislation void lies with the Courts of law. This is elementary and I hardly need to refer to any authorities. It suffices to point out that the principle was incorporated, e.g. in the Uganda constitution of 1966 (See Articles 1 and 87) and the Lesotho constitution of 1966 B (See Article 2). See also Article 30(3)-(4) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania, 1977.

It is elementary, too, that a decision of one judge of this Court (the High Court) does not bind another or other judges of this same Court. It is only decisions of the Court of Appeal which bind this Court. So, though it is good C policy that decisions of the same court should be consistent and unconflicting, I am, as a matter of principle, not bound to follow the decision in the case of Daudi s/o Pete v. R. which was relied on by Mr. Bwahama in attacking D the validity of the DPP's certificate and s.148 (4) CPA on which it (the certificate) is based. That decision was rendered by a judge of this Court. And to my knowledge, since that decision was rendered it has stood alone; no other judge in this Court has followed or supported it. In the case of Charles Mwakalinga v R., which Mr. E Bwahama also referred to, Bahati, J. did not seek to follow the decision in the Daudi s/o Pete Case. All that Bahati, J. , said in that case was that the District Court was bound by the decision in Pete's Case and acted correctly in feeling it was bound by decision in Pete's Case and acted correctly in feeling it was bound. This was, F of course, based on the cardinal principle that decisions of this court bind courts subordinate to it. Bahati, J., did not, as stated already, say that he was agreeing with the decision in Pete's Case and therefore that the lower court applied it correctly it terms of the merits of the decision in that Case (Pete's case).

G Mr Bwahama made several other points in his submissions both oral and written - in support of this application. In my view, however, and as Mr Teemba rightly pointed out, the crucial point at this stage in the matter is the validity or otherwise of the provisions of s.148 (4) CPA and the DPP's Certificate filed on the basis of them, i.e. H the provisions. Fortunately, and as Mr. Teemba again rightly pointed out, the case of Daudi s/o Pete v R. on which Mr Bwahama relied in challenging the validity of the provisions and the certificate, is presently before the Court of Appeal for appeal purposes. To my knowledge the appeal has been heard already and it is only the I judgment which is pending delivery. The very issue of the validity or otherwise of s. 148(4) CPA is one of the issues for determination in that appeal. It would then, to my mind be prudent and a matter of good sense to await the determination on the issue by Court of Appeal. I hold so. A

In the meantime, the DPP's Certificate, issued under the provisions of s.148(4) CPA holds sway and operates to bar the release of the applicants on bail. Bail is accordingly refused. B

Bail refused accordingly.

Case Information

A Appeal dismissed.

Bateyunga, for appellant.

B Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: This is the third appeal between the parties, the matter having started in Vwawa Urban Primary Court in Mbozi District. So for the sake of clarity and simplicity we shall refer to the parties by their first names rather than by appropriate legal labels.

C Omari Kalumwana unsuccessfully sued Jela Kalinga at the Primary Court for the repossession of a certain plot. Needless to say he was aggrieved and so appealed to the District Court of Mbozi where he succeeded. It was then the turn of Jela to go to the High Court at Mbeya to challenge that decision. However, he failed to persuade D Mtenga, J. and he thus lost again. But as his morale is high, Jela has finally come to us after obtaining a certificate from Mwaikasu, J. that there is a point of law at stake. Thus Omari was the original plaintiff while Jela was the original defendant. Now before us Omari is the respondent and Jela is the appellant.

E The facts of the matter are as simple as their issues are intertwined. The Regional CCM clecrations of the 5th February, 1985 were held in Mbozi District. The District Celebrations Committee identified the site on which to hold the festivities and decided that it should be fenced by building cottages all around to turn it into a stadium, so F to speak. The District Celebrations Committee, as would be expected, was under the chairmanship of the District Commissioner while the District Cultural Officer, one Nicodemus Mwankemwa (PW. 2), was its Secretary. A building Sub-Committee (hereinafter referred to as the sub-committee), whose composition was not G spelled out in evidence, was established and charged with the task of issuing out plots to interested persons for building cottages. Both Omari and Jela were allocated plots which were separated by an interspace. A public latrine was built on the interspace leaving passages on either side of the latrine. After the celebration were over it H was decided to block-up the passages. Omari was permitted by PW.2 to build a wall to connect his cottage to the side of the public latrine adjacent to him. When he was about to put up a roof he left for Dar es Salaam and, on his return, Omari found both the wall he had constructed and the public latrine demolished and Jela was in the I process of creating a new cottage thereon having being permitted to do so by both the district Land

RAMADHANI AND MNZAVAS JJA AND MAPIGANO AG JA

Officer, one Paul Nyalusi (DW.2), and the District Medical Officer called Senga Senga (DW.3). it was the same A DW.3 who had earlier on given a written authority to one Sadoki to demolish the public latrine and the wall of Omari. Naturally, Omari confronted Jela who ignored his protests and proceeded with his construction work. That sent Omari to the Primary court, as said earlier, suing Jela for trespass. B

The point of law that was certified to us briefly was this:

Since the sub-committee was the one with the authority to allocate plots at the stadium and as neither Omari nor Jela C obtained possession of the plot in dispute from the sub-committee, could either one of them be said to have acquired a good title?

Mr. Batenyunga, learned Counsel for Jela, the appellant, presented a memorandum of appeal containing four D grounds of appeal The first ground was that the learned Judge erred to find Jela to be a trespasser as that issue could not arise in the circumstances of this case. The second ground was that the judge erred to declare Omari to have had a better title while there was a finding of a double allocation. The third ground was that the Judge erred E to have denied compensation to Jela on the ground that he was a trespasser. Lastly, that the Judge erred to have granted the plot to Omari while none of them had a better title because of the double allocation.

Mr. Bateyunga before us submitted that since the sub-committee did not allocate the plot to either Omari or Jela F then none of had good title. Therefore, the counsel argued, Omari had no right to sue Jela who could never be a trespasser. Mr. Bateyunga prayed that the decision of the Primary Court be restored.

On the other hand, Mr Mwangole, learned Counsel for Omari, the respondent, argued that there was no double G allocation as Omari was given the plot by PW. 2 on behalf of the sub-committee. On the contrary, the counsel submitted, Jela had no good title as both Dws. 2 and 3 no authority to issue plots. However, Mr Mwangole could not refer us to nay evidence to support his contention that PW. 2 issued the plot in dispute to Omari on behalf of H the sub-committee.

It was the finding of the lower Courts that the sub-committee was the proper authority to allocate plots at the stadium. It was equally settled that the said sub-committee did not issue the plot in dispute to any of the parties. I So we are of the same opinion that in

A law neither of the two had a better title than the other. But in such a situation can there not be trespass?

The foundation of an action for trespass to land is possession. It was decided in Delaney v T. P. Smith Ltd. B [1946] 2 All E.R 23 that to maintain trespass against a wrongdoer it is not necessary that the plaintiff's possession should be lawful. But that is not the case if the action is against the lawful owner. As there was no lawful owner in this case the question than is which of the two had possession, albeit unlawful, at the time of the dispute.

It has never been disputed at any stage that Omari had actual possession before the demolition and the subsequent C construction by Jela. The case of Thompson v Ward [1953] 1 All E.R 1169 supports the proposition that any one who was in possession or who is deemed to have been in possession at the time of the trespass could bring an action for trespass. so Omari's action was proper.

D However, one of the defences against an action for trespass is a claim by the defendant that he had a right to the possession of the land at the time of the alleged trespass or that he acted under the authority of some person having such a right (Halsbury's Law England 3rd. Ed. Vol. 38 at page 749 paragraph 1226). That has been the E defence of Jela. But as already shown he could not have such a right as DW.2 and DW.3 had no authority to giveit to him.

For the sake of completeness we may observe that it could have been argued, though it was not on behalf of Jela that he did not know that he was committing trespass or that he was misled by DW.2 and DW.3 into occupation. F That is very true. However, a person is liable for trespass if he acts voluntarily knowing the nature and the quality of his act even though he does not know the act to be wrongful (See Moriss v Marsden and Another [1952] 1 All E.R. 925).

G Thus we find that Omari had possession of the plot in dispute and that Jela committed trespass. So possession should be restored back to Omari as was the finding of both the District Court and the High Court.

H Mr. Bateyunga had prayed that in the event we came to the conclusion which we have arrived at, we then should consider awarding compensation to Jela. Mr Mwangole was bitterly opposed to that prayer but eventually he conceded. As there was no evidence as to how much money Jela had expanded on the structure we direct the I District Magistrate to take evidence from the parties and experts like the Government valuers to assess the cost of erecting the building in 1986. Interest on the amout from the date of judgment by the District Court, that is the time when Jela was deposed, to the time of payment of the compensation should A be granted as well.

The appeal is dismissed except for compensation.

As the parties were not at fault but were misled into this litigation by other who then became on-lookers we order each party to bear his own costs. B

Before we finish, we may as well comment that Omari suffered some loss when the wall he had built was demolished. But that is a claim which could be brought against DW.3 who ordered the demolition and not Jela. C

Appeal dismissed.

Mapigano, Ag. J.A., Makame and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: On July 20, 1990 at Dar es Salaam, the appellant Aziz Abdallah was convicted by the High Court (presided over by Lugakingira, J.) exercising its economic crimes E jurisdiction on four counts charging attempted unlawful exportation of certain valuables. The subject-matters of the charges were six kinds of notes which are legal tender in other territories, bills of exchange (US dollars in travellers cheques), gold and diamonds, whose certified total value was Shs. 36,021,788/70. He was sentenced to F imprisonment for a substantive term of twelve years, the Court taking a very serious view of the offence. He has appealed against the decision.

A Lebanese called Kazeem figures prominently in this case. The allegation was that Aziz was acting in league with G the said Kazeem who intended to smuggle out the moneys and the minerals in the evening of March 19, 1989. Kazeem had been in Dar es Salaam staying with his relatives who resided there and carried out certain business. He wanted to fly to Amsterdam on that evening on a KLM plane. He checked-in at the Dar es Salaam H International Airport (DIA) Terminal II at around 10.p.m. and he was the last passenger to do so. He had nothing in his hand except a passport and a jacket when he showed up at the customs checkpoint.

Aziz was a around when Nazeem was checked in and PW.5 inspector Mussa Halfani Mayagila was one of the I persons he exchanged greetings with. Aziz was a pilot with the Air Tanzania
MAPIGANO AG JA MAKAME AND RAMADHANI JJA
Corporation (ATC) and lived at Mindu in Dar es Salaam. He was off duty that evening but he had his identification A card with him, displayed on the breast of his shirt.
In due course Aziz left the checking-in hall and went upstairs where the departure lounges are situated. He had a black briefcase with him. A while later Nazeem was found in possession of a briefcase of the same colour, just B when the KLM plane was about to take off. That briefcase had not been checked by Customs. On suspicion Nazeem was apprehended and the briefcase seized. The briefcase was opened in the office of a customs officer, PW.7 Conrad Luyenga, thereby exposing the moneys and the minerals. C
Nazeem was taken into custody. The same with Aziz, on the ground that he had knowingly to a criminal enterprise and done an overt act for the purpose of enabling or aiding Nazeem to evade customs check and traffic the goods. Nazeem and Aziz were not strangers to each other, and according to Aziz, he had business dealings with D Nazeem's kinsmen in Dar es Salaam. Charges were later brought against the two but months later Nazeem abused his bail and went missing.
All the foregoing were not in dispute: the allegation was that the briefcase was passed on to him by Aziz, and that it was the very briefcase that Aziz was seen carrying from the checking-in hall. E
We now proceed to revisit the testimony of PW.7 who was the prime witness for the prosecution. He was one of the customs officers who checked-in the KLM passengers. The passengers then proceeded to the security and F immigration checkpoints and thence to the International Departure Lounge.
Nazeem was the last passenger to check-in and when PW.7 was through with him he noticed Aziz, whom he knew before, heading for the Domestic Departure Lounge upstairs carrying a briefcase, but Aziz said he was then going to the International Departure Lounge. He became curious because there was no more domestic flights in that G night. He approached PW.5 who was also on duty at the place and talked with him about Aziz. PW.5 told him that Aziz intended to travel to Kilimanjaro by a Fokker Friendship, and in his testimony PW.5 confirmed that Aziz H had told him so, a thing denied by Aziz.
A short moment later he saw Aziz heading for the KLM tube (which was also called gangway or bridge) still carrying the briefcase. The KLM passengers proceeded from the departure lounge to the plane through that tube. I This compounded his curiosity and he instantly set out to investigate what Aziz was up to. He went into
MAPIGANO AG JA MAKAME AND RAMADHANI JJA
A the tube using the outside stairs. Two DIA security officers, that is PW.2 Richard Martin and PW.3 Salehe Juma, followed him. It was around 10.15p.m. then.

When he went into the tube he came face to face with Aziz and Aziz who still had the briefcase saluted him, telling B him that he was waiting for a telex from an acquaintance. Aziz admitted that he met with PW.7 and saluted him but he denied that he still had the briefcase. He went and entered the plane, looked around and then came out. He found Aziz standing at a table, the briefcase lying thereon. When the High Court visited the scene PW.7 indicated C that the table in question was standing seven paces from the door of the plane. He walked on and met Nazeem who was being hurried along the tube to the plane by two KLM ground hostesses. He turned and followed Nazeen behind.

His suspicion was rendered valid. When Nazeem reached the table he stopped and exchanged farewells with Aziz D and at the same time Aziz handed over the briefcase to him, which was vehemently denied by Aziz. At that point he pounced upon the briefcase and stopped Nazeem from boarding the aircraft.

There were vain appeals made to him to let Nazeem board the place and proceed with his journey, Nazeem saying E that he was in a hurry and that he, PW.7, could talk with Aziz about the briefcase, and Aziz alleging that Nazeem's father had passed away in Lebanon.

The drama moved to his office downstairs wherein Nazeem eventually yielded and opened the briefcase. But that F was after Aziz had again pleaded with him to let Nazeem proceed with his journey and offered to go bail for Nazeem and even making a point of brandishing his identification card, and after PW.7 had stuck to his guns and insisted on the opening of the briefcase. This was confirmed by PW6. S.P. Placid Chaka, but denied by Aziz. G PW.6 added that at one point PW.7 called upon Aziz to disclose what was inside the briefcase "since it was he who had given the briefcase to Nazeem".

H That was the substance of PW.7's evidence. It is to be noted, however, that there was a striking inconsistency on his part in regard to the place where the exchange and seizure of the briefcase took place. It was not in dispute that in his first information report, exhibit D.3, he had first stated that Aziz passed on the briefcase to Nazeem at the door of the aircraft. He immediately then vacated that allegation and stated that the events took place deep inside I the aircraft. As shown above,in the witness-box he reverted to the story he had retracted in exhibit D.3, and he hardly explained that turn-back. A Nazeem and Aziz were detained at the DIA Police Station. On the following morning PW.5 who had not witnessed the seizure and the opening of the briefcase was surprised to find Aziz in the lock-up. He inquired of Aziz, rather quizzically, how came that he was there and not at the Kilimanjaro. Aziz replied that he too was B surprised and then broke down and wept.

The evidence of the two security officers PW.2 and PW.3 showed that they had just knocked off and were outside on the tarmac near where the KLM plane had taxied when PW.7 passed by walking with a fast pace and C ascended into the tube. They had been standing by a motor vehicle waiting for their other workmates so that the vehicle could ferry them home. Out of curiosity they decided to follow PW.7, PW.3 taking the lead.

When they stopped into the tube they saw a black briefcase lying on a table near the plane, a table which was D usually used by such airlines for their own checking. Aziz, whom they knew before, was standing nearby. He was dressed in full ATC uniform except for the cap and epaulette, again a thing denied by Aziz. Next Aziz asked PW.3 whether he had seen Yahaya (a DIA officer) and the answer was in the negative. Before long Nazeem came from E the direction of the departure lounge, and as he was about to embark the plane Aziz took the briefcase from the table and handed it over to him. Like PW.7, their curiosity was vindicated: PW.7 intervened and caught the briefcase. According to PW.3, PW.7 asked what was inside the briefcase and Nazeem and Aziz replied that there F was nothing, Aziz being the first to do so.

In his defence, Aziz stated that he went to the DIA that evening to see off an old friend, one Nassoro Khalifa Magogo, who was travelling to Dubai on an ATC flight. It was common ground that there was such a flight in that G evening and that the ATC plane took off at around 10 p.m. The black briefcase he had in the checking-in hall belonged to the said Magogo and he handed it over to Magogo soon after Magogo had paid the airport tax. He then went upstairs to the International Departure Lounge and from there he escorted Magogo right up to the ATC H plane.

On his way back and just when he emerged from the ATC tube he saw the KLM passengers proceeding to their plane. He also went into the KLM tube searching for Yahaya Lweno who was travelling to Brussels on that plane. I He was not carrying any briefcase. He wanted to ask Yahaya to buy a Mercedez Benz spare

A part for him. That Yahaya Lweno actually travelled on that flight was confirmed by PW.8 John Njawa.

He then saw PW.2 and PW.3 in the tube and approached them. He asked PW.2 whether he had seen Yahaya Lweno and he received a negative reply. As we have seen, according to PW.3, this question was put to him and B not to PW.2, but that matters for nothing. Then, as he was standing ten feet from the plane waiting for Yahaya Lweno to pass, he saw PW.7 coming out of the plane and walking towards the departure lounge. A short while later he saw him coming back to the plane followed by Nazeem and some KLM hostesses.

C Next he saw PW.7 emerging out of the plane holding the offensive briefcase, Nazeem following him, and the two proceeded to the Customs Office. As he had not succeeded to meet Yahaya he entrusted a written message to one of the KLM crew to pass on to Yahaya. That done, he followed PW.7 and Nazeem. PW.7 asked him to D be a witness and he agreed and subsequently wrote a statement, exhibit D.2. He maintained that he was a mere witness to the incident.

In his judgment the presiding judge reviewed the material evidence and analyzed the same. He then came to the E following conclusions. First, that it is true that the offensive briefcase was given over to Nazeem by Aziz; second, that Aziz's story that he had gone to the aircraft to search for Yahaya Lweno was false and an afterthought; third, that Aziz was privy to the contents of the briefcase; and lastly, that at law Aziz's act of handing over the briefcase F to Nazeem in those circumstances constituted an attempt on his part to exporting the moneys and the minerals unlawfully.

The appeal was brought on ten grounds. But two grounds i.e. 7th and 10th which related to the sentence were G abandoned at the hearing, no doubt upon realizing the futility involved in pursuing the same. Mr. Marando, learned advocate, appeared for the appellant, while Mr. Kamba, learned State Attorney, represented, the respondent, the Republic.

The first ground is that the learned judge erred in fact in accepting, as if unchallenged, the allegation that the H appellant had told PW.5 that he was waiting for a Fokker Friendship to fly to Kilimanjaro, and that such acceptance of the allegation made the judge prejudiced against the sincerity of the appellant.

We dismiss this ground. In his address Mr. Marando relied on what appears at page 52, paragraph 2, of the I record. It is manifestly clear to us that what was said by the judge in that passage was merely in the course of reviewing the evidence that was adduced by the prosecution, as he next did the defence case. The judge's finding on the point came much later. A

It was common ground that PW.5 met and conversed with the appellant in the DIA checking-in hall on 19/3/89 in the evening. It was also common ground that the two met again on the following morning at the lock-up when PW.5 made the allusion that the appellant was supposed to be at Kilimanjaro rather than in the police cell. As mentioned, B it was PW.5's evidence that the appellant had told him on the previous evening that he intended to fly to Kilimanjaro, a thing denied by the appellant. Later on, when he had recapitulated and assessed the whole evidence, the judge preferred the version of PW.5, and in our view the judge was entitled to do so. If PW.5 was a liar, it is C difficult to see the motive, nor was any suggested by the appellant.

The second ground is that the learned judge erred in fact in accepting that PW.7 had checked-in Nazeem and at D the same time preceded him to the departure gangway. It was contended that under normal circumstances Nazeem must have rushed far ahead of PW.7.

We also dismissed this ground, for two reasons. First,under the circumstances that prevailed at the DIA Nazeem must have stopped at two other points for immigration and security checking. Secondly, the appellant himself stated E in his evidence that he saw PW.7 in the KLM tube before he saw Nazeem.

The third ground is that the learned judge erred in fact in stating that PW.7 had testified that the appellant had moved and stationed himself next to the plane's door as Nazeem was entering the plane. F

We pause here to observe that the precise place where and the moment when the appellant is said to have handed over the briefcase to Nazeem was a subject which generated some arguments in the High Court. In dealing with G this ground our task is only to refer to the evidence on record to see whether that complaint is justified.

We content ourselves with the evidence of the appellant himself. He stated, in effect, that he was standing ten feet from the plane when Nazeem was apprehended. Now whether ten feet cannot be termed next to the plane's door H seems to us to be less of a meaningful argument and more of a splitting of hairs. This ground is accordingly dismissed. But mark this: we are at this moment not expressing any view on the veracity of the evidence of PW.7 or, for that matter, of PW.2 and PW.3, simply because as worded this ground does not call upon us to go into that I matter.

MAPIGANO AG JA MAKAME AND RAMADHANI JJA

A We reserve the fourth ground for later. We turn to the fifth ground and it is well and convenient to consider it together with the sixth ground.

The fifth ground is that the learned judge erred in failing to make a finding on the credibility of PW.7 and in failing to B hold that the glaring difference between his testimony in court and his statement to the police indicated that the new story narrated in court "between" PW.2, PW.3 and PW.7 was made up.

And the sixth ground is that the judge erred in law and in fact in holding that the testimonies of PW.2 and PW.3 C corroborated that of PW.7, an in failing to find that PW.2 and PW.3 were not independent witnesses.

As the trial judge correctly observed, the prosecution case depended very substantially upon the evidence of PW.7, PW.2 and PW.3. Little wonder that the considerable burden of the submissions made by Mr. Ismail, who D advocated for the appellant in the High Court, was levelled at the credibility of those three witnesses.

The impugnment of PW.7's testimony pertains to his puzzling turn-back which we have already demonstrated. Mr. Marando has branded PW.7 as double-tongued and we think that there is some justification in that attack. Quite E clearly that turn-back was the most unsatisfactory feature of the prosecution case, and it was significant and substantial.

This inconsistency did not escape the trial judge's attention and he devoted a few words to it. He however found F the evidence of PW.2 and PW.3 to be corroborative of PW.7's testimony on the point. But he did so without pronouncing on whether PW.7 was credible or not. Mr. Marando argued that the judge erred in failing to do so.

G It seems that Mr. Marando's submission has the support of the law. By what the Court of Appeal for East Africa told us in Uganda v Shah and Two Others [1966] EA 30. it was essential for the judge to approach the matter in two stages: first, to decide whether in the light of all the evidence PW.7 was worthy of belief; secondly - H and only if PW.7 was found credible - to look for the existence of credible evidence, independent of PW.7, which support the evidence of PW.7 in a material particular.

The reason, a sound one, was state in D.P.P. v Hester [1973] AC 296, 315 and it is this:

I The purpose of corroboration is not to give validity or credence to evidence which is deficient or suspect or incredible but only to confirm or support that which as evidence is sufficient and satisfactory and credible. A

MAPIGANO AG JA MAKAME AND RAMADHANI JJA

Lord Hailsham gracefully stated the same in D.P.P. v Kilbourne (1973) AC 729, 745 D, to wit:

If a witness's testimony fails of its own inanities the question of his needing or being capable of giving corroboration does B not arise.

We cannot but agree that the inconsistency of PW.7 eroded his credibility to some extent. In fact there is an C oblique suggestion by the trial judge to the same effect. The judge remarked thus:

I have no doubt that the passage from Exhibit P.3 fundamentally contradicts what PW.7 stated in Court. The witness acknowledged the difference and stated that the police statement was wrong on this aspect but his evidence in Court is D correct. I think, with respect, that if witnesses were allowed to tell the court when they are wrong and when they are correct and get away with it, they could easily take the court for a ride. E

An apt and pleasant reflection indeed. But this was all the judge said in that regard.

Sequel to that it was submitted that the judge erred in holding that the evidence of PW.2 and PW.3 were not F independent witnesses, that they had conspired with PW.7 to incriminate the appellant, and that they were present at the scene by design and not fortuitously. The questions were posed why did the two witnesses hang about at the place when they had already knocked off; and why, being security officers, didn't they seize the briefcase. G

The trial judge dealt with the matter in his judgment. He was satisfied that PW.2 and PW.3 were independent witnesses and "not persons dancing to the tune of PW.7". He rejected the conspiracy theory and was of the opinion that in general the witnesses gave the court a true account of the incident. H

We have no reason to think that the judge was wrong. We see no tangible evidence of conspiracy between PW.7 and PW.3. The explanation that PW.2 and PW.3 gave as to why they hanged about the place, namely that they I were waiting for their colleagues so that a motor vehicle could ferry them together, was convincing one.

MAPIGANO AG JA MAKAME AND RAMADHANI JJA

A And it is understandable why they did nothing about the briefcase in the tube, considering the circumstances of the moment. They had been given to suppose that a momentous episode was in the offing, and we take the view that the instinct of the average man would have adopted a wait-and-see attitude.

B Now in relation to Nazeem's receipt of the briefcase from the appellant the accounts of PW.2 and PW.3 were, in our view, also first-hand, and the credence of the prosecution case was to be judged not on the evidence of PW.7 alone but on all the materials on record. So in the final analysis we dismiss the two grounds, notwithstanding C the trial judge's failure to decide on the credibility of PW.7's evidence in that respect.

We pass to the eight ground and we will take it along with the fourth ground. The fourth ground is that the learned D judge erred in law in holding that the whole case stood or fell on the basis of credibility, and that he failed to appreciate that sufficiency of evidence was equally important. The eighth ground is that the judge erred in law in not drawing an adverse inference against the prosecution for their "deliberately" failing to call the KLM crew as witnesses.

E Mr. Ismail did touch on the non-calling of the KLM crew in his final submissions in the High Court and the judge agreed with him only up to a point. The judge expressed the view that if the KLM crew had been called their evidence would have been useful like that of PW.2 and PW.3, but that the absence of that evidence did not F diminish in any degree the value of the evidence of the two witnesses.

The appellant's contention is that the judge was wrong and Mr. Marando has submitted that the said crew would G have been impartial witnesses and that the failure by the prosecution to call them should have given rise to an inference that their evidence would have been unfavourable to the prosecution. In support Mr. Marando cited Section 122 of the Evidence Act 1967. Against such submission Mr. Kamba argued briefly that in principle the H prosecution is not bound to call all the witnesses bearing upon the charges.

The general and well-known rule is that the prosecutor is under a prima facie duty to call those witnesses who, from their connection with the transaction in question, are able to testify to material facts. If such witnesses are I within reach but are not called without sufficient reason being shown, the court may draw an inference adverse to the prosecution. But the practical application of this rule perhaps calls for some exposition. A

In the first place it should be stressed that the inference referred to in that rule is only a permissible one and is normally drawn in obvious cases, where, upon viewing the matter objectively, the court is satisfied that the B inference will not result into a miscarriage of justice.

Secondly, and this is probably what Mr. Kamba had in mind, it is not the duty of the prosecution to adopt an attitude of non-committal. It is a wrong idea that the prosecution is under obligation to call and examine all C witnesses who are acquainted with the facts of the case irrespective of consideration of time (and, for that matter, consideration of willingness of the witnesses to speak to facts). The prosecution are expected to be always concerned with the shortening of trials. So where there is evidence that a large number of witnesses could have deposed about the incident, the absence of some of them from the list of witnesses does not generally created a D doubt whether the prosecution version is to be believed.

Thirdly, even where the adverse inference is properly drawn, that does not necessarily ruin the prosecution case. The Court must judge the evidence as a whole and arrive at its conclusion accordingly taking into account the E persuasiveness of the evidence given in the light of such criticisms as may be levelled at the absence of possible witnesses.

It would appear that the KLM crew were not in the list of the prosecution witnesses. It is to be borne in mind that the KLM plane took off soon after Nazeem was nabbed, and it is by no means certain whether the police were F minded to trace those people and take statements from them. Having pondered over the matter in the light of the considerations we have set out above, we hesitate to say that G this is a case which befitted the drawing of the adverse inference. Accordingly, we dismiss the two grounds.

We come to the last ground, the ninth, namely that the learned judge erred in fact in holding that it was the appellant who carried the briefcase to the gangway. H

There is no force in this ground. In our judgment the judge was justified to make that finding. We have come to that conclusion on the basis of what we have stated above about the evidence of PW.2, PW.3 and PW.7, and in view of other items of evidence borne by the record that went some way to corroborate the evidence of those three I witnesses.

MAPIGANO AG JA MAKAME AND RAMADHANI JJA

A The first item was the appellant's lie that he intended to fly to Kilimanjaro in that evening. The second was his persistent pleadings with PW.7's office and we are given the distinct impression that those pleadings were calculated to mislead PW.7 and prevent the investigation and detection of the crime.

B The third item was his allegation, which was a lie, that he went into the KLM tube to look for Yahaya Lweno. This allegation is missing in his statement, exhibit D.2. We are aware that his ascertain was that he wrote the statement as a witness and not as a suspect. But that cannot be true, for there was evidence from PW.6, which C was not challenged, that there was a moment when PW.7 accused the appellant of having passed the briefcase on to Nazeem and demanded of him to disclose what the briefcase contained. We are satisfied that in such circumstances the appellant must have known from the start that he was a suspect in the crime, and that when he D wrote the statement he fully apprehended that was not a moment for fibbing. He clearly understood that he owed PW.7 an explanation as to why he happened to be in the tube and why criminal proceedings should not be taken against him.

This ground too is dismissed.

E We have been invited to wonder how the appellant could have passed on such an offensive briefcase to Nazeem in the full view of PW.2, PW.3 and PW.7 whose position he knew. This fact is hard to explain only at first sight. The plausible and short answer is that Nazeem was about to fly and there was hardly any better alternative for the F appellant than staking all on a small chance, and we should all know that risk-taking or a sense of confidence has woefully betrayed many a criminal.

Finally, there was the fascinating insinuation made by Mr. Ismail in the High Court that PW.7 knew before hand G that an attempt would be made to smuggle out the moneys and the minerals. That is a perception one may have and thus a possibility that cannot be dismissed out of hand. But we have failed to grasp the purpose for which this suggestion was canvassed. Because even if the court were minded to go along with that suggestion we do not see H how that could have tainted the evidence of PW.7, let alone precluded the convictions. On the contrary, we think that it would probably have rebounded to the prosecution's advantage.

For the reasons we have stated we find that there is no ground for interfering with the convictions. This appeal is I accordingly dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

The appellants, William Rajabu Mallya, Re v Father John Kiwere and Louis Augustino Mbuya were charged in the Resident Magistrates Court for the offences of obtaining money by false pretences and conspiracy to defraud.
When the accused appeared before the court for the first time the court was duly presided over by a Resident D Magistrate. Subsequently the court was presided over by a Principal District Magistrate who tried and eventually disposed of the case.
Two of the accused including Re v Father John Kiwere were acquitted by the trial court. The DPP appealed to E the High Court against their acquittal. The High Court found them all guilty and sentenced them to 5 years' imprisonment.
One of the accused, Re v Father John Kiwere in his appeal to the Court of Appeal raised the issue of lack of jurisdiction on the part of the trial magistrate, relying on section 6 (i)(c) of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1984. F
Held: (i) If a case is designated for a particular court, then it should be heard only by a member of that court notwithstanding that a member of some other court has substantive jurisdiction over the offence and could hear it; G

KISANGA AND OMAR JJA AND MAPIGANO AG JA
A Kisanga and Omar, JJ.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: The three appellants were jointly charged in the Resident Magistrate's Court in one information containing four counts, two counts being for obtaining money by false pretences and the other two for conspiracy to defraud. The trial Court convicted one of them on the counts B of obtaining money by false pretences only, and acquitted all of them on the conspiracy charges. The Director of Public Prosecutions appealed against the acquittals, and the convicted person cross-appealed against his conviction for obtaining money by false pretences. The cross-appeal was allowed in full while the appeal was allowed only in C part by the High Court thus resulting in each of the present appellants being sentenced to a substantive term of 5 years' imprisonment. On the day of the judgment by the High Court i.e. 30.4.90 only the appellant Re v Father John Kiwere was present and although the High Court directed a warrant of arrest to issue against the remaining D two persons, the said persons have not been arrested to date, it being claimed that they have absconded to Kenya. Curiously enough, however, all of them after their conviction were able to instruct Mr J.J. Mwale, advocate, who gave on their behalf a joint notice of appeal, and who continues to act for the appellant William Rajabu Mallya, E while subsequent to the said notice of appeal the appellant Louis Augustino Mbuya also was able to instruct Mr D'Souza, advocate, who is representing him now.

F We have to state that this kind of behaviour and attitude on the part of the appellants Mallya and Mbuya is most unsatisfactory, and must be deprecated. There can be no doubt that they knew the precise terms of the judgment of the High Court. Yet they chose only to appeal against that judgment but deliberately ignored that term of it which required them to serve the sentence. It amounted to a flagrant disregard of the court order which tended to G bring the system of the administration of justice into ridicule. This is totally unacceptable. Members of the society must develop a culture of respect for lawful orders. While it is right and proper that people should be aware of their rights under the law, and that every effort should be made to help them realize those rights, it must be H emphasized that people also have a duty to discharge their obligation under the law. By deliberately avoiding to serve the sentence which was lawfully passed on them, the two appellants were in breach of a society's basic norm; and that must not be allowed to continue.

I Now, when the appeal was called on for hearing, our attention was called to a letter written by the police stating that they were still trying to reach the two appellants in Kenya, and for this purpose the police asked for a fresh warrant of arrest A to issue and a copy of the judgment in the case. In the light of this request we decided to adjourn the appeals of the two appellants, pending the outcome of this further attempt by the police, and proceeded to hear that of the Re v Father John Kiwere who was present. B

This appellant who was unrepresented argued the appeal in person in the course of which he raised the issue of lack of jurisdiction on the part of the trial court and relied for this on the provisions of Section 6 (1)(c) of the Magistrates' Court Act 1984. That provision reads: C

> 6.- (1) Subject to the provisions of Section 7, a Magistrate's Court shall be duly constituted when held by a single magistrate, being -
> (c) in the case of a Court of Resident Magistrate, a Resident Magistrate.

(Section 7 is not relevant to the facts of the present case). A perusal of the record shows that the case was filed in E the Resident Magistrate's Court of Arusha and when the accused were brought before the court for the first time the court was duly presided over by a Resident Magistrate. Subsequently, however, the court was presided over by a Principal District Magistrate who tried and eventually disposed of the case. There can have been no F inadvertence on the part of the Principal District Magistrate because both the Court case file and the charge sheet were clearly titled "IN THE RESIDENT MAGISTRATE'S COURT AT ARUSHA". The appellant in effect contended that the Court was not duly constituted because the Principal District Magistrate sat in the wrong Court, G in violation of the provisions of Section 6 (1) quoted above.

Mr. Kimomogoro of the Principal State Attorney's Chambers Arusha resisted the appeal. He referred us to a decision of the High Court in the case of Lucas Mwita and Two Others MZA Cr. App. NO. 30 of 1977 where a District Magistrate had presided over in the Resident Magistrate's Court and the proceedings were declared a H nullity. However the learned Counsel submitted that the proceedings in the present case were saved under the provisions of Section 387 and 388 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Act. We propose not to set out the provisions of I those sections and to examine them

A in detail, not out of disrespect to the learned counsel but because we are satisfied that they are completely irrelevant to the issue at hand.

Again learned counsel took the view and argued at length that the error was not fatal because the trial magistrate B had substantive jurisdiction to try the offences, and that the wrong titling or citing of the court did not really matter. With due respect, we do not agree. To uphold that view would render meaningless the provisions of S. 6 (1)(c) above cited. In our view the correct meaning to be attached to that provision is that if a case is designated for a C particular court, then it should be heard only by a member of that court notwithstanding that a member of some other court has substantive jurisdiction over the offence and could hear it. Perhaps an analogy from civil cases might serve better to illustrate the point. Under Section 76 of the Law of Marriages Act the High Court, a court of D resident magistrate, a district court and a primary court each has concurrent jurisdiction over matrimonial proceedings. But it can hardly be maintained, for instance, that resident magistrate may properly try a divorce suit which was filed in the High Court.

E For the reasons as expressed above, we agree with the appellant that because the Principal District Magistrate presided over the Court of Resident Magistrate when he was trying this case, the court was not duly constituted within the meaning of Section 8 (1) (c) of the Magistrates' Court Act. The proceedings were, therefore, a nullity F and they are accordingly set aside. As this affects equally the trial of the remaining appellants, our earlier order of adjourning their appeals to a later date is necessarily overtaken by the event and is accordingly vacated.

G The question, what next, has exercised our minds quite considerably. The appellant Re v Father John Kiwere has been very co-operative from the very inception of these proceedings.

Indeed while the offences were committed partly in Tanzania and partly in Kenya, it is he who initiated the investigations, and he has since co-operated with the Police at every stage. He deserves credit for that.

H On the other hand so far he has served only about one year out of the 5 years' prison sentence meted out to him. He was charged jointly with the remaining two appellants who have been so unco-operative and who are still at large. Again the offences which the appellants were jointly charged with and convicted of involved defrauding a I Bishop and Convent Sisters in Kenya a total of Kenyan Shillings 426,285/=, a substantial sum which remains unrecovered. We consider that a practical way out of this rather complex situation is to leave the matter entirely with the Director of Public Prosecutions to decide whether or not to institute the A charges afresh, having regard to the circumstances alluded to. In the meantime the appellant is set free. It is ordered accordingly.

Order accordingly. B

The appellants who had lost a suit in the High Court when appealing against it failed to incorporate a formal or G extracted order or decision appealed against. Contra the argument of the respondents that the appeal was incompetent for failure to comply with an essential step, counsel for the appellants sought to impress on the court that he was under no obligation to draw up the formal order because he was not appealing against the whole order H of the High Court but merely against a finding which formed only a part of the entire order.

C Kisanga and Omar, JJ.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: The plaintiffs filed a suit in the High Court claiming inter alia, a declaration of ownership over an area of land now held by the defendants under certificate of title No. 5104. In the written statement of defence the defendants averred, among other things, that the plaintiffs' alleged D rights over the suit land were extinguished vide Government Notice No. 260 of 1989 in which case the suit disclosed no cause of action, and that this matter would be raised as a preliminary point at the commencement of the hearing of the suit. When the suit came on far hearing the point was accordingly raised and arguments centred E on whether Government Notices Nos. 260 of 1989 and 88 of 1987 which were relied on as extinguishing the plaintiffs' rights were valid. Ruling on the point, the High Court (Munuo, J. (Mrs)) found they were, but declined to F dismiss the suit because there were other grounds on which the suit could proceed to trial.
The plaintiffs were aggrieved by the finding that the said Government Notices Nos. 260 of 1989 and 88 of 1987 G were valid. They accordingly sought and obtained leave to appeal to this Court against such finding. Upon the appeal coming on for hearing, however, Mr Umbulla, Counsel for the respondents, took a preliminary objection that the record of appeal does not incorporate a formal or extracted order to the decision being appealed against. H This, the learned Counsel submitted, amounted to failure by the appellants to comply with an essential step, in terms of rule 89 (1) (h) of the Court of Appeal Rules, as a result that the appeal should be struck out as being incompetent. In support of that submission he cited two decisions of this Court in the cases of Arusha International Conference Centre v D.A. Kavishe Civil Appeal No. 34 of 1988 (Unreported), and Shamsa I Mohamed or Lily Philips v Halima Mohamed Civil Application No. 2 of 1990 (Unreported).
KISANGA AND OMAR JJA AND MAPIGANO AG JA
He also referred us to decision of the East African Court of Appeal in the case of Farrab v Official Receiver A [1959] E.A. 5 at p.10.
Dr. Tenga appearing for the appellants conceded the omission which he attributed to inadvertence on the part of his colleague who had prepared the record of appeal. However the learned Counsel went on to submit that the omission to incorporate the formal order was harmless because it did not prejudice the respondents who were fully B aware of the decision being appealed against, and which decision was indeed in their favour. We could find no merit in the submission. Such an argument could be advanced in all the cases, including those cited above, concerning this point but it would make no difference. The rule is not really based on the requirement that the C respondent should be aware of the decision being appealed against. For, even where the actual judgment or decision being appealed against is incorporated in the record this would not meet the requirements of rule 89 (1) D (h). The point is that this is essentially a technical rule which indeed causes some injustice, for instance, to a party who has to incur double expenses to prepare the record of appeal a second time But so long as the rule is not amended or superseded it has to be complied with.

Relying on an obiter dictum in Shamsu's case cited above, the learned Counsel contended that this rule may be E departed from in the exceptional circumstances of this case, the exceptional circumstance being that the order in this case was duly extracted but inadvertently omitted to be incorporated in the record of appeal. We think that F this is a very weak argument. For, even if we were minded to consider the obiter dictum expressed in Shamsu's case above cited, we are quite satisfied that Counsel's mere inadvertence to incorporate the formal order in the record of appeal could not, by any stretch of imagination, amount to be exceptional circumstance.

And finally the learned Counsel appeared to contend that in any event there was no obligation on his part to draw G up the formal order because he was not appealing against the whole order of the High Court; he was merely appealing against a finding which formed only a part of the entire order. Once again, we are unable to sustain this submission. A decision may consist of one or more findings, and an aggrieved party may choose to appeal against H the whole decision or against certain findings forming only a part of the whole decision. We think that where, as in this case, a party wishes to appeal against a finding or findings which form only a part of the whole decision, he is not obliged to draw up the formal order covering the whole decision. In our view the rule requires him to I

A extract an order corresponding only to that finding or findings which it is intended to appeal against.

In the present case the Court order was for refusing to dismiss the suit on the ground that although the Government B Notices Nos. 260 of 1989 and 88 of 1987 were found to be valid, nevertheless the suit could not be dismissed or not disclosing cause of action because there were other grounds on which the claim could proceed to trial. It was therefore open to the appellants to draw up the order in relation only to the finding that the said Government Notices were valid.

C In the result the preliminary objection is upheld. The appeal is accordingly struck out as being incompetent. No order for costs is made as the appellant is under legal aid.

Appeal dismissed.

The respondent appealed to Singida District Court protesting her innocence that she had never stolen the alleged Shs. 30,000/=. The District Court quashed the conviction and sentence and also set aside the order of payment H Shs. 15,000/= to the husband. The learned District Magistrate inter alia stated:

The woman took what she thought was her right. Therefore she had a defence of bona fide claim of right on her side. I

MWALUSANYA J

A That is why the conviction was quashed.

With respect, the learned District Magistrate was wrong. It is true that under s.258(1) of the Penal Code Cap. 16 B anyone who take away something under an honest claim of right is not guilty of the offence of theft. In the case at hand, the respondent had at no time claimed that she had taken the Shs. 30,000/= under an honest claim of right. She simply stated that she never had taken her husband's money. It was wrong for the learned District Magistrate C to put words in the mouth of the respondent, which was not part of her defence.

Under s.264 of the Penal Code Cap. 16 a husband may be guilty of stealing from his wife or a wife from her husband. So the sole question in this case was whether the respondent had stolen the money from her husband or D not, and nothing more. The trial court was unanimous that respondent had taken her husband's money and the District Court endorsed that view. That being the case, the conviction was inevitable. Any extenuating circumstances ought not to disturb the inevitable conviction, but may only affect the sentence to the imposed.

E I may only observe in passing that even if the respondent had raised the defence of honest claim of right, it is unlikely that she would have succeeded in the circumstances of this case. This is because the bona fides have been dispelled by the fact that she ran away from the matrimonial home since that day, and has been living under F separation since then. If she had an honest claim of right to the money, she would have at least remained at the matrimonial home to spend the money for domestic purposes. But that was not the case.

G I may also point out that the husband established at the trial that the money in question was his separate property as accepted under s.58 of the Law of Marriage Act No. 5/1971. It was not joint property which was acquired by joint efforts. In fact that was common ground at the trial.

H The learned District Magistrate was not happy with the order of conditional discharge that was granted by the trial court in that the condition for the discharge was that the accused should pay her husband half of the stolen money. I agree that, that was wrong. Under s.4(1) of the Primary Courts Criminal Procedure Code the conditions I for a conditional discharge ought to be that: 'during a period not exceeding one year the accused shall appear and receive sentence when called upon and in the meantime he or she shall keep the peace and be of good behaviour'. That was not done, and so the trial court went wrong. A

In the event this appeal is allowed. The judgment of the District Court is set aside. The order of conviction of the respondent by the trial court is restored.

The order for conditional discharge by the trial court is restored save that it is to be accompanied by the usual B conditions set out in s.4(1) of the Primary Courts Criminal Procedure Code. The order of refund of Shs. 15,000/= is set aside but that the respondent will pay her husband Shs. 30,000/= which she stole. C

Order accordingly.

B Mkondya, for the applicant

Mbuya, for respondent

Kyando, J.: The applicant is the defendant in (RM) Civil Case No. 32 of 1990 filed in the Resident Magistrate's C Court "at Dar es Salaam". In that suit the plaintiff/respondent avers; inter alia, that he is the beneficial owner of all that land at Kinondoni Shamba wherein there is a building known as ARAWA BAR RESTAURANT AND D GUEST HOUSE". He also avers that "in 18/7/19 (sic) the plaintiff entered into an oral business agreement with the defendant" whereby they agreed that they "will carry on business of bar, restaurant and guest house on the said land", and that the defendant now is attempting to sell the suit premises and some personal properties belonging to E the plaintiff secretly to some persons unknown to the plaintiff.

The value of the alleged suit premises and/or the personal properties has not been indicated in the plaint. This is violative of 0.VII r. 1 (i) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966, which requires that amongst the particulars to be F contained in a plaint are "a statement of the value of the subject matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and court fees, so far as the case admits".

Be that as it may, the plaintiff has then prayed for the following reliefs, amongst others:

G (1) A declaration that he is the lawful owner of the suit premises, and

(2) A permanent injunction to restrain the defendant either by himself, his servants or agents from either entering the suit H premises or selling the suit premises or any of the plaintiff's property in the suit premises.

On the 25th of April, 1990, he (the plaintiff) presented an application in the court below for temporary injunction to restrain the defendant, his servants or agents from either selling the suit premises or any of the properties in the suit I premises which belong to the plaintiff pending final determination of the suit. He also prayed for a temporary closure of the business pending final disposal of the suit. In a ruling delivered on 16/5/1990 A the court (Kimaro SRM) granted all the above prayers. The applicant/defendant then filed this application in this court praying that the order of closure of the business contained in the Magistrate's ruling be revised.

At the hearing of the application before me, after Mr Mkondya for the applicant/defendant had submitted in support B of the application, Mr Mbuya replied by stating that the application, having been brought under Section 79 of the Civil Procedure Code, is incompetent because, he argued, the order which it is sought to be revised was an interlocutory order, whereas Section 79 of the Civil Procedure Code applies to cases which have been decided. In C support of these contentions Mr Mbuya referred this court to Kassam v Regional Land Officer [1971] HCD n.15 and Jayantilal Gandesha v Kilingi Coffee Estate Ltd. & Another [1968] HCD n. 399. On the basis of the decisions in these cases Mr Mbuya submitted that the applicant's/defendant's application be dismissed. D

In reply, Mr Mkondya submitted that the application by the applicant is also brought under S.95 of the Civil Procedure Code. He also argued that though he had not so stated in the application, under s.44 of the Magistrates' Court Act, 1984, additional powers of supervision and revision have been conferred on the High Court. He E submitted therefore that under these, latter provisions the High Court can, by revision, intervene in interlocutory orders of Magistrates' Courts.

In the case of Kassam v The Regional Land Officer (supra) it was held that s. 79 of the Civil Procedure Code F would not apply to revise a decision of a subordinate court over an interlocutory matter.

In Jayantilal Gendesha v Kilingi Coffee Estate Ltd. & Another, the facts and the holding of the court on the point were as follows: G

The suit proper involves a dispute over a contract between the parties for the sale of a farm. Plaintiff's advocate, who had acted for both the parties during the negotiation of the contract, was called by defendant as a witness. Plaintiff objected that H to allow this would amount to an abuse of the process of the court. The court permitted the summons to issue, and in addition ruled that in view of his role as a witness, plaintiff's advocate should be his retainer. This petition for revision is concerned only with these rulings. I

KYANDO J

A Held: (i) This petition for revision was brought under section 79 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. The High Court observed that it could have been brought under the Magistrates' Courts Act, Cap. 537, ss. 38, 39 as provided by s. 79 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, which gives the High Court wider revisional powers than 79 (1). As plaintiff's petition did not refer B to the latter provisions, however, the court limited itself to s.79(1), which provides for revisional jurisdiction over decided cases. Whether an interlocutory decree may come within the meaning of "case" is a thorny question on which the authorities C diverge ... The present situation cannot qualify as a decided case under any reasonable definition. It was an interlocutory matter, unconcerned with the final decision or that of any of the issues before the court and was concerned entirely with a step in the procedure ....

D As noted above, Mr Mkondya relies also on s.95 of the Civil Procedure Code. I am of the view that that section cannot be had recourse to in this matter when there are specific provisions providing for revision (see (Ryan E Investments v USA [1970] EA 675). It is only a matter of those provisions being complied with by the applicant. As for the revision provisions in the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984, as the case above holds, because those provisions have not been referred to in the applicant's application this court will only limit itself to s.79 of the Civil F Procedure Code under which the application has been filed.

The order made by the learned magistrate is clearly an interlocutory one. It is an interim order pending the determination of the case. It is therefore not a case decided within the meaning of the provisions of s. 79(1) of the G Civil Procedure Code and this court has no jurisdiction to invoke its revisional powers as provided for in that section. So, though the order (of closure of the business) appears patently unjustified, unlike the order for temporary injunction restraining sale or disposition of the properties, this court will not interfere with it by revision. H The applicant's/defendant's application, therefore, is dismissed, with costs.

I Application dismissed.

Mchome, J.: The appellant, Augustino Mponda was jointly charged with six others with Burglary and stealing I contrary to section 294 (1) and 265 of the Penal Code respectively. He was found

A guilty and sentenced to four years imprisonment on the first court and two years on the stealing court. All his colleagues were found not guilty and acquitted. Being aggrieved by both convictions and sentence the appellant has preferred this appeal.

B On 14/7/89 one house belonging to SIDO Njombe was broken into and a lot of property stolen therefrom. These included one washing machine, one gas cylinder, one gas cooker, a grinding machine and a washing brush. The total value of the stolen property is TShs. 109,000/-. On 16/7/89, P.W.I., Detective Constable Edon received information that the stolen property was hidden in the C house of a certain Aderehema Mbilinyi, the original first accused person. With the help of another police detective P.W.I. went to the house and discovered the stolen property. O.W.II Selestine Rwenyagira, the SIDO Estate Manager identified the property as that of his company.

D Both Aderehema and the original 2nd accused person, one Rose Mvile, occupants of the house therein the stolen property was found named the appellant as the one who brought the stolen property into their house at 2.30 a.m. together with some friends of the appellant's.

E Despite the appellant's denial the trial court found him guilty. The learned State Attorney Mr Mbise did not support the conviction. He was right in doing so. For the trial court relied on the evidence of a co-accused without independent corroboration to convict upon. The evidence of D.V.8 cannot be said to be independent as he is the F son and brother of the original 1st and 2nd accused persons respectively and had an interest to save them as they are obviously guilty receivers. The trial Magistrate therefore acted contrary to the provisions of section 33 of the Evidence Act 1967 in convicting the appellant.

G There is no reason why the trial Magistrate acquitted the original 1st and 2nd accused even of the lesser offence of receiving stolen property. The odd hours in which they receive the property, 2.30 a.m., showed they knew or ought to have known the property to be stolen. I can not revise that acquittal here as it will be prejudicial to the H original 1st and 2nd accused persons who have not had opportunity of being heard.

The sentence of four years imprisonment is below the prescribed minimum under the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972. The value of the property stolen is well over Shs. 5,000/=. The trial Magistrate misinterpreted the provisions I of section 172 (2) (c) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 which states:

MCHOME J

Where ... a person has been in remand custody for a period awaiting his trial; his sentence whether it is under the Minimum A Sentences Act, 198=72 or otherwise, shall start to run when such sentence imposed is confirmed, as the case may be and such sentence shall take into account the period person spent in remand. (The underlining is mine)

Section 172 (2) (c) above quoted does in no way amend the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972. The provisions of B Section 5 of the Minimum Sentences Act, which are applicable to this case are Mandatory. They state: ... the court shall sentence person to imprisonment for a term of not less than five years". C

If the legislature had intended to ammend the Minimum Sentences Act it would have done so under no uncertain terms and included the period an accused has stayed in remand as one of the circumstances in which a court may not apply this Act in Section 6 of Act No. 1/72. D
As there are no uncertain amendments to the Minimum Sentences Act, its mandatory terms have to be interpreted strictly. "Minimum" means "not less than". My interpretation of section 172 (2) (c) of the Criminal Procedure Act E 1985 is that the period an accused has stayed in remand shall be considered together with other mitigating factors while sentencing.
In the case of a scheduled offence under the Minimum Sentence Act, 1972 the period shall be taken into account while deciding what sentence is appropriate between the Minimum and the Maximum. In other words it is to help F the sentencing magistrate or judge on how much above the minimum sentence he should go in sentencing the accused. Going below the prescribed minimum is clearly unlawful.
Otherwise it would be absurd were an accused stays in remand for one year the magistrate deducts one year from G the mandates minimum sentence. And when he stays in remand for five years where the prescribed minimum sentence is five years an accused goes free.
Be that as it may, I allow this appeal, quash the conviction and set aside the sentence, the appellant is to be set free H immediately unless held for some other lawful cause.

C The appellant and the complaint had a dispute over a plot of land, each claiming ownership. When the appellant entered the suit plot and cut down some trees he was charged with and convicted of criminal trespass. On appeal the High Court considered whether the defence of bona fide claim of right was not open to the appellant, whether in D the circumstances it was proper to convict of criminal trespass and what the court should do in such cases.
Held: (i) Since this case boils down to a dispute of ownership of the shamba which is the subject matter of these E criminal proceedings it seems that this is a clear defence of bona fide claim of right;

(ii) it is wrong to convict a person for criminal trespass when ownership of the property alleged to have been trespassed upon is clearly in dispute between the complainant and the accused;

F (iii) when in a case of criminal trespass a dispute arises as to the ownership of the land the court should not proceed with the criminal charge and should advise the complainant to bring a civil action to determine the question of ownership - Saidi Juma v R [1968] H.C.D 158.

(a) and 326 (1) of the Penal Code and was sentenced to pay a fine of Shs. 2,500/= in respect of each count. The A appellant was dissatisfied and so has appealed to this court.

To a large extent the facts are not in dispute. They are as follows: The complainant, one Ernest Ndyamukama (P.W.1) told the court that he owns a shamba in which he has planted various trees in Ibwera village, Bukoba. On B 10th September, 1988, at about 1.00 p.m he saw the appellant and three of his servants cutting trees in P.W.1's shamba, and in all they cut down 481 trees. When the appellant was asked by P.W.1 as to why the appellant was C doing such a thing, the appellant retorted by telling P.W.1 that he should go and ask the people who had given the trees to him.

Later the complainant reported the matter, surprisingly, to the Ward Office and the District Commissioner. Eventually the matter found its way to the Police and then to the Court.

In this defence, the appellant said that the shamba in dispute is his own shamba and that it had earlier been the D subject-matter of a civil suit in which he was the successful party. He called witnesses who, to some extent, backed up the appellant's claim.

With respect to Mr Nasimiro, learned counsel for the appellant, I tend to agree that this case boils down to a dispute E of ownership of the shamba which is the subject-matter of these criminal proceedings. It seems to me, therefore, that this is a defence of bona fide claim of right.

The learned trial magistrate blamed the appellant for not producing in court the judgment in the alleged civil case. F However, in this memorandum of appeal drawn up by his learned advocate, the appellant alleges that the civil case was Ibwera Primary Court Civil Case No. 2 of 1987.

In my view, it is wrong to convict a person for criminal trespass when ownership of the property alleged to have G been trespassed upon is clearly in dispute between the complainant and the accused. As was pointed out by this Court in the case of Saidi Juma v R [1968] H.C.D. n. 158, cited by Mr Nasimire, when, in a case of criminal trespass, a dispute arises as to the ownership of the land, the court should not proceed with the criminal charge and H should advise the complainant to bring a civil action to determine the question of ownership. That is exactly what the trial court should have done in the present matter.

For these reasons, the appellant's conviction cannot be allowed to stand. This appeal accordingly succeeds. The I convictions are hereby quashed and the sentence set aside. The complainant is

A advised to seek redress in a civil court. The fine which, I note, was paid, shall be refunded to the appellant forthwith.

Appeal allowed.

D Criminal Law - Murder - Provocation - Defence of provocation by a threat to kill by witchcraft.

-Headnote

In a trial for murder, the trial judge held that as the appellant had previously heard confessions by the deceased of having killed his victims by witchcraft, the threat by the deceased to cause death of the appellant by witchcraft did E not come as a shock and never put the appellant in fear of any danger to his life or that of his brother when he killed the deceased. On appeal, the justices of appeal found that on previous occasions when the deceased admitted to have killed people by witchcraft he had made no threats to the appellant and thus on the day of the incident the F deceased's threat to kill him was sudden and must have come to him as a shock. Accordingly they quashed the conviction for murder and substituted therefore conviction for manslaughter.

G Held: Although mere belief in witchcraft is no defence to a charge of murder, a threat to kill by witchcraft may in certain circumstances constitute legal defence to that charge.

KISANGA AND MAKAME JJA AND MAPIGANO Ag JA
[zJDz]Judgment
Kisanga and Makame, JJ.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: This is an appeal against conviction for murder and the A sentence of death passed on the appellant by the High Court (Kazimoto, J.) sitting at Songea.
The appellant is a grandson of the deceased man. He (the appellant) has a brother called Danstan who was mentally sick. Both of them were staying together at the appellant's home. On a number of occasions the appellant had B consulted witchdoctors who told him that the deceased had killed a number of people in the family and had caused temporary sterility of his own daughter through witchcraft, and on being asked the deceased confirmed this. C
On the day of the incident the deceased visited the appellant's home to see Danstan, the sick grandson. There were different versions of what transpired there between the appellant and the deceased, but the trial judge found, and rightly so in our view, that there was an exchange of words between them in the course of which the deceased D threatened to kill the appellant by witchcraft, following which the appellant picked up an axe and brutally attacked the deceased with it causing his death instantly.
The appellant's defence was one of provocation through witchcraft, but the trial Court rejected it and convicted him for murder as charged, Mr. Kisusi, the learned advocate, who represented the appellant in this Court, filed a total of E eight grounds of appeal. Essentially his complaint is that the appellant's defence was refused on insufficient grounds.
In dealing with the matter before him the learned trial judge properly directed himself that although mere belief in F witchcraft is no defence to a charge of murder, a threat to kill by witchcraft may in certain circumstances constitute legal defence to that charge and for that view he relied on the decision of the court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in Yovan v Uganda [1970] E.A. 405. He specifically referred to the following passage in that judgment: G

> In considering this case the trial judge to a large extent relied on the principles relating to provocation as explained by this Court in the case of Eria Galikuwa v R [1951] 18 E.A.C.A. 175 and, having held that the substantive act of provocation here H was a threat to cause the appellant's death, said, following that decision, that "a threat to cause death cannot be considered as a physical provocative act". With respect we are of the view that the decision in the Galikuwa case should not be regarded I as laying down a general rule but must be interpreted

A with reference to the facts of that case. There may be cases where a threat to kill taken with the other existing circumstances could amount to legal provocation.

B The facts in that case were that the appellant had suspected the deceased, his step mother, of having killed his two children by witchcraft or poison. On his blaming her, she retorted that he (the appellant) would also die before he could bury the children. Whereupon the appellant attacked her by cutting her with a panga causing her death C instantly. In considering the appellant's defence of provocation the Court said:

This is a difficult case because the act of the deceased in threatening to cause the death of the appellant, presumably by D witchcraft, must be viewed not in isolation but in the context of the appellant's children having just died, the appellant honestly believing the deceased to have been responsible for their deaths, and the deceased knowing of this belief. We are unable to say that the uttering of such threats by the deceased, in these circumstances, could never constitute a wrongful act and thus E legal provocation.

The Court, however, found that the killing was pre-meditated because the appellant, when he armed himself with a panga and went to the deceased's house, intended to kill her.

F In the instant case the trial judge found that the appellant killed the deceased in revenge for the past deaths and misfortune he had caused to member of the family. In his view there was nothing sudden in the threat uttered by the deceased to the appellant because prior to the day of the incident the appellant had heard the deceased confessing G to have caused deaths and misfortune to members of the family. His reasoning comes out rather clearly in the following passage of his judgment:

H The accused was no stranger to the deceased. Since 1980 he had been taking the deceased to witchdoctors who told him that the deceased had caused death by witchcraft and the deceased was alleged to have admitted killing his victims by witchcraft in order to pay or reduce debts. The accused had been hearing these confessions. It was not sudden when the I accused heard the alleged threat that he wanted to kill accused or Danstan in order to reduce debts. ... ... As the threat to cause death did not come as a shock I hold that the accused was not put in fear of any danger to his life or that of his brother A when he killed the deceased.

With due respect the learned judge misdirected himself on some material point here. There was no evidence that the B deceased had in the past threatened to kill the appellant. The evidence merely shows that the appellant had heard the deceased confessing to have caused deaths and misfortune to some family members, but there is no suggestion that prior to the day of the incident the deceased had threatened to kill the appellant. As far as the appellant is C concerned, therefore, the deceased's threat to kill him on the day of the incident was sudden and must have come to him as a shock. Such a sudden threat has to be viewed in the context of the deceased's previous admissions, in the appellant's presence, to have caused deaths and misfortune to some family members, and the appellant's honest belief in his having the power to do so. Had the learned judge directed himself on these lines we are unable to say D for certain that he would have necessarily come to the same conclusion.

In this respect it is perhaps pertinent to point out here that in killing the deceased the appellant did not follow the deceased; rather it was the deceased who had gone to the appellant's home, and that would tend to incline more to E the view that the killing was in circumstances of provocation rather than premeditation.

The learned judge went to say that even if the killing was in the circumstances of provocation, he would have found F that there was sufficient time for the appellant's passion to cool because the appellant went to the kitchen, some 23 feet away, where he picked the axe with which he killed the deceased. Mr Kisusi complains that the finding that the kitchen was 23 feet away was not supported by the evidence. This complaint is justified. We could find nothing G in the evidence showing or indicating the distance between the kitchen and the place where the threat was uttered. On the other hand our impression of the evidence is that the kitchen was in the vicinity and that the appellant simply entered there and picked the axe. Even assuming for the sake of argument that the distance of 23 feet was H established on the evidence, such a distance, in our view, was too short and could not provide time for the appellant's passion to cool.

In all the circumstances of the case we are not satisfied that the charge of murder was proved beyond reasonable I doubt. As we have made it abundantly clear, we are increasingly of the view that he might well have come to a different conclusion. The appellant is entitled to the benefit of that doubt. In the result the appellant's conviction for murder is quashed and the sentence of death set aside. We substitute therefore a conviction for manslaughter contrary to section 195 of the Penal Code.

B The appellant has been in custody since 1989, but the killing which was really brutal was rooted in the belief of witchcraft which ought to be discouraged. This was a bad case of manslaughter which came very near murder, and C which calls for a severe sentence. We think that a sentence of twelve (12) years' imprisonment will meet the justice of the case. It is ordered accordingly.

Order accordingly.

Held: (i) Where an Act constitutes an offence, and the penalty for such an offence is amended between the time of the commission of such offence and the conviction therefor the offender shall be liable to the penalty prescribed at B the time of commission of such offence;

(ii) the trial magistrate was not legally justified to punish the appellants with the penalty provided under Act No. 10 of 1989;

(iii) since there is no such offence as armed robbery in the Penal Code, the trial magistrate was wrong in C sentencing the appellants under section 5 (ii) (bb) of the Minimum Sentences Act for armed robbery which offence the appellants were not charged with and convicted;

[zJDz]Judgment
Mushi, J.: Ibrahim Hassan - 1st appellant and Abasi Selemani Shemweta - 2nd appellant, whose appeals have G been consolidated, were jointly charged and tried for the offence of robbery with violence (according to the charge sheet) c/s 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. Both appellants were convicted as charged, that is to say under section 286 of the Penal Code. In sentencing the appellant, the learned trial magistrate stated, and I quote: H

Robbery, armed robbery is a threat in this country and the Government is aware of this, that is why it has increased the sentence to 30 years for those who will be found guilty as amended by Act No. 10/89. I
MUSHI J

A The appellants were then sentenced to 30 years imprisonment each and in addition each appellant was to receive 12 (twelve) strokes of the cane. Both appellants are appealing against both conviction and sentence.

At the hearing of the appeal, two important legal issues came up for consideration. One of the legal issues was B specifically raised by the second appellant in his ground No. 12 of his petition of appeal in which he states, and I quote:

That Your Lordship, the offence was committed on 2/12/88 as alleged by the prosecution side, this being before New, Law C Reform (Act No. 10 of 1989 Amended) come into force. The trial learned magistrate contradicted himself when sentencing me appellant without looking the particulars of the offence I am facing.

D Although this ground is not elegantly framed, the meaning is however clear. To my understanding the appellant is raising a question as to whether an accused person can legally be punished by imposing a heavier sentence than the one provided for at the time of the commission of the offence.

E The second legal point is obvious from the conviction and sentence. The appellants were convicted under section 286 of the Penal Code but sentenced to 30 years imprisonment under section 5 (ii) (bb) of the Minimum Sentences Act as amended by Act No. 10 of 1989. The legal issue is whether there is an offence of armed robbery in the F Penal Code for which the appellants could be convicted and sentenced to 30 years imprisonment. Because of the importance of these two legal points, they were argued first.

G The first point to be argued was whether, in view of the fact that the alleged offence was committed on 2/12/88 as stated in the charge sheet, the court was legally justified to punish the appellant by imposing the new sentence of 30 years imprisonment provided for by Act No. 10 of 1989 which sentence is much heavier than the one at the time the offence was committed.

H I will consider first the contents of Act No. 10 of 1989 and when it came into operation. Act No. 10 of 1989 has amended several laws. Our immediate concern is the amendment to the Minimum Sentences Act with regard to the offence of robbery. According to this Act No. 10 of 1989 new Minimum Sentence are provided for, inter alia, I as follows:

MUSHI J

Section 5 is amended: A

(i) by deleting paragraph (b) and substituting for it the following:

(b) where any person is convicted of robbery, the court shall sentence him to imprisonment for a term of not less than B fifteen years;

(ii) by adding immediately after paragraph (b) the following new paragraphs: C

(bb) where any person is convicted of armed robbery, the court shall sentence him to imprisonment for a term of not less that thirty years; if convicted of attempted armed robbery, a term of not less than fifteen years; and if convicted of D assault with intent to steal, a term of not less than five years.

The first thing to determine is when the act came into operation. This Act was enacted by Parliament of the United Republic as The Written Laws (Miscellaneous Amendments) Act 1989, and it was assented to on 21st of May E 1989 as Act No. 10 of 1989. Section 2 of this Act provides as follows:

The Laws set forth in the first and second columns of the schedule to this Act are hereby amended in the manner specified in the third column. F

It is not specifically stated in the act as to when it should come into operation. Under such situation, recourse must be directed to the Interpretation of Laws and General Clauses Act which is Act No. 30 of 1972. Section 10 of this G act is the one which is relevant to this point and it reads:

10.-(1) When any Act or part of an Act is expressed as having come, or as coming into, operation on a particular day, it shall be deemed to have come or shall come into operation immediately on the expiration of the day next preceding such H day.

(2) Subject to the provision of subsection (1) every Act shall come into operation on the date of its publication in the I

MUSHI J

A Gazette or, if it is provided either in such Act or any other written law that it shall come into operation on some other date, on that date.

B By the authority of this provision, Act No. 10 of 1989 was published in the Gazette as Act supplement No. 2 on 26th May, 1989, must be taken to have come into operation on the day it was published. With regard to this appeal therefore, the offence complained of was committed before Act No. 10 of 1989 came into operation since the C particulars state that the offence was committed on 2nd of December, 1988.

Before the amendment effected by this Act, the Minimum sentence for robbery was seven (7) years imprisonment. The new amendment has increased the minimum sentence to fifteen (15) years imprisonment. It has also provided D for a minimum sentence of 30 years imprisonment for what it is termed Armed Robbery. The question which this court must answer is whether the trial court was legally justified to award the new, and, stiffer sentences as provided for in the amended Minimum Sentences Act for an offence which was committed before the amending law came into E force. In other words which punishment is applicable where the punishment is changed between the commission of the offence and conviction. Again to this question, the Interpretation of Laws and General Clauses has an answer. Section 49 of this act states as follows:

F 49. Where an act constitutes an offence, and the penalty for such offence is amended between the time of the commission of such offence and the conviction therefore, the offender shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be G liable to the penalty prescribed at the time of the commission of such offence.

It is clear, therefore from the above provision, that unless the contrary intention appears, the appellants in this appeal ought to have been punished under the old law because the offence was committed before the amendment even H though the conviction as after the new law had come into operation. This is not, very unfortunately, the end of the matter.

I have deliberately underlined, the clause unless the contrary intention appears - because, apparently, the Minimum I Sentences Act - Act No. 1 of 1972 has a contrary intention. Section 4 of this Act says that:

MUSHI J

4. Where any person is, after the date on which this Act comes into operation, convicted by a court of a scheduled A offence, whether such offence was committed before or after such date, the court shall sentence such person to a term of imprisonment which shall not be less than.

The Minimum Sentences Act then provided for various offences. The operative clause is: B

Whether such offence was committed before or after such date. C

It sounds rather unfair. This means therefore that the provision of section 49 of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act quoted above, does not apply to offences falling under the Minimum Sentences Act. It means therefore D that in this appeal the learned trial magistrate was legally empowered to impose the new penalties provided under Act No. 10 of 1989.

This is not the end of the matter. There is a constitutional provision touching on this particular point. Section 13 (6)(c) of the Constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania reads: E

13(6)- For the purposes of ensuring equality before the law the state shall make provisions:

(c) no person shall be punished for any act which before its commission was not defined as such offence, and no F penalty imposed for any criminal offence shall be heavier than the penalty in force at the time the offence was committed; G

This provision is clear and mandatory. However, according to the above provision the State is required to make provisions to the effect that no law contravenes the provision of section 13 (6)(c) as set out - above. It appears to me that under this provision what the State is required to do is to remove from the statute book any law that is H contrary to the Constitutional provision. Having regard to what I have stated above with regard to section 4 of the Minimum Sentences Act and section 49 of the Interpretation and General Clauses Act, the State has not acted to make the laws conform with the Constitutional requirement. The question which poses itself now is whether the I inactivity on the part of the state makes the

MUSHI J

A provision of this Constitution not enforceable? I am of settled mind that as of now the constitutional provision is enforceable and any provision of the law which is not in conformity with it must be regarded as having no legal effect. This, is in accordance with section 5 (2) of the Constitution (Consequential, Transitional and Temporary B provisions) Act, 1984 - (Act No. 16 of 1984), which made the Fundamental Rights and Duties provided in the constitution enforceable as from March 1988. Before the State Acts to bring all the laws into conformity with the Constitution, the Courts are to construe the existing laws with such modifications, adaptations, qualifications and C exception as may be necessary to bring it into conformity with the provisions of the constitution. This is provided for under section 5 (1) of the Constitution (Consequential, Transitional and Temporary Provision) Act 1984 which states:

D 3. -(1) Without prejudice to the repeal, revocation or amendment of any existing law, with effect from the commencement of this Act, the existing law shall continue to be the law of Tanzania after the commencement of the Act except in so far as it is amended, modified, repealed or revoked by competent authority or any provision of it expires after the E commencement of the Act. However, the existing law shall be construed with such modifications, adaptations, qualifications and conception as may be necessary to bring it into conformity with the provisions of the Act or as are provided in this Act; and for the avoidance of doubts it is hereby declared that, subject to the modifications, F adaptations, qualifications and exceptions with which the existing law shall be construed and subject also to the other provisions of this Act, the operation of the existing law after the commencement of the Act shall not be affected by the G amendment of the Constitution.

This means therefore that the Minimum Sentences Act and the Interpretation and General Clauses Act must be read H with such modification and adaptation to bring them into conformity with Section 13 (6) (c) of the Constitution. This means therefore that the Clause:

I Whether such offence was committed before or after such date.

MUSHI J

Appearing in section 4 of the Minimum Sentence Act - 1972, and the clause: "Unless the Contrary intention A appears" appearing in section 49 of the Interpretation and general Clauses Act, must be regarded as having no effect in the face of the constitutional provision quoted above. The result is therefore that where an Act constitutes an B offence, and the penalty for such offence is amended between the time of the commission of such offence and the conviction therefore as it is the appeal before this court, the offender shall be liable to the penalty prescribed at the time of the commission of such offence. The learned trial magistrate was therefore not legally justified to punish the appellants with the penalty provided under Act No. 10 of 1989. C

The other legal point is whether there is an offence of armed robbery in the Penal Code for which an accused person can he convicted and sentenced to thirty years imprisonment as provided for under Act No. 10 of 1989 which amended the Minimum Sentences Act as already set out above. The Minimum Sentences Act does not D create offences. It prescribes minimum sentences for already existing laws in various statutes such as the Penal Code. Section 5 (ii) (bb) of the Minimum Sentences Act refer to three district offences namely: E

1. Armed Robbery
2. Attempted armed robbery, and
3. Assault with intent to steal.

The Act clearly states that where a person is convicted of any of the three offences, such person shall be liable to the F Minimum Sentence in respect of each. For armed robbery it is 30 years imprisonment. For attempted robbery it is 15 years imprisonment. And assault with intent to steal it is five years. Reading the provisions of the Penal Code G and the provisions of the Minimum Sentences Act as amended by Act No. 10 of 1989, apart from the offence of assault with intent to steal provided for under section 288 of the Penal Code which was repealed and replaced under amendments affected under Act No. 10 of 1989, there are no corresponding provisions of Armed Robbery H and Attempted Armed Robbery in the Penal Code.

As stated above, the two appellants in this appeal were charged with the offence of robbery with violence c/s 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. The offence of robbery is created by section 286 of the Penal Code. The offence of I robbery is defined by section 285 of the Penal Code as follows:

MUSHI J

A 285. Any person who steals anything, and, at or immediately before or immediately after the time of stealing it, uses or threatens to use actual violence to any person or property in order to obtain or retain the thing stolen or to prevent or overcome resistance to its being stolen or retained, is guilty of the felony termed robbery.

B This is the only definition there is in the Penal Code for the offence as created under section 286. The appellants were convicted as charged, that is under section 286 of the Penal Code. According to the Act No. 10 of 1989, the C new minimum sentence for the offence of robbery is 15 years imprisonment. The learned trial magistrate was wrong in sentencing the appellants under section 5 (ii) (bb) of the Minimum Sentences Act for armed robbery which offence the appellants were not charged with and convicted. In any event, as already stated, there is no such an D offence of armed robbery in the Penal Code.

There is one small observation which I wish to make. The appellants were charged with robbery with violence c/s 285 and 286 of the Penal Code. According to the definition of robbery under section 285 as set out above, E violence is an ingredient of the offence of robbery. It seems to me that for an offence under section 286 of the Penal Code to charge an accused with robbery with violence, the use of the word violence is superfluous.

F Coming back to the appeal before the court, Mr Mramba - learned advocate for the first appellant has complained in his first ground of appeal, and I quote:

1. That the adjournment of the case by the Trial Court for an aggregate exceeding sixty days and the trial of the case G thereafter without certificates by the Regional Crimes Officer, State Attorney or Director of Public Prosecutions being filed was in contravention to the provisions of section 225 (4) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 and therefore unlawful. The trial ought to be nullified.

H Before we proceed further let us see what subsections 4 and 5 of section 225 of Criminal Procedure Act say.

4. Except for cases involving offences under sections 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 45, 48(a) and 59, of the Penal Code or offences I involving fraud, conspiracy to defraud or forgery,

it shall not be lawful for a court to adjourn a case, in respect of offences specified in the First Schedule to this Act, A under the provisions of subsection (1) of this section for an aggregate exceeding sixty days except under the following circumstances:

(a) Whenever a certificate by a Regional Crimes Officer is filed in court stating the need and grounds for adjourning B the case, the court may adjourn the case for a further period not exceeding an aggregate of sixty days in respect of offences stated in the First Schedule to this Act. C

(b) Whenever a certificate is filed in court by the State Attorney stating the need and grounds for soaking a further D adjournment beyond the adjournment made under paragraph (a), the court shall adjourn the case for a further period not exceeding in aggregate of sixty days.

(c) Whenever a certificate is filed in court by the Director of Public Prosecutions or a person authorized by him in that E behalf stating the need for the grounds for a further adjournment beyond the adjournment made under paragraph (b), the court shall not adjourn such case for a period exceeding an aggregate of twenty four months F since the date of the first adjournment given under paragraph (a).

5. Where no certificate is filed under the provisions of sub-section (4) the Court shall proceed to hear the case of G discharge the accused in the court where the prosecution is unable to proceed with the hearing save that any discharge under this section shall not operate as a bar to a subsequent charge being brought against the accused for the same offence. H

Learned counsel argued that the appellants were first charged in court on 9th June, 1989. According to the above provisions, the court is empowered to adjourn the case for an aggregate of 60 days without any condition. Any I further adjournment, these must be a certificate from Regional Crimes Officer; State Attorney or the

A Director of Public Persecutions. In each case the certificate must state the need and grounds of adjourning the case. Learned counsel stated that the first batch of 60 days expired on 8th of August 1989. Learned counsel stated that the court adjourned the case without any certificate from the Regional Crimes Officer. Mr Mramba stated that B the learned trial magistrate acted illegally in adjourning the case without such certificate. According to the counsel the magistrate ought to have refused an adjournment and either proceed to hear the case or discharge the accused. Learned counsel said further that the other batch of 60 days elapsed on 8th October, 1989 and the trial magistrate C adjourned the case without a certificate from the State Attorney filed in court stating the need and grounds for further adjournment. The learned counsel submitted that there were two unlawful adjournments which clearly violated the mandatory provisions of section 225 (4) and (5) of Criminal Procedure Act. In that respect the counsel D submitted that the trial was a nullity and the court had no power to hear the case which had violated the mandatory provisions of the law.

The provisions under section 225 (4) and (5) are, unlike many others, so clear that there is no possibility of E misunderstanding its meaning. Subsection (4) states that:

It shall not be lawful for a court to adjourn a case, in respect of offences specified in the First Schedule to this Act, under the F provisions of section (1) of section for an aggregate exceeding sixty days except under the following circumstances.

There are three circumstances under which the court may adjourn the case in excess of sixty days. These are G certificates from the Regional Crimes Officer, State Attorney sand the Director of Public Prosecutions. In case no certificate is filed, subsection 5 provides an answer and it emphatically states:

(5) Where no certificate is filed under the provisions of sub-section (4) the court shall proceed to hear the case or H discharge the accused in the court where the prosecution is unable to proceed with the hearing.

This means that at any stage after the expiration of sixty days, if no certificate is filed to justify more adjournment, the I court can only do one of the two things. The court must proceed to hear the case. If the prosecution is not ready to proceed then the court must discharge the accused person. Under the A circumstances, for the trial magistrate to act otherwise such as adjourning the case, such act is declared to be unlawful.

In the appeal before me, since there was no certificate filed in court by the prosecution stating the need and the B grounds for further adjournment, after the expiration of 60 days, the court ought to have either proceeded to hear the case or discharge the accused persons. Since the case did not proceed to hearing, then the trial magistrate ought to have discharged the accused persons.

The Act of the trial magistrate to adjourn the case was an unlawful act. Since the provisions under section 225 (4) C & (5) are mandatory, it means that the continual holding of the accused persons in remand amounted to unlawful detention because legally there was no charge properly before the court for which they could be remanded and subsequently tried. The accused persons, now the appellants, were therefore tried for non existent offence. The D trial was therefore a nullity. The proceedings loading to the trial and conviction of the appellants are hereby declared a nullity and the same are accordingly quashed.

The above finding is enough to dispute appeal. But just in case I am wrong, let me consider whether or not there E was sufficient evidence upon which the conviction could properly he based.

The first appellant, Ibrahim Hassan, lived about 250 paces from the shop of the complainant which was broken F during the night. According to the evidence it was alleged that the first appellant was identified among the group of several people who broke and stole from the complainant. Among the witnesses who claimed to have identified the first appellant was PW 3 - Athumani Amiri. This PW 3 - who was 16 years old, told the court that he was sleeping G in the verandah whom he was awakened by the noise of falling articles which had been placed against the door. PW 3 said that when he woke up he lit a candle which the first appellant kicked and it went off. PW 3 said he identified the first appellant with the aid of the candle light. Again PW 2 - Mwanaisha Amiri told the court that she heard PW 3 shouting that he was dying. When PW 2 came out she saw many people. PW 2 said that one of the H robbers flashed torch light with which she was able to identify the first appellant. The first appellant was found in his house sleeping after the incident. According to the evidence, it appears that there was a lot of commotion at the scene because PW 2 and PW 3 said that they were beaten. It was a dark night. There is no doubt at all that the I

A circumstances were not easy for identification. Candle light which was put off and kicked as described by PW 2 cannot be held to be reliable means under the circumstances of this case, for unmistaken identify of a person. The violence of identification was not water light. The evidence left some doubts as to the identify of the first appellant at the scene.

B The second appellant was charged because he was found with a Singer Sewing machine which was allegedly to be among the articles which were stolen from the complainant shop. The second appellant admitted to have been found with the sewing machine. The second appellant told the court that the sewing machine was his property and C produced a receipt. The learned trial magistrate found that the receipt produced by the second appellant was not a genuine one and thus rejected it. The question still remains as to whether the sewing machine was conclusively D identified as the one stolen from the complainant shop. There was no documentary evidence such as a receipt from the complainant to prove that the sewing machine was his property. It is recorded that the complainant, who gave evidence as PW 1 - Amiri Kavuki, mentioned the number of the machine as LK 252827 but there is no indication E that he stated the number from his memory which is most unlikely. The same number was mentioned by the 2nd appellant. PW 1 stated that the sewing machine was welded at the bottom and some other visual marks. There is evidence that the complainant was shown the machine when it was recovered from the second appellant's premises. F There was no statement to the Police before the article was found describing the same. It is therefore not certain whether or not the description given by the complainant was after he had seen the machine or that he had known of such marks before. Since both parties, i.e. the complainant and the 2nd appellant claimed ownership of the same G article, a much higher degree of identification is required before the court can confidently find the article belongs to one of the claimants. In this case the evidence adduced by the complainant with regard the identity of the sewing machine was not enough for the court to conclusively find that it was one of the stolen articles from the shop on the H day the shop was broken into. There is nothing more to connect the second appellant with the case.

For the reasons which I have given above, the appeal for both 1st appellant and 2nd appellant is allowed. The I conviction is quashed and the sentence is set aside. The appellants are to be set free unless they are lawfully otherwise held.

Appeal allowed.

[zJDz]Judgment
Kaijage, D/R:. This ruling is subsequent to the judgment delivered by this court (Mapigano) on 14/6/90 in which the appellant, judgment debtor is these proceedings, was condemned to pay costs. In appeal, the judgment debtor was represented by Mr Massati, learned advocate, and the respondent/decree holder was represented by Mr G Kessaria.
On 2/2/91 when the case came up for taxation, the judgment debtor for no apparent reason did not put up appearance. To this, Mr Kessaria was allowed proceed ex-parte. H
Mr Kessaria has filed a bill of costs entailing a total of 46 items. In his submission he has contended that items 2-20 are according to scale and that they should be taxed as presented.
The sum of 50,000/= has been charged against item No. 1, which is for instructions to oppose the appeal. It is Mr I Kessaria's submission that the charged amount is justified taking into account

A the fact that the grounds of appeal involved the interpretation of various sections of the Rent Restriction Act, Stamp Duty Act, and s.8 of the Registration of Documents Ordinance, cap 117. Mr Kessaria has tendered a list of authorities which he relied on, and which in these proceedings has been marked "A".
B I have had an advantage of going through the record of appeal and I have nothing to fault Mr Kessaria's contention that, the appeal involve the interpretation of various provisions under the Rent Restriction Act and the Contract Ordinance. This, however, is not to suggest that the appeal itself involved complex issues of law. C Similarly, I am not suggesting that Mr Kessaria did absolutely nothing in preparation of, and in arguing the appeal. Having regard to the nature of the appeal, the amount involved, and the party who will bear the costs, I am of the considered view that the sum of 28,000/= (twenty eight thousand) is reasonable and justifiable under the D circumstances. Thus, the sum of 22,000/= is taxed off on this item.

The amounts charges on items No. 22-47 are not supported by any receipt. This, by implication I have taken note of the fact that the decree holder is, and was a resident of Morogoro Region.

E Therefore, there is no doubt that he, the decree holder, used to travel to and from Morogoro as and when required by the court. What is rather problematic in this aspect, is that exact amount spent as bus fare. Indeed, it is common knowledge that buses to and from Morogoro are running almost every day until late hours of the day. I F have found no justification in Mr Kessaria's submission warranting the award of the amount charged as lodging and boarding. At the same time, one cannot ignore the possibility of a decree holder having spent some nights in Dar es Salaam. On the basis of these brief observations, I am prepared to tax items 22-47 at 50% of the amount charged G against each item.

Finally, I tax the entire bill at 34,425/50 and 27,100/= taxed off.

[zJDz]Judgment
Kyando, J.: The records of this case and another were called for by J.K. who then minuted: F
In each of these cases two questions may be considered by the court:

(1) Whether, bearing in mind the wording of s. 225 (4) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985, it was lawful for the G subordinate court to adjourn the case for an aggregate period exceeding sixty days.

(2) If the answer to the first question is either negative what order or orders ought to be made by the High Court in respect of the case? H

The records were called for, no doubt, under the provisions of s. 372 of the Criminal Procedure Act (CPA), 1985, and similar provisions in the Magistrates' Court Act, 1984, which empower the High Court to call for and examine I the record of any criminal

A proceedings before a subordinate court for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the correctness legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed, and as to the regularity of any proceedings in such subordinate court".

B S. 225(4) CPA referred to in JK's minute provides:

225-(4) Except for cases involving offences under sections 39, 40, 41, 43, 45, 48 (a) and 59 of the Penal Code or Offences involving fraud, conspiracy to defraud or forgery, it shall not be lawful for a court to adjourn a case, in respect of offences C specified in the First Schedule to this Act, under the provisions of subsection (1) of this section for an aggregate exceeding sixty days except under the following circumstances:

D (a) Where a certificate by a Regional Crimes Officer is filed in court stating the need and grounds for adjourning the case, the court may adjourn the case for a further period not exceeding an aggregate of sixty days in respect of offences E stated in he First Schedule to this Act.

(b) Wherever a certificate is filed in court by the State Attorney stating the need and grounds for seeking a further adjournment beyond the adjournment made under paragraph (a), the court shall adjourn the case for a further period F not exceeding in aggregate of sixty days.

(c)... of Public Prosecutions or a person authorized by him in that behalf stating the need for and grounds for a further G adjournment beyond the adjournment made under paragraph (b) the court shall not adjourn such case for a period H exceeding an aggregate of twenty four months since the date of the first adjournment given under paragraph (a)

(5) Where no certificate is filed under the provisions of sub-section (4) the court shall proceed to hear the case or discharge the accused in the court where the persecution is unable to proceed with the hearing save that any I discharge under this section shall not operate as a part to subsequent charge being brought against the accused for the same offence. A

(b) Nothing in this section shall be construct as provising for the application of this section to any proceeding in a subordinate court in relation to any offence triable only by the High Court or triable under the Economic Organized time B Control Act, 1984.

The provisions of subsection (1) of s.225 referred to in subsection (4) relate to the lawfulness of adjournments generally, before/and during the hearing, of cases; the provisions give discretion to courts to adjourn hearing "to a C certain time and place to be appointed".

The offence in the present case is not expected by the provisions of s. 225(4) (supra), for the offence does not fall D under ss. 39, 40, 41, 43, 45, 48 (a) or 59 of the Penal Code. It falls instead under s. 296 (1) of the Penal Code. It is "warehouse breaking". It is also an offence specified under the First Schedule to the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.

The proceedings of the case show that it was first mentioned before the Court below on 21/12/89. The last date of E the proceedings before the record was called for here is 11/4/91. There is nothing to indicate that any certificates as provided for in s. 225 (4)(a) - (c) (supra) were filed. Before me, Miss Munisi, learned State Attorney, submitted as follows: F

If we go strictly by the law, which is mandatory, it was improper for the case to go on for more than sixty days without complying with the provisions of s. 225(4). It was unlawful for the case to remain pending for so long, i.e. after sixty days. I G suggest that an order be made in terms of s. 225 (5) Criminal Procedure Act.

It is indeed the case that it was unlawful for the case to remain pending for the period from 21/12/89 to 11/4/91 (and it may still be pending up to now) without any certificates as the law requires being filed. And it is surprising H that the clear provisions in s. 225 (4) Criminal Procedure Act are not being followed by subordinate courts. This is because, to my knowledge, this is not the only case in which the provisions have not been being followed, there are several others, (see, for example, Ibrahim Hassan & Another v R I

A (HC) Criminal Appeals Nos. 92 & 307/90 (Tanga Registry)(unreported). The only reason for failure to follow the provisions may be their unfamiliarity to most magistrates - for they were not there in the now repealed Criminal Procedure Code. It may also be that magistrates do not feel that they (the provisions) are not an efficacious cure for B delays of cases, which I think the purpose for their enactment in view of the provision that a discharge under the section containing the provisions (s.225) "shall not operate as a bar to a subsequent charge being brought against the accused for the same offence". Of course this provision is unencouraging but we, as courts, are duty bound to apply C the law as we find it and or enacted by the legislature. We have no power at all to ignore it.

I am satisfied, as already indicated and as the Republic through Miss Munisi says, that it was unlawful for the case to D have remained pending for more than 60 days in the absence of certificates as already shown. If their certificates have not been filed to date, the subordinate court is directed by this order to immediately proceed hearing the case or, if the prosecution will be unable to proceed with the hearing, to discharge the accused - under s. 225 (5) of the E Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.

Order accordingly.

E Mwalusanya, J.: The appellant Haruna s/o Said was charged with 59 counts of stealing by a person in the public service c/ss 270 and 265 of the Penal Code Cap. 16 at Manyoni District Court in Singida Region. He was acquitted of all 59 counts. At the end of the day the learned trial magistrate decided to draft his own charge F consisting of one count for stealing by public servant Shs. 85,055/= for which the appellant was convicted. He was sentenced to five years imprisonment. He is now appealing against the conviction and sentence.

G The appellant was a station master with the Tanzania Railways Corporation (T.R.C) and was stationed at Kintinku, Among his duties was to collect revenue for his employer and remit it to the headquarters in Dar es Salaam. On 30/3/1989 a Section traffic Inspector of T.R.C. Tabora Mr Hamisi s/o Chemchem (PW.1) prepared H his report Exh. P.1 after inspecting the account books of the appellant. For November and December 1988 he found that appellant had short remittance of Shs. 85,055/=. And for March 1989 he found that appellant had hard cash short of Shs. 35,600/70. And so on 6/6/1989 appellant was sent to court and get charged with two counts - I first of stealing Shs. 85,055/= and secondly of stealing Shs. 34,600/70.

MWALUSANYA J
The above charge of two counts was substituted with a new charge of 59 counts on 2/12/1989 when the trial A commenced. The persecution substituted a new charge following a fresh auditing of the account books of the appellant by an Internal Auditor of T.R.C one Mr Daniel Martin Mkasu (PW.3). The said auditor conducted his audit in May 1989. He noticed that on numerous occasions (59 times) the appellant collected sums of money but B recorded loss in the main cash book which is called the Coaching Traffic Summary Book. He found in total Shs. 104,769/50 was stolen for all the 59 counts.
The appellant at the trial contended that he had a shortage and not theft at his place of work. He explained as to C how he incurred losses in his accounts which was not deliberate theft. He said that his employers understand the situation and took it as a shortage and not theft and that is why they allowed him to refund the missing money. Thus on 22/5/1989 he refunded Shs. 30,000/= vide receipt Exh. D.I. There are two letters from his employer Exh. D.2 D and Exh. D.3 which indicate that indeed appellant was allowed to refund the shortage he had incurred which was not regarded as theft. The appellant testified that the practice of requiring an employee to refund the money he or she incurred as shortage, is very prevalent in their institution. He said that he was surprised as to why he was E charged with the theft offences.
What has troubled this court is as to whether the learned trial magistrate was entitled to substitute a conviction of the theft of Shs. 85,055/= when he had acquitted him of all the 59 counts. Admittedly under s. 300 (1) of the C.F.A. F No. 9/1985 a substituted conviction may be made for a miner and cognate offence although an accused was not charged with it. Citing the cases of Ali Mohamed Hassan Mpanda v R.: [1963] E.A. 294 and Dracaku v R.: G [1963] E.A. 363 (C.A.) Mr. Justice Chipeta in his book A Handbook for Public Prosecutors (1978) T.M.P at p. 86 stated that:

The Matters to be borne in mind are:

(i) that the offence substituted must be minor to the one with which the accused was charged and tried; H

(ii) that the circumstances embodied in the major charge necessarily and according to the definition of the offence imputed by that charge, constitute the minor offence also;

(iii) that the major charge has given the accused notice of the circumstances going to constitute the minor offences of I

1991 TLR p128
MWALUSANYA J
A which the accused is to be convicted, that is, that it must not appear that in substituting the minor offence, the accused was taken by purpose.
B Coming to the case at hand I find that the substituted offence is not a minor offence but equivalent to the offence with which appellant was charged. That is, both offences were of stealing by a person in the public service c/ss 270 and 265 of the Penal Code Cap. 16. What is more is that it appears that the appellant was taken by surprise with C this new conviction of stealing by public servant Shs. 85,055/. It will be recalled that the testimony of the auditor (PW.3) was quite different from the evidence of the Section Traffic Inspector PW.1. The basis of the evidence of PW. 1 was that appellant short remitted money to the headquarters, while PW.3 stated that appellant recorded loss D money in the cash book (Coaching Traffic Summary Book) than he had collected and pocketed the difference. The testimony of PW.1 was the basis of the charge of stealing of Shs. 85,055/= which was later substituted to conform to the testimony of PW.3. What happened is that the trial magistrate was challenging the prosecution as to E why they had substitute the new charge instead of the old charge. But the truth is that a new charge was substituted and appellant directed his efforts to challenge the new charge instead of the old charge. At no time was the appellant given a chance to challenge the old charge. Therefore the conviction for the old charge which was substituted was quite irregular and improper.

F There is another point as to whether theft or a mere shortage of money had been proved. The trial magistrate had inter alia said: "To an employer to give his employee time to refund the money is a mere privilege and it is not a G right". I think the learned trial magistrate missed the point. The issue is not whether the order of refund is a privilege or right, but as to whether the employer by conceding to the refund was suggesting that there was a mere shortage and not theft. Appellant brought evidence at the trial to the effect that he was told by his employer to refund the H missing money and that would be the end of the matter. That inferentially tends to show that the employer conceded that appellant had a mere shortage of money and had not stolen the same. It is important to note that in a charge of stealing by public servant, it is not enough to prove mere shortage, or merely that the accused person was negligent I in the performance of his duties as a public servant. There must be evidence that the accused stole the money. In other words animus furandi or fraudulent conversion must be proved - see Jackson Sumuni v R: [1967] HDC n. 152 and A Fanuel s/o Kiula v R. [1967] HCD n. 369.

In the case at hand I am not sure if the persecution had proved theft and not merely a shortage of money in the accounts of the appellant. In fact the trial magistrate that much conceded and said at p. 4 of his judgment: B

> What I have noticed in this case is that the accused was not careful in his accounts. The accused failed to manage its accounts properly, that is why there was sometime an excess amount which was not known how it come about. C

That being the case, the trial magistrate should have given the appellant a benefit of doubt by holding that the persecution had not proved theft, but a mere shortage arising as a result of mismanagement of accounts. D

One last point as to whether this trial was a nullity or not for the simple reason that appellant was not granted legal aid for the preparation and conduct of his defence. Counsel for the Republic Mr Ndunguru conceded that this was E an appropriate case in which legal aid should have been granted as it contained complicated issues of law. In fact the learned trial magistrate should have forwarded the certified copies of the proceedings as well as his recommendation to the Chief Justice that appellant needed legal aid to conduct his defence. F

Under s. 3 of the Legal Aid (Criminal Proceedings) Act No. 21 of 1969 where in any proceedings it appears to the certifying authority that it is desirable, in the interests of justice that an accused should have legal aid in the preparation and conduct of his defence or appeal and that his means are insufficient to enable him to obtain such aid, G the certifying authority may certify that the accused ought to have free legal aid. For proceedings in the High Court the certifying authority is the Chief Justice of the Judge of the High Court conducting such proceeding, and in the case of a proceeding before a District or a Court of a Resident Magistrate, the certifying authority is the Chief H Justice.

In the following circumstances it will normally be procured that the interests of justice require that the accused should be legally represented at his trial.

(a) Where an accused is charged with a serious offence, I

1991 TLR p130

MWALUSANYA J

A whereof a very lengthy prison sentence is likely to follow upon a conviction e.g. offences of robbery with violence, economic crimes under Act No. 13/1984 e.t.c.

(b) When the trial is likely to include complicated issues of law arising from concepts like alibi, possession, burden of B proof, consent, knowledge, confessions, hearsay evidence, special circumstances or special reasons e.t.c. But each case has to be decided on its merits to find out if it has complicated issues of law or not. For example in Samson v R C [1958] E.A. 681 the E.A.C.A. observed with approval what the Seychelles High Court had said that it was in the interest of justice to grant legal aid on a charge of being in possession of property suspected to have been stole. Seychelles then had a law similar to our Act No. 21/1989

D In these two instances, there is a presumption that the interests of justice require that the accused should be legally represented.

E Therefore whether these two instances present themselves the trial magistrate is enjoined to conduct an inquiry to determine the means of the accused person to see if he or she can afford to hire an advocate. After that the report of the inquiry as well as the certified copy of the proceedings be sent to the certifying authority (the Chief Justice) for F the consideration as to whether legal aid should be granted or not. As to the duty of the certifying authority, the E.A.C.A. In the case of Mohamed s/o Salim v R. [1958] E.A. 202 said at p. 203:

That in such a case the certifying authority should given the matter anxious consideration before deciding to refuse a G certificate for legal aid on the ground of sufficiency of means; that a reasonably liberal interpretation ought to be placed on the section and that in case of doubt the discretion should be exercised in the prisoner's favour. [The certifying authority] has to H exercise its own independent judgment in the matter .... instead of merely accepting the opinion expressed by the magistrate.

Therefore it is clear from the above authority that the certifying authority cannot delegate its responsibilities given out I under s. 3 of the Legal Aid (Criminal Proceedings) Act No. 21/1969, to the magistrates. The Chief Justice himself has to make a personal decision. A

I wish to emphasize here that the exercise of sending recommendations to the certifying authority by a magistrate, does not depend on the accused having raised or applied for legal aid. The trial court has to raise it on its own motion. It is automatic so to speak, so long as these two instances mentioned above have been not. In that regard B the E.A.C.A. in the Mohamed s/o Salim v R. Case at p. 204 had the following to say:

We would add that we consider that it is the duty of the trial judge or magistrate to ascertain that the question of provision of C legal aid has been duly considered by the proper authority .... in which the accused appears before him unrepresented.

The observations of the E.A.C.A. in the Mohamed s/o Salim Case are relevant though they concerned the D provisions of s. 3 of the replaced Poor Prisoners Defence Ordinance Cap. 21 because these provisions are similar to s. 3 of the Act No. 21 of 1969 except that while Cap. 21 applied to capital offences only, the 1969 Act applies to all serious offences as herein indicated above. E
What is the fate of the case where legal aid was unreasonably refused by the certifying authority or was not considered at all? We get the answer from the judgment of Samatta J. (as he then was) in the case of A. Kalumbeta v R. [1982] T.L.R. n. 328 where at pp.300 - 332 said: F

Legal representation for an accused is a right which is almost universally recognized. In some jurisdictions the right is a constitutional right. In Tanzania the right is provided for in s. 190 of the C.P.C. (now s. 310 of C.P.A.). That right is so jealously G guarded by the law that if an accused is deprived of it, through no fault of his own and through no fault of his advocate and he is in the end convicted, that conviction cannot be allowed to stand on appeal. It must be quashed.

I am only add by remarking that though in 1982 when that judgment was delivered, the right to legal representation H was only statutory right, right now it is Constitutional right incorporated in the Constitution Vide Act No. 15/1984. The right to a fair hearing under Art. 13 (6) (a) of our Constitution carries with it the right to a legal representation. I

A Therefore where legal aid is unreasonably refused by the certifying authority or where the trial magistrate has omitted to send the proceedings to the certifying authority for consideration of legal aid (in the two instances mentioned above) the trial will be held to be a nullity. There is no question as to whether the irregularity has B occasioned a miscarriage of justice or not; the point is that the irregularity is to fundamental that the trial is automatically a nullity. In fact that is what the Tanzania Court of Appeal had to say in the case of Laurent s/o Joseph v R. [1981] T.L.R. n. 351 where Makame J.A. said at p. 352:

C We cannot say that if he had been legally represented a different picture would not possibly have emerged.

That is the point. This is because the quality of justice we got when an accused is not legally defended is D bus-standard.

It is not every man who has the ability of defend himself on his own. He cannot bring out the points in his own favour or the weaknesses in the other side. He may be tongue-tied or nervous, confused or wanting in intelligence. E He cannot examine or cross - examine witnesses intelligibly. The quality of justice, surely improves where there is legal representation.

In the case at hand I was prepared to allow the appeal on the simple ground that the trial was nullity because the F appellant was denied of his legal right to legal representation. The denial of the right to legal aid is indeed reprehensible and it boggles my mind as to why this right has not been exerted since 1969 when Act No. 21/1969 was enacted. Could it be so because there was no one to champion the rights of the poor? Under s. 190 of the C.P.C. (new s. 310 of the C.P.A.) there is a statutory right to legal representation. The courts have decided to G construe that section to the disadvantage of the poor. Various cases have held that, that section means that once a accused person has availed himself the services of an advocate (that presupposes that an accused person has means) he should not be deprived of the right to be defended by counsel through no fault of his or his counsel. H These cases championing the cause of the haves, are numerous and a few of them are: J.A. Haji v R. : [1947] 1 T.L.R. (R) 299 (Wilson J.); Mugoma v R: [1957] E.A. 555 (C.A.); Joshua Nkonoki v R.: [1978] L.T.R. n. 24 I (Mnzavas J.), D.P.P. v Rugaimukamu: [1982] T.L.R. 139 (Rubama J.) and Alimasi Kalumbeta v R.: [1982] T.L.R. n. 329; and the Jamaican case of Rebinsen v R. : [1986] L.R.C. (Const.) 405 (by Privy Council).

I looked for a decision which would held that a statutory right of legal representation has been infringed where an A accused person is deprived of the right to be defended by counsel through no fault of his or his counsel because of his poverty (in that accused could not afford to hire one) and the court did not on its own motion consider whether to grant legal aid or not, but I could not find any such decision. If anything that statutory right was interpreted in B favour of the haves and the have nots were ignored. I hope this judgment comes to the rescue of the indigent accused persons.

Be that as it may, for the reasons given herein above, the appeal succeeds. The conviction is quashed and the C sentence and compensation order are set aside. The appellant should be released forthwith, unless held for any other offence.

Order accordingly. D

A Mwalusanya, J.: The appellant Mohamed s/o Nassoro had an ex-parte judgment passed against him for Shs. 10,000/= by the Singida R.M.'s Court. The suit proceeded ex-parte when allegedly the appellant failed to appear on the hearing date (25/2/1988), while the respondent Ally s/o Mohamed had appeared.

B At the hearing of the appeal and in his memorandum of appeal the appellant has contended that he was never served with notice for appearing on 25/2/1988. He said that the ten cell leader had lied when he ordered on a letter that appellant had refused to accept serve of summons.

C It is my finding that the appellant was not properly served with the summons, and that much the respondent has conceded during the hearing of the appeal. First the "summons" in question are not the proper documents, but it was only a hand-written piece of paper, written and signed by the magistrate requiring the appellant to appear in D court on 25/2/1988. It was not even attached with the plaint. Secondly it was not served on the appellant by a proper officer of the court (the process server). According to the respondent it was him who had taken the "summons" to the ten cell leader for service on the appellant. That was highly improper and the appellant was right E to refuse service in the circumstances.

According to Order 5 rule 16 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966 it is only the proper officer of the court who has to effect service of summons. And if the party refuses to accept service, the process server has to leave a copy of the F summons with him and return the original to the court together with an affidavit stating that the person upon when he served the summons refused to sign to acknowledge service.

As the ten cell leader was not a proper officer of the court he had not and could not have made an affidavit as to G how to effect service. In short there was no proper service, and respondent that much has conceded.

As there was no proper service, the trial magistrate should have set aside the ex-parte judgment as of right. In the event the appeal is allowed. The order dismissing the application for setting aside the ex-parte judgment is set H aside. I also set aside the ex-parte judgment that was passed by the trial court. The suit should proceed to trial. Each party to bear its own costs of this appeal.

D For this reason the court found that he lacked the jurisdiction to entertain the matter.

Held: As the learned magistrate lacked jurisdiction the proceedings are nullity. E

Kyando, J.: This matter, a probate cause, was heard by a Resident Magistrate (Mrs Msuya - RM) in the District F Court of Ilala, at Kisutu, Dar es Salaam. It was initially filed in the Primary Court at Kariakoo, Dar es Salaam and a grant made at as the Resident Magistrate indicates in her judgment, it was later discovered that the grant was a nullity for lack of jurisdiction. The record of the case was then transferred to the District Court where the learned G Resident Magistrate heard it.

The appellant was dissatisfied with the decision of the District Court. He filed this appeal in this court. Before hearing the appeal I wanted to know if Mrs Msuya, R.M., was a District Delegate in terms of s. 5 of the Probate H and Administration Ordinance 1961. For this purpose I directed the Registrar to send a note to Mrs Msuya to assertion. The Registrar did so and Mrs Msuya replied that she has no instrument of appointment as a District Delegate. By this, of course, I understand her to mean that she has not been appointed a District Delegate under s.5 I of the Ordinance.

KYANDO J

A Section 5 provides that the Chief Justice May, from time to time appoint such resident magistrates as he thinks fit to be District Delegates. In the definition part of the Ordinance, a District Delegate is defined as "a resident magistrate appointed a District Delegate under section 5". Under s.5 (2) it is provided as follows:

B 5 - (2) A District Delegate shall have jurisdiction in all matters relating to probate and administration, with power to grant probate and letters of administration, if the deceased, at the time of his death had his fixed place of abode within the area for C which the Delegate is appointed -

(a) in non-contentious cases;

(b) in contentious cases, if the Delegate is satisfied that the gross value of the estate does not exceed fifteen thousand D shillings, or the High Court authorizes the Delegate to exercise jurisdiction in such circumstances as are specified in subsection 3.

Then, under subsection 4 of s.5, "A District Delegate shall not have jurisdiction to exercise any of the powers herein E expressly conferred on the High Court".

The provisions of s. 5 are under Part II of the Ordinance which is headed "Jurisdiction in Probate and Administration." Under s. 3, it is provided that the High Court shall have jurisdiction in all matters relating to probate F and administration of deceaseds' estates, with power to grant probates of wills and letters of administration to the estates of deceased persons and to alter or revoke such grants. Then below the High Court some, limited, jurisdiction is conferred on District Delegates (per s.5 supra) and District Courts (in relation to small estates). G According to the scheme of the Ordinance, therefore, general jurisdiction under it is conferred on the High Court. Districts Delegates and District Courts have only limited jurisdiction - as provided for the Ordinance itself. Did the resident Magistrate then have power to hear this matter? As I have indicated above, she did not have an H appointment as a District Delegate. Under the Ordinance exercise by resident magistrates of powers relating to probate and the administration of deceaseds' estates is not automatic. These magistrates have to be appointed District Delegates under s.5 in order to be vested with such powers. It is like extended powers under the Criminal I Procedure Act, 1985, it is not that every resident magistrate can exercise such powers. It is only those who have been specifically invested with the powers who can A exercise them.

The learned resident magistrate in this case, having not been appointed a District Delegate, had no jurisdiction to hear it, I am aware, of course, that the Second Schedule to the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984, lists the Probate B and Administration Ordinance as one of the laws in respect of which under s. 41 of the Magistrates' Courts Act, Courts of resident magistrates or civil magistrates have power to exercise jurisdiction. Under s. 41' and the Second Schedule it is indicated that these courts or magistrates have jurisdiction to administer the whole Ordinance, i.e. the C Probate and Administration Ordinance. In view, however, of the clear provisions of s.5 of the Ordinance itself, it is obvious to me that apart from the High Court, resident magistrates' courts or resident magistrates as such do not have such general powers to administer the Ordinance. Their powers are only to the extent as limited by s.5 and no more. The appearance of the Ordinance under the second schedule must have been oversight on the part of the D drafters of the schedule. The learned magistrate, as already held, lacked jurisdiction in this matter. The proceedings which she held were, it follows, null and void and I so declare them here I quash and set them aside. Whoever, amongst the parties wishes to pursue this matter, he should do so by instituting it in the court with powers or E jurisdiction to entertain it. No order as to costs.

D The appellant had admitted before the Lower Court of taking the goat belonging to his uncle, one Athuman s/o Abdallah (PW.1). The only excuse and defence was that the goat belonged to his uncle with whom he had been living at the time of the event.
This appeal is bound to fail.
F As the law stands today in this country, the relationship that exists between an uncle and his nephew, or a father and his son, doesn't 'peruse' property. Hence, if either takes the other's property without the other's permission or authority, one thereby commits a criminal offence punishable by a fine or imprisonment.
The appellant, having taken a goat belonging to his uncle without the latter's permission or authority, he cannot take shelter behind the provision of section 9 at the Penal Code.

Case Information
Appeal dismissed.
[zJDz]Judgment
Nchalla, J.: Simon Elina Mbaga filed to this court Cr. Appeal No. 75/91, while Sifuni Said Ernest filed Cr. Appeal No. 76/91. Both appeals arise from the decision of Mwanga District court in its original criminal case no 203/90 in D which both appellants were jointly charged with armed robbery c/ss 285 and 286 of the Penal Code, Cap. 16 whereupon they were convicted of that offence, and were then each sentenced to 15 years imprisonment. They E were also ordered to pay 1000/= compensation each for the injuries P.W.1 sustained at the hand of the appellants.

The appellants were further ordered to make good the items they robbed from the complainant a description of which is aptly given in the charge sheet.
The appellants are appealing against conviction, sentence and the order of compensation. Both appellants did not F wish to be present at the hearing of their appeals, and they did not engage counsel to represent them on appeal. So, the appeal have been heard in the absence of the appellants.
As the two appeals arise from one and the same original case, it was ordered that the same be consolidated and that G they be heard together. The two appeals have therefore been heard in consolidation.
I will refer to the appellants' grounds of appeal in general not seriatim. The appellants argued that the evidence of H P.W. 1 and P.V.7 is contradictory.
They argued that while P.W.1 said that her children escaped from the house through the window, P.W.7 the daughter of P.W.1 said that she escaped through the rear door of their house. The appellants further urged that I P.W.1 the victim of the robbery in this case could not have properly identified her assailants as she said
NCHALLA J
A that she fell unconscious when she was cut with a panga. The appellants further urged that the evidence of P.W.4 and P.W. 6, who claim to have seen the appellants near the house of P.W. 1 after P.W.1 had been attacked and had been taken to hospital, is not credible and the same is contradictory. Simon Elina Mbaga (whom I will B hereinafter refer to as the first appellant) argued that the evidence by P.W.4 that he cut him (appellant) with a panga at the scene on the material night is not established, as P.W.4 did not identify the person whom he claims to have cut with a panga right at the scene after P.W.1 was attacked. Moreover, the first appellant charged that the description C of the shirt, which it is alleged the first appellant wore on the material night and place, is different from the description of that shirt given by P.W.1, P.W. 3 and P.W.7. P.W.4 said it was a T-Shirts, while the other D prosecution witnesses said it was a white shirt. "This is a marked contradiction", first accused urged.
As to the evidence of P.W. 3, the appellants urged that evidence is not true. The appellants queried why P.W.3 did not identify in court the panga which it is alleged the appellants borrowed from her on the night in question, and E which it is alleged the appellants used in attacking P.W.1 and that the same was recovered from the house of the first appellant.
Mrs. Lyimo, learned State Attorney, gave a reply in support of the appeals. She submitted that the issue of identification of the appellants by P.W.1 and P.W. 7 at the scene during the alleged robbery was not resolved. Mrs F Lyimo urged that P.W.1 was too frightened to be able to identify her assailants.
After a close scrutiny of the evidence on record which evidence, I admit, was inelegantly recorded, and after a careful consideration of the trial Magistrate's evaluation and assessment of the available evidence and his reasoning G and findings on that evidence, I am unable to agree with Mrs Lyimo and the appellants that the trial Magistrate arrived at a wrong conclusion in this case. I am highly satisfied that the trial Magistrate properly considered the H evidence and also properly directed himself on that evidence and the law relevant thereto and ultimately rendered a sound decision.

As the trial magistrate rightly found, the issue of identification of the appellants at the scene during the commission of the robbery in this case was effectively resolved. The evidence of P.W.1 and P.W.7 on identification of the I appellants at the scene and during the incident is watertight, and the same meets the test set by the court of Appeal of Tanzania in its decision in the case of Waziri Amani, 1980 TLR .250. The incident took place A at night, but in the early hours of night at 8.30 p.m. when ordinarily most people in the village are still awake. P.W.1 was still preparing food, that is, dinner, in her house where her children were too. Suddenly, the door of her house was kicked open, and the two appellants stormed the house. The appellants were accompanied by another B person called Kilavo who was killed in another robbery incident after this robbery took place, and so he was not charged in this case jointly with the appellants. P.W.1 like P.W.7, properly saw and identified the assailants from a lamp which was then on in the house where P.W.1 was cooking food. P.W.1 knew all the assailants before, as they C happened to live in the neighbourhood. The assailants had not disguised themselves in any way. Moreover the first appellant spoke to P.W.1 before attacking her. It was from very close range, that is, right at the spot where P.W.1 was cooking food. P.W.1 described the appellants' attire. The first appellant wore a white shirt, while the D second appellant wore a red hat and a red jacket. The first appellant was holding a Panga. The attack lasted for a considerable time.

The description given by P.W.1 and P.W.7 of the appellants' attire during the robbery tallies with the description of E that attire given by P.W.3 who is an independent witness whose testimony cannot, and was not, faulted in any way. P.W.3 had met with the appellants on the material night at about 7.00 p.m. when the appellants went to her house to borrow a panga, and P.W.3 indeed, gave her panga to the appellants who then left. An hour or so later F P.W.3 heard the alarm from P.W.1's house when she was attacked and robbed of her money 20,000/= and other property. It was in the same village.

After P.W.1 was cut with a panga and after she had been taken to hospital P.W.4 and P.W.6 remained hiding near G P.W.1's house. As they were hiding there they saw two persons near P.W.1's house. When they approached them those two persons started fleeing. P.W. 4 who was armed with a panga threw it on one of these two fleeing persons and hit him with that panga. Nevertheless these two persons ran on and disappeared in the bush. P.W.4 H and P.W. 6 looked about at P.W.1's house and they found a white - blood - stained shirt.

On the same night and about the same time when P.W.1 reached the hospital on the material night, the 1st appellant also arrived at the same hospital and had his hand cut with some sharp instrument which could have been a panga, I probably the panga

NCHALLA J

A which P.W.4 had thrown at a person whom he did not properly identify at the scene. The first appellant alleged that he was cut with a panga by a person he did not identify when he was going to P.W.1's house in answer to her alarm she had raised on the material night. This evidence by the first appellant cannot be true. Why did he flee B when he was cut with the panga. He should have raised an alarm and should have complained immediately to his fellow villagers who would have supported his version in this case. To the contrary the first appellant makes a bare assertion which is not supported by the circumstances of this case.

C When the 2nd appellant's house was searched the red hat and red jacket were found which resemble to those which the 2nd appellant wore on the material night as described by P.W.1, P.W.3 and P.W.7.

D On the whole the evidence of P.W.1 and P.W.7 who are eye witnesses to this robbery, coupled with circumstantial evidence from P.W.3, P.W.4 and P.W.6 together with the exhibits tendered namely exhibits C nd D has established the charge of robbery on both appellants beyond any shadow of doubt and the conviction that was E entered on them by the trial subordinate court is well founded and I upheld it. The contradictions in the prosecution case are not at all fatal.

As to the sentence of fifteen years imprisonment that was imposed by the trial court, the same, in my view, was F inadequate and in disregard to the mandatory provisions of section 5 (b) of the Minimum Sentences Act, 72 as amended by Act No. 10/1989. That section now reads, "5 (bb) where any person is convicted of armed robbery, the court shall sentence him to imprisonment for a term of not less than thirty years etc."

G No doubt the type of robbery that the appellants committed in this case is armed robbery. They were armed with pangas which they used to cut P.W.1 successively and on several parts of her body as evidenced by the doctor's report on PF 3 (Exh. A). Consequently, I set aside the illegal sentence of fifteen years imprisonment that was H imposed on each appellant, and I substitute therefor a sentence of thirty (30) years imprisonment on each appellant and I confirm that sentence. The order of compensation is proper and I uphold the same.

The appeals lack substance and merit, the same are dismissed in their entirety.

I Appeal dismissed.

KATITI J

A The evidence fluidish as it appears, is as follows. The complainant, PW1 Kushoka Butondo, testified to have discovered theft of his four heads of cattle, that each had a KB brand mark - the abbreviation of his name, above mentioned. A year after, PW1 claimed that, the child of the Francis Mangale was found with one of the said cattle, and the Kraal of one Magweshi John, we only learn from one Deshi, who did not give evidence, that the said cow B had been taken to him "by some people", there being no mention of the appellant. But cross - examined by the appellant, the same PW1 said, "I found it in the heads of the Police". But on heels, was PW.2 Raphael s/o C Makwase, who told the court, that, on 17/10/1986 the appellant having attracted suspicion by offering to sell a cow, he had in his possession at Shs. 4,000/=, the Police, in particular PW3 No. C 5180 PC ALEX, was informed and hence the arrest of the appellant, on the 28/12/1988. The appellant defending himself, maintained that one woman D having entrusted him with her cattle, he was arrested, prosecuted, but acquitted. He added, that, this case involves the same subject matter, same witnesses and dates, as were in the prior, or previous case, vide which he was acquitted, hence the plea. He tendered to certified copy of the previous proceedings as Exh. D1. The above E evidence constituted the foundation of the conviction, in the present case.

With respect, testing the foundation on which the conviction is built, I get irresistibly the conviction, that the evidence in its own element is quite fluidish and tenuous. If one Francis Magweshi's child, was found in possession of the F cow, in the kraal of one Magweshi, how come, that none of them gave evidence, is tantalizing in the direction of confusion, and is incomprehensible. Again one Deshi, who too did not give evidence, emerged from no where, G although he is reported by PW1, to have said that the cow "was taken to him by some people". The appellant curiously was not mentioned by this Deshi, nor by PW1 - of course the statement by the said Deshi, being hopelessly hear-say-adding no valuable contribution, to the case.

H Coming to the testimony of PW2, that on the 17th day of October, 1986 the appellant offered to him, a cow for sale, I find myself in an embroiling quagmire, unlike the trial Magistrate. For, if as per PW1 Kushoka Butondo, his four heads of cattle were stolen on the 20/10/1986, the appellant could not have offered one of them for sale on the I 17/10/1986, as this was before the event - theft of the cattle. But curiously, PW3 No. 5180 PC ALEX told the Court, that he arrested the appellant while in possession of the cow on the 28/12/1988, posing a question that, if PW3 Alex received a report from PW2 on the 17/10/1986, the day appellant A is alleged to have offered the cow to PW2 for sale, how the arrest of the appellant, could have taken place on the 28/12/1988, and not on the same 17/10/1986, is derogating from the truth. From the above, I find myself satisfied, that the quality of evidence on recorded, is not capable of proving the charge beyond reasonable doubt, and in my B view, no reasonable criminal justice system, can found conviction on such evidence.

It is without prejudice to the generality of the above, good dutiful to remember, that the appellant did traversely plead, autrefois acquit - that he had been previously tried and acquitted, for the same offence, by the very Court - C pleading in bar to subsequent criminal prosecution. Obviously this plea softly lands us on the provisions of Section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985, that from the top of the hill, proclaims thus: D

> A person who has once been tried by a court of competent jurisdiction for offence and convicted, or acquitted of such offence, shall while such conviction, or acquittal, has not been reversed or set aside, not be liable to be tried again, on the same facts E for the same offence.

The above provisions do proclaim a principle, that places a bar, or an injunction against prosecuting a person, who has previously been convicted/acquitted, by a court of competent jurisdiction, again, on the same facts and for the F same offence, unless the said previous conviction, or acquittal, has been reversed, or set aside. The governing principles in so far as the pleas of autrefois acquit/convict, judicially educative and persuasive were pictorially considered and announced, by no less a judicial brain than, Lord Morris of Borth - Y - Best, in the case of G Connelly v DPP, [1964] 2 All E.R. 401, at page 412 thus:

I pass, therefore to a consideration of the questions which arise concerning the plea of autrefois acquit. In giving my reasons H for my view that the direction given by the learned Judge was entirely correct. I propose to examine some of the authorities of, and to state what I think, are the governing principles.

In my view both principle and authority establish: (i) that a man cannot be tried for a crime in respect of which he has I

KATITI J

A previously been acquitted, or convicted; (ii) that a man cannot be tried for a crime in respect of which he could on some previous indictment, have been convicted, (iii) that the same rule applies, if the crime in respect of which he is being charged is in effect the same, or is substantially the same, as either the principal, or a different crime, in respect of which, he has B been acquitted, or could have been convicted, or has been convicted; (iv) that one test, whether the rule applies, is whether the evidence which is necessary to support the second indictment, or whether the facts which constitute the second offence would have been sufficient to procure a legal conviction, on the first indictment, either,as to the offence charged, or as to the C offence, of which on the indictment, the accused could have been found guilty, (v) that the test must be subject to the provision, that the offence charged in the second indictment, had in fact been committed at the time of the first charge, (vi) that an a plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict, a man is not restricted to a comparison between the later indictment, D and some previous indictment, or the records of the court, but that he may prove by evidence, all such questions as to the identify of persons, dates and facts, as are necessary to enable him to show, that he is being charged with an offence, which is either the same, or substantially the same, as one in respect of which he could have been acquitted, or convicted, or as E one, in respect of which, he could have been convicted, (vii) that what has to be considered, is whether the crime, or offence F charged, in the later indictment, is the same, or is in effect, or is substantially the same, as the crime charged, (or in respect of which there could have been a conviction), in a former indictment, and that it is immaterial that the facts under G examination, or the witnesses being called in the later proceedings, are the same as those in some earlier proceedings;

The principles enunciated in the above case on and about pleas of autrefois acquit/convict, have found their way H into our statute book - as demonstrated by section 137 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 above. What therefore for our purposes is principally deducible from the cited provisions are, - one that a person cannot be tried again for the crime in respect of which he has previously been acquitted or convicted, by a court of competent jurisdiction, I unless such acquittal or conviction, has been reversed or set aside, two, whether the plea of autrefois acquit/convict, applies, the test of whether, the evidence which is necessary to support the second prosecution, or whether the facts that constitute the A second, or subsequent offence, would have been enough to procure a legal conviction or acquittal, on the first prosecution i.e. that the offence charged in the second indictment had in fact been committed at the time of the first charge. B

The autrefois convict/acquit may in my view be proved, or established by evidence rendering comparison between the later indictment and some previous indictment possible i.e.

(i)Comparison of charges or indictments, where possible, by the trial court on the invitation and initiative of the C accused.

(ii)By tendering a certificate of conviction, or as the case may be, of acquittal, relating to that offence, provided the person named in the certificate, as having been convicted or acquitted, of the offence, is the person whose D conviction or acquittal of the offence, is to be proved.

(iii)By tendering and reference to court records, by the clerk of the court, or another officer having custody of the record of the court, where such conviction or acquittal took place, - with sufficient proof of the identity of the person convicted, or acquitted. E

(iv)By adducing such other evidence showing all such questions as to identify of the accused, date, and facts as are necessary to enable him to show that he is being charged with an offence, which is either the same or substantially the same, as the one in respect of which he has been acquitted or convicted. F

The above principles, do pose questions like (i) by whom should the plan of autrefois acquit be pleaded, obvious though the question seems to be, (ii) at what stage should such plea be staged, (iii) on whom does the onus lie, (vi) and the quantum of proof thereof. Considering the above seriatim, and considering that the fundamental principle G here, is that a person is not be prosecuted twice for the same offence, and possibly, the latter being inherently within the knowledge of the accused, then it is the accused person who should plead the same, in order to derive H advantage or benefit there from. Giving serious thought to the question as to the stage, in the proceedings, when the plea could be staged, I think, the question should be approached, with liberality, and in my view the accused person may raise the plea at any time, either as a plea in the bar to the second prosecution, or, at any stage in the I proceedings, before the closure of the defence case. And, as the provisions don't

A prescribe, any procedure to be adopted, then obviously the plea may, either be formal or informal, by the accused person. And delving into the issue of burden of proof, an important aspect, I am given to think and repeat, what is trite law, that, the general rule is that the burden of proof, (onus probandi) lies on the party who asserts the B affirmative of the issue, or question, in dispute. Relevantly associated here therefore, and in this case, the burden of proof lies upon the accused to prove what he asserts - that he previously been acquitted or convicted on the same facts, and of same offence, by a court of competent jurisdiction, and this is only on the balance of probabilities - see C R. v Coughlan and Young (1976) 63 Cr. App. R 33.

Retreating back, or coming home and to the case, it is clear, that the appellant having pleaded autrefois acquit, in D his defence produced a certified copy of the proceedings vide which the appellant was acquitted, on no case to answer under Section 230 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985. The trial Magistrate rightly found the facts in the earlier case Cr. Case No. 100/1987, totally different from the case before him, and like the trial Magistrate I would E rule by applying the above and hereby rule that, the plea of autrefois acquit could not, and cannot succeed at all.

But given that the prosecution evidence was so weak and fluidish, the conviction is usage to uphold. I therefore allow the appeal, quash conviction, and set aside the sentence, the appellant to be released forthwith, unless he is otherwise legally held.

F Appeal allowed.

Appeal dismissed. C

[zJDz]Judgment

Korosso, J.: This is an application filed by the Applicant one Hassan Mohamed Mkonde who is the 2nd accused in this case which is being tried by Mr G.W. Mirumbe, Resident Magistrate. D

The main reason for the application is that the trial Magistrate conducted the trial in the absence of his counsel despite his complaint that he was unable to conduct his defence without his Counsel, that he entertained reasonable fear that the trial Magistrate would not decide the case impartially. E

Mr. Kwikima, Counsel for the Applicant, submitted that there should be a change of trial Magistrates because the current trial Magistrate has proceeded with the hearing of the case despite his absence at the trial, as he had then been appearing before the High Court, that the trial Magistrate had not supplied him with copy of the proceedings F on application made to the Court and that when his client had alleged that he would not defend himself without his Counsel, the bail bond was cancelled and the Applicant was remanded in Custody. A collection of incidents have been the cause for the Applicant's fear that he would not get a fair trial. Mr Kwikima further submitted that the G proceedings be quashed.

On examination of the Lower Court's record, I find that a greater part of the complaint is unfounded.

The record shows that on 12/3/91 and 13/3/91, the case couldn't proceed for hearing though the prosecutor had H witnesses because Mr Kwikima for the Applicant was reportedly engaged before the High Court Tabora. Again, on 9.4.91 when the case came up for hearing, the prosecutor had witnesses and was ready to proceed. The Applicant (2nd Accused) told the Court that he had engaged Mr Kwikima. The trial Magistrate admitted that Mr I Kwikima had written a letter thus: "Owing to more pressing

A commitment elsewhere, we will not be able to attend the hearing of this matter. We apologize and beg to be excused". The trial Magistrate reacted to the contents of Mr Kwikima's letter in these terms.

B This Court cannot entertain these types of correspondence by a senior member of the bar. In essence, the Counsel has permitted himself and thus, this letter is but an information to that end. This Court will not attach any importance to this letter. This case has witnesses from as far as Mwanza who are going to be paid. The Court cannot adjourn on the vague C correspondence by Mr Kwikima.

The hearing of the case proceeded in the absence of Mr Kwikima. The 2nd Accused (Applicant) was given an D opportunity to cross-examine every witness who testified.

In my humble view, the trial Magistrate was entitled to proceed in the absence of Mr Kwikima, who had chosen to write to the court an ambiguous letter. The trial Magistrate was not obliged to speculate whether such commitment E would be at a wedding, a rally or funeral. A Magistrate whether young by age or new in the profession, must always jealously safeguard the authority of the Court over which he presides at a particular time. He must resolutely resist any attempt by anybody who deliberately or otherwise erodes or belittles the authority of such a Court.

F Again, according to the record, on 2/5/91 Mr Kwikima appeared in Court. By this date 4 prosecution witnesses had testified and then cross-examined by the 2nd Accused (Appellant) in the absence of the learned defence Counsel. On 2/5/91 the prosecutor asked for an adjournment because he had no witness. Mr Kwikima, objected G on the ground that on 12/4/91 the hearing had proceeded despite his absence. His objection was overruled. Mr Kwikima, personally suggested a hearing date of 27/5/91. The application was granted and the case fixed for hearing on 27/9/91. On 27/5/91 the case came up for hearing as originally fixed on the application by Mr Kwikima. H The prosecutor told the Court that he had two witnesses in attendance. The Court asked the 2nd Accused (Appellant) thus:- "Where is your Counsel?" The 2nd Accused replied:- "He has just gone out". I pray that I go and look for him". The Court remarked thus:- "This is not possible. The Counsel was in Court just now and it I was for this case". In spite of such remarks by the trial Magistrate he adjourned the hearing of the case to 28/5/91 partly because the prosecutor had not brought the exhibits in Court. A

When on 28/5/91 the case came up for hearing, Mr Kwikima was not in Court. His client, the 2nd Accused (Applicant) told the Court that his Counsel had travelled to Mwanza. The trial Magistrate remarked. "But this case was to have proceed yesterday and Counsel left the Court without any information. The witnesses in this case came B from far. This case has to proceed". The hearing proceeded which involved two prosecution witnesses (P.W.5 and P.W.6), whose evidence brought to a close the case for the prosecution.

The hearing of the defence was fixed on 31/5/91. On 31/5/91 when the case came up for the defence, the 2nd C Accused (Applicant) told the Court thus: "My Counsel is present but he has said that he cannot come to court because he has not been supplied with copy of charge sheet and proceedings".

The Court observed thus: "It is surprising that the learned Counsel, who is by far a senior member of the bar can D send such a message to the Court. It may be that the learned Counsel has never wished to defend the 2nd Accused in this case and has sought for excuses. This is quite unfortunate. Nevertheless, this case has to proceed". The E case consequently, proceeded to hearing with the 1st Accused naturally starting his defence.

After the close of the evidence of the 1st Accused, the record of the Court reads thus: "The 2nd Accused has not given this Court the way to defend himself. The Court considers that he has elected to remain silent under, 231 (1) of the C.P.A. There followed two orders: One order was for the judgment to be delivered on 14/10/91: This F order has not been implemented because of this instant application. There is an order for the cancellation of a bail bond. This order has also been the subject of appeal to this Court.

The question is whether this court should interfere by quashing the proceedings. I am not prepared to grant the G application. It is surprising that Mr Kwikima, who had on occasions deserted his client even after he had actually gone into court should now be heard to complain that justice has not been done to his client. The lower Courts record testifies that. On 12/3/91 there were 3 prosecution witnesses and on 13/3/91 there were 2 prosecution H witnesses but the case could not proceed because Mr Kwikima, for the Applicant was engaged before the High Court. The case was set for hearing on 9/4/91 then the case came up for hearing. Mr Kwikima for the Applicant wrote a letter that he wouldn't appear for the Applicant because he had some pressing business elsewhere I

A without saying where and what business. On 27/5/91 the case came for hearing as suggested by Mr Kwikima himself. Mr Kwikima happened to get into Court but when time was ready to start, the Advocate was nowhere to be seen. The 2nd Accused desperately suggested to the Court that he be allowed to go outside a look for his B Advocate, Mr Kwikima, but the lower court rightly rejected the application.

In my view, there is profuse evidence in this case that the trial Magistrate, Mr G.W. Mirumbe conducted the case perfectly well, recording every little incident. I also support him for the action he had taken in cancelling the C Accused's bail bonds because what had been happening in court was unusual and sufficient ground for suspicion to any reasonable mind.

For a judicial officer, there is nothing so fascinating as seeing an Advocate devotedly defending a client, but in this D case, it was a different matter. The lower Court was forced to express surprises after surprises.

If any Advocate decided to defend a suspect whether freely or on payment, then in the eyes of the Court he is obliged to persue the matter as efficiently and devotedly as his profession would expect of him to. If for any reason E best known to an Advocate, he decides to withdraw, then he should do so courteously and professionally. I think that never before in the history of the country have there been so greater awareness by the populace of the importance of advocacy. It is, therefore, imperative for every member of the profession to lay an individual role in F the edification and not in the degradation of the profession so that it wins the essential respect of our anxious people.

It is true that under provisions of section 310 of the Criminal Procedure Act, No. 9/83, an accused has a right to G engage an Advocate. But such a right has to be reasonably exercised. In this case, the Accused were formally charged on 26/5/88. It was not until about March, 1991 when the Applicant engaged an Advocate, Mr Kwikima. By then almost 21/2 years had elapsed. Surely, it cannot be sensibly argued that the Applicant had exercised his H right with reasonableness.

Again, the right of an accused under the provisions of section 310 of the Criminal Procedure Act No. 9/85 has to be considered along with other equally important rights. For example, a Court of law cannot consider only the right of I an accused before it is complete oblivion of the rights of witnesses who appear before it after they have travelled from near and far. There is the right of the Republic, which pays allowances to those witnesses. In this case from 12/3/91 to 21/5/91, the learned trial Magistrate has A been fully aware of all other rights besides that of the Appellant. This is what I would choose to call, balanced justice rather than what I would also call, one sided justice. Similarly, there is nothing in the record to show that any of the Accused was denied an opportunity to call a witness or witnesses. In the case of the Applicant, he had B explicitly indicated his wish to call witness.

On the foregone observations, I would refuse to grant the application.

Samatta, J.K.: It cannot be disputed that most grievous injustice has been done to MT 22512 L/CPL Newton H Lazaro, one of the five accused in this case. On May 28, 1990, the man was acquitted by the District Court of Ilala of two charges namely, stealing by a person employed in public service, contrary to s. 265 and 270 of the Penal Code, and unlawful possession of offensive weapon, contrary to s.8(1) of the National Security Act, 1970. Two of I the man's co-

A accused were convicted and sentenced to imprisonment. The clerk who prepared commitment warrants in respect of the two men apparently mixed up the name of one of them with L/CPL. Newton Lazaro's name. The most disturbing result of that apparent gross negligence was that later l/CPL. Newton Lazaro was arrested and, no doubt to his utter disbelief, taken to Ukonga prison. He has been there, I am informed, for several months. This B purported imprisonment must be brought to an end immediately. Accordingly, there will be an order in the following terms:

The warrant of commitment signed by Mr. Kingambi Hyera, Resident Magistrate, on 28th May, 1990, purporting to C authorize and require the Superintendent of Ukonga Prison to receive MT. 22512 L/CPL. Newton Lazaro into his custody and there carry a sentence of five (5) years imprisonment into execution is hereby declared to be null and D void and therefore having no force in law. MT. 22512 L/CPL. Newton Lazaro be released from custody with immediate effect unless his personal liberty is otherwise lawfully assailed.

It is of the first importance that those who have the duty of preparing commitment warrants or approving them by E signing them exercise great care in discharging those very important duties. I devoutly hope that what has happened to MT. 22512 L/CPL. Newton Lazaro in this case will be a solitary tale in the administration of justice in this country.

Korosso, J.: This appeal has been lodged by the appellant who was charged with and convicted by Kigoma District Court of the offence of rape c/s 120 of the Penal Code. The Appellant was sentenced to 5 years C imprisonment.

In this petition of appeal one of his grounds has been that the trial Magistrate had erred in holding that there had been no consent on the part of Beatrice Kayemba (P.W.1). D

Mr. Mtaki, the Principal State Attorney representing the Republic, supports the conviction.

The evidence as adduced by one Beatrice Kayemba (P.W.1) doesn't prove commission of rape by the appellant. According to P.W.1 herself, she had agreed being intercoursed by the appellant whose male organ was smeared E with white powder. The appellant assured P.W.1 that sexual act with her on her bed in her house would ascertain whether the child was naturally positioned in her womb. P.W.1's voluntary consent to sexual intercourse by the appellant vitiates the offence of rape. A woman who is enslaved by the strange ideas and belief, allows a F medicine-man to intercourse her in the hope that the sexual act was the medicine-man's way of examining her pregnancy, cannot be heard to complain of rape. The only remedy available for P.W.1's husband could possibly be to sue the appellant for adultery. G

On the foregone observations I would quash conviction and set aside the sentence of imprisonment.

It is hereby ordered that the Appellant be released forthwith unless lawfully held for other causes. H

He was convicted and D sentenced to six years imprisonment. At the end of the case the 2nd appellant was also convicted. He got the same sentence. (ii) there was no sufficient evidence to convict the second appellant for the offence charged;

[zJDz]Judgment

Sekule, J.: The two appellants namely Boniface Mboje and Paschal Mrembe hereinafter to be referred to as the G 1st and 2nd appellant respectively together with two other person were charged in the District Court of Shinyanga District of the offence of stealing contrary to section 265 of the Penal Code.

It was alleged that they jointly and together stole an assortment of carpentry tools belonging to one Doto Shija. The H appellant was the 2nd accused of the trial and the 2nd appellant was the 4th accused.

The facts of case are briefly that on the 18th of October, 1988, PW.1 Doto Shija discovered that his carpentry tools box had been stolen and that a couple of days later one Nkwabi Sanga, PW.4 came and informed him that the 1st I appellant together with the person who was the 1st accused were selling carpentry tools. PW.1 Doto Shija went to the place where the appellant was said to be selling the carpentry tools. And he found the items they were selling were part of his stolen tools. And he duly A identified the items.

After the close of the persecution case at the trial, the 1st appellant did change his plea of not guilty to the charge to that of guilty to the charge.

The change of plea was accepted and the trial court went on to find him guilty as charged and convicted him B accordingly on his own plea of guilty.

The rest of the 1st Appellant's co-accused proceeded to defend themselves. The 2nd appellant was at the end convicted. Both appellants were each sentenced to six years imprisonment. The 1st appellant is now appealing C against sentence.

The 1st appellant has contended in his petition of appeal that as he pleaded guilty and served the prosecution's time, this factor should have been considered in assessing the sentence that was to be imposed against him. D

He also claim to have been a first offender and that he is a young person, he seems to have been 22 years of age at the time of his conviction.

Mr. Bilaro, learned Counsel who appeared for the Republic was of the view that the sentence was rather excessive. E I agree. The sentence was excessive in the circumstance of the case. The facts that appellant changed his plea to one of guilty should have been considered so is the fact that he was a first offender and a young person.

I am therefore of the considered opinion that this appeal has merits. I would and do hereby set aside the sentence F that was imposed against the 1st appellant. And I substitute therefore the sentence of three years imprisonment. It is so ordered.

On the 2nd appellant who is appealing against conviction and sentence, I agree with the learned State Attorney that G there was no cogent evidence connecting him with the crime.

He was simply mentioned by his co-accused. This however was not enough to found a conviction against the 2nd appellant. Section 33 of the Evidence Act, 1967 refers. And the 3rd accused's statement which implicated the 2nd appellant needed to be also materially corroborated in the circumstances of the case. As a matter of fact, the trial H court, appeared to have convicted him simply because he chose to say nothing in his defence, when the options that were open to him were pointed and explained at the close of the prosecution case. It is true a court can draw an adverse inference on an accused's choice of silence. But this alone cannot be a basis of a I

A conviction in the absence of evidence establishing an accused's guilt. The 2nd appellant's conviction is with respect, therefore not well founded. The appeal is allowed.

The appellant ran out of the house but was pursued and arrested. The house was searched F and a three band radio cassette, which was later identified as belonging to one, Masali Fundikira was recovered. Inside the house another person, presumably the appellants co-accused, was found under the bed. He was arrested. It appears that this person was the owner of the house in question. It would appear before the trial started, the appellant's co-accused and who was the 2nd accused absconded. The charge against him was withdrawn. Held: (i) The appellant's action of running away was not sufficient, in itself, to show that he was a party to the B commission of the offences of housebreaking and stealing;

(ii) as the first prosecution witness did not mention anything on bhang the court was not justified in holding that a prima facie case had been established in respect of it;

Sekule, J.: The appellant Mrisho Salum together with one Marseli Haruna were jointly charged in the District Court of Tabora with the offences of house breaking, stealing and unlawful possession of noxious plant commonly known as bhang. The offences appeared as 1st, 2nd and 3rd counts respectively on the charge sheet. The appellant F was the 1st accused at the trial.

It would appear before the trial started, the appellant's co-accused and who was the 2nd accused absconded. And when efforts to arrest him failed, the charge against him was withdrawn. The case thus proceeded against the appellant alone. G

After the testimony of one witness, the appellant also disappeared. The trial Court then proceeded to make the following ruling:

Since the accused person namely Mrisho Salum escaped from lawful custody within the court premises after hearing the H evidence of the first prosecution witness, I think, it is not unreasonable to draw an adverse influence against him (accused person) against whom a prima facie has been established at least it exists and the said accused having escaped from lawful custody. I

A Accordingly I convict him as charged, that is burglary c/s 294 (1) of the Penal Code, stealing contrary to Section 265 of the Penal Code and the unlawful possession of noxious plants c/s 2(b) of the Cultivation of Noxious plants (Prohibition) Ordinance Cap.134.

The appellant was then sentenced to 3 years imprisonment on the 1st Court, i.e. burglary, one year imprisonment in B respect of the 3rd count, possession of bhang.

The appellant is now appealing against conviction and sentence. And he was present at the hearing of the appeal. C Mr. Oswald, learned State Attorney appeared for the Republic and declined to support conviction.

The background of the case can be gathered from the testimony of Detective Cpl. Patrick Benedict the sole witness who testified, is that on the material day, he and other two CID officers were conducting some investigations in the D Ng'ambo area in the Tabora municipality. They were then tipped that in one house in that area there were robbers. And they accordingly went to that house. And as they were in the process of surrounding the house, the appellant rushed out of that house and ran away. He was pursued and arrested. The house was then searched and a three band radio cassette was recovered from therein and this radio was later identified to be the stolen property of one E Masali Fundikira of Ng'ambo Sikonge Street in the Municipality.

In the house, they found another person under the bed. I suppose this was the appellant's co-accused.

F The appellant then led the police to his parent's home where they met his mother. Thereafter he and his co-accused were taken to the Police Station and charged.

And this was the essence of the prosecution case at the time before the appellant escaped. In his petition of appeal, G the appellant has contended that there was no prima facie case established. And he stated in his oral submission at the hearing of the appeal that the person who escaped and avoided trial was the owner of the house.

I have considered the evidence and I agree with the appellant, that the evidence of PW.1, Detective Cpl. Patrick H Benedict did not establish a prima facie case against the appellant. All it established is that the appellant ran away from that house in which a stolen radio was found upon a search. But in any view the appellant's act of running away could not on its own establish that he was a party to the commission of the offences contracted with that radio. He I was not a resident of that house. He lived with his parents in another house. And he led the Police to his parent's home and it would appear nothing incriminating was found there. A

It is the owner of the house who appears to be the person who avoided trial who should have been principally the person to explain how the radio in question came to be in his house.

As to the issue of unlawful possession of bhang, there was no mention of bhang at all in the testimony of PW.1. I B do not therefore understand why the trial Court was of the view that a prima facie case had been established in respect of this particular count.

Further, it would appear, after the disappearance of the appellant after the testimony of PW.1, in taking the course it C took, the trial court was probably and purportedly acting under the provisions of section 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. Should that be the case, the trial court, was with respect in error. The provisions of section 227 of the Criminal Procedure Act, do in my view apply to situations whereby an accused fails to appear on a date fixed for continuation of the hearing after the close of the prosecution or on the date fixed for the passing of sentence D (underlining supplied). In this case, the prosecution had not closed their case when the appellant went missing. The proper provisions which should have been invoked were in my view the provisions of section 226 of the Criminal Procedure Act. And the Court should have proceeded to hear the prosecution case to the end and if the evidence E adduced warranted a conviction, then it could have proceeded to convict him in absentia. The provision of section 226 (2) (3) and (4) should however always be closely borne in mind in this kind of situation.

The procedure adopted was therefore in my view and with respect, not proper. F
For the foregoing reasons, this appeal succeeds and it is hereby allowed. The conviction is quashed and the sentence is set aside. The appellant is to be released forthwith unless otherwise lawfully held. G
Appeal allowed.

[zJDz]Judgment

Korosso, J.: The appellant has presented this appeal challenging the decision of the District Court of Tabora before which he was charged with three offences. In the 1st count, he was charged with and convicted of the offence of D corruption c/- paragraph (2) of the First Schedule to and section 56(2) and 59(2) of the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act No. 13/84. He was sentenced to 4 years imprisonment.

In the 2nd Count, he was charged with and convicted of the offence of personating a public officer c/s 100 (1) of the E Penal Code. He was sentenced to 6 months imprisonment.

In the 3rd Count, he was charged with and convicted of attempt at Extortion c/s 290 (1) of the Penal Code. He was sentenced to 3 years imprisonment Dissatisfied with the findings and sentences of the Lower Court, he has appealed F to this Court.

The facts of the case as admitted by the lower court were that on 20/11/1986 the Appellant, a militiaman, who was not on duty then happened to meet the complainant on the way. He accused the complainant of having assaulted a G certain person at the central market. He ordered the complainant to accompany him to the Police Station. On the way to the Police Station, the Appellant suggested that if the complainant paid the sum of Shs. 1,000/=, he would set him free. The complainant promised to pay the money on the following day. The Appellant, who was in company H of another militiaman, parted with the complainant after having seized the complainant's identify card. Meantime, the complainant reported the matter to Officers of the Squad who arranged the trap on the following day, at the I restaurant where they had agreed to meet. The Appellant and co-accused were arrested together with the employee

A of the garden restaurant who had been asked to preserve the money for them.

The appellant in his defence testified that he had been innocently assaulted.

B Mr. Bilaro, the learned State Attorney who represented the Republic submitted that the Appellant should have been convicted of obtaining goods by false pretences as far as the 1st count was concerned rather than convicting of the Appellant of the offence of corruption. He supported conviction of the 2nd count and 3rd count.

C I agree with the learned State Attorney that the abundant evidence supported conviction of obtaining goods by false pretence c/s 302 of the Penal Code. This is so because the complainant had committed no offence known to the law at the time when the Appellant purported to accused him of having committed the offence of assault.

D I am not sure in my mind if the Appellant had committed the offence of attempts at extortion. It having been proved that the Appellant had falsely represented himself as a policeman and that the complainant had agreed to give out the money because of the Appellant's personation as a Policemen, the offence of attempts at extortion c/s E 290 (1) of the Penal Code, was in my humble view, a duplication of the 2nd Count.

On the foregone observations, I would convict the Appellant of the offence of obtaining goods by false pretences in the 1st Count.

As to the 2nd Count, the conviction of personation is up-held. I quash the 2nd Count of attempts at extortion c/s (1) F of the Penal Code, and set aside the sentence of 3 years imprisonment.

Appeal dismissed save for the 3rd Count.

On appeal the justices of appeal upheld the trial judge's decision but quashed the E award of special damages.

(ii) the failure by the appellants to exercise duty of care in respect of the motor vehicle to them for repairs went counter to the clear statutory provisions of section 103 of the Law of Contract Act, Cap. 433.

(iii) the theft of the engine and gearbox was a breach on the part of the appellants which went to the root of G the contract; and as such the exemption clause could not be relied on;

(iv) it was wrong for the trial judge to award special damages which were more than what the respondent had claimed. H

Case Information

Order accordingly.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mnzavas, Kisanga and Omar, JJ.A.: In this appeal the present respondent, Arusha International Conference Centre, filed a suit in the High Court, (Chua, J.), against the present appellant, Cooper Motor Corporation (T) Ltd., I seeking for an order that the appellant/

A defendant returns to him his (respondent's) motor vehicle in good condition and repair. The respondent/plaintiff also claimed from the appellant/defendant total of Shs. 166,000/=, as special damages and general damages for loss of use of his motor vehicle to the tune of Shs. 90,000/=. The trial Court was also asked to grant any further costs it B may deem fit to grant.

After a full trial the learned judge came to the conclusion that the respondent had proved his claim against the appellant and accordingly ordered the appellant to pay Shs. 1,018,969/30 as special damages, Shs. 90,000/= as C general damages and finally ordered the appellant to fix a new engine and gearbox to respondent's motor vehicle. The appellant was also to pay 9% interest on the amounts awarded from the time of filing the suit to the time the whole amount was paid in full. Aggrieved by the decision of the High Court the appellant is appealing to this Court.

D The following undisputed facts formed the basis of respondent's claim against the appellant. On the 7th of August 1981 the respondent/plaintiff delivered the motor vehicle registration No. SU 13483, a Volkswagen Combi, to the appellant's garage in Arusha for repairs in accordance with instructions as per exhibit P2 E dated 7/8/81 for a consideration of Shs. 14,654/=. The appellant apparently repaired the motor vehicle but as the motor vehicle was about to be delivered to the respondent who was ready to pay for the repairs the appellant wrote F a letter - exhibit P1 dated 26/12/81 to the respondent informing him as follows:

We are sorry to inform you that the engine and gearbox for your car quoted above which was undergoing repairs in our workshop has been stolen.

G This was discovered in the morning of 28th September, 1981 and the matter was reported to the Police who have been dealing with it since then.

Investigations are still going on after which we shall communicate to you.

H Meanwhile we shall appreciate if you would please provide us with the engine number from the log book for onward transmission to the C.I.D.

I Yours faithfully,

For and on behalf of

The Cooper Motor Corp. (T) Ltd.

After this correspondence the appellant offered, without prejudice, to settle respondent's claim out of Court and A offered to purchase the motor vehicle at its market value at the time it was delivered for repair on 7/8/91 - exhibit P3 dated 21/1/87. A reminder regarding the offer was sent to the respondent by the appellant on 14/5/82 as shown in exhibit P4. B

A counter offer was made to the appellant by the respondent who, by way of mitigation of costs, afford to buy a new engine and gearbox for the motor vehicle whose price would be submitted to the appellants for payment by invoice; and other damages to be negotiated between the parties as per Exhibit P5 dated 24/3/83. This counter offer C was not replied to by the appellant despite two other reminders as shown in exhibits P6 and P7 dated 6/6/83 and 3/5/83 respectively. It was after this that the respondent went to Court (as mentioned above) and subsequently the appellant, being aggrieved by the judgment of the trial Court, decided to come to this Court. D

Before us the appellant was represented by Mr. Kapoor and Mr. Desouza learned Counsels. Mr. Kapoor conceded that there was a contract between the appellant and the respondent whereby the former was to repair a motor vehicle of the later for an agreed sum of money. Equally Mr. Kapoor admitted in his submission that the E motor vehicle was delivered to the garage of the appellant and thereby making the appellant a bailee of the motor vehicle. While the motor vehicle was in the possession of the bailee, the appellant, its engine and gearbox were stolen. What this Court has to decide is whether the appellant as a bailee of the motor vehicle would be responsible F in law for the loss of the engine and the gearbox.

Mr. Kapoor vigorously argued that their client, the appellant, as a bailee of the chattel exercised enough and reasonable care in protecting the property. He said to quote him - "No one would have taken the engine and gearbox without being detected by the guard. It is our contention that the motor vehicle was kept in a first class G garage and not under a tree. The appellant's duty of care was no more than what he did".

Secondly Mr. Kapoor submitted that over and above the argument that the appellant had discharged his duty of care as a bailee under section 103 of the Law of Contract Act, he was also protected from liability by the exemption H clause in the agreement between the parties. It was the learned Counsel's submission that a contract can include any exemption clause no matter how wide. In support of this argument we were referred to the decisions in Kenyon I Ltd. v Baxter Hoare & Co. [1971] 2 All E.R. 708 and Suisse Atlantique Société

A d'Armement Maritime S.A. v N.V. Rotterdamsche Kolen Centrale [1966] 2 All E.R. 61. It was submitted that the decision in these two cases was that a contract can even exclude a fundamental breach in its exemption clause. Mr. Kapoor, learned Counsel submitted that their client, the appellant, was not a warehouse; that he had B contracted to repair respondent's motor vehicle and not to warehouse it.

Coming to the quantum of damages awarded by the High Court it was submitted that the respondent had claimed a maximum of Shs. 166,000/= special damages. That being the claim Mr.

Kapoor argued that the learned judge erred C in law in awarding special damages to the respondent which were more than what the respondent had pleaded. In support of this argument the Court was referred to the decision of this Court in The Cooper Motor Corporation Ltd. v Moshi/Arusha Occupational Health Services - Civil Appeal No. 1 of 1990. Finally Mr. Kapoor submitted D that even the Shs. 166,000/= special damages claimed by the respondent had not been proved. To fortify his argument we were referred to page 59 of the High Court judgment where the learned judge noted that the plaintiff, E now the respondent, had shown how he arrived at the figure of Shs. 166,000/= special damages.

The learned Counsel asked the Court to allow the appeal. In the alternative Mr. Kapoor submitted in reply that in the event the Court found that there was a fundamental breach on the part of the appellant the Court should look F into the value of a gearbox and engine. To counter Mr. Kapoor's submission that the appellant was not liable for the loss of the engine and the gearbox Mr. Umbulla, learned Counsel for the respondent/plaintiff argued that the evidence showed that the appellant instead of repairing the motor vehicle under the contract he vandalized it. This, it was argued, went counter to the statutory provisions of section 103 of the Law of Contract Act. Secondly it was G Mr. Umbulla's submission that it is now settled law that exemption clauses will no apply where there is a fundamental breach. In support of his argument we were referred to Anson's Law of Contract - 21st Ed. at pages H 126 and 127. It was argued that exemption clauses cease to have effect where the breach went to the root of the contract. It was submitted that in this case the appellant, as a bailee, was required in law to take care of the respondent's motor vehicle generally. In support of his argument the decision in Photo Production Ltd. v I Securicor Transport Ltd. [1978]3 All ER 146 was quoted.

MNZAVAS, KISANGA AND OMAR JJA

As for quantum of damages Mr. Umbulla submitted that special damages were pleaded and that the sum of Shs. A 166,000/= claimed was up to 31/3/82. On the question of general damages it was Mr. Umbulla's submission that their claim of Shs. 90,000/= as general damages was found to be reasonable by the High Court and asked this court not to interfere. The learned counsel finally argued that this Court should order that the respondent be compensated B for the loss of the engine and gearbox. The Court was asked to dismiss the appeal with costs.

This is an interesting case and it has exercised our minds a great deal. We have endeavoured to read all the C authorities quoted to us by learned counsel and we have made our own research as to what should be the law where an exemption clause is worded in wide terms which tend to make the contract itself absurd.

This situation arose in England in the case of J. Spurling v Bradshaw [1956]1 W.L.R. 461 where it was held inter alia: D

> Exemption clauses are to be read as subject to a proviso that they only avail to exempt a party when he is carrying out his contract, not when he is deviating from it or is guilty of a breach which goes to the root of it. E

If this decision is anything to go by the facts in this case show that (to borrow Mr. Umbulla's terminology) the appellant "vandalized the respondent's motor vehicle instead of repairing it".

This was clearly a breach that went to the root of the contract. But, as already mentioned above, Mr. Kapoor argued that parties to a contract may insert F exemption clauses in a contract which protect a party even where there is a fundamental breach. The Suisse case (supra) quoted by Mr. Kapoor in support of his contention was also referred to by Mr. Umbulla in support of the opposite view. G

We have carefully read the judgment in this case and it is our view that the decision is more compatible with the argument advanced by Mr. Umbulla than that put forward by Mr. Kapoor. For example at page 68 the judgment of Pearson, L.J., in U.G.S. Finance Ltd. v National Mortgage Bank of H Greece and National Bank of Greece, S.A. is quoted where he said inter alia:

As to the question of fundamental breach I think there is a rule of construction that normally an exception or exclusion clause or similar provision in a contract should be construed as not applying to a situation created by a fundamental breach I

A of contract. This is not an independent rule of law imposed by the Court on the parties willy-nilly in disregard of their contractual intention. On the contrary it is a rule of construction based on the presumed intentions of the contracting parties. It involves the implication of a term to give to the contract that business efficacy which the parties as reasonable men must B have intended it to have. This rule of construction is not new in principle but it has become prominent in recent years in consequence of tendency to have standard forms of contract containing exception clauses drawn in extravagantly wide C terms, which would produce absurd results if applied literally.

In the same case at page 76 the Court said inter alia:

D Exemption clauses differ greatly in may respects. Probably the most objectionable are found in complex standard conditions which are now so common. In the ordinary way the customer has no time to read them, and if he did read them, he would probably be told that he could take it or leave it. If he then went to another supplier, the result would be the same. Freedom to E contract must surely imply some choice or room for bargaining. At the other extreme is the case where parties are bargaining on terms of equality and a stringent exemption clause is accepted for a quid pro quo or other good reason; but this rule appears to treat all cases alike ... This is a complex problem which intimately affect millions of people and it F appears to me that its solution should be left to Parliament.

Again at page 78 the Court says inter alia:

G Sometimes it has been declared that where a fundamental breach had occurred an exception clause could not as a matter of law be relied on, but the better view on the authorities and that accepted by both sides before your lordships, is that, as a matter of construction, normally an exception or exclusive clause or similar provision in a contract should be construed as H not applying to a situation created by a fundamental breach of contract.

That was a case decided in England and so decision is of persuasive value. Coming back home we have section 103 I of the Law of Contract Act which deals with bailment. It says:

MNZAVAS, KISANGA AND OMAR JJA

In all cases of bailment the bailee is bound to take as much care of the goods bailed to him as a person of ordinary A prudence would under similar circumstances take care of his own goods of the same bulk, quantity and value of the goods bailed: Provided nothing in this section shall be construed as applying to or qualifying the liability at common law of a B common carrier or an in keeper.

In the present case it is not disputed that the appellant was a bailee of the motor vehicle sent to him for repairs. As a bailee of the chattel the law required him to take as much care of the chattel as a person of ordinary prudence would C do in respect of his own goods. That the whole engine and its gearbox were dismantled from the motor vehicle and stolen from appellant's garage tends to support Mr. Umbulla's argument that the appellant failed to exercise duty of care in respect of the motor vehicle entrusted to him for repair. This failure went counter to the clear D statutory provisions of section 103 of the Law of Contract Act. Cap. 433.

As to the argument that the appellant was protected by the exemption clause which said inter alia that "the appellant was expressly relieved of all liability for loss of or damage to customers' goods and property however E caused" we are satisfied in our own minds that the theft of the engine and the gearbox was a breach on the part of the appellant which went to the root of the contract; and as such could not absolve the appellant from liability. We would be setting a very dangerous precedent if we are to hold that an exemption clause like the one relied upon by F the appellant could protect a garage owner in whose garage vital parts of a motor vehicle sent there for repairs are stolen. On the totality of the evidence we agree with the learned trial judge that the appellant was liable for the loss of respondent's engine and gearbox. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs in this Court and the High G Court.

On the question of damages it is amply clear that the respondent did not prove to the Court how he incurred the special damages of Shs. 166,000/=. The respondent did not produce even an invoice demanding payment let alone H a receipt to show that he incurred expenses in hiring alternative transport after his motor vehicle had been vandalized. That being the position and taking into account the provisions of Order VII R.7 of the Civil Procedure Code that every plaint shall specifically state the relief which the plaintiff claims, we have no alternative but to disallow the claim of special damages. We should also I like to mention to the learned trial

A judge that it was wrong in law for him to award special damages which were more than what the respondent/plaintiff had claimed. A party is only awarded damages which he pleaded and proved by way of evidence. See C.A. Civil appeal No. 32 of 1988 - Arusha International Conference Centre v Edward Clemence.

B The claim of Shs. 90,000/= general damages for loss of use is upheld.

The motor vehicle, SU 13483, VW, COMBI to be returned to the respondent fitted with a new engine and a new gearbox and in good mechanical condition and repair.

C If the appellant has effected repairs on the motor vehicle as per repair order - Exhibit P2, repair charges as shown in exhibit P2 to be paid to him by the respondent.

D Order accordingly.

Objection affirmed.
Macha for defendant B
Tarimo for plaintiff.
[zJDz]Judgment
Kyando, J.: In this suit on 24/11/85 I ordered, under 0.1 R.10(2) & (4) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966, and in view of the issue involved in the case that the Director for Lands be made a defendant. I directed the plaint to be C amended to comply with my order and the plaintiff did so.
On 13/9/91 when the suit was called for hearing, Mrs. Macha, who apparently represented the Director for Lands, raised a preliminary point of objection to the suit, which was that the Director for Lands, through the Attorney D General, had been sued without a consent to sue the Government having been obtained first in terms of the Government Proceedings Act. She contended that the suit was for the reason incompetent and should, until the E requisite consent is obtained be truck out.

In reply Mr. Tarimo for the plaintiff submitted that the addition of the Director of Lands, and therefore the Attorney General, was made following an order of this court i.e. my order referred to above. He said that they themselves did not sue the Attorney General. He said that the Attorney General came in by an order of the court. Further Mr. F Tarimo submitted that for over two years the Attorney General has been appearing in this case without raising any objection. He said it does not take two years to discover whether any consent was required. He submitted that the Attorney General, by his conduct, had in fact consented to the proceedings going on. He said at the relevant time the G Attorney General was also the Minister of Justice, (and it is the Minister who gives the consents).

Mrs. Macha responded by submitting that the matter had never been heard before. She said the mere fact of H previous appearances therefore did not restrict the Attorney General from raising the preliminary point she was now raising. She submitted further that the Attorney General cannot be said to be estopped from raising the objection because of his previous conduct of appearing: She said estopped cannot operate against a statute. Finally, she I contended that even if it was the court which ordered the joinder of the Director

A for Lands it does not mean then that the usual procedure for suing the Government is thereby waived. She said by making the order the court and not intend that the suit should be brought in violation of the law.

B I am of the view that Mrs. Macha is right in her arguments. It was necessary to obtain the consent of the minister for Legal Affairs to sue the Director for Lands even if it was this court which made the order to sue or join him as a defendant. This is because an order of this court prevail and be complied with. So when the order to include the C Director for Lands was made what was expected was that the usual and normal procedure for suing a Government Officer as provided for in the Government proceedings Act would be followed. It was, as already indicted, not followed, and the suit is incompetent.

D I would have struck it out for incompetence but as I believe that the plaintiff may have been, because of my order, under the impression that there was no need to apply for and obtain a fiat to sue the Director for Lands as usual, I will not order that the suit be struck out but instead I order that it be stood over for three months from today and in E the meantime the plaintiff is to obtain the requisite consent under the Government Proceedings Act. If he will have failed to obtain the consent within that period, the suit will then be struck out - for the reason I have indicated already.

There was an application, too made by Mr. Nyange and which Mr. Tarimo opposed. The application was that he, F Mr. Nyange, had just been briefed and instructed to represent Timber Impregnation Limited, first defendant, and he needed time to amend the Written Statement of Defence previously filed by Mr. Kapinga.

Mr. Tarimo replied that so long as Kapinga, who had been representing the first defendant, had not formally G withdraw from the suit Mr. Nyange could not take over and start making application to amend the written Statement of Defence.
I think the requirement for advocates to formally withdraw from suits and before the courts is a requirement based H on practice and courtesy only. Mr. Nyange came with his clients. If the clients will recognize Mr. Kapinga as their advocate they would have objected to Mr. Nyange appearing on their behalf and from making the application he made. They did not do so and I take it that Mr. Kapinga no longer represents the first defendant; Mr. Nyange is the one who now represents them. I therefore overrule Mr. Tarimo's objection to the application made by Mr. Nyange. I Mr. Nyange, however, will have to amend the Written Statement of Defence in the manner he wants to amend it only after the plaintiff's suit has been consented to by the Minister for Legal Affairs as indicated A earlier on above.

Criminal law - Murder - Standard of Proof - Alleged identification of accused - Accused present in village - Not arrested until days later - Whether guilt proved beyond reasonable doubt - Penal Code, s.196. D
-Headnote
The accused persons stood jointly charged with the offence of murder on 20/1/87 contrary to section 196 of the Penal Code. The important evidence directly implicating the accused persons was that of one Kulwa d/o Lumwecha E (PW1) and one Ngwalu d/o Seni (PW2). The former alleged to have seen the deceased, her mother, lying on the ground and the accused persons assaulting the deceased. She testified to have seen the accused persons felling the deceased and slashing her with a panga. F
It was common knowledge that the offence took place on 20/1/87. It was also not disputed that the first accused was arrested on 21/1/87 and the second accused was not arrested until 25/1/87. There was an evidence that the second accused was absent from the village between 20/1/87 and 25/1/87. G Held: (i) The alleged identification of the accused persons took place on 20/12/87. It is surprising that the first and second accused should have been arrested on 21/1/87 and 25/1/87, respectively, especially considering that there H was evidence that the second accused was absent from the village. The prosecution incidence has not established the fault of the accused persons beyond reasonable doubt. Accordingly the accused person are not guilty as charged.

A Korosso, J.: The 1st Accused, one Rugisha Kashinde and the 2nd accused one Sida Jibuge stands jointly charged with the offence of having murdered the deceased, one Geni d/o Satte in the village of Kondamoyo in the District of Urambo, Tabora Region, on 20th January 1987.

B One of the persecution witnesses was one Kulwa d/o Lumwecha (PW1). She testified that the Deceased was her mother with whom she lived in the village of Kondamoyo for many years until the date of the incident, she knew both the 1st Accused and 2nd Accused. She remembered that sometime back the 1st Accused and 2nd Accused had C ever lived with her uncle named Shija. She recalled that on the night in question her mother, the Deceased made a big fire outside their house. The fire was so bright that it illuminated an area up to 27 paces from where they had sat. About 9.00 p.m. they were still seated beside the big fire when she happened to see the 1st Accused and 2nd D Accused at a distance of 27 paces. She saw the 2nd Accused carrying a panga as well as a torch. She saw the 2nd Accused carrying a panga as well as a torch. The Deceased was just then heard asking as to who were those persons approaching there. The 1st Accused and the 2nd Accused continued walking towards them, until they E reached them. Both approached PW1 and then asked her to where was their mother. PW1 pointed at the Deceased. The 2nd Accused reacted by trampling on her back so that she fell to the ground. She got up and ran away, followed by her sister one Ngwalu (PW2). PW1 saw her mother, the Deceased running too. The 2nd F Accused seized PW1's cloth as a result of which it came off and she continued running still having an underwear on. In the course of her running, she saw her mother, the Deceased lying on the ground and the 1st Accused and 2nd Accused were seen assaulting the Deceased. She ran safely until she reached her sister's home. Her sister Holo d/o G Mbeja and PW1 raised an alarm, which attracted people to the scene. The 1st Accused and 2nd Accused were not amongst the person who went to the scene in response to the alarm.

Another witness was one Ngwalu d/o Geni (PW2). She testified that the Deceased was her mother. She knew both H Accuseds as her neighbours, in the village of Kondamoyo. On the night in question, the deceased, and herself were seated beside a fire when the 1st Accused and 2nd Accused happened to go where they were. On reaching them, the Accused had asked as to where was their mother. PW1 asked the 2nd Accused to speak in Sukuma I language because she didn't understand Kiswahili. The 1st Accused told the 2nd

KOROSSO J

Accused speak Sukuma. The 2nd Accused repeated the question in Sukuma language. PW1 pointed at their A mother, the Deceased. The Accuseds felled the Deceased to the ground and they slashed her with a panga. PW1 and PW2 ran away as they raised an alarm. They finally reached the home of their sister one Holo where they met on the way being with her husband. The 1st Accused was amongst the persons who had responded to the alarm. B She mentioned the 1st Accused and the 2nd Accused as having been responsible for the assault of the Deceased.

Another witness was a one No. 3013 D/sgt. Mbaga (PW3). PW3 testified that on 21/1/87, he was at the Police C station when the Deceased was brought there having some cut wounds on the head and on her right thigh. The Deceased died in hospital in the morning of 22/1/87. PW3 went to the village to visit the scene. He contacted one Kulwa (PW1) whose statement he had recorded. The statement of Kulwa (PW1) was produced and marked Exh. P1. The said Kulwa (PW1) had mentioned the 1st Accused and the 2nd Accused as having been the suspects. Both D Accuseds were consequently arrested.
In his defence the 1st Accused denied the charge. He deposed that on the night of 20/1/1987 he was asleep in his E house when one Samike Renagala who told him that the Deceased had been attacked. The 1st Accused get outside where he accompanied other persons to the house of the ten cell leader by the name of Maduka Mpalamino. They arrived at the scene where they found the Deceased bleed on the head and side. The Deceased mentioned one F Jamadas as having been the habit of accusing her as a witch before and that on many occasions she had reported one Jamadas to the ten cell leader. He went on to aver that at the Police station one Kulwa d/o Lumwecha (PW1) had also mentioned one Jamadas and unknown persons as having been the suspects. He admitted to had made two G statements to the Police Station produced and marked Exh. D1 and exhibit D2. He said that at the Police station one Kulwa (PW1) had also mentioned one Jamadas. The 1st Accused was also arrested by the police one mere suspicion that he had attacked the Deceased. H
The 2nd Accused giving on oath, denied the charge. He testified that he knew the Deceased as they lived in the same village. On 25/1/87, he was arrested at the home of one Ituju where he had stopped on his way home after he had been from his shamba. He was taken to the ten cell leader without being told what he had done. At the home of I the ten cell leader he was informed that he was the suspect.
KOROSSO J
A Policemen were present. He was finally taken to the police station where he was interrogated and his statement was put down by D/Sgt. Mbaga (DW3). In his statement to the police, he utterly denied responsibility for the murder of the Deceased. He denied having ever gone to the house of the Deceased. He denied having ever gone to B the house of the Deceased on the night in question. He denied to have had any enmity with the Deceased.
He went on to aver that about 6.00 p.m. on 20/1/87 he ever went to the house of the 1st Accused bringing with him 3 chickens for safe-keeping. He admitted freely signing on the statement Exh. D3, yet he totally refuted the C evidence that he had ever told D/Sgt. Mbaga (FW3) that on 20/1/87 he had taken 1 chicken to the 1st Accused, for the purpose of using it for food. He admitted that he was in the habit of putting on black clothes. He expressed the belief that he had been arrested merely on suspicion that one of the attackers had put on black clothes.

He admitted D that PW1 and PW2 knew him, however, he rebutted their evidence that he and the 1st Accused had the Deceased on the night of 20/1/87. He stressed that PW1 and PW2 had sought to implicate him in the crime chiefly because their original suspect, one Jamadas Kakomala had been let out. He said he had not gone to the scene on E the night in question as he had not heard the alarm alleged to had been raised then.

After I had finished reading out the summing up to the Honourable Assessors, I kindly invited them to give their opinions on the case. The two Honourable Assessors were unanimous in their view that the evidence had not F established the guilt of the Accuseds beyond reasonable doubt.

Having gone through the evidence fairly carefully, I find myself in full agreement with the two honourable assessors.

The important evidence directly implicating the 1st and 2nd Accused is that of one Kulwa d/o Lumwecha (PW1) G and one Ngwalu d/o Sani (PW2). Both PW1 and PW2 claimed to had been with the Deceased outside their house where there was allegedly a big fire. Both claimed to had clearly identified the 1st Accused and 2nd Accused as having been the two persons who had attacked the Deceased. If it were true that PW1 and PW2 had mentioned the H Accuseds on the night of 20/1/87, how came that 1st Accused was arrested on 21/1/87 though PW2 had seen the 1st Accused being at the scene. It is still a surprise that the 2nd Accused should have been in the village of Kondamoyo without being arrested until on 25/1/87 if PW1 and PW2 had really mentioned the Accused on the I night. There is no evidence that the 2nd Accused had been absent in the village between 20/1/87 and 25/1/87. There have been no evidence of a ten cell leader, village secretary or A village chairman as to whether or not PW1 and PW2 had ever mentioned the 1st Accused and the 2nd Accused on the night of 20/1/87.

In view of this doubtful in conclusion evidence as thus against the Accuseds, I feel constrained to declare the guilt of B the 1st Accused and 2nd Accused has not been proved.

I accordingly find the Accuseds not guilty.

I dismiss the charge and acquit the 1st and 2nd Accused of the offence of murder c/s 196 of the Penal Code. C

Order accordingly.

Mwalusanya, J.: The appellant Halima d/o Athuman successfully applied for divorce at Utemini Primary Court in Singida District, against her husband Maulidi s/o Hamisi the present respondent. She sought divorce on the ground E of cruelty on the part of her husband. The trial court was satisfied that the husband had treated his wife with cruelty and hence the dissolution of marriage that was made. However the husband successfully appealed to Singida District Court. That has prompted the wife to appeal to this court.
F It was common ground at the trial that the spouses in this case had contracted a Moslem marriage in 1983. The wife alleged at the trial that in the course of years he was regularly assaulting her and many times has threatened to kill her with a panga. She also alleged that at one time she was locked inside their house while the husband went on G safari. That was confirmed by a witness Mr. Hassan s/o Njiku (PW2). She also alleged that her husband insisted to have sex against the order of nature but that she vehemently resisted. Efforts to have the spouses reconciled at the Arbitration Tribunal proved abortive.

H The District Court reversed the decision of the trial court first on the ground that:

As both parties belong to an Islamic community and their marriage was according to Islamic law, the proper board to I reconcile them was a board of Islamic community.

MWALUSANYA J

The learned District Magistrate therefore held that since the board was not in accordance with section 103(2)(b) of A the Law of Marriage Act. No. 5/1971, therefore there was no reconciliation ever made. On my part I find that the learned District Magistrate was wrong. It is provided under section 104(7) of the Law of Marriage Act that:

The proceedings of a Board shall not be invalid by reason only of the fact that it did not have jurisdiction under section 105(2). B

Therefore the mere fact that it was not the Moslem Conciliatory Board that reconciled the parties, that does not C render the reconciliation a nullity. An ordinary Marriage conciliatory Board can perform those functions and that would be effectly alright. And it is doubtful if in Singida Township there is a proper Moslem Conciliatory Board which has been established in accordance with the complicated provisions enumerated in item No. 345 of D Appointment of Communal Conciliatory Boards G.N. 245 of 1971. Most likely the existing local Moslem conciliatory Boards in Singida Township have not registered with the Registrar of Marriages and Divorces in accordance with G.N. 245/1971, but nevertheless their functions are properly protected by section 104(7) of the E Law of Marriage Act. Therefore I hold that the Marriage Conciliatory Board in this case had jurisdiction to reconcile the parties. Then the learned District Magistrate went on to say that: F

Again even if the board was the proper board according to law to reconcile the parties, but it has not certified that it has failed to reconcile the parties. As I have gone through the contents of the letter dated 28/9/88 and I have found that only the petitioner had gone to the board with her present but appellant was not called and given an opportunity of being heard in G accordance with section 104(1) of the Law of Marriage Act.

The letter referred to above is dated 28/9/88 and it is issued by the Chairman of the Kibaoni Marriage Conciliatory H Board. I agree with the learned District Magistrate that as the husband was not given an opportunity of being heard, then there was no proper reconciliation by the Board. The position is that the matrimonial difficulty is regarded not to have been referred to any Marriage Conciliatory Board. I

MWALUSANYA J

A However that is not the end of the matter. The learned District Magistrate should have considered the applicability of the provisions of section 101(f) of the Law of Marriage Act which dispenses with referring the matter to the Marriage Conciliatory Board where the court is satisfied that there were extraordinary circumstances which B make reference to the Board impracticable. That phrase was considered by Onyiuke J. in the case of Zainat Khan v Abdullah Khan [1973] L.R.T. n. 57. The learned judge, inter alia said:

C The discretion conferred on the Court by paragraph (f) of section 101 should only be sparingly exercised and then only in circumstances where it is clear beyond any reasonable doubt that a reference to a Board is not a practical proposition. This may be due to the fact that the circumstances of the case are such that no expectation can be entertained that the Board will D be able to achieve any useful results and that any reference to it will be so much a waste of time and effort.

Thus "impracticable" in section 101(f) of the Law of Marriage Act was liberally interpreted such that it was not E limited to physical impracticability. Reading through the letter of the chairman of Kibaoni Marriage Conciliatory Board, one cannot fail to see that it was found useless to call the husband and for reconciliation as it would be a waste of time and efforts. The allegations were so serious such that any reference to the Board would not be a F practical preposition I think the trial court took it that way. Therefore the trial court was right to proceed to hear the case, even if it had not been referred to the Marriage Conciliatory Board. And I agree that the petitioner had succeed to prove that her marriage was broken down beyond repair. On my part I concur with the trial court in G dissolving the marriage in questions.

There is another matter which the learned District magistrate missed. Under the Law of Marriage Act, there are two ways in which Moslem spouses may seek dissolution of the marriage. The first method is the fashk divorce as H provided in section 107(1) and (2) of the Law of Marriage Act whereby a Moslem, like any other spouse, sets out to prove that the marriage is broken down beyond repair by either cruelty, adultery etc. This method applies to all spouses who are Moslems or non-Moslems.

Then there is the second method for Moslems only, which makes it easier for them to secure divorce. It is provided I under section 107(3) of the Law of Marriage Act that - subsequent to the granting by the Board of a certificate that it has failed to reconcile the parties either of them has done any act or thing which A would, but for the provisions of this Act, have dissolved the marriage in accordance with the Islamic law. Thus if the Board has failed to reconcile the parties, a Moslem spouses can proceed to demand a khului before a Sheikh (a wife securing her release through payment of a sum of money) or she can ask the Sheikh to grant divorce mubaraat B (mutual consent of spouses to divorce).

For a male Moslem he can issue three talaks. After getting the Khului, or divorce mubaraat or three talaks, then the concerned Moslem merely goes to court to have his divorce officially registered without requiring him or her to C prove that the marriage is irretrievably broken down. Therefore the learned District Magistrate should have so advised the parties. I hope in future she will not fail to advise the Moslem women, the easy way of securing divorce.

Be that as it may, the appeal succeeds. I allow the appeal with costs. The decision of the District Court is set aside, D while that of the trial court is restored.

Order accordingly. E

A Held: On the basis of the agreement and the "Declaration of Intent" the defendant undertook to perform his part of the contract.
Case Information
Order accordingly.
[zJDz]Judgment
B Mkwawa, J.: In this case the plaintiff, Juma Sultan Mkugenzi, basically prays for an order for specific performance of a sale of a house. The prayer is based on the following events:
Sometime in June, 1988 one Mgeni d/o Mawazo who is the mother of the instant defendant, Ramadhani Athumani, C approached the plaintiff (to whom for brevity sake I will be referring to as PW.1) and asked him for a loan of Shs. 200,000/= to enable her to finalize payments against her in a court proceeding. It is common ground that the said Mgeni d/o Mawazo is now dead and that her son Ramadhani Athumani is her sole heir and legal representative (for D brevity sake I will be referring to them as the deceased and PW.1 respectively). It is further not in dispute and clearly demonstrated in the testimony is of PW.1 and DW.1 that though the deceased had initially received from PW.1 Shs. 200,000/= to enable her to secure a house No. 13, Plot No. 49 Block 'B', Magomeni, Dar es Salaam E which was a subject matter in the High Court in Probate and Administration Cause No. 63 of 1985; the deceased subsequently offered for sale the said house to PW.1 as she could not secure a loan in respect of the same from PW.1.

F It is in the evidence of both PW.1 and DW.1 that on June 29, 1988 the deceased and PW.1 entered into a written agreement for the sale of the said house. This agreement was drafted by a practising advocate (Exhibit P.1). The agreement inter alia provided for the payment of the purchase price as follows: Shs. 200,000/= to be paid at G once and the seller acknowledged receipt of the same. The balance of Shs. 500,000/= to be paid after the finalization of Probate and Administration Clause No. 63 of 1986. It is further common ground that Messrs. Mchora and Company Advocates were to ensure the transfers and ownership of the property were effected. It is common H ground that the deceased did not live to effect the said transfer of property, PW.1 being the sole heir and legal representative of the deceased committed himself in writing in what was described as "Declaration of Intent" (Exhibit Pa) to ensure that the transfer and ownership of the said property is effected. Once again this document was drafted I by and attested before practising advocates respectively.

MKWAWA J

It is further in the testimony of PW.1 that the deceased and later on DW.1 had declined to effect the transfer and A collect the balance of Shs. 500,000/= though the said monies were in possession of their advocate i.e. Mr. Mchora. It is on these basis that the instant proceedings were instituted and hence the prayers for specific performance against the defendant to execute the Transfer Deed. B

On the other hand DW.1 blames PW.1 for defaulting in paying the said balance of Shs. 500,000/=. Briefly, these are facts culminating to the instant proceedings.

Mr. Semgalawe, the learned advocate for PW.1, urged this court to compel DW.1 to carry out the intention of the C parties by executing the Transfer deed as PW.1 had partly conformed the intended sale agreement by paying Shs. 200,000/= to DW.1's mother who at the relevant period was the owner of the house in question.

In rebuttal Professor Fimbo, learned advocate for DW.1, contended that part performance i.e. payment of Shs. D 200,000/= is without legal effect so long as the consent of the commissioner was lacking. He sentenced that the said consent was a necessary requisite in dispossession of an interest in land. In support of this proposition the learned advocate cited several authorities regarding the necessity of receiving the consent in land disposition. The learned E counsel will forgive me for not referring to the numerous authorities cited in support of this argument. I will only refer to one of them i.e. Nitin Coffee Estate Ltd. v United Engineering Works Ltd. - Ci v App. No. 15 of 1988 Ar. Registry (unreported) Prof. Fimbo argued that having regard to regulation 3 of the Land Regulations 1948 K as F amended in 1960 - G.N. 101 of 1960 and the decision of the Court of Appeal - Tanzania in Nitin's case (supra) the agreement - Exhibit P1 - is in operative and can not be enforced for want of consent.

Prof. Fimbo further argued that having regard to paragraph 2 of the said agreement (Exh. P.1) the parties had G envisaged entering into the agreement in future. This being the state of affairs Prof. Fimbo contended that issue No. 1 of the agreed issues should be answered in the negative and the sum of Shs. 200,000/= advanced by PW.1 to the deceased should be considered as a loan. Prof. Fimbo further argued that the said loan is not recoverable in the H instant court proceedings as PW.1 did not cover this issue in his plaint and/or his advocate's submission in this court. Lastly but not least Prof. Fimbo argued that the prayer for specific performance can not be granted to PW.1 as he has not shown reasons why such discretionary I

MKWAWA J

A prayer should be granted particularly in the absence of consent as statutorily required in such dispositions.

I find it pertinent to mention at this juncture that though the parties in this suit did not impress one as being sophisticated persons it has been amply demonstrated from the brief resume of facts that right from the very B beginning the parties and their eye "on the law". This, they did by engaging the services of practising advocate. That not withstanding it is now evident that their caution did not bear fruits. Their efforts had fallen on barren land and the C once good relationship between the parties has now gone sour and they now come to "law" to seek for redress.

Though the matter before this court stems from very simple facts the matter is far from being easy. Having regard to the issues raised in this matter I must confess that the matter is not an easy one to decide one way or the other. The D issues formed by the court with the assistance of both learned counsel are as follows:

1. Was there an agreement for the sale for the house in disputed?
2. Is the agreement in-operative for lack of approval of the Commissioner of Land?

E 3. Is the agreement void for impossibility?

4. To what relief are the parties entitled to?

F In answering the first point raised, namely whether there was an agreement for the sale of the house, one has to look on the versions of PW.1 as these are the only witnesses before this court and Exh. P.1 and Exh. P.4. On a careful and sober evaluation of the testimonies of the parties to this suit and the contents in exh. P.1 (The agreement G for a sale of a house) and Exh. P.4 (Declaration of Intent) it leaves no doubt in my mind that the deceased who is DW.1's mother badly and urgently needed money from PW.1. It is uncontroverted that PW.1 did not loan the same to her. Undoubtedly PW.1 took advantage of the situation i.e. the deceased's plight and managed to have the house H now in dispute sold to him for the sum of Shs. 700,000/=. Issue No. 1 is thus some what answered in the affirmative. I shall revisit this matter.

The central issue/question that I have now to consider is whether as agreement obtained under such circumstances I and having regard to the fact that it was a land disposition issue can be enforced by this court. In my view this point embraces issues no. 2 and no. 3 collectively.

MKWAWA J

In defendant (DW.1) in paras 5, 6 and 7 of his written statement of defence appeals as follows: A

5. The Defendant denies the contents of paragraphs 5.55 6 and 7 of the Plaint. The Defendant contends that the agreement described in paragraph 3 of the Plaint was merely an agreement to enter into and agreement for the sale B of the house in dispute held under a right of occupancy.

6. In the alternative, the Defendant contends that the said agreement is void for impossibility. The defendant contends that at the date of the said agreement Mgeni Mawazo, deceased had no interest/estate int he house in dispute, the C right of occupancy had not been transferred to her.

7. In the alternative, the Defendant contends that the said agreement is in operative for lack of approval of the D Commissioner for Lands".

Prof. Fimbo's main submission against the Plaintiff's prayer is based on regulation 3 of the Land Regulations, 1948 as amended by G.N. 101 of 1960, so far as it is material, made as follows: E

3.(1) A disposition of a right of occupancy shall not be operative unless it is in writing and unless and until it is approved by the (President) F

(2)....

(3) In this regulation disposition means

(a) a conveyance or assignment other than by way of mortgage, or a gift, settlement, deed of portion, assent, vesting declaration, or a sale in execution of an order of a court. G

Prof. Fimbo contends that courts will not enforce a claim which can only be established by relying upon a transaction declared by the law to be in operative for lack approval. In support of this proposition Prof. Fimbo has referred me H to several authorities including Nitin's case (supra).

Before I make a finding as to whether the case now under consideration involves an agreement which is in operative or not, I find it pertinent to reproduce all the clauses in Exhibit P.1. The same runs as follows: I

1. That the purchaser shall advance Shs. 200,000/= (two hundred thousand shillings) to the seller to enable the latter to C finalize administration expenses in respect of the estate of the deceased MARIAMU MAWAZO the registered owner of House No. 13 Morogoro Road which is the property to be sold to the said purchaser. The seller hereby D acknowledges receipt of the said amount.

2. The seller undertakes to effect the finalization Probate and Administration Course No. 63 of 1986 and subsequently to enter into a sale Agreement with the purchaser.

E 3. Both parties agree and covenant Messrs MCHORA AND COMPANY, to ensure the transfers of ownership of the property.

4. The agreed purchase price is Shs. 700,000/= (seven hundred thousand only) from which the sum mentioned under F paragraph 1 is mentioned. Wherefore the parties have signified their agreement the terms and conditions in this agreement on the date aforementioned by appending their respective names.

G It is also common ground that on February 23, 1990 DW.1 made what was described as "Declaration of Intent" (Exhibit P.4). This document like Exhibit P.1 was drawn and attested before a practising advocate. I find it H appropriate to produce in full some of the relevant paragraphs of said "Declaration of Intent" these run as follows:

I 2. That I am the only son of the late MGENI BINTI MAWAZO and that I am the only heir of the deceased's estate.

5. That the deceased received advance payment of Shs. 200,000/= from the said JUMA SULTANI MKUGENZI A immediately after the execution of the sale agreement.

6. That the reminder of the purchase price was deposited by the said JUMA SULTANI MKUGENZI to Mchora and B Company, Advocates for making further payment to the deceased.

7. That later, the deceased decided to change her mind on the said sale, refused to collect the said balance of C payments and also refused to effect transfer formalities. Hence High Court Civil Case No. 76/89.

8. That, consequently, I undertake to collect the balance of the purchase price from M/S MCHORA & CO. ADVOCATES. D

9. That also undertake to ensure that the house is transferred into the name of JUMA SULTANI MKUGENZI. E

10. That this declaration has been made voluntarily,consciously and without any undue influence.

Looking at the evidence adduced by PW.1 and DW.1 coupled with clause 2 of the said agreement (Exh. P.1) and F paragraphs 7 and 10 of the Declaration of Intent (Exh. P.4) the intention of parties becomes quite evident. One sees that the purchaser made an initial payment to the vendor i.e. Shs. 200,000/=. He further deposited the remaining Shs. 500,000/= with an advocate, presumably, pending consent to the transaction being given by the commissioner G together with delivery certificate of title upon execution of Exhibit P.3. It is further evident from exhibit P.1 and PW.4 particularly Paras 7 and 10 Exh. P.4 that the vendor had failed to fulfil the agreement by failing to deliver an unencumbered title. The defendant (PW.1) has in no uncertain terms admitted that he was in breach of the H agreement but now undertakes to execute it. It leaves no doubt in my mind that Exhibit P.1 and P.4 are executory documents. As the defendant(DW.1) is grantor in this case I think the two documents (Exhibits P.1 and P.4) should be construed if necessarily contra proferentum. Then words in these documents albeit not diligently written, should I be given their proper construction. Besides, it is a general rule that

A an instrument should be construed according to its natural meaning in the light of the circumstances in which it was executed. The decisions in Gathuti Hotel v Fazar Ilah [1957] E.A. 17 (CA-K) and S.L. Patel and Another v Dhana Singh s/h Hakan Singh [1962] E.A. 32 (CA-K) are very relevant.

B I have carefully and very soberly appraised the various arguments raised by Prof. Fimbo. I would have supported them had the defendant (DW.1) not made the Declaration of Intent - Exhibit P.4. I say so in the light of what I have, hopefully, demonstrated in my foregone analysis; and I need not repeat myself.

C I now turn to the last issue. The purchaser (PW.1) has brought a suit for specific performance. As I have already stated the remedy sought is an equitable one. The question is whether this is a case on which an order for specific performance should be made. In the instant matter the plaintiff has claimed specific performance of their agreement D with the Defendant. There has been no alternative claim for damages.

In my view the Defendant cannot rely on his own failure to do that from the doing of which he would ultimately have no lawful escape. It was implicit in this "Declaration of Intent - (Exh. P.4) that he thereby undertook to take the E necessary steps to fulfil what his mother had agreed to do (see Exh. P.1). "Equity looks on that as done which ought to be done. In favour of persons entitled specifically to enforce a contract, equity events an agreement to do a thing F as if the thing were already done "per Dacon, J.A.; Abdul Razak bin Mbarak v Feraj bin Abed el-Aweni and other 23 E.A.C.A. 120 at pp. 122 [1956] who quoted with approval Lindly, L.J. in Re Anstis (1886) 31 Ch. at pp. 605-606. Another view of the situation is that which was expressed by the Judicial Committee in Howard v G Miller [1915] A.C. at p. 326 as follows: "It is sometimes said that under a contract for the sale of an interest in land the vendor becomes a trustee for the purchaser of the interest contracted to be sole subject to a loan for the purchase money; but however useful such a statement may be made as illustrating a general principle of equity, it is H only true if and so far as a court of equity would under all the circumstances of the case grant specific performance of the contract".

In the light of the foregoing I think the agreement, though admittedly somewhat obscure is not too uncertain to be enforced. I would accordingly allow the claim and order specific performance of the agreement as prayed in para I II(1) of the plaint. Having regard to the history of the case parties to bear their costs. It is so ordered.

Order accordingly.

Ramadhani, and Mnzavas, JJ.A. and Mapigano Ag. J.A.: It has never been in dispute that the appellant, F Nkamangi Elifuraha, bought a "shamba" from the respondent, Mwinyishehe, for Shs. 1,500/=. What has brought the parties to court is the plot on which the appellant has built a house.

The respondent claims that he had permitted the appellant to put up a temporary shed as a store for building G materials for the house she was to build on the shamba she had bought. The respondent, who was the plaintiff at the Primary Court of Buguruni, brought two witnesses: John Mgota (S.W.2) and Ramadhani Athumani (S.W.3) in support of his case. The appellant, on the other hand, claimed that the plot in dispute had been a subject matter of H sale between the respondent and another man who defaulted. The appellant then wanted to buy the plot but the respondent decided to give it to her free of charge and this was evidenced in writing, Exhibit B.

The Primary Court, without considering Exhibit B, believed the two witnesses of the plaintiff and decided in his I favour. The

A defendant, i.e. the present appellant, appealed to the District Court which considered Exhibit B and decided in favour of the appellant. The respondent appealed to the High Court where Babati, J. restored the decision of the Primary Court and hence this third appeal.

B In his judgment Babati, J. questioned the genuiness of Exhibit B and also faulted the District Court for regarding Exhibit B as a contract while there was no consideration.

Before us the appellant was advocated for by Mr Maira, learned counsel. He had six grounds of appeal. First, Mr Maira argued that the learned judge was wrong in finding that there was no consideration. Second, it has been C submitted that even if Exhibit B is not taken to be a contract it is evidence of a legal gift. Third, the learned judge erred to hold, in a second appeal, that Exhibit B was fake when that was not contested at the trial. Fourth, the learned judge erred in holding that the contents of Exhibit B were not satisfactorily proved when they had not been

D disputed in the two lower courts. Fifth, the learned judge erred in holding that there was a implied consent for the building of the house. Lastly, that the whole proceedings before the Primary Court were null and void as the magistrate, contrary to the law, summed up to the assessors.

E We shall treat the six grounds as three lots. The first lot is the effect of the summing up by the Primary Court Magistrate to the assessors. The second is the legal issues concerning Exhibit B.

Lastly is the issue of consent for the building of the house on the disputed plot. The respondent did not have legal F representation therefore there were no replies to the points of law raised by the appellants.

As for the summing up Mr Maira submitted that it was contrary to Rule 3(3) of the Magistrate's Courts (Primary Courts) (Judgment of Court) Rules, 1987 GN. 2/88 which states:

G (3) For the avoidance of doubt a magistrate shall not, in lieu of or in addition to, the consultation referred to in sub rule (1) of this Rule, be entitled to sum up the other members of the court.

H Mr Maira contended that the use of the word "shall" makes it imperative that the magistrate is not to sum up to the assessors. In this case, Mr Maira said, the magistrate summed up, according to the counsel, the summing up I was fatal as it would appear to have directed the assessors as to what opinion they should give at the end of the day. It is our well considered opinion that though the summing up was misconceived, it was innocuous. It was not fatal and it did not occasion any injustice. Thus though A the sub rule is couched in imperative terms that oversight, we feel, is curable.

A number of submissions have been made with regard to Exhibit B. The first one was that the learned judge was wrong to have regarded Exhibit B as fake. Mr Maira said that the learned judge had no right to do so. He cited B Kanji v Gailoy & Roberts Limited [1959] E.A. 521. Mr Maira contended that the respondent did not object to Exhibit B being tendered and its authenticity had not been questioned at any time. Mr Maira conceded that the records do not show when Exhibit B was tendered in evidence though it has been given an identification letter. C

However, we are convinced that it was properly tendered and was never questioned. In fact during the hearing of this appeal the respondent himself admitted that there was a note which was written after their agreement. D Therefore, the learned judge was wrong, at the hearing of a second appeal, to doubt the genuiness of the document or to require its contents to have been proved to the satisfaction of the lower court. The Privy Council in Kanji v Gailey & Roberts gave an opinion that it would be wrong for an appellate court to upset the judgment of the trial E judge on the ground that it was not open to him to arrive at the conclusions of facts which he did. So Exhibit B must be taken to have been genuine. But what is its value?

The learned judge held that it was not evidence of a contract between the parties as there was no consideration. F That is so. However, Mr Maira submitted that Exhibit B is evidence of a gift by the respondent to the appellant. He cited Section 25(2) of the Law of Contract Ordinance Cap. 433 which provides that:

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect the validity, as between the donor and donee, of any gift actually made. G

In sub section (1) it is provided that "An agreement made without consideration is void ..." and then follows three exceptions. So sub-section (2) saves gifts from the requirements of consideration. We are satisfied that Exhibit B H evidenced a gift that was actually given to the donee, the appellant, by the donor, the respondent.

The last lot of rounds of appeal is whether or not there was consent for the building of the house on the plot by the appellant. Mr Maira submitted that there was at least an implied consent. He asked how could a big house be built I and roofed with iron sheets

A and then rented out without the respondent raising a finger? Admittedly this is a question of fact which does not concern us at this stage of appeal.

However, the determination of this point depends on the determination of certain points of law. Since we have B found that the genuiness of Exhibit B could not legally be challenged by the learned judge and that it was evidence of a gift and as such was unaffected by the absence of consideration, then it follows that there was consent. We feel that we better reproduce Exhibit B which was written on 7/6/81:

C Mimi Fulani Bin Mwishehe Lubaluba natoa kiwanja cha kujenga nyumba kwa Mwalimu Mkamangi Elifuraha bila hata hela moja. Na ana haki ya kuuza bila tatizo moja, na anahaki akifa mwenyewe wanaweza kurisi watoto wake bila tatizo lolote. D Nimetowa kiwanja hicho shahidi mbele ya mjumbe Bwana Johari Nyata ni mjumbe wa shina hili. Shahidi wa pili Ramadhani Amani, shahidi wa tatu Jorome Dismasi.

Then there followed the thumb print of the donor, the signature of the donee and that of the cell leader.

E The words of that document are very clear ad unambiguous. The respondent himself said before us:

"Tunagombania shamba na sio kiwanja cha kujengea. Hicho nilimpa na kama ataishi kwa heshima sitamfukuza. Lakini F yeye amechukua shamba na kulifanya lake kwa kuzungusha seng'enge".

The respondent was accompanied to this court by his son, Mohamed Mwinshehe Ubwa, who failed to hold himself G under control but manifested uneasiness by constantly jutting up his finger. As the respondent was extremely old, and as Mr Maira did not object, we allowed Mohamed to speak for the respondent. He started by saying that the H respondent could not give out any piece of land without him, Mohamed, the son, being consulted and in this case he was not. We warned him just to tell us the case of the respondent and no more. He then said that what is in dispute is the plot on which the house has been built. He went on to say that the fence of barbed wire has been put I closely around the house and that it has not enclosed any part of the shamba. This explanation is different from that of the respondent himself.

RAMADHANI AND MNZAVAS JJA AND MAPIGANO AG JA
It is our opinion that the respondent gave the appellant a plot on which to build a house as evidenced by Exhibit B A and as he has himself recapitulated before us. As for that plot on which the house stands there is no dispute between the respondent and the appellant, what the respondent objects to is the enclosure of some parts of his shamba by the appellant. B
We do not have any evidence as to how big or small is the part of the shamba which has been so enclosed by the appellant. In his testimony at the Primary Court the respondent said:

Kesho yake nikaona ile sehemu niliyompa mdaiwa anaweka sen'genge na kuongeza hata sehemu nyingine ambayo C sikumpa.

It has also never been disputed that within the plot given to the appellant there are two coconut trees belonging to the respondent. The appellant wanted to buy these but the respondent refused the offer. D
We are satisfied that the respondent gave the appellant a plot on which to built a house. What is disputed is the piece of land surrounding the house. For lack of evidence of the width of this surrounding land we order the District E Court to go and determine it. A house must have some open space around it. In our opinion a piece of land three meters wide all around the house in reasonable. If the enclosed area is more than three metres then the fence should be pulled towards the house to leave a piece of land three metres wide. But if the open space is three metres or less F than it should be left as it is.
Appeal is allowed as explained above. Each party to bear his own costs. G
Appeal allowed.

This case involved a dispute based on sale of a house. The plaintiff appellant won the case in the District Court and lost it on appeal to the High Court by the defendant/respondent. On appeal to the Court of Appeal it was argued D that the memorandum of appeal to the High Court was not accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from as required by O.XXXIX R.1(1) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966.

G Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: The appellant, Mariam Abdallah Fundi, is a minor whose affairs have been conducted through her next friend, one Rajabu Alli Hamidi. The respondent, Kassim Abdallah Farsi, was the brother and now is the administrator of the estate of Fatuma Abdallah Farsi who died H intestate on 14th November, 1988.

Before her death the deceased had entered into a contract for the sale of her house Plot 52 Block "K" in LINDI to the appellant for Shs. 300,000/=. On 16th August, 1988 the contract was signed by the parties and a down I payment of Shs. 30,000/= was made (Exh. A). Then on 12th September, 1988 an instalment of Shs. 120,000/= was paid by the appellant through Mr Hamidi (Exh. B). However, before the appellant finished paying and before A she obtained possession, the deceased died. The appellant then sought to complete paying the contract price to the respondent and so to come into possession of the house but the latter refused to receive payment and would rather refund the money paid. B

The District Court of Mtwara decided in favour of the appellant who was then the plaintiff. The present respondent appealed to the High Court where he succeeded.

This now is an appeal from that decision. Before us the appellant was represented by Mr Marando, learned C advocate. He had four grounds of appeal. But we feel the appeal can be disposed of on the first ground. Mr Marando submitted that the memorandum of appeal to the High Court was not accompanied with a copy of the decree as required by O.XXXIX R.1(1) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966. D

The respondent, on the other hand, appeared in person and, as a layman, did not advance any counter argument. But even if he were represented, his counsel would have had an unenviable task because that order provides: E

> Every appeal shall be preferred in the form of memorandum signed by the appellant or his advocate ... The memorandum shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from ....

It has been held a number of times: F

That 0.39, R.1 is mandatory in requiring every memorandum of appeal to be accompanied by a copy of the decree or order appealed from, and that where an appellant has failed to comply with this provisions, the appeal is not properly before the G court and must be dismissed. Munshiran & Co. v Star Soda Water Factory [1934], 16 K.L.R. 50 which was followed in Kotak Ltd. v Kooverji (1967) E.A. 348.

The learned judge in this appeal overlooked that fact and went ahead to determine the appeal which was not H properly before him instead of dismissing it. So what is now the position? We must treat as done that which ought to have been done. The learned judge ought to have dismissed the appeal but did not. We must treat the appeal I

A to have been null and void. We are then left with the judgment of the District Court which was in favour of the appellant.

Incidentally, we have made two observations in our perusal of the record. One, Exh. A and Exh. B have not been B stamped. But this is not fatal as the stamping could legally be made subsequently. Secondly, the house being on a registered land its disposition would require the consent of the commissioner for Lands.

After saying so, we allow the appeal with costs.

Appeal allowed.

So he decided to appeal against the decision G of the High Court refusing the application to the Court of Appeal. No leave was sought and obtained to appeal to the Court of Appeal.

Muccadam, for the appellant A Kalunga, for the respondent
[zJDz]Judgment
Makame, Kisanga and Omar, JJ.A.: This appeal arises from a dispute over a house of which the appellant is the landlord and the respondent the tenant: We assume that Saide Salmin Ambar is the one person as Saide Salmin B Islam.
It is not necessary to go into the details of the controversy for the purpose of the task immediately in front of us. Enough it is to say that it was the present respondent who took the dispute to the High Court of Zanzibar sitting at Vuga and that Mnilla R.M., (Extended Jurisdiction), in an ex-parte judgment, found her still the lawful tenant of the C present appellant whom he also ordered to pay the present respondent some damages.
The appellant applied to have the ex-parte judgment set aside but the application was refused. He has now come D to this Court wanting to appeal against that order refusing to set aside the ex-parte judgment and is being represented by Mr Muccadam, learned advocate. The respondent is advocated for by Mr Kalunga, learned counsel.
Mr Muccadam filed a Notice of Motion asking to be permitted to file a supplementary record because, he said, E High Court Misc. Application No. 10 of 1991 had not been brought to his attention when he filed the record of appeal: That Misc. Application contained, inter alia, his client's affidavit explaining the reasons why the ex-parte judgment should be set aside. F
Mr. Kalunga resisted Mr Muccadam's application before us and submitted that Mr Muccadam had not really handled his brief with any seriousness otherwise he would have made sure that he had all the necessary papers. We wish to pause here and observe that Mr Muccadam should not have made a general search for the alleged affidavit. G He should have specifically asked for this file for Misc. application No. 10 of 1991 because Mr Mnilla's Rulling clearly indicated it was in that Misc. Application, 10 of 1991, and not in the main civil case or any other cause.
It appeared to the court that the application before us would turn on a different issue, infact, and accordingly we H invited both counsel to address us on that one. The issue is, whether the intending appellant was entitled to come on appeal as of right, or whether he had first to obtain leave to appeal against the order refusing to set aside the ex-parte judgment. Mr Muccadam submitted that the order by Mr Mmilla was itself a decree so he did not have to I obtain leave
A first. He was entitled to appeal as of right. Mr Kalunga argued that Mr Muccadam should have applied for leave.
Appeals to this court are governed by the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979, section 5. Subsection (a) and (b) set B out all the situations in which a party may appeal as of right while subsection (c) provides:

With the leave of the High Court or of the Court of Appeal, against every other decree, order, judgment or finding of the High C Court.

We are of the considered view that appealing from an order refusing to set aside an ex-parte judgment does not come under sub-sections (a) or (b). It comes, rather, under subsection (c), for which it is necessary to obtain leave D first. As no such leave was sought and obtained, this intended appeal is incompetently before us. We accordingly strike it out with costs.

Matata, for the appellant B

Mussa, for the respondent.

[zJDz]Judgment

Ramadhani, and Mnzavas, JJ.A. and Mapigano, Ag. J.A.: Before us came Mr Matata, learned counsel, on behalf of the appellant, Masanja Mazambi, who was convicted of the murder of Deha d/o Malaba at Mitindo C Misungwi, Kwimba District, on or about 13th May, 1988. The learned advocate had four reasons for challenging the judgment of Masanche, J. who presided over the trial before the High Court of Tanzania at Mwanza.

First, Mr Matata said the learned trial judge was wrong to admit the cautioned statement of the appellant as Exh. D P.3. Then, he maintained that the testimonies of P.W.1 and P.W.2 ought to have been rejected as the appellant made an involuntary confession to them. Yet, the learned advocates argued that the learned judge erred in holding that the appellant was an aider and abbetor. Lastly, Mr Matata contended that the defence of compulsion was E available to the appellant.

The respondent/Republic was represented by Mr Mussa, learned Senior State Attorney, who supported the findings of the learned judge as being firmly grounded on the properly received evidence before him. F

The learned trial judge believed Paulo Fita Kasambale, the chairman of Misungwi village (P.W.1) and Paulo Ruhumbika, the Secretary of the same village (P.W.2) who, in the main, said that the deceased was found dead at her house after having been slashed by a panga by unknown persons. Somehow the sungusungu got wind of who G the assailant was and so they netted one Jagi Magangana who isolated the appellant as his associate. It is a pity that Jagi died before the trial. The appellant was then sent to the C.C.M. Branch where, under interrogation of the Sungusungu, owned the killing. The appellant told P.Ws 1 and 2 that he was taken to the house of the deceased by H Jagi without knowing the purpose. While there he was given a stick and a torch. His assignment was to hit the iron sheet door of the deceased's house and bark orders of lying down to the inmates of the house and to prohibit neighbours from coming out of their houses. The appellant did that obediently while Jagi I

A broke into the house and, after dragging the poor lady to the door, hacked her with the panga he was carrying. Jagi and the appellant then swiftly abandoned the scene. The appellant made a cautioned statement before the Police and that was admitted as Exh. P3 and now forms the first ground of this appeal.

B Mr Matata had three reasons in attacking the admissibility of that statement. First, he said that it was a hearsay piece of evidence since it was made through an interpreter who was not called to testify. He said that in R v Mabara Festo (1936) 3 E.A.C.A. 119 it was held that such statement was inadmissible. Then he said that the C provisions of section 57(4) of the C.P.A. were not complied with. Lastly, he pointed out that there was not a trial within a trial. On the other hand, Mr Mussa said that the statement was admissibly despite the fact that the interpreter was not called to testify. He cited D.P.P. v Regina Karantini and Another Criminal Appeal No. 110 D of 1988 (unreported) at p.5 which held such statement to be admissible but not reliable.

We agree with Mr Matata that the statement was inadmissible for the failure to hold a trial within a trial. When E A.S.P. Mohamed Maganda (P.W.3) wanted to tender the statement, Mr Magongo, the defence counsel at the trial, objected and prayed for a trial within a trial but he withdraw with prayer upon being asked a few questions from the bench. The was must unfortunate. That prayer should not have been refused or even objected to by the F prosecution. A trial within a trial has to be conducted whenever an accused person objects to the tendering of any statement he has recorded. We do not find it necessary to go into the non-compliance with section 57 of the C.P.A. or the two authorities that were cited to us.

G Mr Matata submitted that once Exh. P.3 is excluded then there is no evidence left on which to base a conviction because of the inconsistencies in the testimonies of P.Ws 1 and 2. He then said that the Sungusungu are notorious for torture and that is the treatment the appellant claimed to have received while in their custody. The learned counsel said that the learned judge brushed off that claim on grounds that the scars which the appellant exhibited to H support his claim were insignificant. Mr Matata submitted that the learned judge viewed the scars in 1991 while the injuries had been inflicted in 1988 and that the scars had faded away.

We agree with Mr Mussa that even without Exh. P.3 the evidence of P.W.1 and P.W.2 is enough to support the I conviction. Mr Matata did not quote to us any example of contradictions between P.W.1 and P.W.2. Admittedly there were minor variations in what they said which are due to the lapse of time and are healthy sign that they had not rehearsed the evidence. Besides A that, the learned judge who tried the case heard and observed the witnesses when testifying and believed them.

The third ground of appeal is baseless. Mr Matata conceded that if P.Ws 1 and 2 are believed then the appellant was aider and abbetor. B

As for the last ground, with respect to Mr Matata, it is hopeless. The defence of compulsion is not at all available to the appellant. Even assuming that there was compulsion, then it was not "during the whole of the time" the offence was committed. We thus dismiss the appeal. C

Appeal dismissed.

Mwalusanya, J.: This is an application filed by one Mr. Rashidi s/o Juma for leave to appeal to the Tanzania Court of Appeal on a point of law. The applicant was represented by Counsel Mr. Rweyemamu, while the respondent Mr. Agricola s/o John resisted the application in person. G
This matter concerns a case in which the applicant filed an application for vacant possession of premises at the Bukoba Resident Magistrate's Court against the respondent. The case was filed in the R.M.'s Court because the H District Court has no jurisdiction to hear such cases. However the case in the RM's Court was heard and tried by a Senior District Magistrate one Mr. Kajuna. The applicant was successful and respondent appealed to the High Court.
In the High Court Munyera J. was very brief and he held: I
I have no intention of going into the merits of the case as there is
1990 TLR 2
A fatal irregularity apparent on the face of the record of a Resident Magistrate but it was tried by a District Magistrate Mr. Kajuna. Section 6 (1) of the Magistrates' Court Act No. 2/1984 reads Subject to the provisions of s.7, a magistrate's Court shall be duly constituted when held by a single Magistrate being:
B (a) ....
(b) ....
(c) in case of a court of resident magistrate, a resident magistrate.
C While a District Court can be presided over by a resident magistrate, a resident magistrate's court, cannot be presided over by a district magistrate.
I am in complete agreement with the observations of Mr. Justice Munyera. Despite the gallant efforts made by Mr. D Rweyemamu that this was a curable error, however I am of a different view. As clearly pointed out by this court in the case of Giryago s/o Mwita v R. [1978] TLR. n. 89. (Mfalila J.), lack of jurisdiction in the presiding magistrate is a fundamental defect that is not curable at all. The same view was held by the late Mr. Justice Biron in E the case of R v. Pangaras s/o Liprima [1968] H.C.D. n. 178 who held that a trial by a District Magistrate who lacked jurisdiction in a Court he was presiding was a complete nullity. Therefore the argument by Mr. Rweyemamu that the irregularity is curable is untenable.
F That leads me to the conclusion that there is no point of law raised by the applicant which is fit for consideration by the Tanzania Court of Appeal. Therefore this application is dismissed with costs.
Order accordingly.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Sentencing - Powers of subordinate court to sentence an offender for scheduled A offence - Section 170(1) (a) of the C.P.A. - Whether sentence passed by a Senior Resident Magistrate needs to be confirmed by the High Court. B
-Headnote
The appellant is appealing against a sentence of twelve years imprisonment on the ground that his parents are old and depend on him and that the punishment is more than he could bear.
Held: (i) Section l70(1)(a) of the C.P.A. empowers a subordinate court to sentence an offender for a scheduled C offence to a term of imprisonment not exceeding eight years;
(ii) the scope of the proviso to section 170(2) is limited to section 170(2) and does not apply to the whole of section l70, and in effect it does not give Senior Resident Magistrate unlimited sentencing powers; D
(iii) having dependants is not a mitigating factor in sentencing.
Case Information
Appeal allowed in part. E
[zJDz]Judgment
Mchome, J.: This is an appeal by Alexander Mpelemba against sentence. He was found guilty with two others of robbery with violence and sentenced to twelve years imprisonment each. The appellant's ground of appeal is that his parents are old and depend on him and that the punishment is "more than I can bear". F
Having dependants is not a mitigating factor in sentence since the appellant ought to have thought of the dependants and refrained from committing the offence instead of committing an offence and pleading for lenience because of the dependants. G
But as the learned State Attorney, Miss Mwaiteleke has submitted the sentence imposed is ultra vires the powers of the subordinate court The minimum sentence for robbery in 1987 was seven years imprisonment. The learned Senior Resident Magistrate passed a sentence of twelve years imprisonment apparently due to the big value of the property stolen. H Under section 170(1) (a) a subordinate court has powers to sentence an offender for a scheduled offence for a term of imprisonment not exceeding eight years. The learned Senior Resident Magistrate perhaps misconstrued the proviso in section 170 (2) which states that:
this section shall not apply in respect of any sentence passed by a Senior Resident Magistrate. I
1990 TLR 4
A My interpretation of this proviso is that it applies only to section 170(2) and not to the whole section 170. It means that a sentence passed by a Senior Resident Magistrate need not be confirmed by the High Court. But it does not give a Senior Resident Magistrate unlimited sentencing powers. My interpretation is based on the golden B rule of avoiding absurdities.

I therefore allow the appeal against sentence and reduce the sentence to one of eight years imprisonment. By way of revision the sentences against the original third and fourth accused persons, Laitoni Temelayinga Lukosi and C Zavery Chotamasege are also reduced from twelve to eight years imprisonment.
Order accordingly.

Criminal Law - Murder - Circumstances where the defence of insanity can be invoked.

F The appellant was condemned to suffer death after his conviction for the murder of one, Micaela Mwenda. The deceased was the husband of one Danda whom the accused believed to be the paramour of his wife. According to the evidence available, the appellant deliberately put poison in some flour which the deceased used to cook a meal G for herself and the family. The deceased, her husband and the son ate the meal. The husband and their son survived the dreadful ordeal. After the death of the deceased the appellant wrote to his brother confiding to him how the deceased unhappily got killed when the appellant intended to kill the deceased's husband who had been H sleeping with his wife. At the hearing of the appeal counsel for the appellant argued that the learned trial judge should have invoked the provisions of section 220(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act i.e should have ordered the appellant to be detained at a mental hospital for medical examination.

Mwanyika, State Attorney for the Republic

Mcharo, Advocate, for the Appellant.

[zJDz]Judgment

Makame, Ramadhani and Mfalila, JJ.A.: The appellant Dastan Antony Luambano was condemned to suffer C death and he is now appealing from the decision. The High Court sitting at Songea, (Kazimoto, J.), found it established that the appellant, with malice aforethought, killed Micaela Mwenda, the wife of Edward Danda, a person the appellant believed to be his wife's paramour. The allegation was that the appellant deliberately put D poison in some flour which the deceased used to cook a meal for herself and her family. She died as a result of eating that meal. Her husband and her son were also taken ill as a result of partaking of the meal. This was at Namabengo village in Songea District on 31st August, 1986. E

Mr. Mwanyika learned State Attorney, resisted the appeal argued before us by Miss Mcharo, learned Counsel for the appellant.

Miss Mcharo had filed two grounds of appeal - that the trial court should have considered the defence of accidental poisoning, and secondly, that the learned trial judge should have invoked the provisions of section 220 (1) of the F Criminal Procedure Act, 1985; in other words he should have ordered the appellant to be detained at a mental hospital for medical examination.

We were not at all surprised that at the hearing of the appeal Miss Mcharo abandoned the first ground, and we are G able to say at the outset that Miss Mcharo is on very thin ground with regard to the second prong of her attack.

Before section 220(1) can be brought into play it must first appear to the court that the accused person might have been insane at the material time. There must be some material which would make it appear to the court, and H reasonably so if we may add, that the accused person might have been insane when he committed the deed. In the instant case we are of the considered view that there was no material such as would have made the court feel that the accused might have been insane.

There was plenty of evidence, despite the appellant's protestations to the contrary, that the appellant believed that I the deceased's husband,

A Danda, was in the habit of enjoying the appellant's wife's intimate favours. After the deceased had got killed the appellant wrote to a brother of his confiding to him how the deceased unhappily got killed when the appellant had intended to kill the deceased's husband who had been sleeping with the appellant's wife. We see nothing that would B persuade us to agree that the trial court should have ordered the appellant to be medically examined as to his mental health. Miss Mcharo urged that the appellant's act of poisoning food stuff which he knew would be consumed also by other people, and not only by Danda, was irrational. We ask, what murder is ever rational?

C We agree with Mr. Mwanyika that the evidence against the appellant was overwhelming and we accordingly dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

[zJDz]Judgment
Ruhumbika, J.: This appeal by Amina Mpimbi arises from the decision of the Resident Magistrate's Court of B Singida in Civil Case no. 180 of 1987.
The appellant herein brought an action against the respondent Ramadhani Kiwe demanding to be paid a sum of shs. 50,000/= in damages for that malicious prosecuting she claimed was brought against her in the Primary Court of C Mtinko where the court acquitted her.
The trial court considered the evidence laid before it and decided against the appellant whereupon the appellant's claim was dismissed with costs. The trial court reasoned out that the appellant (who was the plaintiff before that court) did not satisfy the said court that she had proved "want of probable cause", "malice" or "bad faith" on the part D of the respondent herein (who was the defendant) when he prosecuted the appellant in the Primary Court of Mtinko.
The background to this appeal is interesting and is as follows: the appellant is married to the respondent's brother E and therefore she is a sister-in-law of the respondent. One time there was found a dead sheep in the shamba of the appellant (here the appellant talks of one such dead sheep while the respondent talks of two). Following this there were confrontations between the two parties before this court. The respondent banking on what he claims his F children had told him took it that it was the appellant who had slain the sheep as a result of straying into her shamba. The appellant on her part appeared to have disclaimed this.

Eventually, the respondent took up the matter with the police and up to the Primary Court of Mtinko where he G persecuted the appellant (presumably) for wilfully having killed his sheep.

According to the respondent, the appellant was acquitted not because the prosecution was malicious but because his children who had seen the appellant were not allowed to give evidence as they were of tender years. The H magistrate there it would appear did not bother to conduct the voire dire examination of those children. However, as this court was not favoured with the opportunity of perusing the record of the Primary Court of Mtinko, much to be relied upon are the submission of the parties themselves before this court. The appellant on her part supports the fact that one such a child of the respondent could not testify because of the child's tender years. One of these I children (Zena

RUHUMBIKA J

A Ramadhani) gave evidence in the Resident Magistrate's Court at Singida on 19/5/88 and her age is shown to be thirteen years. The trial magistrate affirmed this child as he took stock of the fact that she did understand the nature of the affirmation. Zena told the court that actually the appellant cut the sheep (two sheep) which died in her shamba B and that the appellant injured another two sheep. The witnesses called by the appellant in the Resident Magistrate's Court (including the Ward Secretary) do not seem to have helped her. No one told the court that the dead sheep found in the appellant's shamba had been sent there by the respondent himself as claimed by the C appellant herself. They simply told the court below that they had seen the sheep carcasses in the appellant's shamba and that was all they said.

This court in dealing with Civil Appeal No.16 of 1984 (Dodoma Registry, unreported) and in which the parties were Amina Mpimbi v Tabuy Kilongo, had this to observe quoting the case of Herniman v Smith [1938] D A.C. 305 quoting:

It is not required of any prosecutor that he must have tested every possible relevant fact before he takes action. His duty E is not to ascertain whether there is a defence, but whether there is reasonable and probable cause for prosecution.

In that case the House of Lords approved a definition of reasonable and probable cause, by Hawking, J. in Hick v Faulkner (1881) 8 Q.B.D. 167,171, as:

F an honest belief in the guilt of the accused based on a full conviction, founded upon reasonable grounds, of the existence of a state of circumstances, which, assuming them to be true, would reasonably lead an ordinary prudent and cautious man, placed in the position of the accuser, to the conclusion that the person charged was probably guilty G of the offence imputed.

The respondent in these circumstance had "reasonable and probable cause" to believe that the appellant had wilfully H killed the sheep after straying into her shamba.

As the record of proceedings of the lower court does reveal, an amicable settlement of the matter could not be achieved between the parties and this precipitated the respondent to seek recourse in a court of law resulting in that criminal prosecution brought against the appellant at Mtinko Primary Court.

I For the appellant to have succeeded in her action against the respondent, she should have proved in the court below that there was "malice" on the part of the respondent in that A he had prosecuted her in the Primary Court "without just cause or excuse" or that the respondent had no "reasonable and probable cause" when he prosecuted her over there.

Ipso facto, this appeal has no merit and is hereby dismissed with costs for the reason contained herein. B

Appeal dismissed.

The two appellants Mwalimu Omari and Ahmed Banguo were sued in the Resident Magistrates Court by the F respondent Omari A. Bilali. The subject matter of the suit was a plot No. 60 block "E" situated at Magomeni. Brief facts are that at Magomeni there was an area which at first had not been surveyed. Mwalimu Omari occupied this area whose size the record does not show. Somehow it was decided by some official to survey the area The area G was surveyed and two plots came out of it; plot No. 60 and plot No. 61. Plot No. 61 was given to Mwalimu Omari. It appears that before the plot was surveyed, Mwalimu Omari had given part of the area (now plot 60) to his in-law. This person in turn sold it to the suit defendant Ahmed Banguo. Banguo occupied this unsurveyed land which had nothing but a toilet and some cassava. When the area was demarcated into plots No. 60 and plot No. H 61 Mwalimu Omari got plot No. 61 and the plaintiff was offered plot No. 60. Mwalimu Omari it appears had wished the plot to have been given to Banguo. In the Resident Magistrates Court two issues were framed. (1) who was the

A evidence, the Resident magistrate held that plot no.60 belonged to the plaintiff and there was no compensation for the house built while the case was sub judice, hence this appeal.

B Held: (i) Title under customary law and a granted right of occupancy in an area declared township or minor settlement cannot co-exist. Title to urban land depends on grant;

(ii) squatters in the eyes of the law cannot equate themselves to any person holding a title under right of occupancy even where the squatter occupies land under customary law,

C (iii) once an area is declared an urban planning area and land surveyed and plot demarcated whoever occupies land under customary law has to be quick to apply for right of occupancy. If such person sleeps on such right and the plot is given to another, he becomes a squatter in law and would have to move away; he strictly would not be D entitled to anything;

(iv) the appellants erected the building knowing fully well that the matter was still sub judice and that the respondent had a valid letter of offer from the Ministry of Lands. Since they did so at their own peril no compensation can legally be given to them except for the few cassavas and toilet which existed at the start of the E suit.

Masanche, J.: The two appellants Mwalimu Omari and Ahmed Banguo were sued in the Resident Magistrates G Court of Kisutu here in Dar es Salaam by the respondent Omary A. Balali. The subject matter of the suit was a Plot Number 60 Block "E" situated at Magomeni.

Just for purposes of interest a lot of advocates have handled this case. It started with Mr. Ismaili, learned advocate drafting the plaint for the plaintiff, Omari A. Bilali. The defendant engaged Mr. Rahim, learned advocate. The case H got started on 8/9/82 before Mrs. Kimaro RM (as she then was). The case then got adjourned. The whole of 1983 passed; then 1984,1985,1986 and finally on 3/7/87, the case came for continuation of hearing. This time Mr. Mwajasho had taken over from Mr. Rahim. Then on 31/7/87 the case got finalised. Judgment was entered for the I plaintiff with costs. The defendants got aggrieved and appealed to the High Court through Mr. Rahim. But then when the case came up for hearing it is Dr. Lamwai, learned advocate who argued the appeal. There were five grounds of A appeal that had been preferred by Mr. Rahim. Mr. Lamwai decided to adopt the whole memorandum of appeal, but when it came to arguing the actual appeal, Dr. Lamwai, quite rightly to my mind, abandoned ground No.l saying that the record does not support it. He then proceeded to argue grounds No.2,3 and 4 together. Grounds No.5 B and 6 were argued separately.

Briefly the facts of the case were these, at least from the record.

At Magomeni there was an area which, at first, had not been surveyed. Mwalimu Omari occupied this area. The record does not tell us the size of the plot. But, for sure it was not surveyed. So Mwalimu Omari occupied the C whole of it.

Then, somehow it was decided by whatever official it was to survey this area. So the area got surveyed and two plots came out of it; Plot No. 60 and Plot No. 61. Plot No. 61 was given to Mwalimu Omari. Naturally Mwalimu Omari, had wished to be given the other Plot as well - Plot No. 60. D

If one reads the record well it appears that before the plot got surveyed this Mwalimu Omari gave the area (now Plot 60) to his in-law (name not given in the record). This person in turn sold it to the first defendant Ahmed Banguo. It is not correct therefore, to say that the first defendant Ahmed Banguo was given the piece of land gratis E by the second defendant. Mwalimu Omari himself says this, in his evidence in chief in the Resident Magistrates Court:

Banguo bought the house from one person who is my in-law and now deceased. Plot No. 60 was my plot. I had given F the plot to my in-law. My in-law died and the parents of my in-law sold the plot to the 1st defendant.

Banguo, however occupied this unsurveyed land which had nothing except for a toilet and some little cassava. So, G when the area got, demarcated into two plots, Plot No. 60 and Plot No. 61, Mwalimu got Plot 61 and the plaintiff was offered Plot No. 60. Mwalimu Omari, it appears had wished the plot to have been given to Banguo.

In the Resident Magistrates Court two issues were framed: H

They were:

1. Who is the lawful holder of Plot No. 60 Block E Magomeni Dar es Salaam. I
2. To what relief are to parties entitled to.

1990 TLR p12

MASANCHE J

A After both sides had given evidence (no witnesses were called) the learned resident magistrate held that Plot no. 60 belonged to the plaintiff. She said:

In this case, the plaintiff has proved his ownership over the plot by documentary title, a letter of offer of Right of B Occupancy of the plot. He has also furnished the Court with receipts which confirm(s) that he has paid all necessary charges. The letter of offer clearly shows that the Plaintiff was granted Right of Occupancy from 1/7/78 for 33 years. On C the other hand the defendants have proved unsufrucuary proof of user through the claim that they were given a letter of offer or Right of Occupancy effective from 24/1/80 but they didn't furnish the court with any document to confirm the same.

D Counsel Dr. Lamwai and Mr. Mwajasho made very interesting arguments before me. Dr. Lamwai, for the appellants, for example told this court that DWI, Ahmed Banguo had occupied the area (Plot 60) since 1962, at a time when it was not surveyed. It therefore implies that the said Banguo was a holder on customary law. The E respondent Omari A Bilali came later, in 1978. Even if, right now, this Omari A. Bilali, has been granted offer of right occupancy or even if he had the complete real right of occupancy his title would be inferior to that one of Banguo. Dr. Lamwai then criticised the learned magistrate for relying on the case of Mtoro bin Mwamba v A. G. F (1953) T.L.R. (R) page 327. The learned Magistrate had, relying on that case, held that:

The owner of land in customary land tenure does not have a title on the land. He has only the right to use or in other G words he has unsufrucuary right over the land.

Dr. Lamwai criticised the magistrate for having sought assistance from Mtoro's case. He argued that Mtoro's case is no longer law as that case has been over-ruled by the case of Metusela Nyangaswa v Christopher Nyirabu H (Court of Appeal Civil appeal No. 14 of 1985) in which Mustafa J.A. held (according to Dr. Lamwai) that the right of a holder of right of occupancy by native law and custom is not extinguished and the person does not become a squatter upon the area becoming a planning area Dr. Lamwai went on to argue that since the Land Ordinance I recognises both tenures, there is a possibility of both tenures in a planning area co-existing.

Mr. Mwajasho, for the respondent submitted at some length. He supported the learned magistrate in holding that A the appellants were squatters on Plot No. 61 and that, therefore, had no title at all. And, even assuming that they had a title under customary law, that title was inferior to the one the respondents had. Mr. Mwajasho commended the learned magistrate for seeking guidance from the old case of Mtoro Bin Mwamba (Supra) which according to B him was the law. He also submitted that in fact the case of Nyangaswa v Nyirabu quoted by Dr. Lamwai, does not over-rule Mtoro's case.

What Mustafa J.A. said in Nyangaswa's case is that after an area is declared Urban planning area, a squatter or a person holding title under customary law continues to enjoy some rights, e.g. compensation but this was not C superior to that of a holder of right of occupancy. Squatters have a right of facing authorities for fast registration if they comply with set down rules. If they do not do so and someone is granted the plot, they can only be compensated for unexhausted improvement, so Mr. Mwajasho argues. D

I have considered the submissions from both counsel quite seriously. I am afraid, the law is as Mr. Mwajasho, learned Counsel for the respondent says. The interpretation of Nyangaswa's case by Mr. Mwajasho is correct. In that case as I read it, Mustafa J.A. and Omar J.A. who signed the majority judgment, Makame J.A. dissenting E seem to have said that a person holding title under native law and custom but in an area which had been surveyed would have an inferior title to the plot in case another person is granted the same under Land Ordinance. It seems the court there agreed with the interpretation of the law by the learned advocate of the respondent Nyangaswa Mr. F Mkatte. The Court there said:

Mr. Mkatte who appeared for the respondent would seem to contend that the trial Judge did not hold that the right of a holder of a right of occupancy by virtue of native law and custom is extinguished solely because an area has been G declared a planning area. He however seemed to state that a right of occupancy granted in terms of section 6 of the Land Ordinance Cap. 113 confers a superior and overriding title. H

Mustafa J.A. then went on to state:

At any rate I am not prepared, on the rather inconclusive and tenuous arguments advanced in this appeal, to hold that the right of a holder of a right of occupancy by virtue of native law and I

1990 TLR p14

MASANCHE J

A custom is extinguished and he thereby becomes a "squatter" on an area being declared a planning area.

I understand that passage to mean; which appears to be the most sensible interpretation as Mr. Mwajasho says, B that a squatter, in an area declared a planning area would not be thrown out mercilessly. He would be entitled to something, say, some compensation but that does not mean that the two can co-exist. This view, I would venture to say, finds support in a passage by two learned authors R.W. James and G.M. Fimbo in their treatise Customary C Land Law of Tanzania: A source book, at page 592, where they say this; about squatters:

It is normal for the Government to compensate squatters on town land, when any occupied portion is required. The legal necessity to pay compensation is uncertain, it is arguable that persons occupying town land without any grant are using D such land under customary law, for a right of occupancy "is defined as" a title to the use and occupation of land and includes the title of a native or of a native community lawfully using or occupying land in accordance with native law and E custom (section 2 of Cap 113).

So squatters, in the eyes of the law, I repeat, cannot equate themselves to any person holding a title under right of occupancy even where that squatter is there under customary law. Once an area is declared an urban planning area, F and land is surveyed and given plots, whoever occupied the land even under customary law would normally be informed to be quick in applying for rights of occupancy. If such person sleeps on such a right and the plot is given to another, the squatter, in law, would have to move away and in law, strictly would not be entitled to anything. G However, as the learned authors R.W. James and G.M. Fimbo say, governments have always compensated such going away squatters for their unexhausted improvements. And I agree with these learned authors when they say that these compensations are made (at least after 1967), probably, with in mind the sentiments of Mwalimu H Nyerere in his book Uhuru na Umoja at page 53 - 54 where he says:

Land is a free gift from God to all His living things to be used now and in the future. When I use my energy and talent to I clear a piece of ground for my use it is clear that I am trying to transform this basic gift from God so that it can satisfy a human need.... By clearing that ground I have actually added to its value and have enabled it to be used to satisfy a human need. Whoever A takes then this piece of ground must pay me for adding value to it through clearing it by my own labour (Mso quoted in Customary Land Law of Tanzania A source book R.W. James and G.M. Fimbo at page 598). B

It is true as Mr. Mwajasho says that the squatters whenever they apply for rights of occupancy over a plot they have an adverse possession and are normally given priority. The two appellants did not do so for plot No. 61. Mwalimu Omari was fast on acquiring title for plot No. 60. Ahmed could have done the same for plot No. 61. C Because he did not do anything, the respondent got an offer first, in 1978. "If Ahmed Bangu got another offer after 1978, on the same Plot (Plot 61) that offer was superfluous".

Here, again, perhaps a passage from Customary Law of Tanzania by the same authors Mr. James and G.M. Fimbo D would have the matter of allocation home.

The authors say, at page 83:

The nature of grant (allocation or allotment) is a common source of litigation in areas where there is land shortage. In E the face of conflicting allegations of allotment and allocation the courts are guided by a number of rules: it is a question of the intention of the land allocating authority; evidence that the grantee was forbidden from fencing the land or planting F permanent trees on the land is an indication that absolute interest was not intended to pass "The courts have on many occasions held that the planting of permanent trees and the act of fencing land, is, customary jurisprudence, acts tantamount to ownership and are inconsistent with rights less than ownership (Jeremiah s/o Antony v Ramadhani Saidi G (1963) L.C.C.A., 63/1962; Mariam bint Chaurembo v Hamisi Waziri (1946) Application to the Governor No. 140, No. 24/1946).

The learned authors go on to say: H

The best evidence of the nature of a grant is of course direct evidence, i.e.; the evidence of the authority responsible for granting the land, or the witnesses thereto. If the grantor is dead, or not available, any document executed when the grant I was made is of

A vital importance. Such evidence is also invaluable when two persons claim to have been allotted the same piece of land.

After Mr. Mwajasho submitted in reply to the submission of Dr. Lamwai, Dr. Lamwai, also submitted. He has B complained that at least the learned magistrate should have compensated the appellant if she held that the plot belonged to the respondent. But then I see that the learned magistrate gave reasons, sound to my mind, why she was not ordering for compensation for the house. She said:

C On the question of building which the defendants erected on the plot, I hold that as the defendants did erect the building with a clear view that the matter was still sub judice in court and that plaintiff had a valid letter of offer from the D Ministry of Lands since 1978, they did so at their own peril. No compensation can legally be given to the defendant....

Of course the defendants could only be compensated for the cassava and the toilet.

E Lastly, there was a reference both in the judgment of the lower court and by Counsel, of Government Circular No. 4 of 1953. That circular would have no direct bearing to the facts of this case. That circular was passed in 1953 to give elaborate procedure of compensation on people in areas other than urban areas. The had been declared township, or municipalities or ninon settlements.

F It also emphasized the preposition that an African who held land under customary law, even if he had no documentary title would be recognised to have had a title. But this did not apply to Urban areas. Title to urban land depends on a grant. So, to answer Dr. Lamwai's question of whether the two titles, title under customary law, and G the rights of occupancy under the land law would co-exist side by side, the answer is that in an area declared to be township or minor settlement, the two cannot co-exist. As I said, title to urban land depends on a grant.

H This appeal is dismissed in is entirety. Costs to follow events.

Appeal dismissed.

Flynote

Criminal Law- Doctrine of common intention - Death resulting from a fight. B

Evidence- Identification - Repudiated confession - Credibility and demeanour of witnesses - Conflict of evidence.

-Headnote

In a trial for murder caused during a fight at night, the trial judge found the appellants guilty of murder on the C evidence that the first appellant was identified as being present when the second and third appellant attacked the deceased on the fateful night and thus participated in the murder under the doctrine of common intention, that the second appellant was identified as one of the attackers, that the third appellant had confessed to have hit the D deceased on the head with a stone, and that the third appellant's repudiation of the confession required no corroboration for his confession to support his conviction.

The Court of Appeal of Tanzania allowed the first and second appellants' appeal and quashed the third appellant's E conviction for murder and substituted therefore conviction for manslaughter.

Held: (i) There was conflict of evidence as regards the identification of the first and second appellants and that the F identifying witness demeanour and testimony lacked credibility;

(ii) mere presence of the first appellant at the scene of the crime was not sufficient to invoke the doctrine of common intention and implicate him to the murder;

(iii) repudiated confession though as a matter of law may support a conviction, generally requires as a matter of G prudence corroboration as is normally the case where a confession is retracted;

(iv) the third appellant's denial of his confession was an after- thought and thus, on the basis of the evidence untenable;

(v) when death occurs as a result of a fight unless there are very exceptional circumstances, the person who H causes death is guilty of manslaughter and not murder.

Tunkunjoba, for first and third Appellants I

1990 TLR p18

A Bateyunga, for Second Appellant

Ndunguru, for the respondent

Mnzavas, Kisanga and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: The three appellants Jackson Mwakatoka, Briton Mwakalasya and B Anthony Madawa were jointly charged with, and convicted of, the murder of one, Amos Sanga c/s 196 of the Penal Code and sentenced to death by the High Court, (Mtenga, J.)

Dissatisfied with the finding and sentence of the lower Court they have appealed to this Court. Arguing for the first C and third appellants (Jackson Mwakatoka and Anthony Madawa) Mr. Tukunjoba, learned Counsel, attacked the finding of the High court on the ground that the two witnesses, PW. 1 and PW.2, who testified that it was the accused who attacked and killed the deceased, could have been mistaken in their identity of the appellants because D they were standing about 20 paces from where the deceased was being assaulted. It was the learned counsel's submission that there was doubt regarding identification of the appellants as the ones who attacked the deceased on the material night and that this doubt should have been resolved in favour of the appellants.

E As for the doctrine of common intention relied upon by the learned trial Judge in convicting the appellants Mr. Tunkunjoba submitted that the learned judge "did not give a thorough analysis of the evidence". The Court was asked to find the appellants not guilty of the offence of murder and allow the appeal. Mr. Bateyunga, learned F Counsel for the second appellant, Briton Mwakalasya, argued that the two witnesses could not have properly identified the appellant as among the people who attacked the deceased as, it was argued, there was only dim moon light on the material night. It was also submitted that the two eye witnesses were hiding in a jungle of trees and, as such they could not properly see what was happening leave alone identifying the appellants as the people G who attacked the deceased.

The learned Counsel also submitted that although there were electric lights in the neighbourhood the first electric light was 58 paces from the scene of crime, the second electric light was 59 paces away and third was 47 paces H from the scene of crime.

Mr. Bateyunga further argued that the two eye witnesses (PW. 1 and PW.2), could have mistakenly identified the appellants as the people who belaboured the deceased on the material night.

I In support of the convictions Mr. Nduguru, learned State Attorney, argued that the two witnesses properly identified the appellants because there were electric lights. It was also submitted that the two witnesses knew the second and third appellants before the incident and that because of this the question of mistaken identity A of the second and third appellants by the witness was safely discounted by the High Court. Mr. Ndunguru further argued that the third accused confessed to a justice of the peace, (PW.5), that he attacked the deceased with a stone.

MNZAVAS JJA, KISANGA JJA and RAMADHANI JJA

As to the doctrine of common intention it was submitted that the evidence of PW. 1. and PW.2 and the fact that the B appellants took to their heels when they saw villagers coming to the scene proved that the accused had formed a common intention to kill the deceased. The learned state Attorney submitted that the appeal has no merit and asked the Court to dismiss it in its entirety. C

In convicting the appellants the learned trial Judge said inter alia:

I observed very carefully these two witnesses i.e. PW.1 and PW.2 and I have come to the conclusion that they are D witnesses of truth. These two witnesses managed to see the three accused very clearly attacking the deceased for on that day it was a moonlight day and also at the scene there was an electric lamp. The three accused attacked the deceased jointly. The three accused therefore fall within the ambit of the principle of common intention as provided E under section 23 of the Penal Code.

Dealing with the extra judicial statement of the third accused the learned trial Judge said inter alia: F

The third accused tries to say that when he gave his statement a Police Officer was present with a gun. I do not believe this story for if it was so then his advocate could have raised this point when Mr. Kajeri, (PW.5), was giving evidence. The G third accused also denied having told the justice of the peace that he hit the deceased with a stone on the head for self-defence. With that I told the two assessors that a denied confession differs from a retracted confession and it does not require to be corroborated. If at all corroboration is required then there is enough of it from the evidence of PW. 1 and PW.2. H

The learned Judge rejected appellants' defence of alibi and convicted the appellant with the offence of murder and imposed the mandatory death sentence.

After having considered and evaluated the evidence and having tested the conclusions of the trial Court drawn from I the demeanour of

MNZAVAS JJA, KISANGA JJA and RAMADHANI JJA

A the witnesses against the whole of the evidence in this case we are of the view that the learned trial Judge erred in his assessment of the credibility of the two witnesses, PW.1 and PW.2. The evidence of Emmanuel Ukara, PW. 1, which evidence was accepted by the lower court as credible differed in material particulars from his preview B statement to the Police (exhibit D1).

In his evidence he testified that on 12/8/86 at about 10.30 p.m. the appellants visited his club, attacked him and robbed him of his shs. 1400/=. He testified that having robbed him they left the club and followed the road to Chunya.

C The witness said that after the robbery he went home where he was told that his landlord, the deceased, had followed them at the club after he (the deceased) had been informed by one, Ally about the fracas at the club.

D It was his evidence that he, accompanied by Ally and Richard, PW.2, followed the deceased. At the bus stand they saw the third appellant jumping in jubilation that he had already done his duty. He told the Court that all the appellants were there and that the third appellant was armed with an iron bar and a knife. In cross examination he said he saw the accused attacking the deceased.

E Apparently this witnesses's evidence is diametrically opposed to his statement to the Police on 13/8/86 (exhibit D1), in which he said that when he was attacked by the appellants he raised an alarm and that when the deceased came to his rescue the appellants attacked him with a knife.

F In the same breath the witness again gave a different statement to the Police on 5/l0/86. He told the Police that it was when he was returning home from the club after he had been robbed of his money that he met the second and third appellants. The third appellant is said to have announced that he had finished his job. He says in his statement G that he saw the deceased lying on the ground and that the three appellants were standing near the deceased. He however said he did not see the appellants attacking the deceased.

Like PW. 1, Richard Sanga, (PW.2), also contradicted himself in his evidence. In his examination in chief he H testified that after the fight at the club he proceeded home and told his father, the deceased, what had happened at the club but on being cross-examined by the learned defence Counsel he said that it was one, Ally who reported to the deceased what had happened. In Court he testified that he was standing six paces away from where the third I appellant was attacking the deceased but when cross-examined by the learned defence counsel he admitted having said in his statement to the Police that he was about 20 paces from the scene of crime. He also said he was hiding in the jungle of trees when he saw the third appellant A armed with a knife and an iron bar.

It was incumbent on the trial Judge to have dealt with the conflict of the evidence and as to whether it was sage to convict the appellants on the evidence of PW.1 and PW. 2; this the learned Judge did not do. We are also at a loss B as to why only PW. 1 and PW.2 testified regarding the alleged attack of the deceased by appellants. Given that the incident took place in a populated area, and that many villagers came to the scene, one would have expected other villagers to give evidence regarding the incident. PW. 1 was the deceased's tenant and a business partner of C PW.2 who is deceased's son. Taking into account this lead to agree with Mr. Bateyunga's argument that PW. 1 and PW.2 had every reason to embellish their stories. It is also not irrelevant to mention that although PW. 1 and PW.2 told the trial Court that there was an electric lamp only 6 paces from the scene of crime when the trial court visited D the scene it was found that one electric lamp was 58 paces from the scene of crime, another one was 59 paces from the scene of crime and the third electric lamp was 47 paces away. These facts tended to discredit the two witnesses all the more.

The Republic argued that although only the first appellant did not assault the deceased he stood passively while the E deceased was being attacked and that he ran away with the second and third appellants when villagers came to the scene. This behaviour, it was argued, made the first appellant guilty of the offence of murder under the doctrine of common intention as defined in section 23 of the Penal Code. The Eastern Africa Court of Appeal dealt with a F similar situation in the case of R. v. Komen where it was held inter alia that:

. . . Mere presence of the accused at a killing, he not having raised any objection thereto is not enough to justify his G conviction for murder.

As for the second appellant his conviction was wholly based on the evidence of PW. 1 and PW.2 whose demeanour impressed the learned trial Judge that they were truthful witnesses. As we have already mentioned H above first and second appellants left much to be desired. Dealing with the question of demeanour of a witness it was held in the case of Byamungu s/o Rusiliba v R. [1951] 18 EACA. 233 that:

An impression as to demeanour of a witness ought not to be I

A adopted without testing it against the whole of the evidence of the witness in question.

Had the learned Judge tested the demeanour of PW. 1 and PW.2 against the whole of their evidence he would no B doubt have found that their testimony was far from being credible.

Coming to the third appellant the evidence against him was on different footing when compared to the evidence against the first and second appellants. There was his extra judicial statement to the justice of the peace (PW.5). In C his statement (exhibit P. l) he assaulted the deceased on the head with a stone but in his defence in Court he repudiated his confession and said that he never told the justice of the peace that he had attacked the deceased with a stone in self defence. He argued that he gave his statements to the justice of the peace in the presence of an armed Police Officer and that D the statement was not read back to him. He however admitted signing the statement.

In dealing with their appellant's repudiated confession the learned Judge said inter alia:

a denied confession differs from a retracted confession as it does not require to be corroborated... the leading authority E for this preposition is the case of R v. Fabiano Kinene and Two Others [1941] 8 EACA 96. If at all corroboration is required then there is enough of it from the evidence of PW. 1 and PW.2 .

F With respect to the learned trial Judge it was a clear misdirection for him to say that a repudiated confession "does not require to be corroborated". That may have been the law in 1941 when the case in R v Fabiano was decided; but the position has since changed. In the case of Tuwamoi v Uganda [1967] EA at page 91 the Court G said inter alia:

.... We would summarize the position thus a trial Court should accept any confession which has been retracted or H repudiated with caution, and must before founding a conviction on such a confession be fully satisfied in all the circumstances of the case that the confession is true...corroboration is not necessary in law and the court may act on a confession alone if it is fully satisfied after considering all the material points and surround circumstances that the I confession cannot but be true.

MNZAVAS JJA, KISANGA JJA and RAMADHANI JJA

This decision was quoted and followed by this very Court in the recent case in Ali Salehe Msutu v R. [1980] TLR A 1 in which the court held that "a repudiated confession, though as a matter of law may support a conviction, generally requires as a matter of prudence corroboration as is normally the case where a confession is retracted".

Apart from the misdirection in law we are however in agreement with the learned Judge when he says in his B judgment....

coming now to the extra judicial statement of the third accused; the third accused tries to say that when he made the statement a Police Officer was present with a gun. I do not believe this story for if it was so then his advocate could have C raised this point when Mr. Kajeri (PW.5) was giving evidence....

On the totality of the evidence we are of the considered view that the third appellant' s confession to the justice of D the peace could not but be true. His denial was clearly an afterthought.

The extra judicial statement shows that there must have been a fight between the deceased and the third appellant who showed to the justice of the peace a scar on his forehead which he alleged was a result of a wound the E deceased had inflicted on him before he (third appellant), attacked the deceased on the head with a stone. When death occurs as a result of a fight as it was in this case, unless there are very exceptional circumstances the person who causes death is guilty of manslaughter and not murder. F

In conclusion we find that due to the paucity of evidence regarding identification of the first and second appellants as shown above the learned trial Judge erred in convicting them with the offence of murder. We allow the appeal in respect of the first and second appellants and we order that they be released from custody forthwith unless they are G otherwise lawfully held in connection with another matter.

As for the third appellant we, for the reasons stated above, find that he is only guilty of the lesser offence of manslaughter c/s 195 of the Penal Code. Consequently we quash his conviction for murder and substitute therefore conviction for manslaughter. H

Taking into account that he has been in custody since August, 1986 we are of the opinion that a sentence of 5 years imprisonment will meet the justice of the case. He is so sentenced.

Order accordingly. I

[zJDz]Judgment

Makame, Ramadhani and Mfalila, JJ.A.: In the High Court at Dar es Salaam the present appellant, Joe Rugarabamu, filed a suit against Tanzania Tea Blenders Ltd. the present respondent, for reinstatement in his H employment as Chief Accountant. The respondent filed a Written Statement of Defence along with a counterclaim. The appellant failed to respond to the counterclaim and before the suit was heard on merit Mr. Maira, learned advocate for the respondent, successfully applied for judgment to be entered on the counterclaim The I appellant/plaintiff's appeal to this court is against the aforesaid judgment.

1990 TLR p25

MAKAME JJA, RAMADHANI JJA and MFALILA JJA

Up to the time of the High Court judgment the appellant was being represented by Mr. Rwechungura, a A Corporation Secretary for the Tanzania Investment Bank. Mr. Maira successfully challenged Mr. Rwechungura's legal capacity to represent the appellant in the matter so Mr. Rwechungura accordingly ceased to act for the appellant. B

In this appeal, as in the Court below, the respondent's counsel is Mr. Maira. The appellant's lawyer is now Mr. Kisusi, learned advocate.
The appellant's five point Memorandum centred on his complaint that judgment should not have been entered by the C High Court because there was no proof as to when exactly he received the counterclaim.
We use the High Court record as to dates and the chronology of events in examining the appellant's contention. On the fourth mention date, 30th July 1988, the order was that the Written Statement of Defence should be in by 12th August, 1988. The day following that, 13th August, 1988, by consent the hearing was fixed for 18th October 1988. D We cannot see how the appellant could on the day have agreed to a hearing date being fixed if he had not received the Written Statement of Defence. He must have got it by then and Mr. Rwechungura conceded as much. We therefore do not propose to spend more argument on this aspect of the matter. To plea as does Mr. Kisusi, E that the appellant was after all not warned that there was a counterclaim below the Written Statement of Defence was really to scrape the barrel. We have no basis for assuming that when the appellant agreed to the hearing date he was oblivious to the counterclaim. Mr. Rwechungura rightly made the concession that Mr. Kisusi's valiant effort F to salvage the situation cannot succeed. The rules of Civil Procedure were rightly brought into play. The Reply was filed on 17th October 1988, well beyond the time limit of twenty one days for 13th August 1988. This clearly contravened Order VIII rule 11; no leave of the High Court was obtained in accordance with Rule 13; and so G Mtenga J. acted well within his powers under Rule 14 to pronounce judgment on the counterclaim.
On that basis we are satisfied that the appeal has no merit and accordingly we dismiss it with costs. H

In a suit before the High Court, the appellants had contended that the Tanzania Assemblies of God was incorporated as a trust and that its subsequent registration as a society was improper. [zJDz]Judgment

Makame, Kisanga and Omar, JJ.A.: The appeal to this court is from the judgment of Chipeta, J. in the High Court at Tabora in a suit involving men of God belonging to a denomination called the Tanzania Assemblies of God D which, for facility of reference, we shall call T.A.G. As the learned trial judge observed this was "an unusual and rare suit."

Evidently there was simmering discontent in the Church and this developed into remarkable acrimony, giving rise to a fractious division, open hated, and at times even physical violence. In at least two instances, at Tabora and at E Temeke, some members of the Church are said to have sought to make and emphasize their view-points by manhandling the opposite party within the precincts of the house of prayer. Following all this, the parties took each other to court.

The present appellants sued in the High Court and prayed for, among other things, a Declaration that T.A.G. was F incorporated as a trust and therefore its registration as society was improper; and an injunction perpetually to restrain the present first respondent, William Lusito, from acting as minister to T.A.G. church at Kitete in Tabora Region. At the end of the day the present appellants failed in the suit and were condemned in costs. A counterclaim G by the present respondents substantially succeeded. The appellants and all ministers in their group, declared dissident by the trial court, were found to have been lawfully removed from office; they and their followers were restrained from conducting prayer meetings in all T.A.G churches without the authority of what was found to be the H authentic leadership of T.A.G, and they were ordered to vacate with immediate effect all T.A.G. churches and church premises they were found to have unlawfully seized. A prayer for general damages for trespass in the counterclaim was however not allowed, because of the learned trial judges expressed hope that the dissention I would heal and because of the particular nature of the claim.

A We find it necessary to say a few words by way of background. The Assemblies of God is said to have been first introduced into the country in 1927. It was incorporated as a trust in 1963 and had a constitution. This constitution was amended in 1966 and under the amended constitution a bishop called Emmanuel Lazaro continued to be the head of the Church, the superintendent, which he had been since 1963. This man Lazaro is now the B second respondent. His assistant was Moses Kulola, also a bishop. Kulola and Lazaro fell out with each other in 1982 and there has been a split since then.
C At the trial of the suit in the High Court the present appellants were advocated for by Mr. Kwikima, learned counsel, while Mr. Muhula, learned advocate, represented the present respondents. Before us the appellants' advocate was Mr. Ballonzi while the lawyer for the respondents was Dr. Lamwai.
D The appellants are complaining against the trial court's findings that the operative and valid constitution was the 1978 Constitution, which replaced the 1966 one; that the registration of T.A.G. as a society was lawful and in fact obligatory; and that the legally registered trustees are those who existed after the 1981 elections. The learned trial E judge's finding that Pan African Evangelism as an organization did not exist was also complained against.
We wish to say that we found this appeal both involved and intricate and that the various submissions by learned counsel demanded close comprehension and careful analysis. We are grateful to both learned counsel for their well organized efforts to assist us.
F We wish also to refrain from expressing our own views on the mechanics and dynamics of T.A.G such as seem to us to emerge from the record of appeal. We must limit ourselves to observing that the sorry and unusual developments in T.A G. might well be a manifestation of the failure of the expected deep spirituality of devout men G to gain dominance over the human ego and vanity. The structure and history of T.A.G. might have been contributive to the present situation we have to deal with. It occurs to us that the problem is not quite novel in T.A.G. For example as early as September, 1969 the Mbeya Conference of T.A.G. had occasion to note, albeit in a slightly different context:

H Missionary quarrels - Sometimes a missionary groups sends missionary back to the States. Later that man returns as an independent missionary. It was agreed by the conference that the missionary should notify the Executive I committee and the Presbyters when something like this occurs ...

MAKAME JJA, KISANGA JJA, and OMAR JJA

and further on, under Missionaries visiting Churches - A because of the things that happened at the Dodoma Conference two years ago, the Mbeya Section decided that missionaries could not visit Churches in their Section without special permission from the Presbyter ... If any missionary B causes trouble or creates a problem, then he will be disciplined according to the Constitution.

One would have expected that men is religious cloaks would spend their spiritual endowments, their time, and their energies, on joyous selfless service to others and that by their devoted display of the major virtues of high thinking, C right living, and loving action, they would illumine the less enlightened mortals and radiate the loving care of Him they profess to follow and serve.

In conducting this appeal we acceded to Mr. Ballonzi's request that he should start by submitting on a certain aspect of respondents' counterclaim. Dr. Lamwai did not object to that course of action. The aspect Mr. Ballonzi wished D to address us on, a preliminary aspect as it were, was whether the respondents had no legal capacity to bring the counterclaim in the first place. He wanted us to say that the respondents should not have counterclaimed at all, so that if we upheld him on this the rest of the appeal would proceed to be argued on the basis that there was no E counterclaim at all. Dr. Lamwai vigorously responded to Mr. Ballonzi's arguments. Immediately after the end of that exercise the court rose so as to consider learned counsel's submissions that far in order to construct its own view. After careful consideration however, and because both counsel understandably went beyond the restricted scope of F that particular exercise, and touched upon issues properly within the province of the rest of the appeal, we decided that counsel should go on and argue the rest of the appeal, on merit. Indeed as it turned out, even after that recess both learned counsel found themselves going back to some of their earlier submissions. That was hardly G surprising, because the various complex parts of the matter are so intertwined. On our part we do not wish to make a severe division, and treat the first portion of the learned arguments as though it is not closed to the rest of the arguments; because it is. H

Mr. Ballozi submitted that while his clients were legally entitled to bring the suit, the respondents had no legal capacity to respond beyond the plaint and bring their own counterclaim The appellants were trustees, Mr. Ballozi submitted, and to remove them one would have to proceed under section 18 of the Trustees' Incorporation I Ordinance cap.375, and seek an opinion of the High Court: Such opinion by the High Court

A would be deemed to have the force of a declaratory decree. Mr. Ballozi also submitted that the respondents were not entitled to counterclaim in the manner they did, in any event, because they did not comply with section 67 of the Civil Procedure Code. He further submitted that under that section, the respondents would first have to B obtain the written consent, of the Attorney General.

Dr. Lamwai's response was briefly that there was need to resort to section 18 of the Trustee's Incorporation Ordinance because, as far as the respondents were concerned, this was on occasion, "when any question arises as C to whether any person is a member of such body corporated..." etc. in terms of the said section 18. Dr. Lamwai submitted that Callist Masulu Dionisi, the man who signed the second Amended plaint, was not a trustee, as is clearly evidenced by Exh. D.1, the document entitled "Notification of A Change of or concerning The Trustees". It D shows that Callist Masalu Dionisi had been dismissed in April, 1982. As for the argument that the respondent did not have the Attorney General's consent, Dr. Lamwai submitted that the section deals with an alleged breach of trust but now because the respondents were not alleging that the appellant persons were trustees, or because in the counterclaim the allegation that the appellant persons were trustees was not conceded, the Attorney General's E consent cannot be a prerequisite.

It seems to us from the foregoing that the rival submission effectively encompass the substantive area of controversy so that central question upon which the outcome of this appeal seem to us to depend.

F In our view the issues are defined by the following questions:

What was at the material time the operative and valid constitution of T.A.G. and what powers if any, did the second respondent, Emmanuel Lazaro, therefore have? Who were really the registered trustees when the plaint was filed? The other questions and possible answers would flow from the foregoing. These would be such issues as whether G Callist Masalu was entitled to resist the transfer to Mwanza and what part the resultant confrontation played? What were the circumstances leading to the registration of T.A.G. as a Society under the Societies Ordinance and whether such registration was illegal and or mala fide? Whether Emmanuel Lazaro had formed an Organization H called Pan-African Evangelism; whether he was entitled to do so if he did, and what was the effect of that organization on T.A. G. and on Lazaro's own position?

It was common ground at the trial that the original constitution registered at the time of the incorporation was replaced by the 1966 Constitution. The appellants' case was that 1966 Constitution was never replaced by any I other one and it is thus the legal and valid one to date.

The relevant and material significance of this contention, if true, would be that Emmanuel Lazaro should not have A continued as the Chief Bishop non stop after two terms, to-date, and that there was no provision for the transfer of Ministers under the said 1966 Constitution. This would in turn mean that it was irregular to purport to transfer Callist Masalu Dionisi and so he was not obliged to obey the transfer order to go to Bugando. B

We think with respect that the learned trial judge marshalled capable arguments to support his finding that the 1966 Constitution is not the valid constitution of T.A.G. to date. He found on good evidence in our view, that there was a C valid approved constitution the 1978 Constitution a person holding a T.A.G. Office would have to lie fallow for two years after two two-year terms, so how else would Lazaro still be the head, the superintendent, as late as 1988 as asserted by Callist Masalu himself at Page 26 of the typed proceedings? The letter, exh. D.3, which was signed jointly by Emmanuel Lazaro and Moses Kulola, as late as 8th November, 1983, was inviting pastors to a D conference the following month to have another look at the Constitution before going to the General Conference to thrash out the crisis already in existence. The letter directs that the second respondent Emmanuel Lazaro shall in the meantime continue as the Head of T.A.G. with Moses Kulola as his Deputy. This letter of invitation signed by both Lazaro and Kulola as aforesaid, says: E

Katiba Yetu iliyopitishwa na Mkutano Mkuu wa 1978 aliyosimamia Kanisa letu hata sasa mpaka itakapofanyiwa marekebisho. F

Callist Masalu belonged to Moses Kulola's portion of the Church and Exh. D.3 was put in as part of the respondents' case. We think it is significant that Moses Kulola was not called to testify on the appellants behalf. G While we are on this, we wish also to remark that it has not escaped our notice the fact that Moses Mwamenda, one of the people ought to sue the respondents, did not sign the final version of the Amended Plaint and that the only other witness for the appellants, that is other than Masalu himself, was Alexander Simbila who did not get on board until 1982, after he had left the Roman Catholic Church, and who could only talk of the ramifications of the conflict, rather than the root cause which is what would provide answers to the issues the trial court was looking for. H His being a member of Kamati Maalum did not improve his status nor make him more informed as to what was the constitutional position of T.A.G.

If there was no duly approved 1978 Constitution, which was the one registered in 1981, how come Callist Masalu and others under I

A Kulola, were trying to amend the very same Constitution behind the back of the rest of the members of T.A.G., only that the relevant authorities refused to register the amendments because they had not been approved by the recognized General Conference of T.A.G. Masalu does not say that he did not attend the 1978 conference. Lazaro B clearly asserted that Masalu attended that General Conference and that he had in fact participated in preparing for it. We agree with the learned trial judge that in 1978 a Constitution to replace the 1966 one was approved and we agree also that at the 1982 General Conference it was this 1978 constitution which was used. The Lazaro-Kulola C joint letter was much later, in November, 1983, as we have already seen.

The registration of T.A.G as a society was also the subject matter of complaint. It was alleged by the appellants that it was done in bad faith, so as to facilitate Lazaro's scheme to transfer ministers from their stations, for which there D was no provision under the 1966 Constitution. It was also submitted by the appellants' counsel, Mr. Balonzi, that it was irregular, any way, to register T.A.G. under the Societies Ordinance Cap. 375.

The respondents' case was that the transfers were sanctioned by the Executive Committee to which the General E Conference has delegated powers under the 1978 Constitution. We are satisfied that the operative constitution did provide such powers and that Lazaro was only carrying out the Executive Committee's decision. Whether or not the transfers themselves were in bad faith is in our view a different issue, distinct from the contention that the registration F of T.A.G. as a society was itself done in bad faith and irregular. We now wish to turn to this latter contention and we have to start with the relevant law.

Section 2(1) of the Societies Ordinance defines what society is. Section 6 provides that an organization which is not G otherwise a society as defined, because of certain reasons specified under the Act, may nevertheless be required to apply for registration as a society, within the period specified in the order. This means that the requirement is compulsory to the organisation. What is discretionary is the decision to require, and that is by the Minister. The type of organizations which are not societies but which may nonetheless be required to apply for registration are those H organizations which are not societies because they are exempted under specific situations. T.A.G. as an organization was obliged to have itself registered as a society. It appears that Mr. Ballonzi himself otherwise agreed with this but he submitted that T.A.G. is exempted from the obligation by virtue of the Societies Ordinance (Application) Order I 1954 and he relies on Paragraph 4 of the said Order. Paragraph 4 is "Congregations which assemble exclusively for the purpose of religious teaching and worship." But is T.A.G. really such an organization - A congregation A exclusively for the purpose of religious teaching and worship? Our view is that it is not. In the Concise Oxford Dictionary the nearest 'Congregation' to T.A.G. as an outfit is a lot more than that, even to the knowledge of the appellants. See the Application for Registration - Exh D.7. A group of people not have a church which is B self-supporting self-propagating etc. If all that it does is to assemble exclusively for the purpose of religious teaching and worship.

Mr. Balonzi pointed out that the letter from the Ministry of Home Affairs, Ref. No. SO.6246/29 of 4th August, 1984, that is Exh.p.12 recalled an earlier letter dated 9th February, 1983, (Annxr. J to the Written Statement of C Defence) which said that, among other things, Callist Masalu and certain other named persons were no longer trustees. Even if one was to read Exh. p.12 literally and very strictly, and say that the withdrawal also referred to the compulsory registration, and was not only limited to the leadership crisis the Ministry was handling, the trial judge's D finding was correct that T.A.G was obliged to register as a society in view of our finding that the Societies Ordinance (Application) Order 1954 did not apply. So that even if Chipeta, J. had considered the said order we are satisfied that he would have come to the same conclusion he did and with this court is in agreement. The E evidence was that the Executive Committee was unsure about the legal position of T.A.G., and that their enquiry because of that is what lead to their discovering that they had to register. We see no evidence from which to agree with the appellants that the step to register T.A.G. as a society was done in bad faith. F

The next big question is who the trustees of T.A.G. at the time the appellant instituted the proceedings were, and, more specifically, whether Callist Masalu was one of the trustees at the material time. We share the learned trial judge's view that "This issue goes to the root of the matter". G

Having not been persuaded by the appellants to fault the High Court finding that the 1978 Constitution was the operative one at the material time and is the valid constitution to date, we have no difficulty in finding, as did the trial court, that Emmanuel Lazaro was the Superintendent the Askosfu Mkuu, of the T.A.G. according to the H Constitution. There is no evidence that he has been lawfully replaced. Callist Masalu became a T.A.G. trustee in 1974 as evidenced by the notification signed by the second respondent himself and by one Glenn Ford. The Notification Form is the Form T.1.4 we heard so much about during the hearing of this appeal. Another T.1.4 Form, signed by the second respondent and another person, dated October, 1984 I

MAKAME JJA, KISANGA JJA, and OMAR JJA

A was refused registration by the Administrator-General because, the Administrator-General contended, evidence had surfaced that the meeting alleged to have taken place at Dodoma on 11th and 12th October, 1984 at which the new trustees were appointed had not taken place and that in any event an October, 1984 meeting could not have B effected a change of trustee the previous August, that is August 1984. In that Notification, Callist Masalu was mentioned as one of the trustees 'dismissed' but the form shows that his name is cancelled as one of the dismissed trustees and he does not appear in the new list of trustees. So one has to look at other evidence to see whether or C not Masalu had been removed as a trustee. Such evidence is available. The second respondent testified at the trial that after Masalu had refused to obey the transfer to Bugando the General Presbytery called him to a meeting so as to consider the issue but Masalu refused to attend, whereupon the Presbytery decided to remove him from T.A.G. D It was after that dismissal that a Notification of change Exh. D.1 was sent to the Administrator General. The change was said to have taken place on 23rd April, 1982 and signed on 17th January, 1983. Dr. Lamwai was at pains to point out that this Notification was not the one that was rejected, and he was right. The Notification was E sent in after the Iringa conference which got rid of Masalu. We are of the view that the learned trial judge was entitled to arrive at the conclusion that Masalu was not a T.A.G. trustee at the time the proceedings were instituted.

F The arguments on section 10 of the Trustees' Incorporation Ordinance and section 67 of the Civil Procedure Code can be taken together and need be dealt with only briefly. We think Dr. Lamwai's reaction to both arguments has merit. You do not need to seek an opinion when you are satisfied what your position on the matter is and you are not in doubt. The-respondents' stand was that Masalu was not a trustee and they proceeded on that basis. It G would be inconsistent and self-contradictory to start off by wondering whether Masalu was a trustee. What the respondents did was to respond to Masalu's contention, a pretence as far as they were concerned, and assert that Masalu was not a trustee.

H Regarding the counterclaim Mr. Ballonzi submitted that if at all, the respondents should have proceeded in compliance with section 67 of the Civil Procedure code which required first the written consent of the Attorney General. Mr. Ballonzi's arguments was that what the respondents were counterclaiming was covered under subsections (a), (b) and (c) of section 67. Under the said subsections a party would seek a High Court decree for I one of the following:

MAKAME JJA, KISANGA JJA, and OMAR JJA

(a) To remove a trustee, A

(b) To appoint a new trustee and

(c) To vest property in a trustee;

When the party alleges a breach of trust created for the purpose of a public charity. B

One has to ask oneself, to get an able answer to Mr. Ballonzi's submissions, whether the respondents were seeking any of the three (a) and (c); and whether the respondents were saying Masalu was in breach of trust. Their position was that Masalu had ceased to be a trustee so he could not be in breach of trust and there was no question of C removing him etc. The trustees were the ones mentioned in the Notification Exh. D. 1. We uphold Dr. Lamwai on this. The respondents were entitled to counterclaim and, on the necessary balance of probabilities, they successfully proved their case in our view.

We shall now consider, very briefly the issue of Pan African Evangelism. We further think it is subsidiary. Subsidiary D in that it did not go to the basic issues.

Some people were unhappy and unconformable about Lazaro's Pan African Evangelism. Certainly one such person was Callist Masalu. The matter was discussed by the relevant authorities in T.A.G. and these were satisfied that Pan E African Evangelism was not an organization as such. "BUT", to use Lazaro's own words, "I was asked to change my ministry to "Bishop Lazaro". This was to avoid confusion among Christians and thus preserve tranquillity within the Church". So that was the advice the Askofu Mkuu got from the collective wisdom as the General Presbytry. It F is noteworthy that we have no evidence that Lazaro continued with the term "Pan African Evangelism" for what he called his Ministry. But the damage might have been done. When you have Askofu Mkuu ending his 'Ministry' bulletins by signing himself as "Ni sisi Pan African Evangelism" one may be tempted to ask the quest who are the G plural 'Sisi'. Why in the name of good reason and sober calculation use Pan African Evangelism letter heads when transacting purely T.A.G. business as Askofu Mkuu, including such things as the transfers of pastors? Pastors could justly have been confused and unsettled by this, just as they could have been by Lazaro's proven and conceded H association with Morris Cerullo whose bulletin billed Emmanuel Lazaro as "a great living example of the teachings Morris Cerullo." Morris Cerullo may be entitled to the view he expresses in his "AFRICA IS IN OUR HANDS" but when he talks of his encounter with the 'Communist Government' and 'Communist Authorities' in Dar es Salaam in 1974, one need not be very surprised if some members in Lazaro's flock, anxious I

A not to mix religion with politics, felt uncomfortable and perhaps misunderstood their superintended.
We agree with the analysis made and the conclusions reached by the court below and we have no reason to upset the decision. We wish to add that in our view it was quite balanced and judicious not to award to general damages B prayed for.
We dismiss the appeal in its entirety but in the careful exercise of our discretion we order each party to bear his own costs.
We wish to end by expressing our earnest hope that the living faith the parties profess to have will enable them to C forget and forgive, embrace one another again, and take up from where they parted ways, and then seek to improve things from within.
Appeal dismissed.

[zJDz]Judgment

Chipeta, J.: In March 1990, the plaintiff, Chibinza Kulwa, filed a suit in Shinyanga Resident Magistrate's Court B against the six defendants claiming damages for defamation. The amount claimed was shs. 200,000.

From the contents of the plaint, there can be no doubt, that the Shinyanga Resident Magistrate's Court had both territorial and pecuniary jurisdiction in the matter. C

A problem arose when the defendants filed their written statement of defence and counterclaim. The counterclaim was for the sum of shs. 317,000/= or 28 cows. The subject matter of the counterclaim was property in a D deceased's estate which is a subject of dispute between the parties.

When the counterclaim was filed, the trial court ordered that the suit be transferred to this Court on the ground that the sum claimed in the counterclaim was in excess of the pecuniary jurisdiction of that court.

It is certainly true that by the provision of Order 8, Rule 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, a defendant may in the E written statement of defence state particulars of the claim made or relief or remedy sought so long as the cause of action accrued to the defendant before the presentation of his written statement of defence.

However, in such a case, the court is at liberty to order the counterclaim to be struck out or that it should be F disposed of by a separate suit or that it should be tried separately. This the court will do if it should be of the opinion that the subject matter of the counterclaim ought to be so dealt with for any reason (see order 8, Rule 12 C.P.C.). One instance in which the court can exercise this discretion is where it is of the view that the counterclaim G would prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit.

In the present case I note that the nature of the alleged defamation is a statement to the effect that the plaintiff is a witch, and murderer. The allegedly defamatory statements were made in March, 1990. The cause of action in the H counterclaim, however is said to have arisen as far back as January, 1987, and the nature of the claim is the property of a deceased's estate.

In my view the counterclaim would clearly prejudice and embarrass the plaintiff and would undoubtedly delay the I fair trial of the suit if dealt with in a single case.

A For these reasons, and in the exercise of the revisional powers of this court, it is hereby ordered that the counterclaim be struck out and the plaintiff's suit be tried by Shinyanga Residents Magistrate's Court. The counterclaim shall be filed as a separate suit in a court of competent jurisdiction.

Mwalusanya, J.: The appellant Wambura s/o Nyango was charged at Musoma District Court in Mara Region with cattle theft c/s 268 (1) and (3) of the Penal Code Cap. 16. which the appellant was sentenced to 10 months imprisonment. The appellants' conviction for the latter's offence A was allegedly made under S. 300 of the Criminal Procedure Act No. 9/1985. The appellant is now appealing against conviction and sentence.

The course of action taken by the learned trial District Magistrate was clearly strange and irregular. Very correctly B the appellant has drawn attention to the learned trial magistrate the decision of this court in Nathanael s/o Nkulikiye v R. [1982] T.L.R. 129 by Chua J. and I may point out that there are hundreds of similar cases in our High Court Digests. All these cases stand for the proposition of law to the effect that the general rule applicable in C substituting conviction is that the verdict sought to substitute the existing one, must be one involving a minor and cognate offence to the offence charged. It is crystal clear that the offence of using abusive language is minor to the offence of cattle theft but it is not cognate. So the substituted conviction was obviously bad in law. The State Attorney Mr. Mbago was of the same view and did not support the conviction. D

In the event the appeal succeeds. The appeal is allowed, the conviction is quashed and the sentence is set aside. The appellant should be released forthwith unless held for any other offence. E

Nyalali, C.J., Makame and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: The appellant Charles Samson was charged and convicted in the High Court at Mwanza for the offence of murder c/s 196 of the Penal Code and was sentenced to suffer death F by hanging. He was aggrieved by the conviction and sentence hence this appeal to this court. Before us he was represented by Mr. Rugarabamu, learned advocate, who filed a memorandum of appeal containing two grounds of G appeal. Mr. Malamsha, learned State Attorney appeared for the respondent/ Republic.

From the proceedings in this court and the court below the following matters are not in dispute between the parties. During the night of Saturday 3rd October, 1987 the dwelling house of one Charles Tinga in Magu Town, Magu H District, was invaded by a group of bandits, who broke into his room, shot him dead and demanded and were given money amounting to shs. 106,000/= by the wife of the deceased, that is Elizabeth Magushi, (PW.1). Thereafter the bandits went away. PW.1 raised an alarm in response to which a group of people, including the police, came to the I scene. It is common ground that there was bright moonlight at the material time. Subsequently the appellant was arrested the following day in the evening. It is common ground also that on the 7th day of October 1987 the appellant was identified by PW. 1 and her son, that is Japhet Tinga (PW.2) at an A identification parade mounted by the police.

It is apparent from the proceedings both in this court and the court below that the following matters of fact are in dispute between the parties. It is the prosecution case that the appellant was one of the bandits and was in fact the B person who shot dead the deceased. On the other hand the defence case consists of a general denial and an alibi to the effect that at the material time the appellant was at home playing cards with his family and a neighbour until he went to sleep at about 11.30 p.m.

In his memorandum of appeal the appellant raises one important point which, if sustainable, makes it unnecessary C for us to consider his other grounds of appeal. The ground reads as follows:

The learned trial judge failed to address the assessors and direct himself on the appellant's defence of an alibi and D under circumstances erroneously convicted the appellant.

It is apparent from the brief summing up and the judgment of the learned trial judge that no reference is made to the appellant defence of alibi. Mr. Malamsha concedes as much. He however submits that the failure to direct the E assessors on this defence of alibi and the omission by the trial judge to consider this defence in his judgment, is not fatal to the trial because, the appellant, on his part failed to comply with the provisions of section 194 subsections (4), (5) and (6) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985. These provisions require an accused person seeking to rely on F an alibi, to disclose it before he is called upon to defend himself. With due respect to Mr. Malamsha, we are unable to agree with his submission. The provisions of subsections (4), (5) and (6) of section 194 state as follows:

(4) Where an accused person intends to rely upon an alibi in his defence, he shall give to the court and the prosecution G notice of his intention to rely on such defence before the hearing of the case.

(5) Where an accused person does not give notice of his intention to rely on the defence of alibi before the hearing of the H case, he shall furnish the prosecution with the particulars of alibi at any time before the case for prosecution is closed.

(6) If the accused raises the defence of alibi without having first furnished the particulars of the alibi to the court or the I prosecution in pursuant to this section, the court at its own discretion, may accord no weight of any kind to the defence.

A It is obvious, on a proper construction of the provisions of this section, that the court is not exempt from the requirement to take into account the defence of an alibi, where such defence has not been disclosed by an accused person before the prosecution closes its case. What this section means is that where such disclosure is not made, B the court, though talking cognizance of such defence, "May in its discretion, accord no weight of any kind to the defence".

In the present case the court appears to have taken no cognizance whatsoever of the alibi, both in the summing up C to the assessors and in the judgment. There was thus a mistrial and a consequential miscarriage of justice. We are bound therefore to allow the appeal by declaring the trial a nullity, quashing the proceedings and directing that a new trial of the appellant be undertaken either before the same or another judge.

D Appeal allowed.

Nyalali, C.J., Makame and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: The deceased in the case giving rise to this appeal, Enock Hinyonza Masharubu, was alleged to be a train robber and the contention by the Republic was that he was assaulted to death by the appellants who intended that he should die or suffer grievous harm. During the same D session of assault, the Republic contended, a prosecution witness and an alleged companion of the deceased, a man by the named of Fidelo Mgudo, had both his ears chopped off with a knife by one of the appellants. Both gentlemen assessors who sat with the learned trail judge opined that all the appellants were guilty of murder. The E learned trial judge (Korosso, J.) agreed with the assessors, convicted the appellants for murder, and accordingly condemned them to death. They have appealed to us against that decision and their advocate for the purpose was Mr. Rugarabamu, learned counsel. Mr. Mtaki, learned Senior State Attorney represented the respondent Republic. F

Mr. Rugarabamu came armed with four grounds of appeal seeking to demolish the trial court's decision but before he could make use of his forensic arsenal we drew his attention to a possible issue he might wish to address us on, and it was this: Whether, if the assessors were not given the opportunity to put questions to the witnesses, the trial G could be said to have been with the aid of assessors, and what the effect would be, in law, if the said trial was not with the aid of assessors. We had to stand down the appeal for a brief while so as to give time to counsel to organize himself and prepare his response. H

On resumption Mr. Rugarabamu submitted that because under section 265 of the Criminal Procedure Act all trials before the High Court shall be with the aid of assessors, where such a trial is not with the aid of assessors it is a nullity. He also drew our attention to section 177 of the Evidence Act under which: I

A In cases tried with assessors the assessor may put any questions to the witness, through or by leave of the judge, which the judge himself might put and which he considers proper.

B Mr. Rugarabamu also submitted that it is discernible from the record of trial that the assessors were not invited to put questions to witnesses for, had they been, and they merely declined to accept the invitation because they did not have any questions to ask, or if they had indicated to the trial judge that they wished to put particular questions all of C which the trial judge did not consider proper, the record would have said something like that the questions were 'NIL'. Learned counsel also addressed us on section 290 of the Criminal Procedure Act which provides:

D The witnesses called for the Prosecution shall be subject to cross-examination by the accused person or his advocate, and to re-examination by the advocate for the prosecution.

E If we correctly understood Mr. Rugarabamu, as we reckon we did, he wondered why assessors were not referred to in section 290 like they were mentioned in section 265. Now section 290 deals with witnesses for the case for the Prosecution. We note that it has its counterpart-section 294, when one comes to the case for the F Defence. We do not, however, propose to detain ourselves too long with considering any of the above two sections because, for our present discussion, they are completely irrelevant. They deal with cross-examination and re-examination of witnesses and the accused, none of which is the function of assessors. It is not the duty of G assessors to cross-examine or re-examine witnesses or the accused. The assessors' duty is to aid the trial judge in accordance with section 265, and to do this they may put their questions as provided for under section 177 of the H Evidence Act, 1967. Then they have to express their non-binding opinions under section 298 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. We might mention here that, in practice, when they put their questions under section 177 of the Evidence Act 1967 other than through the judge, they do so directly, the leave of the judge being implicit in the judge not stopping them from putting their questions. That is, the discretion remains with the judge to prevent the asking of questions which are, for example patently irrelevant, biased, perverse, or otherwise improper.

I Mr. Mtaki, learned Senior State Attorney, did not seek to challenge Mr. Rugarabamu's submission that the trial judge's failure to comply with section 265 of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 made the trial not with the aid of assessors and so rendered A it a nullity. Very briefly, denying the assessors the opportunity to put questions, as we are satisfied was the case in the proceedings below, means that the assessors were excluded from fully participating in the trials; so to the extent that they were so excluded, and denied their statutory right, they were disabled from effectively aiding the trial judge B who could only benefit fully if he took into judicious account all the views of his assessors and those would only emerge from their own appreciation of the case as a whole. Such appreciation would have been influenced and shaped partly by the assessors' sheer need to articulate their own questions which cross their minds as they go C along, and by their own perception of the factual issues involved, as assisted by the assessors' exchanges with the witnesses and the accused. We think that the assessors' full involvement as explained above is an essential part of the process, that its omission is fatal, and renders the trial a nullity. We wish to add another thought to this D exposition: For our purpose in the Court of Appeal, the informed and full views of the assessors become further necessary when we have to rely on what we might call the Segesela principle, that is in the event of the trial judge disagreeing with the unanimous views of his assessors we shall want to determine whether he was entitled to do so. E In order to enable us to make that determination meaningfully we must know the judge's reasons for so disagreeing, and to appreciate those reasons we would have to gauge them against the full and informed views of the assessors which they can only express satisfactorily if the trial was with their aid as explained. This need for a F judge to give his reasons for disagreeing with the unanimous views of his assessors was enunciated in Charles Segesela v R., E.A.C.A criminal appeal no. 13 of 1973, from a case tried in Tanzania, and we wish to express our approval of it. G For reasons we have endeavoured to explain the High Court proceedings in the case giving rise to this appeal are a nullity. We accordingly quash them and order a retrial of the appellants.

G Nyalali, C.J., Makame and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: The appellant Mukami Wankyo was charged in the High Court on circuit at Musoma with the offence of murder c/s 196 of the Penal Code, was convicted as charged and sentenced to suffer death by hanging. She was aggrieved by the conviction and sentence hence this appeal to this H court. Before us the Republic was represented by Mr. Malamsha, learned State Attorney. Mr. Butambala learned advocate, representing the appellant filed a memorandum of appeal containing one ground of appeal stating:

NYALALI CJ, MAKAME JJA and RAMADHANI JJA

From the proceedings both in this court and the court below, the following matters of fact are not in dispute A between the parties. It is common ground that at the material time the appellant was one of the many wives of one Wankyo s/o Mkirya. On or about 11th July, 1986 the said Wankyo s/o Mkirya died inside the house of the appellant in Magunga Village, Musoma district. Subsequently the appellant was apprehended and taken to B Buhemba Police Station, where she made a statement to a police officer, that is, no. C 193 D/Cpl. Joseph (PW.1) in which she confessed to poisoning her husband by putting poison in the tea which she prepared for him that day, apparently because of his persistent cruelty towards her. Thereafter the appellant was taken to a Resident C Magistrate, that is, Mrs. C.K. Kalombola (PW.2) to who she made a similar confession. Furthermore, it is undisputed that on the 14th July 1986 a postmortem examination on the body of the deceased was performed by a doctor, who came to the conclusion that the death of the deceased was due to poison. This doctor took some D internal organs which he sent to the Government Chemist for further expert chemical analysis and report. It is undisputed that the Chief Government Chemist's report, made in consequence thereof, shows that the pieces of liver and kidney, as well as the intestinal excreta taken from the deceased, contained some alkaloids and organ sulphur, E which are known to be fatal to human beings, when taken in large quantities.

From the same proceedings in this court and the court below, the following matters of fact appear to be in dispute between the parties. It is the prosecution's case that the appellant voluntarily confessed to PW. 1 and PW.2 to the F effect that she had put poison in the tea which she had prepared for her husband on the material day in order to kill him and thereby end her ordeal of cruelty perpetrated to her by her husband. On the other hand, the case for the defence consists of a general denial of the prosecution case and an assertion that the deceased began feeling unwell when he returned to the appellant's house from a visit to the house of one of his sons by another wife. It is part of G the defence case that after the death of the deceased, the appellant was beaten up, initially by the sons of the deceased, and later by the police at Buhemba Police Station . It is part of the defence case that as a result of these beatings by the police, she confessed to PW.1 and PW.2. H

The first important issue for consideration and decision in this case is whether the confessions made by the appellant to PW. 1 and PW.2 were voluntary. The trial court came to an affirmative answer after a trial within a trial was conducted in respect of each of the confessions. We concur with the conclusion of the learned trial judge on this I point. In her evidence in chief given during the trails within the trial, the appellant

NYALALI CJ, MAKAME JJA and RAMADHANI JJA

A asserted that she was beaten up by PW.1 and another son of the deceased, that is, Mr. Sukuti, to induce her to confess. We note however that when PW. 1 gave evidence in one of the trials within the trial, no suggestion to the effect was put to him under cross-examination by the defence. We think it is unlikely that PW. 1 would not have B been cross-examined by the defence specifically on the point, if really he and Mr. Sukuti were involved in beating up the appellant. Furthermore, if the appellant had really been beaten up by the police at Buhemba to induce her to confess, she would have mentioned that fact to the Resident Magistrate, that is PW.2, when confessing to her in the C Magistrate's court chambers. The suggestion made to PW.2 under cross-examination to the effect that a confession, was denied by PW.2 appears to be candid. This is illustrated by her record of what she saw when she examined the body of the appellant. She records to have seen bruises on the leg and fingers of the appellant. These D bruises were however old.

The second issue for consideration and decision in this case is whether the appellant poisoned the deceased. The three wise assessors and the learned trial judge accepted the two confessions as true, and came to an affirmative E conclusion on the issue. In coming to this conclusion, the trial court however did not specifically consider the apparent contradictions between certain parts of the two confessions. Such contradictions concern inter alia, the source of the poison, and her normal residence prior to this incident. In her statement to PW. 1 she claims to have F been living in separation from the deceased for twelve years in Kenya, and claims to have brought the poison with her from Kenya. However in her statement to PW.2, the appellant seems to suggest that she lived with her husband and obtained the poison from a witch doctor in Tarime.

G We have considered these contradictions but we are satisfied that they do not affect the central story of the confession, which concerns the administration of the poison to the deceased through tea prepared by the appellant for the deceased. These contradictions can therefore be severed from the central story within the scope stated in the case of Siduwa Were v Uganda, [1964] E.A. p.596. Moreover, the central story is confirmed by the findings of H the Chief Government Chemist concerning the remains of the internal organs taken from the body of the deceased. Thus fortified we are satisfied that the remaining central story in the confession contain nothing but the I truth, and can safely be relied upon to convict the appellant in keeping with the rule stated in the case of Tuwamoi v Uganda [1967] E.A. p. 84. Having come to that conclusion, it follows that the appeal must fail A in its entirety.

In the final analysis therefore we dismiss this appeal in its entirety.

In a suit for recovery of land, the trial Primary Court found that the appellant had not bought the land from the respondent. On appeal, the District Court reversed the decision of the trial Primary Court and entered judgment for F the appellant on the findings that the appellant was time barred by the Customary Law (Limitation of Proceedings) Rules, 1963 from recovering possession thereof. On further appeal to the High Court, the appellant judge found that it was wrong for the District Court to act on matters which were not raised or dealt with in the trial Primary Court, that is, the additional evidence purportedly taken by the District Court and the matter of limitation, G and accordingly reversed the decision of the District Court and restored the decision of the Primary Court. On further appeal to the Court of Appeal.

Held: (i) The trial Primary Court had discretion to admit the suit after the prescribed limitation period and had H sufficient cause to use its discretion;

(ii) the District Court was wrong to reverse the trial court's decision because the purported additional evidence supporting the reversal was no evidence in law. The submissions made by the appellant in the course I

A of the appeal arguing that the appellant had bought the land are not evidence but arguments on the facts and the law raised before the court. There being no evidence on the fact of sale of the land, the District Court had no basis for its finding;

(iii) the finding of the District Court that the appellant had been in occupation of the land in dispute for a period B of 15 years and hence the respondent was time barred to recover possession was based solely on the information contained in the Memorandum of Appeal, by the appellant to the court and in submissions made by the appellant in support of his grounds of appeal. D Rutakyamirwa (guardian ad liten), for the appellant
[zJDz]Judgment
Nyalali, C.J., Makame and Ramadhani, JJ.A.: The Respondent Petro Joseph instituted a suit in the Primary E Court at Katerero in Bukoba District on the 21st September 1983 against two persons, that is, Wilbrod Joseph, who was the First Defendant, and the appellant, that is, Morandi Rutakyamirwa, who was the Second Defendant, for recovery of possession of a piece of land situated in Rwagati locality in Bukoba District. As the First Defendant F could not be traced, the suit proceeded against the appellant, and was successful. The appellant was aggrieved by that decision and he appealed to the District Court at Bukoba. That court overturned the decision of the trial Primary Court and gave judgment for the appellant. Predictably in cases of this nature from Bukoba District, the G respondent in turn appealed to the High Court at Mwanza. That court, Munyera J., overturned the decision of the District Court and restored the decision of the trial Primary Court. The appellant was also aggrieved by the decision of High Court, and he sought to appeal to this court by asking the High Court to certify a point or points of law H involved in the intended appeal in terms of section 5 (2)(c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979.
The High Court, Moshi, J., certified as prayed, hence this appeal. Mr. F. Rutakyamirwa appeared before us for the appellant as a guardian appointed by a judge of this court, whereas Mr. J.S. Rweyemamu, learned advocate, I appeared for the respondent. The
NYALALI CJ, MAKAME JJA and RAMADHANI JJA
Memorandum of appeal filed in this appeal contains three grounds as follows: A

1. The learned judged erred in law by disregarding the explicit provisions of the law relating to the limitation of actions and in not holding that the action by the respondent was time-barred. B

2. The learned judged erred in law by not holding that the learned District Magistrate was justified in law in taking additional evidence. C

3. The learned judged erred in law in not taking into account the additional evidence taken by the District Court.

From the proceedings in the three courts below the following matters of fact appear to have been established. The D appellant was at the time material to this case in occupation of the land in question by the appellant, one Wilbrod Joseph, that is the First Defendant, who is a brother of the respondent, occupied it. The respondent and the said Wilbrod Joseph are sons of the late Joseph Mjunangoma, and are members of the Abainda clan. The appellant is not a member of that clan, to which the land in dispute belongs, but is a member of the Mjubu Clan and a blood E brother of the late Joseph Mjunangoma. Furthermore it was established by the courts below that while the said Wilbrod Joseph was in occupation of the land in dispute, he mortgaged the land to raise some money on four different occasions, and that the appellant advanced some money to him to enable him to redeem it. Thereafter on F the last occasion, the appellant entered into occupation of the land, and the said Wilbrod Joseph vacated it and went away. He has never been seen or heard of ever since. It was established in the trial Primary Court that the appellant did not buy the land in dispute from the said Wilbrod Joseph but merely assisted the latter to redeem it. G The District Court however, after purportedly taking additional evidence on appeal, concluded that the said Wilbrod Joseph sold the land in question to the appellant on the last occasion and that the transaction was recorded in a document. This conclusion was one of the basis which led the District Court to overturn the decision of the trial H Primary Court.

The other basis which led the District Court to overturn the decision of the trial Primary Court, concerns the Law of Limitation. The District Court found that the appellant had been in occupation of the land in dispute for the period of 15 years, and therefore held that the suit for recovery of possession of the land was time-barred by virtue of the I

A provisions of rule 2 and paragraph (6) of the Schedule to The Customary Law (Limitation of Proceedings) Rules, 1963 - Government Notice No. 311 published on 29th May 1964 - which provides for a limitation period of 12 years.

B As already mentioned, subsequently the High Court overturned the decision of the District Court and restored that of the trial Primary Court. The High Court, Munyera J., was of the view that the District Court was wrong in acting on matters which were not raised or dealt with in the trial Primary Court, that is, the additional evidence purportedly taken by the District Court, and the matter of Limitation.

C It is apparent from the record of proceedings that the basis of the finding by the District Court that the appellant had bought the land in dispute from the said Wilbrod Joseph was solely the submissions made by the appellant in the course of the appeal in the District Court. Mr. Rweyemamu, learned advocate for the respondent, contends to D the effect that such submission are not and cannot be treated as evidence. Mr. Rutakyamirwa concedes the point. We, on our part, concur and find that submissions made by a party to an appeal in support of grounds of appeal, are not evidence but are arguments on the fact and the law raised before the court. Such submissions are made E without oath or affirmation, and the party making them is not subject to cross-examination by his opponent. Since, apart from these submissions, there was nothing else by way of evidence upon which the District Court could have properly found that the appellant had bought the land in question, it follows that the finding of the trial Primary Court F that there was no sale of the land in question, cannot be faulted.

We now come to the issue of Limitation. The finding of the District Court that the appellant had been in occupation of the land in dispute for a period of 15 years was based solely on the information contained in the submissions G made by the appellant in support of his grounds of appeal. Since, as already stated, submissions are not evidence, it follows that they have to be disregarded on this point. Mr. Rweyemamu, learned advocate, also contends to the effect that the Memorandum of Appeal is similarly not evidence. Mr. Rutakyamirwa concedes. We, on our part, H concur and find that a memorandum of appeal is not evidence but is purely a statement of the grounds upon which the appeal is based. It follows therefore that there was no evidence whatsoever to support the finding of 15 years' occupation of the land by the appellant.

I The only material which can be used to determine the period of occupation of the land by the appellant is to be found in the pleadings.

NYALALI CJ, MAKAME JJA and RAMADHANI JJA

In his statement of claim in the Primary Court, the respondent admitted that by the 20th January 1971, the land was A already sold to the appellant, and attempts were made to redeem it. It thus seems that the appellant had been in occupation of the land in dispute for a period of 12 years and some 8 months by the time the suit was instituted in the Primary Court. Does this mean that the respondent is time-barred in redeeming the clan land? Undoubtedly the B period of limitation is 12 years as stated by this court in the case of Elizeus Retakubwa v Jason Angelo (Civ. App. No.21 of 1987 - not yet reported). But there is an exception provided under Rule 3 sub-rule (4) of The Customary Law (Limitation of Proceedings) Rules 1963, which states: C

The court may in its discretion admit any proceedings after the expiration of the period of Limitation, if it is satisfied that the person bringing such proceedings was unable for sufficient cause to bring the proceedings earlier. D

Mr. Rweyemamu has submitted to us that the delay of 8 months or so in instituting this suit after the expiration of the period of 12 years, has been due to the conduct of the appellant who has been prevaricating by suggesting to the E respondent that he was willing to settle amicably out of court as soon as the said Wilbrod Joseph turned up. It is apparent from the appellant's evidence adduced in the trial Primary Court that he has continued to protest his willingness to hand back the land amicably, even without payment as soon as the said Wilbrod Joseph appears. We F are thus satisfied that the respondent has been late by 8 months or so in instituting this suit in the Primary Court because of the appellant' s conduct. We are of the view that this conduct of the appellant constitutes sufficient cause for the Primary Court to use its discretion to admit the proceedings after the expiration of the period of 12 G years in terms of sub-rule (4) of Rule 3 above mentioned. The trial court was therefore correct in entertaining the suit.

We therefore dismiss the appeal with costs in this court and the courts below, with liberty as stated by the trial H Primary Court for the appellant to claim compensation for any unexhausted improvements made on the land prior to the institution of the suit.

Kahangwa, for the appellants
[zJDz]Judgment
Ramadhani, J.A.: An inquiry was instituted in the District Court of Mugumu, Serengeti District, under section 15 E of the Stock Theft Ordinance, Cap. 422. The inquiry was erroneously treated as Criminal Case No 295/86. Briefly the facts were that some 145 head of cattle belonging to the present respondent, Muhere Chacha, and another F person, who was P.W.3 in the District Court, disappeared at Singisi Village, Serengeti District. The cattle were being moved from Mugumu to Mugeta Village in Bunda District. It was sought to order the Singisi Villagers to compensate the respondent. The villagers were represented in the proceedings by Sanai Mrumbe, the Village G Chairman, and Joseph Mimberera the Secretary, who are now 1st and 2nd appellants respectively. The District Court, being dissatisfied with the proof of the claim, dismissed it. As that decision was not appealable, the aggrieved party applied for and was granted on order of certiorari by the High Court of Tanzania (Munyera, J.). The learned judge after quashing the proceedings went further and ordered the villagers to compensate the respondent. This H appeal is against that order.
Before us and on behalf of the appellants was Mr. Kahangwa, learned counsel, while the respondent appeared in person. Two grounds of appeal were filed. One, it was submitted that the learned judge misdirected himself in law I in treating the matter as if it were an appeal.
NYALALI CJ, MAKAME JJA and RAMADHANI JJA
A Two, it was contended that in certiorari the most the superior court could do was to quash the decision complained of thereby reinstating the status quo. Mr. Kahangwa pointed out that in the present case the learned judge, after compensation, which had been denied, as if this was an appeal. He referred us to a number of B authorities which we shall touch upon in due course. The respondent, on the other hand, merely expressed the difficulty he would encounter in summoning his witnesses if he were to institute a fresh inquiry.
An order of certiorari is one issued by the High Court to quash the proceedings and the decision of a subordinate C court or a tribunal or a public authority where, among others, there is no right of appeal. The High Court is entitled to investigate the proceedings of a lower court or tribunal or a public authority on any of the following grounds, apparent on the record. One, that the subordinate court or tribunal or public authority has taken into account D matters which in ought not to have taken into account. Two, that the court or tribunal or public authority has not taken into account matters which it ought to have taken into account. Three, lack or excess of jurisdiction by the lower court. Four, that the conclusion arrived at is so unreasonable that no reasonable authority could ever come to E it. Five, rules of natural justice have been violated. Six, illegality of procedure or decision. (Associated Provincial Picture Houses, Ltd. v Wednesbury Corp. [1947] 2 All E.R. 680 and Council of Civil Service Unions v Minister for the Civil Service [1984] 3 All E.R.935).
In Tanzania certiorari is provided for in Sections 17,18 and 19 of the Law Reform (Fatal Accidents and F Miscellaneous Provisions) Ordinance Cap.360.

In the exercise of such investigation the High Court is not entertaining an appeal. If any of the above six grounds has been offended the proper action of the High Court is to quash the decision and the proceedings. On that principle of G law Mr. Kahangwa has referred us to R.v Northumberland Compensation Appeal Tribunal ex parte Show [1952] 1 All E.R. 122, R.v Net Bell Liquors [1922] A.C. 126; Associated Provincial Picture Houses Ltd., v Wednesbury Corp. [1947] 2 All E.R. 680 and Anisminic Ltd. v Foreign Compensation Commission [1969] 1 H All E.R. 208. Thus for instance Lord Green, M.R. has said in Associated Provincial Picture Houses (already cited above at p.685) that:

The power of the court to interfere in each case is not that an appellate authority to averred a decision of the local I authority, but is that of a judicial authority which is concerned, and concerned only, to see whether the local authority have A contravened the law.

Munyera, J. in the present case, was well aware of the above outlined legal position for he said: B

Finally the question is what should this court do. Normally an order of certiorari is to quash the decision complained against. But in this case mere quashing of the Magistrate's order will not afford the justice desired. Moreover, subordinate to the High Court and the matter is properly before the later. I think I can correct what I believe to be an error. C

After that the learned judge went ahead to order the compensation for the 145 head of cattle. With due respect, and though the learned judge had the best of intentions, that was contrary to the existing law. D

The learned judge granted the order of certiorari because the decision of the learned magistrate was contrary to the evidence before him and he concluded that the magistrate was biased against the present respondent. However, there was another reason why the order should have been granted. Again the learned judge touched on it but discarded it. E

Under section 15 of the Stock Theft Ordinance, Cap. 422, an authorized officer is required to seize cattle, from the village suspected of cattle rustling, equal to the number of cattle stolen and then to apply for an inquiry. That was not done in this case. According to the learned judge experience has shown that if some cattle are seized as required by F law, by the time the inquiry is over the seized cattle are no where to be found and the court order becomes impossible to execute. So in practice inquiry is done first and then cattle are seized only if there is an order to compensate the applicant. The learned judge was of the view that "instituting enquiry before seizing the cattle did not offend the law". With due respect again the law was offended and an order of certiorari had to issue for the G procedural defect.

We sympathize with the respondent. But that is the inconvenience brought about by legislation which seek to oust the power of the High Court by denying appeals to it. H

So the order of certiorari quashing the proceedings of the District Court is upheld. The order of High Court for compensation to the respondent is set aside and any stock attached in execution of the decision of the High Court is directed to be released and restored to the owners. I

Order accordingly.

[zJDz]Judgment
F Bahati, J.: The dispute in this case is whether the respondent was entitled to build on the appellant's father's land. The Primary Court held that he was not entitled. But the District Court held that he was entitled because he had been given the plot on which he built the house by the village authorities.
G In his submission, Mr. Maira, learned counsel for the appellant, said that the village government had no power to allocate land which is not vacant. In reply to that, Mr. Marando, learned counsel for the respondent argued that the land had fallen vacant after the appellant's father died and that the village government then allocated it to the H respondent. Mr. Marando further submitted that the appellant should have asserted ownership of his land against the village government and that the appellant did not even have letters of administration to administer his father's estate. He concluded that the proceedings in the Primary Court should be looked into as they appear to be irregular I in view of the summing up made which is contrary to government notice No.2 of 1988.

In a further reply, Mr. Maira submitted that the land never became vacant upon the demise of the appellant's father A and that the appellant was claiming as a successor and that his title was not in dispute. With regard to GN. No.2 of 1988, Mr. Maira said that the summing up did not occasion a failure of justice.

I accept the submission that the village government may allocate land to anyone. But that does not mean that the B village government has power to taken away land from one person and give it to another. Although Mr. Marando cited the Ujamaa Village Act, he did not specify which provisions in the Act empowered the village government to allocate land belonging to one person to another. C

Therefore prima facie the allocation of the land to the respondent was ultra vires and therefore void. Secondly, there can be no questioning of the appellant's competence and his relations to succeed their late father.

This was not in dispute in the courts below and it cannot be made an issue now. As for the summing up which was D made in contravention of GN.2 of 1988, in view of the fact that it did not occasion any failure of justice the irregularity is curable.

Ruta, for the respondent.

D Chipeta, J.: In Kigoma Resident Magistrate's Court, the appellant, Rashidi Kiranda, was charged with and convicted of the offence of unlawful possession of Government trophies contrary to sections 56 (1) and (2) and paragraph 16 (d) of the Economic and Organised Crime Control Act, 1984 as amended by Act No. 10 of 1989, read together with section 67 (1) and (2) of the Wildlife Conservation Act, 1974. He was sentenced to ten (10) E years imprisonment. He now appeals against the conviction as well as the sentence.

The prosecution's evidence was that during an operation code-named "Operation Uhai", police received information that there were elephant tusks in the appellant's house. On 3rd June, 1989, armed with a search warrant, D/Sgt F Joseph (P.W. 1) accompanied by another police officer proceeded to the appellant's house at Kazuramimba. On arrival there, they told the appellant that they suspected that he was in possession of government trophies, a gun and some ammunition. The appellant replied that he only had a gun. When the house was searched, police found three G eland tails for which the appellant had no certificate for his possession of them. A further search revealed a hunter's torch and some ammunition.

Thereafter, the search party demanded a hoe and they started digging up the then floors of the house. When they H started digging up the floor of a room at the back, the appellant told them to stop and said that he would show them where he had hidden the elephant tusks. The appellant then removed grass from a certain place, thus revealing a corrugated iron sheet. He removed it and dug out the soil to a depth of three to four feet and unearthed two elephant tusks.

I When the appellant was asked about these elephant tusks, he said that they belonged to a game Officer and that he had hidden them because he feared that they could be stolen. The appellant had no licence to possess those elephant tusks. A

In his defence, the appellant insisted that the elephant tusks belonged to game scouts called Masanja and Mrisho. He repeated that story before this court during the hearing of this appeal.

With great respect to the appellant, I think he is labouring under his massive ignorance of the law. As the learned B trial resident magistrate pointed out, the charge was that of unlawful possession and not ownership. Since the appellant admitted possession and he had no authority to possess the Government trophies, the conviction was C inevitable. The circumstances in which he came to possess the same could only be a mitigating factor in sentencing.

The appeal against the conviction, therefore, is without merit.
Regarding the sentence, Mr. Oswald, learned state attorney, submitted that the sentence was unlawful. In his D submission, the trial court should have taken judicial notice that two elephant tusks had a value of more than Shs. 5 million.
As was pointed out by the learned trial magistrate and conceded by Mr. Oswald, there was not a scintilla of E evidence as to the value of the trophies. What is more, we do not know the weight of the elephant tusks nor the price per kilogram of trophies at the relevant period. What is more, this court is ignorant of the size of these elephant tusks.
I am of the view that where the value of property involved in the commission of an offence is a necessary element in F the assessment of sentences, the value must be strictly proved by credible evidence. In the absence of such evidence, the accused must be given the benefit of the doubt. (See Abdalla Ali v R. [1969] H.C.D. n. 298; and Amri v.R., [1971] H.C.D. n. 126). G
For the foregoing reasons, I am of the view that the learned trial magistrate was perfectly entitled to give the appellant the benefit of doubt in the circumstances.
In the upshot, this appeal fails and so is hereby dismissed in its entirety. H

[zJDz]Judgment

H Ramadhani and Mfalila, JJ.A.: Mr. Marando, learned counsel, informed the Court, when the appeal came up for hearing, that as there was a conflict of interests among the appellants, he was unable to represent all three of them and consequently his failure to file any memorandum of appeal. Mr. Marando drew our attention to the fact I that two counsel were assigned at the trial. He therefore applied for adjournment so that additional counsel could be appointed. Mr. Kaduri for the respondent Republic did not object to the application.

1990 TLR p63

RAMADHANI JJA and MFALILA JJA

The Court on its own motion drew the attention of Mr. Marando to the joint notice of appeal of the appellants. It is A stated there that the appeal is against the mandatory sentence of death which was imposed consequent to the conviction for murder. Mr. Marando opined that the appeal ought to have been against conviction.

Indeed section 6 (1) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1979 prescribes so when it provides, in the relevant part, as B follows:

6 (1) Any person convicted on a trial held by the High Court or by a subordinate Court exercising extended powers may appeal to the Court of Appeal. C

(a) where he has been sentenced to death, against conviction on any ground of appeal;

The Court of Appeal is seized of an appeal when a notice of appeal is lodged. The issue now is whether with this D anomaly, that is a notice of appeal against sentence instead of against conviction, it can be said that the Court is seized of an appeal. In other words has a valid notice of appeal been lodged.

Mr. Marando was of the opinion that there was in effect no appeal at all before the Court and hence it was wrong E on his part to ask for an adjournment as there was nothing to be adjourned.

A similar situation like this arose in the appeal of Jamal Ismail v R. Criminal appeal No. 163 of 1989. This court upheld the argument that there was a notice of appeal before the Court but that it was defective. We would F therefore reiterate what we had said earlier on in Jamal Ismail v R. That:

Complete failure to file any notice at all would render the proposed appeal incompetent. It would be rather akin to G complete failure to extract the decree in a proposed Civil appeal. In the instant case some attempt was made to comply with the Rule and without the guidance of counsel. There can be no doubt that this was an unintentional slip by laymen, there being no possibility of appealing against sentence only. H

As such the Court is seized of the appeal and we direct Mr. Marando to amend the notice of appeal informally and we further direct the Registrar to assign another counsel for the third appellant while Mr. Marando represents the first two appellants. The appeal is adjourned to a date to be fixed. I

KISANGA JA

A Kisanga, J.A.: I have had the advantage of reading in draft the majority ruling of the court in this matter. The background to the matter has been set out in the majority ruling I need not repeat it here.

The only point on which opinion is divided is whether there is an appeal before us which we can adjourn to enable B counsel to take further steps in the matter. The majority view is that there was a defective notice which in law constituted the appeal and therefore the court could validly adjourn such appeal for the purposes as intimated above. I am of a different view.

C The Court of Appeal in its function is guided by the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979 and the Court of Appeal Rules also of the same year. It is these two instruments which guide the Court of Appeal in the exercise of its function which is exclusively appellate. The right and procedure of appeal by persons who have been sentenced to death are to be found under the Appellate Jurisdiction Act and the Court of Appeal Rules. The majority view D acknowledges that, in terms of section 6 (1) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act there is no provision for appeal against sentence only; there is only provision in the Court of Appeal Rules which sanctions an appeal against sentence only.

E I am unable to accede to the majority view that the appellants being laymen, and acting without the guidance of counsel, took as wrong view of the law and unintentionally appealed against sentence only. The record shows that after passing the death sentence on 20.9.89 the trial judge explained to the appellants their right of appeal. In the F absence of any indication to the contrary, the learned judge must be taken to have explained to them fully their right of appeal including the right to appeal against conviction; there can be no reason to think that he did not explain to them their right of appeal against conviction, and indeed the appellants have not suggested so. On the same day (20.9.89) the appellants gave notice of appeal in the following terms:

G The appeal is against the sentence only.

That sentence is couched in terms which clearly show that the appellants were aware of more than one right of appeal but that they consciously chose to exercise the right to appeal against the sentence only. That would be H consistent with the view that the trial judge must have explained to them their right to appeal against conviction as well but they opted against it and in favour of appealing against the sentence only.

I Not only that. The appellant's notice of appeal was in strict compliance with the requirements of the law. Rule 61 of the Court of

KISANGA JA

Appeal Rules says, inter alia, that: A

61 (1) any person who desires to appeal to the Court shall give notice in writing, which shall be lodged in triplicate with the Registrar of the High Court at the place where the decision against which it is desired to appeal was given, within B fourteen days of the date of that decision, and the notice of appeal shall institute the appeal.

(2) ....

(3) ....

(4) ....

(5) C

(6) ....

(7) a notice of appeal shall be substantially in the form B in the First schedule to these Rules and shall be signed by or on behalf of the appellant. D

The relevant part of Form B reads:

TAKE NOTICE that.....appeals to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania against the decision of the Honourable Mr. Justice..... given at.....on the .....day of.....19..... whereby the appellant was convicted to.....and E sentenced to.....

The appeal is against conviction only/conviction and sentence/sentence only. F

The marginal note says: "Delete inappropriate words or amend as necessary".

In compliance therewith the appellants gave their joint notice of appeal within the prescribed time limit and opted to appeal against sentence only. In other words the law gave them three options, viz. to appeal against conviction only G or to appeal against both conviction and sentence or to appeal against sentence only and required them to show which option they chose the last option, namely, to appeal against sentence only, thereby deleting or missing out the options to appeal against conviction or against conviction and sentence. That was clearly a conscious act of H selecting or choosing one option out of three given options, and I could find no room for the view that the appellants might have taken a wrong view of the law or that they might have been under some misapprehension as to their rights of appeal or as to which right of appeal exactly they intended to exercise. I

KISANGA JA

A There is equally no support for the view that notice of appeal was defective. For, the notice was given within the prescribed time limit, and it was in accordance with the appellants' own wish or intention in that the appellants, out of the three specified options, desired to appeal against sentence only and they in fact did just that. I can see nothing B defective about that. It would have been a different matter if it appeared that the appellants had wished or intended to appeal against conviction or against conviction and sentence but that for one reason or another they could not achieve that aim. But, as has been demonstrated out of the three options open and known to them, the C appellants chose not appeal against conviction or conviction and sentence; instead they chose to appeal against sentence only. There was nothing to prevent them from appealing against conviction or against conviction and sentence if they were minded to do so. In short, my own view is that at the time of giving the notice of appeal, the D appellants had no intention of appealing against their conviction otherwise there was nothing to prevent them from doing so. To my mind the appellants' express declaration that "The appeal is against the sentence only" means precisely what it says and could not possibly be said to include, or to be confused with, a wish or intention to E appeal against conviction. To say that declaration includes an intention to appeal against conviction would be tantamount to ascribing to the appellants an intention which they did not have, and that in my opinion would be patently wrong.

To my mind it would not be quite correct either to compare, like the majority view has done, the situation here with F one in civil cases where there has been failure to extract the decree. The two situations appear to be different. In the civil case the ground for complaint would be that an intending appellant has failed to take an essential step in the proceedings i.e. to extract the decree. That necessarily presupposes that the appeal, meaning the proceedings, is G already instituted. In the instant case, however, the view I have taken is that no appeal has so far been instituted or initiated. That is to say the appellants have given no notice (or purported notice) of appeal against conviction to institute an appeal against conviction. What they have done is to give notice of appeal against the death sentence H only, which in law does not exist or is not sanctioned, and which therefore the court cannot take cognizance of.

For the reasons I have endeavoured to give, it seems plain to me that at the time of giving the notice, the appellants I did not wish or intend to appeal against conviction even though they were aware of that right. Such intention was formed by, or ascribed to them only subsequently but then no necessary steps have so far been taken to effect such subsequent intention. In my view, therefore, there was no question of the appellants having given a A defective notice of appeal or having made an attempt to appeal against conviction because they had no intention of appealing against conviction at the material time. There was simply no notice or a purported notice of appeal against B conviction. There was merely a misconceived appeal against sentence only.

I would therefore, with respect, subscribe to Mr. Marando's view that there is in law no appeal before us because no notice has been given to institute or initiate the same. On that account I would have declined to grant an C adjournment because in law there is nothing before us which can be adjourned. In my view to grant an adjournment and to require counsel to amend such misconceived notice of appeal would amount to an attempt to improve upon something which, in law, does not exist. I would have struck out the appeal as being misconceived and counsel to D take the necessary steps of applying to the convicting court, under section 11 (1) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, for extension of time to file notice of appeal against conviction.

Order accordingly. E

Case Information
E Appeal allowed.
[zJDz]Judgment
Mfalila, Makame and Kisanga, JJ.A.: In the Dar es Salaam Regional Housing Tribunal, the respondent Paulo F E. Maro applied for vacant possession of the premises in house No. 89 Plot 9 Block 54 along Uhuru Street, Dar es Salaam. He made this application on three grounds. The first ground was non payment of rent by the appellants from 1st January, 1986, that the appellants had failed or refused to pay rent from that date. The second ground was G that the respondent requires the premises for his own use and that of his family as he has no other accommodation available to him after being evicted from his former employer's premises. The third ground was that the appellants had in breach of the conditions of their tenancy, sublet the premises to third parties. In the premises, the respondent prayed for vacant possession, arrears of rent from 1st January, 1986 at shs. 13,500/= per month and costs. The H Regional Housing Tribunal dismissed the application on the basis that the respondent had not proved that there was available to the appellants reasonable equal alternative accommodation to which they could move. Secondly that I there was no evidence showing that the appellants had sublet the premises as alleged, on the contrary the respondent had found all the occupants in the premises at the time he bought them in 1981. Against this decision the respondent appealed to the Housing Appeals Tribunal which A dismissed the appeal on the ground that non payment of rent had not been proved, in fact the Tribunal found the allegation false. Secondly that there was no proof that the appellants had sublet the premises, but that in fact all the people in the house were there when the respondent bought the suit premises. Thirdly that the respondent had not B shown that there is available to the appellants suitable alternative accommodation to be used both for commercial and residential purposes like the present premises. Against this decision, the respondent successfully appealed to the High Court. The High Court, Mnzavas, J.K, (as he then was) allowed the appeal and ordered repossession in C favour of the respondent, holding that the landlord was houseless therefore refusing him the order of repossession would cause him greater hardship than the tenants would suffer by being evicted. The appellants applied to the High Court for leave to appeal to this Court against this decision. On 2nd September, 1989 Kyando, J., granted leave D and certified two points of law which are part of the memorandum of appeal. In their appeal to this Court, the appellants filed five grounds of appeal but we think these can be boiled down to two main complaints namely, first, that the learned Judge failed to consider matters that were specifically before the Court, instead proceed to consider and decide on matters that were not in issue. For instance instead of deciding on the applicability, extent and E meaning of section 25 (e) (i) and (ii) of the Rent Restriction Act 1984, non payment of rent and subletting and therefore whether it was open to the Court to make an order of repossession, the Court merely considered whether the landlord required the premises for himself and his family. Secondly that the learned Judge erred in taking F additional evidence without good cause.

As indicated at the beginning of this judgment, the respondent applied for vacant possession of his premises on three grounds, namely non payment of rent, subletting and that he requires the premises for his own use. The first G two grounds are questions of fact and therefore cannot be subjects of appeals to this Court. In fact both the Regional Housing Tribunal and the Housing Appeals Tribunal made specific findings of fact that the respondents allegation of non payment of rent was false and that the allegation of subletting was not proved in view of the fact H that all the occupants of these premises were present when the respondent bought the premises in 1982. Therefore both in the High Court and in this Court; the respondent was left with only one ground namely the he reasonably requires the premises for his own use and that of this family.

But this is only the first limb of the question and as I a question of fact it should properly be decided by the two Housing Tribunals. It is the second limb
MFALILA JJA, MAKAME JJA AND KISANGA JJA
A - namely whether alternative accommodation, reasonably: equivalent is available or will be available at the time that the order takes effect, or that the tenant has built or owns a dwelling house suitable for his own accommodation which is available to him or would be so available but for his own act in disposing of the same, B which called for a decision in the High Court. The same applies to commercial premises. What is alternative reasonably equal accommodation is a question of law involving the interpretation of section 25 (e) (i) and subsection (2). In the light of this, the appellants' complaints against the approach and decision of the High Court would appear C to be justified. In the course of the hearing of the appeal in the High Court, the question was whether the Landlord reasonably required the premises for himself and his family for occupation. We think with respect that Counsel for the appellants wasted a lot of his energy trying to disprove or rather to show that the respondent had not proved D that he reasonably required the premises for his own occupation. In his evidence, the respondent had stated quite clearly in our view that having lost his former residence along with his employment with the Posts and Telecommunications Corporation, he had to turn to his own house as he had nowhere else to go. Counsel for the E appellants insisted that the respondent could only prove his need by producing documentary evidence that he had lost his staff accommodation along with his employment. This insistence on documentary proof may be uncalled for in situation where the Landlord cannot get such evidence. If pushed to its logical conclusion, it may result in hardship F to the Landlord. We think that on the evidence, the respondent lost his job and accommodation that went with it, he was therefore entitled to turn to the only accommodation available to him namely his own premises. But establishing that he reasonably requires the premises for his own occupation is not the end of the matter. The Rent G Restriction Act requires for both residential and commercial premises (before section 25 was amended by Act 5/1990) that before making an order for recovery of possession on this ground, the Tribunal must be satisfied that alternative accommodation, reasonably equivalent is available or will be available at the time that the order takes H effect. Thus in this case the more important question for the High Court related to the second limb, the availability of the alternative reasonably equivalent accommodation. It was only after answering that question that the Court could have gone on to dispose of the question provided in subsection (2) of section 25, namely whether having regard to I all the circumstances of the case it is reasonable to make such an order and that unless such an order is made great hardship will be caused to the landlord. As it turned out, the High Court skipped the middle question and held that since the landlord was houseless, it was reasonable to A make an order for recovery of possession and that greater hardship will be caused to the landlord if the order is not made. This is the appellant's main complaint in this appeal, and with respect we agree that the High Court skipped an essential step in the process. B At the trial, the respondent stated that both appellants had available to them alternative accommodation. In the case of the first appellant, he said, he has other accommodation currently used as commercial premises styled FURAHA TAILORING along Livingstone Street. As for the second appellant, he said, he has his own residence opposite the C suit premises along Uhuru Street. Both appellants conceded that they had such premises, but they stated that not only are these premises not available to them, but they are not suitable and reasonably equivalent to the suit premises which are used for both residential and commercial purposes. The respondent countered that since D commercial and residential premises are separately provided for in the Act, if the suit premises are used both for residential and commercial purposes, then the alternative accommodation answering to one of the descriptions is reasonably equivalent, and that therefore the Housing Appeals Tribunal was wrong to hold otherwise. The E alternative accommodations referred to commercial purposes not for both as the present premises. Are these therefore reasonably equivalent to the present premises in terms of Section 25 (1) (e) (i) and (ii) of the Rent Restriction Act? If the appellants are evicted from the present premises, they will not be able to carry on the F activities they are able to do in the present premises, namely, reside and work. They will only be able to do one or the other. In England, where the alternative accommodation is only required to be suitable, as opposed to ours which is required to be reasonably equivalent, the Court of Appeal held in Warren v Austen [1947] 2 All E.R. G 185 that where a tenant living in premises with playing facilities for his children and an agreement which entitled him to take in paying guests to supplement this income, alternative accommodation without these facilities was not suitable accommodation. In the Tanzanian positon where the alternative accommodation must H be reasonably equivalent, the position is even more demanding and that therefore in the present case is the alternative accommodation which cannot be used both for residential and commercial purposes cannot be reasonably equivalent to the suit premises. With such a finding it is not necessary and it should not have been I necessary for the High Court to go and consider the question under subsection (2) whether it is reasonable to

A make such an order and whether unless such an order is made great hardship will be caused to the landlord.

The second main ground of appeal centred on the learned Judge's calling for additional evidence designed to show whether or not the landlord reasonably required the premises for his own occupation. Since there were no B conflicting views in the two lower Tribunals on the matter, we think there was no need for a second appellate Court to require proof of this fact. There could be situations where a second appellate Court can feel compelled to take such action, but this is not one of them. In fact it only ended up confusing issues before the Court. C The Court answered wrong questions leaving the right ones unanswered. But on the view that we have taken of the second limb to be requirements imposed by section 25 (1) (e) (i) and (ii) we do not feel we are called upon to say any more on the matter.

D For these reasons we allow the appeal by setting aside the judgment and orders of the High Court and restoring those of the Housing Appeals Tribunal. We also make an order for costs in favour of the appellants.

Appeal allowed.

In an application for directions the High Court directed that the life style of the deceased at the time of his death was A governed by the traditions, customs and practices of the Bahaya tribe to which he (the deceased) belonged, therefore, the law applicable in administering the distribution of the estate was the customary law of the Bahaya. The High Court further directed that since the first appellant was not lawfully married to the deceased because the B previous monogamous marriage to the second respondent was still subsisting, the 2 issues of the deceased's cohabitation with the f irst appellant were illegitimate children who under the applicable Bahaya customary law did not legally qualify for distribution, because an illegitimate child cannot inherit from the father's side upon his dying C intestate. On appeal to the Court of Appeal against the directions.

Held:(i) In administering the estate the Administrator-General does not have to appear in the Primary Court for any purpose because he is not acting as an advocate representing a particular party. All that is required of him is to D distribute the estate to all those who qualify for distribution. In case he runs into a difficulty he may turn to the High Court f or direction.

Kisanga, Makame and Mfalila, JJ.A. This appeal arises from the decision of the High Court (Mapigano, J.) H upon an application to him for directions on matters relating to intestate succession.

The deceased Bruno Kahangwa died intestate on 28.12.86. He was survived by his widow Eudokia Kahangwa (the second respondent) with whom he had celebrated a monogamous Christian marriage on 6.11.82. He was also I survived by a female child (Lilian) of that marriage

KISANGA JJA, MAKAME JJA AND MFALILA JJA

A born on 17.8.83. At the time of death, however he and his widow, Eudokia, had been estranged and were living apart but their marriage was still subsisting. Their daughter Lilian was staying with the mother. In the meantime the deceased was living or cohabiting with another woman, Violet Ishengoma (the first appellant) with whom he B contracted a customary law marriage as evidenced by a marrying certificate put in evidence and dated 25.6.86. During their association or cohabitation the deceased and Violet begot two children - Reynold born on 1.12.84 and Diana born on 9.2.86.

C Following the death of the deceased, his widow Eudokia, applied that the Administrator-General (the first respondent) be appointed administrator of the deceased's estate. The application was duly granted by the High Court, but subsequently Violet Ishengoma (the first appellant) and Jovin Mutabuzi, a brother of the deceased (the D second appellant) applied for the revocation of that appointment and instead asked that the said Jovin Mutabuzi (the second appellant) be appointed to administer the estate in accordance with the customary law of the Bahaya. In the High Court the applicants/appellants Violet Ishengoma and Jovin Mutabuzi were represented by Mr. E Malingumu Rutashobya. Mr. Ngoto appeared for the first respondent, the Administrator-General while Mr. W.B.L. Kapinga was for the second respondent Eudokia Kahangwa. At the hearing before the High Court however, the applicants/appellants abandoned their application for the revocation of the appointment of the Administrator-General as the administrator of the estate, but the Court was asked by the parties for direction on F two matters:

1. Whether the customary law of the Bahaya should govern the distribution of the estate, and

G 2. Whether the two children of the deceased viz. Reynold and Diana by the first appellant would qualify for a share or shares in the distribution of the estate.

The learned Judge in a painstaking decision came to the conclusion that the distribution of the estate was governed H by the customary law of the Bahaya, it appeared to him that the life style of the deceased at the time of his death was governed by the traditions, customs and practices of the Bahaya tribe to which he (the deceased) belonged. Accordingly, the learned Judge directed the Administrator-General to apply that law.

I On the second question the learned Judge held that the two children did not qualify for distribution because they were illegitimate. This is how he arrived at that conclusion. The purported customary law marriage between the deceased and the first A appellant was, under section 38 (1)(c) of the Law Marriage Act, a nullity because in terms of section 15 (1) of that Act the deceased had no legal capacity to marry by reason of his prior and subsisting monogamous marriage with the second respondent. The two children were, therefore illegitimate because they were born of an adulterous B association between the deceased and the first appellant. And under the Local Customary Law (Declaration) (No.4) Order 1963 published as G.N. No. 436 of 1963 and made applicable to the Bahaya tribe vide G.N. 605 of 1963, illegitimate children cannot inherit from the father's side upon the father dying intestate. Accordingly the C learned Judge directed the Administrator-General that the two children did not legally qualify for distribution. It is from that decision that this appeal arises.

Before us Counsel appearances were the same as they were in the High Court except that the D Administrator-General was now represented by Mr. T.Z. Ruganzibwa. Mr. Rutashobya filed and argued two grounds of appeal. For convenience, we set out here in below the two grounds together with the order he has asked for: E

1. That the learned Judge erred when he held that the estate of Bruno Kahangwa be administered according to the customary law of the Bahaya Tribe and yet declared that the two children of the deceased Raymond (sic.) Kahangwa and Diana Kahangwa do not legally qualify for distribution. F

2. That the learned Judge misdirected himself when he directed Administrator-General to apply the customary law of the Bahaya Tribe administrating the estate of the deceased without taking into account G the fact that the matter then came within the jurisdiction of the Primary Court competent to adjudicate on the matter where the Administrator General had no locus standi.

It is proposed to ask the Honourable Court of Appeal of Tanzania for the following Orders: H

(a) A declaration that the two children of the 1st Appellant Violet Ishengoma Kahangwa, Raymond (sic.) Kahangwa and Diana Kahangwa are entitled to succeed the estate of their father the late Bruno I Kahangwa;

1990 TLR p76

KISANGA JJA, MAKAME JJA AND MFALILA JJA

A (b) An order directing that the probate (sic.) proceedings in respect of the estate of the deceased should be adjudicated upon in a Primary Court of competent jurisdiction and that the estate of the late Bruno Kahangwa should be administered by the 2nd Appellant Jovin Mutabuzi according to the customary law B of the Bahaya tribe.

It is at once apparent that ground 2 is both incompetent and misconceived. Before the High Court Mr. Rutashobya C had abandoned his application to the court to revoke the appointment of the Administrator-General, and henceforth the matter proceeded on the footing that the Administrator-General was the duly appointed administrator of the estate. That is to say the matter was agreed to and duly settled in the High Court. For the learned Counsel to seek on appeal to question or criticize the appointment of the Administrator General is tantamount to re-opening the D issue to which Counsel himself had conceded. That, in our view, he cannot properly do because it would lead to endless proceedings.

Even assuming that it was open to him to raise that point at this stage, his ground for the complaint does not appear E sound. If we understood him correctly his argument is that it is the Primary Court which was competent to administer the customary law of the Bahaya, but that the appointment of Administrator-General was irregular in that it would make it impracticable for him (the Administrator-General) to administer the estate because he has no locus F standi in the Primary Court. By saying that the Administrator-General has no locus standi in the Primary Court we understand him to mean that the Administrator-General has no right of audience in that court. If this is what learned Counsel meant, and we could not figure what else he could have meant, then with respect he must have got G mixed up as to the role and function of the Administrator-General in the matter. In administering the estate the Administrator-General does not have to appear in the Primary Court for any purpose. For, he is not acting as an advocate representing a particular party. All that is required of him is to distribute the estate to all those who qualify for distribution. In determining who qualifies for what share he, as a lawyer, is to apply the customary law of the H Bahaya, and in case he runs into a difficulty he may turn to the High Court for directions. In such circumstances it seems to us that the learned counsel's contention that the Administrator - General has no locus standi meaning he has no right of audience, in the Primary Court is of little or no relevance because, as already noted, his appointment I to administer the estate does not entail any appearances in the Primary Court.

KISANGA JJA, MAKAME JJA AND MFALILA JJA

It is quite apparent that Mr. Rutashobya was not aggrieved by the learned judge's direction that the Bahaya A customary law should be applied. Indeed this is what the learned Counsel himself had specifically asked for, and we are satisfied that for the reason given by the learned Judge as referred to hereinbefore, that direction was perfectly sound. Mr. Rutashobya's real grievance is that the second appellant, and not the Administrator-General, should B administer the estate but, as we have sufficiently indicated, that issue was settled at the commencement of hearing the application before the High Court following Mr. Rutashobya's own conceding the same, and no grounds have been advanced for re-opening it on appeal. C

In the remaining ground of appeal Mr. Rutashobya asserts that the learned Judge erred in holding that the two children did not qualify for distribution and asks us to fault that direction. He did not seriously challenge the finding that the two children were illegitimate. Indeed he could not have done so because there was overwhelming evidence D to support that finding. Nor can there by any argument that under paragraph 43 of G.N.No.436 of 1963 read together with G.N. No. 605 of 1963 an illegitimate child cannot inherit from the father's side upon his dying intestate. However learned counsel urged us to say that the two children qualified for distribution on the ground that their deceased father had legal and moral obligation to maintain them, and that upon his death that obligation E continued and attached to his estate. In support of the submission counsel referred us to, inter alia, the provisions of section 129(1) of the Law of Marriage Act and two English decisions in the cases of In re Joslin [1941] Ch. F 200 and In re Makein [1955] Ch. 194.

We have given most anxious consideration to Mr. Rutashobya's submission, but we are unable to accede to it. His reference to section 129(1) of the Law of Marriage Act was undoubtedly influenced by the views expressed by the learned Judge about that provision. The learned Judge was comparing the present state of our law on intestate G succession with that of England and observed that the Tanzania law militates against illegitimate children. He noted that in England a number of statutory attempts have been made to try to alleviate this situation but that there have been no equivalent or corresponding efforts in Tanzania. It was in this context that he made reference to section 129 H (1) of the Law of Marriage Act and said that was about the only relevant statutory provision on the subject. That provision says:

129 (1) Save where an agreement or order of court otherwise provides, it shall be the duty of a man to maintain his infant I children,

A whether they are in his custody or the custody of any other persons, either by providing them with such accommodation, clothing, food and education as may be reasonable having regard to his means and station in life or by paying the cost thereof.

B The learned judge construed the word "children" appearing in the subsection to include illegitimate children in which case the deceased was duty bound to maintain the two illegitimate children, and, taking the queue from there, Mr. Rutashobya submitted that that duty continued and attached to the deceased's estate upon his dying intestate.

C Mr. Kapinga submitted that the learned Judge wrongly construed the word "children" to include illegitimate children. In his view the word "children" here excluded illegitimate children, and in support therefore referred to the meaning assigned to the word "child" in section 2 (1) of the Law of Marriage Act:

D 'child' includes an adopted child.

The learned Counsel contended that this shows the clear intention of the Legislature to exclude illegitimate children, E otherwise it would have expressly extended the meaning to such children like it did for adopted children. We think that Mr. Kapinga is right. The point he puts forward to support his argument seems quite strong, and we can only say a few words to amplify it The category of illegitimate children is not a negligible proportion of the country's F entire population. Nor can one really say that it is smaller numerically or in any other way lesser as compared to that of adopted children. In those circumstances the fact that parliament singled out adopted children for including in the meaning of "child" and said nothing about illegitimate children increasingly adds to the view that the scheme of the G Law of Marriage Act did not have illegitimate children in its contemplation.

But even if we were to assume for the sake of argument that the learned Judge was right, which in our view he was not, in interpreting the word "children" to include illegitimate children, we think that Mr. Rutashobya' s proposition H that the obligation which the deceased would have to his two illegitimate children would have attached to his estate upon his dying intestate is untenable. At any rate the learned Judge was not prepared to go that far. A perusal of his judgment makes it plain that he was prepared to go only as far as saying that such obligation of the deceased attached only during his life time. Mr. Rutashobya cited no authority for the proposition that such obligation would I survive the deceased and attach to his estate. The problem arose, though not directly, in the English case of In re Harrington [1908] Ch.687 which we find to be persuasive. There it was held A that a putative father's obligation under a bastardy or affiliation order ends with his death, that such obligation is personal and the arrears under such an order are not recoverable against his estate. So that even if the word "children" in section 129 (1) of the Law of Marriage Act were to be enlarged to include illegitimate children and B hence to say that the deceased in the instant case had a duty under the law to maintain his two illegitimate children then on the strength of Harrington's case such duty or obligation being only personal, would not service him; it would have ended with his death. This, therefore appears to run contra to Mr. Rutashobya's thesis that such C obligation, even if it existed, would have attached to the deceased's estate.

We must say that we have much sympathy for Mr. Rutashobya's further view that the two illegitimate children should be held to qualify for distribution on the ground that their deceased father had a moral, as distinct from legal, D obligation to maintain them. However, we are regrettably of the view that in the present state of our law on the subject such a view is equally untenable. In the two cases (In re Joslin and In re Makein) cited by Mr. Rutashobya in support of his contention, the Court was concerned with the interpretation of the word "dependant" E appearing in section 1 (1) of the English Inheritance (Family Provision) Act 1938 to see if that word included illegitimate children so as to qualify them for a claim under the distribution of their deceased father's estate. The Court in In re Makein took the view that it would interpret that word broadly to include an illegitimate child if such extended meaning was more consonant with the object of the Act, but in the particular case it came to the F conclusion that such extended meaning was unwarranted, with the result that an illegitimate son of the deceased did not qualify for distribution from the estate of his father who had died intestate.

But we could not quite see why Mr. Rutashobya cited this case to support the claim of the two children in the G instant case. Because here, unlike in the English case, the court is not called upon to construe or interpret the term "child" in any law governing distribution of the estate of a deceased person. As has been shown, the law governing distribution of the deceased's estate in the instant case is the Bahaya customary law as set out in G.N.No. 436 of H 1963 and applied to Bahaya vide G.N. No.605 of 1963. Paragraph 43 of the law expressly prohibits illegitimate children from inheriting from the father's side where the father died intestate. Thus the facts of the case fall squarely within that provision: The two children Reynold and Diana were obviously illegitimate and it is common ground that I their father died intestate. There is nothing vague,

A ambiguous, inconsistent or incomplete about paragraph 43 which having regard to the facts of the case, would call for interpretation. Giving the words of paragraph 43 their plain and natural meaning as applied to the facts of the case, it simply means that the two illegitimate children of the deceased cannot qualify for distribution. We could find B no room for reading or introducing moral considerations into the provision. In other words we could find no room for interpreting it, as urged by Counsel, so as to make the two illegitimate children qualify for distribution on the ground that their father had a moral obligation towards them. To do so would amount to substituting the Court's C own views for the express provision of the written law; that the courts cannot do.

It is perhaps appropriate to observe here that it seems advisable that in cases like this where a father feels that he owes a moral obligation towards his illegitimate child or children he should seek to honour that obligation by leaving D a will. That would go some way to alleviate the hardship often facing illegitimate children; it would make easier the task of the Courts in handling such cases when they came to Court and it would serve to put the conscience of the putative father at some ease. When all is said, we have to conclude the matter by stating that we could find no E ground for faulting the decision of the learned Judge who in our view was as sympathetic as anyone could have been with the plight of the two illegitimate children of the deceased. For the reasons we have given in this judgment we think that the Judge adequately dealt with, and properly directed himself on, the main issue before him and came to the right conclusion.

F We are satisfied that the appeal against that decision cannot succeed and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Order accordingly. D
El-Maamry, for applicant

[zJDz]Judgment
Kyando, J.: The applicant in this matter Mohamedi Jama Yusuph, is a Somali by origin. He has filed this E application seeking from this court on order of certiorari to quash a deportation order made against him by the Ministry for Home Affairs on 10th April, 1989. The Minister's deportation order was made under s.24 of the Immigration Act, 1972, and it was served on the applicant on 19th April, 1989, after he was arrested on 17th F April, 1989.
The application is supported by the affidavit of the applicant himself. Mr. El-Maamry advocates for him in these proceedings and Mr. Salula, learned State Attorney, appears on behalf of the Minister, who is the respondent in the matter. G
The grounds upon which the application is made are that the applicant is a citizen of Tanzania and he cannot for that reason be deported from this country. He has stated that he is a holder of Tanzania passport No. 152603 which at the moment is in police hands. He also tendered, amongst other documents, birth certificates of himself and his H mother to show that they i.e. his mother and himself, were born in Tanzania and therefore that the applicant is a Tanzanian.

It is, of course, not an easy or simple matter to interfere with or, above all, quash a decision or order of a Minister. In making such decisions or orders, the Minister does so on behalf of government, headed by the President. But, as I we often say, justice must be done, even when

A heavens fall. And as was said by Lord Denning in the case of Congreve v Home Office [1976] A. C. 629 which involved revocation by the Home Secretary in England of a television licence:
B ... when the licensee has done nothing wrong at all, I do not think the Minister can lawfully revoke it without giving reasons, or for no good cause. If he should revoke it without giving cause, or for no good reasons, the courts can set aside his revocation and restore the licence. It would be a misuse of the power conferred on him by Parliament: and C these courts have the authority - and I would add, the duty-to correct a misuse of power by a Minister or his department, no matter how much he may resent it or warn us of the consequence if we do - Padfield v Minister of Agriculture, D Fisheries and Food [1968] AC 997 is proof of what I say. It shows that when a Minister is given discretion - and exercises it for reasons which are bad in law the courts can interfere so as to get him on to the right road. (Underlining supplied.)
E In sum, even though it is not an easy or simple matter to interfere with or quash a Minister's decision or order, courts have authority or power, even a duty, to quash them in proper and fitting cases. In doing so, of course, the courts are not acting as appellate bodies over the ministers' decisions or orders; they only investigate the legality or F otherwise of a decision or order and make determinations on these accordingly. In other words, this power of the courts to review or investigate is not based on the merit, but on the legality, of the Minister's decision or order. Prof. Wade says on the point in Administrative Law, Clarendon Press Oxford, 2nd Edn., p. 48:
G At the root of the matter is jurisdiction or, more simply power. The principle is that if an administrative authority is acting within its jurisdiction, or ultra vires, and no appeal from it is provided by statute, then it is immune from control by a H court of law. But if it exceeds its power, or abuses them so as to exceed them, a court of law can quash its decision and declare it to be legally invalid.
In this matter, the applicant is saying exactly what is stated in the passage above i.e. that the Minister for Home I Affairs acted ultra vires his powers when he ordered the deportation of the applicant, who is a Tanzanian. Did the Minister act ultra vires as contended? This is the fundamental question for determination in this application. A
KYANDO J
As already indicated above, the Minister's order to deport the applicant was made under s.24 of the Immigration Act, 1972. The section provides:
24 - (1) The Minister may make an order (hereinafter referred to as a deportation order) requiring - B

(a) any prohibited immigrant (other than a prohibited immigrant who is the holder of a valid pass or other authorisation issued to him under the provision of this Act); or

(b) any person (other than a citizen of Tanzania) convicted of an offence against any of the provisions of this Act any regulations made there under; or C

(c) any person (other than a citizen of Tanzania) whose continued presence in Tanzania is, in the opinion of the President undesirable, to be deported from, and remain out of Tanzania, either indefinitely or for the period specified in the order. D

Then it is provided under s. 25 of the Act that the burden of proof that a person who is the subject of an order of the deportation is a citizen of Tanzania lies upon him to prove that his is a citizen of Tanzania.

As stated at the beginning of this judgment, the applicant has indicated that he is a holder of a Tanzania passport to E prove that he is a Tanzanian. He has also tendered other documents to establish the fact of his citizenship of this country. The whole of the evidence he has tendered (to show that he is a Tanzanian) has not been challenged in any way. Indeed Mr. Salula did not even seek to reply to Mr. El-Maamry's submissions that the applicant is a citizen of F Tanzania and that the Minister acted wrongly in ordering his deportation. I am satisfied beyond doubt myself that the applicant is a citizen of Tanzania. Is the Minister then justified in ordering his deportation from this country? I unhesitatingly hold that he was not: he acted beyond his power in making the deportation order against the applicant G and acted plainly in breach of the provisions in the Immigration Act, 1972, which empower him to make deportation orders. These provisions do not empower him to deport Tanzanian citizens, like the applicant, from the country. His order of deportation against the applicant was therefore contrary to law, as shown above, and I have, H as I hereby do, to quash it, by certiorari, as prayed in the application filed by the applicant in this court.

Order accordingly. I

Edward D. Kambuga and Wrong Teak Say, the appellants preferred this appeal after the High Court had granted D bail to Kambuga on near impossible conditions and refused to admit to bail Say on the ground that as foreigner he was likely to jump bail and thus fail to attend his trial. In arriving at this decision the judge relied on sections 29 and 35 of the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act 1984 under which the appellants were charged.

E Counsel for the appellants attacked the judge's ruling on the ground that the judge should have applied section 29 in exclusion of section 35 because the latter provision fetters the judge's powers to grant bail, and that it was improper for the judge to deny the second appellant bail on the ground that he was a foreigner.

F Held: (i) The learned judge was correct in using the power to grant bail under section 29 against the mandatory condition stipulated under section 35;

G (ii) as the procedure for granting bail is fully provided for in the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act, 1984 the procedure under the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985 did not apply.

(iii) while foreigners should not be treated differently in our courts merely because they are foreigners, we think H the High Court was entitled to take into account past experience when deciding finally whether or not to grant bail;

(iv) in such cases the court must take into consideration the seriousness of the case facing the foreigner, whether it is of such a nature that in the event of a conviction, the stipulated penalty is so severe as to encourage escape from justice.

Mfalila, Makame and Omar, JJ.A.: This appeal is against the Ruling of the High Court at Dar es Salaam (Kyando, J.) granting bail to the first appellant Edward, D. Kambuga on near impossible conditions under sections 29 and 35 of the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act 1984 and refusing to admit to bail the second B appellant Wrong Teak Say. Currently both appellants are charged before the Resident Magistrate's court at Kisutu with two counts for offences under the Economic and Organized Crime Control Act, henceforth to be referred to as the Act, but have not yet been committed for trial. For this reason, and as the value of the property involved is more C than ten million shillings, the power to hear and grant bail to the appellants is vested only in the High Court. The High Court heard the appellants' application for bail on 26/3/90. At that hearing, it was contended on behalf of the appellants that the High Court should grant them bail under either section 148 (5) of the Criminal Procedure Act or D section 29 of the Act both of which give unfettered power to the High Court to grant bail. It was contended that section 35 of the Act which fetters the power to grant bail was inapplicable because that section only refers to "the court" which is the Economic Crimes Court. However the learned judge held that as the procedure for granting bail E is fully provided for in the Act, the procedure under the Criminal Procedure Act did not apply to the application before him. This reasoning and conclusions by the learned judge is correct and is in line with the view taken by this court in Criminal Appeal No.13 of 1989 Juma Athuman & 5 Others v Republic. F

The learned judge also held that his power to grant bail under section 29 was fettered by section 35 and granted bail to the first appellant under conditions spelled out in the section and refused bail to the second appellant on the ground that as a foreigner he was more likely to flee the country and thus fail to attend his trial. Two grounds were G filed by Mr. Maira in support of the appeal against this decision. The first was in respect of the bail conditions imposed on the first appellant, that in an application for bail under section 29 (4) (d) of the Act, the discretion of the court is unfettered. The second ground related to the court's refusal to grant bail to the second appellant on the basis of his being a foreigner. H

At the hearing of the appeal, Mr. Maira argued in support of the first ground that the High Court should only have acted under section 29 of the Act without considering section 35 which fetters the discretion of the court because the conditions stipulated in that section are so onerous that they almost amount to a denial of bail and this cannot be I the law, bail being a right which should only be taken away in

A exceptional circumstances. Unfortunately for Mr. Maira, this happens to be the law, and as conceded by him, this would dispose of his argument. We agree with Mr. N.D who argued for the Republic that sections 29 and 35 serve different purposes. Section 29 provides the power to grant bail in economic cases whereas section 35 lays B down the extent to which that power should be exercised. The two sections should therefore be read and applied in tandem as it were. They cannot be separated as suggested by Mr. Maira. The learned judge was therefore correct in using the power to grant bail under section 29 against the mandatory conditions stipulated under section 35.

C On the second ground, Mr. Maira argued that there is no evidence that foreigners generally jump bail and that therefore the High Court took a wrong view of previous episodes as a justification for treating the second appellant differently.

D While we agree that foreigners should not be treated differently in our courts merely because they are foreigners, we think the High Court was entitled to take into account past experience when deciding finally whether or not to grant bail. In similar past episodes involving foreigners, no conditions including the impounding of passports proved sufficient to prevent the jumping of bail . However, in all such cases, the court, as the learned judge did in this case, E must take into consideration the seriousness of the case facing the foreigner, whether it is of such a nature that in the event of a conviction, the stipulated penalty is so severe as to encourage escape from justice. The learned judge F was of the view that this is such a case and there is no reason which we can use to disagree with this assessment.

Appeal dismissed.

Kisanga, Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: The appellant was convicted on his own plea of guilty to D manslaughter and sentenced to 9 years' imprisonment. He is now appealing against the sentence only.
The facts as adduced by the prosecution and admitted by the appellant were as follows: The appellant and the E deceased were brother-in-law. On the day of the incident they were at a pombe shop drinking and both of them became drunk. The deceased became troublesome and started to fight other people. The appellant intervened to restrain him but he turned on him and fought him as well, causing him to fall to the ground. Before the appellant could get up, the deceased pounced on him, whereupon the appellant gave him a kick in the stomach which sent F him to the ground leaving him injured. He was taken to hospital where he died of a ruptured spleen.
In passing the sentence the learned judge stated that the courts should not show leniency to persons who kill G following excessive drinking. But as the facts show, the appellant did not kill because of excessive drinking on his part. Although he was drunk, he behaved responsibly by intervening to restrain the deceased who was disturbing the peace. When he was thus performing this lawful and noble duty, the deceased took offence and attacked him. H That obviously amounted to grave provocation which in our view should have warranted the exercise of leniency in sentencing the appellant for killing the deceased on the account.

The other factors pleaded in mitigation were that the appellant, in occasioning the death, administered only one kick on the deceased, and it may be added that he did not use any weapon. He readily I

A pleaded guilty to the charge. He was remorseful and the deceased was his brother-in-law. He was a first offender and had been in remand since 1987.
At first Mr. J.D. Mono, the learned Senior State Attorney appearing for the Republic, took the view that although B the sentence was on the heavy side, it was not manifestly excessive so as to warrant interference by this Court. On reflection, however, he conceded and changed his mind; and like him, we are of the view that considering the mitigating factors as outlined above, and considering all the circumstances of the case, the sentence of 9 years' C imprisonment was manifestly excessive. In the circumstances we feel justified to interfere. That sentence is reduced to a term of imprisonment which will result into the appellant' s immediate release from prison unless he is held there on some other lawful ground. The appeal is allowed to that extent.

Kisanga, Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: This appeal arises from the sentence of 20 years' imprisonment passed on the appellant following his conviction on the charge of manslaughter to which he had pleaded guilty. C

The appellant who is over 50 years of age is the father of the deceased, a boy aged only about 7 years. On the day of the incident the appellant returned home and found the deceased absent. In addition he was informed that deceased did not attend school either. When the deceased eventually came home the appellant chastised him by D beating him using sticks, fists and kicks. The deceased tried to run away from the onslaught, but as he did so he fell on a stone and sustained a serious head injury which led to his death. The appellant tried to retrieve the life of the deceased by treating him and then taking him to hospital but in vain. E

In meting out the sentence, the learned High Court Judge observed that what the appellant did was far beyond what was expected of a father, and that the attack on a child of such tender age was most inhuman. But the appellant's F act of chastising the child for playing truancy is something which the society approves of. The only valid criticism is that in so chastising the deceased, the appellant over-reacted by acting violently, as evidenced by his use of fists and kicks. We think that such criticism could not be a sufficient basis for imposing such a stiff sentence of 20 years' G imprisonment, especially considering that the fists and kicks were not the direct and immediate cause of the fatal head injury.

Mr. M.K. Kimomogoro, the learned advocate for respondent Republic took the view that the sentence was manifestly excessive, and we entirely agree. On that account we feel justified to interfere. Accordingly the H appellant's prison sentence of 20 years' imprisonment is reduced to one of 3 years' imprisonment. The appeal is therefore allowed to this limited extent.

Mnzavas, J.A.: This is an application under rule 43 (b) and 44 of the Court of Appeal Rules and under Section 5 F (1) (c) of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1979; against the Ruling of Mwakibete, J. delivered on 31/8/89.

The dispute between the parties that has culminated to this application started in Moshi RM's Court as RM Civil Case No. 54/ 82. The dispute was over two houses and the trial court was required to decide whether the two G houses belonged to the applicant's father alone or whether they were jointly owned by the parties i.e. Elisa Mosses Msaki and Yesaya Ngateu Matee. After a full trial by the court of first instance the Court was satisfied, and came to the conclusion that the two disputed houses were jointly owned by the parties. Dissatisfied by the decision of the H district Court the applicant appealed to the High Court in High Court Civil Appeal No. 19 of 1985. The appeal was dismissed on 8/7/88, (Munuo, J.), and the decision of the trial Court affirmed.

I Before this Court Mr. Desouza, learned counsel for the applicant, argued in support of the application that both the trial court and the High Court erred in not deciding as to who between the parties was the owner of the plot on which the houses are built. This failure, it was argued has caused a lot of difficulties as A ownership over the plots remains unresolved. It was submitted that the point regarding ownership of the plot was basic and that this Court should grant the application although it was not raised in the High Court. B

Held: (1) that the question of ownership of the plot on which the two houses are built was neither the issue in the RMs Court nor in the High Court.

(2) Secondly it was submitted that the application is out of time as, it was argued, it was in contravention of C the provisions of Rule 43 (b) of the Court of Appeal Rules which specifies that such application should be lodged within 14 days from the ruling of the High Court. According to Mr. Shayo's argument the Ruling of the High Court was delivered on 10/8/89 and this application was filed on 13/9/89. D

I will first deal with the question of limitation. I agree with Mr. Shayo's submission that the ruling of the High Court is dated 10/8/89 but as rightly argued by Mr. Desouza the actual reading of the ruling to the parties was on 31/8/89. E That being the position the application to this Court for leave is timeous.

Coming to the argument as to whether there is in this case question of law calling for determination by this Court I have read the judgment of the trial court and I am satisfied that the issues between the parties in the RM's Court F was about ownership of the houses. Equally, in the appeal before the High Court the issued canvassed by the learned counsels for the parties was that of ownership of the houses and the question as to who should collect rent from the houses.

The question as to who was the owner of the plot on which the houses stood neither featured in the Court of first G instance nor in the High Court. This Court will only look into matters which came up in the lower Court and decided; not on which were not raised nor decided by neither the trial Court nor the High Court on appeal.

The decision of the Court of first instance regarding ownership of the houses was wholly based on matters of fact H involving credibility of the witnesses. That being the position I am far from being persuaded by Mr. Desouza's submission that the learned High Court Judge armed in coming to the conclusion that there were no points of law involved in this case calling for determination by this Court. I

A Accordingly this application for leave to appeal to this court fails. The respondent to have his costs.

D Criminal law - Murder - Malice aforethought - Killing as to effect stealing -Whether malice aforethought may be inferred.

The appellants, charged with and convicted of the offence of murder, appealed against both conviction and E sentence. The trial court based its conviction on the fact that the appellants were found in possession of stolen property a few hours after the watchman of a shop was killed. And, it was established that the property was stolen from the shop which the watchman was guarding. When arrested one of the appellants asked to be pardoned and F the other said matters were becoming serious and later cried at the CCM office.

Counsel for appellants charged on appeal that recent possession of stolen property could not alone, in the circumstances, ground a conviction of murder.

G Held: (i) The possession was very recent and that this fact cannot be ignored. The distance from the burgled shop to Chigugu is 28 miles and it takes 5 hours to travel by taking a short cut path or road. To be found at 10.00 am. the following day having already arrived at Chigugu means that there was no time lost by the possessors of H goods in running away from the scene of crime;

(ii) in the circumstances it was not wrong to conclude that the appellants were also responsible for killing the deceased, and because we are satisfied that the killing was so as to effect the stealing we are of the view that it was quite proper to infer malice aforethought;

I (iii) this is a fit case for invoking the doctrine of recent possession to support not only the shop breaking and theft but also the murder.

Omar, Makame and Mfalila, JJ.A.: The two appellants were charged with and convicted of the offence of B murder contrary to section 196 of the Penal Code.

The prosecution led evidence to the effect that on the night of 14th June, 1988 at Majengo "C" area in Nachingwea District the shop of P.W. 2 Abbas Ally Maji was burgled and its watchman was killed. The following day at about C 10 am. at Chigudu village the stolen goods were found in the possession of the two appellants who were trying to sell them to a shop owner P.W.3 Mohamed Bonamali. P.W.4 Rashidi Ally Rashidi was called from his house by his father-in-law P.W.3 to go and assist in this transaction. When P.W.4 talked to the two appellants and inspected the D goods he suspected that they were stolen articles and so he put the appellants under arrest. Eventually the two suspects were sent to CCM Office where the Village chairman opened the bag which contained the goods and inspected them. They were the following goods: 34 pairs of Khanga, 14 pairs of vitenge, cloth materials for gowns, E bicycle tubes and tyres, soap, underwear and shoes, also a bicycle on which the bag was put. From there the appellants were sent to Ndanda Police Station and thence to Nachingwea where they were charged with this offence. The owner of the burgled shop was called to the Police Station and he identified the things as some of his F shop goods stolen the previous night.

First appellant in his defence denied stealing any goods from any shop. He was at Chigugu bus stand with the second appellant who he had met at Ndomondo Village when he was arrested with him. First appellant stated G further that he was running from the police who were after him because of his escape from them while they were taking him to the Court on a charge of possessing stolen properly.

The second appellant Selemeni also denied any involvement in the goods claimed to be stolen. He explained his journey to Chigugu and how he met first appellant on the way, and that they were arrested when they were waiting H for the bus.

Mr. Jadeja, learned Counsel for the two appellants, quoted section 122 Evidence Act 1967 and compared it with section 114 Indian Evidence Act both sections being similar in expression and content:

The Court may infer the existence of any fact it thinks likely to I

1990 TLR p94

MAKAME JJA, OMAR JJA AND MFALILA JJJ

A have happened regard being had to the common course of natural events human conduct and public and private business, in their relation to the facts of the particular case.

B Mr. Jadeja said that we must look for other circumstances as well besides recent possession, it is better, he said to err on the side of acquittal than on the side of conviction. He ended by saying that it was difficult to feel that the appellants had been part of the breaking in and murder.

Mr. Kamba, learned State Attorney, supported the conviction of both appellants based on circumstantial evidence. C Both appellants were identified selling the stolen goods and their reaction to the arrest by P.W.4 had to be taken into account; one asked to be pardoned and the other, the second appellant Selemani, said matters were becoming D serious. Selemani was the one who later cried at the CCM Office.

Mr. Jadeja in his reply was emphatic that further material evidence was needed to uphold the conviction of murder. We have considered the arguments of Mr. Jadeja and are of the view that the possession was very recent, and that E this fact cannot be ignored. The distance from the burgled shop to Chigugu is 28 miles and it takes 5 houses to travel by taking a short cut path or road. To be found at 10 a.m. the following day having already arrived at Chigugu means that there was no time lost by the possessors of goods in running away from the scene of crime. The F section of the Evidence Act which was quoted to assist us in our deliberations states that the court may infer the existence of any fact which it may think likely to have happened but we have to take into account: the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business in their relation to the facts of this case G under consideration. Do the facts adduced by the prosecution in any way most accord with the conclusion that the two have committed both burglary and murder? The two appellants were found 28 miles away from the scene of burglary at about 10 a.m. just a few hours after the event and it is in evidence that it takes 5 hours to reach there on H foot. The bag with articles in it was put on a bicycle which was then easy to push.

Unlike Mr. Jadeja, we think that the decision in Rex v Bakari Abdulla (1949) 16 E.A.C.A. 84, relied on by Maina, J., was a sound one. Applied to our case, there are the circumstances we have already touched on, I including the extreme proximity in time, as well as the second appellant's inconsistence in Court and the Caution Statement; the second appellant's refraining from giving an explanation to P.W.4, and their joint failure to give village Chairman the version they later gave to the trial court. We are not convinced that, in the A circumstances it was wrong to conclude that the appellants were also responsible for killing the deceased, and because we are satisfied that the killing was so as to effect the stealing we are of the view that it was quite proper to infer malice aforethought. We have no quarrel with the decision in Sanwat Khan v State of Rajasthan A.I.R. B 1959 S.C. 54. We agree that no hard and fast rules can be drawn. In Khan's case, the Supreme Court faulted the High Court decision because the said High Court had rejected virtually all the bases the learned Sessions Judge had relied on and used only the solitary circumstance of the recovery of only two items the silver tashak and the gold C kanthi out of what must have been a large assortment of property belonging to the wealthy deceased from the boxes and almirahs.

Further we discern two other features distinguishing the Khan case from the present one: In Khan the appellant was D found with the property some eighteen days after the killing, unlike in our present case where the discovery was within a few hours. Secondly in Khan's case the two victims were killed in a temple where they were living and to which presumably any people could just come and go, so that conceivably the thieves might have acted after the E killing by other people. In our case the property was removed late at night, sometime after 11 p.m. going by P.W.2 Manji's evidence, and no one other than the deceased Andrea was supposed to be there.

We therefore agree with the learned trial judge that this is a fit case for invoking the doctrine of recent possession to support not only the shop breaking and theft but also the murder. We find the appellants properly convicted of F murder and we dismiss their appeals.

The respondent then towed away the vehicle and sued the appellant in the High Court which found that the appellant had breached their contract of bailment and held them liable for Shs. 5,000/= being the price of a new engine, Shs. 54,000/ = for loss of use of the vehicle from E the time the engine got lost to the time of filing the suit and shs 600,000/= general damages from 1980 to the date of judgment in 1988.

The Court of Appeal considered two issues: First, whether the award of shs. 54,000/= for loss of use was justified; F and second, whether general damages were specifically pleaded and the propriety of the quantum awarded.

Held: (i) As the respondent could not have used the vehicle even with its engine intact because of the accident G sustained earlier on he should not be allowed anything for loss of use;

(ii) general damages need not be specifically pleaded; they may be asked for by a mere statement or prayer of claim;

[zJDz]Judgment

Ramadhani, Kisanga and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: The appellant, the Cooper Motor Corporation Ltd., is a limited liability Company, specialist in Volkswagen Vehicles, among others, with a branch in Moshi. The respondent, D Moshi/Arusha Occupational Health Services, is also a limited liability company based in Moshi too. A Volkswagen Combi bus of the respondent with registration number TZ 44059 was involved in an accident on 27/5/1980 and consequently was driven and delivered to the appellant on 24th July, 1980 for repair estimates after it had stayed E for almost two months at another garage. On or about 17th November, 1980 the appellant informed the respondent that the engine of the said vehicle had been stolen while in their (appellant's) possession and custody. The respondent after some communication with the appellant filed a suit on 25th April, 1981 and on 10th March, 1982 F towed the bus away from the premises of the appellant. The High Court of Tanzania at Arusha (MWAKIBETE, J.) found that the appellant had breached their contact of bailment with the respondent. He held them liable for Shs.45,000/= being the price of a new engine; Shs.54,000/= for loss of use of the vehicle from the time the engine got lost to the time of filing the suit and Shs.600,000/= general damages from 1980 to the date of judgment in G 1988. This appeal is from that judgment.

At the start of hearing this appeal Mr. Ngalo, learned decease for the appellant, left no stone unturned and no outlet uncooked endeavouring to persuade us to find that there was no contract of bailment at all. However, due to the H probings from the bench, he conceded, rightly too in our opinion, that there was a contract. He also conceded to the award of 45,000/=. Thus he abandoned three out of his seven grounds of appeal. The remaining four grounds deal with damages and conveniently settle down to two issues. First, was the payment of Shs.54,000/= for loss of I

A use justified? Second, were general damages specifically pleaded and, in any case, was the quantum awarded proper?

Regarding the loss of use Mr. Ngalo submitted that the vehicle was damaged and was therefore not usable. The respondents had to incur these expenses in any case even if there was no breach of the contract of bailment. Mr. B Shayo learned advocate for the respondents, repeated that the respondent had to hire transport and so must be recouped their expenses from the time the engine disappeared to the time of filing the suit.

Admittedly as this vehicle was off the road alternative transport had to be hired as evidenced by receipts (Exh.P5). C But this was not because of the theft of the engine on 17/11/80. On the contrary this was a result of the accident that damaged the bus on 27/5/80. We ask why damages are sought for the period from the date of the theft of the D engine and not before that. Hulsbury's Laws of England 3rd Ed. Vol. II p. 233 paragraph 400 says:

The fundamental principle by which the Courts are guided in awarding damages is 'restitutio in integrum'. By this is meant that the law will endeavour, so far as money can do it, to place the injured person in the same situation as if the E Contract had been performed....

In the instance case of a contract of bailment, the bailee i.e the appellant had the duty under sec. 103 of the Law of F Contract Ordinance (Cap.433) to:

... take as much care of the goods bailed to him as a man of ordinary prudence would, under similar circumstances, take G of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value as the goods bailed: (The proviso is not relevant).

"Restitutio in intergrum" demands that the value of the engine in terms of money be paid. As the respondent could not have used the vehicle even with its engine intact because of the accident sustained earlier on, he should H not be allowed anything for loss of use. So shs. 54,000/= is disallowed.

As for the general damages Mr. Ngalo made three submissions. First, he said that these are required to be specifically pleaded in the plaint and not merely being mentioned in the prayer. He cited Bullen & Lake and I Jacob's Precedents of Pleadings 12th Ed. at p. 379 and Perestrello Companhia Limitada v United Paint Co. Ltd.

[1969] l . W.L.R 570. Second, he submitted that even if there is a finding for general damages the period over A which they are granted should be from the time of the theft of the engine to the time the vehicle was taken away by the respondents and not to the time of the judgment of the High Court. This was conceded by Mr. Shayo. Lastly, B he argued that there was no evidence on which an assessment of general damages to the tune of the shs.600,000/= could have been made. He pointed out that the award is out of proportion to shs. 45,000/=, the value of the stolen engine.

Mr. Shayo, on the other hand, drew the attention of the court to the fact that the passage cited by Mr. Ngalo in C Bullen and Lake refer to special and liquidated damages. General damages, he said, are provided for in another passage which state that they are not required to be specifically pleaded. In any case, Mr. Shayo argued, general damages have been pleaded in paragraph 9 of the plaint and then in the prayer in paragraph 11. As to the third point. Mr. Shayo agreed that there was no evidence to support the comments of the learned judge in awarding the D general damages. However, he pointed out that they are not excessive and that an appellant court should only disturb an award if it has been granted on a wrong principle (Davies v Powell [1942] 1 All E.R.657 at 664/5). Moreover, Mr. Shayo submitted, the lower Court was entitled to take devaluation into account National Bank of E Commerce v Parma Shoe Company - Civil Appeal No. 11/88 of CAT - unreported).

The first issue we have to consider is whether or not general damages require to be specifically pleaded.

We agree with Mr. Shayo that the passage he had cited in Bullen and Lake p.379 is the relevant one and reads as F follows:

In claim for general damages, particulars will not be needed of the quantum of damages claimed (see London and Northern Bank Ltd. v George Newness Ltd. (1900) 16 T.L.R. 433, C.A.). On the other hand, the mere statement or prayer G of a claim for 'damages' will not support a claim for any particular injury or loss other than general damages (see Perestrello Companhia Limitada v United Paint Co. Ltd., [1969] 1 W.L.R. 570).

It is abundantly clear from the above quoted passage that only general damages can be asked for by "a mere H statement or prayer of a claim" and this is what has been done in this case.

The case of Perestrello v United Paint Co. Ltd., which has been referred to in the above passage and also cited to us by Mr. Ngalo I

A provides at page 579 thus:

There is plenty of authority for the proposition that a plaintiff need not plead general damage...

B The learned judge, then went on the quote Lord Dunedin in Admiralty commissioners v S.S. Susquehann [1926] A.C. 655 at p. 661 who said:

C If damage be general, then it must be averred that such damage has been suffered, but the quantification of such damage is a jury question.

The learned judge after quoting the above passage gave an amplification:

D What amounts to a sufficient averment for this purpose will depend on the facts of the particular case. . .

We think on the facts of the appeal before us, which we have concisely narrated at the beginning, the word E 'inconvenience' in paragraph 9 of the plaint:

As a result of the loss of the engine the plaintiff has been deprived the use of the motor vehicle and has been put to considerable expense and inconvenience.

F and the prayer (in paragraph 11 (b) for a "judgment against the defendants for general damages as the honourable Court may deem proper" is sufficient averment.

G The second issue now is should we or should we not disturb the quantum of general damages. Mr. Shayo referred us to Davies v Powell [1942] . That decision of the court of appeal was approved by the privy Council in Nance v British Columbia Electric Raily Co. Ltd. [1951] A.C. 601 at p. 613 thus:

H ... Whether the assessment of damages be by a judge or a jury, the appellate Court is not justified in substituting a figure of its own for that awarded below simply because it would have awarded a different figure if it had tried the case... before the appellants court can properly intervene, it must be satisfied either that the judge, in assessing the damages, I applied a wrong principle of law (as taking into account some irrelevant factor or leaving out of account some relevant one); or, short of this that the amount awarded is so inordinately low or so inordinately high that A it must be a wholly erroneous estimate of the damage ...

That position was adopted by the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in Henry Hiday Illanga v Manyama Manyoka [1961] E.A. 705 at 713. We are of the opinion that the principles stated are correct. . How applying the B principles to the present case we are of the opinion that the learned judge took into account an irrelevant factor when he considered the period covered to be up to the time of judgment instead of up the time the vehicle was towed away which Mr. Shayo, as already said conceded to be the proper one. Then also the learned judge C considered, albeit obiter, matters of which there was not evidence which again Mr. Shayo concerned. The learned judge said:

And in assessing general damages I take into account the circumstances under which the engine disappeared and the D fact that the motor vehicle in question has consequently been lying idle all these years since 1980, to date, to the great inconvenience of the plaintiff company. Customers ought not to be unduly scared at the prospects of losing or having their motor vehicles cannibalised if left at the garage for purposes for which the garages are intended. I would award E shs.600,000/= in general damages ...

It is also our well considered opinion that the amount awarded is so "inordinately high". We agree with Mr. Ngalo that the award of shs. 600,000/= general damages does not bear any relationship to shs. 45,000/=, the value of the F stolen engine.

Mr. Shayo argued that devaluation was a factor to have been considered. We have never been able to lay our hands on the case he has cited. Mr. Ngalo claims that decision was alright as it pertained to the repayment of G money. Be that as it may, that ought to have been an argument to seek the enhancement of monetary value of the lost engine. However, it was not advanced then. The amount awarded even now with the devaluation is "inordinately high". We therefore think that an award of shs.150,000/= will be the justice of the case. H

Thus we uphold the award of shs 45,000/= being the value of the lost engine, we strike out the award of shs. 54,000/= for loss of use and we reduce general damages to shs.150,000/=. As the respondent has substantially won the appeal we allow him to have his full costs both here and in the court below. I Appeal allowed in part.

[zJDz]Judgment
Mfalila, J.A., Nyalali, C.J., Makame, Kisanga, Omar, Ramadhani, and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: In this appeal, the H appellant company is challenging the decision of the High Court in a judgment in which its dismissal of the respondent from employment was declared invalid.
A total of six grounds of appeal were filed in the amended Memorandum of appeal. However Prof. Shivji learned I counsel for the respondent filed a preliminary objection against ground No.1 "on the ground and for reasons that the issues and matter raised therein are res judicata". At the hearing, Prof. Shivji submitted that the question of jurisdiction as raised in ground no. 1 was finally decided by this Court on appeal from the decision of the High A Court in Civil Appeal No.10 of 1982 and that therefore it cannot be reopened in the same Court in the same suit between the same parties. He added that it was because of this earlier decision that the question of jurisdiction was not even raised at the subsequent trial in the High Court. B

In reply, Mr. Uzanda submitted with commendable boldness that the learned High Court judge should have included the issue of jurisdiction as a question for this determination, because it was specifically raised in the Written Statement of Defence and that his failure to do so rendered his judgment bad in law. As the learned judge failed to C raise this point, he said, the issue is not res judicata.
Having considered the matter, we are of the view Prof. Shivji is correct. It is true that the question of the Court's jurisdiction was raised in the Written Statement of Defence and therefore was one of the issues raised in the pleading, but it was also raised specifically as a preliminary point at the start of the hearing on the basis that if D successful, it would completely dispose of the suit. Indeed the outcome was successful and the suit was completely disposed of by its being dismissed. However, the respondent successfully appealed to this court which held that the High Court had jurisdiction to try the case. This court ordered the trial to proceed. When therefore the trial opened E before Bahati, J. on 14/4/88, the question of jurisdiction had already been finally decided by this Court, the learned High Court judge could not reopen the matter by making it one of the issues to be decided by him. The question was and is res judicata. F
For these reasons we uphold Prof. Shivji's preliminary objection and order that ground No. 1 be struck off.
As the question of jurisdiction was the basis for convening the full bench of the court, this ruling renders such need unnecessary as the rest of the grounds can be decided by the ordinary bench. G

Accordingly we adjourn the proceedings to the later sitting of this court before an ordinary bench.

Maina J.: The two appellants were jointly charged with, and convicted of unlawful possession of "Moshi" contrary to section 30 of the Moshi (Manufacture and Distillation) Act, No.62 of 1966. They were each sentenced to H eighteen months imprisonment. They were convicted on their own pleas of guilty. The appeals are against conviction.
As Mr. Hyera, learned State attorney, rightly pointed out, there can be no appeal against conviction on a plea of guilty. (See section 360 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.) The question here is whether the pleas were I unequivocal. If they were, then there can be no appeal against the convictions. When the charge was read over to the appellants, each one of then admitted and said "It is true". Then the facts were read showing that they were found in A possession of fifteen litres of the illicit local liquor known as "Moshi". This comprised two gallons and two bottles. The appellants admitted the facts, and they were accordingly convicted and sentenced. They now say that they were beaten up and that they were not found with moshi. That is an afterthought. When they appeared before the B trial court, the charge was read over and explained to them and they admitted the charge and the facts which were later outlined by the prosecution. The pleas were clearly unequivocal and the conviction was inevitable.

As regards sentence while it is true that both appellants are first offenders, the quantity of moshi found in their C possession was such that it must have been intended for sale and not personal consumption. As Georges, C.J. said in the case of Hadija do Omari v R. [1970] HCD n. 158:

Where the quantity of liquor found with the offender is such that they must have been a distributor, a prison sentence D would seem to be correct, even for a first offender.

With respect, I agree with the learned Chief Justice. It must also be pointed out that under the old Ordinance, the E maximum penalty was a fine of Shs. 1,000/= or three months imprisonment. But the present legislation provides a maximum of five years imprisonment for the offence. This reflects the seriousness with which Parliament views this type of offence. I agree with the trial magistrate that a sentence of imprisonment was appropriate, in the F circumstances. The sentences are confirmed.

[zJDz]Judgment

D Makame, Omar and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: The appellants in this case were sued by the four respondents, all brothers, for damages in connection with some head of cattle the respondents alleged had been taken away without their consent. The outcome was that the High Court (Mroso, J.) found the first three appellants liable to the second E plaintiff Misele Kilala now the second respondent for shs. 60,000/= for the six head of cattle found to have been seized from him wrongly, and shs. 300/= to the respondent Kuzenza Kilala for the assault he was found to have been subjected to. The appellants have come to us protesting against the High Court decision. On their part the F unsuccessful respondents/plaintiffs have cross appealed.

At the outset we wish to make an observation regarding two aspects of this appeal. The first is, as we told the first three appellants, we did not think they should have included their Kilyamatundu Village Council as one of the G appellants because the Council was not found to be vicariously liable. We accordingly struck off the fourth appellant. Secondly, on the evidence, if the first three appellants were properly held to be liable we think that the decision that the Village council was not vicariously liable is open to argument: the fourth defendant, the Council, admitted at least the Village Treasurer Maiko Mwamwenda was its employee; and is also clear from the evidence H of Bonaventura or Boniface Kipesha, the second appellant and the other two appellants held offices also in the Village council as distinct from their C.C.M. Branch posts. We do not however propose to say any more about this I because we see that although Mr. Bateyunga learned advocate for the respondents/cross-appellants had made this his fourth ground of cross appeal he informed us he was abandoning A the matter.

We naturally start with the appeal. The learned trial judge believed that Kuzonza was assaulted by the appellants and we think that the evidence of Kuzenza himself and Michangu (Maiko) Kilala between them established the B allegation. The learned trial judge awarded only shs. 300/=, which was clearly nominal, merely, but we cannot fault him on this. Whereas there was evidence that Kuzenza was roughed up it is clear that the alleged extent of assault was disbelieved by the learned trial judge. Not only was there no medical evidence, documentary or oral proof of the injury, there was also no convincing explanation as to why he did not make a report at Kamsamba Police C Station. Kipasha said the Police Station was only half an hour away and we see that he was not cross-examined on this. We would not be justified to disturb the award of shs. 300/=. We accordingly dismiss the appeal on the first ground and by the same reasoning we are unable to entertain the fifth ground of cross-appeal in which Mr. D Bateyunga sought enhancement of the award.

In the second ground of appeal the appellants challenge the finding that of the cattle taken from the respondents six had to be compensated for. The learned trial judge carefully sifted the evidence and got his arithmetic right. He explained that the appellants took from the Kilala brothers a total of twenty four head of cattle, Less the eight he E found legitimately taken in connection with Village lorry project and less again the ten beasts restored to the respondents by the Police, the balance was six animals on which he placed the price of shs. 60,000/=. We dismiss this second ground of appeal accordingly. F

Regarding the cross-appeal, because as aforesaid Grounds 3,4 and 6 were dropped and as we have already disposed of Ground 5, only Ground 1 and 2 remain to be considered and those are of course closely interrelated.

Mr. Bateyunga has urged that the third and fourth clients were not residents of Kilyamatundu Village and so they G should not have been required to contribute for the acquisition of a lorry for the village, alternatively they were not party to the resolution. On our view it is rather late in the day for the cross appellants to canvass the contention that they were not party to the resolution even if they were villagers. Their stand throughout was farther than that - it was H that they did not belong to Kilyamatundu Village at all. On the balance of probabilities we are satisfied that the assertion that Machangu (Maiko) Kilala and his younger brother Kuzenza were resident at Kilyamatundu was proved. It was unconvincing to say that although they used to take their animals to Kilyamatundu Village for grazing I they did not know that during the alleged

A encounter with the cross-respondents they were on Kilyamatundu territory. Their contradictions as to the number of animals they had with them at the material time - now 400 now 900; the number of marauders - sixty or ten people, and Brother Mchele's denial of their contention that they had obtained a permit to drive the cattle to Moleza village all go to indicate that the two cross-appellants were untruthful.

B With respect to Mr. Bateyunga, we do not think it is quite correct to say that the learned trial judge found the contributions were collected by force. He believed that the legality and propriety of the resolutions that the contributions were made were not really challenged, only that when the two cross-appellants put up resistance, C unreasonably in our view, considering the evidence, the unreasonable resistance was overcome. This, per se, did not make the collection of the contributions unlawful.

D We dismiss both grounds in the cross appeal.

We order each side to bear its own costs for the appeal and cross appeal. For the avoidance of possible doubt, this order does not effect the High Court order as to costs.

E Order accordingly.

The appellant lost a case in the High Court in which he claimed for damages for breach of a building contract. The B appellant decided to appeal and gave notice of appeal within prescribed time limit. He then delayed in lodging the appeal until the prescribed 60 days time limit had expired. So the appeal was lodged accompanied with an application under Rule 8 of the Court of Appeal Rules, for extension of time to lodge the appeal. The respondent, C with the knowledge of the application for extension of time, proceeded to file a counter application seeking to have the appeal struck out on the ground that no order for extension of time to institute the appeal was obtained. The Court considered the propriety of the counter application and filing the application for extension of time under Rule D 8. The Court also considered whether there was a sufficient reason in this case to grant the application.

Held: (i) It was improper for the respondents, with the notice of the application of extension of time, to react by filing a counter notice of motion seeking to have the appeal struck out for want of leave to lodge it out of time, the E very shortfall which the appellant's application sought to remedy;

(ii) if the respondent wanted to challenge the application, the proper thing to do was to file a counter affidavit in order not only to avoid confusion and multiplicity of actions but also make the proceedings neat and orderly; F

(iii) where the appellant failed to lodge his appeal within 60 days after filing his notice of appeal as required under Rule 83 (i) of the Court of Appeal Rules he can apply to the court under Rule 8 for leave to do so out of time. And this is precisely what the appellant has done; G

(iv) the delay in lodging the appeal caused by the appellants absence from the country at one time and also his advocates indisposition and temporary absence from the country at another time after the appellant himself had returned into the country in the instances of this case do not constitute sufficient reason under Rule 8 of the Court of Appeal Rules. 1990 TLR p110
KISANGA JJA, RAMADHANI AND MNZAVAS JJA
[zJDz]Judgment
A Kisanga, Ramadhani and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: There is before us an appeal from the decision of the High Court (Munuo, J. (Mrs.)) dismissing the appellant's claim for damages for breach of a building contract. The appeal was accompanied with an application for extension of time to lodge the appeal, as the appeal had not been lodged within B 60 days of giving the notice of appeal as required by rule 83 (1) of the court of appeal Rules. After the application was filed the respondent, with the knowledge of it, proceeded to file a counter application seeking to have the appeal struck out "on the ground that no order for extension of time to institute the appeal was obtained". When the C appeal was called on, we had to deal with this application first. Mr. B. Lobulu appeared for the appellant while Mr. F.S. Kinabo was for the respondent.
In the course of hearing the applications, Mr. Lobulu submitted that when he filed the notice of motion seeking leave D to lodge the appeal out of time, it was improper for the other side, with the notice of such application, to react by filing a counter notice of motion seeking to have the appeal struck our for want of leave to lodge it out of time, the very short fall which the appellant's application sought to remedy. We think that Mr. Lobulu is right. The course E adopted by the respondent is prone to lead to unnecessary multiplicity of actions and confusion. As suggested by the learned counsel, if the respondent wished to challenge the application, the proper thing to do here was to file a counter affidavit. That would not only avoid confusion and multiplicity of actions, but would also make the proceedings neat and orderly.
F We shall now turn to the merits of the appellant's application. But the appellant and his advocate each filed an affidavit in support of the application. The main points as disclosed by the two affidavits are as follows: The judgment being appealed from was given on 20.10.87. The request for documents for the preparation of the record G was made on 29.10.87 and the said documents were received by the appellant's counsel on 23.9.89. Mr. Lobulu contends that on receiving the documents he could not proceed to lodge the appeal as he was unable to obtain instructions from the appellant who had left for Yemen and Saudi Arabia on 24.3 .89 for purposes of medical H treatment, among other things, and did not return until 11.3.90. The appellant went to see him on 23.3.90 only to find the he (Mr. Lobulu) had travelled out of the country. Mr. Lobulu was back in his office on 9.4.90 and that is when he advised the appellant to pay the fees in Court for the lodging of the appeal. That is to say the appellants filed the appeal over six months after his advocate head received the documents for preparation of record of the I appeal.
KISANGA JJA, RAMADHANI AND MNZAVAS JJA
Mr. Lobulu's notice of motion for the extension of time is brought under rule 8 of the court appeal rules. That rule A says:

The Court may for sufficient reason extend the time limited by those Rule or by any decision of the court or of the High Court for the doing of any act authorized or required by these rules, whether before or after the doing of the act, and any B reference in these Rules to any such time shall be construed as a reference to that time as so extended.

Mr. Kinabo, opposing the application, submitted that the application was wrongly brought under rule 8 of the Rules. C He argued that rule 8 was applicable only where there was an appeal before the Court but in his view there was no appeal here because the appellant had obtained no leave to institute it. He strenuously contended that the appellant's purported appeal was misconceived and incompetent and should therefore be struck out. In support of D the contention he referred to the ruling of this Court in the case of Arusha International Conference Centre v Damas Augustine Ndemansi Kavishe. Civil appeal No. 34 or 1988 (Unreported). That was the substance of his counter notice of motion.

It appears, however, that the submission by the learned counsel is with due respect, somewhat misguided. In the E context of the present case rule 8 as reproduced above is saying that if the appellant failed to lodge his appeal within 60 days after filing his notice of appeal, as required under rule 83 (1), he can apply to the court for leave to do so F out of time. And this is precisely what the appellant has done. He failed to lodge the appeal within the time limit of 60 days, and he is now asking the court to enlarge that time. Mr. Kinabo's submission that the appeal is incompetent because no leave was obtained to institute it is necessarily self defeating because it ignores or G overlooks the fact that there is already before the court the appellant's application for leave to lodge that appeal out of time.

Nor is it correct to argue, as Mr. Kinabo did, that there is no appeal before the Court. The record shows that the appeal was lodged in the sub-registry at Arusha on 12.4.90. That, admittedly, did not institute the appeal. But since H the appellant had given notice of appeal within the prescribed time limit then the process of appeal had commenced. That is to say, there was a proceeding before the court, and the present application is made in pursuance therefore. We should add, for the sake of completeness, that if the present application for leave is I granted, such leave would operate retrospectively and the appeal would be deemed

A to have been duly lodged on 12.4.90 in which case it would not be necessary to lodge it a second time.

Kavishe's case cited by Mr. Kinabo is easily distinguishable from the present one. That case dealt with a situation B where the intended appeal was lodged within the prescribed time but the appellant had failed to extract the decree being appealed against and to make it part of the record. Following a series of previous decisions of this court and of its predecessor, we held that the appeal was incompetent and we struck it out accordingly. But in the instant case we are at a different stage of the appeal. We are at the stage where the appeal is not yet lodged; the time for C lodging it has run out and the appellant is seeking leave to lodge it out of time. At this stage the question whether or not the decree has been extracted, and if not what are the consequences, does not fall for consideration yet. It does so only after the leave is granted, if at all, and the appeal is duly lodged. We are therefore satisfied that the D application was properly bought under rule 8 of the Court of Appeal Rules.

Mr. Kinabo's other ground for resisting the application was that no sufficient reason, in terms of rule 8, is shown for granting extension of time. There is merit in this submission. The appellant's main contention was that the delay in E lodging the appeal was caused by his absence from the country at one time, and also by his advocate's indisposition and temporary absence from the county at another time after he himself had returned into the country. The claim, however, is entirely without merit. The appellant travelled to Yemen and Saudi Arabia for the purposes of medical treatment, among other things. But he was not hospitalized there. His medical cards show that he attended only as F an outpatient, reporting at the hospital at intervals of up to four months, which means that he was not seriously sick. As such there was nothing which prevented him from inquiring about the progress of his appeal either directly from the Court or through his advocate when he had duly instructed to rule the notice of appeal and to request for G documents for preparation of the record. His indolence is further demonstrated by the fact that upon his return to the country, he did not go to see his advocate promptly; he did so only after some eleven or twelve days. His claim that he was convalescing during this period is baseless in view of the fact that he was not hospitalized at any time H and was not seriously sick. His advocate's indisposition and temporary absence from the country cannot help him either. His own advocate when arguing this application disclosed that his indisposition started on 25.11.89, which is over two months after he received from the Court the documents for preparation of the record. That provided more I than ample time during which he could have informed his client of his receipt of the same and ask him for further instructions in the matter, if A any.

Mr. Lobulu further contended that the appeal had overwhelming chances of success, that the appeal was already filed, that the court should not enforce the rule strictly so as to deny justice to the appellant and that if the application is granted, no prejudice would be caused to the either side. We think that these matters do not advance the B appellant's case anywhere. This is a case involving an inordinate delay in lodging the appeal. The appellant has a duty to explain such inordinate delay but he has not. We think that the matters now being put forward by counsel might have been relevant if the appellant explained the inordinate delay but since he has failed to do so, we do not C think we are obliged to consider them.

We therefore uphold Mr. Kinabo's submission that no sufficient reason, in fact no reason at all, is shown for the delay, and hence for granting the leave sought to lodge the appeal out of time. The application is accordingly D dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Masanche, J.: This is an ex-parte chamber application for leave to apply for an order of certiorari and mandamus. It is accompanied by an affidavit. The affidavit is however not an elegant one. This is not surprising B because as I came to discover later, the applicant is pursuing the matter himself without the assistance of a lawyer.

From the affidavit and indeed entire record, I gather the following facts:

That the applicant got employed by Dodoma Wine company (popularly known as DOWICO) as Laboratory C Assistant Grade II and was a Production Supervisor in the wine production section. Sometime at the end of December, 1986, it was discovered that each time workers reported for duty in the morning, they found wine making equipment in disarray, suggesting that some other people had been using the equipment the previous night. D It became clear that a group of workers were making wine outside normal working hours, and this wine got smuggled out of the gate and got sold in town.

Then, one day, the applicant and two other members of staff found some undergrade wine in a shop in town. That E wine was not standard wine made by DOWICO. All these happenings never got reported to the Management which got annoyed, it seems, and dismissed the applicant from his job. There was a second worker who also got dismissed but it is not known how he is pursuing his case.

It is that dismissal that the applicant is aggrieved of.

F The matter went to a Conciliation Board and it appears the applicant lost the case. He appealed to the Minister for Labour against the decision of the Conciliation Board, confirming the dismissal by the Management. Unfortunately, the appeal was not taken up as the application was out of time in so appealing. It is, therefore, G against all such unsuccessful attempts that the applicant has decided to come to the High Court and pursue the matter by way of certiorari and mandamus.

The law about orders of certiorari and mandamus is quite clear in this country, and I can do no better than quote my brother Samatta J. (as he then was) in the case of Moris Onyango v The Senior Investigating Officer H Customs Department Mbeya Criminal Application No. 25 of 1981; wherein he said:

It is entirely correct preposition to say that an order of mandamus is a discretionary remedy. The order is not one of right and it is not issued as a matter of course. The purpose of the order is to supply defects of justice. It will therefore issue I where there is no specific legal remedy for enforcing the specific legal right claimed or where, although there is an alternative legal A remedy, such mode of redress is considered by the court to be less convenient, beneficial and effectual. As a general rule the court will refuse to issue the order if there is another convenient or feasible remedy within the reach of the applicant (Emphasis Supplied) (Also see the case of Lakaru v Town Director (Arusha) (1986) TLR page 326.) B

Again in the case of Assistant Registrar of Buildings v Frederick Kibwana Criminal Appeal No. 1 of 1978 (Court of Appeal) the Court there has said: C

Certiorari being a discretionary remedy for courts to issue cannot be issued in a case where there is already a contractual relationship between landlord and tenant, a relationship of a commercial or business nature. The recourse D to the courts of law to adjudicate on the breaches of contract would be better procedure.

In this instant matter before me, the applicant was a worker, employed by DOWICO. There was, therefore, a E contractual relationship between him and DOWICO a contract of service. If, therefore, the applicant, feels that he has been unjustly dismissed, he may sue the employer for wrongful dismissal. In short, therefore, there is a remedy and a forum. Leave to apply for orders of certiorari and mandamus is refused. F

Order accordingly.

[zJDz]Judgment

Chipeta J.: In Kigoma District Court, the two respondents, Elias Laurent Mkoba and Charles Mholo, were charged jointly with the offence of stealing by public servant c/ss 270 and 265 of the Penal code on a total of 22 E counts, that is, l 6 counts in respects of the first respondent and six counts in respect of the second respondent.

After a full trial the two respondents were acquitted on all counts. Dissatisfied, the Director of Public Prosecutions now appeals to this court.

F The prosecution's evidence was that at the material time the first respondents, Elias Laurent Mkoba was an accounts assistant while the second respondent was a general clerk. Both of them were employed by the Tanzania Railways Corporation Marine Operations, Kigoma. Between 3rd July, 1987 and 16 November, 1988, the first G respondent received a total of shs.1,920,507.20 from one Bernard Ezekiel Bundala (P.W.3) being coaching and goods earnings from M. V. Mwongozo. The second respondent, on the other hand, received a total of shs. 576,908.20 from P.W.3.

H The procedure that was supposed to be followed in dealing with earnings from M. V. Mwongozo was that the steamer clerk, in this case P.W.3, had the duty of collecting revenue. He then had to record the revenue collected in a Cash Remittance Note Book which has two identical leafs. After filling the two leafs with the total amount earned, the steamer clerk himself would go to bank the money, and the leaf on the right hand side of the Cash Remittance I Note Book is then detached and attached to the paying-in slip after Cash Remittance. Note has been duly stamped by a bank teller. The two documents are then sent to the Chief of Finance who then sends an A acknowledgement to the Marine Department.

An administrative Manager, marine Department, Kigoma, one Sebastian Nandi P.W.4 testified that the two respondents and P.W.3 used to work under him and that P.W.3, who was a steamer clerk had the duty of B receiving revenue and banking the money. According to P.W.4, he changed the system sometime in 1986 after some theft was detected. It was arranged that P.W.3 was to hand the earnings to the accountant, that is the first respondent, who was then entrusted with the duty of banking the money. After banking the money, the first respondent was supposed to give the Cash Remittance Notes and paying-in-slips to P.W.3. P.W.3 was in turn C supposed to prepare comparative accounts and send the same to their Headquarters in Dar es Salaam.

After direction that unusual procedure, P.W.4 took for granted that the new system was being followed, and P.W.3. never complained to him that he was not receiving the Cash Remittance Notes from the first respondent. D Besides, there does not appear to have been any official handing over of duties and relevant revenue documents between P.W.3 and the first respondent. P.W.3 however, testified that he used to hand over the money to the first respondent and, in the absence of the first E respondent, to the second respondent, and that each one of the two respondents used to acknowledge receipt of the money by signing in a book (Exh.P. 1) which was improvised by P.W.3. and is not an official accounting document of the corporation. According to P.W.3, he complained to his supervisors at Kigoma about the failure of F the first respondent to give P.W. 3 the Cash Remittance Notes, a fact which was denied by P.W. 4. P.W.3 also denied having received any miscellaneous receipts for any of the respondents.

An accounts clerk from the Corporations Headquarters, one Naiman Isaya Tarimo (P.W.5), testified that the last G time he received Cash Remittance notes from Marine, Kigoma, was on 10th September, 1987, and that they were prepared by P.W.3.

When the disappearance of the money came to light, the matter was reported to the Police and the two respondents H as well as P.W.3 were arrested. The three of them were then jointly charged with these offences on 31st December, 1988, with P.W. 3 the first accused. However, on 18th July, 1989, the charge against P.W.3 was withdrawn and he was used as a witness.

In his defence, the first respondent, who was the first accused at the trial, testified that prior to his arrest, he was an I acting accountant. Prior

A to 1986, P.W.3 wa responsible for keeping the money and bankin it. Later he, the first respondent, was being given the money by P.W.3 for safe custody prior to the money being banked by P.W.3 the next day. He went on to say that he did receive the money as shown in Exhibit P.1 but he added that he only received it for safe custody B before giving it to P.W.3 for banking the next day. As to why he did not issue miscellaneous receipts, the first respondent said that it was for P.W.3 to issue the same and that there were no miscellaneous receipt books in his office. Regarding his signing in Exhibit P. 1, the first respondent said that it was for the purpose of enabling him to C easily do a reconciliation of the accounts as he also kept other monies for difference purposes in his safe, and also to ensure that the cash deposited with him by P.W.3 was the same account P.W.3 was to take the next day for banking, and further, that the register (Exhibit P. 1) would assist him in case of surprise checking by auditors who D would then clearly see the source of the case in his safe. The first respondent denied having received any money from the second respondent.

The first respondent called one Kange who testified that when he was transferred to Mwanza from Kigoma, he handed over his duties to the first respondent and that miscellaneous receipt books were not among the documents E he handed over because they were not available in the office.

In his defence, the second respondent said that at the material time he was charged with the duties of preparing reports in respect of WADU, Insurance, JUWATA and issuing leave passes. He went on to say that when the first F respondent was handed over duties by the former accounts, the first accused assigned him the duties of received earnings, including earnings from the steamer clerk in the absence of the first respondent, and that he used to hand over the money to the first respondent on his return. The second accused said that this arrangement was made G because the prior clerk, one Ndanuka (D.W.4) had no safe.

I have carefully considered that prosecution's evidence. Quite frankly, the prosecutions' case was unsatisfactory. As the learned trials resident Magistrate pointed out, the duty of banking the revenue from M. V. Mwongozo was that H of the steamer clerk, P.W.3. The changes allegedly made by P.W.4 brought in vagueness and lack of clarity as to who was supposed to do the banking. P.W.4 issued no written directive to that effect, and he appears to have not bothered to ensure that his system, which was contrary to the Corporation's regulations, was being followed. So we I only have the word of the respondents against that of P.W.3.

CHIPETA J

As conceded by the Republic, P.W.3 was a witness with his own interests to serve. He had himself been charged A jointly with the respondents. He could not, therefore, be expected to have said any thing other than that which would exculpate him from liability. For instance, if the arrangement made by P.W.4 was that the first respondent would do the banking and then pass on paying-in-slips and Cash Remittance Notes to P.W.3 for P.W.3 to prepare B comparative accounts and send then to Dar es Salaam, why did P.W.3 remain silent during all those months when he discovered that the Cash Remittance Notes were not forthcoming?

There is one other point. According to the prosecution's evidence, there were not remittances between 3rd July C 1987 and 16th November, 1988. But the evidence of P.W.5 was that he received the last Cash Remittance Notes from P.W.3 in September, 1987. This suggested that P.W.3 was doing the banking.

In short, what comes out clearly from the evidence is that it is impossible to say who between the two respondents D and P.W.3 stole the money. There is authority for the proposition that where, in the absence of evidence of common intention, it is not possible on the evidence to say which of the accused persons jointly charged committed the offence, then all the accused persons must be given the benefit of the doubt. It was so held in the case of E Jumanne Salum Pazi v Republic, [1981] TLR 246, in which Kisanga, J. (As he then was) stated, at page 251:

I take the view that where two or more persons are jointly charged with the offence and it is impossible to ascertain which particular one committed the offence then all of them must be acquitted unless there be established on the part of F the accused persons common intention to commit the offence charged.
That is the position in this case, and there is no evidence to show that the respondents and P.W.3 acted with G common intention.
For the foregoing reasons, I am clearly of the view that the learned trial magistrate was perfectly justified in giving the respondents the benefit of the doubt in the circumstances.
In the upshot, this appeal fails and so is hereby dismissed. H

Boaz, for the Republic.
[zJDz]Judgment
H Maina, J.: The accused was convicted by the District Court at Masasi of arson contrary to section 319 (a) of the Penal Code. The learned district magistrate committed the accused to this court for sentencing under section 171 of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985.
When the matter came up before me for sentencing, Mr. Boaz, the learned State Attorney submitted that the I evidence on record was insufficient to convict and urged the court to exercise its revisional power and quash the conviction. The learned State Attorney cited section 171 (b) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 A which states of follows:
1990 TLR p121
MAINA J
the provisions of this section shall be so construed as to enable the High Court in its consideration of any case thereunder to exercise its power of revision under section 373 of this Act in the same manner as if the record of the B proceedings had under that section been reported to the High Court for Orders.
In my opinion, when an accused person is committed to the High Court for sentencing, under section 171 of the Criminal Procedure Act, and it appears that the conviction is for any reason bad, the High Court may, instead of C sentencing the accused, proceed to revise the proceedings. That would appear to be the meaning of section 171(6) of the Act. The question now is whether the evidence was sufficient to base a conviction. The only evidence against the accused is of threats which he uttered the day before the complainant's house was set on fire. It was alleged by D the persecution witnesses that the complainant, PW1 Joseph Peter and accused had quarrelled on 25 June 1990. The complainant allegedly assaulted the accused who threatened that he would do something serious to the complainant. On the following night the complaint's house was set on fire as he and his family slept in the house. No E one saw the accused setting fire to the house, but the accused was later arrested on suspicion because of the earlier threats. The learned district magistrate held that the evidence of the threats which the accused had uttered was sufficient to prove that the accused had burnt the complainant's house. As already stated, the threats were F uttered by the accused during the day on 25 June 1990, and the complainant's house was set on fire during the following night. Can the evidence of threats constitute sufficient evidence to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the accused is the person who set fire to the complaint's house? Mr. Boaz, the learned State Attorney, submitted G that the evidence did not prove the accused's guilt beyond reasonable doubt.
The evidence against the accused, is clearly circumstantial. In the case of Simon Musoko v R. [1958] EA 715 it was held that: H
In case depending exclusively on circumstantial evidence, the court must find before deciding upon conviction, that the inculpatory facts are incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other hypothesis than that of guilt. I
1990 TLR p122

A The decision in the Musoko case has been followed by this court in several cases, one of which is Carnal Samson v R. [1972] HCD No. 184. In that case the only evidence against the accused was that he had threatened to kill the complainant or burn her house. Later that same night, the complainant's house was set on fire. The B appellant's conviction was quashed by this court which held that the evidence of threats was inconclusive to base a conviction for arson. As the court stated in the Carnal Samson case, where must be something tangible other than the occurrence of the threatened act to indicate that the appellant did carry out his threat. The fire could have been C caused by numerous other causes besides the appellant, i.e a flying spark, a malicious fellow who had heard the appellant utter the threats, etc." The fact in the present case are almost identical with the Carnal Samson case.

Threats alone cannot be conclusive evidence that the person who uttered the threats has committed the offence, for D as Mfalila Ag. HJ. (as he then was) said in the Samson case "a threat is of the highest value when it corroborates some other evidence in order to link the accused with the offence charged. It is weakest when on its own, for it is E then reduced to mere circumstantial evidence in the form of a disconnected chain."

The evidence in the present case did not prove the accused's guilt, for the reasons given. The conviction which is not supported by the Republic, is quashed and the sentence is set aside. The accused must be released from F custody forthwith unless he is lawfully held on other matters.

Appeal allowed.

[zJDz]Judgment

Sekule, J.: This is an appeal under section 102(1) of the Land Registration Ordinance, Cap 334 by Zahir Roshanali Hirani against the decision of the Registrar of Titles of striking the name of the appellant/ petitioner from the register. F

The background of the matter is that the father of the appellant one Roshana Jawal Hirani is a brother of one Madat Jamal Hirani.

It would appear that the two brothers, i.e. Madat Jamal Hirani and Roshana Hirani own some real property on Plot No.19 Mwanza Industrial area. It would further appear in the course of time, Madat Jamal Hirani left the country G and went to England.

While away in England, Madat did on the 27th of March 1975 execute a general power of attorney and appointed his brother Roshanali Jamal Hirani a person who was still a resident in Mwanza his attorney in accordance with section 10 of the Powers of Attorney Act 1971. H

On the 20th of June 1987, Roshanali Jamal Hirani, using the powers of attorney granted to him, transferred Madat's half share in the right of occupancy on Plot No.19 Industrial Area Mwanza to the appellant/ petitioner, Zahir Roshanali Hirani, his son.

Subsequent to this transfer a subtitle with registration No.3033050/ I

1990 TLR p124

SEKULE J

A 28 was issued by the Registrar of Titles in the name of the appellant, Zahir Roshanali Hirani.

It is alleged that the consideration for this transfer was natural love and affection on the part of donor of the power of attorney to the appellant/petitioner as expressed through the donee of the power of attorney, Roshanali Jamal B Hirani.

Madat, the donor or grantor of the power of attorney, did however on the 16th of September, 1987 object to this transfer and applied to the Registrar of Titles, for the rectification of the Register accordingly. That is to have his name restored in the Register and the name of the petitioner be struck out. And on the 13th of January 1988, the C Registrar of Titles formally requested the appellant petitioner to surrender his subtitle for the rectification process. And ultimately the Registrar of Title struck off the name of the appellant/petitioner from the Register.

The appellant was dissatisfied with this decision, hence his appeal under the provisions of section 102(1) of the D Land Registration Ordinance Cap 334.

At the hearing of this appeal, the appellant/applicant was represented by Mr. Nasimire learned Counsel. Mr. Mussa learned state Attorney appeared for the Registrar of Titles.

E Mr. Nasimire, learned Counsel started off by recapitulating the background of the matter as reviewed above.

He further submitted that the appellant/petitioner's name was struck out from the register on the following alleged grounds. Firstly that there was fraud on the part of the donee of the power of attorney and the petitioner in this F appeal in transferring the half share in the estate to the appellant/petitioner. And that at the time the transfer was effected, the power of attorney to the donee, Rashanal Jamal Hirani, had been revoked. And that allegedly, the revocation was done on the 31st of December, 1986.

G Mr. Nasimire further contended that the other grounds that are alleged to have led to the striking off of the appellant's title in the register is that the donee did not comply with the provisions of section 334. And further that the donee of the power of attorney as an agent of the donor of the power of attorney acted outside his authority in H transferring the donor's title in the estate to his son, the appellant.

Addressing himself on the grounds that led to the striking out of the appellant's name from the register as itemized herein above, Mr. Nasimire, submitted that the power of attorney to the donee Roshanali Jamal Hirani could have I been revoked as claimed, he however contended that the pertinent issue was the donee aware of this revocation. In his view, there was no clear and firm evidence to the effect that the donee was aware of the alleged revocation at the time he effected the transfer of the donor's title to the estate to the A appellant. Mr. Nasimire argued that all there is, on this issue, is the assertion of the Assistant Registrar of Titles that the power of attorney to the donee had been revoked and also a letter to that effect from the donor of the power of attorney which Mr. Nasimire argued, could have been back dated. B

Mr. Nasimire therefore contended that as the donee of the said power of Attorney was unaware of the revocation, the transfer he effected with regard to the donor's interest in the right of occupancy in question was valid.

Mr. Nasimire also argued that there was consideration in this transaction as the law recognizes gifts which are given C for natural love and affection and reference in this regard was made to section 25 of the Contract Ordinance, Cap 433. Elaborating Mr. Nasimire submitted that the donor of the power of attorney is the brother of the donee of said power of attorney. D

On the other hand, Mr. Mussa learned State attorney submitted that the decision of the respondent, Registrar of Titles to strike out the name of the appellant/petitioner was justified under the provisions of section 99 (l)(d) of Cap 334 as there was sufficient material before him indicating that the transfer was fraudulently made. The donor of the E power of attorney had in his declaration, annexure C dated 26th August 1987 stated that he had revoked the power of Attorney that was granted to the donee - on the 31st December 1986. And this declaration is supported by the deed of revocation, annexure D that was executed and attested by a Solicitor on the 31st of December 1986 F as stated by the donor in his declaration mentioned above.

Mr. Mussa therefore submitted that this transfer was in these circumstances, fraudulent and illegal as it was earned out of powers that had ceased to exist.
Mr. Mussa however conceded that there was no clear evidence indicating that the donee received the revocation G order or/and notice.
Mr. Mussa therefore queried why was the affidavit not filed. And he also argued that if the donor was in constant touch with donee, then the donee must have been made aware of the revocation as soon as it was made.
Mr. Mussa seemed therefore to contend that the donee must have been aware of the revocation before the transfer H was effected. Mr. Mussa further submitted an alternative argument, and that is, the donee acted beyond the scope of his authority. He stated that in annexure 'C' to the respondent's case, the donor stated clearly that he I would not have effected the transfer or/and he would not have transferred the title in question if

A he had been present as the exercise carried out was to extinguish his title to the property in question. Mr. Mussa also contended that there was no consideration with regard to the transaction, because the donor was not aware of the transaction and as such the alleged natural love and affection could not be attributed to him.

B As to indemnity, Mr. Mussa urged the court to reject this prayer and invoke the provisions of section 104 of Cap 336 as the transfer was a result of fraud. Otherwise the petition should be dismissed.
There is no dispute that Madat Jamal Hirani did grant a general power of attorney to Roshanali Jamal Hirani, the C father of the appellant/ petitioner in 1975, annexure 'A'.
Roshanali Jamal Hirani under the power of attorney had authority to do or act for the affairs of the donor of the powers of attorney as generally an agent would do with regard to the affairs of his principal.

D It is this power of attorney, the petitioner contends that his father used to transfer the 1/2 share of the donor of the power of attorney in the Right of Occupancy on plot No. 19 at Industrial area Mwanza. And further petitioner contends the donor of the power of attorney was aware and assented to the transaction. On the other hand the respondent to this appeal contends, this transfer was fraudulent in the sense that at the time it was effected, the E power of attorney to the petitioner's father had long been revoked.
And that the donee of the power of attorney acted without authority in effecting this transfer which had the effect of extinguishing the title of the donor of the power of Attorney in the property, without the express authority of the said F donor.
And further, as the donor of the said power of Attorney was not aware of this transaction, there was no consideration with regard to this transaction, as the natural love and affection could not be attributed to him.

G I have carefully read and considered the petition, the submissions of both counsel and the documents the parties have filed.

It would appear to me after a careful examination of the petition and the documents that have been filed by the parties, the crucial issue for determination in this appeal, is, whether or not the donor of the power of attorney was H aware and consented to the transfer of his 1/2 share in the property in question. For this seems to be the case for the petitioner that is, apart from the existence of the power of attorney, at the material time, Mr. Madat Jamal Hirani was informed of this transaction and that he consented to it. This to me appears to be the most crucial question in I this matter.

SEKULE J

The petitioner has for example stated in paragraph 6 of his petition as follows: A

The petitioner is ready to affirm by way of affidavit that the donor had constantly been informed of the disposition complained of and that he had assented to the same. B

Again in paragraph 3 of the petitioner's letter to the Assistant Registrar of Titles dated 23rd May 1988 enclosed in this file, the petitioner stated as follows: C

Mr. Madat was contacted on telephone just before and after the transfer and he had given his consent unreservedly. I am prepared to swear an affidavit to support this fact. Surprisingly Mr. Madat did not notify me or Mr. Roshanali of his revocation. D

The question is, what evidence has the petitioner tendered to support his claim in this regard. I dare say apart from his mere assertion as indicated above, nothing. Even the affidavit he had promised to make, it appears it was not so made as it has not been filed. E

The lack of substantial evidence on the part of the petitioner to support this claim i.e. the donor was aware and consented to the transfer has caused me considerable anxiety and concern.

This was an important disposition and if the donor had been informed of it and consented to the disposition, one F would have expected the petitioner or the donee of the power of attorney to say at least when the donor was contacted about this matter and would probably have required some written record from the donor signifying his assent to the transaction. As already said this was an important disposition the cause and effect of which was the donor to divest himself of his property. And further as the donee of the power of attorney saw the need to contact G the donor before the disposition was effected, one would have expected him to require a more formal authorization from the donor. This as already said was a deal involving real property, I am thus inclined to the view that it would not have been that casually hand led even between relatives as the petitioner seems to contend. H

There is also another feature which has equally caused me some anxiety. And that is, for reasons that were not made known to this Court, the donee of the power of Attorney has not given his word by affidavit or otherwise about this matter. He was the principal actor in this transaction. He was therefore the person in a position to throw I

SEKULE J

A more light on this issue. But as already stated he has not done so, and no reasons as to why he has failed to do so have been given.

There is another important question and that is, who initiated this transaction. Going by the statements of the B petitioner as stated in paragraph 6 of the petition and in paragraph 3 of letter dated 23rd May, 1982, paragraphs which have been referred to above, the donor does not appear to have been the initiator of this transaction. According to the petitioner, the donor was contacted or informed of the matter and assented to the transfer. It would therefore appear the donor was not the initiator of this move. It was the donee of the Attorney.

C In have found this to be rather strange, because if the donor was giving a gift to the petitioner, the son of his brother, for natural love and affection as claimed, one would have expected him (the donor) to be the initiator of the transaction. He would not in the circumstances be the person to be contacted and required to give his consent to D this transfer. He was supposed to be the giver of the gift. I am therefore satisfied that there is no evidence at all to support the petitioner's claim that Mr. Madat was contacted and that he gave his consent to this transaction All there is is the petitioner's bearer assertion in that connection. And this in my view is not enough.

E On the contrary, the evidence available seems to support the claim of Mr. Madat, to the effect that he was not informed of this transaction before it was effected.

As already said, if Mr. Madat was surrendering his title in the property to the petitioner as a gift for natural love and F affection as claimed by the petitioner - he should ordinarily had been the prime mover or the initiator of the transaction and not the person to be informed of the intended transaction.

There is also the conduct of Mr. Madat, the donor of the power of attorney. And this is, he took what could be G said to be immediate action for some one who was out of the country to object to the transfer.

The transfer was effected on the 20th June 1987 and Mr. Madat made a formal and attested declaration objecting to the transfer. On the 26th August 1987, annexure C. This was about two months from the date the disputed H transfer was effected.

If Mr. Madat was informed and assented to the transaction as claimed by the petitioner, I have found it difficult to believe, in the absence of real evidence that Mr. Madat - would have changed his mind so shortly after he had I approved the transaction. And would have taken such formal steps to repudiate his consent with such a short time.

I am therefore on this evidence and the conduct of Mr. Madat satisfied that he was not aware of this transaction A and he never consented to it.

And in the circumstances, I am of the view the consideration which is attributed to him with regard to the transfer of his half share in the property i.e. natural love and affection to the petitioner cannot on the evidence tendered be B attributed to him. He was not aware and he has also stated in his declaration that he had no intention of transferring his title in the property to the petitioner.

I am therefore of the view that there was no consideration in this transaction - in as far as Mr. Madat was C concerned as the issue of natural love and affection cannot on the evidence tendered be attributed to him.

The next issue for consideration is this, could the petitioner's father, i.e. the donee of the power of Attorney have validly effected the transfer using the general power of Attorney he had. I have considered this matter, and I am of D the view that since the transfer in essence meant to extinguish the donor's right and title in the property, the donee of the power of Attorney, in doing so could hardly be said to have been doing or managing his principal's affairs to his advantage.

Therefore if Mr. Roshanali Jamal Hirani purportedly used the power of attorney alone to effect this transfer then in E the circumstances of this case and in the absence of express authority from the donor of the power of attorney to effect such transfer, he did in my view exceed his authority. And the effected transfer was therefore in my opinion not valid and particularly in the absence of any consideration as pointed out hereinabove. F

And as a matter of fact, for the set of facts and circumstances as discussed in the course, of this judgment, and since, I have not been able to see real evidence from the petitioner explaining how exactly this transaction came to be effected. I have found it difficult to rule out the possibility of fraud on the part of the donee of the power of G Attorney or/ and the petitioner in this transaction.

Next, there is the issue of the revocation of the power of attorney. It is true according to annexure, Mr. Madat revoked the General Power of attorney granted to Mr. Roshanali Jamal Hirani on the 31st December, 1986. This H was before the transfer was effected. The deed of revocation was executed by a Solicitor in Britain. In the absence of evidence to contrary I have no reason to doubt its authenticity. I cannot therefore accept the petitioner's claim to the effect that the document may have been back dated. I

SEKULE J

A The petitioner claims however that the donee was not aware of this revocation. The donee himself has not personally given his word on this. Likewise, the donor, has not explained how he communicated the notice of revocation to the donee. There is therefore no real evidence establishing that the donee was aware of this revocation.

B I am therefore of the view that if the transfer had been otherwise valid, this transaction could not have been vitiated by reason of the revocation as the donee claims to have not been aware of it and there is no clear evidence pointing to the contrary. As rightly pointed the deed of revocation itself, nothing contained in the revocation deed C would have effected the validity of any act or thing done by the said Attorney by virtue of the powers conferred on him before he had received notice of the said revocation thereof.

I am otherwise satisfied for the reasons given hereinabove that the transfer was not valid.

D Lastly, there is the question of indemnity to the petitioner, I have considered this issue, and I am of the settled opinion that the petitioner cannot be indemnified, firstly because there is no evidence that the petitioner had effected any new development of the property or has incurred any expenses with regard to the property in question. And in E any case Mr. Madat registered his objection only about two months after the transfer had been effected I am therefore of the view that within that short time, the petitioner could not have effected any development or incurred expenses with regard to that property.

F Lastly, the petitioner and the donee of the power of attorney appear to me to be the persons who are blameworthy in this transaction, the donor cannot therefore in my opinion be the person to compensate or to indemnify them for a situation which they appear to have the authority and which appears to have been purposely carried out without the knowledge or/and consent of the donor or the power of Attorney and was not to his advantage or interests.

G The Register of Titles was therefore right to make the rectification. This appeal/petition fails and it is hereby dismissed.

H Appeal dismissed.

Kazimoto, J.: Abdul Salum Mnuye, and Abdul Zuberi Ndete the appellants have been convicted for being in H unlawful possession of government trophy c/s 67(1) and 2(b) of the Wildlife Conservation Act No.12/74 and each sentenced to 20 years imprisonment. The second appellant was also convicted of possession of firearm without a licence as amended by 3rd Schedule to Act No.13 of 1984. He was sentenced to 7 years imprisonment. Both have I appealed and their appeals have been consolidated.
KAZIMOTO J
A The case at the trial was simple and straight forward. Twelve elephant tusks were found and seized from the shamba of the first appellant. The evidence further disclosed that it was the first and second appellants who directed the police to where the tusks were buried and both were present when the tusks were dug out. The second B appellant had claimed ownership of 6 tusks. There was clear evidence that the first appellant had permitted the second appellant to hide the tusks in his shamba. The first appellant had conceded on ground one of his appeal that the tusks were found in his shamba. His only complaint is that he was not the owner of the tusks. That is a non issue in this case. If the first appellant had been found with tusks in his shamba in law he is deemed to have possessed C them unless he can show either that he had authority for keeping them there or that he did not know of the presence of the tusks in his shamba. Neither of this has been shown. The manner the tusks were hidden clearly proves to his D knowledge that the tusks were illegally hidden in his shamba.
The second appellant had querried the judgment of the trial court on how he could be convicted on the evidence of the first appellant on this issue. I find no merit in this complaint. The first appellant was not the only person who gave E evidence in this case. I am satisfied that both appellants have been properly convicted on the first count and the appeal against the first count is dismissed.
The second appellant had admitted in round one of his appeal that he was found with a firearm which was not his. F He contended that he was given it by Amil Mpondi to take to Ally Salum. But that does not licence him to possess that firearm. He had no licence and he was rightly convicted on that count.
The appellants were sentenced to 20 years imprisonment in count 1. That sentence is illegal. The maximum penalty for the offence charged is 7 years imprisonment. The appellants were also ordered to undergo twelve strokes. The G imposition of strokes is unauthorized by law.
The learned trial magistrate has wrongly applied the provisions of Act. No.10 of 1989 which come into force on 21.5.89. The offences in this case were alleged to have been committed on 22.4.88. I wish only to refer the learned trial magistrate to the provisions of section 49 of the interpretation of laws and General Clauses Act, No.30 of H 1972, the case of Barjit Singh v R. [1974] LRT No. 61 and Article 13(6) (c) of the constitution of the United Republic of Tanzania which reads:

No person shall be punished for any act which before its commission was not defined as such offence, and no I penalty imposed for any criminal offence shall be heavier than the penalty in force at the time the offence was committed. As stated the maximum penalty at time of the alleged commission of the offence was 7 years imprisonment and there was no provision for corporal A punishment. I therefore quash the illegal sentence of 20 years and twelve strokes and set it aside. Taking into account the prevalence of such offence in Liwale District I sentence each appellant to six years imprisonment on count 1. I find no reason to vary the sentence imposed on the second appellant in count 3 . B
In the result the appeal against conviction is dismissed. The appeals against sentence are partly allowed to the extent indicated above.
Order accordingly. C

C Appeal allowed.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwalusanya, J.: The appellant Samson Kishosha Gabba filed an application at Kakoro Primary Court in Ngudu District, for him to be appointed an administrator of the estate of his deceased father Gabba Mpondamali. He D stated in the application that he was a suitable candidate for the post of the administrator of the estate of the deceased because two properties viz. houses on Plots No. 125 and No.33 Block A, in Ngudu Township belong to him (applicant) and not to the deceased, though the said plots are all in the name of the deceased.

The respondent Charles Kingongo Gabba was appointed by other children of the deceased as well as the E deceased's wife, to file an objection in court against the appointment of the appellant as the administrator of the estate of the deceased. Evidence was given as to why appellant was unfit to be appointed administrator of the F deceased's estate. And it was vigorously contended that the two houses on plots No. 125 and No. 33 Block A, in Ngudu Township belonged to the deceased and not to the appellant.

The trial court found the appellant to be unfit to be appointed as an administrator of the estate of the deceased because he claimed to own part of the estate of the deceased. And also its was found that he was at loggerheads G with other children of the deceased. And so the appellant's application was dismissed. And instead the trial court appointed the Ward Secretary of the area as the administrator of the deceased estate.

H The trial court did decide two other things, which I think was mistakenly done. First the trial court held that the house on Plots No. 125 and No. 33 Block A, Ngudu Township belonged to the deceased and not the appellant. Secondly the trial court usurped the powers of the administrator of the deceased's estate by distributing all the property to the children of the deceased including the appellant.

I The appellant decided to appeal against the judgment of the Primary Court which was delivered on 5/7/1988. The appellant presented his petition of Appeal to Kwimba district Court on 11/2/1989 and was told he was out of time and so on 14/2/1989, A he filed an application for leave to appeal to the District Court out of time. He said in the affidavit that he was late to appeal because he had gone to see the District Registrar in Mwanza so that he appoints another District Magistrate to hear his intended appeal other than the incumbent Mr. M.R. Mlawa. The application for leave to appeal out of B time was dismissed by Mr. M. R. Mlawa D.M. It is against that dismissal that appellant has appealed to this court.

MWALUSANYA J

The reasons which appellant presented in the memorandum of appeal as cause of the delay are frivolous and C patently untenable. One is at a loss, if it is indeed true that the appellant was a magistrate during the colonial times, as to why he pleads ignorance of the law as the cause of the delay for his to appeal. He concedes that he should be have filed the appeal by 11.9.1988, but said that he could not do so because he was consulting the District magistrate to hear the appeal. He said that because he lodged the complaint to the District Registrar before D 11/9/1988 then it should be taken that he was not out of time.

The argument by the appellant that because he had lodged his complaint of change of magistrates to the District Registrar in time, then it should have been taken that he had not been time barred, is naïve as it is preposterous. E Apparently he is ignorant of the law despite the fact that he was a magistrate. He should have filed the appeal by 11/9/1988 and then should have started to pursue his wish to have appeal. There was no iota of good reason as to why he should not have filed the appeal in time. If this was the only materials to consider I would have dismissed the F appeal.

The learned District Magistrate should note that one of the most important points to consider whether or not to allow an appeal out of time is the likelihood of success of the intended appeal. The points raised in the intended memorandum of appeal, as well as the judgment of the trial court have to be considered to see if the intended G appeal has any chances of success. While reason for the delay in appealing in time are relevant, yet those are not the only material consideration in these matters. In this case, the learned District Magistrate, erred in not considering the chances of success of the intended appeal. H

After considering the judgment of the trial court, I am of the view that the intended appeal has good chances of success and it will be in the interest of justice if part of the judgment of the trial court is reversed. I say so because the decision of the trial court has some conspicuous errors. The appointment of the Wards Secretary as the I administrator of the deceased estate was quite correct. However the trial court had no power

A to distribute the estate of a deceased person to the respective heirs: that power of distribution is given to the administrator of the deceased estate. So the trial court usurped the power it does not have under the law. Again it is the administrator of deceased estates who knows the property of the deceased and distributes it. If any of the B property is alleged not to belong to the deceased, then the person to be used in court is the administrator of the deceased estate. In this case the trial court was wrong to decide the ownership of the houses on plots No. 125 and No. 33 Block A, when the administrator had yet to distribute them.

C If the District Magistrate had considered those above mentioned fundamental it would have granted leave to appeal out of time, despite the fact that the appellant had delayed. After all the delay was not very long, but only five months. And so I will allow this appeal so that the appeal is filed within 30 days from today. Among other D things the District Court should consider setting aside the illegal orders of the primary court of distributing the estate of the deceased to the heirs; as well as setting aside the premature order that the two houses belonged to the deceased. As there are now two District Magistrates at Kwimba District Court, then the appeal to be filed, be E heard by a magistrate other than Mr. M.R. Mlawa.

The respondent during the hearing of appeal raised complaint as to why the decree of the Primary Court was not executed. He wondered as to whether the Senior Resident Magistrate Mr. E.P. Mtui had power to order stay of F execution by a letter ref No. 82/323 of 27/21/89 when there was no court order He said that he was even imprisoned in a criminal case for disobeying a lawful order i.e the said letter of the S.R.M. He wondered if that was not an abuse of power. All I can say is that, the complaint raised is not relevant to the appeal under discussion. My observation is the letter which is not backed up by a court order cannot have the effect of stay of execution pending G appeal. In any cause in this particular case no appeal of any kind had been lodged and up to now no appeal has been filed. If the respondent feels that there has been a case of abuse of power, he may pursue his remedy administratively or by filing a case in court for redress.

H Be that as it may, this appeal succeeds. I allow the appeal. The appellant should file his appeal at Kwimba District Court within 30 days from today. In view of the nature of my decision. I order that each party will bear its own costs of this appeal.

I Order accordingly.

The accused was charged with the murder of his wife. After killing the wife he dumped her body into an abandoned C latrine, buried her and made a false report to his own father and mother in law about the whereabouts of the wife. The killing took place after the accused had suspected that his wife had committed adultery, failed to arrest the D suspect after chase and the wife had uttered words which made the accused lose his temper and hit the deceased with a billhook which was nearby.

The trial court considered whether suspicion of adultery can afford a defence of provocation in murder. It also considered whether or not the statement by the deceased can afford a defence of provocation in the circumstances. E

Held: (i) Prior knowledge by a husband of the adultery of his wife with a paramour does not bar him from raising the plea of provocation if the killing was upon finding the wife and her paramour in the act of adultery. In the present F case the accused alleges that the deceased had committed adultery in similar circumstances three times but he had never seen the deceased committing adultery; so the defence of provocation is not open to the accused;

(ii) the statement alleged to have been uttered by the deceased was provocative in law and as the accused killed G the deceased as a result of such provocation the killing was not intentional.

Kazimoto, J.: The accused Ally Said Kiubatyo stands charged with murder o/s 196 of the Penal Code. The Court I has been informed that on or about the 13th day of October, 1989 at Chapita Village

KAMIZOTO J

A Mingumbi within the District of Kilwa, in Lindi Region the accused murdered Zena d/o Mshamu Kimbokota The accused has pleaded not guilty

A preliminary hearing was held in accordance with the accelerated Trial and Disposal of Cases Rules 1988; B whereby the prosecution stated in detail all the facts of the case. The defence admitted only one fact that the deceased has died.

A full trial was then held and what was obvious at the preliminary hearing the accused had grudgingly to admit that Zena d/o Kimbokota was his wife; that he killed her, that after killing her he dumped her body into an abandoned C latrine and buried her and made a false report to his own father, and his mother-in-law, that the accused had to report at the authorities as he had not done so while PW1, and the relatives of the deceased went to the house of the accused, combed the surrounding area; in the shrubs, forest, valleys all in vain. Then while at the house of the D accused PW2 saw a place which had been covered with fresh sand and flies were flocking in and out. PW2 called search party, they dug out the sand and saw a human body cuddled in a kaniki and kitenge cloth. The body was identified to be that of the deceased. When the accused was asked he appeared apprehensive of and PW1 ordered E the arrest of his son and tied him with a rope and was taken into custody. The evidence of PW2 is in all fours with that of PW1 and I do not intend to repeat it.

PW1 has informed the court that since their marriage he has never received any complaint either from the accused or deceased about misunderstandings in their matrimonial life and the only complaint he got came from PW2 that F the accused had borrowed money and did not repay it. In his evidence the father of the accused (PW1) informed the court that on 15.10.1989 the accused reported to him that his wife had disappeared from home and that he did not know where she had gone. He further informed the court that the accused told him that the deceased had left all G her clothes and took with her a piece of kaniki and a kitenge and that deceased disappeared for two days. He advised the accused to report to the parents of the deceased immediately but the accused refused saying that he was tired. He informed the court further that on 16.10.89 the accused went to report to the deceased's parents that H the deceased had not been seen at home since 13.10.89 and was informed that she had not be seen at their home and that since there was only one person they would go to the accused house on the following day. On 17.10.89 PW2 together with the brothers and sisters of the deceased went to PW 1 and after consultations in the presence of I the accused it was decided the accused should go to report to the relevant authorities. In the meantime a manhunt was mounted in the valleys, shrubs, bushes and forests around the A area surrounding when she went to answer a call of nature, which arose her suspicion. It was a disused latrine freshly covered with sand and flies flocking in and out. She prickled a stick and called in other members of the search party, undug the sail and saw a human body which was that of accused's wife. The accused was arrested. B He first denied knowledge and when taken to a justice of the peace he made a free, voluntary and full confession that he killed the deceased. The confession had been admitted in evidence. In his confession he stated that he returned at night to his house and did not see her. He only saw the child alone sleeping. As he went out to check he C heard a person running away and gave chase but failed to get him. When he returned inside he saw the deceased sitting on the bed and asked her who the person was he saw running. The deceased was alleged to have replied "sijui umemkimbiza na umeshindwa mwenyewe kumkamata sasa unamwuliza nani na mtu mwenyewe D umemwona?" - freely translated in means "I do not know. You have seen the person and failed to arrest him. Whom do you ask then?" The accused stated in his confession that he lost his temper and took the billhook which was nearby and hit the deceased intending to warn her and then realized that he cut the deceased on the forehead. He panicked when he came to know that he had killed the deceased and dumped the body into the latrine. E

The accused gave evidence on oath. He adopted his extrajudicial statement. His evidence does not differ in anyway with the confession.

The Republic have contended in their submission that there was no evidence of adultery. All that has been shown F was a suspicion that deceased had committed adultery. It was submitted that hearing a person run away does not show adultery.

The Republic also submitted that the words which deceased was alleged to have uttered were ordinary words and G could not have provoked the accused into killing.

The Republic also submitted that the accused relies on insanity as a defence but contended that the accused was not insane.
In reply learned defence counsel conceded that the accused has a weak defence in insanity but he submitted that the H accused had been provoked and relied on Manyeri s/o Mukonko v R. (1954) EACA 274. He further contended that the words which deceased had spoken could have provoked the accused. He stated that the accused has stated that deceased used to commit adultery and suspected that she had done so. I
KAMIZOTO J
A In my summing-up note I stated to the assessors the defence of provocation exists where the following are established that the accused killed the deceased in the heat of passion, that the state of passion was caused by provocation of a sudden kind, provocation must consist of a wrongful act or insult which if done or directed to an B ordinary person he would have been deprived of his power of self-control.
Two gentlemen assessors found that the accused intended to kill the deceased. The first gentleman assessor is of the opinion that there was no evidence of adultery. He also stated that accused has known that deceased had committed adultery on three previous occasions. The third gentleman assessor concurred with the first assessor and C took into account the weapon used and the circumstance of the whole case. The second gentleman assessor stated that the killing was not intentional and gave his reason as to why he thinks that the defence of provocation stands.
D It is conceded that the accused did not see the alleged person let alone seeing the deceased committing adultery. He only suspected the deceased of having committed adultery. The issue is whether suspicion of adultery can afford a defence of provocation in murder cases . In the case cited by learned defence counsel of Manyeri s/o Mukonko E (supra) while the deceased and her husband the appellant had retired to bed a man came to the door of the hut they had been living in and spoke to the deceased, who told the man that she did not know him. The man asked what she meant and then the man stated that he had been living with the deceased. The appellant got out and F chased the man who ran away. The appellant got angry and speared the wife. It was held that the sudden discovery of a wife's adultery even if not finding her in fragrante delicto may in law be sufficient provocation to reduce an international killing to manslaughter. But this case can be distinguished on the fact from the present one. In Munkonko's case the paramour went to the door of the appellant and spoke to the deceased. The appellant heard G the man. Secondly the appellant heard the deceased talk to the man who being told by the deceased that she did not know him, the man stated that he had been living together with her. In the present case the accused did not see H the suspected paramour nor was there any conversation between the deceased and the alleged paramour. The only thing in common is the fact that in both cases the alleged paramour ran away.
I have called in aid the cases of Yokoyadi Lakora s/o Omari v.R [1960] EA 323 and R. v Ernest Mkumba I JIMILI [1979] LRT no. 27. The case deals with previous knowledge of adultery of a wife with a paramour. In both cases it was held that prior knowledge by a husband of the adultery of his wife with a paramour does not bar him from raising the plea of provocation if the killing was A done upon finding the wife and her paramour in the act of adultery. In the present case the accused alleges that the deceased had committed adultery in similar circumstances three times but he had never seen the deceased committing adultery. Accordingly the principles laid down in the cases of Yokayadi and Ernest (above cited) B cannot be applied to this case.

I have considered the alleged statement by the deceased quoted above to see whether it could not have provoked the accused. Looking at it in a superficial manner the statement is innocent. But considered in the circumstances in C which the statement was uttered could have provoked the accused. The accused had come from husking coconuts. He knocked at the door expecting the deceased to open the door for him. Then he pushed the door open only to find his child sleeping alone in bed. The deceased was nowhere to be seen. The accused went out and as he was D searching around he heard foot steps of a person running. He chased the person and failed. He did not know who the person was. He turned inside and saw the wife sitting on bed. The accused asked who was the person he saw running. Instead of being civil she uttered the words she was alleged to have said. The reply could have infuriated the accused, as it actually happened and took the billhook and caused the deceased's death. In my view those E words uttered to an ordinary man in the circumstances which accused had would have provoked him to assault the deceased. In his confession the accused stated the he was seized with sudden passion and assaulted the deceased. It is true that he used a lethal weapon but it is not suggested that the accused had time to look for it. In his evidence F and confession made to the justice of the peace the accused appeared to have the billhook when he returned from his safari. I agree with the defence counsel that the statement alleged to have been uttered by the deceased was provocative in law and as the accused killed the deceased as a result of such provocation the killing was not G intentional. I concur with the second gentleman assessor that the killing was not intentional.

The accused was not insane. The depositions do not state that the accused had once suffered insanity. As the burden to establish the issue of insanity is on the defence on a balance of probability it was properly withdrawn as H being weak. In any case it does not raise any doubt in the prosecution case.

A lot has been said about the conduct of the accused after killing the deceased. I agree the conduct of the accused cannot be described in any way humane. The is far from saying that he was not provoked. I

A For the reasons I have given above I am satisfied that the prosecution have failed to establish that the accused killed the deceased intentionally. I am satisfied that the murder against the accused had not been proved. Preliminary objection overruled. B
Maira, for the applicant
Majithia, for the respondent
[zJDz]Judgment
Kisanga, J.A.: There is before me an application for a stay of execution pending appeal to this Court. When the C application came on for hearing Mr. Majithia, learned counsel for the respondent, took a preliminary objection that the application was wrongly before this court in that it ought to have been made to the High Court in the first instance. Mr. Maira, learned advocate for the applicant, resisted the objection and in the course of the submission D both counsel referred to two apparently conflicting decisions of the High Court on this point.

The application for a stay of execution was brought under rule 9(2)(b) of the Court of Appeal Rules which provides E that:

(a) subject to the provisions of sub-rule (1), the institution of an appeal shall not operate to suspend any sentence or to a stay of execution, but the court may

(b) in any civil proceedings, where notice of appeal has been lodged in accordance with Rule 76. order a F stay of execution. On such terms as the Court may think just.

In his objection Mr. Majithia submitted that the High Court has concurrent jurisdiction with this court to order a stay of execution pending appeal to this Court, and so in terms of rule 44 of the Rules this application ought to have been G made to the High Court first, which it has not. In support of the view that the High Court has concurrent jurisdiction in the matter he relied on the decision of the High Court in the case of Godes Ltd., v Nimrod E. Mkono - DSM High Court Civil Case No. 91 of 1989 the High Court had inherent jurisdiction under section 95 of H the Civil Procedure Code to stay of execution pending appeal to this Court. The learned counsel further relied on the decision of the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa in the case of Ujagar Sing v Runda Coffee Estates Ltd. [1966] E.A. 263 also cited by Mapigano, J. in the Godes case. Again he referred me to a number of passages in I the commentaries by both Sakar and Mulla on section 151 of the Indian Code of Civil Procedure

A which is in pari materia with section 95 of our Civil Procedure Code and which confers inherent jurisdiction of the court. Relying on all this learned counsel vigorously contended that the High Court has inherent jurisdiction to stay of execution pending appeal to this court. In resisting the objection, Mr. Maira relied on the decision of the B High Court in the case of Saab-Scania A.B. t/a Saab-Scania Tanzania Branch v Mapinduzi Tailoring Co-operative Society Limited. - DSM Civil Case no. 85 of 1986 (unreported) where Bahati, J. ruled, in reference to Order 39 of the Civil Procedure Code, that the High Court had no jurisdiction to order a stay of execution pending appeal to this Court.

C Both Mapigano, J. and Bahati, J. rightly held that the High Court had no jurisdiction under order 39 of the Civil Procedure Code to order a stay of execution pending appeal to this Court. In this connection it is noted that Mapigano, J. in his ruling inadvertently cited Order 35 rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code as being the provision D under which the application before him for a stay of execution was brought. However, a glance through the court case file clearly shows that the application before him and counsel submissions pertaining thereto were based on Order 39. In any case Order 35 is completely irrelevant and has nothing whatsoever to do with stay of execution. E Allowing for the inadvertence, therefore, Mapigano, J. and Bahati, J. share the view that Order 39 does not confer on the High Court jurisdiction to order a stay of execution pending appeal to this court, and as I have indicated sufficiently, I am also of the same view.

F Mapigano, J., however, went further and held that the High Court has such jurisdiction in the exercise of its inherent powers under section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code, and this is what counsel appear to regard as conflict of opinion between Mapigano, J. and Bahati, J. on the matter. However, the true position is that Bahati, J. did not decide on or consider the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court under section 95 to order a stay of execution G pending appeal to this Court.

That issue was never before him either as raised by counsel or by the court itself. To that extent I see no conflict myself, in as much as there is only the opinion of Mapigano, J. on the point.

H The question now falling for consideration, therefore, is a narrow one, and it is this: Does section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code confer jurisdiction on the High Court to order a stay of execution pending appeal to this court? It is pertinent here to glance at the provision of section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code which says:

I Subject to the express provisions of any written law, the provisions of this Code shall apply to all proceedings in the High Court of the United Republic, courts of resident magistrate and district courts. A

This Code applies to stay of execution proceedings brought in the specified courts because I am not aware of any written law which makes provision to the contrary. However, upon perusal of the Code, I have not been able to B find any specific provision conferring jurisdiction on the High Court to stay of execution pending appeal to this Court. The question, therefore is: Can section 95 of the Code be construed, as urged by Mr. Majithia, as conferring on the High Court inherent jurisdiction for the purpose? C

It is to be remembered that the inherent power of the High Court under section 95 of the Code is exercisable were the law has made no provision governing the particular matter at hand Mr. Majithia, therefore, may be justified in submitting that the High Court has inherent jurisdiction here because, as I have observed, the Code makes no D specific provision for a stay of execution by the High Court pending appeal to this Court. But I should hasten to add that in my view such jurisdiction is limited and that it is not for all the time. I think that the High Court has such jurisdiction only so long as proceedings, of appeal to this Court have not been commended. Once such proceedings E have been commended, I think that the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court over the matter ceases.

I held this view for two reasons: First, once appeal proceedings to this Court have been commenced, I think that such proceedings do not come within the ambit of section 2 of the Code as set out above. That is to say, in my F view, they are proceedings in the Court of Appeal and not proceedings in the High Court to which, in terms of section 2, the provisions of the Code would apply. Therefore the High Court could not properly apply section 95 of the code for the simple reason that, in my opinion, the proceedings are no longer in that court. G

Secondly once appeal proceedings have been commenced by filing notice of appeal to this Court, the law makes specific provision, relating to stay of execution by this Court, under rule 9 (2) (b) of the Rules as reproduced above. So that there could no longer be excused for saying that the High Court would exercise its inherent jurisdiction H because the law has made no provision governing the matter.

I have read the case of Ujagar Singh which was cited before me by Mr. Majithia, and which was also relied upon by Mapigano, J. for his decision. It is true that in that case it was held that the High Court of Kenya had inherent I jurisdiction to order a stay of execution pending appeal to the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa. But that power was

A expressly conferred by rule 53 of the East African Court of Appeal Rules which were in force at the time. That rule provides that:

An appeal shall not operate as a stay of execution or of proceedings under the decision appealed from unless the courts B before or the court or a judge so orders and no intermediate act or proceedings shall be invalidated except so far as the court may direct.

C The reading of the rule make it plain that either the Court of Appeal or the High Court is empowered or authorized to consider whether or not to order a stay of execution pending appeal to the Court of Appeal. In other words rule 53 provides the source of authority for the court to be seized of the matter. And with reference to the High Court it means that in dealing with the matter, which is now properly or competently before it, it can exercise D its inherent jurisdiction or powers which it has under section 95 of the Code to decide whether or not to order a stay. But in the Tanzanian Court of Appeal Rules we have no corresponding provision to rule 53 above cited; we have no corresponding provision in the Appellate Jurisdiction Act either. In other words once appeal proceedings E to this court the High Court have been commenced, I could find no source of authority for the High Court to be seized of the matter; and if that court is not seized of the matter, it is difficult to see how it could proceed to exercise any inherent jurisdiction or powers which it has under section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code.

F It therefore follows that the decision in the case of Ujagar Singh is of no assistance here. That case is distinguishable in that there the High Court was seized of the matter with rule 53 being the sources of such authority, while in this case the High Court is not shown to have any sources of authority for it to be seized of the matter. The G same is true also of counsel's reference to the various passages in the commentaries by Mulla and Sakar on section 151 of the Indian Code of Civil Procedure relating to the inherent jurisdiction of the court to order a stay of execution. Such reference would be relevant and of assistance only upon showing that there is a provision of law, H akin, to rule 53 of the East African Court of Appeal Rules above cadet which authorises the High Court to be seized of the matter in the first instance. If that were shown, then it could validly be said that once the matter is competently before the High Court, then that court can exercise its inherent jurisdiction or powers which it has I under section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code to consider whether or not to order a stay of execution pending appeal to this court. But in the absence of any such enabling provisions, then there is no linkage between the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court under section 95 of A the Civil Procedure Code and proceedings relating to a stay of execution pending appeal to this Court, to which proceedings that said section 95 of the code has no application. It is for these reasons that I differed with Mapigano, J. and take the view that once appeal proceedings to this Court have been commenced by filing notice B of appeal, the High Court has not inherent jurisdiction under section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code to order a stay of execution pending appeal to this Court.

Now applying this analysis to the situation at hand, the applicant' s affidavit in support of the notice of motion, clearly states that notice of appeal to this court has already been given, and this had not been contradicted. C Therefore in terms of rule 9(2)(b) of the Rules, as reproduced above, this court has jurisdiction over the issue of a state of execution pending the appeal to itself. On the other hand, and for the reasons I have endeavoured to state, I could find no support for Mr. Kajithia's contention that the High Court has concurrent jurisdiction with this court in D the matter.

Consequently rule 44 which requires an application to be made in the first instance to the High Court is of no application here. I am therefore satisfied that the application for a stay of execution completely before this court. E

In the result the preliminary objection is overruled with costs to the application.

Nyalali CJ.: On the basis of the undisputed information brought to the attention of the court to the effect that the F Applicant AERO HELICOPTER (T) LTD. has withdrawn instructions from Mr. Maira and Co. as per notification filed in court on 1st April, 1993 and as per exchequer Receipt No. 215166 of same date, it is hereby directed that Maira and Co. cease to represent the applicant hereafter in these proceedings unless fresh instructions are given. Evidence - Evidence of a single witness in a murder charge - Whether it requires corroboration before conviction - S. 143 Evidence Act 1967.

-Headnote

C Before the High Court of Tanzania sitting at Njombe was Yohanis Msigwa, the appellant, charged with the offence of murder. The trial court convicted him of the offence and condemned him to death.

Dissatisfied with the conviction and the sentence, the appellant through the services of Mr. Mwakilasa, learned D counsel, appealed to the Court of Appeal of Tanzania raising among other grounds, that since P.W.1 was the only eye witness, her evidence required corroboration as a matter of prudence given gravity of the offence.
Held: (i) As provided under section 143 of the Evidence Act 1967, no particular number of witnesses is required E for the proof of any fact. What is important is the witness's opportunity to see what he/she claimed to have seen, and his/her credibility;

[zJDz]Judgment
Makame, J.A.: In November 1983, at a village called Maliwa in Makete District, Iringa Region, a man known as G Kibweri Msingwa was severely cut five times: on the face, the ears, the neck and the chest. According to the postmortem examination report the deceased died of these injuries and the consequent haemorrhage. The High Court sitting at Njombe (Mwaikasu, J) was satisfied that the appellant Yohanis Msigwa was the person who H mortally wounded the deceased and that he did so with malice aforethought. The appellant was accordingly convicted for murder and condemned to death. He is appealing to us against the decision and in the effort he is being advocated for by Mwakilasa, learned counsel. In resistance of the appeal Mr. Sengwaji, learned Senior State I Attorney, argued on behalf of the Republic.
The appellant and the deceased were cousins and PW1 Teresia
MAKAME JA
Malube, the star witness, was the wife of the deceased. On the fateful day, according to PW1, the appellant A accosted PW1 in the village and asked her the whereabouts of her husband. He explained why he was looking for the deceased: A local medicine man had told him, the appellant, that the deceased was a wizard so he wanted to talk things over with the deceased so as to avoid antagonism. This conversation was allegedly in the present of one B Lubaso, a brother of the deceased, who was unhappily dead by the time the case came up for hearing so he was not available to testify. PW1 told the appellant where the deceased was at an abandoned house which they were using as their granary, and from which she had just come. When PW1 was going back to the abandoned house the C appellant walked past her and went to where the deceased was. He stabbed the deceased in the full view of PW1 who was a few meters from them. In her early report to both PW3 Feliski Sanga, a woman whose house was some thirty paces away, and PW4 Enock Sanga the Village Secretary, PW. 1 implicated the appellant. We need D not here comment on the confining of names said to have been introduced by PW3 in her statement to the Police for that was resolved by the trail Court and is no longer the subject matter of controversy, except we desire to point out that it is not quite the thing to do to make use of the alleged statement by PW3 as did the learned trial judge, E without such statement being tendered in evidence. Be it as it may, the appellant was arrested at Makambako, according to him on 29th December, 1983 and was eventually tried and found guilty of murder as aforesaid.

Mr. Mwakilasa urged two grounds of appeal. The first that the evidence adduced was not enough to base a F conviction of murder on, and secondly that the appellants alibi should have been accepted. Mr. Mwakilasa submitted that as PW1 was the only eye witness, her evidence required corroboration as a matter of prudence for a crime so grave. He suggested that PW1 testified falsely against the appellant because the appellant had put PW1 his daughter, his niece, in the family way. For good measure Mr. Mwakilasa further suggested that it is possible that G PW1 herself was the deceased's killer. Mr. Mwakilasa also wonders why, if PW2.'s story were true, the appellant was not arrested until some seven weeks later, whereas Makambako, where he was picked up by the Police, is just in the next door district of Njombe. Mr. Songwaji responded to this: He submitted that PW. 1 knew the appellant H before and the appellant conceded as much. PW1 said she knew of no grudges, and the pregnancy story was not put to PW1 for her to admit or deny; in any event the appellant says the matter was discussed and settled. As for the delay in arresting the appellant Mr. Dengwaji surmised that it I

A could well have been because the appellant was a pottery businessman at Makambako with no firm address.

As aforesaid, Mr. Mwakilasa also complained about his client's alibi. He submitted that although no notice of it was given as required of the Defence, the Prosecution was aware of its existence by virtue of the fact that the appellant B told the investigating officer, PW5, Inspector Benjamini Mwakatika, that he was not involved in the murder, that is; an alibi was implicit in the utterance.

We are able to say at the outset, with respect, that Mr. Mwakalasa's submission on the defence of alibi is decidedly C thin. Also in urging us to say that PW1 might have been the killer, Mr. Mwakilasa was truly scraping the barrel. It is a wild and barren theory, without the slightest foundation in the evidence on record.

The Prosecution was silent as to when the appellant was arrested so we must go by the appellant's own assertion, D which was not controverted, that he was not arrested until 29th December 1983 that is some seven weeks after the event. Mr. Mwakilasa did not come out more boldly but we think his oblique insinuation was that PW1 could not have implicated the appellant on the day of the incident otherwise the appellant would have been arrested a lot E earlier. We are unable to go along with learned counsel on this. We are not at all surprised that the appellant was not apprehended sooner than he was because, on his own account, he did not go back to the village since he went to Makambako in 1976 that is seven years previously. It is therefore possible that the villagers including PW 1 did F not know where he was living. Indeed PW 1 said that the appellant was not a frequent visitor and we think it is significant also that even PW4 Sanga, the village Secretary and so a man in authority at the village, did not at all know the appellant although PW4 had lived in the village since 1981.

G There was admittedly a lone eye witness in this case. Her evidence is not however detracted from because of that fact alone. As provided under Section 143 of the Evidence act, of course no particular number of witnesses is required for the proof of any fact. What were important here were PW1's opportunity to see what she claimed to have seen, and her credibility. Mr. Mwakilasa concedes it was broad daylight and, as Mr. Sengwaji remarked, the H learned trial judge was positively impressed by PW1 as a witness. We ourselves find no reason to doubt the veracity and reliability of PW1's testimony. We are satisfied that the appellant was quite properly convicted on the evidence and we accordingly dismiss the appeal.

I We wish to add one observation. All the three assessors who sat with the learned judge advised that the appellant was not guilty. As we have had occasion to say before, it is a rule A of practice that when a trial judge departs from the unanimous views of his assessors. Albeit not binding, he should state his reasons for doing so. We have elsewhere referred to this as the Segesela Rule with reference to the judgment in the Court of Appeal Criminal Appeal No. 13 of 1973 Charles Segesela v R an appeal from Tanzania. B In the present case the learned trial judge gave convincing reasons for disagreeing with his assessors and the Segesela Rule was in our view clearly observed.

1990 TLR p151

MAKAME JA

Appeal dismissed. C

Case referred to. F

1. Thornton v Shoe Lane Parking Ltd [l971] l All ER 686.

[zJDz]Judgment

Chipeta, J.: This is a ruling on a preliminary point. The plaintiffs, M/s Star Service Station Co. Ltd, have filed a suit against the defendants, the Tanzania Railways G Corporation in which they claim damages for loss of goods consigned to the defendants by the plaintiffs for transportation from Dar es Salaam to Shinyanga.

The defendant's preliminary point raised was that based on an exclusion or limiting clause as to the defendant's liability. The defendants asserted that they can in no way be H liable by virtue of the "conditions of carriage" contained in their "Tariff Book" which state that "dangerous goods" as petroleum products (the goods in question in this case) are carried at "owner's risk" as the defendants are not "common carriers" of such goods.

To my mind, there are cases in which such preliminary points may be upheld. But I before such a submission can be upheld, certain principles of law must be carefully examined. The existence of a valid contract A presupposes that the contracting parties were ad idem as to the terms of the contract and that each of them willingly accepted those terms of the contract. In cases in which one party to a contract inserts a term excluding or limiting liability which would otherwise be his, the question whether or not the other party was made aware of such B exclusion terms of liability and accepted them is often a question of fact to be ascertained from the evidence adduced. Such cases may also raise the question as to whether or not such exclusion terms or clauses render the given contract void for unreasonableness of the given exclusion clauses. C

CHIPETA J

In deciding such cases therefore, it is necessary to enquire whether the other party was given reasonable notice of the exempting or exclusion clauses. As Lord Denning, M.R. pointed out int he case of Thornton v Shoe Lane Parking Ltd. [l971] I All E.R. 686 at page 105: D

It is no use telling the customer that the ticket is issued subject to some "conditions" or other without more, for he may reasonably regard "conditions" in general as merely E regulatory, and not as taking away his right unless the exempting condition is drawn specifically to his attention (Emphasis added).

Lord Denning, M.R., went on:

I do not pause to inquire whether the exempting condition is void for unreasonableness. F All I say is that it is so wide and so destructive of rights that the court should not hold any man bound by it unless it is drawn to his attention in the most explicit way. In order to give sufficient notice, it would need to be printed in red ink with a red hand pointing G to it, or something equally startling.

In the present case, in the absence of evidence, the court would not be in a position to know whether the exempting clauses were drawn to the attention of the plaintiffs in the H most explicit way or whether or not the defendants are not common carriers of petroleum products, and so on. All these are questions of fact which can only be determined from evidence to be adduced by the parties.

For these reasons, the preliminary point fails. The case will proceed to trial and be I determined on the merits.
Order accordingly.

On conviction, the accused person was sentenced to pay a fine of shs.7,000/= or nine months imprisonment and to pay shs.3,000/= as compensation. B
This court has often held that a sentence must fit the crime and guilt as well as the circumstances of the offender. If a sentencing court is minded to impose a sentence of fine as an option to a custodial sentence, such court should take pains to inquire into the C financial means of the accused person, for if that is not done, a court might find itself imposing on an accused person a sentence of fine whose result would be to render the option of a fine illusory. (See Ally and Another v R., [l972] HCD n. 115; and R. v Sima, [1972] HCD n. 182), It has also been held that youthful first offenders should be D treated leniently (see R. v Juma s/o Rashidi, [l972] HCD n. 185), and that an accused person who is a student should likewise be treated with some measure of leniency (see R. v Aleni Mwamenze [l972] HCD n 226).
In the present case, the learned magistrate took into account the fact that the accused E person was a first offender. He, however, said that "a deterrent sentence" was called for "to be a lesson to the accused person and other people." I certainly agree that violence and indiscipline in schools must be discouraged. But in this case, that was not the only factor to be taken into account. In assessing a sentence, all relevant factors F must be taken into account. If that is not done, an appellate court or a superior court acting in revision would be entitled to interfere with such a sentence. (see Silvanus Leonard Nguruwe v Republic [l981] TLR 66).
In this case, and as pointed out above, the accused was a student in a secondary G school. He is aged 20 years, and he is a first offender. As a student, he could hardly be expected to have an income which could enable him to raise shs.10,000/= at a moment's notice! Besides, the injury which the victim sustained can hardly be said to have been serious. These were very strong mitigating circumstances to which the H learned trial magistrate did not address his mind. In this, with respect, he erred.
For these reasons, I am of the settled view that the sentence of fine imposed on the accused person by the trial court was so manifestly excessive as to have resulted in injustice. The same is accordingly hereby set aside, and substituted therefor is a I sentence of a fine of shs.1,000/= (one thousand) or one month imprisonment.

If the fine has been paid, the balance of shs.6,000/= (six thousand) shall be refunded to A the accused person forthwith. The order of compensation shall remain undisturbed.

This application arises out of a dispute over a piece of land. The applicants unsuccessfully applied before Msumi, J. for orders of certiorari and prohibition E challenging the acts of the Minister for Lands and Director of Land Services who had purportedly acquired the plot originally allocated to the applicants and reallocated it to Globe Tiles. Seven days after the decision, Miss R.H. Sheikh for the applicant filed a Notice of Appeal against that decision. An application was then made by applicant for F extension to apply for leave to appeal. Mnzavas, J.K. dismissed the application.
In the Court of Appeal, Mr. Jadeja for the applicant, filed Notice of Motion for an extension of time for an application for leave to appeal and for leave to appeal. G
The Court of Appeal dismissed both applications with costs.
Held: Leave to appeal, which was necessary in the present matter, has to be sought within fourteen days of a decision. Under Rule 43 of the Court of Appeal Rules, such H leave may be applied for informally. This informal application must be made when the decision against which it is desired to appeal is given. [zJDz]Judgment
Makame, J.A.: This application arises out of a dispute over a piece of land, Plot No. 22 Vingunguti Industrial Area in the City of Dar es Salaam, allocated at various times to the applicants, Metal Products Ltd., and to another company Globe Tiles (T) Ltd. The B applicants unsuccessfully applied before Msumi, J. for orders of Certiorari and Prohibition, challenging the acts of the present respondents who had purported to acquire the plot that had been allocated to the applicants and had it re-allocated to Globe Tiles to whom it had allegedly been allocated at first. C

The applicants were dissatisfied with the decision of Msumi, J. which he made on 11th August, 1987 and seven days later Miss R.H. Sheikh, who was appearing for the applicants, filed a Notice of Appeal against the said decision. Thereafter an application D was made on 23/9/87, for an extension of time to apply for leave to appeal. This was heard by Mnzavas, J.K. and on 26th July, 1988 he dismissed the application.

The Notice of Motion now before me, filed by Mr. Jadeja, learned advocate for the applicants and resisted by Mr. Warema, learned State Attorney on behalf of the E respondents, is for an extension of time for an application for leave to appeal, and for leave to appeal. Mr. Warema has urged that the application for leave is incompetent as it ought first to have been made to the High Court as is required under Rule 44 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, and none was made. He also submitted that Miss F Sheikh's ground - inadvertence - was properly held by the High Court as not amounting to sufficient reason for the delay.

Leave to appeal, which was necessary in the present matter, has to be applied for within fourteen days of the decision. Mr. Jadeja is perfectly right under Rule 43 such G leave may be applied for informally. This informal application must be made "when the decision against which it is desired to appeal is given".

Miss Sheikh sought to persuade the High Court that she did tell Msumi, J. that she intended to appeal. Mnzavas, J.A. was not impressed: He said that the record did not H bear her out. Mr. Jadeja has submitted that it is possible the learned J.K. was misled by the cycostyled copy of Msumi, J.'s Judgment (which did not indicate what Miss Sheikh had said - that "We give Notice of Appeal to Court of Appeal"). Looking at Annexure A in support of Miss Sheikh's affidavit in the present Notice of Motion it is I clear that Mr. Jadeja is obviously right - Miss Sheikh did indicate her intention to appeal, whether as Mr. Warema says, she was weeping in the process; or not. But A what was the effect of this? Was Rule 43 complied with? Mr. Jadeja submitted thus:

> contend an informal application - 'I apply for leave to appeal' - whatever the words - would B refer to leave to appeal, No informal application for Notice to appeal is necessary.

Of course Mr. Jadeja is right again, but only as far as he goes. "Whatever words" used in clear connection with the application for leave to appeal - Yes - but not any words. C "Whatever words", without the qualification indicated is too wide a proposition. What Miss Sheikh did on 11th August, 1987 was to indicate her intention to appeal, which she was free to do, and indeed she made good her word when she filed her Notice on 18th August 1987. How from what transpired in the presence of Msumi, J. Miss Sheikh was able to assume that leave was granted I find utterly startling. Why D should she make such an assumption? Part of para 10 of Miss Sheikh's affidavit goes thus:

> Mr. Justice Msumi delivered the judgment on 11th August, 1987 and I immediately told the E learned judge that I wanted to appeal. There was no objection coming from counsel for the Respondents and I saw the learned judge writing down something which I assumed to be the granting of leave to appeal. In the sure knowledge that I had been allowed to appeal I F proceeded to file the annexed Notice of Appeal ...

With the greatest respect, such 'sure knowledge' was baseless and ill-founded.
Mr. Jadeja furnished me with a formidable list of authorities - indication of his usual G industry - and ably took me through some of them: From Gatti v Shoosmith, right up to I.F.M. F. Simon Manyaki. They show the evolution of thought - from special cause to sufficient reason - and the courts' persistent dislike to have their discretion fettered in these matters. We still have to consider - whether there was sufficient reason for the H delay in taking the steps Miss Sheikh should have taken. The delay must relate to the period right from the time Msumi, J. delivered his judgment, not just from the time Miss Sheikh says she discovered her blunder. Quite frankly, the reason here is Miss Sheikh's ignorance of the procedure, or her blatantly unwarranted and erroneous assumption I that she had been granted leave. This is outside the category of explicable inadvertedness and cannot be A condoned. Otherwise the rules would be pointless - they were made to be followed and their broken can only be excused if sufficient reason is shown.

I respectfully agree with Mr. Jadeja, and I find support for this even in the ruling by the B learned J.K. himself, that there were in effect two applications made to the High Court - for leave and for extension of time. In the particular circumstances of this case Mr. Jadeja has a point that the refusal to extend time was in substance refusal to grant leave also. Mnzavas, J.K. did make reference to the application for leave. For myself, I C am not persuaded to hold that it is just what leave should be granted. The record shows that on 30th June, 1987 Miss Sheikh merely asked for more time in which to prepare herself and that she also prayed for leave to file and reply to the respondents' counter affidavit as she had discovered some facts which were not pleaded in her D affidavit. She did not indicate the subject matter of her discovery. Her application was dismissed. She should have researched for her case more carefully in the first place. Some of the things she is now alleging in her affidavit could not be considered by the Court of Appeal without calling for additional evidence, nor have I the means to know E the truth or otherwise of them at this eleventh hour. In the exercise of my discretion I refuse to grant leave to appeal and I have indicated why I also feel, though for rather different reasons, why I also would not allow the application to extend time.
F Order accordingly.

Maina, J.: The accused, Muhidin Twalib, was charged in the District Court at Kilwa with burglary and stealing. He denied the charge. After a few adjournments, the prosecutor informed the court that the accused was married to the complainant's daughter, and he requested that the matter be settled out of court. The District Court agreed and made an order that the case be settled out of court. This case was admitted to revision because it appeared that the District Court acted without jurisdiction.

The learned district magistrate made his order under section 163 of the Criminal Procedure Act which provides as follows:

In the case of proceeding for common assault or for any offence of personal or private nature, the court may, if it is of the opinion that the public interest does not demand the infliction of the penalty, promote reconciliation, and encourage and facilitate the settlement, in an amicable way, of the proceedings or on terms of payment of compensation or other term approved by the court, and may thereupon order the proceedings to be stayed.

It seems to me that the court can promote reconciliation and encourage settlement in a case of common assault or for an offence which is of personal or private nature. The relationship between the accused and the complainant is not relevant. What the court has to consider, before applying section 163 of the Criminal Procedure

Act, is whether the offence is one of common assault or of personal or private nature. If A the answer is in the affirmative, then the court may proceed to promote reconciliation and encourage settlement. In this case, the learned district magistrate conceded that the offence was serious. It was of common assault. The charge was burglary and stealing. B That is not an offence of personal or private nature. Burglary is a serious offence and therefore it is not an offence in which the court could promote reconciliation Section 163 of the Criminal Procedure Act was not applicable in this case.

The order of the District Court that the case be settled out of court is set aside. C

It is ordered that the case be remitted to the District Court for trial before another magistrate.

(iii) a judgment must contain the points for determination, the decision thereon B and the reasons for the decision.

[zJDz]Judgment
Kazimoto, J.: When the appeal came up for hearing and having heard learned state C attorney who declined to support the conviction and having considered the grounds of appeal by the appellant I quashed the appellant's conviction, set aside the sentence imposed and ordered his immediate release from prison. I reserved my reasons which I now give. D
The appellant was convicted of house breaking and theft c/ss 294(1) and 265 of the Penal Code and sentenced to five years jail for house breaking and two years imprisonment for stealing. He appealed.
On 26.2.87 the house of the complainant (PW1) was broken into and two shirts, a pair E of shoes, a belt, a pair of trousers, children's clothing and ten pairs of khanga were stolen. The thief or thieves were unknown.
On 23.3.87 the appellant was seen by PW1 wearing a shirt, a belt and a pair of shoes F which complainant claimed to be his. This led to the arrest of the complainant and the subsequent charges and convictions at the trial.
In his evidence PW1 neither described by make or any other mark, the properties which he alleged to be his. According to his evidence he recognised the shirt by its yellowish colour and stripes and the belt and shoes by colour. Even if colour could be G said to be a special mark the type of colour in respect of the belt and shoes should be stated in evidence. And it has been held in numerous authorities that identification of stolen property by colour alone is the weakest sort of evidence and an accused person H ought not to be convicted on such evidence.
A judgment which does not conform with the provisions of section 3l2(1) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 is not a judgment in law and will certainly run the risk of being quashed. It has been said now and again that a judgment to be a judgment must I "contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision." Having summarised the evidence for both the prosecution and A the defence the learned Principal District Magistrate had this to say:

> Indeed on the evidence before me I am satisfied that the accused was found wearing some of B the complainant's property, about 27 days later (shoes, a belt and shirt).
> This is not a type of property which could easily pass from one hand to another in such a short period. The accused must have been the breaker and the thief.

The appellant was not charged with being "found wearing or in possession". At issue is C the identity of the stolen property. The learned magistrate did not direct his mind to that issue. He did not say on what he was "satisfied" that the appellant was the breaker D and the thief. Further it was premature to invoke the doctrine of recent possession. That doctrine depends on the stolen property being identified. As it was not identified by the complainant it cannot be said it is the same property which had been stolen from him.
And to say that the type of property cannot pass hands within a month in todays E business boom of second hand clothes popularly known as "mitumba" can hardly be convincing. Clothing can easily pass hands within a few days. They are not the type of things which could fail to get a willing and able purchaser.

It was for these reasons that I allowed the appeal and made the subsequent orders. F

Lugua, for the accused
[zJDz]Judgment
Mapigano, J.: This case concerns the death of a man called Athumani Rajabu which took place on 29th day of February, 1988, in the Bagamoyo hospital. The deceased D aged 33 years had sustained an injury in the leg a few hours back, described in the autopsy report as a deep cut wound involving large arteries and veins, and alleged by the prosecution to have been inflicted by a knife. The accused Siwajibu d/o Kibaya is facing a murder charge from the alleged stabbing and she maintained that the charge is a E frame-up.
At the material time the accused was living together with a man called Tabu Mohamed in a quasi matrimonial situation at Magomeni Nianjema in the township of Bagamoyo, and there were issues out of their three-years cohabitation, and the two were anxious to F contract a legal marriage. It is clear from the evidence that the death of Athumani Rajabu had some reference to that cohabitation.

The sequence of events culminating with the death of Athumani started at the homestead of Shabani Mkombozi (PW6), a neighbour of Tabu Mohamed and the deceased. The G incident involved the accused, Tabu and a girl called Rukia Selemani otherwise named Azimio (PW1). The accused was manifestly and poignantly given to understand that Rukia was intruding into the cohabitation.

Rukia was not a resident of Nianjema. She lived at Lugoba and she came to Nianjema H to attend the funeral and the hitima of a near relation at the home of Rashidi Yusuf. During her stay in Nianjema she happened to have struck up an amatory relationship with Tabu Mohamed, the man who was living on the other side of the road. She stands in a near blood relation to the deceased as well I as to Selemani Bahatisha and Omari Yusuf who gave evidence on the side of the A prosecution as PW2 and PW3, respectively.

On 28/2/88 at around 9 p.m. the accused found Tabu and Rukia in the compound of Shabani Mkombozi. She accused Rukia of having a love affair with Tabu and she scolded Tabu and alternated with Rukia. That was common ground. But the accused B had some interesting details to add. She said that she took the two in the act of tender embrace, Rukia leaning against the wall, Tabu resting his hands on her shoulders, fondling and kissing each other. She brought Tabu back to their house where the C tongue-lashing went on in the verandah. It came to a point, before long, which Tabu could not bear the ordeal any longer and he scurried away and vanished.

The prosecution evidence has depicted the accused as one who had been driven into a raving fury. Soon after returning to her house she fetched a knife and went to the D verandah of Rashid Yusufu, where Rukia was standing, to take vengeance on her. In the state of such fury she hurt Amina Rajabu and missed stabbing Omari Yusufu (PW3), when the two tried to tackle her in order to disarm her, and according to PW3, she declared that she had decided to slay a person.

When the deceased came and made a similar bid, at the same place, the accused E stooped and gave him the fatal blow. The prosecution contention is that she had no excuse whatever to do so. Their contention is also that exhibit P5 is the knife which the accused used to commit the offence, but the defect which obtains in their case is that exhibit P5 was not identified by any of the eye witnesses.

F On the other hand the case for the accused is that she was a victim who was later cast as the aggressor. To rub salt into injury, as the idiom goes, Rukia had the audacity of storming into her yard to heap scorn upon her. Rukia scoffed at her fit of passion, telling her that her vagina was frigid and that was why Tabu was smitten with another woman. G

That was not the end of her torments. Members of the family of Rukia, including the deceased, descended upon the yard and set upon her for "putting Rukia to shame." One seized her by the throat while the others treated her to some kicks and she got injured. H In due course a man came and interceded. The man remonstrated with her attackers and warned them that she might lodge a complaint with the police against them. She denied that she stabbed the deceased. She claimed that she did not know how the deceased came to sustain the injury, pointing out, I think correctly, that there was darkness and that the row had pulled a crowd. I

MAPIGANO J

She claimed that the report that was later laid against her to the police was meant to A forestall her complaint and make her suffer. There is an item in the testimony of constable Boniface (PW5) which tends to confirm that she had been given a beating.

All the assessors have gone by the version of the accused, and, accordingly, they have stated the opinion that she did not commit any offence and that she should be cleared of B the charge.

I fully apprehend that the decision of this case depends largely upon the credibility of the witnesses, and that I have to approach the evidence of PW1, PW2 and PW3 keeping in mind that they are closely related to the deceased. I have come to the conclusion that it C is unsafe to believe their testimony that the accused was responsible for the death of the deceased.

For one thing, the three witnesses have lied when they alleged that the deceased sustained the leg injury at the home of Rashid Yusufu. The evidence of Shabani D Mkombozi, the one witness I consider to be independent and impartial, gave them that lie. The witness stated that he found the deceased writhing in pain at the home of Tabu Mohamed.

For another, the evidence of the two witnesses, i.e. Shabani Mkombozi and Constable E Boniface, also tends to land some credence to the accused's story that Rukia and her relations came to her house to violence.

Furthermore, we have been urged to believe that the accused decided to avenge her wounded feelings on the deceased, when the evidence does not show that there was F nothing to stop her from doing the same on Rukia, to whose misbehaviour her fury had a direct reference. I should say that this is a thing I have found hard to accept.

In the final analysis the evidence does not exclude the possibility of the stab having been inflicted by some one else, or the possibility of the injury having been caused otherwise G e.g. by falling on a sharp object. I find that the information against the accused possibly proceeded on a mere supposition, as the first assessor put it, or on an anticipation and malice, as the accused has claimed. I find the accused not guilty and acquit her. She is to be set free forthwith if she is not otherwise lawfully held. H

A Mapigano, J.: The question is whether section 130 (1) of the Evidence Act 1967 is applicable to a couple which have lived together in concubinage for a space of three years, begotten two children, and entertain the desire and hope of going through a ceremony of marriage in the near future.

B The rule laid down by that provision is predicated upon the objection on special grounds, to disturbing marital harmony more than is absolutely necessary, and what many regard as the harshness of compelling a husband to give evidence for the prosecution on the trial of his wife and vice versa.

C We got the rule from England and at paragraph 1331 of the 13th edition of Archbold it is said that the rule only applies where there is value marriage.

It is however appropriate that we approach the matter against the backdrop of the real Tanzania situation, which is to say that the question should be decided upon the D circumstances prevailing in this country. We have to acknowledge that such cohabitation is a notorious affair in Tanzania, that the line between a valid, marriage and concubinage is sometimes obscure, and that often enough such cohabitation takes on the typical features of a durable establishment.

E I am therefore prepared to give section 130 a broad construction and to enlarge its period to enfold a couple like the accused in this case and the prosecution witness Tabu Mohamed. I accordingly sustain Mr. Mselem's submission that Tabu Mohamed is not under duty to testify for the prosecution.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kyando, J.: The appellant was a witness in Criminal Case No. 179 of 1987 of the District Court of Dar es Salaam, at Kisutu. He was PW11. At the conclusion of the trial the District Court ordered that 604 bases of second hand clothes, popularly known as H "mitumba", which were exhibits in the case be restored to Sadrudin Sulemani The said Sadrudin Sulemani was an accused person in the case. He was the third accused. The appellant appeals against the order that the exhibits be restored to Sadrudin Sulemani. He contends that the Court should have ordered that they be restored to him and not to I Sadrudin Sulemani.

1989 TLR p18

KYANDO J

A At the commencement of the hearing of the appeal Mr. Kesaria for Sadrudin Sulemani, the second respondent in this appeal, took points of preliminary objections to the appeal. He contended that the appeal is incompetent and should not proceed to hearing. He based his contentions on the following three points: B

(1) That the appellant is not the proper person, and has no right, to appeal in the case.

(2) That no notice of intention to appeal was given by the appellant as required by law.

(3) That the judgment or order appeared from was not accompanied with the C petition of appeal, again as required by law.

Mr. Malaba, learned State Attorney, who appeared for the Republic/first respondent, D supported Mr. Kesaria in these objections. They both then prayed that I dismiss the appeal for incompetence.

Mr. Mchora for the appellant maintained that the appeal is competent and prayed that I overrule the objections raised by his two learned friends. This ruling is on these opposing contentions of the learned counsel. E

I will start with the first point raised by counsel for the respondents, and that is that the appellant has no right of appeal in the case. Mr. Mchora submitted that the appeal is made under s. 358(5) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. This subsection provides: F

358(5) Any person aggrieved by an order made under this section may appeal to the High Court and upon the hearing of such appeal the court may, by order annul or vary any order G made on a trial for the restitution of any property to any person, although the conviction is not quashed; and the order, if annulled, shall not take effect, and if varied, shall take effect as so varied.

Mr. Mchora argued that his client, the appellant, derives the right to appeal in this matter H from these provisions of the C.P.A. Mr. Kesaria on the other hand argued that it is only a person who is a party to a case who can acquire rights to appeal from any decision of a court in that case. He contended that because the appellant was a mere witness in the instant case he has no right of appeal and his present appeal is incompetent I and it is unmaintainable.

KYANDO J

As I have said Mr. Mchora relied on s. 358(5) C.P.A. To appreciate the provisions of A the sub-section fully I think it is important to consider the provision of s. 357 C.P.A. and also those in the remaining sub-sections of s. 358. Section 357 provides:

Where, upon the apprehension of a person charged with any offence, any property is taken B from him, the court before which he is charged may order -

(a) that the property or party thereof be restored to the person who appears to the court to be entitled thereto, and if he be the person charged, that it be restored either to him or to such other person as he may direct or C

(b) that the property or part thereof be applied to the payment of any fine or any costs or compensation directed to be paid by the person charged.

Section 358 provides: D

358 (1) If any person guilty of an offence mentioned in chapters XXVI to XXXI, both inclusive, of the penal code, in stealing, taking, obtaining extorting, converting or disposing of, or in E knowingly receiving any property, is prosecuted to conviction by or on behalf of the owner of such property, the property shall be restored to the owner or his representative.

(2) In every case referred to in this section the court before which such offender is F convicted shall have power to award from time to time writs of restitution for the said property to order the restitution thereof in a summary manner, save that: G

(a) Whether goods as defined in the sale of goods ordinance have been obtained by fraud or other wrongful means not amounting to stealing, the property in such goods shall not revest in the person who was the owner of the goods or his H personal representative by reason only of the conviction of the offender; and

(b) Nothing in this section shall apply to the case of any valuable security which has been in good faith paid or discharged by some person liable to the payment thereof, or being a negotiable instrument has been in good faith taken or received I by transfer or delivery by some person for a just and valuable consideration without any notice or without A reasonable cause to suspect that the same has been stolen.

(3) On the restitution of any stolen property if it appears to the court by the evidence that the offender has sold the stolen property to any person, and that such person had no B knowledge that the same was stolen, and that money has been found in possession of and taken from the offender on his apprehension the court may, on the application of such purchaser, order that out of such money a sum not exceeding the amount of the C proceeds of such same be delivered to the said purchaser.

(4) (Not applicable). D

Mr. Mchora argued that the words "any person aggrieved" in sub-s.(5) of s.358 mean what they say, i.e. anyone whatsoever who is dissatisfied by an order for restoration made by a subordinate court can appeal from that order to the High Court. He argued E that the appellant was aggrieved by the order made in this case by the trial court and being "a person", even though he was only a witness, he has the right of appeal under the above sub-section.

Section 358 is rather difficult to construe. But to my understanding, sub-s.(5) applies F only to section 358 and not to s. 357 also. This means that one cannot appeal against an order made under s. 357 relying on sub-s.5 of s.358, because the sub-section says "Any person aggrieved by an order made under this section", i.e. s. 358. It is important to make this clear because in their arguments before me learned Counsel did not seem to G make a distinction between orders made under s. 357 and these made under s. 358. Mr. Mchora in particular appeared to be of the view that a person aggrieved by an order made under s. 357 can appeal under s. 358 (5) against it.

Secondly, it would appear that an order which can be appealed from by "any person H aggrieved" under sub-section (5) is an order made on a trial for the restitution of property. These are the words used in the sub-section itself. This therefore means that before an order under s.358 is made appealable, there has to be a trial for restitution of property and the order made in that trial is the one which is appealable to the High Court I by anyone aggrieved by it. Quite clearly, this would mean the one who had been party to the trial i.e. the trial for restitution of property, and not anyone else. For such a trial to take A place I think there would have to be an applicant (for the order of restitution) and a respondent, or contending parties bearing titles akin to these. At the conclusion of this trial, an order or writ such as that referred to in sub-s.(2) then issues and it is from it that a party may appeal under sub-s.(5). B

Lastly, it is clear that s.358 as a whole only applies to situations where an accused has been convicted. It does not apply to situations where an accused has been acquitted. This is obvious from these words of s.358(1): "If any person guilty of an offence mentioned in chapters XXVI to XXXI, both inclusive ... is prosecuted to conviction by C or on behalf of ..."

Applying the above, it is clear that section 358, and its sub-s.(5) have no application to the instant case. This is because, first, no trial for restitution of the property, the subject matter of this appeal, was held in the District Court and there is therefore no order which D can properly be appealed from by the appellant. The one which he is appealing from now is not the type of order envisaged by s.358. Secondly, and this is of greater importance, there was no conviction in this case. The accused were in fact discharged after the prosecution failed to establish prima facie case against them. Section 358 E C.P.A. has no application therefore as that section applies to "prosecutions to convictions" only.

Because s. 358 does not apply to this appeal the appellant cannot rely on s.358(5) to present it and Mr. Mchora was quite clearly wrong to place reliance on the provisions of F that sub-section as shown above.

Can the appellant rely on any other provisions of the C.P.A. Mr. Mchora emphasised in his submissions on the words "who appears to be entitled thereto" used in section 357 and argued that the property in this case should have been ordered to be restored to his G client because on the evidence he appears to be the one entitled thereto. By his emphasis on those words I understood Mr. Mchora to be relying on s. 357 too. But that section has no appeal provisions. As already indicated sub-s.(5) of s.358 only applies to s.358. So how can a person appeal who is aggrieved by an order for restoration of H property made under s.357? Is it by reliance on s.359(1) of the C.P.A.? Sub-s.(1) of s.359 provides:

359(1) save as hereinafter provided, any person aggrieved by any findings, sentence or order I made or passed by a subordinate court ... may appeal to the High Court...

He can not rely, in my view, on these provisions either, as, like under s. 358(5) where a A person who can appeal must be one who was a party to a trial for restitution of property, here too one must have been a party to the trial in order to be aggrieved by "any finding sentence or order made or passed by a subordinate court" and appeal. B Under s.359 the parties envisaged are, as Mr. Kesaria rightly argued, the Public (or prosecutor) or the accused. It can not logically be contended that a witness in a case can acquire rights to appeal under this section. If a witness feels that an order for restitution C under s.357 is wrong, the proper course for him is to request either the prosecutor, if he was a prosecution witness, or the accused, if he was a defence witness to appeal against it. In the instant case therefore the appellant had no right of appeal under s.359 (1) C.P.A. either. There being no other provisions on the basis of which he could properly have appealed, as submitted by Mr. Kesaria and Mr. Malaba, the appeal he D brought to this court is unmaintainable. It is incompetent.

I will now consider the objection based on an alleged failure to give notice of intention to appeal. Under s.361(a) C.P.A., no appeal under s.359 C.P.A. can be entertained unless E the appellant has given notice of his intention to appeal within ten days from the date of the finding, sentence or order he wishes to appeal against. As indicated above, Mr. Kesaria and Mr. Malaba for the respondents contended that no notice of intention to appeal was ever given in this case. They submitted therefore that the appeal is F incompetent on this ground too and prayed that it be dismissed. In reply Mr. Mchora contended that he gave notice of intention to appeal and within the prescribed time. He said the notice is contained in his letter dated 28 November l988 to the Principal Resident Magistrate, Kisutu Court. The letter reads: G

Mr. Kesaria argued that this letter is not a notice of intention to appeal at all. At best, he said it might be a notice of intention to apply for revision. He maintained that the appeal was lodged without the requisite notice of intention to appeal. Mr. Mchora argued in F reply that since there is no such thing in law as a notice of intention to apply for revision, it should be assumed that the use of the words "intends to apply for revision of the said order" in the letter was a slip of the pen but what was intended was a notice of intention to appeal. He submitted therefore that the letter should be accepted as a notice of G intention to appeal and that therefore respondents' counsels' objections to the appeal based on lack of notice to appeal should be overruled.

I find the arguments by Mr. Mchora on his letter reproduced above not sensible at all. H The letter is, quite simply, not a notice of intention to appeal at all. Even if I was minded to accept his argument that the letter was intended to be a notice to appeal and not to apply for revision and that there was a slip of the pen in the use of the words "intends to apply for revision" what transpired soon after this letter does not support Mr. Mchora's I contentions. Mr. Mchora actually not only applied but he pressed for a revision of the order of the District Court by the High Court and it was only after the J.K. advised him to ask A the DPP to appeal that he adopted the course of appealing. It is clear to me that the letter reproduced above was part of the efforts to have the order revised by the High Court. It had no relationship to any intended appeal at all.

In desperation, as he was about to conclude his arguments on this point, Mr. Mchora B stumbled on the point that the appeal has already been admitted. By his minute dated 13.12.88, my learned brother Mapigano, J., admitted the appeal to hearing. Mr. Mchora contended that under the second proviso to section 36l C.P.A. the High Court may, for C good cause, admit an appeal "notwithstanding that the period of limitation prescribed in this section has elapsed". He argued therefore that since the appeal was admitted to hearing it must be assumed to have been admitted under these provisions of the law and that it is therefore competent and maintainable.

Mr. Kesaria, in reply, submitted that the proviso requires "good cause" to be shown D before extending time, and that in this case no cause at all had been shown by the appellant when Mapigano, J. minuted to admit the appeal. He argued therefore that Mr. Mchora cannot rely on this minute and the second proviso to s.361 C.P.A. I agree with E Mr. Kesaria. In addition, the proviso applies to periods of limitations. It does not apply to admitting of an appeal where no notice at all has been given. In other words it does not say that the High Court may admit an appeal notwithstanding that no notice of intention to appeal may have been given. It refers to periods of limitation and this means F that a party, if he shows good cause, may have his appeal admitted notwithstanding that he may have lodged his notice of intention to appeal after the prescribed period of limitation has elapsed. The proviso does not save the situation for the appellant in this case therefore. No notice at all was given and the appeal on this ground too is incompetent. G

Finally, on failure to attach the judgment or order appealed from: Mr. Mchora submitted that he attached the copies of the order when lodging the appeal and he expected that it would be for the court to serve the order, attached to the Petition of appeal, on Mr. H Kesaria. Mr. Kesaria complained that his copy of the petition of appeal was not accompanied by a copy of the judgment or order appealed against and he contended that this infringed s.362 C.P.A. I note in the court case - file that there are several copies of the drawn orders of the District Court against which the appeal was brought. I give I therefore the benefit of doubts to Mr. Mchora and hold that he supplied sufficient copies of the order to the Court but the Court may have overlooked to serve same on the respondents' Counsel when A serving copies of petitions of appeal on them. The objection based on failure to comply with s.362 C.P.A. is therefor overruled.

On the grounds that the appellant, having only been a witness and not a party to the case, has no right of appeal, and that no notice of intention to appeal was given by the B appellant in this case as required by law, this appeal is incompetent. The two objections by counsel for the respondent are upheld and the appeal is hereby dismissed for incompetence. C

Maina, J.: Masudi Amlima is appealing against conviction for house breaking and D stealing, for which he was sentenced to imprisonment of five years in the first count and three years in the second count, to be served concurrently.
The complainant, Daileta Kalamula, told the trial court that on 4 May l987 she locked her house and she went to work in her shamba. When she returned to the house at about E four o'clock in the afternoon, she found the house had been broken into and her properties, mainly clothes, valued at shs.6895/=, were stolen. Her neighbour, PW3 Fabian told her that he had seen the appellant coming out of the house at about eight F o'clock in the morning carrying a bag. Fabian said in his evidence that he did not suspect anything because the appellant who is also a neighbour, was a frequent visitor to the house. The appellant was arrested after the matter was reported to Police. In his evidence Detective Cpl. Burhani said that the appellant admitted the theft. He sent the G Police and the complainant to various places where he claimed that the stolen properties were hidden. The appellant also named two persons to whom he had given the clothes. One of these persons denied any knowledge about the clothes. The other was not traced. None of the stolen properties were recovered. H
The appellant denied the theft, saying that he had been at a place called Sululu when the offence was commited. He said he was with his girl friend whose name he did not remember. He has said in the memorandum of appeal that the trial magistrate erred in convicting him on the testimony of a single witness. Section 143 of the Evidence Act provides that: I

Subject to the provisions of any other written law, no particular number of witnesses shall in A any case be required for the proof of any fact.

In this case the complainant's neighbour saw the appellant coming out of the B complainant's house. That was a single witness. The trial magistrate believed him. There is no law requiring that more than one person should be required to prove the fact that the appellant was seen coming out of the house. The evidence of PW3 Fabian was sufficient to prove that fact. The appellant was seen carrying a bundle, and the C complainant later found out that her house was broken into, and her properties were stolen. From Fabian's evidence, the irresistible conclusion is that the appellant broke into the house and stole those properties. That was sufficient evidence to base a conviction.
The appellant's defence of alibi was rejected, and properly so. He did not give the notice D required under section 194(4) of the Criminal Procedure Act that he intended to raise the defence of alibi. Furthermore, he did not call the person he claimed was with him at the time of the commission of the offence. The trial court, therefore, properly rejected the appellant's alibi. E
From the evidence on record, the learned trial magistrate considered what Fabian said and believed that evidence. Fabian knew the appellant and it was in broad day light. There is also the evidence that the appellant admitted the theft, and even showed the prosecution witnesses where the properties were hidden, although they could not be F recovered. The evidence, on the whole, leaves no reasonable doubt on the appellant's guilt. The sentence is the minimum under the law.

Appellant was charged and convicted of the offence of defilement of a girl under A fourteen years c/s 136(1) of the Penal Code. He was sentenced to thirteen years imprisonment. The appellant is appealing against both conviction and sentence, arguing, inter alia, that the trial magistrate exceeded his sentencing jurisdiction. It was also B argued for the appellant that the evidence of a child of tender years was wrongly received and ought to have been discarded completely.

Held: (i) It is clear from section 127(2) of the Evidence Act, 1967 that if a child of tender years does not understand the nature of an oath, her evidence may nevertheless C be received without oath or affirmation (a) if she is possessed of sufficient intelligence and (b) she understands the duty of speaking the truth. The trial magistrate must record that such investigation has been made to establish whether the two conditions [(a) and (b)] have been satisfied;

(ii) trial magistrate made a finding that the witness did not understand the nature D of an oath and her evidence could not be received on oath or affirmation. But the trial magistrate did not proceed to establish the second condition;

Mukandara for the Republic.

Mushi, J.: The appellant in this case is Dhahiri Ally. He was charged and convicted for G the offence of defilement of a girl under fourteen years c/s 136(1) of the Penal Code. He was sentenced to thirteen (13) years imprisonment. The trial magistrate exceeded his jurisdiction in imposing the above sentence of thirteen years. The appellant is appealing against both conviction and sentence. H

In cases of defilement and rape, the victim, in the majority of cases, is the principal witness for the prosecution and in most cases the conviction is based on her evidence. Children under fourteen years, are, in our evidence, regarded as being of tender years as per section 127(5) of the Evidence Act. The Evidence Act provides for special I provisions for the reception of the evidence of children of tender years. Mr. Akaro, learned Counsel for the appellant submitted that the evidence of PW2 - Asha who was the child of tender years, was wrongly A received and it should be discarded completely. The learned counsel stated, and I quote:

PW2 - was a child of tender years. Her evidence could only be received if she knew the nature B of oath or was possessed of sufficient intelligence and understands the nature of speaking the truth as required under section 127 of Evidence Act. The trial court must make a record of such findings. In the proceedings with regard to the evidence of PW2 - Asha Ndungo nowhere is recorded that the witness was possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of C her evidence.

Section 127 (2) of Evidence Act is relevant to this point and for ease of reference the subsections reads: D 127:(2) Where in any criminal cause or matter any child of tender years called as a witness does not, in the opinion of the court, understand the nature of an oath, his evidence may be E received, though not given upon oath or affirmation, if in the opinion of the court, to be recorded in the proceedings, he is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of his evidence, and understands the duty of speaking the truth.

The provision is clear that if the child of tender years does not understand the nature of F an oath, her evidence may nevertheless be received without oath or affirmation if two conditions are satisfied.

These conditions are that:

She is possessed of sufficient intelligence and She understands the duty of speaking the G truth.

The trial magistrate must record in the proceedings that such investigation has been made to establish whether the two conditions exist and must make a specific finding of these H facts. In the proceedings in this case with regard to PW2 - the record reads as follows:

PW2 - Asha d/o Ndungo, Tanzania, Female, 11 years, Islam. I

Court:Witness is under the age of 14 years. In terms of section 127 of the Evidence Act, she is cross-examined and she says: A Witness: I am schooling at Masiwani Primary School. I am in standard three. I have affirmed to friends several times in our conversations. I do not know why I have been B doing that. I know the difference between a liar and one who speaks truth, but not exactly. Court: To the humble opinion of this Court, the witness does not know the nature of oath and she will proceed giving evidence unaffirmed. C

MUSHI J

Here the trial magistrate clearly made a finding to the effect that PW2 - Asha did not understand the nature of an oath therefore he evidence could not be received on oath or affirmation. But the learned trial magistrate did not proceed to find out, before receiving D her evidence, whether she was possessed of sufficient intelligence and she understood the duty of speaking the truth. The Court of Appeal, considering similar provision in the case of Nyasani s/o Bichana v R. [1958] E.A. 90 stressed this point when it said at page 191: E

It is clearly the duty of the Court under that section to ascertain, first, whether a child tendered as a witness understands the nature of oath, and, if the finding on this question is in the negative, to satisfy itself that the child is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence and understands the duty of speaking the truth. This is a condition F precedent to the proper reception of unsworn evidence from a child, and it should appear upon the face of the record that there has been a due compliance with the section. G

Again in the case of Kibangeny v R. [1959] E.A. at page 94 the same Court repeated the necessity of ascertaining whether the child is possessed of sufficient intelligence and understands the duty of speaking the truth when it was stated: H

... as we have seen, that where such a child does not in the opinion of the Court understand the nature of an oath his evidence may be received unsworn if the court is satisfied of his intelligence and that he understands the duty of speaking the truth. This necessarily implies I that before the child can be allowed to give evidence upon oath (or affirmation) the court must satisfy itself that he does understand the nature of an oath. Such was the A interpretation placed on the passage by this court in the recent case of Nyasani s/o Bichana v R. (2), [l958] E.A. 190 (C.A.), where after reciting the section we held:

(A) It is clearly the duty of the court under that section to ascertain, first, whether a child B tendered as a witness understands the nature of an oath, and, if the findings on this question is in the negative, to satisfy itself that the child "is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify C the reception of the evidence and understands the duty of speaking the truth.

Such an investigation need not be a length one but it must be done and the court record D must bear witness to it. In this case the proceedings do not show that the learned trial magistrate complied with the mandatory provision of the law with the result that the evidence of PW2 - Asha was wrongly admitted and acted upon. The evidence of this witness was crucial to the prosecution case because apart from touching on other E aspects of the evidence, it was the only evidence regarding the identification of the appellant as the person who defiled her. There was, of course, evidence which proved that PW2 was defiled but as who did it is where the evidence of PW2 was important. Under these circumstances, the appeal is allowed, and it is ordered that there should be a retrial of the appellant. F

The appellant was at the material time of the incident the holder of two firearm licences B for two rifles. On 2/3/l980 the appellant left the two guns with someone who was not authorised to possess any firearm (Mr. Sanga). The guns were found with the latter person. Consequently both the appellant and Mr. Sanga were charged with the C appropriate offences under the Firearms and Ammunition Ordinance, Cap. 223 and sentenced. In terms of s. 31(4) of the Ordinance, upon conviction of the appellant, the firearm was liable to be forfeited or to have the licences suspended for a specified period. This was not ordered by the trial court. The record remained so silent for seven D years until the same court was moved by the Director of Public Prosecution. The trial magistrate proceeded to make the forfeiture order without notice to the prosecutor who was to represent the Republic, and the appellant whose guns were to be forfeited. This appeal is based on the grounds that such order was made seven years after sentence had E been passed and without notice or hearing to the appellant, or any application for the order from the prosecution.

Held: (i) Procedure adopted by the learned trial magistrate was grossly irregular, in that F by denying the parties the opportunity to be heard, he offended one of the cornerstones of justice, i.e. principles of natural justice;

(ii) the order for forfeiture ought ordinarily to have been made soon after passing the sentence;

(iii) the trial magistrate does not become functus officio and thereby incompetent G to make the order later by merely omitting to make any other order such as forfeiture or compensation as required by law;

(iv) where the trial court inadvertently omits to make an order that order could H be properly considered and made at a later stage after sentencing, provided that all parties concerned have been given notice and an opportunity to be heard;

(v) in a situation such as the foregoing, the trial court need not wait until the prosecution applies for such an order.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwaikasu, J.: Before the lower court, (Kapaya, RM Esq.), the appellant, Michael Z. Kabogo, was convicted upon his own plea of guilty to the charge of failing to take proper precaution for safe custody of a firearm c/s 13(1) and 31(1) of the Arms and B Ammunition Ordinance Cap.223.

He was then sentenced to a fine of shs.2000/= or six months of imprisonment in default thereof. He paid the fine. No order of forfeiture of the firearms, which were two rifle guns or suspension of the licences in respect of such guns was made by the lower court C when such sentence was passed, which was on 18/8/80.

It was then seven years later and upon being urged to do so by the DPP, vide his letter Ref. No. J/C.ll0/l8/l49 of 9th September l987, that on 21/l0/87, and without notice to and in the absence of the appellant, the owner of the two guns, the lower court made the D forfeiture order.

That then is the subject of this appeal on the grounds that such orders was made seven years after sentence had been passed and without notice to the appellant, or any application for that order from the prosecution, and that the lower court erred in law in E making such forfeiture order without hearing the appellant first.

The appellant was represented by Mr. Mwakasungula, learned counsel and Mr. Naali learned State Attorney appeared for the Republic.

Arguing the appeal Mr Mwakasungula, learned counsel for the appellant contended F inter alia, that when the lower court sentenced the appellant on 18/8/80, without making the forfeiture order, it was thereby functus officio, as regards the order of forfeiture. It had therefore no power to make any order subsequently. Thus the order made on 21/l0/87 to forfeit the appellant's two guns seven years later was wrong in three G respects: first, there was no applicant for such order as no prosecutor appeared when the order was so made; secondly, the appellant himself was not present nor informed of such application if any. It was therefore prayed that the order should be quashed with an H order restoring the two guns to the appellant.

Mr. Naali, learned State Attorney declined to support the order of forfeiture so made upon finding that there was a clear irregularity on the face of the record. For the order having been made seven years after the sentence was passed was itself irregular. Then I considering the fact of the case the appellant ought to have at least been called upon to show cause as to why the order should not be so made. He A therefore also conceded that the appeal should be allowed.

I allowed the appeal when it came up for hearing on 17/3/89, reserving my judgment which I now proceed to give.

Briefly the facts show that the appellant was at the material time of the incident the holder B of two firearms licences for two rifle guns.

Then on 2/3/80 the appellant left the two guns with Erasto Asheri Sanga who was not authorized to possess any firearm. On the same day at about l0 p.m., such firearms were C found with the said Sanga but it is not clear under what circumstances the guns were so found, and whether the same were found at the said Sanga's home or not.

Consequently both the said Sanga and the appellant got charged with the appropriate D offences under the Firearms and Ammunition Order, Cap. 223 and sentenced accordingly.

In terms of s.31(4) of the Firearms and Ammunition Ord. upon conviction of the appellant for contravening the provisions of the Ordinance, the firearm was liable to be E forfeited or to have the licences suspended for a specific period. That was not, however, so ordered by the learned trial magistrate and the record remained thus silent for a period of seven years until the lower court was subsequently moved by the D.P.P. as stated above. Then the learned trial magistrate proceeded - making the forfeiture order F without notice both to the prosecutor who was to represent the Republic and the appellant who had to be heard why such guns should not be so forfeited. Hence this appeal. In the first place I totally agree with both learned counsel that the procedure adopted by the learned trial magistrate was grossly irregular, in that by denying the G parties the opportunity to be heard, particularly the appellant, he thereby offended one of the cornerstones of justice, which is one of the principal arms of the principle of natural justice that no one should be condemned guilty or have his property confiscated, without being given the opportunity to be heard.

The other aspect of the appeal is that the order was irregular for being made several H years after the date when the sentence was passed, and that by then the trial magistrate was functus officio.

Admittedly, the order for forfeiture ought ordinarily to have been made soon after passing the sentence. That is why in terms of s. 351(4) of the C.P.A., when a forfeiture I order is so made in which an appeal lies, it shall not, except when the property is livestock or is subject to speedy and natural decay, be carried out until the period for presenting the A appeal has passed or when such appeal is entered until the disposal of such appeal.

But one interesting question is whether where the trial magistrate has passed a sentence but omits to make any other order such as forfeiture or compensation as required under the law, he thereby becomes functus officio in respect of such forfeiture or B compensation order, and therefore incompetent to make it subsequently.

In my judgment I would not subscribe to such view. For it appears clear to me that the authorities so far available on the point do relate to the powers of the trial magistrate or C judge to the stage of sentencing, or some other order of the court finally determining the trial of the case such as an order for no case to answer. Yet an order for forfeiture that is to be made after the conviction and sentence of an accused person, is a separate exercise of judicial discretion over and above the sentence passed. It is in effect a D separate legal duty imposed upon the trial court that has to be exercised after the conviction and sentence have been passed. Though hinging upon an accused's conviction, it is a separate exercise of judicial powers over and above the power of sentencing. E

Thus where it has inadvertently been omitted, it could, in my view, be properly considered and made at a later stage after sentencing, provided that all parties concerned - the Republic and the accused person have been given notice and an opportunity to be heard. F

In such situation the court need not wait until the prosecution applies for such an order. It would, in fact, be its duty to move for such an order. For in terms of s.31(4) of the Firearms and Ammunition Ordinance as amended by Act No. 50 of 1964, it is there provided, thus: G

(4) All arms or ammunition and any equipment or tools used in the manufacture and assembling of such arms or ammunition, and any vessel, in respect of which an offence is committed is liable to be forfeited to Government. H

That then imposes a duty upon the trial court to consider making the order for forfeiture of the firearms or ammunition in respect of which an offence has been committed in contravention of the provisions of the Ordinance. There is, in fact, another duty imposed I on the trial court to the like effect as provided for under sub-s.(3) of the same section which provides thus: A

(3) Any person so convicted who holds a licence or permit under this Ordinance shall be further liable to forfeiture of his licence or permit or to suspension thereof for such period as the court thinks fit. B

In this regard comparison can be made with the provision under s.7(2) of the Minimum Sentence Act 1972, relating to the making of orders for compensation. It is there provided thus: C

(2) An order under this section may be made at anytime after the sentence has been passed, and where it has not been made immediately after the sentence has been passed, the court which passed the sentence or any court having revisional jurisdiction over it, may make such D order at any subsequent time on the application of the owner of the property or on its own notice.

However, in considering whether orders of forfeiture provided for above should be E made, it is imperative, as a matter of justice that opportunity to be heard should be given to all the parties concerned.
In this case this court was inclined to make an order for the suspension of appellant's licences in respect of the two guns.
However, upon considering the circumstances of the offence of which the appellant was F convicted, and that seven years had elapsed during which the appellant was deprived of the use of his firearms as they remained in the custody of the police, it was found that such period was already more than enough in denying the appellant the use of such G firearms as a lesson for him to exercise greater care of the same.
Accordingly the appeal had to be allowed setting aside the lower court's order for forfeiture with an order that the two guns should be restored to the appellant.
H Appeal allowed.

Kyando, J.: The Director of Public Prosecutions, represented by Mr. Komeye, learned H State Attorney, applies for leave to appeal out of time against the decision of the District Court of Ilala at Kisutu in Criminal Case No. 153 of 1987 of that Court. The application is supported by the Affidavit of Simbakalia, State Attorney. The respondent, A.M. Swai, is in these proceedings represented by Mr. Kisusi, learned Advocate, who I opposes the application.
1989 TLR p38
KYANDO J
In the course of hearing the application it came to light that besides the intended appeal A having been lodged out of time no notice of intention to appeal was given to the District Court in the first place. Mr. Komeye on this point submitted as follows before me:

... no formal notice of intention to appeal was given to the District Court. What Mr. Chaburuma, B the prosecutor in the District Court, did was to give an informal notice to the trial magistrate. The magistrate, however, did not record it. Mr. Chaburuma followed up with a letter, within the time for giving notice, asking for copies of proceedings and judgment for appeal purposes. C The letter is dated l6/7/88. It was sent two weeks after judgment was delivered. This letter confirms that the prosecutor gave an informal notice of intention to appeal. He did not, of course, know that the magistrate had not recorded the oral notice of intention to appeal. So D notice was given, though the magistrate did not record it.

In reply, Mr. Kisusi submitted that in the first place the record of the case does not show that any notice was given. Secondly, Mr. Kisusi contended, the one who is said to have E given an oral notice, Mr. Chaburuma, was not present in the court below on the date of judgment. A public prosecutor was present and was the one who received the judgment in the District Court. Mr.Kisusi further submitted: F

Even then, Mr. Chaburuma should have sworn an affidavit to show that he had given notice. Your Lordship cannot rely on my learned friend's statement from the Bar. G

As the application was for extension of time to appeal and it is discovered that even the notice of intention to appeal was not given, I pray that the application be dismissed.

Mr. Komeye in reply reiterated his prayer that the letter of Mr. Chaburuma of l6/7/87 be H taken as notice of intention to appeal.

I have given careful consideration to the case as a whole and the arguments of learned counsel. It is clear that there is no indication at all that any oral notice of intention to appeal was given by the Republic. The one who received the judgment of the court I below is indicated to be Insp. Mubwego, a public prosecutor. It is unlikely therefore that Chaburuma could have given the notice as contended by Mr. Komeye as he was not in court on the date of judgment in the District Court. A

Concerning the prayer that I treat the letter of 16/7/88 as a notice of intention to appeal, it is my view that a letter applying for copies of proceedings and judgment for appeal purposes is different from a notice of intention to appeal as envisaged by the law. The B letter applying for proceedings and judgment for appeal purposes presupposes that a notice has already been given. As no notice of intention to appeal was given in this case in the first place, the application for leave to appeal out of time cannot be entertained. It is dismissed in accordance with the prayer by Mr. Kisusi. C

Kazimoto, J.: The appellant and the respondent were husband and wife and were F married according to Islamic law. Matrimonial problems having developed the marriage was dissolved by the Urban Primary Court. There was conclusive evidence that the marriage had been irreparably broken down. The respondent has been proved to have been living an adulterous life. The decision to dissolve the marriage was not challenged G by the parties.

During the subsistence of their marriage the appellant and the respondent had acquired four houses, a coconut farm planted with 250 trees and a stock of animals. The trial H court found on the evidence that these properties were jointly acquired through their joint efforts and awarded two houses to the appellant and two houses to the respondent, the farm and stock were awarded to the appellant while the respondent was awarded shs.10,000/= as her share for the farm and animals. The respondent appealed to the I District Court which partly allowed the appeal. Although the District Court found that there were four houses which were acquired during their marriage it was satisfied that one house was given as a gift to the respondent's mother A and should not have been a subject of division. With respect I agree with the decision of the District Court. Where during the subsistence of a marriage either spouse or both spouses give a matrimonial property to another person as a gift, it is presumed that such property has been permanently given to that other person unless there is evidence to the B contrary. In this case there is no such contrary evidence. The house given to the respondent's mother was not a matrimonial property and should not have been subjected to these proceedings. The District Court was right to exclude it from the list of matrimonial property. Consequently the District Court awarded two houses to the C appellant together with the coconut farm including stock and gave the respondent one house and ordered the appellant to compensate the respondent shs.30,000/= as her lawful share of the farm and stock. The appellant has been aggrieved by this decision and hence this appeal. D

The appellant has submitted three grounds of appeal which are:

l. That, the first appellate court was wrong in awarding shs.30,000/= more to the respondent as additional amount that would drive her to an equal share of jointly E acquired matrimonial assets, when there was sufficient evidence to prove that the respondent had arbitrarily shared out to herself some of the assets such as a motor cycle, a pedal cycle etc ... even before the breakdown of a marriage. F

2. Having regard to the case cited, the first appellate magistrate ought to have found that property that respondent had encroached upon before the dissolution of marriage was enough and ought not to add more property on top of it. G

3. That the first appellate magistrate did not have in mind the fact that where a jointly owned property is to be developed, he/she who in the first instance shows unfaithfulness towards it is always to lose. H

This appeal has raised two important legal issues. The first to be considered and decided is whether the respondent's alleged misconduct was in law a relevant factor for the purpose of distribution of matrimonial assets and secondly whether a spouse I who mismanages matrimonial property is entitled to equality of division of assets upon A dissolution of marriage.

Both courts below have dealt at length with the custom of the parties. The trial court however did not say whether a moslem woman who is divorced due to misconduct is B entitled, under Muslim custom, to anything. On appeal the learned senior resident magistrate stated as follows:

What share should a divorced Sunni Moslem woman or man get from the matrimonial assets? I could not lay a hand to a legal text - book on Islamic law either. I shall therefore C assume that the two gentlemen assessors, themselves being moslem, took note of this issue when they gave their views. The assessors seem to agree that a woman is entitled to something from her former husband if she did not misbehave in the management of the matrimonial assets otherwise she forfeits that right. D

In a nutshell the learned magistrate stated that a moslem woman who misbehaves in the management of matrimonial assets is not entitled to such assets. E

In a recently decided case of Salim Wendo v Tausi Wendo and Alfred Kasililwa High Court (DSM Registry) Matrimonial Civil Case No. 8 of l987 (unreported) Mnzavas, J.K. had this to say:

The parties are Muslims and as such they belong to customs of the Muslim Community. F Under Islamic custom a divorced wife is entitled to a parting gift (Kithumn) from her former husband.

The facts in that case are the same as in this case. The woman was, as the respondent in G this appeal, of loose and immoral character. In that case she was given money to start poultry business and she failed to manage it. The Hon. J.K. is a Moslem himself and I venture to think that when he said a divorced Muslim woman who misconducts herself is H entitled to a parting gift he is speaking about the customs to which he belongs and has personal knowledge of such custom. It is therefore clear to me that under section 114(2)(a) of the Law of Marriage Act l97l a divorced Muslim woman is entitled to, and does not forfeit her share in, the division of matrimonial assets. I

KAZIMOTO J

I now come to the first issue in this appeal. In this case there was evidence that the A respondent has been guilty of gross misconduct. She not only committed acts of adultery with the sewing machine operator as shown by the exhibits tendered in court, which in themselves would not, in my view have affected her share in the division of property, but also she mismanaged the tailoring business which she had completely wrecked down. B Besides that she built a house clandestinely. Thirdly while the appellant was away in Dar es Salaam the respondent disposed by sale three mattresses, a bed, a refrigerator, three sewing machines, a motor cycle and so on. There was therefore cogent evidence to prove that the respondent had grossly misconducted herself in the management of the C matrimonial property. I would hold accordingly that a misconduct by a spouse touching to the management of matrimonial property is a relevant factor when the issue of division of matrimonial property upon dissolution of marriage arises. D

The second issue - whether a spouse who mismanages matrimonial property is entitled to equal division of such assets - must be resolved in the negative. The District Court had rightly awarded the respondent one house out of three. The appellant did not seem to challenge this in his memorandum of appeal. He contended that the award of E shs.30,000/= by the District Court to the respondent would have put the respondent to equal division of the matrimonial assets. While it was proved that the respondent had sold the items stated above it was not stated how much money was realised. Nor was the value of the three houses stated by either party to this court. The value of shamba F was also not stated. The learned magistrate has stated that the current market value of goat was shs.l,000/=. And with 30 goats became up to shs.30,000/=. In the absence of value of the matrimonial property I cannot say that the award of shs.30,000/= to the G respondent would make her get more than or equal to half of the matrimonial property. Having considered the principles which the senior resident magistrate had used in arriving at shs.30,000/= I cannot say that he erred in this. Taking into account all factors, including the nefarious conduct of the respondent, I am satisfied that the award of H shs.30,000/= would not put the respondent on equal footing as regards division of matrimonial property. The decision of the District Court is upheld. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

I Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Practice and Procedure - Bias - Determination of bias on the part of the trial magistrate.

-Headnote

This was a complaint lodged against the trial magistrate for being biased against one, C Raphael Binali. In the original case three people were charged with shop breaking and stealing c/s 296(1) and 265 of the Penal Code. When PW1 was testifying in court he mentioned one, Raphael Binali as being one of the persons from whom the stolen items D were recovered. At this juncture the trial magistrate ordered that the charge be amended and the said Raphael Binali be joined as one of the accused persons. It is this step that led to the complaint.

Held: (i) Section 234(1) of the CPA only empowers the court to amend the charge E where, on the face of it, it appears to be defective either in substance or in form but does not empower the court to order that a person be included in a charge sheet;

(ii) by ordering the inclusion of Raphael Binali in the charge sheet the magistrate F had usurped the powers of the prosecution and for that reason he was biased.

Case Information

Order accordingly.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kazimoto, J.: A complaint has been lodged that the learned Principal District G Magistrate has assumed the powers of a prosecutor while at the same time adjudicating upon a case. It was alleged that the trial magistrate would not do any justice to the accused concerned as he appeared to be biased. On perusing the record I find the complaint valid. The circumstances of the allegation are as follows. H

The shop of the complainant was broken into and a number of items were stolen. In the course of investigation the three accused persons were charged with shop breaking and stealing c/s 296(l) and 265 of the Penal Code. A number of stolen items were recovered from various people, including one Raphael Binali whom the prosecution had called as a I witness against the original accused persons. In the course of his evidence the complainant, PW1 said this: A

In the presence of the OCS at the police station he, the first accused, said clothes were at Mangaka with Raphael Binali. I went with Mr. Yahaya to Mangaka with the OCS Mangaka Police B Post and we recovered 7 pairs vitenge and kanga 9 pairs from his shop. I identified this. Raphael said he bought them from Aman from Namatumbusi village then he changed his story to say he had got them from 1st accused. C

At this juncture the trial magistrate interjected:

Court to P.P

Raphael Binali is outside the court house. D

Order: I strongly form an impression that Raphael Binali is a suspect. In that the charge is defective hence the prosecution's failure to include him as an accused person for reasons unknown.

He be brought into the dock and join his colleagues as an accused No. 4. E

The defective charge is amended accordingly by inclusion of the said Raphael Binali as the 4th accused as well as his personal particulars. This is done in terms of section 234(1) F Criminal Procedure Act.

Sgd. C.H. Msamati

Principal District Magistrate G

Section 234 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Act 1985 states:

(1)Where at any stage of a trial, it appears to the court that the charge is defective, either in H substance or form, the court may make such order for alteration of the charge either by way of amendment of the charge or by substitution or addition of a new charge as the court thinks necessary to meet circumstances of the case unless, having regard to the merits of the case, the required amendments cannot be made without injustice and all amendments made under I the provisions of this sub-section shall be made upon such terms as to the court shall seem just (emphasis added). A

In my view subsection 1 of section 234 CPA only empowers the court to amend the charge where, on the face of it, it appears to be defective either in substances or in form. B It does not empower a court of law to order that a person be included in a charge sheet. The fact that a would be suspect, in the mind of the magistrate, has been omitted cannot make the charge defective either in form or substance. The powers of the prosecution and the courts are clearly defined and understood. Clearly the learned C Principal District Magistrate had usurped the powers of the prosecution when he ordered Raphael Binali to be charged and abdicated his role as a magistrate. He had become the prosecutor and the magistrate at the same time against Raphael Binali. He has grossly erred in this.

The effect is that he has ceased to be an impartial adjudicator in the whole case. He is D biased. It has been said:

It is not merely of some importance, but it is of fundamental importance that justice should not only be done but should manifestly and undoubted be seen to be done. E

Nothing is to be done which creates even a suspicion that there has been an improper interference with the course of justice. F

This was the message of Lord Howart, the Lord Chief Justice of England in Rex v Sussex Justice exparte MacCarthy [1924]1K. B at page 259.

Dealing with the issue of bias Lord Denning M.R. has stated in Metropolitan Properties Co. (F.G.C.) Ltd. v Lannon [l969] 1 Q B 577 at page 599, with which G passage I respectfully agree, that:

In considering whether there was a real likelihood of bias, the court does not look at the mind of the justice himself or at the mind of the Chairman of the tribunal or whoever it may be, who H sits in a judicial capacity. It does not look to see if there was a real likelihood that he would or did, in fact, favour one side at the expense of the other. The court looks at the impression which would be given to other people. I

KAZIMOTO J

Even if he was as impartial as could be, nevertheless if right minded persons would think that, A in the circumstances, there was a real likelihood of bias on his part, then he should not sit. And if he does sit, his decision cannot stand. Nevertheless, there must appear to be a real likelihood of bias. Surmise or conjecture is not enough. There must be circumstance from B which a reasonable man would think it likely or probable that the justice or Chairman, as the case may be, would or did favour one side unfairly at the expense of the other. The court will not inquire whether he did, in fact, favour one side unfairly. Suffice it that reasonable people might think that he did. The reason is plain enough. Justice must be rooted in confidence, and C confidence is destroyed when right - minded people go away thinking: The judge was biased.

What did those people who attended the court on that day think when the magistrate D ordered Raphael Binali to be included in the charge sheet. They must have thought that Raphael Binali would not have full justice done to him, that he was going to be convicted because the learned principal district magistrate had already formed a "strong impression" against him. I have no doubt that the trial magistrate had already made up his E mind when he included Raphael Binali as an accused person. I find that the trial magistrate was biased.

And because the learned principal district magistrate has usurped the powers of the F prosecution and abdicated his role as a magistrate and this becoming a prosecutor and a magistrate and for the bias he had shown against Raphael Binali I now quash the whole proceedings and set aside the order to charge Raphael Binali, who incidentally the DPP had entered a nolle prosequi in his favour, and order that the case be tried afresh G against the original accused as per charge sheet. It is directed that the trial de novo should be conducted by another magistrate of competent jurisdiction.

H Order accordingly.

This application was made under 0.37 rr. 1 and 4 and section 68 of the Civil Procedure Code. The applicant wanted an order for temporary injunction issued and the E respondent be restrained from floating 800 shares. Counsel for the applicant submitted ex-parte injunctions could only be granted in special circumstances and that there were no such circumstances in this case. The learned counsel submitted that the floating of 800 F shares was illegal as it contravened section 51(2) of the Companies Ordinance. He added that the floating of 800 shares was invalid as it was designed to oppress the applicant. Counsel for the respondent attacked the applicant's application. Though he cited no authority in support of his contention, he said that it was bad at law. The learned counsel added that the application which sought the discharge to the injunction was G time-barred. As regards the floating of 800 shares, Counsel for the respondent submitted that it was done in good faith.

[zJDz]Judgment

Mapigano, J.: Let me state the background first. The plaint says that the applicant's employment as manager of the respondent company was terminated by a resolution E passed by an extraordinary meeting of the directors held on 23/l2/86, on account of gross mismanagement; that the applicant has not abided by that resolution and continues to manage the business of the company to the detriment of the company; and that unless he is restrained from managing the business of the company the company will continue to F suffer considerable loss. Wherefore the respondent prays that the termination be affirmed and the applicant be restrained, permanently, from managing the business of the company. It is to be noted that the applicant is not only a shareholder in the company but a director as well. G

On 22/1/87 the respondent made an ex-parte chamber application, seeking an order for temporary injunction against the applicant to restrain him from entering the business premises of the company pending the determination of the suit. On the same day the learned J.K. granted the application, observing that the applicant's employment had H already been terminated.

The applicant filed his W.S.D. on 23/6/87. It is evident from that pleading and the materials now before this court that the applicant was aware, at the time of filing the W.S.D., of the existence of the ex-parte injunction and that the injunction was granted I when he had already resigned from the management of the company.

MAPIGANO J

On 3/l2/87 a resolution was passed by the directors of the company to issue 800 shares. A It was also resolved that "each shareholder be offered to purchase the said shares according to individual shareholding".

The present application was brought on 3/2/88. The application is made under 0.37 rr. l B and 4 and section 68 of the C.P.C. The applicant wants the order for temporary injunction dissolved and the respondent be restrained from floating the 800 shares. The reasons are stated in his affidavit, particularly in paras 3, 4 and 5. He has deposed that the management of the company is now in the hands of Messrs Thakrar and Lakhani and C alleged that the company's business does not receive proper attention because one "is in London since the last six weeks" and the other "is always engaged in his other business." He has contended that the proposed issue and allotment of 800 shares is invalid because the meeting that passed the resolution in that respect was not called in D accordance with the rules of the Articles of Association and because the said issue was meant to oppress him.

The respondent has opposed the application and Mr. Thakrar who is one of the directors has sworn and filed a counter-affidavit. In paras 3, 7, 8 and 9 he repeats the E charge of gross-mismanagement against the applicant and illustrates the same. In para 4 he alleges that the applicant has made some efforts to close down the business of the company, which allegation is not disputed. In para 10 he asserts that the issue of 800 shares is not ill-motivated but is an action the directors believe to be in the best interests F of the company. And in para 12 he points out that the company is now managed by one Mr. Edwini and not Messrs Thakrar and Lakhani.

Mr. Kesaria, learned counsel for the applicant, has submitted in regard to the ex-parte temporary injunction, that such injunctions are granted only in exceptional circumstances. G He has cited the case of Janmohamed v Madhani (l953) 20 EACA 8. In his opinion there was no such circumstance in this case. With regard to the floating of the 800 shares, Mr. Kesaria has put forward two propositions. The first proposition is that it was illegal because it contravened the provision of section 51 (2) of the Companies H Ordinance. The second is that it is invalid because it was designed to oppress the applicant, and the learned advocate has cited Clemens v Clemens Bros. Ltd. [l976] 2 All E.R. 268 in support.

Mr. Ismail who represents the respondent has attached the application for being duplex I in that the applicant has united two distinct applications in one application, namely an application for setting aside the temporary injunction and an application for injunction order to stop the A floating of the 800 shares. Mr. Ismail has submitted that the application is bad at law on that score, but has not backed up his contention with any authority. Next, learned counsel has submitted that the application, to the extent that it seeks the discharge of the injunction order is time barred. He has relied on the provision of Article 21, Part B III, First Schedule to the Law of Limitation Act, 1971. And as regards the application, to the extent that it relates to the floating of the 800 new shares, he has pointed out that the shares have already been floated and remarked that the applicant should have been advised to apply for a revocation of the issue rather than an injunction. In any case, he C contended, the creation and the floating of those shares was done in good faith and that neither the company nor the applicant has been hereby prejudiced. Lastly Mr. Ismail has informed this court that the applicant has already instituted legal proceedings D in a bid to have the company liquidated.

In reply Mr. Kesaria has contended that the joinder of two applications is not prohibited by law. In his opinion it is inferable from 0.2 r. 3(1) of the C.P.C. that such joinder is, on the contrary, countenanced. Against the proposition that the application E for discharge of the temporary injunction order is time barred, Mr. Kesaria has replied, if I understand him correctly, that the provisions of the Law of Limitation Act were not applicable to the matter.

I now proceed to decide the various points that have been raised in this application. In my opinion the combination of the two applications is not bad at law. I know of no law F that forbids such a course. Courts of law abhor multiplicity of proceedings. Courts of law encourage the opposite.

I am also disposed to share Mr. Kesaria's view that the Law of Limitation Act, 1971, does not apply to an application for discharge of temporary injunction. For very G obvious reason. An order for temporary injunction is essentially an interim order. But it may last several years and circumstances may change and the order may become unduly harsh or unnecessary or unworkable. It would thus be improper and unwise to make such an order the subject of any law of limitation. H

On the question whether the learned J.K. was justified to dispense with service of notice to the applicant, I have to refer to the wording of 0.37 r. 3 of the C.P.C. It seems to me that the requirement of giving notice to the opposite party is mandatory. I The exception is where it appears that the delay involved in the issue of notice will defeat the object of the injunction. As mentioned above, the reason A given by the J.K. for dispensing with the issue notice was that the services of the applicant had been terminated. However, the materials deposed by Mr. Thakrar in his affidavit of 20/1/87, which depositions stand uncontroverted to-date, I think that the application satisfied the requirement of 0.37 r.3 of the C.P.C. and I am satisfied that B the injunction was not irregular.

I turn to the issue of the 800 new shares. The first point to consider and decide is whether the resolution of the directors in that respect was ill-motivated i.e. whether it C was framed and passed in order to divest the applicant of his rights as a shareholder holding 300 shares in the respondent company. In Clemens v Clemens Bros. Ltd. to which Mr. Kesaria has made reference and which is about the leading case on the point, certain resolutions to increase the capital and issue of new shares in such a way D as to deprive the plaintiff, a shareholder, of her "negative control" in the defendant company were set aside as having been passed by an inequitable use of the defendant's voting rights. These were the facts of the case: The plaintiff owned 45% of the issued share capital of the defendant company and her aunt hold the remaining 55%. Although E at one time both the plaintiff and her aunt had been directors of the company, at the relevant time the plaintiff was no longer a director. The aunt and her fellow directors proposed to increase the company's share capital by the creation and issue of further shares. The proposal was to issue them as 200 to the directors and as to the remaining F 850 to a trust for long-serving employees. Resolutions to give effect to these proposals were passed at an extraordinary general meeting notwithstanding the plaintiff's proxy voting against them. The plaintiff was concerned that the proposed share issue would dilute her own holding and voting power from 45% to marginal less G than 25%, in other words, she would lose "negative control". She commenced proceedings against the company and the aunt seeking a declaration that the resolutions were oppressive, and an order setting them aside. Forster, J. acceded and made the order asked for having formed the view that the resolutions were "specifically and H carefully designed to ensure not only that the plaintiff can never get control of the company but deprive her of what has been called her negative control" i.e. the power to prevent the passage of any special resolutions of which she disapproved.

It seems to me that the analogy between Clemens case and the present case fails on a I vital point. Here it has not been established that the alteration of capital by the creation of the new shares and floating the same was meant to delete the applicant's holding and voting power. As we A have seen, all the shareholders including the applicant were offered to purchase the new shares on a pro-rata basis and in the circumstances I fail to understand how the applicant can be heard to complain that the resolution was oppressive to him. I accept the version of the respondent that the increase of the capital and the issue of the new B shares was solely done in order to strengthen the company's capital base and that it suited the requirements of the company.

With regard to the allegation that the company is being mismanaged, I am not satisfied C that is actually the case. In any case I do not think that the discharging of the injunction order would be the solution of the problem.
Finally, I come to the question whether the passing of the resolution contravened the provision of the Companies Ordinance. It is not in dispute that the resolution was D passed by the directors at their meeting held on 3/l2/87. By section 51(2) of the Companies Ordinance the power to increase capital must be exercised by the company by passing a resolution in a general meeting and directors have no power to exercise it. The resolution was, therefore, illegal and should not be allowed to stand. I set it aside. No order for costs. E
Order accordingly.

[zJDz]Judgment
Ruhumbika, J.: The appellant, Stephen Ngonyani, was convicted by the District Court of Dodoma of the offence of stealing by a person employed in the public service c/s 265 of the Penal Code. E
He was charged with having stolen various sums of money, in four different counts. The money was supposed to be paid out as salaries to junior policemen serving in the Field Force Unit of the Police Force at Dodoma, where the appellant was attached and F served as a Police Inspector and Officer Commanding Field Force Unit.
The appellant was found guilty and convicted on all the four counts and sentenced to concurrent sentences under the Minimum Sentences Act, l972 as follows:

lst Count: Three years of imprisonment. G
2nd Count: Three years of imprisonment.
3rd Count: Three years of imprisonment.
4th Count: Five years of imprisonment.

The appeal is against the convictions and sentences. Mr. Rweyongeza, learned H advocate based at Dodoma, argued the appeal. Mr. Benne, learned Stated Attorney, represented the respondent Republic.
There were seven grounds of appeal in the petition of appeal, but Mr. Rweyongeza I dropped ground number two and argued on only six such grounds.
1989 TLR p55
RUHUMBIKA J
The first ground of appeal in the petition of appeal is couched as follows: A

That the learned Resident Magistrate being the second trial magistrate erred in law in denying the appellant the right to resummon witnesses who had testified before his predecessor. B

It was here argued for the appellant that failure by the successive trial magistrate to inform the appellant of his right to have the witnesses who had given evidence before the first trial magistrate re-summoned and re-heard was prejudicial and caused injustice C to the appellant. Therefore, such an omission was in abrogation of the provisions of section 214(2)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act, l985 (Act No. 9 of l985), which provisions created a statutory duty on the successive magistrate to inform the appellant of his right under that section. D
According to the record of the lower court, the appellant was first tried by Mr. Mammba, District Magistrate, as from the 13th May, 1986, up to the 6th August, l986. He recorded the evidence of ten witnesses for the prosecution. E
On the 29th August, l986, Mr. Shangwa, Resident Magistrate, took over the trial. There were no reasons on record for this move but most likely Mr. Mammba, District Magistrate, might have moved on transfer. The successive magistrate did not comply with the provisions of section 214(2)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act, l985. That is to F say, he did not inform the appellant that he had the right to have the witnesses who had testified before Mr. Mammba re-summoned and re-heard. The second trial magistrate continued with the hearing and recorded the evidence of PW11, PW12 and PW13. Thereafter, the prosecution case was closed. The appellant was put on his G defence, and made a sworn statement. He called no witnesses. The successive magistrate acted on the evidence of ten witnesses for the prosecution who gave evidence before Mr. Mammba, and acted on the evidence of only three witnesses who testified before him. Most of the material evidence had been given by the witnesses H who gave evidence before the first trial magistrate. The second trial magistrate did not have the opportunity to observe their demeanor and evaluate their credibility.

Section 214 of the Criminal Procedure Act, l985, is as follows:

214(1) Where any magistrate, after having heard and recorded the whole or any part of the I evidence in any trial or conducted in whole or part any committal proceedings is for any reason unable to complete A the trial or the committal proceedings or he is unable to complete the trial or committal proceedings within a reasonable time, another magistrate who has and who exercises jurisdiction may take over and continue with the trial or committal proceedings as the case may be and the magistrate so taking over may act on the evidence or proceeding recorded by B his predecessor and, may in the case of a trial re-summon the witnesses and recommence the trial or the committal proceedings or otherwise subject to subsection (2). C

(2)Whenever the provision of subsection (1) applies -

(a) in any trial the accused may, when such other magistrate commences his D proceedings, demand that the witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and re-heard and shall be informed of such right by the other magistrate when he commences his proceedings.

(b) the High Court may, whether there be an appeal or not, set aside any conviction E passed on evidence not wholly recorded by the magistrate before the conviction was heard, if it is of the opinion that the accused has been materially prejudiced thereby F and may order a new trial. (emphasis added).

There are several decisions relating to non-compliance with the provisions of (the G former) section 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code. See the provisions of the new section 214 of the Criminal Procedure Act, l985. But the court was referred to only one of those decisions. That is the decision in the case of R. v Maulidi s/o Mkuba [l974] LRT no. 44. The trial of the accused in that case was conducted by two H different magistrates. The second magistrate did not comply with the provisions of section l96(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. The case went before the High Court on revision. The court held, inter alia, that:

(1) Where a magistrate proceeds with a trial under the provisions of s. 196 Criminal I Procedure Code, Cap. 20 from where his predecessor had left off, it is his duty to bring to the notice of the A accused person of his right to have the witnesses or any of them who have already testified before the predecessor magistrate in the same case, re-summoned and re-heard as is required by the proviso to s.196(1) Criminal Procedure Code. B

(2) ...

(3) The requirement is essential as it is intended to give an opportunity to the trial magistrate to hear the evidence himself in order to make a sound assessment of the evidence as a whole. C

(4) ...

(5) ...

(6) The High Court on appeal is not bound to uphold such conviction if it is of the opinion that the accused has been materially prejudiced. D

(7) ...

(8) ...

In that case, the conviction was quashed and the sentence set aside. E

Mr. Benne, learned State Attorney, conceded that the second trial magistrate did not comply with the provisions of section 214(2)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act, 1985. However, he argued that the omission did not prejudice the case for the appellant because ten witnesses were heard by the first trial magistrate and three were heard by the second trial magistrate. F

With respect to the learned State Attorney, it is difficult to see the logic of his argument. Because it is reasonable to say that the second trial magistrate was at a greater disadvantage as he was faced with a situation whereby he had to evaluate and act on G the evidence of ten witnesses from whom he did not record that evidence and had no opportunity of assessing the demeanor and credibility of such witnesses. Of the two magistrates, it is obvious that the first trial magistrate was better placed in the understanding of the case as against the second trial magistrate. H

It is obvious that the appellant was materially prejudiced by the manner his trial was conducted by the two magistrates.

The words used in section 214(2)(a) of the Criminal Procedure Act, l985, are: "Shall be informed of such right". That is to say, the second magistrate who took over the trial of the appellant should have informed him of his right to have the witnesses who had I given evidence before Mr. Mammba or any of them re-summoned and re-heard. In the A earlier case of Remenisele s/o Elisawe v R. [l967] H.C.D. n 75, while stressing the essence of complying with the provisions of section l96 of the Criminal Procedure code, the court had this to say:

(1) The discretion given to a magistrate by the Criminal Procedure Code section l96 B should be exercised with great care, for the primary purpose of the hearing is to permit the court to observe the demeanor and evaluate the credibility of all the witnesses. In the present case the charges were grave and the accused vigorously C contested the allegations of the prosecution's witnesses.

(2) Criminal Procedure Code section l96(a) permits the accused to demand that witnesses heard by the first magistrate be re-summoned and re-heard and provides D that the accused "shall be informed of such right by the second magistrate ..." There is no record that the accused was so informed.

In that case, the accused was convicted of forgery and theft. The magistrate who E commenced the case heard the evidence of the prosecution and after a recess of three months, heard some of the defence witnesses. After another recess a second magistrate replaced the first who had been transferred to another district. Exercising his discretion under the Criminal Procedure Code section l96, the second magistrate elected not to F re-commence the trial but to hear only the remaining portion of the case. A new trial was ordered in that case. This earlier case was cited with approval by this court in the subsequent case of Maulidi (supra).

The appellant was convicted on the 17th June, l987, and his case, as observed earlier, G involves four counts relating to various sums of money he is alleged to have stolen in the course of his employment.

In the interests of justice, the course open to the court is to order a hearing de novo.

Accordingly, under the provisions of section 366(1)(a)(i) of the Criminal Procedure H Act, 1985, the proceedings in the lower court are quashed and the decision therein set aside and it is hereby ordered that the appellant be re-tried in the District Court of Dodoma but before another magistrate with competent jurisdiction to try the case. [zJDz]Judgment

J.H. Msoffe, PRM - E.J.: On 4/11/88, the appellant appeared before the District D Court of Hai at Hai, on a charge of unlawful possession of Government trophy c/s 67 (1) (2) (a) of the Wildlife Conservation Act No. 12/74. When the charge was read over and explained to him as is the usual practice, he is recorded to have pleaded guilty E in the words "it is true". A plea of guilty was accordingly entered by the trial court, and facts read out and admitted by the appellant. He was accordingly convicted. It was not until 9/11/88 however, that a sentence of 2 (two) years imprisonment was pronounced against him. He is now appealing against conviction and sentence, alleging among other things that his plea was equivocal. F

The facts before the trial court were briefly as follows: That on 9/9/88 One Kulasauko Faraji Kimaro was found selling eland meat at Kwasadala village. On being asked by a G Game officer, one Siyael K. Mosha, as to how he came to possess the same, he mentioned the appellant as the person who brought him the meat in question for sale purposes. The Game officer went to report with the police at Bomang'ombe Police Post. Accordingly he was accompanied back by some policemen. Before the police, H the said Kulasauko Faraji Kimaro, who then had only 5 kilogrames, worth 350/= of the meat remaining, maintained his earlier story that the meat had been brought to him by the appellant. The appellant was, on the basis of this information, arrested and charged in court.

Mr. Alute, learned State Attorney who appeared for the Respondent Republic before I me, has urged that the conviction is not sustainable on the ground that the appellant's plea was equivocal.

JH MSOFFE PRM - EJ

I agree. It is clear now that according to the proceedings when the charge was read A over to the appellant he pleaded "It is true". This court had always held that an accused's plea should as near as possible be recorded as the accused has said. A plea of "It is true" without amplifications is certainly unsatisfactory as it may not amount to an B admission of every constituent element of the charge(s). Indeed this was the same point emphasized by this court in Bujukuno v R. [1971] H.C.D. no. 446 where Makame, J. (as he then was) said, and I quoted:

In my view the appellant did not admit every constituent of the charge and the record does not C show that he pleaded guilty to every element of it unequivocally.

Mr. Alute, learned State Attorney raised another issue for consideration by this court, D and this is whether the appellant's plea was remedied by the appellant's admission of the facts after they had been read over to him by the prosecution. I was referred to the case of Sebastian Gilberty v R. [1970] H.C.D. no. 281 where Mnzavas, Ag. J. (as he then was) had this to say, and I quote: E

The appellant having admitted the facts the final question to be decided is whether admission of the facts remedies the equivocal plea of guilty. In Paul Mathias v R. [1970] HCD 209. Georges, C.J. when dealing with the question whether the accused plea was F unequivocal said: Quite often an equivocal plea ... can be remedied by a full statement of all the facts needed to constitute the offence, and an admission by the accused person that these facts are true.

In our case, the appellant admitted that the facts were correct as narrated by the G prosecution but the issue for consideration is whether the facts as narrated disclosed an offence against the appellant. With respect to the trial magistrate, the facts did not disclose that the appellant was found in unlawful possession of government trophy i.e. H the eland meat. On the contrary the facts disclosed that another person by the name of Kulasauko Faraji Kimaro was the person found in possession of the eland meat which he was selling. The appellant, therefore, should not have been convicted of unlawful possession of government trophy, notwithstanding his admission of the facts. I

JH MSOFFE PRM - EJ

Mr. Alute, learned State Attorney again invited this court to look at the sentence A imposed on the appellant, and consider if it is in conformity with usual practice of the courts in sentencing. A look at the record will show that the trial magistrate was minded to fine the appellant if he was able to show an ability to pay a fine. As it turned out to B be, the appellant said he was not in a position to pay any fine; and was accordingly sentenced to the 2 year term of imprisonment. To appreciate the point being advanced here in full the relevant trial court's proceedings of 9/11/88 are reproduced hereunder thus: C

SENTENCE F

Accused is a first offender and the meat was possessed due to poaching, the act which is ceased in Tanzania. The offence therefore is at an increase in Tanzania, hence different sentence is looked for. I inquired into, as to the accused's means to pay the fine and I am G satisfied he cannot pay the fine, the thing I cannot do because he cannot pay the fine. However, I find no special circumstances to be lenient to an accused. Accused to serve a term of imprisonment for two years. H

Sgd: Musa,

District Magistrate,

9/11/88

With respect the learned trial District Magistrate adopted a rather unusual approach. I Having convicted the appellant, surely there was nothing wrong in investigating into his financial capability to pay a fine. But it is A clear here that the magistrates, who does not say in so many words, was prepared to impose a fine if the appellant had the capability to raise money for one.

1989 TLR p63

JH MSOFFE PRM - EJ

If that was so, then he should not have changed the nature of the sentence by aggravating it simply because the appellant could not pay a fine. I appreciate that s. B 67(1)(2)(a) of the Wildlife Conservation Act No. 12/74 under which the charge and conviction is based, is couched in mandatory terms, and the magistrate felt he had to impose the maximum term of imprisonment now that the appellant had said he could not pay a fine. But, with respect, if the learned trial magistrate had carefully researched, C he would have actually found that it was wrong in the first place to charge and convict the appellant under s. 67(1)(2)(a) of the said Act. It is clear from the evidence that the trophy the subject of the charge is "eland meat". Eland is a trophy which falls under part II of the First Schedule to the Wildlife Conservation Act No. 12/74. The D proper charge therefore ought to have been preferred under s. 67(1)(2)(c)(i) of the same Act. If the trial court had invoked this latter provisions, no doubt, it would have been left with the duty to impose a sentence less than the 2 year term of imprisonment. E Better still, if the trial court was minded to find special mitigating factors i.e. small value of the meat (350/=), the appellant being a first offender etc. it could have invoked the provisions of s. 79 (1)(b) of the same Act, and commit him to the High Court for sentencing with recommendation for leniency and the grounds thereto; and no wonder F the appellant could have ended up at the end of the day with a far more lighter sentence.

In the final result the appellant's conviction cannot be upheld. It is accordingly quashed and sentence set aside. The appellant is to be released from prison forthwith unless he G is otherwise lawfully held therein.

The twelve respondents resisted the two applications in B person.
As regrds the second application it appears this court has no jurisdiction to entertain it. The application for the stay of execution is reportedly made under rule 9(2)(b) of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules GN. No. 102/1979. But the said rule says that the C application has to be made to the 'court' which is defined to mean the Tanzania Court of Appeal. I am therefore unable to entertain this application.
As regards the first application counsel for the applicant Mr. Magongo made gallant efforts in arguing the case of his client but I am afraid, no point of law has been made D out fit for consideration by the Tanzania Court of Appeal. The main plank of his argument is that the practice of attachment of cattle before judgment and placing them in the custody of the plaintiffs in civil suits in Tarime District, is a practice which E amounts to a recognised customary law of the Kuria tribe. Both parties in this case are Kurias. So he argues that the District Court and the High Court should not have disturbed the decision of the Primary Court which placed the cattle in the custody of the plaintiff before judgment. He contended that the District Court and High Court F should have appreciated that this matter was governed by the principles of Kuria customary law to the exclusion of principles derived from English law to wit rule 17 of the Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules and cited in support the case of Maagwi Kimito v Gibeno Warema: C.A.T. (MZA) Civil Appeal No. 20 of 1984 G (unreported) as well as s.9 of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance Cap 453. The District Court had held that the practice of attachment of cattle before judgment and placing them in the custody of the plaintiff was contrary to the express provisions of rule 17 of the Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules. That rule holds that if there is any attachment before judgment, then the attached cattle are to be placed in H the custody of the court and the plaintiff bears the costs of their upkeep. The High Court nodded in agreement, that, that was the correct statement of the law.
From the foregoing it is clear that Mr. Magongo has missed the point. First there was I no question of any Kuria customary law which was involved here. What we had was simply a practice by the Primary Courts in A Tarime District attaching cattle before judgment and placing them in the custody of the plaintiff. That was done by the courts and not by any order of a specific tribal community in Tarime District. To say that there was any customary law involved in the process is not only vulgar and specious but just a figment of the fertile imagination of B Mr. Magongo. The Primary Courts by their regular practice cannot make a customary law for the people in the area as it has been urged upon me.

In any case even if there was a Kuria customary law which allows attachment of cattle C before judgment and placing them in the custody of plaintiff, I would still hold that, that customary law in question is no longer good law as it has been superseded by statutory law vis. rule 17 of the Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules. It is clearly stated under the proviso to s. 9(3) of the Judicature and Application of Laws Ordinance Cap 453 that: D

> Provided that the court shall not apply any rule or practice of customary law which is ... superseded by any Ordinance or Act of Tanzania. E

And, the case of Maagwi Kimito (supra) which has been cited by counsel is very clear on this point as on page 8 of the judgment it stated:

> The customary laws of this country, now have the same status in our courts as any law, F subject only to the Constitution and any statutory law that may provide to the contrary.

I have underlined for emphasis the crucial words in the above quotation. Now in the G case at hand, it is crystal clear that there is a contrary statutory law which has superceded any Kuria customary law on the matter and that statutory law is rule 17 of the Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules. Moreover it is naive on the part of Mr. Magongo to argue that rule 17 of the Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules is derived H from some English Rule as those Civil Procedure Rules were passed by our Parliament or its agents. That sufficiently disposes of the main argument of Mr. Magongo.

There was another point that the applicant had not been heard before the District Court made the Revision Order in upsetting the judgment of the Primary Court. Mr. Magongo I said that was contrary to s. 22(3) of the Magistrate's Court Act No. 2 of 1984. I concede that, that was an irregularity, but it is curable under s. 37(2) of the Magistrate's Court A Act as it did not occasion any failure of justice. This is because even if the applicant was heard, the District Court was duty bound to follow the express provisions of rule 17 of the Primary Courts Civil Procedure Rules which are loud and clear.

In the event I find that the first application raised no point of law fit for consideration by B the Tanzania Court of Appeal and therefore leave to appeal is refused. The two applications are dismissed with costs.

C Order accordingly.

Land Law - Acquisition - When completed. E

The appellant, the National Bank of Commerce, was allocated a parcel of land owned earlier by one Suleiman Nassor, deceased. The respondent, eldest son of the deceased claimed lawful ownership of the parcel of land and sued the appellant in the Resident Magistrate's Court for trespass. F
The appellant was allocated the land after the President, through the Minister for Lands, had given notice, which was published in the Official Gazette, of his intention to acquire this particular piece of land for public purposes. G
Both the trial and the first appellate courts were satisfied that formalities for the registration of document containing Notice of Acquisition were not completed and so there was no acquisition in law, and therefore the land still belonged to the former owner. Both courts found that the tort of trespass was established. H
The Court of Appeal of Tanzania construed the relevant provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, No. 47 of l967 and amendment thereof contained in Act No. 25 of l968.

Appeal allowed. B
[zJDz]Judgment
Nyalali, C.J., Makame and Omar, JJ.A.: This is a second appeal. The appellant, the National Bank of Commerce was allocated a parcel of land owned earlier by one Suleiman Nassor, deceased. The suit is prosecuted by his eldest son Ali Suleiman Nassor who is the respondent in this appeal. C
The suit was filed in the RM's Court by the present respondent alleging trespass into his land situated on Plot No. 75 Block '5' # Liberty Street, Mwanza Municipality, by the agents of the National Bank of Commerce after the President through the Minister of D Lands had given notice, which was published in the Official Gazette, of his intention to acquire this particular piece of land for public purposes. This piece of land was later allocated to the National Bank of Commerce, in Mwanza.

In order to determine whether there was trespass, certain laws like the Land E Registration Ordinance Cap. 334 were taken into account and ultimately it was decided that formalities for the registration of document containing Notice of Acquisition were not completed and so there was no acquisition legally effected and so the land still belonged to the former owner. This view was also held by the High Court F and the tort of trespass was established. We on our part hold a totally different view upon the proper construction of the Acquisition Act No. 47 of l967 and the amendment thereof contained in Act 25 of l968.

Section 5 of the Act empowers the Minister responsible for lands to authorize any G person to enter land with a view to examining it after the President had formed an intention to acquire it. In certain cases, three days notice to the occupier is deemed by the Act to be enough to enable such person to enter the enclosed space attached to a dwelling house.

When the intention to acquire has been formed then sections 6,7,8 and 25 apply. H Under section 7(1), the Minister may direct the person upon whom the notice is required to be served under sec. 6 (i.e. the respondent in this case) to yield up possession of such land after the expiration of the period specified in the notice, which period shall not be less than six weeks from the date of the publication in I the Official Gazette. In this particular case the period was from 5/8/83 to 16/9/83. A Section 7(2) then states that:

> At the expiration of the period specified in subsection (4), the President and all persons authorized by him shall be entitled to enter into and take possession of such land accordingly. B

The period mentioned above expired on 16/9/83. There is evidence that notice was served on the respondent and he signed at the bottom of the copy of notice (see Exhibit D.2). Section 25 of the Act states: C

> Where a notice to acquire any land under this Act has been published in accordance with the provisions of section 8, the persons entitled to transfer the land shall, within six weeks of the publication of the notice in the Gazette, transfer and convey the same to the President D notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any written law or in any order made or issued by the court otherwise than under the provisions of this Act. E

So section 7 directs respondent by notice to yield possession after expiry of 6 weeks while section 25 requires the persons concerned i.e. the respondent to transfer and convey to the President the land so gazetted notwithstanding (and this is the new addition of the Amendment Act 25/68) anything contrary contained in any written law F or any court order made otherwise than under the provisions of this Act i.e. Acquisition Act.

About the formalities of registration which the two courts below were convinced they should be observed before the acquisition could be accepted as complete, the G Acquisition Act does not consider the requirements of Registration Ordinance Cap. 334 as the prerequisite to the completion of the Act of acquisition. The fact of acquisition will already have been established by the expiry of the period indicated in the notice published in the Gazette.

Section 19(1) envisages a situation where acquisition is prevented by an objection H raised within six weeks of the publication of the acquisition notice under section 6 and 7 of the Act followed by proceedings in court to determine a dispute concerning the intended acquisition. In such case, the President will not be required to complete the I acquisition unless he has entered into possession of the land in dispute or he fails "within one month of the judgment of the court to intimate to the court that he does not intend to proceed with the A acquisition".

NYALALI CJ, MAKAME JJA AND OMAR JJA

This suit should not have been filed at all because there was no trespass whatsoever. After the expiry of 6 weeks from the date of publication of the notice the respondent B should already have filed his objections but he did not do so and only 18 days later on 4/l0/83 he wrote to the Minister for Lands Housing and Urban Development (Ex. P.4) saying that during the publication of the notice of intention to acquire his land he was out of Tanzania and in August, l983 when he returned he was engaged in processing C matters of administration of his late father who died in July l983. He wanted to be allowed to build apartments and renting them to guests visiting Mwanza and this the letter said was for the benefit of society or public purposes. This letter was not answered and we are not surprised. The land was then given to National Bank of Commerce to build structures to house their bank. D

The main contention is the concurrent finding of the two courts that acquisition was not completed because registration had not been done before the plot was allocated to N.B.C.

We would emphasize that the acquisition of land under the Land Acquisition Act does E not depend upon registration formalities under the Land Registration Ordinance. The acquisition is deemed complete when the 6 weeks have expired after publication of the notice to acquire and no objection raised.

Section 29(b) provides that: F

> Where a certificate of Title is registered under section 28, such transfer disposition or certificate of title shall (there is deletion here of the whole reference to the requirements of G Cap. 334 Land Registration Ordinance by the Amendment Act 25/68) confer upon the President the land comprised or referred to in such transfer, disposition or certificate of title free from all adverse or competing rights, title, trusts, claims, and demands whatever etc. etc. H

In the circumstances we are of the view that section 29(b) deals only with the effect of a certificate of title granted and registered in default of the previous owner of land executing a deed of transfer under section 25 of the Act. It does not deal with the acquisition of land. We say that even if there is no registration of the land so acquired I the acquisition is complete. Registration merely endorses or certifies the fact of acquisition and ensures that the record of it is kept at its A proper place in the land registry and that it reflects the vesting of such land in the President.

In the result we allow the appeal and confirm the transfer of this land to the National Bank of Commerce as being proper. We find no trespass to have been committed whatsoever for the reasons given above. B

Appeal allowed.

Marando, for the Appellant

[zJDz]Judgment

Bahati, J.: This is an appeal from the decision of the Housing Appeals Tribunal. I will give the background facts in this case. They are that the appellant filed an application in the Regional Housing Tribunal of Dar es Salaam against the Registrar of Buildings. I Although the proceedings in the Regional Housing Tribunal are shown as application No. 179/86, what was filed to commence these proceedings is A titled "Plaint". This plaint seeks, among other things, an injunction against the Registrar of Buildings restraining him from evicting the plaintiff from the premises which she was occupying as family in the tenant who was abroad temporarily.

1989 TLR p73

'This suit of application was never heard because it was dismissed for non appearance B of the plaintiff. The dismissal was done on a date which had been fixed for the mention of the case. After this dismissal, the appellant/plaintiff was evicted from the suit premises about a week afterwards. No application was filed to the tribunal to set aside the dismissal of the application until after the prescribed period within which to do so C had passed. Then an application for extension of time to make the application for setting aside the dismissal order was filed. It was eventually heard and the tribunal decided that no sufficient cause had been shown for the delay to apply for the setting D aside the dismissal order. An appeal was then lodged in the Housing Appeals Tribunal. The memorandum of appeal filed in the Housing Appeals Tribunal had only two grounds of appeal which were actually saying more or less the same thing, namely that the Regional Housing Tribunal erred in holding as it did. E

When the matter was set for hearing in the Housing Appeals Tribunal, Mr. Kesaria learned counsel who represented the appellant, not only argued the appeal according to the memorandum of appeal, but also went into the merits of the application for the setting aside of the dismissal order which was to be argued in the Regional Housing F Tribunal in case the Regional Housing Tribunal would have given extension of time to apply for the setting aside of the dismissal. He went further and argued now the dismissal order was wrong because it was made on a mention date. When Mr. Kesaria took this line of argument Mr. Marando, learned counsel, who was appearing for the G Registrar of Buildings objected to it but he was overruled. And so Mr. Kesaria was given the liberty to point out in detail every point he wanted dealt with even though it was not in his memorandum of appeal. Naturally, in reply Mr. Marando went through all the points raised by Mr. Kesaria and submitted counter arguments. H During the hearing of this appeal in the Housing Appeals Tribunal, one of the lay members left for medical treatment after Mr. Kesaria's submission. He only came back after Mr. Marando had submitted but before Mr. Kesaria had made a reply. Each I member was asked his opinion. The member who had been absent for some time during the proceedings advised that the appeal should be allowed while A the second member advised that it should be dismissed. The learned chairman of the Housing Appeals Tribunal then wrote his judgment in which he allowed the appeal. The learned chairman went further in his judgment. He held that the dismissal of the B appellant's application was wrong and that each and every application pending in the Regional Housing Tribunal was being upheld and set aside. The learned chairman also ordered reinstatement into the suit premises of the appellant namely Kaniz Kermali.

The Registrar of Buildings through his advocate, Mr. Marando, learned counsel has C now appealed to this court setting out 11 grounds of appeal. I will now deal with these grounds. I will commence with the point concerning the jurisdiction of this court to hear this appeal. Mr. Kesaria, learned counsel, in his reply to the appeal, argued that under D section 43 of the Rent Restriction Act No. 17 of l984, the decision or determination by the Housing Appeals Tribunal shall be final and conclusive, and that an appeal from any other decision or determination of the Housing Appeals Tribunal shall lie to the High Court upon any point of law or mixed facts and law. Mr. Kesaria argued that no E other decision had been shown by the appellant which was to be appealed against. Mr. Marando, in reply, argued that there could not be envisaged a situation in which there would be another decision apart from that which the tribunal has made, and that what was meant by section 43 (proviso) was that the appeal could only lie to the High F Court when there is a point of law or mixed facts and law involved in the decision of the Tribunal. With respect to Mr. Kesaria, I agree with Mr. Marando's argument. As it is, the proviso to section 43 of the Rent Restriction Act does not appear to make much sense. I am of the view that the word "other" appearing in the proviso is misplaced and G it should have been omitted because otherwise the proviso is meaningless. I understand the section together with its proviso to mean that decisions of the tribunal are final and conclusive except where points of law or mixed law and facts are involved. I therefore hold that this court has jurisdiction to hear this appeal because it is H quite evident that points of law are involved here.

The second point I wish to deal with concerns the powers of the Housing Appeals Tribunal. Mr. Kesaria submitted that the Housing Appeals Tribunal had all the powers of the Regional Housing Tribunals. With respect to Mr. Kesaria, I do not hold that I view. I am of the view that section 12 of the Rent Restriction Act does not apply to the Housing Appeals Tribunal. Section 12(1) reads in part: A

BAHATI J

> ... The Tribunal shall, in relation to every rent restriction area within its jurisdiction have powers to do all things ... B

My reading of section 12(1) is that it refers to Regional Housing Tribunals hence the phraseology "in relation to every rent restriction area within its jurisdiction ..." Hence section 12 talks of the powers of a Regional Housing Tribunal and not those of the Housing Appeals Tribunal. C

The 3rd point I wish to consider is whether the Housing Appeals Tribunal erred in dealing with matters which were not in the memorandum of appeal. Mr. Kesaria submitted that the Housing Appeals Tribunal was entitled to deal with such matters because it had the powers of the Regional Housing Tribunal and it had inherent D jurisdiction. Mr. Marando in reply argued that the Housing Appeals Tribunal did not have the right to deal with anything outside the appeal because section 42 of the Rent Restriction Act allowed it to deal only with matters appealed against. E

I have already held that the Housing Appeals Tribunal does not have the powers of the Regional Housing Tribunal. As for section 42 of the Act, it provides quite clearly that the Housing Appeals Tribunal shall have power to: F

> (a) (not relevant)
>
> (b) (not relevant)
> (c) confirm or reverse, amend or vary in any manner the decision or order appealed against. G

(I have underlined the above words for emphasis). Now, nowhere in the Act is it provided that the Housing Appeals Tribunal has got powers of revision over the proceedings in the Regional Housing Tribunal. Since the Housing Appeals Tribunal was dealing with and deciding on matters not appealed against it was acting ultra vires. Indeed even section 6 of the Act which established the Housing Appeals Tribunal H states that the Housing Appeals Tribunal shall have jurisdiction to admit, consider and determine appeals originating from Regional Housing Tribunal. No powers of revision are mentioned there or anywhere else in the Act.

In their opinion, one of the members of the Appeals Tribunal stated inter alia, in I directing himself to the appeal, that the Appeals

BAHATI J

Tribunal was not there to consider the merits of the dismissal order, thereby imply that A he was there to consider only the grounds of appeal. The second member also gave his opinion concerning the points under appeal only.

I therefore hold that the decision of the Housing Appeals Tribunal on matters not B appealed against cannot stand as the same are ultra vires. I will quash them and set them aside.

I will now deal with one more point before I consider the final point concerning extension of time to file an application to set aside the dismissal. It is in respect of the C absence of one of the members during part of the hearing of the appeal in the Appeals Tribunal and the subsequent re-appearance culminating with giving his opinion which was considered by the learned Chairman of the Appeals Tribunal. The relevant provisions are contained in section 11 of the Act. I wish to point out, however, that the positioning of section 11 just after the earlier section which talks of the Constitution of D the Regional Housing Tribunal does not make section 11 very clear. This is because one may take it to apply to Regional Housing Tribunals only, coming as it does immediately after a section talking about Regional Housing Tribunals. Be that as it may, E I am of the view that section 11 deals with proceedings of Regional Housing Tribunals as well as those of Housing Appeals Tribunal.

Now, section 11 provides in subsection (3) the procedure to be followed in case one or both the members who were present at the commencement of the proceedings is or are absent. It is that the Chairman and the remaining member (if any) may continue and F conclude the proceedings notwithstanding such absence. In our appeal, one member was absent for only part of the proceedings and then he came back and gave his views. This was an appeal and not a trial in which witnesses were involved. I am of the opinion G that this was irregular because it certainly went against what is provided in subsection (3) of section 11 of the Act. The question to be considered now is whether what took place in the appeal in the Housing Appeals Tribunal occasioned a failure of justice since the Chairman took the opinion of this member into consideration and agreed with it. H Mr. Kesaria argued that the absent member was made aware of what arguments had been made in his absence. It is my considered opinion that no failure of justice was occasioned because there was no witness involved and that all that which was required was to know the arguments of both sides. Although the record does not state that the I argument of Mr. Marando was made known to the absent member, there is material on the record to show that the absent member at least read what that argument was, because even time to read the A cases referred to by counsel was given to both members. It was held in Arobogast Fundi v Masudi Zaid [l980] TLR 125, that the test of determining whether a change of assessors during trial is curable irregularity or not is whether such change occasions a failure of justice to a party in fact. I, with respect agree with this holding of the High B Court. The above case appears to be authority even in the case at hand where there was an irregularity.

Finally I come to the point of appeal which should have been determined by the Appeals Tribunal to the exclusion of all the other matters which were dealt with. It is whether an extension of time should have been granted. I have heard both arguments C for and against the granting the extension to apply for setting aside the dismissal, and I am of the opinion that the Regional Housing Tribunal should have granted the extension. This is because it was not entirely the fault of the respondent (Mrs. Kermali) that no D application for setting aside the dismissal was made in time. In view of the orders I intend to make at the end of this appeal, I do not wish to say more about the reasons which in my view were sufficient to warrant an extension of time to apply.

Before I conclude this appeal, I wish to state that I was rather perturbed by Mr. E Kesaria's remarks in his submission before the Appeals Tribunal which were in the following words "from the very beginning of the proceedings it is evident that the presiding chairman was biased in favour of the respondent." With due respect to Mr. Kesaria, I can see no evidence to such a serious allegation against a Magistrate. Just F because a Magistrate makes a decision which is against one's interest does not mean he is biased against him. The Court of Appeal of Tanzania had an occasion to remark that allegations of bias against a Judge or Magistrate should not be made lightly and the G Court of Appeal warned against such conduct in future. I cannot do better than sound again the words of the Court of Appeal to those who are minded to make accusations of bias against Judges or Magistrates without providing any evidence to back up their allegations.

Having said that, I will now conclude the appeal. This appeal fails in so far as it seeks H to have the decision of the Appeals Tribunal set aside in respect of its holding that the Regional Housing Tribunal should have granted the respondent an extension of time to apply for the setting aside the dismissal order. The appeal succeeds in respect of the other orders made by the Appeals Tribunal which were not matters under appeal in the I Appeals Tribunal. The same are set aside. For the avoidance of doubt it is hereby stated that the matter is remitted A back to the Regional Housing Tribunal for that Tribunal to deal with the application to be made by the respondent for setting aside the dismissal order against her main application for an injunction. This may appear a circuitous course but I am afraid there B is no short cut here. Each party is to bear his costs since each side has only been partially successful.

Order accordingly.

El-Maamry, for the Appellant. D

[zJDz]Judgment

Nyalali, C.J., Omar, J.A. and Mfalila, Ag. J.A.: The respondent, namely, Mohamed Raza Hassan Dharamsi, successfully sued the appellant, that is, Sasa Enterprises (Z) Limited in the High Court of Zanzibar at Zanzibar for breach of contract E for repayment of a loan of shs. one million plus interest at Bank rate and with costs. The appellant was aggrieved by the decision of the High Court, hence this appeal to this court. Mr. El-Maamry, learned advocate, appeared for the appellant before us; whereas the respondent who was duly served with notice to appear, did not enter F appearance in his appeal. The hearing of this appeal proceeded in his absence under the provisions of Rule 105(2) of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules, l979.

From the proceedings at the trial and in this court, the following primary facts are not in dispute between the parties: The appellant is a company incorporated in l985 under the G Companies Decree of Zanzibar, initially it had four shareholders, that is, Ghalib Abdalla, Halfani Shuweli, Ali Sultani Issa and his wife, that is, Eshe. On the 15th February, 1986, the number of shareholders was reduced by resolution from four to two; and in that way the remaining shareholders remained Ali Sultani Issa, who H appeared as the only defence witness at the trial, and Ghalib Abdalla who did not testify at the trial. Sometime thereafter in l986 the respondent Mohamed Raza Hussein Dharamsi gave the said Ghalib Abdalla a loan of shs. one million repayable in a month's time. The said sum of money has not been repaid as agreed in spite of repeated I demand for payment. It is also not in dispute that at the material time the said Ghalib Abdalla was A one of the Directors of the appellant company.

From the proceedings in this court and the court below the following matters are in dispute between the parties: It is the respondent's case apparent from the record that the loan of shillings one million was made to the appellant acting through its Director, B that is Ghalib Abdalla. On the other hand, it is the appellant company's case also from the record and the submissions made by Mr. El-Maamry, learned advocate for the appellant, that the said loan of shillings one million was a personal loan made to Ghalib Abdalla, and not in any way a loan made to the appellant company. C

The main issue which arises for consideration and decision in this appeal before us is a narrow one, and it is whether the loan of shillings one million was a personal loan made to Ghalib Abdalla or was a loan made to the appellant company. The learned trial judge considered this point and found as a fact that the loan was not a personal loan D but was a loan made to the company through one of its Directors, that is the said Ghalib Abdalla.

In his memorandum of appeal, elaborated upon by Mr. El-Maamry, the appellant complains against this finding of the court below and submits in effect that the evidence E adduced at the trial was not sufficient to prove on a balance of probabilities that the loan was made to the appellant company.

The evidence adduced by the respondent, who was the complainant at the trial, was given by the respondent himself (P.W.1) and by one Ibrahim Hassan (P.W.2) who is F the brother of P.W.1, and by one Ahmed Sultan Mugheiry (P.W.3). This latter witness is also known as Riami. The evidence of P.W.1 is to the effect that the loan agreement was made in the office of the appellant company for the purpose of financing the G construction activities of the appellant company, and that thereafter the money was conveyed to Ghalib by P.W.2. The evidence of P.W.2 corraborates that of P.W.1 concerning the transmission of the money to the said Ghalib Abdalla who passed it on to P.W.3. The evidence of P.W.3 corroborates that of P.W.2 concerning the delivery of the money. P.W.3 was the Operations Director of the appellant company. He H testified to the effect that the appellant company needed the money because it happened to be in a bad financial position, and the money thus received was used in paying construction technicians of the company. That, in a nut-shell, is the evidence in support of the respondent's case. I

NYALALI CJ, OMAR JA AND MFALILA Ag JA

The appellant, on the other hand, adduced evidence through one of its Directors, that A is, Ali Sultan Issa (P.W.1) to the effect that the appellant company did not borrow any money from the respondent as the alleged loan did not comply with the procedures required for borrowing money by the company. This procedure entails a resolution by the Board of Directors, a recording of the transaction by the company, and an B endorsement of the company's seal on the documents embodying the loan agreement.

It is apparent that the central issue in this case is whether the said Ghalib Abdalla acted for and on behalf of the appellant company in borrowing the money as testified to by P.W.1, P.W.2 and P.W.3. In resolving the issue, one has to ask one self whether it is C improbable that the said Ghalib Abdalla acted as he is said to have acted, in contravention of the laid down procedures of the company. We see nothing improbable for any human being, including the said Ghalib Abdalla to act contrary to laid down procedures. To say otherwise would mean that it is also improbable for people to D contravene the law.

The Said Abdalla did not testify at the trial although the court made sure that he was available. Since he was an obvious witness for the appellant's case if the appellant's E denials of liability were true, one wonders why the appellant, acting through one of its Directors, that is, P.W.1 elected not to have him give evidence. Under the circumstances of this case, we think that an adverse inference can and should be drawn under the provisions of section 114 of the Evidence Decree of Zanzibar, Cap. 5, which states: F

> The court may presume the existence of any act which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common cause of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, in their relation to the facts of the particular case. G

We are satisfied that the appellant refrained from having the said Ghalib Abdalla give evidence, whilst he should testify in support of the respondent's claim. We are thus satisfied that the learned Chief Justice was correct in accepting the evidence of P.W.1, H P.W.2 and P.W.3 concerning the conduct of the said Ghalib Abdalla in borrowing the money in question for and on behalf of the appellant company. This conduct is fully covered by the provisions of section 33(b) of the Companies Decree of Zanzibar, Cap. 153, which states: I

NYALALI CJ, OMAR JA AND MFALILA Ag JA

> 33- (1) Contracts on behalf of a company may be made as follows: A
>
>
> (b) a contract which if made between private persons would by law be valid although made by parol only, and not reduce into writing, may be made by parol B on behalf of the company by any person acting under its authority, express or implied.
> (2) A contract made according to this section shall be effectual in law, and shall bind the C company and its successors and all other parties thereto.

It is obvious from these provisions of section 33 that the appellant company was empowered in law to enter into a parol contract, as it did in the present case, D notwithstanding any internal procedure made by the company to the contrary, provided that such parol contract is made by a person acting under the company's authority expressly or impliedly. The question therefore arises whether the said Ghalib Abdalla was expressly or impliedly authorised by the company to enter into the loan contract E which is the subject of this case.

The learned Chief Justice relied, inter alia, on the provisions of Articles 14 and 15 of the Articles of Association of the appellant company, which state - in Article 14: F

The Directors may, from time to time, at their discretion, borrow and secure the payment of any sum or sums of money for the purposes of the Company.

As to Article 15, it states: G

The Directors may secure repayment of such monies in such manner and upon such terms and conditions in all respects as they think fit. H

On the basis of these provisions, the learned Chief Justice came to the conclusion that the said Ghalib Abdalla, acting as Director of the appellant company, had express authority to enter into the loan contract in question. The learned Chief Justice was furthermore of the view that although the provisions of Articles 14 and 15 must be I construed as requiring prior agreement between the Directors before one of them acts for and on behalf of the company, a third party A dealing with one of the Directors is not obliged to ascertain whether that prior agreement existed. As authority for this stand, he cited the case of Royal British Bank v Torgand [l856] 6 EXB. We concur with his findings. We are satisfied that the said Ghalib Abdalla as a Director of the appellant company had express authority contained B in Articles 14 and 15 of the articles of Association, to borrow money for and on behalf of the appellant company.

The final issue for consideration and decision in this case is whether the appellant company is liable to repay the loan as claimed by the respondent. We find no difficulty, C in answering this question by virtue of the provisions of section 33 (1)(b) and of the Companies Decree of Zanzibar above cited. The answer is thus in the affirmative.

It follows therefore that the judgment of the learned Chief Justice cannot be faulted, and we are bound to dismiss this appeal and we do so now with costs. D

Appeal dismissed.

Company Law - Winding up - Opposition to winding up - English Companies (Winding-up Rules), 1929. G

-Headnote

The petitioner, Jo'Carlo Ballonzi, filed a winding up petition praying that Isahero Agrivet (T) Ltd (the company) be wound up by the High Court. Petition was filed on 5/9/l988 and was on 4/l0/l988 advertised in the 'Daily News'. The petition was then set down for hearing on 14/2/l989. In the meantime, on 3/11/l988 Mr. Marando, H representing the company, appeared before the Deputy Registrar of High Court, and applied orally and ex-parte for extension of time to file an affidavit in opposition to the winding-up. The application was granted and Mr. Marando was given seven days to I file his affidavit in opposition.

KYANDO J

At the commencement of the hearing on 15/l2/l989, Mr. Ballonzi for the petitioner A raised two points of objection to the presence of Mr. Marando in court on that date and his affidavit in opposition. Mr. Ballonzi contended that Mr. Marando had no right of audience because after the petition had been advertised he or the company gave no B notice to the petitioner of his intention to appear as required by Rule 33 of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1929. Secondly, that the extension of time granted to Mr. Marando on 8/11/l988 by the Registrar had been obtained ex-parte and fraudulently when he (Mr. Ballonzi) and/or his client should have been notified and given an opportunity of being heard in opposition to it. C

Held: (i) By virtue of ss. 285 and 348 of the Companies Ordinance, Cap. 212 it is the English Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1929, which apply to a petition. A Winding-up petition is required to be presented to the Registrar of the High Court D (Rule 26) and must be advertised "seven clear days before the hearing" (Rule 27);

(ii) rule 33 requiring notice to the petitioner by any person who wishes to appear does not apply to the company. The rule relates only to persons who have been notified of the petition by advertisement; E

(iii) rule 28 provides that every petition shall be served upon the company or otherwise presented at company's registered office. There is nothing to establish that the company was served with the petitioner's petition at any stage since it was filed in court. The petition was therefore not served on the company as the law requires and F the petitioner cannot now be heard to say that the affidavit in opposition is out of time.

(iv) in exercise of powers conferred on courts by section 95 of the Civil Procedure Code, l966 Mr. Marando is permitted to give notice of the filing of affidavit G in opposition to the winding-up in compliance with Rule 35(1) of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1929.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kyando, J.: Jo'Carlo Ballonzi, the petitioner, has filed a winding up petition in which he prays that Isahero Agrivet (T) Ltd (the company) be wound up by this court. The I petition was filed on

KYANDO J

5/9/88 and on 4/l0/88 it was advertised in the 'Daily News' of that date. It was then set A down for hearing on 6/l0/88. On that date it was adjourned to 15/10/88 for mention with a view to fixing another hearing date. On that date, i.e. 15/l0/88, hearing was set down for 14/2/89. In the meantime, on 3/11/88 Mr. Marando, representing the company, appeared before Mr. Mrema, the Deputy Registrar of the High Court, and B applied orally and ex-parte for extention of time to file an affidavit in opposition to the winding up. The Deputy Registrar granted the application and allowed Mr. Marando seven days from the 3rd of November l988 to file his affidavit in opposition. He (Mr. Marando) filed the affidavit on 8/11/88. C

On 14/2/89 the hearing of the petition was adjourned to the next day, i.e. 15/2/89. At the commencement of the hearing on 15/2/89, Mr. Ballonzi for the petitioner raised two points of objections to the presence of Mr. Marando in Court on that date and his affidavit in opposition. He (Mr. Ballonzi) contended that in the first place Mr. Marando D had no right of audience because after the petition had been advertised he or the company gave no notice to the petitioner of his intention to appear as required by Rule 33 of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules l929. Secondly he contended that the extension of time granted to Mr. Marando on 8/11/88 by the Deputy Registrar had E been obtained ex-parte and fraudulently when he (Mr. Ballonzi) and/or his client, the petitioner, should have been notified and given an opportunity of being heard in opposition to it. He referred to Rule 8 of the Winding-up Rules which provides that every application, other than a petition, under the Rules must be made by either motion, F if made in court, or Summons, if in Chambers, and that notice of the application must be served on the other party. Mr. Ballonzi contended that the application for extention of time by Mr. Marando was not made in accordance with Rule 8. He submitted therefore that Mr. Marando's affidavit in opposition was time-barred. He said further G that as there is no proper order granting extension of time to date, the affidavit in opposition is not properly before the court and should be dismissed. He contended that once that is done, the petition will stand unopposed and he prayed therefore that it be granted as prayed. H

In reply Mr. Marando argued that his client, the company, was under no obligation under Rule 33 (supra) to give notice of intention to appear because, he contended, notice under that rule is required from creditors, contributors, etc, but not from the company itself which is the subject of a winding-up petition. In any case, Mr. Marando I contended, the obligation, if any on the part of the company to serve notice would only have arisen if the petitioner had served the company with the A petition as required by Rule 28. He argued that the petition was not served on the company as required and Mr. Ballonzi cannot now be heard to say that the petitioner has not been served with notices to appear from it. B

Concerning the extension of time granted by the Deputy Registrar on 3/11/88 Mr. Marando argued that it is common practice to ask for extension of time during mention of cases. He said the matter was brought before the Deputy Registrar on 3/11/88 and he prayed on that date, orally, that he be given more time to file the affidavit in C opposition. He said this was granted and he sees nothing irregular about it. He submitted that the objections by Mr. Ballonzi were baseless and prayed that he be permitted to be heard in opposition to the petition.

It is not in dispute between the parties to this matter that by virtue of ss.285 and 348 of D the Companies Ordinance, Cap 212 it is the English Companies (Winding-up) Rules, l929, which apply to a petition such as the present one. Under those rules a winding-up petition is required to be presented to the Registrar of the High Court (Rule 26) and must be advertised "seven clear days before the hearing" (Rule 27). Rule 28 provides E that every petition shall be served upon the company, unless presented by it, at its registered office etc. Then under Rule 33, every person who intends to appear on the hearing of the petition must serve on, or send by post to, the petitioner or his advocate or agent at the address stated in the advertisement of the petition notice of his intention F to so appear. A person who has failed to comply with this requirement "shall not, without the special leave of the court, be allowed to appear on the hearing of the petition". In the instant matter, Mr. Ballonzi argues that the company is caught by these provisions of the Rules because it has failed to give a notice. Rule 29 provides that G every petition for the winding-up of a company by the court shall be verified by an affidavit referring thereto. Rule 35(1) provides that affidavits in opposition to a petition, such as the one filed by Mr. Marando herein, "shall be filed within seven days of the date on which the affidavit verifying the petition is filed". In the present matter the H affidavit verifying the petition was filed on 5/9/88, i.e. on the date on which the petition was filed. The affidavit in opposition to the Winding-up was filed on 8/11/88 as already shown. Mr. Ballonzi submits that it was filed outside the prescribed period of time and should be disregarded. I

On the requirement of notice to the petitioner by any person who wishes to appear under Rule 33 I have no doubt in my mind, and I agree with Mr. A Marando that it does not apply to the company. The rule relates to persons who have been notified of the petition by advertisement. It states:

> 33 Every person who intends to appear on the hearing of a petition shall serve on, or send by B post to, the petitioner, or his advocate or agent, ... at the address stated in the advertisement of the petition notice of his intention. (underlining added). C

The notice follows on an advertisement of the petition. The company, on the other hand, is not served or notified by advertisement. Under Rule 28 it is notified by (or served with) the petition itself and upon being served with the petition what it is required to do, if it wishes, is to file an affidavit in opposition under Rule 35, and not to D give a notice as Mr. Ballonzi would wish this court to hold. There are two separate procedures therefore in relation to the company and other persons when winding up petition is filed. For the company, it is served with the petition and if it wishes to oppose it must file an affidavit in opposition. For other persons, they are notified by E advertisement and if they wish to appear on the date of hearing of the petition they have to give notices to the petitioner indicating their intentions. It does not sound logical to me that for a company it should be served both by advertisement and by service of the F petition, or that it should give notice and also file affidavits in opposition. It is upon filing of an affidavit in opposition that notice of its filing is given to the petitioner I hold therefore, as I have indicated already, that the requirement to give notice under Rule 33 does not apply to the company. I do therefore overrule Mr. Ballonzi's objection to the company's appearance in this matter. G

Concerning the filing of the affidavit in opposition out of time, Mr. Marando complains, as shown, that the company was not served with the petition as required by Rule 28 (Supra). Mr. Ballonzi in reply has contended that the company must have become H aware of the filing of the petition because at some stage it took steps towards opposing the petition. He contended that in any case he had seen a copy of the petition signed by the company indicating that it had been served. With respect, there is nothing before me to establish that the company was served with the petitioner's petition at any stage since it was filed here. There is nothing in the Court file to I show this. Becoming aware of the petition by the company as Mr. Ballonzi contends is A not service on it. Mr. Ballonzi should have ascertained it in fact, and shown to the court positively, that service had been effected, and if so when before he launched his attack on the affidavit in opposition. I hold that the petition was not served on the B company as the law requires. For this reason Mr. Ballonzi cannot now be heard to say that the affidavit in opposition is out of time. The rather irregular procedure employed in extending the time for filing the affidavit in opposition was necessitated by Mr. Ballonzi's failure to serve the petition on the company. I think that irregularity is C excusable in the circumstances and I hold that the affidavit in opposition was filed in time, as extended by the Deputy Registrar.

There is one point though in relation to this affidavit in opposition to the petition. Rule 35(1) of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules requires that once the affidavit in D opposition has been filed, notice of the filing of the affidavit must be given, on the date it is filed, to the petitioner or his advocate or agent. In the instant matter, no such notice appears to have been given by Mr. Marando or the Company to Mr. Ballonzi or the petitioner. This is rather contrary to the rules. However while failure to give notice E under Rule 33 is attendable by a person being barred from appearing at the hearing of the petition, Rule 35(1) does not say what results from failure to give notice upon filing an affidavit in opposition. I think it will all depend on the circumstances of each case. In this instant matter, under powers provided for in s.95 of the Civil Procedure Code, F l966, I will permit Mr. Marando or the Company to give notice as from today of the filing of the affidavit in opposition to the petition. He is given three days from today within which to file the notice. This notice will, of course, be sort of formality to Mr. G Ballonzi because he is already aware that the affidavit in opposition has been filed. It will, however, give him an opportunity to replying to it under Rule 35(2). He is to file the affidavit, if any, in reply within the days from the date when notice of filing of an affidavit in opposition will be received by the petitioner or Mr. Ballonzi. Then the H petition is to be set down by the Registrar for hearing.

In the final result then, the objections raise by Mr. Ballonzi to the appearance of the company and to the affidavit in opposition to the Winding-up petition are overruled. I Objections overruled.

Samatta, J.: This is an appeal from a decision of the District Court of Iramba affirming the decision of the Primary Court of Nduguti whereby a claim by the respondent for recovery of possession of a six-acre farm was allowed. F

I have reached the settled conclusion, having given the matter anxious and, I hope, careful consideration, that the decisions of the two courts below cannot be allowed to stand. The respondent's case was simply this. Some years prior to 1979 his elder G brother, Chandewa Kititi, permitted the appellant to use his (Chandewa's) six-acre farm for cultivation purposes. In l979, following the death of Chandewa, he became or was appointed administrator of the deceased's estate. Eventually, the six-acre farm was inherited by the deceased's daughter known as Gole Shukia. When called upon to give H possession of the farm to the woman, the appellant refused to do so, asserting that the farm was his property. The respondent reacted to that refusal by instituting the proceedings which have given rise to the appeal now before me. The appellant's answer to the suit was that the six-acre farm was his property, having developed the land I himself.

SAMATTA J

The appellant has invited me to determine the appeal on its merits, but I am clearly of A opinion that it is not possible in law to do so. Why am I of that opinion? That I will tell. The evidence adduced by the respondent clearly reveals that when the suit was instituted in the Primary Court the farm in question had already been inherited by Gole Shukia, B who in l983 was, according to the record of the case, aged 30. It must be correct to say that, as far as the farm is concerned, the office of administrator, which the respondent assumed on the death of his elder brother, came to an end when the estate in the farm descended to Gole Shukia. If Gole wished to acquire possession of the farm, then she C herself should have instituted the proceedings. His office of administrator of the deceased's estate having come to an end, the respondent ceased to have locus standi in the matter. It would appear that the respondent instituted the proceedings in his own name because he entertained the view that, being a female, Gole lacked legal capacity to D institute proceedings before a court of law. Nothing is further from the truth than that notion. Whatever the position might have been in the past, now the general rule of law (and it is obvious justice) is that any female who has attained, in terms of s. 2 of the Age E of Majority Ordinance (Chapter 431), full age has the right to institute proceedings in a court of law in her own name or individual capacity unassisted. The notion that a woman can institute legal proceedings only through her father or other male relative is a notion of the past, which our law now rejects as being entirely erroneous. It is an F incontrovertible proposition of law that a woman does not need a guardian to assist her in institution or prosecuting a suit in a court of law. Once she reaches the age of majority, a female, like a male, ceases to be a minor and can sue or be sued in her own name. The law treats her as having full legal capacity. A woman in this country can now stand up and loudly say: G

I am a major and have the undeniable right to personally look after my legal interests. I need no guardian.

And, lawyers would nod to signify their assent. H

The appeal is allowed, the decision of both courts below are set aside. The respondent (Amri Shabani) will pay the appellant's costs in the two courts and this court. For the I avoidance of doubt, it must be stated that Gole Shukia is at liberty in law to institute civil proceedings against the appellant for the recovery of possession of the six-acre farm. A

Application dismissed. D

Samatta, J.: In this application Mr. Godwin S. Kigalla moves, on behalf of himself and his co-applicants, who are 88 in number, for an order of certiorari to bring up and quash a decision of the Regional Housing Tribunal of Dodoma dated 16th June, 1987, E allowing an application filed before it by the respondent corporation and raising the monthly standard rent for each of the housing units which the applicants occupy from shs. 90/= to shs. 510/=. The application raises an important question as to the meaning F and effect of s. 2(1) of the Rent Restriction Act, 1984 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"). Although he is not a lawyer, Mr. Kigalla has argued the application fairly ably and, if I may hasten to add, with that degree of confidence which lawyers usually display on such occasions.

The facts which are material to the determination of the application may, I think, be G stated as shortly as is consistent with intelligibility. The respondent is a parastatal organisation. It owns the housing units in question which it rents to the applicants, none of whom is employed by it. Before the Regional Housing Tribunal had raised it to H shs.510/=, the monthly rent for each unit used to be shs.90/=. Basing himself on s. 2(1) of the Act and paragraph 4(b) of the Staff Circular No. 2 of 1973, issued by the Central Establishment Division of the President's Office, Mr. Kigalla contended that, since the housing units in question are the property of a parastatal organisation, the Regional I Housing Tribunal had no jurisdiction to entertain the application brought before it by the respondent.

SAMATTA J

According to Mr. Kigalla, s. 2(1)(a) of the Act exempts all residential and commercial A premises owned by the respondent for renting from the application of the provisions of the Act. Notwithstanding the forceful way Mr. Kigalla presented his argument, I am unable to accede to it. Section 2(1) of the Act, partly relied upon by Mr. Kigalla in his contention, reads as follows: B

(1) This Act shall apply to all dwelling houses and commercial premises, furnished or unfurnished, situate or in course of erection or hereafter to be erected in any rent restriction area in Tanzania Mainland, other than - C

(a) premises which are the property of the Government, a parastatal organisation or of a local authority, where such premises are used by or are for use by employees of the Government, the parastatal organisation or the local authority, D and

(b) any premises, or class of premises, in Mainland Tanzania, which the Minister may with approval of the National Assembly signified by a resolution, by order published in the Gazette, exempt from all or any of the provisions of this Act. E

None of the applicants has, in this application disclosed the identity of his employer, but for the present purposes it will be assumed that they are employed by the Government, a F parastatal organization (other than the respondent corporation) or a local authority. Paragraph 4 of the Staff Circular No. 2 of 1973 reads as follows:

4. These regulations in the matter of rents, have now been reviewed and it has been G decided to introduce the following changes, with effect from the 1st March, 1973, which will apply to "public sector housing". For this purpose public sector housing means and will now include accommodation allocated to officers by:

(a) Government; H
(b) The National Housing Corporation;
(c) The Registrar of Buildings;
(b) Other Parastatal Organisations. I

1989 TLR p94
SAMATTA J

Before proceeding further, I desire to express the hope that I will be forgiven for stating A the obvious, namely, that Staff Circular issued by the Central Establishment Division govern only the relationship between the Government and its employees. The relationships between parastatal orgnisations and local authorities and their respective B employees are not governed by these circulars; they are governed by circulars issued by other relevant bodies. Having said that, I must now revert to the question whether the Regional Housing Tribunal was right in law to hold, as it seems to have done, that it has jurisdiction to entertain applications for increase of rent brought by the respondent C corporation in respect of dwelling premisses owned by the corporation and rented by public servants employed by the Government, local authorities or parastatal organisation other than the respondent corporation. It is my opinion that the words in s. 2(1) of the Act must be given their ordinary meaning. When so construed, the subsection, in my D considered opinion, cannot be said to exempt dwelling (or commercial) premises which are the property of the respondent corporation and rented to persons employed by the public institutions (including the Government) other than the respondent corporation itself. As I read the subsection, it seems to me that if a house or flat belonging to the E respondent corporation is rented by a person employed by the government, a local authority or some other parastatal organisation, the exemption created by the subsection does not cover such premises. It is arguable, however, that if such premises are rented by an employee of the respondent corporation, then the exemption would apply. The F conclusion that there is no merit in Mr. Kigalla's argument is fortified, as far as employees of the Government are concerned, by the provisions of paragraph 10 of Staff Circular No. 21 of 1973, which reads:

10. Although officers occupying "public sector housing" will now pay rents based on salary, G the National Hosing Corporation, the Registrar of Buildings or other Parastatal Organisations, will continue to be entitled to receive the full standard rent for their premises. Therefore, while accounting officers will recover rents on the basis of H paragraph 5 above, the full assessed standard rent should be remitted by accounting officers to the National Housing Corporation, the Registrar of Buildings or other Parastatal Organisations.

In cases where these accounts are in excess of the rents actually recovered from I officers, accounting officers should report the shortfall to the Principal Secretary, Ministry of Communications and A Works.

1989 TLR p95
SAMATTA J

As amended by Amendment Slip "A", dated August 1, 1974, paragraph 5, referred to above, reads as follows: B

5. All officers occupying "public sector housing" will be required to pay rent according to the following percentages of basic salary, irrespective of whether the accommodation is furnished or unfurnished: C

	Category	Rate of Basic Salary	Rate of Rent
A	From minimum wage up to shs.863/= per month		7.5% of Salary.
B	Shs.864/= permonth to shs.1,725/= per month		10% of Salary. D
C	Shs.1,726/= per month and over		12.5% of Salary.

In cases where officers or overseas terms are receiving, in addition to basic salary, such E other payment as special allowance, expatriation allowance, pay addition etc, these payments should not be taken into account for the purposes of house rent.

In my opinion, though they are, in terms of paragraph 4 of Staff Circular No. 2 of 1973, F public sector housing, the dwelling premises which the applicants occupy and which were the subject matter of the proceedings conducted before the Regional Housing Tribunal, are not exempted from the application of the provisions of the Act. The Minister for the time being responsible for housing affairs may, of course, by invoking his G powers under s. 2(1)(b) of the Act, exempt the premises, but he has in his wisdom not done so. It follows, therefore, that the Regional Housing Tribunal was perfectly entitled in law to entertain the respondent's application. It had jurisdiction to do so. Whether or H not it arrived at a just decision is an entirely different question which cannot be answered in the instance proceedings.

I Application dismissed .

The respondent in this appeal successfully sued the appellant in Igalukiro Primary Court C for five head of cattle as compensation for adultery. The appellant's appeal to the District Court was dismissed. Hence this appeal.

The facts were that in November 1986, the respondent's grandfather died, leaving D behind a widow and three children. After the funeral and during mourning, members of the deceased's family asked the widow to remain and be inherited by one of the members of her deceased husband. She consented and chose the respondent out of the six members of the family brought before her. He took the widow to his home where E they stayed as man and wife. Sometimes towards the end of March l987, the widow asked leave of her husband to visit her children living with the respondent's father. Permission was granted, and she was to return on the same day. She never returned. After looking for her for two days, the respondent found her living with the appellant. He F reported the matter to a Ten Cell leader before whom the appellant, in writing, agreed to refund the respondent's bride-price, a promise which was not honoured. The respondent sued in court.

Held: (i) When a widow is duly inherited, according to GN 279 of 1963 para 64, she G becomes a lawful wife of the one who has inherited her;

(ii) a man has a duty under para 129 of GN 279 of 1963, to carry out adequate inquiry to satisfy himself and ascertain the marital status of a woman before taking her to H his home as a wife;

SEKULE J

[zJDz]Judgment

Sekule, J.: The respondent in this appeal successfully sued the appellant in the Igalukilo A Primary Court for five head of cattle as compensation for adultery. The appellant was aggrieved by this decision he appealed to the District Court of Magu District at Magu. Here too he was not successful. He has now preferred an appeal to this Court. B

The case for the respondent in the trial court was that sometime in November, l986, his grandfather died. He left behind a widow and three children.

After the funeral and before the mourning period had ended, members of the deceased's family asked the widow whether she was willing to be inherited as a wife by another C member of her deceased husband's family, and that she consented. Thereafter six men belonging to her late husband's family were brought before her and she chose the respondent as her new husband.

This exercise was witnessed by other people including the widow's own father. The D family of the deceased also settled with the widow's father the issue of a balance of brideprice that the deceased had left unpaid. The respondent then took the widow as his wife to his home where they stayed as a man and wife.

The respondent further contended at the trial that, sometime towards the end of March E 1987, his wife (the widow) told him that she wanted to visit her children. It would appear these children were living with the respondent's father. He allowed her to go and she went. She was expected to go and return on the same day. She never returned. After two days the respondent started looking for her. He found her living with the F appellant at his home. The respondent then reported the matter to a ten cell leader. It was his contention that at the ten cell leader, the appellant agreed in writing to refund the respondent's bride price. This promise was however not honoured by the appellant as a result the respondent had no alternative but to take the matter to court. The ten cell G leader testified as P.W.3 and produced the agreement regarding the return of bride price by the appellant to the respondent which both had signed before him. Unfortunately I have not been able to see this document in the records supplied. The father of the widow testified as P.W.2. He firmly supported the respondent's evidence regarding his H contention that he inherited the widow as his wife with her consent. This is what he stated:

Katika wadaiwa hawa wawili, namfahamu mdai Amos Mutanda ambaye ni mkwilima wangu I na mdaiwa simfahamu kabisa na wala sina uhusiano wowote naye. Nakumbuka Mkwilima wangu wa kwanza A aliyekuwa amemuoa binti wangu Sumai aitwaye Masome Nyenge alifariki mnamo tarehe Novemba, 1986 na kumkabidhi mjane binti yangu. Baada ya matanga mdai ndiye alichaguliwa na binti wangu kuwa mumewe wa urithi. Hivyo mimi nafahamu mume wa binti ni B mdai. Marehemu mkwilima wangu wa kwanza alipofariki alikuwa na deni la mahari - ng'ombe wanne na hivyo binti wangu aliporithiwa na mdai aliahidi kunilipa baki ya mahari mwezi huu - Mei 1987. C

The appellant contended in his defence that on the 29th March 1987 he met the respondent's wife at a market. He approached her and told her that he was in love with her. She agreed and he took her to his home. He further claimed that before that he had asked her whether she was a married woman and she replied in the negative. She D however told him that her first husband was dead and that she was living with her relatives. He did not however ask her whether she had formally parted with her deceased husband's family. At the hearing of this appeal, the appellant and the respondents appeared in person. E

In addition to what he stated in his memorandum of appeal, the appellant contended that the woman in question was not inherited as a wife by the respondent.

I have carefully considered the evidence on record, and I am of the opinion that there F was ample evidence to the effect that the widow was inherited as a wife by the respondent upon the death of her husband. And this was done with her consent. There could not be better evidence in my view on this point than that of the widow's own father, P.W.2. P.W.2's evidence to the effect that his daughter agreed to be inherited as G a wife by relatives of her deceased husband and that she on her own accord chose the respondent as her new husband appeared to have been given in a firm and straight forward manner. And further P.W.2 could not have lied against his own daughter. Like the trial court, I am also of the view that the evidence of this witness was nothing but the truth. H

As a matter of fact, it would appear that the woman's denial to have been inherited as a wife by the respondent was half hearted. For instance she agreed in cross examination that she was visiting the home of the respondent and that it was the respondent who was paying her development tax after the death of her husband. She further stated that after I the death of her husband, she was not formally divorced, meaning I suppose that she had not formally parted with her deceased A husband's family. And that in these circumstances therefore she was committing adultery with the appellant.

It is obvious from this account in my view that the widow was simply trying to deny a fact that she knew was the truth or the correct position. Her evidence particularly in B cross examination essentially supported the respondent's testimony to the effect that he had inherited her as a wife. For example, how come did the respondent assume the responsibility of paying her development tax after the death of her husband if he had not inherited her as his wife. C

On the evidence, I am satisfied in my mind that the widow was duly inherited as a wife by the respondent with her consent. And according to paragraph 64 of the Customary Law Declaration Order, GN 279 of 1963 and as rightly pointed out by the trial court, after the widow was inherited with her consent she became the lawful wife of the D respondent. Paragraph 64 reads:

Kama mjane anakubali kuishi kama mke wa mmoja wa ndugu wa marehemu na shauri likakubaliwa na baraza la ukoo, basi anakuwa mke halali wa ndugu yule. E

Further, from the evidence on record, I am of the settled opinion that the appellant was rightly found by the two lower courts to be liable for adultery in this case. According to the appellant's own testimony the widow told him that her husband was dead. And that F he did not however bother to ask her whether or not she had formally parted with her deceased husband's family. In my view the appellant had a duty to carry out adequate inquiry to ascertain and to satisfy himself that the widow was indeed a free woman before taking her to his home as his wife. Paragraph 129 of the Customary Law G Declaration Order, GN 279 is relevant in this connection. Paragraph 129 reads:

Ni wajibu wa mwanamume kupata uhakika kwamba mwanamke anayetembea naye au H anayemwoa hana mume. Usemi wowote wa mwanamke hata kama akiutoa mbele ya mashahidi hauwezi kuwa ngao kama mwanamume akishitakiwa ugoni.

It is thus evident from this paragraph that a man has considerable burden to discharge I before deciding to have an affair or getting married to a woman whose marital status he does not know before hand. A

In this case and going by the appellant's evidence at the trial, the widow's statement to him when they met to the effect that her husband was dead should have put him on B notice for him to make the necessary inquiries to ascertain her true marital status. He does not seem to have done so. He was indifferent.

In these circumstances therefore he was correctly found to be liable for adultery.

I am thus satisfied that the appellant's appeal on the issue of adultery is devoid of merits, C and it is hereby dismissed.

On the issue of quantum of compensation/damages; the respondent claimed five head of cattle and he was so granted by the lower courts. On my part and after considering the circumstances of the case, particularly the fact that the appellant does not appear to have D enticed or taken the widow right from her new matrimonial home but that he met her at a market and that there was no evidence adduced to challenge the appellant's claim in this regard, I am of the view that two (2) head of cattle as damages for adultery would meet the ends of justice in this case.

I would and do hereby therefore set aside the trial courts order of compensation and E substitute therefor an order to the effect that the appellant pays the respondent, two (2) head of cattle as compensation/damages for adultery. It is so ordered.
To this limited extent the appeal succeeds. Otherwise it is dismissed. Each party to bear F his own costs for this appeal.
Order accordingly.

In revisional proceedings before the High Court the trial judge found that the subordinate A court had imposed a lesser sentence than the minimum prescribed by law. The judge called upon the accused to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced and why he should not be disqualified from holding or obtaining a driving licence. B
The judge enhanced the sentence but allowed a lesser sentence than the minimum prescribed and disqualified the accused from holding or obtaining a driving licence.
Held: (i) There were special reasons for the court to impose a sentence less than the C minimum fine. The minimum sentence prescribed in section 63(1)(b) of the Road Traffic Act for an offence of causing injuries through reckless driving contrary to section 42 is a fine of ten thousand shillings. The sentence of fine of five hundred shillings was manifestly D lenient and should be enhanced to five thousand shillings. A person who wishes not to be disqualified from driving must advance reasons which are special to the offence. The reasons given by the accused were special to the offender and not the offence. Therefore, the accused is disqualified from holding or obtaining a driving licence for a period of three years and his learner's driving licence cancelled. E

Hyera - for the Republic. F
Maina, J.: The accused/respondent, was convicted on his own plea of guilty of four counts under the Road Traffic Act 1973. The fourth count was on causing injury through reckless driving for which he was sentenced to a fine of shs.500/= or two months G imprisonment in default.
The record of the case was called for inspection because it appeared that the sentence for the offence in the fourth count was illegal. Furthermore, there was no order disqualifying the accusedfrom driving or obtaining a driving licence. The accused has H been called upon to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced and also why he should not be disqualified from holding or obtaining a driving licence.
The facts which the accused admitted showed that he drove a motorcycle without displaying learner plates and that he drove so recklessly that he knocked own a I pedestrian who sustained injuries.
MAINA J
When called upon by this court to say why the sentence should not be enhanced, the A accused said that he is a first offender, he had several dependants and that he also sustained serious injuries in his attempt to avoid the collision. The pedestrian sustained minor injury which was a sprain on the leg and on the shoulder. B
In the circumstance, these were special reasons which are relevant for the purpose of imposing a sentence less than the minimum prescribed. The minimum sentence prescribed in section 63(1)(b) of the Road Traffic Act for an offence of causing injuries through reckless driving contrary to section 42 is a fine of ten thousand shillings. In the C circumstances of this case, I have held that the reasons advanced amount to special reasons and the court finds it fit to impose a sentence less than the minimum fine. However, the sentence of fine shs. five hundred imposed by the District Court was D manifestly lenient. The sentence is enhanced to fine shs. 5,000/= or one year imprisonment in default. Since the accused has paid the fine of shs.500/= imposed by the District Court, he should pay shs. 4,500/=.
As regards disqualification from driving, the accused said that he depends on driving to E be able to perform his duties as an auditor. With respect these are reasons special to the offender and not to the offence. A person who wishes not to be disqualified from driving must advance reasons which are special to the offence. In other words, the court can make an order not to disqualify an offender from driving where the reasons advanced are special to the offence. The accused has not given such reasons. F
It is hereby ordered that the accused be,and is hereby, disqualified from holding or obtaining a driving licence for a period of three (3) years effective from 18 January 1989 the date he was convicted. His learner's driving licence is hereby canceled. G

A dispute arose between the parties over the attachment of the objector's several head of cattle in execution of a court judgment against one Mpujila Kusaga. The matter went to Urban Primary Court of Mpwapwa for purposes of legal settlement. The appellant D got judgment which decreed him to recover 8 head of cattle, 7 goats, shs. 3,550/= and costs from the defendant and he also obtained a warrant of attachment which instructed and authorised the District Commissioner to attach the judgment debtor's ten head of cattle from one Samueli Mtubatwa's cowshed. OBITER:If a litigant who is not familiar with the intricacies of court procedure appears B before him, a magistrate should explain to him, briefly and in simple language, the objects of cross-examination.

Samatta, J.: This appeal is about ten head of cattle. It raises this question: Is the C District Court of Mpwapwa right in refusing to share the opinion of the Urban Primary Court of Mpwapwa that the ten beasts were rightly attached by the appellant, Kwiga Masa, from the kraal of the respondent's brother, Lazaro Mtubatwa?

The legal battle between the parties over the head of cattle commenced in the Primary D Court nearly two years ago. On May 18, 1987, the appellant obtained in that court a judgment against one Mpujila Kusaga. The judgment, inter alia, declared that he was entitled to recover from the defendant 8 head of cattle, 7 goats, shs.3,550/= and the costs of the suit. Later, he successfully applied for a warrant of attachment. The warrant E authorised and directed the District Commissioner to attach the judgment-debtor's ten head of cattle from Samweli Mtubatwa's cowshed. Armed with this document, the Acting Ward Secretary, in the company of the appellant and a member of the People's Militia, among others, proceeded to Samweli Mtubatwa's cowshed. There, in the F presence of the owner of the kraal and the respondent, among others, he executed the warrant and handed over the animals to the appellant. The respondent was "aggrieved" by that step. He summoned the law to his aid by commencing objection proceedings in G the Primary Court. The burden of his case was that the attached ten head of cattle were his property and not those of Mpujila Kusaga, the judgment-debtor.

He called several witnesses in support of that case. He asserted, among other things, that he had kept the beasts at his brother's kraal because, as a result of the implementation of H the HADO project, he was not allowed to keep them at his kraal. He gave the number of cattle he kept at his brother's kraal as being 6 bulls and 18 cows. His brother's evidence on this point, however, differed materially. The witness said the beasts were 12 in number - 2 bulls and 10 cows. Mpujila Kusaga, who gave evidence I for the respondent, denied that he was the owner of the ten head of cattle. The appellant's case was that the animals belonged to Mpujila Kusaga. He, too, adduced evidence from A several witnesses, including the Acting Ward Secretary and the member of the People's Militia. Like the appellant, the Secretary and the militiaman asserted that when he was asked to sign the warrant of attachment, Samweli Mtubatwa refused to do so, saying that the ten head of cattle were the property of Mpujila Kusaga (the B judgment-debtor) and not his. The two witnesses also told the trial court that the respondent was present when the ten head of cattle were attached, but he said nothing.

The Primary Court magistrate and the assessors who sat with him unanimously held, C after a careful consideration of the evidence laid before him, that the respondent had failed to establish that the ten head of cattle were his property. Accordingly, they dismissed the objection. As already indicated, the learned District Magistrate found himself unable to uphold that decision. In the course of his judgment, he said: D

The court below unanimously accepted the respondent's story that the 10 head of cattle were the judgment-debtor's and so affirmed the seizure. I decline to share that view. There was no evidence to show that the head of cattle were the judgment-debtor's. He merely suspected that E they were the judgment-debtor's but he would not substantiate it. He said "Nilikamata hizo ng'ombe kumi katika zizi la Lazaro (SM2) ninavyojua mimi ng'ombe za mdaiwa-mhukumiwa zilikuwa (sio) zinakaa njia panda ya Msagali." He did not say that the judgment-debtor's head F of cattle were at Lazaro Mtubatwa's homestead. And none of his witnesses said that the 10 head of cattle were the judgment-debtor's. Suspicion alone was insufficient. He ought to have adduced some evidence to show that the 10 head of cattle were the judgment-debtor's. The G judgment-debtor denied that the same were not (sic) his. And strangely enough, the respondent did not cross-examine him on this aspect. And a failure to cross-examine on an important matter ordinarily implies the acceptance of the truth of the witness testimony. (see H Twalla Mohamed Mushi v R., Dar es Salaam Registry Criminal Appeal No. 216 of 1976 (unreported), where the English case of R. v Halter Berkley Hart [l932] 23 Criminal Appeal R. 202, was followed with approval. The appellant, on the other hand, adduced evidence to show that the 10 head of cattle were his. There was the evidence of Lazaro Mtubatwa, which was not I challenged, that the 10 head of cattle were the appellant's. The respondent failed to show on balance of prependerances A that the 10 head of cattle were the judgment-debtor's.

With respect to the learned District Magistrate, I am of opinion that he was not entitled B in law to fault the Primary Court's decision in this case. In my view, he misdirected himself on three points, namely: (1) onus of proof; (2) effect of the failure by the appellant to cross-examine the judgment-debtor on the latter's assertion that the ten head of cattle did not belong to him; and (3) the credibility or otherwise of the evidence given C and adduced by the respondent. I propose to deal with these matters in turn.

1. ONUS OF PROOF IN OBJECTION PROCEEDINGS

It is clear from his judgment, that the learned District Magistrate entertained the view that D in objection proceedings the onus of proof lies on the judgment-creditor. With respect, this notion was wrong in law. In Lukasi Paskali v Mgwabi Mkaka, (Dodoma Registry) (PC) Civil Appeal No. 13 of 1987 (unreported), I dealt at length with the issue E of onus of proof in objection proceedings. In the instant case, I can, I think, do no better than to quote, in extenso, what I said in that case, at pp. 2-4 of the cyclostyled judgment:

The Primary Court was required to determine the issue raised in the objection proceedings in F accordance with Rule 70 of the Magistrates' Courts (Civil Procedure in Primary Courts) Rules, 1964). Unlike the rules in the Primary Courts Criminal Procedure Code, which on the coming into operation of the Magistates' Courts Act, 1984, ceased, as a result of being G repealed and replaced by the rules embodied in the Third Schedule to the Act I have just mentioned, to have any force of law, the Magistrates' Courts (Civil Procedure in Primary Courts) Rules, 1964 (hereinafter referred to as "the Rules"), were not repealed. They were H saved by the provisions of s. 72(3) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984, which reads:

"Any applicable regulations made under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1963, and in force prior to the date upon which this Act comes into operation shall remain in force as if I they have been made under this Act until such time as they are amended or revoked by rules made under this Act."

SAMATTA J

Rule 70 of the Rules provides as follows: A

(1) Any person, other than the judgment-debtor, who claims to be the owner of or to have some interest in property which has been attached by the court may apply to the court to release the property from attachment. Stating the grounds on which he bases his B objection.

(2) On receipt of an application under sub-rule (1), the court shall fix a day and time for hearing the objection and shall cause notices thereof to be served upon the objector, C the judgment-creditor and the judgment-debtor.

(3) No order for the sale of such property shall be made until the application has been determined and if any such order has been made, it shall be postponed. D

(4) On the day fixed for the hearing, the court shall investigate the objection and shall receive such evidence as the objector, the judgment-creditor and the judgment-debtor may adduce. E

(5) If the court is satisfied that the property or any part of it does not belong to the judgment-debtor, it shall make an order releasing it, or such part of it, from attachment. (the underlining is my own). F

The question that is raised by the present appeal is whether the District Court was right in law in holding, as it did, that in the objection proceedings the onus of proof lay on the judgment-creditor. In my opinion, the District Court misdirected itself in so holding. The G general principles governing the determination of the incidence of onus is one stated in the Latin Maxim: semper necessitas probandi incumbit illi qui agit [see s. 110 of the Evidence Act, l967]. Put in a modern language, the maxim would read something like this: He who seeks a remedy must prove the grounds thereof. In certain situations the H legislature may, and sometimes does, lay down rules which are inconsistent with that general principle, but it seems to me, having regard to the wording of Rule 70(5) of the Rules, that in that rule the general principle has not been displaced. On the contrary, I am of the settled opinion that the rule embodies that principle. If the legislature had intended I to effect a departure from that [principle] and impose the onus of proof on the judgment-creditor it could easily A have demonstrated that intention by wording sub-rule (5) as follows or to this effect:

"(5) If the court is not satisfied that the property or any part of it belongs to the judgment-debtor, B it shall make an order releasing it, or such part of it, from attachment."

It is instructive to note, I think, that in objection proceedings conducted in higher courts under the provisions of Order XXI Rules 57 and 58 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1966, C the objector, to quote the latter rule, "must adduce evidence to show that at the date of attachment he had some interest in ... the property attached."

I adhere to those words. In my view, the learned District Magistrate in the present case, like his learned brother in Paskali's case supra, strayed into an error in law in D entertaining the view that in objection proceedings the onus of proof lies on the judgment-creditor. As, I hope, clearly demonstrated in the passage I have ventured to quote, the onus in such proceedings lies on the objector. In the instant case, therefore, E the burden of proof lay on the respondent. That statement brings me to a consideration of the second matter.

2. THE EFFECT OF THE FAILURE BY THE APPLICANT TO CROSS-EXAMINE THE JUDGMENT-DEBTOR ON HIS ASSERTION THAT F THE TEN HEAD OF CATTLE DID NOT BELONG TO HIM

It is perfectly true, as was remarked by the learned District Magistrate, that the appellant did not cross-examine Mpujila Kusaga on the point. The two cases the learned District G Magistrate cited - Twalla Mohamed Mushi's case and Walter Berkley Hart's case - do not lay down an inflexible rule of law that any important evidence which is not challenged by way of cross-examination must be taken to be conceded as being true. A failure to cross-examine is merely a consideration to be weighed up with all other factors H in the case in deciding the issue of truthfulness or otherwise of the unchallenged evidence. The failure does not necessarily prevent the court from accepting the version of the omitting party on the point. The witness' story may be so improbable, vague or contradictory that the court would be justified to reject it, notwithstanding the opposite I party's failure to challenge it during cross-examination. In any case, it may be apparent on the record of the case, as it is in the instant case, that the opposite party, A in omitting to cross-examine the witness, was not making a concession that the evidence of the witness was true. It must be emphasized to the magistracy, I think, that when litigants who appear before them are unrepresented and not the kind of persons who are likely to understand clearly all the intricacies of court procedure, ordinarily it is B not right to hold against such persons mistakes they might make such as failing to cross-examine. It must not be forgotten that in some customary legal systems in our country, cross-examination was not regarded as an important procedure in a trial. Sometimes the attitude of an ordinary African litigant (or even an accused person) who is C not formally educated is: "let him (his opponent) and his witnesses tell their story. I will let the court know my version of the matter when it is my turn to go into the witness box". It is not, therefore, surprising that when he is later told that his omission to cross-examine, or to cross-examine on an important point, has been taken by the court D as demonstrating or suggesting that he was accepting the witness' version, such a litigant may be tempted to believe that the law is an ass. In the interest of justice, when a litigant who is not likely to be familiar with the intricacies of court procedure appears before him, a magistrate should explain to him, briefly and in a simple language, the E objects of cross-examination - "to impeach the accuracy, credibility and general value of the evidence given in chief; to sift the facts already stated by the witness, to detect and expose discrepancies, or to elicit suppressed facts which will support the case of the F cross-examining party." It should be made perfectly clear to such a litigant that if there is anything relevant which the opposite party or his witness has not said or touched upon in his evidence-in-chief which he would like the court to know and take into account in deciding the case, he can and should try to elicit the thing from the opposite party or his G (the opposite party's) witness, as the case may be. The party should further be informed, in a simple language, that where the witness' version defers materially from his own version, he should, as briefly as possible, put his version to the witness with a view of making him (the witness) agree that what is going to be alleged by him or his witness is H what occurred or was said on the occasion in question. If the party knows any reason why the opposite party or his (the opposite party's) witness should lie or be inclined not to tell the whole truth, then, ordinarily, he should cross-examine him on the point and put the reason to him. Ordinarily, these matters need be explained to the party (or accused) I only once - just before he embarks upon the cross-examination of the first witness. I am confident that if magistrates take A such trouble, irrelevant cross-examination and wrong omissions to cross-examine by such litigants will be minimised. To revert to the instant case, I am of opinion that the failure on the part of the appellant to cross-examine the judgment-debtor on his (the B latter's) assertion that the ten head of cattle did not belong to him cannot, upon the evidence on record, be regarded as amounting to a concession by the appellant that the assertion was true. Finally, I must deal with the third point.

3. THE CREDIBILITY OR OTHERWISE OF THE EVIDENCE GIVEN AND C ADDUCED BY THE RESPONDENT

There were, in my opinion, three principal reasons for disbelieving the evidence adduced by the respondent. The first reason is that, according to the testimony of the two D independent witnesses in the case, the Acting Ward Secretary and the militiaman, although he was present when the attachment of the ten head of cattle was carried out, the respondent uttered no word. It seems improbable, if, as was asserted by him in the witness-box, the animals were his property, that the respondent would not have E protested to the Secretary against the attachment. The second reason relates to the glaring discrepancy between the evidence of the respondent and that of his brother, Samweli Mtubatwa, the man in whose kraal the ten head of cattle were at the time of F attachment. It will be recalled that the respondent asserted that he kept 24 head of cattle in the kraal, but according to his brother, the number of the cattle was 12. This inconsistency is, in my judgment, unresolvable. The gap which yawns between the two assertions demonstrates, in my opinion, that the assertion that the attached head of cattle G are the respondent's property is nothing but a moonshine, designed to defeat justice in this case. Thirdly, according to the evidence of the Acting Ward Secretary and the militiaman, when asked to append his signature to the warrant of attachment, Samweli Mtubatwa refused to do so, saying that the ten head of cattle belonged to the H judgment-debtor. This piece of evidence shows, in my opinion, that Samweli Mtubatwa's word in the witness-box cannot safely be relied upon.

The conclusion I reach, without any hesitation, from the foregoing is that the Primary Court was right in holding, as it did, that the respondent had failed to discharge the onus I lying on him in this matter. I cannot bring myself to entertain any doubts as to the correctness of that court's decision. Unlike the learned District Magistrate, I am of A opinion that, in the legal battle, the appellant had two powerful allies on his side - justice and law. Clearly, the learned District Magistrate erred in refusing to share the opinion of the Primary Court.

The appeal is allowed, the decision of the District Court is recalled and that of the B Primary Court is restored. The appellant will have his costs in this court as well as in the District Court.

[zJDz]Judgment

Omar, Makame and Kisanga, JJ.A.: The appellant Obedi Mtei was sued in the High Court by the respondent Rukia Omari for trespass into her land, Plot No. 560 I Kawe Beach, Kinondoni District. The prayer was also for the demolition of the huts unlawfully built by the appellant. The learned trial judge gave judgment for the A respondent and ordered that the respondent Rukia be put in possession of all that land encroached upon by the appellant. The beacons removed by the appellant were to be put on their right places as approved by the Director of Surveys and Mapping and the B appellant was ordered to demolish the hut he built on the respondent's land. Being dissatisfied by this decision the appellant is now appealing to this court.

The facts of this case are as follows: That one Rukia Mohamed now the respondent was either sold or given as a gift a piece of land at Kawe Beach area, measuring l.25 acres of C land, by one Obeid Mtei who had known her for sometime and the two had helped each other in many ways as good friends. The land was soon measured in the presence of the Chairman of the Allocation Committee, P.W.2, Amimu Hamisi, and both he D appellant and respondent and some elders of the village. Beacons were put there in the form of iron rods. Two weeks later Rukia sent a professional surveyor, P.W.3 who measured the land again and put beacons. Appellant was not there this time. This was in June, l986. In August, l986 when P.W.3, visited the land the second time the two E beacons put by him were not seen, they had obviously been removed and the third beacon was found under the hut which appellant Obeid had built. There was a wire fence stretching from one side of the plot to the other and taking away about 2272 square meters of the respondent's land.

Appellant avers that this extra land which was incorporated in the deed plan was taken F away from his land unlawfully, when respondent sent surveyors to measure and demarcate the land in his absence and allocated 1.5 acres to Rukia instead of 1.25 of the land which he had given her free of charge but which on her insistance he had signed an G agreement signifying that he had sold her the plot for shs. 5,000/=. There was another piece of land bought by the respondent from villagers which was added to this one obtained from the appellant. Appellant does not dispute this former piece. He is only concerned with the 1.25 acres sold or given to her which was originally part of his plot. H

The Director of Surveys and Mapping who was called by the appellant to the farm after he had complained to him of the irregularities in the fixing of beacons, had this to say:

Normally before we make any survey it is the duty of the Land Officer to make sure that all the I third party interests are cleared and if it is a farm, the land officer must see to it that the owners agree on the A boundaries.

In the present case the surveyor did not follow the procedure in that he did not involve all the neighbours and he did not have a certificate signed by the Land Officer and the B neighbours regarding his survey and the boundaries. Further he said in his testimony "I see this plan Exh.

P.6 it was approved by my office. I see these beacons YR 928 and YR 929. If they were removed it is very serious". C

Considering that the deed plan had been prepared as a result of the survey of P.W.3 in a manner which did not take into account the above procedure of having the owners approve of the boundaries and signifying their approval on a particular certificate which the Director of Surveys had shown to the court while giving evidence, we are of the view that the survey should be conducted again. D

We believe there would be no area of disagreement once the parties are present as they are to our knowledge in full agreement as to what the acreage of each of their plots is.

In the result we allow the appeal to the extent that a re-survey is ordered. The deed plan of plot 560 might or might not change in acreage depending on what part of each of their E respective plots it should embody. The resurvey should be conducted on the lines suggested by D.W.2, Mr. Edwin Njau the Director of Surveys and Mapping, as shown above. We note that there is no dispute regarding the no mansland. F

In a suit before a trial Primary Court to redeem a mortgage purportedly entered into A more than 70 years ago, the appellant succeeded. On appeal by the respondent the District Court found that there had been no mortgage arrangement as contended by the appellant and that even if there had been one the period for redeeming it had lapsed. B Accordingly the Primary Court decision was reversed.

The High Court, on further appeal found that there was a mortgage arrangement but its redemption was hopelessly barred by limitation.

Held: The Law of Limitation Act, l97l defines a "mortgage" as including, where C customary law applies, as in this case, any arrangement under customary law which has similar effect and incidents as a mortgage. A suit to redeem land in possession of a mortgagee must be brought within twelve years as prescribed under the First Schedule D to the Law of Limitation Act, Part Kyando, J.: The appellant's uncle, Dilunganika Mwanamvuvulu, allegedly mortgaged his 12 shambas to the respondent's uncle Kibuwi bin Mbukwa for three goats, a pair of F "amarekani" pieces of cloth a measure (pishi) of salt and a cock. This was when the appellant was only a baby; he is 76 years now. The respondent is 109 years and he says he has been using the shambas since he was a young man, upon the death of his uncle G Kibuwi bin Mbukwa, from whom he inherited them. His position is that appellant's uncle sold the shambas to his (respondent's) uncle and it is not that he mortgaged them as contended by the appellant. The appellant filed a suit in the Primary Court at Tawa, Morogoro District, seeking to redeem the shambas from the respondent. He succeeded, H and the respondent appealed. On 8/9/88 Shillogila PDM on appeal reversed the decision of the Primary Court holding that there had been no mortgage arrangement as contended or alleged by the appellant and that even if there had been one the period for redeeming the shambas has elapsed. The appellant now appeals to this court against the I decision of learned Principal District Magistrate.

[zJDz]Judgment

In the first place I accept that the arrangement pleaded by the appellant was a mortgage A transaction. The Law of Limitation Act, l97l, defines a "Mortgage" as including, where customary law applies, as in this case, any arrangement under customary law which has similar effect and incidents as a mortgage. This, as I have said, was such an arrangement B between appellant's and respondent's deceased uncles. Under the first schedule to the Law of Limitation Act, Part I, a suit to redeem land and possession of a mortgagee must be brought within twelve years. And under s.3(1) of this same Act, every proceeding for which a period of limitation has been provided in the First Schedule to the Act and which C is instituted after the prescribed period of limitation "shall be dismissed whether or not limitation has been set up as a defence."

The shambas in the instant case were mortgaged many years ago, when, as I have said already, the appellant, was on his own admission, only a baby and he is 76 years old now. He did not even witness the transaction and as the learned Principal District D Magistrate in the Court below rightly observed, he had been only informed about it by others. His attempts to redeem the shambas now are, as far as the law is concerned, therefore, hopeless as he is barred by limitation. E

The redemption should have been done within twelve years of his uncle mortgaging the shamba's to the respondent's uncle. That this was not done within these years the appellant's rights to the shambas, have been extinguished-under the provisions of s.39 of the Law of Limitation Act, 1971. Like the learned Principal District Magistrate therefore, F I have to hold for the respondent and dismiss, as I hereby do, the appellant's appeal to this Court, with costs. The shambas are to remain the legitimate property of the respondent.

Munyera, J.: The appellant was the plaintiff on the trial. He sued the respondent for E recovery of eleven (11) head of cattle he alleged were his inheritance. It was agreed the respondent was his step mother, his father married her and lived with her for more than 20 years. His father died in 1986 and by then he (appellant) had his separate homestead. F On the deceased's death everything remained in the hands of the respondent. In 1987 the appellant filed this suit claiming the property left by his deceased father, in particular he claimed eleven head of cattle then in possession of the respondent. In her defence the defendant/respondent argued the cattle were acquired through joint efforts of her G deceased husband and herself. She called several witnesses who told the court that the clan council had allowed her to retain 8 out of the 11 cattle left by her husband. The trial court unanimously rejected the respondent's defence and gave judgment for the appellant and ordered the respondent to surrender all 11 cows to him. The respondent H successfully appealed to the District Court. In turn the appellant brought this appeal, blaming the Senior District Magistrate for reversing the judgment of the trial court.

The trial court erred in law. It was undisputed the respondent is the widow of the I appellant's father, they lived together for about 25 years although they were not blessed with children. It appears the appellant's mother had gone away and he himself was brought up by his step mother, A the respondent. Rule 77 of GN 279/63 provides a childless widow is entitled to maintenance out of the property left by her deceased husband. In this connection there was evidence the clan council had given 8 cows to the respondent and the decision was B a wise one, the trial court ought to have abided by it. For that reason the decision of the District Court awarding her 8 out of ll cattle left by the deceased was a sound one and is upheld. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

[zJDz]Judgment
Maina, J.: In a suit field at Mtwara Urban Primary Court, the appellant was ordered to A pay to the respondent a sum of shs.
1,000/= per month for maintenance of a child born out of wedlock. The appellant was dissatisfied as he thought that the amount awarded was too high. He appealed to the District Court which enhanced the amount to shs.1,192/90 per month. This appeal seeks B an order by this court to reduce the amount awarded by the lower courts.
There was no dispute that the appellant is the father of the child born out of wedlock following the appellant's love affairs with the child's mother who is the respondent in this case. The appellant had in fact been paying money for the maintenance of the child, but it C seems that misunderstandings arose between the parties on the amount which was being paid. The appellant's contention is that he cannot afford to pay the amounts awarded by the lower courts considering his income and the people who depend on him. The Primary Court did not even consider the appellant's ability to pay the amount D awarded. No effort was even made by the trial Primary Court to find the incomes of the parties. The amount of shs.1,000/= was awarded arbitrarily. In a case for maintenance, it is important for a trial court to find out the income of the person sued in order to be E able to decide the amount to be paid. The Primary Court erred in ordering the appellant to pay shs.1,000/= monthly without even finding out the appellant's income and ability to pay.
The District Court took into consideration the appellant's monthly salary of sha.3,578/= and ordered that the appellant should pay one-third of his monthly salary as maintenance F of the child. The learned district magistrate cited the Fourth Schedule to the Magistrate's Court Act, paragraph 3(3)(c)(iii) which provides that attachable salary "shall not be deemed to include two - thirds of any salary or wage which exceeds one G hundred and fifty shillings monthly." That provision means that two-thirds of a persons salary should not be attached. It does not mean that one-third of a salary is automatically the amount of maintenance for a child. The amount which a child should be paid as maintenance will depend on the circumstances of each case. That amount cannot automatically be one-third of the salary of the child's father. H
There was no dispute that the appellant has a wife and three children who depend on him. Two of the children are in secondary schools. These are factors which the learned district magistrate should have considered in deciding the amount to be paid to the child I born out of wedlock. The appellant's children and his wife are entitled to a share in the appellant's salary. It is unfair and unreasonable to give to one child one-third of the salary, and the appellant, his wife and A the other three children to share the remaining two-thirds of the salary. All the appellant's children and other dependents are entitled to equal share of the salary for their maintenance. The order of the District Court that the respondent should be paid one-third of the appellant's salary is set aside. B

I have considered all the circumstances in this case including the appellant's salary and number of dependents. I order that the appellant pays to the respondent the sum of sh.600/= per month for the maintenance of the child, effective from July, 1988. C

Banturaki, for the Plaintiff A

Rugarabamu, for the defendant

Mwalusanya, J.: The plaintiff the National Bank of Commerce, is claiming from the B defendant Saidi Ally Yakut shs.283,684/40 which is an outstanding sum in the defendant's current account by way of an overdraft at Karagwe Branch of the N.B.C. It is said the defendant fraudulently obtained overdraft facilities at the said bank to the tune of sum of money that is claimed. The defendant who was represented by counsel Mr. C Rugarabamu denied that he ever made an application for an overdraft, let alone a fraudulent application for an overdraft. The plaintiff was represented by counsel Mr. Banturaki from the Tanzania Legal Corporation.

The sole witness for the plaintiff was Mr. Edward E. Mbogo (PW l) who is the current branch manager of N.B.C. at Karagwe since May l985. Prior to that, the branch D manager was one Mr. Madaha. It is common ground that the defendant has a current account with the N.B.C. at Karagwe. According to the records in possession of PW 1 the defendant on 5/5/l984 deposited a sum of shs.279,500/= in his account using a country cheque of that sum that was drawn by a customer having an account at N.B.C. E Market Street, DSM. Then on 7/5/l984 the said defendant was allowed to draw the shs.279,000/= from his account using his cheque which is Exh.D in court. The witness said that they paid the defendant before his country cheque was cleared in DSM; and that was because they trusted the defendant. F

Then the witness PW1 testified that they sent the country cheque to Market Street, DSM for clearance. But it is said the said cheque never reached DSM, as it got lost. According to para 6 of the plaint it is said: 'That the cheque mentioned above was G destroyed at Karagwe Branch and never reached the paying Bank, Market Street, DSM.' So we can't tell if it was sent to DSM or it was lost at N.B.C. Karagwe Branch. Be that as it may, at the end of l985, it was decided to contact the defendant so that he accepts that sum to be an overdraft. H

However the defendant refused to accept the sum of shs.279,500/= as an overdraft. So that is why the bank filed this suit.

As earlier indicated the defendant in his defence emphatically denied that he ever applied for an overdraft let alone a fraudulent application for an overdraft. He testified that I throughout the transactions he dealt with the branch manager of the bank one

MWALUSANYA J

Mr. Madaha. He said that on 5/5/l984 the bank manager Mr. Madaha went to see him A with his relative who was allegedly coming from Shinyanga. It is said this relative of the bank manager was staying at the Guest House of the defendant in Room 5. It is further stated that the bank manager revealed that his relative wanted some cash and had a country cheque for shs.279,500/= drawn at the Market Street, N.B.C. DSM. The B defendant said that he told the manager that he had then only shs.l00,000/= cash, which he handed over to the manager, and the manager handed it over to his relative. At the same time it is said that the bank manager deposited the shs.279,500/= in the defendant's account vide paying-in-slip which is Exh.B in court. It is said two days later, C that is on 7/5/l984 the bank manager phoned the defendant stating that the country cheque he had deposited had been cleared in DSM and so he could come at the bank and draw the shs.279,500/= and pay the relative of the manager the outstanding sum of shs.l79,500/=. The defendant duly went to the bank and drew shs.270,000/= vide his D personal cheque Exh.D. The said cheque was authorised for payment by the bank manager and the bank accountant. After that it is said the defendant duly handed over shs.179,500/= to the bank manager so that he could hand over to his relative. E

The defendant further stated that at the end of 1985 he was surprised to learn that the country cheque had been lost and that they wanted him to pay the bank the shs.279,500/=. He said that he refused to accept the suggestion that shs.279,500/= should be regarded as an overdraft. F

Counsel for the defendant Mr. Rugarabamu submitted that his client was not liable. He said that the bank was negligent and so the blame lies squarely on them. He contended that as the bank had allowed his client to collect the money before the cheque was cleared in DSM and later the said country cheque was destroyed by the bank, then the G bank was to blame. He said that plaintiff bank owed a duty of care to the defendant not to destroy the country cheque or else they should not have allowed the defendant to withdraw the money until the cheque was cleared. Mr. Rugarabamu cited the case of National Bank of Commerce v Parma Shoe Company Civil Appeal No. 11/l988 by H the Tanzania Court of Appeal (unreported) which was a decision from an appeal in the case No. 56 of l983 which I decided at the High Court Mwanza.

In my judgment I find that this claim has absolutely no legal basis. The collecting bank I owes a duty of care to its customers, such that it conducts its activities with care and circumspection.

There is need for the banks to display vigilance when handling their customer's financial A matters. Here is the case when the defendant was allowed to withdraw the money from his account on the strength of the word of the bank manager that his country cheque had been cleared. The bank manager is a senior officer of the bank and so he B has to be trusted. It cannot be doubted that the defendant was so told, as the plaintiff bank had no courage to call that bank manager as a witness so that he could refute the word of the defendant. At the same time we are told that the country cheque was destroyed by some bank officials at the N.B.C. Karagwe Branch - see para six of the C plaint. In these circumstances how can the defendant be blamed for the destruction of the country cheque which was destroyed by employees of the plaintiff bank? The blame surely lies squarely on the plaintiff bank. The bank was grossly negligent and the defendant had no hand in it. D

I agree with the defendant that at no time did he ever apply for an overdraft, let alone made a fraudulent application for an overdraft. The loss to the bank was caused by the employees of the bank, arising from their negligent or deliberate conduct. I am surprised that the bank had the guts to come to court to seek relief in the mattet they have presented it. E

In the event this suit is dismissed with costs. I enter judgment for the defendant.

Mr. Mkono referred to Rule G 35(1) of the English Companies (Winding-Up) Rules, 1929 which are made applicable to Tanganyika by section 348 of the Companies Ordinance, Cap. 212. He argued further that since we are dealing with applied law the rules are mandatory. Mr. Mkono revisited the facts in this case which were that the affidavit was ordered to be filed on H 7/6/89 when the respondents had been served on 6/5/89. This would be 24 days after the last day in which they could file their affidavit in opposition and that as such they were completely barred from appearing in court or to do anything in relation to this winding up. Mr. Mkono submitted further that there was no provision in the law for an I extension of time to file an affidavit in opposition to a petition for winding up. He referred to section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code and submitted that the A Civil Procedure Code was inapplicable because there was specific provision on winding up proceedings namely the Winding Up Rules. He submitted also that because the affidavit in opposition to the petition was not made in time he found no cause to B answer it within 3 days as rule 35(2) of the Winding-Up Rules requires. Mr. Mkono submitted that because of what he had said above, there was no affidavit in opposition to the petition and therefore the respondents were strangers to the petition and they cannot plead anything as the petition remains undefended. He prayed that the liquidator be C appointed. He concluded that in case the court ruled otherwise then he would ask for leave to file a reply to the affidavit in opposition to the petition.

In reply Mr. Mkatte, learned counsel for the respondent company submitted that the D preliminary objection was misconceived. He argued that after the petition was filed on 6/5/89, there was a notice given to the respondent dated 6/5/89, requiring the respondent to appear before the Registrar on 13/5/89. Mr. Mkatte appeared on that date and it was agreed that the reply to the petition be filed by 9/6/89. Mr. Mkatte E submitted further that the Court in its inherent jurisdiction made the order as to when the reply to the petition should be filed. He went on to submit that meanwhile a chamber application had been filed for appointment of a liquidator and the hearing of it was to be F on 16/6/89. On 16/6/89 Mr. Mkatte sought leave to file a counter affidavit to the application for appointment of a liquidator and leave was granted without any opposition and the petitioner's advocate applied to file a reply to the counter affidavit which was yet to be filed first. Then the matter came for hearing.

Mr. Mkatte submitted that he agreed with the rules of the Companies (Winding-Up) G Rules 1929, but he invited the court to look at the proviso to section 348 of the Companies Ordinance Cap. 212. He contended that what was done by the court in this case was not inconsistent with the provisions of Cap. 212. He therefore submitted that he was properly and competently before the court. As for Mr. Mkono's prayer for leave H to file a reply, Mr. Mkatte contended that he should not be granted leave because he had been given more than 3 days to do so.

Mr. Mkatte then went on to argue his own preliminary point which is to the effect that the petition is based on a guarantee given by the respondent, but that the respondent is I contending that he is discharged from the guarantee by reason of material variation of the agreement. He submitted that it is arguable whether the respondent is liable on the A guarantee or not, and under section 48 and 85 of the Law of Contract Ordinance there are arguments to be resolved. Concerning the letter replied on in para 10 of the petition, Mr. Mkatte contended that in the respondent's affidavit it was averred that the letter was B obtained by undue influence and coercion. He submitted that because of this it was not meet that a provisional liquidator be appointed. He contended that such liquidator would have no locus standi unless the two legal points raised above are resolved and that the dispute over the guarantee can only be resolved in another way other than the petition, C because once a debt is disputed then no proceedings for a petition based on the debt can be entertained and should be dismissed. He said that the rationale for that was that the petitioner is not a creditor in terms of section 169 of the Companies Ordinance and therefore he cannot petition for a winding up of the company. D

Mr. Mkatte referred the Court to various authorities. The first authority was Re Tanganyika Produce Agency Ltd. [1957] E.A. 241 which held that a disputed debt cannot be used in winding up proceedings. Then he referred to case of Re Lympne Investments Ltd [1972] 2 All ER 385 which held that: E

(i) it would be wrong to stand over a winding up petition in order that the disputed issues might be resolved in other proceedings; F

(ii) when a debt was disputed on substantial grounds the petitioner was not a creditor within the meaning of section 244 of the Companies Act who had a locus standi to present a petition even if the company were insolvent; and G

(iii) the exercise of a dispute on substantial grounds as to the existence of a debt defeated the contention that the company had "neglected" within the meaning of section 223(a) of the Companies Act to pay the debt. H

The other authority was the case of Mann and Another v Goldstein and Another [1968] 2 All ER 769 at 776i and 778c and f. It was held here that as the existence of the debt on which each winding-up petition was founded was disputed on grounds showing a substantial defence requiring investigation, the petitioner did not establish that I he was a creditor and thus had the locus standi to present the petition and the companies court was not the appropriate court to decide the A dispute; accordingly, the presentation of the petitions was an abuse of the process of the court, and injunctions would be granted restraining, until trial or further order, the advertisement or prosecution of the winding-up petitions. B

Mr. Mkatte also referred to Palmer's Company Precedents 17th Edition at page 26. He prayed for a ruling to the effect that the petitioner has no locus standi and the petition to be dismissed with costs.

In reply, Mr. Mkono submitted that there was no way in which the winding up rules C could be avoided and that even the inherent powers of the court could not be used to override the express provisions of the law, and a violation of the rules could not be good grounds for dispensing justice. He went on to argue that the petition did not concern only the petitioner as there were another creditors who had joined this petition. Mr Mkono D conceded however that where there is a dispute about the debt there cannot be a winding up. Concerning the validity of the guarantee, Mr. Mkono stated that issue was sub judice. He however reiterated his stand that the petition was undefended as nothing E had been filed in answer to it in time. He even stated that he was prepared to enter a consent judgment to the effect that as far as the guarantee matters are concerned, they should be stayed.

Mr. Mkono further submitted that a provisional liquidator should be appointed because the petition was undefended. He also said that the insolvency of the respondent had not F been denied.

Mr. Mkatte was allowed to reply in connection with his preliminary point and he elaborated on what was meant by section 169 of Cap. 212. He submitted that if the petitioner has no locus standi there cannot be any question of a liquidator being appointed. G

The points for consideration and decision in this case are not many. One of them is with regard to the preliminary point of Mr. Mkono to the effect that since the affidavit in answer to the petition was filed out of time the petition is undefended and counsel for the respondent cannot appear in any manner in court. I can see the force of the argument of H Mr. Mkono. It is quite correct to say that this court must apply the Companies (Winding-up) Rules of 1929 in terms of section 348 of the Companies Ordinance Cap. 212. It is also quite correct to say that rule 35(1) of those Rules which are English Companies Rules, requires the affidavit in opposition to the petition for a winding up to I be filed within 7 days of the date on which the affidavit verifying the petition is filed. The respondent did not file the affidavit in opposition within 7 days. According to rule 35(1) he was out A of time. But that is not all. We have a rather peculiar situation. I will set out the facts briefly because Mr. Mkatte did already refer to them in his submission. When the petition was presented to the court, the Registrar issued a notice of a petition for winding up to the respondent notifying the respondent of the presentation of the petition and of B the date for the mention of the petition. The petitioner was being required by that notice to appear in court for the mention of the petition. The notice of the petition was directed to be sent to the respondent's advocate and copy to the petitioner's advocate. The C appearance was to be seven days from the date of the notice. On 13/5/89 both advocates appeared and it was ordered that the affidavit in opposition should be filed by 9/6/89 and the case would be mentioned on 10/6/89. Now, in view of the above facts, can it be said that the respondent was time barred to present his affidavit in answer to D the petition? According to rule 35(1), he was certainly out of time. But it is the court itself which made an order that he should file his affidavit by 9/6/89 which would be over 30 days since the affidavit verifying the petition had been filed. Mr. Mkono argues that even the court cannot extend the time to file the affidavit in opposition once the E prescribed time has passed because that would be a violation of the rule and that the court had no inherent power to order an extension after the time had lapsed.

Mr. Mkatte thinks otherwise. His stand is that the respondent did everything in obedience to the orders of the court. He cannot be said to have done anything wrong F and that the court certainly had power to do what it ordered. I should add on the record that the petitioner's counsel never objected to the order of 13/5/89 giving the respondent time to file his affidavit by 9/6/89. It would appear that the provisions of rule 35 were not in the contemplation of the petitioner's counsel or the Registrar of the High Court. It G seems to me that the process set out on 13/5/89 cannot be reversed. If the petitioner had any objection to what was being ordered by the court on 13/5/89 he should have pointed out to the court about rule 35. The respondent was led into believing that all was in order. The petitioner is now estopped to raise this argument about the 7 days H limitation according to rule 35.

Whereas I can see nothing in rule 35 which gives power to the Court to extend the time for the filing of an affidavit in opposition, I am unable in the circumstances of this case to hold that the preliminary point of Mr. Mkono should be sustained because such point I should have been raised at the first appearance in court.

BAHATI J

Service on the respondent was on 6/5/89 and the parties appeared in court on 13/5/89 A and agreed to the affidavit in reply to be filed by 9/6/89. The petitioner cannot be heard now to say that the affidavit in opposition was filed out of time when he consented to the court making an order that it be filed after more than 7 days. It would be inequitable to sustain the petitioner's objection in this case. B

In Miscellaneous Civil Case No. 128 of 1968 - In Matter of petition under section 163, 167, and 169 of the Companies Ordinance - In re African Marble Company Ltd (unreported) Mapigano, J. made a ruling in connection with the non-compliance by the C petitioner with rule 27 of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules 1929 and rule 29. These rules require the verification of the petition by an affidavit within 4 days after the petition is presented (rule 29), and the advertisement of the petition seven days before the hearing (rule 27). None of these matters had been done by the petitioner. Mapigano, J. D observed in his ruling thus: "I should think that the non-compliance in this matter was purely due to the ignorance of the rules on the part of the petitioner and its advocate and not a deliberate one. I apply my discretion and grant the petitioner 21 days from today to rectify the errors". E

A reading of rules 27 and 29 will show that no discretion for extension of time within which to do what is required in the rules is provided in these rules; just like is the case with rule 35(2). Yet the court in that case allowed the petitioner more time to do what is required by these rules. With respect, I agree with the ruling of Mapigano, J. which F exhibits good sense and equity. In our case, the position is similar. The learned Registrar gave the respondent with the consent of the petitioner time to file the affidavit in answer to the petition. I am of the view that the learned Registrar had power to do so. It seems to me that the second proviso to section 348 of the Companies G Ordinance would appear to allow such a thing when interpreted liberally. The interpretation of rules 27 and 29 by Mapigano, J. to include a discretion of the Court to extend time for the doing of what the rules require, would appear to be based on the liberal and wide interpretation of the second proviso to section 348, and I agree with H such interpretation. I would therefore overrule Mr. Mkono's preliminary point and hold that the affidavit in opposition to the petition is properly before the court and that the respondent has a locus standi in these proceedings.

The other important point for consideration and decision concerns the preliminary point I raised by Mr. Mkatte for the respondent to the effect that the petitioner has no locus standi. I have already set out the arguments for and against this point. The law on this point is A very clear and it is as per the authorities cited by Mr. Mkatte namely that a disputed debt cannot be used in a winding up proceedings (vide Re Tanganyika Produce Agency Ltd supra). Then there is Re Lympne Investments cited above which held: (i) it would be wrong to stand over a winding up petition in order that the disputed issues B might be resolved in other proceedings; (ii) when a debt is disputed on substantial grounds the petitioner was not a creditor within the meaning of section 244 of the Companies Act who had a locus standi to present a petition even if the company were insolvent; (iii) the existence of a dispute on substantial grounds as to the existence of a C debt defeated the contention that the company had "neglected" within the meaning of section 223(a) of the Companies Act to pay the debt. With respect, I entirely agree with the holding in the above cited cases. Indeed even Mr. Mkono did not seriously disagree with the above holdings. He seemed to be submitting that the petition should be stayed D to await the decision on the guarantee liability. With respect to Mr. Mkono, that would not be possible and indeed the cases just cited would appear to be against that.

In the answer to the petition the respondent annexed various documents showing that the E debt in question is seriously disputed and that there are firm grounds for the dispute.
Furthermore there is the case of Mann and another v Goldstein and another also cited above which held that as the existence of the debt on which each winding up F petition was founded was disputed on grounds showing a substantial defence requiring investigation, the petitioner did not establish that he was a creditor and thus had the locus standi to present the petition and the companies court was not the appropriate court to decide the dispute; accordingly, the presentation of the petitions was an abuse G of the process of the court, ...
Mr. Mkatte had equated the English Companies Act section 224 with out section 269 of the Companies Ordinance. I agree that the substance of these 2 section are the same. Furthermore I also agree with the holding in Goldestain's case above. H
Now, in view of the above authorities and in view of what is contained in the answer to the petition, since the petition is based solely on a disputed debt, I agree with Mr. Mkatte that the petitioner has no locus standi in this matter since he is not a creditor within the meaning of section 169 of the Companies Ordinance. I will I therefore sustain Mr. Mkatte's preliminary point and hold that the petitioner has no locus A standi in this matter. I therefore dismiss the petition with costs.

Petition dismissed.

Paulo Lema is appealing against an order made by Munyera, J. in which the learned judge reviewed his own order made in revision, in a matter arising from a suit to resist E the sale of a house in a public auction. One Steven Lulyalya had two civil suits against him in the Resident Magistrate Court, Mwanza. He sold to the present respondent Wilson Chuma, a house he owned at Igoma, Mwanza on December 15, 1984 while already in November 1984 there was an injunction restraining Lulyalya from disposing of F the house. The same house was bought by Paulo Lema at a public auction on March 3rd 1985. Later Chuma successfully applied before another magistrate to have the sale to Lema set aside and to find Chuma's private purchase of the house valid. An inspection note was sent up to the High Court with the observation that some of the pages of the G record had been removed when Chuma's application was heard so the magistrate had decided the case on the basis of a misrepresentation of fact. The learned judge accordingly set aside the lower count's order and declared the court broker's sale to Lema absolute. Following the High Court's decision, Chuma applied to the same court H for review of its order in accordance with 0.42 of the Civil Procedure Code. Munyera J. was impressed by the Arguments marshalled on behalf of Chuma so he confessed himself in error set aside his own revisional order and ordered that the decision of the trial court be restored in its entirely. The decision aggrieved the appellant hence the I present appeal.

[zJDz]Judgment

Makame, Kisanga and Omar, JJ.A.: Paulo Lema, who is represented in this appeal by Mr. Kahangwa, learned advocate, is appealing against an order made by Munyera, J. in which the learned judge reviewed his own order he had made in revision, in a matter arising out of a suit in connection with which the present respondent Wilson Chuma, now D represented by Mr. Rutashobya, learned counsel, filed objection proceedings resisting the sale of a house the present appellant had bought at a public auction. The history of the matter is rather complex but it seems to us that the issue before us now is narrow and not so difficult. E

Briefly, the history of the matter is like this: A person called Steven Lulyalya had two civil suits against him in the Resident Magistrate's Court, Mwanza. It is asserted that he sold to Wilson Chuma, the present respondent, a house he, Lulyalya, owned at Igoma, Mwanza, when there was already an injunction, in at least one of the civil cases, F restraining the said Lulyalya from disposing of the said house. The sale to Chuma was on 15th December, 1984 whereas the same house was bought by the appellant Lema at a public auction on 3rd March, 1985. Chuma successfully applied to have the sale to Lema set aside so the result was that Chuma's private purchase of the house was found G to be valid. This decision was by Rugaimukamu, R.M. while the trial magistrate in both the main suits was Mwihava, R.M.

In due course Matui, S.R.M. sent up to the High Court an Inspection Note in which he H observed that some pages of the record had been removed when Chuma's application was heard so the magistrate (Rugaimukamu, R.M.) was not aware of some orders which had earlier on been made prohibiting and restraining Lulyalya from transferring etc. the house at Igoma. As aforesaid, Munyera, J. revised Mr. Rugaimukamu's order and set it I aside. The learned judge was satisfied that Mr. Rugaimukamu's decision was based on a misrepresentation of facts as a result of some of the pages of the record A disappearing. The learned judge accordingly set aside the lower court's order and declared the court broker's sale to Lema absolute.

Following the High Court's decision Chuma applied to the same court to review its order B in accordance with Order 42 of the Civil Procedure Code. Chuma was in that application advocated for by Mr. Kidela, learned counsel, while Lema was represented by Mr. Kahangwa, learned advocate.

Munyera, J. was impressed by the arguments marshalled on behalf of Chuma so he C confessed himself in error, set aside his own revisional order, and ordered that "the decision of the trial court is restored in its entirety."

Lema is in turn appealing to this court to fault the second decision by Munyera, J. He is, D in other words, asking us to say that Munyera, J. erred in reviewing his order. That is to say, Lema wants the position to remain the same as the one reached by Munyera, J. in the Revisional Order.

Order 42 specifies the situations in which a party may apply for a review. For ease of reference we reproduce the relevant portion of the said Order 42: E

1 - (1)Any person considering himself aggrieved -

(a) by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed, but from which no appeal has been preferred; or

(b) by a decree or order from which no appeal is allowed, and who, from the discovery of F new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made, or on account of some mistake or error apparent on the G face of the record, or for any other sufficient reason, desires to obtain a review of the decree passed or order made against him, may apply for a review of judgment to the court which passed the decree or made the order. H

Looking at both Chuma's Application for review and the arguments by Mr. Kidela in the High Court, we are with respect, completely at a loss to appreciate in what sense Order 42 could legitimately be called into play: Chuma urged that, among other things, the High I Court was misled that some pages of the record, containing the injunction were removed, that a temporary injunction cannot prevent a party from alienating his property, and he purported to guide the A learned judge to a legal provision contained in Order 37 rule 2(3). In the course of his arguments in the High Court Mr. Kidela did not appear to challenge that some pages of the record were removed, in fact he accepted that an injunction was granted in November, 1984, that is before the private sale to Chuma, only he got mixed up as to B which civil case was relevant. His main support for the application was rather his contention that the proper and only course open to the court if Lulyalya sold the house in defiance of the injunction was to attach the property under Order 37. Mr. Kahangwa's brief submission in reply was that the injunction was binding on Lulyalya and Chuma C bought at his own risk: Lulyalya should have applied under order 37(4) to have the injunction discharged etc. before he sold the house to Chuma.

We think, with great respect, that the attachment mentioned in Order 37 rule (3), which is what Mr. Kidela relied on, and which is clearly what influenced the learned judge as D being missing, is not the attachment as a result or, following as a consequence of the injunction. The attachment is that of party who is disobeying the injunction order. Munyera, J. concluded that in this case no attachment was made as a result of the E disobedience (to observe the injunction order) and mixed up that attachment with the issue as to whether what was done by the trial court before Lulyalya sold to Chuma amounted to attaching the property to the extent of forbidding Lulyalya to sell. That was a question of law, in our view not envisaged by Order 42. The course open to Chuma if F he was dissatisfied with Munyera, J.'s decision in revision was to seek to appeal to this court against the decision which confirmed the sale to Lema as indeed he indicated he would do in Paragraph 3 of his affidavit at Page 49 of the proceedings. G

We are anxious that it should be understood that we are not concerned with the merits of the decision in the revisional order. It is not the function of the present exercise. All that we are really saying is that the learned High Court judge was not entitled to take another look at his own decision in the circumstances and say that his exposition of the law was incorrect. H

We are of the view that this appeal has merit and it is accordingly allowed with costs. The position is therefore as established in the revisional order, that is the house is the present appellant's unless Chuma succeeds in dislodging him from that position. I

Appeal allowed.

Eight appellants were charged in the District Court with robbery and after the conclusion of the trial the lst, 2nd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th appellants were convicted as charged D and the 3rd appellant was convicted for being an accessory after the fact of robbery. The alleged robbery took place at night. All appealed against conviction and sentence. There were two issues to be determinal before the High Court. First, whether the appellant, except the 3rd, were properly identified at the scene of crime. Second, E whether it was proper to convict the 3rd appellant for being an accessory after the fact of robbery.
Held: (i) Where the conditions for identification are unfavourable corroboration is F necessary;
(ii) the evidence of identification, except for that against the 2nd appellant, was very unreliable in the circumstance of first case and no conviction could stand without corroboration;
(iii) the conviction of the 3rd appellant for being an accessory to the fact of G robbery was wrong as the offence though minor,was not cognate to it.

Kimomogoro, State Attorney, for the Republic
[zJDz]Judgment
Chua, J.: Seven appellants namely (1) Nahum Salieya Mbise (2) Antony Yohana Juma (3) Stanslaus Erneo Furushi (4) Mohamed Bakari Faraji (5) Jumanne Bakari Faraji (6) I Idi Nangu Kitundu and (7) Isack Simon Kiteyo were found guilty in different offences and sentence as follows: All the appellants except the 3rd one were found guilty of robbery A with violence and sentenced to seven years imprisonment; the third appellant was found guilty of being an accessory after the fact of robbery and sentenced to 7 years imprisonment. The convictions are being contested in this appeal.

There was unchallenged evidence from Naftali Mayombo (PW l) and Mohamed B Ibrahim (PW 2) that on 7/6/88 at about 9.30 p.m. bandits raided Lamshuku Mining Camp and in the process broke into several homes stole properties and injured several people. It was further proved that the night in question was dark and that some of the bandits who carried guns had put on military combat fatigues with camouflage. The issue C at the trial was whether the appellants were identified as being members of the gang.

According to Naftali Mayombo while he slept he heard gun shots and people shouting. Then suddenly the door of his house was forced open. He stated further that the lst, 2nd, D 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th accused entered. How was he able to identify these people? He went on to say that the lst accused was holding a torch whose light he directed on a bed. A little later, the witness stated that he identified the lst, 2nd and 4th accused by voice for he had worked with them. For the 5th, 6th and 7th accused he said that he identified E them when they went to the store. He does not reveal whether there was any light at that store.

He did not state whether these persons had put on any hats or caps to disguise their appearances. Be that as it may, the impression conveyed by PW 1 was that he was not F absolutely certain of what he stated in court for by first stating that he identified the lst, 2nd and 4th accused by voice and a bit later stating that they wore military dresses he was thereby contradicting himself. One would have expected the witness to say that he identified these people by their appearance if he saw them and knew them before that G day and not by their voices which is an unreliable means of identification.

The second identifying witness stated that when bandits broke into his house he saw the 2nd and 7th accused enter. He stated further that he had worked with the 2nd accused for one year and that the second accused talked to him telling him that they were H relatives and that he should show them where he had kept gemstones. As for the 7th accused he states that he had seen him at Mbuguni though he did not specify in connection with what business he had seen him. The witness had stated that right from the beginning of the episode he had dived under his bed. He nevertheless asserted that I the 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th accused were outside without explaining whether he went out of the house and if he did so whether there was any light out there A for the night was said to have been dark.

In respect of the first accused PW 2 stated that he did not see him that night while for the 3rd accused he deposed that on the l0/6/l988 he heard him tell one person called Tall and other culprits to run away lest they be arrested by the police. B

When FW2 was being cross examined he stated that the 2nd accused had entered his house while light was on but he did not describe what type of light was on. The importance of describing the type of light was vital in a case which depended almost solely on visual identification. C

The case also had another limb of evidence that could have been used to corroborate the evidence of identification if it had been properly handled. PW 1 in his evidence had stated that he heard a car leave the scene of crime and on peeping through a window D noted that it was a white pick up. He did not however note its registration number. Thus the evidence of Detective Corporal Kitimba (PW 4) that upon receiving information that there was a white pick up with registration Nos. UF 440 hidden at Tengeru, that he went there and seazed it, that the 1st accused went to claim the vehicle on behalf of the registered owner one Peter Kamawathi, did not add E any weight to the prosecution case for the vehicle was not proved to have been the very one that was seen leaving the scene of crime.

There was evidence that the first accused on being arrested had set up an alibi claiming to have been in Nairobi at the time the crime was committed. The prosecution through F PW4 and PW5 purported to disprove the alibi by producing an emergency pass of the accused and showed that there was no stamp showing when he had last entered Tanzania. Furthermore records held by Immigration Officials at Namanga did not reflect an entry shown on the pass purporting to show that the first accused had travelled to G Kenya on the 1/6/88. But as conceded by Lucas Mponda (PW.5) it was possible that some stamps on the pass had faded away in which case he could not positively assert whether the first accused had not travelled to Kenya after the last date appearing on the pass which was the 29/2/88. That being the case the evidence had fallen short of H negating the alibi the accused had set up.
Learned State Attorney Mr. Kimomogoro declined to support the convictions because of the unsatisfactory evidence of the identification. He stated further that the mere fact I that the witnesses pointed out some of the accused persons in court did not add any weight because they knew them before the day of the offence.
CHUA J
I have carefully weighed the evidence that was adduced and the arguments that have A been levelled against the conviction and have to say the following in respect of the accused persons. In respect of the accused that were known to PW. 1 and PW.2 it is to be expected that they would have themselves to avoid being easily identified. PW.1 in fact said that he had known the 1st, 2nd and 4th accused persons because he had B worked with them and identified them by their voices. Later in his evidence he said that they wore military combat fatigues with camouflage. But PW.2 in his evidence said that he did not see the first accused person. Thus there was no evidence to corroborate that of PW.1 on his having identified the first accused person. C
There having been no other evidence to corroborate that of PW.1 the first accused was not properly convicted. In this respect the attention of the learned trial magistrate is drawn to the need for corroboration in cases where identification of the accused is done D in difficult circumstances such as those which prevailed in this case. The famous case of Abdallah Wendo v R. (1953) 20 EACA 166 is relevant.
In respect of the second accused PW.1 said that he had worked with him and knew him well. PW.2 also said that he knew the 2nd accused having worked with him for one E year. PW.2 further stated that the second had talked to him telling him that in fact he was his relative. Though the circumstances were not conducive to easy identification the fact that the witness knew the second accused well, a fact which was not contradicted, F removed the possibility of mistaken identity. The second accused having elected not to say anything for his defence, and the evidence of PW.1 having been corroborated by that of PW.2 it is my view that the conviction against the second accused was properly entered.

As regards the 3rd accused he was convicted of being an accessory after the fact of G robbery. This conviction was challenged on the ground that the evidence that was relied on to convict him was that he was heard to have warned two persons namely, Nathaniel and Kaburu to run away to avoid being arrested by the police, but that the two persons were not charged with the offence of robbery and therefore one cannot be an accessory H to an offence that has not been proved.

Learned State Attorney declined to support the conviction agreeing with the observation of learned defence counsel and went on to add that in law the learned trial magistrate I was wrong to substitute a conviction of being an accessory after the fact of robbery with violence because the offence of being an accessory though minor to the offence of A robbery with violence is not cognate to it. The case of Andrea Nicodemu v R. [1969] HCD 25 was cited.

I have perused the case of Andrea Nicodemu v R. and agree entirely with the observations of the learned state attorney. A minor and cognate offence which can be B substituted for the offence charged must be one which can be arrived at by a process of subtracting some of the ingredients of the main offence.

It is quite clear to me that being an accessory after the fact to the offence of robbery with violence cannot be arrived at by a process of subtracting some ingredients from those C that constitute robbery with violence. The conviction in respect of the 3rd accused was therefore contrary to well established principles of law.

As regards the 4th, 5th and 6th accused persons it is noted that whereas PW.1 stated that he identified the 4th accused by voice and that he had seen him wearing military D combat fatigues with camouflage PW.2 stated that he the accused No. 4 was outside the other. There was no description of how he was able to see him outside while it was a dark night. The evidence of PW.1 was therefore not corroborated by credible evidence. That being the case the conviction against him cannot be supported. E

In respect of the 5th and 6th accused PW.1 stated that he saw them carrying boxes. There was no mention of how he identified them i.e. whether he knew them before that day or the dresses they put on or some other aspect which would dispel fears that he F could have made an honest but mistaken identification. PW.2 on his part merely said they were outside without any description whatsoever whether he went out and how he saw them in darkness. The conviction was therefore not properly entered for there was no credible evidence to corroborate that of PW.1. G

Finally in respect of the 7th accused PW.1 stated that he was one of the persons carrying the stolen goods. But he did not say how he recognized him for he did not say whether he had known him before that day and what dress he put on. PW.2 on his part said that he had met the 7th accused at Mbuguni but he did not elaborate in connection H with what business he had met him to dispel any fears that he could have mistaken him. The absence of a description of the appearance of the 7th accused contributed further to fears that the identification of the 7th accused was not absolutely water tight as is required in cases where the evidence relied or is entirely that of identification. In this I regard the case of Eria Sebwato is relevant.

CHUA J

Before I leave this case I must comment on the manner the learned trial magistrate A handled the defence case. It is noted in the record that after the submissions of counsel the first accused stated that he wanted to call witnesses for his defence though all the accused except the 3rd accused had earlier on stated that they had no witnesses to call.

The learned Resident Magistrate stated: B

I am sorry defence case is closed and I wonder why your advocate never mentioned this before. What he stated was only that you will remain silent and ask for submission date. There C is nothing this court can do at this state.

In my view before writing judgment the learned trial magistrate could have entertained the application of the accused which reflected that he probably had not been happy with D the manner the defence case had been conducted. By saying that there was nothing she could do the learned trial magistrate had abandoned her duty to ensure that a fair hearing had been given to all the parties. Magistrates and judges have a duty of ensuring that even defended accused get a fair hearing. E

In the final analysis I quash the conviction entered against the 1st, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th accused and set aside the sentences. They should be set free unless they are otherwise legally detained. The appeal in respect of the 2nd accused Antony Yohana Juma is dismissed entirely. F

Judgment delivered in the presence of Mr. Mwidunda, State Attorney. Mr. Kinabo who is notified but is busy in Session cases to be notified about the outcome of this appeal.

In an application for stay of execution of the decree of the Court of Appeal, the Chief Justice found that the application was based on the intention of the application to appeal D as no notice of appeal had been filed, that the application was of an interlocutory nature as it related to discovery and inspection and had been filed out of time. NYALALI CJ

Nyalali, C.J.: This is an application by notice of motion filed by the Applicant, that is, A Israel Solomon Kivuyo under the provisions of rule 3 sub-rule 1 and 2 of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules 1979, under which he seeks stay of execution of the decree of this Court given in Civil Appeal No. 16 of 1988. The judgment from which the decree flows is dated 24th December, 1988 and the decree was settled under the provisions of B rule 39 sub-rule 2 on the 16th May, 1989. The application is supported by affidavit which lists various matters upon which it is based. The crucial matters in this affidavit are to the effect that the record of appeal in Civil Appeal No. 16 of 1988 contains certain C omissions which were deliberately not rectified by Counsel who represented the applicant at the hearing of the appeal, thereby misleading the Court into giving judgment against the applicant. Dr. Lamwai, a junior but very able member of the Bar, represents the Applicant and has appeared before me by special permission according to the D practice of the Court. Mr. D'Souza, a senior member of the Bar, represents the Respondents. When this application came before me on the 24th July, 1989 a preliminary matter arose and invited submissions in respect of it from both sides. The question is whether this application can be entertained by this Court. As already stated, E the application seeks stay of execution of the decree of this court. This basis for stay is contained in paragraph 8 of the affidavit filed in support of the application. That paragraph reads: "... I am intending to make an application for the comparison of the hand written Court record with the record of appeal and necessary orders to meet the end of justice". F

Undoubtedly, the relevant provisions for making an application for stay of execution of a decree of this Court is sub-rule 2 of rule 3 of the Rules of this Court. This is so because, there is no other provision governing the matter either under the rules or any other G written law. But can an application for stay of execution be entertained by this Court where the basis for such stay is merely the state of mind of the Court to take certain steps? I don't think that it is proper for any Court to grant stay of execution of a decree before the applicant has taken legal action to move the Court in a direction affecting the H decree. Thus in the case of an application for stay of execution of a decree. Thus in the case of an application for stay of execution of a decree pending an appeal where no notice of appeal has been given, the application will not be entertained. This is the Rule in the case of Nganga v Kimani [1969] E.A. page 67 where the High Court of Kenya I restated the rule. In my view that rule is sound and correct in this country as well. It follows therefore, that this application A for stay of execution of the decree of this Court cannot be entertained unless and until the intended application mentioned in paragraph 8 of the above mentioned affidavit is filed in this Court.

In the course of the hearing of this application, Dr. Lamwai requested this Court to allow B him to file the intended application. Mr. D'Souza, learned Advocate for the Respondents countered such move by submitting that the intended application is already time barred. I agree with this submission since under item 21 of part III of the First C Schedule to the Law of Limitation Act, 1971, an application under a written law for which no period of limitation is provided under the Limitation Act, 1971 or any other written law has to be made within a period of sixty days. The judgment in Civil Appeal No. 16 of 1988 was delivered to the parties early this year, and the decree was settled D in terms of rule 39 sub-rule 2 on 6th May, 1989.

It is obvious that by the 24th July, 1989 when the parties appeared before me for the hearing of this matter, more than 60 days had expired from the time when the intended E application could be made - that is after the delivery of the judgment against the applicant. Dr. Lamwai's contention that the intended application had to await settlement of the decree and the subsequent execution proceedings is untenable in the light of the nature of the grievance made manifest in paragraph 9 which reads: "Further, that I verily F believe that had the record of appeal been accurate, the outcome of the appeal would have been different". Since the outcome of the appeal is in the judgment, the intended application could be made as soon as the judgment was delivered to the parties.

Furthermore, I am satisfied that the intended application is incompetent in law. I say so G because, the intended application is in the nature of an interlocutory application for the discovery or inspection of certain facts required to facilitate a course of legal action. It is trite law that an interlocutory application for discovery or inspection cannot be H entertained unless it relates to a legal action or step pending in Court. In the present case, the application has not yet instituted a legal action or step for the purpose of which discovery or inspection may be ordered by this Court. Let us see whether the intended application can be construed as an interlocutory application within the scope of Civil I Appeal No. 16 of 1988. According to Jowitt's Dictionary of English Law, 2nd Edition at page 999 an interlocutory "proceeding ... is incidental to the principal object of the action, namely, the judgment. Thus interlocutory applications in an action include all A steps taken for the purpose of assisting either party in the prosecution of his case, whether before or after final judgment; or of protecting or otherwise dealing with the subject matter of the action before the rights of the parties are finally determined, or of executing the judgment when obtained. Such are applications for time to take a step e.g. B to deliver a pleading, for discovery, for an interim injuction, for appointment of a receiver, for obtaining a garnishee order, etc. So an order giving a plaintiff leave to sign judgment is interlocutory, because he must sign judgment before he can issue execution ..." C

In the light of this exposition, it is clear that the intended application for comparison of the Court records with a view to discover the alleged omissions cannot be construed to be incidental to the judgment in Civil Appeal No. 16 of 1988, as it does not directly flow or arise from that judgment. On the basis of the affidavit above mentioned, it flows or D arises from something extraneous to the judgment - that is, the alleged misconduct of the advocate who represented the applicant at the hearing of the appeal. Such alleged misconduct of the applicant's advocate cannot in law be a basis for the intended E application. It can be a basis for instituting a suit by the applicant against that advocate.

In the final analysis therefore, I am satisfied that the present application for stay of execution of the decree of this Court is incompetent and I am bound to dismiss it and I do so now with costs. F

Order accordingly.

The Appellants were convicted of both counts and each sentenced to 5 D years imprisonment for the 2nd Count. The Appellants are appealing to this Court against convictions and sentences.
Mr. Oswald the learned state attorney who appeared for the Republic supported the convictions registered against the Appellants. E
The Appellants challenged the finding of the learned trial magistrate as having been based on mistaken identification.
The evidence on the lower Court's record was such as to leave no doubts in the mind of the trial magistrate as to the identification of the Appellants by one Mbula Mayege F (PW.1) one Madulu Shibi (PW.2) and one Devota Magembe (PW.3). There was a lamp light illuminating the house. In the case of Devota Magembe (PW.3) she had been awake at 11.15 p.m. on 17/8/86 when the Appellants broke into the house. In the case G of the 1st Appellant was taking a lamp then burning in the house. All these witnesses, PW.1, PW.2 and PW.3 knew the Appellants thoroughly before the incidence having been a resident of the village of Matalambuli. It is in evidence that when the villagers went to the scene, PW.1, PW.2 and PW.3 not only mentioned the Appellants but also H by their names and the clothes they had put on, so that when the Appellants appeared at the scene feigning as good samaritans were promptly arrested, there and then.
I am satisfied that these appeals have no any substantial cause for complainant, justifying I this Court to disturb the convictions rightly made.

[zJDz]Judgment
Nchalla, J.: Mr. Rahim, learned advocate, acting for the appellant had filed this application for an order and leave of the High Court to transfer a case from the Primary Court to the District Court. The case for which leave and order of this court is sought to I transfer it to the District Court has already been registered at
NCHALLA J
Magomeni Primary Court, Kinondoni District. Mr. Rahim has sworn an affidavit in A support of his application. In his affidavit Mr. Rahim avers only one ground to back up his application, namely that he wishes to represent the applicant in the case in question in which the applicant has been sued by the respondent in this application. Mr. Rahim has B brought up this application under s.63 (1) of the Magistrates' Courts Act No. 2 of 1984. At the hearing of this application Mr. Rahim relied on the single ground averred in his affidavit.
In reply, Mr. Kisusi objected to the application stating that the same is misconceived. He C submitted that s.63(1)MCA, 84 is irrelevant for purposes of the applicant's application who is seeking for transfer of proceedings already instituted in a Primary Court. He pointed out that the relevant provision of law applicable to this application is section 47(1)(c) of the MCA, 1984. And the reasons for which transfer of a case from a D Primary Court can be made are enlisted under that section and no other. The reason that the defendant wishes to be represented by an advocate is not one of the reasons envisaged by s.47(1)(c)(i-iv) for which transfer of a case from a Primary Court can be made. Mr. Kisusi submitted that transfer of the case in question cannot be exercised E under section 47(1)(c) of the MCA because the subject matter of the case is land held under customary law. The matter has invariably to commence in a Primary Court in view of s.63(1) of the MCA, 1984. And if leave of the High Court is sought that the matter F commence in a court other than a Primary Court, then it is only the plaintiff, not the defendant who has the right to seek for such leave. He submitted that on the A contrary the defendant is applying for such leave when the plaintiff is against such leave being given. So, Mr Kisuri urged, the application, in whichever way you tilt it, appears to be G askew, and is misconceived. He prayed that the application be dismissed with costs, and that the case already instituted in the Primary Court proceed to hearing and determination therein.

At last Mr. Rahim conceded that he had preferred this application under the wrong section of the relevant law. He admitted that the proper section should have been H s.47(1)(c)MC Act, 1984 as pointed out by Mr. Kisusi. However, Mr. Rahim submitted that the omission is not fatal to the application as the substance thereof remains the same. I agree that the mere omission by a party to indicate the appropriate section of the law under which the matter is preferred is curable, particularly so where the omission, as in I this case is inadvertent, that is, not intentional or negligent. But I would add that on the circumstances of this application, it was incumbent that the application be A preferred both under section 47(1)(c) and 63(1)of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984. This is so because the case in point has already been instituted in the Primary Court. So, the direct act is transfer of that case from the Primary Court to the District Court. Transfer of cases generally are dealt with under section 47 of the Magistrates' Courts B Act, 1984. But the transfer of the instant case which is about immovable property held under customary law cannot be had under s. 47 alone in view of the express provisions of s.47(1)(c) proviso (a)(b). So, recourse must be had to s.63(1) Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 to be applied in conjunction with s.47(1)(c) to facilitate the intended transfer. C This is the only way out as I see it. But as I have already found, the omission by Mr. Rahim to indicate s.47(1)(c) in his chamber application is not fatal, as the substance of the application remains the same, and in no way has the respondent been embarrassed by the omission. D

Having reviewed the law and the submissions by counsel for both parties, I now consider whether this application is sustainable. Section 63(1) M.C. Act, 1984 does not lay specific conditions under which leave may be given by the High Court for proceedings to commence in a court other than a Primary Court. So, it appears leave E here is discretionary to the court. But it is well established law that where a right is to be exercised by a court on discretion, then the same must be exercised judicially. Judicial exercise of discretion must be backed up by good cause. Is the mere fact that the defendant wishes to engage an advocate good and sufficient cause to grant the leave F applied for? After all the case has already been instituted in the Primary Court as Civil Case No. 84/1988. So, the immediate action sought is transfer of the proceedings already commenced in the Primary Court. This necessarily brings us to the dictates of s.47(1)(a)(b)(c)(i) (ii)(iii)(iv) of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984. The reason advanced G by Mr. Rahim in support of his application for transfer of the case from the Primary Court does not tally with any of the conditions set by the section. So, transfer of the case in question cannot be ordered under any of the provisions of s.47(1) Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984 since none of the conditions therein have been proved in favour of the H applicant. I am not also quite settled whether the mere fact that a party wishes to engage an advocate without any qualification will per se entitle a party to be granted leave to commence proceedings in another court which proceedings would otherwise have legally I commenced in a Primary Court. I am of the view that a party seeking for transfer of a case from a Primary Court to a District Court or that proceedings commence in a court other A than a Primary Court should show good or sufficient reasons which are qualified and which the court will consider whether or not to grant the application. Mere financial ability to engage an advocate without any qualification therefor will not, I think, merit for grant of leave under s.63(1) or transfer under s.47 both of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1984. B

In the circumstances, the order to transfer to or commence proceedings in the District Court applied by the applicant is refused.

C Application dismissed.

Maina, J.: This is a second appeal. The appellant, Ahmad Saidi Kidevu, filed a suit in A the Primary Court for an order that his wife, the respondent Sharifa Shamte, be compelled to live with the appellant. The suit was dismissed. The appellant's appeal to the District Court was dismissed, and he has now appealed to this court.

The parties were married in 1986 under Islamic law. They lived together at the wife's B house, and when they started quarrelling a few months later, they separated. They have been living separately since 1987. The respondent wife sued the appellant for maintenance after the appellant had issued one talaka. The wife has consistently refused to live with the appellant. As both lower courts found, the marriage between the parties C is in serious trouble, and it is unlikely that the marriage can be saved.

The question now is whether the court can compel the respondent wife to live with her husband. I must state straightaway that the appellant's suit is misconceived and not D maintainable in law, in view of section 140 of the Law of Marriage Act which provides a follows:

> No proceeding may be brought to compel a wife to live with her husband or a husband with E his wife, but it shall be competent for a spouse who had been deserted to refer the matter to a Board.

Marriage is a voluntary union of a man and a woman, and it is contracted with the F consent of the parties. It is intended that the marriage will last for their joint lives of the parties. However, when difficulties arise in a marriage, and one spouse decides to live separately from the other, the court cannot compel them to live together. Parliament, in its wisdom, enacted section 140 of the Law of Marriage Act, which clearly provides that G a court cannot compel one spouse to live with the other. The only remedy to a spouse who has been deserted is to commence divorce or separation proceedings.

In the present case, the respondent wife has refused to live with her husband, the appellant. The court cannot compel her to live with her husband. The appellant's remedy H now is to refer the matter to a Marriage Conciliatory Board, and then file divorce proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction. The lower courts rightly refused to make an order compelling the respondent to live with the appellant.

Sisya, J.: This appeal is by the Director of Public Prosecutions. He is appealing against D the sentence of shs.10,000/= fine or two years imprisonment in default of payment thereof imposed by the learned District Magistrate, Tanga, on the respondent. The latter was, on 25/11/86 and on his own plea, convicted for causing the death of one Joseph G. Kisanga through dangerous driving. This is an offence under section 40(1) of the Road E Traffic Act. The only ground of appeal advanced by the DPP is that the sentence meted out by the learned convicting magistrate is, under the circumstances of the case, manifestly inadequate.

In short, the admitted facts of the case are that on 21/11/86 at about 11.30 am the F accused was driving an Isuzu lorry bearing registration number TX 4652 along the Independence Street from the direction of Bombo Hospital towards the main Post Office. When he reached the intersection of the said Independence Street and the G Customs Street he turned right and drove towards the direction of Tanga Port. he did so in the face of the deceased who was then riding a bicycle on his, i.e. deceased, left and correct side of the road and who approached from the respondent's opposite direction, and without stopping in order to allow the deceased, who, incidentally, had the right of way, to pass. In the process the respondents lorry knocked down and crushed the H deceased, a form one student, who then died instantly. Going by the lorry's motor vehicle inspection report Exh.'D', the lorry's steering and foot brake were serviceable both before and after the accident.

In his address to the court before sentence, the respondent is recorded to have stated I that his father died of shock when news of the accident reached him; that he has a sick mother, a wife and schooling children to A support; that was his first offence, that he had long service with the Agricultural Department; and that his monthly pay (which was not disclosed) was very low. Again, when addressed in terms of section 27 of the Road Traffic Act the respondent, this time, B stated that the accident occurred because the steering developed a sudden and serious defect. He did not elaborate what the alleged serious defect actually was. The motor vehicle inspection report, Exh.'D', however, tells the lie of the respondent's allegation on this aspect of the case. The respondent stated further that his speed was moderate at the time of the accident. C

In sentencing the respondent the learned District Magistrate was greatly influenced by the fact that the speed at which the respondent was driving at the time of the accident was not mentioned by the Prosecution. Without more the learned District Magistrate D found that there existed 'special circumstances' in the case which called for 'leniency' on the side of the respondent. I interpret this to mean that the learned District Magistrate found that there were special reasons which warranted him to impose a sentence less than the minimum laid down by the law for that offence. The learned District Magistrate E also refrained from suspending the respondent's driving licence as well as disqualifying him from obtaining another one.

In arguing out this appeal before me the learned Senior State Attorney, Mr. Mwale, bitterly criticised the sentence which he said was manifestly inadequate. Mr. Mwale F argued further that the learned District Magistrate erred by failing to disqualify the respondent from holding a driving licence because no special reasons were advanced by him.

The offence of causing death through dangerous driving carries with it a mandatory G minimum of two years imprisonment, with or without a fine, unless there exist special reasons to warrant the imposition of a lesser penalty. In the case of Republic v Mkama Ndaro [1977] LRT n. 12 my learned brother, Katiti Ag.J. (as he then was) held, among other things, that 'what amounts to special reasons may be special facts which constitute H the offence and/or facts that are personal (-and I may add, and special) to the offender.' With this I, most respectfully, agree. Special reasons under section 63(2)(a) of the Road Traffic Act, 1973, must be extra ordinary facts peculiar to the offence or to the offender. A fact may be extraordinary and peculiar or special to the offence if, for I example, the accused committed the offence while rushing an expectant mother or an accident victim to hospital for urgent management. Ordinary mischief or flagrant conduct A by the accused at the material time will not suffice to amount to a special reason. Likewise a fact may be extraordinary or special to the offender if, for example, it is established that the accused has a very long and unblemished driving record or having regard to the age and character of the accused it is inexpedient to inflict custodial B punishment. Ordinary antecedents such as having a family to support or if accused is a professional driver will, in my considered opinion, also not suffice as special reasons peculiar to the offender.

Special reasons must be advanced and the court must make a specific finding on the C same. In this instant matter the respondent was given opportunity to advance special reasons both before sentence and before making an order regarding the issues advanced by him before driving. With respect, none of the issues advanced by him before sentence amounts to a special reason. Instead the respondent dwelt on obvious and deliberate lies D in an attempt to explain why the accident happened. All that he said is now not viable as there is no appeal against conviction. The admitted facts, on the other hand, clearly show that the respondent was at fault. He simply did not stop or, at least, slow down at E a place where he was required by the law to yield and give way to oncoming traffic which includes cyclists of whom the deceased was one. Since he did so while his footbrakes and steering were serviceable and the deceased approached in front of him I find that there was a big element of deliberate risk taking on the respondent's part. I F repeat that there are no special reasons peculiar to the offence to warrant imposition of a lesser penalty. I, again, see none special to the offender, that is the respondent himself.

In the circumstances and on my part I find that the sentence imposed by the learned trial G magistrate does not only err on the lenient side but it is also illegal for being below the minimum prescribed by the law.
This appeal, therefore, has merit and it must succeed.
In the final result in addition to the fine which was paid the respondent is further and now sentence to two years imprisonment. H

[zJDz]Judgment
Kisanga, Ramadhani and Mfalila, JJ.A.: The respondent Dr. Edward Clemens filed H a suit against the appellant - the Arusha International Conference Centre, his erstwhile employers claiming damages for breach of a contract of service. The claim totalling shs.62,535/= was made up as follows:

(i) Gratuity I 24,629.00
(ii) Salaries for the unexpired period of 12 months i.e. July, 1981 to June, A 198231,875.00

(iii) 3 months salary in lieu of notice 7,696.00
(iv) Leave pay 14 days 4,058.00
(v) Transport costs for family and personal effects for Arusha to Moshi B 4,000.00

The appellant denied the claim, stating that it lawfully terminated the contract of service C with the respondent in accordance with the terms of the contract something it was entitled to do. The High Court after hearing evidence, held that there was a contract of service between the appellant and the respondent which the appellant terminated not only unlawfully but maliciously. Judgment was entered for the respondent as claimed minus the claim for 3 D months salary in lieu of notice. This the court found had already been paid by the appellant. The respondent was awarded a total of shs.54,565.50 in damages.
The appellant lodged this appeal, complaining in the first ground of appeal that the E learned trial judge erred in holding that the respondent had complied with the provisions of Order VII Rule 7 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966 in the pleadings. This complaint has a long history and it is as follows: Apart from the original record where the plaint bears some handwritten alterations, the rest of the records show paragraph 9 of the F plaint in the following terms:

(a) the cause of action arose at Arusha, thus within the jurisdiction of this honourable court. G

There was no prayer for any relief. Thus when the appellant filed the written statement of defence, he pleaded in paragraph 7 that the whole suit should be dismissed with costs as it does not show reliefs the plaintiff requires the court to grant him, and that this offended the provisions of O.VII R.7 of the Civil Procedure Code which provides: H

Every plaint shall state specifically the relief which the plaintiff claims either simply or in the alternative, and it shall not be necessary to ask for general or other relief which may always I be given as the Court may think just to the same extent as if it had been asked for. A

And the same rule shall apply to any relief claimed by the defendant in his written statement of defence. B

There was no reply to this complaint up to the time both sides closed their respective cases. But in his submissions, Mr. Kapoor raised the point again stating that the provisions of O.VII Rule 7 are mandatory and since the plaintiff claimed no relief at all, C his claim must fail. He cited a commentary in the book by Mocha on the Law of Pleadings in India 11th Ed. dealing with an identical provision to our O.VII Rule 7. It is stated at page 247:

The relief sought should be accurately worded and it is risky to use loose or inartistic D language as there is always a danger of the Court throwing out the case, although Courts should not be too strict if it can be fairly inferred what the plaintiff really means - But whatever reliefs he claims must be stated in the plaint specifically as relief claimed in the plaint cannot be supplemented orally. E

The plaintiff omitting a relief will therefore have to make an application for amendment which cannot be allowed after limitation. Each relief should be clearly and separately stated and two or more reliefs should not be mixed together. F

In her judgment, the learned trial judge dealt with this point and resolved it in pleading of the respondent in the following words:

In paragraph 9 of the plaint the plaintiff prays for judgment for the sum of shs.62,535/= costs G and any other relief. I specifically spelt out paragraph 7 and 9 of the plaint in order to overrule the contention of the learned defence counsel in his submission that the suit should be struck out for offending the requirements of O.VII Rule 7. Paragraph 9 of the plaintiff specifically prays H for judgment in the sum of shs. 62,535/=, so the plaintiff has fulfilled the requirements of Order 7 Rule 7 of the 1966 Civil Procedure Code ...

This is the finding which is the subject of the attack in the first ground of appeal, a finding I which undoubtedly was influenced by the handwritten amendments to paragraph 9 of the plaint. With the handwritten amendments, paragraph 9 on the original plaint reads as follows: A

(9)The cause of action arose at Arusha, thus within the jurisdiction of this honourable Court. Wherefor the plaintiff prays for judgment as follows: B

(i) Plaintiff claim for shs.62,535.00
(ii) Costs
(iii) Any other relief. C

On the face of it therefore paragraph (9) seems complete and makes the plaint comply fully with the requirements of O.VII Rule 7. But there are practical difficulties which unfortunately were not dealt with by the trial judge before making the above finding. It is quite clear that this amendment was made very much later in the proceedings, for if it had D been there from the beginning, the written statement of defence could not have contained paragraph 7, and it had contained paragraph 7, then counsel for the plaintiff would have corrected the impression particularly when the prayer was for dismissal of the suit for non-compliance. The issue was raised again during the final submission, yet E again there was no response from the plaintiff.

At the hearing of this appeal, all Mr. Kinabo, Counsel for the respondent could say was that he does not remember what happened which made him make the handwritten F amendments. The position then is quite clear to us. The handwritten amendments were inserted either during or at the end of the hearing, there was therefore no reliefs claimed at the time the plaint was filed, at the close of the pleading and at the start of the hearing. There is nothing in the record to show that an application to amend the plaint was made G at any stage of the proceedings. The plaint was therefore amended without leave of the Court under O.VI rule 17 of the Civil Procedure Code. The result is that although the amendment embodying a prayer for reliefs is physically on the plaint, it is legally not there. We therefore upheld Mr. Kapoor's submission that the plaint did not comply with H the provision of O.VII Rule 7 and since there was no application to amend, the claim could not be maintained in the absence of reliefs sought by the plaintiff. Mr. Kinabo conceded that O.VII Rule 7 was in these circumstances not complied with, but he submitted that the consequences of this non-compliance would depend on the way the I plaint was framed. if the plaint is framed in such a way that the other side could understand the nature of the claim, then the error is curable. He added A that in the present case the plaint is clear that the plaintiff was claiming specific damages amounting to shs.62,535/=, and asked this Court to cure the error under the provision of Rule 108 of the Court of Appeal Rules, 1979. But on our part we think that B the existence of a valid claim is a condition precedent for the use of the powers under Rule 108. In the present case there was no valid claim by reason of non-compliance with O.VII Rule 7.

Although this finding would have disposed of the appeal, we wish to consider the second C arm of the appeal raised in the Memorandum and argued by Mr. Kapoor at the hearing. It was contended that the learned trial judge erred in holding that the appellant had breached the contract of employment and that she ought to have held that the appellant was entitled to terminate the contract of employment in accordance with the D provisions of Clause 13(1) of the said contract. Mr. Kapoor contended that since the employment was lawfully terminated in accordance with the terms of the contract, the appellant is not liable in damages and the respondent is not entitled to any gratuity which is only payable on successful completion of the contract period of employment, in this case 24 months. E
On the other hand Mr. Kinabo argued that the relationship between the parties was regulated by an oral contract similar to the previous oral contract which ended on 30/6/80. He said that contrary to the appellant's allegation of the existence of a written F contract embodying Clause 13 under which either party could terminate the contract before the expiry of the contract period, there was no such written contract. There was only an oral contract similar to the previous contract under which the appellant could not terminate the contract of employment before the expiry of 24 months. he added that G since the appellant had not terminated the respondent's employment at the end of the first contract on 30/6/80, he was not free to relieve him of his duties before the end of the 24 months contract period.

We thought this was a novel idea that a contract of employment oral or written could H bind the parties to the extent suggested by Mr. Kinabo. Indeed after it was decided not to employ the respondent on permanent and pensionable terms on account of his age, his previous employment was converted into a contract, a the same time a new contract was offered effective 1/7/80 (See Exh.P.2) and he was advised that the terms of the contract I would be communicated to him at a later date. This was done on 31/3/81

(See Ex.D.3). Although no written agreement was in fact signed by the parties, there A was nothing in the oral contract of the parties to suggest that the appellant could not terminate the oral contract in the way he did. This being the case we are satisfied that by giving the respondent three months salary in lieu of notice, the appellant lawfully terminated the contract of employment. We agree with Mr. Kapoor that the right to the B payment of gratuity, only arises at the end of the successful completion of the contract period of employment. The respondent has therefore no claim against the appellants.

For these reasons we allow the appeal and set aside the judgment and orders of the High Court. C

With regard to costs we order that each side shall bear its own costs here and in the Court below, because we are satisfied that the respondent was misled into believing that he had a valid claim. This belief was based on the Telex Message Exh.P.3 from the D Board Chairman directing the appellant to renew the respondent's contract. But before even replying to this directive the appellant terminated the contract.

[zJDz]Judgment

Maina, J.: The appellant was a booking clerk employed by Bin Cleb Bus Service. His B duties included issuing tickets to passengers and receiving the money from the passengers. He was required to hand over his collections daily to the Branch Manager. It was alleged that the appellant had stolen some of the money so received, and for this, C he was convicted of stealing by servant. He was sentenced to two years imprisonment.

The prosecution evidence was briefly that the Branch Manager, PW1 Mohamed Issa, was receiving the money from the appellant for each day's sales of tickets. The witness said that he checked the tickets sold and the money remitted by the appellant on each D occasion. He believed that the appellant had given him the correct amount. But later when an auditor who is also the General Manager, PW3 Athumani Jawa, audited the books he found out that there was a difference of shs.49,110/= between the actual total sum received from sale of the tickets, and the sum which the appellant allegedly gave to E PW1 Mohamed Issa. The appellant is alleged to have admitted loss of the money and he promised to make a refund. He was escorted to an area of Songea Township called Bombambili to borrow money, but he escaped from the Police escort. He was rearrested later.

In his evidence, the appellant denied the charge. He said in effect that he had remitted all F his collections daily to his Branch Manager. He was not aware of any loss or shortage of the money he had received, until he saw the audit reports in the court. The appellant did not wish to call a witness. G

The learned resident magistrate was satisfied that the appellant gave less money to PW1 Mohamed Issa than what the appellant had actually collected. As Mr. Boaz, the learned State Attorney, submitted, this was a case in which there is the word of PW1 Mohamed Issa against that of the appellant on the actual sums which the appellant handed over to H the witness. There was no dispute that for that period between 28 October 1988 and 31 December, 1988 the appellant sold tickets worth shs.2,722,170/=. The amount which PW1 Mohamed Issa alleged was handed over to him by the appellant was shs.2,673,060/=. Clearly shs. 49,110/= remained unaccounted for. The question is, how I much did the appellant give to Mohamed Issa? Here, we have the work of Mohamed Issa against the word of the appellant. It is surprising that Mohamed Issa did not require the appellant to sign for A the amount which he (the appellant) was handing over daily. The witness compiled his own list showing the sums of money he had received from the appellant. The lists, Exhibit P1 collectively, were prepared and signed by Mohamed Issa alone every three or five B days. The appellant did not sign anywhere in Exh.P1. His defence that he remitted correct amounts as shown in the duplicate copies of the tickets remained difficult to challenge. If he had remitted less than what he had actually collected from passengers, Mohamed Issa would have required him to sign for that. But Mohamed Issa said that he C did not discover he had received less than what was shown in the tickets.

What PW1 Mohamed Issa was telling the court in effect is that he received from the appellant money which appeared to be correct collections, and later he found out that it was not correct amounts according to the tickets. The appellant cannot be held D criminally responsible for theft of the money while he had remitted his collections together with the relevant books on daily basis. It was claimed that the appellant had promised to refund the money. But he did not at any time admit the theft. He admitted that there may have been loss as alleged, and suggested that this might be due to E carelessness in giving change to passengers. That does not meanhe admitted he stole the money. The learned State Attorney did not support the conviction and, with respect, I agree with him.

The prosecution did not prove beyond reasonable doubt that the appellant committed the offence charge. F

The appeal is allowed. The conviction which is not supported by the Republic is quashed and the sentence is set aside. The appellant should be released from custody forthwith unless he is otherwise lawfully held. G

The parties were married under Islamic Law in 1979. In 1986 the respondent issued talaka in accordance with Islamic Law. Their dispute had been referred to a Marriage Conciliation Board which certified that it had failed to reconcile the spouses and the D Primary Court granted a decree of divorce. On appeal to a District Court, at the instance of the husband it was held that there was no evidence that the marriage had broken down irreparably and the decree of divorce and the order of division of matrimonial assets was set aside. Appellant now appeals to High Court. E

Held: (i) The Principal District Magistrate had apparently overlooked the provisions of section 107(3) of the Law of Marriage Act 1971;

(ii) once the Marriage Conciliation Board has certified that it has failed to F reconcile the spouses, and a talaka has been issued, then the court has to find that the marriage has irreparably broken;

(iii) there must be evidence to show the extent of contribution before making an order for distribution of matrimonial assets;

(iv) performance of domestic duties amounts to contribution towards such acquisition but not necessarily 50%. G

Case Information

Appeal partly allowed.

[zJDz]Judgment

Maina, J.: The parties were married in 1979 under Islamic Law. They lived happily H together for a few years, and in 1986 the husband issued "talaka" in accordance with Islamic Law, dissolving the marriage. The matter had been referred to a Marriage Conciliatory Board which failed to reconcile the parties, and certified accordingly to the Primary Court. The wife petitioned for divorce. The Primary Court granted a decree of I divorce, and ordered division of matrimonial assets. On appeal, the District Court held that there was no evidence that the marriage had broken down irreparably. The decree of divorce A and the order for division of matrimonial assets were set aside. The wife now appeals.

1989 TLR p163

Since the parties were married in Islamic form section 107(3) of the Law of Marriage Act is applicable. It states as follows:

Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the court that: B

(a) the parties were married in Islamic form, and

(b) a Board has certified that it had failed to reconcile the parties, and

(c) subsequent to the granting by the Board of a certificate that it had failed to reconcile the C parties, either of them has done any act or thing which would, but for the provisions of this Act, have dissolved the marriage in accordance with Islamic Law, the court shall make a finding that the marriage has irreparably broken down, and proceed to issue a D decree of divorce.

In this case, all the conditions set out above were complied with. The act of the husband issuing "talaka" had the effect of dissolving the marriage, and as the Board had certified E that it had failed to reconcile the parties, that was evidence that the marriage had irreparably broken down. The Primary Court quite properly made a finding accordingly, and issued a decree of divorce.

The learned principal district magistrate apparently overlooked the provisions of section 107(3) of the Law of Marriage Act. F

The decision by the District Court that the marriage still subsists is set aside, and the decision of the Primary Court issuing a decree of divorce is restored.

I now turn to consider division of matrimonial assets. The Primary Court made an order G that all the matrimonial assets be divided equally between the parties. But there was no evidence on the contribution by the wife towards the acquisition of the assets. It seems that the Primary Court acted on the assumption that because the assets were acquired during wedlock, the parties were entitled to divide them equally between H themselves. All that the wife contributed was by performing domestic duties, like cooking and looking after the house. She also assisted in supervising labourers who were constructing one of the houses. But the husband had provided all the funds for the purchase of the farms, household properties and construction of the houses. Section I 114(1) of the Law of Marriage Act gives powers to a court when granting, or subsequent to the grant of divorce to order division of matrimonial assets acquired by the A parties during the subsistence of the marriage by their joint efforts. It is conceded that the duties performed by a wife to look after the house should be considered as her contribution towards the acquisition of matrimonial assets. But in deciding how much she B should get as her share when the marriage breaks down, one should consider section 114(2) of the Law of Marriage Act. Among the factors to be considered in deciding how much parties should get from the matrimonial assets when the marriage is dissolved are the extent of the contribution by C each party and debts owing as well as the customs of the community and needs of the infant children. There were no children to the marriage. There was, however, clear evidence that the wife's contribution was by her performance of domestic duties. Under the circumstances, she could not get half of the matrimonial assets. At the hearing of this D appeal, the husband informed the court, and the wife conceded that he had built a house worth shs.40,000/= for the wife in her village. That, I think, is sufficient share from the matrimonial assets in view of her contribution. She is not entitled to anything else. The order by the trial court giving the appellant half of the matrimonial assets is set aside. E

To sum up, the decision of the District Court is set aside. The decision of the Primary Court granting a decree of divorce is restored, and the order giving the wife half of the matrimonial assets is set aside. Each party shall bear his/her own costs. F

Order accordingly.

[zJDz]Judgment

Kisanga, Omar and Mnzavas, JJ.A.: This is a third appeal arising from a suit F brought in the Primary Court to recover a piece of land. The appellant, a woman, testified in the Primary Court that she bought the disputed land in 1966. In 1974 she took up the respondent as her boyfriend and they lived together for one year after which they parted company and lived apart. Then in 1987 the respondent sold the land in question claiming that it was his land which he had bought from someone else. The G Primary Court disallowed the appellant's claim. The appellant's appeal to the District Court was dismissed and further appeal to the High Court was equally unsuccessful. The present appeal to this Court is upon a certificate by the High Court that appoint of law is H involved in the decision, namely, whether the concurrent decisions of the courts below were supported and justified by the evidence. Both parties who were unrepresented each appeared and argued the appeal in person.

We wish to observe at the outset that this was an unsatisfactory way of certifying a point I of law. That certificate is capable of two interpretations. It could mean posing the question whether there was any evidence at all A to support the concurrent decisions of the courts below. It could equally mean to ask the question whether the evidence as adduced was sufficient to support and justify those decisions. How, this distinction is imported. The question whether there was any B evidence at all to support the decision is a question of law which can properly be certified for the opinion of this court. But whether the evidence as adduced was sufficient to support the decision is a question of fact which could not properly be the subject of a certificate for the opinion of this court. For, this court takes the view that if there was C some evidence on which the courts below could have arrived at the decision they did, then this court will not interfere, even though had this court itself tried the case it might have come to a different decision. Those who are called upon to certify points of law should, therefore, keep this distinction in mind in order to ensure that only the correct D questions are certified for the opinion of this court.

KISANGA JJA, OMAR JJA AND MNZAVAS JJA

The learned High Court judge who certified the point of law in this case found that the three courts below misconstrued or neglected altogether the evidence of the appellant's witness (PW.4). That witness had testified that in 1984 he, as an agricultural field E assistant, had allocated some of the appellant's land to some "wananchi" or villagers, and that before doing so he had to consult the appellant as the owner of the land. The learned judge criticised the trial court and the first and second appellate courts for wrongly understanding PW.4 as saying that he had allocated the disputed land to the F appellant in 1984. Thus the learned judge stated that had the three courts below taken the correct view of PW.4's evidence, he was in doubt if they would have come to the conclusion which they did.

It is pertinent to point out here that this criticism would be relevant only in relation to the G decisions of the first and second appellate courts. The District Court which heard the first appeal clearly fell into the error. That court took the mistaken view that PW.4 said that he had allocated the disputed land to the appellant in 1984. And the Principal H Resident Magistrate (Exercising Extended Jurisdiction) who heard the second appeal made reference to such mistaken view of the District Court without correcting it. But the Primary Court was under no mistaken view at all about PW.4's evidence. It did not give any impression at all that it understood PE/4 as saying that he had allocated any land to the appellant. I themselves as to the evidence of PW.4. And the question which the learned judge meant A to certify for our opinion is whether those courts would still have come to the conclusions which they did, had they not so misdirected themselves. That is a question of law which could properly be certified for opinion by this Court.

So the true position really was that the first appellate court and, to some extent, the second appellate court, misdirected

In considering that question it has to be pointed out once again that the Primary Court in B arriving at its decision it did not rely on any mistaken view of PW.4's evidence. It proceeded on the correct view that according to PW.4 the appellant was in occupation of the suit land in 1984 when he allocated some of the appellant's land to the villagers. C So the Primary Court found against the appellant not because it took any wrong view of PW.4's evidence; it arrived at that decision upon its unmistaken understanding and appreciation of the evidence before it.

The next question which we would have to decide is whether had the first and second D appellate courts properly directed themselves as to PW.4's evidence, they would still have come to the conclusion which they did. But having regard to the course which we have decided to adopt in this appeal it is no longer necessary to do so.

What we have dealt with so far was the only point of law specifically certified for the E opinion of this court. But the learned judge also reserved unspecified questions of law for the opinion of the court. Thus in this ruling he said:

> The applicant raises other grounds but, in view of the aforegoing I do not consider it necessary F to deal with them. How that it has been found that this is a fit case for consideration by the Court of Appeal I will leave the said grounds for consideration or otherwise by the Court of Appeal itself. G

With great respect to the learned judge he was wrong in so doing, in as much as it amounted to abdicating his responsibility in the matter. Once he had decided that other points of law existed, he was enjoined by law to go further and spell out clearly what H those points of law were. It was wrong for him to leave for the Court of Appeal to guess what those points were.

In her memorandum of appeal the appellant complained that the assessor Nathaniel Nungazija is a father-in-law of the respondent, and that she had requested the trial court I to have the assessor disqualified on that ground but her request was not heeded. That complaint, however, is not borne out by the record. There is no endorsement by the trial A magistrate to that effect, and the appellant made no mention of it in her successive appeals to the District Court and the High Court. Indeed at the hearing of the appeal the respondent vehemently denied the allegation. thus as there was nothing to support the B appellant's allegation the same could not have been certified for the opinion of this court.

The memorandum of appeal also raised the complaint that only one of the two assessors in the Primary Court gave opinion in the case. This is fully supported by the record which C clearly shows that only the first assessor gave his opinion while the second assessor did not and was absent. This raises the question of constitution of the court which is a point of law that could properly have been certified to us. The omission by the second assessor to give his opinion contravened section 7 of the Magistrates' Courts Act which D provides that:

> (1) In every proceeding in the Primary Court, including a finding, the court shall sit with not less than two assessors. E
> (2) All matters in the Primary Court including a finding in any issue, the question of adjourning the hearing, an application for bail, a question of guilt or innocence of any F accused person, the determination of sentence, the assessment of any monetary award and all questions and issues whatsoever shall, in the event of difference between a magistrates and the assessors or any of them, be decided by the votes of the majority of the magistrates and assessors present and in the event of an equality of G votes the magistrate shall have the casting vote in addition to his deliberative vote.

We think that it was mandatory for the second assessor to give his opinion on the final issue in the suit i.e. which party was successful and to what extent. The omission to do H so was necessarily fatal, and it rendered the purported decision null and void. That is to say there was no decision by a competent or properly constituted court. We think that the present appeal ought to succeed on that ground. Thus it should now be clear why earlier on in this judgment we decided not to go into the question whether the two I appellate courts below would have come to the same conclusion if they had properly directed themselves as to the evidence of PW.4. It is apparent too that we had A to touch, although only in passing, on the purported judgment of the Primary Court simply for the purpose of ascertaining the actual point of law which the learned judge meant to certify for our opinion. It so happens also that this would appear to exhaust the B unspecified questions of law which were reserved for our opinion.

KISANGA JJA, OMAR JJA AND MNZAVAS JJA

In the light of the foregoing, we set aside the purported judgment of the Primary Court. Needless to say the judgment of the first and second appellate courts necessarily crumble; they could not stand on what has been declared a nullity. C

The question as to what future course is to be taken in this matter has exercised our minds quite considerably. We are conscious of the time element involved in commencing a new trial, inconveniences to the parties and the problems of re-summoning the witnesses. In the course of hearing the appeal the respondent, for instance, informed us D that one of the witnesses who gave evidence at the trial is already dead. Thus in order to minimize inconveniences to the parties and delays in finalizing this matter, and in order to avoid further costs and possible problems connected with tracing or non-availability of E witness, we direct that the matter be remitted back to the Primary Court for action as follows: If the assessors Adam Hamisi and Nathaniel Mungazija are still alive and can be traced, then the Primary Court magistrate who tried the case with them should summon them, sum up the case to them afresh on the evidence as already recorded and then F proceed to decide the case in accordance with the provisions of section 7 of the Magistrates's Courts Act as reproduced earlier. Thereafter any party who is aggrieved by that decision can appeal to the District Court in the usual manner. If the said assessors are dead or cannot be found, then the matter is to be tried de novo G before a different magistrate and upon the same court fees as have already been paid. It is further ordered that each party is to bear it own costs of this appeal.

H Order accordingly.

Mwalusanya, J.: The appellant Simango s/o Kehengu was successfully sued at Noreme Primary Court in Serengeti District by the respondent Athanas s/o Tarayani in a H claim of ten head of cattle which had been unlawfully seized by the traditional army (Sungusungu or Baraza la Jadi) from the respondent and given to the appellant. The appellant appealed to Serengeti District Court and his appeal was partly successful in that he was ordered to refund only seven head of cattle instead of ten. Still aggrieved by I that decision, the appellant has now appealed to this court. At the hearing of this appeal, the appellant was represented by counsel Mr. Sandhu.
MWALUSANYA J
What happened was that sometime in 1972 the appellant had his seven head of cattle A stolen. He suspected the respondent to be the thief. With the advent of Sungusungu in 1988 the appellant sent the respondent to the Sungusungu to be tried. It is said the respondent was tried and convicted by the Sungusungu and was ordered to compensate the complainant (the appellant) the seven head of cattle. However when the members of B the traditional army were executing the attachment, they attached ten head of cattle from the respondent. It is said only seven head of cattle were handed over to the appellant while three head of cattle were 'pocketed' by the Sungusungu.

The trial court ordered the appellant to refund all the ten head of cattle to the C respondent. However the District Court held that appellant should refund only seven head of cattle which he had been given; and that respondent should have sued the Sungusungu for the three head of cattle which they had 'pocketed'. D
There can be no controversy that the Sungusungu are operating outside the Rule of Law. They have no power to try and convict offenders nor make compensation orders. Under our Constitution only the courts of law are empowered to try, convict and sentence offenders. Under Article 13(3) of the Constitution it is stated that: 'Rights of an individual and the community shall be protected by courts of law and other organs of the E government'. But the traditional army is neither a court of law nor an organ of the government with judicial powers. And Article 24 of the Constitution states that every individual has the right to the protection of his property; and that his property may only be taken from him when found liable by a court of law or when there is a legislation F allowing confiscation of somebody's property but which makes adequate compensation for the affected individual. Therefore it is crystal clear that the traditional army usurped the judicial power which it does not possess under our constitution. The judicial power is vested in the court of law only. So the conduct of the traditional army in this case was G patently unlawful. And the appellant having used an unlawful method for getting redress, must bear responsibility and refund the seven heads of cattle that he was unlawfully compensated. I agree with the learned Senior District Magistrate that the appellant is H only liable for seven heads of cattle which he was given. The respondent should have sued Sungusungu that had unlawfully pocketed the three head of cattle.
In the event this appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs. the appellant should refund the respondent only seven head of cattle.
I Order accordingly.

Mwalusanya, J.: The respondent Mturi s/o Nyegeri successfully sued the appellant A Kabuya s/o Essore at Mugango Primary Court in Musoma District, in a claim of nine heads of cattle which were allegedly unlawfully withheld by the said appellant. The appellant appealed to Musoma District Court against the judgment of the trial court, but he again lost and hence this second appeal. B

The respondent testified that his father died in 1951 when his mother was pregnant. Soon after his father's death in 1951 he was born. His father left more than 80 head of cattle. The appellant is the uncle of the deceased father of the respondent and when the C respondent's father died, the appellant was asked to inherit the wife of the deceased, that is respondent's mother. Then the deceased's property was distributed to the children of the deceased by the clan council. Each wife was given a number of cattle to keep them on behalf of her children. The respondent's mother was given nine head of cattle D and as she was inherited by the appellant, the said cattle were kept by the appellant. After some matrimonial conflicts, the respondent's mother deserted the appellant. The appellant did not dispute at the trial that he received the nine heads of cattle, but he said he was given the cattle in his own right as a person who had inherited the deceased's E wife. He said that as the said wife has deserted him, then nor her nor her child (the respondent) has the right to the cattle in question.

The Primary Court Magistrate who was in the minority held that the suit was time-barred. He said that as the respondent was born in 1951, then he attained the age F of majority (21 years) in 1970 and so he should have filed this suit soon after 1970. He said that as the suit was filed in 1987 (17 years after the cause of action arise) then the suit was time-barred. However the gentleman assessors did not care about the law on the limitation period and held that the respondent was entitled to get the nine heads of G cattle. As the gentleman assessors were in the majority, they out-voted the Primary Court Magistrate and their view carried the day as the judgment of the Court.

Surprisingly the Principal District Magistrate did not discuss at all, as to whether the suit H was time-barred or not. That was wrong. This was a fit case to allude to that pertinent question. Under the Customary Law (Limitation of Proceedings) rule GN.No.311/1964, no specific period of limitation is laid down in a case of a claim of heads of cattle. But I rule 5 of the said Rules states:

Where any proceeding is brought for the enforcement of a claim under customary law for A which no period of limitation is prescribed by these Rules, the court may reject the claim if it is of the opinion that there has been unwarrantable delay in bringing the proceedings and that B the just determination of the claim may have been prejudiced by that delay.

The question as to whether the delay is unwarrantable is a question of fact. In the case of Isoto v Isota: (1970) H.C.Dn.328 Mr. Justice Biron found that a delay of six years in C these type of claims was unwarrantable and rejected the claim. In the case at hand the delay was for some 17 years. No explanation has been given by the respondent for this delay. In my considered view the delay is quite inordinate, and therefore the trial court should have rejected the claim. The learned Primary Court Magistrate was right. D

Even on merits, I am of the considered view that the suit should have been dismissed. I agree with the appellant that he inherited the nine head of cattle on his right. When the appellant was installed by the clan council as the inheritor of the wife of the deceased, then the said wife and her child (respondent) became the legal wife and son of the E appellant respectively. In other words the respondent became the legal son of the appellant and so he had no separate property apart from that of his now legal father. He can claim the property of his new legal father (the appellant) when that father dies and he F can claim as a lawful heir to the deceased's estate of his new legal father. But once the appellant still lives, he cannot claim anything from him. I think that logic makes sense.

In the event this appeal succeeds and it is allowed with costs.

Nchalla, J.: The appellant Asia d/o Iddi was jointly charged in the District Court at E Kondoa with another person, Clemence s/o William, with the offence of stealing by servant c/ss. 270 and 265 of the Penal Code, Cap. 16. It is evident that it was an error for the Police to have referred to this kind of theft as "Stealing by Servant". The offence of theft by servant is under ss.271 and 265 of the Penal Code, and not under ss.270 and 265 of the Penal Code. The proper description of the offence in this case should F therefore have been "Stealing by person Employed in Public Service, or, briefly, stealing by person in public service". This error has not, however, occasioned a miscarriage of justice, as the proper sections of the law creating the offence were indicated in the G charge sheet and the particulars of the offence related to that offence. This error is therefore cured.
However, I observe that there are other irregularities in the charge sheet which call for comment and direction by this court on appeal. I will therefore reproduce the particulars of the offence as they appear in the charge sheet. Those particulars are the following:- H "That Asia d/o Iddi and Clemence s/o William jointly charged on 14th day of January, 1988 at about 19.00 hrs, at Kwapakacha Education Store, within Kondoa District, in Dodoma Region, being the persons employed by the Ministry of Education as a store-keeper and a night-watchman respectively, did steal 1505 1600/= exercise I

1989 TLR p176
books worth shs.11,287/50, property of the Ministry of Education which came into their A possession by virtue of their employment."
As it clearly appears from the particulars of the offence reproduced above, the number of exercise books alleged to have been stolen was carelessly and haphazardly indicated B on the charge sheet. The figures 1505 1600/= exercise books are meaningless, and are subject of ambiguity with regard to the exact number of exercise books alleged to have been stolen by the accused. These figures denote an amount of cash, not an amount of things like exercise books. The figure 1505 was recorded by free hand, while the C figure 1600/= was type-written. This means the figure 1505 was not originally recorded in the charge sheet, and it is not explained who later inserted that figure in the charge sheet by free hand and with ink. Moreover, the value of the exercise books alleged to have been stolen was originally indicated in the charge sheet in type-writting thus - D 16,000/=, but, later, someone unknown crossed off that figure and inserted, instead, the figure 11,287/50 in free hand, and with ink. This careless handling and admission of charge sheets cannot pass without comment by this court. I wonder whether those particulars of the charge were read over and explained to the accused. For had the trial E magistrate done so, he could not have failed to spot those glaring errors and discrepancies, and should have immediately ordered the charge to be amended. It is only fortunate that the whole evidence on record related to 1505 exercise books having been stolen and their value consistently stated being shs.11,287/50. For this reason I am F inclined to believe that the accused were not embarrassed and confused by the errors relating to the number of exercise books alleged to have been stolen and their value.
Under the circumstances, I find that no miscarriage of justice was occasioned by the errors which the appellant did not even raise on appeal. For that reason the errors are G cured. However, these errors are deplored by this court on appeal, and I hereby direct that, in future, the trial magistrate should exercise diligence in ensuring that the charge sheet is properly laid out, and is free from such glaring errors which depict nothing else but negligence and sloppiness. H
Having made the above instructions and directions, I now turn to the gist of this appeal.
The appellant Asia, and her fellow accused, Clemence, were convicted of the offence of theft by public servant c/ss.270 and 265 of the Penal Code and were each sentenced to I five (5) years imprisonment under the Minimum Sentences Act, 1972. Asia was not satisfied with the decision of the District Court, and has appealed to this Court A against conviction only. The 2nd accused, Clemence, did not appeal.
1989 TLR p177
NCHALLA J
The appellant was represented by Counsel both at the trial and on appeal. The same counsel, Mr. Rweyongeza, appeared for the appellant both in the District Court and on appeal. Mr. Nduguru, State Attorney, appeared for the Republic in this appeal. Mr. B Ndunguru did not support the conviction that was entered on the appellant by the District Court. He therefore conceded to the appeal.

Mr. Rweyongeza argued the appeal. He submitted that the only evidence that implicated C the appellant with the offence is the co-accused's extra judicial statement which was made to a justice of the Peace, one Neugence Orio (PW.3). In his extra judicial statement the co-accused by the name of Clemence william confessed to have D participated in stealing the exercise books from the store at Kwapakacha. However, at the trial Clemence repudiated his confession. Mr. Rweyongeza submitted that at the trial Clemence, appellant's co-accused, made an exculpatory statement in relation to the commission of the offence. Mr. Rweyongeza argued that the exculpatory statement by E Clemence at the trial obliterated his former confession which he made before PW.3. The resultant effect is that there was no more any confession at all, but a more exculpatory statement or, at best, a repudiated statement which, as a matter of prudence, required corroboration. Mr. Rweyongeza submitted that an exculpatory statement by an accused F person implicating a co-accused cannot be acted upon to convict the other co-accused. To this end Mr. Rweyongeza cited the case of Ali Salehe Msutu v R. [1980] TLR (C.A.) at P 1. Mr. Rweyongeza submitted that even if appellant's co-accused had not repudiated his confession, still, the same ought to be corroborated G before the same can be used to convict the appellant. Mr. Rweyongeza cited the case of R. v Kusenta Cheligia & another [1978] LRT No. 11 where Mr. Justice Mnzavas (as he then was) held, inter-alia "where an accused person implicates himself with an offence, his statement that a co-accused participated in the commission of the offence H must be corroborated by other independent evidence pointing to the guilt of his co-accused." Mr. Rweyongeza submitted that there was no independent evidence on record to corroborate the repudiated confession made by Clemence, appellant's co-accused. Mr. Rweyongeza argued that the evidence of the Store Keeper, one I Magesa (PW.2) and that of the Education Officer Incharge of

NCHALLA J

Supplies (PW.1) cannot be held to be corroboration to the confession in question. Mr. A Rweyongeza argued that PW.1 and PW.2 can either be imputed as accomplices or actual thieves of the exercise books in question. This is so because on 14/1/88 PW.2 went to the store at Kwapakacha and opened it. He was alone. He took exercise books B from that store, and transported them to Kwamtoro. It is not known how many exercise books he took, and how many he left in the store. PW.2 then handed over the keys of the said store to appellant. it is established that the appellant in turn handed those keys on the same day to PW.1 because appellant was sick. So, PW.1 could also have C had access to the store by opening its door and stealing exercise books there from. Equally PW.2 could have stolen those exercise books because he never handed over to appellant the store, or at least the exercise books the subject of the theft in this case. So, it cannot be proved conclusively under those circumstances that only the appellant could D open and steal the exercise books from the store in question. The store was not damaged anywhere. The theft was committed by opening the store door in the normal way.

So, any one among appellant, PW.1 and PW.2 could have committed the said theft. Moreover, it is not known exactly at what point in time the said theft was E committed. It was committed between 14/1/88 and 16/1/88 when the same was discovered. And during this time the store keys had changed hands from PW.2 to the appellant and to PW.1. There is so much doubt as to which persons among appellant, PW.1 and PW.2 opened the store door and stole the exercise books therefrom. in the F circumstances, Mr. Rweyongeza argued that PW.1 and PW.2 were persons with an interest of their own to serve in this matter, and as such, their evidence required corroboration. In this connection Mr. Rweyongeza cited the decision in Abraham Wilson Saiguran v R. [1981] TLR P.265.

Mr. Rweyongeza also made reference to the provisions of s.33 (1) (2) of the Tanzania G Evidence Act, 1967 which reads:

33 (1) When two or more persons are being tried jointly for the same offence or for different offences arising out of the same transaction, and a confession of the offence or H offences charged made by one of these persons affecting himself and some other of these persons is proved, the court may take that confession into consideration against that other person.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), a conviction of an accused person shall not be based I solely on a confession by a co-accused (underscoring is mine). Mr. Rweyongeza submitted that since no other A independent evidence is available to implicate the appellant with the charge, save for the co-accused's confession which contains exculpatory statements, and which is repudiated, then conviction cannot be sustained on the appellant based solely on B appellant's co-accused's confession.

Mr. Rweyongeza further submitted that Clemence, appellant's co-accused, is not a truthful person. He made three different statements all of which are contradictory. These C statements are his extra-judicial statement to the justice of the peace (Exh.B), his caution statement to police (Exh.D) and lastly his testimony in court. Each of these three statements has its own version, different from the other. Clemence did not complain anywhere that he was either tortured, threatened or induced into making those D statements. The only reasonable conclusion on that point is that Clemence, appellant's co-accused, is not a truthful person. Moreover, Clemence told the court on 17/8/88 during the trial that one Ally Hussein (DW.3) saw him (2nd accused) in appellant's company when Ally gave to 2nd accused the key to his house to go and see the exercise E books which had been hidden therein. But in his evidence Ally Hussein (DW.3) denied that he saw appellant in 2nd accused's company on 15/1/88 when he (Ally) gave him (2nd accused) the key to his house. Ally also denied that he knew the appellant. This evidence goes to show how incredible 2nd accused is. F

Having considered the evidence on record and the exhaustive submissions by Mr. Rweyongeza, counsel for the appellant, I am quite convinced that the appellant was wrongly convicted in this case. I quite agree with Mr. Rweyongeza that the only evidence that the court could have acted upon to convict the appellant with the charge is G the repudiated/retracted confession of the 2nd accused, Clemence, who is appellant's co-accused. The said confession required corroboration, particularly so bearing it in mind the fact that its maker has been shown to be an untruthful person. The only corroboration, if any, could be only found in the evidence of PW.1 and PW.2. But as H indicated above, the testimony of these two last mentioned witnesses also requires corroboration, as they are established to be persons who have an interest of their own to serve in the matter. The evidence of PW.1, PW.2 and the 2nd accused Clemence, I excepted, then there is no any other evidence on record to go by in order to justify a conviction on the appellant. The rest of the evidence is merely shaky circumstantial evidence which is not incompatible with A appellant's innocence. There are so many gaps in the prosecution case which cast doubt as to appellant's guilt in this case. Apart from what has been demonstrated afore, one wonders why the ledger book in which the exercise books in question were recorded B was not produced in court. Without the said ledger, it cannot be proved what balance of exercise books there was in the store on 14/1/88 after PW.2 took some of them and transported them to Kwamtoro. The evidence adduced in court on this aspect is, with due respect, mere hear say, and the same is inadmissible. C

On the authorities cited here by Mr. Rweyongeza, the conviction and sentence entered and passed on the appellant cannot be left to stand. I quash the said conviction and set aside the sentence of 5 years term of imprisonment meted out to the appellant, Asia d/o Iddi. D

Before winding up my judgment, I wish only to point out to the victims of this offence, that is, the Ministry of Education and its agent, the Kondoa District Council. It appears that they have not realized that store is cash, just like bank notes or coins are. Its custody must be exercised under strict and established store procedure coupled with E Financial Procedure and Regulations. In financial Regulations applicable to government, store and hard cash are regulated in the same way. It is therefore surprising to note that the District Council at Kondoa deals with stores as if the same had no economic value, or as if the same were different from hard cash. Whoever is responsible for the F supervision of stores at Kondoa District council should revise his stores training and administration in order to avert similar unaccounted losses in future.

Having said this last remark, I direct that the appellant, Asia Iddi, be released from G prison forthwith, unless further detained for another lawful cause. The appeal is allowed in its entirety.

To be settled first, is the propriety of the Resident Magistrate-in-charge's action, of A forwarding the record to the High Court, with proposition as to the possible exercise of revisional powers by the High Court. There is no beating about the bush. Indeed the provisions under Section 44(2) of the Magistrates Courts Act 1984, hereafter to be B called the act, does confer statutory powers, upon the Resident Magistrate-in-charge, so pointed by the Honourable Chief Justice, to call for, or inspect, any proceedings, for purposes of satisfying himself, as to the correctness, legality, or propriety of any decision, or order, and as to the regularity of the proceedings therein, and may where he C thinks the decision, or order, is illegal, forward the record with a report to the High Court in order that, it may consider whether, or not to exercise its powers of revision.

In this case the Mara Resident Magistrate-in-charge, did indeed forward the record to us, with attendant report, within the letter and spirit of the above statutory provisions, D and there is no way that action, can be impugned in law.

The proposition here, is that this court exercise revisional jurisdiction, if the record is good material for the same. It would however in prospect appear to me, that, a decision E by any court subordinate, to the High Court may be susceptible to revision, either under the provisions of 43(2) of the Act 1984, or under the Provisions of Section 79 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966. That is the High Court may under Section 79 of the Civil Procedure Code 1966, straight call for the record, for revision, or act in revision F after the Resident Magistrate-in-charge has under the provisions of Section 44(2) of the Act 1984, forwarded the record, and the attendant report on the same to the High Court.

I am however verily anxious, to see how these provisions differ if at all, and which section is my vehicle of transport in this case. The revision section 79 of the Civil G Procedure Code 1966 provides:

79 (1) the High Court may call for the record, of any case which has been decided by any court subordinate to the High Court, and in which no appeal lies thereto, and if such H subordinate court appears:

(a) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or I

1989 TLR p183

KATITI J

(b) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested or A

(c) To have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally, or with material irregularity, the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be construed as limiting the High Court's powers to B exercise revisional jurisdiction under the Magistrates Courts Act (1963) now (1984).

It does from the above seem to me, that, first, the power for revision under section 79 of C the Civil Procedure Code 1966, is discretionary, second, it is applicable in the case in which no appeal lies, and this where, the subordinate court appears.

(1) To have exercised jurisdiction not versed in it by law, or

(2) To have failed to exercise a Jurisdiction versed in it by law or D

(3) To have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally, or with material irregularity.

The above mean, that the High Court has no power to interfere in revision under this E section, except in particular in the three cases mentioned above. Vindicating the above view, is the case of Privy Council Case Venka Tagiri v Mindu Religious Endowments Board 76 I.A. 67, [1949] APC 156, that commented on Section 115 of the Indian Civil Procedure Code, - the equivalent of section 79(1) of our Civil F Procedure Code 1966 thus:

Section 115 applied only to cases in which no appeal lies and where the legislature has provided no right of appeal ... The section empowers the High Court to satisfy itself on three G matters, (a) that the order of the subordinate court is within its jurisdiction, (b) that the case is one in which the Court ought to exercise jurisdiction, and (c) that in exercising jurisdiction, the court has not acted illegally, that is, in breach of some provisions of law, or with material irregularity, that is by committing some error of procedure in the course of the trial which is H material, in that it may have effected the ultimate decision. If the High Court is satisfied on these three matters, it has no power to interfere, because it differs however profoundly from I the conclusions of the subordinate court on questions of fact or law.

KATITI J

It is obvious from the above that the High Court revisional powers under section 79(1) A of the Civil Procedure Code 1966 are circumscribed, for while discretionary, they are limited to cases where no appeal lies, and issues whether, the subordinate court has exercised jurisdiction not vested, or if vested whether has failed to exercise the same or B has in the exercise of such jurisdiction acted illegally or with material irregularity - and that is all. But revision under, or taken as a result of exercise of powers of under section 44(2) of the Magistrates Court Act 1984 and therefore under section 43 (2) and 44(1) C of the same Act 1984, sufffers no such limitation, other than that, "it should appear that there has been an error material to the merits of the case involving injustice." It therefore seems to me, that, revision provisions under the Magistrates Court Act 1984 - see section 43(2) and 44(1)(b), unprejudiced as they are, as per statutory declaration in section 79(2) of the Civil Procedure Code 1966, are wider and liberal, and it is under D the same provisions that, this revision is undertaken.

In this case, the trial magistrate was appointed and vested with relative civil jurisdiction vide G.N.212 of 1984 to have power in respect of: E

2 (b) other proceedings where the subject matter is capable of being estimated in monetary valve, in which the value of the subject matter does not exceed one hundred thousand shillings. F

But as above pointed out, the claim in this case, was valued at shs.280,460/=, and yet the trial magistrate purported of try the case. But obviously the figure went beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction vested on to him, therefore the trial magistrate acted without G jurisdiction. It may therefore be posed, whether this "was an error material to the merits of the case involving injustice", as posed by section 44(b) of the Magistrate's Court Act 1984. I would like to argue, that whatever merits of any case must have a jurisdictional foundation upon which they are built, and merits cannot in my view, emanate from a H jurisdictional nullity. The trial Magistrate had no pecuniary jurisdiction and absence of jurisdiction not only automatically affected merits but also justice. The proceedings are hereby declared null and void. The plaintiff is advised, to file his action in the appropriate court, if he is still so minded. Costs to fall upon the plaintiff. I

Order accordingly.

On the facts of the case, the appellant got no opportunity to inspect the tyre. He was just D told by the respondent that the latter had a tyre for sale and asked him to deliver it at his house. When the appellant found the tyre to be defective, that being the first time to see it, he went to ask for the refund of his money. The Primary Court gave judgment in favour of the appellant (original plaintiff). E
The respondent (original defendant) appealed to the District Court of Mbeya. The District Court allowed the appeal applying the principle of caveat emptor. The District Magistrate reasoned that the appellant was entitled to a reasonable inspection of the goods he intended to purchase, and that if the buyer omitted or neglected to do this at F the earliest opportunity he could not be allowed to take action at the later stage.

Held: (i) The appellant saw the tyre for the first time after it had already been delivered to his house. He got no opportunity to inspect the tyre. [zJDz]Judgment Mchome, J.: The Appellant, Magirini Mahinya sued the Respondent Mbwiga Mkeya A in the Uyole Primary Court, Mbeya for recovery of 5,000/= being purchase price for a tyre the respondent sold the appellant. The respondent after being paid the 5,000/= cash delivered the tyre at the appellant's house. When he appellant came and found the B tyre he discovered it was defective. He returned it to the respondent and the latter promised he would refund the appellant his money and take back his tyre. This was way back in 1966. But the respondent never did so despite several reminders. Hence this suit. C

In his defence the respondent totally denied to have sold the tyre to the appellant. He alleges that the appellant and his witnesses may have mistaken him for someone else.

The Primary Court gave judgment in favour of the appellant (original plaintiff). Then the D respondent (original defendant) appealed to the District Court. The District Court allowed the appeal applying the principle of "Caveat emptor". This therefore is a second appeal.

Both lower courts found that the respondent is the one who sold the tyre in question to E the appellant. The respondent's allegation that the appellant and his witnesses may have mistaken him for someone else was rightly rejected as the transaction took place during broad daylight and more than once. The allegation by the respondent that the P.Ws are F all relatives of the appellant and so should not be relied upon was also rightly rejected by both lower courts since they are competent witnesses, their relationship to the appellant notwithstanding, and there was no evidence that they were lying because of their relationship with the appellant.

In allowing the first appeal the District Magistrate alleges that the appellant was entitled G to a reasonable inspection of the goods he intended to purchase, and that if the buyer omits or neglects to do this at the earliest opportunity he cannot be allowed to take action at the latest stage.

The principle of caveat emptor is inapplicable to this case after the appellant had H explained that he got no opportunity to inspect the tyre. He was just told by the respondent that the latter had a tyre for sale and asked him to deliver it at his house. When the tyre was brought the appellant was not at the house. P.W.II who had instructions to receive the tyre and pay for it said he did not know the terms of their I agreement so did not inspect the tyre. When the appellant came and found the tyre to be defective, that being his first time to see it, he went to ask for the refund of his money. So the question of the A buyer having not inspected the goods at the earliest opportunity does not arise.

Rather it is a question of a breach of implied Warranty on the part of that seller that the goods would be in a reasonable condition. Nobody can enter into a sale agreement to B buy a useless tyre and pay 5,000/= for it.

The respondent is a liar to say he never sold the tyre to the appellant, as he was found by both lower courts. He is not even constant in his testimonies. He says either he never sold the tyre at all or he sold it when it was in good order. Such contradictory statements C make me find it most probable that the respondent not only sold the tyre to the appellant, but also sold a defective tyre. He had admitted to have sold the tyre and contended that it was in good order or that their oral agreement was to sell him a defective tyre his evidence would have been worth considering. But denying totally to D have sold the tyre make me like did the Primary Court that he is most probably lying. I therefore allow this appeal with costs.

The plaintiff entered into and executed the defendant's standard form contract of agency B for the distribution of the defendant's full oxygen gas cylinders at an agreed commission. The contract had a termination clause providing for a three months termination period at the instance of either party. While the contract was subsisting the Managing Director of the plaintiff company went abroad on a private mission. C

He however, entrusted the management of the business of the plaintiff company to another person. While the said Managing Director was absent, the defendant terminated the agency contract by three month notice. The notice termination was not addressed in D the plaintiffs company's business name but was addressed to the person entrusted with the management of company's business. The defendant alleged that the termination of the contract was prompted by the plaintiff's breach of the contract. The plaintiff incurred loss of profit and claimed shs. 300,000/= as relief in lieu of notice. In an action before the E High Court by the plaintiff for breach of contract arising out of the defendant's termination of the agency contract.

Held: (i) Since the notice of termination was not addressed to the plaintiff company as the contracting party and in its business name, the said notice, if it ever reached its F destination in the absence of the plaintiff company's Managing Director, was and must have been treated as a private affair by the care-takers of the plaintiff company's business in respect of the plaintiff company so that should the notice have come to the knowledge of the Managing Director on his return, it could not be properly taken as a G proper business communication with the plaintiff company, and plaintiff would therefore be entitled to ignore it;

Case Information

Judgment for plaintiff. C

[zJDz]Judgment

Mwaikasu, J.: By the defendant's standard form of contract, Exhibit P.1, on 16th day of October 1978, the plaintiff entered into and executed a contract of agency for the distribution of the defendant's full gas cylinders, to its customers in Mbeya, at an agreed fee. The gas was oxygen for welding and medical purposes. D

The contract continued to be in force for seven years until it was terminated by the defendant as from 31st August 1986, by a purported three month's notice dated 19/5/86.

It is now the contention of the plaintiff that such contract was wrongfully terminated and E therefore breached by the defendant for want of the contract three months' notice as clearly stipulated under clause one of the contract. Hence the plaintiff's claim for the reliefs as prayed in his plaint.

That, however, has been categorically denied by the defendant.

Thereupon the following issues were agreed by the learned counsel for the parties: F

(a) Whether or not the defendant had issued to the plaintiff notice of termination of the agency relationship on 19/5/86; G

(b) Whether or not, if such notice had been so issued the same was in accordance with the procedure agreed under the contract between the parties;

(c) If agency relationship was then still existing, whether the defendant paid the plaintiff the agreed commission. H

(d) What reliefs, if any, are the parties entitled to.

The case for the plaintiff company centres on the only evidence of its proprietor, the P.W.1, one Mr. Vinod K. Babla, a businessman resident of the Municipality of Mbeya, I at short street, Block L. Plot 52.

MWAIKASU J

His evidence is to the effect that he is the proprietor of the Plaintiff Company, known as A Southern Highlands Motors Ltd., situated along Karume Avenue, within the Municipality of Mbeya, registered as Limited Company in 1982.

While the contract in question between the parties was still in operation, in March 1986, B the P.W.1 went abroad for marriage, and returned in August 1986. In his absence his business through the plaintiff company was then left in the hands of his secretary one Miss Mourine Nyondo. It is further his testimony that on his return from abroad, he did not receive any notice of termination of the plaintiff company's agency relationship with C the defendant, nor was he aware that in his absence his secretary received such notice. He has added that on his departure for his marriage abroad, he wrote a letter to the defendant company and personally handed it to an official of the Defendant Company in D Dar es Salaam, one Rwegoshora notifying them of his absence, and that he would be back in three months time. It would also appear that the defendant company was also informed that in his absence his office would remain open and taken care of by his friend one Thaker. On the P.W.1's return the said Thaker could not inform him anything as to E whether a notice or the termination of the agency relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant company had been received from the defendant business transactions did then continue as usual until sometime in August 1986, when a truck carrying full cylinder gas that called at the company premises had to be diverted by an official of the F defendant company called one Nkondo, (D.W.1) and sent the consignment to another person; within the Municipality. That is when the plaintiff company came to know that the agency had been terminated by the defendant company. He went on to testify that he G used to get a commission for the sale of the defendants gas, dependant upon the amount of gas cylinders supplied by the defendant company. That, however, is said to have ranged between shs.4,000/= and shs. 8,000/= paid monthly.

On the other hand, it is the defence case, inter alia, as testified the D.W.l, one Juma s/o H Nkondo, a Mechanical Engineer working with the defendant company, and the D.W.2, one Dr. Asajile s/o Kapungu, being the medical officer i/c., of Isoko Hospital, that following the absence of the P.W.1, while abroad for marriage, there developed deteriotion in the agency services rendered by the plaintiff company because the plaintiff I company could not make regular distribution of full gass cylinders particularly for hospital oxygen, as the person left to act for the P.W.l called at the premises part time, leaving the plaintiff company's office premises closed often times. That then forced A the medical customers, as the D.W.2 once did, to follow the gas to the Head quarters in Dar es Salaam. According to the D.W. 2, such problem of supply became more acute between the months of March, April and May 1986.

Thereupon on account of such deteriotion in the plaintiff company's agency service with B the defendant company, on 19/5/86 the defendant company issued a three months' written notice to the plaintiff company for the termination of such agency contract between the parties. Such notice was tendered before this court as Exhibit D.1, and is C also Annexure "C" to the written Statement of Defence. According to the D.W.1, such notice is unreferenced; it was not addressed to the plaintiff company, but to one Mr. Babla, the P.W.l in person, of Southern Highlands Motors, P.O. Box 252, Mbeya, it was sent by post but the D.W.1 could not tell whether it was by ordinary or registered post. D

It was then on the basis of such notice that on the expiration of the three months period of notice, on 31st August, 1986, the contract was brought to an end.

On being cross-examined, the D.W.1 has maintained that such termination of the contract was justified on the ground that the plaintiff company had committed several E breaches contrary to the provisions under clauses Nos. 4, 5, 9 and 21. The D.W.1, however, admitted that there was no evidence to show that the notice had SOUTHERN HIGHLAND v. T.O.L. (Mwaikasu, J.)been received by the plaintiff company, and that F Mr. Babla (P.W.1) was not a party to agency agreement, adding that before the P.W.1 went abroad, there was no business problem with the Plaintiff company. He went on to say that there was no prior communication between the plaintiff company and the defendant company regarding dissatisfaction of the defendant company's customers, with G the plaintiff company's agency services rendered. He could not also tell how much earnings had been lost by the defendant company during the absence of the P.W.1. Neither could he say how many deliveries had been made to the plaintiff and sales made during the absence of the P.W.1 as he had no documents to support the same, nor could H he produce any when time was given to the purpose.

From the above evidence it is evident that the contracting parties to the contract of agency the subject of this suit were Southern Highlands Motors Ltd., a limited company registered under Companies Ordinance and Tanzania Oxygen Ltd. The contract was I concluded on 16/10/78 and continued to be in force up to 31/8/86.

MWAIKASU J

It is also common ground that in March 1986, the P.W.1, one Vinod K. Babla, the A proprietor and managing director of the plaintiff company had to travel abroad for his marriage, leaving his business in the hands of his secretary one Miss Maurine Nyondo, and Thaker, who worked part time. I also find as an established fact that during the B P.W.1's absence while he was abroad, his business premises were not regularly kept open to his customers. However, in absence of any documentary evidence to show the volume of business in respect of the oxygen gas, between the plaintiff and defendant companies, this court is unable to accept the evidence for the defendant and say that any C of the alleged breaches of the agency agreement clauses were actually so committed by the plaintiff company.

Nevertheless, any party was at liberty to terminate the contract at any time after giving a D three months notice to the other as provided for under clause I of the agreement.

Under Clause I of the agreement the parties agreed in the following terms and I quote:

I. This agreement shall be deemed to have commenced on the 16th day of October 1978 and shall continue until terminated by either party giving to the other three months E notice in writing of its intention so to do or as provided in clauses 23 and 24.

Clause 23, of the agreement provides: F

If there shall be any breach by the Distributing Agent of any provision of this Agreement or if the Distributing Agent shall commit an act of bankrupting the company may forthwith terminate this agreement.

Under Clause 24 of it is there provided as follows: G

In the event of either party thereto selling or ceasing to carry on its business they shall have the right to terminate this agreement by giving one month's notice in writing.

In my view, the import of the above clauses is that, the contract could be terminated in I either one of the three situations: first, on the decision of either party, as he pleases, to end the contract agreement, when, in terms of clause I, he would then be required to give a three months' notice to the other party; second, whenever the Distributing Agent, in this case the plaintiff, breached any of the provisions of the agreement, in which case in terms of clause 23, the Principal, in this A case the Defendant company, would be entitled to terminate the agreement immediately without prior notice to the Distributing Agent; and third, whenever either party happened to sell or cease to carry on his business, in which case the other party would be entitled to terminate the contract after giving a one month's notice. B

It is clear in the instant case that it is the first option under Clause I of the agreement that the defendant invoked in terminating the contract of agency with the plaintiff company.

The issue in respect of such three months' notice is whether the same was properly and C actually served upon the plaintiff company.

According to the evidence that is before this court, it is clear and undisputed that the purported notice dated 19/5/86 was not addressed to the plaintiff company as the D contracting party as such, but was addressed to one Mr. Bable of Southern Highlands Motors, P.O. Box 252. As such notice, if it ever reached its destination in the absence of the P.W.1, the Company's managing director, was and it must have been treated as a private affair by those left to look after the P.W.1's business in respect of the plaintiff company. For it was not addressed in the business name of the contracting plaintiff E company. So that should that have come to the knowledge of the P.W.1 on his return, it could not be properly taken as a proper business communication with the plaintiff company, and therefore would be entitled to ignore it. F

On the other hand it is the P.W.1's contention which could not be effectively challenged by the Defendant company that such alleged notice was not brought to his notice and he did not in fact receive it.

The defendant company has been unable to prove that such notice was actually received G by the plaintiff company or that it was aware of it in any way. For no proof could be offered as to how the posting of such notice was effected, and whether it actually reached the plaintiff company.

Yet in terms of s.160 of the Law of Contract Ordinance Cap. 433, the termination of the G authority of an agent does not so far as regards the agent, take effect before it comes known to him. The burden to prove that such notice of termination of the agency had come to the knowledge of the agent, in this case, the plaintiff company, rests with the principal, in this case, the defendant company. That the defendant company has failed to I discharge. It follows, therefore, that the termination of the agency contract with the plaintiff company A must be regarded as wrongful.

The consequence of such wrongful breach of such contract of agency between the parties is to be found under the provisions of s.157 of the Law of Contract Ordinance. It is there provided thus: B

157. Where there is an express or implied contract that the agency should be continued for any period of time, the principal must make compensation to the agent ... for any previous revocation or renunciation of the agency without sufficient cause. C

I also accept as an established fact, as it was not at all challenged by the Defendant Company during the trial of this suit and as also laid down in Clause 19 of the agreement, that the plaintiff company used to be paid a commission by the Defendant D Company for the oxygen gas cylinders sold. It does not appear that such commission was paid to the plaintiff company for the period of September 1986 to October 1987, when this suit was instituted following such wrongful termination of the contract by the defendant company. E

I now proceed to consider the reliefs claimed. The first is for shs.56,000/= being loss of profits. I consider the same to be founded and it is accordingly granted. Then there is the second relief of shs.4,000/=, per month as loss of profits from the second relief of shs.4,000/=, per month as loss of profits from the month of November 1987, a month F following the institution of this suit to the day of judgment. That as well appears to be merited. It is accordingly granted. On the other hand, I find it hard to understand the basis for the relief of shs.300,000/= as prayed in item (c). For no evidence has been led G for the plaintiff company to show how such amount of loss has been arrived at. Nor does the agreement have any provision to such effort. The only reasonable amount to be claimed as relief in lieu of notice must be the amount which ought to have been due to the plaintiff company by way of commission. Thus for the requisite three months' notice the H plaintiff company is entitled to shs.18,000/=, in lieu of such notice, being the average of commission of between shs.4,000/= and shs.8,000/= that could be paid to the plaintiff per month.

In the final analysis judgment is entered for the plaintiff and it is hereby ordered that the defendant do pay the plaintiff as follows: I

(a) Shs.56,000/= being loss of profit for the period of 14 months from September 1986, to A October 1987, at the rate of shs.4,000/= per month.

(b) Shs.76,733/= being loss of profits for the period of November 1987 to 13th October 1989, at the rate of shs.4,000/= per month, for 24 months and 13 days. B

(c) Shs.18,000/= being payment in lieu of three months' notice.

On behalf of the government of the United Republic of Tanzania the Secretary of the Central Tender Board by advertisement in the Daily News paper of 9/2/88, invited tenders for sale of elephant ivory of approximately 13 tons. The tenderers were C requested to quote prices per kilogram in US$ or any convertible foreign currency, the quotations to be firm and valid for acceptance for at least 60 days from closing date of the tender. Further, successful tenderers were required to make full payment and to collect the ivory within 30 days from the date of the award.

The plaintiff company, an agent of M/S TAT Hing Ivory Wares Factory, Hong Kong, D offered to buy the whole lot of ivory at US$ 80 per kilogram or at US$ l0% above highest bidder's offer should its offer be beaten. On 13/5/88 the Director of Wildlife, Ministry of Lands, Natural Resources and Tourism accepted the plaintiff company's offer to buy the ivory at E 10% above the highest bid which was US$ 140 - that is to say, at US$ 154 per kilogram subject to the plaintiff company confirmation within seven days of receipt of the letter of acceptance of the sale and at the price per kilogram. On the same day, i.e. 13/5/88 the plaintiff company communicated its confirmation to the Director of Wildlife. F On 19/5/88 the Director of Wildlife wrote to the plaintiff company's principal in Hong Kong stating that the plaintiff company were the winners of the government tender for the sale of nearly 16.5 tons of mixed ivory. The letter of the Director of Wildlife which was copied to the plaintiff company was silent as to the time for payment of the sale G price. On 28/5/88 the Acting Director of Wildlife wrote to the plaintiff company confirming that the tender had been awarded to it and requiring the plaintiff company to pay the sale price within the period of one week from the date of the letter. The H plaintiff company objected, maintaining that the tender regulations under which they had been operating had provided for a thirty day, and not seven day, period of payment of the sale price. On 22/6/88 the Director of Wildlife cancelled the award of the tender to the plaintiff company. In a suit by the plaintiff company heard ex parte on 15/9/89, for a I declaration that the cancellation of the tender was null and void:

Held: (i) The advertisement by the Secretary of the Central Tender Board calling for the A purchase of elephant ivory was not an offer but an invitation to treat. Each of the tenderers offered to buy at his quoted price and it was upon the government of the United Republic of Tanzania to accept an offer or reject it; B

(ii) in the letter of the Director of Wildlife of 13/5/88 seeking confirmation on acceptability of the purchase price of US$ 154 per kilogram, the plaintiff company was being asked if it still stood by its tender to pay 10% above the highest bidder's offer. In this respect, the Central Tender Board was not obliged to accept the highest bid or any of the tenders for that matter. The highest bid need not necessarily be the best. The C Central Tender Board after opening tenders moves to evaluate them and it is the highest evaluated tender, which need not be the highest bid, that is accepted;

(iii) on the evidence, the tender by the plaintiff was the highest evaluated tender and that it was the offer that the government had accepted. By the Director Wildlife's D letter dated 19/5/88 to the plaintiffs principal in Hong Kong, the Director of Wildlife had created a legally binding contract between the government of the United Republic of Tanzania and the plaintiff's principal; E

(iv) the tender had been awarded to the plaintiff on the basis of the tender conditions stipulated in the advertisement that appeared in the Daily News of 9/2/88. These conditions required payment of the sale price within 30 days and not 7 days as demanded by the Director of Wildlife. It was not open to the Director of Wildlife to modify and shorten the said period of 30 days subsequent to him declaring the plaintiff F the winner of the tender. As there was a binding contract between the plaintiff and defender.

(v) the unilateral cancellation of the award of the tender to the plaintiff by the Director of Wildlife vide his letter of 22/6/88 was illegal and in breach of a contract which already existed. G

(vi) Obiter: The counsel for the defendants who appeared on 15/9/89 did not have a right of audience as the case was coming up for ex parte hearing.

Rubama, J.: By Tender No. 116 of 1987 for the sale of Elephant Ivory appearing in I the Daily News dated 9th February,

1989 TLR p198

RUBAMA J

1988, the Secretary of the Central Tender Board on behalf of the government of the A United Republic of Tanzania invited tenders from potential authorised buyers for the purchase of "Elephant Ivory of approximately 13 Tons".

The tenderers were told that the Ivory for sale was available for inspection in the Ivory B Room, Dar es Salaam. Details on whom to contact to gain access to the Ivory Room and the allowed time were provided. The tenderers were also "requested to quote prices per kilogram in US$ or any convertible foreign currency". The quotations had to be firm C and valid for acceptance by the government for at least 60 days from closing date of the tender, i.e. 11 March, 1988, at 0900 am. Further, the successful tenderer was going to be required to make full payment and collect the Ivory within 30 days from the date of award of the tender. Failure to accomplish this was going to have the effect of nullifying the award.

GBL & Associates Ltd on behalf of a Principal, M/S Tat Hing Ivory Wares Factory D submitted its tender on 10th March, 1988, a day or so before the closing date for the tender. Their tender was couched in the following terms:

We offer to buy the whole lot of Ivory at US$ 80 (eighty) per kilogram. E

PRINCIPAL CONDITION

Should our tender above become low, then we offer 10% above highest bidders' offer. F

On 13th May, 1988 the Director of Wildlife, Ministry of Lands Natural Resources and Tourism wrote to GBL & Associates Ltd referring to a conversation he (the Director of G Wildlife) had had that morning with Mr. Lugendo of the GBL & Associates Ltd he stated:

As pointed out to you, we are prepared to award your company the tender for the sale of nearly H 16.5 tons of ivory at a price of US$ 154/kg of mixed or ungraded ivory. This price is arrived at as follows:

i. The highest bid in the tender advertised on 19th and 11th March, 1988 was for US$ I 140 (US$ one hundred and forty).

ii. In your quotation for the same tender, you offered US$ 80 or 10% over and above the A highest bidder.

iii. Since your quotation for US$ 80 was far too low, we opted for your second quotation (i.e. 10% above the highest bid, i.e. US$ 140. And 10% of US$ 140 = 154). B

The purpose of this letter is to seek your official confirmation that if you are finally awarded the tender for the sale of nearly 16.5 tons of ivory you will be able to pay US$ 154 per kilo of mixed ivory. We need your confirmation within seven days upon receipt of this letter. C

GBL & Associates Ltd, wrote to the Director of Wildlife on the same day, i.e. 13th May, 1988, confirming that if finally awarded the tender for the sale of nearly 16.5 tons of ivory, they would pay US$ 154 per kilo of mixed ivory. No doubt following receipt of D the confirmation of sale price per kg. from GBL & Associates Ltd., on 19th May, 1988 the Director of Wildlife directly communicated with the plaintiff's Principal in Hong Kong copying the letter to the plaintiff. The Director of Wildlife stated: E

This is to confirm that Messrs GBL Associates Ltd. of P.O. Box 3154, Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, are the winners of the recent Government tender for the sale of nearly 16.5 tons of mixed ivory. F

We also confirm that the ivory will be accompanied by relevant CITES documents which will only be released after the ivory has been paid for in full.

No mention of within what time that payment for the ivory had to be effected. The G Acting Director of Wildlife did, however, address the Managing Director of GBL & Associates Ltd. on the time within which payment for ivory had to be made. In his letter dated 28th May, 1988, he stated: H

I have the pleasure to inform you that you have been awarded the said tender under the following conditions:

(a) That you will pay US$ 154.- per kg without subjecting the lot to any grading. I

(b) That you are ready to effect the total payment of the 16.538 tons of elephant tusks at once, into our Bank Account within a period of one A week from the date of this letter.

The condition on payment schedule was objected to by Mr. Lugendo on the very day, B i.e. 28th May, 1988. He maintained that the Tender regulation under which they had been operating had provided that payment for the purchased ivory had to be effected within 30 and not 7 days. He called upon the Ag. Director of Wildlife to honour his own tender regulations. On the same day, Mr. Lugendo also communicated by phone with C the boss of the Acting Director of Wildlife, i.e. the Principal Secretary, Ministry of Lands, Natural Resources & Tourism. He confirmed this conversation in a letter addressed to the Principal Secretary. He stated:

Please refer to our telephone conversation of this morning with our Mr. Lugendo and we wish D to know your account number and where in Europe or anywhere and name of your Bankers so that our Principal in Paris and Hong Kong can send the money in respect of the purchase of the ivory which you have advised us we have won on behalf of our Principals. Without this E information, we cannot arrange for payment.

On 14th June, 1988, Mr. Lugendo in two letters addressed to the Director of Wildlife one of which was copied to the Principal Secretary of the Ministry of Lands, Natural F Resources and Tourism presses for the same information he had sought from the Principal Secretary on 28th May, 1988, i.e. where his Principal was to effect payment for the 16.538 tons of elephant tusks. The response to these letters was a letter dated 22nd June, 1988, addressed to Mr. Lugendo from the Director of Wildlife cancelling the G award of the tender number 116 for the purchase of 16.538 tons of elephant tusks. The second paragraph of that letter reads:

I wish to inform you that a decision has been taken by the Government to cancel the award of H the tender number 116 to your firm for the purchase of 16.538 tons of elephant tusks. Our letter No. GWC.5/73/315 dated 28th May, 1988, addressed to you in which you were awarded the tender is, therefore, withdrawn. I

Following this communication GBL & Associates Ltd filed a suit against the defendants A seeking the following orders.

(i) A Declaration that the government Tender award for 16.538 tons of ivory, the subject matter of this suit, is still valid and that the cancellation of the same by the 1st and 2nd defendant is null and void. B

(ii) An order that the 1st and 2nd defendants issue to the Plaintiff and/or its Principal, M/S Tat High Ivory Wares Factory Cites certificates and all necessary permits to enable the plaintiff and/or its principal to export the ivory from Tanzania. C

(iii) Costs of this suit.

(iv) Any other relief which the court will deem fit to grant.

I wish to first state that this suit was properly filed in that consent of the Attorney General D was duly obtained for purpose of suing the government. The 1st and 2nd defendants have been included herein since they were the officers that had been involved in this case.

Following completion of the pleadings, this case was fixed for hearing on 20th July, 1989 E before my brother judge (Kyando, J.). All the parties were aware of this hearing date. However, the defendants without assigning any reason absented themselves. The learned counsel for the plaintiff prayed for permission to prove his case ex parte by affidavit. This prayer was granted. An Affidavit was duly filed on 11th August, 1989 as ordered F by the Court (Kyando, J). The case eventually came for hearing on 15th September, 1989 when learned counsel for the plaintiff, Dr. Lamwai, prayed for judgment. Mr. Ihema, learned counsel for the Defendants, also appeared on this day. He did not on the G day have a right of audience as the case was coming up for an ex parte hearing.

In the affidavit sworn by the Managing Director of GBL & Associates Ltd. in compliance with this Court's order of 20th July, 1989 (Kyando, J.), the deponent submits that once the tender was made on the basis of the conditions stipulated in the H advertisement that had appeared on the Daily News on 9th February, 1988, namely, the period within which to pay to be 30 days, it was not open to the 1st defendant to modify and shorten the said period, especially subsequent to the 1st defendant declaring the plaintiff the winner on the 19th of May, 1988, and the 1st defendant's letter dated 28th I May, 1988 did not have any effect on the original terms of payment as stipulated in the original agreement. Further noting that on the 22nd day of June, A 1988, the 1st defendant, vide his letter of even date, unilaterally cancelled the award of the tender, the deponent submits that this unilateral action by the 1st defendant was illegal and in breach of a contract which already existed.

Let us revisit the advertisement by the Secretary of the Central Tender Board calling for B tenders from authorised buyers of Elephant Ivory. The tenderers were "requested to quote prices per kilogram in US$ or any convertible foreign currency" and further informed that: C

(a) Quotations be firm and valid for acceptance by the government for at least 60 days from closing date of the tender, i.e. 11th March, 1988, at 9.00 a.a. and that

(b) The successful tenderer would be required to make full payment and collect the Ivory D within 30 days from the date of award of the tender. Failure to comply with this requirement was going to nullify the award.

Were the Tender Regulations operative in respect of Tender No. 116 for the purchase E of 16.538 tons of Elephant Tusks those detailed by the Secretary to the Central Tender Board's advertisement appearing in the Daily News of 9th February, 1988? This court accepts the plaintiff's submission that the tender had stipulated in the advertisement that had appeared on the Daily News on 9th February, 1988. F

The plaintiff on behalf of M/S TAT Hing Ivory Wared Factory of the United Kingdom had quoted the price of the highest bidder plus 10% thereof as its tender price. This quotation was in a convertible currency, i.e. American Dollars. From the exchange of letters between the Director of Wildlife and the Managing director of GBL & Associates G Ltd (both dated 13/5/88) fully reproduced above, it is clear that the quotation by GBL & Associates Ltd had remained firm and valid for the acceptance of the United Republic of Tanzania for more than 60 days from the closing date of the tender, i.e. 11/3/1988 at H 9.00 am. The 1st defendant, vide his letter dated 19th May, 1988 addressed to the plaintiff accepted the plaintiff offer and required the payment of US$ 154.00 per kilogram.

What then was the legal status of the advertisement by the Secretary of the Central Tender Board that had appeared on the Daily News on 9th February, 1988, calling for I the purchase of "Elephant Ivory of approximately 13 tons"? Was it an "invitation to Treat" or an "Offer"? Was the Central Tender Board obliged to accept the highest A bid? The call for tenders by the Secretary of the Central Tender Board on behalf of the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania was an "Invitation to Treat". These tenderers' bids were the "offers". Each of the tenderer offered to buy at his quoted price and it was upon the Government of the United Republic of Tanzania to accept an offer B or reject. The substance of the Director of Wildlife's letter dated 13th May, 1988 to GBL & Associates Ltd., seeking confirmation from GBL & Associates Ltd. on acceptability of the purchase price of US$ 154 per kilogram of ivory testifies to this very fact. In this letter, GBL & Associated Ltd were being asked if they still stood by their C tender to pay "10% above the highest bidder's offer." In this respect, the Central Tender Board was not obliged to accept the highest bid or any of the tenders for that matter. The highest bid need not necessarily be the best to accept. The Central Tender Board after opening tenders moves to evaluate them and it is the highest evaluated tender which D need not be the highest bid that is accepted. Going by the various communications between the Director of Wildlife and the Managing Director of GBL & Associates Ltd., the Director of Wildlife and the plaintiff's Principal and also between the Principal E Secretary, Ministry of Lands, Natural Resources and Tourism and the Managing Director of GBL & Associates Ltd., it is clear that the tender by the plaintiff was the highest evaluated tender and that it was the offer that the government had accepted vide its letter by the Director of Wildlife dated 19th May, 1988 to the plaintiff's Principal in F Hong Kong which was copied to the GBL & Associates Ltd. Dar es Salaam. The 1st defendant, ignoring the legal effect his letter to the plaintiff's Principal has had, again directly wrote to the plaintiff on 28th May, 1988, stating that the tender for the purchase of Elephant Tusks had been offered to the plaintiff. By the 1st defendant's letter dated G 19th May, 1988 to the plaintiff's principal in Hong Kong, the 1st defendant had created a legally binding contract between the government of the United Republic of Tanzania and the plaintiff's Principal. This legal status between the two parties was again affirmed by the 1st defendant's letter dated 28th May, 1988, addressed to the Managing H Director, GBL & Associates Ltd. In this situation, what is the effect of the United Republic of Tanzania's action "to cancel the award of the tender No. 116 to the plaintiff for the purchase of 16.538 tons of Elephant Tusks" communication to the plaintiff vide the 1st defendant's letter dated 22nd June, 1988? I

As the Tender Regulations operative in respect to Tender No.

RUBAMA J

116 for the purchase of 16.538 tons of Elephant Tusks those detailed by the Secretary A of the Central Tender Board's advertisement appearing in the Daily News of 9th February, 1988 a successful tenderer was going to be required to make full payment and collect the Ivory within 30 days from the date of award of the tender. Failure to B accomplish this was going to have the effect of nullifying the award. "Within 30 days" here does not apportion the time within which to make payment on award of the tender and the time within which to collect the elephant tusks. The successful tenderer could, if he so chose, make payment on the last day allocated, i.e. 30 days and collect the elephant tusks on the same day. C

It is clear that the 1st defendant had not acted under the above mentioned regulation. There is no reference to non-payment for the ivory or failure to collect the bought ivory within 30 days from the date of award of the tender. If the government had proceeded D under this regulation, the award of the tender would have been nullified. This is not the case in the instant case. Here we are told "that a decision has been taken by the government to cancel the award of the tender No. 116 ... for the purchase of 16.538 tons of elephant tusks". No reason is assigned. The plaintiff was left to speculate whether E that government reaction was out of the objection raised by the Managing Director, GBL & Associates Ltd. that the tender regulations under which they were operating required payment within 30 and not 7 days as demanded by the Director of Wildlife. For whatever reason the government had thus acted, this chief accepts the plaintiff's F submission that the tender had been awarded to the plaintiff on the basis of the tender conditions stipulated in the advertisement that had appeared on the Daily News on 9th February, 1988, namely, the period within which to pay to be 30 days. It was not open to the 1st defendant to modify and shorten the said period of 30 days subsequent to the G 1st defendant declaring the plaintiff the winner on the 19th day of May, 1988. As noted above, there was a binding contract between the defendants and the plaintiffs on the 19th of May, 1988 and the 1st defendant's letter dated 28th May, 1988 could not have any effect on the original terms of payment as stipulated in the original agreement. H The 1st defendant's unilateral cancellation of the tender award vide his letter of 22nd June, 1988 to the plaintiff was illegal and in breach of a contract which already existed. On the materials before this court, I further find that in consequence of the cancellation referred above, the plaintiff and its Principal have suffered loss in that they had already I opened letters of credit in favour of the defendants and that payment had been duly made and the contract thus firmly concluded. The defendants could not back out of A it at will.

In view of the above, I enter judgment for the plaintiff with costs as prayed: B

(i) It is hereby declared that the Government Tender award for 16.538 tons of ivory, the subject matter of this suit, is still valid and that the cancellation of the same by the 1st and 2nd defendants is null and void.

(ii) It is ordered that the 1st and 2nd defendants issue to the plaintiff and/or its Principal, C M/S TAT Hing Ivory Wares Factory Cites certificates and all necessary permits to enable the plaintiff and/or its principal to export the ivory from Tanzania.

(iii) Costs of this suit. D

Lastly, I find it necessary to state the obvious that the law involved in this case is extremely simple. Appreciating that, I must express utter astonishment on how so straight forward a matter could be left to get out of hand leading to the necessity of a government being taken to court. Worse still, the action of the principal actors on behalf of the E government have been contradictory and unilateral and in complete disregard to the adverse repercussions in its future dealings in international trade. Consistency, steadfastness and fairness are some of the many qualities and a democratically elected F government as the one being sued is must strive to have in its dealings. A government that chooses when to abide by a freely entered contract does so at extreme costs to its reputation or standing. This court decries this sorry development.

G Order accordingly.

This is an application for the extension of time within which to appeal to the Court of Appeal and for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal. The judgment of the first appellant court (The High Court) was delivered in the High Court on 14 November D 1988 at Songea in the presence of the parties. The applicant filed a notice of appeal in time. She however got a copy of the judgment, at Mtwara registry, on 26 January 1989. She could not, therefore, apply for leave in the High Court to appeal to the Court of E Appeal within fourteen days as required by Rule 43(a) of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules. The point of law and mixed law and fact for determination by the Court of Appeal are sufficiently highlighted in the ruling.

[zJDz]Judgment
Maina, J.: This is an application for extension of time within which to appeal to the H Court of Appeal and for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal.
The judgment of this court was delivered on 14 November 1988 at Songea in the presence of both parties. The applicant gave notice of intention to appeal to the Court of I Appeal on the same day, and she paid the relevant fees. The applicant was required to seek leave of the High Court within fourteen days of appeal, as required by Rule 43(a) A of the Tanzania Court of Appeal Rules. But she did not do so within the period prescribed. Her reason for delay is that she could not obtain the copy of the judgment until 26 January 1989 and she had to send it to her advocate at Dar es Salaam. She had to travel to the High Court Registry at Mtwara for the purpose of obtaining the copy of B judgment. She says in her affidavit that the clerks at the High Court Registry were not cooperative and they kept telling her that only her advocate could obtain the copy of the judgment. How she eventually obtained it is not known. Mr. Haule, for the respondent, has strongly opposed the application saying that the applicant is indolent and a liar. C

There is no dispute that the appeal was heard by this Court at Songea where the judgment was delivered. It is common knowledge that the High Court Registry for Mtwara Zone is at Mtwara, and whatever judgments are pronounced at Songea, the D copies of those judgments cannot be ready for distribution to the parties until after the files are returned to Mtwara. There is no record to show when the copy of judgment in this case was ready. In my view, it could not be possible to have the judgment ready for distribution immediately. The applicant had to travel to Mtwara for her copy of the E judgment. It is alleged that she did not receive it until 26 January 1989, just over two months after the judgment was delivered. Mr. Haule demanded a receipt as proof of the date the applicant received the copy of judgment. This, Mr. Mwajasho, counsel for the applicant, could not produce because the matter was heard at Songea while the F applicant was residing in Dar es Salaam and Tanga.

In the circumstances of this case, as I have said, it was not possible for the applicant who was then resident at Songea where the appeal was heard, to have obtained the copy of the judgment at Mtwara immediately, or within a short period. The problems of G communication between Songea, Mtwara and Dar es Salaam are well known.

It was also said that the delay in filing the application was due to unavoidable circumstances. The application was filed in August 1989. This, as Mr. Haule said, the H applicant obtained the copy of the judgment on or about 26 January, 1989. She had to take it from Mtwara to Dar es Salaam where her advocate is based. She sought legal opinion and the affidavit was signed in March 1989. It is evident from the annextures to the affidavit that the application was sent to the High Court Registry at Mtwara in March I 1989, and not February 1989 as stated in the supplementary affidavit. The letter from the District Registrar dated 6 March 1989 returning the application to the A advocate for the applicant is proof that the application was submitted at the High Court in late February 1989 or early march 1989. There was an exchange of correspondence between the District Registrar and Mr. Mwajasho for certain corrections to be made in B the application and for fees payable, until the application was eventually accepted by the High Court Registry and filed on 21 August 1989. So, between March 1989 and August 1989, there was a chain of correspondence between the High Court Registry and the advocate for the applicant about the application. It cannot be said that the C applicant had delayed until August 1989 when the application was filed.

The application was presented for filing before March 1989, but the District Registrar refused to register the application due to certain matters which the District Registrar D pointed out that they needed corrections. The question is whether the applicant has shown sufficient or reasonable cause of the delay so that she may get an extension as provided in section 14(1) of the Law of Limitation Act, 1971. On the whole, the applicant was diligent and not indolent. She gave notice to appeal on the same day the E judgment was delivered by the High Court at Songea. She had to travel to Mtwara to get a copy of the judgment. I believe her that she did not get the copy she needed at the time she wanted it. There was no reason for her to travel to Mtwara and then sit back. When she eventually got the copy of judgment she had to take it to Dar es Salaam to her F advocate. The papers which were eventually filed at the High Court Registry at Mtwara were not immediately accepted, and the applicant cannot be held responsible for the ensuing delay. In the circumstances, I find that there is reasonable and sufficient cause for the delay. G

Mr. Haule had submitted that the affidavit in support of the application was defective for non-disclosure of the source of information. I do not agree with him. The affidavit clearly stated the source of information on the matters stated thereon. It was not necessary of the applicant to give names of the clerks of the High Court Registry. She said that the H clerks did not cooperate in giving her the copy of judgment. That was sufficient disclosure.

For the reasons which I have given, I find that reasonable and sufficient cause for the delay has been shown and the extension applied for is granted.

As regards the points of law, Mr. Mwajasho submitted that there are several, while Mr. I Haule said that no points of law are involved. The parties were husband and wife. Their marriage was dissolved by a decree A of divorce issued by this court of appeal. The dispute is over a house on Plot 15 Mbamba Bay road in Songea Township. Both the District Court and the High Court found that the respondent is the lawful owner of the house. The applicant wife claims that it is her house, and that it is not matrimonial property but personal property. The B certificate of Right of Occupancy is in the name of the Applicant. The Respondent alleged that he wanted to register the house in the name of his son, Saidi Saidi, and the applicant, by fraud, had the house registered in her name. C

There is another house, No. 11 Block C in Songea Township which the applicant had claimed she bought by paying shs.50,000/=. That evidence appears, according to Mr. Mwajasho, to have been confused as referring to the purchase of the house now in dispute. D
